Pope's Address Causes Comment In Capitals of World

His Christmas Address Thought to Be a Bid For Place at Forthcoming Peace Conference

Edited by Rita Rubin

Rome: (by wireless): — The Pope's Christmas address on democracy is interpreted by sources here as a bid for inclusion of the Holy See at the peace conference. Catholic circles have been suggesting unofficially that the Pope be invited to the peace conference, but this is the first time that the groundwork for this plan has been clearly laid. In effect, this Papal address abandons the Vatican's previous studiedly neutral attitude, by recognizing that the future belongs to the democracies. Such a "change" it is held, would have to precede any possible invitation to the Pope to participate in the peace conference.

One of the most significant aspects of the Pope's declaration of open and clear support of democracy is that the holy see conceives of democracy, with its insistence on human dignity and guarantee of individual liberty, as the best means of forestalling communism. It is speculated here that as a result of the Pope's address, the Vatican would be prepared to recognize a well-ordered democracy in Spain, provided it were free of communist influence.

Left-wing circles in Paris commended Pope Pius for the open support of democracy expressed in his message, but were critical of his definition of democratic regimes. The newspaper Combat approved the address in general, but objected to the Pope's assertion that democracies may embrace monarchies as well as republics. The Pope was also criticized for subtly distinguishing between "masses and people" and for favoring "counsels of moderation." It is these moderates, the paper commented, "that risk today serving those who wish to preserve everything and have not understood that something must change. The Church today should take on the task of not letting itself be confused by the forces of preservation."

Combat asserted, "For years, we have waited for the greatest spiritual authority of our time to condemn dictatorship in clear terms. We say clear, since this condemnation can be read into certain encyclicals if one can understand them. But it is stated in that traditional language which has never been clear to the majority. It is this great majority which has awaited all these years a voice to say clearly as today where the evil lay."

In Moscow, the newspaper Pravda published a sharp attack on the Pope's address, charging that the Pope is trying to "absolve Hitlerite Germany from responsibility for crimes committed against humanity." The newspaper condemned the Pope for his lack of condemnation of Mussolini and Italian fascism. Commenting on the possible inclusion of the Pope at the peace table Pravda said, ". . . the Pope, above all, raises the demand that this organization take an identical attitude towards peace-loving countries and fascist aggressors."

In the light of recent victories by the common people of Greece, Yugoslavia and Poland and in the coming political changes in China and Spain, it is thought here that if the Vatican is to participate with the United Nations Council, it must eventually make a moral distinction between fascism and democratic movements, which in many cases include communist elements.

BISHOP DEWOLFE IS HONORED

Garden City, L. I.:—Bishop DeWolfe of Long Island celebrated the 25th anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood on December 21 at a service of the holy communion celebrated at the cathedral here. He was then the guest of honor at a luncheon when the bishop was presented with a purse and a book containing a greeting from clergy of the diocese.

Chicago, Ill.:—The million dollar debt which has hung over the diocese of Chicago for the past twenty years has been removed. Bishop Conkling announces, "Our faith in God and in our people has been justified," and directed the clergy and the people to offer a Te Deum and other Acts of thanksgiving and dedication. The first concentrated attempt to liquidate the long-standing debt of the diocese was made in 1935, the centennial of the diocese of Chicago, when the late Bishop George Craig Stewart refused to accept bankruptcy and made plans to meet the diocesan obligations. His efforts from 1935 until his death in 1940 paved the way for the accomplishments of the past four years.

CHURCH PENSION FUND SETS RECORD

New York: — The past year brought in to the Church Pension Fund the largest total of pension assessments in its history, according to the executive vice-president, Bradford B. Locke. They amounted to $1,192,238. He states that "the reasons for the new record total have not yet been analyzed but it is probably due to the fact that churches are discharging this important obligation more promptly nowadays, plus the effect of an apparent trend upward in the scale of clerical salaries."

BISHOP TSU RETURNS TO CHINA

New York, N. Y.:—Bishop Y. Y. Tsu of Kunming is on his way back to China after a year's stay in this country. While it is impossible to give the details of the bishop's return journey, it is expected that he will arrive in Calcutta, India, about the middle of February.

ORTHODOX LEADERS TO VISIT MOSCOW

Brooklyn, N. Y.: — Metropolitan Benjamin, official representative of the Moscow patriarchate in this country, will leave here shortly for Moscow to take part in the forthcoming All-Russian Church council summoned to elect a successor to the late Patriarch Sergius as head of the Russian Orthodox Church. The Russian-born churchman, who was appointed in 1933 as exarch, or deputy, for the Aleutian Islands and North America by the then Acting Patriarch Sergius, will make the trip at the invitation of Metropolitan Alexei of Leningrad and Novgorod, acting patriarch. He will travel by steamer to Cairo, completing his journey by air to Teheran and then to Moscow.

Metropolitan Benjamin has conveyed a similar invitation to Archbishop Theophilus, metropolitan of America and Canada, who represents Russian Orthodox elements who have consistently refused to recognize the Soviet government or to acknowledge the Church in Russia on the ground that it was not free. Metropolitan Benjamin's mission here has been largely to effect a reconciliation between the Theopholites who are an estimated 80 per cent of the Russian Orthodox membership in America, and the mother Church in Russia.

Theophilus will not attend the Moscow conference personally, but has appointed a delegation of three to represent his followers. Bishop Alexis, head of the monastery and pastoral for clergy at New Canaan, Pa. will lead the delegation. The other members will be the Rev. Nicholas Metropolsky of Stratford, Conn. and Ralph Montgomery Arkush of New York, the diocesan counsel.

The results of the Moscow conference should have wider significance than the choice of patriarch, since the Russian Orthodox Church has been autonomous in America since 1933.

CHAPLAINS KILLED IN SERVICE

Washington, D. C.: — Forty-two chaplains lost their lives while ministering to soldiers in battle during the first three years of war, according to official figures obtained from the army and navy. Three chaplains are listed officially as "missing in action," while 43 are being "detained by the enemy." (A chaplain is not a prisoner, since he is a noncombatant.) One hundred and ten chaplains have been wounded in action. One chaplain died while being detained by the enemy.

There were 9,825 chaplains in the army, navy, marine corps and coast guard as of December 7, 1944, or more than four times as many as were in this branch of the services when the Japanese struck Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941. Literally hundreds of chaplains have been awarded decorations in all branches of the service. About 500 medals have been given the chaplains, including the distinguished service cross, legion of merit, silver star, the soldier's medal, purple heart, and many others.

MISSIONARY TO INDIA RETURNS HOME

New York, N. Y.:—The Rev. George Van B. Shriver, after eleven years of service under Bishop Azariah in the diocese of Dornakal, India, has resigned, according to an announcement by Rev. James Thayer Addison of the overseas department of the National Council. Dr. Addison said, "We share the regret of Bishop Azariah who has written, 'George Shriver has been a faithful priest and missionary. He has developed the work with wonderful energy and devotion'."

Mr. Shriver went to India in 1933, the Episcopal Church's only missionary there. Most of his work has been in the Singareni Colliery district. He visited regularly some thirty villages, travelling by bicycle most of the time. He has not yet announced his plans for the future.

Religious Education Meeting Held in Washington

Christian Nurture of Children Must Start With Preparation for Marriage of Parents

By Charles W. F. Smith
Chairman of Religious Education of the Diocese of Washington

Washington:—The Christian education of the child has to start somewhere. That it should start at birth is obvious. That it should start before birth was the conclusion of a recent conference at the College of Preachers sponsored by the province of Washington. The most effective ministers are the parents and the Church's ministry to them, for the sake of the child, should start before the child arrives and, indeed, with marriage preparation.

The conference explored this area of religious nurture and soon discovered how little work had been done on it. The guidance provided by Dr. Mary Fisher of Vassar and Dr. Reuel Howe of the Virginia Seminary was illuminating and stimulating. A view of religion which sees it not as something added to life but something expressed in and through the ordinary experiences of life needs constant emphasis. Thus the life of the child in the womb provides a situation which in itself is religious in its elements and for which adequate substitutes must be found in the welcome the child receives and in the treatment accorded it.

This obviously imposes an obligation on the minister. It envisions more thorough preparation for marriage so that young couples look forward to children with Christian expectation and prepare themselves to be Christian parents. It involves a ministry to the expectant parents, that through self-examination and their own nurture, they fit themselves to deal with the new life. The experiences of the infant in terms of demands made on the parents and the way in which these demands are met, are likely to color the growing person's fundamental attitudes toward God and man.

In the Episcopal way of life the vitally important sacrament of baptism enters into the situation, not only as a new birth of the child into a new and wider family but also as a consecration of the parents to their task. The part played by godparents was the subject of much discussion. All of this involves a further ministry on the part of the clergy in the instruction of parents and godparents for the duties they assume in the service.

It becomes apparent that the average minister (of whom it is demanded above all that he keep busy) will find this an additional and heavy burden on his time. In the issue it requires a new evaluation of the whole pastoral ministry. It seems highly probable that it would be well to break loose from many time-consuming activities and organizational involvements in order to give time to the work implied by the viewpoint of this conference. In effect it would be time given immediately in order to save time in the future. It became clear in the conference discussions that many of the life-situations which develop in later life and are almost beyond the capacity of the average minister to solve might be avoided by time spent on prospective parents and parents of infants and upon attention to the pre-school child himself.

Not only the question of time however is involved, but the matter of adequate understanding and the development of a technique for this work. It was clear at the College of Preachers that while there are some good books dealing with the nurture of infants and their parents there is practically no book which deals with it from the Christian and specifically from the Episcopal point of view. It would seem that some effort along this line might be of more value than the multiplication of course materials for older children.

Another striking aspect of the conference was the thought developed by Dr. Fisher that the attitudes, demands and expectations of infancy are repeated in another form in adolescence. This provides in effect "a second chance." Many of us are aware of the problems involved in the reaction of parents and adults and the Church to the adolescent, and a little thought reveals the equal importance of the similar reaction to the infant.

To the author this raises two important questions more fundamental than those of technique. Are we looking for a type of Christian nurture which avoids the necessity of that personal commitment to Christ which centers around the term "redemption" and is based upon Christ's experience of crucifixion and resurrection? The background of this year's conference was the conference a year ago which dealt with the theological content of Christian nurture. In dealing with the infant it became more than ever apparent that the child must be treated as a potential person and everything done to develop to the full his God-given individuality.

The very success of this fundamental approach leads to that self-centeredness which becomes the problem for Christianity in adult life and so makes necessary the experience of commitment to a new life-center in Christ. Baptism stresses both the individuality and distinct worth of the individual ("What is your name?") and also the relationship of the individual to other people through the Christian family. Beyond or at the crisis of the development of self-consciousness and self-assertion lies confirmation. Therefore it would seem that our nurture must always bear in mind the central necessity of Christian life — namely that personality must be developed to its fullest degree and at the same time find its center in God and its chief interest in the welfare of others.

The second consideration is that the attitude of the conference towards the normal life-experience of the infant provides an antidote to those theories of nurture which make the impossible demand that the Church school shall provide a complete life-experience in which the child can practice what it is taught. Surely what is done in the Church school must reveal to the child the possibilities of Christian living in and through the daily materials and adventures offered in living and not in and through an artificial construction of them.

This leads back again to the main concern — namely with the infant and its parents. It calls for an appreciation on the part of the parent of the complete dependence and helplessness of the child and its very definite limitations and therefore the need of a fundamental sense on the part of the parents of the child as a person who has his own rights, who exists for himself and for the Christian family, and not simply for the gratification or enhancement of the parents.

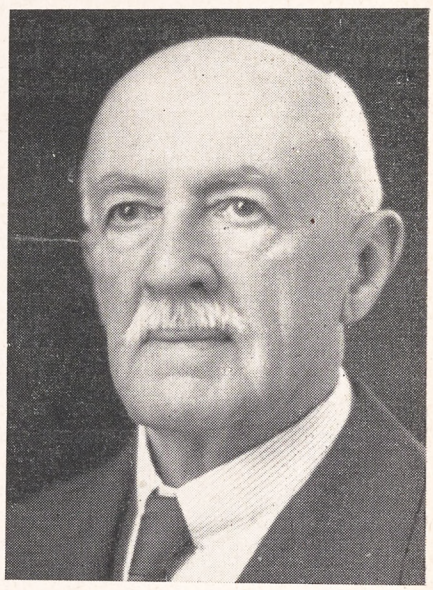
It can readily be seen how essentially Christian is this attitude and very little observation of parents in their relation to infants reveals the lack of it. So that once again there comes into view a great opportunity for the ministrations of the clergy which, applied at this point, might be calculated to produce results, the extent and importance of which can hardly be exaggerated.

If the recent conference has anything to say to the Church-at-large, both to clergy and laity, it would be to plead for further study everywhere on this problem — of marriage preparation, pre-natal parent preparation, baptism preparation, both for parents and godparents, and the stirring up in every parish of a sense of its tremendous assets in and great obligation to the infant child.

In a day of doubt and the danger of pessimism and of possible cynicism regarding the post-war world, here is a bright prospect of hope which, if it can be seized upon, while it will make demands upon us, may yet lead to a new birth in our sacramental life and immeasurably strengthen the future Church for its foreseeable great opportunities of preparing the way for the Kingdom of God.

GORDON REESE GOES TO PACIFIC

Honolulu, T. H.:—The Rev. Gordon Reese, who for the past three years has been executive secretary of the army and navy commission of the diocese of Texas, has been loaned to the district of Honolulu for six months. Bishop Harry S. Kennedy of Honolulu expresses gratitude to the army and navy commission for Mr. Reese and his wealth of experience with men and women in the service.



SENDS MESSAGE TO PARISH

Bayonne, N. J.:—Chaplain Revere Beasley sent his Christmas greetings to his parishioners in Calvary Church, on a phonograph record. The recording, made in Texas, was played at the Christmas Eve Service and again at a later service on Christmas Day. Emile S. Harper of Brooklyn is the locum tenens.

RUSSIAN SEMINARY HAS DEAN

Paris (by wireless): — Professor Basil Zenkovsky has been appointed to succeed the late Sergius Bulgakov as dean of the Russian Orthodox Theological Academy here. Dean Bulgakov, noted Russian intellectual, died last July. Exposed to the constant threat of political denunciation and kept under rigid surveillance by the German police, the academy's concern during the occupation was to preserve its existence as a divinity school and as a center of theological research. This it did in spite of a serious student and teacher shortage. Under the stress of the times, theological courses were organized for students who lacked the usual preliminary training. Both men and women were admitted to public evening theological lectures designed to equip them for practical church ministry.

CHANCELLOR

The Hon. Charles W. Parker is the chancellor of the diocese of Newark. He has had a distinguished career as a jurist, first as judge of a district court and then for many years a justice of the supreme court of the state

HOUSING PROJECT HAS CHAPLAIN

Albany, N. Y.:—Appointment of a Protestant chaplain to the Griffin Manor-Hyde Park housing units for war workers in Niagara Falls was authorized here by the board of directors of the state Council of Churches. Services of the chaplain will include visitation, counselling, religious education, and other activities. The Council's camp and defense committee recently surveyed the area at the request of the Niagara Falls Council of Churches and found that more than 50 per cent of the 9,000 persons living in the two housing units are members of Protestant denominations. Roman Catholics are served by a small chapel erected on the edge of the development.

Action Is Called For

WHAT becomes of resolutions passed by General Convention which require action? For example: at the last Convention both houses voted: "that the National Council be instructed to take such measures as will lead to the inclusion of lay employees of religious bodies in the federal social security act and at the same time best protect the Church from encroachment by the state."

That was in October 1943. Has the National Council taken such action? We have heard nothing about it. The only news on the matter is a report from the 30th annual meeting of the Church Pensions conference held in New York at the end of November at which our Church Pension Fund was represented and Mr. Robert Worthington, the secretary, elected vice-president of the conference. Plans to include church employees in the social security system were condemned by various speakers. Dr. Thomas J. Watts, executive secretary of the relief and annuity board of the Southern Baptist convention said: "Those in control of the government do not care a thing about our principle of Church and state, our people have got to protest this sort of intrusion into the office of our Churches if we are to have freedom for our religion." Do the directors of our Pension Fund share that view? If they do we should know about it, for it is contrary to the attitude of the Church as expressed by General Convention. If they do not they should dissociate the Fund from any action that might be taken by the conference to block the inclusion of lay employees in the social security act. The implication of the vote of General Convention is that the freedom of the Church can best be served, not by accepting favors from the government as we are at present by the exclusion of lay workers from the social security program, but by having them in the program along with other American workers.

The National Council was not asked to study the question, it was "instructed to take such measures as will lead to the inclusion of lay employees . . . in the federal social security act." We have been talking about this long enough. Since 1937 commissions have been investigating the matter. Now we have a clear directive from the legislative body of the Church which calls for action. What is the National Council doing about it?

"QUOTES"

THERE is nothing more important in view of the need for bringing the influence of the Christian Church to bear upon the postwar world than adequate training for the clergy who are to be leaders in the years that lie ahead. All our seminaries must be better financed if they are to give the kind of training that is called for. I hope that on the forthcoming theological education Sunday (January 21) there will be generous response to the appeal of the various seminaries for assistance.

—Henry St. George Tucker
Presiding Bishop

Good News From India

THE news has just reached us that the Madras diocesan council has accepted the South India Scheme for Unity by a vote of 55 to 19 in the clerical order and 107 to 19 in the lay order. This means that ten out of the thirteen dioceses of the province of Burma, India and Ceylon have accepted this plan. The approval of a majority of dioceses was necessary for the adoption of the scheme by the province as a whole. Calcutta has not yet voted.

The S. I. U. C., the Union of the Presbyterians and Congregationalists, of Travancore, the largest conference in the province, recently accepted the scheme by a vote of 89 to 23. So seven out of eight conferences have obtained their two-thirds majority necessary for the adoption of the scheme.

Now visiting the United States, after three years of study in Toronto, is the Rev. Victor Satthianadhan, who plans to return to his native India next month to resume his ministry. He has agreed to write an article for us on the South India Scheme before leaving. We are privileged to announce it at this time in connection with this important and cheering news.

Because It Is Absurd

THE Epiphany, far from being limited to three wise men, is the season for every Christian to seek wisdom, to ponder the appearing of God as man. For Anglicans, it is worthwhile to assess our traditional approach to this central Christian fact. It is our pride that we are known as the Church which, in fair weather and foul, has borne witness to the Incarnation. Our sacramental practice is rooted in it; one of our favorite descriptions of the Church is the extension of the Incarnation. Thence springs our Anglican sweet reasonableness.

In these latter days a narrow wedge of bitter questioning is penetrating the domain of our gentle faith. Can this tragic world be redeemed by such genteel rationality? Can a religion of sweetness and light make contact with the crass reality of our world? Far deeper than this—have we misread, misinterpreted the drama of God-become-man? May this drama not be the most painful of paradoxes—an absurdity overreaching the absurd contradictions of human society, a paradox which must be grasped in the utmost tension of strenuous faith?

This question has entered our Anglican Eden partly through the growing number of clergy of the school called neo-orthodox, partly through the stir which the translation of Kierkegaard's works has made in the intellectual world. Its emphasis is not away from the Incarnation, but more emphatically on it. It is a question worth pondering this Epiphany. May it be, as Tertullian long since said, that we believe the Incarnation because it is absurd? From this pondering a new vitality may be entering Anglicanism, which has tended to tame, to domesticate, the Incarnation.

Three-Personal Being

By C. S. Lewis

The Author of Screwtape Letters and Other Books on Religion

A GOOD many people nowadays say, "I believe in a God, but not in a personal God." They feel that the mysterious something which is behind all other things must be more than a person.

Now the Christians quite agree. But the Christians are the only people who offer any idea of what a being that is beyond personality could be like. All other people, though they say that God is beyond personality, really think of him as something impersonal: that is, as something less than personal. If you are looking for something superpersonal, something more than a person, then it is not a question of choosing between the Christian idea and other ideas. The Christian idea is the only one on the market.

Again, some people think that after this life, or perhaps after several lives, human souls will be "absorbed" into God. But when they try to explain what they mean, they seem to be thinking of our being absorbed into God as one material thing is absorbed into another. They say it is like a drop of water slipping into the sea. But it is only the Christians who have any idea of how human souls can be taken into the life of God and yet remain themselves—in fact, be very much more themselves than before.

You know that in space you can move in three ways—to left or right, backwards or forwards, up or down. Every direction is either one of these three or a compromise between them. They are called the three dimensions.

Now notice this. If you are using only one dimension, you could draw only a straight line. If you are using two, you could draw a figure: say, a square. And a square is made up of four straight lines. Now a step further. If you have three dimensions, you can then build what we call a solid body; say a cube—a thing like a dice or a lump of sugar. And a cube is made up of six squares.

Do you see the point? A world of one dimension would be a world of straight lines, but many lines make one figure. In a three-dimensional world, you still get figures, but many figures make one solid body.

In other words, as you advance to more real and more complicated levels, you do not leave behind the things you found on the simpler levels: you still have them, but combined in new ways—in ways you could not imagine if you know only the simpler levels.

Now the Christian account of God involves just the same principle. The human level is a simple and rather empty level. On the human level one person is one being, and any two persons are two separate beings—just as, in two dimensions (say on a flat sheet of paper) one square is one figure, and any two squares are two separate figures.

On the divine level you still find personalities; but up there you find them combined in new ways which we, who do not live on that level, cannot imagine. In God's dimension, so to speak, you find a being who is three persons while remaining one being, just as a cube is six squares while remaining one cube. Of course, we cannot fully conceive a being like that: just as, if we were so made that we perceived only two dimensions in space we could never properly imagine a cube. But we can get a sort of faint notion of it. And when we do we are then, for the first time in our lives, getting some positive idea, however faint, of something super-personal, something more than a person. It is something we could never have guessed, and yet, once we have been told, one almost feels one ought to have been able to guess it because it fits in so well with all the things we know already.

You may ask, "If we cannot imagine a three-personal being, what is the good of talking about him?"

Well, there isn't any good in talking about him. The thing that matters is being actually drawn into that three-personal life, and that may begin any time—tonight, if you like.

What I mean is this. An ordinary simple Christian kneels down to say his prayers. He is trying to get into touch with God. But if he is a Christian he knows that what is prompting him to pray is also God: God, so to speak, inside him. But he also knows that all his real knowledge of God comes through Christ, the man who was God, that Christ is standing beside him, helping him to pray, praying for him.

YOU see what is happening: God is the thing beyond the whole universe to which he is praying—the goal he is trying to reach. God is also the thing inside him which is pushing him on, the motive power. God is also the road or bridge along which he is being pushed to that goal. So that the whole threefold life of the three-personal being is actually going on in that ordinary little bedroom where an ordinary man is saying his prayers.

God in Time of Storm

ARE not the wars and revolutions that sometime sweep over the world interruptions of and interference with God's will for man? The answer of Jesus Christ to this question is a definite NO. As he looked into the future he saw no prospect of history proceeding smoothly and peacefully to a human Utopia. He saw that history would be marked by periodic catacylsms and storms. He did not see these as evidences of God's failure, but as moments of God's greatest activity for man. And he called on men to welcome such moments with courage and hope. Look up, Lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh. When the storms of life come be not afraid. The storms of life are the gales of God.

—D. A. McGregor, Mutual Radio Chapel.

The man is being caught up into the higher kind of life, what I call zoe, or spiritual life: he is being pulled into God, by God, while still remaining himself. And that is how theology started. People already knew about God in a vague way. Then came a man who claimed to be God; and yet he was not the sort of man you could dismiss as a lunatic. He made them believe him. They met him again after they had seen him killed. And then, after they had been formed into a little society or community, they found God somehow inside them as well: directing them, making them able to do things they could not do before. And when they worked it all out they found they had got the Christian definition of the three-personal God.

You see, it is not something made up: theology is, in a sense, experimental knowledge. It is the simple religions that are the made-up ones. When I say it is an experimental science "in a sense," I mean it is like the other experimental sciences in some ways, but not in all. If you are a geologist studying rocks, you have got to go and find the rocks. They will not come to you, and if you go to them they cannot run away. The initiative, so to speak, lies all on your side. They cannot either help or hinder. Suppose you are a zoologist and want to take photographs of wild animals in their native haunts. Well, the wild animals will not come to you: but they can run away from you. There is beginning to be a tiny trace of initiative on their side.

Now a stage higher; suppose you want to get to know a human person. If he is determined not to let you, you will not get to know him. You have got to win his confidence. In this case the initiative is equally divided: it takes two to make a friendship.

When you come to knowing God, the initiative lies chiefly on his side. If he does not show himself, nothing you can do will enable you to find him. And, in fact, he shows much more of himself to some people than to others, because it is impossible for him to show himself to a man whose whole mind and character are in the wrong condition, just as sunlight cannot be reflected in a dusty mirror as clearly as in a clean one.

You can put this another way by saying that while in other sciences the instruments you use are things external to yourself (things like microscopes and telescopes), the instrument through which you see God is your whole self. And if a man's self is not kept clean and bright, his glimpse of God will be blurred—like the moon seen through a dirty telescope.

God can show himself as he really is only to real men. And that means not simply to men who are individually good, but to men who are united together in a body, loving one another, helping one another, showing him to one another. For that is what God meant humanity to be like; like players in one band, or organs in one body. Consequently, the one really adequate instrument for learning about God is the whole Christian community, waiting for him together.

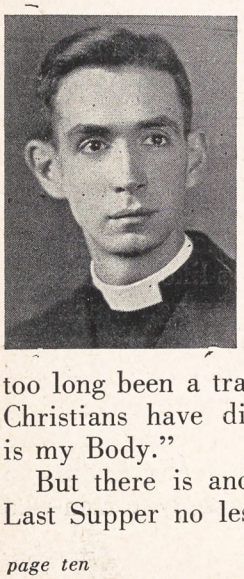
Christian brotherhood is, so to speak, the technical equipment for this science—the laboratory outfit. That is why all these people who turn up every few years with some patent simplified religion of their own as a substitute for the Christian tradition are really wasting time, like a man who has no instrument but an old pair of field-glasses setting out to put all the real astronomers right. He may be a clever chap; he may be cleverer than some of the real astronomers, but he is not giving himself a chance. And two years later everyone has forgotten all about him. But the real science is still going on.



If Christianity were something we were making up, of course we could make it easier. But it is not. We cannot compete, in simplicity, with people who are inventing religions. How could we? We are dealing with Fact. Of course, anyone can be simple if he has no facts to bother about.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

The Sacrament of the Kingdom

BIBLICAL scholars and theologians have debated for centuries the exact meaning of our Lord's words at the Last Supper: "This is my Body"; "This is my Blood of the New Covenant."

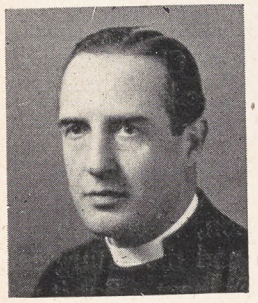
However they may have understood them, they have admitted the crucial importance of these phrases. Indeed, much of the success of the present movement towards Church unity will depend upon achieving common agreement among Christians as to their signification. The sacrament of unity has too long been a tragic occasion of schism because Christians have disputed the meaning of "This is my Body."

But there is another word of the Lord at the Last Supper no less significant. Yet it does not have a prominence in historic liturgies, such as ours, which it demands: "I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine until that day I drink it new in the Kingdom of God." (See Mark 14:25 and parallels in Matthew and Luke.) If we may so speak, our Lord instituted the Eucharist not only as a sacrament of His Body, but also as a sacrament of His Kingdom. The holy fellowship of His Table is the pattern, and the earnest anticipation and foretaste of the life of His loved ones in the Kingdom of God, which we pray, according to His command, to come "on earth as it is in heaven."

To come on earth—yes, the Kingdom did not mean to Jesus solely a future hope, something entirely beyond this world of time and space, that

> . . . one far-off divine event,
> To which the whole creation moves.

He certainly expected of men that they lay some hold upon it now, or rather, that they let its sovereign rule of love lay hold on them, and find some realization, however hard to gain, within the community of disciples who have won newness of life in company with His Person. The holy Supper was to be the pattern of this redeemed community, the focal center of its common life and mission, the dynamic of its effort to do justice and to love mercy. By means of the Supper He enacted a parable which summed up and exemplified all His teaching, all His revelation of the Father's will and purpose. Think how many are the parables and incidents of His life which present the Kingdom as a festive meal where all the barriers of race and social state among its guests are done away. A meal was for Him an occasion of rebuke to proud Pharisees, of reconciliation of penitent sinners, of awakened social conscience for dishonest publicans. He broke common bread and gave it to hungry multitudes as heavenly food; He changed water into wine. He taught that at Messiah's board the poor and outcast were honored guests, the lowly enjoyed the chief seats, the master was as one who served. The Eucharist is by His express intent the sacrament of this Kingdom.



The Last Supper was not then a farewell, but the introduction to a new realm of society. As often as this Holy Communion is celebrated there is proclaimed the "good news"—the time of waiting and expectancy is fulfilled, the Kingdom of God is at hand, repent, have faith, and enter in to its festivity with men of peace and good will. Surely those who have entered in to this fellowship have already received some foretaste of that eternal Kingdom, which is not barely "meat and drink," but as St. Paul defines it, "righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost."

When Chaplains Come Home

By
J. CLEMENS KOLB
Chaplain at University of Pennsylvania

ONE of the solemn truths that many of the clergy have been uttering is this: If the Church falls down in its care of the men in the service, its helpfulness will be lost for the next generation. That, I suspect, is a very sober fact and one that has had a great deal to do with the generous giving to the army-navy commission and the support of the U.S.O.'s. It strikes me that in this field we have done well indeed. I am surprised at the number of letters I get from all over the world in which former students at the university mention the chaplain. And those letters have always been complimentary to him. "I have just met the chaplain. He is a swell fellow." Or, "The chaplain here is a great guy." Or, "Do you know chaplain So-and-So? We all like him." That is the kind of thing I hear all the time. I hope that the chaplains out in the field know how much their men really think of them.

They say that there are only two kinds of chaplains—splendid and rotten. And I suppose that some of the boys who don't say anything about the chaplain have met the less desirable type, of which there are bound to be a few. But the reports from the men are so good and so many in number and include not only our Church but chaplains of all denominations from men of all denominations that I feel greatly encouraged, and I think that in this aspect certainly the Church can take heart. The Church hasn't fallen down in its Christian responsibilities toward the men in the armed forces.

Furthermore, I have reason to believe that men who seemed in no way exceptional in their parish ministry have been heroic Christians when with the armed forces. One man whose outer record and career would have led no one to believe that he had unusual merit did so magnificent a job both in camp and under fire that when he was wounded the unit refused to release him. They would rather have him convalescent than anyone else in the best of health. This sort of thing is gratifying.

So far, so good. The danger in the future lies in this, that we will not put into our parochial lives the same values and virtues that have won such respect for God and Church in camp and on the battlefield. The real danger is, as Bishop Sherrill once pointed out, that it is too bad it takes a war to bring men to do what they should do in peace time. I am thinking of four things.

First of all, the utter lack of parochialism. A man growing up in a parish seems to have the idea that his clergyman is primarily the shepherd of the sheep that are in the fold and doesn't have much concern for the goats on the outside. There are reasons why a parish priest should give this impression, for after all he can't spend all his time running after the goats, for the sheep must be fed. And if he follows the procedure of one of the best of our parish priests in starting in on his fall work by calling on all those who pledge and then getting around later to those who don't, no one can blame him. But in the camp, men see that the parish extends to every man in uniform. His parish and his world are for once coterminus.

SECONDLY, in the armed forces narrow sectarianism is done away. Clergy of every faith minister to men of every faith and they find how much they have in common. It takes no great intelligence to see that there is something utterly incongruous and wrong when people who follow the same Jesus have to worship in churches which are so often rivals in the same town. And he who has not witnessed a little mild sheep-stealing and body-snatching between various sects and parishes of the same sect has not had an experience of the Christian life as practiced in many a community.

The man in the army finds the Church is at one as he never suspected it would be or could be and he must have a new respect for the men who, in his eyes, make it so.

Thirdly, the men in the armed forces have found an unsuspected courage in the men of the cloth. I do not think that the average person believes that the clergyman is a very brave or heroic man. He is usually depicted as having a personality more nearly resembling that of Mr. Milquetoast than that of Richard the Lion-Hearted. It must be something of an eye-opener to see chaplains in the paratroops jumping with their men, chaplains in the marine corps hitting the beaches with their men, sharing the danger and sharing it unarmed. Furthermore, the soldier knows that every chaplain has volunteered. The chaplain doesn't have to be where he is. He could stay at home and be safe and look forward to enjoying his pension and dying in bed. Chaplains are not drafted and if they are found in the front lines they are there of their own free will. It is good for the men who fight to know that the men who represent religion can face fire as well as they.

Last of all, the boys in uniform find that the chaplain is concerned with their welfare and not with the budget of the Church. He is really concerned with their worship and their prayers and their trails and troubles instead of spending his time soft-soaping Mr. Moneybags, the senior warden. They see the chaplain every day and not just on Sunday, and they find out that the minister's work is seven days a week instead of only one as they often suspected.

In short, it strikes me that the chaplains have given to the Church a new outlook and a new respect. The question is this: When the war is over, will our Churches be less parochially minded and less sectarian minded and more courageous and more devoted to the life of the spirit than they have been? Will the experiences of our chaplains be carried back to their parishes? By their outlook on their work and their courage in performing the same our chaplains have added a new depth of meaning to that great phrase of the creed: "One, holy, catholic, apostolic Church." I sincerely believe that all unconsciously the men who wear the cross on their collars have given the Church a new vision of what it should be. And not to follow where they are leading but to sink back into the old ways would be one of the greatest tragedies that can befall.

The Doctrine of the Trinity. By Leonard Hodgson. Scribners. $2.50.

Before Pentecost, the disciples "had been standing outside, and peering in at the life of Christ and trying to make out just what it was all about. Now they looked out at the world around from within His life and mind." This "adoptive Sonship in Christ," giving access to the will of the Father and the power of the Spirit, is the Trinitarian experience shared by Christians in all generations. It is the emperical datum from which all Trinitarian theology has been developed. The author illustrates this with the thought of Augustine, Thomas Aquinas and Calvin. The Trinity is the factual experience of all Christians. Theology clarifies it intellectually and warns against its distortion.

In that perennial difficulty, the relation of Trinity to Unity, Professor Hodgson makes a unique contribution. Even the above named great thinkers assumed that undifferentiated, mathematical unity is the only kind of unity that exists. Most of their self-contradictions arose from this. But there is in creation another kind of unity, organic unity, " 'internally constitutive unity,' that is to say, a unity which by the intensity of its unifying power unifies distinct elements in the whole." The orthodox formula for the Trinity, "Three Persons in one Substance," involves this kind of unity. We can now grasp the idea, because modern biology has shown it to us as the principle which unifies all organisms, from plants to men.

"Adoptive Sonship" and "organic unity" are two great ideas; perhaps that is all we may ask from one book! Yet Professor Hodgson tantalises us with a few indications of the relation of these ideas to the organic doctrine of the Church and to Christian social thinking. This needs further development. And no economic implications are brought out in the chapter of Trinitarian religion. All through the book there is still too much emphasis on individual apprehension, where the experiences of parish fellowship and the Liturgical Movement would be far more pertinent. But it remains a great book, imperative for the clergy and (most of it) edifyingly legible to serious laity.

Religion for Today. By A. J. William Myers. Association Press. $2.00.

This book is "an essay in the philosophy of religious education" and is written from a liberal point of view—in fact, it is uncompromisingly liberal. The author is determined to apply religion to social conditions, and this is really the main thing in religious education, for him. He seems to have a very inadequate view of the Church. Instead of the term "the body of Christ," he holds that "corporation of Christ" is much nearer the meaning and "everyone who wishes may be a full member and vital factor in that corporation." Yes, but it is something more than that.

Archbishop of Athens Is Loved By People of Greece

First Time That a Leader of Greek Church Is Chosen to Fill High Political Office

Edited by Rita Rubin

New York: — Appointment of Metropolitan Demaskinos, Archbishop of Athens, as regent of Greece marks the first time since the establishment of Hellenic independence in 1830 that a leader of the Greek Orthodox Church has been chosen to fill a high political office. One of the most powerful and best-loved figures in Greece today, Archbishop Demaskinos consistently defied German authorities. The calm, black-bearded prelate not only protested deportations of Greek workers and execution of hostages, but on two occasions offered to let the Nazi authorities take his life and those of his clergy in an attempt to save his people from the hostage system.

Shortly before the Germans withdrew from Athens, they announced they would shoot 50 hostages as a reprisal for sabotage. The victims were already selected when Archbishop Demaskinos, with fifty bishops and priests, went to the execution place and offered their lives instead of the hostages. The Germans quickly decided it was unnecessary to carry out the planned execution. Thousands of Greeks, numerous British officers, and many Jews are said to owe their lives to the Archbishop's intervention with the Germans. He supervised the work of helping and protecting the destitute people of Athens; more than 3,000 families whose menfolk were shot were being cared for by the church at one time.

The Greek prelate had been in bad standing with the Germans since he refused, in November 1942, to swear in the puppet regime of Premier Logothetopoulos, and authorities were forced to call in a clergyman of lesser rank to perform the ceremony. Demaskinos was linked to the refusal of 600 Greek clergymen in the summer of 1943, to announce anti-Semitic decrees in their churches. The response of the Greek priests to an order by the German commander in Athens to promulgate new anti-Jewish regulations was to preach sermons exhorting their congregations to treat the Jews with justice, tenderness and consideration.

Shortly before assuming the regency, Archbishop Demaskinos made it clear that his acceptance of the post would be dependent on his being permitted to exercise his powers in an unbiased fashion unhampered by the demands of any warring faction or political party. He also made it evident that his role of supreme national leader in no way implies intrusion of the Church in state affairs.

The Archbishop's stand was foreshadowed several weeks ago when he issued a message banning all political activities by clergymen under his jurisdiction, and threatening ecclesiastical penalties against priests who interfered in public affairs.

Demaskinos was possibly the only man of great stature acceptable to reactionary monarchy elements in Greece and to the courageous Greek patriots. With the British concession of a plebiscite for the Greek people, it is hoped that a unified Greek government under Demaskinos will point toward the fulfillment of the Teheran declaration.

Syrian Orthodox Church

New York: — The Syrian Antiochian Orthodox Church has announced that effective January 5, 1945, it will withdraw from membership in the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. The decision was conveyed in a letter to the executive committee of the Federal Council by Metropolitan Anthony Bashir, Archbishop of the Syrian Orthdox Archdiocese of New York and all North America.

Reason for the Church's action, the letter stated, is "the possibility that membership in the Council might be thrown open to certain other religious organizations which do not regard belief in the divinity of Christ as a required article of faith."

It is believed here that the significant motive for the resignation of the Syrian Orthodox Church's action was the membership in the Federal Council of the Russian Orthodox Church of America, headed by Metropolitan Theophilus, who is hostile to the Church in Russia. Metropolitan Antony of the Syrian Church has maintained cordial relations with Metropolitan Benjamin, official Russian exarch of the Aleutian Islands and North America who is seeking to reconcile Theophilus with the Moscow patriarchate.

Heads Department

London (by wireless):—The Rev. J. Hutchison Cockburn, former moderator of the Church of Scotland, has been appointed British secretary of the department of reconstruction and inter-church aid of the World Council of Churches. It is expected that he will be head international secretary of this department. Cockburn leaves for Geneva headquarters in March.

Archbishop of Canterbury

London (by wireless):—The Rt. Rev. Geoffrey Francis Fisher, Bishop of London, is being mentioned here as likely to become Archbishop of Canterbury, to succeed the late Dr. William Temple. Appointment of a new primate is made by the King, as head of the Church of England, on advice of the prime minister, as provided by statute.

Creation of a headquarters staff for the Archbishopric of Canterbury has been urged by the Anglican Bishop of Chelmsford, Dr. Henry A. Wilson. He described the proposal as "one of the reforms most needed in the Church, since the holder of the see is burdened with immensely important duties." Bishop Wilson suggested that the council's function be to watch the general Church situation, advise on necessary reforms, study developments and plan action. It should not, he added, include the bishops, who are already fully occupied with administrative matters.

Russian Christmas

Moscow (by wireless): — Elaborate preparations are being made by the Moscow cathedral and other churches here for the celebration of Christmas, which will be ushered in at midnight services on January 6, according to the tradition of the Eastern Orthodox Church. The cost of decorating the churches is being met jointly by the Moscow city Soviet and local congregations. Indications are that this will be Russia's best Christmas since the war began. Carloads of Christmas trees are being shipped here from all parts of the Soviet Union. A special attraction will be an open-air Christmas tree party in the Hermitage Gardens near Pushkin Square. School children have been urged to prepare miniature trees and attend in carnival costumes. Christmas carols will be sung in Sverdlo Square and other public places.

In Leningrad, a highlight of the holiday season will be a children's masquerade ball in the House of Pioneers. Reports from Sverdlovsk and other Ural centers also indicate widespread interest in Christmas plans.

celebrations have already been held. Foreign residents, including Polish, French and other Roman Catholics attended Christmas mass in the American Church in Moscow, and subsequently attended receptions and parties at various legations and embassies.

Returns to Paris

London (by wireless):—The Rev. Frederick W. Beekman has arrived here en route to Paris where he is to resume his pastorate as dean of the American Cathedral of Holy Trinity, having spent more than four years in America. "Our primary goal remains a twofold one," says Mr. Beekman, "to offer all courtesies of the Cathedral to American officers, chaplains, and enlisted personnel on duty or leave in Paris, and to take care spiritually of all Americans in Paris regardless of denomination." American troops and chaplains are already using the cathedral in large numbers.

Large Delegation

Cleveland: — When the national study conference on the Churches and a just and durable peace meets here, January 16-19, the Episcopal Church will be represented by 26 delegates. Those announced by the Presiding Bishop are Bishop Scarlett, Bishop Hobson, Bishop Remington, Bishop Oldham, Bishop Sterrett, Bishop B. D. Tucker, Dean Emerson, Rev. S. B. Harbach, Rev. C. Avery Mason, Mr. Henry K. Craft, Judge Hubert Delany, Mr. Harvey Firestone, Miss Avis Harvey, Miss Lucy Mason, Mrs. William G. Mather, Judge James J. Parker, Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, Mr. Louis M. Washburn, Mr. Paul B. Anderson, Dr. Clark G. Kuebler, Rev. Almon R. Pepper, Mrs. Clinton S. Quin, Mr. Spencer Miller Jr., Rev. Clifford L. Samuelson, Rev. William G. Gehri, Rev. William H. Marmion, Rev. Howard Melish. The total number of delegates is expected to be 321. Two commissions have been set-up — one to study the international situation in the light of the guiding principles and the six pillars of peace and another to study the basic problem of the peace strategy of the churches. Professor William E. Hocking of Harvard is the chairman of the first commission while the Rev. Walter M. Horton is the chairman of the second. Mr. John Foster Dulles is the chairman of the entire conference.

Pulpit Exchange

Cambridge: — The Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship and the Evangelical Education Society has sent a letter to the clergy urging that Sunday, January 14, be observed by an exchange of pulpits with the Presbyterial Church.

Flys from Africa

New York:—Indicating an improvement in Bishop Kroll's health, a cable has been received from Liberia stating that he and Mrs. Kroll will arrive here about January 17 by plane.

Free Government

New York: — Spain must have a government free from tyranny and dictatorship and based upon the "consent of the governed" declared the Rev. John LaFarge, editor of America, Jesuit weekly. Anticipating a republic or a monarchy, the editor called for a strong government of the people which will recognize human rights, guarantee the "innate rights of minority groups" and solve the "immense Spanish land problem." As to the attitude of the Spanish hierarchy he asserted that "reliable sources of information" were behind reports last summer

To Every Faithful Member of the Church

To fulfill her work for a better world at peace, the Church needs many more ministers.

To train them is the great task of the Church's seminaries.

For this they need your generous support. There is no more worthy and far-reaching cause to which you can give.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 21st

is the appointed day for contributions.

This advertisement is provided in the interest of all our Church seminaries by the following institutions:

that the Roman Catholic bishops in Spain regard the Franco regime as a temporary expedient and would not oppose even a republic provided it were free of communist control.

Buy Bonds

New York:—The National Council bought $770,500 in war bonds during the sixth loan drive.

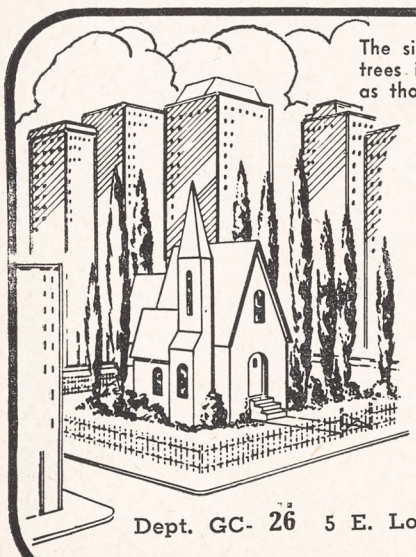
Leads Quiet Day

Berkeley, Calif.:—Bishop Lewis of Nevada led a quiet day at the opening of the second term at the Church Divinity School of the Pacific.

Joins Conference

New York:—The committee on friendly relations among foreign students, an interdenominational group sponsored by the Y.M.C.A., has applied for membership in the foreign missions conference. Secretary Louis E. Wolferz said that it was desirable in order to "link us more closely to Church groups." He also forecast closer relations between churches and foreign students and said that his committee plans to work with mission boards as a clearing house for information on schools, relate the students to churches, youth groups and camps. It was also stated that the number of foreign students in American colleges will probably increase from the present 8,000 to 20,000 in the first years after the war.

European Relief



New York:—The department of relief and reconstruction of the World Council of Churches has now been set up in Geneva, declared the Rev. A. L. Warnshuis, foreign councellor of the committee declared upon his return from England, France and Switzerland. He declared that British churches do not look for aid from America in rebuilding but that on the continent our aid will be required to provide temporary buildings and later to help in building permanent structures.

Survey Area

Inkster, Mich.: — Parishioners of several Detroit churches, Negro and white, joined in a survey of 850 homes in Inkster to ascertain church affiliations. The area covered included the Carver Homes, a war housing project inhabited by Negro war workers and their families. The survey was initiated by St. Clement's Church in Inkster, to determine the extent and kind of services the Episcopal Church could offer the community. Bishop Frank W. Creighton said, "While hopeful that it will increase our own work in members and strength, our chief reason for this survey is an evangelistic effort on behalf of the Christian religion, and others may benefit as well as the Episcopal Church."

Many Bishops

Charlotte, N. C.:—The diocese of North Carolina can point with pride to its record as a mother of bishops. The present Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Edwin A. Penick was elected while rector of St. Peter's, Charlotte. Bishop Robert E. Gribbin was rector of St. Paul's, Winston-Salem when elected to be bishop of Western North Carolina. Bishop John Long Jackson of Louisiana was rector of St. Martin's, Charlotte. Bishop John Moore Walker of Atlanta is a former rector of St. Peter's, Charlotte. Bishop Elwood Haines of Iowa was formerly executive secretary for the diocese of North Carolina. Bishop Reginald Mallett, recently consecrated for Northern Indiana, was once rector of Holy Trinity, Greensboro. The late Bishop Joseph B. Cheshire was rector of St. Peter's, Charlotte, when he was elected bishop. The late Bishop Henry B. Delany had been in charge of Negro parishes as arch-

Plastics in Church Lighting

Rambusch Lantern No. 11-G-165, first made for St. Francis of Assisi Church, New York City, has proved so popular that mass production methods are being installed. Costs are down to one-half and shipping costs are down even more. This lantern marks a new development in the science of church interior illumination in that it departs from the use of metal framework and adopts a more practical and serviceable material. The new lantern frames are made from a ligno-cellulose product which is durable, non-corrosive, easy to transport, assemble and install. The new diffusing material is plastic. It is shipped in flat sheets and bent into cylindrical form during assembly.

deacon in a number of the southern dioceses, including North Carolina, prior to his consecration as Suffragan. At one time in the diocese, Bishops Gribbin, Jackson, Walker, Haines and Mallett were all rectors of parishes serving under Bishop Penick.

Use Radio

New York:—A joint radio committee to promote religious programs with professional talent has been organized by the Methodist, Presbyterian and Congregational-Christian Churches. Network and local station officials also are serving on the committee. It is planned also to sponsor seminars to train clergymen and educators in the use of radio.

Resist Nazis

Stockholm (by wireless):—137 rebel Lutheran clergymen are in prison or have been expelled from their parishes by German occupation authorities in Norway, according to the latest reports. Ten clergymen have been arrested in the last few weeks in the face of protests and open demonstrations by members of their parish churches. In many instances, it was charged, arrests or expulsions took place without any evidence to support such action.

Even clergymen "ordained" by the Quisling-controlled Church department are feeling uneasy, and are said to be resigning their posts.

Dean Johan M. Wisloeff, 70 year old leader of Norway's Inner Mission Society, has died in the Grini concentration camp near Oslo. Father of Vicar H. E. Wisloeff, a member of the Norwegian Provisional Church Council, Dean Wisloeff was arrested by the Germans in November, 1943.

Dean H. K. Hein of Grena, Norway, who was arrested last September is now being used as a "train hostage." The 49 year old clergyman is among several prominent Danish leaders who are frequently forced to ride, hand-cuffed, behind barred windows in the forward cars of troop transport trains, to forestall sabotage by Danish patriots.

English Bishops

London:—Failure of a United States army chaplain to understand the signature "Geoffrey London" gives the press bureau of the Church of England a chance to be jocular as well as to pass out some useful advice about the customs of British ecclesiastics and of a few on this side of the Atlantic. Said the press bureau: "One of our Church periodicals has been telling its readers of the perplexity of a U.S.A. chaplain who on receiving an invitation signed "Geoffrey London," to dine at Fulham Palace with other chaplains was at a loss to know whom his hospitable correspondent might be and asked a friend if he knew anything of a Mr. London who was evidently in the cinema industry as he wrote from The Palace, Fulham.

"Such a misunderstanding is quite natural in the case of a visitor from overseas. Indeed quite a number of our own countrymen seem to be unaware of the custom, dating from the days before the use of surnames became general, which ordains that instead of signing their names in the ordinary way bishops should employ an official signature composed of their Christian names, or the initials, followed by the designation (often abbreviated) of their see. Thus "Geoffrey London" signifies simply Geoffrey (Bishop of) London, just as 'Edward Lichfield' and 'E. W. Birmingham' are the official signatures of the bishops of Lichfield and Birmingham.

"Some Bishops use after their Christian name an abbreviation of

Disband Societies

Paris (by wireless):—Members of the French national assembly have demanded dissolution of two reputedly anti-Semitic organizations formed in France since the liberation. The organizations named are the national inter-cooperative association for commerce, industry, and craftsmanship; and the French directors association. The first is accused of publishing material designed to arouse public opinion against Jews claiming restitution of possessions confiscated by Germans. The other is charged with openly waging a campaign to have controllers now in charge of Jewish possession maintained in their posts.

MR. RICHARD T. HALL
Layman of Gloucester, Mass.

Despite the undoubted sincerity of many who are now preaching brotherhood with respect to Jews and Negroes, the overall picture presents itself to me as an incongruous one, for there are those who seem to fear that a campaign of hatred at home will weaken the war effort; an effort which necessarily involves hatred against the Axis. In all this we may perhaps read the lesson that hatred simply does not pay in the end. Those who would make war find that the group conscious side of human nature which they emphasize and use in their war-making is now being turned against themselves. The wisdom of man is foolishness to God.

THE RT. REV. BENJAMIN M. WASHBURN

THE WITNESS (Nov. 30) calls attention to the excellent new combination Prayer Book and Hymnal published by the Oxford Press. Under its royalty agreement with the Church Pension Fund the Oxford Press used duplicate electro-type plates prepared, supplied and paid for by the Church Hymnal Corporation. The Church is in many ways indebted to Oxford Press but credit for the solution of a different typographical problem in the arrangement of the melody edition of the Hymnal belongs to Canon Douglas and to Miss Little of the Hymnal Corporation instead of to the Oxford Press as your review seems to imply.

THE REV. ALLEN BROWN
Rector of Christ Church, Hudson, N. Y.

I have just seen your editorial Reformed Catholic Church (Nov. 23) and want to thank you for it as an example of the sane, centripetal type of thinking of which more is needed in the Episcopal Church. I feel you should have been as emphatic for loyalty to those doctrines of the Church specifically maintained in the 16th century as for the repudiation of those doctrines it "specifically repudiates." Of course that was implied in the editorial. Neither wing of the Church has been alone in practicing partisanship or in the "undoing of a man's life work six months after he was gone." Most of us have contributed to this divisiveness in the Church but it is not too late for all of us to start working for a new spirit of unity within the Episcopal Church. When we have that we can talk about unity with those outside.

MR. J. MAVER FEEHAN
Layman of St. Louis

Joan Bradley (WITNESS, Nov. 30) in dealing with Negroes raises the usual red herring of intermarriage. The plaintive wail designed to tighten the heart strings of parents everywhere "Would you want a member of your family to marry a Negro?," presenting this well worn argument with the inference that someone is going to make white girls marry Negro boys. Has Mrs. Bradley forgotten that it is still quite possible for any girl to reject a proposal of marriage whether it comes from white, black or yellow man? Naturally regardless of race equality one would expect young women to continue to exercise the same privilege. Can we blame the Negro entirely for the fact that a very high percentage of them have white blood in their veins? They did not get this by rubbing elbows socially with whites. Could this have been entirely due to the "immoral Negro"?

MISS ESTHER FIFIELD
Churchwoman of Lockland, Ohio

It is invariably a shock to read a letter like the one (WITNESS, Nov. 30) on Negroes and to realize that there are people, not only in the United States but in the Church, whose racial beliefs so closely resemble Hitler's. It is ironic that such a person lives in the city of brotherly love and that she claims to be a follower of Christ who said, "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." He forgot to put the word "white" before the word "men." I have worked intimately with Negroes for 14 years and have never experienced facts which would justify her sweeping statements about the Negro people. I have also read widely on the subject of race and know that scientists deny her alleged claims. Much as we of the white group would like to feel superior we have little basis upon which to base our feelings.

ANSWER: Discussion of Mrs. Bradley's letter is now closed.

WHY GO TO CHURCH?

By DAVID K. MONTGOMERY

A Book for Laymen. Why go to Church is a perennial topic and the Reverend David K. Montgomery has written a very enlightening and readable book on this topic. We go to Church but for one reason—to Worship. "To worship means to give the best that you have, and the best that you are, to the best that you know."

Many people, says the author, lack reality in their church-going and the reason for this is that the Holy Spirit has not penetrated their lives. You will find this book modern in the sense that it discusses men and women of today — their relationship to one another and their relationship to God. Price, $2.25

THIS MEANS OF GRACE

By JOHN S. HIGGINS

"This Means of Grace is an attempt to illuminate, for Anglicans and non-Anglicans, the greatest service in our Prayer Book, the Holy Communion. It goes forth with the prayer that many will find new meanings in the lines and between the lines of our incomparable Liturgy, now tested by English-speaking peoples for almost four centuries." These are the words of the author and they express adequately what this book is about. The better we understand the service of the Holy Communion the better Christians we shall be. Clergymen will find this book a fine teaching medium on the Holy Communion. Price, $2.00

AND WAS CRUCIFIED

PRAYER AND THE SERVICE OF GOD

By DANIEL JENKINS

"Does it really matter whether or not I say my prayers? He Who made us for communion with Himself cannot remain indifferent when we spurn His fellowship and try to live as though He were not there."—Daniel Jenkins.

A modern book which faces some of the questions and difficulties which present themselves to those who find it hard to maintain the life of prayer in the stress of this grim and confused twentieth century.

Prayer and Faith; God's Will and Our Prayers; Prayer and the Bible; Prayer and the Church are some of the chapter headings.

Peace Proposals Are Endorsed By Church Commission

Commission on Social Reconstruction Holds Meeting to Discuss Many Important Issues

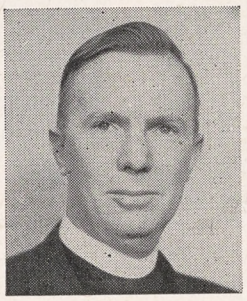
By Rita Rubin

Washington: — The Commission on Social Reconstruction of the Church held an off-the-record conference at the College of Preachers, January 4-7, under the chairmanship of Bishop Scarlett of Missouri. There was one important action however that was not off the record—a statement released on the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals which was given out after lengthy discussion. The statement is as follows:

"The Joint Commission on Social Reconstruction, acting on its instructions by General Convention, reports to the Church as follows:

"1. Responsible use of the great power and influence of the United States of America in international relationships is, in our judgment, a primary necessity for the maintenance of the justice, order and peace of the world in the immediate future. The Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, agreed to by representatives of the United States, the United Kingdom, the Soviet Union and China, offer a forward looking plan representing the widest area of agreement yet achieved by the four Great Powers on a general organization making for world stability. The support of these Proposals seems to us the first step toward a just and durable peace.

"2. These proposals have grown out of the common interests and tasks of the United Nations. They carry into the post-war era an association already established through cooperation in war. This association, existing to win the war, must be continued to win the peace; with provision for expansion and modification as experience dictates, ultimately reaching out toward universality through the inclusion of neutral and enemy states.



"We agree with the statement of the President that 'Perfectionism, no less than isolationism or imperialism or power politics may obstruct the paths to international peace.' We think that an irresponsible idealism under the guise of Christianity which will not submit to the discipline of the achievable will ultimately give support to the isolationism so deeply rooted in many citizens and so dangerous to the peace of the world.

"3. In the near future a general United Nations Conference will be called at which the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals will be used as the basis of discussion in preparing the Charter for the new organization. Our representatives at that Conference must know where our people stand and will need evidence of substantial support for their efforts.

"4. We therefore commend the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals to our fellow Churchmen for immediate study, and we urge that as citizens they support the basic principles and machinery outlined in the Proposals."

While it is not possible to report the addresses or the discussion we can present the program and the names of those who attended. Bishop Reifsnider, in charge of the work for Japanese Americans of our Church, spoke on his work and the situation among these people at this time. President Bowman of Johns Hopkins University, now a member of the state department who was one of the American representatives at the Dumbarton Oaks conference, told of the efforts being made to build an international peace structure. The Hon. Francis B. Sayre, legal consultant to UNNRA, presented his opinions as to how Germany should be treated following victory. Bishop Penick of North Carolina and the Rev. John Burgess of Cincinnati spoke on Negro-white relationships. President Stringfellow Barr of St. John's College, Annapolis, Md., presented his ideas on religious education. Dr. Eduard Heimann of the New School in New York, spoke on man and the state, while the final session was a two hour conference with Vice-President Wallace. There was also an informal meeting one afternoon with Congressman Jerry Voorhis of California. A tip-top program certainly.

Attending the conference of the commission on social reconstruction at the College of Preachers were the Rev. Phillips Osgood, president of the House of Deputies, Bishop Carruthers of South Carolina and the Rev. John Burgess of Cincinnati

Those attending the conference in addition to the speakers were Bishop Scarlett, Bishop Carruthers of South Carolina, Bishop Tucker of Ohio, Bishop Carpenter of Alabama, Bishop Dun of Washington, Bishop Loring of Maine, Prof. William J. Battle of Austin, Texas, Mr. W. Dewey Cooke of Georgia, Mr. Milton P. Fuller of Kansas, the Rev. John Higgins of Minneapolis, the Rev. Robert O. Kevin of Virginia, Dean Arthur Lichtenberger of Newark, the Rev. A. T. Mollegen of Virginia, the Rev. Phillips Osgood of Boston, the Rev. Charles F. Penniman of Wilmington, the Rev. Almon R. Pepper of New York, the Rev. William B. Spofford of New York, the Rev Clifford Stanley of St. Louis, the Rev. Anson Phelps Stokes Jr. of Columbus, the Rev. Theodore Wedel of Washington.

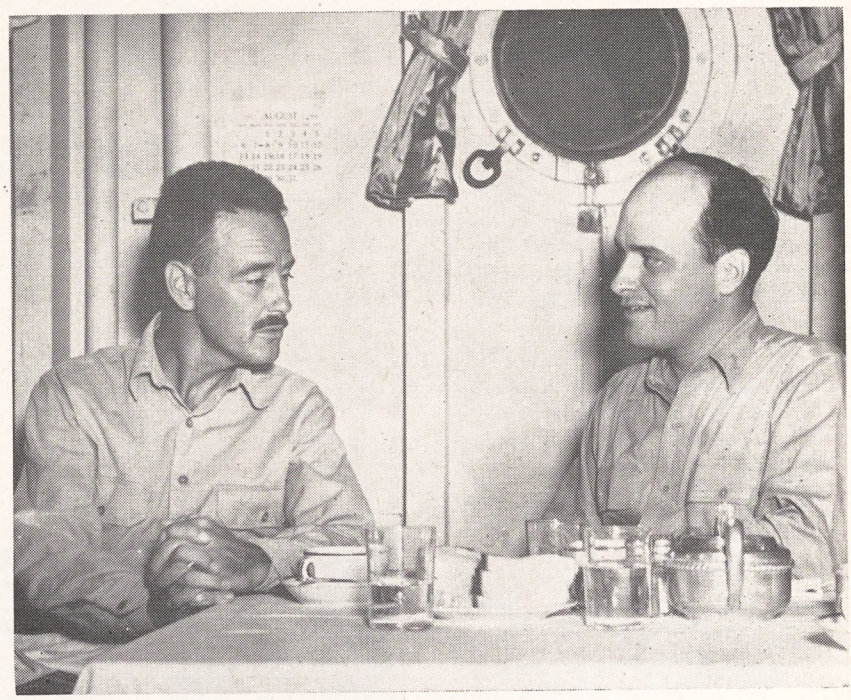
CONFERENCE ON UNITY IN WASHINGTON

By Theodore Wedel,
Warden of the College of Preachers



Washington: — A notable conference on Christian union met at the College of Preachers in the closing days of December, the fifth to be held in successive years. Men and women representing the major Protestant communions of America came together to share their concern for Christian unity, though no pronouncements were expected, nor unity documents produced. Those attending spoke as individuals and not as negotiators for their respective Churches. Sponsorship was shared by the College of Preachers and the committee in America representing the World Council of Churches.

The conference was made up, as in former years, from three main groupings—secretaries of the Federal Council of Churches; secretaries or other representatives of city or state Church federations; representatives of denominational councils.

No summary can here be given of the dozen papers read nor of the animated discussions thereby provoked, though it is expected that some of the papers will later be published. The first evening was devoted to "Crucial corporate tasks confronting the Church," with addresses by the Rev. F. E. Reissig of the Washington Federation and the Rev. Luman Shafer of the department of international justice of the Federal Council. The next major topic was "Bringing the denominational order to grips with these tasks," with Bishop Angus Dun and Bishop Ivan Lee Holt of the Methodist Church presenting the essays. The Rev. John Harms of the Chicago Federation and the Rev. Hermann N. Morse of the Presbyterian board of missions then discussed "Bringing the council system to grips with these tasks."

Later in the conference the Rev. Charles Clayton Morrison, editor of the Christian Century, viewed the whole ecumenical problem facing Protestant Christianity in a paper on "Bringing the total Christian movement to grips with these tasks." The program, as can be noted from this list of themes, aimed to give a survey of the ecumenical scene beginning from the local and denominational interests and ascending to a total view.

Lew Ayers, former movie star, now a chaplain's assistant eats a meal in the Pacific with Chaplain Richard L. Harbour, formerly rector at Warrensburg, Missouri. Ayers got his fame as an actor by taking leading parts in anti-war pictures after world war one. He was first a C. O. in this war and went to a C. O. camp. Later he volunteered for non-combative service and distinguished himself by heroism in the Pacific. He is to study for the ministry after the war

The last day of the conference was spent in dealing with two large topics. Papers by the Rev. H. Paul Douglass and the Rev. Clarence T. Craig of Oberlin College dealt with "Growing agreement in the Christian faith." The closing talk was an unforgettable one by the Rev. A. L. Warnshuis who had landed only a few days before from a journey to Geneva, Switzerland, for consultation on behalf of American Churches with the home office of the World Council of Churches. His picture of the suffering and heroism of European churchmen in England, Holland, France, Germany, Norway, stimulated much interest. America, so he told us, is today the "old" world. A new world is to be built in Europe. And the Church is at the center of this fresh world born out of tragedy and outward defeats. Christian unity has marched with great strides towards its goal in the suffering European world. Christians rediscover their oneness in Christ in the face of a common enemy.

The conference this year more than ever is a heartening sign of the times. No one sees the future in rosy colors. Non-Roman Christianity in fact was acknowledged to be in a humble mood, in some ways almost defeatist. The faults of Protestantism were openly described even as over against Rome. Yet out of this very sharing of grave concern and of sometimes severe self-condemnation, there came, in this conference, a thrilling sense of unity. The Church as the body of Christ, with powers scarcely yet tested, is looming large on all sides as a rediscovered fact of Christian faith and life. And this Church is and ever must be one Church. Christ is not divided. All who confess Christ as Lord and Saviour are one in ultimate faith. They are one in the possession of the Holy Spirit. In their divided institutional embodiments, so Dr. Morrison persuasively argued, churchmen of the many "Churches" have robbed the one Church of its

Noted Jewish Author Answers Charges Against Jews

Mr. Sigmund Livingston Says the Solution of Problem Lies Largely with Christians

By W. B. Spofford

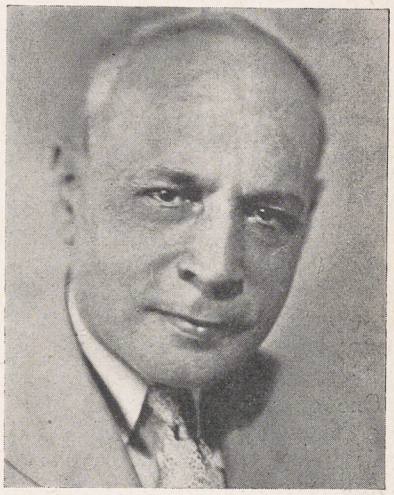
New York: — David R. Hunter, in his article on meeting racial tensions (WITNESS, Nov. 30), told of an experiment made at a diocesan youth conference when the young people were asked to state their reasons for disliking Jews. According to Mr. Hunter, a "combination of misleading truth, definite untruth, and the sin that doth so easily beset all of us" was the result.

Letters commenting on Mr. Hunter's article have been appearing in THE WITNESS ever since — some agreeing with the children's charges, some refuting them, and many asking for competent, satisfactory discussion. Our own editors are capable, we believe, of answering the questions, but we felt it would be interesting to interview an outstanding Jewish leader. So we called upon the author of a new book on anti-Semitism, Must Men Hate? Mr. Sigmund Livingston, who is chairman of the Anti-Defamation League of the B'nai B'rith.

We told Mr. Livingston that some of our readers felt that it was up to the Jews themselves to solve the problem of anti-Semitism. It brought a smile to his face. "The solution or amelioration of anti-Semitism lies with the Christians," he answered. "The Jew can never solve this age-old problem. This conclusion has been reached by most eminent sociologists, both Christian and Jewish. Their opinion is shared by outstanding Christian scholars in other fields. I think all will agree that those charged as witches could never have eradicated the belief in witchcraft, regardless of personal good conduct. The accused witch could never prove innocence by denial under oath, for who would believe a witch? It was the vigorous struggle of good men with stout hearts which finally convinced the masses that witchcraft was a delusion and that there were, in fact, no witches."

Mr. Livingston went on to say that if the charges which cause anti-Semitism are based on fact, then certainly they can be eradicated. "If, however," he declared, "a charge is founded not upon fact but results from delusion, then the victim can only try to eradicate the delusion from the minds of men."

But the victim cannot eradicate the delusion himself. "It has been pointed out time and again that not the Jew, but the Christian is able to convince the masses that they suffer from delusions," he said. "Jews, after all, are human, with the frailties common to humankind. To hold him culprit for the faults common to humankind is one of the important factors in this struggle."



"We deal with a psychological problem," according to Livingston. "Through the centuries, there developed a stereotype of the Jew which lodged in the mind of the masses. It is primary in the subconscious and it becomes active when it meets a single Jew who affirms or supports the stereotype. Immediately, there follows the perversion of reasoning from the particular to the universal."

One of the accusations used most often, and employed by all professional anti-Semites, is the tale that the Jews have an international conspiracy to upset Christian civilization and to rule the world. The infamous "Protocols of the Elders of Zion" (proven to be a fraudulent forgery) was written expressly to further anti-Semitism. Some people seem to feel that in order to disprove this charge, the Jew should withdraw from all public activities, take no part in politics, just be quiet and behave himself. We asked Mr. Livingston what he thought about this.

"I feel that the anti-Semites would immediately say that this proves the accusation," he replied, "that the Jews have withdrawn from the public eye; they disregard all public duty; they appear to be very good just for the purpose of carrying out this nefarious conspiracy; that in this manner they expect to divert suspicion from their unholy design. The denial of any such conspiracy by Jews is of no avail because anyone so stupid as to believe this charge would give no credence to a denial by the Jews. This is a good example of how every popular accusation could be analyzed and it be shown that the corrective must be either by or with the help of Christians."

We went on to present some of the specific charges we had received and asked Mr. Livingston to discuss their origin and degree of truth. "What about the charge that Jews are isolationists and will not mix with other people?" we inquired.

"Who is at fault?" asked Mr. Livingston. "The Jew is not received in Gentile country clubs nor in most of the city clubs; nor in many exclusive resorts; nor in social groups; in college fraternities; in finishing schools for girls; in certain hotels; as tenants in apartment buildings; in restricted residential districts. In all these cases the individual Jew is not excluded because of personal disqualifications, but solely because he happens to be a Jew. I am convinced that were Jews admitted to membership under the considerations pertaining to Gentiles, there would be no Jewish country or city club, nor would there be residential districts disproportionately inhabited by Jews. Is it fair to make this charge and at the same time bar his association with non-Jews? No one argues that social institutions should be open to all Jews regardless of social standing or character, but Jews should not be excluded merely because they are Jews. As long as this condition exists, the charge should not be made that they are isolationists, refusing to mix with other people."

Mr. Sigmund Livingston answers many questions that have been raised about his own people

We commented that a lot of people believe that all or most shyster lawyers are Jews. What did he think about this?

"There are shysters who are Jews," he replied. "There are Gentiles who are shysters. No one has ever calculated the percentage of the undesirable in the legal profession or determined the preponderance of Jews. I do know, however, that Jewish lawyers as a general rule have enviable reputations for ethical conduct and worth. In almost every large city there are Jewish lawyers who are leaders at the bar."

"I wish," he smiled, "that there were no Jew who could ever be classified as a shyster. I must be realistic, however, and know that they are subject to the frailties common to all classes. I also know that if a person happens to have had the misfortune of coming into contact with a shyster lawyer who happens to be a Jew, the mental process before-mentioned immediately takes place, namely, that all Jewish lawyers are shysters."

"What about this idea that they are merciless in driving Gentile competition out of business?" we asked. Mr. Livingston didn't know of any statistics on this point, but said he was confident from his own observation that the opposite was more likely to be true, since many Gentiles prefer to trade with a Gentile merchant.

One of our readers wrote in to say that the Jews disdain to earn their living with their own hands. Here Mr. Livingston did have statistics, which appear in his book, proving that a quarter of the union carpenters in New York are Jews; one-fifth of the electrical workers; nearly half of the painters and paper hangers; half the plasterers; nearly half the plumbers and steam fitters; more than half the sheet metal workers. "There are also quite a large number of Jews in agricultural pursuits," he said. "The accusation which you mention is another generality accepted without investigation. It may be quite true that the proclivity of Jews is in mercantile vocations. In view of the fact that until about a century ago, the Jews were in most countries forbidden to own or cultivate land and to join the labor guilds, it was natural that they try to make their living as small tradesmen."

One of the latest charges is that the Jews have taken over the motion picture industry and degraded it. "Of course this is false," Livingston replied proudly. "The Jews did not take over this industry; they created it. American motion pictures have an enviable world-wide reputation. The charge that they have degraded the industry, I am certain, is not true. The product has been of high class. Occasionally there have been products subject to criticism. But to say that the industry has been degraded is a charge which cannot be established and is entirely untrue."

"Someone charged that the Jews have for the most part abandoned their own religion together with all standards of morals and manners," we told him.

"This charge is so unrealistic as to require very little answer," he replied. "The percentage of churchgoers among Protestants and among Jews very likely does not differ greatly. A professional anti-Semite might, of course, make such a charge, but such a one is reckless in statements and invents new charges and accusations as required." As far as morals and manners are concerned, Mr. Livingston referred us to his book for statistics of penal institutions, which show that the percentage of Jews is far below that of the general population.

Livingston admitted the charge that Jews have adopted neither Christianity nor a healthy paganism. "The basic laws of this country," he said, "guarantee freedom of religious belief and also, if you please, freedom of no belief. If the Jews are to be criticized because they have not joined the Christian faith. then their constitutional guarantee of freedom in this regard is nullified. I cannot understand how any true and loyal American can entertain any hatred concerning the operation of that which is guaranteed by the fundamental laws of our land. If this accusation against the Jews has any considerable adherence, then I certainly must conclude that it is a hatred founded and based upon religious intolerance."

The interview ended with Mr. Livingston expressing his appreciation because we came to him for the answers to the many questions we had received. "I appreciate frankness even when it conflicts with my own contentions. The serious questions or group relations will get nowhere unless we are fair, open-minded and intellectually honest. I think it is a step forward when we can discuss these questions with candor and without bitterness.

"I hope I have not burdened you too much," he said, rising. "Of course, a full and complete answer would be beyond the scope of one discussion. Each one of the criticisms made by your WITNESS readers might justify a whole thesis. I only hope that I have been somewhat helpful in answering some of their questions."

MOSCOW CRITICISM OF POPE'S ADDRESS

Moscow: — The recent attack by Pravda on the Pope's Christmas message does not preclude development of closer relations between Moscow and Rome, according to observers here who are close to Soviet officials. It is believed that certain gestures have been made by the Soviet government looking towards the time when understanding with the Vatican can be achieved, and Roman Catholic priests may enter Russia to carry on religious work.

It has been frequently stressed here that preceding any arrangement between Moscow and the Vatican, the Pope must issue an unequivocal declaration against the Nazis. Moscow's respect for anti-Fascist Catholics has increased as a result of closer contact with Russia's Polish, French and other allies. It was recently strengthened by the visit to Moscow of General Charles de Gaulle and French foreign minister Georges Bidault.

EDITORIALS

A Beginning for Peace

WE congratulate our commission on social reconstruction for the clear and timely statement issued last week on the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals (page three, this number). We are particularly happy to find a commission of the Church that acts upon its instructions by functioning between the sessions of General Convention, and we hope that it is but the first of several pronouncements that the commission might well make on vital social issues.

As for Dumbarton Oaks it surely is the task of the Church constantly to insist that the high ideals of the faith become the organizing center of life. Leaders of all Churches have affirmed that if we are to have peace it is required that we possess a clear vision of the moral law, acknowledge that God is its author, and recognize the oneness of the human race underlying all national distinctions. We have to recognize these ideals in the ordering of society, national and international, and press for their realization.

Yet in any crisis in history we are required to accept one of several possibilities, none of which match the ideal. Choices can be made only from the possibilities offered. The choice we approve must assure the greatest advance toward the ideal that can, at the same time, win the acceptance of sufficient numbers to make it effective in operation. If we of the Churches stand aside, as some are now doing on the ground that the Proposals fall short of what they call Total Christianity, then the chance is lost of pushing what today is practicable toward the ultimate ideal. Our commission makes this crystal clear. War is the violent climax of our failure to get on together; Dumbarton Oaks offers an instrument, imperfect as it may be, whereby we may get on. And we will do well to see that it is quickly endorsed and put into operation since the safety of all nations, large and small, depends upon a world system of collective security. The proposals provide that—at least the beginning. It is either that or power politics, spheres of influence and all the rest of those sinister devices that nations use when they believe that their security is threatened. Already this game is being played —Greece, Romania, Poland, Spain, and elsewhere—simply because there is no international organization to which any may appeal. It will continue to be played unless and until we undertake a definite political partnership through world organization that is dedicated to maintaining peace and security by effective collective measures.

With the commission on social reconstruction we urge you to support "the basic principles and machinery outlined in the Proposals" by writing at once to the state department and to your own senators.

"QUOTES"

THIS war will not be over when our terms of unconditional surrender are accepted by our enemies. The military conflict is just one phase of the moral struggle which we, as God's children, are called to wage against all that denies the eternal principles of justice, honesty and truth, which are essential for life. The battle will go on and in that battle attack, and attack only, will win in peace as in war. We are called to make ourselves effective in the winning of war; we are called to exert our supreme effort to fight through, and then to choose, and to be ready to struggle for the moral principles of life in the days of peace.

—Henry W. Hobson,
Bishop of Southern Ohio.

About Anti-Semitism

WE were told the story the other day of a distinguished vestryman, devout and hard-working, who listened attentively as his rector preached a carefully reasoned sermon against anti-Semitism. After the service he sought out the rector and said: "I believe that everything you said is perfectly true. But I still believe that all Jews should either be run out of this country or put in concentration camps."

We have no way of knowing how many Americans there are who throw facts and reason to one side and call for the persecution of fellow-citizens because they themselves are motivated completely by blind and stupid prejudice. We do know that it is sufficiently large to threaten the safety of the nation. We also know that there are forces in American life, as elsewhere, who cleverly use this prejudice for fascist ends.

We are therefore very happy to be able to present in this number (page five) an interview with Mr. Sigmund Livingston, a distinguished Jew in which he answers some of the most common charges brought against his people. We hope the article will be carefully read. We suggest further that the facts there presented might well be presented in sermons.

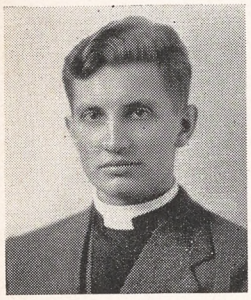
Mr. Livingston, incidentally, is the author of a new book, Must Men Hate?, published by Harpers, which merits the attention of all those who are sincerely interested in better understanding among American groups.

The New Archbishop



THE new Archbishop of Canterbury is the Rt. Rev. and Hon. Geoffrey Francis Fisher, D.D., the present Bishop of London. He is not very well known in America, but everything that is known about him is favorable. He is a scholar and a teacher, and is socially minded. It is evidence of the intention of the English Church and also of the British government to maintain the tradition established by Archbishop Temple—who was a scholar and the leading social thinker as well as the leading theologian of the English speaking world. The British are evidently no more afraid of having an out and out social thinker and leader as head of their House of Bishops than they are afraid of scholarship and learning, for which the Anglican episcopate is famous. Archbishop Fisher has been called to a great succession—may God give him the strength, courage, wisdom, and insight, to fill worthily his great office.

Religion and the Movies

by W. B. Spofford Jr.

Minister in charge of the Good Shepherd, Boston

RELIGION and art have been complementary ever since man could first experience compulsions on his energies and capabilities that did not arise from his basic, animal motivations. Religion as we know it might be described as the process and technique whereby man recognizes and declares his affinity with the ultimate realities of existence; it is a means whereby man is lifted out of himself and placed in a communal relationship with a transcendant wholeness and otherness which in essence incorporates man's individuality into itself. It is in fact the interpenetration of the natural and supernatural so that the one becomes idealized and the other becomes objectified.

And art? Well, art seems to be the expression of this relationship. It is an attempt to see the real or the divine in natural forms and to express them in perfect patterns of symmetry, balance and harmony. It is man's feeble—yet glorious—attempt to express his reality in terms of final ends and values, rather than in terms of secondary considerations. When the supernatural pole of the artistic endeavour is God (which, according to the Christian view it always is), the material expressions take on the nature of offerings to and symbols of the divine—as in the true Gothic cathedrals or in the majesty of Bach's compositions. When art is undertaken with such a reference it is closely akin to the religious spirit: it is an attempt to equate the natural and the supernatural.

I do not say that the movies as we know them are this kind of art. Motion picture production today can be classified as "big business" and consequently its moguls try to keep their corporate thumb ever on the pulse of the public pocketbook. They try to cater to expressed demands of taste. Therefore the religious reference is almost nil. When dealing with religion today's movies are rather like Adam and Eve in the garden one beautiful afternoon along towards the beginning. Having nothing better to do, they lined up every living creature and marched the whole line past the fig tree under which they were sitting. And then they named each species as it appeared before them. Finally a big, lumbering beast loomed up and Adam said, "That's going to be called a rhinoceros." With girlish glee, Eve cried, "Yes, yes, that's wonderful. But why rhinoceros?" To which, Adam replied: "Because it looks more like a rhinoceros than anything that we've seen yet." That's the cinema's approach to religion: it deals in stereotypes. Representatives of religion are either portrayed as stock comic types, like the straight-laced Protestant preacher, played by a comedian in most of the western films, or else as a happy-go-lucky, sweet individual surrounded by soft-lights, soporific music and a dog-collar, as in most of the films dealing with life in a run-down city mission. Instead of touching up reality with the supernatural reference, they take reality and change it into something that should only go on the cover of a calendar.

During the past year many millions of people saw two so-called religious films. Both were graced by some really fine acting. The first, Going My Way, dealt with life in a city mission of the Roman Catholic Church. It was an enjoyable film: Barry Fitzgerald was wonderful as the old priest who was killing himself in battling a seemingly hopeless situation and Bing Crosby made an excellent easy-going, crooning young priest. Both characters had the human touch. And yet, this picture was not a religious film—since it didn't touch reality. James Agee, the movie critic for The Nation, summed up its failure when he said: "It would have had more stature as a 'religious' film if it dared to suggest that evil is anything worse than a bad cold and that lack of self-knowledge can be not merely cute and inconvenient, but also dangerous to oneself and to others."

The second film was the star-studded Song of Bernadette: this, too, was an artistic failure. Agee characterized this one by saying: "What you have here is a tamed and pretty image, highly varnished, sensitively lighted, and exhibited behind immaculate glass, the window at once of a shrine and a box-office." And yet, both of these films were immeasurably better from a religious standpoint than anything else that has appeared—especially when compared with that other monstrosity, One Foot in Heaven, in which the Protestant minister was nothing but a petty gangster and a blackmailer, always on the lookout for a way to turn an easy dollar. This character was played by Frederic March, although Edward G. Robinson or George Raft would have felt perfectly at home in the role. So far, when dealing with specifically religious subjects, the movie makers have been able to turn out nothing but duds—albeit, duds which have a tremendous boxoffice appeal.

However, when attempting to make an honest, artistic picture, Hollywood, the United States government and other film producers do occasionally manage to come up with some mighty fine sermons. During the war we have seen some documentary films that have taken the horror of war into the field of art. I am thinking specifically of such films as Desert Victory and that horrible, yet artistic and spiritual, moment in it when the British guns opened the barrage at El Alamein in Africa; or Attack, the Battle for New Britain, in which the spectator, through the eyes of the camera, goes through a sea-borne invasion against a musical background of Rimsky-Korsakoff's Le Coq d'Or. In such films, through the intelligent use of lights and shadows, mood music and film editing, the producers have come up with condemnations of war which would put any anti-war sermon from the pulpit to shame. In a different artistic sphere these documentaries match the power of Tolstoi's War and Peace and Humphrey Cobb's Paths of Glory.

LIKEWISE in fictional presentations, the moviemakers have often come through handsomely. In the Ox-Bow Incident, Hollywood has portrayed the Christian doctrine of sin as effectively as anything that I have ever read. In this film, which deals with the lynching of three innocent men accused of cattle-rustling, man the sinner is portrayed in all of his horror. In it some twenty odd individuals come up to a soul-making or soul-breaking choice and, almost unanimously, they choose the evil side. The feeling of compulsion diving them towards evil, can be felt and appreciated by each member of the audience. True it was a great novel but the novel could never show the flea-bitten dog scuffling through the desolate dust of an abject western town at the beginning of the film nor could it back up its presentation with the various renditions of the song, Red River Valley—now played as a song of joy and now played as a mournful funeral dirge. Here, Mr. Niebuhr's children of darkness are portrayed with force and moving power and with unconscious religious insight.

On Foot to Freedom

The whole family are walking, are walking, step by step,
On Foot to Freedom, from Nanking to Chengtu, to the great West.
Walking, walking and walking . . . six thousand miles,
Past and over are three hundred and fifty-five days and nights,
Lost and gone is everything save our own bodies,
Still our Heavenly Father bestows on us His gifts:
Many friends with loving hearts,
Sun and moon, over-head the beautiful stars,
Rain and snow, wind and frost, and clouds in the skies,
Huge rocks, mighty rivers, great lakes and lofty mountain peaks,
Dense forests, tall bamboos, birds singing and the fragrance of flowers,
And more was given us — joy which gold cannot buy,
And strength to struggle with wind and water, burning sun and open air,
And then He gave us peace that passeth all understanding.

—The Rev. Newton Chiang, written of the journey of his family of eight into Free China as the Japanese armies overran the Eastern part of the land.

Or again we could consider The Watch on the Rhine: a study in consecration and devotion to an ideal. Here through intelligent camera work and sensible acting, particularly by Paul Lukas as the fearful yet consecrated professional anti-fascist, we can see the spirit of the martyrs brought back to life. Two scenes in particular stand out. The first takes place when the anti-fascist first meets his American mother-in-law. He is a man of mystery to her: she knows he has come from Germany and she sees that his hands have been broken. Finally she asks her daughter what her husband does for a living. Reluctantly, her daughter tells her: "He is an anti-fascist." Then, with a seemingly typical American answer, the mother-in-law says: "But aren't we all anti-fascists?" To which the daughter answers, with a weary smile, "Yes, but he works at it!" In the other scene, we find the anti-fascist bidding farewell to his children and, in it, we get as fine a sermon on the nature and destiny of man as we can ever hope to hear. He has just killed a man and is conscience-stricken over having done it—and yet he does not regret having done it. It was necessary if his great task was to be carried out. And so without apologies he confessed to his children that he has sinned—deeply and irrevocably—and bids them to try to understand, knowing full well that they are not capable of such depths of perception. Here is presented each one of us: each one of us who has bought a war-bond or cheered the boys goodbye. Yes The Watch on the Rhine was a fine play, written by Lillian Hellman, and, yet, I think that given the freedom of the camera's approach, it was many times more successful on the screen—besides carrying its message to many more people.

And in many other different films, we find religion bursting through: it is found in the last quarter of Rose Franken's Claudia, in which a young girl has to face up to the fact that her mother has cancer, or in None but the Lonely Heart, in which a boy from the slums finds himself being beaten down by his environment even though he fights with everything that he has.

We could go on. There are many such films. None of them are perfected pieces of art nor do any of them express the full religious meaning of life. And yet occasionally they do come up with something which, in power and truthfulness, is worthy of consideration with Dante's Inferno or a picture by Da Vinci. Such a moment was found in the film version of The Grapes of Wrath when Casey, the gaunt, wandering preacher, was talking to the ex-convict, Tom Joad. During his speech, the camera wanders idly over the countryside, now focussing on a tractor plowing up a desolate farm, now centering on the tear-stained face of a sharecropper's child, now showing the wind and dust blowing past a tumbling farmer's cottage. And backing up this montage are the words of Casey: "I ain't saying I'm like Jesus. But I got tired like him, an' I got mixed up like him, an' I went into the wilderness like him, without no campin' stuff. Nighttime I'd lay on my back an' look up at the stars; mornin' I'd set an' watch the sun come up; midday I'd look out from a hill at the rollin' dry country; evenin' I'd foller the sun down. Sometimes I'd pray like I always done. On'y I couldn't figure what I was prayin' to or for. There was the hills, an' there was me, an' we wasn't separate no more. We was one thing. An' that one thing was holy. An' I got thinking, on'y it wasn't thinkin', it was deeper down than thinkin'. I got thinkin' how we was holy when we was one thin', an' mankin' was holy when it was one thin'. An' it only got unholy when one mis'able little fella got the bit in his teeth an' run off his own way, kickin' an' draggin' an' fightin'. Fella like that bust the holiness. But when they're all workin' together, not one fella for another fella, but one fella kind of harnessed to the whole shebang—that's right, that's holy." True, the words are John Steinbeck's but the dramatic irony is a part of the director's camera genius.

With such productions, the motion picture might conceivably become the handmaid of religion—even as architecture, drama, music, painting and other artistic media are its handmaids. It will take time to turn the movies from their present, highly negative effect on culture to a rich and positive position. It will take education. But, eventually, a new, rich and mature art form is going to be born.

The Predicament of Modern Man. By D. Elton Trueblood. Harpers. $1.00.

This brief (105 pages) analysis of the spiritual situation of our day is a book which everyone who preaches sermons and everyone who listens to them ought to read. We wish it might have a wide circulation also among people who never go to church. Professor Trueblood describes the sickness of our time in a disturbing way: he gives content to the assertion we hear constantly that the "most urgent problem of our time is the spiritual problem." But even though this is frequently asserted, "most people do not believe it." Ethics alone are no way out of our predicament, but we are trying the very precarious experiment "of attempting to maintain our culture by loyalty to the Christian ethic without a corresponding faith in the Christian religion that produced it." The strong affirmation of this book is that we cannot have a real civilization without religious faith, not merely individual piety, but the effective working of a redemptive society.

THOSE who saw the film Jamaica Inn may not have realized that the film departed from the book by making the villain the squire instead of the parson. The story, as told by Daphne De Maurier, is the sordid tale of an evil priest of the Church of England in Cornwall about a century ago. Readers of the book, on the other hand, may not know that the author has probably taken her plot from facts of Church life in those days and approximates in her tale the novel called The Maid of Sker by John Blackmore, author of the well-known Lorna Doone, who wrote much about his country-side as he lived in Devon and Cornwall. In Jamaica Inn the parson is an albino; in Blackmore the parson is one who, because of his swarthy appearance, was called Black John and whose carryings-on caused Blackmore to lampoon him in the hope of bringing some semblance of Christianity and civilization to the afflicted parish of which he was rector.

This recreant priest was The Rev. John Froude, member of the clever family which produced Archdeacon Froude, rector of Dartington and father of Hurrell and James Anthony, the historian. He had been well educated and was a graduate of Oxford. It is said that he met with great disappointment in love, and in early life retired into what was, in the beginning of the 19th century, great retirement from the world of culture and intellectual activity, the parish of Knowstone-cum-Molland. Knowstone stands high on a bleak and windswept hill and Molland lies three and a half miles on a brook in the moors. The living was at that time valuable and Froude was also possessed of considerable private income. There were few educated people residing in the neighborhood and with the quiet inoffensive clergy thereabouts he would not associate; with the others he could not as they held themselves aloof from him. He came in time to associate only with the rough farmers of Exmoor and grew to resemble them in mind, language, habits and even dress. From them he was principally differentiated by his superior wits and exceeding wickedness. Froude, it must be said, fascinated his neighbors overawing them as a snake is said to fascinate a bird or mouse. If he told them to do a thing, or to keep quiet, he was obeyed. They dared not do otherwise. He had a nicely adjusted scale of punishments for all who offended him and he had ready assistants to administer them.

FROM his first arrival at Knowstone he encouraged about him a lawless company of vagabonds, who, when they were not in prison, lived roughly at free quarters in the rectory, and from thence carried on their business of petty larceny; and who were, moreover, ready to execute his vengeance upon the rector's enemies; and those enemies, though they lived in continual terror, were numerous. His satellites ran errands, beat covers, did light farm work and found hares for the rectory hounds. It is this man whom Blackmore describes in The Maid of Sker, although he there calls him Parson Chowne. If the parson desired to damage a farmer who did not pay his tithes punctually or who otherwise had offended him, he gave a hint and the farmer's ricks were burned or his horses lamed. "As I've been standing in the church porch, Harry, I thought what a terrible thing it would be if the rick over yonder of Farmer Jones were to burn. 'Twould come home to him pretty sharp, I reckon," he would say and next night the parish saw a fire.

Or perhaps his man Tom saw parson put his fork to his nose and then certainly would Farmer Smith be thrown from his trap by his wheel coming off, to be found by the next passerby with dislocated thigh or broken arm or collarbone.

The Rev. W. H. Thornton in his almost forgotten book, The Reminiscences of an Old West Country Clergyman, gives more details of these matters to confirm what Blackmore has to say. One of the few who stood up to Froude was Bishop Phillpotts of Exeter, his diocesan, but even he could not prevail. An amusing tale is told that once when the Bishop decided to seek him out for admonition Froude jumped into bed still wearing his red hunting coat. He tried to make believe he had scarlet fever and so drive His Lordship off, but the Bishop was not to be dissuaded. So he climbed up stairs and seated himself by the bed. "What will your Lordship take? It's cruel cold. A drop of brandy will help keep off the infection," said Froude. "Nothing, thank you," said the Bishop; "I take this opportunity to tell you strange stories concerning you reach my ears." "Perhaps your Lordship prefers whisky," interrupted the culprit. "Mr. Froude, I beg you to desist. I am here to inquire into the truth of these stories." "My lord, I have also heard strange stories about your lordship. But among gentlemen us don't give heed to thickey tittle-tattle. Perhaps you'd prefer gin. You'll excuse me, my lord, I be terrible bad and I be afraid you'll catch the infection—pleased to have seen you—good bye," and he ducked his head under the bedclothes.

The Weekly Times of Exeter kept an eye on Froude and his doings and misdoings, and old items are to be read under the heading "Knowstone Again," but Froude was much too foxy to give the Bishop direct ground for proceedings, and the neighbors were much too afraid of him to give evidence. Oftentimes his wife, whom he brutalized, would see him come falling into the rectory and would say, with strange choice of epithets, "Are you ill, my lamb?" "No," said his reverence, "I baint ill. I'm only drunk, my dear, that's all." As he got older he could not wreak his vengeance and this man of God was so mortified and infuriated by this that he broke mentally and physically and died December 9, 1852. Blackmore tells in The Maid of Sker that his hounds finally turned on him and rent him, but that is romance not fact. So bad were the conditions in the parish that Froude's successor, Prebendary Matthews, never left the rectory unarmed and is said to have fired a shot to let his flock know their shepherd was ready for them.

A Layman On Unity

By

ULYSSES S. HARRIS
Layman of Massachusetts

IT IS difficult for an average layman to understand the delay and the present situation in regard to our Church achieving organic unity with the Presbyterian Church. In 1937 our Church renewed the negotiations by a vote of our General Convention. In 1938 the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church approved the declaration of our General Convention. Since that time several commissions of our Church have had this matter under consideration but so far as an average layman can understand, not much progress has been made. While it is true that many laymen who know little about this matter or are not in close touch with Church affairs are apathetic, it is also a fact that a great many laymen are deeply concerned at the failure of our Church to have made much more headway on this important issue.

The layman, untrained in theology and doctrine, does not see clearly the importance of some of our differences in these fields. He does believe that the many fundamental principles on which these two Churches already agree are of far greater importance than those points on which there may be an honest difference of opinion.

But he does see very clearly these things: First; the weakness of Protestantism lies in its many divisions.

Second: this serious weakness, which is holding back the splendid and much needed work that can only be accomplished by a more united Protestant Church, will never be overcome until by faith and action we achieve organic unity with some of our like-thinking Christian brethren of other denominations.

Third: He hears several prayers in our Book of Common Prayer for unity of God's people, in one of which we say, "Give us grace to lay to heart the great dangers we are in by our unhappy divisions. Take away all hatred and prejudice, and whatsoever else may hinder us from Godly union and concord," etc. . . . He hears other prayers containing this same thought expressed by bishops and priests of our Church. He hears our people sing, "We are not divided, All one body we. One in hope and doctrine, One in charity."

Fourth: he knows that ours is a democratic Church in which the government is arrived at by democratic processes. He therefore assumes that inasmuch as the declaration to achieve organic unity with the Presbyterian Church was passed by our General Convention, it is the will of the majority that such union be consummated. He remembers that the declaration reads, "The two Churches, one in the faith of the Lord Jesus Christ, the Incarnate Word of God, recognizing the Holy Scriptures as the supreme rules of faith, accepting the two sacraments ordained by Christ, and believing that the visible unity of Christ's Church is the will of God, hereby formally declare their purpose to achieve organic unity between their respective Churches."

And then in his simple belief that we must love our Christian brothers more than we love our theological and doctrinal differences, and his sincere desire that this much to be desired organic unity be consummated, he wonders why it is that after seven years have passed, we have not been able to make much more progress than has been made. And what is delaying the mandate of our Church "to achieve organic unity between their respective Churches."

Bishop of Washington Pleads For a Vital Religion

Church Unity Is Stressed in His Address At Church Publishing Association Dinner

By W. B. Spofford

New York: — The task of the Church is to bear witness to the Saviour rather than itself claim to be the saviour of the world, declared Bishop Angus Dun of Washington in addressing the annual meeting of the Church Publishing Association for whom THE WITNESS is published. The dinner, held January 11th, was attended by about 150 members of the Association and their friends who filled the large dining hall of the Church of the Heavenly Rest. The meeting was opened by Mr. Samuel Thorne, president of the Association, who announced that Mr. Willard Dixon, layman of Montclair, N. J., had been elected vice-president to succeed the late Walter Kidde.

EDITOR BOYD

The Rev. Frederick C. Grant, chairman of the editorial board, presided and announced that under a system of rotation three new editors were to be added each year and that the Rev. Beverley M. Boyd, formerly the editor of The Southern Churchman, who is now an executive of the Federal Council of Churches, was now a WITNESS editor. Another to join the board is the Rev. Hugh McCandless of Suffern, N. Y., with the third new member soon to be announced.

Bishop Dun stated that the Church, particularly in its present state of division, was not likely to have much to say about economic life, national issues, the peace settlement and other matters that are pressing upon us for solution. But he went on immediately to say that the Church can and must offer illumination, not only to its own members but to those outside the Church as well.

"To say that the Church is not, and should not be, concerned with politics, economics, education, international affairs is infantile. The Church has its own convictions as to how things should be organized in all areas of life and these convictions should be proclaimed as Christian judgements. It is obvious that we are living in revolutionary times with everything in a state of flux and it is the job of the Church to give men a foundation for life. Jesus is the center, able to bring order into this world of bitterly warring factions, just as a great magnet is able to draw filings into their proper arrangements."

"The primary task of the Church," stated the Bishop, "is to proclaim the faith, offer worship through which strength is renewed, and nurture the spirit of servanthood. The greatest service that the Church can render men in all the difficult areas of life is to help them to see all in the light of faith and worship and to bring this spirit of service into them." The areas of life where Church men and women are particularly asked to serve today, Bishop Dun described as family relationships; "the political society of our imperfectly democratic state whereby we become involved in the relations of states, alliances, bitter warfare, struggles for security, supremacy, existence, world order"; the economic order "which takes most of the hours of most Church people"; racial groupings with their manifold problems; the educational system in which we are all involved either as parents, students, teachers or tax-payers.

"It is clear that all these are essential in our human existence and development. From the standpoint of the Christian faith all are aspects of God's creative order, and all are profoundly corrupted by sin, individual and group—pride, self-seeking, godlessness." At this point Bishop Dun, very movingly, addressed himself particularly to the many laymen present by pointing out that they were, unavoidably, involved in the corruptions of human society so that they, if sincere in their Christian professions, had to cry out, "God have mercy upon me, a sinner."

The speaker dealt briefly, but certainly most effectively, with the subject of Church unity in opening his address. He stated that we met as Episcopalians, and as liberal Episcopalians, and he paid a fine tribute to THE WITNESS as an organ of liberal Christianity. "Our most immediate ties, obligations and opportunities are within that particular segment of the Christian community called the Anglican Communion. But I do not suppose any of us would limit the meaning of the Church to this. The whole broken, yet not wholly broken community, who profess and call themselves Christians is the Church. How is it possible to look out on our world today, to Norway for instance, where we see courageous and heroic churchmen fighting oppression, and not say, with full conviction: 'That is the Church.' If what we see in Norway is not the Church then I will say as I have said before, that I am not interested in the Church." Then after a moving silence he added, "and I do not think God is either. And that is all I need to say on the subject." That it was sufficient was demonstrated by the enthusiastic burst of applause.

He concluded his stirring address with witty remarks contrasting the job of being a dean of a theological seminary with that of being a bishop. He spoke of the sheltered life of a seminary and of the problems of a great diocese. Then, saying that he would like to borrow a term from military life, he stressed the need for "basic training" for men going into the ministry "whereby they might learn to live courageously in this world as it is."

Among those attending the dinner were Bishop Larned of Long Island, Bishop Littell, retired bishop of Honolulu, Bishop Gilbert of New York, Bishop Ludlow of Newark, the Rev. Harold Kelley of the Seamen's

Indian Bishop Dies

New York: — The famous and venerated Bishop Azariah, bishop of the south India diocese of Dornakal died on January 2. Cause of his death is not revealed in the cable but since he was in good health at last reports it is thought to have been a heart attack. He was seventy years of age. In addition to a great work as bishop he has been chairman of the interdenominational Christian Council of India and worked constantly at Church unity. The last published statement by him to appear in America was his Missions Demand Unity which was featured some months ago in THE WITNESS and is now available as a leaflet.

Political Action Committee

New York: — Religious associates of the National Citizen's Political Action Committee will be formed this month in Chicago, Detroit and Boston. The Rev. Dwight J. Bradley, secretary of the associates, announced that the organization has about 250 members nationally.

Orthodox World Council

New York: — A World Council of Eastern Orthodox Churches, first in history, may be an outcome of the all-Russia Sobor, or council, according to Archbishop Benjamin, now on his way to Moscow. He told a representative of Religious News Service before leaving that present day developments in the Balkan and Near Eastern countries have given point to the suggestion by the late Patriarch Sergius that a central Orthodox authority to administer ecclesiastical activities be formed around a president of a universal council of bishops chosen from among bishops of world capitals. "This proposal," said the Archbishop, "was put forward in the late patriarch's refutation of the claims of the Vatican that Papal Rome is a divinely appointed and necessary center of Christian unity and authority."

Church on Air

New York: — The Church has issued six electrical transcriptions, each dramatizing a religious situation, for use during the six weeks of Lent. Sponsored by the Presiding Bishop's Committee on Laymen's work, and made under supervision of the Division of Christian Education, the series of programs is entitled "The Living People," and features leading stage and radio actors. Bishops of dioceses all over the country are arranging for use of the programs by their local radio stations.

Ecumenical Spirit

Rochester, N. Y.: — Mrs. Harper Sibley, Episcopalian who was recently elected president of the United Council of church women, has called upon all Church women to assume the burdens of developing a real ecumenical spirit within the Church which should be something beyond interdenominational cooperation. "Women have been too satisfied," she said, "to simply sew flannel petticoats to go to the mission fields and have not sufficiently dedicated themselves to interpret the life and mind of Christ in his Church."

Chaplain Decorated

Fort Knox: — Chaplain Kenneth C. Wilson, formerly rector of St. Mark's, Cincinnati, and now connected with the hospital here, was decorated for meritorious achievement last week. The honor was conferred for his bravery in action at New Georgia and at Bougainville.

Greet De Gaulle

Paris (by wireless): — Leaders of the Protestant, Roman Catholic and Jewish faiths brought greetings to General Charles de Gaulle at a New Year's audience here. The callers were Emmanuel Celestine Cardinal Suhard, Archbishop of Paris; Pastor Marc Boegner, head of the French Reformed Church; and Dr. Julien Weill, Chief Rabbi of Paris.

Elect a Negro

Nashville, Tenn.: — The Methodist conference on Christian education elected its first Negro president at annual sessions here. He is the Rev. T. B. Echols of Austin, Texas, a prominent member of the Church's central jurisdiction and executive secretary of the Texas and West Texas conferences.

The conviction that the Church has devoted too exclusive attention to theological, ecclesiastical and liturgical matters, and entirely too little to the teachings of Christianity as a way of life, was voiced by the Rev. Robert W. Searle, general secretary of the New York Federation of Churches. "Only by the application of the golden rule," Dr. Searle asserted, "can people ever hope to escape the ills from which individuals and society suffer so greatly today. God has written a law in life and that law is brotherhood. This law is not a sentimental thing; it is an iron law that will wreck those who defy it."

Youth Meetings

Middlebury, Vt.: — Young people of the Congregational, Episcopal and Methodist Churches here have held a series of meetings together. There will be six meetings altogether, with each church being host on two occasions. The Rev. Harry H. Jones, rector of St. Stephen's, is in charge of the program. On the program are Mrs. Jesse Flores, formerly of Puerto Rico, and James Farmer, a Negro.

Election Well Received

London (by wireless): — Nomination of the Rt. Rev. Geoffrey Francis Fisher, 57 year-old Bishop of London, as the 98th Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of All England and Metropolitan, was cordially received by the press and leaders of all denominations here. Bishop Fisher, who will succeed the late William Temple in the Church of England's highest office, was nominated by King George VI on recommendation of Prime Minister Churchill for election by the dean and chapter of Canterbury. Enthronement will be delayed until after Easter, due to the lack of central heating in Canterbury Cathedral.

The Archbishop-designate has six sons, four of whom are in the British Army. He has the reputation of possessing great organizing and administrative ability, and since becoming Bishop of London in 1939 he has shown cooperation with leaders of other communions. Fisher is chairman of the committee of Anglicans, Roman Catholics and Free Churchmen cooperating on social and religious matters. He is not well known to the general public; has written very little, and has not figured much on national platforms. Although he did not share the late Archbishop of Canterbury's connection with the Labor Party, Geoffrey Fisher was closely associated with Dr. Temple in running the Malvern Conference in 1941, which was generally considered to be "a healthy outburst of social radicalism."

Personal Counsel

San Clemente, Calif.: — The Rev. Paul G. Favour, in charge of St. Clement's Church here, has been made the personnel manager for a large rubber company. He will continue as vicar of the church.

To Elect Bishop

Orlando: — Bishop Wing has called a special convention for February 7th to elect a suffragan bishop for the diocese of South Florida. A committee was appointed in November to receive nominations and the nominees, together with biographical information concerning them, is to be sent to each delegate ten days before the convention.

Seminary Head

Chicago: — Dr. Arthur C. McGiffert, Jr., president of Pacific School of Religion at Berkeley, Calif., has been elected president of Chicago Theological Seminary. He will take office Jan. 1, 1946, succeeding Dr. Albert W. Palmer, who is retiring. McGiffert is an ordained Congregational minister, and served on the Chicago faculty for 13 years, until he went to Berkeley in 1939.

Hits At Franco

New York: — Asserting that "fascism is the utter rejection of Christianity," Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of the Methodist Church told a rally for Republican Spain on January 3 that he wanted all diplomatic relations with Franco Spain severed.

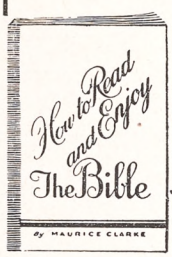
"The hands of democracy must be clean," he said. "I do not want the hand of democracy made foul by clasping the hand of fascism. Let us have done with the fascist as a people and as a government."

Bishop Oxnam declared that "whenever the Church, in a blind endeavor to preserve its privileges and its property, makes common cause with fascism, allies itself with the great landlords and the military, it not only repudiates its Christ but deserves the wrath of the masses it has betrayed." The Bishop made clear that he was not attacking a particular Church in this statement. "It so happens," he said, "it was the Roman Catholic Church in Spain. It was the Greek Church in pre-revolution Russia whose voice was too often that of the Czar rather than the voice of Christ. And if it be Protestant bodies anywhere become more interested in the maintenance of the institutions of religion than in permeating the community with the spirit of Christ and moving forward in those mighty endeavors that seek justice and the emancipation of man, then they will earn the rejection of the people who know that the kingdom of God cannot be built upon foundations of injustice."

Urges Cooperation

Toronto, Ont.: — Close cooperation with other communions was urged here by the lay advisory council of the United Church of Canada, composed of three representatives from each of the ten conferences of the Church. The report recommended that surveys be made in rural and urban communities to reach the 500,000 or more persons who describe themselves as followers of the United Church faith, but are not listed as members.

Cripps on Germany



London (by wireless): — In a speech to the Baptist Union board here, Sir Stafford Cripps, minister of aircraft production, well-known for his mission to India, and prominent member of the Church of England, outlined a policy of "practical Christian idealism" for the postwar treatment of Germany. Cautioning against wholesale revenge on the German people, but advocating protection for their "frightened neighbors," Sir Stafford said, "We must try to recast the boundaries of Europe on a safer pattern. We must attempt to wean Germans from Nazi leadership and ideas. We must by dignified and just methods bring the worst wrongdoers to account."

Cripps said that the practical Christian attitude of the Allies to the German people should be, "When passions generated by war have died down and you have been able to convince your neighbors of your true desire for friendly and peaceful cooperation, you will be able to join with all other nations in elaboration of such an international order as will obviate the danger of future wars."

Wait to Withdraw

New York: — The Syrian Antiochian Orthodox Church, which last week announced its resignation from the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America has modified its decision to the extent that final action will be withheld until a general vote has been taken by the heads of various Orthodox churches in this country.

According to Metropolitan Antony, the Federated Orthodox Greek Catholic Primary Jurisdictions, which includes the Greek, Syrian, Ukranian, Carpatho - Russian, Romanian, and Russian Orthodox Churches, will not meet until after the All-Russia Church Council meets in Moscow to elect a successor to the late Patriarch Sergius and to discuss other matters of vital concern to the Orthodox Church generally.

Aid to Italy

New York: — Three Protestant churchmen will leave shortly for Italy to study post-war relief and rehabilitation requirements of Protestants in that country. The Rev. Robert W. Anthony, former secretary of the Waldensian Aid Society and associate minister of the Park Avenue Presbyterian Church here, will represent the Church committee on overseas relief and reconstruction and the American committee for the World Council of Churches. The Rev. Dewey W. Moore of Washington, D.C., will represent the Southern Baptist convention; and the Rev. P. J. Zaccara, pastor of the Broome St. Tabernacle here and chairman of the national Evangelical committee for relief in Italy. This committee has been conducting a campaign for $50,000 and 2,000,000 pounds of clothing to aid Protestants in Italy.

Becomes Parish

New York: — When a mission in China in the midst of war becomes a parish it is news, according to Bishop Gilman of Hankow. The church is St. John the Baptist in Hankow whose rector, the Rev. Philip Ts'en, reported that a drive for $30,000 was over-subscribed so that the parish is now self-supporting.

Bishop Is Ill

Salina, Kan.: — Bishop Nichols of Salina recently suffered a heart attack but has sufficiently recovered to leave the hospital. The attack was reported as severe but cardiograms reveal no persistent heart trouble. He will be obliged to be inactive for a time but reports indicate that there is every hope for his recovery.

Post-War World

Boston: — Professor Carl J. Friedrich, director of the Harvard school for overseas administration will speak on "The Church and the post-war world" at the annual meeting of the Massachusetts Church Service League, Jan. 17. Dr. Lula M. Disosway, long at St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Shanhai, China, and more recently of the Hudson Stuck Hospital, Fort Yukon, Alaska, will fill a series of speaking engagements in Massachusetts January 23 to 31.

Church Is Closed

Washington: — Eighty year old St. Paul's Church. Washington, D. C., closed its doors on New Year's Day with a farewell service held by the rector, the Rev. Arlington A. McCallum. The church was forced to clear the way for the construction of a hospital connected with George Washington University, which is now training military personnel. Previous to this, litigation had been engaged in unsuccessfully by the rector and vestry of the parish as well as the persons whose homes were also condemned. The government has provided storage space for the church's furnishings and has shown a disposition to assist in any way possible in view of its demand upon the parish for its property. The parish is planning a new St. Paul's on a site recently procured, to be designed by Philip H. Frohman, architect of the Washington Cathedral. The church will be styled after the Gothic parishes in England during the 14th Century.

"Some to the Church repair
Not for the Doctrine,
But the Music there"
—Alexander Pope

Yet, what are the hymns of the Church if not an expression of its doctrine? "Love Divine, All Loves Excelling, joy of Heaven to Earth come down" . . . how close in this God seems, how real His infinite love and grace!

"All Hail the Power of Jesus Name—and crown Him Lord of all" . . . speaks of the divinity, the universality of Christ. Not only with words, but in the beauty of the organ's anthem-peal of joy, its calm voice of devotion, its humble reverence of prayer . . . all these, speak the deep abiding faith that is in essence the spirit of The Church.

M. P. Möller in conceiving The Artist of Organs—The Organ of Artists, seeks to build an instrument worthy of this great faith—in tonal beauty and in faithfulness of expression.

On Counselling

Boston: — The Rev. Rollin J. Fairbanks, chaplain at the Massachusetts General Hospital, lectured on "The Techniques of Counselling" at the fourth session of the diocesan course in counselling at the Church of the Advent on January 8th. The course, which is being sponsored by the Department of Social Service of the diocese, is designed to make available for clergy all the knowledge that has been discovered and developed by psychiatrists, psychologists and representatives of allied sciences.

Turns Down Vatican

Moscow (by wireless): — No immediate prospect for entry of Roman Catholic priests from abroad into Russia is seen here by Ivan V. Polyansky, chairman of the Soviet council on affairs of religious cults. He stated that there was no need for Catholic priests to come from abroad to participate in religious affairs, since Russia's own talented and hard-working clergy was proving capable of serving the needs of the faithful.

organs. Each fractional family of God arrogates to itself the exercise of functions which rightfully belong to the one holy Catholic Church of Christian Faith. The one Church has no organs through which it can become visible and fully active in history.

Solutions for the scandal of a divided Christendom are not yet at hand. The conference furnished no magic answers. But even seeing the problem is a great step forward. All testimony at the conference agreed that great strides had been taken toward unity in the last generation. The next generation may, under God, be given grace to see the Church again in a united Kingdom of the Holy Spirit.

SGT. JAMES F. MANSER
Air Base, Brownsville, Texas

I am an Episcopalian and, in the past, have been proud of it. But after reading the following letter that appeared in Link, the magazine of the Service Men's Christian League, I am afraid I am not going to remain one very long. Do not Episcopalians ever read the words in the back of the Prayer Book in which we are warned against the "repugnant" practices of the Roman Church?

The letter referred to was signed by Cpl. John S. Dugger and is as follows:

"Referring to the article by Chaplain G. E. Hopkins on page 13 of the November 1944 issue of The Link, I quote: 'There is nothing sectarian about either the chapel or the chaplain. There is no Methodist nor Baptist nor Episcopalian. There is only Protestant!'

"May I ask on what grounds does Chaplain Hopkins draw this conclusion? Why does he think the Episcopal priests in the chaplain's corps celebrate the Holy Eucharist (or the Mass) every Sunday and often on weekdays as well as every Holy Day for the Episcopal men of his organization? And where does he get the idea that the Episcopalian men worship in general Protestant worship services? Is he at all acquainted with the Episcopal Church and its doctrines and teachings? Apparently he isn't!

"I have worked in the chaplains department for nearly two years, and I have yet to see Episcopalian men worshipping in general worship services conducted by other 'Protestant' chaplains when there is an Episcopalian chaplain on the post or an Episcopalian priest in a near-by civilian community. In many cases, civilian priests are hired to say the Mass for Episcopalian men. I am only one of many, who, in the absence of an Episcopalian chaplain, attend Roman Catholic masses. I find, too, that this practice is commonly advocated by the civilian parish priests. So, let's have men like Chaplain Hopkins do a little research before publishing statements of that kind, which, I am sure, are quite distressing to the parents of Episcopalian men in service."

ANSWER: It is hard for us to believe that priests of the Episcopal Church advocate that soldiers attend Roman services in the absence of an Episcopal chaplain. We will be glad to have any evidence to that effect.

ARNOLD CHICKERING
Choirboy at Harpursville, N. Y.

After reading many articles in THE WITNESS on unity with the Presbyterians I would like to express how I feel about it, because someday I hope to enter the priesthood. Although the union would be a wonderful thing on the part of both Churches, I do not think that we should compromise one bit or change our form of worship or doctrine. Also, before we invite any Church to unite with us we had better teach our own Episcopalians something about their own Church. It wasn't for just bishops, priests and deacons.

In our school in Harpursville we have religious education. The Roman Catholics and Episcopalians have their own separate classes. Our rector teaches us about the Church and its form of worship and its belief. If the people of the Church knew as much as we are taught by our rector about the Church they might feel different about the question of union. I doubt if the Church would gain very much if our friends the Presbyterians united with us at this time because the present Episcopalians that I know anything about know very little about their Church. This would help the incoming and new Episcopalians very little as to the knowledge of their new and great heritage. In the end we nor they would not be any better off.

Every time I listen to a Presbyterian or Methodist service on the radio I can usually hear a familiar phrase from the prayer that the minister is saying. If they are gradually picking up our form of worship they will become very familiar with the Episcopal Church and the way it worships. If this happens they would have everything except the valid episcopate, which, if they accepted it they would accept confirmation and re-ordination as necessary to the whole Catholic faith. This would not require us to sacrifice anything that we now hold necessary in Catholic and orthodox worship.

These ideas may be very Roman Catholic, but how has the Roman Church fared in setting up such strict precepts. They have good church attendance and their priests and churches are equipped with the best.

THE REV. HUGH E. MONTGOMERY
Rector of the Good Shepherd, Philadelphia

I have read Dr. Macon's excellent and constructive article on the need of Prayer Book revision (WITNESS, Dec. 14). This is to endorse what he says with all the emphasis at my command. The many archaisms in our Prayer Book should be deleted. This can be done without in any sense detracting from the tradition and beauty of our liturgy and by so doing will be an inspiration to the many who now are puzzled, discouraged and frequently lost to the Church because of its inability to appreciate or understand not only the passages Dr. Macon refers to but many others.

To Witness to the Gospel
To Maintain Evangelical Faith
To Attain Ecumenical Fellowship

We believe that God wills the Church to be Catholic in its inclusiveness, Liberal in its essential spirit, Evangelical in its witness to the Gospel of Christ.

We believe in the interpretation of the Christian religion in contemporary terms; in the rigorous application of the principles of Christ to our social life; in simplicity and dignity of worship; in immediate action toward Christian unity.

We believe that discussion of these principles must be accompanied by adventurous action.

Rector Tells of Experience In Large War Plant

He Finds That the Union Is Indispensable For the Proper Running of a War Industry

By Edgar L. Tiffany
Rector of the Transfiguration, Buffalo

Buffalo, N. Y.:—From the day we entered the war I felt that I wanted to do something more about it than talk. I was over the line to apply for a chaplaincy. Surely there was something I could do. Here in Buffalo, there was a constant appeal for men to work at war production. I made up my mind what I would try to do. I put on an old suit, a blue shirt of golfing days and went down to the U. S. employment service. It was crowded with "all sorts and conditions of men." I know now for whom I pray. I found a seat on a bench and after several hours my turn came. I explained what I wanted to do in the war effort and felt what others had learned to do I could also. I was pleased that when they found I had gone to Harvard they did not hold that crimson mark against me.

I was referred to the Chevrolet-aviation engine plant No. 2 of General Motors where the Pratt-Whitney engine was being made. After a talk with the personnel department they decided I could best be used in the salvage department. The salvage group in each shift was the final inspection of parts received from production which the latter could not pass on. Salvage tolerances were in most cases slightly more liberal than production figures. From salvage, the disputable parts went to the army inspectors for final acceptance or rejection. Salvage was the link between production and the army-navy. It was exceedingly technical work to learn, involving blue-prints, micrometer readings of all kinds, various gauges, etc., and the memorizing of endless figures applicable to the various parts which came up for inspection.

The irony of the whole thing was that I who in college had taken every and any course to avoid mathematics now found myself involved in the most mathematical part of the whole war production effort. Knowing the work was new to me the management was most patient and helpful in every way as they were to all the employees. There were three shifts at the plant—7 A.M. to 3 P.M., then 3 P.M. to 11 P.M., and the last from 11 P.M. to 7 A.M. I had to work on the second shift—from 3 P.M. to 11 P.M.—in order to keep up my church work. I got home about midnight, was up at 8 A.M. doing the church work until 2:30 P.M.

I kept up my parish calls, organization contacts, etc. My vestry stood 100% in back of me in my desire to help in the war effort. Their only concern was as to whether I could stand the racket. I promised if I could not do so I would ask for my immediate release. Incidentally no one at the plant knew I was a clergyman but the head of the personnel department—and my immediate superiors. I did not want any "benefit of clergy" and desired to be accepted and treated the same as all the other employees. There were times at the start when I felt I might have to call it a day. On one stretch from July through September, I went ninety consecutive days without a day off. Sunday was the hard day, getting up for the early service and then returning to work immediately after Sunday dinner.

I felt I was back rowing that last half-mile in the crew—giving everything you had in a sort of mechanical, numb manner. I found the first three months were the hardest. It is a huge plant and my work enabled me to go through it daily with every opportunity for observation.

I was impressed first of all that contrary to many rumors everyone worked steadily and worked hard. There was no loafing, no stalling, no idling. I was amazed at the technical work done by the women and girls. They all deserved medals for the way they stood by their machines in the beastly hot weather. I was impressed by the fellowship spirit all round—everyone willing to help or give a lift to his neighbor.

Before I started to work, parishioners and friends joked with me about the CIO and whether I would become a member. Let me say with all earnestness that in the months I worked at General Motors, I saw no CIO activities anyone could object to or any conflict with the management. I was not a member and I worked for several months before a committeeman of the CIO asked me if I were a member or desired to join. There was not a hint of coercion or implied force.

The Rev. Edgar L. Tiffany, rector of the Transfiguration, Buffalo, who writes some of his experiences in a defense plant.

Speaking of committeemen, the CIO had a number of these officials on every shift. It was their business to go through the plant regularly and if a worker had any grievance they settled it or took it up with the management. Many disputes between workers were thus settled at the source. If the CIO had suggestions to make as to how things could be improved, they conferred with the management. The idea was to have everybody concerned work together in harmony and good will.

Here is a concrete incident of a dispute that arose and was amicably settled. A foreman, newly appointed, and probably to show his authority, ordered all the stools or chairs taken away from the women in one inspection department. Inasmuch as the tables had been built to be seated at, standing for inspection work was not only very tedious, difficult, but downright painful. The women maintained that because their work was made more difficult it was slowing up production at a critical time. The CIO investigated and were convinced the women were right. After conferences with the management the chairs were replaced.

Without some kind of labor organization, it was obvious to me, the women would have been helpless to protest. A great deal of friction comes from the foremen. When a man is promoted to a foremancy, he automatically ceases to be a member of the CIO or the union. He has new power and authority. Some of them may be inclined to make it tough for some of the men they worked with. There is bound to be hurt feelings, jealousies, and envies. I understand such a state of affairs sometimes exists in church affairs and activities. Now one important work the CIO did was not simply the protection of the worker against management disputes, but the protection of the worker from injustices originating with the foreman. Frankly, where thousands of different individuals and personalities are concerned I do not see how management could get along without the CIO or its equivalent. To be sure there is frequently mutual suspicion and feeling of injustice on both sides but without the CIO or similar organization the situation would be chaotic and I do not see how management could solve it alone.

One of the things the CIO was insistent upon was what is known as seniority rights of the workers. No matter how much more efficient one man may be than another he must wait until his time comes for increased pay or advancement. The man who has stood the heat and burden of the day comes first. To be sure injustice is done as a result of seniority procedure but much more injustice would be done without it. Abolish it and immediately the weaker, less able person who has worked faithfully for years would be out. It would resolve itself into a survival of the fittest along ruthless lines.

I came to the conclusion after months of observation that people who thought every CIO official had horns protruding from his cap either were blindly prejudiced or in ignorance did not know what they were talking about. I also want to say a word of the fine job management was doing. Every worker was given every consideration possible and no one was treated as a "hand" but as a human being entitled to respect and a hearing.

I worked until February 1944 when with Lent and confirmation at hand I felt I could not keep it up much longer. I was granted my release and received my army-navy "E," of which I am very humbly proud. Maybe it was only a little but I felt I had made some personal contribution toward the war effort. It was a great experience and, although not a member, the CIO did more for me than I can ever do for them and that goes for General Motors and the fine groups of men and women who represent it. And, by the way, for those who think the war is over, I just received notice last week to be prepared at any time to come back to work!

WILL ALEXANDER PRAISES UNIONS

Atlantic City:—One of the greatest opportunities of the church today lies in helping large sections of the Negro population bridge the gap between their life in rural Southern districts and the industrial centers where they will finally settle, Will W. Alexander, director of race relations for the Julius Rosenwald Fund, declared in an address to the Home Missions Council here. "We need to approach Negroes as American citizens and serve them and work with them on integrated programs that reach all citizens regardless of race," he said. "Here again, the church is called upon for pioneering."

Alexander anticipated large migrations of Negroes from the South, as an expression of their increasing restlessness over the lack of educational opportunity and the general pattern of race relations. He warned that what happens to minorities in our population will determine the success of our "American democratic dream." "The most hopeful aspect of the race problem in America," he said, is the attitude of the labor movement, particularly the CIO, to problems of minorities in our society. Some of the older unions are equally alert. In the next hundred years the labor movement will make a major contribution to the solution of the problems of the minorities in our democracy."

BISHOP McCONNELL ASKS NEW SOCIAL OUTLOOK

Atlantic City: — A social system which produces "a few men at the top" at the expense of 100 million others violates the rights of man as a citizen of society, Bishop Francis J. McConnell of New York told the national conference on the ministry of the Church to shifting war workers. The Methodist bishop shared the platform with Emil Rieve, president of the Textile Workers Union and vice-president of the CIO, and Morse DellPlain, president of the Welsbach Engineering Co. of Philadelphia, in a discussion of full employment after the war. Bishop McConnell said that a policy of every-man-for-himself is not a statesmanlike approach to the postwar concern of eleven million servicemen. In speaking of the Church's part in achieving economic democracy, he stated that the church must justify its results in human terms.

Church and Labor Find They Have Much in Common

Experiment Started in Columbus of Informal Meetings Is Spreading to Other Localities

By John G. Ramsay

Representative of the United Steelworkers

Columbus, O.:—A year ago thirty-five clergymen, interfaith and interracial, accepted an invitation to visit and observe the Ohio state CIO convention, and also to sit down and lunch with the officers and delegates of the convention. The response of the delegates was much greater than anticipated. Over two hundred attended the luncheon and over one hundred others desired to attend but had to be disappointed since there was not enough food in the hotel. It was another clear indication that there is a spiritual motivation that makes men and women of labor give unselfishly of their time and energies to build a union. It showed a longing in the hearts of organized labor to be understood and accepted in the spiritual life of the nation.

The luncheon was informal, the clergymen were introduced individually and sat scattered among the labor men so that they were rubbing shoulders with labor. The Rev. Willard Uphaus, secretary of the National Religion and Labor Foundation, gave an inspiring and challenging address. A Catholic priest and the president of the Protestant ministerial association opened and closed the luncheon period with prayers.

There were many requests from the labor delegates from other Ohio cities for help in promoting this kind of fellowship. Many of the local clergy and labor leaders felt a need to know each other. Out of this desire developed another luncheon. Some twenty persons, representing religion and labor, had lunch together in a private dining room at the YWCA. Each person purchased his own lunch at the cafeteria, and, while eating, sat next to someone whom he did not know.

After lunch, each person was asked to introduced himself and frankly state what his convictions were about religion and labor. There was real honesty. Resentments and prejudices were brought out into the open. We were learning to know each other.

The extremes expressed were somewhat as follows: One labor leader told how his minister formulated a vigilante committee to break a union which he, then an employee in a local factory, was helping to build. "That was twelve years ago," the leader said, "and ever since then I have considered the clergymen to be a bunch of bosses' stooges."

From the clergy, labor learned that some of them had an intellectual understanding of the aims and aspirations of the labor movement, but, as one of the clergymen said, "From what I have read in the newspapers about you men of labor I did not believe you had any high ideals; I was afraid that if I invited you to speak to my congregation you would desecrate the church."

The most active among the 150 church and labor leaders to attend the meetings described by Mr. Ramsay recently had their picture taken. They are about equally divided between church and labor, with both the CIO and the AF of L represented and with representatives of Roman, Protestant and Jewish Churches. The tallest of the men in the back row is the Rev. Richard S. Zeisler of Trinity Church, Columbus. Mr. Ramsay, responsible for these informal get-togethers, is at the right end of the line of those standing, while Mrs. Ramsay is seated at the left beside the Rev. Harold Lancaster, Methodist minister of the city.

These extremes showed a real need for fellowship and understanding. At the suggestion of one of the clergymen, a monthly luncheon date was made. Now, labor leaders do speak in the churches; some who have been out of church for years now go to church. Now the clergy do not hesitate to open union mass meetings and conventions with prayer and they know they are welcome to union meetings and conventions.

It was soon learned that it was necessary to have planned discussion programs. Instead of setting up a formal organization the need was met by appointing a rotating committee of four, alternating two from religion and two from labor. The first person named was to be the chairman of the committee and to lead the next meeting, at which time he retired from the committee and appointed a new member to take the fourth place, each of the former members stepping up and taking their respective turns as chairman. This has proved to be a very satisfactory method. No one is required to give too much time and each has the opportunity to bring out his own interest for discussion.

The programs have been varied. At one luncheon a rabbi, a priest, and a minister gave the social credos of their respective faiths. The unity of thought expressed bound together the clergy of all faiths. Labor found that these ideals as expressed by religion, were the same as the high aspirations of the labor movement.

At another meeting the ideas of the Steelworkers' Union program for a guaranteed annual wage was the topic for discussion. One of the clergy felt that this program was materialistic (polite for communistic). He proceeded to give a sermon on the theme: "Man does not live by bread alone; ye must be born again." A union lawyer with real love in his heart put the clergyman on the witness stand and began a cross examination. "How do you give this spiritual life to the unemployed father of undernourished children?" The clergyman was not used to having his congregation talk

If We But Will

by J. Raymond Walsh

Director of Education and Research of the CIO

OUT of the welter of issues, real and synthetic of the presidential campaign, the war, the peace and postwar employment emerge as the transcendent anxieties of the people. The war will be won decisively—although the end may be many months away. An enduring peace may be realized—but there is no clear and certain road to it. For Americans confront a difficult task of forging a foreign policy based on the facts of life. The world, as Mr. Wallace and Mr. Willkie have passionately urged, is one. Technology has made it so. The instruments of war now range the world and subject men everywhere to aggression anywhere. National economies are so inter-twined that depression anywhere sends itself everywhere. Communication is so penetrating that ideas released in France, Russia, India or the Argentine agitate men around the globe with the speed of light or sound. Peace, like war, in indivisible. Depression like prosperity is indivisible. Social and political movements jostle against each other relentlessly in a world that has become a huge whispering gallery.

How quickly and smoothly the United States will surrender to these facts and to the further fact of its own enormous power for good and evil remains to be seen. But surrender it must and will. Isolationism in all its variance, economic, political and military—pacifism—nostalgic seclusion—nationalistic imperialism will go. One can only hope that the transition to maturity in international affairs will be made with intelligence and good will.

In a sense, our foreign policy begins at home. Our major contribution to peace will be indirect, taking the form of domestic prosperity which, if we achieve it, will help bring economic well-being to other peoples. And with economic health throughout the world, the tendency to war will be incalculably reduced everywhere.

What about domestic prosperity and jobs after the war? This question can profitably be broken into two parts: employment in the first year or two after war ends, and employment in the decade that will follow.

My own guess is that unemployment will be large in the first period. Under the most favorable circumstances, five or six million people will be involuntarily unemployed, because the physical reconversion of war plants and the necessary transfers and retraining of workers will take time. I say "under the most favorable circumstances," by which I mean that wise public policies on price control, wages, taxation, social security, disposal of government-owned commodities, and use of government-owned plants will be agreed upon. And that the subtle atmosphere called "business confidence" will prevail. But no one in his right mind can assume that these will be the conditions. Rather, if the ignorant and clamorous debate on the Murray-Kilgore proposals for unemployment compensation adequate to sustain consumer spending is an indication, we shall start the postwar in disagreement and confusion. Unemployment will be correspondingly larger, markets for all goods smaller, with all the obvious risks to social stability.

It is not of this phase of postwar however that I wish to write. Rather, the next decade concerns me. Will it be a period of economic stagnation or the expanding prosperity promised us by both parties in the presidential campaign?

A few things are clear. America built a new economy during the war. Prodigious output of war material was added to an undiminished production of consumers goods. Gross production actually doubled and the national income passed $150,000,000,000 a year, while 11,000,000 of our youngest, strongest men were in the armed services. Allowing for a retention of 2,500,000 servicemen after the war; a voluntary retirement of three to four million women, young and old people; frictional unemployment of 2,000,000 and a reduction of hours to an average of 37 a week, our output in 1946 will reach in 1940 prices $142,000,000,000, compared with the $97,000,000,000 in 1940, and at a rate of 3 per cent a year due to technological change and population increase. At once we shall face an unprecedented opportunity and challenge. We must increase our standard of living by an average of 50 per cent or suffer large-scale unemployment and economic defeat. Literally poverty is obsolete in this Protean country of ours. Are we up to that revolutionary challenger?

ONE fact is clear. Americans need that increase in living standards. A year ago Paul V. McNutt, who as federal security administrator ought to know, estimated that 75 per cent of all Americans needed better diets and 40 million people were living below the diet danger line. Milo Perkins, inventor of the food stamp plan, estimated that in 1939, 20 million Americans were living on an average of five cents worth of food per meal. Men in the armed services were then receiving meals that cost the government on a mass basis three times as much. In a Gallup poll a few days after Pearl Harbor, half of the Americans interviewed said they would like more to eat.

A standard adequate diet has been worked out by dietitians. And we can grow enough of the proper food to give that standard to all Americans —indeed without adding any more land or labor to farming. The neet exists. So do the means.

People must eat and, as the federal theater once put it, "A man's gotta have a place to live." The houses of many Americans, however, haunt one's dreams. There are the dwellings of the lovely New England town, Newburyport, Massachusetts, forty per cent of which were found by Harvard researchers to be in bad repairs. There are the hundreds of shacks that constitute the Negro ghettos within the shade of the capitol building in Washington, D. C. Thousands of refugees from the Civil War live in dwellings that defy description in Pig Alley, Tiger Alley, Louse Alley and a score of others. More than half the children born in these wretched houses are illegitimate. Crime and disease flourish.

The United States census bureau tells us that almost half of the 38,000,000 dwelling units in the nation need major repairs, bath, or both. At least one-third of our population is badly housed.

Authorities say that we shall need a million and a half houses each year for a decade after the war. The need, again, exists. So do the materials and the labor to meet them—if we but will.

Americans like education. Yet over half of our schools are one room where a half million youngsters receive all their education in all courses in all grades from one teacher in one room. Our average education among adults is only eight grades and a fraction—patently not enough. We should raise our sites to a high school education or its equivalent for every child in the country—the need again is clear. And the means out of which to build more schools and better schools are abundant, while young people will be available for training as teachers—if we but will.

The army draft is a shocking commentary on the nation's health. One boy out of two in the first 2,000,000 examined was physically unable to pass muster. Rejections still run over 40 per cent I believe. In an average year 225,000 women give birth to children without a doctor's aid. Of the 75,000 stillbirths each year, 30,000 need not die if ordinary medical attention is available. Three out of five counties have no hospital facilities. The story could go on. But the point is the simple one that we need a vast extension of medical facilities. We have the lumber, brick and mortar. We will have the human stuff out of which to educate nurses, dentists and doctors and leap up the ladder of national health in a decade—if we but will.

I say "if we but will." The problem is no longer one of inadequate resources or skills. It is one of engineering consent. It is an educational problem, a political problem, for to translate these possibilities into realities and thus provide jobs for all, we must undertake large public investment and generous public provision for mass consumption. It is stupid and reckless to think that private enterprise can or will do this by itself. The houses we need for example can be supplied up to a million, perhaps, by private purchase and contract. The remaining five million must be subsidized out of government funds for the simple reason that the people who need them can't afford to pay their cost. The same goes for medical care, for hospitals, for schools. And it goes for food too.

Our government must be prepared to function in this wide field, supplementing and invigorating the private economy, if we are to avoid enormous unemployment, poverty in sight of abundance and a social upheaval. It can do so by the use of well-known fiscal measures: monetary action to keep interest rather low, heavy redistributive taxation to keep income on the move, and a general guarantee that public spending will be maintained at a level high enough to sustain full employment.

It is anyone's guess whether and when Americans will summon the will to do this. The Republican orators, in particular, manifested in my opinion an alarming lack of comprehension of the problem. If they actually speak for many millions of our citizens we face difficult times, until through pain and suffering we learn what we must learn and do what we must do.

"Quotes"

AN OUTSTANDING and pressing duty of the Church is to convince its members of the necessity of nothing less than a fundamental change in the spirit and working of our economic life. This change can only be effected by accepting as the basis of industrial relations the principle of cooperation in service for the common good, in place of unrestricted competition for private or sectional advantage.

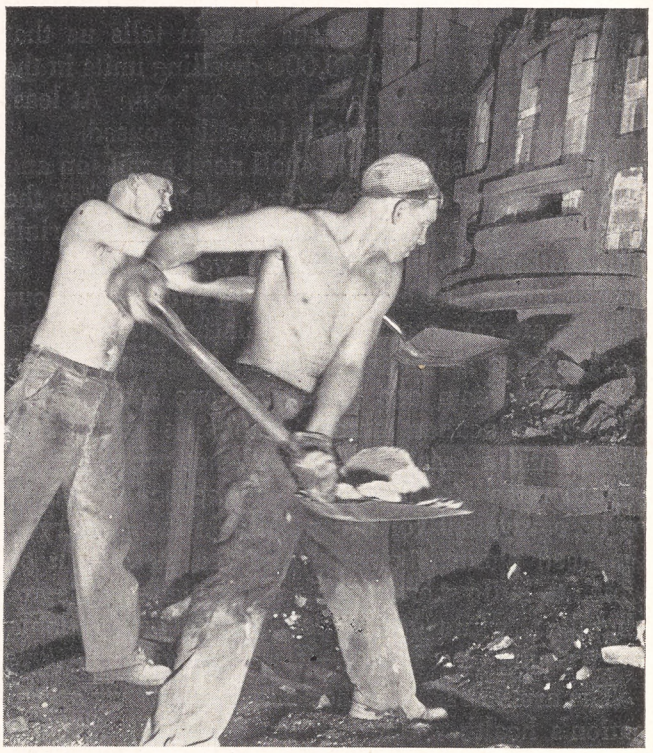
All over the world youth stands at the gate of death, "victims of a fate they did not organize, sacrificed at the altar of a destiny they cannot choose." No one who watches their achievement at Dunkirk, Sicily, Normandy, Stalingrad, Bataan can help feeling a sense of profound humility before them. Theirs is a temper in which pride and courage are equally combined. Is it not clear that only as our achievement in the postwar for those who come after us seeks some genuine proportion to the sacrifices we exact from them, shall we receive acquittal at the bar of history or in the secret places of our own hearts?

Why An Annual Wage?

by Philip Murray



President, Congress of Industrial Organizations

IT TAKES an annual wage to make a sufficient wage. Adequate pay rates over short periods cannot support the worker and his family over slack periods. Insufficient wages over the course of a year drag down the living standards of the worker and of the community in which he lives. A guaranteed annual wage is not a new idea at this time. Farmers, as a group, have received a guarantee, under federal law, of 90 per cent of parity for a period of two years following the close of the war. Industry, as a group, has also received a substantial guarantee under present tax laws.

In my report to the seventh annual convention of the CIO in November, 1944, I state: "In the interest of assuring continued mass purchasing power which is the key to any sound economy and increasing prosperity, the United Steelworkers of America requested a guaranteed annual wage. . . . The future promised by the steel industry for the post war period is one of darkest depression and widespread unemployment. As against this, the United Steelworkers of America, on the basis of government reports and the professions of government leaders as to the imperative need for full production and full employment in the postwar period, has maintained that our policies must be geared to a premise that there shall be no such depression. Further, the introduction of the guaranteed annual wage would be the strongest propelling factor in assuring the demand for peacetime goods that would guarantee full production and full employment. . . .

"We are convinced that in the interest of continuing the war effort in a manner necessary to accomplish our determined goal of complete defeat of our enemies and to assure the kind of postwar world to which the common people aspire, there must be a successful conclusion to the demands submitted by the CIO and its affiliated unions for an appropriate revision in our national wage policy, the incorporation of guaranteed annual wage provisions in collective bargaining agreements and the improvement of other working conditions."

President Roosevelt in his message to Congress last January stated as a postwar objective a new bill of rights to include the right to a useful and remunerative job in the industries, farms, mines or shops of the nation—a job which would pay enough to provide adequate food, housing, clothing, education and recreation for every American.

Wendell Willkie also advocated the following labor plank for the Republican platform: "Labor also has aspirations which are not only just but indispensable to the health of a society marked by wide economic fluctuations. For instance, an annual wage to those who work in plants with long seasonal or periodic shut-downs seems fair and necessary."

The Kilgore Bill, supported by the CIO, would provide legislation to cushion the results of reconversion cut-backs and lay-offs. It would give temporary relief to twenty million workers now dependent on war production jobs for their livelihood. Airplanes and ships are two of the industries to be most affected by the change-over to peacetime employment. Steel, automobiles and aluminum will also undergo serious reconversion problems affecting the swollen ranks of manpower now engaged in their production.

Trade unionists will stand firm in their demands for job security and steady pay. Immediate measures must provide jobs for those laid off through the cancellation of war contracts. Long-range measures must be initiated to keep our nation in a healthy state of prosperity in years to come. The guaranteed annual wage will form a foundation for this goal.

The demands of the United Steelworkers of America are a test case in this evolutionary process. What will benefit the workers in one industry can be shown to benefit those in other production areas. The Hormel Packing Company, for one, has already demonstrated the practicality of the guaranteed wage on a local scale.

When the industrial worker is prosperous he is able to buy the output of factory, farm and shop, and to provide himself and his family with the services of the professions and of the service trades. He is the basis of our whole economy. As a consumer, his wages furnish our greatest market, the domestic one. This market has been allowed to lag in the past, due to the insecurity and meagre wages of the mass of wage earners. Improper diet and shoddy housing have marred the living level of the richest country in the world.

There has been no legitimate equality of sacrifice during the war years. While profits have soared and the cost of living has risen greatly, wages have remained frozen to an unrealistic level imposed by the "Little Steel" formula. Increased hours and overtime pay have made it possible for war workers to buy essential goods, but when hours are brought back to normal, base pay rates as they now exist will not allow an adequate budget for the majority of workers in industry. Continued price control plus a guaranteed annual wage are the answer to this future threat.

The American people have watched planes, tanks, ships and guns roll off assembly lines at an incredible rate. They now know that cars, refrigerators, prefabricated homes and washing machines can roll off at an equal rate, and they need these things. Once their income is established at a point which enables them to purchase them, consumer goods will be plentiful and our nation will achieve the comforts to which the dignity of labor entitles it.

Why I Joined Labor

By

LUCY RANDOLPH MASON
Public Relations Representative of the CIO

THE WITNESS has suggested that this article explain why, as a Church woman, I am in the labor movement. The answer is simple. My father and mother taught me that religion includes both one's relationship to God and to man. They made their own the cause of the oppressed and the destitute. They acted on their beliefs. Father was an Episcopal minister as was Mother's father. I grew up in a deeply religious atmosphere permeated with positive acts not only to help individuals, but to work at correcting causes. With that heritage I could not keep religion and social action in separate compartments. In that long past, and while I was still in my teens, the sixty-hour week for girls in Richmond's tobacco factories, and the seven day-week for young men in steel plants bit deep into my conscience.

Later on when a few of us socially minded women went to the legislature to press for laws to compel safe-guarding of machinery, workmen's compensation, protection of children, shorter hours for women—we found only one body of men in Virginia supporting these and other social measures. These men were in the state federation of labor. I learned then to turn to labor unions for help in progressive legislation. Learned too that labor's greatest security lay in strong organization.

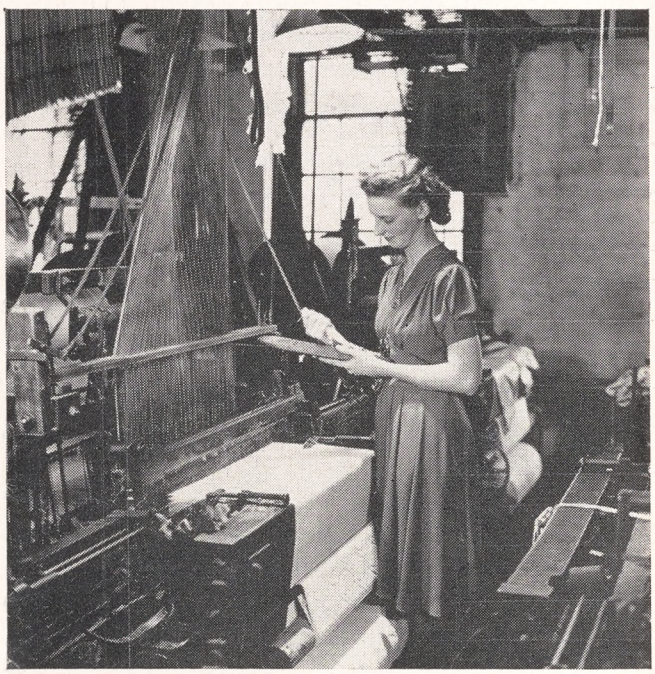
In the five years, 1932-37, as secretary of the National Consumers' League, working for state and federal wage and hours laws, social security and the remedial measures introduced under the Roosevelt administration, it became more and more apparent that workers must organize to protect themselves and to effectively press for social legislation.

While I was with the League and in frequent contact with well known labor leaders the CIO came into being. From the first its principles and program thrilled me. Here at long last was a labor movement that demanded opportunity and security for all workers—that represented industrial democracy on the broadest scale ever achieved in America.

The CIO called for organization of all workers without discrimination because of race or nationality or creed. It demanded equal pay for equal work whether performed by a white or Negro man, or a woman. It called for plant-wide organization, including every skill and no skills. The very structure of industrial unions called for democracy. Skilled tool makers had to remember the rights of common labor in the plant. The mass of unskilled or semi-skilled workers realized their interdependence with the skilled workers. Unless the interests of all were looked to, industrial unions would fall apart.



The industrial union movement worked. In a few years standards of living were raised for millions of working people and their families. Even among the formerly most exploited and submerged groups of workers organization came and brought new hope and opportunity. As Philip Murray said in a message to the Churches, the CIO "philosophy runs simply to this fundamental need: to improve the status of the family life, thereby, of necessity, improving the status of this nation." This philosophy was put into dynamic action.

THE CIO was not satisfied to limit its activities to union security, good wages and working conditions. It looked beyond collective bargaining to the society of which working people and their families are part. As the CIO has grown in numbers and power its leadership has thought more and more in terms of social progress—what is good for all the people.

These social concerns of the CIO have been shown in support of federal legislation for the benefit of farmers, for the farm security administration and for low interest loans to small farmers, for conservation of soil, forests, water, and other natural resources, for aid to education, extension of social security benefits to new groups of people, for low cost housing for both city and country people. The CIO has supported every measure for prosecution of the war, and consistently urged adequate provisions for returning servicemen.

No organization in America has shown a more intense and practical interest in this country's responsibility in helping secure a just and lasting peace, or made more insistent and practical suggestions for full employment in the postwar period.

Small wonder that the CIO has attracted so many professional people of strong social sympathies, and that college professors, ministers, social workers and government executives are now working for it and its unions. These people might well use the words of Steven Nance of Georgia, who directed the CIO's textile and garment organizing campaign in the south until death took him in 1938. One of Steve's friends, possessed of more prejudice than information concerning the CIO, asked him why he had gone with it. Steve replied, "Because I wanted to do the most good to the greatest number of people in the shortest time."

ELLIS VAN RIPER
Vestryman of Calvary, New York, and Officer of the Transport Workers Union

E. STANLEY JONES in his recent book Christ of the American Road goes to some length to describe his difficulties during one of his preaching missions to contact the leaders of organized labor through the local churches or churchmen. He found out as he inquired further that there was a wide gulf between them and that no attempt was being made to bring them closer together. He found after meeting some of the leaders of labor however that there were many men of deep spiritual convictions among them and the gap was an artificial one that did not represent a wide separation of views or objectives.

It certainly is true that many churchmen are misinformed when it comes to the question of organized labor. In far too many cases it has become a hysterical matter and reason no longer is the ruling factor in making any decisions. Many within the Church have been piously saying that when Christ was in the wilderness that he emphatically rejected the material solution to the problems of his people but such was not the case. He did say that "man shall not live by bread alone." Many of these same churchmen seem to have censored out of their Bibles the challenging story of the judgment where Christ separates the sheep and the goats on the basis of their deeds in meeting the needs of their fellowmen. These are the same churchmen who are completely taken in by the false claim that labor is a "communist" and revolutionary force and that if one gives support to it they will be in effect supporting anti-Christ.

Likewise there are many labor leaders and in the rank and file who sincerely believe that the Church is virtually a closed shop for reaction and big business. As a result of this feeling they have studiously avoided any form of contact with it. It should be needless to say that there is some justification for this feeling on the part of both groups and also that it is exaggerated far beyond its true proportions.

Most labor unions have embarked on a campaign to make their membership aware of the issues before the people for the postwar world. They are using the usual means at their command: discussion groups, literature and radio and pictures.

At the same time in many churches discussion groups are now using the findings of the Malvern and Delaware conferences as a basis for discussions on the post war world. Curiously, it seems to me, somehow we have come to live in compartments. For if you take the trouble to read the findings of these Church conferences and compare them with the program and objectives of the CIO you will be struck by their similarity . . . even in most cases identical wording. Those who care to make this study can secure the Malvern Manifesto and the Delaware report from the CLID, 155 Washington Street, New York 6, and the report of the CIO post war planning committee by writing the national office at 718 Jackson Place N. W., Washington 6. I am sure that if you will read these documents carefully you will discover that the Churches are frequently more radical than labor; and on practically all points in the program the Church and labor have the same common objectives. Why then the gulf between them?

It is of course due to lack of contact and hence of understanding. The need is for a systematic laying of a foundation for fellowship. It would be hard to find a parish today that did not have at least one member of a union. There are many Christians today who need to grow in their experience of Christ and to translate this personal experience into social action. It should be done in every parish through discussion groups. And in doing so we will do well to remember that the plans will be only as good as those who make them. If within those who plan there is lacking that redemptive spirit of Christ little will be accomplished.

The Church and labor are the two institutions that touch the masses. They should be cooperative not competitive. The Church must see the labor movement as a vehicle for social expression of its ideals. The labor movement must see an ally in the Church and be ready to receive its moral and spiritual corrective. We are approaching a people's world and the Church and labor are people's institutions. Division will only postpone the better world ahead.

"Quotes"

NO MERE establishment of an old economic order will suffice. Christ demands a new order in which there shall be a more equitable distribution of material wealth, more certain assurance of security for the unemployed and aged, and, above all, an order which shall substitute the motive of service for the motive of gain.

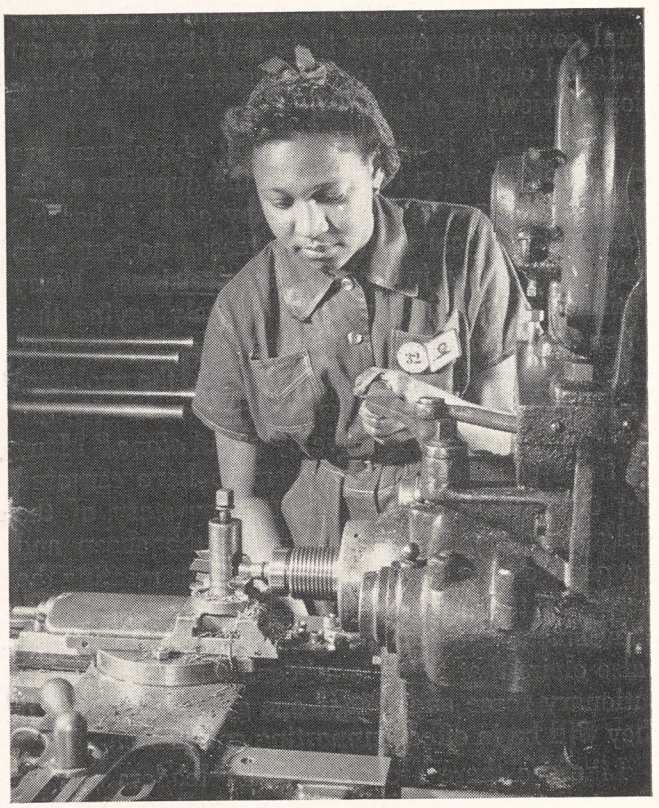
Our Abstract Virtues

By

KERMIT EBY
Assistant Director of Research and Education of the CIO

THE Bible teaches us to love one another. Jesus of Nazareth lived a life demonstrating love for his fellowmen. Millions of sermons have been preached from the Bible's texts and Jesus' life. No one quarrels with the practice. In fact nothing is more soothing than a minister's regular admonitions on brotherly love. Nor is there any danger to the minister's position if he deals with purely abstract concepts.

Love in the abstract is quite pleasant. It is love in the specific which complicates matters. Let the minister suggest we associate with our social inferiors, that the church is more than a middle-class club, and he soon is dubbed an irresponsible radical.



For a long time I have been bothered about the ease with which we love Negroes in Africa and discriminate against them in the United States. I have never understood why we have no Negroes in the Church communing with the whites; nor why a Negro soul becomes valuable in direct proportion to his distance. Love in the abstract is so beautiful that I hate to disturb the solace it brings. And yet I doubt if we can save our individual or collective souls until we secure the same rights for Negroes — jobs, equal pay, civil rights — as we demand for ourselves.

Justice is another soothing word. The trouble is again our unwillingness to apply it to specific situations. Abstractions in the area of justice are meaningless. Let the minister suggest to his congregation that Brother C — who is paying starvation wages to his workers, has already had his fate sealed. Or let him speak at a union meeting with the same enthusiasm reserved for Rotary luncheons or when he is waited upon by the trustees. (Ministers of my acquaintance have refused to "bless" a union convention for fear of reprisals.)

Justice demands specific things. It demands an annual living wage for all those able and willing to work, irrespective of race, creed, sex or color; it demands the utilization of our tremendous productive capacity for the production of peace time goods and services. It demands peace and a total society governed by law not force. These and many others are the criteria for our modern world and the minister who shrinks from proclaiming the truth makes justice a mockery.

Jesus taught us to bring good tidings to the poor. And to bring them good tidings we must go where they are. Today the poor mistrust us (ministers) so much they consider the Church representative of the exploiting classes. Need I say more!

Charity is another over-worked word. Faith, hope and charity, but the greatest of these is charity. Much emphasis is placed on charity at Christmas time. Christmas baskets are considered by some a solution to our economic problems. During the depression and today we have community funds and government relief — commercialized charity. Certainly if we can systematize our relief we can systematize our production.

The supreme test of our economy will come when the war ends; when we face unemployment, breadlines and competition for jobs. Now is the time to prepare for the challenges of tomorrow. This edition of THE WITNESS is an indication of the church's awareness of the tasks ahead. Awareness must be followed by decision. The hungry are not appeased by promises nor the naked by unused surpluses.

Churchmen Meet in Cleveland To Plan for Peace

Dulles Tells Church Conference We Should Proclaim Goals and Support Them in Europe

Edited by W. B. Spofford

Cleveland:—The people of Greece, Spain, Belgium, Poland were absent participants in the conference of the commission for a just and durable peace, meeting here January 16-19. Chairman John Foster Dulles, adviser for Governor Dewey on foreign affairs, called upon the government to adopt and proclaim a foreign policy whereby we would actively participate in Europe's problems, and was critical of the "alooftness" of Washington in the Polish and Greek situations. He termed this a "major setback" and a threat to the effectiveness of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. He was seconded in this by Prof. William E. Hocking of Harvard who advocated "prompt and affirmative" action to give meaning to the Proposals so that cooperation between the United Nations may be substituted for the power politics which he stated is being played in Europe. Meanwhile others, more sympathetic with the administration, expressed the conviction that misunderstanding that may now exist between England, the United States and the Soviet Union would undoubtedly be cleared up at the forthcoming conference between Roosevelt, Churchill and Stalin, and charged that those who "rock the boat" by creating distrust of our allies were actually playing into the hands of our enemies who hope to be saved from inevitable defeat by driving a wedge between the big three nations.

More than 500 delegates, representing all of the Protestant Churches, attended the conference, the first full meeting of the commission to be held since the Delaware conference in 1942. There are 29 men and women present representing the Episcopal Church.

Four "principles of conduct" were urged by Mr. Dulles to bring collaboration "out of the realm of theory into that of reality," as follows:

Our government should adopt and publicly proclaim its long-range goals. These should stem from our Christian tradition and be such as to inspire and unify us.

Our government should not merely talk about ideals. It must get down in to the arena and fearlessly and skilfully battle for them.

Our government must, however, battle for its ideals under conditions such that "no particular setback need be accepted as definite."

Our electorate demanding the foregoing of its government must judge its government accordingly. It should not judge it merely by the immediate results attained. It must rather judge it by its announced long-term objectives, by whether it works competently to achieve them and by whether it brings into actual functioning procedures of peaceful change so that the world may evolve away from present harsh necessities.

Professor Hocking recommended united Church support of the Dumbarton Oaks proposals on the ground that if they were rejected no world order of any kind would be possible for a long time.

He urged the conference to call on the government to advocate a program of international agreement on ultimate autonomy for colonial areas and peoples, and an international bill of rights or some other set of principles to safeguard religious and intellectual freedom.

For the peace settlement with Germany, Dr. Hocking recommended that only those responsible for crimes should be punished; that Germany should not be dismembered into separate states, and that the anti-Nazi forces inside Germany should be strengthened. In the Far East he advocated a fully independent China; Philippine independence; a place for Japan in "the comity of nations" and recognition of her economic needs; recognition of Russia's importance in the Far East, and modification of American immigration laws to end discrimination against Orientals.

The Rev. Walter Horton, professor of Christian theology at the Oberlin graduate school of theology, urged the Churches set up a permanent organization to deal with peace problems. He said they should not isolate themselves from world politics but should mobilize their members on moral issues.

There was much lively debate throughout the conference between Dumbarton Oaks supporters and those whose strategy was to have the Proposals given only conditional endorsement since they were aware that they could not have them disapproved. The final result was unconditional support of the proposals.

Chief spokesmen for the pacifists were Charles Clayton Morrison of Chicago, A. J. Muste of the Fellowship of Reconciliation who argued well but was always thrown back in spite of fairly good support and E. Stanley Jones, former missionary to India. Those urging that the Proposals should be given unconditional support kept a positive attitude throughout the debate and were represented by excellent speakers. Episcopalian John J. Parker, judge of the circuit court of appeals, stated that "if we wait for the attainment of perfectionist plans it would bring the defeat of all our dreams. Our choice is not between Dumbarton Oaks and perfection but between Dumbarton Oaks or nothing." Another Episcopalian, Charles P. Taft, likewise warned the delegates against indulging in perfectionist statements. Meanwhile Mr. Dulles expressed the opinion that "there isn't going to be any peace conference" and that the question before the Churches is "whether we want our government to sit in on the peace conference that is going on today and every day. What we should get out of our minds completely is the idea that there is going to be a peace conference at some future day when representatives of the nations will gather in some mirrored hall like Versailles with a blank sheet of paper before them upon which to write the peace." He stated further that the U. S. government "has in effect withdrawn from the peace conference" and he placed the responsibility upon the people of the country who have not demanded that their government should take its place in the "peace conference" that in reality is now going on.

One of the tense moments during the conference was when Dr. Morrison was arguing for conditional endorsement of the Proposals, with the president of the Federal Council, Bishop Oxnam, presiding. At the conclusion of Morrison's address, Bishop Oxnam accused the speaker of claiming that certain matters were omitted from the Proposals which were in fact written into them in precise language, and he charged the Chicago editor with standing for "devilish purposes." The use of the word "devilish" cause the whole crowd to stir audibly but Bishop Oxnam went on in unruffled fashion.

The complete findings of the conference had not been released when this number of THE WITNESS went to press. There will therefore be a further report next week. But it can be said that this most important of Church conferences did give unconditional support to the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals.

Social Security

New York:—Extension of the government's present social security program to millions not covered by its provisions, including 700,000 to 1,000,000 lay employees of churches, educational and charitable institutions, was urged here by the executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches. The committee endorsed the extension of old age and survivors insurance to agricultural workers, domestic servants, employees of non-profit organizations, and the self-employed, and called for inclusion of the churches in a Federal social security plan offering protection to their lay workers. "We believe that such a program can be operated without impairing in any way the rights and freedoms of the churches," the committee's resolution stated.

It was pointed out that selective service experience has revealed that the standard of health in America is not adequate, and that a government study indicated 92 per cent of the population needed some assistance in meeting the cost of medical care. The committee recommended a "sound plan of public insurance." It urged "that the churches be unequivocal in giving guidance to the nation in the program of broad social welfare which social security legislation represents."

Temple Memorial

Baltimore: — A memorial service for Archbishop Temple was held at St. Paul's last Sunday, January 21, with the sermon by the Rev. Charles W. Lowry of Washington as the preacher. He studied under the late Archbishop and was closely associated with him during his stay in England. Dr. Lowry is to be one of the contributors to the Archbishop Temple number of THE WITNESS which will be our next issue. Others to contribute are Dean David Robert of Union Seminary; the Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher, the Rev. Richard Emrich and the Rev. Massey H. Shepherd of the Episcopal Theological School; Dean Willard Sperry of Harvard and Mrs. Reinhold Niebuhr of Barnard College. This number will be followed by the series on God and Our World which will be used in many parishes for Lenten studies. Those wishing extra copies of the Temple number must send their orders at once to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty St., New York 6.

Dumbarton Oaks

New York:—Approval of the security proposals made at Dumbarton Oaks was announced here by the United Christian Council for Democracy, composed of six official denominational social action groups. The council urged several specific modifications, amendments, and additions in the final charter. The state department was called upon for "prompt action in opening the proposals, with all suggestions for their amending and completion, to full discussion by the United Nations, convened in early conference if that be at all practicable." The social action groups urged that the organization be established immediately. The Church League for Industrial Democracy represents the Episcopal Church on the Council.

Daring Escape

Chungking (by wireless):—T. Z. Koo, a secretary of the world student Christian federation, has just arrived in Chungking after a daring escape from the Japanese at Shanghai. Koo was scheduled to leave Hongkong by air for America on Dec. 8, 1941, but Pearl Harbor the day before grounded his plane. He hid in Hongkong for three months and then smuggled himself aboard a ship sailing for Shanghai in a Japanese convoy. His identity was discovered just before the ship docked and during the next two years and more he was kept under strict surveillance by the Japanese and was frequently questioned by military authorities. Finally, the Japanese relaxed their vigil, and Koo was able to leave Shanghai.

Most of the student leader's trip through the interior of China was made on foot, often across Japanese lines and guerilla territory, and he had many narrow escapes. By way of Central Honan, he reached Sian, then Chengtu, and at last Chungking after a journey of more than four months. Living with friends here, Koo is spending his time preaching while he awaits passage to America to resume his duties with the federation. His family is still in Shanghai.

Washington: — Rev. J. Brooke Mosley, former rector of St. Barnabas Church, Cincinnati, recently accepted the position of director of the department of Christian social relations of the diocese of Washington. Moscow (by wireless) : — Izvestia, official Soviet newspaper, has charged the Vatican with supporting Polish reactionaries in London who are vainly trying to influence Allied opinion against the Soviet Union. "The Vatican organ, Osservatore Romano," Izvestia said, "is very sorry to hear the proposal for the return to Poland of a number of pieces of territory now included in Germany. The Vatican, in its 'mercy' to Germany goes so far as not to risk offending Germany, even in the interest of its Polish emigre flock. Doubless, Hitler is pleased by the Vatican's fervor, but it displeases the peoples fighting for life and liberty. From the beginning, Vatican policy has been contrary to the basic interests of freedom-loving peoples."

Paintings Exhibit

New York:—Church paintings by the young French artist, Bernard Lamotte, will be exhibited in the ecclesiastical department of Black, Starr and Gorham on Feb. 19, and will continue for two weeks. The canvasses were commissioned for the DeBeers collection. Mr. Lamotte travelled some 17,000 miles from Connecticut to California, painting "portraits of churches" in the background of life and color of the surrounding communities.

Successful Canvass

Larchmont, N. Y.:—St. John's Church has had the most successful budget campaign of its history. For the year 1944, which has been a normal year, there were 381 subscriptions totaling $16,623 but for 1945 there are 480 subscriptions totaling $24,064 with a few more still coming in. This represents a 25% increase in the number of subscriptions and a 44% increase in the total subscribed income.

Some of the increase is no doubt due to the deeper interest in things spiritual which every parish has felt together with the obvious fact that there is more money in circulation than there has been for some years past. But Larchmont has been affected less by war-prosperity than most places as there are no war industries nor military installations in the community.

Plastics in Church Lighting

Rambusch Lantern No. 11-G-165, first made for St. Francis of Assisi Church, New York City, has proved so popular that mass production methods are being installed. Costs are down to one-half and shipping costs are down even more. This lantern marks a new development in the science of church interior illumination in that it departs from the use of metal framework and adopts a more practical and serviceable material. The new lantern frames are made from a ligno-cellulose product which is durable, non-corrosive, easy to transport, assemble and install. The new diffusing material is plastic. It is shipped in flat sheets and bent into cylindrical form during assembly.

The great part of the success is due to the thorough work of the chairman of the campaign, Arthur Perkins. Heretofore the parish had been canvassed by letter first and by visitation afterwards of those who had not responded to the letter. This time Mr. Perkins decided to begin the campaign with a visitation of the entire mailing list. Instead of fifty or sixty canvassers needed for the former type of visitation he enlisted 140 men, many of them only recently come into the community. The attempt was made to carry out the whole visitation on one Sunday afternoon and the great majority of the people were reached on that day. The campaign was carried on in a quiet dignified manner utterly free from high pressure salesmanship and blatant publicity.

CHURCH AND LABOR

back and was at a loss for a reply. Then the union lawyer in another set of questions brought out the fact that missionaries who are sent into foreign fields are interested in giving health and the material things of life to those whom they are endeavoring to give a spiritual message. Another clergyman presented this idea of an annual wage in a sermon to his congregation and permitted a union to publish it in a union paper which reached 800,000 union workers and 200,000 union members in the armed service.

Some months later a rabbi was chairman of the program. His committee planned a dinner meeting which was held in the dining room of a large Protestant church. There were 149 persons present, representing all faiths, colors, and both the CIO and AFL unions. Two clergymen spoke on the theme, "The Church looks at Labor," and two labor leaders of the AFL and one from the CIO spoke on the topic, "Labor looks at the Church."

This is a growing experience and labor and religion are looking forward to the future together. One of the leading clergymen writes, "We are willing and anxious to listen to the problems of both management and labor. While it is true that industrialists have usually been more active members of church than labor leaders, it is likewise true that the purposes of organized labor come closer to the social creeds of the churches than the announced objectives of organized industry. We believe we have a mission to take the way and the spirit of the Hebrew-Christian religion into industrial relations. We hope within the year to have industrialists sitting at the same table with ministers and labor leaders. We have found the labor leaders of Columbus to be men whom we respected and liked. Much of our misunderstanding of them and much of their misunderstanding of us has been wiped away."

This experience is moving out now into other localities and has found a ready response from the leaders of both religion and labor. Requests are now coming from many cities and towns for help in starting fellowship luncheons.

There is a great need in our nation today for men to know each other and grow in their common experience. Out of this experience can come the positive action that will unite a nation and build God's kingdom on earth.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

OUR Church, like practically all others, has for years been issuing forthright pronouncements on "the right of employees to organize and to bargain collectively." General Conventions also have repeatedly urged a better understanding on the part of Church people of the aims and objectives of organized labor. It is in the spirit of these pronouncements that the editors of THE WITNESS asked a number of leaders of labor to contribute to this Church and Labor number.

As I read over these articles and as I meet with labor people I am struck with a marked difference between them and Church people. They want action. You will find it called for in all these articles—the translation of the Christian principles, in which they believe no less than ourselves, into deeds. Church people, in contrast, are inclined to think they have done something brave when they meet comfortably in conference and issue a manifesto setting forth what someone else ought to do. This was brought home to me some years back in a conversation with a couple of bishops on the way to a General Convention. I had just been mixed up in a nasty strike in a mining community. There were beatings, guns, starvation. There was also a complete denial of free speech. So I had been asked—as a parson and therefore presumably less vulnerable—to go into the valley and address a meeting. The bishops debated whether or not I was right in going. There was no question about the justice of the workers' cause; there certainly was no question about their right, as Americans, to hold meetings. Yet one of the bishops was able to sum up the duty of a churchman under such circumstances very simply: "You should assure the workers that you believe in the justice of their cause. Particularly you should tell them that you stand for the right of free speech. But you should make it clear that the Church is above such struggles and tell them that while they were in the mining community to test their rights, that you would be at the altar of the parish church (twenty-five miles away) praying for their success."

YOU will be interested in knowing something about those who have contributed to this number. First, all of them are prominent in the CIO so we want to say, before someone raises the objection, that several leaders of the A.F. of L. were asked to contribute but said they had more pressing things to do.

The Rev. Edgar L. Tiffany is the rector of the Transfiguration in Buffalo. He tells of his experience as a worker in a war plant.

John G. Ramsay, now a representative of the United Steelworkers Union, is a Presbyterian layman who was for many years active in the church in Bethlehem, Pa. He is a devout Christian whose chief task today is setting up conferences similar to the one he describes on page five.

Dr. J. Raymond Walsh, now director of education and research for the CIO, was formerly on the faculty at Harvard, Dartmouth and Hobart. He is an Episcopalian.

Philip Murray, the president of the CIO, is a Roman Catholic.

Lucy Randolph Mason, public relations representative of the CIO, was formerly the director of the Consumers League. She also is an Episcopalian, is a member of the CLID and served for a number of years on the executive committee of the social service department of the Federal Council of Churches.

Ellis Van Riper is a vestryman of Calvary Church in New York and is the chief shop steward of the Transport Workers Union.

Kermit Eby, formerly a high school principal and teacher, is a graduate of the University of Chicago. He spent a half year in the Orient as a member of the Quakers good will mission. On his return he became the executive secretary of the teachers union in Chicago and is now the assistant director of education and research of the CIO. He is a frequent contributor to magazines on religious subjects.

We are very happy to present their articles and hope that they may make for a clearer understanding of the aims of organized labor on the part of Church people.

A Friendly Message . .

Nearly 200,000 members of the United Rubber Workers of America, CIO, extend greetings to the members of the Episcopalian Church.

We are justifiably proud of our organization which was conceived in 1935. Since then the URWA has consistently sought to protect the interests of workers engaged in the rubber and allied industries, and we are deeply gratified at the results obtained. Our wartime activities have been great. We have made much progress in the establishment of Labor Management committees which in many instances can be credited with substantial increases in war production.

We are proud of the part which our people have played in assisting the war effort. This not only applies to production of a multitude of war products, but to the participation of our members in War Bond drives, Community Chest campaigns, War Relief collections, Red Cross activities, Blood donations, and every other worthwhile cause. Then too, over 20,000 of our boys and girls are in the armed services.

Ours is an organization dedicated to the advancement of men and women who toil for a living. One of the fundamentals adopted at the beginning of the Rubber Workers was a doctrine of brotherly love. A high percentage of our men and women belong to churches of all denominations. Our objectives are constructive and unselfish. It is our intention to cooperate at all times with all groups for the best interests of all Americans.

S. H. Dalrymple, President,

A Tribute to William Temple By the New Archbishop

A Simplicity of Character Greatest Thing About Him Declares Former London Bishop

By Geoffrey F. Fisher
Successor as Archbishop of Canterbury

London: — The greatest thing about William Temple was the simplicity of his character. With all his immense range of interests, with all his intellectual brilliance, with all his great influence in the Christian Churches, with all his vital concern for the Church of England, Christian unity, national well-being and so on, he was himself utterly simple, single-minded, without a thought of self, or of anything else but the service of love which he owed and gladly gave to God and to his fellow men. I heard him once at a great student movement conference, packed with young men and young women from the universities; the kind of an audience which above all he loved. He talked to them for forty-five minutes on religion. It was strong meat, a discourse closely argued, profound and challenging; then, for ten minutes at the end, he declared his own personal faith in the simplest words: faith in the Jesus whom he knew as Lord and Saviour and present friend. There was the real man, and all his brilliance of power never obscured it; that was the secret of his amazing capacity for friendship. All sorts of people were his friends, among the great and the humble. He never forgot them and was never too busy for them, and refused no call they made upon him. In any generation of Englishmen William Temple would have stood out as he conspicuously did in ours. So great was the range of his interests and his gifts and his effective influence that a brief appreciation like this must be altogether inadequate. The quality of his mind is shown in everything that he wrote or said. Whatever the subject, he found in it something original, stimulating, profound, and he held any audience by that characteristic delivery of his—vigorous, lucid and utterly sincere. He did not know how to be commonplace, though he knew very well when to be frivolous. There were not limits to his intellectual interests, he ranged over the whole field of history, philosophy and theology. I remember him saying once that he was taking with him for his summer holiday certain books as he wanted to fill a gap in his knowledge of the history of Spain.

After his time at Rugby and Balliol College, he became a fellow and lecturer in philosophy at Queen's College, Oxford. If he had chosen to become a professional philosopher, he would have been a great one. When many years later, as Archbishop of York, he delivered the Gifford lectures, he made a notable contribution to the philosophy of religion, and he did it among all the distractions of his public office. He could even write philosophy on the train. I remember seeing him off once at the station on his way to York, when he told me that he hoped on the journey to turn a particularly difficult corner in his Gifford lectures. But at Oxford, other interests than philosophy already occupied him, and already he was throwing himself into those interests in people, and how they lived, and in their social problems, which never left him. There must be many people in Bermondsey now who remember that young, vital, bulky figure of his in the Oxford and Bermondsey clubs. There are very many members of the Workers' Educational Association, of which he was president for sixteen years, who remember his brilliant lectures, his fascination in conversation and that tremendous laugh of his. Already at Oxford, it was clear to him that above every other interest, was his concern for the Christian faith and the Church of England and that to her service his life was to be dedicated.

It was no less clear to others that he would inevitably be a leader of it. After four years as headmaster of Repton, an interlude of sheer delight to him, he came to St. James's, Piccadilly. It is typical of him that even while he threw himself into every movement of the day, and was a great popular preacher, he had a special care for the spiritual interests of the servants of the many hotels in his parish. He became a leader of the reforming movement of the Church of England called the Life and Liberty, out of which in the end came the Church Assembly. He gave up St. James's to give himself wholly to that work. When it was finished, he became a canon of Westminster, but had hardly done so before he was appointed Bishop of Manchester. Thence after eight years, he went in 1929 to York, and only two years ago to Canterbury. All this time he was becoming a central figure in what is called the ecumenical movement, the drawing together of the diverse elements of the Christian Church, Orthodox, Lutheran, Reform and Anglican. In a series of conferences, he became personally known to and trusted by the leaders of all these Churches and exercised a powerful influence by the virtue of his theological insight and his wide sympathies. There was no one else who held quite his position. To have him at Canterbury meant an immense strengthening of the ties between all the Christian Churches.

From Canterbury, together with the Archbishop of York, he launched a great program of advance for the Church of England. It had a strong emphasis upon social betterment, the cause which he always had at heart, and he did not hesitate to give his views on economic as well as social questions. His speeches caught the ear of the nation. Everybody admired his courage, his forthrightness, and the clear inspiration of his lead. But the social emphasis was never the chief thing in the speeches which he delivered in England and Scotland at that time. As he himself pointed out to critics, the larger part of what he said was devoted to theology and the Christian religion, and everything else depended upon that. Indeed, everything in his life depended upon that. It is an untold loss for the Church of England, for the nation, and it is not too much to say for the world, that so soon, so prematurely and at such a time, this great churchman, this great Englishman, should be taken from us.

London:—In 1943 a mission composed of six prominent Chinese, well known in politics, journalism, education and law, visited England. They saw for themselves something of Britain's war effort by visiting naval and military bases, munition factories and educational establishments. In London they were guests at a reception given at the Chinese embassy by Dr. and Madame Wellington Koo. The cover picture is of the late Archbishop of Canterbury, William Temple, chatting with the leader of the mission, Dr. Wanf Shih-chieh.

COOPERATIVE EFFORT IN ALABAMA

Birmingham, Ala.:—The Auxiliary of Alabama, meeting at the Advent on January 17-18, voted to join an interdenominational undertaking to support an educational worker in one of the state prisons for women. The opportunity facing the Church in college work was presented by the Rev. James Stirling, student worker at the University of Florida. A feature of the meeting was the showing of a motion picture of Washington Cathedral.

BREAK RECORDS ON COLLECTIONS

New York:—Collections by the National Council for 1944 was $38,414 in excess of expectations. The collection ratio was 102.2%. Every diocese and district in the United States paid 100% or more. The total budget giving was $1,796,473 which was an increase over 1943 of $313,424.

BISHOP TUCKER HONORED

Baltimore: — Presiding Bishop Tucker was presented with a medal on January 19th designating him the "outstanding Virginian of the year." It was presented by the Virginians of Maryland. The speaker at the dinner was Bishop Powell of Maryland, with the Rev. Richard H. Baker, retiring president of the society, who is rector of the Redeemer, presiding.

The Archbishop of Canterbury chats at the front with General Sir Bernard L. Montgomery. The officer in the center is not identified

MEET SOCIAL ISSUES SAYS LEADER

London (by wireless):—The Rev. Ronald Allen, connected with the World Council of Churches as secretary of the department for reconstruction of Christian institutions in Europe, has challenged the Church to meet social issues squarely. He is the rector of a parish in Manchester, and was the speaker at the 1944 meeting of the Church Publishing Association for whom THE WITNESS is published. "We must all grasp not only the fact of world revolution but also the fact that of all world institutions the Church alone remains to bridge the gap between the old and the new era." A united Christian approach will be indispensable in strengthening the authority of a militant Church, he said, adding that "much hopeful progress" has already been made in this direction through the ecumenical movement.

GOOD EXAMPLE TO FOLLOW

Columbia, Mo.:—The Rev. Roger Blanchard, rector of Calvary Church here, in ordering a bundle of twenty-five copies of THE WITNESS through Lent, makes this comment: "We have used THE WITNESS series the last two Lents and have found them very effective for discussion groups." There is still time for you if you send your order at once to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y. We will bill Easter week at five cents a copy. The series on God and Our World starts next week. Sounds like a strictly Episcopal affair.

Summary of Cleveland Meeting With an Appraisal

Immediate Task of the Churches Is to Make Their Opinions Known Before It Is Too Late

By Richard Morford
Secretary of the United Christian Council for Democracy

Cleveland:—As reported in THE WITNESS for January 25, the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals for world organization received unconditional approval, at the same time nine specific improvements in the proposals were called for and a score of other fundamental recommendations directed toward the achievement of world order, justice and freedom were passed with the overwhelming majority support of the 450 delegates at the second national study conference of the Churches on a just and durable peace meeting in Cleveland January 16-20.

The suggested improvements in Dumbarton Oaks are as follows: (1) The final charter should contain a preamble accepting the long-range purposes of justice and human welfare set forth in the Atlantic Charter; (2) provisions for the operation of the organization under specific international law, which law must be expanded and codified; (3) withholding of voting rights in the Security Council from a country whose own case is being considered; (4) making procedure for amending the charter more liberal; (5) a special agency to deal with and be responsible for colonial and dependent areas; (6) another agency on human rights and fundamental freedoms; (7) eventual membership of all nations willing to accept the obligations of membership; (8) more specific proposals aimed at the limitation and reduction of armaments; (9) provisions designed to protect and defend the smaller nations more adequately from possible subjection to the arbitrary power of the great.

The sense of urgency concerning world organization to which the churchman gave more attention than to any other subject was made emphatic in their appeal to the President to issue invitation for a United Nations conference to be held as soon as possible to consider the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals.

Among other recommendations written into the 3,000 word Message to the Churches are these: the United Nations are urged to make explicit now their attitudes on the post-war treatment of Germany and Japan, to remove from these countries the "power and will" to wage war but not to be "vindictive" in the necessary discipline which must be exercised for the crimes committed; to stimulate liberal German and Japanese elements in the re-education of their fellow-citizens and to make opportunities for productive industry and trade available to both. Also urged was the abandonment of the unilateral determination of boundaries, the development of an international bill of rights. Repeal of the Oriental exclusion act was asked. Opposition was registered to all discrimination against racial and minority groups both at home and abroad. Thus support was given to the proposal for a permanent Fair Employment Practice Committee, the repeal of the poll tax, and to non-discriminatory housing. Anti-Semitism as a rising threat to brotherhood must be wiped out. Congress was asked to defer action on peacetime military conscription until after the war. The conference pleaded for a larger federal unity in Protestantism, preserving the freedom of various denominational groups and at the same time coordinating the resources of Protestantism to apply them to the solution of social, economic, and political problems dealt with in the conference. The need for a united Protestant missionary movement was declared, and as well the need for American Protestants to join with Catholics, Jews and others who, in recognition of the moral law, share our social objectives in building a world order.

Extended and thoroughly democratic discussion featured the conference sessions. Realistic, concrete proposals in considerable detail which the summary above does not adequately suggest were the outcome. There was fifteen hours of give-and-take for all the delegates on all the content of written memoranda submitted by commissions which had been at work several months. The findings committees in each of the three discussion groups gave additional hours to sifting the preliminary recommendations; a central findings body did heavy midnight to dawn work. In plenary session all the delegates again had their chance for seven hours to modify and amend the final recommendations.

Two of the leading members of the findings committee of the peace conference were Bishop William Scarlett, chairman of the commission on social reconstruction of the Episcopal Church and Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, Methodist Bishop and president of the Federal Council of Churches

What came forth is not a statement of principles alone although the basic imperatives of the Christian faith for our time are the foundation of the message. No fear of overstepping the traditional, circumscribed functions and responsibility of the Church hindered these churchmen from making specific pronouncements on economic, social and political matters, nor of asserting

by Joseph F. Fletcher

Professor at Episcopal Theological School

DOROTHY SAYERS in an essay called The Greatest Drama Ever Staged says that official Christianity "of late years, has been having what is known as a bad press. We are constantly assured that the churches are empty because preachers insist too much upon doctrine—'dull dogma,' as people call it. The fact is the precise opposite. It is the neglect of dogma that makes for dullness. The Christian faith is the most exciting drama that ever staggered the imagination of man—and the dogma is the drama.

William Temple more than any of the Christian men from whom I've learned my lessons taught me what strong meat the faith of the Church provides. And strong meat whets the appetite. The epistle to the Hebrews tells us that "everyone that useth milk is unskillful in the word of righteousness, for he is a babe." William Temple never failed to note that the word there is dikaiosuneis: that is, justice—troublesome, radical, critical, prophetic judgment—not personal or mystical or private rectitude! "But strong meat belongeth to them that are full of age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil."

I have no desire to do "obsequious sorrow" as Shakespeare said in scorn, but we all feel awed, and perhaps even a bit frightened, by the Archbishop's sudden death, and in this mood I'd like to suggest that this truth that the dogma is the drama in the lesson, above all others, we can learn from his life. Somehow I feel sure that he would prefer us to think on his life rather than to dwell upon his death, just as Temple himself always turned for inspiration from the Pauline preoccupation with our Lord's death to the Johannine discovery of atonement in the life and the light and the love.

What I am trying to say is colored no doubt by my own personal experience and indebtedness to Temple. The year before I entered the seminary he published Christ the Truth and its incarnation-centered faith caught me—has held me helpless but willing ever since. The year after I started theological study he showed me the dramatic stature of Christian courage by his stand for the English miners in the general strike. Here was a preacher and prophet on a scale that American Church life always hinted at but never provided.

Later in England in spite of the press of his own studies and his duties in the northern primacy, he never failed to help me when I ran into snags in the search for backgrounds of Christian political and economic theory. Never have I known anybody with such incredible wealth of information ready to be turned on by a simple question or a superficial opinion not easily squared with the facts. And those of us who lectured from '29 to '32 for the English Workers' Educational Association had frequent reason to thank God for his chairmanship of the common people's school. Temple was the people's archbishop fully as much as St. Thomas of London or William Laud ever were. In our own times no religious leader has been as truly a national figure with the possible exceptions of Cardinal Manning and General Booth.

Back in 1922, in a book called Painted Windows, by a "Gentleman with a Duster" who was generally known to be Sidney Dark of the Church Times, a modernist theologian was quoted as saying that "Temple is the most dangerous man in the Church of England. He is not only a socialist, but is also Gore's captive, bow and spear!" William Temple was not a socialist but he was a prophetic man of God and therefore his championship of the Labor Party and of British workingmen no doubt made him a socialist as far as most un-modern modernists are concerned. He was no captive of Gore's Anglo-Catholicism, neither by bow or spear, but a truly central and classical believer—but I suppose that that put him in a class with liberal Catholics—and the archbishop was proud to be so numbered. But this modernist was telling more of the truth than he could really understand; he was saying that the dogma is the drama. His use of socialism to heighten the charge of Catholic conviction—as far as Temple was concerned—only served to illustrate the old saw that "any stigma will do to beat a dogma." The archbishop understood that even rarer than Christian charity is Christian faith.

At that time, 1922, he was still the Bishop of Manchester, and Sidney Dark also said, "I regard him as a man whose full worth will never be known till he is overtaken by crisis." Temple had already shown his courage in the Life and Liberty Movement which led to the creation of the National Assembly, and the frank threat of disestablishment if Parliament refused to relax its Erastian control of the Church. He gave Dark's words their proof in the first post-war period at Birmingham, in 1924, in the conference on politics, economics and citizenship. And he proved them without doubt in the general strike of 1926 and at the Malvern conference in 1941, when the blitz was at its height and the iron was hot for revolutionary Christian utterance. The Malvern Manifesto is an impressive demonstration of Temple's own rational faith that revelation is no intuitive and mystical fiat, but—as he always put it—"the coincidence of event and appreciation."

It's hard to indicate the richness of his influence as it came in such a steady stream through his elaborated works like the Gifford lectures and the Penguin book on Christianity and Social Order (of which the appendix is a time bomb yet to explode), or in prophetic addresses like his attack two years ago in Albert Hall on the scarcity economy of modern credit monopoly and the five big banks, or the many shrewd remarks to be found studding his essays, meditations and episcopal charges. But I find my thoughts centering, briefly, on three scores: his ecumenical leadership, his radical social leadership, his leadership as a modern apologist.

WE all know of his hard labor in the ecumenical movement. The wisdom and skill he brought to Oxford and Edinburgh in 1937 inevitably caused him to be put into the presidency by a loud and ready acclamation, of the World Council of Churches. The most sectarian and bigoted of Christians and the most eager of haste-makes-waste reunioneers all respected his simple distinction between "unity" and "union" and his insistence that the one comes before the other. I feel sure that he believed profoundly that the way to Edinburgh leads through Oxford, that the way to universal faith and order is to be found in universal life and work, that cooperation is the key to communion. Many of us realize that the ethical points of interest in the epistle to the Ephesians would have obscured its ecumenical importance for us if it had not been for his grace, who saw its practical message for a modern Church so broken as to deny the risen Lord. It was precisely Temple's faith in the classical dogma of the Church as the risen body of Christ which made him, compelled him, to work so unceasingly under Christ "in whom all the building fitly formed together groweth into an holy temple in the Lord."

To be a "radical" means literally to go to the root of matters. Both prophecy and physics research are by nature radical, and they both lead us to the same truth that organic unity is the truth about the nature of things. This conviction about the unity (not singularity) of things was the key perhaps to Temple's life and thought. Spiritual unity, physical unity—they require that their being, the reality of them, shall be acknowledged in Church and government, economics and culture, and that the sacramental unity of the spiritual and material orders themselves shall be made plain. He always understood, with the simplicity that comes of careful study, that a planned society will surely come in the very nature of social process and he therefore always tried to show us that our task is to preserve personal liberty in a planned society by planning for it and not by resisting history itself in a mood of decaying individualism and stupid reaction.

He was of course a son of aristocratic people, indeed the archbishop son of an archbishop father, but he had in him a lot of "the best of the old school tie!" Nothing galled him so much as the knowledge that the Church was still too much cluttered with "squires from the shires and spinsters from the spas," the conservative party at prayer. I am myself convinced that he turned away so obviously from Anglo-Catholicism (except for its social radicals like Canon Demant and Mr. Reckitt) because his patience could not stretch to so many young priests who were easily excited about the proper place of the gloria in the order for holy communion but unconcerned about the proper place of the workers in a Christian society. He was too fully aware of the word of God as the light of the world, and stood in the tradition of Maurice, Kingsley, Holland, Westcott and Gore.

Canon Scott Holland once said in St. Paul's Cathedral that the more he understood the incarnation the more he was concerned about drains, or "sewers" as we say in America. Although his only brother is a sanitary engineer, an expert on drains, Archbishop Temple probably knew little about them. But he certainly knew what Scott Holland was getting at. Temple made it even more unmistakable; he was forever pointing out that there is nothing secular but sin, that Christianity is a materialistic religion, that no more dialectical materialism can be conceived than the claim that the Word was made Flesh, that redemption of the world means revolution—redeeming means re-ordering the structure of social and personal relations, that both personal and social sin are matters of disorder and not of corruption, that the image of God is obscured but not destroyed in men. The dogma is the drama. He didn't succumb to the cynicism and despair of Neo-Calvinoxy! And always he brought good humor into his defense of classical integrity, as once at a seminarians' conference after Reinhold Niebuhr had lectured:

At Swanick, when Niebuhr had quit it,
A young fellow said, "Now I have hit it.
Since I cannot do right
I must find out tonight
What sin to commit, and commit it."

But he could be sharp as well as witty as when he wrote to me in a personal letter about a quietly circulated attack on Malvern which went the rounds in the National Association of Manufacurers, that it was "for the most part silly." When Temple went to Canterbury, he went from Malvern as well as from York.

As a modern apologist for our faith Temple's contribution is too rich and acute to be more than mentioned here. His Nature, Man and God is perhaps the most vital Anglican work of its kind in modern times. The germinal brilliance of his recent supplement to the Christian News-Letter, republished in the Forward-Day-by-Day may be of even greater importance—if we can raise up strong interpreters. Speaking for myself, I am supremely grateful to him for his firm but humble loyalty to natural theology, not as a wicked instrument of human pride, as Barth and Heim and Brunner suggest, but as a necessary safeguard against bigotry and superstition and the religious anarchist whose opinions are always prefaced by "Thus saith the Lord." Only such a man could so completely face down all forms of religious idealism and its subtle schizophrenia and boldly assert Christian realism instead.

When there is no vision the people perish. God is faithful and just—but who are His servants who fear not to see the drama in the dogma? Perhaps Middleton Murry has stated our present case too well for comfort when he warns us that the "Church fails in leadership because it shows no sign of having known despair; no evidence of having been terrified by its own impotence." What Murry says digs deeper now that Temple is gone, but no requiems will fill the place he leaves. The Church needs more actors in the drama of the dogma.

Memories of William Temple

by Mrs. Reinhold Niebuhr
Of the Barnard College Faculty

WHEN I went up to Oxford in 1926, William Temple was Bishop of Manchester, but to most people he meant many things more than just a bishop. He had supported and advised the workers' educational association; he had been connected with COPEC (conference on political and economic co-operation); he had been headmaster at Repton; he had edited the Pilgrim; he had written big books and little books; Mens Creatix was published towards the end of the last war, and Christus Veritas in 1924, while earlier that very year there was published Personal Religion and the Life of Fellowship as the Bishop of London's Lent book—a little book which today, as then, eighteen years ago, speaks simply and yet profoundly to the mind and conscience of the average person in the Church. Those who knew him and remembered his father prophesied that the son would go far, despite his unworldly tendency to espouse certain political and social causes—even to the extent of being a member of the Labor Party. Those of the younger generation, concerned with and questioning issues of ecclesiastical and political life or troubled or perplexed by intellectual problems looked to him for leadership and inspiration as well as for direct counsel and advice.

So it was no wonder that undergraduates as well as their elders thought much of him and listened eagerly to him whenever he came to Oxford. A Balliol man, he had held a fellowship at Queen's College, and had tutored in philosophy; and to many he was the embodiment of all the qualities that go together to make the perfect Oxford tutor.

He was wise, learned, and at the same time simple, Socratic and impersonal in discussion, yet always kind and generous as well as understanding of the problems and points of view of others. If you had once seen or heard him discussing, either with his fellow theologians, or with undergraduates, you could not forget it. The dispassionate judgment, the close attention, the clarifying definition of points and problems, the neat rejoinder and even neater summing up—all this made him a great teacher, a true doctor of the faith for all those who came into contact with him: his clergy, leaders of the Christian student movement, those who gathered under his direction at missions or schools of prayer or at retreats, and countless others who were associated with him in his various fields of interest—social, educational and theological.

Whenever he came to Oxford he was sure to find an eager and crowded audience. St. Mary's, the university Church, would be packed for the Sunday evening university sermon, or for the successive services of a university mission, with undergraduates sitting cheerfully on the stone floor or chancel steps. One of such occasions is still vivid and I can remember it as if it were yesterday—his straight-forward, unsentimental discussion of worship and prayer. The worship of God was the beginning and end of the Christian life and the worshipping attitude could not be "used"; it was not to be regarded as a "helpful" adjunct to the active life. In an equally matter-of-fact fashion, he insisted that if the act of worship did not affect one's ethical and social attitudes then it was not worship of God, but spiritual self-indulgence. He spoke simply and easily as he always did, without strain or effort, yet neither his manner nor what he said could be described as facile. His words had the mark of much thought and discipline and even more of prayer and meditation. The head of a college spoke to me as we left the Church. "There is no swept-awayness in that kind of sermon," he said and further explained, "The Archbishop uses his mind and expects you to use yours and yet he speaks simply and directly, only as Oxford 'greats' man (i. e., classical scholar) could have preached that sermon." And, allowing for the bias in the remark, on the whole the comment was correct. The Archbishop's appeal was never emotional. There was a curious power in his speaking and preaching, both in substance as in the manner of presentation, and so often what he said was so amazingly relevant to the occasion and to the situation that his words had moral and spiritual authority.

THE Archbishop looked then in the late thirties very much as he looked ten or fifteen years earlier. His hair may have become more sparse, but his face was unlined, his expression as serene, and his glance behind his steel-rimmed spectacles as keen as ever. The outward and visible man was very much an expression of his mind and spirit. His courage and appearance had a kind of stately sprightliness and, in spite of the portliness of his figure, his gait and movements were agile and easy. Unfailingly friendly and pleasant, he was never effusive or hearty, and the straight-forward ease of his manner showed that he moved among his fellows in simpleness and sincerity of heart. He also had the modesty of the truly great; sometimes one was struck by the contrast between him and perhaps some over-pretentious cleric or intellectual who was trying to impress. Such people he always treated with sincere courtesy, and sometimes his attitude of charity helped to banish some of the grounds of their arrogance or pretention. But his courtesy and charity were not calculated; they may have been the fruits of a mind naturaliter Christiana, but the grace of such modesty in the last resort was because he walked humbly before God.

I can recall all sorts of pictures of him: the Archbishop at Oxford, chatting with the porter at his old college, discussing with his former colleagues or present-day undergraduates, and giving all his same cordial interest and attention. Or again, leading retreats or quiet days and sharing with others the discipline of silence and worship. When he was elevated to the primacy of York many wondered how in that office he could possibly combine its administrative responsibilities with intellectual life and with the spiritual direction he gave to so many groups in the Church. But in his first diocesan letters he announced that he was going to keep one day a week free of outside engagements for the particular purpose of study and meditation. In the following years he wrote and delivered the Gifford lectures at Glasgow university, while the Readings in St. John's Gospel, published in 1937, were the fruits of study shared in retreat and conference with various groups of clergy.

But, to return to my memories—I can see him going off after some meeting, bouncing about cheerily in the ancient and minute baby Austin of some impoverished curate, rather than in the upholstered limousine some might regard as befitting so eminent a churchman. I can see him spending two whole days chairing a small conference of younger clergy and university dons, not many of the important or obviously key people; and, with consistent interest, discussing and clarifying issues of theology and politics with them. Other recollections: the Archbishop happily drinking a mug of hot cocoa after a strenuous day of meetings or going over some of the problems under discussion. His sudden laugh, so friendly and contagious, and the quick phrase and flash of wit come back to mind; and one realizes how dreadfully as a person as well as a leader he will be missed.

The Archbishop feasting and fasting on an apple, and an apple only, for breakfast, while the rest of us consumed porridge, toast, bacon and eggs. But the last memory I have is of a sermon broadcast on the last Sunday in August, 1939. It was in the last days, and, although war officially was not declared until the following Sunday, the inevitable was upon us. The Archbishop was preaching at Bristol but most of England heard him over the radio. We sat in our Sussex village and heard him describe the moral and spiritual issues underlying the political and military challenge of Hitler's Germany. It was a great address, both in its religious reference, and also in its analysis of the issues confronting England and Englishmen. No one else could have spoken to England or for England in that moment as he did and he was able to do it because his ultimate loyalty was to more than to England. He was knit and related to so many phases of our natural life, but he was first and last the servant of God and of his Church, and was able to relate the tragedy of history to the gospel in terms of immediate realism as well as of ultimate hope.

It was seemly and fitting that All Saints-tide followed the time of his death. That season, commemorating the blessed company of all faithful people, stands as a lively symbol of the faith which he served so loyally and which others felt he embodied so well.

O Almighty God, who hast knit together thine elect in one communion and fellowship, in the mystical body of thy son, Christ, our Lord; Grant us grace to follow thy blessed saints in all virtuous and godly living, that we may come to those unspeakable joys which thou hast prepared for them that unfeignedly love thee; through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

Temple As Friend

By

CHARLES W. LOWRY
Rector at Chevy Chase,
Washington, D. C.

AMONG all the arts there is none more rare and difficult than that of friendship. Yet there is perhaps nothing else in life that is richer or more deeply satisfying. For Christians friendship is forever hallowed by the words of our Lord: "Henceforth I call you not servants . . . , but I have called you friends."

In a recent letter from England a canon of the English Church, for many years closely associated with Dr. Temple, writes: "Prominent among his great gifts was a genius for friendship." There will doubtless be many testimonies to the same effect for I believe that William Temple was a great friend. By this I mean much more than that he was a friendly person though he was that. He was friendly because he was a Christian and was essentially a humble and simple and loving person. Friendship however is a high art, involving the capacity for love, sensitivity, imagination, and a selfless thoughtfulness.

This short article is a transcript of some phases of an intimate experience. It is not easy to write, but it would be harder to decline to do so.

I did not meet Dr. Temple during my years at Oxford and in England, though I heard him for eight nights at his remarkable mission to Oxford University in 1931, I stayed for a short while in a line of students waiting to see him, half a block long, and subsequently I brushed sleeves with him walking in the parks. When I did meet him at the College of Preachers, Washington, in 1935, and recalled these contacts without personal fruition he made the somewhat breath-taking reply: "I was sure when you came up (at the opening ceremony of the conference) to sign the book that I had seen you somewhere before." That week, or fragment of one, which was for him surely one of the most crowded a mortal ever put in, he found time to invite me twice up to his quarters in the tower, to drive to Mt. Vernon, and to slip by the Virginia Seminary for a hastily swallowed cup of tea. Thereafter no December ever passed that I did not receive a letter recalling our meeting at the college. This has always seemed to me one of the most extraordinary instances of thoughtfulness I have ever encountered. In all I have perhaps 35 letters from him, all save two or three written by hand. After he became Archbishop of Canterbury he continued to write, though more briefly and sometimes with the plaint that he was horribly pressed and had to take time out of sleep for personal correspondence.

The spectacular chapter in my friendship with the Archbishop came in the summer of 1937. I encountered him first at the Archbishop of Canterbury's garden party for the delegates to the great conferences at Lambeth. He joined the line behind me several yards, Mrs. Temple with him. I left the line and greeted them, the meeting being definitely British. On the formal side, so to speak. However, it was not so very long—as I discover from a detailed diary kept that summer—until the Archbishop and I were handing tea to Mrs. Harper Sibley and Mrs. Stebbins, as well as Mrs. Temple. Then there happened suddenly one of those incredibly thoughtful acts. I was on the point of paying my farewell respects to our Archiespiscopal host when Dr. Temple advanced and said: "Your Grace, I hope you will not only meet this man but get to know him." In consequence my farewell took two or three minutes.

FROM London I went to Bishopthorpe (the ancient palace of the Archbishops of York) to spend the week-end before the Edinburgh conference. A galaxy of distinguished persons arrived Saturday afternoon but mine was the rare fortune to be invited on Friday and to have twenty-four hours as the only guest in the palace. On Saturday morning we went over the Archbishop's hoods, which took up virtually a whole room. Pulling out those given by Princeton and Columbia, he said: "I must wear one of these on Sunday in the minster; which do you think is the more honorable?" On Sunday the Archbishop was the celebrant at an early service in the parish church and in the evening I preached with His Grace reading Evening Prayer. In between at a great service in the minster, with Bishop Perry preaching, I had the honor of acting as chaplain to his grace.

At Edinburgh on the eve of the conference we had tea together. The Archbishop was on a strict diet, only fruit for breakfast and nothing but tea at tea. But on this particular afternoon he said, "I believe I'll break over this once," and ate cake. In this conference he was great as a presiding officer but he was still greater in the informal contacts of Cowan house where about a hundred delegates lodged and had two meals a day together. I had the opportunity of observing both him and Mrs. Temple in constant and not unwearing intercourse with folk of all nations and ecclesiastical denominations. They were both superb.

I remember so well the last evening. An eminent American delegate made a very nice speech in which he paid tribute to the Archbishop of York. Then he continued: "And to Lady York, (sic) too, we want her to know . . . " My eyes were fixed on the faces of both the Archbishop and Mrs. Temple, but—thoroughbreds that they were—I was unable to detect even a change of expression. Earlier in the conference I was beside the Archbishop at table when we got into a discussion of English versus American table manners. I tried to interpret the American point of view on the use of knife and fork. He accepted my rationale with humor and humility. "Yes, I suppose we English must seem like very gross feeders to you Americans." Toward the end of the conference a snarl developed on the subject of the ministry. Angus Dun, now Bishop of Washington, intervened at a tense moment with a motion that the chair appoint a committee to bring in a statement the next morning. That evening at Cowan house the Archbishop in great humor said: "Horatio Dun saved the bridge."

The last time I saw his grace was at Amsterdam in 1939. Again I had a rare privilege—I met him at his hotel and accompanied him to his boat train. We conversed in his compartment at some length. I was rather full of Mein Kampf, which I had just read preparatory to an expedition into Germany. He confessed that he knew nothing about it, having only an impression gained from reading a few excerpts, then went on to quote Plato and Aristotle in Greek on slavery.

His memory was phenomenal. His brain was a flawless machine. His intellect was spacious and constructive to a unique degree among modern theologians. Even larger was his stature as a Christian. Out of his single-minded devotion to God in Christ flowed his social vision as well as his genuineness and simplicity as a man. But to those to whom he gave himself in personal relationship, nothing can ever outweigh his devotion and goodness as a friend.

Temple, The Scholar

By

DAVID E. ROBERTS
Dean of Union Seminary

ARCHBISHOP TEMPLE often declared that we need someone who can do for our day the work which St. Thomas Aquinas did for his. Undoubtedly he would have regarded it as preposterous to declare that he approached this goal more nearly than anyone else in his generation. For he produced no Summae; his books—even such extensive treatises as Mens Creatrix, Christus Veritas and Nature, Man and God—were composed during spare moments in an incomparably busy life. Yet the fact remains that the "system" implicit in the score of volumes and numerous essays which he wrote is in many respects the most inclusive, the most versatile and the most lucid achievement of our age in philosophical theology. And in one sense his intellectual contribution was all the more adequate precisely because it was made amidst staggering ecclesiastical and other public responsibilities. His enthusiastic interest in philosophy might easily have led him into a purely academic career, wherein his dialectical gifts would undoubtedly have assured him of a prominent place in British intellectual life; but his writing could not then have incorporated the scope and the concreteness which brought his intellectual interests into an integral relationship with a reformer's vision and a pastor's concern.

The most striking characteristic of his work as a philosophical theologian was his earnest quest for coherence. He acknowledged a profound debt to Edward Caird, but the integrity and clarity of Temple's mind would have impelled him toward structural orderliness even if his training had been under another master. The magnificently sustained and cumulative character of the argument in his Gifford lectures is all the more remarkable because, as the author confesses in the preface, it was written without conscious reference to his former opinions; he applied his mind de novo to the central issues of philosophical theology and discovered that the convictions which arose within him had an imminent consistency and inevitability which lay outside the sphere of his volition. Anyone who studies the volume carefully will discover that it is best understood as though the argument were a synoptic intuition—like a complete symphony entering the consciousness of the composer in a single flash. And as one surveys Dr. Temple's writings as a whole, finding many passages in his briefer and more casual works which are substantially identical with sections of Nature, Man and God, he realizes that this coherence was not artificially superimposed, but reflected the personal integrity of a great soul.

This is not to say that his thinking was inflexible; he devoted his attention to the shifting tendencies of theology over more than thirty years, discussing each new problem on its merits. Thus his "system" was like a growing plant, deriving nourishment from its environment in order to sustain an unfolding flower. His polemical method, in dealing with opposing positions, was uniformly one of restating as fairly and forcefully as possible the measure of truth which he could discern in them, incorporating that truth in his own body of conviction, and then politely but massively resisting them at the points where they seemed to him to have gone astray. Toward the end of his life he recognized that the type of thinking most congenial to his own mind had to some extent gone out of fashion in theology. He accepted this fact ungrudgingly and encouraged younger men to be content with less imposing structures if thereby they could make the impact of the gospel more effective within the Church and upon the world. Yet he remained confident that in less catastrophic days theology would need to "take up again its larger and serener task and offer to a new Christendom its Christian map of life, its Christo-centric metaphysic." (Thoughts in Wartime, p. 107.)

IN accordance with his quest for philosophical coherence he sought to show the way in which knowledge, art, morality and religion present four lines of evidence which tend to converge. But he recognized that so long as sin and evil last these lines cannot converge perfectly in any system that the mind of man can conceive. At this point he believed Christian revelation and its central "fact"—the Incarnation—supplied just what was needed. Thus he distinguished between introducing faith arbitrarily and introducing it exactly at the point where one should expect the intellect to be baffled. As a philosopher his mind moved upward inductively from the world to God; as a theologian and a man of faith he sought to bear witness to the divine initiative whereby God acts redemptively in history. This laid him open to criticism from both directions. Philosophers could claim that his metaphysical constructions were always warped in the direction of coincidence with Christian doctrine. Theologians could claim that the manner in which he accepted and reinterpreted Christian doctrines was always influenced by desire to harmonize them with a pre-conceived metaphysic. Yet few of his critics could rival his religious devotion in the presence of mystery and his serene grasp upon intelligibility wherever the latter could be found.

Virtually all of his books reflect this double standpoint in dealing with the great themes which occupied his major attention: the nature of God, the relations between revelation and reason, the incarnation, the atonement, the Church and the sacraments, the nature of personality, the relations of Christianity to secular culture and to other religions. His lifelong study of the fourth gospel, which issued in his two-volume work Readings in St. John's Gospel, is indicative of the fact that he stood near the center of Anglican "incarnational" theology. What he wrote about the atonement in Christus Veritas, The Faith and Modern Thought, or Basic Convictions, for example, leaves no doubt about the centrality of the cross for his own religious faith and practice; but it fits the work of Christ into a sacramental view of the universe which stands in sharp contrast with continental Protestant theology with its overwhelming stress on sin and justification.

At the time of his lamented death, Christians all over the world felt so keenly the incalculable loss in connection with the role of the Church in the postwar world, that the corresponding loss to constructive theology has tended to take a secondary place in our attention. Yet without minimizing in the slightest the magnitude of his influence for social reform and for cooperation among the churches, it is fair to say that in Archbishop Temple's death Christendom also lost its most persuasive advocate of a concordat between philosophy and theology.

Temple on the Eucharist

ONE seldom has to search long in William Temple's writings for a statement of the relevance of Christian worship to whatever problem he has taken in hand to discuss. He had not only the grace to live a full human life, he had the gift of clarifying its complex wholeness, so that he could pass at once from a theological exposition of the sacraments to its application to a social problem such as unemployment without the slightest strain upon reason,—or for that matter, upon the formulas of the Prayer Book, to which he was devotedly, not slavishly loyal.

In his Christus Veritas (Macmillan, 1924) occurs perhaps his best theological discussion of the eucharist. Analyzing the word "Present," he finds it to mean "accessible" or "apprehensible." "Through the consecrated elements we find Christ specially apprehensible so that though he is not personally localized, he is accessible by means of what is local." The elements do not undergo a change of substance but of value. "There is nothing here of magic or even of miracle, if miracle means a fact for which other experience offers no analogy. But there is here . . . a clear manifestation of the principle which informs the whole universe, the utilization of lower grades of being for the purpose of the higher, even the highest." This accessibility of Christ is "spiritual, not material or local, and Christ is only actually present to the soul of those who make right use of the means of access afforded."

"The Presence is given to be received; when received it incorporates us into the body of Christ, so that in the power of His eternal sacrifice we may take our allotted share therein, 'filling up what is lacking of the sufferings of Christ for His body's sake, which is the Church.' The proof that we have received the Presence is the increase of love in our daily lives. . . . If a man goes out from his communion to love and serve men better he has received the Real Presence. If he feels every thrill and tremor of devotion, but goes out as selfish as before, he has not received it. It was offered, but he did not receive it." It is evident that Archbishop Temple took the Thirty-Nine Articles seriously.

In a little devotional book, Personal Religion and the Life of Fellowship (Longmans, 1926), he wrote: "It is impossible to separate the individual and corporate aspects of the holy communion without irreparable damage to both. That such damage is common there is no doubt. There are many extremely devout people who treat this service as in effect the most intimate of private devotions. That at once reduces it to the level of a mystery cult. It is the family meal, where the children gather 'round the table to receive what their Father gives them. And what he gives, through his incarnate Son, is his own nature; in other words, it is love. But if we receive love, of course we become more loving; we are more closely united to our brother-men."

This thought is taken up with characteristic application to modern society in his recent The Hope of a New World (Macmillan, 1941). Bread and wine, he said, "are the perfect symbol of the economic life of man. Before there can be bread the land must be ploughed, the seed scattered, the harvest gathered, the corn threshed, the flour baked; and before all that there must be the gift of God in the life of the seed, the nurturing quality of the soil, sunshine and rain. Bread is an instance of God's gifts made available by human labor for the satisfaction of men's needs. The same is true of wine. In the production of these things man co-operates with God. . . . It is a great mistake to suppose that God is only, or even chiefly, concerned with religion."

Hence the holy communion service is "a perfect picture of what secular society ought to be; and a Christian civilization is one where the citizens seek to make their ordered life something of which that service is the symbol." But this, he says, is not enough because man needs chiefly "not guidance but redemption. Something must be done for him and in him that he can never do himself." So "we need not only citizens who have the right picture of society, but also enough citizens who have found the redeeming power that is in Christ," who may receive in the broken body "the power to give ourselves unto death, and through his blood—his life sacrificially offered—may receive the life which is not destroyed by death but rather released by it that it may be united to God for ever."

Harvard Divinity School Dean Pays Tribute to Temple

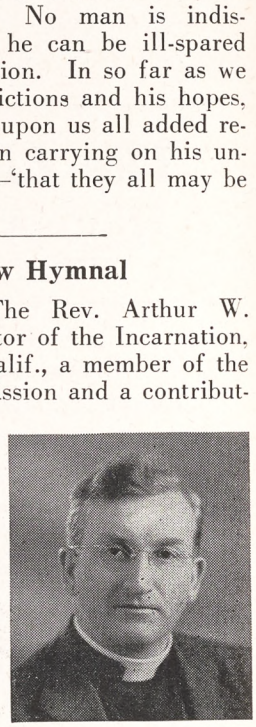
His Humanity and Capacity for Friendship Unimpaired by the High Offices He Held

Edited by W. B. Spofford

Cambridge, Mass.:—Dean Willard L. Sperry of the Harvard Divinity School delivered a fitting tribute to his friend, the late Archbishop of Canterbury at a memorial service that was held in the chapel of Harvard University.

"It is difficult for me to speak formally of William Temple since my personal memories of him go back forty years to the fall of 1904, when, as a young man of twenty-three, only a year out of Balliol, he had come to a fellowship at Queen's College in Oxford," said Dean Sperry. "I had gone up to Queen's that year as a Rhodes scholar. He was very near us in age and shared our life with us as a contemporary rather than as one of our elders. My most vivid memories of him still cling about the long evenings spent in his room in college, while he read us poetry—mostly Browning.

"In the intervening years he had come far from those informal and unconventional days. Great honors had been given him and greater responsibilities vested in him. A lesser man would have allowed the intimacies of those earlier days to be supplanted by later associations and subsequent dignities. It says very much for William Temple that he kept to the last the good comradeships of the college where we were, and that, wherever he was and whatever his office, he met us in these later years as he had met us at first—simply unaffectedly and wholeheartedly. His native humanity and his capacity for friendship were to the last unimpaired by the high offices he held.



"William Temple had been, more recently, Bishop of Manchester, Archbishop of York, and now for the last two years Archbishop of Canterbury. He was loyal to his own communion. He believed in doing things decently and in order. He was always constitutional in his procedure. His administration of the domestic affairs of the Church of England was as correct as it was courageous.

"But his influence was not restricted to his own communion. He had become, by the tacit consent of all concerned, the recognized spokesman for the Christian conscience of England at a critical time in her history. He more than any other one man united the Nonconformist Churches and the Roman Church together with his own Church in a common Christian witness. In the areas of economic and industrial concern he was trying to prophesy a better future for the common man. As for the war, in which we are now engaged, he believed that it must be fought to a victorious end, if the framework of our religion is to be preserved in the western world. Yet there was no bitterness, or hatred, or threat of vengeance in anything he said. And at the time of his enthronement at Canterbury he made special point of offering prayers for our enemies.

"Not only so, but in these last years Archbishop Temple has become more and more identified with the various movements looking to world-wide Church unity. These movements have now issued in The World Council of Churches, and at the time of his death the Archbishop was its presiding officer, as he had been its leading spirit. That Council is still imperfect in that it still falls short of representing the totality of organized Christianity throughout the world. Some churches at the ecclesiastical left and others at the right are not as yet included in its membership. There is need for further patience and tolerance, if we are to have the truest catholicity. Meanwhile this World Council is one of the major religious facts of our time and stands today as perhaps the one cause above all others to which William Temple had given an ever-increasing amount of his time and strength. No man is indispensable; but he can be ill-spared in this connection. In so far as we share his convictions and his hopes, his death lays upon us all added responsibilities in carrying on his unfinished work—'that they all may be one.' "

New Hymnal

Chicago:—The Rev. Arthur W. Farlander, rector of the Incarnation, Santa Rosa, Calif., a member of the hymnal commission and a contributing editor of THE WITNESS, was the speaker at a choir festival held on January 21 at St. James' Church. A choir composed of voices from seven parishes was directed by Leo Sowerby, choirmaster at St. James'. Dean Farlander also addressed the students at Kember Hall on the 18th on the hymnal. He urged that the hymnal be read as well as sung and suggested that parishes train their people to sing many of the hymns that are in the hymnal for the first time.

Visits Arkansas

Little Rock:—Bishop Oliver Hart of Pennsylvania was the speaker at a dinner for laymen held in connection with the convention of the diocese of Arkansas, meeting here January 24-25 at Christ Church.

Summary of Cleveland Meeting

their determination to follow up the recommendations with political action directed to the President, the department of state, other administrative agencies and the Congress.

This was a highly selected group of churchmen—only 450 of them—board secretaries, officers of Church agencies (both laymen and clergy) and additional nationally known preachers and lay leaders. There were not too many ordinary churchmen. The lay delegates carried the ball in the discussion groups a considerable portion of the time which helped to bring results down to earth. Be it said, however, that the clergy demonstrate increasing ability to make realistic appraisal of contemporary problems and show willingness to chart a course of specific political action.

The question remains nevertheless whether this highly selected group can make its recommendations stick with the rank and file of ministers and Church members back home. Particularly whether the pacifist inclined clergy over the nation or the fearful-of-cooperation-with-Europe people who sit in the pews will go along wholeheartedly with the Dumbarton Oaks approval.

A further open question is whether anything set in motion at Cleveland by way of program or procedure will really galvanize the Church people into concrete action as citizens to influence the shaping of the charter for world organization while there is yet time. For the conference itself called upon the President to call a meeting of the United Nations at the earliest possible moment to consider the world organization. We do know that Mr. Roosevelt is headed shortly toward a meeting with Mr. Churchill and Mr. Stalin at which certain of the proposals will surely reach a definitive stage.

True, with the backing of this conference the Federal Council of the Churches as a central body intends to exert all possible pressure upon the state department (with whom Church officials kept in constant contact throughout the Cleveland sessions) for the consideration of the nine recommendations. But while state department officials and other highly placed leaders in Washington may give attentive ear to Mr. John Foster Dulles, chairman of the commission on a just and durable peace,

Is Religion a Deterrent to Crime?

Catholic spokesmen condemn the American Public School as "Godless," and advise building jails instead of classrooms—unless religion (their religion) is made a part of the school curriculum.

BUT—Do you know that according to official Roman Catholic and Government statistics:

- The percentage of Catholics in our prisons is twice the percentage of Catholics in the total population?
- 64% of Juvenile Delinquents in New York City are Roman Catholic?
- Catholics outnumber Protestants in Connecticut jails four to one?

For these and other startling facts and figures on this important problem—when he speaks on behalf of the Federal Council, these officials must be able to determine with greater directness whether Mr. Dulles really has the backing of millions of Church members. From the President down everybody knows that this time the plan of world organization must gain the mass support of the American people in the early stages or it will be defeated when it comes to the Senate for ratification.

While the Methodist leadership is ready to ask its eight million members to write letters to Washington in support of Dumbarton Oaks, also recommending improvements, many denominations are not so far along. Most of them, including the Methodists, are trying to initiate study programs for the next few months. At this rate they may be ready officially to recommend specific action by April or May. It is probable that a "shall we" or "shall we not" decision of the U. S. Senate will be the only practical alternatives subject to influence by Church people at so late a date, with little chance left of amending the basic plans for the world organization.

Moreover whatever the Cleveland conference recommends in the name of the 26 affiliated Protestant Churches generally or whatever the council of Bishops may recommend to the Methodist constituency particularly, the freedom of action so cherished among Protestants will not permit these recommendations to be offered as directives. Which is as it should be. But the chances are that in spite of the determined and forthright stand on world organization taken at Cleveland, history will again record for the churches "Too little, too late."

Among these selected churchmen the finest spirit of cooperation and fellowship in spite of differences was apparent. They adopted a ringing statement of Christian faith but they drew back from fighting over particular tenets. In considering final recommendations they did not fail to catch one statement: "The only effective assurance for justice in an abiding world order is in the expansion of allegiance by men and nations to the Christian faith." The "only," said some, might be so misunderstood and doubted by those of other faiths or of no faith as to hinder our cooperation with them for world order. "Can we not modify this statement even though many here may believe in its absolute truth?" "Yes," was the reply and they did. The "only" became "most." Would it not have been true a few years back that theological controversy on this point might have overshadowed and precluded the witness to the world of Christian determination to cooperate in the building of world order?

Indeed, the most outstanding and determined conclusions of the conference, in this writer's judgment, came at this point of reconciling the ideal which we dare not forsake with the practical demands of the historical situation. Can we maintain our Christian ideals without compromise and yet in good conscience take the next steps, imperfect as they may have to be, overshadowed by the danger that unless our Christian influence finally succeeds these steps may be turned later in the wrong direction? Further, can we join ourselves with those who do not recognize the imperatives of our Christian faith to work for world order? The nearly unanimous answer of the delegates to the Conference was in the affirmative. This is the way they put it:

"Christians must act in situations as they exist and must decide what God's will demands of them there. An idealism which will not accept the discipline of the achievable may lose its power for good and ultimately lend aid to forces with whose purposes it cannot agree. If we accept provisionally situations which fall short of our ultimate objective, we cannot be morally bound to sustain and perpetuate them. That would be stultifying. It is the possibility of change which is the bridge from the immediate to the Christian ideal. When a concrete proposal for world organization is presented, Christian leaders must help the people to decide whether it marks a step in the right direction and, if so, urge them to give it their support."

On this basis they approved the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. On this basis they strongly urged nine important improvements. On this basis also they refused to make their present approval contingent upon the incorporation at once of the improvements, either for the purpose of avoiding the appearance of compromise with the ideal or of maintaining a bargaining power the better to influence alteration.

Churchmen Lead

San Diego:—Two churchmen were headlined in the labor institute which was held here January 19-20 under the joint auspices of the CIO and A. F. of L. The Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, rector of St. Paul's and assistant secretary of the House of Deputies, took part in a panel discussion along with labor leaders, educators and industrialists; Paul J. Hartley, who in addition to being the vice-mayor of the city is also treasurer of St. Luke's, was a speaker at the opening session. There was also a Congregational minister and a Roman Catholic priest on the program. There are about 70,000 members of unions in San Diego.

Religious Liberty

New York: — An international agreement on religious liberty, if attained after the war, might be implemented through the world organization recommended in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, it was suggested on January 22 by Henry S. Villard, chief of the state department's division on African affairs. He also stated that pronouncements of Churches on the subject of freedom of worship and of conscience had received "the careful consideration of persons within the department concerned with the post-war settlements."

His Last Book

Review by Richard S. Emrich

Professor at Episcopal Theological School

The Church Looks Forward is the title of the recently published last book of William Temple. (Macmillan. $2.) It contains addresses delivered by him as Archbishop of Canterbury during the years 1942-43. He who reads it will be impressed again with the inestimable loss suffered by the Church in his sudden death, for William Temple as scholar, preacher, social prophet, ecumenical Christian, and Church statesman speaks with power in these pages. Amid the confusion of war, and the dislocation of life caused by it, here at least was one voice that spoke sanely, courageously, prophetically to his people and the world. It is no exaggeration to say that our hopes for a just peace and for a Church alive to its prophetic task in the present have dimmed with his passing.

This should be required reading for all of us for it contains the finest thought of one of the greatest contemporary Christians speaking at the height of his power. It is in fact the cream of his thought and life and it combines the simplest and most beautiful Christian piety with a prophetic grandeur. There is scarcely a great concern facing the Church today which is not dealt with in these pages. There are three addresses on Church unity; a series of five addresses, entitled the Church looks forward, dealing with the task of the Church in society; addresses on finance, production, and consumption and the Church's approach to the problem of venereal disease; an analysis of the fundamental causes of the war and the decline of our culture; a scholarly address on "an increasingly effective religious education"; and discriminations on the relationship of love to justice considered in connection with the future relationship of Britain and Germany. And in among all this are simple and beautiful sermons delivered over the radio on Christmas and Good Friday.

It is a book written by a man who combined social concern with a tremendous stress on individual piety, realism with hope, breadth with standards, humility with power, a tremendous sense of the Church's task with a vivid realization of her present inadequacy. "When worship," he said, "is once more the consecration of all life, and when life itself, industry and commerce no less than family and friendship, is the expression of worship, then we shall see a Church fully alive and the fulfillment of our social dreams." And on the same page, "Will you day by day submit your thoughts and desires, your hopes and your plans for yourself and for the world, to the directing influence of His Holy Spirit? In short will you be His disciple in all parts of your life? And I trust our answer is one that can be expressed in the words of the old mission hymn—'Wave the answer back to heaven, by thy grace—we will'."

THE REV. CHARLES LEWIS BIGGS
Carlsbad, New Mexico

We are at one of the turning points of history, the greatest to date. For the first time three great empires have emerged, with possessions and therefore responsibilities reaching quite around the world. For the first time these three are cooperating in a common cause. Further, two of the three are English speaking, with like institutions, common law, and much the same traditions. Was ever the stage more fortunately set for a post-war agreement among them to enforce peace?

Further, the hitherto separated, non-communicating Churches of Christendom, except the Roman Catholic, have so far drawn together as to have discovered no inconsiderable areas of both intellectual agreement and physical cooperation. Witness the Madras conference of 1938 with representatives from over sixty nations and the encyclical that issued from its deliberations. Has articulation and single mindedness among the Churches gone far enough to enable them to bring moral aid and pressure on the three great empires so as to help them to an over-all agreement among themselves that they will not quarrel with each other for the period, let us say, of twenty years? In that time presumably adjustment machineries can get into such good working order that another twenty years can be ventured on. Is not that a worthy objective, not for individual Christians only, but for all Churches as Churches?

MISS MARJORIE WILLCOX
Teacher of English, Fredonia, N. Y.

I was much interested in your column with the list of words and pronunciations contributed by Dr. Bohanan. I am in hearty agreement with the article in general and with the pronunciations of all the words but one. That is the word "thoroughly." I would very much like to know the authority for "threw-ly." Webster's dictionary certainly does not give it, even an 1859 edition. Webster says "thur-o-ly" (U as in curl).

As an English teacher, I am especially interested. I don't want to lead any of my students astray, so please let me know the authority for "threw-ly."

ANSWER. The pronunciation given by Dr. Bohanan is the pronunciation of the biblical word "throughly," used in such passages as "Throughly to cleanse his threshing-floor" or "Wash me throughly from my sins." We repeat this explanation, because a good many readers have been disturbed by what was obviously a misprint. Dr. Bohanan was referring to the biblical word "throughly" not to our modern word "thoroughly."

MISS MARY LAIRD
Churchwoman of Montgomery, Ala.

I have read the numerous articles in THE WITNESS strongly urging the common worship and further social acceptance of the Negro in our churches. In theory this may sound possible but it is sure to defeat its own purpose and increase the tension now existing between the two races. It is undoubtedly only right and the Christian thing to work toward better relations; toward improving living and working conditions for them and toward improving their economic security. Much should be done that has long been left undone.

But the Negro's own happiness lies in living his own life among his own people and worshipping in his own churches. The two races may still live in friendliness and mutual cooperation and still apart. If the Church yields to pressure and the Negroes should be admitted into membership of white Churches, in close social contacts, two evils are certain to follow. First, the white members will fall away from their own membership and attendance, and the Negro will suffer a constant bitterness and resentment at the attitude of the white members. For the natural instinct that keeps the two races apart will not be removed by this suggested pressure and will only increase.

MR. JAMES O'BRIEN YOUNG
Layman of Port Arthur, Texas

There is one question that comes to me often these days, and the more I read THE WITNESS and other Episcopal periodicals, especially letters to the editor, the more I think about it: How can the Episcopal Church expect to be able to teach its members race tolerance when it is split by a religious intolerance unknown to any Christian Church in existence today? Our Church represents both the Catholic and the Protestant viewpoint in its doctrine and form of worship . . . as different as baptist and buddhism. We are Catholic or Protestant as we are spiritually inclined or as we may have been educated as children. It is a beautiful heritage of our Church, however few Episcopalians seem to know much about it; nevertheless, he usually takes a definite stand which he manages to get off his chest now and then.

Unfortunately, the House of Bishops has never seen fit to institute a national program of Church School study on Church history for people of all ages. It is a study that could be made vitally and intensely interesting. The removal of ignorance would certainly unite us more than we are now. All over this country in every parish and diocese at one time or another, if not at all times, clergyman and layman are practicing a bigotry that is basely unchristian but oddly quite Episcopalian.

High-Churchmen must learn that their Low-Churchmen are not agnostics and freethinkers, and Low-Churchmen must learn that High-Churchmen are not Roman Catholics in disguise. This is not a problem to be afraid of. Our House of Bishops has many men of courage, intelligence, tolerance, and vision who could unite us as one body intelligent, hence broadminded of the different interpretations of Episcopal doctrines and creeds and the diversity of the forms of worship in our Church.

The Secretary for Negro Work Elected for Liberia

Five Clergymen Are Elected Bishops to Fill The Vacancies in Our Missionary Districts

By W. B. Spofford

Birmingham, Ala.:—The little republic of Liberia, where the Church established a missionary district in 1851, is again to have a Negro for a bishop. The man elected by the House of Bishops, meeting here January 30-February 1, is the Rev. Bravid W. Harris who has been doing a first rate job as secretary for Negro work of the National Council. Of the seven men who have been in charge of the Liberian work in nearly a hundred years but one has been a Negro, Bishop Samuel D. Ferguson, and this in spite of the fact that the population is nearly entirely Colored. Two arguments have been chiefly used by those who have opposed sending a Negro; one, that the people in Liberia prefer a white Bishop; two, that Negroes are so delicate that they can't stand the climate. I don't know anything about the first argument, never having been in Liberia. But I do know that the top job being done in Africa by Negro soldiers and sailors has knocked the "health" argument into a cocked hat.

Archbishop Harris when asked by this reporter whether or not he would accept replied that he had to give it a good deal of thought. "As you know I have been urging the election of a Negro for Liberia since the resignation of Bishop Kroll was announced. But it never entered my mind that I would be considered, and when I have been asked I have suggested the names of two Negro priests, either of whom would make, in my judgment, an excellent bishop. My own election is a surprise almost to the point of being a shock." When reminded that one who had so strongly urged the election of a Negro was hardly in a position now to turn down the job he just laughed.

Four other clergymen were elected bishops: the Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving, rector of Calvary, Pittsburgh, was elected for Arizona, where he will succeed Bishop Walter Mitchell. To succeed the late Bishop Beal for the Panama Canal Zone, the House elected Dean Reginald H. Gooden of Havana, Cuba. The Rev. Thomas W. Sumners, rector of St. John's, Houston, Texas, was elected bishop of North Texas where he will succeed Bishop Seaman. And as bishop coadjutor of South Dakota the House elected the Rev. Conrad Gesner, rector of St. John's Church, St. Paul, Minnesota, a contributing editor of THE WITNESS.

It would seem that if you do not like action taken by General Conventions just ignore it and the chances are you will get away with it. The Cleveland Convention voted for the compulsory retirement of bishops at 72. There are four who have passed that age: Bishop Manning of New York; Bishop Davis of Western New York; Bishop White of Springfield and Bishop Perry of Rhode Island. The latter's resignation was before the bishops at this meeting. The resignations of the other three bishops were not. So Bishop Davis proposed the appointment of a committee of five bishops to study the whole matter, to consider especially the local situations and the effect of the Church's work in various interested dioceses and to offer the next General Convention a canon to implement the constitutional amendment. Among those sharing in the debate were Bishop Perry, Bishop Hobson of Southern Ohio and Bishop Mitchell of Arizona, whose resignation was before the House and who is but 69 and in good health. The resolution was adopted by a vote of 57-29. Another resolution was then offered to lay on the table all resignations then before the House, pending the report of the committee of five, but this was lost, 25-53. Then they voted to accept all resignations before them, except that of Bishop Perry on which action was deferred until General Convention. Those whose resignations were accepted were Bishop Darst of East Carolina; Bishop Seaman of North Texas; Bishop Walter Mitchell of Arizona and Bishop Kroll of Liberia. It all sounds to me like what my communist friends call "dialectics" but maybe it makes sense to you.

The bishops rejected a resolution asking the President to use influence to have the United Nations issue a statement "to the peoples of Germany and Japan which would go beyond unconditional surrender and be positive, not punitive, in its appeal." They also tabled a resolution,

The Rev. Conrad H. Gesner, rector of St. John's, St. Paul, Minnesota, was elected bishop coadjutor of South Dakota by the House of Bishops meeting February first offered by Bishop Scarlett of Missouri, which urged that consideration of compulsory military training by Congress be postponed until after the war. Bishop Hobson said that there was insufficient time to debate such an important matter, which seemed to be the clincher.

The proposal for a Pan-Anglican conference, first proposed by Bishop Gray in a WITNESS article, was approved and a committee is to con-

INTERRACIAL COMMITTEE IN NEW JERSEY

Trenton:—Mrs. Mary Yard, social service worker, heads the newly organized New Jersey committee for interracial unity in which churches, labor organizations, civic groups and social agencies cooperate. Its first task is to secure cooperation of labor and management to prevent job discrimination against Negroes and to work for the establishment of a state fair employment practices committee. The Rev. Robert D. Smith, social service secretary of the diocese, has been active in the organization.

WESTERN MICHIGAN CONVENTION

Grand Rapids:—Concern over the static condition of church schools was expressed by Bishop Whittemore in his address to the convention of the diocese of Western Michigan. He said that a certain share of the blame must be laid at the door of the National Council's division of Christian education because of its lack of definite guidance especially in the realm of teaching materials. The convention voted to increase its quota to the National Council and also urged that steps be taken to increase the salaries of the clergy.

INVITATION CAME TOO LATE

Moscow (by wireless):—It was announced here on January 29th that Alexei, acting patriarch of the Russian Orthodox Church, had invited a delegation of the Episcopal Church to attend the council (sobor) of the Orthodox Church which met January 31 to elect a patriarch. The office of the Presiding Bishop declared that no delegation had yet been named and that the visit of such a delegation was "indefinite at this time."

Meanwhile Orthodox leaders from all parts of the Soviet Union, Europe and the Near East gathered here, with more than 150 bishops attending. Among foreign churchmen were Patriarch Christopher of Alexandria; Patriarch Alexander 3rd of Antioch, accompanied by other high ranking churchmen; Metropolitan Josip of Skoplje, deputy patriarch of the Serbian Orthodox Church, who represents Patriarch Gavrilo who is still a prisoner of the Germans. Ecumenical Patriarch Benjamin Constantinople (Istanbul) was among those invited but because of his advanced years was represented by Metropolitan Germanos. It is also doubted if Patriarch Timothy of Jerusalem was able to reach Moscow but it is likely that he sent a substitute. Also attending the sobor is Metropolitan Benjamin, head of the Russian Church's archdiocese of the Aleutian Islands and North America who, after a few days in the Soviet capital, stated that "the Church has emerged stronger and purer than ever."

NEGRO SPIRITUALS IN LONDON

London (by wireless):—Negro spirituals were sung for the first time at an evening service in St. Paul's Cathedral by the caisson choir of the U. S. army.

PROGRESSIVE ACTION IS URGED

San Francisco:—After listening to a stirring address by Bishop Block the convention of the diocese of California passed resolutions backing the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals and taking progressive positions on economic and racial questions. In urging such action Bishop Block stated that "the Church will become a mere irrelevance in contemporary life if it does not help to the limit of its ability and influence to enforce public opinion which recognizes the indivisibility of democracy, the right of self-determination and the essential sovereignty of all nations great and small." He asked Church people to accord returning Japanese-Americans a Christian welcome; to expand the army and navy commission's work and to establish a chaplains school to help discharged chaplains adjust to parish work.

WORLD DAY OF PRAYER WIDELY OBSERVED

New York:—Observance of World Day of Prayer on Feb. 16, is planned in 11,000 communities, it was reported here by the United Council of Churchwomen. Evening world day of prayer meetings are scheduled for working women in Pittsburgh, Atlanta, St. Paul, Indianapolis, Detroit, Kansas City, Columbia, S. C., and Chicago, sponsored by the Wesleyan Methodist Service Guild and local church groups. Children's meetings are being arranged through released-time religious committees in a number of communities. Fifty-one countries outside the United States are expected to join in special services.

Professor Urges Cooperation With the Soviet Union

He Declares That the Revolutionary Spirit Should Be Allowed to Express Itself Freely

By W. B. Spofford Jr.

Boston: — "The establishment of sound relations between the United States and the Soviet Union is the primary task confronting the world today," said Prof. Carl J. Friedrich, director of the school for overseas administration of Harvard, addressing the laymen and clergy of Massachusetts at the annual meeting of the Massachusetts Church Service League. Speaking on the Church and the post-war world, Dr. Friedrich said that the United States must develop a foreign economic and military policy that would in no way prevent the peoples of the world from establishing governments of their own choosing. Citing the fact that both the United States and the USSR were interested in the same ends—the maintenance of peace, internal development and the raising of the standard of living for all peoples—he pointed out the necessity for both nations working together if any true stability were to be achieved in the international field. While personally favoring the federal union type of world organization in which there would be drastic reductions in any nation's sovereign rights, Dr. Friedrich said that Church people should accept the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals as a jumping-off place for discussion and education and be grateful for it as the first step in the long process of establishing some type of international order. Stating that there was much revolutionary spirit and fervor in the countries of Europe and Asia, he said that for the sake of peace such revolutionary spirit should be allowed to express itself.

It was his belief that a good many Germans were suffering from guilt complexes arising out of their recognition of the suffering that they have caused the world and said that we must give them opportunity to relieve those complexes through atonement and the establishment of a responsible, democratic German government. Likewise, he said that we should be careful not to blame the Japanese people for the policies of the autocratic governmental and military cliques and should give them the opportunity to carry through their own revolution and program of democratic rebuilding.

At the afternoon session, which was attended by both men and women, Mr. Reuben L. Lurie, former member of the Massachusetts parole board, and Dr. Miriam van Waters, superintendent of the reformatory for women at Framingham, were the speakers. Stating that the social community was smug in its lethargic approach to the problems of prisoners and penology, Mr. Lurie said that the people of Massachusetts were to blame for the deplorable state of affairs in the prisons of the state. "The state prison at Charlestown is a perfect hell-hole," he said, "and the shame belongs to you and me—and all of the people of the commonwealth." Declaring that Massachusetts had no reformatories but only prisons where strict, unimaginative military discipline fostered crime, he cited the cases of defective delinquents who, having committed no legal crime, were committed to state institutions for life simply because they were mentally delinquent. The only solution he said was the positive, religious approach by which the institution molded itself to the men and not vice versa. He complimented the Episcopal Church for the good work that it has done in the institutions but said that a lot more had to be done. Calling for some extra support for the work of the prison chaplains, he said that Christians must accept their community responsibility and bring pressure to bear on their representatives to investigate and reform the state system of penology so that the institutions would turn out reformed, productive citizens rather than hardened and bitter criminals.

Dr. Van Waters in attempting to outline a Christian system of penology said that she had never seen a truly hopeless case in all of her years as a worker in the field of criminology. Stating that the prison population was a good cross-section of our country's population, she said that we must be allowed to use all of the medical, educative, sociological and psychiatric techniques that we possess in rehabilitating prisoners.

Starting with the Christian doctrine of man in which every individual has inherent value as a child of God, she said that the duty of the Christian is to attempt to understand the prisoner—his mental make-up, his environmental background and the many pressures that have driven him into delinquency. She declared that most individuals have un-scientific and un-Christian attitudes towards the people in our prisons. Most prisoners she said fear the callousness and scornful indifference of their fellow citizens when they get out and consequently never get the opportunity to rebuild their lives. These people need Christian understanding and Christian love, she said, and they need to be made to feel that they have value. "That is the task of the Church and its members," she concluded.

MISSION OF HELP HAS MEETING

New York:—The societies providing youth consultation services through the Church Mission of Help held a conference here starting February 4 to study the increased responsibilities that the war has brought. Speakers were Bishop Hobson of Southern Ohio, Mrs. Kendall Emerson of New York; the Rev. R. L. Howe of Virginia Seminary; Mr. Walter W. Pettit of the School of Social Work; the Rev. Charles Sherrin of Washington and Miss Edith Balmford, executive secretary of CMH.

WEST TEXAS HOLDS COUNCIL

San Antonio:—Purchase of a 75 acre camp site for conferences; the establishing of a fund for church extension; the inclusion of $1,000 in the budget for work in Brownsville for Latin-Americans, were the chief actions taken at the convention of the diocese of West Texas. Mrs. Arthur Sherman, national head of the Auxiliary, was the leader of a conference of women on post war planning.

CONVENTION AT DALLAS

Dallas: — Bishop Moore of the diocese of Dallas asked the convention, meeting here on January 24-25, for a bishop coadjutor. A special convention is to be held April 10th for the election. Headline speakers were Mrs. Arthur Sherman of the national Auxiliary and the Rev. Claude W. Sprouse of Kansas City.

MINNESOTA BUYS STUDENT CENTER

Minneapolis: — The diocese of Minnesota has purchased properties adjacent to the campus of the state university for a student center. The two residences will be used as they now stand for the duration but plans are being made to erect a chapel and a student center at a cost of about $85,000 as soon as possible.

RURAL WORK IS STRESSED

Des Moines, Iowa:—Rural work is going to get a break in Iowa. As a result of a conference held here January 12 between Bishop Haines and the council of the diocese it was voted to pay clergy serving rural areas a minimum of $2,000 ($2,400 for married men); a generous allowance for travel; a month's vacation; proper recognition in diocesan affairs. Plans are also under way to correct methods and terminology which draws necessary distinctions between parishes, aided parishes and missions, which indicate that dependent and small churches are inferior units of the diocese.

SEGREGATION DENOUNCED

Knoxville, Tenn.:—Declaring that "the Christian Church is one of the most segregated institutions in the country," the conference of the Fellowship of Southern Churchmen, meeting here at Knoxville College, denounced all segregation as "a sin against God and man." A resolution was also passed stating that each member of the organization should "to the limit of his ability ally himself formally with some local of a labor union."

JACQUES MARITAIN AN AMBASSADOR

New York: — Jacques Maritain, French Catholic philosopher, has accepted appointment as French ambassador to the Vatican. A resident of the United States since 1940, he has lectured at the University of Chicago, Yale, Princeton and Toronto.

QUAKERS SUPPORT DUMBARTON OAKS

Philadelphia:—"The United States should strive vigorously for the development of an adequate world organization," declared the Friends committee on national legislation in a statement issued here on the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. Although the Quakers believe the security proposals "fall short of what is required, and contain serious dangers," they recognize them "as opening the way for progress." They would encourage "our government, in cooperation with other nations, to proceed with the task of developing them into a democratic and satisfying system for achieving international peace, justice, and good will." No peace settlement, they assert, "will endure that does not challenge mankind as being directed toward justice and worthy of confidence and sacrifice."

CAMBRIDGE DEAN GIVES ADDRESS

Boston:—Dean Charles L. Taylor of the Episcopal Theological School spoke on the opportunities of the Church today at the annual meeting of the Episcopal Club of Massachusetts, meeting January 29th. The following day the archdeaconry of Lowell met at the cathedral to consider various phases of social work, with addresses by the Rev. Howard Kellett on service men; the Rev. George O. Ekwall on hospital needs; the Rev. Charles L. Lancaster on ministering to children in institutions and the Rev. Rollin J. Fairbanks on emotional and spiritual factors in illness.

The diocesan school started its winter sessions on February 1 at the cathedral, meeting each Thursday through March 22, with a registration of 200. Among those giving courses are Bishop Hartman of the Methodist Church; Prof. Henry J. Cadbury of Harvard; Prof. Herbert Gezork of Andover-Newton Seminary; Prof. Richard Emrich of ETS; Prof. Massey Shepherd of ETS; Lewis B. Franklin of the National Council.

The Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving, rector of Calvary Church, Pittsburgh, was elected bishop of Arizona by the House of Bishops meeting February first

RETURNED VETERANS CONSIDERED

Flushing, N. Y.: — The Church and returning veterans is to be the topic at the third of a series of meetings sponsored by the social service commission of the diocese of Long Island. It is to be held at St. George's the afternoon of February 11th. Speakers: Lewis L. Bennett, director of Veterans Service Center, New York; the Rev. William H. Melish of Brooklyn; the Rev. Joseph H. Titus of Jamaica; Chaplain Maurice Witherspoon. USNR and the Rev. C. Lawson Willard of New Haven.

At Least There Is One

WE HAVE in the past defended the name of Henry A. Wallace both as a Christian and as a statesman; as a Christian because we admire his statesmanship and as a statesman because we have a high regard for his religion. We are once more eager to plunge into the fight for his defense if only because he has once more succeeded in getting himself into a cause that is bigger than he is. The real question behind the opposition to his appointment both as secretary of commerce and head of the reconstruction finance corporation is not one of administration for as secretary of agriculture he lent a lot of money to a lot of people, and did it well. The fight is over policy. Wallace is for the people and their welfare and obviously his opponents are for the few big corporations and their power.

We wish that the President had made this issue clear when he replaced Mr. Jones with Mr. Wallace instead of obscuring it under the pretext of a political reward. It is of course true that the present administration is in power today due to the balance of power wielded by Mr. Wallace, the PAC and other liberal forces, but it is even more true that their influence actually could be counted in votes because the ordinary man is beginning to sense that there is a battle on the home front which threatens to become of more vital concern to the American people than the battle on the fighting front. What we believe should be done at this juncture is to point up the issue and call out the score. American reaction in its opposition to Wallace is beginning to try to keep control of our economy for the postwar period as it undoubtedly has during hostilities. It is apparent that many members of Congress easily lend themselves to this sinister tactic.

We urge therefore that our readers if they know which side their bread is buttered on, to put the matter on a less idealistic basis, do something about this present issue. What makes Henry A. Wallace so significant in relation to Church people is that against their stupid selfishness and short-sighted unawareness he stands out in bold relief as a grand example of a churchman at work in the world. At least there is one.

Or Else

LIBERTY-LOVING as we are we are not entirely opposed to the idea behind the national service act. Something of the sort is the only efficient and fair way of bringing about the victorious end of the war. For our part we cannot see anything sinister in being made to work or fight. On the face of it it is far more reasonable to be forced to defend our livelihood at the behest of our government than it is to have to defend our starvation in the form of maintaining an economy of scarcity in order to provide profits for our business barons—which is exactly what many of our people had to do until they were provided with the dubious relief of an all-out war and which they are very likely to be compelled to do again after it is over. The truth is that free enterprise, that felicitous phrase which many love to toss around so blithely, is not an unmerited right or something to be defensively maintained but rather a reward to be gained after discipline and sacrifice for the common good.

Yet we detect a certain class view point behind the present discussions on the man power situation. The object seems to be the working man exclusively. He is to be the one who is going to be made to work or fight. But why not go a bit further in defining what is and what is not essential war work? If this were realistically done we would find that we could close up Wall Street very nicely for the duration and put the stock brokers to pushing hand trucks at the docks. After all the Soviet Union, which is now waging a big offensive and therefore being admired, manages to get along without any stock exchange at all. And think what good exercise it would be — better than golf. The same goes for the bureaucracy of business which makes the federal government look infantile by comparison. An office manager would do a very nice job on the production line and incidentally find out something about the need for labor unions. As a matter of fact this would be an excellent opportunity to get rid of lots of social handicaps like the middleman, the sales promoter, the advertiser, the vice-president in charge of public relations, and lawyers. We almost omitted lawyers and what good farmers they could be. There are many others and we have not forgotten the clerical gentlemen, many of whom could change jobs without being noticed. Anyhow the whole idea is fascinating not only in revealing our unquestioned social injustices but in pointing up the uselessness of so many of us. We suspect the reason that we do not really go all out in this way is that much of our so-called work, once disposed of, would never return.

The Series for Lent

God and Yourself

By

WILLIAM H. MARMION
Rector of St. Mary's-on-the-Highlands, Birmingham, Alabama

G. K. CHESTERTON once remarked that if you were on the verge of renting a room it would be more useful to know your landlady's view of the universe than the quality and price of her accommodations. What you think of life's origin, purpose and destiny is of prime importance because your belief eventually works itself out in action. Sooner or later everyone must ask the ultimate questions of life. And the answers we get stem directly from our world-view. The basic issue is one between pessimism and optimism, frustration and fulfilment, despair and confidence. Without God we get either no answer at all or else an answer of frustration, defeat and emptiness. But the Christian world-view gives answers which say that the universe has meaning and purpose, that sin is not irremedial, nor suffering and death final and hopeless.

Christianity teaches us that we come from God and return to God. We are not accidental collocations of atoms but children of a creator-father, the supreme intelligence behind the universe, whose hand is seen in the age-long evolutionary process and in human history, guiding all life from the lowest to the highest forms, from the amoeba to the saint. As a Christian you are "a member of Christ, a child of God and an inheritor of the Kingdom of Heaven." In a time when secular society increasingly devaluates the individual the Christian teaching about the worth of personality becomes vitally important. If you base your world-view on this teaching you can stand in the dignity of your manhood, knowing that it was conferred upon you by God, the father, your creator; is retrieved when lost by God, the son, your redeemer; and is continually built up, encouraged and nurtured by God, the holy spirit, your sanctifier.

You are made in the image of God and are infinitely precious in his sight. But so is your neighbor, your brother. He too is an individual for whom Christ died. Our common allegiance to God binds us together and makes fellowship a spiritual necessity. It is God's purpose to establish a society where justice shall reign in all relationships of life. But man while being dependent on God also has freedom and therefore a large measure of independence. Evil comes when we forget our duty to God and our neighbor. Man tries to take the place of God and order his own life after his own will. Nevertheless God has so framed the structure of the world as to teach us the lesson of righteousness. The moral law has not been repealed simply because men break it. The sad state of affairs today is not a sign of God's indifference but of man's disobedience. Whenever we try to live our lives or order society apart from God we sin. We all have a share in the corporate evil that spoils the world and that is why in Church we confess the sins of all publicly. Sin is social as well as individual. It is collective and cumulative and its existence is a judgment on the best of us as well as the worst.

THE Christian teaching about sin and salvation is summed up in those words from St. John's epistle, which are familiar to us as an opening sentence in evening prayer: "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us; but if we confess our sins, God is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." First is our recognition of the reality and horror of sin. Second is our personal confession of our own share of guilt. Third is God's forgiveness and the cleansing from sin. But the key word in John's statement is the word "if." Man's salvation hinges not only on God's ability to save but on man's ability to understand his condition, to recognize his fallen state, to see himself as he actually is.

"God's in his heaven," and this "makes sense" of the universe, but it does not follow that "all's right with the world." We cannot rest content in a world which in one generation has seen two great wars and a major depression. And it is difficult to have any illusions about automatic progress when you consider the block-buster and the robot-bomb. Jesus said, "My father worketh and I work, even until now." The key to our situation is to realize that the main interest of God is to get his work done. Life has meaning for us, not only in the belief that we human beings are children of a heavenly father who made us and all mankind but also in the faith that because his creation is still unfinished he needs our help in completing the job, and that although we may fail him miserably it is still his will to save us from ourselves and give us abundant life. The world's need faces us with the challenge to become God's co-partners, sharers with him in the great work of perfecting his creation.

Respond to that challenge, and what happens?

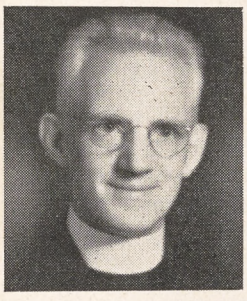
Your private devotions and corporate worship, your Church work and community service will take on new meaning because they will be related to God's ongoing enterprise. Everything you are and have and do will be identified with God's purpose. In the process of serving Him you will become a real person. You can then face sorrow and disappointment, accept personal handicaps and limitations, overcome temptation, carry burdens otherwise too heavy to be borne, be brave in the face of danger because all these things will be related to your life with God. As someone has wisely observed, "God is not a problem to be solved but a worker to be joined."

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION



1. What does Christianity teach about human personality? How does the office of instruction define it?
2. How would you define sin?
3. What is your duty to God? to your neighbor? How does the office of instruction define these?
4. What are the three necessary steps to salvation?
5. How do you think you could best share today in perfecting God's creation? Discuss.

Talks with Teachers

By

WILLIAM GRIME
Rector of St. Paul's, Great Neck, N. Y.

AT THE outset let it be remembered there are no ten easy lessons to successful teaching. Real teaching is difficult and ought to be offered and accepted as such. This column will seek mostly to be practical. It will often ask, have you seen this or that new book, this new children's hymn, this restatement of purpose, or have you tried this new course, this experiment in worship or this bit of Christian social pioneering? Or what can we learn from other communions about Christian education?

Also the prevailing pessimism concerning Christian education of our youth extends far and deep. Yet there is a small but growing group of rectors and teachers who are determined to give this matter a revitalized leadership in the days ahead. They know all the problems. Still they are bent on leading children through the resources and family life of the church to worship God in Christ as the central aim of all Christian education. They believe that if the response of the creature to the Creator, of the sinner to the Saviour can be kept growing in reverence, honesty, meaningfulness and intimacy that youth will again accept the spiritual discipline and grace out of which can come the better possible righteous society.

As has been hinted this small group (who, by the way, are inviting others to join them) are not afraid of testing their work as they go along. They are not just vaguely trusting something good will turn up in their efforts. They know there are no tests which can precisely measure what changes for the better are taking place in their students. Yet they are not content to drift along without self criticism and the criticism of a competent friend. For instance they ask themselves such questions:

1. Is there improvement in my pupils' attitudes during worship periods?

2. Why this lack of interest for the last few weeks?

3. Are there any signs of growing loyalty to school, Church and one another?

4. In the teaching-learning are there any evidences that pupils are discharging responsibility as if they enjoyed it?

5. Is class discussion entered into frankly, earnestly? Is it related when possible to the every day lives of students and to community and world needs?

6. What are the children getting out of Church School which they could not just as well get out of a public school?

In connection with these questions pages 158-166 make good reading in Preaching the Word of God by Noyes.

But do I hear someone saying "we know all this"? That may be quite true. If so shall we listen to the Master teacher himself "Happy are ye if ye do these things."

A Family Prayer

O LORD visit us not on Sunday evening or Monday morning with pestilence on our children so that they cry out in the night season and vomit in the morning watch. Be with us, we pray thee, when telephones ring, or dogs demand an outing, and the children lie in bed, and students wait without, and laundresses and cleaning ladies tarry or come not. Be with us then and give us a heart to praise Thee. Amen.

—A private prayer of the late WILLIAM TEMPLE, Archbishop of Canterbury, submitted by Mrs. Reinhold Niebuhr.

Azariah of Dornakal

By

P. A. MODAK
Former Vice-Moderator of the United Christian Church of India

THE Rt. Rev. Vedanayakam Samuel Azariah was one of the first natives of India to become an Anglican bishop. He was born on August 17, 1874, the son of the Rev. and Mrs. Vedanayakam.

He received his early education from the Christian mission schools and later attended the Madras Christian college. In 1920 an honorary LL. D. was conferred upon him by Cambridge University. He became the travelling secretary for the YMCA in South India in 1896 and held the position of associate general secretary from 1903-1909. In 1909 he was ordained in India. In 1910 he visited England as a delegate to the World Missionary Conference. From 1909-1912 he was the head of the Dornakal mission in South India.

In 1912 the Dornakal mission was established as a separate diocese and the Rev. V. S. Azariah was appointed as its bishop. He continued to minister to this diocese from 1912 to 1944, a period of 32 years, during which time this small diocese grew to be the largest in the Anglican Church in India, numbering over 200,000 Christians. At one time Bishop Azariah was chairman of the international Christian council of India. He was a prominent leader in the conferences on faith and order held at Lausanne, Switzerland in 1927 and at Edinburgh in 1937 and also at the conference on Church, community and state held at Oxford in 1937. He attended the two conferences of Anglican bishops held at Lambeth in 1920 and 1930 respectively. At the centennial celebration of the appointment of the first Episcopal bishop of Australia in 1936, Bishop Azariah represented the Anglican Church of India. In 1937 he addressed the General Convention of the Episcopal Church in Cincinnati, Ohio.

Bishop Azariah began his life as a teacher together with another young layman, Mr. K. T. Paul. These young laymen later became two of the outstanding Christian leaders of India. In 1903 Bishop Azariah founded the Indian missionary society of Tinnevelly and acted as the secretary of the organization from 1903-1909. He and Mr. Paul were among the founders of the national missionary society of India and served as joint general secretaries from 1906-1909, at which time Bishop Azariah took charge of the Dornakal diocese and Mr. Paul was appointed as one of the national secretaries of the YMCA. Mr. P. O. Philip was appointed as their successor to carry on the work of this indigenous organization. Mr. Philip served in this capacity until he became a secretary of the national Christian council of India—a body representative of Protestant Christian missions and Churches—and was succeeded in turn by Mr. A. C. Mukerjee. Mr. Mukerjee had a title of distinction conferred upon him by the Indian government in recognition of his public services.

Bishop Azariah and Mr. Paul often travelled together all over India addressing Christian audiences to instruct them in the work of this first indigenous missionary movement. The writer of this article first came to know Bishop Azariah in this way. It is a proud memory that my father and mother were among the supporters of this movement in the province of Bombay. The two men were entertained frequently in our home and as a schoolboy I always took pleasure in attending the meetings conducted by them in my city of Ahmednagar. My own first inspiration to build a national Christian movement in India came from Bishop Azariah and Mr. Paul. I took great satisfaction in the fact that my father, who was both a lawyer and a Christian minister, turned over a

Worship as Social Celebration

"I can worship God in the living room," "I can worship God in the garden," "I can worship God on the golf course"—nonsense! The person who says these things has no conception of the celebrative genius of worship. Of course one can commune in these places, but worship is more than communion; of course one can pray in these places, but worship is more than prayer. Worship is formal adoration and praise; worship is social celebration of common faith and purpose; worship is ordered expression of Christian devotion. When the priest before the altar lifts up the sacred host or the chalice, he executes the perfect gesture of worship. Worship is the exaltation, the elevation, the glorification of all the gracious relationships which unite our finite with God's infinite being.

good part of his clerical salary to support the work of the society. Both Bishop Azariah and Mr. Paul were pioneers in leading Indian Christians to the realization that for the permanence of the Christian movement in India the Church should be independent of foreign finance and leadership and the Christian missionary movement must be of and for the peoples of India themselves. These men left behind them as their legacy a host of Christian nationals who are actively engaged in building up an indigenous Christian Church. God gave these two men opportunities to render prophetic service and they used these opportunities with such success that even now, when they are no longer in the midst of the Christian movement of India, their work and their inspiration remain as an important and productive influence.

New Books

Excellent Good *Fair

According to Paul. By Harris Franklin Rall. Charles Scribner's, $2.75.

Professor Rall is a systematic theologian and a very thorough one. In 1940 he won the Bross prize with his book Christianity—An Inquiry Into Its Nature and Truth—and this one tops a long series of works in the field of theology. He has now written one of the sanest books on St. Paul that we have seen. The point of departure is exactly right. Paul had "a religion in search of a theology," rather than a finished theological system. It was not only Paul's heritage from the past but his own personal experience that provided him with the material for his theology. The great truths of the Christian gospel were discovered by him in his own experience. "These truths he had to set forth again and again, and in reflecting upon them, in seeing how his gospel met the needs and experiences of men, his insights were deepened and clarified and enriched. So his life became for him a school; city streets and roads of empire were for him study and classroom. He might well have written solvitur ambulando over his theology: his problems were solved in action. His theology as it comes to us, then, is the theology of a preacher, as all Christian theology should be. It comes out of life, it speaks to life, and it concerns itself in the main only with that which has relevance for life."

There is a good though brief bibliography—where one misses the title of Deissmann's great book, Paul—which will be especially useful to the layman and the beginner.

There is probably no field of Biblical study more beset with misunderstanding and obscurities than the Pauline Epistles, especially for the layman. Here is a book that will help to burn away some of the fog.

Try God

By

CHARLES T. HULL

Rector of St. Paul's-by-the-Lake, Chicago

I HAVE received permission to pass on to Witness readers a letter written from Italy a few weeks ago by a youthful soldier to his mother.

"Here is something that I know you'll be glad to hear. The impossible has finally come to the fore. I have gotten religion. Yes, this time I'm sincere and I hope it will be lasting. Here are the details:

"On New Year's day, several of our boys were injured in an automobile accident. On the 3rd of the month we got a 'phone call that one of the boys had passed away. This boy was one that we weren't especially concerned about because he was supposed to have had a broken jaw and leg, which in itself wasn't too serious. But complications set in, internal hemorrhages no doubt, and he passed away. At present we are sweating out another well liked chap and we all pray for his recovery. On January 4th we fellows went to Bari to this buddy's (can't mention his name until official confirmation has been given to his next of kin by the war department) funeral. This is the first military funeral that I have ever been to and I think it was a wonderful tribute to him. We went to the U. S. military cemetery just on the outskirts of Bari. There it was—a small cemetery with white crosses, row on row. This buddy of ours was well liked by everyone in the squadron. At the funeral they had a firing squad of eight men who fired a volley of three rounds each at the completion of the service.

"This brings me to my main theme—religion. The chaplain who conducted the service was marvelous. His opening words startled me very much. They were, 'At this moment we are gathered here for great rejoicing.' I couldn't believe my ears. The chaplain went on to say that the reason for rejoicing was that this buddy of ours was entering not into death as we mortals know it, but into the beginning of eternal life. He said, 'Though we may miss our buddy, we should be glad that he has been called by the Almighty.' 'Man,' he says, "lives in three phases. He is born, he lives, and he dies, not as we know it but then enters upon a new threshold of eternal life.' I was greatly impressed by these words and fascinated by this chaplain.

"After the service, the buddies of the newly departed walked past his grave in single file, and as a parting gesture, saluted him. It was very impressive. So today being Sunday, I went to church. Our services are held in our indoor movie theatre. It was a very simple service. For an altar, there was a table with a cross and two white candles on either side of it. We sang a few hymns and were given a sermon. For my money this chaplain is dynamic. He is simple, yet very sincere and emotional. At one point in his service, he took out his handkerchief and cried. His sermon was Try God. He said, 'We in America have massed the greatest materialistic empire the world has ever known.' He went on to say, 'We, I don't think, will win this war until we try God. We should humble ourselves unto God and not until we do will we win. This fight of ours is too great for our leaders, Roosevelt, Churchill and Stalin. They are confused, we are confused. Not until we humble ourselves and try God will we be able to win.'

"I think I have seen the light. He said, 'This victory of ours must begin first with the individual, then the nation, and finally the United Nations.' I don't think this is a passing fancy with me but the real thing. This thing or whatever you may call it, is too big for us, any of us, so let us, as he says, Try God.

"I know that you'll be greatly pleased with my new metamorphosis. You've been trying to preach it to me since I was a little child, but this is something that no one can teach you. It must come from within you and yourself alone. I will close now for I believe I have made you very happy with my new finding, for I, as an individual, am truly happy for I have found God."

THIS letter came to hand because a family in a neighboring city to this parish had suddenly remembered that they were communicants of the Episcopal Church and should be transferred. But it had been so long since they thought about such a move that they did not know where their communicant membership was last registered. This is mentioned simply to show how true the letter is in its diagnosis of the world's disease.

Beside the vivid picture of the wonderful work being done by our chaplains, this letter also points very sharply to one of the major weaknesses of the Church. This boy got his religious life adjusted when probably for the first time he actually faced intellectually the fact of death. Fortunately a good chaplain was on hand to facilitate his thinking and to guide his emotions into constructive channels. He grasped the idea of immortality as a sane explanation of life. Once he had accepted the Church's doctrine of immortality he was ready to do something about his own life and to begin at once to share that more radiant life.

The Church is somehow failing in her whole task unless the leaders of thought in the Church focus our attention upon the fact of immortality. Until we have faced that doctrine of the Church as eternal truth and made our adjustments to it, we have not fully learned what it means to be churchmen.

Recently here in Chicago we were warned again about the dangers of emotional preaching. If it would not be so sad it would be ridiculously amusing to think of the Episcopal Church as in danger of being too emotional. Some of us still realize that this beloved Church of ours has a reputation for blowing cold rather than hot. Perhaps we need to be something more than luke-warm. The author of the letter says his chaplain was dynamic, simple, sincere, and emotional.

Can we really Try God and not feel it? A simple, unadorned service in an army movie theater with only sincerity and emotion to adorn its thought brought a boy to Try God and his whole family back here in the states are also following his example. Sincerity and emotion make a powerful charge with which to propel the doctrine of our faith. Perhaps more people would be willing to try God if we had the courage to use and direct them.

"Quotes"

THE value of man and the meaning of history is to be found in the nature and character of God who has thus made himself known. The value of man is not what he is in and for himself—humanism; not what he is for society—fascism and communism; but what he is worth to God. This is the principle of Christian equality; the supreme importance of every man is that he is the brother for whom Christ died. This is compatible with many forms of social differentiation and subdivision. It is not compatible with any scheme which subjects a man's personality to another man or to any group of men such as the government or administrators of the state.

Philippine Missionaries Send Messages to Friends

Brief Notes Seem to Indicate That All Are Well and Receive Letters From Home

By Rita Rubin

New York:—Messages from nine prisoner-of-war postcards from missionaries interned in the Philippines, dated late April or May, 1944, or not dated at all, have been received by the National Council's overseas department, sent direct or forwarded by relatives or friends. All indicate "good" or "fair" health, good spirits and considerable activity. No messages have been received from Bishop Binsted or Bishop Wilner, nor from the great majority of the staff. Those that have come are as follows:

From Camp Holmes near Baguio in the Mountain Province, Mrs. George C. Bartter conveys her characteristic spirit in less than the permitted maximum of twenty-five words. She writes undated: "Slender, shabby, serenely unfastidious. Rich in experience. Enjoy teaching Latin. Bridge improving. Hankering Elsie's products." ("Elsie" is understood to mean the Borden cow and to signify dairy products.) A second card, dated April 17, 1944, mentions jubilation over letters received from her family, and adds, "Cheerful, busy, reseating, re-elbowing ragged suits." She says also that her husband is gardening and bookbinding. He, now 68, went to the Philippines in March, 1900, and has been on the mission staff since 1907.

Also from the Baguio camp Sister Anita of the Order of St. Anne says that the sisters occupy a native hut, Sister Augusta is a kindergartner, Sister Isabel a masseuse; the others pack rice. They have a daily communion service.

A card from the Rev. Alfred Griffiths, Baguio, writes, "Please inform relatives my family all well."

The only other message from the Baguio camp is from 16-year-old David Bergamini. His father is the mission architect. David writes on April 30, 1944: "Enjoying ourselves while we wait. Dad constructing school. Baseball stopped rainy season. Sixty-eight inches tall, weigh ten stone. Studying hard, geometry, algebra, trigonometry, French." On May 30, he adds, "Hope graduate year early. Playing bridge tournament. Dances some Saturday nights. Always yours hungrily."

From the internment camp called Santo Tomas in Manila, come messages from Miss Ella L. Foerstel, Miss Louise Goldthorpe, the Rev. Raymond E. Abbitt and the Rev. John Mears. Mr. Mears had been stationed at Upi, Mindanao, in the south, and Miss Goldthorpe at Zamboanga. The fact that their messages come from Manila may indicate that the missionaries in the south were transferred north. Miss Goldthorpe, a nurse, writes "I am enjoying my work in the camp hygiene department. Received lovely Red Cross boxes for Christmas" (1943).

Mr. Mears writes from Santo Tomas, "Your package was among many miracles happening to us."

Miss Foerstel, a nurse, wrote on June 28, 1944, the latest date mentioned in these cards, that in March she had voluntarily re-entered the camp to help, and mentions that "Boyle" is there, which would mean Miss Helen Boyle, formerly in Zamboanga. Miss Foerstel adds: "All well living in cathedral rooms." According to the last previous word received, late 1943, this would include Bishop and Mrs. Binsted, Mrs. Leo G. McAfee, Mrs. Benson H. Harvey, Deaconess Kate S. Shaw, the Misses Elizabeth G. Griffith, Ruth Meinhardt, Helen M. Pond.

The Rev. Raymond Abbitt, Santo Tomas, says he had received forty-five letters.

From Camp No. 2, which is at Los Banos, forty miles south of Manila, Maureen N. Davis, a nurse who went to the Philippines in 1940 and was stationed at Baguio, writes: "Everything fine. Hope get home soon. Weiser, Goldthorpe, Harvey well." Miss Lillian Weiser is superintendent of nurses at St. Luke's hospital, Manila, and when last heard of, late 1943, was still permitted to continue in an advisory capacity when the hospital was taken under Japanese management. At that time it was also reported that the Rev. Benson H. Harvey had voluntarily entered Santo Tomas camp to help with religious work there.

Coadjutor for Texas

Houston, Texas:—The council of the diocese of Texas unanimously voted to comply with the request of Bishop Quin for a coadjutor bishop. The Rev. J. F. Cameron of Beaumont was made chairman of a committee to receive nominations, to investigate and to report to the special council called for the election. The committee will present ten names, though other nominations from the floor will be in order. A committee on a cathedral for the diocese was also appointed. It is a matter which has been discussed in the diocese for many years. The executive board of the diocese was also instructed to employ a business manager for the diocese. An unspent $5,000 in the diocesan treasury was transferred to the returning chaplains fund, bringing it to $15,000, the money to be used to aid chaplains in returning to parish life.

More Chaplains

San Francisco: — "Although the churches of America have made a wonderful contribution in giving priests, rabbis and clergymen to the armed forces, still more is expected of them," Captain Robert D. Workman, chief of navy chaplains, said here. "The nation's churches must prove themselves the equals of industry and economic forces, which have produced fantastic totals of war materiel, by furnishing the clergy to minister to fighting men's spiritual needs." Captain Workman is bound for the Pacific to visit ship and shore chaplains. The navy, he said, needs 3232 more chaplains by July 1 and "the churches must give us the men or we will have to do without."

Church Unity

London: — The Slovak Lutheran Church hopes to establish close ties with the Church of England after the war, according to the Rev. Jan Michalec, chaplain to the Czech army in Great Britain. He urged in a statement here that the Church of England send a representative as soon as possible to visit the Slovak Lutheran Church and report fully on conditions in the Church of England. He proposed also that a representative of the Slovak Church visit the Anglican Church for the same purpose.

The Vatican Line

Quebec, Canada: — A warning against communistic "infiltrations" was issued by the national board of the Roman Catholic hierarchy of Canada following a two-day meeting here. It was signed by Archbishop Villeneuve of Quebec and twelve other archbishops and bishops. "The courageous part which the Russian people have played in turning away from the world the frightful Nazi domination must not blind us to the world revolution which the leaders of international communism always seek," the statement said. There was also a paragraph about "our dear country for which so many of our sons offer each day their lives and their futures" which may give a smile to a lot of folks in view of the hierarchy's opposition to the Canadian war effort. There was the usual statement about "heroic Poland" with the hope expressed that the Allies would not "abandon her to her fate."

Chaplains Confer

Honolulu:—Twenty chaplains attended a recent conference here and came up with some definite recommendations. They urge that clergy at home place greater emphasis on teaching; that there should be greater emphasis on preparation for marriage; that the army and navy commission should have a person of influence in Washington to help with the location of chaplains. They think there should be a series of tracts prepared for service men on the teachings of the Church; also that the commission, if it has the cash, should provide a book a month to each chaplain. Parishes on the mainland were urged to have days of prayer for men and women in the service and for a just peace. Speakers at the conference were Bishop Kennedy; the Rev. Gordon Reese who is in Honolulu as the representative of the army and navy commission; the Rev. E. Tanner Brown and Chaplain Donald Aldrich, coadjutor bishop-elect of Michigan.

Archbishop Speaks

Los Angeles:—Archbishop Derwyn T. Owen, primate of Canada, told the convention of Los Angeles that the Church has a responsibility to see that man does not exclude God from the solution of world problems. He also said that a more satisfactory solution of social problems can be effected through interdenominational cooperation. He is the president of the newly formed Canadian Council of Churches.

Clergy Exempted

Geneva:—Priests and deacons belonging to the Ukrainian Catholic Church of the Bysantine Rite have been exempted from military service by Russian occupation authorities in Galicia, according to information received here. Reports say that clergymen generally have been treated with favor by Soviet administrators, and are continuing their ministry unhampered. Thirty priests, however, are said to have been arrested, and some of them executed, on charges of pro-Nazi collaboration.

Issues of War

New York:—Sir Gerald Campbell of the British embassy is to be the first speaker at a series of services and forums held at St. Thomas' Church under the direction of the Rev. Sturgis L. Riddle, assistant minister. He is to speak on February 11th on spiritual issues in the war and the peace. The address is given in place of the sermon at the regular Sunday afternoon service, with an off-the-record discussion following in the parish house.

Bishop Celebrates

Buffalo:—Bishop Davis of Western New York celebrated the 15th anniversary of his consecration on January 23rd by leading a conference of the clergy at Trinity where he was once rector. At the luncheon there were addresses by the Rev.

Walter Lord who is retiring as rector of St. John's, Buffalo, where he has served for 36 years; the Rev. Charles Broughton, rector of the Ascension, and Dean Edward Welles of the cathedral on behalf of the clergy who presented the bishop with a number of books.

Alabama Convention

Mobile, Ala.:—National treasurer Lewis B. Franklin was the headliner at the convention of Alabama meeting here January 24-25. The convention approved the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals in principle and urged their study by congregations. The canons of the diocese were changed so as to permit 18-year-olds to vote in parish meetings. There was also a resolution passed calling upon parishes to set up community inter-racial committees.

To Aid Evacuees

Sacramento, Calif.:—The council of Churches here has issued a statement calling on churches to assist returning Japanese-American exacuees. Describing the recent action by army authorities rescinding the evacuation order issued early in 1942 as "fully consistent with our democracy at its best," the council warned against boycotts and other forms of intimidation, and urged church members to help "reduce to a minimum all factors and attitudes which might lead to friction." The council expressed its conviction "that the revocation of the evacuation order will serve to strengthen the moral position of our country in the eyes of the world, both of friendly and enemy peoples, and will give to the United States a clearer title to leadership in the family of nations."

United Action

Granville, Ohio: — United action in "all those things which can better be done together than separately" was urged here by the national consultative conference of the United Student Christian Council, attended by student and adult delegates from 29 states and 51 colleges. Summer work camps for study and direct participation of students in urban social work, agricultural and industrial projects, and regional conferences and retreats for students on a cooperative basis were recommended. It was urged that united support be given the world student service fund, and the work of the world student Christian federation and other international youth groups. The conference called for united action by student agencies, while preserving the autonomy of each cooperating group and maintaining the creedal position of each body. United action, they added, would stimulate Christian fellowship, increase knowledge of the Christian faith, and give religion an adequate place in higher education.

Support Proposals

Baltimore: — The convention of Maryland passed a resolution affirming its conviction that "the charter outlined at Dumbarton Oaks, though far from ideal, is a great step forward and that it offers the most effective political partnership in world organization at the present time." Copies of the resolution were sent to the President, secretary of state and to Maryland Congressmen. The social service commission of the diocese, headed by the Rev. Owings Stone, is promoting the study of the Proposals in parishes and urging them to voice their opinions to authorities in Washington.

Wellesley Conference

Boston: — The conference for church work, held for many years at Wellesley College, will be held again this summer after a lapse of two years. The dates are June 14-23.

Committee Condemned

New York: — Condemning the creation of a permanent "Dies Committee" as a "slick maneuver on the part of a small clique which is counter to the interests of the nation, the election mandate of the people and dangerous to the successful prosecution of the war," George Marshall, chairman of the national federation for constitutional liberties, today called upon members of Congress to warn of the full implications of Rankin's trick.

"The entire nation, which hailed the elimination of Martin Dies and three fellow committee members from the ranks of Congress, expects that, regardless of what committees are established by our legislative bodies, there must be no repetition of the divisive policies and tactics of the old Dies committee which, despite its avowed policy, shielded and befriended many of the worst fascist elements in the country, many of whom have been under federal indictment."

Community leaders are urged to inform their representatives, without delay, that any attempt to repeat the scandalous performance of the Dies committee, practically all of whose members were repudiated at the polls, must be blocked.

Liquidates Debt

Huntingdon, Pa.:—Preparing for the celebration of its 100th anniversary, St. John's Church concluded a debt-liquidation campaign that was 60 per cent over-subscribed. The historic little parish was consecrated in 1845. In addition to its regular parochial program, the ministry is sometimes extended to the Pennsylvania Industrial School, a corrective institution for boys, and continuously to the Episcopal students of Juniata College.

To Elect Exarch

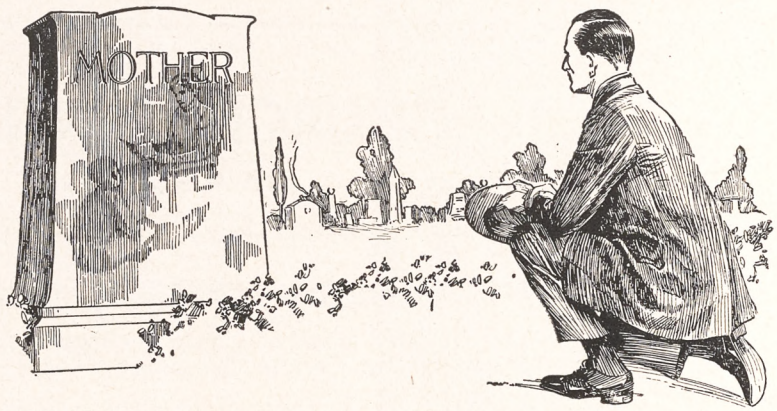
Washington: — Election of a new exarch, or supreme head, of the Bulgarian Orthodox Church, a post that has been vacant for almost 30 years, took place on Jan. 21, according to an announcement of the holy synod, broadcast over the Sofia radio and reported to the office of war information here. First step in the selection of the exarch, according to Metropolitan Stefan, acting president of the holy synod, took place on Jan. 14, when representatives from each parish will be chosen as an electoral college to choose the new leader. Decision to hold the election has been approved by the Bulgarian government.

The first Bulgarian Exarch, Antim I, was elected in 1872, two years after the Bulgarian Orthodox Church was reorganized on an independent basis. Since the death of his successor, Exarch Joseph, in 1915, the post has been unoccupied.

The Bulgarian Church, which embraces two-thirds of the population, was declared in schism by the ecumenical patriarch at Istanbul, but has been upheld by the patriarch at Jerusalem as well as by the Orthodox Churches of Russia, Romania, and Serbia, which refused to accept the charge of schism as legal or valid.

Tells of Nisei

Minneapolis:—Bishop Reifsnider, formerly of Japan who is now in charge of work with Japanese Americans, addressed several large gatherings in the Twin Cities, January 16-17. He also visited Fort Snelling to confer with Nisei members of the armed forces stationed there. He addressed a meeting of the clergy and later told 300 Church women of the plans made to return Japanese-Americans to the Pacific coast.



Aid From Baptist

Cliffside Park, N. J.:—Monday, January 22, was the deadline for saving Trinity Church, of which Richard P. Pressey is rector. On July 18 the bank which held Trinity Church's mortgage of over $63,000 put the church up for sale at sheriff's auction, and bought it back. The bank then made an agreement with the rector that when anyone made a bid for the purchase of the church, the bank would give the congregation of Trinity a chance to buy it for the price offered. The Lutherans offered $45,000 for this beautiful stone church, and the bank gave Trinity until yesterday to raise the $45,000. A Baptist layman was largely instrumental in raising the required $45,000. The rectory was not included in the agreement, but the congregation has another 60 days in which to raise $5,000 to save that.

More Pay Maybe

Grand Rapids:—Immediate steps to increase salaries of the clergy in the diocese of Western Michigan were urged at the annual convention. "A clergyman shouldn't have to worry about his groceries while he is saying his prayers," declared the Rev. W. A. Simms, rector of St. Thomas' Church at Battle Creek. The convention petitioned for National Council to consider definite standards of instruction for youth, and to promote the distribution of the St. James series of church school lessons, recommended by the diocese's division on education.

With missionary pledges totaling more than $20,000 for 1945, the diocese approved plans for extension of missions, and post-war building loans to parishes.

Good Advice

Plainfield, N. J.:—The Mary Fawcett Co., importers of linens for vestments, has sent a message to parishes advising "all altar guilds to use worn-out vestments for the repair of others and to cut up old albs, surplices, etc., for smaller pieces such as corporals, veils, purificators, etc. Surplice and other lightweight linens are almost unobtainable and even cotton is becoming more restricted."

Berkeley Reunion

New Haven:—The Rev. Paul Tillich of Union Seminary was the headliner at the midwinter alumni reunion of the Berkeley Divinity School which was held January 25th. He spoke on the Churches and the emerging social order in Europe. Another headliner was the Rev. Norman P. Dare, army chaplain, who told of what war service does to churchmen.

Youth Conference

Panama Canal Zone: — The Rev. George Packard has had what is believed to be the first youth conference for this district. Following the Forward in Service theme of the Christian Doctrine of God, the following helped with the program, Rev. R. T. Ferris, Rev. L. B. Shirley, Rev. R. W. Jackson, an unnamed chaplain from Fort Davis and the Rev. Mr. Ford, a Baptist clergyman.

Religion In Poland

Moscow (By Wireless): — Anna Louise Strong, daughter of a former Congregational minister of Seattle, declared here on January 22 that religious freedom is "taken for granted" in liberated Poland. She has just arrived here after an eight weeks' tour of the country. Roman Catholic priests are cooperating with red army authorities and "the clergy are represented on various citizens committees along with representatives of trade unions and other organizations. Among them is Dr. Josef Kruszinski, rector of Lublin Catholic University, who was a member of a general citizens committee which collected 140,000 Christmas packages for Polish soldiers." She mentioned several other priests who have distinguished themselves in the underground movement, and also declared that the Polish army ritual includes morning and evening prayer.

Negroes Attend

Richmond: — More than 1,000 delegates, representing some 500,000 white and Negro Protestants from twelve leading denominations in Virginia attended the first convocation of the newly-formed Council of Churches, the first such council to be interracial from the start.

Although Baptist pastors are active leaders on the council committees, Virginia's 275,000 Baptists will decide whether or not they will affiliate with the council next month. Four separate agencies have become corporate units of the council: the Virginia council of Christian education, the interracial commission, the Christian youth council and the Church conference of social work.

Marriage Canon

Buffalo:—Another attempt to liberalize the marriage canon will be made at the 1946 General Convention according to an announcement on January 16 by Bishop Davis of Western New York, chairman of the commission. The commission has suggested appointment of a committee in each diocese to study the problem and make recommendations. Bishop Davis expressed particular concern for the men and women in the service. "When they come back," he said, "some will find that they have made a terrible mistake. Is the Church going to insist that they continue in that state of marital discord and disunity or is it going to help them establish a home with somebody else that promises unity and happiness? That is one reason why we are so anxious for the Church to give consideration to the matter."

sider asking the Archbishop of Canterbury to call one.

Offerings to aid conscientious objectors were urged—the Episcopal Church now has 78 with 33 on detached service; 35 in camps; 10 in prison. $22,000 is needed to aid them stated Bishop Ludlow of Newark.

The younger bishops spent a day before the meeting discussing various problems with the Presiding Bishop. There was great concern lest the Church fail the Negro by not seeking to correct existing evils and injustices. There was also united sentiment that the Church should contact labor leaders and "aid in developing Christian brotherhood among workers of all types." This was felt so strongly that they are going to urge the National Council to secure "some exceptionally capable man" to do such a job.

Miss Jessica Sherman
Churchwoman of Milwaukee

The last number of The Witness (Jan. 25) delights me. Since I began to go to labor meetings twenty-five years ago as a student of social work I have known how ignorant the usual middle-class person is of the aims, ability and democracy of labor leaders and delegates. I know from my own earlier ideas and from the present ideas of my friends against which I knock my head. Many of the liberal clergy, it seems to me, have also not had the experience really to know what labor leaders are like and are after. I hope the Columbus meetings are going to be duplicated in many other cities.

I have been glad too of your urging of political action through letters to members of Congress, as on the poll-tax, Dumbarton Oaks, etc. I am hoping that you will also urge people to write their Congressmen on behalf of Henry Wallace and sixty million jobs as against Jesse Jones and money.

Robert P. Wilson
Layman of Jacksonville, Fla.

I noticed the report in The Witness that Mr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Moreland College, Atlanta, had been elected vice-president of the Federal Council of Churches. I have just learned that Dr. Mays was threatened and run out of a public parking place in the terminal station at Atlanta. Also in a diner he was requested to leave. I believe that he wears a Phi Beta Kappa key but that does not cut any ice down here unless the wearer or the wearer's daddy also belongs to the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan. The Negro of the south will have to find the economic royalists very much injured economically before he can make very much headway. His greatest hope down here will naturally lie with the C.I.O.

If you will refer to The Witness of January 25th, 90% of it is CIO and I am not going to "clear through Sydney." When I read a Church magazine I want to read of the activities of the Church and not the activities of a labor union, therefore this is your authority to discontinue my subscription.

Miss Elmira A. Foster
Churchwoman of Cleveland, Ohio

May I comment on three of the points made in the article on The Prayer Book by Clifton Macon (Witness, Dec. 14). He speaks of the references to eating flesh and drinking blood in the prayer of humble access as having no worship value and being abhorrent to non-cannibals. Shall we then repudiate the use of these terms by our Lord in the 6th chapter of St. John's gospel? The people to whom he addressed these words were not cannibals. To many thousands of Christians they have a deep worship value as recalling our Lord's words in the very service which makes them actual to us.

Concerning intinction I will say merely that those who protest the traditional method of administering are naturally more vocal than those who are completely satisfied with it. Many avoid those parishes where intinction is practiced. At the risk of being called a verbalist may I inquire how intinction can possibly fulfil our Lord's command, "Drink ye."

Mr. Macon thinks that the Church tempts sponsors to lie before God and man when she asks them to affirm their belief in all the articles of the Christian faith as contained in the Apostles creed. I am sure he would be surprised to know of the vast numbers to whom the creed is a precious treasure, not merely because they are obstinate conservatives but because they rejoice to recognize the revelation of God and to pledge their allegiance to him in the manner in which the Church formulated that revelation in the days when persecution was considered a badge of honor. Some epochs of Church history are qualified to revise offices of worship. It may be doubted whether the present epoch is thus qualified. Perhaps the difficulty is that many clergymen are content to exhort rather than to teach, although their ordination vows refer to instructing and teaching rather than to exhortation.

The weekly arrival of The Witness always provides one of those moments when I feel especially proud of our Church. However the Church and labor number is one of the best ever. "Using religion as a preventative and therapeutic agency the minister has, within his limitations, a great work to do."

Pastoral Care of Nervous People

By

HENRY J. SIMPSON

Here is a book that is sorely needed by the clergy. More and more the clergy are being called upon for counsel. Questions concerning mental habits, emotional life, home training or the lack of it, the ideals, the aims and purposes of life, fears, anxieties, confusion over the meaning of life and religion—all of these come within the field of pastoral work. All of these topics are dealt with by the Rev. Henry J. Simpson in his guide to the care of nervous people.

Some of the chapter topics are: The Pastor and the Psychoneurotic; Varieties of Approach to the Problem; Procedure for a Pastor; The Right Life; The Wrong Life; General Nervousness; Special Therapeutic Procedures.

This book is not a complete presentation of either religion or psychiatry. It is an introduction to a technique which brings the help of both to the aid of nervous people.

Prayer And The Service Of God

By

DANIEL JENKINS

This is a modern book which faces some of the questions and difficulties which present themselves to those who find it hard to maintain the life of prayer in the stress of this grim and confused twentieth century.

Some of the topics are: Prayer and Faith; Prayer and the Bible; Prayer and the Church; Why Do We Find Prayer So Difficult Today?

The author is an English clergyman. Price, $1.50

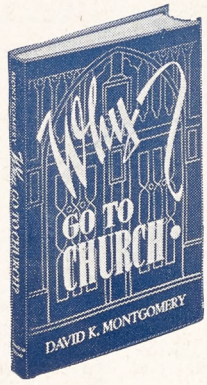
WHY GO TO CHURCH?



By DAVID K. MONTGOMERY

A provocative book based on the perennial topic—who go to church? This is, of course, a book for a layman.

We go to Church but for one reason—to worship. "To worship means to give the best you have, and the best you are, to the best you know.

Many people, says the author, lack reality in their church-going and the reason is that the Holy Spirit has not penetrated their lives. You will find this book modern in the sense that it discusses men and women of today—their relationship to one another and their relationship to God. Price, $2.25

*Excellent for Confirmation groups.

THE SIGN OF THE CROSS

Canadian Lenten Book for 1945

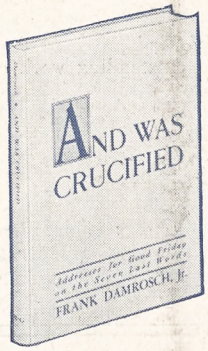
Dedicated to the Members of the Royal Air Force

By R. S. K. SEELEY, D.D.

This is, in our estimation, one of the finest books to come out of Canada in some time. The purpose of the book is "to bring the cross out of the realm of theoretical doctrine and make it a living experience for individuals."

The sub-title of the book is "A Meditation on The Place of the Cross in Human Living." After reading The Sign of the Cross one cannot but realize that the redemptive principle which we discover in the cross of Christ is central to the life of every Christian man and woman.

The Cross and My Neighbor, The Cross and Myself; The Cross and the World Order are some of the chapter topics. Price $1.60



AND WAS CRUCIFIED

Addresses for Good Friday on the Seven Last Words

By

FRANK DAMROSCH, JR.

Dean of Ontario
Provost of Trinity College

For the clergy these meditations will be a real find for preaching purposes. For the laity, here is devotional reading at its best . . . an excellent preparation for the Queen of Feasts—Easter Day.

In the introduction the author says: "If we try to empty ourselves of all self-centeredness, if we concentrate all our will, all our feeling upon loving the Jesus whose sufferings we are beholding, as we hear the Seven Words there may well come to each of us some special blessing, some particular message, which will seem as though it were spoken especially for us. And in truth it is." Price, $1.25

Increased Giving Is Reported To National Council

National Auxiliary Board Passed Favorable Resolution on the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals

By W. B. Spofford

New York: — Nobody of course would say it out loud but there probably were those who found "Ain't war wonderful" running through their minds when the National Council met here February 6-8. For the money is rolling in as never before. The budget for 1945 is $2,587,637 which is about $85,000 more than it was in 1944. Then a budget was adopted for 1946 of $2,735,058 which is $147,421 more than 1945. The Presiding Bishop's Fund received over $131,000 last year. The United Thank Offering is far ahead of the previous triennium; to the end of the year 1941 the amount received was $295,786.98, whereas to the same time in 1944 the amount received was $532,332.64. This is an increase of $236,545.66 or 80%. And to top off the rejoicing over an abundance of cash the Council voted to go after a fund of $5,000,000 for reconstruction and advance work, thus upping their original plan by a couple of million. So before going home on the 8th the Council went into a lengthy huddle on the need for increased giving all through the Church and methods of educating Church people to know their responsibilities.

Aside from money there was little that happened that makes news, though it certainly will be news if the next General Convention acts favorably on the resolution which will be presented authorizing women as layreaders. The committee, reporting through Bishop Dun of Washington, stated that "many of them are plainly qualified" to be layreaders and so the Council is going to ask General Convention to amend the canon making them eligible.

It was announced that the Rev. Bravid W. Harris, bishop-elect of Liberia, had accepted and a fine resolution was passed praising him for the wise and effective work done as field secretary for Negro work. It was also announced unofficially that Dean R. H. Gooden would accept his election to be bishop of Panama Canal Zone.

Bishop Salinas y Velasco of Mexico addressed the meeting and told of the increased opportunities for the Church in that country. The Council therefore added $4,800 to the appropriation for Mexico and also authorized that $10,000 recently received from a legacy should be used to help build a plant at Tlalpan, Mexico.

There was considerable discussion of religious education with Bishop Dun presenting the recommendations of the House of Bishops who also discussed the matter at length at their meeting in Birmingham (WITNESS, Feb. 8). The recommendations are "the preparation of a corpus of instructional material to be acquired by every child (a) by the time of confirmation; (b) by the time of leaving high school; the revival by the division of Christian education of its function of producing curriculum materials; that consideration be given to more definite guidance of the clergy and other leaders on such specific problems as (a) best use of weekday time for religious education; (b) best use of time on Sunday when such weekday instruction is also available; (c) methods of teacher training; (d) formulation of a curriculum with suggested teaching materials suitable for teachers of varied degrees of education."

The national board of the Auxiliary, meeting February 2-5, recorded "its support of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals as a basis on which to build a just and durable peace" and the women also called for "speedy political action and further Allied discussion along the lines suggested" by the Cleveland study conference (WITNESS, Feb. 1). The board sent the resolution to the state department and also urged all Church people to express their convictions on the Proposals to their Congressmen.

CONFERENCE CENTER FOR OKLAHOMA

Oklahoma City: — The diocese of Oklahoma has received 37 acres for use as a conference center, the gift of Mr. A. J. Miller. A committee of five laymen is working on plans.

National Council pays tribute to the Rev. Bravid W. Harris on receiving the news that he has accepted election as bishop of Liberia

OAKS PROPOSALS SUPPORTED

Stockbridge, Mass.:—The Dumbarton Oaks Proposals were all but unanimously supported at a meeting of the Berkshire county ministers association, meeting at the Congregational Church on January 9th. The speaker was Episcopalian Thomas F. Opie who compared the present Proposals with the League of Nations. He suggested, as practical steps toward peace, an international newspaper and an international university.

NOTABLES ATTEND CONVENTION

Honolulu:—There were a number of notables present at the convention of the district of Honolulu, meeting January 22nd, including General Robert C. Richardson Jr., Admiral William L. Calhoun and Chaplain Donald B. Aldrich. The General said that he has just returned from a 17,000 mile trip and that "after such a trip in so short a time it is impossible for anyone to remain an isolationist." Admiral Calhoun, a great Episcopalian, gave credit to the Church for the steadfast spiritual strength given in these difficult days.

The convocation was held ten months after the consecration of Bishop Harry S. Kennedy and it was pointed out that in that short time confirmations have increased 50% and the debt cut in half.

MOLLEGEN AND NASH AT CAMBRIDGE

Cambridge, Mass.: — Rector Norman B. Nash of St. Paul's School, the Rev. A. T. Mollegen of the Virginia Seminary and H. Pitt Van Dusen of Union were the headliners at the mid-winter commencement at Episcopal Theological School. Nine men graduated.

DETROIT CATHEDRAL TO EXPAND

Detroit: — Development of St. Paul's Cathedral as a great civic cathedral, linked with the city's expanding civic and cultural center nearby, is under consideration and a community-wide campaign for this purpose soon will be launched, Dean Kirk B. O'Ferrall has announced. Although he gave few details of the plans now being formulated, he told the congregation and his radio listeners that "the entire half block, between Hancock and Warren Avenues from the alley to Woodward Avenue, must be part of the plan for the future." Geographically only three business buildings and a parking lot in that half block separate the cathedral from the cultural center to the north which includes the Rackham educational memorial, the institute of arts and the public library. The purpose of the development, Dean O'Ferrall indicated, will be to give the cathedral a position in Detroit comparable to that of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York and that of the National Cathedral in Washington. Pointing out that one of the greatest cultural centers in the world is developing in the area in which the cathedral is located, representing the fields of education, literature, music, art, science, medicine and history, he asserted the projected civic cathedral "will give this great center that deepest and greatest quality of all—religion."

WELLSBORO PARISH HAS CARILLON

Wellsboro, Pa.: — A twenty-five bell electric carillon was recently dedicated at St. Paul's Church by Bishop Heistand. It is a memorial to those who had been killed in this war.

Incidentally if there are those who want to use these articles in this way or any other way during Lent there is still time since there are still six to appear. Next week God and the Soldier will be presented by Chaplain Leland Henry, and this will be followed by one on God and Economics by the Rev. Charles Kean. Others to contribute are Avis Henry of the national office of the Auxilary; the Rev. John H. Johnson of New York; Canon Smith of Trenton, N. J. and Dean Bloy of Los Angeles. To receive copies of the next number orders will have to be received at 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y., not later than Saturday so you better either air-mail or wire stating the size of the bundle desired.

Hollywood directors say "never look at the camera" but then this is not a Hollywood movie but a group of youngsters having breakfast together at Christ Church Cathedral, New Orleans

UNIQUE LENTEN PROGRAM

Middletown, N. J.: — At historic Christ Church, founded in 1702, a unique program is offered this Lent. The regular eleven o'clock service is shortened with the sermon omitted. The rector then presents a brief outline of the article in the God and Our World featured in THE WITNESS during Lent. Two members of the congregation then present their ideas on the subject, with previous preparation, in brief talks after which there is general discussion. It is a program that lends itself only to a small congregation but it does have the advantage of giving parishioners that chance to "talk back to the preacher" that one often hears expressed.

MARYLAND BISHOP SPEAKS OUT

Annapolis, Md.:—Bishop Powell of Maryland spoke out strongly for the repeal of the Jim Crow law which requires mandatory segregation of the whites and Negroes on certain intra-state transportation facilities. His statement was offered by a senator who sponsored the repeal. Bishop Powell said that "there is no place for such segregation in our community life. We are asking of the Negro race exactly what we are asking of the white race in the preservation of our form of government and to me it is but justice that this bill should no longer be on our statute books." Action on repeal was deferred pending a report by a committee.

Trustful Cooperation Is Urged By Archbishop Fisher

He Declares That the Four Largest Nations Have Responsibility for Establishing Peace

By Antonia H. Froendt

London (By Wireless): — The Archbishop of Canterbury, Geoffrey Francis Fisher, said here there must be "trustful cooperation" between Great Britain, the United States, and the Soviet Union. Asserting the need for such cooperation is "critical," he added: "No one can say that there are no grounds for anxiety about that after the fighting stops, but leaders and people must be possessed with the spirit to secure it and that spirit is really the spirit of the Christian religion."

The Archbishop gave his views in an exclusive interview. He advocated an international organization which gives "proper place" to small nations and which "in due time will admit enemy countries." He said however participation of enemy countries in the international structure must be preceded by a "long period of education of the enemy countries in principles that are part of our Christian heritage but which they have foresworn for many years past."

While declining to express an opinion upon particular aspects of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, the Archbishop commented that "quite clearly if wars are to be avoided there must be a gain in international organization rooted in principles of right and justice. We must proceed from where we are, that is, from a world in which four great powers carry chief responsibility and power. The first necessity is continued frank and trustful cooperation between the four powers. The second is an organization which gives a proper place to small nations and inspires them with confidence. The problem must be solved as we go along, step by step. We cannot establish an organization for all time at once. The ultimate purpose must be that the forces of peace and justice will be so established in an international organization that enemy countries will be admitted in due time." The Archbishop disclosed that the Church of England is planning to send representatives to continental Churches for mutual consultation and spiritual fellowship and that plans are under way for giving these Churches material aid in reconstructing themselves. The Anglican Church, he said, will cooperate with the World Council of Churches in reconstruction efforts for European Churches.

He anticipated a visit "before long" of a delegation of Russian Church leaders to England. He also confirmed a report that the Dean of Canterbury, Hewlett Johnson, has been invited to come to Moscow but said the dean's visit will be a personal one and not official for the Anglican Church.

Expressing optimism over prospects for Church union, the Archbishop warned that unity will be a slow process. "The problem of Church reunion remains one of the most important and one of the most difficult confronting the Churches," he explained. "The need for it grows here in England. Cooperation between the Churches has developed tremendously and the kind of atmosphere is growing up between them which makes quiet and careful consideration of the problem of reunion more hopeful than it has ever been. However, one must not expect rapid accomplishment of a task which is fraught with difficulties arising from deeply held principles."

He did not think that a Lambeth conference of the Church can be held before 1947 "and it may be later than that." The last Lambeth meeting was held in 1930, and it has been agreed on all sides, the Archbishop stated, that another must be held at the earliest possible date after the war.

The Archbishop, discussing missionary problems, asserted it is "remarkable" that in the last two years "there has been a very great increase in missionary contributions from the home Church. Missionary work, like that of Church work at home is immensely affected by the shortage of manpower owing to the absence of a vast number of chaplains in the forces. The question of demobilization for them will be difficult, for we must have in mind the needs of both the home Church and the Church overseas."

He concluded by expressing optimism as to the prospects of the Christian religion and the Christian Church. "I think the opportunities are greater, more challenging and more hopeful than for many years. At least everybody knows now that Christianity is not a conventional thing but stands for realities. The evidence of the Churches in the occupied countries and in Germany itself proves that."

MICHIGAN SEEKS LARGE FUND

Detroit: — The diocese of Michigan is to seek $85,000 as a memorial to the late Bishop Page, to be used for clinical training in rural work, college work, labor and ministry to the sick. It was also announced at the convention, meeting at the cathedral January 31-February 1, that the Rev. Donald B. Aldrich, bishop coadjutor elect, had received his release as a navy chaplain and that steps are now being taken to secure the necessary consents to his consecration. The convention went on record unanimously as favoring a state fair employment practice committee, and also without a dissenting vote again came out strongly in favor of union with the Presbyterian Church.

CHURCH IMPERIALISM TO END

Boston: — Imperialism will no more be tolerated from now on in the Church than in business and politics, the Rev. R. H. Stafford, president of the American board for foreign missions, told those attending the opening session of the diocesan school meeting at the cathedral. He said that hereafter the head of a mission will always be a native and that missionaries sent from the parent Church will take his orders from him. He gave it as his opinion that "the principal effect of the war on foreign missions will be to accelerate the emergence of the so-called backward peoples into independence and determination to work out their destiny without outside interference from outside people of European origin."

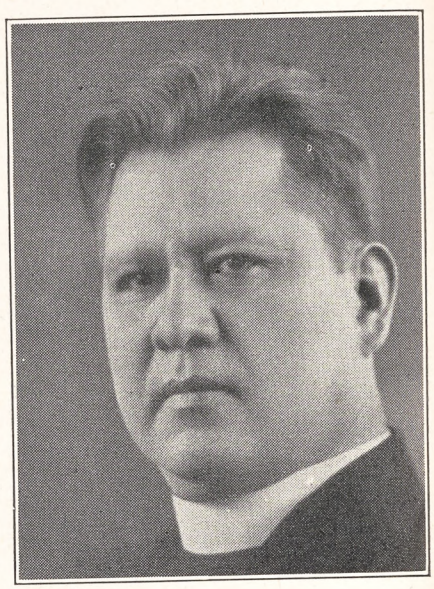
ORTHODOX CHURCH ELECTS ALEXEI AS PATRIARCH

Moscow (By Wireless): — Metropolitan Alexei of Leningrad and Novgorod was elected patriarch of All Russia by unanimous vote here of the general council, or sobor, of the Russian Orthodox Church. He is the thirteenth patriarch in the history of the Church. The 67-year-old former acting patriarch, by the oral vote of delegates representing 44 Russian dioceses, was chosen to succeed the late Patriarch Sergius who died last May, less than nine months after the Russian Church was given formal recognition by the Soviet state. Each of the dioceses was represented by a bishop, priest, and layman. While his election had been generally regarded as a foregone conclusion, Orthodox officials here are particularly pleased by the unanimity shown in the choice of the new patriarch. An elaborate process of reporting on the qualifications and background of voters preceded the election, which was supervised by Archpriest Nikolai Federovich Kolchitsky, administrator of the Moscow patriarchate. Immediately following the election the sobor adopted a resolution extending greetings and expressing loyalty to the new patriarch.

Born Serge Vladimirovitch Simansky in Moscow, Patriarch Alexei comes from a wealthy and educated family noted for its broad European outlook. He is the only high dignitary in the Russian Church who speaks a western language fluently. He has spoken French from childhood and is known for his admiration of English literature and music. Besides gaining a wide reputation as a devoted spiritual pastor of his flock Alexei has played an outstanding part in Church activities during recent years. On March 10, 1941, at the fortieth anniversary of the episcopal consecration of Patriarch Sergius, Alexei was chosen to convey the greetings of all the bishops of the Russian Church. A noted Church historian he was chiefly responsible for determining the courses of study in the newly opened theological school in Moscow. Widely acclaimed for his patriotic efforts during the German siege of Leningrad, Patriarch Alexei received the Leningrad medal for his refusal to leave the city.

CHURCHWOMEN SUPPORT PEACE PROPOSALS

New York: — The united council of Church women announced plans here to rally Protestant churchwomen in support of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. Mrs. George B. Barbour of Cincinnati, chairman, said the council will seek appointment of trained leaders in each local Protestant church to organize discussions of the recent national study conference on the church and a just and durable peace at Cleveland, and the Dumbarton Proposals. In addition, conferences of churchwomen will be held in key population centers of some states, and community training conferences, to which local churches will send delegates will be organized.



Churchwomen are being asked to arrange church suppers on the Dumbarton Oaks theme, special study courses of four to six weeks, and special world order programs for all March meetings of church groups.

CHURCH CONGRESS MEETING

New York:—A regional conference of the Church Congress was held at the General Seminary on February 12th to discuss the Church in a world of travail. Causes of the difficulties confronting us were presented by WITNESS editor Dean Lichtenberger of Newark and the Rev. Harold F. Hohly of Bronxville, N. Y. The doctrine of God as an answer to the world's need was presented by the Rev. Charles W. Lowry of Chevy Chase, Maryland, while the meaning of the Church for the world's travail was presented by Canon C. W. F. Smith of Washington Cathedral and the Rev. W. Norman Pittenger of the General Seminary faculty. The Rev. Elmore McKee, rector of St. George's and the Rev. Gordon Wadhams, rector of the Resurrection, were the co-chairmen of the meeting.

LOS ANGELES HONORS BISHOPS

Los Angeles: — Several anniversaries were celebrated when the convention of the diocese of Los Angeles was held here January 22-24. The diocese was organized 50 years ago: Bishop Stevens was consecrated 25 years ago and Bishop Gooden was consecrated 25 years ago. Archbishop Owen of the Church of England in Canada was a headliner at the convention. In 1894 there were 13 self-supporting parishes, 36 clergymen and 5,500 members. Today: 141 parishes; 158 clergymen; 60,000 members. Lure of sunshine, oranges and Hollywood.

BISHOP BLAIR ROBERTS VISITS MOUNT CARMEL

Mount Carmel: — Bishop Blair Roberts of South Dakota was the preacher at both services at St. Stephen's Church here on January 21 with congregations that filled the church. There was a reception following the evening service at which Bishop Heistand was also present. Joining in the services also were the congregations of Holy Trinity, Centralia, and the Church of the Ascension, Kulpmont. The Rev. DeVere L. Shelmandine is in charge of all three churches.

They Shall Give Account

IN the Backfire section we are printing a letter that has the merit of stating clearly and unequivocally the view which inspires much opposition to both open communion and reunion with a Church like the Presbyterian. Sooner or later this view will have to be either accepted and maintained by the Episcopal Church, or frankly, flatly, and finally repudiated. Part of the Church believes as the author of the letter does; part does not believe it for a moment; while the majority haven't thought much about it or made up their minds one way or the other. The WITNESS has thought a good deal about this matter, and here are our convictions: (1) The Episcopal Church has defined "regular" baptism in the rubric on page 282 of the Prayer Book: it is baptism "with water, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost"—these are "essential parts of baptism." It simply does not do for individuals to set up their private judgment against the Church and offer their own definitions of valid baptism, as the letter does, and say: "The reason their baptisms are irregular is that they are by heretical bodies." That is not the language of the Episcopal Church. Where does the author of the letter get such language?

Two, since when does the Episcopal Church refer to Methodists, Congregationalists, or Presbyterians as "heretical bodies"? Nowhere and never so far as we know has the Anglican Church as a whole or the Episcopal Church in this country made any such affirmation. The language sounds like what you can read in any ten-for-a-penny tract circulated by the Paulists or other trouble-makers within and without the Church of Rome. It simply is not the language—or the thought—of the Episcopal Church.

Three, the statement that confirmation makes a person "a full member of the Church" is contrary to our theology, according to which holy baptism makes a person a member of Christ, a child of God, and an inheritor of the kingdom of heaven. Confirmation is historically the completion of the rite of baptism, but that is not the same thing as saying it makes one a full member of the Church; he is a full member of the Church the moment he is baptized.

Four, the rubric at the end of the confirmation service has nothing to do with non-Episcopalians; it may have been kept there with that idea by some revisers of the Prayer Book; but historically it arose at a time when there were no Protestants anywhere and the regulation simply meant that babies were not to be brought to the altar rail to receive communion.

Five, since the Church does not call members of other Christian Churches "heretics" or their Churches "heretical bodies," we think it is both absurd and extremely bad mannered for any Episcopalian to use such language. It is a very serious thing to call a man a heretic; and yet some of the brethren bandy the term about as if they had no need to back up their libel. Have they never read the words of our Lord in Matthew 12:36? "Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." The trouble with too many of our controversialists is that they have never absorbed either the theology or the spirit of the Anglican Church.

"Quotes"

CHRISTIANITY and democracy! What have they to do with each other? Everything. Here is the way it goes. If you turn to the Bible you discover that from end to end it is concerned with freedom. In the Old Testament the story turns on it—out from Egypt, defense against oppressors, out from Babylon; and interpreting all this history, the words of the great prophets which may be summed up as the mission to preach good tidings to the poor, to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives and the opening of prison to them that are bound. It was with these words that Jesus opened his ministry in his small home town of Nazareth.

The Communion—Keep It Holy

WHOEVER wrote the comment for Maundy Thursday in the 1945 Lenten Forward booklet certainly had a pitifully inadequate and distorted idea of the last supper. In the first place he equates it with "the mass," which it emphatically is not. We had thought that the Protestant Episcopal Church, following the wise guidance of the Anglican Church as it was purified of mediaeval superstitions during the reformation, had advanced far beyond a merely mechanical view of the sacraments. Furthermore we are told, "The priest takes the part of Jesus," and when he blesses the bread and wine, "then (italics ours) in a mysterious way which we cannot understand, but really and truly Jesus comes." If these words mean anything at all they mean, quite crudely, that the celebrant, by some occult manipulation, has the power to summon the Lord Christ! Thus what is ineffably holy is reduced to the level of Aladdin and the genie. We cannot understand how such obscurantist doctrine was permitted to creep into the usually sane teaching of the forward movement and we register emphatic dissent and protest.

But what is perhaps even more deplorable, sacerdotalism, for this is nothing else, is allowed to obscure the desperately needed sacramental teaching of our Church in this tragic era of the world's history. The significance of that first holy communion, the Lord's supper, was that the Son of God imparted his spirit to men—in all its fullness; in all their lives and living. Not at one point; not at a selected moment, but wherever spiritually responsive life is found. This is the glorious hope that we must not lose sight of—that the grace of God awaits in its unrestricted abundance whenever men realize its need and seek it. Let us not presume to try to limit his power by the devices of men.

God and Your Job

By

JOHN GASS
Rector of St. Paul's, Troy, New York

THE Protestant reformers were the first to give popular expression to the Christian conviction that the true relationship between God and a man's job is that of an "earthly calling" or a "divine vocation." The many references in the New Testament to the Christian's "calling" (klesis; Rom. 11:29; Phil. 3:14; Eph. 1:18; 4:1, et al.) are, with the single exception in 1 Cor. 7:20, always spiritual in their usage and refer to the Christian's "calling" out of this world to eternal salvation. In mediaeval Christianity, a Christian's "calling" belonged exclusively to the monastic orders. Only the monks revived the German beruf or the Latin vocatio. But when the two revolutionary truths which the reformers stressed—the universal priesthood of believers and the sanctity of common life —took root in popular thought, they soon flowered into the theological and ethical conviction that the true calling of God was to be realized in man's workaday world.

Until comparatively recent years most Christians were sure that this conviction of our forefathers was true. They believed that a close and intimate relationship existed between God and one's job. Some thought that God's call was so specific that each person's career was blue-printed and mapped-out by the divine hand, including even the smallest details of one's life. But of late this conviction has faded from the popular mind until today it has almost dropped out of popular speech.

Many causes no doubt have brought this about, our machine age, our secular philosophy, our wide-spread humanism, a declining belief in God; but two things as they have affected modern man seem primary. In the first place, the fluctuating conditions of modern industrial life, the ever-recurring problem of unemployment and the extreme division of labor have virtually stripped an "earthly calling" or a "divine vocation" of their meaning for many people.

In the second place modern man has learned that our world is a very complex place in which many forces other than those directly exerted by God — heredity, social environment, physical health, circumstances (how these have affected the youth of today!), sometimes sheer coincidence— all these influence human lives and shape our careers. This has spread far and wide a scepticism as to whether any vital or purposeful relationship exists between God and man's everyday world of toil and labor.

Christianity still insists that such a relationship exists. However, it is plain that if this conviction is to be impressed on the mind of modern man and become operative again in the present-day world, Christianity must restate in ethical principles just what it holds to be the relationship between God and a man's job. That this is imperative is evidenced by the fact that the head authorities of the several Church bodies in England (including the late Archbishop Temple) declared that one of the basic principles for the establishment of an enduring peace was this: "The sense of divine vocation must be restored to man's daily work."

The ethical approach of the Christian religion to this problem is simple and realistic. Three fundamental principles should govern the relationship between God and your job. The first is a statement about God. According to Christian belief God has a spiritual and moral interest in you and in what you are doing. He is interested in your job and what your job is doing to you. Christianity does not say that God has necessarily placed each of us where we are but rather that he takes each of us as we are and where we are and then tries, in and through our jobs, to develop to their fullest stature whatever character values we may possess.

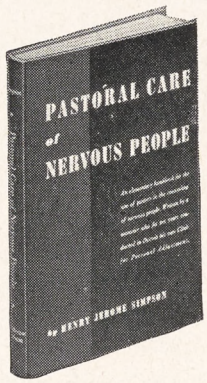
Following and issuing from this is a second ethical principle. In the sight of God one's job is purposeful. Labor is obligatory. Idleness, whether it be that of the "idle rich" or of the "village bum," is sinful. Labor is a moral necessity not only because it is necessary if one is to live but because through work man achieves self-development. Certain character values such as discipline, patience, faithfulness are inherent in any job, and these strengthen, enrich and develop personality. This gives dignity to one's job. This invests all labor with moral worth in the eyes of God and man. The old distinction between the secular and the sacred no longer prevails. Cecily W. Hallack "washing up plates" and praying to the "Lord of all pots and pipkins" to "warm all the kitchen with thy love" and "make me a saint by getting meals" is as spiritually purposeful in her work and as acceptable to God as the pious priest performing solemn ablutions before his high altar.

A THIRD ethical principle is that one's job be of service to one's fellow-men. This is probably the truest test of how morally real the relationship is between God and man's work. It doesn't matter what the kind of work may be. The lawyer who can feel "the end of law is merciful justice and that justice rests upon man's duty to God and to his neighbor;" the teacher in the field of social sciences who tries "to expound the moral code of the Christian as representing the highest code of social relationship and individual behavior;" the professor of classical languages who, because he is privileged to share in the shaping of the ideals of the young, feels "a growing conviction of his divine calling as a teacher;" the clergyman who feels called "to speak in the language of men and interpret to them the loving, creative spirit of God, who is of no age because he belongs to every age;" the doctor whose profession has become to him "a fulfillment of the divine injunction of the great physician to heal the sick;" the carpenter who builds the house, the miner who digs the coal, the butcher, the baker, the candle-stick maker, all who contribute to our interdependent social life, the laborer who looks upon his job as "of service to the community and of benefit to my fellow-man;" these have all discovered the deepest implications of an "earthly calling." They have related their jobs to the purposes of God. They have interpreted them in terms of service to their fellow man. They have lifted them to the high level of a divine vocation.

Obviously these ethical values are more easily realized in some situations than in others. It is a blunt but nevertheless true fact that men labor under social and economic conditions where it is next to impossible for these ethical principles to operate. Where these situations exist — inadequate wages, intolerable industrial conditions in mines or in sweat shops, racial discriminations, insecurity and fear occasioned by seasonal employment — they are a challenge to the conscience of Christian employer, of Christian laborer, of Christian law-maker and of Christian citizen. For the function of Christianity is to proclaim the ethical principles which govern the relationship between God and one's job and then, when it finds conditions which thwart or make impossible the application of these principles, to fight with all its moral power for a "higher and better social order," where these principles can prevail and where "the sense of divine vocation (can be) restored to man's daily life."

To its proclamation of ethical principles Christianity adds a final affirmation of faith. Every man and woman in the world is precious to God. Under present conditions many have not found happiness in their jobs but unhappiness. Many have found frustration and disappointment and not self-realization. To you, to me, to all who may have felt that failure has dogged their steps, the religion of the Carpenter of Nazareth declares that everything has meaning in God's universe and that "nothing walks with aimless feet." Everything honestly done, everything faithfully achieved, seemingly insignificant though it may be, if done in God's name and in the service of mankind is finally caught up, blessed, sanctified and given its place in the fulfillment of God's purposes and plans for His world.



"Therefore, be ye stedfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord."

Questions for Discussion

1. When in Church history did the conviction that one's calling is to serve God in everyday life originate?
2. What are some of the reasons why this idea is less generally held today?
3. What is the effect of unemployment on this belief?
4. Is there purposeful relationship between God and most jobs today?
5. Do you think your Christian character is being developed by your job?
6. What are some of the values that should be developed by your job?
7. Discuss the statement that "men labor under social and economic conditions where it is next to impossible for ethical principles to operate." If so what are some of the conditions?

This Means of Grace

By JOHN S. HIGGINS

"This Means of Grace is an attempt to illuminate, for Anglicans and non-Anglicans, the greatest service in our Prayer Book, the Holy Communion. It goes forth with the prayer that many will find new meanings in the lines and between the lines of our incomparable Liturgy, now tested by English-speaking peoples for almost four centuries." These are the words of the author and they express adequately what this book is about. The better we understand the service of the Holy Communion the better Christians we shall be. Clergymen will find this book a fine teaching medium on the Holy Communion.

And Was Crucified

Meditations for Good Friday on the Seven Last Words

By FRANK DAMROSCH, JR., Rector
St. Paul's Church, Doylestown, Pennsylvania

For the Clergy these meditations will be a real find for preaching purposes. For the Laity, these meditations are fine devotional reading—an excellent preparation for the Queen of Feasts—Easter Day.

In the Introduction the author says: "If we try to empty ourselves of all self-centeredness, if we concentrate all our will, all our feeling upon loving the Jesus whose sufferings we are beholding, as we near the Seven Words there may well come to each of us some special blessing, some particular message, which will seem as though it were spoken especially for us. And in truth it is."

The Sign of the Cross

By R. S. K. SEELEY, D.D.
Dean of Ontario, Provost of Trinity College

DEDICATED TO THE MEMBERS OF THE ROYAL AIR FORCE
This is the Canadian Lenten Book for 1945. The Foreword is by The Most Rev. Derwyn T. Owen, D.D., Primate of All Canada.

The purpose of the book is "to bring the cross out of the realm of theoretical doctrine and make it a living experience for individuals. If we can grasp the great principle of life which Jesus followed out even in His death, and if we can plan our lives in accordance with that principle then we shall grasp the adventure of Christian living and find in it something that calls out all our noblest qualities and that satisfies our highest ideals."

Some of the chapter topics: The Cross and My Neighbour; The Cross and Myself; The Cross and The World Order. Price, $1.6

NERVOUS PEOPLE

WHEN THIS WAR is over and millions now in service return home, there is bound to be an almost insurmountable problem of personal adjustment — the returning man in uniform, the returning woman in uniform, the families themselves. Even now thousands of service men are being released and many clergymen have already experienced pastoral work of a special nature.

The Reverend Henry J. Simpson has written a book for his fellow clergymen—a book which is sorely needed—a book backed by practical and clinical experience—a book which is both a treatise on, and a guide to the care of nervous people.

Questions concerning mental habits, emotional life, home training, the ideals, the aims and purposes of life, fears, anxieties, confusion over the meaning of life and religion—all of these come within the field of pastoral work. And the Pastor is in a unique position to deal with people in need of care along these lines. Price, $2.25

Prayer and the Service of God

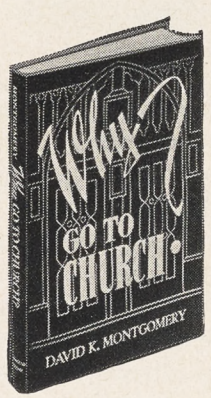
By DANIEL JENKINS

A modern book which faces some of the questions and difficulties which present themselves to those who find it hard to maintain the life of prayer in the stress and uncertainty of this grim and confused twentieth century.

CHAPTER TOPICS ARE: Why do we find Prayer so Difficult Today?; The Dimension in Which Prayer Exists; Prayer and Faith; God's Will and Our Prayers; God's Ways of Answering Prayer; Prayer and the Bible; Prayer and the Church; Does it Matter Whether We Say Our Prayers?

" . . . people have increasingly lost touch with the real world where prayer matters and with it have lost that unity of personality, that spiritual integration, which is the mark of true manhood."—Daniel Jenkins. Price, $1.50

Why Go To Church?



By

DAVID K. MONTGOMERY

Rector, St. Peter's Church,
Morristown, N. J.

A Book for Laymen. Why go to Church is a perennial topic and the Reverend David K. Montgomery has written a very enlightening book on this topic. We go to church but for one reason—to Worship. "To worship means to give the best you have, and the best you are, to the best you know."

Many people, says the author, lack reality in their church-going and the reason is that the Holy Spirit has not penetrated their lives. You will find this book modern in the sense that it discusses men and women of today—their relationship to one another and their relationship to God.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

ATTENTION: CANON 23

IN THE October 26th issue of THE WITNESS the suggestion was made in our column that the Church should not only assist her musical ministers in obtaining their education in the technical requirements of their art, but should also provide them with a modicum of theological and liturgical instruction. Though it is true that no service of our Prayer Book requires the assistance of musical expression, it is equally true that when music is employed in worship it is not an extraneous addition. It must carry the emotion of worship, not simply adorn it. Thus the relation of music to the liturgical text becomes intimate, and all those who are responsible for the conduct of common worship need to understand how music and ritual may fittingly "with one mind and one mouth" glorify God. The choral service is, too, when historically considered, the norm of Christian liturgical practice, as it was of Judaism. "He hath put a new song in my mouth," is a perfect definition of the manner of worship of the redeemed. A "said service" is not only a compromise, it is unnatural.

Thus, just as the church musician needs to know the meaning of the liturgy and its theological basis, so the clergy need to know how the worship of the Church is best rendered by seemly and uplifting song. The canon law of our Church has long recognized this and is most explicit about the clergy's responsibility for the music of our services. The present canon, No. 23, goes back to the General Convention of 1874, and prior to that time to a joint resolution of the Convention of 1832. It concerns more than the "hiring and firing" of choirmasters and organists. It gives the clergy both authority and responsibility "to give order concerning the tunes to be sung," and adds that it is their "especial duty to suppress all light and unseemly music, and all irreverence in the performance."

It might be thought that this long-standing and explicit directive would have had more effect upon our theological seminaries so that the men trained by them would know enough about music to give order about tunes and promote seemly music with intelligence and competence. Yet, to my knowledge, only one of our seminaries has anything like an adequate program of instruction in music, and a few of them have almost no provision or requirement in this field. The following suggestions are given as a minimum standard for the clergy so that they might be equipped in some measure to fulfill the obligation which the Church places upon them as ministers of common worship:

1. Know how to read music sufficiently well so that one can sing a given melody or "part" of a hymn or anthem. One does not have to be able to perform on a musical instrument to do this. Plainsong notation as well as the more modern system of printing music should be learned. Before making up your mind that you are "tone-deaf" consult a good singing master.

2. Be acquainted with the technical terminology of music so as to be able to read intelligently a handbook on church music (there are many ex-

THE SANCTUARY

conducted by W. M. Weber

ALMIGHTY GOD, Thou alone holdest rightful rule over the kingdoms of the world, and without thy favor we are but dust that builds on dust. As we, the people of these United States, entrust the powers of government to those whom we have chosen, enable us to dedicate them, and to rededicate ourselves, to the tasks to which Thou hast called us.

Keep us ever mindful of the sacrifices we ask of those who give their lives on our behalf; keep us mindful of the heritage of good or of ill which we shall leave to our children and to our children's children. Hold these thy servants, and us, steadfastly faithful to the maintenance of responsible liberty for all, and equal justice under law.

For the sake of this people and of all peoples, lift those who bear authority among us above the claims of class, the prejudices of race, the seeking of party advantage, and make them in truth the resolute servants of the common good. And in these days of perplexity and pain, forbid that we shall be content with any peace save that of a world at unity with itself where all nations in mutual trust may bring their glory unto thy kingdom. Hear us, O Father, and grant our prayer for the honor of thy Holy Name. Amen.

3. Be able to order a choral service accurately, whether of the Eucharist or the Daily Offices.

4. Have a general knowledge of the history of church music, so as to be able to distinguish various styles and forms and to judge their appropriateness to the liturgical offices of our Church.

5. Develop a sensitiveness to tunes and anthems with a view to testing their fitness in expressing the feeling of the texts to which they are set. This will take practice, as does any cultivation of taste. But the great offense of much so-called "church music" is its failure to enhance the meaning of sacred words.

6. Learn the various systems of pointing of psalms and canticles for chanting, both to plainsong psalm-tones and to Anglican chant. The clergy should not depend on the choirmaster in this matter, for the essential thing is the text that is to be pointed.

7. Know the Hymnal as thoroughly as the Bible or Prayer Book.

8. Keep oneself informed. For example, borrow your organist's musical periodical, and lend him in turn your copy of THE WITNESS.

THE BIBLE AND THE COMMON READER. By Mary Ellen Chase. The Macmillan Company, $2.50.

Here is a study of the Bible which the parish parson can put into the hands of his people without apology. The Author, who is Professor of English at Smith College, shares with her readers her enthusiasm for the Bible and stirs them to fresh adventures in this treasure house of our faith and culture. While using the historical approach and the results of modern criticism she still remains within the capacity of the common reader. The material for the book is the product of Dr. Chase's experience in teaching the literature of the Bible and gives abundant proof of her knowledge and love of her subject.

SOLDIERS' BIBLES THROUGH THREE CENTURIES. By Harold R. Willoughby. University of Chicago Press, $1.00.

A fascinating account written by an expert in the history of the English Bible, and giving at the end a photographic reprint of The Souldiers' Pocket Bible of the days of Cromwell (1643). Pocket Bibles have been published repeatedly in times of war. One of the most astonishing things is the way in which the old Cromwellian Pocket Bible was reprinted time and again—down to the Boer War, the Spanish American War, and even World War I. There was once an Anglican edition in which the Authorized Version took the place of the Genevan, and which had sections on the duties of the soldier to his king; but it was the old original one edited by Edmund Calamy which has survived, with all its array of Scripture passages meant to support the morale and comfort the soul of the warrior. 125 passages are quoted from the Bible—all but seven are from the Old Testament, and none from the Apocrypha! On the whole I am inclined to think that our "Prayer Book for Soldiers and Sailors" is a vast improvement over the old fashioned Souldiers' Bible.

Meaning of Sorrow

By

GEORGE I. HILLER
Rector of Trinity Church, Miami

WHY should I feel the weight of sorrow when so many around us do not seem to have a care? One hears such questioning continually and in these times increasingly so. Perhaps it seems callous to say "Thank God you have the capacity to suffer," yet, after all, is that not what me mean? Sorrow is possible only for those who love. Grief only for those who have dear ones. A sense of loss is only for those who have been blessed with friends. Had you lived entirely apart, or by yourself you would not have the capacity to sorrow. All of our joy, all of our life is in association, fellowship, and love. Out of these same relationships come all of our responsibility, all of our duties, and incidentally, all of our sorrows. In other words in the fullness of our lives is the measure of responsibility and the capacity of our suffering.

Do not ask, how or why should this happen to me? Rather thank God for all that has gone before, for only thus could it happen. Sorrow is the price we pay for love, and a fullness of life; the only way we could escape all sorrow would be never to have loved at all.

Church Leaders Meet To Plan For Post-War Needs

Make Elaborate Plans to Aid the Churches Of Asia with Wide Expansion of Vital Work

Edited by W. B. Spofford

New York:—Nearly fifty leaders of eighteen denominations conferred here with representatives of government and inter-government relief agencies in a two day session devoted to study of post-war needs in Burma, Malaya, Netherlands Indies, Philippines, Indo-China, Thailand, Korea, and Japan. The meeting was sponsored by the Church committee on relief in Asia.

Among various phases of rehabilitation considered were medical services, agricultural projects, child welfare, social work, and assistance in restoring home and family life and normal economic conditions. It was stressed that the program, of one or two years' duration, would be "mainly a social welfare program carried on in the spirit of the Christian witness," rather than emergency relief of reconstruction "which will be a long-term program of social engineering."

According to Director Fred Atkins Moore, the Church committee seeks a 1944-45 budget of $175,000. In addition $500,000 is sought for China and $75,000 for India. In 1945-46, a much larger fund will be required and appeals will be made to more than forty denominations cooperating with the committee.

In the early period after liberation, only experienced missionaries familiar with the language of these countries will be welcomed. Entry will be determined by the national governments and may vary from country to country. It was estimated that 359 Protestant missionaries will be available for assignment to the eight East Asia countries in the first year after their liberation. The conference was told that UNRRA would welcome the aid of Christian workers.

The conference recommended intensive retraining courses for missionaries between the ages of 35 and 60, and urged regional study courses for groups of missionaries in various parts of the United States.

It was felt by the Church leaders that rehabilitation activities being worked out by Christian agencies should enlist the cooperation and possibly the leadership of national Christians in each country. They also urged that Church programs for these countries be made in consultation with European mission leaders.

Agricultural and rural rehabilitation will probably be the first emphasis of the Christian missions program, since in all the countries except Japan and Malaya the rural population is larger than the urban. Seed, livestock and implements to start immediate planting will be a basic need. A child welfare program will begin with provisions for the temporary care of war orphans and the eventual placing of these children in permanent homes. Home and family rehabilitation will involve aid in locating and reuniting members of families separated by war and migration, giving family counsel and spiritual leadership, reestablishing family economic bases and encouraging family and community activities. Economic rehabilitation will require the granting of loans to small businessmen and seed and cash loans to individuals and group farmers.

The church-aided medical program will be carried out on a widespread and long-range plan.

Brotherhood Month

Philadelphia:—Brotherhood is being stressed this month at Christ Church here which is celebrating its 250th anniversary. It was in this church that members of the colonial congress came to pray after signing the Declaration of Independence; it was here that the first convention of the Church was held; and it was here that George Washington, Betsy Ross and Benjamin Franklin worshipped. The anniversary is to be celebrated throughout the year, with the emphasis on brotherhood at the opening. On February 7th Lewis Cutler spoke of Jewish-Gentile relations; on the 9th the men of the parish went to a nearby synagogue to hear Dr. W. H. Fineshriber; on the 11th Rector Felix Kloman exchanged pulpits with the Rev. William D. Turner, Negro rector of St. Augustine's.

Orthodox World Council

Moscow (By Wireless): — Formation of a world council of Orthodox Churches was proposed by Metropolitan Benjamin, exarch of the Moscow patriarchate in America and the Aleutian Islands, in an address before the general council, or sobor, of the Russian Orthodox Church here. Hitherto discussed only privately the plan was given its first public airing by Metropolitan Benjamin with the approval of Alexei, patriarch of the Russian Church. The plan is based on a suggestion of the late Patriarch Sergius that a permanent representative council for all Orthodoxy, or, at least, for large regional areas, be set up. Patriarch Sergius made the proposal in refuting claims of the Vatican that Rome is the center of Christian unity and authority.

Human Rights

New York:—Presiding Bishop Tucker and Bishop Oldham of Albany were among the 150 leading churchmen, business men and civic leaders to sign a statement calling for a commission in human rights and fundamental freedoms to be set up as a part of the United Nations organization. The statement was presented over a radio system by John W. Davis former ambassador to Great Britain. Others to sign were Bishop Oxnam of the Methodist Church; Henry Sloane Coffin of Union Seminary; Samuel Cavert of the Federal Council of Churches; John Foster Dulles, chairman of the commission for a just and durable peace.

Church Conventions Cancelled

New York:—Scheduled meetings and conventions of churches are being cancelled or indefinitely postponed in order to cooperate with the war effort. Among those cancelled are the annual meeting of the International Council of Religious Education; the associated Church press; Methodist convention in Texas; Baptist convention in North Carolina; the annual ministers week at Chicago theological school.

Draft Chaplains

Albany, N. Y.:—Drafting of clergymen as chaplains to the armed forces was proposed by Wilbur T. Clemens, general secretary of the New York state council of churches at the council's annual meeting here. "The demand for chaplains is so acute in our armed forces and the opportunity for Christian service there is so important," he said, "that I am in favor of the drafting of clergymen, as there may be of nurses, to meet the appalling needs of the boys in the service."

Clemens added that "there can be little excuse for keeping three or four husky young ministers in a town of from 500 to 800 persons, when one or two could adequately carry on the work."

South Florida Elects

Orlando:—The Rev. Henry Irving Louttit, formerly rector of Holy Trinity, West Palm Beach, but now an army chaplain, was elected suffragan bishop of South Florida on February 7th. Others nominated were the Rev. P. S. Lander of Rosemont, Pa.; the Rev. William Moses of Lakeland, Fla.; the Rev. Edgar L. Pennington of Miami, now an army chaplain; the Rev. Rex B. Wilke of Coconut Grove and the Rev. Thorne Sparkman of Chattanooga. Mr. Louttit, who is now in an army hospital recovering from sickness incurred in the south Pacific, was elected on the 2nd ballot.

Making Hay

Rome (By Wireless):—The Vatican newspaper stressed the statement made here by Harry Hopkins to newspaper men that it would be absolutely contrary to U. S. interests to permit a liberated country to choose a totalitarian government. The importance attached to this statement by the paper is viewed here as revealing the Vatican's apprehension that communism may gain control in Italy and its hope that the U. S. will help prevent such a development.

Resistance in Norway

Stockholm (By Wireless):—Pastor Nils Hov of Aafjord is among 30 well-known Norwegian hostages who have been removed from the Grini concentration camp to Gestapo headquarters in Oslo as "protection" against Allied air attacks. Meanwhile rebel Pastor Thomle has been sent to a concentration camp near Oslo for refusing to conduct public funeral services for a young Quislingite killed in a bombing raid on the Gestapo headquarters during New Year's eve. The clergyman expressed willingness to conduct private services, but insisted that if a public funeral was arranged it should be conducted by a clergyman "more in harmony with the youth's political views." The case was referred to puppet Premier Vidkun Quisling, who immediately deposed the pastor and ordered him banished to Holgoeya Island where many other Norwegian ministers are being held in virtual internment. After another hearing however the clergyman was ordered sent to the concentration camp. In Bygland, Pastor Bolling has refused to pay a fine of $300 for refusing to display a Nazi flag at his parsonage when ordered to do so. The matter has been brought to the attention of the Quisling Church department by local police who are apparently undecided whether or not to imprison the clergyman.

World Federation

Columbus, Ohio:—Participation of the United States in "a commonwealth of nations to be known as the federation of the world" was advocated by the Ohio pastors' conference here, and President Roosevelt was urged to "initiate the procedure necessary to formulated a constitution for the federation of the world, which shall be submitted to each nation for its ratification."

The conference also recorded its "deep concern that, in term of a just and durable peace for the world, there shall be guarantees of religious liberty throughout the world in which every man and every group shall be free to worship God according to the dictates of conscience and propagate religions without interference by any political or ecclesiastical authority." People of all nations, and of the United States particularly, were called upon to "enact such legislation and develop such atti-

The Presiding Bishop's Book for Lent

Earth Might Be Fair

By Richard S. Emrich

"Dr. Emrich has struck at the root of the human problem—that man is eternally trying to place himself in the position of God. There is, however, a constant hunger on man's part for something which neither his own nature nor his environment can supply. This can only be answered by God Himself, since God planted it in the human heart. The book is practical since it contains solid theology as well as the human touch with the man on the street."

tudes as actually to assure to every person complete political, social, and economic justice without regard to color, race, or creed."

The conference endorsed establishment of a permanent fair employment practice committee, and urged postponement of Congressional action on peacetime military conscription until the end of the war in Europe and the Pacific.

Among those to address the conference was Episcopalian Francis B. Sayre, the diplomatic adviser to the director general of UNRRA.

Communist Speaks

Paris (By Wireless):—"With Engels, I've always considered it stupid to declare war on religion." This statement was made here by Maurice Thorez, French communist leader, in an interview with a representative of the Catholic weekly, Temps Present.

"Marx and Engels always took into account spiritual ideals and problems," Thorez claimed. "The evolution which has taken place in Russia is not the work of Soviet leaders but of the Orthodox clergy," he added. "The Soviet authorities have always recognized absolute liberty of the denominations, which is written in the constitution of the U. S. S. R. But the important thing is that the Orthodox clergy—first hostile to the revolution—frankly rallied to it. As for Catholics, there have always been Catholic priests in Leningrad and Moscow."

French Communists, Thorez said, are "partisans of liberty of conscience."

Louisiana Convention

Baton Rouge:—The most important action taken at the convention of Louisiana, meeting here January 24-25, was the decision to raise $250,000 this year to enlarge the diocesan program. Addressing the convention were Bishop Clingman of Kentucky and Mr. Lewis B. Franklin, treasurer of the National Council.

Woman Suffrage

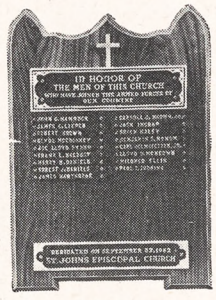
Rome (by wireless):—Fear that votes for women may increase the power of the Roman Catholic Church in Italy is seen behind disagreements between the Christian democratic party and left-wing groups as to how far political rights for women should extend. It should be made clear however that no political party has opposed the campaign.

The Catholic viewpoint, expressed by Alcide de Gaspari, Christian democratic leader and foreign minister in the Bonomi government, is such that it would restrict women to voting only. Gaspari stated that woman suffrage "would bring greater idealism into politics." Left-wing leader Humberto Calosso insists that women need more than the vote or they will "just follow their husbands." He favors legislation under which municipal councils would have one woman representative in every ten. The election of a woman in every village, he states, would be enough "to revitalize all others, making them immediately more conscious of their political and social responsibilities."

Need Chaplains

London (by wireless):—Chaplains committee of the Church of Scotland has urged young ministers to volunteer as chaplains, reporting a casualty rate of 10 per cent killed or wounded among clergymen in the armed forces.

Thanksgiving Service



Paris (by wireless):—Assurance that French Jews will cooperate in common reconstruction efforts was given by Dr. Julien Weill, chief Rabbi of Paris, at thanksgiving services here for the liberation of France. "We think, above all," he said, "of our country and its glorious renaissance. The best forces of the nation are now coming forward to help its reestablishment. Our fellow Jews will participate in the common effort for the reconstruction of a more beautiful, strong, and disciplined France, enjoying fully its essential liberties, and worthy of the place it will occupy once more in the vanguard of civilization." Also a speaker at the ceremony was Jewish Chaplain Judah Nadich of the U. S. army, who said, "Our aim is that death of all the martyrs and soldiers, and the suffering of all oppressed peoples shall give birth to a new life, a new world where real brotherhood shall reign among men."

Urge Unity

London (by wireless):—Greater unity among Free Churches was urged here in a manifesto issued by a group of non-Anglican chaplains attached to the royal air force. Drawn up at a series of conferences, the manifesto called on Free Churchmen to "sink denominationalism." The chaplains asserted that they had found a unity and fellowship in their ministry in the RAF that they did not wish to lose in denominationalism after the war.

The manifesto stated: "The men and women we have served are folk we hope will return to the churches and during their service careers denominational differences have not obtruded. Two practical examples of this are: we have ministered to folk of all our churches irrespective of their denomination, and have been accepted by them as their chaplains; and we have prepared for membership of churches other than our own and have administered the sacrament. It is our opinion, based on experience, that the large number of men and women at present uncommitted to any open profession of Christian faith are with us in the struggle for a better world order founded on the Christian way of life. We are convinced that a united Free Church is likely to appeal to such uncommitted folk as denominational religion will not do. We are further convinced that in the Free Church tradition the average man finds a religious counterpart in his democratic ideal of human life."

Pastor in Norway

Stockholm (by wireless)—American-born Dean Arne Fjellbu, one of the Norwegian Lutheran Church's most militant oponents of Naziism, has been designated by the Norwegian government-in-exile as bishop of the liberated province of Finnmark in northern Norway.

Dean Fjellblu is the son of an Iowa clergyman. He completed his theological studies in Norway, and took post-graduate courses in Berlin and Heidelberg. He has had a long and bitter career of steadfast opposition to the Quisling government, sprinkled with numerous arrests and exiles. Important tasks now await him on the northern tip of Norway, liberated by the Red Army last autumn. He must provide church services for several localities, organize the chaplaincy for Norwegian troops that have been sent there and minister to the people who have long been without a spiritual leader.

A Good Year

Miami, Fla.:—The Church of the Holy Cross where the Rev. G. W. Gasque is rector now has prayer partners for the 232 service men and women. There has also been organized a credit union through which members can borrow, especially service men who may need assistance. The parish also reports the completion of a comprehensive youth program; improvement of buildings and grounds; the liquidation of an old debt; the purchase for cash of eight lots and the investment of $5,500 in bonds as the beginning of a fund for post war buildings. There was also a satisfactory bank balance at the end of the year. Meanwhile there were 63 baptisms and 54 confirmations during 1944 and the communicant list increased from 1,033 to 1,396.

Kindly discontinue our subscription. Reason: we no longer think THE WITNESS is a fair and unbiased paper but an organ of decidedly one-sided political propaganda. It is simply not our idea of a Christian, much less a Church, magazine.

MRS. G. V. T.

I must ask you please to discontinue sending THE WITNESS even though I have taken the magazine for a good many years. I have always found it stimulating and helpful but my husband gets so upset by some of the articles that it will be better if he does not read the paper. The labor number for instance made him furious. I know little about such things but he insisted that all the contributors were communists and probably atheists and that they undoubtedly want to overthrow our system of free enterprise.

ANSWER: As stated in the number, page nineteen, every single contributor to the labor number has definite church connections. We have received many letters about the number with all but two or three of them congratulating us for bringing it out. We have also received many orders for extra copies but we are obliged to say that the supply is now exhausted.

CAMERON PLUMMNER
Layman of Mobile, Alabama

It is all well for a clergyman to oblige a celebrant to offer him the blessed elements, where "non-communicating mass" is being foisted on the public, but few laymen would care or even dare to enter the sanctuary during a celebration of the holy communion and insist upon being offered the elements. The laymen are well trained, and mis-trained, to the concept that the sanctuary is reserved for the hallowed feet of the clergy, the sexton, the altar boys and the ladies of the altar guild. There is too much sacerdotalism practiced and taught in our catholic Church. The church, the sanctuary included, is the spiritual property of all devout Christians, lay or clerical. So too are the blessed elements, which are so often refused to them by fanatical ceremonialists.

In my own diocese laymen are instructed by the bishop not to place alms upon the holy table when lay-reading, which has resulted occasionally in the ludicrous practice that an altar boy took the basin from the lay-reader's hands and went with it to the high altar. In Atlanta recently I walked out as unobtrusively as possible from a service where a ceremonialist from "way back" (about 1066 A.D., I'd say) in the cathedral church, practicing instruction supposedly, placed the host on each communicant's extended tongue. This seemed to be so utterly unsanitary and revolting that I could not bring myself to participate. What has become of the rubric which requires that the chalice be delivered into the hands of the people? These are old questions—but they need to be asked again and again and again—with love and affection, and not in any spirit of contentiousness.

H. J. MAINWARING
Layman of Wollaston, Mass.

The Rev. Malcolm E. Taylor (Dec. 28) appears to run counter to the Church and the Book of Common Prayer in criticizing a priest "who does not like to have baptized members of non-Anglican communions receive holy communion in his church." The answer to his question, "Does the Church teach that holy communion is a Christ-ordained way whereby a person made a member of Christ in baptism, receiving faithfully, renews his baptismal unity with Christ, or does it not teach this?" he answers rightly, "Yes." But he misses the nub of his own query, for "receiving faithfully" is the point.

The Church teaches nothing about Methodists, Congregationalists, or Presbyterians or their communions; those terms are not found in her formularies. Irregularity of baptism is no trifle. The reason their baptisms are irregular is that they are by heretical bodies which in faith and practice, reject one or more truths of the Catholic faith.

We may ask, "Does 'faithfully receiving' require loyalty to the Church and faith in her teaching, or does it not?" Mr. Taylor admits such persons are not loyal to the Church, do not intend to do as she wishes nor what she expects of her loyal members. They "do not wish"—are not "ready and desirous to be confirmed."

Dennen, in his Introduction to the Prayer Book, says: "Confirmation is always performed by the bishop, which, by making the person confirmed a full member of the Church, gives him all the privileges of membership, the greatest of which is to receive holy communion."

Boss, in The Prayer Book Reason Why, says: "How then may we regard confirmation?" And he answers, "As the door admitting us to the lord's supper which is the highest privilege and duty of every Christian believer." As Bishop A. C. A. Hall said, it would be preposterous if outsiders "whose baptism, if valid, is irregular, and whose teaching has been defective, were to be granted admission to the full privileges and the holiest mysteries of the Church, with less preparation than those who have been trained in her ways."

The Church herself, through successive revisions of the Book of Common Prayer, has purposely, logically, and reasonably retained the rubric at the end of the confirmation office:—"And there shall none be admitted to the holy communion until such time as he be confirmed or be ready and desirous to be confirmed." She would be unjust in the extreme to admit heretics to the holy communion while shutting out her own faithful children. Those who would loyally and "faithfully" receive at her altars must loyally and faithfully submit to her discipline and believe her doctrine.

The priest, the Prayer Book, and the Church—these three agree.

THAT'S OUR CHURCH

By THE REVEREND VERNON MCMASTER

M.A., S.T.D., Secretary for Administration, National Council's Division of Christian Education, Protestant Episcopal Church in the U. S. A.

Here is the one book that answers your children's and every young communicant's questions about your church! An interesting, absorbing story that tells of the history, traditions and workings of the Protestant Episcopal Church, told with a charming simplicity children will understand and love. THAT'S OUR CHURCH is the exciting story of Jim and Ruth Davis, typical American children, flushed with the natural enthusiasm and curiosity of youth. It will give you and your children a new and refreshing picture of ritual procedure, history, traditions, background and other vital essentials. Just Published! $2.00

Chaplain Joe Moore Organizes South Pacific Parish

A Plainfield Soldier Writes of Attending Service with Natives Formerly Head-Hunters

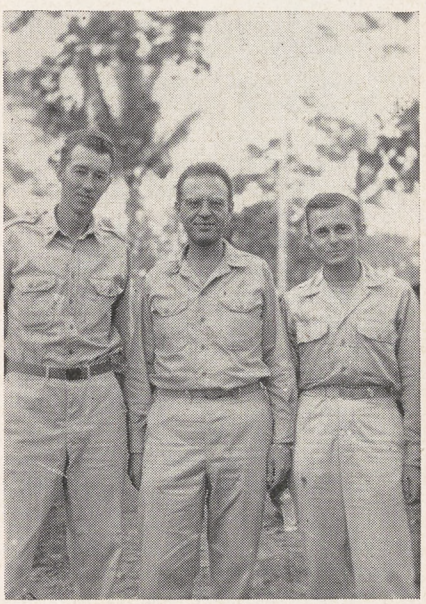
By W. B. Spofford

Southwest Pacific: — The parish of St. Michael's, the Church of the Soldiers, has been organized somewhere in this war area and the Rev. Joseph G. Moore, now a chaplain and formerly the rector at Evansville, Indiana, is the first rector. Joe Moore, who entered the service soon after Pearl Harbor, was prior to that active in promoting the Malvern Movement as a part of the program of the Church League for Industrial Democracy.

The chaplain called together a number of Episcopalians serving in his outfit and pointed out to them the need to keep fellowship with one another and to support the work of the Church wherever they happened to be. Everyone agreed and so they immediately organized an unofficial parish. Corp. Paul Quinn, formerly a member of Moore's parish, was elected secretary of the vestry; Major Conrad B. Cleveland of Spartanburg, S. C. and Captain Samuel L. Reid of Charleston, S. C. were elected wardens, and the following were elected vestrymen: Pfc. Sampson O. Miller of Austin, Texas; Lt. Alfred R. Schaeppi of St. Paul, Minn.; Capt. Lesene Smith of Spartanburg, S. C.; and Captain John Fawcett of Savannah, Ga.

Announcements of all services are published throughout the area, advertisements are run in post papers, announcements are made over the radio. That members of Orthodox Churches were invited to full membership in the newly organized parish was immediately stressed.

Chaplain Moore was elected as rector by regular action of the vestry, with the minutes of the first meeting stating very specifically that "the salary of the rector shall be determined solely by the U. S. army."



Those who know Joe Moore were not surprised to read in the parish minutes that one of his first official acts was to call all his "parishioners" together for a six-hour picnic which was held immediately after church the first Sunday.

Another chaplain to be heard from from this area is Chaplain Bertram L. Smith, who had the good sense to shorten his name from Bertram Leon Burgueoine Smith at the time of his ordination back in the early twenties. He entered the chaplaincy from Christ Church, Dallas, Texas, in 1940. He too writes of churches in the Pacific area, giving description of the resources shown by chaplains in the erection of houses of worship. "One of the most notable things in the army," he writes, "is the construction of chapels. Rarely is there a bivouac area without a chapel and often it is the most attractive building in the area. This bespeaks the interest and cooperation of commanding officers, chaplains, officers and men. Artists and artisans contribute their talents and skills. Isn't it also indicative of the realization of the basic need for spiritual help and divine guidance?

"These chapels are of all types and kinds. Don't underrate the imagination and vision of our chaplains. From a few strips of ply wood, pots of paint, strips of canvas, they envision a fitting place of worship — and, behold, it becomes a reality! And there is always some soldier who is skilled in mixing colors, or drawing designs, or using materials in a new manner. These men are masters of improvisation. As a result an attractive chapel is built and almost by magic it would seem at times. It is the white magic of the mystical devotion of men of God consecrated to creative activity for the spread of his kingdom.

"We could hope for better attendance at the services held in these chapels. True! But even if the services are not attended, these chapels are symbols of the things of the Spirit, and constant reminders of the presence and love of God. The men are proud of their chapels and want them."

That it is not only chaplains who are interested in worship is attested to by a letter received by the Rev. Harry J. Knickle, rector of Grace Church, Plainfield, N. J. from a parishioner, Lt. Henry G. Morse, a bombardier also serving in the South Pacific. He tells of attending service in a wooden chapel that was made entirely by the bomb group with which he serves. "The altar," he wrote his rector, "is lined and decorated with white parachute silk and the flowers are kept in polished 75 M.M. dull casings. We have an organ and an excellent choir and the service is fully as impressive as any I have ever attended. This morning some fifty natives from Java, New Guinea, Celebes, Ceram and the Halmaheras (Protestants) were our guests. They sang a number of hymns for us in native dialect, played wooden, homemade flutes and finally led us in the last hymn. This seemed strange and miraculous way out here in the jungle to hear these primitive people showing us their belief in Christianity. I wish you could have seen the faces of the boys in our squadron when they finished. There in a small crude chapel, between infantry artillery fire on Japs outside our perimeter and the roar of our bombers taking off to bomb Ceram, thousand of miles from our small white settlements, these hymns coming from men who until a short time ago were parts of head-hunting tribes in the desert jungles of the world — I tell you, sir, I will never forget that as long as I live.

Capt. Lesene Smith of the Advent, Spartanburg, S. C., a vestryman; Chaplain Joe Moore, the rector; Major Conrad B. Cleveland of the Advent, Spartanburg, senior warden of the parish of St. Michael's in the southwest Pacific

"When someone complains to you of the hardships of believing in God and Christianity, tell them of these savages living in squalor and poverty with nothing but danger, filth, dreariness and desolation year in and year out. Yet they don't seem to have much trouble keeping faith in Christianity and they don't complain or pity themselves for all that. In comparison, our problems don't exist and our lives are a bowl of cherries!!

"That's quite a lecture — guess I must be in a philosophical mood. At any rate, it will give you an idea of our army chaplains and services. It has been said that proximity to death makes Christians out of all men, but I believe it's not the danger involved, but the realization all of a sudden of your own puny part in the world and of the vastness of space around you. If all of this sounds a little balmy, mark it up to over-exertion from digging fox holes. We finally hacked out 5 feet of jungles and constructed a staunch if not elaborate shelter. If post-war plans include ditch digging, I'll be a shining success!"

CURRENT PROBLEMS PRESENTED

Jamaica, N. Y.:—A university of life, sponsored this Lent by the ministers association here, opened Sunday the 18th and continues for five Sunday afternoons. The adult section deals with marriage, sex education of children, understanding children, and that time-honored topic, "keeping up with the Joneses." There is another section for young people of high school age and up to twenty-one, dealing with "bringing up ourselves," "controlling our parents," "signposts to love," "choosing a mate," with the final session a question period, with one division for boys and the other for girls. All of the lecturers are topflight people in education and the social services. The meetings are all held at the parish house of Grace Church where the Rev. Joseph Titus, WITNESS editor, is rector.

RACE RELATIONS SUNDAY

Lancaster, Pa.:—Chaplain P. C. Williams, a major who is serving the troops at Indiantown Gap, was the preacher on February 11th at St. James' Church here where the Rev. Robert C. Batchelder is rector. The junior choir of the Bethel African Methodist Church joined with the choir of St. James' in special music and the Rev. E. S. Dennis, pastor of the Methodist congregation assisted Mr. Batchelder in the service. The service was largely attended by members of both congregations.

UNITY AND PEACE STRESSED

Cleveland:—Unity with the Presbyterian Church and support of the Dumbarton Oaks peace proposals were emphasized at the convention of the diocese of Ohio, meeting at the cathedral February 6th. Two leading Presbyterians, the Rev. Herman Klahr, moderator of the local Presbytery, and the Rev. Philip S. Bird, chairman of the Presbyterian committee on approaches to unity, addressed the convention. Dean Emerson reported on the recent national conference of the peace commission of the Federal Council of Churches, with Bishop Tucker authorized by the convention to appoint a committee to stimulate discussion of the proposals throughout the diocese.

NEW ECUMENICAL CENTER TO PUSH REUNION

London (by wireless):—St. Basil's House has been opened here as an ecumenical center to further reunion of Eastern Orthodox and Western churches. It will be operated under joint auspices of the Fellowship of St. Alban and St. Sergius and the Student Christian Movement. The building is equipped with an Eastern Orthodox chapel and contains a library and reading room, and rooms for meetings and lectures. In addition to the staff's living quarters, accommodations will be provided for theologians and scholarship students interested in problems of Church reunion.

NEW MOSCOW PATRIARCH TO VISIT GREAT BRITAIN

London:—The Archbishop of Canterbury has asked Metropolitan Alexei, newly enthroned Russian Patriarch, to accompany other Orthodox dignitaries invited here as guests of the Church of England.

V-BOMB KILLS CHURCHMEN

London:—Rev. William T. Elmslie, general secretary of the Presbyterian Church in England, and secretary of the British Council of Churches' committee on reconstruction of Christian institutions in Europe, was among those killed when a V-bomb damaged a church hall in Southern England. Other officials killed were: W. H. Wright, Rev. T. W. Douglas, W. T. Stubbs and R. H. Tribe.

The Church of St. Michael was built largely by the sort of natives described by Lt. Henry Morse

POLISH CATHEDRAL DESTROYED

Warsaw (by wireless):—Historic St. John's Cathedral, Warsaw's oldest church, was among the many ecclesiastical buildings destroyed during the German occupation of the Polish capital. All that remains intact is a plaque recording outstanding events in the Cathedral's history. St. John's was built in the 13th century, enlarged in 1390, raised to the dignity of a collegiate church in 1406, and consecrated as a cathedral in 1791. In 1339, a Papal tribunal met in the church to decide a dispute between the Polish kings and the Crusaders. The kings of Poland were crowned in St. John's, and in 1791 delegates met there to sign the Polish constitution. The first president of the independent Polish republic was buried in the crypt, where many valuable relics, including the Moslem standard captured by King Sobieski outside Vienna during the war against the Turks, were stored.

Clergyman Ran Semi-Military Unit of Underground

Secretary of World Alliance Made His Home A Place of Refuge for Those Sought by Nazis

By Religious News Service

New York: — How a French Protestant clergyman risked Nazi recriminations for helping Jews, French army officers, and anti-Nazis escape from southern France is told in a firsthand report received here by Henry A. Atkinson, secretary of the world alliance for international friendship through the churches. The report came from Pastor Jules Jesequel, French secretary of the alliance for twenty years, who lived in southern France between Pau and the Spanish border during "the frightful weeks of the campaign in France and the Armistice."

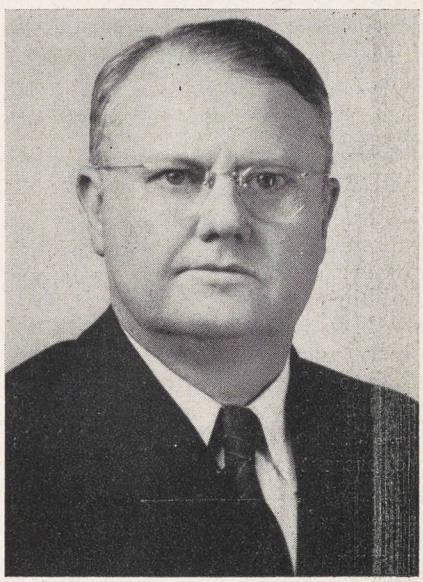
Pastor Jesequel is believed to be one of the few European world alliance secretaries to have escaped death or imprisonment at the hands of the Nazis. The report covering his activities from 1939 to 1945 is the first direct communication the alliance has received from Europe since the German armies began to march. Thirty-four councils of the world alliance were in existence in Europe before the war.

According to his story, Pastor Jesequel first aided French, Belgian, and Czech refugees streaming past his home ahead of the German invasion. After the fall of France he began work at the Camp de Gurs near his home, where foreigners of all nationalities, but principally German Jews, were interned. This ministry the 70-year-old pastor carried on from 1940 until recently. He travelled to and from the camp daily on an old bicycle.

Then, Pastor Jesequel writes, "when the shameful persecution of the Jews began in my region . . . another task presented itself . . . to help the Jews to avoid arrest and the deportation which threatened them. So I organized a kind of placement service for men and women who then disappeared into safe homes, most often in the country on isolated farms. This activity involved many journeys which had to be made secretly. I gathered at my home as many guests as I had room for . . . This sort of thing went on for three years, some staying for a long time, others spending only a few days to move on to some other hiding place. I always had a dozen people either at my own home or in a neighboring house which I had rented and furnished. Later I took care of French youth who wanted to avoid forced labor in Germany, in addition to the foreigners. It was necessary to hide these French boys or to help them get over the French-Spanish frontier.

"Again it became necessary to do the same thing for French army officers who had been demobilized by the Vichy government. This work expanded to such an extent that it became very dangerous, and several friends who were my accomplices had to leave France in order to escape the Gestapo. I had then . . . become quite popular, a kind of maquis at my home made up of French and foreigners. During a long period we were a quasi-military organization. At dawn a sentinel was placed in a position so that he could overlook the road and give the alarm if something suspicious appeared. Measures were taken so that my guests might immediately flee into the neighboring woods. . . . Several times we had a lively alert but never was the house searched."

Pastor Jesequel told with what difficulty he obtained food for his concealed guests who had no ration cards and who could, consequently, obtain no bread, meats, or fats.



"I had to procure for them false identity documents and ration cards. This is certainly the part of the work which caused me the most trouble but there was no other alternative. It was a question of life or death for these people . . . Intensive gardening which we undertook helped a little. . ."

Only two of his guests, Pastor Jesequel reported, met death during their stay with him. One was a Hungarian Jewish doctor who left his house to give medical attention to a maquis and was killed when he met up with a German patrol. The other was a young German woman who during grilling by the Gestapo "committed suicide."

RACE RELATIONS SUNDAY IN BOSTON CHURCH

Boston:—Race relations Sunday, February 11, was observed in Trinity Church here, at an evening service sponsored jointly by the diocesan department of social service and the young people's fellowship. Rev. David R. Hunter, rector of the Church of the Holy Spirit in Mattapan and an active leader in the Good Neighbor Association which has done much in promoting harmonious race relations in his community, preached; Rev. Kenneth deP. Hughes, rector of St. Bartholomew's, Cambridge, read the prayers.

CHANCELLOR

Andrew Dilworth, chancellor of West Texas, is a member of St. Mark's, San Antonio, where he has served as a vestryman and as president of the laymen's league. He is a member of the diocesan council, secretary and treasurer of the standing committee and was a deputy to the 1943 General Convention. He is prominent in civic affairs and besides practicing law is the director of a number of corporations

HARTMAN HOPEFUL ABOUT RUSSIAN REVIVAL

Boston:—"The Russian Orthodox Church is experiencing just now a great revival of prestige and influence not only in Russia but here in the United States," said Bishop Lewis O. Hartman of the Methodist Church in an address to the diocesan school in the Cathedral Church of St. Paul on February 8. Hartman marked the wholehearted support to the Soviet cause which leaders of the Russian Church have given in the present war which has been recognized by the government, and rewarded with larger recognition and broader liberties for the Church.

"While its major interest continues in the emphasis on worship and liturgy," declared Bishop Hartman, "the Church is becoming increasingly hospitable to many Communist ideas, and is beginning in some degree to develop the same practical interest in human welfare that characterized the Churches of the west." The Soviet constitution provides for "freedom of worship and of anti-religious propaganda," but not for religious propaganda. With the new rapprochement between government and Church, however, Bishop Hartman predicts an enlargement of religious liberty. He thinks that the Russian Church will take a new grip on the leadership of Greek Orthodoxy, whose membership now hold third place in the ranks of Christendom.

MEMORIAL CHAPEL DEDICATED

Washington: — In a simple but impressive ceremony a chapel to the memory of the Very Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips was dedicated on February 11th at the Church of the Epiphany where he was rector from 1924 to 1942. It will be used for small services as a chapel for meditation. The Rev. Charles Sheerin is the present rector.

RED STAR CHARGES VATICAN INTERFERENCE

Moscow (by wireless):—Charges that the Vatican is preparing a message opposing the Allied program for postwar Europe were made in a sharply worded article in Red Star, Soviet army newspaper published here. The article asserted that an Anti-Soviet campaign, inspired by the Vatican, is being carried on by Catholic newspapers in England and the United States. The writer, Konstantine Gofman, said the Vatican's wartime policy has been pro-Nazi and included attempts to "save Mussolini and prevent the democratization of Italy." He called the Vatican "the last political shelter for London Polish bankrupts such as Raczkiewicz, Sosnkowski, and Arciszewski," and warned "it is trying to turn back history and revive Russian-Polish hostility." Gofman added that the Vatican's "back to Catholic fascism" policy which has been obvious in the organized terror bands fighting against democratic Poland, and the events in Italy, is a precedent for expanding it in Germany, Austria and farther east over Hungary and Poland. The Soviet author characterized the Pope as "the mouthpiece of Germany, and the preacher of a soft peace," and declared that the Soviet Union will resist any Vatican interference in these countries.

SEEK GREAT PLACE FOR LAITY

London (by wireless):—A resolution to rejuvenate its house of laity was unanimously adopted at the spring session here of the Church of England assembly. Introduced by Lt. Colonel H. L. Oldham who declared that the present house has not had an election for ten years, the resolution urged that suitable candidates be sought for elections to take place between Easter and Whitsunday. Support for the resolution came from many speakers, including Sir Arthur Griffith Boscawen, who said that "if the Anglican Church hopes to do its duty, the laity must play a much bigger part than hitherto in the religious revival of this country."

Plans to raise 250,000 pounds in the next seven years toward a proposed one million pound fund for European church reconstruction were also put before the assembly. It is hoped to raise a substantial proportion of the fund in the next two years to meet urgent needs. Half the total amount will be sought from churches, the balance from religious societies and the general public.

DENOMINATIONALISM BOWS TO FUEL

Albany: — Protestant churches were urged to "transcend denominational lines," and to cooperate in arranging joint worship services, in a move to overcome the coal shortage. The appeal was made by Wilbur T. Clemens, general secretary of the state council of Churches, who said he had already received reports from churches on steps being taken to conserve coal, including plans for joint services in smaller communities.

Father and son department: William Ellwood Craig, Senior and Junior. Both were candidates from the same parish, the Epiphany, Los Angeles, and both attended the Church Divinity School of the Pacific. The younger Craig is the vicar of the Holy Apostles, Los Angeles, while his father is the rector of the Epiphany. You can figure out the rest — wives and a grandchild who thinks this picture-taking is a lot of nonsense

CHURCH GROUP FIGHT RENT RACKET

Leominster, Mass: — Church groups here are making a determined effort to smash the "rent racket," in which landlords have demanded exorbitant rentals from servicemen stationed at nearby Fort Devens. It was claimed that OPA ceilings were ineffectual. In an attempt to enlist laymen more closely in this and other church activities, the ministerial association here plans to turn over the majority of its duties to the Leominster council of Churches.

Hold That Line

THOSE FORCES of religion at home and abroad, and they have been legion, that have worked for the realization of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals should call their people to services of thanksgiving for the statement on world aims issued at the close of the Crimea Conference. The dream of the Nazis that they could dig in, waiting for that disunity among the Allies that would give them the final victory, has been shattered. For our leaders meeting at Yalta not only reaffirmed their common determination "to maintain and strengthen in the peace to come that unity of purpose and of action which has made victory possible" but perfected machinery for its realization. Not only will the charter for a world peace structure be finally agreed upon at the conference to be held this spring in San Francisco, but arrangements have already been made for the meetings of foreign secretaries every three or four months, to be held in rotation in Washington, London and Moscow. Also it is important to note that the question of voting procedure in the proposed international organization, so widely criticized, has been settled.

Services of thanksgiving however will not be enough. The bogey of "communism," "bolshevism in Europe" etc. has been firmly planted in many minds by clever Nazi propagandists and we may be sure that the fascist international will not accept final defeat without a final rush to their guns and to their microphones. "Look at poor Poland," "Small nations are being enslaved by the big three powers," "It is power politics and imperialism all over again," "We should be more Christian in our treatment of Germany." All these slogans to drive a wedge between the United Nations will be shouted with all stops out, and not only by Nazi propaganda agents but by those sincerely idealistic people who stand for "total Christianity" and will accept nothing but perfection in this very imperfect world. These forces can be met, and will be met, by that overpowering majority of peace-loving people who looked to Yalta for mutual understanding rather than perfection; for clear purpose and positive direction rather than the blue-printed settlement of issues that must of necessity await the complete victory. Teheran gave us unity; Dumbarton Oaks gave us more unity; Yalta gives us still more unity. Unity—unity for a just and lasting peace. That's the line. Hold it.

"Quotes"

ONLY with the continuing and growing cooperation and understanding among our three countries and among all the peace-loving nations can the highest aspirations of humanity be realized — a secure and lasting peace which will, in the words of the Atlantic Charter, "afford assurance that all the men in all the lands may live out their lives in freedom from fear and want." Victory in this war and establishment of the proposed international organization will provide the greatest opportunity in all history to create in the years to come the essential conditions of such a peace.

A Positive Lent

WHY keep Lent? As if the world were not sad enough already, after more than five years of war! And as if we needed any more stress laid on human sinfulness, when we see it in all its horror and beastliness, and on the largest scale on which it has ever been portrayed in all human history! But this objection arises from a wrong idea of Lent. To be of a sad countenance is not to keep Lent — our Lord warned against people who went about looking sad and dejected, and identified that with religion. Nor is it keeping Lent merely to stress human sinfulness. The pessimist does that all the time, and sees no good in anything; so does the cynic who cannot believe there is anything noble in human nature; but neither the pessimist nor the cynic is a whit more religious than other men. In fact, they are probably considerably less so. It is not sadness that Lent requires, but seriousness, reality, a calm recognition of things as they are. And it is not the sinfulness of man that is the subject of thought for Lent, but our own share in the sin of the world; and, secondly, the divine provision for curing the world's sin — and ours too. Thus Lent leads us to the very heart of our religion. And the best thing we can do is think over our sins, trying to realize just what they are and what they mean, in God's sight; then repenting of them, asking forgiveness of God — and of other persons, if they are involved — and making restitution wherever that is called for; then studying the gospels and living as close to Christ as we can in thought and prayer, letting his spirit dominate our lives and really change them into his own likeness. that may come the strength we need to do our part, whatever it is, in the reconstruction of society after the war. Merely worrying over human sinfulness is not keeping Lent; it is not even pious devotion; it may be a thoroughly paralyzing procedure. Lent means action, thought, study, something positive. And out of that comes strength, not weakness; peace, not disillusion; joy, not sorrow; self-committal, not self-concern; faith, not despair.

The Series for Lent

God and the Soldier

By
LELAND B. HENRY
Chaplain, U.S.A. and Instructor Army Chaplain School

THE title of this article reminds one of the story of the colored preacher who announced a sermon on the subject "The Wonders of God, and How Little We Know." There are nearly eight million soldiers in the army of the United States. They represent every racial strain, every social and economic group, every section of the country. They are of every religious faith, and of no religious faith. Once in the army, these men of varied background have an equally varied experience. Some are in training or housekeeping or hospital units in the United States. Some are in isolated outposts in the Aleutians or the Greenland base or the Caribbean. Many have faced the terrific strain of battle in the Pacific or North Africa or Italy or on the Western Front. The man who tries to generalize, to say "soldiers think this, or feel that, or do the other," simply does not begin to appreciate the infinite variety and complexity of life.

For example, in a recent issue of a news magazine were two stories of army men. One story told of a group who had used precious cargo space in planes flying over the hump to China for the purpose of smuggling contraband which they sold for a huge profit. The other story told of a wounded man lying in a spot exposed to hostile fire. He called to the stretcher bearers not to try to reach him. Several men who ignored his warning were wounded. To keep others from risking their lives he deliberately lifted himself to his feet and fell an instant later riddled with machine gun bullets. Such are the depths and the heights of human degradation and of human glory.

If one were to make any generalization concerning the religious life of the army, I think it would be this: the army intensifies every aspect of personality. The strong man becomes stronger; the weakling is crushed. The Godless man drifts farther from religion: the man with even a minimum of faith finds that faith deepens as he faces the loneliness and the hazards of military life and sees the quiet heroism and unselfishness of which human nature is capable. It is scarcely fair of the Church to expect the army in time of war to do for men what the Church failed to do through all the years of peace. It is scarcely fair for parents who in eighteen or twenty years failed to produce in their sons even the beginning of religious faith and practice to expect the chaplain to succeed where they have failed. If your boy had any personal religion when he came into the army, if he really believed in God, if he knew how to pray, if he habitually found strength and comfort in the holy communion, you need not worry about what the army will do to him. Almost certainly, he will come back stronger for his experience. If his religion was purely nominal or if he was actually antagonistic toward religion, do not expect the war or the chaplain to perform a miracle in his behalf. This, also, is a generalization. There are exceptions.

I have talked with hundreds of chaplains, back from every theater of operations, who have been students in the chaplain school. I have yet to find one who believes that there is any widespread revival of religion in the army. There is nothing comparable for instance to the revivals that swept through the army of the Potomac and the army of Northern Virginia during the winter of 1863-4. Yet there is general agreement that as a unit moves toward the front there is a greater interest in the chaplain's program and a better attendance at services. There is no reason to be cynical about this. It is perfectly natural for young men brought for the first time in their lives into the imminent presence of deadly danger to remember whatever religious training they may have had and to seek strength wherever they can find it. How many of the psalms seem to have been written in like circumstances!

Out of the deep I have called unto thee, O Lord. Lord, hear my voice.

The test of such a religious experience comes when a division moves out of the lines into a rest area. Again and again attendance at services does continue at a high level, after the period of greatest danger is over. Men who have really found help in a moment of supreme crisis are not apt to forget. In fact, there are certain figures released by the office of the chief of chaplains which seem to indicate a considerably more optimistic picture of the religious life of the army than one obtains in conversation with individual chaplains. In a study of religious trends in the army from July, 1941 to May, 1944 the office of the chief of chaplains finds that the number of chaplains increased by 546%. The number of religious services increased by 830%. The attendance at the services increased by 871%. And perhaps most significant of all the number of soldiers, both Catholic and Protestant, who received holy communion increased by 1549%.

THIS last figure is interesting in the light of what the most competent chaplains have to say about army religion. The most thoughtful among them are in substantial agreement that what men want as they face loneliness and death is not good advice but vital religion. I do not mean that the soldier feels that religion and ethics are unrelated. The average soldier is devastatingly practical in his estimate of the value of a religious profession. But men facing death need above all else faith in God. They want to believe in a God of infinite wisdom and power and love. Their whole situation shatters the illusion of self-sufficiency. They need a God who acts.

A man's family is three thousand or six thousand miles away. How pitifully inadequate is anything he can do for them! He has made an allotment of his pay. Perhaps he has drawn a will and a power of attorney. He writes regularly by V-mail, brief letters that because of censorship and even more because of the limitations of language cannot begin to tell them what he would like to say. There is one thing more that he can do. He can pray for them. He can bridge the miles of sea and land and the months and years of separation as he kneels to receive the holy communion. He wants to believe in a God who can and will watch over the ones he loves.

Nor can a man do very much to help himself. He goes where he is ordered. He faces temptations he cannot avoid, loneliness he cannot cure, dangers he cannot escape. Again he needs a God who can and will act. That I think is the secret of the great increase in the number of men receiving holy communion. The sacrament is primarily the act of God, the gift of God. It is the pledge of God's love. It brings the assurance of God's forgiveness, which helps heal the psychological scars of battle.

The God who meets the soldiers' needs is not the God of the fundamentalist with a rigid system of Puritan ethics and sectarian dogma. Neither is he the God of early twentieth century liberalism. The soldier has seen too much of the austerity and mystery of life, too much of human frailty and human helplessness to feel that such a God is adequate to our situation. The soldier is not a theologian but I believe that a large number would find themselves in rather close agreement with Reinhold Niebuhr. The war has driven home upon them a realization of the sinfulness of man, — not of the enemy alone, but of us all. It has taught them that man cannot save himself, that man as an individual and the whole sorry, war-torn world can be saved only by the infinite mercy and power of God.

I have not talked with more than one or two chaplains out of hundreds who expressed a belief that prayer would deflect a bullet. Of course men pray when they are in danger. It is as instinctive as it is to take shelter in a fox-hole. But the religion of the soldier is not in most cases a mere desire for physical safety, coupled with a belief that such safety can be assured by prayer. Every soldier in a fighting unit has seen too many good men hit.

The soldier is forced by the very exigencies of his situation to be a realist. He will not normally be a realist about everything else and a sentimentalist about religion. When he returns he will I think be very critical of a religion which seems to him to be a mere matter of words. He will be little impressed by a Church which issues lofty pronouncements about social justice and peace and democracy and then fails to practice these virtues in first-hand dealings with particular individuals and with other religious groups. He will be little interested in sectarian labels for he will have seen brave, true men of every faith. He will feel perhaps more strongly than any generation the world has yet known that God is the God of all mankind.

Do not, I beg of you, think of the returning soldier as a "problem." He is not a problem. He is just your son or your husband or your neighbor, a fellow-member of your Church. He will be changed by the army to be sure though the change may be less than you imagine. The change in many cases will be for the better. Many a soldier will return more mature, more understanding, more tolerant and sympathetic, and, it may very well be, more truly and deeply religious than when he went away.

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

1. Chaplain Henry states that the army intensifies every aspect of personality. Would you agree with this basing your opinion on servicemen you know?
2. What do you think should be done to prepare men entering the service? What is being done in your parish?
3. Is the attendance at services higher in the army than in civilian life?
4. What do soldiers primarily seek from religion? What do you seek?
5. What are some of the things we can do as individuals and as parishes for the men in the service?
6. What will the soldier expect of the Church when he comes home?

A Serious Call by William Law

by Vida D. Scudder

Contributing Editor of THE WITNESS

THE eighteenth century was a dry period religiously; one has to get below the surface to find springs of living water. Of course such are there, they never fail; William Law was one of the earliest in his day to dig for and release them. But one reason why his Serious Call is a religious classic is that he takes for granted the fashions of his time. His attack on conventional Christianity is addressed to plain folk living under entirely mundane conditions, who take themselves for granted as satisfactory Christians. It never occurs to them, as it did to so many ardent souls in the middle ages, to try running away from the world; nor does Law in one sense wish them to do so. True, the situation differs from ours. These types lashed by his piercing satire are all faithful Churchgoers as the proprieties demand, self-righteous about their religion. Should we be glad or sorry that nowadays it is perfectly respectable not to go to Church or even not to be a Church member? Well, after all the contrast is not absolute; a diluted Christian code still controls our surface assumptions though Hitler has done a good deal to shock us out of taking this code as a matter of course. It might be contended that his Germany is more honest than we are.

In any case one reason for the enduring popularity of the Serious Call is the devastating frankness of Law's portraits of respectable Church people. "In their way of life, their manner of spending their time, and money, in their cares and fears, in their pleasures and indulgences, in their labor and diversions, they are like the rest of the world," says he. And it is easy to see why "the rest of us," "the loose part of the world generally make a jest of those that are devout." We laugh while we wince. A pageant of human weaknesses in that period so like while so unlike our own moves through his pages. His clever and entertaining character studies belong to the literary type popularized by Pope and Addison, a type precursor of the modern novel at its most disillusioned. How many of them we know! Caladus, always in a hurry, smothered by his business concerns; Flavia, horrified by heretics, whose tender conscience makes her very scrupulous lest she give amiss, since she is sure that the poor are mostly cheats; Fulvius, excellently educated, with delightful hobbies, who gracefully evades responsibilities; Flatus the restless, Feliciana the frivolous, Caelia the worried who always has a chip on her shoulder; Succulus the lazy epicure, whom Dante knew under the name Belacqua. Law grows increasingly biting as he presents better types: Cognatus the acceptable clergyman; Negotius the "temperate, devout man," a philanthropist devoid of vision; Mundanus, Classicus; Caecus the self-deceived, who mistakes his pride for humility. A clever sketch is Susurrus the gossip; but he gets converted. One would go far to find more varied and incisive analysis of the worldly lures which divert men from the standards of Christ.

Fortunately we meet other types in these pages: Paternus, perhaps drawn from Law's father; Eusebia, Ouranius. His Miranda was a portrait of Miss Hester Gibbon, who in his later years lived with him and a Mrs. Hutchinson in a sort of miniature Little Gidding; Law was for years a member of the household of the historian's father. For such as these he is writing the Call. Relentlessly he explores implications in the Christian paradox challenging much in our normal every day living. The time of the social gospel was not yet; the revolutionary upheaval in men's mind, continuous since the end of the eighteenth century was still to come, and Christian folk were not troubled as we are by the tormenting maladjustments between political and economic assumptions and the Christian code. Law speaks to people expected to take society as they find it, to the British middle class, busy with practical matters,—dress, business, management of their estates, family relationships. He is himself no recluse; his pages are spiced by the keen canny observations of a man in if not of the world. But if his approach is personal, his summons to holiness is absolute, it is free from compromise or evasion. And effectively he demonstrates that life offers sustaining interest, drama, and romance, only when not merely time but eternity is taken into account as one's habitation; and that worldly existence, lacking the illumination and hazards afforded by Christian faith, becomes in the long run terribly boresome.

ADDRESSING an orthodox public, he takes the basis of such faith for granted; his stress is ethical. So it is a surprise to find that the body of the book is concerned less with external behaviour than with internal disciplines, with man's commerce with the unseen. More than half of the pages are devoted to expounding that source of all strength for righteous conduct to be found in prayer, and few treatises offer more enlightening guidance to practise of that supreme art. Law's treatment is in one way disconcerting. He is no monk; his readers as has been said, stay in the world; but the framework of daily living that he suggests hardly seems adapted to ordinary secular existence, for it is based on faithful observance of the old canonican hours; prime, terce, sext, nones, compline,—that is to say, on the repeated interruption of activities by sustained periods of devotion. Names are not given to these offices; Law has the pleasant Anglican habit of utilizing old tradition with refreshing freedom, but he follows it loyally, and he actually makes you believe that this can be done, without detriment to one's duties. The first prayer on awakening should be a psalm, chanted aloud; he is scornful of people who don't get up early, or who feel shy about this exercise. Prime, as the "Religious" would call it, shall be chiefly acts of adoration and praise; that is natural and one may hope habitual with Christians. When Law reaches the third hour, he passes beyond formal exercises and gives us long beautiful pages concerned with the virtue basic to him in Christian life,—that is, humility. He knows as his Caecus doesn't that this is an evasive virtue, not to be taken as excuse for inaction, beset by peril of laziness or of melancholy, not to speak of camouflaged self-esteem. Analysis is searching in these pages. But in treatment of the sixth hour, Law soars higher. Now his theme is love, its austere demands and its ecstatic rewards. With no touch of sentimentality Law analyzes the virtue which we today are learning to distinguish from its counterfeit by the great Pauline word "Agape." It finds, he tells us, its best expression in that most creative of activities, intercessory prayer; concerning which none ever wrote with more penetrating discernment. Pertinent to us is what he says about loving our enemies: "By love I do not mean any natural tenderness which is more or less in people according to their constitutions; but I mean a larger principle of the soul. . . . The love of our neighbor is only a branch of our love to God. . . . You have never less reason to be pleased with yourself than when you find yourself most angry and displeased at the behaviour of others. . . . All hatred of sin which does not fill the heart with the softest tenderest affections towards persons miserable in it, is the servant of sin at the same time that it seems to be hating it. And there is no temper which good men ought more carefully to watch and guard against than this. For it is a temper that lurks and hides itself under the cover of many virtues. . . . The sight of sinners instead of raising in us a haughty contempt or peevish indignation towards them, will then fill us with bowels of compassion as when we see the sick in a hospital." But Law does not deny that the sick in hospitals sometimes need drastic treatment.

Studies of Thanksgiving and of Penitence complete his sequence of emphasis for the hours. Experience breathes from every page. It is no wonder that the Wesleys in their youth drew close to Law, though later they broke with him. Law himself did not remain on the levels where we find him, to our advantage, in the Serious Call. He became the ardent follower of that recondite, exalted and difficult mystic, Jacob Boehme; some of his later treatises, rich in released spiritual passion and in soaring vision, are for those who can receive them. But the earlier book remains his most widely known down the Christian generations; any one following its counsels with docility might well find himself borne on and upward into heights beyond our usual ken.

The Factory Chaplain

J. CLEMENS KOLB

THERE is a tendency that most people will admit, I think, to put religion on the periphery of life instead of at the center of it. Most of us have rather naively traced this tendency back to original sin or else to the conditions of our environment, with a feeling that as in the parable of the sower most of us live in that patch of ground where the thistles are thick and the good seed gets crowded out. Perhaps there is another source, and that is in the organization of the Church itself.

This was brought home to me the other day when Chaplain Francis B. Sayre spoke of the need for chaplains in industry and argued that the present geographic parochial organization of the Church was behind the times, fitted to an agricultural society but not to an industrial society. It did strike me that his argument was very plausible. If religion is not to be edged out of the periphery of a man's life, it must be placed at the center of his interest. If it is not to be found in that part of his life where he spends most of his waking hours—his business, his industry—if it is only to be found where he spends his evenings and his week ends, he cannot be blamed if it doesn't occupy a vital place in his consciousness.

I would have been vehemently opposed to Chaplain Sayre's suggestion, for I had one experience with a clergyman in industry. I worked one summer when I was in college in a large plant—I am not going to say where—and there the management had made a very earnest effort along this line. They had employed an outstanding clergyman as personnel officer in their business. They paid him what seemed to me a perfectly magnificent salary. I doubt if there are ten clergymen in the Episcopal Church today who get as much as he did twenty years ago. But that was just it. He knew where his bread was buttered. There was no doubt on which side he stood in every controversy. He did the cause of religion incalculable harm among the men. They simply referred to him as "that so-and-so who thinks he is next to Christ." But Chaplain Sayre had the remedy. He suggested that in industry a man be only partly paid by the management and partly by the employees, most likely the union. This might be an impossible place for a poor man. He would be worse off than "low man on a totem pole." But if he were the kind of a man that every clergyman should be, the kind that both sides can trust, he could be the voice of the men, interpreting their wishes and needs to the management and, conversely, an articulate voice from the management to bring about a better understanding with the workers. He could be the one indispensable key man in the entire organization.

Chaplain Sayre's suggestion seems to be one that the Church should take with the greatest seriousness and should try out wherever they can find the industry and the man for the experiment. Not that we ought to do away with parishes—not at all, any more than we are doing away with parishes because we have college chaplains and army chaplains. It isn't a question of "either, or"; it is a question of "and, and." I think the Church's chances of being helpful in critical times would be enhanced if this suggestion could be carried out.

I AM more than ever convinced that a promise of better things lies in this direction since hearing Dean Alexander Zabriskie of Virginia remark about the difference that a ministry made in an allied field. Dean Zabriskie said that one of his friends in the employ of the government does research on the problems of agriculture. In a section where agriculture is declining, he goes and tries to find the reasons for the decline. If agriculture is progressing, he tries to find out what change has brought about the increased wealth. He asked his friend what conclusions he had come to and his friend said, "I am not much of a church member, but quite objectively I have been forced to the conclusion that much of the difference between a declining agriculture and a rising agriculture is due to the quality of ministerial leadership in a community. We have found again and again that where a change has occurred in agricultural wealth one or a group of clergy is responsible. When clergy with ability of leadership come into a community, the first thing you find is a demand for better conditions of education, and then better health standards and then an intelligent approach to the agrarian problems. And when we find agriculture declining, so often it is because a community has lost its ministerial leadership. Then standards of health and standards of education begin to decline. The young people start moving away and the inevitable lower standards result." If the rural clergy are so necessary, doubtless the industrial clergy would be, too.

Of course we are short of clergy. We haven't enough to man our own parishes. There are not enough to go around for our needs at present; but perhaps one reason why not enough men are entering the ministry is because so much of the religion of the present has not been near enough the center of interest of men's lives. Let religion be placed back where it should be, in the center of existence, and more and better men will be found.

Leaders of Orthodox Churches Seek Greater Unity

Apparently Plan to Make Moscow the Centre Of Orthodoxy as Rival to Claims of Vatican

Edited by Rita Rubin

Moscow (by wireless): — Two representatives of the Russian Orthodox Church in North America, Bishop Alexis and the Very Rev. Joseph Dzvonchik, who are acting for Metropolitan Theophilus, have arrived in Moscow to confer with Patriarch Alexei and other officials on problems affecting reconciliation between the mother Church and the autonomous Church in America. The American Church, which represents 80 per cent of Orthodoxy, has consistently refused to recognize the jurisdiction of the Moscow Patriarchate and is still regarded as schismatic.

Informed of the arrival of the American Orthodox leaders, Metropolitan Benjamin, exarch of the Moscow Patriarch in North America and Alaska, expressed "high hopes" of eventual reconciliation of all sections of the Orthodox community in the United States. Metropolitan Benjamin arrived in Moscow on the eve of the sobor and has taken a prominent part in its affairs. He was the only foreign representative entitled to cast a vote in the election of the new Patriarch Alexei.

At the same conference, spokesmen for all but one of the major Eastern Orthodox Churches in Europe and the Near East signed a statement charging the Vatican with seeking to protect Nazi Germany from Allied punishment. Broadcast over the Moscow radio the statement was also given prominence in the Soviet newspapers. The statement stressed that "the Christian religion may only give its blessing" to those seeking to deliver the world "from fascism and from monstrous, sanguinary aggressions such as that of Hitler." It affirmed that Christianity might only give its blessing to the efforts of the whole of the "progressive freedom, and peace-loving humanity at present directed toward the establishment of such an order on earth as will deliver the world for all times from Fascism . . ."

Il Quotidiano, outspoken Catholic evening newspaper, in an article on "Russians and the Oriental Church," asserted that Stalin is subjugating to the Soviet State the same Orthodox Church he has criticized for its subservience to Czarism. The crux of the Vatican's charge is, however, that Moscow is reinstating the Orthodox Church as a counterweight against Catholic influence in central and eastern Europe, where they characterize the Church of Rome as "representing the spiritual liberty which is an obstacle to dictatorship, and thus must be combatted."

Metropolitan Benjamin revealed that the status of the Bulgarian Church was discussed at the meeting of Patriarchs. It was decided that Sofia would be urged to submit to the Ecumenical Patriarch at Istanbul a formal letter of repentance and reconciliation required as a condition of canonical reinstatement. The schism between the Bulgarian Orthodox Church and the Ecumenical Patriarchate dated from 1872, when it was accused of introducing racial distinction as an innovation in the Church. Recent newsreels here show Red Army troops in Sofia being greeted by Exarch Stefan in full ecclesiastical regalia. It is hoped that action by the Bulgarian Exarch may heal the breach.

The Metropolitan, as previously reported, also urged at the Moscow meeting that a world council of Orthodox Churches be established, with many believing it is to be set up to counteract the claims of the Vatican. What action was taken has not yet been learned.

Polish Church

Warsaw (by wireless): — Assurance of "good relations" between Church and state in Russian-occupied Poland was given here by Boleslaw Beirut, acting president of the Lublin provisional government, which has set up headquarters in the Polish capital. He stated in an interview that "Full religious freedom will be given to Roman Catholics in Poland, and to all other groups." The Polish president said that no plans are being made to set up a ministry for religious education but that steps will be taken to organize a department of religion as part of the ministry of public administration, "to promote the interests of all worshippers."

Virtually all churches in Warsaw were severely damaged or destroyed during the war. In one church in the Praga suburb worship services are being held daily, attended by persons of all ages, including many soldiers.

Social Action

St. Louis: — The convention of Missouri, meeting February 6-7, passed resolutions on a number of social issues. Endorsement was given to the new state constitution; urging the governor and assembly to appoint a children's code commission to revise laws for the protection of children in industry and the protection of dependent and neglected children and social security measures for child-care. A resolution was passed urging a minimum wage law for workers not now protected by the federal law and also urging the state to appropriate sufficient funds for social security. On the subject of housing the convention went on record as favoring low-cost housing and called for federal funds for use in St. Louis for this purpose. Also a resolution was passed advocating full cooperation by parishes in support of suitable legislation and constructive procedures in county jails and in state correctional and penal institutions.

On the subject of peace the convention endorsed the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals and commended them to Church people for study and action — action meaning write the state department and senators. On minorities the convention called upon parishes "to find ways and means of bringing the various mi-

Finally, on the matter of social security to lay employees of the Church, after pointing out that the 1943 General Convention had urged that they be included in the federal social security act, the convention instructed its secretary "to request information of the National Council as to what action it has taken toward carrying out these instructions" and further urged the National Council "to proceed at the earliest possible moment to carry out the instructions of the General Convention as one of its recognized functions."

The Rev. Charles C. Wilson, rector of Grace Church and director of Grace House, a social service settlement, presented the resolutions as the chairman of the social service committee of the diocese.

German "Hymnbooks"

Stockholm (by wireless): — The anti-Hitler underground in Germany is reported to be distributing "evangelical hymnbooks" containing hints on how to avoid military service by stimulating illness. Similar in appearance to hymnbooks issued to the army, the "hymnals" also contain tips for workers on ways to avoid service in war industries.

European Clergymen

New York: — Three prominent European churchmen have been invited to visit the United States in May as guests of the American committee for the World Council of Churches, and a special three-day session of the committee will be held May 17-19 to discuss plans for the first assembly of the World Council after the war. Making the trip here will be Dr. Marc Boegner, president of the French Protestant Federation, and a vice-president of the World Council; Dr. W. A. Viss't Hooft of Geneva, general secretary of the World Council, and Anglican Bishop George Kennedy Allen Bell of Chichester, a member of the Council's provisional committee. According to temporary plans the first world assembly will be held in the United States, probably in Princeton, N. J., or some community adjacent to New York. To date, 83 communions, both Protestant and Orthodox, in 83 countries have voted to join the Council and a full delegation to its sessions will total nearly 500 churchmen from all parts of the world.

Another subject of discussion with the Europeans will be the problem of aid to the churches on the continent, which Dr. Douglas Horton, chairman of the American Committee, has estimated will require a minimum of $50,000,000.

Back Dumbarton Oaks

Cleveland: — In a message to President Roosevelt, the Congregational Christian Churches endorsed the Dumbarton Oaks security proposals as approved by the national study conference on the churches and a just and durable peace. The denomination will send copies of the peace proposals together with a critical interpretation, to all the churches this month. Extensive plans have been made to organize study and discussion groups. After the United Nations Conference gives final form to the Proposals, these will also be sent to the churches, and the council will urge them to hold "town meetings" modeled after the old New England gatherings. It will be suggested that treaty ratifications, committing this nation to membership, will be the primary obligation of the United States.

As a joint project of the Congregational Christian and Unitarian Churches, the first privately financed American medical unit has been organized to aid war-stricken Italians. The Unit will work with relief organizations to study control of epidemics and the spread of tuberculosis among undernourished people, as well as disease of underfed children.

Jews Exempt

Helsinki: — German Jews in Finland are exempt from Russian occupation orders for the internment of German citizens, Pavel Orlov, political advisor to the Soviet central commission, declared here. Orlov gave this assurance in reply to questions based on charges that pro-fascist elements in the Finnish police are seeking to round up Jewish refugees from the Reich while permitting Nazi sympathizers to hide or to retain Finnish citizenship acquired at the time of the Finnish-Russian armistice. "Russian control authorities in Finland," Orlov states, "have adopted the same principle now in force in Rumania, whereby internment regulations affecting Germans are not applied to Jews."

Revised Bible

Chicago:—A new revised standard version of the Bible, begun 15 years ago, and officially approved by 44 Protestant denominations, has been completed, it was announced here by Luther A. Weigle, dean of Yale University Divinity School. The volume is now in the hands of the publishers, he said, and the New Testament probably will be available by Christmas.

10th Anniversary of The Upper Room

TEN YEARS ago The Upper Room, a devotional quarterly, began as a venture of faith. Today it has grown to a circulation of 2,350,000 copies per issue and is going to every country of the globe.

Men and women in the armed forces receive 500,000 copies of each issue. Letters by the thousands tell how "The Upper Room has found a place in many a soldier's heart."

Printed in English, Spanish, Portuguese and Braille, The Upper Room has a world-wide field of service, limited only by the wartime paper shortage. As soon as paper restrictions are over, its circulation should undoubtedly continue the phenomenal growth which has enabled it in its first ten years to break all records for religious periodicals.

The issue for April, May and June is the Easter number, probably the richest of the year because of the season covered in its daily devotions. Send in your order TODAY for the number of copies you need.

The Upper Room—larger size 4½x7 inches, New Pocket Edition 3¼x4½ inches—is available (English and Spanish Editions) in quantities of 10 or more to one address at 5 cents per copy, postpaid. Single yearly subscriptions in U. S., Canada and Latin America, 30 cents, postpaid; four years, $1.00. Other countries, 40 cents; four years, $1.35. Special envelopes for remailing the Easter number, $1.00 per 100.

Interracial Group

Asheville, N.C.: — A permanent interracial association was set up by the ministerial association of Asheville and Buncombe County and the Colored ministerial association at a joint meeting here. The Rev. W. C. Brown, pastor of the Nazarene Baptist Church, was elected president, and the Rev. Harold Tyler, president of the white minister's group was named secretary. The white clergymen were the guests of the Negro organization at the meeting.

Church Union Plan

London (by wireless) :—The general council of the Anglican Church of India, Burma and Ceylon has adopted parts of the South India church union scheme to permit certain dioceses to carry out "their practically unanimous desire" to enter the United Church of South India. The union plan would merge representative bodies of the three major Protestant groupings — Anglicans and Methodists, Presbyterians and Reformed, and Congregationalists.

The council debated for two days and then passed the following resolution: "While reaffirming that the Church of this province continues to be bound in matters of faith and order by the constitution, canons, and rules of the Church of India, Burma and Ceylon, it finally adopts the scheme of the Church union in South India (Seventh Edition Revised) Parts One and Two." The council's action permits the dioceses of Madras, Travancore, Cochin, Tinnevelly, and Dornakal to enter into the union.

Russian Message

Moscow (by wireless) :—Christians throughout the world were called on to fight for "the triumph of liberty and truth" in a statement adopted by the general council of the Russian Orthodox Church here. "In the name of the triumph of Christian and all human principles of freedom," the message said, "the Russian rthodox Church calls on all Christians in the world to fight against the monstrous distortions of the divine teachings of the Savior. May Fascism and its inspirers 'vanish like smoke, as wax melts before the fire.' Verily are Jesus Christ's words, 'he who lives by the sword shall perish by the sword,' falling heavily on their heads. Pray God humanity will renounce forever resolving controversy by the sword. Thus may God's blessing be upon all brothers in Christ for the indefatigable fight for the triumph of liberty and good throughout the world, and forever! Let us be united and firm! The general council of the Russian Orthodox Church sends its blessing to the leaders of peoples occupied with the welfare and the improvement of the lot of their humbler brethren."

Axioms Vital to the Church

"Without a ministry the Church cannot exist; and destitute of a learned as well as pious ministry, she cannot flourish."

So said Bishop Hobart in 1817, appealing for contributions to establish a Theological Seminary.

And it is still true that the Church's power to relate the timeless Gospel to human need depends upon the learning as well as the devotion of the ministry.

Men and women of former times founded the Church's seminaries and in part endowed them. It is for the laity of our time to contribute generously, that the Church may flourish.

Though the Sunday appointed for contributions to theological education has passed, the rest of the year is available for those who have not yet given.

man occupation of Poland, according to a lay brother now serving with Polish forces in Scotland. Among priests killed by the Germans, he said, were the rectors of the order's four houses in Poland. Also executed were Fathers Liguda, Drapiewsky, Msyk, and Huwer, as well as Brother Gregorius of Frankowiak, who was publicly executed on May 5, 1943. Fathers Sonsala, Kubitsa, Kozubek, and Golom, the latter a missionary who had returned to Poland for a rest period after serving in China, died in concentration camps, the lay brother stated. Ten students who had already become members of the order also died in concentration camps.

Canadian Council

Toronto: — The Most Rev. Derwyn T. Owen, Anglican Archbishop of Toronto and Primate of all Canada, said in a pastoral letter to the clergy that a lay association of the Canadian Council of Churches is planned in various dioceses throughout the Dominion of Canada.

Works as Layreader

Boston, Mass.:—A layreader with a tank unit somewhere overseas, finds plenty to do. He wrote his rector recently that he had been taking the part of chaplain. "On Sundays when the regimental chaplain is unable to conduct a service, I hold a service and give a talk, which I hope is helpful, for my own outfit. There are many times during the week when my own squad sits around singing hymns. Most of the men don't know the hymns that mean so much to me, but I have learned a lot of theirs. Also quite often my buddies ask me to read them the Scriptures. I recall one day when we had been under heavy enemy shelling and our nerves and minds were in a state of unrest. I was asked to read something to them. I read the 91st, 46th and 23rd Psalms and a couple of prayers from the family prayer section. This we followed with a discussion on prayer.

"I also persuaded a fellow, a Southern Methodist, to be baptized. Back in the states he was one of those that didn't have much use for the Church or Church people. It wasn't very long after his first battle that he began to talk about things that really matter. I opened the subject of baptism. He said he wanted it, but never got around to it. I was able to get a Southern Methodist chaplain, and he baptized him.

"There are many little things that I do for the members of my squad, such as first aid, write letters for those who can't write and read mail to those who can't read. I shall never forget my amazement when for the first time I came in contact with a man who couldn't read and write more than his name, but who has traveled all over the United States as a hobo. I've learned many things from him. You see, rector, even though I'm not back working in the arch-deaconry, I'm keeping busy with my little 'congregation.'"

French Reconstruction

Paris (by wireless):—The Reformed Church in France looks to the churches in America for aid in postwar reconstruction, but will meet normal needs out of its own treasury, Dr. Marc Boegner, president of the French Protestant Federation, said in an interview here. He announced that the next synods of the sixteen regional divisions of the Reformed Church, including North Africa, will meet in February and March to consider problems confronting the Church. They will discuss the reconstruction of destroyed churches, aid to pastors and their families, training for theological students, the religious press, and political and social issues.

Turning to the question of collaboration between the Protestant and Catholic Churches in France, the Reformed leader said, "Such collaboration is desired by many Catholics and Protestants, who know that in the postwar world, all Christians must bring a common faith to the accomplishment of definite, common tasks." According to Boegner, the French Protestant Church has taken no definite stand in regard to collaboration with Communists in social matters.

MR. JOHN G. CLARK
Layman of Philadelphia

THE WITNESS is to be congratulated for the excellent number devoted to the Church and Labor and the fine number that was in Memory of Archbishop Temple. I have been reading the paper but for a short time and do not mind saying that I have been surprised to find a Church paper that is really aware of what is going on in our world. My two children of college age have been on the verge of giving up the Church entirely with the off-repeated statement, "But, dad, everything is so unrelated to our world." I cannot yet say that THE WITNESS has brought them back to their Church. But I do find them reading THE WITNESS; asking for it if it is mislaid; and then together discussing, sometimes with a good deal of heat, the articles that appear there. I am trying to be a wise parent by keeping out of the discussions though I have not been able to resist throwing out on occasions, "Well there seems to be a few live parsons left in the Church after all."

ROY W. BATTENHOUSE
Professor School of Religion,
Vanderbilt University

My congratulations on your excellent assemblage of articles for the William Temple memorial issue of February 1. I enjoyed them greatly. In the midst of them, however, I was suddenly taken aback by the incongruity of the advertisement on page 15. What happened? Did the business manager forget to consult the editor? Surely the editor does not think that H. G. Wells' indictment of the Roman Catholic Church is the sort of literature that will nourish the ecumenical principles for which the late Archbishop stood. Or does the editor think it not his job to exercise a pastoral censorship in admitting advertisements to his magazine? If so, he is separating "religion" from "business" in a way William Temple would hardly have countenanced. The discrepancy between your news columns and the advertisement lays you open, I'm afraid, to the charge of exploiting for commercial reasons the very minds and consciences which you hope to strengthen and enlighten in your editorial columns. THE WITNESS ought to practice a better "social gospel" than that. Next time be sure your right hand knows what your left hand is doing!

ANSWER: The matter to which Prof. Battenhouse refers appeared in a paid advertisement. In common with all other publications products presented in advertising space do not carry with them editorial endorsement.

MRS. JOHN W. CHAPMAN
Churchwoman of New York

The assertion is frequently made, that 'Jesus was a Jew.' Was he of purely Jewish blood? The book ascribed to St. Matthew was written for Jewish readers. The author was concerned in proving that Jesus was a lineal descendent of King David. According to Dummelow, "His actual descent could only be upon his mother's side." Dr. Paterson-Smythe must have found good authority for saying that "though Mary was a peasant girl she also was of royal blood." The genealogists said that she was of the royal lineage of David. David's grandfather was Obed, and Obed was the son of Boaz and Ruth, the Moabitess. It is true that Mary's ancestry cannot be directly traced beyond her mother Anna. It cannot be proved that she was, or was not, purely Jewish.

The priests taught their people that they were a chosen, a separate race. "A pious Jew believes that he must live a different life from the people in other nations not so much for his own sake as for theirs" (Cooke). They had no dealings with the despised Samaritans who were of mixed blood. When Ezra was informed that some of the people had intermarried with others than Jews he rent his garment and his mantle and "sat down astonied." When Nehemiah made a similar discovery—that Jewish men had taken wives of Ashdod, of Ammon and of Moab, "he contended with them and cursed them and smote certain of them, and plucked off their hair."

The young theologue who wrote this out for me, added this comment of his own: "It is thought by some that the author of the book which tells the beautiful story of Ruth had great courage in writing it. Possibly he was intending to show that there were good people even among the Moabites and that marriages between Hebrews and foreigners were not necessarily scandalous; but that good might come out of even such a union."

ANSWER. There can be little doubt that Jesus was a Jew—a pure-blooded Jew. It is not a question of the genealogies in Matthew and Luke, which are probably (like most genealogies) somewhat artificial; but it is the whole spirit and outlook of Jesus, his language, his thought, the words he uses and the ideas he takes for granted, that are thoroughly Jewish. There is no other ancient people or religion that provides the background for him, his life, character, and teaching (as a historical figure) as Judaism does. The people who deny his Jewishness always have an axe to grind! For example, Houston Stewart Chamberlain, the expatriated Englishman whose book, The Foundations of the Nineteenth Century, was a pre-Hitlerite glorification of German blood and soil, with the whole foolish "Aryan" theory thrown in to boot. Of course he wanted Jesus to be an Aryan—for people still thought a purely Aryan Germany would be Christian. We have since discovered that the pure "Aryans" are pure barbarians, not Christians, not even civilized. There are no reputable scholars who subscribe to the theory that Jesus was an "Aryan."

I cannot refrain just a line of congratulation on your splendid Temple number of THE WITNESS. It is the best thing of the kind I have seen and a most fitting tribute to one of the greatest men of our time.

The Rev. Henry Sloane Coffin Pleads for Unity

He Declares That Protestant Churches Have Stressed Liberty Without Thought of Unity

By Henry S. Coffin
President of Union Seminary

New York:—At a public hearing in this city some weeks ago the question came up, why certain individuals had received no attention. A social worker remarked: "Oh, they are only P.P.P.s." In this day, when so many governmental and other organizations are called by initials, some of us were puzzling what P.P.P.s were. When the social worker was asked, the reply came: Poor powerless Protestants.

If we have become that, it is our own fault. For one reason, Protestants have lost an adequate feeling of what is theirs in the Church—the universal Church of which their particular communions are branches.

A month ago there was published the autobiography of an eloquent minister, the late Dr. William L. Sullivan. Born the child of Irish immigrants, educated for the priesthood of the Roman Catholic Church, becoming a Paulist father and a theological teacher, he found his mind cribb'd, cabin'd and confin'd in the dogmas of the Church, and he left it to become finally, a Protestant minister. In this fascinating autobiography is a description of what his Church means to a Roman Catholic youth:

"The Church is his aristocracy and his romantic love, the household where he mingles with the holiest of all the ages, children, like himself, of a mother solicitous and majestic, nurse of saints yet mindful of her sinners and keeping in her heart memories incomparable, as far back as the age of martyrs and the missions of the apostles. When she takes him in her embrace, he ceases to be a casual atom of humanity; he becomes an heir of the ages, a citizen in the commonwealth of God; his name thenceforward is entered in the vastest brotherhood ever known on earth, and written through this august mediation in the book of life above. The Church has saved civilization and will save him, for her mission is to save. . . . For the mind she has light, for the heart, tenderness, for the imagination, magnificence; for the soul, sanctity, for death, consolation and an immortality of beatitude. Where is any likeness to her to be found?"

We might modify an expression or two, but the Church means and should mean all that to the loyal Protestant. It is a defect of our teaching that we fail to inculcate such feelings in our young people.

And a principal reason for our failure is due to the divided plight of Protestant Christendom. We admire the superb organization of our Roman Catholic brethren. Are we so stupid and impotent that we cannot today reorganize our forces? We have the delicate problem of combining liberty within unity. We want a sufficiently unified overhead organization to do three things:

1. Supply us with a sense of solidarity under one name.
2. Provide a common witness to the basic Christian truths about God, Christ, man and his life here and hereafter, which we hold in common.
3. Compact us in a common front for such practical purposes as we are facing.

Let me, however, for a moment stress the common witness to our convictions about God and life. A Harvard philosopher, Professor Ralph Barton Perry, has just given us a profound book entitled Puritanism and Democracy. His thesis is that underlying our American institutions and way of life are two spiritual bases. One of them is the partially Christian philosophy of the enlightenment which came through John Locke, Benjamin Franklin and Thomas Jefferson, and minds of that type. The other is the distinctively Christian heritage through Puritanism, which handed down the basic convictions of the Christian faith as they were held throughout the centuries, then purified by the Reformation, and then further sharpened and pointed by the Puritan group. He is at pains to point out that one does not find our democracy where you do not find this spiritual foundation.

Let me sum up what that spiritual foundation is:

Faith in the capacities of the common man. Our Protestant faith stresses the Biblical conviction that every man has direct and immediate access to God, and that all Christians are priests to minister for God to their fellowmen. There is the dignity and high calling of the plain man and woman in Christ.

Faith in the self-evidencing power of truth. Protestantism put a Bible in every man's hand and said: "Read and make up your own mind. You are directly responsible to Almighty God for your opinions and for your conduct." And Protestantism has stood for freedom to think and to teach the truth as God discloses it to every man's conscience.

Faith that this seemingly apathetic universe, what Thomas Hardy called "this nonchalant universe" is on the side of the nation and the society which tries to embody human brotherhood, because its maker is the father of all men, black, yellow, white, and wills them to live together and share together His gifts for body and soul with justice and in fellowship.

That spiritual basis for American democracy is our particular contribution. Without it we should not have had our American institutions and manner of life to start with. Without it, it is questionable whether our American institutions and life can survive in vigor. They will be like cut flowers doomed to fade and perish.

Our weakness is very largely our own fault. We have stressed liberty without unity. The result is that we can be spoken of as P.P.P.s. This Protestant Council is a sane, practical and urgently needed means of solidifying our miscellaneous and scattered forces for our common tasks. It has in it the promise of enabling us to accomplish those tasks much more effectively and—incidentally, a most valuable by-product—of welding us together into a genuine fellowship in faith and purpose.

UNION SERVICE IN CHAPEL

London (by wireless): — Bishop Neville V. Gorton of Coventry gave the use of the private chapel in his home for a joint service of Anglican and Free Church members recently. They represented the governing board of the Christian service center which has been proposed in the scheme for rebuilding Coventry cathedral and the service was patterned after the kind suggested for the permanent chapel of unity which will be incorporated into the cathedral.

RECTOR'S SON KILLED

Chicago:—The Rev. Dudley Stark, rector of St. Chrysostom's, Chicago, has received word that his son has been killed on the European front.

BOY SCOUT FLETCHER WAS LATE

Newark: — The Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher was scheduled to be the headliner at a conference of clergy and laymen of the diocese of New Jersey, speaking on returning service men. But as the train pulled into Newark the Assistant-Professor-of-Practical-Theology-and-Social-Studies-and-Director-of-Clinical-Courses at the Episcopal Theological School noticed an elderly woman who was having difficulty in getting off the train with her luggage. Seeing the chance for his good-deed-a-day the professor came to her rescue. But doors banged shut, the train moved on, and the lecturer ended up in Trenton. Grabbing the first train back he arrived at the diocesan house for his talk just as everyone was ready to leave. He got in a few words but question period was cut off since the busy and popular Joe had to rush off for another engagement. Bishop Ludlow and the Rev. Harold R. Onderdonk had some practical experience ad-libbing until the speaker arrived.

LARGE CLASS IS PRESENTED

New York:—A class of 142 persons was presented to Bishop Gilbert by the Rev. John H. Johnson, rector of St. Martin's. The service marked the 17th anniversary of the founding of the church and during that time 2300 people have been confirmed. Mr. Johnson is to contribute to our Lenten series in a forthcoming number on God and Race.

PROTESTANT LEADERS ARRESTED

Geneva (by wireless): — Bishop Samuel Osusky, popular and widely-respected Lutheran Church leader of Slovakia, and an outspoken foe of Naziism, has been arrested at his home in Brataslava, and nothing further has been heard of his whereabouts. Several pastors and Protestant teachers were also taken into custody as the puppet government of Msgr. Joseph Tiso intensified its attacks on the Lutheran Church and accused it of not conforming to the demands of the Slovak state. All leading Protestant journals have been suppressed, among them the Sentinel of Zion, edited by the Rev. Ludevit Sensel, who has been arrested on several occasions.

BIBLICAL DRAMA ON RADIO

Jersey City:—The Ven. John T. Ledger, rector of Saint Paul's Church, has obtained from England a copy of Dorothy Sayres Biblical dramatizations for the "wireless." It contains a good one of the last supper. Archdeacon Ledger has a group of men he calls "The Legion of Honor." When he told them of his wish to present a radio dramatization of the last supper in the Church on Maundy Thursday evening, he met with a 100% favorable response, 21 men and one woman volunteering to take parts. The reason is that they do not have to appear before anyone, will not have to put on costumes, and do not have to memorize parts. The cast will enact their parts in the parish house before a microphone and the congregation will hear it over amplifiers in the church. Sacred music will be used at intervals to break the strain of one hour's listening to a radio drama. If the congregation receives it well on Maundy Thursday, Archdeacon Ledger promises to present one every month in the belief that there is more spiritual meat in one of these presentations than in a number of sermons. And he has the pledged support of his men.

We always like to run in this sort of a picture about this time of year just to warm you up a bit. It is Bishop Everett Jones of West Texas and his successor at St. Mark's, San Antonio, the Rev. Thomas Wright

MRS. KARL BLOCK DIES

San Francisco:—Mrs. Karl Block, wife of the bishop of California, died on February 15 in her 58th year. Her son, Capt. Karl M. Block of the air forces, who returned recently from 100 missions overseas during which he received the distinguished flying cross, was on an emergency leave at her bedside.

CHURCH AND SOLDIERS DISCUSSED

New York:—The Woman's Auxiliaries of Manhattan are joining with Grace Church on March 12th for a service at which President-elect Henry Pit Van Dusen of Union Seminary will speak on the discovery of the Church by men in the services in the Pacific.

Francis Sayre Thinks Church Neglects Education

Declares That Service Men Are Interested In Religion but Not Differences of Sects

By J. Clemens Kolb
Chaplain at University of Pennsylvania

Philadelphia:—"Every clergyman should have in his possession public law 16 and public law 346," declared George A. MacFarland, professor of accounting in the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania, chairman of the advisory council for veterans at the university and coordinator with the veterans' administration, at the midwinter conference of the corporation for Christian work in educational institutions, diocese of Pennsylvania, held at the Church of the Mediator, Philadelphia. "Even the veterans don't know their rights. It is true that they are told about public law 16, concerning the rehabilitation of veterans, and public law 346, better known as the G.I. bill of rights; but they are told at the time when they are being discharged from the service and they are thinking about getting home, or getting a job, or getting married, and it goes in one ear and out the other. Every clergyman should be in a position to advise and guide the veterans in his parish as soon as they come home."

Mr. MacFarland pointed out further that testing centers were being set up all over the country to which returned veterans may go to discover their aptitudes and abilities and to help them in the problem of reorientation to civilian life. "A veteran doesn't want to be made a hero; he doesn't want to be pampered; and he doesn't want to be pumped," he continued. "He wants to be treated as a human being. Friendly thoughtfulness is what they want." As a bad example of our attitude toward the returned veterans he cited the case of two soldiers waiting for a table in a restaurant. "One of the veterans was minus a leg. A gushy young woman stopped, looked at him and said, 'Oh my, you have lost a leg.' The veteran looked down and remarked, 'Darned if I haven't.' 'Did you lose it on the battlefield?' she asked. 'No,' he replied, 'I was trying to get into a taxi and someone slammed the door.' Don't ask the returned soldier too much about his experiences. Let him tell you what he wants to tell you, if and when he tells you at all."

Mr. MacFarland was followed by Chaplain Francis B. Sayre. According to Chaplain Sayre, the Church faces three problems. The first, Christian education. "I picked 117 enlisted men at random from my ship," he said. "They were of all denominations and none. What surprised me was the high average of religious education — 8.2 years — a much higher total than I ever expected. In spite of this high general average of Sunday school education their ignorance was abysmal. Less than half of them could make any distinction between the Old Testament and the New. We picked some of the commonest books of the Bible and all but a very few thought that Romans was in the Old Testament, probably because it sounded old. Only 47 out of 117 could give the names of four of Jesus' disciples. When it came to some of the terms like incarnation hardly anybody knew what they meant. And our grading was extremely lenient. Anything that could possibly be construed as being correct was given credit. Something has to be done about religious education. As it is at present, it is almost a total flop." He suggested that it must be made a part of secular education and also that Church schools even of different denominations should combine in order that the children might have both the advantage of numbers and also adequately trained teachers.

Secondly, denominationalism. The veteran is confused because of the different claims of different churches, the superstructure of the faith so to speak. He is interested in religion of a very simple sort. He wants to know about God and he wants to know about Christ but he is not interested in the differences of faith of sect and sect. When he comes back from the war if he finds the fundamentals of the faith stressed he will come in and be the best vestryman we have; if they are not, he will leave and never come back.

"In the navy, furthermore," said Chaplain Sayre, "the chaplain occupies a peculiar position. He really is the spokesman for the men, the only one who can go to the commanding officer and tell him what the men really want and think and feel. The clergy must again become the spokesmen of the people and not just a small privileged class but the workmen — the spokesman of the employee to the employer." He suggested that churches, based as they are now on geographical lines, are out of date, that just as we have chaplains in colleges regardless of nearby churches so we should have chaplains in industry. For the Church must be where the men are and must be at the center of their lives, and not off in the periphery.

The third problem is morals. "Preach to men about how little they really know of Christian standards," he said. "Preach to them about the seventh commandment and they come up to you and say, 'But chaplain I am not married. Why can't I do as I please?' The Church has a tremendous task ahead," he concluded, "and the future of the Church lies in its ability to meet critical problems of education, denominationalism and morals that are facing it today."

INTER RACIAL MEETING IN LOUISVILLE

Louisville: — White, Negro and Japanese-American leaders joined forces here on February 9th for a city-wide, inter-racial inter-denominational forum. It was sponsored by the council of churches and the young people's commission of the city. It was largely attended by both white and colored, with many Episcopalians present, particularly young people and several of the clergy. Most of the discussion at the start was by older colored people, until an elderly Negro suggested that opportunity should be given to the white folks to say something. He also said it was supposed to be a young people's meeting and how about the older folks keeping quiet so they could learn something.

An aftermath of the meeting was a supper on February 11th, sponsored by the young people of St. Mark's Church, attended by both races, at which the speaker was the Rev. T. S. Ledbetter, the pastor of a Negro Congregational Church.

FINLAND ALSO LOOKS TO MOSCOW

Stockholm (by wireless):—Christian forces in Finland are seeking to reestablish their former international relations and are making overtures of friendship to Christians in the Soviet Union. The Evangelical Lutheran is the state Church in the country and more than 95 per cent of the population is Lutheran.

SAM SHOEMAKER ON RADIO

New York:—The Rev. Samuel M. Shoemaker, for twenty years the rector of Calvary, New York, and a leader for many years of the Buchmanite movement, is to start a series of Wednesday morning broadcasts over the blue network. The series starts on March 7th and will continue for four months.

URGES ATTENDANCE DURING LENT

North Plainfield, N. J.:—The Rev. R. B. Gribbon, rector of the Church of the Holy Cross, thinks that commuters ought to go to church during Lent. So he has New York parishes send him announcements of their weekday services which he announces each Sunday. "Few communicants are zealous enough to attend services in their own parishes when they have to catch trains at eight. But they might take time out at noon for the purpose." Good idea.

ARCHBISHOP WARNS OF MATERIALISM

Paris (by wireless): — Urging Frenchmen to unite for victory and "real justice," Archbishop Suhard of Paris, warned in a Lenten pastoral letter that "basic reforms" must not be sought in either communism or "excessive capitalism." The letter advocated "stable personal and family property and certain means of production necessary to human beings," but sanctioned community ownership "where this is in the interest of the general good." Cardinal Suhard cited Papal pronouncements against communism and excessive capitalism, naming their common fault materialism.

best way to do that is to put ourselves in other people's shoes." The kind of postwar world we have will largely depend on youth's present attitude toward neighbors of different races and creeds, she said, and urged the young people to help break down intolerance by thinking of people as individuals and "not as great lumps of people."

THEOPHILUS DELEGATION SEES UNION

Moscow (by wireless): — "There is every reason to hope for a complete reconciliation between the Russian Orthodox Church in America and the Moscow Patriarchate," Religious News Service was informed here by representatives of the autonomous American Church headed by Metropolitan Theophilus. The two delegates representing the portion of the American Church in schism since the Russian revolution are impressed by the "evident absence of canonical or dogmatical differences between believers here and in America, and foresee ever-closer collaboration and contact, especially after the war." Conversations with the newly-enthroned Patriarch Alexei are continuing "in the most cordial atmosphere." On leaving Moscow to return to the U.S. by plane by way of Alaska and San Francisco, a spokesman stated that the "results of the mission were favorable."

MRS. ROOSEVELT PLEADS TOLERANCE

Washington:—For the first time in her varied and busy career, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt has spoken from a church pulpit. The occasion was a religious youth meeting in the National City Christian Church here, at which she told 1,400 young people of several races and creeds, that "Peace is a stake for which you play day by day. You just don't wrap it up at the end of a war and say we have peace. We must learn to work as hard to maintain peace as we do to win wars."

The first lady admonished, "We must find a way to bridge the differences between peoples, and the

East Is East and West Is West

THE oldest schism, that between east and west, seems to be showing strong signs of renewed activity. On the one hand Rome has been busy trying to line up such countries as Spain, Portugal, Eire, French Canada, Italy, South America and certain elements in the United States. This combination cannot be said actually to have backed the present war effort but rather has been reactionary and even fascist. On the other hand Moscow, which has become the modern Constantinople, has succeeded in attaching to itself most of the Balkans, the Baltic states and large progressive elements in various other countries. There the dominant characteristic has been an all out prosecution of the war together with a strong trend toward collectivism. This whole issue has been high lighted by the recent meeting of the Orthodox Churches in Moscow where it was proposed by Metropolitan Benjamin of the United States that a World Federation of Orthodox Churches be formed.

Thus are religion and politics being worked together with somewhat common tendencies. Just as the faithful in Portugal look to the Vatican to defend the maintenance of their corporative state so the faithful in Czechoslavakia expect Moscow to keep an eye on their peoples government. Socialism and Orthodoxy versus Capitalism and Catholicism.

The question is at once raised what about the World Council of Churches and there is much cause for us to look seriously at our position in this whole alignment. At the present time the World Council is not much more than a paper organization, set up by a few leaders at the head of the Churches. This is partly due to its coming into existence shortly before the War; partly due to the heterogenious nature of Protestantism. However, great hopes lie in the future of the World Council in the growing unanimity in doctrine concerning Christ and the Church, but its social and political future is still a question mark. In both doctrine and social action much may come from a close relationship between the Council and Orthodox Christianity. In this alignment Rome's rigid dogmatic system will be faced not by a negative, undogmatic federation but by a positive, orthodox Christendom, alive to the world's real problems. A bad idea of the Church can be triumphed over only by a good idea of the Church in equally positive and dogmatic terms.

As we watch the course of the issues between Rome and Moscow from the social as well as the religious point of view we will increasingly see the need for the World Council to throw its fortunes with the orthodoxy of Moscow and thereby reach true effectiveness in social action.

"QUOTES"

LIVE your life while you have it. Life is a splendid gift. There is nothing small in it. For the greatest things grow by God's law out of the smallest. But to live your live you must discipline it. You must not fritter it away in "fair purpose, erring act, inconstant will," but must make your thoughts, your words, your acts, all work to the same end, and that end not self but God. That is what we call character.

—Florence Nightingale.

Yesterday and Today

IT IS the fashion for older people, especially in war time, to wag their heads and cluck over the present generation, and its hasty, ill-advised marriages. We have had the opportunity to watch hundreds of young people start life together; some very young, some youthful, and some more mature. Far from being alarmed, we have been impressed to see how well matched and purposeful these couples are, and to note that while they are supremely happy in their new estate, they are still mindful of the responsibilities of married life. Practically all have passed through a normal courtship; many of them have "kept company" since school days. Nowadays, with so many girls in business and professions, most young people are more practical and capable starting a home together, and winning their way than the young folks of grandma's time. We think all this apprehension one hears about dangers ahead is utterly silly.

Life was different in the good old days. Young men either went into business with father, or he helped them to find a job. Girls belonged at home, and there led sheltered lives, chaperoned and shielded from contact with, or knowledge of the world in general, and men in particular. Matches were largely arranged by fond parents with young men who were thought to have brilliant prospects. It was believed that young girls permitted to make their own plans would marry beneath their station, or that their loveliness and marriageability would be lessened by the slightest realization of the serious facts of life. A boy who called on a girl a few times, however decorously, was apt to be asked his intentions.

Today many outworn conventions have been scrapped. In a world where boys and girls play, study, and work together these canons have no bearing on their life. Both sides know the score, yet they are none the less ready for matrimony. The bloom is not off the peach because girls are free to choose their values, their way of living, and their sweethearts. It is true that business girls have less time to learn domestic arts before marriage, but business training makes for quick learning. What is more important is that young people today, with a better understanding of human relations and the biological urge, are better fitted to choose a mate than most of their elders.

God and Economics

By
CHARLES D. KEAN
Rector of Grace Church, Kirkwood, Missouri

ECONOMICS is the field of man's relationship to physical nature and it includes all the processes derived from that relationship. Man is dependent upon physical nature as the ultimate, if not always the immediate source of food, clothing, shelter, light and heat and all those other things that people regard as necessary perquisites in adequate living. Economic activity includes the means by which the material of physical nature is obtained, refined, processed, distributed, exchanged and consumed. While in a technical civilization these processes have become highly elaborated and have had joined to them certain abstract processes—such as money and credit—nevertheless the fundamental basis of all economics is man's relationship to physical nature, whence he derives the raw material for maintaining life.

Economic activity has always involved social institutions. Anthropologists, such as the late Professor Malinowski of Yale, do not believe there was ever a period when man engaged in economic enterprise even of the most primitive sort as a sole agent. On the other hand Professor Malinowski and others believe that the social institution has always anteceded economic enterprise, which is not to say that the development of new technical skills does not lead to the development of new institutions. The important fact is that economic activity even when confined to relatively simple enterprises of the manufacture and use of primitive implements, before the development of problems of distribution and exchange, has always been a social process. Therefore, economic activity is never and can never be found in pure form; but rather it is always coupled with political activity. In other words, man's relationship to physical nature always involves his relationship to human nature.

It is because economic activity has always involved a tension between men, as well as between man and nature, that it becomes a serious religious consideration. Even if there could be such a thing as pure economics, completely sundered from politics, it would still present a religious problem because it would present a strain to the human spirit. As matters stand, however, economics presents a double strain. Man in this world is not only in the position of wrestling with nature in order to force it to yield him a living, but he is also in the position of struggling with his fellow men at the same time. In a sense man always lives at the expense of his fellow-man but he is always in the position of struggling to increase any advantage he may have or to acquire such an advantage if he does not have it.

The problems of injustice and exploitation are rooted in the very nature of political economy. To the extent that a civilization has advanced technically, it has become not only more efficient in production, distribution and exchange; it has also elaborated necessarily its institutional machinery so that not only the economics but also the politics have become more complex. It does not require a very elaborate institution to provide the setting for the economic activity of the primitive tribe. It requires however a very elaborate institution with intricate patterns of human relationship to provide the setting for modern finance, industry and international trade. With the elaboration of the social institutions added scope has been given for injustice and exploitation.

The words, injustice and exploitation, have moral connotations. They imply the possibility of an equitable standard of human relations in the political and economic fields. These words have definite religious associations, but they are also rooted deeply in the history of civilization. Men have discovered over and over again in experience throughout history that while they need, use and abuse the institutions they create for economic ends at the same time no institution has ever satisfied them fully. It is obvious that people find varying degrees of satisfaction in the same institution depending upon how adequately it appears to serve them. It is not so obvious but it is equally true that the dissatisfaction men find in political and economic systems raises problems not only of personal convenience but also of moral value. It might be said that man's concepts of moral worth grow partly out of his frustrations in trying to live within the institutions he has evolved. As long as he is not frustrated he does not tend to ask questions about fitness, but when he is frustrated he tends not only to question the institutions themselves but also raise points of general validity—or moral law. Institutions likewise seek to justify themselves morally particularly when under criticism.

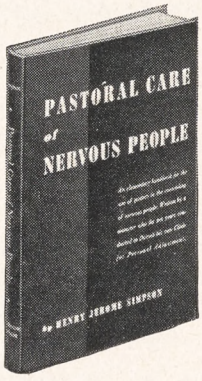
Since the earliest days men have tried to correlate their social institutions with their understandings of moral law. Every now and then a tolerable synthesis seems to have been achieved, at least to the extent that a sufficiently influential part of society is sold on it. But even the best synthesis is rendered obsolete before long by the change of events and frustration which never disappeared entirely becomes again a predominant issue. For example feudalism might be said to have represented such a tolerable synthesis granted its inadequacies and injustices in the eleventh century; and capitalism likewise in the nineteenth century. The relation of religion to economics like the relation of religion to every other aspect of man's life has its basis in man's experience of the limitations of moral law in concrete institutional situations.

THE Christian Church has always recognized that man's economic activity involved religious problems. The traditional way of dealing with the issue from the days of Saint Thomas Aquinas through the Malvern Manifesto has been to set forth a proposition. The first paragraph in the forward in service pamphlet on God and Economics in the series on The Doctrine of God is a good example of this approach. "God is the creator and sustainer of the world. He is above it and beyond it, yet nearer than hands and feet. He sustains it. Every breath we take, every beat of our hearts is there because God supports and directs us. Since he made the world everything in it is his: the rocks, the trees, the animals, men and all that has to do with men (except sin) are his. We did not make the world; God made it. The world is his. The earth is the Lord's. America is the Lord's. We are the Lord's." From such a premise, men's obligations and responsibilities toward his fellow-men in both economics and politics are deduced logically.

Approaching the problem of economics from the premise that God created the world has its definite value for the man of faith. As a basis to appeal to a non-Christian world it is not convincing. When men accept the proposition as a philosophical account of the origin of the universe, it becomes a mythological description of a first cause, but it does not motivate them generally to do anything. The old joke of the farmer's reply to the minister, "You should have seen this garden when God had it all by himself," is a healthy, normal reaction. To describe the universe as God's is meaningless unless man has discovered his own relationship to God.

There is a definite connection between God and economics that needs to be presented to this confused and war-torn world but it cannot be presented on the basis of a philosophical premise that is easy to accept but which does not necessarily lead to any feeling of personal or social responsibility. The connection is more vital when the economic problem is approached from the opposite direction.



The field of political economy is the field in which man comes into concrete contact with frustration and despair. The tension between man and nature is overarched by the tension between man and his fellow-man. The tension results in wars and depressions, with their destructive effects upon social institutions and their torment of the spirits of individuals. Man whose innate tendency is to assert the autonomy of himself as an individual, or of his group, even though he may intellectually subscribe to a theory that God made the universe, expresses this desire for autonomy—either individual or collective—most concretely in his economic and political relationships. And it is precisely in these relationships that his assertion of autonomy is most obviously vulnerable.

A non-Christian world is not searching for the Christian interpretation of its problem nor does it desire the Christian answer. It will always try to save itself and will achieve a relative success in doing so. The history of civilization is the history of what that relative success means—the survival of the race of man through continual wars and depressions, each one tending to be more serious than its predecessors. There is no reason why this history will not continue to follow the same pattern indefinitely. Man's answer to the problem is to maintain old and familiar social institutions even more desperately when they are threatened or to devise new ones. A non-Christian world always

By JOHN S. HIGGINS

"This Means of Grace is an attempt to illuminate, for Anglicans and non-Anglicans, the greatest service in our Prayer Book, the Holy Communion. It goes forth with the prayer that many will find new meanings in the lines and between the lines of our incomparable Liturgy, now tested by English-speaking peoples for almost four centuries." These are the words of the author and they express adequately what this book is about. The better we understand the service of the Holy Communion the better Christians we shall be. Clergymen will find this book a fine teaching medium on the Holy Communion.

And Was Crucified

Meditations for Good Friday on the Seven Last Words

By FRANK DAMROSCH, JR., Rector
St. Paul's Church, Doylestown, Pennsylvania

For the Clergy these meditations will be a real find, for preaching purposes. For the Laity, these meditations are fine devotional reading—an excellent preparation for the Queen of Feasts—Easter Day.

In the Introduction the author says: "If we try to empty ourselves of all self-centeredness, if we concentrate all our will, all our feeling upon loving the Jesus whose sufferings we are beholding, as we near the Seven Words there may well come to each of us some special blessing, some particular message, which will seem as though it were spoken especially for us. And in truth it is." Price, $1.25

The Sign of the Cross

By R. S. K. SEELEY, D.D.
Dean of Ontario, Provost of Trinity College

DEDICATED TO THE MEMBERS OF THE ROYAL AIR FORCE. This is the Canadian Lenten Book for 1945. The Foreword is by The Most Rev. Derwyn T. Owen, D.D., Primate of All Canada.

The purpose of the book is "to bring the cross out of the realm of theoretical doctrine and make it a living experience for individuals. If we can grasp the great principle of life which Jesus followed out even in His death, and if we can plan our lives in accordance with that principle, then we shall grasp the adventure of Christian living and find in it something that calls out all our noblest qualities and that satisfies our highest ideals."

Some of the chapter topics: The Cross and My Neighbour; The Cross and Myself; The Cross and The World Order. Price, $1.60

NERVOUS PEOPLE

WHEN THIS WAR is over and millions now in service return home, there is bound be an almost insurmountable problem of personal adjustment — the returning man in uniform, the returning woman in uniform, the milies themselves. Even now thousands of rvice men are being released and many clergyen have already experienced pastoral work of special nature.

The Reverend Henry J. Simpson has written book for his fellow clergymen—a book which is sorely needed—a book backed by practical and clinical experience—a book which is both a treatise on, and a guide to the care of nervous people.

Questions concerning mental habits, emotional life, home training, the ideals, the aims and purposes of life, fears, anxieties, confusion over the meaning of life and religion—all of these come within the field of pastoral work. And the Pastor is in a unique position to deal with people in need of care along these lines. Price, $2.25

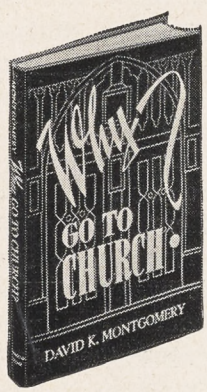
Why Go To Church?



By

DAVID K. MONTGOMERY

Rector, St. Peter's Church, Morristown, N. J.

A Book for Laymen. Why go to Church is a perennial topic and the Reverend David K. Montgomery has written a very enlightening book on this topic. We go to church but for one reason—to Worship. "To worship means to give the best you have, and the best you are, to the best you know."

Many people, says the author, lack reality in their church-going and the reason is that the Holy Spirit has not penetratedtheir lives. You will find this book modern in the sense that it discusses men and women of today —their relationship to one another and their relationship to God.

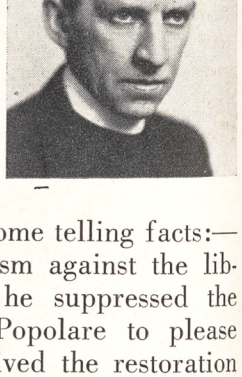
believes that the correct system will end the problem, forgetting that, while man cannot live in history without social institutions, the institutions themselves are part of the problem with which he is confronted because no institution is safe from being used for purposes of individual and group aggrandizement.

The connection between God and economics becomes relevant only when man's despair is utilized to bring him into relationship with God and his economic enterprise can be shown to be among the concrete causes for his despair. This does not mean that Christian man—man who has discovered his dependence upon God—will have more adequate political and economic insights than non-Christian man. It means rather that Christian man has a new and different relationship to the problem. To the extent that he desires to use the traditional phrasing of the God-and-economics premise it makes sense.

As long as history continues men will be wrestling with nature and with their fellow-men in the elaboration of economic and political processes. Even the most adequate system of organization soon becomes obsolete as technology advances forcing new relationships upon a world that has not really adjusted to its previous situation. Christian man recognizes that this area of tension which is of the very stuff of history is among the most concrete occasions in which to discover continually his own sinfulness and need for redemption. This does not mean that he can evade attempting to solve the political and economic problem of his age in terms of specifics. Rather to the very extent that he has a Christian faith he will be driven by the urgency to face immediate problems as intelligently and completely as possible. But he will not equate his provisional solutions which are the only solutions he can make with the Kingdom of God. Rather he will recognize that "the earth is the Lord's," particularly in the sense of the statement in Acts—"It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power."

The fact that man in history is necessarily involved in economic and political enterprises—without them he dies—means that he is inevitably involved in situations that strain his spirit, in which he will continually arrogate autonomy to himself, to his group and to his nation. Therefore Christian man discovers in the very inevitability of political and economic life the basis of his dependence upon God because their problems drive him to despair. When he thinks of the contemporary world of war and the unsolved issues that lie ahead he will face these problems as resolutely as he can knowing that he himself is part of the difficulty. On this basis he can accept the traditional premise and take seriously the moral obligations and responsibilities deduced from them.



QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

1. How would you define economics?
2. Has it ever been possible for an individual to engage in economic activity alone?
3. Why must religion be concerned with economics?
4. Do you think that our present economic society is immoral?
5. What are some of the causes of tensions in American life? In international life?
6. Is it true of you personally that the difficulty of economic problems make you more dependent on God?

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

EDGAR ANSEL MOWRER, now a columnist for the New York Post, is generally recognized as one of the world's foremost journalists. He has been in all parts of the world and is distinguished not only for the accuracy of his reporting but perhaps even more for his analyses of the news he presents. The other day he had a piece examining the speech made at Christmas by the Pope which was hailed as proof that the Vatican is now a champion of the democratic cause.

Mowrer however went to the record and came up with some telling facts:—that the Pope supported fascism against the liberal Italian monarchy; that he suppressed the Catholic democratic Partito Popolare to please Mussolini (for which he received the restoration of temporal power for the Vatican and also a bunch of cash). He then told of reporting from Berlin where he "watched with fascinated horror the democratic Catholic Center Party slowly abate its resistance to the Nazis, with Msgr. Kaas, its titular head, slowly yielding to arguments from Rome until the final capitulation to Hitler which opened the door to Germany's attack on the human race." In Spain, where Mowrer witnessed the rise of Franco, he reports that Spanish clergy told him of the pressure they had "from above" to support fascism; again in France, where he was stationed in 1940, he says that the hierarchy was not only visibly but avowedly anti-republican.

He ends by asking a number of questions which he says would help the non-Catholic to make up his mind whether the Pope really did mean what he said at Christmas time. "Would the American Catholics, if they became a majority, permit us dissenting minorities the full exercise of all the rights which the Catholic minority enjoys now? Would they oppose with their lives any attempt to suppress American democracy, meaning majority rule through democratic process—as the Italian Partito Popolare and the German Center Party did not?"

AS FAR as I know no official of the Roman Catholic Church in this country or elsewhere has seen fit to answer these questions. Of course we all know devout Catholics who would and do give a ringing and a fighting "yes" to both these questions. But anyone who has taken a look at Rome in Mexico, Spain, Quebec and elsewhere where it is the majority would have to agree with Mowrer, and incidentally with the editorial in this number of THE WITNESS, that the hierarchy "cannot be said actually to have backed the present war effort but rather has been reactionary and even fascist."

But there is more to it than this—and I am as concerned about this second part as I am with the first. On the day Mowrer's piece appeared, and on the same page, the owner and editor of the Post ran an editorial in which he bawled out his columnist for writing as he did. There was no answering the facts; no charge that Mowrer had wrongly interpreted the facts. It was simply that in the opinion of the editor the Catholic readers of the Post would feel that they had been insulted. And if you don't think this sacred-cow policy, established on most secular newspapers, is real just go into a huddle sometime with some of your newspaper friends. Rome is powerful; Rome is organized; Rome boycotts. Every newspaper publisher knows it so the order goes down that nothing critical is to be said about the Roman Catholic Church. A former reporter of a big metropolitan daily told me, in discussing this article by Mowrer, that no reporter on that daily would think of writing anything critical of Rome. On the conservative papers it means your job. On the liberal New York Post it meant that a top columnist like Mowrer got publicly scolded by his boss. "Give people the light and they will find their own way" is the slogan of one national chain of newspapers. But no ray of light is turned on the power politics of the Roman Church and to that extent at least freedom of the press does not exist in these United States. And that, incidentally, is why the little papers—the independent weeklies including the religious press—can, if we do our jobs, be guardians of our American heritage.

Excellent Good *Fair

_Alfred Loisy, His Religious Significance._ By M. D. Petre, Cambridge University Press (New York, Macmillan). $2.00.

The purpose of this little book is to bring out the genuinely religious point of view and thought of the great modernist. The author was for many years his personal friend and, though remaining a Roman Catholic, one who appreciated the problems Loisy faced and sympathized with his attitudes and attempted solutions of his problems.

Miss Petre insists that Loisy was really a deeply spiritual man and will eventually come into his own — some day it will be discovered that he contributed more to the future than to the present. The book contains a good account of the modernist movement and then a sketch of Loisy's critical views, theology, and philosophy. A final chapter sums up his significance.

It is difficult to see how under the conditions of the times the modernist movement could have succeeded. At the same time it is a great pity that it was completely condemned, with the result that Roman theology became more reactionary and impervious to Biblical criticism and to modern science than it was before the rise of modernism. It is one of the values of this little book that it helps us to understand the present by throwing light upon the immediate past.

The Serbian Orthodox Church Also Turns to Moscow

Declares That the Conference of Orthodox Churches of Greatest Importance to World

Edited by Rita Ruben

Moscow (by wireless): — Soviet newspapers gave prominence to a lengthy statement issued in Belgrade by delegates of the Serbian Orthodox Church following their return from the Moscow conference of the general council of the Russian Orthodox Church. The delegation was headed by Metropolitan Josip of Skoplje, representing Patriarch Gavrilo, who is being held prisoner in Germany. The Serbs were particularly interested in religious life in Moscow, and every day during their stay visited churches, which they described as "richly appointed, full of light and provided with excellent choirs. These divine temples are bearing witness to the full religious liberty and happy conditions in which the Russian Church is functioning."

The statement declared the participation of all Orthodox Churches in the recent conference of the greatest importance not only for the Russian Church but for the whole Orthodox world. They extended their "heartfelt love toward the fraternal Soviet people and mother Russia, the great defender of the Slavs." (See Editorial, page seven)

Michigan Convocation

Detroit:—"The Church school today for a Christian world tomorrow" is the theme of a four-session institute for Church school teachers of churches of east side Detroit, held on the first four Monday evenings in Lent at St. Columba's Church. Bishop Frank Creighton will speak at the last session, March 12.

Speaks of China

Boston: — "Christianity has done little more than establish a good beachhead in China," said the Rev. Wynn C. Fairfield of the American board of commissioners for foreign missions, when addressing the seminar on Christianity and the postwar world, conducted by the diocesan school in the cathedral, Feb. 15. Dr. Fairfield pointed out that although not more than two million of China's 450 millions are Christian, one in ten of all university students is in a Christian university. Christianity has favorable standing and influence among educated people, and among all of the people, because of their record of war service. He deemed it the responsibility of Christianity to render humanitarian service, not as bait to win souls but to give a genuine revelation of the spirit of Christ. He sees many complex problems facing China in the future. Among them he mentioned that of unifying the country for effective external security without becoming totalitarian internally; of how to finance industrial development without exploiting cheap labor for the benefit of the wealthy few, and of how to build a strong country without enough leaders with the requisite ideals of public service in any rank of public life.

Youth Leaders

Paris (by wireless): — Urgent need for training schools to prepare young people for evangelistic work in France was stressed at a seven-day session of religious youth leaders at St. Cloud, near Paris. Despite the acute lack of transportation, food and heat, 50 persons attended the conference, including national secretaries of federated movements within the Protestant youth council, and members of the CIMADE, a combined committee for the care of evacuees. After years of isolation it provided the young people with their first opportunity to renew contacts with the outside world and speakers gave accounts of church developments in the United States, England, South America, and other places. Dr. W. A. Visser't Hooft, secretary of the World Council of Churches at Geneva, presented four lectures on the application of the Bible to the study of social and political problems. Two young communists discussed the party's program for France and in Soviet Russia.

Clergymen Decline

New York:—Information Service, weekly bulletin of the Federal Council of Churches, reported in its current issue that the number of clergymen in the U.S. declined from an all-time high of 148,848 in 1930 to 140,077 in 1940, a loss of 8,771. Quoting figures of the bureau of census, totals for 1910 were given as 117,333 and for 1920 as 125,483. It was also pointed out that the number of clergymen per 100,000 population was considerably less in 1940 than in 1910. The number of women serving as clergymen has been increasing steadily the figures show rising from 1,787 in 1920 to 3,276 in 1930, and to 3,308 in 1940. "The total number of persons who consider themselves 'ministers' is larger than the number classified as 'clergymen,'" Information Service commented, "but figures for total number of ministers have not been gathered during recent years."

Rector Honored

San Antonio:—About 500 people called at the parish house of Christ Church on Sunday, Feb. 11, to honor the fifteenth anniversary of Rev. Samuel Orr Capers as rector of the Church. The congregation presented the minister and his wife with a pair of antique crystal mantel vases.

Meeting Canceled

New York:—The meeting of the National Council scheduled for April 24-26 will not be held. Presiding Bishop Tucker announced that on the advice of the officers of the council, the meeting could be omitted without undue interference with their work. The resolution was made in the spirit of cooperation with the ODT.

Russian Aid

Middlesboro, Ky.: — Every parish and mission in the diocese of Lexington has assumed its quota of one thousand kits for Russian War Relief. The fourth province has set itself a goal of fifty thousand kits.

Student Opinion

Montreal:—A sharp distinction between "religion" and "church attendance" was made in a survey conducted here among 718 representative high school students by the community council of the west end district of Notre Dame de Grace. To the question "do you feel that religion is a help to you personally?" 77 per cent answered "yes," but 61 per cent stated that Church attendance helped them very little or not at all toward being a better person. Seventy-one per cent expressed a desire to "know more about religion." Students questioned ranged in age from 14 to 19, with most of them between 16 and 18. The district where the survey was made is mostly Protestant, with a sprinkling of Roman Catholics and Jews. The community council embraces all the faiths. Three things "chiefly wrong with the world" were given by the students as racial prejudice and discrimination, war, and selfishness and greed. A large number also listed religious intolerance, and nationalism.

Plans for Food

New York:—John Van Wie Bergamini, widely known church architect, lost the product of two years' work recently at Bilibud prison in the Philippines. These were the plans and blue prints for the Central China College at Wuchang. "The data are almost impossible to collect again," said Bergamini. "I made two sets of plans but the one which was left in China I'll certainly never see again." He offered a reward of all the tinned food in his possession to anyone returning the plans. It is probable that Mr. Bergamini has now been liberated by the Americans.

Praises Yalta

Moscow (by wireless): — Patriarch Alexei of the Russian Orthodox Church in a statement hailed the decisions of the Big Three conference at Yalta as a "shining expression of Christian yearning" and a step toward "a firm basis for peace throughout the world. "His message said, "A firm basis for peace throughout the world has been established. Peace on earth, for which the Church ceaselessly prays, is seen in a future not far distant. Crushed forever will be the scourge of the earth, German Fascism — crushed by the power of the valorous warriors of the United Nations and by the wisdom of our great Stalin and the heads of the governments allied with us."

Exchange Students

London (By Wireless):—Plans for resumption of scholarships for continental theological students are progressing rapidly in England and Scotland, according to J. Hutchinson Cockburn, former moderator of the Church of Scotland who was recently named British secretary of the department of reconstruction and inter-church aid of the World Council of Churches. Cockburn said that a committee from Scottish divinity schools have been in conference with English divinity school representatives to bring ministerial candidates from the continent to Great Britain for study on scholarships.

Notable Progress In Virginia

By S. B. Chilton

Virginia Correspondent

Richmond: — Eighteen of the thirty-five parishes and churches of the diocese of Virginia receiving aid from the diocesan missionary society in paying the salaries of their rectors have made notable progress toward self-support for 1945. The Chapel of St. Clement in Alexandria leads. Late in 1943 the diocese appointed the Rev. Darby W. Betts as missionary to organize a congregation in a new development in Alexandria and to build a church. His salary and house rent had to be paid in full by the diocese. On Easter Sunday the Chapel of St. Clement, built largely through money given by the diocese, opened its doors for its first service. In 1945 this chapel is entirely self-supporting and has accepted a small quota for the missionary work of the diocese and general Church. This is a notable achievement and one that has few parallels anywhere in the whole country.

Trinity Church, Arlington, where the Rev. A. C. Muller has been rector since 1942, continues to make outstanding progress. Three years ago this congregation was worshipping in a very inadequate building and could pay only $750 toward its minister's salary. Since then the building has been remodeled and enlarged at a cost of over $14,000. The parish is now paying $2,500 toward the minister's salary and has accepted a quota of $800 for the program of the diocese in addition to curtailing its indebtedness annually. Trinity has shown steady, well-rounded growth, building up its congregation, its missionary giving and self-support in a very satisfactory manner. In the rural area, Madison Parish in Loudoun County deserves special mention. In 1939 the diocese was contributing over $1,200 per year toward its minister's support. Under the leadership of the present rector, the Rev. Paul E. Shultz, this amount has been gradually reduced until now the parish is entirely self-supporting. In the archdeaconry of the Blue Ridge the cure of the Rev. Dewey C. Loving has increased its giving toward his salary by $200. Among the colored congregations the largest increase is at Meade Memorial Church, Alexandria where the Rev. A. Myron Cochran is rector. Other notable achievements were made by St. John's Church, West Point, Church of Our Saviour, Sandston, Grace Church, Arlington, Grace, Stanardsville, Overwharton Parish, Stafford, Christ Church, Brandy, Christ Church, Luray, Varina Church, Varina, Meade Memorial Church, White Post, Trinity Church, Charlottesville, and the churches in the cure of the Rev. Thomas D. Brown.

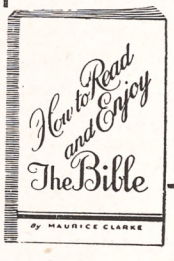
In some cases the diocese made a saving in its appropriation of the entire amount of the increase made by the parish. In other cases, it was felt that an increased salary was urgent and so the diocese matched the parish in accomplishing this. The net saving to the diocese is approximately $5,000 per year.

Liberated France Ruined

London:—A grim account of conditions in liberated France was given here by Roger C. Wilson, secretary of the British Quakers, who reported that destruction at Le Havre, Calais, and Boulogne was even worse than the havoc wrought by the blitz of Great Britain. "I was deeply impressed with the spiritual quality that is struggling for life in liberated France," Wilson said. "There is little reason for believing that the occupation and Vichy regimes were any less bad than our worst fears. An experience of this sort both debases and exalts the human spirit. To be free from the need to be cunning is liberation indeed, but to put off habits of cunning and to maintain a sense of achievement in an environment where all physical movement and creation are frustrated by lack of materials is difficult. What France needs badly is the sense that honest striving gets somewhere; in religious terms, that real worship gives men power to endure and live."

Costumes

London: — According to the Scottish Guardian, vestments may be costumes. Five new bishops raised to the Episcopal bench in wartime were confronted with the embarrassing problem: How were they to perform the rites attending their office without the necessary vestments in a time of clothing rationing? No garments could be obtained without coupons. A special application was made to the ministry of supply and sympathetically considered. But the authorities would take no risk. When the special issue of coupons arrived, each one was stamped, "For theatrical purposes only."



Nazi Prisoners

Stockholm (by wireless):—Twelve Lutheran clergymen are being held prisoners by the Nazis in German-occupied Denmark, and two others have been sent to concentration camps in Germany, according to latest information here. Most recently arrested were Pastors Magle of Toender, Melby of Birkeroed, and Julius Rasmussen of Hadsten. Pastor Riis Hoejgaard of Riise, was transferred to Kolding from Foeslev, where he was said to have exerted "too much influence" over other prisoners. Meanwhile, Danish refugee clergymen formerly connected with the Danish underground church press have started a newspaper here for fellow exiles. Known as the Dansk Kirke (Danish Church), the publication already has a circulation of 17,000.

ROLLS OF HONOR BOARDS

Those of your Church Membership who have enrolled in the armed forces have earned a tribute which should have a permanent place in your minds.

To preserve this record, to know the full name of each, to pay tribute to them, is the purpose of the "Roll of Honor."

Tastefully designed and skillfully executed these beautiful walnut boards are restrained and dignified enough to blend with any church surroundings. They are inexpensive, yet so skillfully made that they provide an excellent tribute to those who are serving.

The panel is 7/8" thick, is built up of five-ply board, finished in walnut veneer and the decorative detail is a gold toned finish, to blend with any Church furnishings.

The eagle of serviceable plastic wood with the olive branch, represents the eagle of peace.

A sturdy, beveled gold edged card in walnut tone (¾ in. x 3½ in.), with each name lettered in gold, makes the completed board handsome and durable.

Uniform Laws

Washington:—A joint resolution, proposing an amendment to the constitution relating to the establishment of uniform laws on marriage and divorce, has been introduced in Congress by Rep. Homer Ramey (R., Ohio) who declared he wanted to "drive a wedge into the practice of making marriage and divorce a joke." The great discrepancies in the separate state practices would be nullified by Ramey's proposal that Congress set certain basic requirements for marriage and divorce, that states could supplement with their own legislation, provided it conformed with the federal law. Congressman Ramey belongs to the Christian Science Church.

Thanks Soviets

Moscow (by wireless):—Patriarch Nicodemus of the Rumanian Orthodox Church has publicly expressed thanks to Soviet troops for their "kindness" and for measures "to safeguard Rumanian monasteries," according to a Bucharest radio broadcast reported in Moscow newspapers. The patriarch's statement was made in a letter to Lt. Gen. Vinogradov, vice chairman of the allied control commission.

Independent Action

Cincinnati: — A communication over the signature of the chancellor of the Roman Catholic archdiocese of Cincinnati, Msgr. John K. Mussio, and addressed to priests of this area, instructed that "Catholics should not participate in any public presentation with members of other faiths under the auspices of religion." The letter explained that interfaith action of a public character was forbidden by pontifical law, since the Catholic religion was "the only true faith" and such action might give the impression "that one religion is as good as another or that Catholics must strive with those of other faiths for a common denominator in religion." The chancellor reaffirmed Catholic good will—and said that social and civic organizations who strive to promote the acceptance of a personal omnipotent God and the supremacy of the moral law, can count on the cooperation of Catholic people in joint action.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD
Managing Editor of THE WITNESS

The so-called family prayer attributed to Archbishop Temple (WITNESS, Feb. 8) was not written by him. Neither did Mrs. Reinhold Niebuhr intend to submit it, as stated in that number. By some chance and mistake it was written on the back of a note from Mrs. Niebuhr accompanying a missing page of her article on Dr. Temple and never was intended for publication. It has also been pointed out to us that the limerick in the article by the Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher (Feb. 1) was also erroneously ascribed to the Archbishop. The author was the Rev. Ronald Preston, a friend both of the Archbishop and of Professor Niebuhr.

MR. P. A. MOORE
Layman of New York

Your account of the meeting of the House of Bishops listed Bishop Cameron Davis of Western New York among those bishops who has reached the age of seventy-two. I think I am correct in stating that he does not reach that age until this coming December.

ANSWER: Mr. Moore is correct and we apologize to Bishop Davis and our readers. We subtracted the year he was born, 1873, from 1945 and came out 72. We failed to take into consideration that there are twelve months in the year in which a person can be born. Sorry.

MR. R. I. CATLIN
Layman of Hartford, Conn.

After reading THE WITNESS for many years I am prompted to offer the following comments which can be printed in Backfire if you wish. The title Back-slaps would be more appropriate than Backfire. After reading the editorials in the February 8th number (on Henry Wallace and the National Service Act) I'd suggest THE WITNESS return to the editorials of Bishop Johnson which gave us some spiritual food to feed upon. Are there not enough divisions in Christ's Church already? The present editorial policy of THE WITNESS will in my judgment create further separations and bitterness. Let's remember the prayer of Jesus "that they may be one." I strive to be tolerant and broad-minded and to view the present problems as a Christian but after reviewing THE WITNESS each week I must confess I fail to get the spiritual uplift and guidance which I feel I should receive from a Church magazine.

I read Forward and the Upper Room every day and there is no comparison in the reaction I get from these and THE WITNESS. Accordingly if the present policy is to persist I think I shall be better off if you will terminate my subscription.

MR. CAREY E. HAIGLER

The January 25th number of THE WITNESS is one of the most interesting issues of any magazine that it has been my pleasure to read recently. Thank you for it.

CARL F. SWARTZ
Layman of Erie, Pa.

I want to thank THE WITNESS for the very fine articles in the Labor number. I believe that articles such as those will help to bring the churches and labor organizations closer together, making for a better and truer democracy.

THE REV. F. K. HOWARD
Berkeley, California

Allow me to express my delight with your Temple number with the excellent tributes to the late Archbishop of Canterbury. While all of the articles were very good the one by Dr. Fletcher seemed to me to do justice both to the Dogma of the Drama and to its able exponent, William Temple. He certainly was a "central churchman" but no stand-patter for an exclusive Anglicanism, for his mind and activities extended out to the entire Christian fellowship. He might have been too liberal for certain types of Catholics and too catholic for certain kinds of liberals but he certainly appealed to every one endeavoring to keep "the unity of the faith in the bond of peace and in righteousness of life." He made one proud to be an Anglican as long as the Church remains divided.

THE REV. BRADFORD YOUNG
Rector of Grace Church, Manchester, N. H.

The plan of action for 1945-6 as presented to the House of Bishops reads very well. No doubt it will coordinate better the National Council, the diocese and parishes. But that will not help the parishes very much so long as the other non-Episcopal churches in the local community are not also united on the projects. The United Church appeal has shown what can be done in the way of newspaper and radio publicity locally as well as nationally when the churches work together at one time and in one place. Also the emergency clothing drive. These techniques of interchurch planning at denominational and Federal Council headquarters for interchurch promotion in the local community ought to be extended to youth Sundays, men's communions and evangelistic and social gospel emphases. Of course I am glad to be observing youth Sunday when Episcopal parishes in my diocese and nation are celebrating it. But I am sure it will be observed much more effectively when Baptists, Methodists, Congregationalists and Episcopalians in this city do it together. We all agree that the world can be won only by more united Christian action. Is headquarters uninterested or unable to promote such action where it will count most?

Leaders of Church and Labor Discuss Many Problems

Dean Lichtenberger Declares That Church Must Be Concerned With Economic Questions

By Rita Ruben

Newark, N. J.: — Representatives of the Church and labor held a joint conference here last week, meeting in the diocesan house, where they discussed problems of women working in industry and on farms in the state. The conference was sponsored jointly by the Auxiliaries and the social service departments of the two dioceses of New Jersey.

Leading off was Dean Arthur Lichtenberger of Newark Cathedral and an editor of THE WITNESS who deplored the attitude of many people who maintain that "the Church must not concern itself with social institutions and systems, that the structure of the economic order, its motives, its effect on the common life is beyond the reach of Christian doctrine."

The dean said an effort was needed in each diocese and in parishes "not only to learn about conditions in industry, but to learn what people who perform the ordinary jobs in business and industry are thinking about, to make use of their social experience, their practical knowledge of what it means to act collectively."

Mrs. Dorothy Chase, representing the CIO, asserted that "an examination of the crevices of a window sill for dirt" does not constitute the understanding, guidance and warmth which a mother must give to make a home.

Explaining that she herself is a mother, she added that woman can make a better contribution "when not bowed down with tedious household details. The majority of women today in industry expect to continue working. The postwar project of 60,000,000 jobs has got to be accomplished."

A picture of the deplorable condition of migratory workers was painted by Rev. C. Melville Wright. He outlined Bill A 143 pending in the state legislature, which he said was "in principle fine but in details needs a lot of improvement."

A plea for a fair employment practices committee in all levels was made by Mrs. Escobedo Possey, occupational analyst for WMC, who described the situation of Negro women in industry and called discrimination against Negroes "a senseless waste of human facilities."

Mrs. John O'Neal, an AFL member of Camden, told of efforts made by her union and the CIO in Camden to meet the child delinquency problem through the parent guidance bureau.

"The philosophy of labor is practically the philosophy of religion. For the sake of future peoples in the postwar world I beg labor and religion to understand each other's goals and find out that what we are interested in is the living community," she said.

Miss Evelyn Dubrow of the CIO termed the legislative program of her union as the "crux" of its educational work and enumerated some measures it sponsors. The program is "not narrow—it is drawn up as an approach for all citizenry. We may make mistakes, but we do make the effort," she said.

A last minute report of the progress of the migratory workers bill was given by Miss Mary Dyckman, vice president of the Consumers' League.

Mrs. Frederick A. Whitney, chairman of the Christian social relations department of the Woman's Auxiliary of Newark and Mrs. Gulian Lansing, who holds a similar position in the New Jersey diocese, presided at the afternoon and evening sessions. Bishop Ludlow of Newark summarized the earlier session and Ven. Robert D. Smith, canon for social service of New Jersey diocese, was leader at the afternoon discussion.

Churchmen in the news: Henry Pit Van Dusen, president-elect of Union Seminary, will speak on the returning soldier at a service in New York on March 12: Dean Arthur Lichtenberger of Newark and a WITNESS editor who was a leader at the Church-Labor conference in New Jersey; Prof. Sherman Johnson who will teach at the special seminar at E.T.S. this summer for leaders in religious education

BLOODGOOD TRAVELS BY TANKER

New York:—When the Rev. Dr. Francis J. Bloodgood sailed to England on his way to the Middle East recently, he traveled in a convoy of tankers, he being the only passenger on one tanker, and occupying the captain's cabin. Bloodgood wrote stating that while on board the Swedish captain asked him to bless the ship which he did with a special form of service. "War Tankers Emergency is a fine outfit," he writes. "The naval gun crew is ably handled and Gen. MacNaughton of the ministry of defense in Canada was not kidding about a certain kind of fish being on the prowl. The American and British navy are good escorts."

FATHER AND DAUGHTER CONFIRMED

Jackson, Mich.:—Rev. Howard V. Harper, rector of St. Paul's Church, Jackson, is about to add to his parish list the name of a young army nurse who is the first American army nurse so far as is known, to be confirmed in England. Lt. Dorothy McRae who has been overseas for about a year came from Jackson but had not affiliated with a parish before her departure. Her father, George S. McRae, became interested in the church and entered the confirmation class being sponsored by Mr. Harper for the visit of Bishop Frank W. Creighton on April 15. Mr. McRae interested his daughter in taking a similar step, and as a result of their correspondence, Lt. McRae requested preparation in St. Michael's Church, Oxford, England, and will be confirmed in time to have her transfer to St. Paul's, Jackson, and be enrolled as a communicant of the parish when her father is confirmed in April.

MORE MISSIONARIES RELEASED

New York: — Additional names are reaching the National Council, showing other missionaries released from internment in the Philippines. The newest list includes Mrs. Robert F. Wilner, wife of the Suffragan Bishop, the Rev. Francis Campbell Gray, Mrs. John Mears, and her daughter Kathleen, Miss Ada Clark, Miss Nellie McKim, Sister Isabel and Sister Eunice.

HEADS DELEGATION TO ENGLAND

Moscow (by wireless): — Metropolitan Nicolai of Krutitsky, second ranking prelate of the Russian Orthodox Church, has been appointed by Patriarch Alexei to head a delegation to confer in England with leading Churchmen.

INTERRACIAL SERVICE IN MINNEAPOLIS

Minneapolis: — More than 1,200 people, of many races and denominations, crowded St. Mark's Cathedral recently for an inter-racial service of worship. Taking part in the service were ministers of all denominations and several racial groups; the choirs were composed of both white and colored. Commenting on the service in a Negro newspaper, the Rev. Clarence T. R. Nelson wrote: "I have been in many services in many parts of the country, but this service ranks high in my thinking as truly significant. As I looked over that vast audience and observed white and Negro, rich and poor, employer and employee sitting (and standing for many were standing) and entering into the spirit of the service, I thought that this is the way God wants people to live, not just one day a year, but every day!"

CHINESE INFLATION IS REAL

China:—Francis Wei and John Coe recently received certificates from the ministry of education in recognition of their years of service in China. It carries with it a gift of $10,000 in Chinese currency. And in order that you may know what $10,000 Chinese buys today we report that Mrs. Coe says that the gift will be used to help buy her husband a couple of pair of khaki pants. She says: "We have great difficulty in finding dust cloths and dish rags these days for they are all serving as underwear or pajamas." Something for you to think about when you consider whether or not you should make a donation to aid the Rev. Kimber Den in his work. Fifteen American dollars, even in these inflationary times, takes care of a Chinese orphan for a month.

These Chinese orphans are among the hundreds being cared for by the Rev. Kimber Den. With inflation increasing he wonders how long he will be able to continue his great work. But it is still possible to feed and clothe a child for a month for $15. If you wish to "adopt" a Chinese child send your donation to the CLID, 155 Washington St., New York 6

BISHOP ZEIGLER IN EAST

Baltimore: — Bishop Zeigler of Wyoming has recently concluded a number of speaking engagements in Maryland. He is now in New Jersey assisting Bishop Gardner with confirmations. One of his most telling stories is of the Rev. John Roberts, now 92 years old. He has been in Wyoming for 62 years, coming from Wales to America and then by stage coach to Green River, Wyoming. Arriving at a time when the chief of the Shoshone Indians had determined to kill the first white man he encountered, because he was under the impression that his son had been killed by a white man, Dr. Roberts went to see the chief, who asked him why he had come. Roberts replied "It won't do for you to kill me because then the authorities will kill you. You are too important to your people." From this he continued telling him the story of his Master, with the result that the chief was later baptized and confirmed.

LOT OF MARRIAGES AT LITTLE CHURCH

New York:—There were 1,675 marriages performed in 1944 at the Church of the Transfiguration, popularly known as the Little Church Around the Corner. The ceremonies were witnessed by 33,500 persons and 14,898 signed the visitors' book as sightseers. Registrants were from every state in the union.

Democracy in Home Is Similar To Relations in State

Churchwoman Draws an Interesting Parallel Between Well Run Home and State Relations

By Esther deB. Vermooten

Editor's Note:—Mrs. Esther deB. Vermooten, Churchwoman of San Antonio, was recently asked to address the parent-teachers association of a local school on how best to bring up children. She is the wife of a major in the medical corps stationed in that city and is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry R. Robins of Philadelphia. Mr. Robins is the rector's warden of Christ Church. Her address follows:

To open this discussion of democracy in the home, I wish first of all to emphasize that like democracy in national government, the achievement and accomplishment often fall far short of the ideal towards which one has been working. One hundred and sixty-nine years of American national life have shown up the large part played by human fallibility and frailty—often to the great discouragement and disillusionment of the idealists who have hoped for Utopia over night. This is not to say that those ideals towards which we work need be lowered in the face of those same discouragements and periods of depression—moral and spiritual as well as material. The ideal itself remains—the higher the better—and "hope springs eternal" that the ultimate goal of the truly greatest good for the greatest number may in time be achieved.

Applying this principal to the "home democracy" I think the first and most important rule to observe is "Do not expect too much too soon." Even given almost ideal material surroundings, reasonable intelligence on the part of parents and good average material in the children, there are many moments when one wonders if any headway is being made at all—if the democracy is becoming a maternal dictatorship, if the reins of government are falling into the hands of a small tyrant, only too glad to assume control and impose his will by fair means or foul upon those who would control his budding ambition to be superman. Again, when "domestic relations" between brothers and sisters or "foreign policy" with small playmates seem to be dictated only by the promptings of primitive savagery, one may feel that one of the more inaccessible desert islands will provide the only solution of the difficulty.

I wonder if most of us go through these periods of gloom, upheaval and depression as I certainly have. In my own case, at least, they have been of mercifully short duration, and given good health, a chance to gain a perspective on the relative unimportance of the specific problem aided by a saving sense of humor, the storm can usually be weathered without the sacrifice of too much "canvas" in the shape of fundamental principles.

To compensate, there are times when quite unexpectedly, like a shaft of sunlight in the midst of gloom, one will be granted a small bit of undoubted proof that some tiny part of the ideal has been accomplished. They are the rewards that keep us going and are worth all the care and trouble involved in the steering of one's own small ship of state.

I have been considerably diverted in drawing the parallel between the national democracy and that of the home unit and particularly in "breaking it down" into specific comparisons. Assuming that in its ideal form democracy is the most adult form of self government (as our American tradition teaches us that it is) we may begin our analysis at the moment when two adults are given a new life for whose physical being and mental, moral and spiritual training they are to be chiefly responsible. It is a new and often terrifying experience which at the outset can only be assumed a day at a time, gradually discovering how to look ahead and plan to best advantage how to meet the problems as they arise, always remembering not to plan too inflexibly as that way lies the sure path to disappointment.

This earliest period may be likened to a benevolent despotism—dictatorship these days has a sinister connotation — with the power centralized, usually so much in the hands of one parent that it might be

It is lads like these who show by their smiles that they have been brought up in a happy home where home democracy is practised. They are also closely tied up with the parish church and go there often to play games as well as to worship called a matriarchiate, while the father temporarily surrenders many of his previous rights and privileges in exchange for the prestige of serving as prime minister, chancellor of the exchecquer, and proud exhibitor to visitors from neighboring states.

The "government" at this stage, though the gentlest and most benevolent of autocracies should strive in its relations with the small personality over which it has control, to strike a balance between unnecessary rigidity and the too soft "appeasement" policy which fosters ideas of "world domination" in the mind of the potential tyrant, vigorously protesting at 9:30 p.m. that bed is not his idea of "new worlds to conquer." As world statesmen have learned with sorrow that "anything for peace" most often means no peace for anyone, I feel that a moral may be drawn from this sad experience for the policies of government in the home.

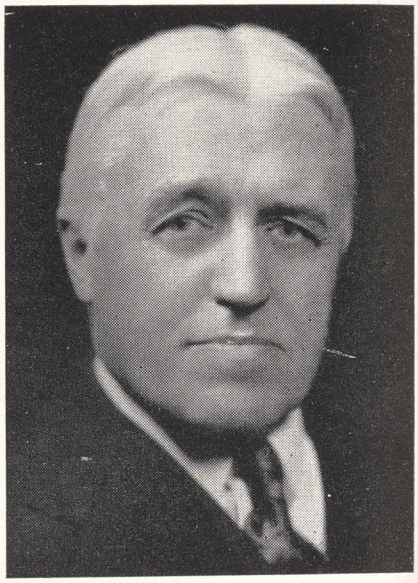
As it has often been demonstrated that unlimited power is easily abused, it is advised that at the earliest convenience the period of benevolent despotism be merged into what may be termed a limited monarchy. The supreme authority is still vested in the parents who have the final word in questions of law making and administration of justice, but as the child develops his own mind and individual personality, he is, within limits, allowed a certain freedom of action which he must be taught not to misuse. He may be taught rules and regulations laid down by the parents, by adult example and by experience—the hardest and most lasting lessons often being taught by this instructor. We may hope that the child will, by this means learn a reasonable amount of self government of his own small person so that as he grows older he may fit into the "family of home democracies" with as little friction and the easiest adjustment into the lives of those among whom his paths shall lie.

During this period arises the question of "foreign policy" in a child's contacts with relatives, his immediate household, neighbors and playmates. It is my considered opinion that the lessons learned at this time in this field have the greatest bearing upon the individual adjustment in later life into the community. Tendencies toward undue aggression or isolationism can be recognized and controlled much more easily when the material is soft and young than when the mold is set and a spirit of cooperation, mutual give-and-take and good faith in "public relations" can be correspondingly encouraged and fostered.

The second term of parental authority over the formative years of a child's life brings with it a more equal division of parental responsibilities. The two members of the original partnership now share an almost equal balance of power in the constitutional democracy beginning to take shape. Of necessity there is still a concentration in parental hands of legislative, executive and judiciary, but the child, as he is given more responsibilities in his own departments of state, treasury, interior and labor, may be allowed some participation in the legislative and executive branches, though the parents remain the final court of appeal, and until the new approach of adulthood, retain the right of veto which like all such powers seem to gain potency with being employed as little as possible.

By the time one has seen an average family of three children through these three terms of adult administration, one may gradually plan to yield the reins of government into the eager hands of the next generation and rather than campaign for a fourth term of control over the grandchildren, may contemplate serving in the restful capacity of an elder statesman comfortably occupying a park bench on the sidelines.

Let me again emphasize that far from feeling the complacency of one who has achieved an ideal, I own myself to be the humblest and most fallible of strivers on the rough road that leads to ideal democracy.



PARIS ORGANIST DISAPPEARS

Paris (by wireless):—The organist of the American Pro-Cathedral here, Lawrence K. Whipp, has disappeared under very mysterious circumstances. He was given great prominence during the occupation by saving the vestments and altar furnishings of the cathedral by distributing them among French friends. The dean of the cathedral, Dean F. W. Beekman, returned to the United States at that time, but has returned to Paris since the liberation and is again in charge of the American church.

The altar and lectern was designed and executed in the machine shop at the station. In it is incorporated the aviation insignia.

SAYS GOVERNMENT DISCRIMINATES

Durham, N. C.:—The Rev. Ernest J. Arnold executive secretary of the North Carolina council of churches has protested what he terms the government's act of discrimination in its order governing conferences and conventions which specifically allows athletic events, but very definitely limits, curtails and even forbids the holding of religious conferences. "My protest," he says, "is over the fact that the government, through the ODT, in setting itself up as a judge to determine what is and is not important, has decreed that athletics should have a priority, while the church is less essential. Today there are too many broken hearts and weary souls for us to say that a baseball tournament takes precedence over the ministry of the church."

EDITORIALS

The Reformation Really Reformed

IT IS FORTUNATE that a member of our editorial board by his letter to Backfire, had given THE WITNESS an opportunity to clarify its position in regard to the Lenten number of Forward Day-by-day. The issue which was raised is not one which concerns simply a particular interpretation of the meaning of a sacrament. Though it should be said that the direction of thought suggested in the second editorial for February 15th, certainly leads to a truer and more scriptural sacramentalism than that pointed to by the author of the Lenten booklet. Why can't we remember that the English Reformation really r e f o r m e d the Church and that all our gain is loss as we drop back into the errors of Medievalism?

We call particular attention to the current forward manual because it introduces the party spirit into the forward movement. Despite differences of opinion and latitude of practice in our Church we have all been able to unite in this movement. We have had devotional material which was strong and beneficial and on which the whole Church would agree. Now for the first time many of the clergy are embarrassed to recommend the Day-by-Day in the very season when it should receive the widest circulation.

Churchmen read that they should receive ashes on their forehead on Ash Wednesday. If this does not surprise them they further learn (on March 12) that they should ask the saints to pray for them. Since the Neo-Platonic heaven of graduated levels has been there established it will be a short step for our people to learn to pray to the saints, so that these demi-gods may intercede for the mere mortals. Strange—for they will find none of this in the collects for the saints days in the Prayer Book. Then they learn that all should go to auricular confession in Holy Week (See Day-By-Day March 26); "Some have never done this before but will do so this week for the first time." The very concession which follows builds up the divisive spirit, separating the sheep from the goats in the Church.

The keenest thrust of all however seems to be the most casual. We can infer no other from the opening phrase of the page for March 11 than that the meditation is meant only for those who have received their communion on the second Sunday in March. Nine-tenths of the Episcopalians in our land will not have received their communion on the second Sunday of the month. What of these thousands — is the Forward booklet not for them? Must their ministers recommend some other devotional manual for their use? Or will the Church institute a new series of daily meditations for the majority of the Church if Forward Day-By-Day is to become partisan?

"QUOTES"

CHURCH attendance serves as a thermometer to register one's interest in and loyalty to the Christian religion; and when one's attendance stands at zero, the chances are that one's interest in things Christian is not at the boiling point. People interested in business are at their places of business; people interested in politics are to be found at the polls; and people interested in common forms of religious life are likely to be found in the neighborhood of a church. One of the best ways for a man or woman to let other people see and know that he believes in personal religion and is in earnest about it is to go to church.

—Raymond Calkins

Won't Be Long Now

THE chairman of the board of Leighlor and Loughlor was troubled. Business was falling off. Competitors were mauling this long established and reputable department store. On the seventeenth hole an idea struck him! People even in an uncertain world are going to get married. There is romance and appeal in weddings. Zounds! Early next morning he summoned one of his young and promising executives. John you have a new job. It is a field which has amazing possibilities. Don't laugh, — I am making you head of our new Matrimonial S e r v i c e Department. It will make us the greatest store in the country. Take all the space you need in Women's Wear. Fix up a gem of a chapel with organ, dressing rooms,— everything a bridal party needs. Get a bride's assistant, and have a few ministers and rabbis handy. Think of it, my boy, thousands of people get married every year! If we can sell them the idea of getting married here in our store, think of the potential customers we can attract. And it will be a great public service. Marriage made easy at Leighlor and Loughlor's! Eliminate the bother and fuss of a marriage at home or at church! Let our bride's assistant take care of bothersome details. Think of it! Up one floor they can have their receptions in our air-conditioned restaurant. Our sales in brides' costumes will sky rocket! pense John. Make this the most stupendous thing in the history of merchandising.

It was stupendous. John set to it with right good American zeal. An architect planned a chapel,—synthetic, but lovely, and so nice and cozy,—much prettier than anything the local churches could offer. By a slight manipulation of the furniture, it could satisfy people of any and all religions, or no religion! With a big advertising campaign, the Chapel of the Beautiful Bride made its debut. The public was taken by storm. It became the rage to be married in the Chapel of the Beautiful Bride. Only a few old fashioned people held back. Here was one-stop service with a bang; everything under one roof: gowns, flowers, organ, photographer, bride's assistant (with Emily Post under her arm), restaurant facilities, even an accommodating minister! And it was not only convenient but so reasonable; all one had to do to enjoy these accommodations was to patronize Leighlor and Loughlor. Everyone benefitted; the store because those who came to the weddings, stayed to shop; the young couples because it made marriage so simple and easy; the churches and ministers of the community because it eliminated the expense of heating and lighting the churches and all the trouble of rehearsals. All hail the Chapel of the Beautiful Bride. All hail the enterprising spirit of American business. All hail the cooperative spirit of the ministers who worked hand in hand with business to give young people bigger and better weddings.

Fantastic? Not as fantastic as it sounds. Business has already taken over the burial of the dead, to say nothing of Christmas and Easter. We cannot blame the business man for making himself efficient and exploiting every opportunity. But what of Christian ministers and the lay people of our churches who sit by in somnolent complacence while these things are swept away? The burial of the dead has slipped through our fingers. Marriage is next on the list. Wake up, Christians; it is five minutes before twelve.

AGAIN the devil took him to a very high mountain, and he showed him all the kingdoms of the world and their splendor, and said to him, "I will give all this to you if you will fall on your knees and do homage to me." Then Jesus said to him, "Begone Satan! For the Scripture says, 'you must do homage to the Lord your God and worship him alone!' "

One of the greatest moments in the world's history is the period in which we are living. Devastation, destruction, and slaughter are abroad in the land. Two world wars and a major depression are the lot of a single generation. Chaos and confusion reign among nations. Man is destroying his fellow man both in body and in spirit. Why? Why in the twentieth century with its great pride of achievement should men have come to this?

This great moment in history is a time of crisis; crisis meaning, as it does in Chinese, dangerous opportunity. Through the stages of man's development he has learned to live with his fellow men in ever widening circles from the family and the tribe to the nation. In each stage men have warred with one another, exploited one another, destroyed one another. This is the picture today; destruction and devastation on a world scale. Once again man must widen his circle, this time to include nothing less than the world. It has become trite to say how the world has shrunken in size. Lands that are remote are a thing of the past. Peoples everywhere are within hearing and seeing distance from one another. Why then do we not live in peace? We cannot live in isolation.

Because we do not live by the will of God. We do not recognize God as the ruler of every nation and tongue. We do not believe all men are brothers. We do not admit the worth of each individual person. We do not act as stewards of this world's bounty, sharing it with one another. We do not work with God in his ongoing creative process.

Instead, we are governed by selfishness, hatred, fear, prejudice, power, greed, ambition. Sometimes these determine our acts as individuals, sometimes they determine the roll played by a nation. Fact or legend it would be good to review the story of creation. God made the world, the light and darkness, the heavens and earth, the waters and the fish of the sea, the birds of the air and the beasts of the field, and finally, "man in his own image."

In love God created the world. With justice and mercy he rules. Man created to worship God was endowed with a free will. God's will must be done "on earth as it is in heaven." Man must come to know that will or be destroyed. At present man is destroying himself against the will of God. God's laws stand. They are not broken. Man not having learned to obey is breaking himself against them. For many their highest loyalty is to the state, the national government, a military power, an economic order, a political party. In God's kingdom a higher loyalty is demanded, allegiance to God as sovereign.

For many a life of fellowship is not possible. White men feel superior to men of color; civilized men use men of more primitive cultures for exploitation and slavery; men of one economic order would impose it on those living under a different order; men in power exert their will and rule over those who by force have been made subject peoples. These things cannot be the will of God. God is father as well as creator and ruler. All men are brothers and as individuals are of infinite worth in the eyes of God. Surely a loving father would have his children live together in fellowship and mutual trust, sharing with one another the abundance of the world's storehouse. All barriers that stand in the way are man made. Wall after wall has been built both from material and from ideas to protect man from man. In the reign of God these must be removed. Protection will be a matter of relationship and faith.

IN ANY time of crisis there are promising signs. They exist today. The belief that war can be outlawed is stronger than ever before. The realization that peace must be won as well as war is a growing conviction. Of equal importance is the certainty that war is no permanent solution of differences. During actual warfare, in addition to a tremendous armament program, plans for relief and reconstruction have been developed and put into effect. And not only has the possibility of a world government come to the minds of many, but proposals for such a government have been outlined. The reports from the Yalta conference have been made public and are being widely studied. April has been set as the time when the United Nations will meet in San Francisco to continue the work begun at Dumbarton Oaks. This meeting may well be as significant for the welfare of the world as was the first Continental Congress for our own land.

What is God's will for this nation, the United States of America? This is the question that must be answered by every Christian citizen. Our founding fathers gave us a wonderful heritage. This has been called a Christian land. Yet in this land of freedom and opportunity may be found every denial of God's law that has been suggested. We can, and rightly, be expected to make a great contribution to world order. But not unless we recognize our own shortcomings and make it possible for all who have come here or were here before we came, to live in fellowship as brothers. We in America have the great privilege of free expression of ideas. With this goes obligation. The Dumbarton Oaks proposals are before us. Individuals and groups may express with effect, their opinion as to these proposals. Do they set up a better way of life for all peoples of the world or for a privileged few? Do they break down the man made barriers that keep us from living in fellowship with one another? Can they be considered a step in the direction of the rule of God?

Nearly two thousand years have passed since Jesus, the Son of God came to earth in human form. We are in the midst of that season of the Church year when we are again reminded of the temptations. One act of compromise and all the kingdoms would have been his. He did not take that way. It was not God's will and he came to do the will of his father.

The opportunity is ours. How nearly have we as a nation learned God's will and how ready are we to subject ourselves to it?

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

1. Does the fact that nations are near neighbors in communication time make it easier or more difficult for them to live together in peace?
2. State the principles that would make possible the kind of society in which you want to live?
3. To what degree have you described the order of society in which you do live?
4. Would you be willing to see these same principles made the basis for building a world order?
5. What would be the effect on the subject peoples of the world?
6. Study the Dumbarton Oaks proposals. How would you suggest amending these proposals in the light of Christian principles? To what extent do your suggestions agree with the amendments recommended by the Cleveland conference? (See The Message to the Churches from the Cleveland conference, issued by the Federal Council of Churches, 397 Fourth Ave., New York 10)

The Vicar of Morwenstow

By

A. J. MILLER
Rector of Christ Church, Ridgewood, N. J.

A CONTEMPORARY of Froude's was the Rev. Robert Stephen Hawker, vicar of Morwenstow in Cornwall, a true poet, loyal churchman, humorist, a man of winning personality but of equal unconventionality. It was he who wrote the familiar lines "And shall Trelawney die?", so convincing in their echo of the days on the imprisonment of the seven bishops that Macaulay quotes them as contemporaneous. Hawker for the best part of half a century climbed the cliffs and marched along the desolate hills of his parish ministering to his sparse congregation of smugglers, wreckers, dissenters and a few loyal farmers. His dress was as peculiar as the man. He despised black and in his early days wore a brown cassock. This later he found inconvenient on the cliffs and rocks, and assumed a claret colored coat with long tails, underneath which he wore a blue fisherman's jersey with a red cross woven in the side in memory of the pierced side of the Saviour. Fisherman's boots reaching above the knees and notorious hats completed his outfit. A pink or plum colored beaver was his delight. When he said his costume was that of an archimandrite of the Eastern Church we cannot be sure whether he was serious or pulling the leg of those who stared after him. His gloves were always crimson and attracted much attention from startled visitors at church who were amazed to see the blood colored hand reach through the screen to hand the offering bag to his clerk.

No one ever had a readier tongue or more nimble wit and many tales are told of his retorts. Once someone taunted him about the houses he built saying, "Fools build houses for wise men to live in." Quick as a flash came the rejoinder "Yes, and there is a saying like unto it, 'Wise men make proverbs and fools quote them'." While baptizing a baby he was asked by a sponsor what was the amount of the fee. "My fee?" cried Hawker, "My fee is a thousand pounds." "I be feered, sir, 'tis moor'n I can pay," said the man. "Don't you know," replied the vicar, "the sacraments of God are invaluable? No amount of money can pay for them." Later he declared that the story would be told in every inn and cottage of Cornwall and would teach the people to appreciate the sacraments of the Church. He hated liberal clergy and once while listening to one preach, when a cock crew outside the church, Hawker said to the person sitting next to him: "Listen to him! He is denying his Lord." His wit often took the form of verse. On one occasion a strong Protestant stated in a speech that he would not be priest-ridden. Hawker rejoined as follows:

> Thou shalt not be ridden by prophet nor priest,
> Baalam is dead and needeth no beast.

Of Lord Beaconsfield's public worship act and Gladstone's disestablishment of the Irish Church, he wrote:

> An English boy was born: A Jew: so then
> On the eighth day they circumcised Ben!
> Another child had birth: baptized: but still > In public phrase surnamed The People's Will!
> Both lived impenitent, and so they died,
> And between both the Church was crucified!
> Which bore the brand? I pray thee tell me true,
> The perjured Christian, or the recreant Jew?

He hated dissent, although he was kind to dissenters, and is reported to have said all was well in Cornwall until that recreant Wesley came down and persuaded Cornishmen to change their vices! Hawker had a marvelous fancy which ran riot over the symbolism of his church and caused him to interpret the zigzag of his Norman doorway as the ripples of Gennesareth and to see all about him evidences of the world of the spirit. Angels waited on him and his altar, and Satan assaulted him in every storm. "The two worlds are nearer than we think," he used to say, "the air is full of invisible beings."

He believed implicitly in prayer and issued the

THERE are several thousand Church people who are receiving their copy of THE WITNESS during Lent by getting it at church on Sunday. We are anxious that a large number of these people receive the paper regularly. We would like therefore to make two suggestions: first to the rector: appoint an individual or an organization to take subscriptions at $3 for a year. Deduct $1 on each subscription as a commission. Then send us the list with $2 for each annual subscription. To lay men and women: if a WITNESS representative has not been appointed in your parish, then merely send us a postal stating, "Enter my personal subscription for a year," with your name and address. We will then enter the subscription immediately after Easter, billing you later at $3 for the year. Send the card to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6.

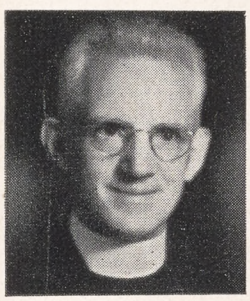
most striking petitions for the relief of the Church from its oppressors and for the preservation of his holy well and the guarantee of his crops. He believed in the letter of the Bible and once when the sky was red at sunset he became wildly excited thinking the end of the world had come. He dearly loved dumb animals and had a pet pig which followed him on his calls. Cats went to church with him and once a poor puss which killed a mouse in church was excommunicated for sacrilege. His ceremonial is interesting as it antedates the catholic revival. He wore always a girded albe and crossed stole as he said the angels do. A purple cope was worn and his life and teachings illustrate continuity of faith and practice in the English Church.



Due to illness he began the use of opium and strange indeed were the things he then said and did. On his deathbed away from his beloved Morwenstow at Plymouth, his wife sent for a Romanist priest and he was received, whether consciously or not, we cannot say, into the Roman Church and he lies buried there away from the spot which he made ever memorable.

For Church Schools

By

WILLIAM GRIME
Rector of St. Paul's, Great Neck, N. Y.

HAVE you, your teachers and pupils, ever evaluated any of your children's eucharists, your abbreviated forms of morning prayer or your uses of the offices of instruction? This is not a fault-finding question but one designed to encourage us to face facts in the interests of all concerned. We know that these services are for the most part adult services; that the language therein was chosen without reference to the needs of growing children and youth. What do you think happens to the younger part of the family of God when we, the adult part, keep imposing upon them thought patterns which are beyond their capacities to profitably experience and understand?

Do you suppose this has anything to do with the decline in church school enrollments and the falling away of the newly confirmed? Is there any connection here with what leaders of young people are reporting from their groups —"we don't want worship services at our meetings this year"? Some leaders claim they stop to interpret parts of their children's services as they unfold. That's good but do these leaders go on and check their completed efforts, and do they use good standards of measurement? Others, who prefer to go on using these adult services with children, tell us —"Children can sense their way into the fellowships of worship." While others contend — "What is obscure to them now will be clear later." Maybe so, still is there not great danger here in caring too little about their present worship experiences? If children have been frustrated with the adult language of the book will it not be harder to quicken their interests in the book later on? And how can we expect young people to wisely and steadily relate the rites and teachings of the Church to the championship of human rights everywhere if their efforts to understand these rites and teachings have been allowed to peter out through assuming that Christian growth was taking place because they could say the creed, the Lord's prayer, and the ten commandments?

Now while we can check accurately the changes in the height and weight of a child we cannot measure precisely what constitutes an adequate worship approach and commitment to God for young persons of different age groups. However through intelligent, friendly questioning we can find trustworthy evidence as to whether worship services are arresting processes or enriching processes in the growth of Christian young people. In addition we can also find opportunities like the one we had recently, while checking thirty-six fourteen to sixteen year old candidates as to what the Apostles Creed meant to them in their worship and living. Forty-five per cent of the results were really encouraging while fifty-five per cent of the results were all snarled up with error, distortion and downright superstition. And through a simple form of checking many were set free from fears and falsities for which they thanked us. As a matter of fact we were asked seventy-three specific questions. Here is one from a fourteen year old: "When you say what you don't mean, that's a lie, isn't it? But when in worship service you are expected to say phrases you don't mean, is that a lie too? Please tell me." Many said they had decided to give up thinking about the Creed for the more they did the more they got mixed up. A few said they had sought help from their parents but with no success, a fact which was partially proved when the results of this checking were shared with five parent-teacher groups, for these parents said: "The children's confusions are still the confusions of the parents."

My friends, while checking is not a cure-all for this dismaying boresomeness in much of our children's worship, yet assumption here is most withering and costly to the Church's children. Therefore, check and double-check.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

Selecting Service Music

THE Reformation compilers of our Prayer Book with a commendable interest in congregational worship sought to simplify the liturgy by eliminating from its offices the antiphons and proper chants which gave such richness as well as complexity to the worship of the medieval Church. Yet we should not abuse the freedom given us to select and adapt the musical offerings of our services by refusing to relate them carefully to the teachings of the Christian year. The Holy Communion service is much enhanced if the introits and offertories and communion anthems and hymns are in harmony with the collects, epistles and gospels. The same principle applies to Morning Prayer since its weekly, rather than daily, observance in many parishes has tended to make it topical, i.e. built around a single theme. Indeed, the new lectionary has given weight to this trend by a closer integration of the propers of Matins with those of the Eucharist for the day. The clergy would do well to acquaint themselves with the choir's repertoire of anthems so as to give counsel to their choirmasters as to what selections are fitting to the season.

It goes without saying that the clergy should keep in their control the selection of hymns. The indices of the Hymnal 1940 are an invaluable guide. Most clergy, at least, take responsibility for the "sermon hymn"; but since this hymn precedes rather than follows the sermon, the congregation is liable to miss the relation of the two unless the preacher explains, when announcing the hymn, why he has chosen it. The Prayer Book allows the substitution of a "proper" hymn for the Gloria in excelsis; but it does not define what it means by the word "proper." Doubtless a hymn in the nature of a doxology is appropriate, or a hymn of praise and thanksgiving "proper" to the season. At least, we should avoid such an inept selection as I once heard on Whitsunday, when a forceful sermon on the strengthening power of the Holy Spirit lost all its point by the singing, in place of the Gloria, of the saccharine hymn, "Our blest Redeemer, ere he breathed His tender last farewell."

It is well to keep as an ideal the ancient distinction between the "common" and the "proper" parts of the service, and appoint such music for the former that the congregation can easily participate, and reserve the latter for the choir. Many choirs can learn well only one piece per service. Let that be the anthem, and let the Kyrie and Sanctus, the chants and canticles of the Daily Office, etc., be simple enough for everyone to sing. If the choir is capable of doing also an "anthem setting" of one of the canticles, let us allow the congregation the comfort of sitting to listen to it. By all means forbid a ten-minute setting of the Gloria. The climax of Communion is communion. Long-winded praises after it are a weariness to the flesh. Sometimes it is refreshing to vary the order a bit and put the anthem after the epistle, or after the third collect at Evening Prayer, and then sing a hymn at the Offertory.

The whole matter of variety calls for care and taste. It is as monotonous to have all the music of a service in the same musical style as it is distracting to have every piece in a different one. A plainsong service mixes well with the classic polyphonic music or many of the chorales or with much of what is called modern music, because these styles share a flexibility of rhythm, a simplicity of melodic line (avoiding chromatic intervals), and a certain modal feeling in their harmonies. They have, too, a dignity and objectivity woefully lacking in most church music of the Victorian era. Chant settings might well be changed with the varying seasons of the Church year. Some congregations lose the zest of the Venite, for example, by singing it year in and year out to the same tune. The new hymnal offers an ideal variety for the Communion service, three simple, unison settings in three different styles, and a part-setting for choirs. From time to time familiar chants and hymns can be given new life by antiphonal singing between choir and congregation, the use of descants, or more elaborate organ accompaniments to a melody sung in unison. Nor should there be any fear about trying something new; repeat it several Sundays in succession until it becomes a favorite. Good music wears well. Look at Merbecke—simple as the service is, it has weathered four centuries! It would be diverting to know how well congregations liked it on first hearing.

Delinquency Forum Is Planned For Detroit Parents

Civic Leaders Teach Fathers and Mothers Modern Methods of Handling Their Children

Edited by Rita Ruben

Detroit:—Big fat books have been written and hundreds of speeches have been make on the subject of juvenile delinquency. It has taken this city to tackle the problem of parental delinquency. Last week a group of civic leaders met to set-up a forum where parents will face the question of how they can be taught to accept their own responsibilities. It calls for a "friendly, educational project for the prevention and cure of youth maladjustments and the mitigation of parental delinquency."

A local newspaper recently made a survey which showed that parental neglect has trebled in the last four years. It so aroused people that the Rev. David Covell, superintendent of the Episcopal City Mission, called together juvenile authorities, clergymen, social workers, psychologists, educators, newspaper and radio representatives and proposed that the problem be tackled through this educational project.

Special teachers will be loaned by the board of education to carry on the forum discussions with regular speakers.

Among the subjects proposed for discussion are:

How and why a teen age child acts as it does.

A program for the leisure time of the child.

Religion in the life of a child.

How a family can plan together so as to stay together.

How to handle the driving forces nature has placed within the adolescent.

Home Life—love, courtesy, cooperation, teamwork, humor.

The child and a job outside the home.

The legal responsibilities of parents.

Divorce and its effects upon parents and children.

Aids available to parents from community organizations.

Judge D. J. Healy pointed out that it was within the court's power to compel parents of children in trouble to attend the forums. He proposed, however, that better results would be obtained if the compulsory authority could be avoided.

"In fact," he declared, "many of those parents themselves are hungry for some kind of social contacts. Neighborliness has passed out of the changing city."

Industrial Parish

Milwaukee: — St. John's Church and its rector, the Rev. L. B. Hastings, had been receiving slaps on the back for doing a good job in ministering to 1,200 West Indian workers employed in a large war plant. Reading matter, games, clothes, parties, luncheons, visits, services have all been a part of the program. The workers, about to leave, wrote a fine letter of thanks as did also the service department of the company.

Doctrine of God

Burlington, Vt.: — The Rev. Charles Martin, rector of St. Paul's, is presenting the Christian doctrine of God during Lent in Sunday morning sermons. He did this in response to a letter he sent to various people asking what the church might do best to meet the needs of the people. A newspaperman said that people need to "relearn to pray. I say relearn because I think that prayer has become a lost art." A teacher wrote that "Youth needs to have a stronger hope that something can and will be done to make a new world after the war. The long view is too long for a generation of young people, yet a strong hope and the appearance of clear objectives outlined by leaders in whom they have faith will do much to inspire them to act rather than to yield to cynical defeatism."

An unnamed U.S. Senator wrote Mr. Martin that he thought "a minister can serve the Lord and humanity by being quite specific in advocacy of means and machinery for specific conciliation and settlement of disputes between nations and for the development of international law on a basis of rights rather than on the present basis of precedents."

A professor called attention to an article which raised the question that troubles many people, and apparently him: "In that colossal drama of savagery, death, destruction and suffering, running the whole gamut of emotions, it is revealed once again that 1900 years of Christianity have not succeeded in raising or ennobling man." A lawyer, thinking of the strains and tensions, the anxieties and worries in which we are all working, suggested that we need some help to carry the burdens and to make us more tolerant and considerate of others.

Stresses Solidarity

Minneapolis:—Human solidarity was stressed by Bishop Keeler at a meeting here that was sponsored by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. A number of Negro choral groups sang.

Angel of the North

Ralph, Mich: — Mrs. Marie S. Campbell died on Feb. 14. She was known throughout the northcountry as the "Angel of the North" and the little log cabin church which she and her husband gave to the community was lovingly called "The Cathedral of the Pines." Coming as a bride to the frontier lumber camp town of Ralph in 1900 she spent her entire life here. From the outset she began her missionary work. Having graduated from Belleville Hospital shortly before her marriage, she soon found ample opportunity to put her talents to work. She did more however than just minister to the physical needs of the people. There was no church in the community so she organized classes in religion for the children. Later when an aged widower whom she had nursed in his last illness left her his cabin she and her husband made it over into a church which was dedicated as St. Mary's mission by Bishop Harris. She was also very active in other community works serving as postmistress and secretary of the school board for many years. Her home was a Red Cross first-aid station from the beginning. Many a lumber-jack had treatment given him that meant the difference between life and death, many a child of some settler was born in that home.

Francis Wei

China: — Eighteen persons were confirmed in the chapel of Central China College by Bishop Ronald Hall of Hongkong recently. Attending the service was President Francis Wei of the college who is getting over a severe attack of typhus. The doctors allowed him to get up for a couple of hours and he chose the time of the service.

Dependent People

New York:—Emory Ross, secretary of the Foreign Missions Conference, has arrived in Europe to confer with religious leaders and government officials on problems of dependent peoples and questions of religious liberty. He will also aid in planning post-war regional conferences in west, central, east and southern Africa during 1946.

Reconciliation

Moscow (by wireless):—Reconciliation of the autonomous Russian Orthodox Church in America with the mother Church in the Soviet Union was announced as the result of discussions concluded here. Officials describe the development as a "tremendous step" toward formation of a world council of Orthodox Churches. Taking part in the discussions were Patriarch Alexei, Metropolitan Benjamin who is the patriarchial exarch of North America, and several dignitaries representing Metropolitan Theophilus, the American head of the autonomous Church. It is expected that the agreement will be ratified at a conference of the Church to be held in June, to be attended by deputies from all parts of the country. At this meeting a supreme head will be elected and it is reported that Patriarch Alexei has already endorsed Metropolitan Benjamin and Metropolitan Alexei, the archbishop of Yaroslav and Rastov, who will preside at the June conference. Conditions agreed upon at the Moscow meetings included general acceptance of the spiritual seniority of the Patriarch of Moscow and an agreement that the churches in America would be safeguarded from any attempts "to exploit them for purposes of anti-Soviet propaganda."

Quick Action

Montgomery, Ala.: — St. John's Church figured actively in relief work following the recent tornado which struck Montgomery, killing 26 people and destroying over 300 homes with thousands of dollars of property damage. The vestry of St. John's was in session the night of the tornado and received a request from the local civilian defense organization to use the parish house as a receiving hospital. Two vestrymen immediately lighted a fire in the furnace, to heat the parish house; other vestrymen stayed on the scene with the rector, the Rev. James W. Brettman; cots were placed in the parish house to receive the injured, and the next day the kitchen was used as a canteen kitchen for making coffee and sandwiches. Over 200 Negroes were given food and shelter. At present the parish house is piled high with clothing, as a distribution center for the families affected by the tornado, women of the parish joining with the American Red Cross in carrying on the work.

Marriage Guide

Buffalo, N. Y.:—A syllabus to guide rectors in the instruction of prospective brides and bridegrooms is being prepared by the newly-appointed committee on holy matrimony of the diocese of Western New York. The syllabus will deal with economic, spiritual, and physical aspects of the question, including reasons for marital failure, use of family income, the matter of in-laws, and adjustment when differences of opinion arise.

New Secretary

New York:—Miss Edith S. Baxter, social worker of Oregon, has been appointed an assistant secretary of the Church Mission of Help. Important among her duties will be responsibility for recruiting trained workers for the member societies.

Combat Discrimination

Albany: — Many church groups were represented at hearings before the state legislature on the bill to bar all discrimination in employment because of race, religion, color or creed. Among the organizations was the United Christian Council for Democracy with which the Church League for Industrial Democracy is affiliated.

Real Questions

Portland, Ore.:—Such lively issues as the Bretton Woods Proposals, international relations, race questions and labor problems are being discussed at meetings held Sunday evenings at St. Stephen's Cathedral here. They are sponsored jointly by the department of religious education of the diocese and the Auxiliary.

Protestants Hit Back

Buenos Aires:—The Roman Catholic hierarchy recently issued a pastoral letter directed against Protestantism in Argentine. It brought a sharp refutation from the confederation of Evangelical Churches, representing ten denominations. After pointing out that "it is in Protestant countries that the Roman clergy is treated with greatest respect" the statement went on to say that "We preach the gospel in our country, Argentina, for the same reason that the Roman Catholic Church carries on its activities of evangelism and extension in the towns and cities of the Argentine provinces. We preach the gospel in these countries for the same reason that the Roman Catholic Church carries on its work of proselytism in Protestant countries, that is to say, in countries that are already predominately Christian.

"We preach the gospel for the same reason that both Catholics and Protestants carry their respective messages to Greece, Japan, China, Turkey, etc., countries where other religious faiths predominate and to which neither Catholics nor Protestants go for the purpose of provoking moral, political or social disintegration."

The Confederation stressed that liberty "does not mean simply the right to worship God according to one's conscience," but also "the right to share one's ideas and experiences with others; the right to tell publicly and privately, by word of mouth or written page, what God has done in the human heart."

"We have neither provoked nor desire to renew the religious quarrels which have had such sad results," the message said. "We do, however, state without hesitation or fear, that we will remain firm in defence of liberty of conscience, liberty for ourselves and for those who do not think as we do; the only way to bring about a more just, worthy and happy brotherliness."

Freedom in Hungary

London (by wireless):—Russian occupation authorities in Hungary have made no attempt to interfere with religious affairs according to Count Michel Karolyi, head of the Hungarian Council in Great Britain, composed of representatives of various anti-Fascist groups.

"There is absolute freedom for all religious faiths," the one-time president of Hungary said in an interview. He added that the clergy "have shown themselves both realistic and public-spirited in their participation in setting up the provisional government and there is every hope they will lead the way in supporting rehabilitation programs despite far-reaching changes which will have to be made in the political economy of the country."

Discussing problems of agrarian reform Count Karolyi said the only religious group likely to be greatly affected by plans for large-scale land redistribution is the Roman Catholic Church, several of whose dioceses are endowed with large estates. In such cases and others, he said, where the income from land holdings support welfare institutions or schools, some equitable settlement will have to be made.

Other spokesmen for the Council here disclosed that the presidium of the Hungarian provisional government includes Julasz Nagy, outstanding Protestant layman, and that nearly all the newly formed interparty committees taking over local government in the wake of advancing Russian armies include one or more clergymen. The fact however that a large proportion of these clergymen are Protestant is regarded in some quarters as evidence that Russian authorities "are somewhat less favorably disposed toward Roman Catholics."

Nearly all Nazi anti-Semitic laws have been revoked, and many Jewish leaders have been released from prisons and internment camps, it was said. Parochial schools have also been reopened.

Another Schism Healed

Washington: — The 73-year-old schism between the Bulgarian Orthodox Church and the ecumenical patriarchate at Istanbul, titular center of all Eastern Orthodoxy, has been finally ended, according to a Sofia radio broadcast reported to the office of war information here. Official announcement was made in a telegram from Ecumenical Patriarch Benjamin to Bulgarian Foreign Minister Petko Stainov, who replied expressing the government's "satisfaction and gratitude."

First step toward healing the breach was taken recently at a meeting of Patriarchs gathered in Moscow for the general council of the Russian Orthodox Church. A letter was sent to the newly-elected exarch of Bulgaria, Metropolitan Stefan, urging him to submit to Patriarch Benjamin the formal letter of repentance and reconciliation required as a condition of reinstatement.

Geneva (by wireless):—Too little is known about the "mental condition" of Germans to form a clear-cut program for treatment of the Reich after the war, Dr. Karl Barth, internationally known Swiss Protestant theologian, declared in a lecture at the University of Geneva. contradictory," he said. "Even if we are well informed about the atrocities committed by the Germans we know very little about their mental condition. Are the opponents of the Nazis numerous or not? After the war, we may learn that there have been more acts of courage and suffering than we imagine today."

Dr. Barth stressed that the destruction of the Nazi state will place an obligation on the victors not only of passing judgment on the German people, but of bearing a share of "man's common responsibility for rebelling against divine law." He said: "Our disobedience against the eternal law is no less real than the Germans'. We must refrain, therefore, from malicious joy, nor must we pass from fear of the Germans to pity for them. Our attitude must combine respect and sympathy as well as dread, since Germany's end is meant to teach us, too, that God's law cannot be flouted."

Discussing the Christian duty toward a defeated Germany, Dr. Barth said, "we must be both gentle and strict, without prejudice, weakness, Pharisaism, or sentimentality. The Germans have enemies everywhere and the loneliness of which they formerly complained has become very real, and thus their greatest need at this dark moment of their history will be friends. But if we wish to be their friends, we must abstain from admonishing them. If we try to approach them as schoolmasters, they will shut their hearts against us. We must not be like Job's friends, who visited him to try to instruct him.

"The Germans do not understand the words: brotherhood and federation. They believe only in hostility. So we must try to show them the meaning of doctrines they consider Utopian. Preaching beautiful words to them will not be enough. They must be made to feel the truth behind the words, 'the Gospel, not the law, will triumph.' Our duty is to help the Germans make a new start in a new, free Germany. There is no question of excusing Germany or encouraging the German churches to carry on as before. Even if our friendship is accepted with reserve by the Germans, it will not relieve us of the duty of trying to meet Germany's needs in the full consciousness of our own needs as well as theirs."

Priest Defends Communist

Paris (by wireless):—A Catholic priest, Father Philip, announced to the National Assembly in session here that he will personally undertake the defense of the Communist Maquis commander, Francois Thuytschaeur, recently sentenced to hard labor for executing two traitors in Mauberge prison. The executions were carried out by Thuytschaeur and two others when thousands of townspeople surrounded the jail, seeking to lynch the prisoners. Backed by Maurice Schumann, a Catholic lay deputy, Father Philip declared that being a priest, did not make him hesitate "to defend this hero even though he's a communist, since he carried out his duty according to his lights."

Demanding that the sentence on Thuytschaeur be revoked, Father Philip added that "Communists, as

End Segregation

Seattle, Wash.: — Integration of Japanese-Americans into the regular, established denominational churches on the west coast was urged here by the Seattle council of churches and Christian education. The council also called for a ministry to meet unusual needs as they may arise, such as holding special services for those who cannot speak English, and adding Japanese ministers to the present staff of existing churches. It further suggested that "in exceptional cases where the need cannot be met in any other way," an interdenominational racial church be set up rather than a denominational racial church.

"We most earnestly request our national denominational leaders to give careful consideration to this matter immediately," the council's resolution stated, "and in the interest of the total Christian program, to do everything within their power to develop the kind of program suggested and to formulate a policy which will make this possible as the Japanese return to the west coast."

It was stressed that churches now have the opportunity to work out a new religious pattern in race relations because the old racial denominational churches have very largely gone out of existence.

"Since we must build anew," the churchmen agreed, "Christian forces now have a real opportunity to put into actual practice the principles and ideals for which Christianity stands."

Day of Prayer

Santa Monica, Calif.:—A national day of prayer on April 25, when United Nations representatives will meet at San Francisco, was proposed at a mass-meeting here sponsored by the American United organization. The audience adopted resolutions requesting the Federal Council of Churches to arrange the day of prayer, to include all faiths and all citizens, "so that our world, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom and a birth of universal peace." Emil Ludwig, noted biographer, was the chief speaker.

THE REV. WILLIAM M. WEBER
Member of the Editorial Board

Rejoicing in the essential Catholic approach of the majority of THE WITNESS board, I heartily disagree with the occasional intrusion of a strident tone into our editorial page. After all these years the second editorial for February 15th is shocked at the Eucharist being called "the Mass"! Yet in this editorial, the word "sacrament" is made to mean no more than God's omnipresent care—which is perfectly acceptable to a Quaker! Gentlemen, this is double-talk! What do you mean by this word sacrament?

A gentler objection to the other editorial of that week—not to its sound intention, but to one detail: closed communion. Whatever may have been the original intention of the exclusion-rubric how can you escape closed communion as a 300-year practice of Anglicanism? Though you may change future practice, you cannot alter the historical record. Many of us (following an opinion of Archbishop Temple in 1936) feel, for reasons of plain honesty, painfully recognising factual Christian disunity, that a flexible application of closed communion is most in the spirit of Christ at this time—that open communion is a sentimental ignoring of the social nature of Christianity and the need for organic unity.

Moreover, I am willing to bet that the majority of middle-of-the-road clergy—evangelical and catholic—are of the same opinion. We are tired of the rigidity of both ritualistic and anti-ritualistic spikes. The tension between three milleniums of tradition and the ever renascent gospel is the very muscular balance of Anglicanism. This we can give to the Church of the future.

Answer: See Editorial.

THE REV. SAMUEL J. MARTIN
Rector of St. Edmund's, Chicago

The election of the Rev. Bravid W. Harris to the bishopric of Liberia is good news. This is an answer to the prayers of many churchmen. I have been lobbying for this along with many of my brethren for several years and it is gratifying to know that it has come to pass. The choice of Mr. Harris is a very excellent one. He is one of the outstanding leaders, admired and respected by all who know him. The people of Liberia are fortunate in having him as their leader and bishop. The action of the House of Bishops will give encouragement and renewed interest to our Colored clergy. This is a step in the right direction. For such interest and tangible expressions of goodwill and interest I am sincerely grateful.

MR. DONALD B. LITCHARD
Layman of Boston, Massachusetts

At the start of the Lenten season it is quite disillusioning to read such an intolerant outburst as is your Or Else editorial (Feb. 8th). We are supposed to love the Germans, the Japanese, the Negroes as brothers. Are stock brokers and lawyers excluded? You point out that Russia has gotten along without a stock exchange. May I remind you that she also seems to have done without a free press, and also without clergy, not just the part of the clergy you suggest getting out of the way. You seem to fear the return of an economy of scarcity. May I remind you that Henry Wallace has been one of the chief advocates of such a system. After all did he not sponsor the killing of all those little pigs?

THE REV. ARTHUR B. KINSOLVING
Rector emeritus of St. Paul's, Baltimore

No man likes to be buried until he is dead. THE WITNESS for February 8 reports that Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving was elected bishop of Arizona. I am the only Arthur B. Kinsolving living. It is my beloved nephew and namesake, Arthur B. Kinsolving II, who is the bishop-elect and his old uncle, still one of the "inferior clergy" is proud of him.

THE REV. WALLACE E. ROLLINS
Dean Emeritus of Virginia Seminary.

May I commend your editorial in your issue of February 15th on The Confirmation Rubric. Your position is entirely sound. It is certain, as you say, that the rubric in its origin had no reference to Presbyterians and Methodists (who did not then exist) but to the age and development of subjects for confirmation. This was clearly shown in a pamphlet by the English historian Dr. H. M. Gwatkin, written in 1914, and by some admirable articles in The Southern Churchman in 1938 by Professor James Arthur Muller of the Episcopal Theological School. These were later published in pamphlet form. Several of us bought and circulated some hundreds of this pamphlet, but it is clear from Mr. Mainwaring's letter that we did not circulate enough of them! Professor Muller showed the origin and true meaning of the rubric and quoted a number of Anglican historians and bishops substantiating this position.

The matter, as you say, is vital, and there is wide-spread misunderstanding of the rubric. I wish that Professor Muller's fine and scholarly pamphlet might be reprinted and widely circulated. It would clear away misunderstandings and prove a real help towards Christian unity.

THE REV. FRANK M. HAMILTON
Rector of St. Mary's, Pikesville, Md.

Thank you for your brave and intelligent stand expressed in the editorial on Holy Communion (Feb. 15). I am writing to ask permission to quote from it in one of the tracts which we get out from time to time.

FRED M. ESHELMAN
Layman of West Pittston, Pa.

You rub me the wrong way occasionally by your anti-business views but, oh boy, you certainly hit the nail on the head in both editorials in the February 15th issue. If you do not intend to make them into tracts then send me fifty copies of that number.

The Work of the American Church Institute for Negroes

The Colleges and Schools of the Institute Have Played a Real Part in the War Effort

By M. M. Millikan
Assistant Director

Boston:—There are a good many thousands of Americans who believe that one of the greatest problems of our country has to do with the Negro and his adjustment in our American life. It is a problem of citizenship and difficult aspects of it extend into the economic, social and political fields. It is basic in the whole matter of racial relationships. It is filled with danger but it involves equity and common justice. Its solution is required by every consideration and should bring enormous benefits not only to the millions of Negroes in this country but also to our country as a whole.

Recognition of this problem led in 1906 to the establishment of The American Church Institute for Negroes as an agency of the Episcopal Church. It is through this agency that all of the organized educational work for Negroes under the sponsorship of the Episcopal Church is carried on. The Presiding Bishop of the Church acts as president of the Institute and its board is composed of clergy and others active in the work of the Church.

The Institute grew out of a belief that while the so-called Negro problem would have to be approached in a variety of ways, no solution could be found without a marked rise in the general educational standard of the Negro in the south. The Institute recognized that it could do but little in the way of quantitative education, a task obviously requiring the resources of the states. However at the turn of the century the southern states were, generally speaking, giving but little attention to the education of Negroes. The plan of the Institute was to serve the general cause of Negro education in six ways:

To stimulate the general cause by establishing worthwhile schools in sections in which there were but poor facilities for Negro education.

To learn by experience the best ways for conducting such schools and thus to develop examples that might be followed in state operation.

To have the schools concerned at least as much with moral and ethical, as with technical standards and to influence their students so that when these young men and women return to their own communities they would help in raising the standards of their people.

To train Colored men and women so that they could gradually take over the direction of the schools and the teaching and do this work for their own people.

To develop teachers who would be available for other schools, and colored clergy and other men and women qualified to become leaders of their race.

By teaching trades and other vocations, enable the graduates of the schools to take a more helpful part in their communities and to raise the economic standards of their people.

The Institute sponsors, supervises and helps in the development and operation of ten schools and colleges in the south. Each institute is located in some center of preponderant Negro population. In the beginning, most of the schools cared for elementary education, as well as some of the higher grades. Today the schools are concerned simply in giving education in high school grades or beyond. However, in certain instances, they operate elementary classes, supported by public money, chiefly to provide experience for the teachers whom the Institute schools are developing among their own students.

In the beginning, heavy reliance had to be placed on white teachers and administrative officers. Today all of the schools except two have Colored principals; all except one have Colored administrative officers; and the faculty members are Negroes almost without exception.

In the early days the schools were pretty well limited by the funds that could be provided to them through the Institute. As time has gone on, the work of the Institute has been influential in achieving a constructive change in these matters. Today a large part of the budgets comes from the students and their families. Each of the dioceses in which the schools are located make substantial contributions to the work of the Schools. Substantial support is given by state or local governments. Important grants have been received from time to time from leading educational foundations. Today the subsidy payments by the Institute comprise less than a quarter of the total income of the schools as a whole. Their annual budgets aggregate approximately $650,000.

This graduate of one of the colleges of the American Church Institute for Negroes is doing his part in the war effort by working in a bomber factory.

The Institute schools have invited investigation and check-up by state authorities and competent officials of educational foundations. They have uniformly obtained good ratings within these fields.

In the main the plants of the Institute schools are very simple indeed. In many cases crude facilities are employed. It has been necessary to do a great deal with very little.

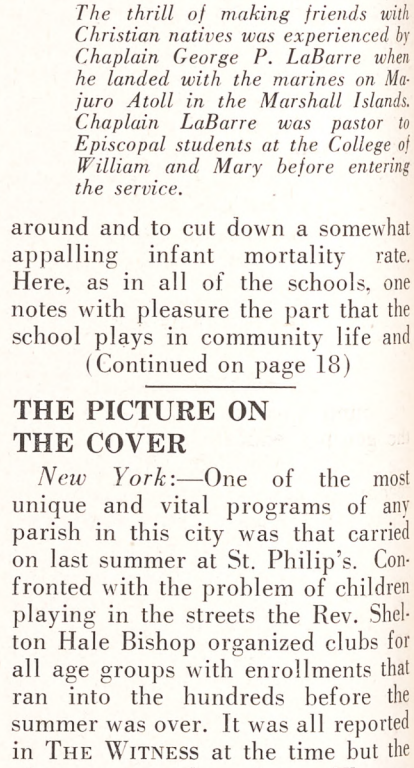
There is no desire to change from this essential simplicity. However in many cases essential buildings or equipment are lacking or are wholly inadequate to meet present needs.

It is a natural corollary to plant and equipment to speak of enrollment and tuition. The current enrollment of regular students in Institute schools approximates 3000, of which 944 are boarding pupils. Practically all of the schools run special courses and classes in applied subjects open to Negroes of the surrounding country-side and involving an annual enrollment of some 7500 people. At the larger schools a summer conference is held every year that is largely attended by the Negro clergy, Church workers and teachers. Excluding the college and the divinity school, the tuition for Institute schools ranges from $2.50 to $75.00 per annum! To say this is to suggest the need for the schools and the limited resources of the people who are benefitted by them.



The Institute schools fall into certain natural groups. There are a number of smaller schools concerned with giving high school education designed to fit the student for trade's or other type of employment of a higher grade than could otherwise be achieved; with this goes aid in achieving a higher standard of living. Typical of this group are Gailor School at Mason, Tenn.; Okolona Industrial School at Okolona, Miss.; Gaudet School at New Orleans, etc. A certain number of the graduates of these schools go on to college. The second natural group are the largest schools like St. Paul's of Lawrenceville, Va. and Voorhees at Denmark, S. C. Here the teaching facilities are greater and extend to a larger variety of trades and more intensified training is given. These schools also do much work in the developing of teachers for other schools and a substantial portion of their graduates go on to college. The third group are special institutions, each for a particular purpose. First comes St. Augustine's College at Raleigh, N. C. which ranks as a first-rate college, a large number of its graduates going into teaching work. Close by is St. Agnes Hospital, doing splendid work for Negroes in and around Raleigh and training seventy undergraduate nurses. At Petersburg, Va. is the Bishop Payne Divinity School. This organization has developed about four-fifths of the Negro Episcopal clergymen in this country. Finally, there is the Fort Valley College Center providing a chapel, social facilities and spiritual guidance for the immediately adjacent Fort Valley College now conducted by the state and formerly one of the Institute schools.

An attempt to describe the work of the Institute and its schools necessarily requires a recitation of statistics and other factual data. It is hard to infuse such an objective approach with the life, the aspirations, the human interests and the accomplishments one feels in visiting the schools. Let us try to suggest this all-important phase of the work by brief comments on two of the schools, though the same sort of recital could be made for each of them.

At St. Paul's, just outside the residential section of Lawrenceville, Va., one drives through entrance posts and enters a 1600 acre tract within which is encompassed what is almost a little world by itself. There are a score or more of buildings and a full-fledged farm. Some of the buildings are small, wooden and old; a few are of brick, modern and large. There are classrooms, a library, an infirmary, chapel, auditorium, several buildings used for education in trades and numerous dormitories, as well as houses for the teachers. Some of the buildings have outworn their usefulness and should be replaced; others are badly overcrowded. In others you find facilities for teaching brick-laying, tailoring, dry cleaning, mechanical drawing, carpentering, electrical and plumbing work—even the operation of beauty parlors (a lucrative trade in the south quite as much as in the north); in a building devoted to household economics, girls become familiar with all types of stoves and other facilities for the carrying on of all household tasks, and obtain a fine training therein. Streaming along the walks and busy in each of the classrooms are more than a thousand Negro pupils extending all the way from youngsters of the elementary classes, being taught by the student teachers, up to relatively mature young men and women about ready to go out into the world. An observer is bound to be impressed with the eagerness and ambition of the students and the general earnestness with which they work. As in all Institute schools, music and choral singing have an important place in the school activities.

Almost at the other extreme we came to Gailor at Mason, with a relatively small plot of ground and very few buildings, this school having suffered a loss by fire not so long ago. Here we find a devoted headmaster and a very small faculty making up in intelligence, drive and earnestness for what they lack in buildings and equipment. The courses are more limited, both in numbers and extent, but they are embraced just as eagerly as in the larger schools. Sound planning is in the air and the visitor becomes certain that the work is so much worthwhile that ways and means will be found for extending it to the hosts of nearby people who need it. People here are beginning to dream of a little infirmary, badly needed, to serve the Negroes for many miles around and to cut down a somewhat appalling infant mortality rate. Here, as in all of the schools, one notes with pleasure the part that the school plays in community life and

The thrill of making friends with Christian natives was experienced by Chaplain George P. LaBarre when he landed with the marines on Majuro Atoll in the Marshall Islands. Chaplain LaBarre was pastor to Episcopal students at the College of William and Mary before entering the service.

New York:—One of the most unique and vital programs of any parish in this city was that carried on last summer at St. Philip's. Confronted with the problem of children playing in the streets the Rev. Shelton Hale Bishop organized clubs for all age groups with enrollments that ran into the hundreds before the summer was over. It was all reported in THE WITNESS at the time but the picture came along later. We present it as a partial explanation of the popularity of St. Philip's rector.

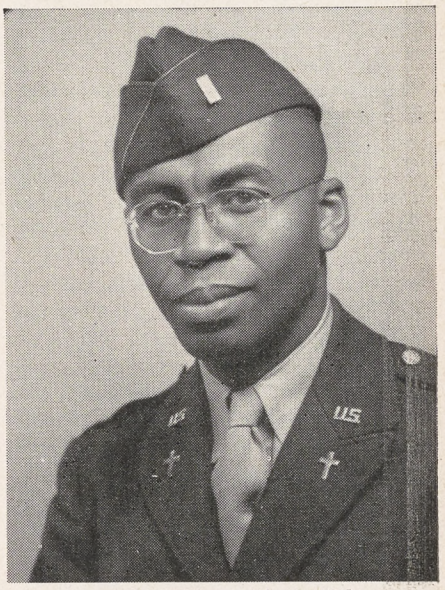
A Chaplain Writes of Clericus Meeting in the Pacific

International, Interracial and Interchurch Meetings Are Held to Discuss What's Ahead

By William Alfred Wilkins
United States Army Chaplain

The South Pacific: — Four Anglican clergymen, serving in this area of combat, met recently and organized the Coconut Clericus through which we seek strength and the renewal of fellowship. They were the Rev. Cecil Muschamp of the royal New Zealand air force; Major Frank L. Titus, member of the division of the ground forces which has been places and doing things. He is a canon of our cathedral in Albany, N. Y. Chaplain Virgil P. Stewart of the naval hospital who before entering the service was rector of St. John's, Elkhart, Ind. The fourth who had the privilege of being present was the writer and I entered the service from the Chapel of St. Barnabas in Pasadena.



We opened out clericus of course with a celebration of the eucharist, using the liturgy of the New Zealand Church. One of the impressive changes from our service was when the celebrant spoke the names "George, thy servant, king, and Franklin, thy servant, president." Here were citizens and communicants from divergent nations united in this sacramental offering, remembering their nations' heads as they prayed. Following the service the staff of the YMCA gave us tea. One chaplain who had not drunk a cup of tea, his favorite beverage, since leaving the states was particularly grateful.

Then, we piled into a jeep and rode away to the beach where there was some swimming and paddling about in the water and much talk about our homes and churches, our dioceses and the postwar order. We ate sandwiches and made a visit to an old member of the French Foreign Legion. He resembled "Old Jules," hinting of his gallant deeds in another world war, sharing with us his Australian sherry. On his place lived Matthew, his wife, and Benjamin, native adults, confirmed by the Anglican Bishop some years ago. Matthew told Padre Muschamp, "Good man, he lay hands on head." For these natives the padre has been having an occasional celebration of the holy communion. He now arranged for Chaplain Titus to come in his absence. Away over here, 9,000 miles from Church Missions House, New York; 12,000 miles from Lambeth, England, Anglican missionary cooperation has become a reality. This clericus believes in missions. We adjourned, hoping to meet again if military necessity did not intervene. Grateful for these hours of fellowship we returned to our respective "parishes."

We had our second meeting across "The River of Rain." The port battalion chaplain picked up the padre of the air forces and the naval hospital chaplain. The padre guided us to our rendezvous with Chaplain Titus, in a lovely grove overlooking a bay. Here we had a field service, the padre celebrating, using the American Prayer Book. As we reached the "Gloria in Excelsis," the swelling crescendo of a flight of planes overhead did not seem out of place. Certainly, men on earth, on sea and in the air would "give glory to God on high" and heartily pray for good will and peace among all nations.

We broke our fast on a famous American drink and molasses cookies Major Titus' mother had sent him. The padre was called on to enlighten the rest of us as to the part the Church of New Zealand had played in the development of the Anglican Communion. He told us that the province of New Zealand, in contrast to Australia's forty dioceses, has only seven. Three dioceses are on South Island; four on North Island. There are two missionary dioceses of Melanesia and Polynesia, covering the South Pacific island areas. The presiding bishop is chosen from among the diocesans; retaining responsibility for his see, along with his new duties and title of Archbishop. The present Archbishop of New Zealand is the Bishop of Christchurch, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Campbell West Watson. An interesting angle of the missionary work presents itself in the archdeaconry of the Solomon Islands. Of 54,000 Christians 27,000 are members of the Church of England. The padre gave an informal description of Church life in the "down under" province, affording us insight into the tremendous tasks and opportunities of the Anglican Communion.

A general chaplains' meeting conflicted with clericus. That meeting makes a complete story in itself. How we journeyed by jeep-boat to the Presbyterian training school, conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Gillan and Mr. Wilson. How the American chaplains (army, navy, marine) reinforced by the padre, went forth in conquering might, in the spirit and manner of Babe Ruth and Joe Dimaggio to show the natives how to play baseball, especially how to steal bases. To the astonishment of the clergy, the native boys stole bases and gave a more youthful demonstration to win the game 16 to 9.

Chaplain William Alfred Wilkins

The Coconut Clericus gathered still again in the inspiring chapel of the naval hospital with Chaplain Stewart as our host. His chapel, like everything the American navy possesses overseas, is properly appointed. The chaplain has the means to inspire his men with the beauty and the reality of holiness in a true Church setting. The altar, gleaming white, before a reredos of panels, on which are painted, on either side, a kneeling marine and sailor, behind them, guardian angels as if hurrying with their prayers to heaven's king. Even the din of outside activities could not interrupt this inspiration to worship.

In Chaplain Stewart's office, we had coffee. Here, we were joined by his "co-pastor," the Roman Catholic chaplain, Father Walther, and a Methodist chaplain of the navy, Lt. Portlock. Up to now, we had been inter-national, inter-racial but intra-church. We now became inter-church. We shared our store of wit and witticisms, by which the clergy are wont to relieve their weighty talk of "shop." As usual, the talk was channeled into a serious discussion of After the War, What?

We discovered as we adjourned that "Old Debbil" military necessity, at last, has caught up with us. Padre Muschamp is to be taken from us. But the rest of us will continue to meet until "Old Debbil" grabs the last chap from Coconut Grove.

DEAN WEIGLE ON POLITICS

Chicago:—Religion must be carried into the voting booth if the state is not to degenerate into tyranny, said Luther Weigle, dean of the Yale University Divinity School, speaking at the Sunday Evening Club here. "The separation of Church and state is a sound principle, but one that is much misunderstood," he explained. "It means that the Church and state are mutually free, and that neither may rightfully control the other. It does not mean that Church and state, being mutually free, may not co-operate with one another. It does not mean that the state acknowledges no God, or that the state is exempt from the moral law in which God sets the bounds of justice for nations as well as for individuals. Religious freedom is not freedom from the responsibilities and duties of citizenship. No man has true religion who reserves it for home or Sunday and fails to use it as a resource for daily living and public service."

BRITISH PROTESTANTS HAIL YALTA

London (by cable):—The Protestant press of Britain has hailed the decisions of the Yalta conference as providing the basis for a lasting peace. Church Times says: "Seldom has a secular conference borne a clearer stamp of harmony in morals and practise." The Record, also an Anglican paper, says: "For the world generally, and not least for the German people, the most outstanding fact that emerges is the unity of purpose which has been achieved." The Free Church press adopted a similar tone, with the Baptist Times writing: "The foundations of a stable peace would seem to have been laid . . . and the world yearning for release from war has welcomed the far-reaching decisions of the big three."

THE MAN BITES THE DOG

Rome (by wireless):—File under heading of Man Bites Dog News. The Vatican has something good to say about the Soviet Union. It is reported as "well pleased" with the "high moral tone" of recent Russian films reaching Italy, according to an article on Vatican-Soviet relations in the Rome newspaper, Tribuna del Popolo. "This is among consoling indications which prompt the hope that the Catholic Church may soon resume its spiritual activity in Russia," the paper stated.

The article noted that Russian films exalt marital fidelity and commented: "The Vatican has not hidden its pleasure over the fact that Soviet films present a standard of morality much higher than the films of other nations, and that in them the precepts of the natural law are generally observed and respected." The Vatican has appreciated the changes in Soviet divorce laws, and has also been pleased over recent reports in the Italian press concerning the high morality of Russian youth, the article added.

LEONARD HODGSON IS WOUNDED

Washington, Conn.: — The Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins, secretary for America of the world conference on faith and order, has received word that the Rev. Leonard Hodgson has been severely hurt in a V-bomb explosion which took place recently at a Presbyterian Church hall in London. Dr. Hodgson is the general secretary of the conference. Canon Tatlow of Christ Church, Oxford, cables that the noted theologian is now in a hospital, severely injured but is "making good recovery." The explosion, reported in these pages shortly after the event, killed several Church leaders.

DISCUSS VOCATIONS AT CENTER

Fort Valley, Ga.: — A conference on vocations will be held at the Fort Valley student center April 6-8, it is announced by a planning committee consisting of the Rev. James Stirling, fourth province college worker; the Rev. Hamilton West, chairman of the fourth province college commission; the Rev. J. Henry Brown, in charge of the church center and the Rev. Bravid W. Harris, bishop-elect of Liberia. The program is said to be not quite complete, but includes addresses by President Bond of Fort Valley College, and D. Brown, a discussion on The Church's Task and Specific Openings led by Bishop-elect Harris, with Miss Anna Brown of Wilmington, Del., the Rev, V. A. Edwards, Fort Valley College, and the Rev. James Stirling, participating.

Miss Ellen Gammack, personnel secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary leads a session considering nursing, and women's part in Church work. The panel for this is not yet complete, but it will include Miss Doris Wilson, a student at Windham House, representatives of the nursing profession, and others.

Tribute to Bishop Eivind Berggrav of Norway and the valiant Christians of all countries who in this war have stood for freedom of faith will be offered at a dinner in New York on March 18th. The guest of honor will be Crown Princess Martha of Norway. Bishop Berggrav is now a prisoner of the Nazis.

CLOTHING COLLECTION ENDORSED

New York:—Presiding Bishop Tucker attended a meeting at the White House called by the committee on clothing collection which will be packed and shipped to the liberated peoples of Europe and the Balkans. Upon his return to his office Bishop Tucker sent a letter to all bishops urging their cooperation in the effort. The chairman of the committee is Episcopalian Henry J. Kaiser.

EDITORIALS

The Bishops Pastoral

THE pastoral letter issued by the House of Bishops at their recent session in Birmingham, Alabama, is an able, constructive statement of what should be the attitude of the Church on a number of current issues. The bishops recognize that the winning of the war is an essential part of our effort to build a just and durable peace—though the majority of us here in America are still far from realizing that this will involve sacrifice on our part. But the bishops also see that victory in the war is not enough. It is the "age-old battle between good and evil, between Christian and anti-Christian beliefs and purposes . . . Men have allowed an anti-Christian philosophy of life to possess their minds, wed itself to the innate evil in human nature, and bring forth its evil brood of pride, arrogance, cruelty, hatred, greed and falsehood." The war is only "an awful climax in this ancient struggle," whose evil motives are at work here in America as well as elsewhere in the world. What the bishops say about crime, race antagonism, false propaganda, national selfishness disguised as patriotism, deserves not only to be read but to be taken to heart. The task of the Church is not only to have a share in the winning of the war and the making of the peace but also—and more important—in the establishment of a more Christian civilization.

The bishops frankly and unequivocally come out for the principle that world organization is essential to lasting peace. America cannot escape responsibility for the proper use of its vast power and influence. "We think that an irresponsible idealism under the guise of Christianity, which will not submit to the discipline of the achievable, will ultimately give support to the isolationism so deeply rooted in many citzens and so dangerous to the peace of the world." And so the pastoral comes out strongly for the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, and commends them to the Church for study and support.

There is a section on justice as the basis of lasting peace and there is a strong concluding section on the Church's world mission, which is something that calls for the participation of every member. There is also an arresting statement on reunion. "While we pray and labor for the full reunion of Christendom, we can find many ways of fellowship and coordination with others who love the Lord Jesus in sincerity. The Lausanne and Jerusalem, Madras and Oxford and Edinburgh conferences and the work of the late Archbishop of Canterbury in organizing the World Council of Churches have pointed a way to effective fellowship and cooperation in the world-wide service of Christ. There are many opportunities on the local level. But there can never be unity without fellowship." This is a point of very great importance. Our approaches to Church reunion ought really to be made from two directions at once. Along with the discussion of points of agreement and of difference, of history and theology, of polity and organization, there ought to be a far greater practice of fellowship. We must worship together and work together for the cause of Christ and the spread of his kingdom, if we are ever to agree upon the more formal matters which now divide us. In our whole approach to reunion we have had the services of experts in theology. They are slowly making headway on their sector of the front. But the rest of us, clergy and laity both, who should have been advancing on the front of fellowship and cooperation, have been notoriously idle, not to say completely bogged down. It is like a pincers movement with one arm of the pincer doing nothing. Under the leadership of our bishops let us rise up and do something about fellowship and cooperation—specifically and right now with our Presbyterian brethren with whom we are hoping to affect a reunion.

"QUOTES"

OUR greatest shortages are of good will and patient understanding between nations, races, classes and individuals. The supply of this most vital of all needs can come only from God through his creative and redemptive work in the minds and hearts of men. It is impossible to abolish the differences between nations, races and individuals. These differences without a principle of unity are chaos; but these differences animated by the spirit of Christ are richness. We share with our Christian brethren of every name and in every land the solemn duty and high privilege of being the humble instruments of that spirit, not in isolation, but in coordinated devotion to the one Lord.

—Bishops Pastoral, 1945

Big Five Veto Power

THE agreements of Yalta were so favorably received by the people of the democracies that there is danger of relaxing our determination that a United Nations organization to maintain peace shall be achieved at the San Francisco conference next month. The plain fact is that the anti-Soviet forces, and they are legion, are pouncing on every possible argument to scuttle the ship. It is well illustrated by the Christian Century, that anti-administration, anti-Soviet journal of undenominationalism, that is weeping crocodile tears over the fate of Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania and Poland and tearing its hair because the meeting was held in Russia, instead of Churchill and Roosevelt demanding that Stalin meet them in Africa, Alaska or some other place.

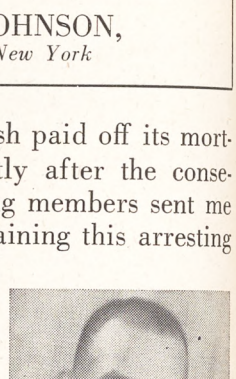
The announcement now made that it was agreed at Yalta that any one of the big five nations who are permanent members of the security council will have the power to veto direct military or economic sanctions to restrain an aggressor is a more serious matter, largely because it will be seized upon for propaganda purposes by those out to wreck the world organization. The natural reaction of the average American to this voting procedure is that it is undemocratic and that the five greater powers thus place themselves above the law. But the plain fact of the matter, whether you like it or not from the standpoint of Christian idealism, is that, once Germany and Japan are defeated, power in this world is going to be largely in the hands of the United States, Great Britain and the Soviet Union. Harmony among them is essential if peace is to be maintained, for no two of them are going to get very far in coercion of the third. Any real falling out between them and you have war. The big three meeting in the Crimea were thoroughly aware of this . . . and faced it. They simply said, "We just won't fall out. We'll keep on sitting there at the table until we do agree, with none of us reaching for our guns." That's the simple meaning of the voting procedure on the security council, with France and China also included and not reaching for their guns either. It is putting trust in trust itself. And that's the beginning of peace. The big three met that challenge at Teheran and Yalta. The big five, we believe, will meet the challenge and the smaller powers as well, petty snipers to the contrary notwithstanding.

IF YOU LIKE IT



THERE are several thousand Church people who are receiving their copy of THE WITNESS during Lent by getting it at church on Sunday. We are anxious that a large number of these people receive the paper regularly. We would like therefore to make two suggestions: first to the rector: appoint an individual or an organization to take subscriptions at $3 for a year. Deduct $1 on each subscription as a commission. Then send us the list with $2 for each annual subscription. To lay men and women: if a WITNESS representative has not been appointed in your parish, then merely send us a postal stating, "Enter my personal subscription for a year," with your name and address. We will then enter the subscription immediately after Easter, billing you later at $3 for the year. Send the card to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6.

The Series for Lent

God and Race

By
JOHN HOWARD JOHNSON,
Rector of St. Martin's, New York

A FEW months ago our parish paid off its mortgage indebtedness. Shortly after the consecration one of the most retiring members sent me a letter of congratulation containing this arresting thought: "I love my Church. It has done more for my race than any other institution. In many localities in these United States, the only place the Negro can go today and feel like a real man is the Church." This indicates how much the Church means to colored people. And it is evidence of the unquenchable ambition among all people to be self-respecting and respected.

It should not be necessary at this point to argue that all men are created equal. This truth is declared in the clearest and most explicit language by science, by democracy and by Christianity. There are no superior or inferior races. The word race itself is merely a term used loosely, to classify large segments of the human family. It has a great deal more meaning sociologically than it does biologically. Though it be granted that at certain periods in history some racial groups have advanced in their culture beyond others, even this does not prove superiority.

Yet the race problem in this country has always been pressing and acute and is now more so than ever. Dangerous tensions exist. Many white people have only contempt for minorities particularly for Jews and Negroes. And in many cases members of these minorities are ever suspicious and resentful. In the face of this serious situation there is appalling ignorance and confusion of thought. It is strange indeed that we are not more humiliated by our crude and even barbarous handling of this problem in human relationships.

In spite of violent opposition, however, the progress of the Negro in America in the past 75 years has been remarkable. Right now the war emergency has accelerated this progress by offering to Negroes better employment opportunities, a higher standard of living and all the resulting benefits. Yet it should be pointed out emphatically that the Negro has not traded on his services in the war effort for an improved status. The loyalty of this thirteen million people, the loyalty of one million men under arms, is without blemish. They are ready to fight to the last in this war not only because they love America but because they hope thereby to gain recognition and respect.

Although many white people rejoice in these forward steps others are fearful and critical. Many are annoyed for example because the Negro does not "stay put." Far from being settled in any one place he is forever bulging into new places. He "invades" residential neighborhoods where his presence is not wanted. In the south where most of his people live, he may move out, suddenly precipitating a labor shortage. It is a fact that the Negro is this country is a migrant but this is true of any oppressed people and the Negro is under duress.

A month or two ago a middle-aged colored man from the deep south reached Bath, Maine, where he went to work in a shipbuilding plant. The coast of Maine in January is not exactly a summer resort. This man said to me, "It was so cold in the barracks where I slept, that when I breathed out hard, icicles formed on the walls and ceilings." He endured this sub-zero weather as long as he could and then he had to quit. But the revealing thing is that this man reared in the sunny south did not go back where he came from to thaw out. He is now working in a meat packing house in New York. And he will be sending for his family as soon as he can.

It is idle to say that the Negro is better off in an agricultural environment, that congested urban slums are bad for him. An instinct warns people when they are in danger. During the past three years many thousands of Negroes have been fanning out into the north, the middle west and the northwest, going into many communities where only a handful of their race lived before. These wayfarers are not seeking what some people call the "social pleasures," if by that they mean invitations to dinner, belonging to clubs and the like. The intermarriage "bogey-man" is not a pertinent question as far as they are concerned and to raise it is to confuse the issues. But they are in search of good jobs, improved educational opportunities for their children, and also something less specific, but perhaps more important. They want to be free! They want to be treated as men!

SOME sincere friends of the Negro have misgivings also about his leadership. Repeated emphasis is placed upon such words as safe, sane, conservative. It is a general feeling, judging from the comments of many interested people, that Negro leaders are too radical. One is bound to have the suspicion that what is really meant is that the Negro leader should be an appeaser. Reasonableness, sanity, realism in any given situation are positive strengths, but a tendency to compromise in the face of the clearly defined truth, is more likely to be weakness.

The leadership of a race is of vital importance. No one person can speak for all the Negroes in America today. Working for the uplift of their people in many fields are many leaders and numerous organizations. They are well-informed and compare favorably with leaders of other racial groups. Whatever their differences of opinion (and they are no more divided than white people) they are united in the desire and the demand for rights as men and citizens of America. While there are limitations in some parts of this country as to what can be said or done about the race problem, the fact remains that everywhere there is a strong urge for complete emancipation. Fortunately there are an increasing number of white people in America—and they are not confined to any one section; many of them are southerners—who encourage this legitimate ambition of the Negro for manhood rights. No one who speaks in tones of condescension can either lead or wield influence with this group. And on the other hand the Negro will respond to any one who commands him with the inspiring words of Ezekiel, "Son of man, stand upon thy feet."

Closely tied to the complaint about leadership is a general feeling that there is too much agitation by Negroes. Friends advise that if they bide their time, tread lightly, endure wrongs patiently, they will fare better in the long run.

We should examine this advice very carefully. It is true of course that any man, white or colored, who deliberately lies, speaks half-truths, seeks to inflame the passions of one race against another, is a culprit. He is destroying the very grounds of fellowship. But, where the rights of man are openly flaunted, where there is injustice, cruelty and insult, he is not a man who fails to cry out against the tyranny. We have this thought in the Prayer Book ". . . grant us grace fearlessly to contend against evil and to make no peace with oppression. . . ." The time has come to deliver ourselves from the state of mind in which we think the Negro should smile and be cheerful in the face of mistreatment. We ought not to expect an entire race to take literally the doctrine of "turning the other cheek." In individual relationships, by returning good for evil, you "heap coals of fire" upon the head of one who mistreats you, but in matters concerning a nation or a race, the same thing is not true; if it were, our obvious duty after the Japanese smashed our fleet at Pearl Harbor would have been to offer them our air force.

The Negro press has also been singled out for criticism because it agitates so strongly. It is enough to say in answer to this that as a general rule it has not yet reached the muckraking level of the white press as far as racial intolerance in handling news is concerned. The creed of a number of these weeklies was stated not long ago in the following paragraph: "The Negro press believes that America can best lead the world away from racial and national antagonisms when it accords to every man, regardless of race, color or creed his human and legal rights, hating no man, fearing no man. . . . " It has been said in a hundred different ways, and it is true, that a man who is not willing to fight for his freedom is not worthy of it.

There are forward steps in establishing brotherhood (and brotherhood is God's doctrine about race) which America should be ready to take now. (1) No policies of "Jim Crow" should be tolerated in Churches, or in institutions operating under the aegis of the Church, such as schools and hospitals. (2) The right to work, to live, and to laugh is equivalent to freedom from want. Practically every abnormal condition from which the Negro suffers, such as the incidence of crime, disease, and death, can be traced directly to an economic cause. Churchmen, clerical leaders and laymen ought to be ready now to support legislative measures that will provide equality of opportunity in employment to all and so alleviate the poverty which has resulted in so many varied ills in Negro life. (3) Every American citizen should be guaranteed the right to vote for those elected to public office. (4) An American Negro should be entitled to travel anywhere in the United States and to enjoy whatever facilities are available.

The New Testament has much to say about the brotherhood of man. Its message is that in Christ, we are one. "We being many, are one body in Christ, and all members one of another."(1) "those members of the body which seem to be more feeble, are necessary. And those members of the body which we think to be less honorable; upon these we bestow more abundant honor."(2) "the members should have the same care for one another. When one member suffers, all the members suffer."(3) "there is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female. For you are all one in Christ Jesus."(4) What leadership and power Christians will bring to the struggle for a decent social order when a vital sense of their kinship, their oneness as members of the body of Christ, is born among them!

Utopia will not come to America in a day. The post-war period will present a serious challenge. Race relations will either improve or deteriorate. As His servants, as Churchmen, we are pledged to work for His Kingdom of righteousness, justice and brotherhood.

But we are born self-centered and cannot hope to succeed until contact with our Lord has worked the miracle of making us God-centered. If we are to change, to improve, we must be humble and penitent enough to call upon the eternal resources of spiritual power. Loving God with the intensity of our hearts, we then can hope to love our neighbors as ourselves. I believe the tide is coming in. We can do much to help it along.

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

1. Has there been an improvement in race relations in your community? Do you think there has been an improvement nationally? Your evidence.
2. Do you believe that the Christian religion teaches racial equality?
3. Are there evidences of "Jim-Crowism" in your community? In your church?
4. Discuss the statement that practically every abnormal condition from which the Negro suffers, such as the incidence of crime, disease and death can be attributed directly to an economic cause.
5. Do you think that laws can aid in ending discrimination?

PROBLEMS OF NEW TESTAMENT TRANSLATION. By Edgar J. Goodspeed. University of Chicago Press, $2.50.

Dr. Goodspeed's translations of the New Testament and the Apocrypha are known every where. He has also written a dozen or more books on the New Testament. Here he takes up 115 passages in the New Testament on which translators have differed from the time of Wyclif. Many persons besides translators of the Bible will find these pages of great interest. For instance John 2:4, "Woman, what have I to do with thee?" It is almost impossible to translate that question—not the words, but the feeling in it. After discussing the various attempts which have been made, Dr. Goodspeed proposes, "Do not try to direct me. It is not yet time for me to act." This is the translation in his own "American" New Testament. Or take Mark 7:11, the "Korban" passage, where he proves conclusively that the proper translation is " 'Anything of mine that might have been of use to you is 'Korban', that is, consecrated to God." This is undoubtedly the right rendering. Or take Mark 2:1, where "in the house" means simply "at home."

I think there are a great many laymen who will find this book full of fascination and who will profit greatly by its perusal. That it must be read by the clergy goes without saying!

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

Te Deum Laudamus

WE WOULD all like to believe, if historians would let us, the pious legend of the Middle Ages that SS. Ambrose and Augustine composed the Te Deum at the time of the latter's baptism.

The truth is, no certain authorship can be claimed for this noblest of hymns. Many scholars nowadays ascribe it to one Nicetas, a "missionary bishop" who flourished around the year 400, and whose see of Remesiana (the modern Jugoslav town of Nish) was near that transient place where East meets West. But in the form now used the Te Deum betrays the devout labors of more than one hand. Like the ancient prayers of the liturgy, it was born of the matrix of the early Church's corporate worship, and since the sixth century it has been universally used in western Christendom in the office of Matins on festal days.

It has often been remarked how close an affinity the Te Deum has with ancient Eucharistic prayers both of the East and the West, particularly the Prefaces. For both have roots in a hymn-form of the oldest Christian times, from which developed both liturgical prayer and liturgical song. We must remember that the consecration prayer of the Eucharist is essentially a thanksgiving-hymn of praise to God. The great antiquity of the first part of the Te Deum is further suggested by the ancient melody of the hymn, which is cast in a style of plainchant similar to that traditionally associated with the Sursum corda and Preface and is what is called "pre-Gregorian." In literary form the Te Deum is akin to the Gloria in excelsis, a fact which is readily seen when we recognize the first verse of the Gloria to be an antiphon preceding the hymn proper, which begins: "We praise thee, we bless thee," etc. The Te Deum, too, seems to have opened originally with an antiphon, for the oldest manuscript prefixes to it Psalm 113:1, "Praise the Lord, ye servants; O praise the name of the Lord."

The Te Deum is now printed in the Prayer Book in the threefold division which corresponds to its literary form and its historical development. Part I (verses 1-13) consists of two stanzas, the first recalling the unceasing praises of the heavenly hosts in their Sanctus, reminiscent of Isaiah 6:3; the second takes up the worship of the Church and her saints and culminates in a Doxology to the Triune God. The two refrains unite the praise of God's holy ones in heaven and in earth, and combine the revelation of His majesty and glory as it is given in Scripture and in the Faith of the Church. Part II (verses 14-21) is a hymn to Christ, similar in structure to a psalm with its parallelism of verses. Complementary to Part I which concerns the Godhead, this second hymn treats of the Incarnation, the Atonement and the Final Judgment. Though more poetic in language, it suggests the Creed with its succinct statement of the primitive gospel of our Lord's saving work. Verses 20-21 form a concluding suffrage, a sort of responsory to the whole hymn. The ancient melody brings out clearly this original conclusion.

Part III, a series of versicles taken largely from the Psalms, is a later addition of a somewhat fortuitous character. Early manuscripts show much variation in their contents. In one of them, the famous Codex Alexandrinus of the Greek Bible, they are attached to the Gloria in excelsis. The Psalm verses agree with St. Jerome's Vulgate, although the Scripture text used in the first two parts is the Old Latin version used in the West before St. Jerome's famous translation. Then too, the ancient music of Part III is simply adapted from that of the preceding part.

A few notes on the English translation of the Te Deum in our Prayer Book may be of interest. It does not always do full justice to the colorful language of the Latin original. For example, the "militant" metaphors of the verses about the Church are missed:

the glorious company of the Apostles,
the praise-worthy regiment of the Prophets,
the white-robed army of the Martyrs.

The "Prophets," of course, are to be understood as Christian prophets. Note in verse 12 that the doxology to the Son means (what also the Creed says): He is worthy to be adored; He is "true Son" (i.e., "very God of very God"); and He is "only-begotten," or as some texts read, "unique Son." Verse 16 in our American Prayer Book is somewhat gentle when compared with the stark original: "When thou tookest man upon thee to deliver him, thou didst not abhor a virgin's womb." Also in verse 17 "sting of death" would be preferable to "sharpness of death." For verse 21 our Prayer Book compilers used a faculty reading, "make them to be numbered" (numerari). Most manuscripts read "make them to be dowered" (munerari).

Next time we shall take up the musical rendering of the Te Deum.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

THE name of this piece: It-Can-Be-Done-if-You'll-Do-It. Governor Dewey on March 5th signed a bill giving the state of New York the nation's first official commission to fight racial and religious discrimination in the field of employment. It provides for equality of opportunity for all people regardless of race, color, creed or national origin. And if history runs true to form this New York bill may become the prototype of laws in other states which frequently have followed New York in liberal and progressive legislation. Several states as a matter of fact already have introduced similar bills, including Maryland.

Why did the bill pass? Because Church organizations, labor organizations, social service workers and others got together to work out a plan for the support of the bill. It included telegrams to key people throughout the state, particularly the northern part where opposition was strongest. These people were urged to rally support by wires and letters to representatives. When the hearings came off the committee room was jammd with people begging for a chance to tell the legislative committee why they were for the bill. They kept the committee in session until two o'clock in the morning until one of the militant opponents said, "What can you do in the face of such support?" Bishop Gilbert was among the many there, speaking for the Federal Council of Churches and the Greater New York Federation of Churches. Dick Morford also played his important part as the secretary of the United Christian Council for Democracy. I was not there as the secretary of the CLID since I had to mind daughter two while wife went to Dayton to mind grandchild one while daughter one gave us grandchild two. But the CLID got in its licks by getting wires and letters in to the committee members.

ONE of the interesting side-lights on this fight was the fact that the bill excludes from its provisions "a fraternal, charitable, educational or religious association or corporation." Opponents of course quickly went to work on that. "Here are all these religious folks urging a law from which they themselves are exempt." The reason for this exemption is that the Roman Catholic Church demanded it. And that Church is powerful enough in New York as elsewhere to defeat such a bill if they do not have their way. So those sponsoring the bill compromised in order to get it through. But speaker after speaker, urging its passage, stated before the committee that the organizations they represented would gladly comply with the terms of the bill. The CLID wrote the legislative committee stating not only that it would comply with its terms but always had and as proof presented the fact that in the past three years it had employed two Jews, one Negro, two Roman Catholics and one Episcopalian on a staff that never had more than four people at any one time. And just for good measure it added that it tried to employ a Japanese-American but apparently they are such efficient workers that they are in great demand.

There is another little side-light if you'll allow me another sentence or two. When some of the opponents of the bill realized that it was going to pass they suddenly were for it and became more liberal than the liberals by suggesting that it be amended so as to include charitable and religious organizations. The bill still had to pass the senate and they apparently figured their amendment would line up Catholic opposition. But the exponents, a number of whom knew the ways of politics, smilingly said "let's not" and the bill became law.

So if you want some action—and we get a flock of letters asking "what can I do?"—drop me a postal and I will send you a copy of the new law in New York. Then you can buttonhole some member of your state legislature and sell him the idea that he should introduce a similar bill. Then you and your friends stay with it until it passes.

The Bishops of South Africa Blast at Prejudice

Issue Call to Church People for Christian Attitude Toward the Peoples of All Races

Edited by W. B. Spofford

New York:—A recent meeting of the provincial synod of the fourteen Anglican Bishops of South Africa issued a call to Church people for a Christian attitude toward color lines. We quote it in entirety: "In view of the widespread opinion that Southern Africa may be destined to play a leading part throughout the whole continent in post-war reconstruction, we feel impelled to address the members of our own Church, and indeed all people of good will, on what we believe to be a grave evil in our midst. That is the evil of color prejudice. We are bound to condemn discrimination which is based solely on the color of a man's skin. Such discrimination is contrary to the clear teaching of the New Testament, with its twin doctrines of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. The idea of a 'herrenvolk' or super-race is wholly repugnant to the Christian religion. When the civilization of India and the east are remembered, it is ridiculous to maintain that civilization and culture are the prerogative of the white-skinned races. In all ages persons of color have won distinction in the spheres of religion, art and science.

"We affirm that the effect of color prejudice is cruel, wasteful, and dangerous; cruel, for it deprives those that are its victims of the opportunity of making full use of their capacities and talents, and so causes frustration and despair; wasteful, for it deprives the community of the skill of many which would otherwise be used for the benefit of all; dangerous, for unjust treatment meted out by one section of the community to another created fierce and ever increasing resentment with results that no one can foresee. It must not be forgotten that such injustice also adversely affects those who are responsible for it, and may well induce grievous spiritual results. We are sadly aware that color prejudice is to be found among our own Church people, and that is the reason why we address them as we do, and urge them with all solemnity, fearlessly to think out anew their own attitude, and to confront this color prejudice and its attendant results with the statement we have made above. We ask them very earnestly to consider whether it can possibly be reconciled with the teaching of our Lord Jesus Christ, the head of the Church."

Bishop Is Home

New York:—Word has been received of the safe arrival in Kunming of Bishop Y. Y. Tsu.

Oppose Reunion

London (by wireless):—A vigorous minority in the Church of England is strongly opposed to moves for reunion with Free Churches. The Council for the defense of Church principles has just issued a statement, signed by 2,800 clergymen, criticizing the South India scheme as "compromising the essential safeguards of Catholic faith and order."

First Native Bishop

London (by wireless):—Ceylon is expected shortly to have its first native-born bishop. He is the Rev. Hiyanirundu Lakdasa Jacob de Mel, vicar of St. Paul's, Kandy, who will be the first Singalese to hold the office in the Anglican communion.

Chaplain Promoted

Washington:—Chaplain Robert D. Workman, director of the chaplains division of the navy's bureau of personnel, has been promoted to the rank of rear admiral with the title of navy chief of chaplains. The action taken by the senate makes him the first chaplain in naval history to go higher than the rank of captain.

Prayers for China

New York:—April 15 has been designated for the launching of the China Prayer Covenant, under auspices of the foreign missions conference. On this day it is requested that throughout North America prayers shall be offered for China, her leaders and her people, but, in particular, for the Christians of China.

On this day too, "Christian friends of China are asked to enter into a pact with God to pray at least once daily for the Christian movement in China, preferably for individual Chinese Christians, or missionaries each day. Chinese Church leaders, through a recent cable, call us to intercession. Surely we will answer their call."

Further, the Foreign Missions Conference asks that the interest of local radio stations be enlisted, with the thought of having radio addresses on China on April 15.

And, in addition to prayers, some of you may want to send donations to the CLID (155 Washington St., New York 6) for the great work being done with Chinese orphans by the Rev. Kimber Den.

Bill in Congress

Washington:—Congressman Walter A. Lynch (D.N.Y.) has introduced a bill in Congress to establish a system of old-age and survivors insurance for employees of religious, charitable, educational and certain other organizations not now under social security. Action of this sort was urged by the General Convention of 1943.

Army Promotion

Lawranceville, Va.: — News has reached the Rev. J. Alvin Russell, president of St. Paul's, that their son, Henry Pratt Russell, has been promoted from 2nd lieutenant to 1st lieutenant. He has been overseas since Christmas and is in the European theatre.

Church Destroyed

Whistler, Ala.:—St. Paul's church was completely destroyed by fire recently. About half of the loss of $6,000 was covered by insurance. Plans for rebuilding are now being made.

Industrial Chaplains

New York:—Many chaplains will shift to industry after the war, serving as chaplains in plants, is the prediction of the Rev. M. J. Creeger, secretary of the Christian commission for camp and defense communities. He said some chaplains look with disfavor on the prospect of returning to parishes and working largely with women and children.

Industrialist Speaks

Philadelphia:—Dale Purves, manufacturer, spoke from the pulpit of historic Christ Church here on March 11th. His subject was "employment and the peace." This was the second in a series for lecture-discussions as a part of the program for the 250th anniversary of the parish which is being celebrated throughout 1945. The Rev. Felix Kloman is the rector.

Church Builds

Birmingham, Ala.: — The government has granted permission for All Saints, Homewood, to construct what the agency calls an "activities building" but what we call a parish house. Reason: expanding Church school and to provide space for youth activities for the entire community. Included is a club for the teen-ages.

Wellesley Off

Andover, Mass.:—The Rev. John Moses, spokesman for the Wellesley Conference, which was to reopen this summer, now announces that it has been called off. Reason: office of defense transportation ruling against conferences and meetings attended by fifty or more people.

Rector Honored

Louisville:—The Rev. Bill Langley Jr., rector of St. Mark's here was given a surprise party on the 10th anniversary of his rectorship. He thought he was to attend a small meeting of Alcoholics Anonymous. Instead he was greeted by his bishop; the Hon. W. B. Harrison, former mayor and his father, Bill Sr., who came on from Newport, R. I. for the occasion.

Lenten Cooperation

Baltimore: — Four parishes in down-town Baltimore are cooperating in their Lenten program—Emmanuel, Grace and St. Peter's, St. Paul's and Christ Church. All are uniting for noonday services at St. Paul's. Men and boys of three of the parishes join forces Sunday evenings for a quiet time. An inter-parish study class is held each Thursday. The women of the parishes meet Friday mornings under the auspices of the bishop's guild to study Church history and the Prayer Book. It has given the life of the Church in the central part of the city a spirit of neighborliness and common interest, reports Rector Victor Kennan of Emmanuel.

Interracial Leaders

Flint, Mich.: — Churches should recruit and train interracial leaders for the purpose of improving race relations, was a part of the findings of a two-day interracial clinic held here. It was also decided to set up a permanent council to deal with race questions.

Other points endorsed by the clinic were: 1. To ask all public and private agencies to check their work to see whether they are serving the entire community, with the suggestion that racial minorities should be represented on their boards and staffs. 2. City-wide interracial education, beginning in the home, continuing in the school, the church and the synagogue, and carried out through various organizations. 3. A survey of recreation needs and plans by a competent recreation engineer, and the development of a comprehensive plan so that recreation can minister to the whole life of the people and be a means of interracial fellowship, with the employment of year-around trained and experienced leaders. 4. Efforts for a post-war low rent, slum-clearance housing program based upon carefully ascertained housing needs of the city, and consultation with real estate dealers and builders on their plans for low-income group housing. 5. A long-range policy of encouraging Negro youth to seek basic vocational training as one step toward opening occupations heretofore closed, and other steps with labor unions and management to remove

Committee on Rights

New York:—The commission on a just and durable peace has set up a new committee to explore the function of the commission on human rights and fundamental freedoms, which is a part of the proposed United Nations organization. Among those serving are Bishop Parsons, the Rev. Henry A. Atkinson of the Church Peace Union; Bishop Oxnam of the Methodist Church; the Rev. Henry P. Van Dusen of Union Seminary; the Rev. John LaFarge S.J.; John W. Davis, former ambassador to Great Britain who will also be chairman.

Cocoanut Grove, Fla.: — St. Stephen's here has received the deed for a large tract of land adjoining its property which will be used as the site for the proposed new church.

French Hierarchy

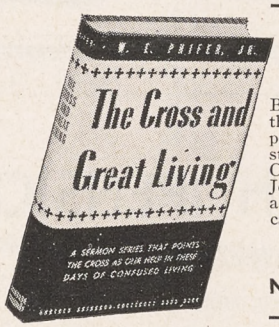
Paris (by wireless):—The Roman Catholic hierarchy of France has issued a pronouncement which denounces the purging of collaborationists and calls upon workers to join Christian unions which seek inspiration in the Church's social doctrines rather than unions, whether socialist or communist "animated by materialistic concepts of life." The prelates advocated progressive participation of workers in the management of industry "without recourse to violence against rights legitimately acquired."

Church Congress

Baltimore:—Canon Charles W. F. Smith of Washington Cathedral was the speaker at the Maryland regional meeting of the Church Congress, meeting in the parish house of Emmanuel Church, February 26th. The next meeting is to be held March 19th when the speaker will be the Rev. Greig Taber, rector of St. Mary the Virgin's, New York. Others to address meetings this spring are the Rev. John A. Bell, rector of the Incarnation, New York, Prof. Norman Pittenger of General Seminary and the Rev. Richard McEvoy, rector of St. Mark's-in-the-Bouwerie, New York.

Hit Catholic Papers

Moscow (by wireless): — The Catholic Herald and Catholic Times of London have been criticized by Trud, official Soviet trade union publication, for warning Catholics against Communists in the labor movement.



"These organs," Trud declared, "do not reflect the feelings of Catholic workers in England. They take a very different attitude than that of Archbishop (Bernard W.) Griffin of Westminster at a reception to delegates of the World Trade Union Congress. Whatever front these papers put on, it is clear they are attempting to split the ranks of workers. These attempts will receive rebuff, since the democratic workers of the world desire, and intend, to bring into being the goal of the World Trade Union Congress, namely, an international labor unity without discrimination on racial, political, or religious grounds. The campaign by the Catholic Herald and the Catholic Times is all the more strange in view of the successes achieved in France, Italy, and elsewhere as a result of collaboration of Socialist, Communist, and Christian Democratic bodies."

Supports Army

Moscow (by wireless):—The Russian Orthodox Church has contributed a half million rubles toward the USSR defense fund and special collections are being taken in churches to mark the 27th anniversary of the Red Army. Patriarch

Church in Politics

Stockholm (by wireless):—Participation in politics is "dangerous for the Church, but a risk which must be assumed," it was asserted by Arne Fjellbu, recently appointed acting bishop of Norway's liberated province of Finnmark by the Norwegian government-in-exile at London. Pointing out that the Communist Party's influence in Norway has greatly increased during the years of German occupation, Bishop Fjellbu predicted a possible split in the national community along sharp political lines after the country's liberation.

"In this also," he observed, "the Church will make a stand," and added: "The Church of Christ is independent, but one with the people. It must take a firm stand on all questions, even political, and must fight all injustice. Our mission is proclaimed as it is related to the people and the state."

Bishop Fjellbu said the admiration and attachment of Norwegians of every shade of political thought for the Church was "proving never so great," and that the Church was respected by everyone, "even by Communists."

The scarcity of food, medical supplies, and fuel has made this winter the hardest since the German occupation began, he said, but the morale of the people remains "good."

WORK OF AMERICAN CHURCH INSTITUTE FOR NEGROES

the way that it has been accepted by the white and colored leaders throughout the community. Readily discernible is the influence that it has had on the Negro communities adjacent to the school in improving standards of living.

One would like to tell about each of the schools because all of them have rich histories in which are written the life story of many devoted men and women who brought the schools into being and kept them alive in their early days. The worth of the present day work of each of the schools is also worthy of retelling. Time and space considerations forbid the doing of this pleasant task. We must hope that the breadth of the work will be suggested by the photographs presented herewith.

Most of the schools are without endowments and in no case are there substantial funds. There is literally no limit to the amount of money that could be used constructively in this work of tremendous national importance. There is, however, an immediate need which can be shared and for which provision must be set. The schools are "bursting at the seams." All of them require more buildings and more equipment. To fill all important and urgent needs would require upwards of a million dollars. It is recognized that with all of the other needs that must be faced by philanthropic people this provision cannot be hoped for at this time. Thus, we have limited our present listing only to items for which the need is so great that immediate provision must be made. This group of projects totals a half million dollars. Our preference is that gifts shall be for apportionment by the Institute board, but we recognize that many of the particular needs lend themselves to gifts as a living memorial. To any one desirous of making that type of gift, full details will be given on request.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

J. V. Blake
Layman of Akron, Ohio

I have the utmost respect and real affection for my two fellow parishioners who are responsible for the letter that appeared in this department February 15th. I know of no more devout and interested Church members than they. On the other hand I do not think that a Church paper should be penalized because in most cases it tries to publish religious news as it sees it. For that reason I enclose my check for $3 for a gift subscription. Send it where it will do the most good.

The Rev. Robert B. Gribbon
Rector at North Plainfield, N. J.

I liked the Church and Labor Number. It was done skilfully from every point of view. I hope you'll fight out the issue of admittance to Holy Communion. If Church is as defined authoritatively in office of instruction by what right does anyone deny to a "member of Christ" participation in the sacrament of His table? On the other hand to one who says, "I will take communion and I won't be confirmed" I say "If in that spirit I fear for your soul." There is such a thing as unworthy receiving.

Rev. W. P. Richardson Jr.
Rector at Ludington, Michigan

Whoever wrote that dumb editorial in the Feb. 15th issue entitled "The Communion—Keep It Holy" shows a sad lack of the knowledge of liturgics and an unawareness of the theology back of the sacraments of the Church. There is nothing in that Lenten Forward booklet comment for Maundy Thursday which I have not heard from my youth up—and I was not raised in a so-called high church parish. It is the basic teaching about Holy Communion of catholic Christendom. Apparently you are joining with The Churchman in an all-out attack on the catholic position of our Church. You should know from past history that such efforts will greatly strengthen catholic churchmen. You constantly denounce those who attach the communist label to any unpopular cause, yet you and The Churchman do the same thing when it comes to the catholic teaching of the Episcopal Church because it does not agree with your own narrow views. In so doing, you are being no witness to the understanding love of our Lord.

Mr. H. B. Sanger
Layman of Natick, Massachusetts

I would like to ask the writer of the editorial in the February 8th number, after reading his opinions of Henry Wallace, if he believes in our form of government and the constitution or a form of national socialism.

ANSWER: Editorials are the responsibility of a board, not of individuals. Those listed in the masthead on page two approved the editorial in question unanimously. To reply to the question: every Witness editor believes in our form of government and in the constitution, as of course does Mr. Wallace. And we have vigorously opposed every form of national socialism both here and abroad. However we add that we find nothing in the constitution or the laws of the United States which require us to believe in any particular system of economics. It is our considered judgment that those economic changes and reforms which have been officially approved by several General Conventions of the Church can take place under our form of government and under our present constitution.

Layman of Jacksonville, Florida

In Backfire for February 8th Mr. Frank R. Fortune's letter damning you, The Witness and the C.I.O. is so interesting that I feel impelled to make up his subscription by enclosing my check for $3 for which please enter one year's subscription for Dr. Witherspoon Dodge, southern director of the president's committee on fair employment practices. Doctor Dodge is a friend of mine and I believe that he will enjoy the truly Christian atmosphere of The Witness more than did Mr. Frank R. Fortune.

Mr. Frederick W. Kilbourne
Layman of Cheshire, Connecticut

As a subscriber to The Witness I should like to protest against your subserviency to the interests and purposes of the C.I.O. and especially its agent, Sidney Hillman, who is evidently engaged in a campaign or crusade to make so-called "labor" (limited by itself to those who work in factories and the like) supreme in politics and, apparently, in control of the world. He appears to be attempting to array one element in the community, or "a class," against all other elements and thus to "nazify" this country and others with the C.I.O. at the top. Woodrow Wilson said, "A class bent upon subserving only their own interests can devise injustice in greater variety than can a despot and their insolence is always quick to goad the many to hot revolution."

We have been holding a weekly discussion on the post war problems which we shall face as Negroes and a minority group. In these discussions we try to bring out the best methods of solving these problems and what part we may play in getting the best results. We have about fifty officers and enlisted men in the group including Australians, American (White and Negro). In working together we have learned to respect and understand each other more. We realize that winning this war will not end our fight to make America the country we would best like to live in. In order to do this we must prepare ourselves to face the future problems. We will be glad to have copies of The Witness to use with the group and any other material you think may be helpful.

ANSWER: We are sending regularly a bundle of ten. If anyone wants to make this as a donation the cost is $5 for ten weeks.

Through gifts from friends and an appropriation from the National Council, the Institute provides vocational education for Negroes in seven southern states. In addition to the vocational and technical training in the five schools, it aids in the support of St. Augustine's College, the Bishop Payne Divinity School, St. Agnes' Hospital, and Fort Valley College Center. One of the Institute's greatest needs is a progressive increase in its endowment.

Head of Chamber of Commerce Calls for Home Unity

Churchman Eric A. Johnston Urges Business And Labor to Take Leaf from Yalta Meeting

By Rita Ruben

New York:—Churchman Eric A. Johnston, president of the Chamber of Commerce, in a speech before a labor union here advised business managers, labor, agriculture and government to take a leaf from the Yalta conference and agree on a program for "peace at home."

The Yalta decisions may represent "as great a victory as any that has ever been won upon the fields of battle," Mr. Johnston told officers of the International Ladies Garment Workers. They hold out a perspective of ever higher levels of living in America, provided areas of domestic agreement are mapped with equal skill, he said.

Though it is "Pollyanna nonsense" to deny differences, he added, he has seen negotiation solve more vexed points than some which brought on strikes and lockouts.

Going on to suggest "antes" for each group, Mr. Johnston termed monopoly a "sissy" way to do business, desired only by those who are "afraid of their own inefficiency." Production at lower profit for each unit must be accepted by management, he added.

He asked labor to contribute increased efficiency and productivity and to curb its minority leaders who "bring the entire labor movement into disrepute." Management will do the same, he said. Thereupon he was asked from the audience to comment upon the action of Sewell Avery in the Montgomery Ward dispute with the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

A "sixty-four-dollar question," Mr. Johnston replied. Then he said:

"Management, whoever they are, must recognize that labor unions are here to stay and to play a very definite and important part in production."

Someone wanted to know if Mr. Johnston thought he expressed typical business viewpoints, and he replied he spoke for "the majority, reflecting the view that management rapidly is absorbing."

Government must provide a post-war tax program to foster investment of risk capital, he stressed, and, more emphatically, he said it must define clearly the areas of its activity. Business's sphere should be set as plainly, he said, and agriculture recognize that "a well paid managemen and well paid labor are essential to absorb the production of the farm at a fair return."

"We must understand that all of us either go up together or fall separately into bankruptcy," he argued. With co-operation he foresaw, for at least ten post-war years, production peaks leveled out and no significant unemployment.

Later Mr. Johnston told a reporter he does not intend, as has been reported, to accept a post in the movie industry. "My term with the Chamber of Commerce is not up until May," he said, "and, who knows, they may want to re-elect me."

LIBERALIZE BURIAL LAWS IN ENGLAND

London (by wireless):—Free Church rites may now be conducted at burials in Church of England cemeteries, and adherents of Free Churches may be buried by their own ministers. The historic change was brought about by a declaration of the Archbishop of York on recommendation by the legal committee of the Church Assembly. The Archbishop declared that any provision in deed of gift for churchyard extension that restricts the form of burial service to that of the Church of England must be void.

By the law of 1880 noncomformists were given access to graveyards and consecrated cemeteries on giving certain notice but the aim of this law has been defeated in some cases when donors of land for cemeteries inserted a clause in the deed that only the Anglican service could be used at burials. Free Churchmen greeted the Archbishop's declaration with satisfaction. Although unpleasant incidents have been rare, recently there have been occasions when parish clergymen have insisted upon graveyard rites undesired by bereaved families.

Churchman Eric A. Johnston says cooperation will mean days of prosperity for America

NO NEGOTIATIONS SAYS VATICAN

Rome (by wireless): — Vatican quarters have denied a report in the Rome newspaper, Il Tempo, that negotiations are under way for a Vatican-Soviet agreement.

Il Tempo had stated: "Vatican circles today confirmed reports of discussions being conducted by the United States government toward an accord between the Vatican and the Soviet. The American initiative, which was started with President Roosevelt, and is being fully supported by England, is believed developing favorably. It will probably lead to a concordat between Russia and the Holy See."

Despite the Vatican's denial, which came through its press office, informed clerical circles in Rome were said to be more and more convinced that a rapprochement between the Vatican and Moscow is on the way, and that the forthcoming visit of Edward J. Flynn, personal representative of President Roosevelt, may have significant results.

Meanwhile, according to Fascist radio broadcasts, Mussolini's supporters are "deeply concerned" over the possibility of a Vatican-Russian agreement, since this would destroy their last hope of mobilizing a crusade of western Christians against communism.

One broadcast, revealing the confusion in Fascist ranks, stated: "The Soviet advance into Europe is threatening not only Christianity in general, but more particularly Catholicism. The division between Catholics and communists, instead of being still further increased, seems instead to be nearer being resolved."

Fascist spokesmen explain this "phenomenon" by stating that Jewish interests are now demanding a truce between Marxism and Christianity, and that it is to be expected that "Roosevelt, descendant of Jewish magnates," should help Judaism "use Catholicism for its own ends as it has already used Russian communism."

Rome newspapers have referred increasingly to the possibility of a Vatican agreement with Russia. Up till now the Vatican has maintained complete silence on the matter. Competent observers, however, profess to read between the lines of recent articles in Osservatore Romano, Vatican newspaper, strong indications that a modus vivendi is being worked out.

BISHOP OF PHILIPPINES REPORTS

New York:—A letter from Bishop Robert F. Wilner of the Philippine Islands has reached the National Council. It was dated February 9, and was written evidently almost immediately after the Bishop was liberated from internment at St. Tomas University. He stated that all the people imprisoned there are thin and run-down, but believes that the good food they are receiving now will soon restore them to health. Bishop Wilner himself is suffering from beri beri but said that if he responds to treatment soon he wants to stay in the Philippines and do his part in getting the work going again.

St. Stephen's and St. Peter's churches in Manila have been burned, Bishop Wilner said, but he believes that St. Stephen's Chinese school for girls near St. Luke's Hospital is still standing. St. Luke's is being operated by the army as a civilian hospital. At time of writing, Bishop Wilner had no information from across the river, where are located the cathedral, bishopsted, rectory, and other buildings. He stated that as soon as conditions permit, some of the staff will visit all Manila property and report on its condition.

Canon Harvey has been for nearly two years the "chaplain" of the St. Tomas camp, and has kept in better health than most of the other clergymen interned. Bishop Wilner commends highly the work of the two Igorot priests, one Igorot deacon and two Chinese priests.

ANTI-DISCRIMINATION BILL SUPPORTED

San Francisco: —California churchmen are supporting a bill before the state legislature to outlaw racial discrimination in employment. Endorsement of the measure was given at a meeting sponsored by the council for civic unity, the San Francisco branch of the national association for the advancement of colored people and other organizations.

A special committee was created to work for enactment of the bill and a large delegation named to appear before the legislators when the bill is considered. Among those who endorsed the bill were Episcopalian John C. Leffler, president of the San Francisco federation of churches; Rabbi Elliot Burnstein, president of the Northern California Conference of Rabbis; and Father Thomas J. Burke, pastor of Old St. Mary's Church.

NOTED THEOLOGIAN IS DEAD

London (by wireless):—The Rev. Alfred E. Garvie, vice-president of the world conference on faith and order that met at Lausanne in 1927 died here at the age of eighty-four.

Canon Robert D. Smith, whose article is featured this week, talks things over with a soldier at Fort Monmouth. He is the head of social service in the diocese of New Jersey and rector of Christ Church, Shrewsbury.

JAPANESE AMERICANS TO HAVE HOSTEL

New York: — Establishment of a hostel in Los Angeles, and also a home for aged and infirm Japanese Americans, is being considered by the American Friends service committee, according to Robertson M. Fort, secretary of the Friends' Japanese American relocation work. A hostel has been opened in Pasadena, Calif., in cooperation with federated missions, and a committee of "friends of evacuees" in the city, Mr. Fort said, and will accommodate up to 12 persons.

Mr. Fort reported that 1,452 evacuees have made use of hostels operated by the Friends in Chicago, Cincinnati, and Des Moines since 1943.

The CLID Adopts New Program For Present Situation

Deals with Both National and International Problems and Calls for Action by Churches

By W. B. Spofford

New York: — The Church League for Industrial Democracy has sent to members a new program dealing with problems that must, in the opinion of its national committee, be faced today if we are to have a world of peace based upon justice. The program is the result of a conference of members held in New York and later ratified by the national board of directors. With the program there has been sent a covering letter stating that "members are not required to subscribe to all the points" but that they doubtless will "subscribe to its general philosophy and want to act upon one or more of the points set forth." The letter also states that the program is for the immediate situation with a revision promised as events dictate.

The aim of the organization is first set forth as being "concerned with the relation of man to man in the processes of production in the light of Christian teaching. Production—the bringing forth of abundance from nature's resources—is here regarded as the area of man's relation to nature and his use of nature's resources for human life. The League's aim in this area is to promote in all industry, national and in the nation's international relations, the full expression of Christian concepts which constitute for us as Christians the sure source and guarantee of the essentials of true democracy. Industrial democracy as an aim for us is an obligation imposed by Christian teaching. The League considers that its social responsibility is to interpret to Church people for their information and action the important issues in the field of its concern."

The program is divided into four parts: the home front; the international front; the Church; plans of the League to further the program.

On domestic issues the League calls for action on nine issues as follows:

1. Full employment at adequate wages is essential to the democratic ordering of economic life. Toward this end, in the shift to a peace time economy, fair and just re-employment regulations must be directed.

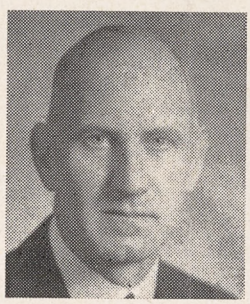
2. An annual income in the form of an annual instead of a mere daily or hourly wage should be guaranteed to all workers, including working farmers.

3. Buildings, equipment, and other commodities which are public property, if regarded as "surplus" in the post-war readjustment, must be used for the benefit of the entire community.

4. Even in the war emergency, the so-called national service legislation which conscripts labor without conscripting wealth should be opposed, first, on ethical grounds, and second, because in the experience of both labor and management such compulsion is held to be ineffective for the purpose of increasing production.

5. Collective agreements between unions and management are supported as basic in industrial democracy. Legislation which would undermine organization, such as prohibition of the so-called closed shop, the licensing of union officials, and other similar measures interfering with the established rights of collective bargaining should be opposed.

6. We support the position of women in industry, that the so-called equal rights amendment to the federal constitution should be opposed on the ground that it would deprive women of their important right to legislation which establishes healthful standards for their work.



7. The gospel proclaims equality of all men before God, and the abundant life for all on equal terms. Therefore, restriction or rights or maintenance of privileges on account of race, creed, or color should be outlawed.

In line with this principie, the national fair employment practices committee should be continued by Congressional action, and similar state committees should be established.

The Church itself in all its relations, internal and external, should observe this principle against discrimination and for equality.

8. As contrary to the principles of political democracy, and therefore opposed to the progress of industrial democracy, all poll-tax legislation should be repealed, and the League advocates unremitting activity toward that end.

9. Because of identity in immediate aim in all essentials included in our program, and because the National Citizens' Political Action Committee has been organized to bring about support of the unions' political program in all areas of common interest for the general welfare, the League urges upon all its members that they seek opportunities for cooperation with the National Citizens' Political Action Committee and its local representatives.

Among the leaders of the CLID are the Rev. Joseph Titus, rector at Jamaica, N.Y.; Mary van Kleeck, vice-president and chairman of the program committee; Bishop Edward L. Parsons, the president of the organization

On the International Front the CLID takes the following positions:

1. As the first step toward a just and durable peace, we support the proposals put forward at the recent international conference at Dumbarton Oaks, and we urge Church people, diocesan conventions, and Church organizations to inform the state department and their Senators that they support these basic principles and the organization outlined for putting them into effect.

2. Complete support of international democracy and opposition to fascism call for immediate cessation of relations by the United States with Franco's government in Spain. The CLID will co-operate fully with organizations aiming to break relations with the Franco government and seeking support for the Spanish republican government-in-exile.

3. The people's movements in liberated countries are to be supported in every possible way.

The Church, as well as League members, is then called upon to act on a number of issues as follows:

1. A social action division should be established in the division of social relations of the National Council.

2. It is incumbent upon Church leaders, particularly those in high and strategic places, to make the social demands of the Church heard and understood.

3. The use of the name of religion by reactionary organizations, such as Spiritual Mobilization, Inc., to cloak their fascist program, is to be opposed and exposed.

4. There should be an exchange of delegates between Church and labor at the meetings and rallies of either group.

5. The CLID has an obligation to supply servicemen with information to aid in their orientation to civilian life, to the end that they may take their place with those forces seeking the extension of democracy.

To the end that this program may be more effectively carried out, the CLID proposes:

1. A series of tracts elaborating points in this program, which shall be sent to all members and other interested persons.

2. Revitalizing of CLID chapters.

3. Establishment of chapters in seminaries.

4. Regular publication of a bulletin in which action that members are called upon to take shall be stressed.

5. Issuing of releases to the Church press.

6. Publication of a devotional manual.

7. Promotion of institutes similar to the one held at the Episcopal Theological School.

DR. COFFIN PREACHES AT CHRIST CHURCH

Philadelphia: — "How can the Christian Church commend Jesus Christ as the unifier of nations and races if we do not allow him to unify his own people?" asked the Rev. Henry Sloane Coffin, president of Union seminary in a sermon at Christ Church, March 18th. "The credit for initiating this movement for union between the Episcopal and Presbyterian Churches belongs to you" and then he quoted the late Archbishop of Canterbury as saying that " 'if union of the Anglican and Presbyterian traditions could be brought about the most significant healing of a four centuries old breach would have been effected and a nucleus formed about which it would doubtless be possible to gather the largest possible number of English-speaking Christians'." Dr. Coffin concluded his address by pointing out that plans by themselves cannot unite churches "so we trust that a skillfully planned basis of union in which every effort is made to conserve all that is precious in both heritages may so bind together our two communions that God may enable us to grow into one dedicated Church."

CHURCHMEN URGE STATE FEPC

Boston: — Representatives of the Episcopal Church appeared before a research committee of the state legislature on March 7 to go on record for the establishment of some sort of Fair Employment Practice legislation in Massachusetts. The Rev. Howard P. Kellett executive secretary of the department of social service of the diocese read the following statement from Bishop Sherrill: "It seems to me most important that in the state of Massachusetts there should be an adequate statute which will enable the enforcement of a fair employment practice. Certainly racial and religious discrimination is one of the evils of our time which must be faced realistically and wisely if we are to have a real and true democracy. I endorse therefore the move which will make possible such a fair practice law with the necessary enforcement to make it not a hope but a reality." Others to appear at the hearing were the Rev. Messrs. D. LeR. Ferguson of St. Cyprian's Church, Boston, and the Rev. K. deP. Hughes of St. Bartholomew's Church, Cambridge. Mrs. Polly Spofford represented the CLID at the session.

CHAPLAIN SHANNON IS KILLED

Washington:—The navy has announced that Chaplain Eugene R. Shannon was killed in action on February 21 while serving aboard ship in the Pacific. He was formerly the rector of Grace Church, Freeport, Illinois.

EMMANUEL PARISH PRESENTS PLAY

Boston:—A play, The Rock, showing the character development of Simon Peter has been presented at Emmanuel Church the last two Sundays. It is a four act play, written by Mary P. Hamlin and directed by the Rev. Phillips E. Osgood, rector of the parish who is an expert in religious drama.

To Afflict the Comfortable

IT HAS been well said that it is the function of the preacher to comfort the afflicted and to afflict the comfortable. Certainly the story of Palm Sunday is a preachment designed to afflict through the ages. Perhaps at no time in history ought affliction to be more felt than by America — the comfortable — today. For, through no virtue of our own we have in large measure escaped the terror and tragedy that the greater part of humanity has experienced. But in spite of this — or because of it — we still have a major part in erecting the continuing cross. It is to us before all that those words are directed — "If thou hadst known, even thou, the things which belong to thy peace, but they are hid from thine eyes."

Let us beware lest we merely acknowledge in contrition our fault and rely, too readily, on the forgiving power of God. It is a genuine repentance that is demanded of us; a repentance that has its issue in drastic regeneration. We know well what our sins are; they have not changed greatly since the year of the crucifixion. We pray for the homeless, the suffering and the outcast—and we are intent on preserving a society wherein our possessions shall remain intact; we turn our eyes from the harrowing pictures of death that is the result of lack of brotherhood —and we cling to our prejudices of race and creed and color; we read with dread the casualty lists in our newspapers—and we go right on, some of us, resisting any effort that might entail the giving up of our sovereignty as a nation in a world united that is crying to be born out of chaos.

Small wonder there was anguish in the heart of Jesus as he entered the city that day hoping that somehow, someway, men would heed him. We are among the incredulous crowd that watched him; intrigued but unconvinced, unwilling to be swayed, unable to pay the price he called for.

There is only one way out and it is the way he took; the way of deliberate sacrifice of some of the things we hold most precious. Our pinch-penny charity must give way to his response to human need wherever he found it; our limited sympathies must yield to his conception of the brotherhood of all men; our smug isolationism must be willing to surrender its rights to a conception of a world that is worthy of civilized men.

A prominent scientist wrote several years ago, "For the first time in the history of humanity a crumbling civilization is capable of discerning the causes of its decay." We should be even better able today to discern these causes, for they have been underlined in blood and lighted by the angry fires of destruction. Never mind about the guilt of the rest of the world; greater obligation falls on those who have the greater power.

The sand is running out fast but it is not too late for us — the comfortable — to mend our ways. May this Palm Sunday and the days of Holy Week not pass without a consciousness on our part that the Christ stands looking upon us as he looked upon the city which was soon to reject him and force him to the cross.

"QUOTES"

IF YOU by some chance have been slipping in regularity in church attendance won't you stop and think: first, if irregularity hasn't somehow softened your fibre and allowed you to be too self-indulgent; and, second, if you don't really owe something to your Church and your comrades there by your ratification of their faith in it and your participation in the whole family of God? The rest of us need you and after all don't you need what the Church provides for you?

—Phillips E. Osgood
Rector of Emmanuel, Boston

They Didn't Know

JESUS' transportation on his triumphal entry into Jerusalem was furnished by a lowly ass. The behaviour of the people on this occasion and their rejection of him a few days later suggests that this may have been the proverbial ass between two bundles of hay. Certainly these people could not have known their own minds else they could not within the space of a few days have received him so joyously and then turned against him. They simply did not know, and they simply did not think what the coming of the Messiah meant. In general terms it was a nice idea, and they approved as their conduct indicated, but these same people became easy victims to the poisonous propaganda of the enemies of Jesus when they clamoured for his death. Whatever else Palm Sunday teaches, it throws into bold relief the instability of people who base their actions on whim and fancy.

This Palm Sunday lesson bears we believe upon the action of the Church with respect to unity. The reunion of Christendom is a noble idea. As long as it is stated in general terms few Christians oppose it. At Cincinnati in 1937 the declaration of purpose to achieve organic unity with the Presbyterians was passed with enthusiastic unanimity. This same declaration was passed again at Cleveland unanimously. Yet when definite proposals are formulated by the commission and submitted to the Church for action a few individuals take exception and find it easy to inflame the fears of the great body of Church people and block any definite action. The impression gets abroad that we do not want Church unity. The real truth of the matter seems to be that the people of the Church are following the Palm Sunday pattern of behaviour. We flounder because we do not know what we want. For instance we have only a vague idea of what the catholic nature of the Church really is. So when organic unity with the Presbyterians is proposed, we immediately jump to the conclusion—aided by the opponents of union—that the scheme means absorption. Either we absorb the Presbyterians and they lose their identity or the Presbyterians absorb us and we lose our Prayer Book, our three-fold historic ministry, our type of worship, and everything else we cherish. This smacks of the narrowest sort of sectarianism rather than the comprehensiveness of the Church catholic. Nothing so far presented by the commission of unity has to the slightest degree compromised the principles of the Lambeth Quadrilateral. We rejoice that our Church enjoys the comprehensiveness which includes in the same communion a St. Bartholomew's and a St. Mary the Virgin. These two extremes exist side by side and neither is asked to give up its distinctive type of worship. Why then must we be thrown into a panic of fear lest in union with the Presbyterians either lose distinctive characteristics?

In a recent editorial in these columns the hope was expressed that through fellowship with Presbyterians we might come to know one another better. We suggest that it might also be fruitful for us to explore the rich possibilities of a truly catholic Church in which that which is typical of our heritage and that which is typical of the Presbyterian heritage exists side by side in the same communion. This might be an approach for the joint commission on unity to develop. There is already too much sectarianism in our Church thinking. It stultifies. We want the Christian Church, and particularly the proposed union of the Presbyterian and Episcopal Churches, to be founded upon the comprehensiveness of genuine catholicism.

IF YOU LIKE IT

THERE are several thousand Church people who are receiving their copy of THE WITNESS during Lent by getting it at church on Sunday. We are anxious that a large number of these people receive the paper regularly. We would like therefore to make two suggestions: first to the rector: appoint an individual or an organization to take subscriptions at $3 for a year. Deduct $1 on each subscription as a commission. Then send us the list with $2 for each annual subscription. To lay men and women: if a WITNESS representative has not been appointed in your parish, then merely send us a postal stating, "Enter my personal subscription for a year," with your name and address. We will then enter the subscription immediately after Easter, billing you later at $3 for the year. Send the card to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6.

The Series for Lent

God and the World

By
ROBERT D. SMITH
Canon of Social Service, Diocese of New Jersey

WITHIN all its brutality and devastation, war has revealed and elicited a courage, a fortitude, and a capacity for selflessness in the human spirit that is profoundly significant, and could be full of promise for the future of the world. Whether in line of battle, in the secret perils of the underground, in crowded cities under bombing, or in the day-to-day civilian effort here at home—in the worlds of H. J. Laski, "Men and women, the normal routine of whose lives seemed to lack any character of heroic proportions became, as it were over night, capable of exertions and of sacrifice which little in the inter-war years would have led one to predict." Certainly many of us here, and countless more in Europe have learned in the hour of danger how truly we are members one of another, and that the acquisitive man is a menace to himself and to his fellows, and only he who is able to identify himself with the common cause, can secure his own safety. The deep mood of happiness that seems to have surged up in so many people in the midst of trial and horror is rooted in the regained sense of meaning and purpose in life that war has brought, and the newly discovered joy of service to, and solidarity with others that it has given.

The great problem facing mankind is how to harness these new insights, these deeper loyalties, this new sense of kinship, one with another, to the tremendous tasks of peace. It is pretty generally recognized today that peace will not come automatically on the expiration of hostilities, nor can we ever return to the old ways before the war. The war is not the basic evil. It is but a symptom of a sickness in our civilization. All those things we are fighting for, and which we conceive in terms of freedom, and security, and opportunity for ourselves and our children, can be found only by dedicating ourselves to the tasks of solving our social, economic and political problems with the same energy, devotion, and willingness to sacrifice, that we gave to the war, and by making these qualities of spirit the moving principle of the social structure we are building.

As Edward H. Carr has pointed out in his book, Conditions of Peace, the crisis we face is essentially a moral one. For one thing, democracy, as equality of political rights, is becoming increasingly meaningless in the face of tremendous economic interests which can influence government with an effectiveness, and in ways over which the ordinary voter has little or no control. Furthermore, cultural and racial cleavages with their own pattern of social inequality tend to empty of all meaning equal political rights. The structure of society, if it is to be in any real sense democratic, must provide for the individual a full participation in social life, and in the effective control of his economic life. Fundamentally, however, this is a matter, not so much of an increased demand for rights, as of a deeper sense of obligations. And that is a moral matter.

Secondly, we can no longer think of the world as made up of absolutely independent, inviolable, sovereign states. Economic inter-dependence ties nations together. Revolutionized methods of communication and transportation draws them into a proximity that makes New York and Moscow closer to each other than New York and Boston were one hundred years ago. Modern methods of warfare have rendered nonsense the idea of isolation and neutrality. The nation must find its true identity, and the freedom and well being of its people, in a system of collective security, in an international organization in which each nation gives of itself, and to which each nation sees its relationship not so much in terms of its rights as of its obligations. It is in the last analysis a moral problem, and the excellent foundations being laid under the impact of the war and in such promising plans as the Dumbarton Oaks proposals will not succeed "unless and until," as Hocking has pointed out, "The world can find an object of loyalty, devotion, and obedience, which transcends the nation state."

THEN thirdly, the economic crisis. Unemployment and the tragic prospect of over-production on one hand and under-consumption on the other which had become so characteristic of the inter-war years since 1929 is itself rooted in a problem that is essentially moral. We had tried to conduct an effective system for the production and distribution of the world's goods with no more adequate incentive than the individual's own personal profit. This did not prove too faulty as long as industry and commerce was mainly a matter of small craftsmen and merchants, freely competing in rapidly expanding market. Today, however, huge industrial and financial organizations with tremendous capital, investments and mass armies of labor have replaced individual enterprise. And the failure of these powerful economic groups, with all the skill and resources they possess, to provide for mankind the abundance of goods they are potentially equipped to provide, reveals the gross inadequacy of the motive of profit, and private gain. Required in a fundamental change in motivation—The providing of service must replace the securing of profits. The concept of welfare must replace that of wealth. Above all, the entire process of production and distribution must be brought into a planned and regulated system subject to social control and responsive to the need and judgment of people, and in which the total well being of the people takes precedence over all consideration of selfish gain.

War has temporarily solved the problem of unemployment mainly because it has provided a non-profit making enterprise to which, by and large, producers and consumers, employers, and labor have dedicated themselves with a willingness to sacrifice and a singleness of aim. The tragedy of the modern world is that war seems to be the only cause which can thus lead great economic groups to subordinate their own interests to that of the public good. The way out says E. H. Carr will not be found "until we find some moral purpose in the peacetime world powerful enough to general self sacrifice on a scale requisite to enable civilization to survive."

Such a universal moral purpose can only be found in the Christian idea of God—of God's purpose for man, and of man's place in the world. The Christian begins with one central thought—that God loves man. That as Archbishop Temple has told us is the source of man's dignity, his worth, and his freedom to live his own life and to fulfill his own destiny. "If I am a child of God destined for eternal fellowship with him, I have therein a dignity with which the state can make no comparable claim." In respect to his sonship to Lord, man is completely equal to all his fellows. It is in the infinite worth that sonship bestows that we find the answer to all claims of superiority. Herein is the foundation of democracy—in whatever form it may take—a respect for and trust in the common man—"and the test of it not whether the majority prevails, but whether the minority is given a freedom to express itself and become the majority if it can." As God's love is the source of our freedom, it is likewise the source of our responsibility. "If God so loved us, we ought also to love one another." The only worthy response, and indeed the only possible one to God's love for us, when once realized, is an outgoing love for others that will bridge all barriers between us, and over-ride all self centeredness.

Such a faith and the moral incentive it provides can transform the world—if we give it a chance. The central question facing the Christian Church is whether it can measure up to its responsibility or whether it is too weakened by its divisions, its little and great compromises, its proneness to follow rather than to lead. Certainly if it is to exert the influence it should on the emergence of a new world it needs fresh insight into its heritage of faith, a devotion to its Master that will place him above every loyalty in life, and a determination to live his life uncompromisingly in the world.

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

1. Discuss the statement that war has brought meaning and purpose to life.
2. In what ways is war a symptom of a sickness of our civilization?
3. Do you think economic democracy is necessary if we are to maintain political democracy?
4. Do you believe that the winning of the peace is a moral problem?
5. Why did our peace-time economy break down and result in mass unemployment?
6. Fundamentally what is the contribution of religion to the problems here presented?

For Church Schools

By

WILLIAM GRIME
Rector of St. Paul's, Great Neck, N.Y.

ONE is often asked for a good dedication service for church school teachers. Here is such a service whose rich simplicity and persuasive call to consecration makes it the best I have ever seen and used. For it we are indebted to Bishop Angus Dun.

Let us give thanks that Christ revealed God's love for children and their great value in His sight.

For Our Lord's welcome to children, that they should come freely unto Him with naturalness and without fear;

We thank Thee, O God.

For his vision of the worth of their unspoiled simplicity and trust and their nearess to the Kingdom;

We thank Thee, O God.

For His indignation against those who cause one of His little ones to stumble and His benediction on all who minister to children in His Name;

We thank Thee, O God.

For the childhood of our Lord; for His birth and infancy; for His mother's care; for His growth at home and at school in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and man;

We thank Thee, O God.

For His natural boyhood, uplifting childhood into the presence of God; for the grace and love of God, by which He took to Himself the form of a child and taught us to know the Father;

We thank Thee, O God.

And as we give thank for the childhood of our Lord and for all childhood in Him, let us pray for all who share in the care and nurture of children:

That we through whom children receive their first thoughts of God may grow in the knowledge and love of God and of His Son, Jesus Christ our Lord;

We beseech Thee to hear us, O Lord.

That we who are called to prepare the way for the coming of the Lord into the hearts and lives of children may walk in that way ourselves;

We beseech Thee to hear us, O Lord.

That we who teach truthfulness may grow in truthfulness.

That we who teach reverence may grow in reverence,

That we who teach cleanness may grow in cleanness,

That we who teach love may grow in love,

That we who teach the blessedness of giving and the life that is found in self-losing may grow in giving and be delivered from the service of ourselves;

We beseech Thee to hear us, O Lord.

That we who call children to prayer may answer Thy call to prayer,

That we who call children to the reading and hearing of Thy Word may read and hear Thy Word,

That we who call children to faithful membership in Thy household the Church may be faithful in our own membership;

We beseech Thee to hear us, O Lord.

From all that in us which stands between Thee and Thy children;

Good Lord deliver us.

From carelessness and indolence; from tardiness and selfsparing inregularity; from hasty preparation and shallow aims;

Good Lord deliver us.

From dullness; from irritability; from fear to reveal our ignorance; from unwillingness to share our best;

Good Lord deliver us.

From the desire to dominate; from the desire to make children our followers rather than Thy followers; from the temptation to offer children something less than the best in order to hold them;

Good Lord deliver us.

O God, Father of all,
Hear us for the sake of the children.

O Christ, Teacher of all,
Hear us for the sake of the children.

O Holy Spirit, strengthener of all,
Hear us for the sake of the children.

We here offer and present unto Thee, O Lord, our selves, our souls and bodies, to be a reasonable, holy and living sacrifice unto Thee; humbly beseeching Thee that we and all others who share in the care and nurture of Thy children may be used and blessed in Thy service. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

THE Hon. Edward R. Stettinius, secretary of state, probably never heard of THE WITNESS but he may now inquire. Mrs. W. O. S. Sutherland, president of the Auxiliary of the diocese of East Carolina, read the article in our issue of November 23rd in which the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals were explained by a spokesman for the CLID. The article also stated that the original document should be studied by parish groups and findings sent to Mr. Stettinius. She therefore had letters sent to the 73 parish branches of the Auxiliary and also to all the clergy in the diocese, urging this action. She enclosed in each letter a copy of the Proposals (supplied by CLID) and the article clipped from THE WITNESS.

She then informed the secretary of state about the action taken and at the same time sent him a copy of a resolution that was adopted by the two hundred delegates that attended the diocesan Auxiliary meeting which follows:

"Inasmuch as a permanent peace can be made only with the full cooperation of the nations of the world, and that world organization will succeed only if it has the whole hearted cooperation and leadership of the American people and their government, and further, that this cooperation and leadership can never be adequate except the people of the Church be actively engaged in it, and further, as the secretary of state of the United States has requested the people of the Church to express themselves:

"Be it therefore resolved that the Woman's Auxiliary of the diocese of East Carolina shall petition members of Congress from North Carolina requesting that the United States of America shall become a member of a general international organization of United Nations as outlined by the Dumbarton Oaks Conference.

"Be it further resolved that the Woman's Auxiliary solicit the aid of the clergy of the diocese in bringing to the attention of their congregations the findings of the United Nations conference to be held in the near future.

"Be it further resolved that the various Auxiliaries in the diocese incorporate, as a part of their program of the year 1945, a definite program, or series of programs, on this subject.

"Be it further resolved that a copy of this resolution, as it is adopted, shall be sent to each member of Congress from the state of North Carolina, and the secretary of state of the United States."

So when you are tempted to say, "But what can I do about such an important matter," think of Mrs. Sutherland and the members of the Woman's Auxiliary of the diocese of East Carolina. There's action.

*THE MESSAGE OF THE NEW TESTAMENT. By Archibald M. Hunter. Westminster Press, $1.00.

The thesis of this little book is that the New Testament, with all its variety of documents and authorship, has one main point of view and theology. Every book in the New Testament bears witness to an essential doctrine of Christ, an essential doctrine of the Church, and an essential doctrine of salvation. I think the author overdoes his treatment and overproves his case. You finish the book with a feeling that the genuine variety in the New Testament has been too much soft-pedaled. The book needs to be balanced up with the reading of such a work as Professor E. F. Scott's Varieties of New Testament Religion.

"Strangers and Pilgrims"

TO UNDERSTAND aright the Holy Communion lections appointed for Lent and Eastertide we must recall that they are surviving relics of what was once a daily lectionary of the seasons, and were designed in large measure for the instruction of catechumens in the periods immediately before and after their baptism. The rationale of their selection is thus found in the pivotal sacrament of initiation, which the Church administered annually at Easter, when the new converts "put off the old man, which is corrupt," and "put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness." There is, accordingly, a distinct "crossing over" in the perspective of the lessons, especially the epistles, with the change of seasons, to correspond to the new perspective of those who had "crossed over" by the bridge of Christ's Cross from spiritual death to life in the Spirit.

Under the title "Lenten Renewal" I discussed over a year ago (Witness, March 2, 1944) the significance of the propers for Lent. In both seasons the lessons appeal to men to undertake the triumphant life of purity, charity and faith. But whereas in Lent the gospel is proclaimed as the power which delivers us from the world's bondage and corruption, in Eastertide it is presented as the power which delivers us from the world's tribulation and persecution. In the former season we herald the victory of the spirit over the body's affections; in the latter, the victory of the spirit over the body's afflictions.

It is well to remember that our liturgical tradition was formulated when Christianity was persecuted, when the Church was keenly alive to the peril of conformity to this world, when the daily endeavor "to follow the blessed steps" of Christ meant to live dangerously—literally to be "strangers and pilgrims." Our liturgical epistles for Eastertide are excerpted from the Catholic epistles, written at the time when the scattered Christian communities of the Roman Empire faced the full impact of the dangers and pitfalls of "those who are admitted into the fellowship of Christ's Religion," living amidst "the sundry and manifold changes of the world." In this "second generation" of the Church, after the death of her original apostles and leaders, the little mission communities had been completely cast off from their nursing Jewish mother, were already outlawed as an "illicit religion" by the State, and were beset within their fold by the rise of false prophets and heretical teachers.

The Petrine epistles for the Second and Third Sundays warn us of the buffeting and malice of the world outside, hostile as it is to those whose conscience is toward God. The selections from St. James for the Fourth and Fifth Sundays point to the enemies within: the contentious and disputatious brother without humility, and the hypocrite whose worship is empty, being unproductive of good works. Against the former foe is set victorious and life-giving faith in God's Son (First Sunday); against the latter, "fervent charity" in our gifts and our speech (Sunday after Ascension). The gospels of the season contain tragic references of a similar sort; notably, the odious hireling-shepherd without love of the sheep, who abandons them to the wolf, thinking only of his own safety (Second Sunday); or that most hideous of all perversions of religion, persecution in the name of God (Sunday after Ascension).

The stark realism of such teaching sets in relief the connecting theme of these Sundays—our necessity for the Comforter, the indwelling Spirit of the risen Lord. His gifts are: Peace in the midst of fear and strife (First Sunday); Joy in the midst of sorrow (Third); Guidance into all truth (Fourth); and Courage to bear witness (Sunday after Ascension). These are the "Four Freedoms" which the Church can possess when she is in heart and mind ascended and exalted with Christ. In our day, when the Church realizes so tragically the tension between the ideals of her community and those of a secularized world, and when she is weakened by the conflicts of her own disunity within, she may well make her Eastertide a new advent of the Comforter to

Anoint and cheer our soiled face

Where thou art guide, no ill can come.

Condition of Church in Japan Described by Student

He Escapes from Japanese Army to Report Christianity Much Weaker Than Before War

Edited by W. B. Spofford

Chungking:—News of the state of the Churches in Japan has been nearly nil since Pearl Harbor but Richard T. Baker, correspondent for Religious News Service, has now written an inside view given to him by a Korean theological student who was forced to volunteer for the Japanese army, served a few months and then escaped and made his way to this city.

Christianity in Japan, he believes, is a much weaker force today than it was in 1941. Christian membership has fallen off as much as two-thirds, he says, and church attendance is about a fifth of the pre-war average.

The 28-year-old student, who was in his third year in theology at the Nippon Theological College in Tokyo, named three reasons for the waning of Christian influence in Japan. For one thing, the new Japan Christian Association, which was inspired by the government to "unite" the churches, spends so much effort flattering the state and its wishes that it is no longer a spiritual force, and many real Christians stay away from church to protest.

Second, it is no longer popular to be a Christian. The faith carries a stigma of being foreign, and the nationalist enthusiasm has weaned away persons of weak faith. "Christians are no longer respected by the general public," he said. Third, people are too busy to go to church. Sunday is a work day, and while Christians in Japan may have time off for attending services, few take it. Pastors also must perform their national labor service.

Christians have been a nucleus of criticism against the state, this former Japanese soldier declared. The famous Christian leader, Toyohiko Kagawa, who had been doing social work since 1941, was thrown into jail in October 1943 for his generally liberal social criticism and opposition to the war. "I was a close friend of Kagawa and heard him say many times that the war was making Japan poorer, that our militarists were leading us to national disaster," the young soldier told.

Eighty-three leaders of the Holiness Church are in jail, and also many Seventh Day Adventists. Both these sects remained highly critical of the government and refused to compromise an inch of their faith. Both refused to enter the union of all Christian bodies in Japan, and both have been disbanded, their leaders jailed, their publications confiscated. Their second advent and millenarian tenets aroused government hostility because they defied the immortal traditions of the Mikado.

Roman Catholics have shown the least decline of Christian bodies in Japan. There are still Italian and German fathers serving as Missionaries. Their seminaries are open, and their priests being trained, without conscription taking them. Japan has kept relations with the Vatican, and has not insisted that Catholics enter the Japan Christian Church.

While the general attitude is moving toward a Japanized Christianity, there has been no coercing of the faith in Japan as there has been in Korea. A layman named Sato, whom everybody recognizes as a government agent, has formed a new sect radically combining Christian and Shinto beliefs, making Jesus another embodiment of Amaderasu Omikami, the national God. The sect has become popular and is winning supporters, although it is considered unorthodox and is opposed by the Japan Christian Church. What Sato has carried to an extreme is typical of the whole tone of nationalized Christianity in Japan today, the young Korean patriot declared.

He also said that the celebrated plan of union which was set up for all Japanese Christian churches in 1940 and 1941 had been a failure. It had weakened Christian influence, and instead of unifying the Churches had really served to atomize them. The picture today, he said, was one of individual churches and individual pastors running things for themselves.

All non-Catholic theological seminaries have been closed, and their students conscripted. All Christian publications are censored, although they are still issued. There has been no tampering with the Bible as in Korea where the Old Testament was made to conform to Korean classics rather than true Hebrew history. A new translation of the Old Testament is now being made by a committee in Japan to match the recently revised Japanese New Testament. The young theological student considered these revisions "good and absolutely true to historical Christianity and Judaism." Christians are free to observe their festivals. Sunday is a workday, but Christians can have time off for services.

The Japanese clergy has been hit hard by the war. They have been forced to take on other duties outside their churches. A third have been dispatched overseas as "missionaries," many have been arrested and conscripted if they are of army age. "The remaining pastors are all over 45 years of age," he said.

Moscow the Center

New York: — Writing for Religious News Service, Alexander Kasem-Beg, Russian adviser to the international YMCA, says that two main conclusions were confirmed by the recent council of the Russian Orthodox Church: one, that the Russian Church has emerged as an influential world force; two, that Moscow has been reestablished as Eastern Orthodoxy's most active religious center. The fact that the council convened with the help and cooperation of the Soviet government; the participation of all Orthodox patriarchates in the meeting; the presence of a delegation from the dissident Orthodox Church in America; the unanimous election of Patriarch Alexei—all are factors pointing to the enhanced prestige of the Russian Church and of Eastern Orthodoxy as a whole.

Of utmost significance to the future of Orthodoxy was the plan laid before the council by Metropolitan Benjamin, exarch of the Russian Church in America, for the creation of a central, inter-Orthodox organization, or synod, vested with consultative, if not administrative, functions. A world federation, resulting from a series of compromise adjustments between the different points of view of various national churches, would doubtless represent a powerful international force.

Successful Campaign

Chicago:—More than fifteen million dollars in contributions and pledges has already been received in the campaign of the Methodists for twenty-five million for world relief and reconstruction.

Religious Communities

Cambridge, Mass.: — The centenary of the restoration of the religious communities in the Anglican communion is to be celebrated this year. The outstanding event will be a service and a mass meeting at the cathedral in New York on April 9th. A very excellent letter has gone to all the clergy asking them to preach sometime during the year on the communities, signed by the superiors of the three orders in the Episcopal Church. It is the type of letter, we believe, that will win them many friends.

Missionaries Ready

Lisle, Ill.: — The day when Roman Catholic missionaries will again be free to labor in Russia is drawing nearer, according to monks of the Benedictine order of St. Procopius abbey, the only institution in the USA which trains men for work in that country. "We must go to Russia as soon as possible to meet the spiritual needs of the people," declared one of the priests, a native-born white Russian.

School of Religion

State College, Pa.: — About 100 parishioners, students and faculty members are attending a school of religion being held at St. Andrew's on Monday evenings during Lent. There are eight courses offered, and except for the one for confirmation candidates that is taught by Rector John N. Peabody they are all taught by laymen. The one on prayer is by Prof. William V. Dennis who was on the WITNESS honor roll for 1944.

Bishop Manning Better

New York:—Bishop Manning of New York, who has been in a hospital since December 7 with a severe attack of rheumatism, has returned home. His physician states that the bishop will soon be able to resume his regular duties.

Rector Celebrates

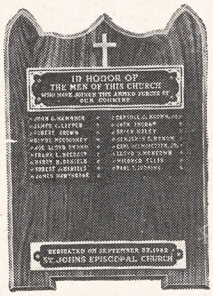
Wilkinsburg, Pa.: — The Rev. William Porkess celebrated a double anniversary on March 4th—the 26th anniversary of his rectorship at St. Stephen's and the 13th of his chaplaincy of the rotary club. Many tributes were paid him, including a glowing one from Mr. John McDowell, former Congressman and now the editor of a local newspaper. But perhaps the best tribute of all came from his congregation that turned out that day in force to honor their rector.

Returns to Europe

Algiers (by wireless): — Bishop Paul Neff Garber has arrived here to become the first resident Methodist bishop in Europe and North Africa since 1939. There are twelve countries in his jurisdiction with Switzerland the only one unscathed by war. He states that he will work with the World Council of Churches and existing relief organizations "closely and in every possible way."

Plan Victory Day

London (by wireless):—Plans for celebration of victory day were speeded here when it was announced that hourly services will be held at Westminster Abbey as soon as the final defeat of Germany is proclaimed. Three great thanksgiving services are scheduled at the Abbey on the Sunday following V-Day. Also thanksgiving and rededication services will be held throughout the country.



Political Action

Washington: — A seminar for Church leaders on the techniques of political action, particularly of legislative action for international cooperation, will be held here April 9-11. Selected leaders of social action committees of the Methodist, Northern Baptist, Protestant Episcopal, Congregational, and Presbyterian (USA) churches will attend the conference which is sponsored by the legislative committee of the Congregational Christian council for social action. Rev. Francis McPeek, chairman of the legislative committee will preside.

Tentative program includes a forum on "How can Church members carry on legislative action?" and a round-table meeting with legislative representatives of farm, labor business, and veterans groups. The Church leaders will meet Senators and members of the state department

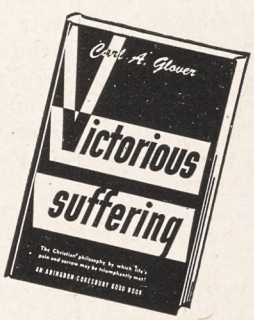
Ask Readmission

Paris (by wireless):—Metropolitan Eulogius Georgievsky, head of the Russian Orthodox Church in western Europe has petitioned Patriarch Alexei for readmission of four independent Russian emigre dioceses into the jurisdiction of the Moscow Patriarchate, it was learned here. The metropolitan's application was submitted in person through the Soviet Ambassador in Paris. Separated from the Moscow Patriarchate for the past ten years, the western dioceses embrace Belgium, Czechoslovakia and southern France, with an independent diocese in Paris. Metropolitan Eulogius is at present under the jurisdiction of the Ecumenical Patriarch at Istanbul. He has been rector of the Russian Orthodox Theological Academy in Paris since its establishment some twenty years ago.



A Plan That Works

Boston:—"If I were back in a parish in the States today," writes a Navy Chaplain to the Army and Navy Commission, "I would select a small group of picked men who would correspond with a small number of picked servicemen. The approach of these men to the boys in the service would be similar to a rector's approach, except that they would not give counsel in spiritual matters. It would be on a basis of friendship and a growing knowledge of the boy's family. The writer might find that the boy could use a scout knife, or a waterproof covering for a pocketbook, a cigarette lighter, a cheap plastic case for a pack of cigarettes—essential here to keep the cigarettes from absorbing perspiration and getting mouldy.

a relationship a parish does something of real benefit. It creates a friendship which is truly Christian, between writer and the family of the boy to whom he writes. It develops a relationship between the writer and the boy which results in the boy's coming to dinner at the writer's home when he is on leave, and establishes there, almost the relationship of a god-parent.

"I am every day exposed to the responsibility of the home parish, and very few of them are doing more than lip service. As usual they start out with a lot of ideas, try to put them all into practice at once, and soon find the whole program has flopped. That is very dangerous when you are dealing with the souls of men, and when those men may within a few hours face death. Also it creates in them the quite justifiable impression that the home church is probably still tied up with so many little details and so many touchy problems of keeping the members of the congregation on good terms with one another, and is still so intent on trying to appease the low church clique and the high church clique in a parish, that there is no time and no mutual interest in those things which to the thinking Christian serviceman looks up as basic—Christ Himself."

Denounce Nazis

Geneva (by wireless):—Nazi authorities in occupied Holland were charged with violating "all the commands of humanity" in a pastoral read in the Protestant churches of the Netherlands. It said that thousands of persons, including those still in their teens, were being deported to Germany for war work; that pillaging continues unchecked; that murder and annihilation continues "on a scale far beyond the needs of warfare." Since the message was read the situation has become worse, with deportations being carried out even more extensively.

Heroic Clergyman

New York:—The irrepressible Newton Liu is heard from again. He is one of the Chinese Church's most picturesque and heroic clergy. When a bomb destroyed his school in Changsha he apologized because the confirmation scheduled that day in the adjoining church had to be delayed for two hours. When Changsha was finally taken by the Japanese Mr. Liu did all he could to help others get away, sent his family off, and barely escaped with his life. He was not heard from for some weeks but has emerged unharmed. His train, at that disordered time, was six days going a few hundred miles.

He writes of the trip: "The scorching sun, filthy environment, cholera and lack of water were hardships to many and all. But I enjoyed the trip pretty much. I read three books, including a dictionary on philosophy and a book on Northwest China. I had the pleasure to lead chapel with the passengers and occasionally some preaching to others."

On Preaching

Philadelphia: — "It is a grand thing to be able to preach to a man with whom you have gone fishing," declared the Rev. Joseph Fort Newton, rector of St. Luke and the Epiphany, in a sermon delivered at the Ordination Ceremony for the Rev. Kenneth C. Morris at Christ Church. In his sermon, Dr. Newton declared that, "a minister of the Church does not belong to himself . . . he is a child of the Church." He called preaching, "the sacrament of personality," and likened the personality of a clergyman to a "prism" through which the divine light shines. "The pulpit," said he, "is a public place in which the preacher speaks of private and secret things, whispered by laymen." For this reason he emphasized the necessity for sincerity and declared that as a servant of human souls the preacher must know and study the nature of those to whom he preaches.

Praise for Churches

London (by wireless): — The Church of England newspaper asserts that "the world owes a debt of gratitude to the American Churches" for their part in America's pledge of cooperation in post-war plans for peace.

Why Church Fails

Worcester, Mass.: — "Nice, respectable churchmen" are "insensitive to the challenge" of public health and public housing programs, the Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher, dean of the graduate school of applied religion, Cambridge, told All Saints' Church lenten school of religion in an address here. He cited statistics dating from 1846 to the present to show that the Episcopal Church had a membership 99 years ago of one-half of one per cent of the population of the United States and has the same percentage of membership today.

"Our Church doesn't grow, you see, and it doesn't decline. It holds its ground just well enough to keep pace with the population statistics. What does that mean? It means that we are a class conscious Church; that we have narrowly defined our corporate identity. We're not Evangelical. We're not prophetic. We're not pastoral. We're dormant—maybe even dead—I don't know.

"And the only Church which can grow is the Church which is socially realistic—the Church which understands and plans for the trends of the modern world—which meets the needs of the modern community. In most cases, the Church, and churchmen are not aware of the collectivistic trend of every phase of human life. These social forces affect the life of the Church whether they are acceptable or unacceptable. And the word 'collectivism' is definitely a bad word. Speaking of moral and ethical duty—if you go to a nice respectable churchman and talk to him about a decent public health program or housing program, what do you get? You get the gate. Nice, respectable churchmen are insensitive to the challenge implicit in rotten housing and rotten recreational facilities. Schools, by cultivating the whole of life, are cutting the ground out from under the feet of the Church. And the only Church which can grow, and meet the growing needs of the times, is the Church which is socially realistic—the Church which understands, and plans for the trends of the modern world, the collectivistic trends, and which meets the needs of the modern community."

The Tasks Ahead

Boston:—"The greatest needs and opportunities now exist in the far east," said Lewis B. Franklin when addressing the Diocesan School, Cathedral Church of St. Paul, on March 8. "Nearly one half of all the people of the world, about one billion souls, live in that area. For the past century, most of them have been dominated by a little handful of Anglo-Saxons, French and Dutch. Then the partial freedoms they possessed were lost to the Japanese and now these subject peoples are beginning to see the dawn of a new day of real freedom. Great Britain has promised freedom to India on certain definite conditions; the Philippines are all but free today; extra-territoriality has been abandoned in China.

"America with the rest of the world," he continued, "is vitally interested that the new and free civilizations about to be built shall rest upon strong and lasting foundations." Referring to the faith in God which guided every step of the founding of our own country, Mr. Franklin emphasized that upon no other basis can an enduring democracy be established.

The problems of our own land were not neglected as Mr. Franklin defined the millions not yet possessed of the freedom to which they are entitled: 13 million Negroes legally free but still under the bondage, in large part, of ignorance, poverty, race prejudice and discrimination; 125,000 of Japanese ancestry of whom more than half are citizens denied their freedom; 20,000,000 uprooted Americans huddled in great war industrial centers.

Anti-Nazi Activity

London (by wireless): — Resistance of the German Confessional Church to Nazism was carried into the German armed forces through the chaplaincy service, it was disclosed here by the religion division of the ministry of information. A German war chaplain who is now an Allied prisoner of war has been identified by German Confessional representatives in Great Britain as a member of the Church's opposition movement and as author of a pamphlet in defense of the Jews which he wrote while serving as a chaplain. He also described the sufferings he and others endured before the war, and how various Confessional pastors had been imprisoned or put to death.

Calling on Christians to take a definite stand against many features of Nazism, he wrote: "We live in an age no less pervaded by superstitions and devils than were the middle ages. Instead of witchmania it is Jewmania which inspires orgies of our allegedly enlightened era. This Jewmania, which was already raging madly in the Middle Ages, has reached the acute stage nowadays.

"The Church must not keep silence. It must not say the settlement of the Jewish problem is a civil matter, and one in which the state is entitled to authority. . . . Nor must the Church say the Jews are now receiving the punishment they deserve for their sins. There is no such thing as moderate Christian anti-Semitism, even when it is presented in an illuminating manner with logical national reasons, or even with scientific, or shall we say, psuedo-scientific reasons.

"Witchmania, too, was once given a scientific basis by experts from faculties of theology, law, and medicine. The fight against Judaism comes from the same murky spring as did witchmania. Mankind today has still not outgrown its search for a scapegoat, and therefore it is always searching for all kinds of guilty people, Jews, Free Masons, and powers unanswerable to the state.

"It is therefore necessary for Christianity to make the same decision which the congregations of the middle ages made. Instead of searching for a scapegoat, and singing of hatred, it must repent and acknowledge its own guilt. It must exercise all demons which have invaded our era, with triumphant assurance that Jesus is victor, that everything must be subject to him, and that he is leading the world on towards his return and his wonderful kingdom."

Convict Priests

Moscow (by wireless): — Four Orthodox priests have been sentenced to imprisonment by a Bulgarian peoples court, according to a Sofia broadcast. They were condemned for complicity in German attempts to prove Russian authorities responsible for the mass-murder of 12,000 Polish officers and men at Katyn forest in 1940. Remember? A very large number of Americans also believed the Russians guilty at the time.

Christianity the Hope

Boston: — No one knows how strong are the anti-Nazi Roman Catholics and the Protestants in Germany, said Professor Herbert Gezork of the Andover-Newton theological seminary and Wellesley College, when addressing the diocesan school on Christianity and the Post War World. But, he continued. from them will come the future Christian leadership in Germany. Professor Gezork predicted that Christianity will be a salvation to many Germans, particularly the youth, in whose minds and souls there will be a spiritual vacuum after the war.

Roger Clapp, in charge of the work for the re-location of Japanese Americans in New England, of which there are 500, reminded his hearers in the session devoted to the Nisei, that the famous 100th battalion, comprised entirely of young men of Japanese ancestry, is one of the most decorated units in the army.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

REV. H. BAXTER LIEBLER
In charge of the National Council's Mission to the Navajo Indians, Bluff, Utah

Some time ago I saw in Backfire a letter from a soldier who remarked that he had been counselled by his pastor to attend Roman Catholic mass when our own Church offered no opportunity of worship; to this your editorial comment expressed a wish to know if any priest of this Church ever did so counsel a parishioner. If only one half knew how the other half lives! Your amazement was probably as great as was mine at your amazement, if you follow me.

I have always given such counsel to parishioners, and while I would not care to submit a list, I am sure that many hundreds of parish priests do so. Why not? Where else will they find a Church with the same creed, a valid ministry, the service of the altar substantially as our own Church conducts it, including, on most days, the very same collect, epistle and gospel, and the same emphasis upon the eucharistic sacrifice as is implied in our own Church formularies?

I am not blind to the defects of Rome, or do I enjoy hearing waltz-time, sentimental hymns sung during parts of the liturgy, but these matters are superficial as compared to the alternatives of staying at home (or camp) or attending Protestant worship which, while perfectly satisfactory to its votaries cannot possibly give to our people, because they haven't it to give, the things we consider essential.

MARGERY C. WEYHENMEYER
Churchwoman of Mountaintop, Pa.

The editorial, The Communion, Keep It Holy (WITNESS, Feb. 15) is a disgrace to a Church paper. You who take up the cudgels for those outside our communion but slap many of your Church brothers in the face for believing in the real presence of our Lord under the forms of bread and wine. Certainly after he blessed them in the first Lord's Supper he did not say "this broken bread is like my broken body." He said "this is my body."

THE REV. KENNETH RIPLEY FORBES
In charge of Calvary, Philadelphia

As a subscriber to THE WITNESS since its beginning, I protest now against the persistent and militant partisanship evidenced in the editorial policy ever since the reorganization under the chairmanship of the Rev. F. C. Grant. The latest evidence of this is the thoroughly vicious attack on the Lenten number of Forward Day By Day. Apparently judging others by itself the editorial writer condemns the Lenten leaflet as introducing party spirit into the forward movement. It is obvious to any fair-minded reader of the leaflet in question that this is not true.

I here accuse the writer of the editorial of March 8 of three deliberate mis-statements: 1. That Churchmen read (in the Lenten Forward Day By Day) that they should receive ashes on their forehead on Ash Wednesday. 2. That they should ask the saints to pray for them. 3. That they learn that all should go to auricular confession in holy week. No such statements were made in the leaflet as anyone can see by reading it. The whole spirit of this little pamphlet is the very antithesis of partisan. What riles THE WITNESS is the simple fact that there is so much as a mention of beliefs or practices commonly called catholic or high church. It is quite evident in which publication the divisive, party spirit is dominant.

THE REV. PHILIP LESLIE SHUTT
Rector at Belvidere, Illinois

The meeting of representatives of Church and labor held at Newark, N. J., as reported in THE WITNESS (March 8) was undoubtedly of great value, but I was distressed to read the comment of Mrs. Dorothy Chase of the CIO about the contribution women can make. She would decry the home-maker in favor of the factory-worker. She says, quote, "an examination of the crevices of a window sill for dirt does not constitute the understanding, guidance and warmth which a mother must give to make a home. . . . women can make a better contribution when not bowed down with tedious household details. . . ."

The window sills for one thing would not be dirty if the mother took time to look after her housekeeping. This means that she would give attention to her family. The Church has always taught that the object of matrimony was to reproduce the race which implies the family as a basic unit of civilization. The Presiding Bishop's program for Forward-in-Service has stressed the importance of the home and family life. I am inclined to think that post-war planning would do well to provide a course of home-training for the millions of women now deserting their families for war-work if we are going to have a healthy civilization.

Decidedly the Church must concern itself with social institutions and systems such as industry, but an equal concern should be given to teaching the importance of the family as a constructive contribution to post-war civilization.

THE REV. THOMAS F. OPIE
Great Barrington, Massachusetts

No doubt a large percentage of your readers will approve your editorial reference to the Lenten number of Forward-Day-by-Day. In addition to the party spirit found here, there is a statement (in March 21st devotions) that ought to be branded as grotesque and entirely out of line with modern ideas of God. "God wills punishment for us because he loves us," we are told. Imagine a human father inflicting upon his beautiful daughter, say, cancer of the breast—or upon his fine young son, infantile paralysis—because he loved them! The "God" that some people worship is my devil. I would not preach the gospel of a God who would inflict a moment's torturous suffering upon his children—nor would I worship such a being. It is time we began to brand this sort of grotesquerie.

BEGINNING AT JERUSALEM

● THE work which is aided by the Good Friday Offering reaches out into the Holy Land and the neighboring Arabic-speaking countries, Transjordan, Syria, the Lebanon, Iraq, the western shore of the Persian Gulf, the island of Cyprus, and parts of Turkey.

● THE Good Friday Offering is your only opportunity to share in this mission supported by every part of the Anglican Communion. Now when war interrupts communications and stops aid from some parts of the world, American help is more necessary than ever before. A more fully Christian Palestine will be the keystone of a more Christian world.

Plan today to have a part in this great symbol of Anglican coöperation

The Good Friday Offering is authorized by General Convention, commended by the Woman's Auxiliary, and directed by the National Council of the Episcopal Church. Unless other arrangements have been made by the Bishop of the Diocese, checks should be made to the order of Lewis B. Franklin, marked for The Good Friday Offering and sent to him at Church Missions House, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York 10.

Gifts to this Offering are not credited on quotas.

Moral Foundations Necessary For the New Society

Bishop Oxnam Urges Church People to Exert Influence on the San Francisco Decisions

By Vance Hayes
Of the WITNESS Editorial Board

Berkeley, Calif.:—"The Churches do not expect Stalin, Churchill and Roosevelt to agree upon the style of architecture of the new house for humanity, but they do insist upon moral foundations." These were the words of Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, Methodist Bishop of the New York area and president of the Federal Council of Churches, that set the keynote of the last of his series of lectures on the E. T. Earl foundation of the Pacific School of Religion.

This year's lectures assumed unusual importance coming as they did on the eve of the San Francisco conference. It was with this thought in mind, together with the role of the progressive churchmen of instilling into the conference the ethical spirit of justice, that Bishop Oxnam chose to speak on "Religious forces and the coming peace."

"The Churches," said Bishop Oxnam, "support the Dumbarton Oaks proposals as a first and significant step. They are opposed to isolationism and to any expression of it in a masquerading imperialism. We refuse to allow a false nationalism to betray mankind for the thirty pieces of imperialistic silver.

"World law and order cannot be built upon foundations of economic injustice. Men who put class interest before the common good are miniature Chamberlains marching to Munich, and their pitiful pronouncements of 'peace in our time' are but prelude to the deluge. Injustice cannot be appeased. Acquiescence in inequality must end. Contemporary leaders must discover the method to preserve our liberty, use it to establish equality, and thus march to fraternity."

Bishop Oxnam went on to say that the Churches are ready to establish law and order which represent the largest area of agreement now possible even though the measures fall short of the Christian ideal. He made the provision however that these measures must not be accepted as proposals the churches are pledged to perpetuate. Without crossing the line that separates Church from state, the citizen members of the Church must make their voices heard in the future decisions that must be achieved. The ideals of religion must be translated into the realities of world law and order, economic justice and racial brotherhood.

Following this same general theme, Bishop Oxnam preceded this lecture with a discourse on "The new social service state." In this lecture the Bishop sought to reply to the criticism that state planning will inevitably result in dictatorship.

"The man who equates planning and totalitarianism," declared the Bishop, "is blind to the fact that there can be democratic planning wherein both security and freedom are maintained. Americans have planned for the education of their children, and the public school system of the United States is one of the great democratic achievements of history. We have planned national parks and forest preserves; we have built Boulder Dam and established the Tennessee Valley Authority; we have organized a public health program, a weather bureau and a bureau of standards.

"Have these services brought dictators to the United States," he asks, "or turned our people to the fascist philosophy? Planning does not mean bureaucracy. At the national level, in democratic decision with all interests participating, basic policies may be agreed upon, perhaps an economic bill of rights to go with our political bill of rights. Once there has been general agreement in the realm of ends we can then turn to the most effective means of realizing the desired goal, using private enterprise, the public corporation, collective enterprise, or forms yet to be devised." In conclusion, Bishop Oxnam stated, "It is the failure to plan and to establish justice that gives the demagogue his chance."

In the opening three of the E. T. Earl foundation series, Dr. Paul Hutchinson, managing editor of The Christian Century, devoted himself to the rise of totalitarianism and the relationship of this rule to the Christian Churches. The first of these addresses dealt with the increase of state action in the economic field, and the threat which state-controlled economy holds for individual liberty. "Moral law and the life of nations" was the theme of his second lecture while "Aspects of the problem of religious liberty" concluded his contribution to the series.

Bishop Oxnam urges Church people to make their influence felt at the forthcoming conference in San Francisco

BISHOP WILNER IS ILL

New York:—Canon Benson H. Harvey writing from the Philippines to national headquarters reports that the health of Bishop Robert F. Wilner is far from good. He is suffering from beri beri and a heart condition, with resistance low due to undernourishment.

DEMANDS INSTANT DEATH FOR WAR CRIMES

London: — The Archbishop of York speaking in the House of Lords on March 20 declared that once the identity of major war criminals is established "those who catch them should at once put them to death." He was against sensational public trials. Among those who should be put to death the Archbishop placed "the master criminals Hitler and Himmler and their gang who have corrupted Germany and ordered these hideous crimes."

Continuing he said that "it would of course be much more pleasant for me to plead for mercy but sometimes justice has to take precedence over mercy, just as righteousness has to take precedence over peace."

He also expressed the opinion that the "whole of the German people" should be punished. "I am thinking of the horrible tortures in concentration camps, of the burning of women and children in that church in southern France where the whole population was massacred, of crimes which no man ought to commit however strong the order given to him. The people we ought to punish are the subordinates who could have refused to give orders for these crimes and have sometimes carried them out on their own initiative with enthusiasm and delight. Then there is the third guilty class. I am thinking of the whole German people. We cannot entirely distinguish the German people from the Nazis. They have some share in the guilt."

Following the Archbishop's address Lord Wright, chairman of the United Nations war crimes commission declared that war criminals, including Hitler, would be treated "as murderers, assassins, thieves, torturers and the like."

ANOTHER TRAILER CHAPEL IN LOS ANGELES

Los Angeles: — Trailer chapel number two was dedicated the other day for use in the diocese of Los Angeles. Like chapel one it is complete with altar for indoor and outdoor services, has folding organ and chairs, and is also a comfortable home for the missioner. There are about four million persons in over 45,000 square miles in the diocese, many of them in rural areas which can be most effectively reached by the use of these chapels on wheels.

LOUISIANA SEEKS LARGE FUND

Baton Rouge, La.: — The diocese of Louisiana is to seek to raise $300,000 to use in developing after-the-war opportunities, particularly with student centers in the educational institutions of the state. A committee composed of leading business men has been organized with Bishop Jackson as chairman.

The kindergarten youngsters of a New Orleans parish were presented Bibles purchased with their own offerings gathered in a three month period

BISHOP ELECT KINSOLVING IN ACCIDENT

Pittsburgh: — The Rev. Arthur Kinsolving 2nd, rector of Calvary Church here and the bishop-elect of Arizona, was in a serious automobile accident on March 18th. Both Mr. Kinsolving and Mrs. Kinsolving were taken to a hospital where it was first thought both suffered from fractured skulls though this was later denied. Their injuries were of such a serious nature however that the date for his consecration, May 10, has been postponed.

PACIFISTS CONDEMN YALTA FINDINGS

New York:—The Yalta conference was condemned by the annual conference of the United Pacifists on the ground that it proposed "the carving up of Germany and Poland" with "virtual slavery for the German people" and permitting "unilateral actions against the small nations." The policy of unconditional surrender was also condemned by the pacifists.

WORLD YOUTH LEADERS TO MEET

New York:— Executive committee members of the world student Christian federation from Holland, England, New Zealand, Canada, India, China, and possibly Belgium and France, will meet here in May to map post-war reconstruction plans of the federation. It will be the first session the committee has been able to hold in six years. Dr. W. A. Visser 't Hooft of Geneva, Switzerland, chairman of the federation, will preside at the meeting. Among the main problems to be considered will be those of student relief, aid for national student Christian movements, and restoration of friendly relations with German and Japanese students after the war.

ANTI-DISCRIMINATION BILL BACKED

Madison, Wis.: — Spokesmen for the Wisconsin council of churches have endorsed a pending state legislative measure which would create a fair employment practice commission in the state. The bill is modelled after the one recently adopted in New York.

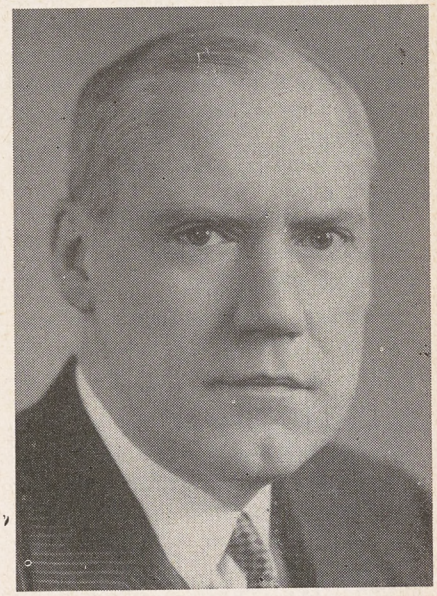
Rev. Walter P. Morse Delivers Drugs to the Chinese

Writes of Journey from New York to China With Consignment of More Than Ton of Drugs

Reported by National Council

New York:—The first direct communication from Fr. Walter P. Morse, SSJE. has reached the National Council. Fr. Morse explains that he did not want to report until the task he had set for himself had been completed, viz., the journey from New York to China, with a consignment of more than a ton of drugs, particularly as for a time it would seem as though his effort would fail. "Well, that's all over with," writes Fr. Morse. "All my things got through safely, not a pill lost, not a bottle broken, and all free of charge all the way from America to this little town (Patung) in the Yangtze Gorges. I have at last arrived, after months and months of delays, at the very place I said I was going to when I left America. And arrived with a full ton of medical relief supplies!

"I left New York with about 1300 pounds of medicines. At Port Elizabeth I met the second Gripsholm, also acquired some more drugs. At Durban I stayed a month, visiting at a national hospital and studying dysentery and acquired about 500 pounds more of medical supplies, all free. Then to Bombay where I stayed with our SSJE fathers for three weeks while I tried to wangle free transportation for drugs across India. Finally succeeded. In Calcutta stayed six weeks trying to get drugs into China free—succeeded—that is, I was 'promised' so went on to Kunming. There trouble began. The promisers found that they couldn't do it so easily. Then there followed months (ten of them) of various and desperate efforts on my part with persons at a great distance. Then it was I almost gave up hope of succeeding. Meanwhile I got busy earning my living to obviate taking a dole, and with what free time I had I begged medicines, not from Church sources, and did what relief I could among Chinese soldiers and other poor on the streets.



"Finally the drugs arrived, and I wrote Bishop Gilman what he wanted me to do. He had no special plan, so I felt free to proceed to the destination I had chosen at the first. The U. S. Army transported my goods to Chungking and I followed by way of Tsing Chen, and the Middle School for which I brought a truck from Kunming. Then to Chungking where I spent three more miserable weeks at another transportation wangle to get a Chinese shipping company to take my things down there. Finally succeeded and without notice was told to pile myself and boxes on a boat and proceed. And here I am, with life just beginning I feel!

"I came here literally not knowing how I was to manage and not knowing a soul in the place, arrived at night, had to get my cargo off the boat that night, safely stored and all the rest of it. It only shows what an incredible country China is that I accomplished all that in the dark, and was able to turn in for a night's rest in an inn by 9:00 p.m. Next morning I literally found a home in the Post Office, in the very bosom of the Post Office staff. It's foolish to try to praise China; it passes everything we can say or imagine. Now I live in the Post Office (so I must write letters!) stuck like the rest of this town on the steep side of the Gorge, looking down from my window unto our dear Yangtze River with the opposite cliff going up almost out of sight. "Do you know, I am the first one back into the Hankow diocese. There is plenty for me to do here among the soldiers and from here I can visit other towns for the relief. I promise to write often now."

AFRICAN REVOLUTION IS FORECAST

London (by wireless):—A social revolution in South Africa is inevitable, and if it is to be the right sort of revolution, there must be a wiser and more efficient propagation of Christian knowledge among the native peoples. This warning was sounded by the Rev. Richard E. Raynes, formerly head of the Sophiatown native mission in Johannesburg, at a Founders' Day meeting here of the society for promoting Christian knowledge, Church of England missionary organization.

Declaring that the South African Negro is determined to follow European ways, Mr. Raynes said: "That may be good or bad, but it is a fact to be accepted. Since the Africans have set their minds on it, the Church has the responsibility of seeing that they inherit all that is best in European civilization and culture. The South African people resent talk about native education. They demand simply education. It is important for them to be taught everything about European civilization, and to have it interpreted to them in terms of Christian principles."

The Rev. William B. Pugh, stated clerk of the Presbyterian Church and chairman of the commission on army and navy chaplains has left for a tour of military bases in the Pacific

BISHOP BINSTED WRITES HOME

New York:—A letter from Bishop Norman S. Binstead of the Philippine Islands, written in Manila on February 24 to his mother, informs Church headquarters that he and his wife were safe and though "quite thin," were improving hourly in health. "We have just been rescued in an amazing way by the American Army, amphibious tractors, paratroopers, etc., superbly planned and executed. God has been good to us and our hearts are full of gratitude. The troops we have met are A-1. Where we go from here I do not know. We may be sent home. If possible I will stay in the Philippines because my place is here with the native and Chinese Christians, who have doubtless suffered terribly." Bishop Binsted was bishop of the Tohoku diocese in Japan from 1928 until Americans withdrew from Japan in 1940, when he was placed in charge of work in the Philippines, succeeding the late Bishop G. F. Mosher.

KNOWING THE OTHER FELLOW

Oradell, N. J.:—Ministers of other churches were the preachers at the Annunciation here during Lent at the mid-week services, each one explaining the doctrines of his own Church. The Reformed Church, the Congregationalist, the Lutheran were explained, while Rabbi Samuel Schwartz of Westwood, N. J. spoke on the Jew. Another evening was devoted to the Negro and the final meeting was on the industrialist. The Rev. Walter Welsh, rector, reports that the services were unusually well attended.

ARIZONA CATHEDRAL PLANS CHAPEL

Phoenix, Ariz.:—Trinity Cathedral is to have a chapel as a memorial to the men and women in the armed forces and part of the Easter offering is to go for that purpose. There is an honor roll with the names of 350 from the parish of about 1200 communicants. All funds will be invested in war bonds and held until building is permitted. The chapel is planned for the west side of the present cathedral structure and will open into it thus providing additional seating space for regular services as well as provide a place for weddings, funerals and weekday services.

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON PERMITS

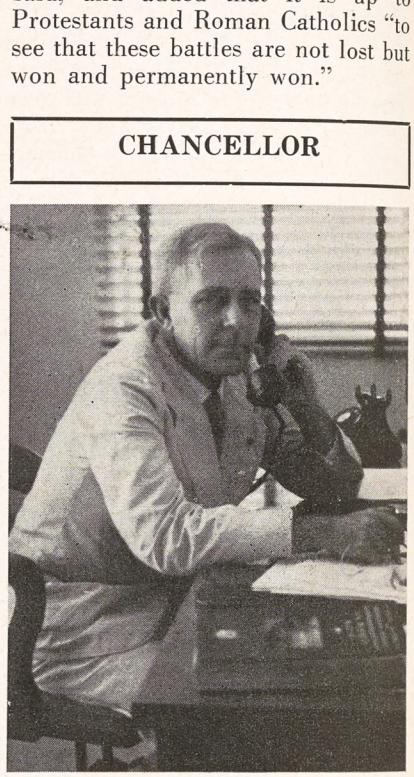
Washington:—The policy of the war committee on conventions on Church meetings and religious gatherings has been stated in a letter from the committee to the Federal Council of Churches. No permit is required for the holding of any meeting for religious worship or for ecclesiastical ceremony, the committee stated. No permit is required for any conference or meeting attended by not more than 50 persons from beyond the local commuting zone, or, in the case of rural communities, beyond the normal trading area of the locality in which the meeting is held. The committee said application must be made for permission to hold other types of Church meetings and that it will act on such applications in accordance with the following principles: If an application is filed for permission to hold a Church legislative meeting, the policy of the committee is to grant a permit with the understanding that attendance must be held to the minimum number necessary for the group properly to function. The committee defines a Church legislative meeting as one called to transact business essential to the continuance or survival of the Church organization.

TEXAS TO ELECT IN MAY

Houston:—A special convention will be held here on May 22 to elect a bishop coadjutor. The committee to receive nominations and present not more than ten of them has extended the date for receiving them. The chairman is the Rev. G. F. Cameron of Beaumont.

YOUNG PEOPLE MEET IN BROOKLYN

Brooklyn:—More than two hundred young people of the young peoples fellowship of Kings county of Long Island, met at Grace Church, Brooklyn, for a Lenten service on Sunday evening, March 18. The service was conducted by three of the young men of the Fellowship together with the Rev. Hedley Williams and the Rev. George MacMurray. A thirty-eight voice choir of young people, representing ten parishes, provided the musical portion of the service. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Gordon Gillett, youth advisor of the diocese.



BISHOP OXNAM VISITS WAR THEATRE

Washington: — Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, who is also president of the Federal Council, is to leave in May to visit chaplains and troops in the Mediterranean.

URGES JOINT ACTION

Toronto, Ont.: — An appeal to Protestants to join Roman Catholics "wherever and whenever possible" in joint or parallel social action was voiced here by Walter W. Van Kirk, secretary of the commission on a just and durable peace of the Federal Council of Churches. In an address before the board of evangelism and social service of the United Church of Canada, in which he advocated Canada's membership in the Pan American Union, Van Kirk cautioned against religious conflict, asserting that in the years ahead "there will be battles enough to be fought. There will be the battle of social and of economic justice, of democracy versus fascism, of mass education and the raising of living standards among the underprivileged peoples of the Western nations," he said, and added that it is up to Protestants and Roman Catholics "to see that these battles are not lost but won and permanently won."

CHANCELLOR

The chancellor of the missionary district of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands is Charles R. Hartzell, an attorney of San Juan. He is a trustee of a number of charitable institutions and serves on a number of committees of the district

DISCUSS RACE ISSUES IN BOSTON

Boston:—The effect of race relations tensions among children was discussed at the annual meeting of the Church home society in Emmanuel Parish House, March 19, with the Rev. David R. Hunter, rector of the Church of the Holy Spirit, Mattapan, and the Rev. Kenneth dePoulain Hughes, rector of St. Bartholomew's, Cambridge, as speakers. Both are leaders in better interracial relations: Mr. Hunter as head of the good neighbor association of Mattapan, Hyde Park and Dorchester. Mr. Hughes, in charge of a splendid Negro parish, and widely known as an authority on race relations, especially as they affect his own people.

The Meaning of Easter

WHOEVER said "Christianity is not good advice it is good news" had a thorough understanding of the gospel. For the gospel is good news, the news that God himself has come into this world in the person of Christ for our salvation. In Christ God has acted definitely and decisively. Christmas is the promise: "Fear not for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy." Easter is the fulfillment: "Now is Christ risen from the dead." He is the Lord of life and death and he calls us to share in the fruits of his victory.

What an utterly different figure Christ becomes when he is pictured as a great and good teacher who understands the life of God and man, a guide who will lead us into fuller life and God's blessing if we follow him. Christianity has suffered incalculably from many of its well-meaning but mistaken interpreters who, during the comparatively easy first thirty years of this century, tried to reduce the Christian faith to an ethic and a rather easy-going ethic at that. Christianity is a way of life, they said. Beliefs are unimportant. Sin is like missing the mark; with a little practice, that is by our own efforts, we'll improve. Christianity teaches us how to build a better world here and we're only wasting time and energy when we give much thought to the world to come. God is good and we are immortal and he will make everything all right in the end!

Of course that is not Christianity at all. At the heart of the gospel is the cross and the resurrection: God in his power meeting sin and death at their strongest and winning the victory. God knowing man's predicament, that there was no way for him out of his self-centeredness, came in the person of Christ to live and die and rise again and to make the power of the resurrection available for us all. The New Testament has little concern for immortality, for the mere continuation of life after death. It presents the mighty drama of redemption: God offering to us an entirely new kind of life, now. It invites us to share in the life of the divine society, the Church, which is the fellowship of salvation.

> IF YE then be risen with Christ seek those things which are above where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affection on things above not on things on the earth. For ye are dead and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ who is our life shall appear then shall ye also appear with him in glory.
> —The Easter Epistle

All this is of profound significance for us and our world. We are sick and the war shows us the seriousness of our disease. Our sickness is a radical illness and demands a radical cure. What relevance will soothing sermons on Easter about the hope of immortality have to this present moment? Christianity does not offer us the hope of immortality, it offers the certainty of life, eternal life beginning here and now which offer we must deliberately accept. As Karl Heim has said, faith in Christ confronts us with a question: "Is he merely a great personality of the past or is he the living Lord of history who can tell me with full authority what I have to do amid all the complicated problems of the present? Jesus the Lord confronts us with an either/or: we must either commit the whole of our life to him or repudiate him passionately and completely." How impossible it is to reconcile this stern demand of the gospel with the facile assumption that God is good and likes us all and therefore everyone will have a prize! The assurance of Easter is not made of such nonsense. We are confronted with a choice: either our way or Christ's. Easter sharpens that issue and makes the consequences of that choice plain. Either the way of pride and self-will and death; or the way of submission to God which is life eternal.

Spiritual Forces Can Unify

THE material disintegration of Europe goes on. Only this week we read of the complete destruction of Dresden. Dresden that gave a synonym for easily shatterable things. It stands today as a symbol of the physical disintegration of Europe. The tragedy is that along with the material devastation goes spiritual disintegration. As Christians we are disturbed in a greater measure by the moral collapse than by the physical destruction. Unfortunately our complacency is not easily shattered. We in this country seem so far removed from the actual scene of all this destruction. There are wishful thinkers in our midst who continue to harbor the idea that as soon as cease firing sounds Europe will quickly rise from the ashes of destruction and her spiritual unity will be quickly restored.

It will benefit us if we will listen to the prophetic words of one near the scene. In the January 11th number of The Spiritual Issues of the War, published by British information services, there is the report of a speech made in the House of Lords by the Bishop of Chichester (who will visit this country late this spring). This was one of a number of speeches made in the House of Lords when they were debating the whole question of the rehabilitation of Europe. The Bishop pointedly called his hearers' attention to the fact that only a strong spiritual force could rehabilitate Europe. That strong spiritual force should recognize that there are four spiritual traditions upon which the civilization of Europe has been built. To quote the Bishop "I suggest that we are more likely to achieve the goal of European unity if we build on the culture which all European peoples have in common. The peoples of Europe all possess a common form of culture based on four common spiritual traditions. There is the humanist tradition, which lies behind the literary and intellectual culture of the educated classes and is largely responsible for the liberal and humanitarian element in our civilization. There is the scientific tradition, perhaps the clearest example of the part played by individual collaboration in European culture. There is the tradition of law and government which, while naturally more affected by national political divisions possesses important common elements which distinguish European from Asiatic society. Lastly there is the Christian religion, which provided the original bonds of unity between European peoples and has influenced every part of Europe and every section of European society."

It is this last tradition—the Christian religion that the Bishop developed, concluding with this sentence: "I believe that in a time of distress and moral disintegration like the present the Christian religion, together with the other spiritual traditions —humanism, science, law and government—may still prove one of the great unifying forces of Europe, one of the principal agencies for ensuring his fundamental rights and liberties to every European citizen."

To this we add a loud amen! We however know that unless the leaders of the Churches and the peoples who compose the membership of these Churches actually apply their Christian convictions in the field of political action, neither Europe nor this country will ever attain spiritual unity.

God and the Church

By
F. ERIC BLOW
Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Los Angeles

RECENTLY a very tired and somewhat upset churchworker said quite feelingly within the writer's hearing; "In the face of all the pettiness, the bickering, the compromising and the superficiality which exists within the Christian Church it is a wonder to me that it continues to survive." Most of us I suppose have entertained at some time or other such dispirited feelings. It is an attitude quite common among the tired or the disappointed, not only of our own generation but of every generation. And such thoughts and feelings are not altogether ill-founded. Viewed in the somber light of men's common frailties it does seem a miracle at times that the Church through the centuries has been able to survive.

Why has the Church survived? Why has it survived controversy, schism, corruption, bigotry, pettiness and the half-hearted allegiance of the great majority of its members; and why will it continue to survive? The answer I believe, is to be found principally in the Church's nature. Matthew Arnold once defined the Church as a "society for the promotion of goodness in the world." That definition is excellent as far as it goes but obviously it does not encompass the whole truth. The Church is something more than a "society." It is something more than just another institution ministering to men's needs. The Church, we believe, is a divine fellowship ordained of God, a living organism through which He carries on the work of revelation and redemption. It is a vehicle of his grace and is independent of human limitations. It is the purpose of this article to elaborate on this.

Most readers I assume will accept the statement without question that the Christian Church as a visible structure came into being through the life and work of our blessed Lord and in the continued fellowship which the disciples had with his risen presence. At the same time however we must not overlook the ground and foundation on which this structure was to be built.

One of the most convincing arguments to my mind of the divine origin and nature of the Church is that all through the long and turbulent history of the Jewish people, the hand of God can be clearly seen at work preparing the ground and selecting the materials which should go to make up the foundations of the Church, of which Christ himself is the chief cornerstone. From the very beginning it is evident that it was the divine purpose to establish a worthy vessel of divine grace. As has been truly observed, "Jesus did not appear in a vacuum. He appeared in history in a specific historical continuum which itself was the revelation of God. . . . This means that in order to understand the revelation which God made in Jesus (and the work he accomplished through him) we must include as revelation (and purpose) the whole specific continuum at whose growing edge he stood. The history that flowed toward him is no less a part of the divine revelation and purpose than the history that flowed from him." (C. C. Morrison, What Is Christianity. Parentheses mine.)

An intuitive awareness of this divine purpose and activity in Jewish history is clearly discernible in the writings and utterances of the prophets. Indeed they themselves constituted a sort of ecclesia within the ecclesia which looked forward to the day when God would reconcile Israel to himself through the faithfulness of a righteous remnant, a consecrated spiritual minority at whose head would stand the Messiah. Not always was it easy for them to articulate their perceptions and one hesitates to say that Isaiah and men of his stamp envisioned the Holy Catholic Church as we now know it. But no doubt they would have found it acceptable because Christ himself, on whom the Church has been built, stands squarely on the ground of their deepest insights. This then is the first thing that we can say about the Church; that not only does it have its roots deep in history, but beyond history in the eternal life and purpose of God himself.

The second reason for the survival power of the Christian Church is to be found in the fact that it is built on two great beliefs; (1) that in the life and character of our Lord we have a complete and unique revelation of the personality and character of God and that (2) God was in Christ—particularly in the sacrifice of the cross—"reconciling the world unto himself."

It is not within the scope of this article to examine these two beliefs critically; that has been done elsewhere by competent scholars. Suffice it to say that in these two beliefs we have the great dynamic for the Church's missionary enterprise.

One must not overlook of course the fact that there have been other great teachers and revealers in the spiritual history of man; and only spiritual arrogance would cause one to gloss over the great contributions of Moses, Confucius, Zarathustra, Gautama, Shankaracharya, Socrates, and others. But with each of these, there is a sense of incompleteness, a feeling that "the best is yet to be." In the matter of character and insight and spiritual daring, in the matter of at-one-ment with reality, Jesus overtops all others. Indeed, one comes to see in him something more than just another teacher or revealer. One comes to feel that here is a fitting and satisfactory vehicle for the complete revelation of the character and personality to God. Of the others it can be said of them as Tennyson said of theological systems:

They are but broken lights of thee
And thou O Lord art more than they.

As the speed of light is the one and only constant in a relative and fluctuating universe, so in the life and character of our Lord man finds a spiritual constant. In the matter of love and mercy and righteousness his standard is basic—a truly cosmic moral norm. We cannot think of these values in terms greater than Jesus' revelation of them. There are many things about the nature of his person that remain a complete mystery; but when we carefully reflect upon his life and character, we feel that somehow it makes sense—it rings true in our inner consciousness and conveys to us a sense of obligation, the obligation that we ought to follow him.

BUT this is not the whole of the matter. That in Christ Jesus we have a complete and unique revelation of the nature of God, is only one of the two great truths on which the Church is founded. It is not only what Christ is that gives power to the

To Put It Briefly

WHAT happens at baptism? confirmation? marriage? communion? when you say your prayers? Why vestments? Why saints days? Why so many churches named Trinity? What is the relationship of a vestry to the rector? bishop? other Episcopal churches? the congregation? These are some of the questions that will be answered in a column, To Put It Briefly by the Rev. William B. Sperry which will start next week. Mr. Sperry before ordination was a newspaper man and is writing these articles in newspaper language that lay people will understand. If you are now getting your WITNESS at the parish church, and it will no longer be available there after Easter, send us a postal, "Enter my personal subscription for a year" and we will start sending your paper to your home at once, billing you later for the three dollars. Christian fellowship, but also what we believe was accomplished by and through him. If the Church is built on the life and revelation of our Lord, it is no less true to say that it is also built around his cross and the redemption he accomplished by it.

We do not pretend to know all that the cross involves or implies. It is a strange and profound mystery to most of us. But this I believe we can say with certainty that in the cross we see something of the limits to which eternal love will go in bringing man into harmony and fellowship with itself. It is indeed a divine pattern of behaviour which men themselves must try to understand and follow if harmony and fellowship are ever to be realized among them.

The power of that selfless, patient, brooding love which was manifested on the cross, is amazing when we contemplate it. It transcends all our notions of space-time, it surmounts every conceivable human barrier and reaches out in power both to convict and redeem us. It simply will not let us go. It sustains the Church in spite of itself. We cannot explain it, we only know it to be true. We only know that the Church will continue to survive because the eternal God together with his Son Jesus Christ has an awful and tremendous stake in it.

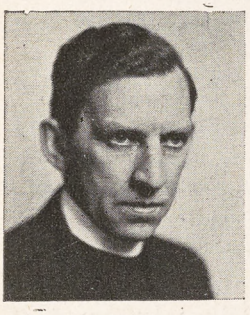
With his own blood he bought her
And for her life he died.

The third reason why the Church is the abiding fellowship we know it to be is that the Holy Spirit, (to whom our Lord pointed his disciples for further revelation for which they were manifestly not ready in his lifetime) carries on the work which God began in Christ and progressively interprets through faithful and obedient hearts God's purposes for the world. In this sense the fellowship energized by the Holy Spirit constitutes the mystical body of Christ. It is the extension of the Incarnation in human society. As William Adams Brown puts it; "What his human body was to the men with whom he walked and taught in Galilee and in Jerusalem, that his disciples were to be to the men and women of later generations. They were to be lips to speak his message, feet to carry his gospel, eyes to see his opportunity, hands to do his work, shoulders to bear his cross, hearts to thrill with his love. And what each Christian was to do and to be in his own personal and individual life, all were to do and to be together. The Church . . . is the body of Christ, and each of its members fulfils his true destiny only as he ministers to the life of the whole." (William Adams Brown, Beliefs That Matter.)

The function of the Holy Spirit is to watch over and guide the Church. Through the sacraments he sustains and nourishes her, through revelation and inspiration of the scriptures he guides her ever into a clearer knowledge of God's truth, through her ministry he brings comfort and pardon and peace, through the koinonia he carries forward the divine purpose of reconciliation. It is at this point that we begin to see clearly do we not, why the Church has been able to withstand the strife, the betrayal and the half-hearted allegiance that has so often been her lot. She belongs to God in a wonderful and mystically triune sense.

There are many things about the Christian fellowship which are disappointing. Its present disunity is something of a scandal, and the great mass of its members are in comparative ignorance of the deeper spiritual truths which underlie its scriptures, its sacraments, its creeds and doctrines. Its petty debates and contentions annoy and repel many. Its far too often pedestrian mind, would seem to belie its divine origin. At times its theology lags woefully behind secular knowledge. But having said all that, the fellowship still remains the fellowship, and within that fellowship is an ecclesia of great promise . . . a faithful remnant, even as was so in ancient Israel. That ecclesia comprises a company of men and women the world around who under the guidance of the Holy Spirit are seeking however falteringly to be loyal to the heavenly vision and to impart Christ's spirit in a convincing and challenging manner so that all men everywhere may come to share in his divine life and realize their rightful inheritance as children in the family of God.

No one who is really honest will deny that again and again the Church has failed her Lord, yet this also must not be overlooked, the Church is the one institution in all the world which in season and out of season holds up before men the truths and values by which they must learn to live. How often men have reviled and scoffed at the Church only to find that in some chaotic hour like this that she is the keeper of all the sanctities!



We hear a great deal of talk today of the desperate need for world fellowship and the need for an undergirding world philosophy to sustain any sort of international organization which the nations may set up in their endeavor to achieve a lasting peace. It is not in the spirit of boastful pride that we say that such a fellowship is already in existence in the "One, Holy, Catholic Church." But what is needed is that we who comprise that fellowship should be more willing to be led by the Holy Spirit into a courageous extension of the fellowship's influence and power. We need to implement the fellowship with more loyalty, more sincerity, more selfless zeal. Christians believe that the Church has the keys to God's kingdom, but if those keys are to unlock the gates to a larger life among men we who comprise the fellowship must stir ourselves more earnestly to use them.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

THE READER'S DIGEST is one of the most entertaining, perhaps the most entertaining, magazine published. Millions of people therefore pour fabulous sums into its coffers in order to receive it. It is also one of the cleverest, perhaps the cleverest, propaganda jobs in the world. It controls other magazines where it plants articles for reprints later in the Digest; it has roving editors at high salaries to dig up the line the owners wish to have sold to its millions of readers; its wealth enables it to hire top writers to do its bidding: it now sponsors Town Meeting of the Air, and how fair that radio forum is under Digest control you can judge for yourself when I tell you that on a recent program when "Is communism a menace?" was debated those taking the negative, as well as those on the affirmative, were men with national reputations for their anti-communism bias.

The latest poisoning job has been pulled off by William L. White, on the Digest fat payroll, who wrote pieces on the Soviet Union. These pieces have now been expanded into a book called Report on the Russians. Mr. White got over to Russia by fastening himself somehow or other to the party of Eric Johnston, president of the Chamber of Commerce. But what Mr. White reported about the country was too much for Mr. Johnston's strong stomach so that he has spewed up the mess with a public repudiation.

But far more important than Mr. Johnston's repudiation—he after all has sense enough not to set himself up as an expert on Soviet life after a five weeks' visit—is the picking apart of White's story by journalists who have spent years in that country.

Quintin Reynolds, Edgar Snow, Ralph Parker, Richard Lauterbach, John Gibbons, Ella Winters, James Aldridge, Jerome Davis, John Fisher, John Hershey, Alexander Kendrick, Robert Magidoff, David Nichol, Edmund Stevens, Alexander Werth—there you have journalists with a total of many years in Russia. They joined forces last week in branding White's report "as a highly biased and misleading report, calculated to prolong the oldest myths and prejudices against a great ally, whose sacrifices in this war have saved us incalculable bloodshed and destruction."

BUT it was a Canadian newsman, just returned from Russia, who really tore White apart. He is Raymond Arthur Davies, correspondent for the Canadian Broadcasting Co., Transradio News and a Toronto weekly paper. And I'd like to offer you excerpts from the open letter he addressed to "Dear Bill." It will really take more space than I have any business to use but I'll lay off for a week or two to make up for it. From here on it is Davies writing to his friend, William L. White:

Dear Bill:

I read your article with great interest. After all, you and I were both so close to death during that harrowing German air raid on the American air base in Russia that I suppose we have a right to speak pretty freely to one another.

Do you remember Bill, how in the very midst of the raid, with bombs coming down one after another, aircraft blazing everywhere and Nazi butterfly mines littering the field, the Russians blocked off the field, prevented American airmen from going to their machines and instead sent their own fire fighting squads made up of women? Ten times as many Russian girls were killed saving American machines as American airmen. You were there, Bill, you knew of this—all of us talked of it after the raid—and yet your article makes no mention of this heroism.

That was only one incident of your five weeks in Russia and of my years. I thought at the time that you saw the Russians as most of us correspondents saw them, a brave people, not without shortcomings, going towards victory through incredible sufferings and undergoing privations for the sake of the freedom of their country. We saw neither paradise nor hell in Russia, but after reading your incredible report I am driven to conclude that you didn't see Russia at all.

How blind you are, Bill. You write that in Moscow you walked through "wide incredibly muddy streets, sidewalks full of hurrying shabby people walking past the dingy shops in dilapidated buildings." You write, "It takes me a week to figure out that what is missing is competition, that it is a matter of indifference to the government whether the public chooses to buy its socks or sausages at one drab government bureau or at a similar one down the street." What nonsense. Everybody knows what is missing in Russia; it is production of civilian consumption goods. These consumption goods are missing because all production has been turned to the needs of war.

You say: "Until Eric Johnston has been in Moscow for a while he can't conceive how closely these reporters are held down; how seldom they are allowed to leave Moscow; how little they see or hear." Now all of the correspondents in Moscow, including myself, complain that they don't see or hear enough; nevertheless, in all justice, the record must be set down. I came to Moscow in January, 1944. I was taken to Smolensk two days after I arrived. In February I was in Leningrad. In April in Odessa, in May in Romania. Then in Minsk, Vitebsk, Lubin, Tallinn. You remember, Bill, during your stay in Russia, there were times when correspondents refused to go out of town because there was too much to do in Moscow.

The Russians' "shabby" clothes have become an obsession with you. And yet you know the Russians have been at war far more than three years, and preparing for this war for many more.

Beginning with "shabby," you become entranced with the word poor. "Poorly fed," "poorly dressed," "poor material" — such frightening words. Why do you stress this so much? Is it to awaken American sympathy for the struggles of the Russian people for survival? Or is it to cast aspersion upon the Russian past, the years since the Revolution on which you blame "malnutrition which brought bad bones structure?" Speak to any anthropologist and he will tell you that the Slavs and Mongols are generally squatter than the Anglo-Saxons, and that the Europeans are generally shorter than the Americans. Yes, years of the American high standard of living have told in the health and general aspect of our people. The Russians have never reached the standard of living of the Americans, but they were well on their way when the war cut short their efforts.

You seem to suffer great pangs of pity for the "underfed audience of about 5000 waiting for 10 minutes while (you) dallied with your second piece of chocolate layer pastry and that last sip of champagne." Well, I have been in Tchaikowsky Hall many times and it only seats 2500 to begin with, and secondly how did you know that the audience was underfed? We know that the Russians have restricted their diet to bare essentials so that they may concentrate on war production and feeding the army. In 1942 and 1943 perhaps the whole Tchaikowsky Hall audience might have been underfed. But during your visit in 1944? I hardly think so.

The would-be piece de resistance of your story, Bill, seems to be the tale of "the NKVD plain clothes man who is always with us" who "firmly" put a hand on the shoulder of a young director "with whom you talked and who wanted to go on talking." Now I don't doubt that there are NKVD men about wherever foreigners move around Russian war plants and in the war zone. I hear the FBI follows the same procedure in the U.S.A. But I think that in the rather varied experience of the whole war correspondents' corps in Moscow during the past year we have never seen such a thing happen as you describe. We've always had NKVD men with us on our trips. But on these trips we could speak to anyone we wanted, except that our guides didn't like us to wander off by ourselves which always annoyed me no end, although this was obviously a measure of protection for us—we were often in areas newly liberated from the Germans and one could never tell whether a spy left behind mightn't try to take a pot shot at the correspondents.

You compare Russia and the Lansing Penitentiary. This is vile. Your father (the late William Allen White) would not like this, Bill. You suggest that Russia is a prison. Russia is no prison. Russia hasn't our system, our democracy. But in her own way she is a democracy for her people. That's what they fight to maintain and extend. Would you say that the Russian doctors you praised, musicians, the soldiers and generals who kill so many Germans are prisoners? More words!

You say the Russian leaders are not pleased with the wave of internationalism and good feeling towards the western world among their people. This is not true. One is constantly impressed by the desire of Russian leaders to foster good will.

Some of your facts are cockeyed. You say, "You see absolutely no man between 16 and 40 at the factory benches." This is just silly. Thousands can be seen in any large plant.

You say: "The average Russian doctor has less training than a good American nurse." More nonsense. The marvel of it is that Russians have doctors enough to care for their enormous casualties, to return to the front 90 per cent of their wounded, to prevent outbreaks of epidemics, to overcome the terrible diseases inheritance of German occupation. Untrained doctors could not have done this. Facts speak louder than calumnies.

You make things difficult for us correspondents by your biased superficial story, your neglect of fact. You came, a guest to Russia, supposedly an objective student. But you did not see Russia at all.

Perhaps, you did not seek to see it. Now the Russians will take to distrusting us because of what you have done and this will make it more difficult to tell the truth about Russia to our people, yours and mine. You began with predesigned hostility. It is sad indeed Bill. We must get to know the Russian people, the Russian people must get to know us, otherwise we cannot work together in the postwar world. But goodwill cannot be based on deliberate deceit. You have harmed America.

St. Stephen's Church Wilkes-Barre Operates A Fine Boys Camp with Many Nationalities

Edited by W. B. Spofford

Wilkes-Barre, Pa.:—Camp Great Neck, operated by St. Stephen's Church is a camp for boys that is different. The program begun some years ago and greatly enlarged last year has so justified itself that it will be the basis of planning for this coming summer. Located on the Susquehanna River, near Tunkhannock, the camp site is one of the most beautiful in northeastern Pennsylvania. Boys from many backgrounds come to the Camp; boys from privileged homes and boys whose home life has been most uncertain. It is interesting to look over the list of those who came last year. The father of one boy is dean of the graduate school at one of our colleges; the father of two others was consul general from Czechoslovakia who went to his home land on government business six years ago and no word has been heard from him since. The grandfather of another boy is chief of naval operations in the European theater and his father is an officer with our armies in France; the father of another was the owner of a brush factory in Bonn, Germany, which was taken over some years ago by the Nazi government and this boy with his family barely escaped from Germany with their lives. The father of another is a coal miner. The father of another was commander of the aircraft carrier, Lexington; yet another boy and his family were released from one of our relocation centers in the west where they had been taken because of their Japanese ancestry. Yes, boys of many backgrounds come to Camp Great Neck, European refugees, Christians, and Jews, privileged and underprivileged, American boys of Japanese ancestry, some of them with brothers in our armies, for it is felt by the management of Camp Great Neck that this work of bringing young America together is one of the most important things that the Christian Church can do in helping the world to peace and security. The entire camp program is a project to help youth and their parents to see that differences in nationality and culture background can all come together for a strengthening and creative relationship.

The camp will begin its 1945 camp season on July 1 and will carry through for eight weeks. The season is made up of two week periods and a boy may register for one or more periods. The cost for one period is only $26.00 and for the entire season $100.

At the moment there are three vacancies in the camp counsellor staff and the camp committee is eager to fill them as soon as possible. In an ordinary year, this would not be a problem but because of the war and because counsellors must be in complete sympathy with what the camp is trying to achieve, the problem of filling staff is especially difficult. Senior counsellors must be adults for whom spiritual values are all important and who are concerned with the implications of our Christian religion in our common life. Salaries are paid but the salary scale cannot compete with the salaries paid in many private camps. Those who serve at Camp Great Neck must first of all have a real heart-interest and zeal for the job that is being done.

Mr. E. H. Hastings, chairman of the department of physical education at De Witt Clinton High School, New York, a churchman with real interest for the spiritual values to be encouraged in the work of this sort, will again be camp director. This will be his fourth season in charge.

The camp has had for the past few years a working scholarship arrangement for a number of boys. This has been possible because of the generosity of some people who have wished to see the Christian Church help the refugee and the oppressed, and other boys who can, through the camp, be trained in Christian leadership. Working scholarships will again be available to a limited number of boys whose applications have the recommendation of the rectors of their parishes. Boys faithful to their Church and possessed with qualities of leadership and who may be interested in serving as counsellors in later years are encouraged to apply for scholarships. Application should be made to the Parish Office, 35 S. Franklin Street, Wilkes Barre. The rector of St. Stephen's is the Rev. William K. Russell, a WITNESS editor.

Urge More Rationing

London (by wireless):—The British know what it is to go without food. Nevertheless the British council of churches last week called upon the people to accept even more stringent rationing of food and clothing if by so doing these commodities will be made available for relief in Europe.

Mrs. Quin Accepts

Houston, Texas:—Mrs. Clinton S. Quin, who declined her election as presiding officer of the 1946 triennial meeting of the women of the Church and was asked to reconsider, has now accepted. The assistant presiding officer is Mrs. Roger L. Kingsland of Fairmont, W. Va., the present chairman of the executive board of the national Woman's Auxiliary.

Visit Bulgaria

Washington:—A delegation of the Russian Orthodox Church has been appointed by Patriarch Alexei to confer with Metropolitan Stefan, exarch of the Bulgarian Orthodox Church on measures for "closer active relations" between the Churches, according to a Sofia radio Russian-language broadcast reported by the federal communications commission here. The broadcast stated that the delegation, consisting of four prominent Russian churchmen, will arrive soon in Sofia.

Citizens at Home

Mauch Chunk, Pa.: — The Rev. Jule Ayers, formerly the pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Wilkes-Barre and later an army chaplain, was the preacher recently at St. Mark's here, where the Rev. G. Clayton Melling is rector. He declared that the returning servicemen will be the greatest asset that the country has and did a bit of cracking down on the current tendency to discuss them as problems. He stated that the real liability for the future of America is the slovenly citizen at home.

India Leaders

San Francisco:—Three leaders of the Christian movement in India arrived here on March 10th for the beginning of a lecture tour that will carry them across the country. The speakers are Miss Zillah Soule, known particularly for her work with young people; Daniel K. Singh, pastor of the oldest church in Punjab, Ludhiana, and known throughout India as a progressive leader; Augustine Ralla Ram, the stated clerk of the United Church in North India who represented the Church at the international conferences at Jerusalem, Madras and Amsterdam.

Speaks on Negroes

Manchester, N. H.: — Governor Charles M. Dale and the Rev. Shelton Hale Bishop of New York shared the program at a meeting of laymen of Grace Church recently. Gov. Dale spoke of the need of developing a world organization "that will secure the supremacy of the cross over the swastika and of free democracy over the raging forces of totalitarianism." Mr. Bishop told of the needs of Negro youth and urged people of New Hampshire to do what was done last summer by a group in Vermont—bringing youngsters to the country for a summer vacation. Church organization later acted favorably on his suggestion.

Togs in a Towel

Manchester, N. H.:—On Palm Sunday at Grace Church here children presented at the altar "togs in a towel," the name of a plan whereby they presented clothing for the boys and girls of Europe. Each package for a boy included a woolen sweater, two sets of underwear, two pairs of knee socks, short trousers and shirt, a toothbrush, two handkerchiefs, comb, wash cloth and a toy. Togs for a girl was the same except it had a skirt and a blouse instead of trousers and a shirt. All the articles were wrapped in a big towel with the name of the donor on a tag pinned to the towel with a large safety pin. It is hoped that many of the donors will receive letters eventually from their friends in destitute Europe. The Rev. Bradford Young is the rector of the parish.

Daughters of King

New York:—The Daughters of the King are to observe the 60th anniversary of the founding of the society on April 18th with an all day program. It will open with a quiet hour led by the Rev. Gordon S. Wadhams, followed by a rededication service. Following conferences and discussion, Miss Esther Carver of New Haven will speak on prayer. The celebration will close with a dinner in the evening.

Orchestra Concert

Philadelphia:—Business men here commemorated the 250th anniversary of Christ Church here on March 20 with a luncheon and a concert by the Academy symphony orchestra. They are organized as the Christ Church Business Men's Association for the purpose of fellowship and to work for the good of the neighborhood.

Rural Work

Castener, P. R.:—Holy Cross Mission here was received in union with the convocation of Puerto Rico as a part of a program to reach some of the thousands of rural folks living in the interior of mountainous islands. When Castaner was first visited by the Rev. R. D. Pagan in 1935 he found little to suggest that there would some day be a thriving community in one of the most isolated spots of Puerto Rico. However that same year the reconstruction administration was established and soon the Castaner hacienda was purchased as the site of one of its resettlement and rehabilitation projects. Today it includes 200 families of more than 1200 people. Mr. Pagan, who serves an area containing 20,000 people, is assisted by Mr. Frederick Kidder of Berkeley, Calif., a member of the staff of the reconstruction administration who learned enough Spanish within a year to be licensed as a layreader. He is now a candidate for orders, studying under the direction of Bishop Colmore.

Goes to Hobart

Detroit:—The Rev. David R. Covell, superintendent of the city mission here since 1942 has resigned to accept a position as chaplain and professor of sociology at Hobart College.

War Marriages

Pittsburgh, Pa.:—The young couple was lucky, everyone said. The husband had a good job, and the army classified him 4-F. But what everyone didn't know was that the couple's marriage was nearly on the rocks. Rejected for military service, the husband became touchy, irritable, abusive, and the wife contemplated divorce. This over-sensitive 4-F husband is just one of the Pittsburghers who have taken their wartime marital problems to the marriage and family consultation service and to its present organization, the family society. The service, sponsored jointly by Allegheny County council of churches and the family society, was established in November, 1942.

Marital trouble often develops when a soldier-husband goes overseas and wants his bride, who may never have met his family, to live with his parents. "One of our counselors solved that problem," explained Miss Margaret Rich. general secretary of the family society, "by suggesting that the girl write her husband that she wanted to stay and work in Pittsburgh to make their own home for him to come back to."

Many marriages of long duration have cracked recently under the strain of the wife's working for the first time, according to Mrs. Celestia Stewart, a counselor. Most of her clients are referred to her by their clergymen, other agencies or by friends who may have used the service, Mrs. Stewart said. First calls are made about equally by husbands and wives.

"Most people who come to us are genuinely hopeful that some long-range adjustment can be made to save their marriage," explained Mrs. Stewart. "They usually have had too much advice. We try to make them think of all the underlying factors of their discontent and then make up their own minds."

The returning veteran sometimes feels left out of his own family, the marriage counselors stated, for the wife has become so used to taking the full responsibility for the home and children that she continues to dominate the household and must learn to share its direction all over again. Other veterans and their wives have worried that their marriages were slipping when they settled down to the responsibilities of a home after a few brief, honeymoon days or weeks together before the husband went overseas.

Mrs. Wheeler Dies

New York:—Mrs. Alice Gilman Wheeler, churchwoman of this city, died on March 20th. She was the widow of Everett P. Wheeler and the daughter of Daniel Coit Gilman, first president of Johns Hopkins University. She was active for many years as a director of the East Side Settlement House. Her sister, Miss Elizabeth Gilman, a member of the national committee of the CLID, survives.

Back Penn FEPC

Pittsburgh: — Representatives of most of the churches are backing the legislation for a fair employment practices committee in the state of Pennsylvania, including the Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving 2nd and Dean N. R. High Moor.

Advise Servicemen

London:—To advise homecoming service men and women in the choice of a career St. Leonard's parish here has set up an advisory panel. Its members, all volunteers, have specialized experience in 27 businesses, trades and professions from dancing to civil service and the ministry.

Tons of Clothing

Washington:—A shipment of 48 tons of clothing is being sent to war stricken countries by the Seventh-day Adventists. They are now gathering 50 more tons.

Titus Honored

Jamaica, N. Y.:—The Rev. Joseph H. Titus was given a reception by Grace Church to mark the 15th anniversary of his rectorship. There were more than 500 present including Bishop DeWolfe who praised the rector and WITNESS editor for the efficient service he had rendered both the parish and the community. There were presents, including war bonds.

Raise a Million

New York:—More than a million dollars has already been raised by the Presbyterian Church in their campaign for a million and a quarter for the activities of its wartime service commission.

Receive Help

New Orleans:—Two Church institutions of the city have received grants for 1945 from the city's war and community chest. The children's home received $5,677 and Gaudet School, an institution of the American Church Institute for Negroes, received $5,466.

Hartford Dean Dies

Hartford:—The Rev. S. R. Colladay, dean emeritus of the cathedral here, died on March 21st in his 75th year. He represented the diocese at many General Conventions and was a frequent lecturer at the Berkeley Divinity School.

Chaplain Honored

Seminary Offering

Philadelphia:—The offering for theological education this year amounted to $30,836, reports Dean Evans of the Philadelphia Seminary who is chairman of the project. Last year it was $17,933. Here's the breakdown: General $8,219; Virginia, $4,897; Seabury-Western, $3,083; Pacific, $2,812; Philadelphia, $2,644; Cambridge, $2,409; Berkeley, $2,257; Bexley, $1,054. No report from Sewanee yet.

In Jail

New Orleans:—The Rev. Caleb B. K. Weed has been in jail every Sunday for 25 years. He goes to minister to the prisoners. But that is but a small part of his task. He cashes checks, lends money which he "charges up to charity," buys clothes for a man going home so that he may have that added sense of respectability that a new suit gives, are only a few of the services he performs. He is seen at the pardon board meetings, there to represent parents who are asking for a pardon for their son. He finds reputable lawyers for men in trouble; he finds jobs for prisoners when they are discharged. He believes firmly in discipline of small children to keep them throughout life in good habits instead of bad, described the life of one condemned man as an example of the overshadowing influence of childhood.

"That man was the son of an immigrant who forced his child to work for him but who never gave him any pocket change. The child wanted a bike because other children had them but his father would not let him earn one.

"The boy stole a bike. Later he stole a car, got a jail sentence, got out and joined a gang, came to New Orleans and held up a bank. He had had no training or fair treatment as a child."

He recalled a country girl whose family had always neglected her and who killed her lover. Dr. Weed baptized her while she was serving her term.

He is fearful of the generation this war is breeding. "They're starting a terrible crop with the children who have no real homes or real mothers and the young men in army camps who begin to drink for the first time," he said.

In his chapel services at 9 a.m. every Sunday at the prison, Dr. Weed has twice as many Negro worshipers as white and has practically no women worshipers.

There he is not a sentimentalist for he said, "Women criminals are a thousand times worse than men. They're usually hard as nails and very difficult to handle."

Work with Indians

Oneida, Wis.:—The Holy Apostles' Indian Mission has shown a gratifying growth during the past year, according to a statement issued by Bishop Harwood Sturtevant, of Fond du Lac. The membership is now 707 communicants in good standing, with 153 children in the Saturday church school. There are 220 Oneidas, including four women, in the armed services of the country.

Rug-weaving looms have been paid for by their own products, and plans are under way for a new kindergarten room and another teacher. Bishop Sturtevant points to a fine growth of cooperation among all the Oneidas of the community, as shown by "joint meetings on common interests, union services such as the world day of prayer, shared even by the Roman Catholic priest and his group." For the first time the Indians have this year appropriated funds toward the support of their priest.

South America

Boston:—A wistful concern as to the future of their relations with the United States is seen on the part of all elements in South American countries by Fred Field Goodsell, executive vice-president of the American board of commissioners for foreign missions (Congregational), who addressed the diocesan seminar on Christianity and the post war world in the Lenten Diocesan School. His summary of the various attitudes he found, notably hostile, cagily suspicious, or eagerly hopeful, was based on a trip by airplane of 15,000 miles. The aim of his address was to deepen the interest of Christian people in the need for patient work toward hemispheric solidarity on the highest levels. Dr. Goodsell referred to the government's work through its department of cultural relations as a new form of foreign missions.

It is disconcerting to realize belatedly that for the classes and masses of South American people it is a new thing to think of the people of North America as either near, dear, or objects of emulation. Latin America's ties have been with Europe, to which the distance is psychologically shorter. Facts must be faced; among them that there is a general misconception of the place of Protestantism in Latin America. Dr. Goodsell testifies to a widespread, vital, growing, indigenous Protestant movement throughout the republics to the south, though not as strong as if it were a thoroughly united movement. Flatfootedly, Dr. Goodsell says, "American Protestants have the same kind of business in Latin America as in any other part of the world; it is our business to preach the Christian gospel and interpret the Christian way of life to those who have not heard of Christ, or who are indifferent to Him." He mentioned the 7,000,000 Indians in the deep mountain valleys of Ecuador, Peru, and Bolivia, as a case in point, and also the thousands among the educated classes, who have neither religious affiliation or intent, or a knowledge of ethical Christianity.

Play Heroic Role

London (by cable):—An eyewitness account of the part played by British Army chaplains in the invasion of the Continent last year has just been published by the War Office. Landing right with the units to which they were attached, they carried out their duties in the same dangerous and difficult conditions which were experienced by the men.

"It would be impossible to say too much in praise of the chaplains," the senior chaplain wrote of the chaplains under him. "On the beach and in the confined beach-head during the first five weeks of battle, which ended in the fall of Caen, they were in an area which was shelled every day and frequently bombed. They lived like most of the others, in slit trenches, in holes in the ground and in shattered buildings which had been converted into regimental aid posts.

"They conducted services, ministered to the wounded and dying; they supervised burials and did all the many other tasks which fall to the duty of chaplains. Their unit commanding officers reported in every case most favorably on their work. The experience which these chaplains have gone through has given them a deep knowledge of men under the most testing conditions."

Layman of Great Neck, Long Island

The editorial Won't Be Long Now (WITNESS, March 15) which describes in fantasy how the marriage ceremony is taken over by a mammoth department store is one of the most delightful bits of comedy seen in some while, but as the author says, "It is not as fantastic as it sounds." Such a situation is indeed already actuality — in California, as might be expected, there is a beautiful convertible chapel with chaplain, garden, altar, arrangers, etc. The only change in detail in the story is that the sponsor is not a department store, but, as may be expected, a honeymoon hotel. What is the next move?

THE REV. JOSEPH GREGORI
Spanish Episcopal Missions, Phoenix, Ariz.

I was shocked at your lack of logic and common sense (editorial of March 8), on the subject of asking the prayers of the saints. You seem to jump from that to praying to the saints. I have many Protestant friends who write to me: "Brother Gregori, pray for me"; and as many or more R. C. friends that ask for my prayers also. Do you conclude that "their next step will be to pray to me"?

You must not think much of the intelligence of your readers or else you must be one of those that believe that the faithful departed are but shadows and ghosts not substances; as though we were in power and influence, they in weakness; we the living, they the dead. Don't you believe that the father graciously imparts to his chosen according to their capacity, what he is himself in his fulness?

Gentlemen, will you pray for the whole state of Christ's Church? Then, what do you have that the saints "ain't got"? A little common sense in the editorial page will not hurt THE WITNESS. Will you dare publish this in Backfire?

THE REV. W. W. S. HOHENSCHILD
Rector of the Holy Communion, St. Louis

Your editorial in THE WITNESS of March 8th, 1945, under the title, "The Reformation Really Reformed," strikes an all time low. I usually carry the banner for THE WITNESS but I find myself in complete disagreement with the editorial writer. It is unfortunate that the editorial was not signed so that we might know the writer. To find fault with the passages in the Lenten number of Forward-day-by-day and attempt to build an argument for this editorial, is unfortunately the most farfetched thing that has been presented by THE WITNESS editorial staff. This editorial is of the barn yard nature. There is a paper shortage today, so why waste paper and postage?

I am confident that the writer of the Lenten number of the Forward-day-by-day did not have a partisan view in mind and even the most liberal of us will rise in his defense to rebuke the writer of this editorial. Why not use your time and space to do constructive work for the Church rather than publish editorials of this nature which are designed to provoke controversy.

ANSWER: We have received other letters about this editorial all along the same line. We have presented them here in the order that they were received as space permits but would like to acknowledge letters from the Rev. B. Norman Burke, rector at Rockford, Ill.; the Rev. William L. Blaker of Roseburg, Oregon; the Rev. Elbert B. Holmes, rector at West Newbury, Mass.; the Rev. Samuel Edsall, rector of Trinity, Geneva, N. Y.; the Rev. Edward G. Maxted, Warrington, Fla. and others. Interesting thing about it is that all the letters objecting to the editorial came from clergymen. Not a single lay man or woman.

CHAPLAIN ROBERT K. GUMM
AFTAC, Orlando, Florida

Kindly discontinue immediately the subscription that is being sent to me. A Church paper that constantly by its editorial comment shows nothing but destructive criticism of one of the major Christian communions of the world cannot be offered as reading material by the undersigned chaplain. I would place THE WITNESS in this category: (To quote from Bishop Frank E. Wilson, page 172, Faith and Practice) "Fractional Christianity is an evidence of human weakness and is apt to degenerate into negative prejudices."

In commenting on your first editorial of the March 8 issue, the Lenten number of Forward in Service, in the opinion of many soldiers and of myself is the best one yet and I trust that more of this solid Church teaching will be soon forthcoming.

MR. E. T. LAWRENCE
Layman of Tillicum, Washington

I am sure all real Episcopalians have read with satisfaction your editorial in the February 15th number. So far as I know there is only one religious body which stigmatizes members of other denominations as heretics and that is the Roman Catholic, than which there is no organization in existence more bigoted. And there are a number of people posing as Episcopalians who are in reality Roman Catholics and they are certainly not an asset to any Protestant organization. Some day, the sooner the better, I hope to see our Church purge itself of these disturbing elements. You can't make a deal with Rome any more than you can with Hitler.

THE REV. AARON MANDERBACH
Rector at Collingdale, Pa.

THE WITNESS gives the news as well as contains articles which represent what I believe to be the best spirit of our Church. During Lent we are receiving a bundle to use with a study class and all of the copies are sold in a very short time after the service on Sunday. I recommended the two editorials of February 15th. Keep up the good work.

How Many Children Are There In the Average Rectory?

A Study Reveals That There Are Very Few Which Raises Question of Why Not More

By J. Clemens Kolb

Chaplain at the University of Pennsylvania

Philadelphia:—Rectories are supposed to provide an ideal environment for the up-bringing of children. In spite of Samuel Butler's hero in The Way of All Flesh, the rectory has the reputation of being a place of gracious living and high thinking. While there is a certain proverb about a deacon's daughter and the minister's son such facts as can be gathered tend to show the contrary. I believe it is true that there are more children of clergy in Who's Who than the children of any other profession. If the rectory provides so promising an environment for the production of outstanding citizens and if we clergy are constantly preaching the need for Christian leadership, it might be interesting to see what we are actually doing about it. How many children are there in the average rectory?

In Stowe's Clerical Directory for 1941, 250 clergy were picked at random, selected from the A's, B's, and M's, taking at least one page at a time and using only clergy who had made full reports. Anyone with an asterisk after his name (denoting failure to return a report) was left out. There is a margin of error even with 250. Some clergy will have more children in 1945 than in 1941, but they will be balanced by a small mortality rate. It is also possible that those who made no reports might have been clergy with larger families than those who made reports but I am inclined to doubt it. The figures appear to me to be nearly enough correct for all practical purposes.

Results: 250 clergy, 264 children —or just one and one-twentieth child to each rectory. I was surprised to find the figures so small. If all the people of the United States followed the example of the Episcopal clergy in the limitation of families it wouldn't be long before we would soon be looking for a new James Fenimore Cooper to write The Last of the Americans.

It occurred to me that it might be a good idea to compare these results with the clergy families of twenty-five and fifty years ago. Unfortunately that was impossible as Stowe's Clerical Directory does not go back that far and they didn't begin to list the children until after 1929. Presumably they were larger; but whether they were ahead of, behind or on a par with the average family of their time, who can say?

If these figures are correct for the present then the number of children in the average rectory is among the lowest anywhere. Before I began this inquiry, I thought that there would probably be more children in the rectory than in the average home because the average rectory is larger, can accommodate children, the children do not suffer from the handicap of the apartment-house dweller, where children either are not wanted or else have very little place to play. The clergy do not suffer from the disadvantage of the average tenant who often has to pay a higher rent if he has children. Added to this is the fact that most clergy are fond of children. They like people. Taking them by and large they are the gregarious type. With these advantages there must be some serious reason for the very small family.

I suspect that the chief reason is financial. Here the clergy suffer under two handicaps. Their salaries are small in comparison with the salaries of the average men of similar professional training — doctors, lawyers, business executives. They may be higher than the average population but the ministry is not a lucrative profession, probably it shouldn't be.

Combined with this is the fact that the clergyman's family, on a comparatively small salary, often has to live in a big, rambling rectory and his living expenses are much higher than those of a man in the same income bracket. He has to do a goodly amount of entertaining that comes out of his pocket. And few and far between are the clergy whose parishes give them an entertainment budget. Then too the living standards of the clergy are expected to be at least within hailing distance of the most affluent members of their congregations. This may be wrong but it is so.

Taking all these factors into consideration and adding to them the moral obligation of the clergy to live within their budgets, to pay their bills, to be Christian in their business dealings as well as in their pulpits, and you have a very small margin left over for such expensive luxuries as children.

The clergy too have high ideals for the up-bringing and education of their children. They are almost invariably graduates of good secondary schools, college and seminary. Their wives are frequently college graduates as well. They are not going to be satisfied merely to put their children through high school. They want their children to go on as far as possible to college and graduate school. In that case the clergy usually try to provide their children with private school educations; and while clergy are usually favored in the matter of scholarships, just the extras of lunches, books, equipment, fraternity dues and transportation make a surprisingly big demand on the none-too-strong exchequer.

What is the answer? Or is there any answer? One possibility lies in the direction of lowered cost of bringing children into this world and maintaining them after they get here. At present the Blue Cross does help a great deal in the lessening of expenses of having a child and the possibility of government-sponsored education according to the ability of the child may lessen the financial burden of the parent. There was a time in the old days of an agricultural society when a child was an economic asset. Now they are an economic liability and economics have to be reckoned with.

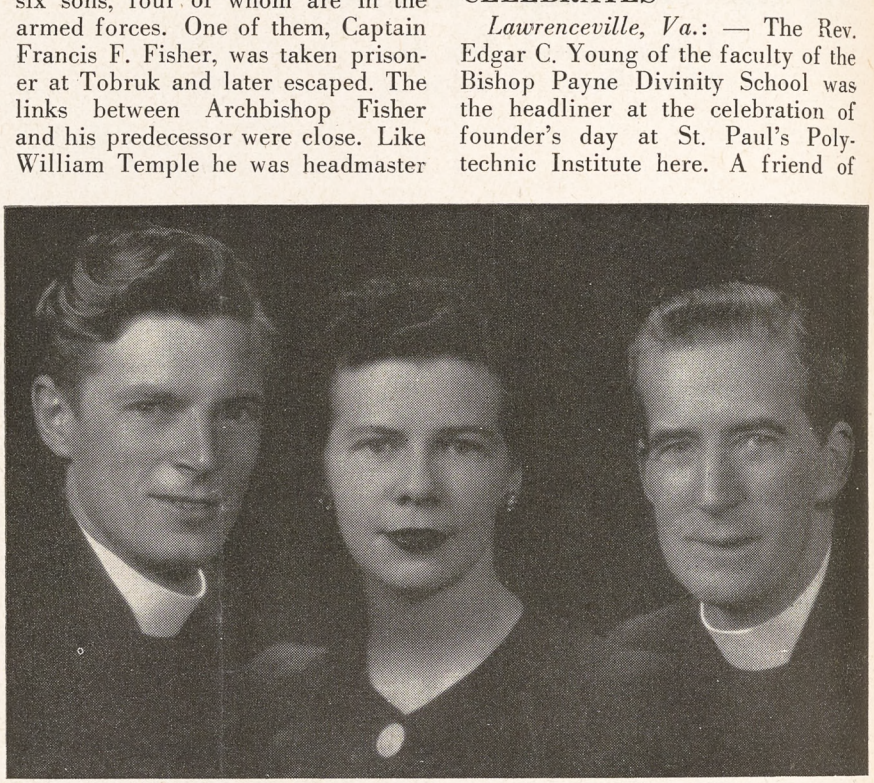
Another possibility is a different system of pay for clergy. Perhaps clergy should not be paid by the size and wealth of their parishes but by the length of their service in the ministry and their number of dependents. That would mean that parishes would not pay directly to their rectors but into a diocesan fund which they might be unwilling to do. But there are many arguments in favor of revision of clerical salaries.



The discrepancies at present are large. There is always an economic pressure to accept a call to a parish that offers a larger salary, not because one is any better fitted to that kind of work or because it offers more opportunity, but because it does mean more money; and for that reason, some downtown tombs with big endowments and no future which ought to be manned by the less able clergy get the very best — because they can afford to pay them. While a strategically-placed mission in a part of town that is rapidly building may have a hard time securing the kind of man who can develop the church work, because they have to begin in the very low salary brackets where a man with a child simply can't afford to stay.

As with so many problems, the problem of small clerical families is linked with other problems—with planned parenthood, with clergy placement, with the change from a rural to an urban civilization and the consequent change in the economic value of children, with church finance. Last evening, I was calling on a doctor and his wife and I told them I had just looked up the size of clerical families. "What were the results?" asked the doctor. "About 2.5?" "No," I replied, "1.05." "That is terrible," he said. "Yes," I replied, "it is." "Why you clergy are not even reproducing yourselves," said his wife. "No," I admitted, "we are not." And then she added, "And you never will until the state provides for the birth and education of children." "Maybe so," I conceded. But when one thinks of the measureless happiness that children bring, one can only comment, "What a pity."

New York: — Geoffrey Francis Fisher, successor of William Temple as the Archbishop of Canterbury, is 57 years of age and the father of six sons, four of whom are in the armed forces. One of them, Captain Francis F. Fisher, was taken prisoner at Tobruk and later escaped. The links between Archbishop Fisher and his predecessor were close. Like William Temple he was headmaster of Repton. He was closely associated with Dr. Temple in the unity movement, and is therefore well known and respected by those of the Free Churches as well as by Anglicans. Dr. Fisher's desire for the widest Christian cooperation is seen on the one hand in his chairmanship of a committee for cooperation on certain matters between Protestant and Roman Catholic communions and on the other by his vigorous defense of his action in allowing a Protestant body to use St. Paul's Cathedral for a special service.

He was appointed Bishop of Chester in 1932 and was translated to be the Bishop of London in 1939. He has expressed the highest regard for the United States. But recently he said: "For long now, the two countries have stood together against the enemies of all that our peoples hold dear and sacred. We go forward now to victory in the west together; together we shall go to victory in the east. Then, please God, we shall go on together to establish among the nations those high principles of brotherhood which your president and our prime minister have proclaimed."

Proud Alex Lyall on the right is here shown with his two children, Gordon and Dorothea. The elder Lyall is vicar of St. John's in West Los Angeles while his son is the senior curate at St. Luke's, Philadelphia. Our correspondent gave us little information about daughter Dorothea except that she was about to marry—which is understandable

CHURCH COLLEGE CELEBRATES

Lawrenceville, Va.: — The Rev. Edgar C. Young of the faculty of the Bishop Payne Divinity School was the headliner at the celebration of founder's day at St. Paul's Polytechnic Institute here. A friend of the founder, the late Rev. James S. Russell, Mr. Young paid a special tribute to him for courage, faith and hard work. He also praised the present head of the college, the Rev. J. Alvin Russell, for the admirable way he is carrying on the work of his father.

WITNESS EDITOR GOES TO ROME

Rome:—The Rev. Beverley M. Boyd, recently appointed social service secretary of the Federal Council of Churches and a WITNESS editor, went to Rome last week. He conducted service on Maundy Thursday, Good Friday and Easter at Zion Church, Rome, N. Y., in the absence of the rector who is in service in the armed forces as a chaplain.

Bishop Tucker of Ohio Tells Of the Postwar World

Believes Chaplains Will Contribute Much To Parishes When They Return From Fronts

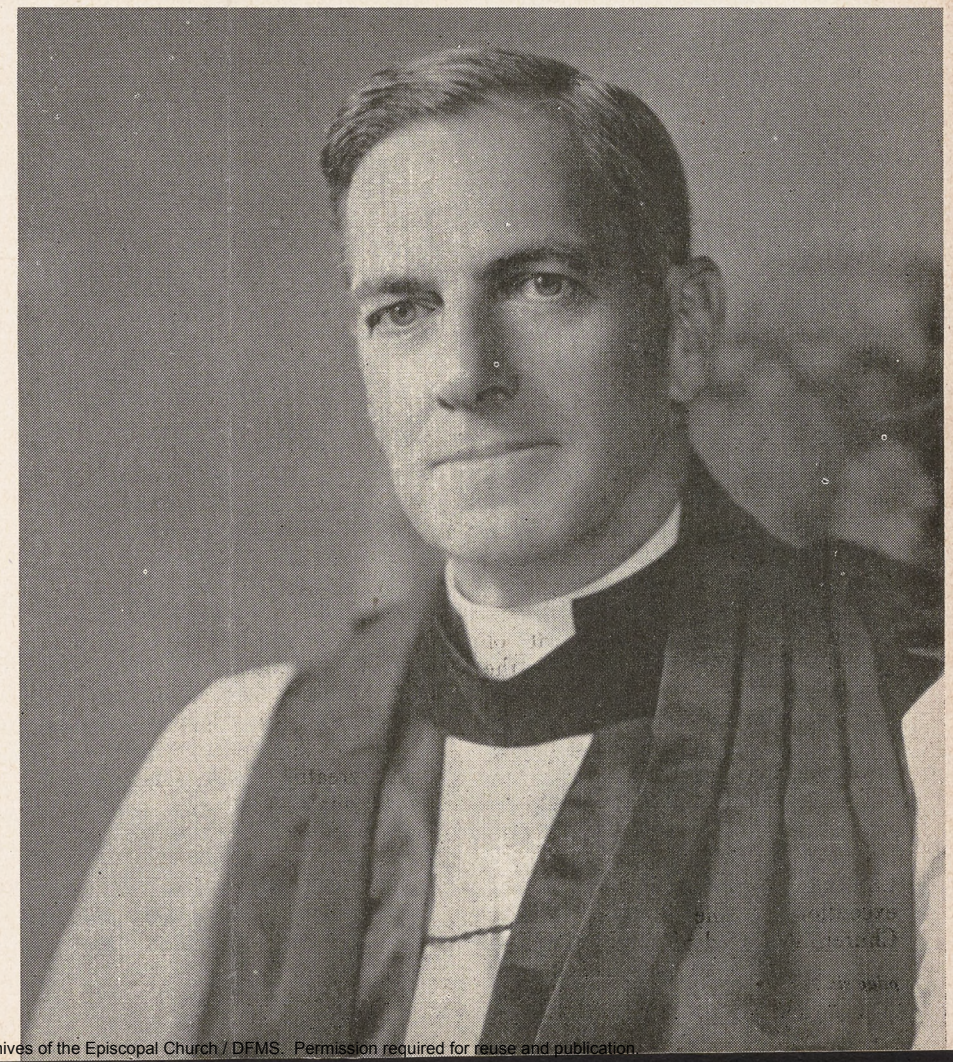
By William H. Leach
Editor of Church Management

Cleveland:—Everybody seems to be thinking of the postwar world. The list of books which brings definite plans for the cooperative world are increasing with each publication date. It is the favorite theme with discussion groups and lecturers. Church conferences give a large proportion of space to the place that the Church will play in it. There is a general feeling that we are drawing near the end of the war and a new era will soon be at hand.

The Rt. Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, Bishop of Ohio, sits in an enviable position for observing the trends in Church and secular affairs. He has a contact with the religious leaders of the nation. He knows the men who control business and industry and he has kept his touch with the common folk. He is interested in progress — progress for the Church and social progress in the nation and in the world. I felt sure that his views on the coming era would be worth while.

Bishop Tucker appreciates as most of us do that war produces a social and industrial unity which is difficult for us for peace times. War is a terrible thing. But the Bishop points out that war, with all of its horrors, has brought full time employment, it has speeded up the government interest in adequate housing for workers, and it has given the minority groups such as the Negro race a larger share in the material resources of our nation.

"These evidences of progress are all fine," I suggested, "but what assurance have you that they will continue after the war? What is going to happen when war orders are cut off? Are the things we now call gains a social reality or are they merely a temporary product of the abnormal days through which we are passing?"



"There is but one answer to that," said Bishop Tucker. "It depends on just how far the socially minded Christians of the nation are willing to fight to hold the social gains made during the months of the war."

It was not said in a "preachy" way and one had the feeling that rather than telling others what they were to do the Bishop was announcing that so far as he is concerned every effort will be made to salvage out of the chaos of war the social gains which have been made.

Will the Church be stronger or weaker after the war? When you talk of the Church the average layman thinks of the local church. The professional churchman thinks of the Church universal which is worshipping and serving in all parts of the world. When the above is asked, the layman thinks of the attitude of the service men toward the local church and its clergy; the churchman thinks of the influence of the Church in the nation and the growth of its missionary movement in the world.

Bishop Tucker thinks in the terms of both. He appreciates that the influence of the local church will depend a great deal on its leadership. He suspects that there are clergy who have kept so far out of the sacrifice and travail of the war period that neither the service men nor others will seek their ministries. At the same time he is sure that there are others who have lived sympathetically with the people to whom they have ministered and he is sure that they will find their churches stronger. They can conserve the spiritual energy created by the conflict.

He sees one way in which the diocese of Ohio will be able to immediately strengthen its program. Eight clergymen from the diocese are serving in chaplaincies. He has asked for an appropriation in the budget to keep these men, following their release from the military service, for one year for special work in the diocese. They are to be assigned for special chaplaincy work among returned veterans. This proposed program will give the diocese a very definite contact with the returned service men and will enable the Church to keep closely in touch with the social problems of the postwar period. It will also keep for the diocese the fine young men who will bring back the rich experiences gained from contacts with the youth of the nation.

There is evidence, the Bishop thinks, to make one optimistic regarding the future of the Church. The spirit of unity and cooperation is working. The war itself has revealed the worthwhile ministries of missionaries in the distant parts of the world. The Churches have been bulwarks for the preservation of the individual conscience in Fascist countries. Leadership produced by the Church has been outstanding in nations such as China. Missionary work has come close to home and assumed a reality not evident earlier.

"But," said the interviewer, "there is Russia," reputed land of atheism and there is China with its communistic millions. How do they fit into this picture?"

"I have no fear of Russia," said the Bishop. "It is the bright spot in the world at the present time. Its leadership in Marshal Stalin has been magnificent. At one time there was a ban on all religions. Perhaps it was a justified ban; at least it was stimulated by ecclesiastical abuses. But Russia now has religious freedom. It is a nation instinctively religious. No, I don't fear Russia. I look for great things from her.

"And China. Just what the Communistic movement may develop I do not know. But it is evident that there is a great social passion back of the movement. Social passion is so closely related to Christianity that, barring evidence to the contrary, I think that we can look for Christian growth in China. I do know that the work of the Christian missions will be continued with increasing emphasis in that land."

The growing spirit of Church cooperation is a favorite theme with Bishop Tucker. Under his leadership Ohio has become the experimental station for the whole nation in this movement. The crowning example of the growing spirit of Church cooperation is shown in the amazing vitality of the World Council of Churches under the leadership of the late Archbishop of Canterbury. This organization has added members and continued its work despite the handicaps of war. It is not too much to hope that soon all Christian bodies, with the possible exception of the Roman Catholic Church, will find places in the membership of the Council. The Christian Church, certainly, is on the way to unity.

Bishop Tucker believes that the Church is vitally interested in the political world of the future. He would not recommend that the Churches try to be represented in the peace conferences.

"That," he said, "would guarantee that the Vatican would be represented and would place the other groups at a disadvantage, but the Churches must lead thinking toward a postwar world."

He has been an active participant in the discussions of the joint commission to keep informed of work of the late Archbishop Temple. This commission has preferred to think of itself as a preliminary commission on social reconstruction. Here we would like to list the seven points which the commission gives as the duty of the Church. We feel that Bishop Tucker helped to frame them and that they express his point of view.

The Christian Church has a primary duty to seek such a unified world and to assist in the creation of international order:

By being itself actually a world-wide fellowship under one Lord, in which national and racial differences are transcended;

By proclaiming insistently that all nations, under God, are members one of another, with mutual responsibility for the good of each: one God, one family, one destiny;

By proclaiming that no people can claim the right of a superior race to rule over subject people, and that the controlling purpose of colonial administration must be to prepare the colonial people for self-government and to assist and hasten them towards the goal;

By repudiating any attempt to approach the solution of postwar problems in the spirit of revenge, hatred, or injustice, though without blinding our eyes to the wrongs of the past or the dangers of the future;

By creating at home such a conviction of international solidarity and interdependence, and the unity of all men in God, as will prepare our people to abandon isolation and to assume their full responsibility for the creation and maintenance of international order and justice;

By the re-establishment of contact with fellow Christians in enemy and conquered countries with the view to helping in the restoration of these Churches and with faith in them to furnish the leadership in their own countries for international cooperation.

Bishop Tucker believes that a strong world organization, with military force, will be necessary to maintain peace. While he feels that the withdrawal of the United States from the League of Nations was a catastrophe partially to be blamed for the current war, he points out that the League, in its organization, was weak. It lacked the power of sanctions and was unable to enforce its decisions.

"I do not think that use of force is per se unchristian. It depends upon the motive that directs its use," said the Bishop. "One must use it in the discipline of children and it will have to be used for a long time in the conduct of nations."

"Would you favor a world organization which provides for continental or regional organizations, over which there is a world organization?"

"Yes, that seems logical but there must be the world organization. Any idea that the troubles of one continent can be segregated from the others will bring future trouble in the world. Probably there are problems peculiar to the Americas, to Europe and Asia. Many of these could be settled by the continental

Good Homes for All

WE face one major problem now—that is winning the war. We will face many problems after military victory is won. These will fall into two general groups—international and domestic. In this editorial we are concerned with one major domestic problem — housing. It staggers the imagination to think of this problem in terms of the European continent. Take one example Berlin. It is estimated that the allies' bombings have been so devastating they have reduced the houses and apartments in which 4,250,000 persons once lived to a state in which they can now house only about 500,000.

Comparably in our own country there has been no building for over five years except for emergency war housing projects. We need homes. We need decent homes in clean neighborhoods. As a group of thirteen cooperating agencies express it in a joint statement issued by them, "We wish to express our conviction that good homes in good neighborhoods for all the people must be a major objective of public policy in the immediate post-war years." The Federal Council of Churches through its executive committee adopted the following resolution: "The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America appeal to Church members generally to support all sound and effective measures for a thorough housing program urban and rural, including community planning for all groups and races, slum clearance and rehousing when necessary; and without passing judgment on any particular legislative proposals, approve the general principle of assistance by federal, state and local governments."

Both of these statements were read into the record of the Senate's subcommittee on post-war economic policy and planning. This is the committee that will draft a public housing bill. The point of this editorial is that as Christian clergy and laity we should be interested in public housing. Decent homes help people to aspire to decent living. There are powerful self interests groups in this country who are marshalling their forces to prevent federal aid in a public housing program. They have a right to their opinion. But the Church should look toward the goal of the common good. When a definite housing bill is drafted, as thinking Christians, we should interest ourselves in studying its provisions and make sure that the whole community is the beneficiary of its provisions and not just one segment. Bad people may live in good homes. But bad homes often induce good people to become bad.

We take our stand for a housing bill that will benefit the greatest number of people, whether through federal, state, or private financing. Perhaps it should be a combination of all three.

"QUOTES"

SOME have tried to say that the faith of the early Christians created the risen Christ. This is due to a failure to understand its meaning. Christ set out to win the free response of men, not the adherence of a crowd mystified by sensationalism. He knew that mere wonder might startle the mind but would not win the heart. "Neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead." The resurrection of Christ is not a miracle to convince the incredulous. Our difficulty with belief in the resurrection is in the spiritual and moral, rather than in the intellectual realm. Christianity has been allowed in many places to become conventional and cheap. The war has revealed how noble men and women can be, but at the same time it has revealed a hideous selfishness. On the one hand we have men and women who are giving life and limb for others and at the same time others are grasping for advantage. In such a world as this, a reasonable Christian will expect to undergo hardship. "That I may know Christ and the power of His resurrection, and the fellowship of His sufferings, being made conformable unto His death."

—Oliver J. Hart.
Bishop of Pennsylvania in an Easter sermon at Christ Church, Philadelphia.

Gay, Triumphant Christians

TWO recent deaths reported in the chaplains corps of the navy bring home to us more keenly than ever the terrible cost of victory. The Rev. Quintin Wilder of the diocese of Nebraska and the Rev. Eugene Shannon of the diocese of Chicago have given their lives in the service of their country. The Rev. Quintin Wilder grew up in Nebraska. At the Episcopal Theological School he was known for his dry humor. He took life cheerfully and himself not too seriously. He insisted that his experience in the sand hills of Nebraska served him well in the sands of New Guinea. During his chaplaincy of a year and a half he designed and dedicated a chapel in New Guinea. The Rev. Eugene Shannon was one who brought into every group a quality of good cheer and Christian gaiety. He lived close to the men he served and shared their pleasures and discomforts. This had been characteristic of him all his life. He worked hard, put himself through college and seminary and understood through his own experience the hard things people often find themselves up against. His own jubilant triumph over difficulties was a quality he was able to pass on to others.

It is impossible that these two ardent gay, triumphant, Christian spirits can have ceased to be. Surely they have gone on, with others like them, to serve with the multitudes of men in the armed forces who have given their lives in this war. It doesn't seem right to say the words, "Rest eternal grant unto them O Lord." Instead we feel like saying "May it be true of each of them: 'Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.' May light perpetual shine upon them, in the nearer presence of the Christ they adored, loved and followed."

John Woolman: Precursor

by Vida D. Scudder

Contributing Editor of THE WITNESS

"AS I LIVED under the cross, and simply followed the openings of truth, my mind from day to day was more enlightened . . . I looked upon the works of God in this visible creation, and an awfulness covered me; my heart was tender and often contrite, and a universal love to my fellow creatures increased in me. This will be understood by such as have trodden in the same path."

So, in key-note words, wrote John Woolman the "Quaker saint," born in 1720. Surveying the English 18th century from the religious angle, one is struck by the sources from which come books of authentic experience. If we look for vitality, beauty, and abiding spiritual appeal, the Anglican communion has a poor showing, after Law. We turn to Methodists and Quakers. And if we except the hymns of the Wesleys, Woolman's Journal is perhaps the best known and most widely loved of writings in this class. It has special interest for us, since it breathes the fragrance of that Quaker inspiration which played so touching, powerful, and inadequately recognized a part in our own early religious culture. Woolman was a native of New Jersey; but he travelled in many states, bearing his witness, and few books proceeding from "The Interior Castle" present so dramatic and romantic a background, varying from the social life of New England to primitive Indian reservations, and to Yorkshire in the mother land, where he died in 1772, and where the "coming events" of the industrial revolution already "cast their shadow before."

But the central value of his Journal is in the reports given of the inward "enlightenment" suggested by our opening quotation. We are tempted to say that in Woolman as nowhere else since Langland, may be noted the revival of Christian social passion. Such revival is with him indissolubly mingled with intensification of the mystical consciousness markedly lacking in 18th century Anglican divinity, where exclusive emphasis falls on slightly Christianized commonsense. Of course in the long run the two qualities are closely allied: witness Langland himself, witness the great Franciscans. But they have a way of slipping asunder, and when that happens, mysticism tends toward unwholesome withdrawal from time into the ivory castle of eternity, while social radicalism even when nominally Christian degenerates into impoverished "moralism." The union in Woolman is as refreshing as it notably is in Quakerism today. "Stillness" is a word he loves; his phrases have poignant actuality as again and again he invokes the silences where love abounds. And when he tells us, "My mind was drawn into a deep inward stillness," we understand the emotion in the yearly meeting where "in the pure flowing of the divine love, I express what lay upon me as it then arose"; for assuredly "deep answers to deep in the heart of sincere and upright men." . . . He inhabited eternity; but transition to the things of time is often amusingly abrupt. We catch our breath:

"My mind hath been preserved in a watchful tender state, feeling for the mind of the holy leader. . . . On enquiry in many places, I find that price of rice about five sh., oatmeal 12 sh. for 120 pounds, . . . wood for fire very scarce and dear. Oh may the wealthy consider the poor!" . . . One wouldn't find a transition like that in St. John of the Cross; a remark not meant to cast disrespect on that perhaps greatest of Christian mystics.

Woolman is a Precursor. Reading him, we find ourselves in that familiar world where Christian principles clash not only against the practices but against the assumptions of the social order. The entire motivation of life down to minutest details is scrutinized; we pass from sweeping denunciations of war, of slavery, to earnest considerations about dyed rats. Moving and disturbing are the extremes to which he carries his witness, as when being aware of the cruel treatment accorded horses and post-boys, he asks his friends to send no letters to him by post; how, one wonders, did he communicate with them? The situation is typical; the most prophetic element in his life is his helplessness as he confronts dilemmas. He is one of the first articulate Christians to realize our inability to escape the tangle forcing every one of us to condone injustice, and—worse—to profit by it. He had a horror of "impure channels" in business,—(how he would have welcomed the Consumers League!)—but will he run away from the world like the monks? Not he, he is a canny practical business man, tailor, conveyancer. He followed to the limit the old Franciscan line of personal simplicity; in some ways he went further than the early friars, for he had an obsession against dirt, which they certainly did not share, and which he carried to an extreme that exposed him to ridicule. But he found no refuge in asceticism; his disciplines sprang rather from "pure love,"—inability to enjoy what others could not share. And cutting far below the surface of individual behaviour, he perceived, albeit dimly, that only corporate action can atone for corporate sin.

SENSITIVENESS like his was to grow. It was to develop slowly into the widely spread social compunction which as the Christian sees today is a far safer guide than proletarian revolt toward a better social order. Disinterested passion like Woolman's, rather than personal grievance or even than chivalric class loyalty, can enable us, as he says, to attain and inhabit that holy mountain of the Lord where they shall neither hurt nor destroy; well may we heed his words, seeking "to have our minds redeemed from the love of wealth, . . . laboring to promote the pure spirit of meekness and heavenly-mindedness in these days of calamity, wherein God is visiting our land" (and the whole world) "with his just judgments."

Even while dying, his social feeling did not fail. "How tenderly," said he, "have I been waited on in this time of affliction . . . while thousands and tens of thousands lack the necessities of life!" Outbreaks of anguish are reported by the Friends who cared for him; but his faith never failed. "He was fully persuaded that as the life of Christ comes to reign in the earth, all abuse and unnecessary oppression both of the human and oft the brute creation will come to an end. . . . And yet,"—they are forced to add "in the sense of a deep revolt and an overflowing stream of unrighteousness his life has often been a life of mourning." That is true, but it had also been a life of joy; and as the Journal admits us to his privacies, we find ourselves in an atmosphere of heavenly peace. For he experienced the release of those fortunate men who "live in the spirit of pure love."; as at Buckingham meeting, where "thro' the descending of heavenly dew, my mind was comforted and drawn into a near unity with the flock of Jesus Christ." [Again: "My mind was opened to behold the happiness, the safety and beauty, of a life devoted to follow the heavenly shepherd." He shared that happiness.] He knew that unity, largely on account of the uncommon degree in which he combined loyalty to extreme convictions and practises with flexible charity. Intolerance was not in him; generous was his attitude toward Christian slaveholders, for instance, who practised with clear conscience what he denounced and abhorred. He addressed his fellow Quakers with devastating candor, but he writes sweetly: "Whatever a man does in the spirit of charity, to him it is not sin." Yet at the same time: "For others it may be absolutely necessary to desist from some parts of conduct which some good men have been in." Pacifists, take notice!

Woolman the precursor! Still he points to the future. We Anglicans, to whom has been given an official motto to "go forward" should heed his words, noting their echo in the last report of the World Council of Churches: "For those who have faithfully attended to the nature and spirit of the Reformation, have seen the necessity of going forward, not only by their example in governing well, but also to use means to prevent their successors

San Francisco

There may have been world conferences more important than the one of the United Nations to open this month in San Francisco. In any case this can be said: whether or not world war three is to be avoided will be largely determined at this coming conference. That is why Bishops are authorizing prayers for its success. That is why sincere Christians the world over are going to follow its deliberations with exciting interest. Since Peace is the number one objective of the Christian Church THE WITNESS is going to give full coverage to the San Francisco Conference. A detailed announcement will be forthcoming. But we want to urge rectors who are concerned, and what one is not, to have their people study what goes on at San Francisco. If you think, as we do, that THE WITNESS reports will be helpful send a card to us at 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y., saying "Start sending me . . . copies with the first reports of the conference." We will then bill you later at the bundle rate of five cents a copy.

from having so much power to oppress others." That is the Journal: and the report echoes it: "The common starting-point . . . in the Churches of nearly all countries and confessions is the view that a transformation of the present social and economic structure is absolutely necessary."

Woolman's quaint little figure in his undyed clothes might well today be one of our chief intimates as we "go forward" toward, as we trust, a more harmonious world.

For Church Schools

By
WILLIAM GRIME
Rector of St. Paul's, Great Neck, N. Y.

IN OUR teaching we frequently use the words "our church" with justifiable pride. But when guiding children into learning about our missionary work why are we too often silent about the missionary work being done by other Christian bodies, many of whom are active in the same communities and countries with us? Are we afraid to let children and youth find out that many of these other missionary-minded Christian fellowships are doing good work and in some cases better work than we are? These exclusiveisms are surely not deliberate. They are just stupid forms of self sufficiency. One can say this when his own unit of missionary education suffers from the same defect.

To see this matter clearly look through our courses on missions. You will find there little reference to the missionary triumphs of other Christian bodies as to where they are singly or collectively working. Then look at some of the maps setting forth where our Church—the Anglican Church—is advancing. These maps are often so colored as to give the impression that our Church, as one young person said, "looks like the whole show."

We are apt to think our students' silences on this matter have no damaging results. Not at all. They begin to interpret these silences after awhile, sometimes audibly. Take this lad who after six months in his class woke it up by saying, "why don't you ever talk about what Quakers do or about Sam Higginbottam in India? They're missionaries too to all kinds of people and the unemployed." Consider also this lad's searching question, "must we help only Episcopal missionaries?" This aroused his class to find and help Dr. Grenfell through reading letters, prayers and special offerings for which he enrolled them as part of the "Crew of Grenfell Juniors."

So here are four suggestions: (1) in our new missionary courses let us begin to include more of the thrilling achievements of other Church leaders besides our own. Why not a missionary course made up of the achievements and triumphs of several Church bodies? (2) Let us show on our world maps more areas where inter-Church projects are at work. This will be a check against promoting too narrow institutional loyalties. (3) Let us acquaint our youth with the reports of such inter-Church groups as Agricultural Missions, Inc. and the Christian Rural Fellowship. These make exciting reading. (4) Let us supply children with copies of Now We Must Help. Give them a chance to learn about and support our Presiding Bishop's fund in its relationship to the needs of the children of Athens, the liberated peoples of the Philippines, and the restoration of European and Dutch East Indies churches. This pamphlet can be secured from 281 Fourth Avenue, free. And now and then let them read your copies of the World Council Courier.

Surely this kind of missionary education will not only not lessen loyalties to our Church but greater loyalties to the whole Christian Church. And surely the time for greatening loyalties to the whole Christian Church is now.

To Put It Briefly

By
WILLIAM B. SPERRY

A RECENT editorial in Collier's magazine suggests that the reason many people stay away from church is because the seats are so uncomfortable. It explains that the pews are designed to fit the average human figure and because no one of us is average they fit no one. Perhaps they are right but there may be more to it than that. It may be that some of our clergy, recognizing this need to reach the average person, seriously try to convey the church teaching to a congregation of mythical average people. Since none of them are average, nothing gets across. The people stretch and squirm not only because the seats do not fit their forms but because the thoughts do not fit their thought forms. The words do not fit their vocabularies.

More likely the trouble is of a different sort. Much of what the Church has to say is in the thought forms of the first or second century. Not only that, but when it is said it is put into the vocabulary or word forms of the seventeenth century, the language of the King James Bible and the Book of Common Prayer. Most people are as uncomfortable in the midst of such language and as awkward in its use as they would be if clad in the habiliments of the first century or dressed in the ruffles and knee breeches of the seventeenth century.

An additional difficulty is found in the tempo and social customs of our age. It is the lack of opportunity for thoughtful, patient teaching. There is still the sermon and there is pastoral calling. Discussion groups can be brought together sometimes and there are books to be read. But the hour long sermon, the evenings spent with the pastor, the pastoral call which results in long and serious discussion of Church doctrine are the exception rather than the rule.

Many of our best pastoral or teaching opportunities come with fleeting moments. They are brief contacts with no chance for lengthy discussion and carefully built up theories. At the door of the church a parishioner may comment or ask a question which needs at the moment a concise answer. We meet a parishioner on the bus or on the street and the conversation takes a serious pastoral turn. But there is no opportunity to answer fully the question about the service, the Church custom or the Church teaching which for the moment is under discussion. The desire of the parishioner for something neat and concise as a substitute for careful thinking need not be encouraged but we should be able to furnish something as both a guide and incentive for further investigation. We should be able to answer in the idiom of the day and with some degree of brevity.

The fact that one is an Episcopalian sometimes gives the feeling that there is nothing more to study or inquire into. Even being reared in the Church has its disadvantages as well as its advantages. We grow accustomed to the things that we first know so that we do not question them and are even inclined to think that anything not done or taught in our own parish is strange, crude or out of place—not quite orthodox.

This complete satisfaction with our own parish —or some one parish—encourages a negligence in attempts to explain the things we do and teach in a way that will be understood by others. Can we churchmen give an answer between bus stops or in walking a block with a friend as to what happens at baptism? There is an historical background and some ancient origins of the custom. There is a theological reason and a sacramental value . . . but, there we go talking outside the thought forms of many people. They say, "Yes," but squirm uncomfortably. What does happen at baptism that would cause a family to want the baby baptized? What happens at confirmation? At holy communion? What are the functions of vestries?

To put it briefly, there are many things that many people would like to know and with full recognition that there is much, much more to be said we ought to be able to "put it briefly." The articles in this series will be written with the hope of encouraging others to attempt to translate our Church teaching into the language of the day.

Excellent Good *Fair

Concerning Marriage and the Family.* By Ernest R. Groves. Macmillan, $1.75.

This is a realistic discussion of the divorce problem addressed to those who are contemplating that step. It begins with a discussion of commonly recognized motives, such as incompatibility, unfaithfulness, quarreling, sexual maladjustment, unfortunate in-laws, money-troubles, and disagreement over the children. Then it takes up some motives not often recognized, such as father or mother fixation, failure to grow up, and matrimonial monotony. In all this the author wisely counsels delay and the consideration of alternatives — since divorce means wrecking the family and often also the wrecking of the life of one or the other spouse, not to mention the children if there are any. Strangely there is almost no reference to religious motivation in conserving the family — the main appeal is to common sense and the prospects of greater happiness through staying married. Perhaps this reflects the author's long experience as a marriage counselor: the people who want divorces are not as a rule deeply enough religious to respond to such a motivation. At the end the author gives good advice to those who insist upon divorce, such as safeguarding the future rights of children and so on. Most of the book is addressed to wives. Is this because wives more often than husbands are the plaintiffs in divorce cases?

There is much in this book that will interest the priest or pastor who is called upon to act as marital counselor. I only wish the author had been somewhat more emphatic about certain causes which underlie the whole phenomenon of increased divorce in America —the spoiled, overly sheltered lives of too many women and girls (also boys and men), with the consequently purely romantic and selfish idea of marriage with which they grow up, especially in one-child homes (they can hardly be called "families"); the crude and revolting methods of birth control which some married persons insist upon; the current miseducation of girls, in many cases with no attention whatever paid to housekeeping and homemaking — as if "anyone can cook," and as if education meant primarily fitness for a career outside the home; also the almost total neglect of bodily health and the cultivation of physical stamina on the part of many who are to be wives and mothers; and finally the utterly mercenary aims in life that are really the consequence of the remnants of mediaeval chivalry surviving in modern civilization — many women are not permitted to be the equals of men, and to live a life of genuine fellowship within the family, but are set apart — or rather aloft, upon some higher plane, as sexless angels — and their revenge is a cool, calculating, mercenary attitude toward life in general which makes genuine fellowship in marriage an utter impossibility. Education for marriage is certainly one of the greatest needs of modern society. —F.C.G.

The Living Liturgy

The Te Deum Set to Music

WHATEVER may be said of the merits or demerits from a purely musical standpoint of the settings of the Te Deum commonly sung by our choirs, few of them are liturgically apt. Most of them ignore the formal structure of the hymn as described in our last article. The Te Deum in our Prayer Book is a morning office-hymn, or if you prefer, a responsory to the first lesson. But our composers persist in treating it as a miniature cantata which, however excellent in understanding the text as a collection of religious phrases of varying emotional power and quality, would be more suitable if and when the Te Deum were considered a separate office or service in and of itself. It has, of course, often been so treated and with telling effect; and great composers, for example, Purcell and Handel, have lent their creative gifts to such occasions. But as a canticle of Morning Prayer it requires a more simple treatment which allows participation by all the worshippers, and hence displays more of the spirit of a truly liturgical offering.

As long ago as the year 1902 the Bishop of Salisbury, the late John Wordsworth, published a little brochure on the Te Deum which contained an excellent suggestion for the liturgical rendition of the hymn. If we follow the Prayer Book versification rather than that of the Hymnal, his scheme would be as follows: Verses 1-2, 5-6 (the Sanctus), and 11-13 (the Doxology) would be sung by all the voices. Trebles and altos would take the verses of the angelic hosts (3-4) and basses and tenors those of the army of the Church (7-10). A brief instrumental interlude would then lead into a different chant for Part II, beginning "Thou art the King of Glory, O Christ." Here parallelism of the verses suggests an antiphonal rendering, not by contrasting types of voices, but balanced groups of singers (i.e., a division between choir and congregation, or by the center aisle). But verses 20-21, "We therefore pray thee," etc., would be sung by all since it is a suffrage-response to the whole hymn. Part III (verses 22-29) should be treated for what it is—simple versicles and responses. The priest or cantor would take the verse as a solo, and all the people would sing the response, just as in "O Lord, open thou our lips," etc. But it is not necessary to sing this last part. Indeed a good effect might be had by concluding the sung Te Deum with verse 21 and reciting Part III responsively. Any chant setting will allow this use; also a few modern "anthem" settings, such as the great setting in G by Ralph Vaughan Williams. It would help congregations to understand that the important word in this hymn is "thee," not "me" or "us."

It is a curious anomaly that our successive hymnals have never made available to our people the original, ancient melody of the Te Deum, yet it remains the most satisfactory music ever devised for the hymn. Even separate editions of it in modern notation are rare. Few of our laity have ever heard it sung. With a little effort congregations can readily master it. The arrangements for chanting the Te Deum given in our Hymnal have the merit of showing its threefold division, but are marred by two slight, but easily corrected defects. "We believe that thou shalt come," belongs with the preceding verse; "we therefore pray thee," with the one following. Also the respective texts of Parts I and III require different chants. A good pattern for simple chant settings is Mr. J. H. Arnold's "An Easy Modal Te Deum" (Oxford University Press). But our composers need to experiment with unison or two-part settings which are modern in idiom but not too difficult for the congregation to participate in them. Need it be said that a successful effort in such a task, beggarly as it may seem, demands much more skill and art than composing a Te Deum setting for trained singers only.

A Chaplain Conducts Services For German Prisoners

Told That They Were Not Allowed to Have Religious Gatherings of Any Kind in Army

Edited by Rita Ruben

Norfolk, Va.:—Circulating among 2,900 German prisoners of war aboard a navy transport during a voyage from Mediterranean ports to the United States, Lieut. Raymond G. Wickersham, chaplain corps, USNR, sounded them out on religion and found a spark of faith alive among them. Through one of the prisoners who had been a lawyer and spoke English, he was told they had not been permitted to have religious gatherings of any kind -- not even a hymn-sing — while serving in the German army.

On the other hand, they said they did not look upon Naziism as a religion. They had not practiced neo-paganism. They just hadn't worshipped. And a considerable number showed interest in the chaplain's survey, of whom 55 per cent professed to be Protestants and 45 per cent Catholics. Some of them requested prayer books or testaments. Chaplain Wickersham told them he had none printed in German. They replied that quite a few among them understood English. So he supplied about 100 of the booklets. Those who took this literature were mostly older German soldiers. One of them was 60 and had been in the army five years. He told of having visited New York years ago, and of having married an Englishwoman. He said he regretted the lack of religious training for German youths.

The youngest of the prisoners appeared to be scarcely 14, but he told the chaplain he was 16½. He had served in a German labor battalion and was taken prisoner by American forces near Belfort, France.

There were 30 officers among the prisoners. Six of them requested religious services the first Sunday of the voyage. They were admitted to the regular services, and were reverent and joined in the singing. The next Sunday a dozen of the German officers attended the services. All hands among the prisoners were told they could hold services below decks, choosing one of themselves to conduct, but they did not exercise this privilege. A fear of their leaders seemed to deter them. Also a factor may have been the fact that none had experience as a clergyman.

Some of the prisoners were patients in the sick bay. Several confided in the navy hospital corpsmen this fear of their leaders. Incidentally, one of the Germans had an accordion and he played to entertain the sick and wounded. He was captured at Oran and had been a prisoner 18 months. Prisoners were given the freedom of the deck in certain hours — at least two hours a day on topside for each. It was their "place in the sun" for fresh air and recreation. They had games, and showed most interest in cards, checkers, and chess. But most of all they welcomed the radio press sheets every morning. Those who knew English interpreted for the others. They were hungry for news little less than for food, Chaplain Wickersham related. As for the food, it was good and obviously they relished it. They were fed two square meals a day, and those in working parties got a third meal. After eating their fill, they stuffed bread in their shirts, and "ate it like cake" between meals.

Toward the end of the voyage, said the chaplain, their gloom lifted and they sang a lot — and had excellent voices. This, he said, was in contrast with the conduct of prisoners which the ship carried on a much earlier voyage. Those prisoners were members of the Afrika Korps, and they had sung while embarking. They laughed off Rommel's defeat as a temporary setback.

Back FEPC Bills

New Haven:—Church groups in Connecticut have urged the passage of the fair employment practice bill now before the legislature. The Church League for Industrial Democracy has been active in urging support and passage of the law was also urged by the state's council of Church women. The women also urged support of the Dumbarton Oaks and Bretton Woods proposals. (THE WITNESS will feature next week an exclusive article explaining the Bretton Woods Proposals, written by Mr. Dean Acheson, under-secretary of state.)

In Maryland, in spite of a good deal of Church support, including that of Bishop Powell, a bill to repeal the state's forty-year-old Jim Crow law that requires segregation of white and colored passengers was lost.

In New Jersey many Church groups are giving their support to the more liberal of two fair employment practice bills that have been introduced. Canon Robert D. Smith is taking a lead in this in Trenton.

British Chaplain

New York:—The Rev. John Higgins, British chaplain, was the preacher three days last week at St. James' Church. And on Easter Sunday the rector and choir of St. James' Church, Piccadilly, London, broadcast a brief service to the congregation of St. James', New York. This was in response to one broadcast last August to London from the New York parish.

Students Meet

Boston:—A well-attended conference of the New England interseminary movement was held in March at the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge. The head-line speaker at the conference was Henry Sloane Coffin, president of Union Theological Seminary, who spoke on "The meaning and task of the Church in the community." The rest of the conference session was taken up with discussion groups dealing with the role that the Church should play in the modern community. Heading the group dealing with urban problems was the Rev. Karl Heath Kopf; rural problems, Dr. C. M. McCon-

Dean Willard Sperry of the Harvard Theological School summarized the conference in a concluding speech. E.T.S. students who planned the conference were James Doubleday and Gordon Price.

Post-War Jobs

Providence, R. I.:—Optimism about post-war economic conditions was expressed in an address here before the R. I. ministers' union by Chelcie C. Bosland, professor of economics at Brown University and a prominent Presbyterian layman, reports Religious News Service. "Statesmanship in all fields will be needed," Dr. Bosland said. He counselled the ministry to acquaint laymen with conditions that probably will prevail after the war, and help them meet problems of readjustment that will arise — but not to preach primarily on economics. Prof. Bosland envisioned that about 53,000,000 jobs will be needed after the war. Stating that national income has doubled and that living costs are up at least 25%, he said that Americans have not suffered much because eight million unemployed were put to work and production was also increased tremendously.

When the war concludes he does not expect governmental spending to end at once and declares that we have tremendous resources with which to meet the period of readjustment and reconversion in which perhaps five million people will be for a certain period unemployed. Private spending will largely make up the deficit he feels. Billions will need to go into factories, housing, and the like. Prof. Bosland counselled the ministry to present such facts calmly and forthrightly and to furnish the moral and spiritual qualities and forces with which all economic and social problems can most effectively be faced.

Endorse Bretton Woods

Washington (RNS):—Approval of the Bretton Woods proposals for an international bank and a separate and independent international monetary fund has been expressed to the House and Senate banking and currency committee by the legislative committee of the Congregational Christian council for social action. "A healthy international economic system is absolutely essential to the maintenance of peace," the committee said. "The Bretton Woods plans are integrally related to the effective operation of the international security organization. Without Bretton Woods and other forms of international economic cooperation, the Dumbarton Oaks proposals become nothing more than a well meaning but ineffective organization for a peace which would well be bound to collapse."

An article explaining the Bretton Woods Proposals will be featured in THE WITNESS for April 12. It is written by Mr. Dean Acheson, assistant secretary of state, and was written exclusively for THE WITNESS. Mr. Acheson is the son of the late Bishop Acheson of Connecticut. If there are those wishing extra copies please air-mail or wire orders to our New York office since we do not print extra copies for late requests because of paper restrictions.

Successful Mission

Manchester, N. H.: — The Rev. Charles M. Serson, a Cowley father from the rural mission at Bracebridge, Ontario, held a mission at Grace Church here the week of March 19th. "He adapted himself to a low church parish without sacrificing any important gifts of the catholic heritage," is the enthusiastic comment of the rector, the Rev. Bradford Young.

Speaks on Peace

Boston:—Professor Henry J. Cadbury of Harvard was the speaker at the last session of the diocesan Lenten school here, speaking on the post war world. He said that the Six Pillars of Peace of the Federal Council commission on a just and durable peace were valid — international cooperation, economic cooperation, peaceful change, autonomy of peoples, armament control, religious liberty — but that these ideals had largely been lost during war. His conclusions were that the belligerent mind must be demobilized and re-educated; that America's responsibility and opportunity is tremendous; that in this country no force is more available or better than the ideals of religion.

Consecration Dates

New York: — The Rev. Conrad Gesner is to be consecrated bishop coadjutor of South Dakota at St. John's Church, St. Paul, Minn., on May 2. The consecration of the Rev. Bravid W. Harris as bishop of Liberia will be on April 17th at the Church of Christ and St. Luke's, Norfolk, Va.

The Presiding Bishop will be the consecrator at both services. The co-consecrators for Mr. Gesner will be Bishop Roberts of South Dakota and Bishop Keeler of Minnesota who will also preach. The bishop-elect will be presented by Bishop Atwill of North Dakota and Bishop McElwain, retired bishop of Minnesota. Attending presbyters will be the Rev.

Bishop Brown of Southern Virginia and Bishop Penick of North Carolina are to be the co-consecrators for Mr. Harris. He will be presented by Bishop Barnwell of Georgia and Bishop Goodwin of Virginia. The sermon will be preached by Bishop Penick. Attending presbyters are to be the Rev. J. C. Perry of St. Mark's, Birmingham, Ala., and the Rev. Richard Martin of Grace Church, Norfolk. The litany will be read by Bishop Powell of Maryland.

Plan Vacations

Manchester, N. H.:—Vacations in New Hampshire for eighty colored children from Harlem are being planned by the social action committee of the New Hampshire council of churches. The project will follow the lines of the Vermont experiment of last summer, reported here at the time. The children, ages 9-12, will be selected by the Rev. Shelton Hale Bishop, rector of St. Philip's, whose address in this city recently is responsible for the launching of the plan. The chairman of the New Hampshire committee is the Rev. Bradford Young, rector of Grace Church here.

Philippine Churches

New York: — Suffragan Bishop Robert F. Wilner of the Philippine Islands has been able to secure considerable detailed information about mission losses in Manila. Writing to the National Council he reports that all Church property on the south side of the Pasig River has been wrecked. The Cathedral of St. Mary and St. John is a mere shell, roofless, and all its furnishings destroyed. The register of the cathedral parish has been found in the rubble. The church house is wide open and the treasurer's vault was open too, Bishop Wilner said. Bishopsted is badly damaged, the Columbia Club completely ruined, the rectory has been burned, and the cathedral dormitory is in ruins. The house at 1376 Gral. Luna was burned. St. Luke's seems to be the only Manila church which is relatively intact.

Philippine YWCA

New York: — Mrs. Francis B. Sayre, wife of the former high commissioner to the Philippines, is the chairman of a committee to help reorganize the YWCA work in Manila. Both Mr. and Mrs. Sayre are Episcopalians and have a son, the Rev. Francis Sayre, who is a navy chaplain.

Difficult Task

Paris (by wireless):—Renewal of relations between the Russian Orthodox Church in western Europe and the Moscow Patriarchate will be "a long and most difficult" task, 78-year-old Metropolitan Eulogius told Religious News Service in an interview here. The Metropolitan, who is at present under the jurisdiction of the Ecumenical Patriarchate at Istanbul, recently petitioned Patriarch Alexei for readmission of the four emigre dioceses under his control to the jurisdiction of the Patriarch in Moscow.

"We have been separated for 25 years," Eulogius declared, "and we must first prepare Russian emigrants for this rapprochement. This will not be easy, because many are still suspicious of the Moscow Church, believing that the reestablishment of religious freedom has meant also the establishment of political ties.

"There can be no question of politics. We are interested only in religious matters. Emigrant circles here, however, still feel that the recent change in Russia was dictated by opportunism, and that after the war there will be an about-face by the state and the church will be persecuted."

New Parish House

Clifton, Ariz.:—It isn't often these days that we get news of new church buildings, what with priorities and one thing and another. But they are building a parish house here where the Rev. O. W. Nickle is vicar. It is a frame building, same construction as the church, and it will meet a

Expand China Work

New York:—Cooperation of Protestant medical schools, hospitals, schools of nursing, and medical missionaries with Chinese government plans for expanded health services after the war was discussed at a conference on medical and health work here, reports Religious News Service. Called by the foreign mission conference committee on East Asia to consider postwar planning of Christian medical work in China, the meeting was attended by 60 denominational executives, missionary doctors and nurses from the United States and Canada. Frank T. Cartwright of the Methodist board of foreign missions was chairman. Also present were Dr. Szeming Sze, general secretary of the Chinese medical association and member of the UNRRA staff in China; Dr. K. F. Yao, health commissioner of Kweichow, and Dr. Herbert C. C. Liu, director of the Seventh Day Adventist sanatarium in Chungking.

Recommendations of the conference will be cabled to Dr. J. W. Decker, executive secretary of the International Missionary Council, now in China, for discussion and consideration by church and government officials. The national health administration will be asked to draw up regulations to give "suitable status to the mission hospitals within the framework of the immediate relief program." Expansion of Christian training facilities for midwifery, dentistry, pharmacy, and hospital technology was also recommended, along with development of four regional Christian medical colleges to grade A level.

Books to Prisoners

Geneva (by wireless to RNS):—Easter booklets in French, English, German, Dutch, Polish, and Italian have been issued for the fifth year by the ecumenical commission for chaplaincy service to prisoners of war of the World Council of Churches. Each edition, beautifully illustrated with reproductions of paintings by noted artists, was prepared by churchmen of various countries. A total of 81,000 copies were printed. The French edition, consisting of 128 pages, included not only Lenten meditations, but articles on various aspects of the evangelism campaign being conducted in France, and a description of the new Protestant monthly, Reforme.

Thanks Americans

New York:—Patriarch Alexei of the Russian Church has sent thanks to the national interfaith committee of Russian War Relief for "its charitable activity filled with feelings of Christian love for the Russian people." The committee, of which the Rev. Ralph W. Sockman is chairman and Bishop Charles K. Gilbert is vice-chairman, reports that more than 250,000 household utility kits have been donated by Church people to the people of the Soviet Union.

The Real America

The real America is not dead, just preoccupied with the war. The great moment for freedom in America and therefore in the world, will come after Victory.

A post-war awakening to what has been happening within the nation will jar the citizenry into vigorous action and thrwart our trend toward the "hell" into which other nations fell when their state-ism reached the totalitarian level.

When Freedom's great opportunity arrives the clergy of America can be counted upon for vigorous, courageous, leadership on behalf of Christian, American, anti-Collectivist, anti-Stateist ideals.

Fourteen countries were collectivised between 1926 and 1939 in the death march of nations. In each instance leaders and impractical idealists assured the people that basic freedoms and spiritual ideals would be preserved. None were! None ever can be! Where the state is all powerful, there is no place for God!

Help prepare for Freedom's big moment! The nation has a right to expect the clergy to lead this fight. Associations of business men, farmers, professional men, responsible labor leaders as well as rank and file citizens need leadership at the spiritual, non-partisan level.

Are you interested in receiving the monthly bulletins of this ten year old, expanding Crusade? Have you had experiences that will enhearten and help your fellow-ministers to be effective in this "Fight for freedom"—for constitutional government, the democratic process, free pulpit, free speech, free enterprise, free assembly and free press—the freedoms belonging to man, a child of God? Let us hear from you!

Moscow Reunion

New York:—Orthodox leaders in America, just returned from Moscow, are pleased over the prospects of reconciliation between the Church here and the Moscow patriarchate. "The tentative agreement reached with Patriarch Alexei," the Very Rev. Joseph O. Dzvonchik told a reporter of Religious News Service, "will strengthen both the Church in Russia and the Orthodox Church in America and should lead to a very close and cordial relations when normal communication is again possible." The proposals will be considered by a council of Bishops to meet May 24 and will then be submitted for ratification at a general council of the Russian Orthodox Church. He declared that the half-million members of the Church in the United States "are very much interested in what is going on in Russia." He also reported that 300 churches were reopened in the Soviet Union in 1944 and 40 in January of this year.

Moscow-Vatican

Rome (by wireless):—Three facts strengthen belief among Vatican observers that the visit of Edward J. Flynn, personal representative of President Roosevelt, to Rome is tied up with a Moscow-Vatican modus vivendi regarding East European Catholics now under Russian control, according to Helen Hiett, reporter for Religious News Service.

First, after his audience with the Pope, Flynn conferred with Msgr. Domenico Tardini and Msgr. Giovanni Battista Montini, of the Papal Secretariat of State, two of the Pope's closest advisors. Second, Flynn admitted at a press conference that he does not know exactly when he will leave Italy. Third, Flynn stated that he is likely to have another audience with Pope Pius.

Informed Vatican circles maintain the American envoy would never have come to the Vatican from Moscow empty-handed. It is also obvious, they state, that Flynn would not be uncertain about the duration of his stay in Italy unless some decision, or, at least, discussions, were pending on the status of Catholic populations in areas occupied by Russia.

Democracy in Alaska

Juneau, Alaska: — On November 20, 1944, the Church of the Holy Trinity, Juneau, held the first parish meeting in its history. The congregation elected a vestry. Formerly the vestry had been appointed by the Bishop. Bishop Bentley approves the democratic plan adopted at the meeting. At its first meeting, the vestry adopted a budget that will make the parish self-supporting. The next step was a well organized and thorough Every Member Canvass, with the result that the Bishop has been informed that Trinity will pay all its parochial expenses this year. The Rev. W. Robert Webb is the rector.

organization. But continental organization, alone is not sufficient.

"In the last analysis isolationism is unchristian. It does not change the situation because the unit is moved from the nation to the continent. The Christian ideal and the one which will bring a lasting peace to the world is that which makes its concept of brotherhood world inclusive."

MRS. BARTOW BEE RAMAGE

On December 17, 1944, Ethel Purvis Ramage, a communicant of Ascension Parish, Amherst, Virginia, entered into rest at her home at Sweet Briar, Virginia.

Mrs. Ramage came into the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia in the autumn of 1928, and from that time has been a vigorous and deeply appreciated worker in the parish and in the diocese. Bishop Jett in 1935 appointed her to introduce throughout the diocese the plan for uniting all the work of the women of a parish under the Woman's Auxiliary. As chairman of the James River Convocation she was untiring in her visits to branch after branch, carrying a lucid and enthusiastic message. In the parish she gave generous service through the Auxiliary, through Bible teaching, and through private ministrations. Frequently she was called upon to give counsel in parish affairs, and her opinion was regarded with respect.

She had a rich experience to draw upon. As the wife of the Rev. Bartow Bee Ramage, for twenty years Rector of St. Andrew's Parish, Fort Worth, Texas, she had not only the varied opportunities for service in parish life, but also the privilege of attending as Diocesan Delegate and often as President of the branch of the Diocese of Dallas a long series of Triennial Conventions. Attending as she did ten of these general church meetings, she followed with absorbed interest the development of the work of the Woman's Auxiliary. She knew churchmen and churchwomen from all over the country, as their adviser and their co-worker. She was a zealous student of the history of the Church, of its principles and of its practice. In the summer of 1929, at the Blue Ridge Conference held at Frederick, Maryland, she gave a course based on the Report of the Jerusalem Conference on the World Mission of Christianity, in which as lecturer she shared knowledge garnered through the years.

This devoted churchwoman lived a life of worship. Her work was a shining sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving, and one felt vibrating within her the Psalmist's cry: Dominus illuminatio mea.

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

THE REV. ROGER BENNETT
Rector of St. Mary's, Newton, Mass.

The cover of the March 8 WITNESS is both honest and clarifying. Thank you for it. So long as we recognize that Chaplain Bayne and his congregation and others worship a god who is symbolized by an airplane rather than God made known by the cross we shall have no cause for quarrel. There is much of the issue in fact that appeals to me. The editorials for instance, and especially Miss Harvey's article which so aptly points out that "we do not live in peace because we do not live by the will of God." True of course and easy to accept when we realize that we don't want to live in peace because it would mean taking God as a substitute for airplanes.

THE REV. S. E. ASHTON
Rector at Arlington, Virginia

For goodness sake send that bundle of ten copies to those boys in the South Pacific. If the problems of our country and the Episcopal Church are going to be met I am afraid it will be the soldier laymen who will have to do it.

ANSWER: Many thanks. This was in response to a letter from a soldier asking if someone might send ten copies a week for a discussion group. Mr. Ashton makes it possible. If any other readers care to donate a bundle of ten copies a week to a chaplain (we have many such requests) the cost is $5 for ten copies for ten weeks. Sorry we have to have help in order to do this.

THE REV. SHELTON HALE BISHOP
Rector of St. Philip's, New York

Let me thank you for putting the picture on the cover of March 15th. We still carry on the Fun Center. It goes exceedingly well at times, and other times not so well. But it has made a tremendous impression on the community and a great improvement in the character of our street. There are dozens of children that come every night.

THE REV. HERBERT W. PRINCE
Rector at Lake Forest, Illinois

Correction! Just to put you right on your faces:—"The naval chaplain directly behind Bishop Hobson" (picture p. 6, WITNESS, March 22) is not chief of naval chaplains Workman, but Chaplain Frank H. Lash, naval chaplain in London in charge of naval personnel in Europe. Chaplain Workman is either behind Lash or beside him, I don't know which, but I know Chaplain Lash intimately.

ANSWER: Right. So many have informed us. So Chaplain Lash it is and we are sorry for our mistake.

MR. ALEXANDER B. ANDREWS
Chancellor of diocese of North Carolina

The statement that "the Episcopal Church had a membership 99 years ago of one-half of one per cent of the population of the United States and has the same percentage of membership today" is not borne out by the facts (report of an address by Mr. Fletcher, WITNESS, March 22). In 1840 the 55,477 communicants were 1/3 of 1% of the population of 17,069,453 and in 1940 the 1,459,227 communicants were 1.1% of the 131,669,275 official government census.

THE REV. RICHARD MORTIMER-MADDOX
Rector at Great Barrington, Mass.

I got an invitation to join Spiritual Mobilization, Inc. The editors of The Churchman do not seem to highly regard this outfit. But I need further guidance from THE WITNESS.

ANSWER: We agree with the Churchman and stated our reasons in an article that appeared in THE WITNESS November 2, 1944. We are convinced that it is a reactionary organization with a program that is quite opposed to objectives set forth in the report of the commission on social reconstruction that was unanimously approved by the General Convention of 1943.

THE REV. CHARLES LEWIS BIGGS
Clearwater, Florida

There are several clauses in both the Apostles and Nicene Creeds that belong in the region of obsolete knowledge. They have neither vitality nor reality for the modern man. The realities and vitalities that remain are inadequate as creeds. That this is generally felt is evidenced by the creeds put forth from time to time, whether as creeds or manifestoes. John D. Rockefeller's credo, given wide publicity, is a fair example and a good one. Millions of Americans, for instance, have added their country for which they are willing to fight and die to their credo. And that is but one of the many articles, besides the theological, that today make up the modern man's credo.

The historic creeds are inadequate but modern creeds are quite certainly too long and contain too many articles to incorporate into our beautiful liturgy. Since the historic creeds are inadequate—I am not arguing, simply asserting — and modern creeds too long, why not substitute a confession and resolution in place of the creeds wherever they occur in the Prayer Book? For instance:

O God, thou art my God: early do I seek thee: my soul thirsteth for thee: my flesh also longeth after thee. With all my might I strive for right relationships with my neighbor according to the mind and the spirit of Christ Jesus my Lord.

This has the merit of brevity and is not lacking in vitality. In a ministry now drawing fast to half a century I have run into many a fine thoughtful Christian who feels he cannot longer in conscience stand up with the congregation and say either of our creeds. Such men do not come to church therefore. Must the Church lose the cooperation of such as these?

ROLLS OF HONOR BOARDS

Those of your Church Membership who have enrolled in the armed forces have earned a tribute which should have a permanent place in your minds.

To preserve this record, to know the full name of each, to pay tribute to them, is the purpose of the "Roll of Honor."

Tastefully designed and skillfully executed these beautiful walnut boards are restrained and dignified enough to blend with any church surroundings. They are inexpensive, yet so skillfully made that they provide an excellent tribute to those who are serving.

The panel is 7/8" thick, is built up of five-ply board, finished in walnut veneer and the decorative detail is a gold toned finish, to blend with any Church furnishings.

The eagle of serviceable plastic wood with the olive branch, represents the eagle of peace.

A sturdy, beveled gold edged card in walnut tone (¾ in. x 3½ in.), with each name lettered in gold, makes the completed board handsome and durable.

Northwestern Academy Has Fine Record in War and Peace

Captain Arthur Wermuth the One Man Army Of Bataan Is One of the School's Alumni

By James Howard Jacobson

Superintendent and Rector

Lake Geneva:—It was during the Christmas recess of 1941 that I visited Bishop Conkling at his office in Chicago. I was then director of Episcopal Church work at the University of Pennsylvania and since I was in Chicago, it was only natural for me to drop in to see Chicago's new Bishop, the former and beloved rector of St. Luke's Church, Germantown. As I was leaving the Bishop's office, I crossed the threshold with Colonel Royal Page Davidson, the then superintendent of the Northwestern Military and Naval Academy at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin who was on his way in to meet his appointment with the Bishop. We had only a few minutes together—no more than an introduction through the Bishop—and as it seems now an even briefer moment of conversation, just enough to permit me to record the impression of a white-haired, stocky but well-built and determined man. Then he was gone.

This was the first and only time I saw Colonel Davidson in vigorous health. Within another two months he was taken seriously ill, and in January of 1943 died at his Florida estate. As I look back on it now it was strange, our meeting at the door of the Bishop's office whereas it turned out later that he and the Bishop were working out plans to put the Academy he had built under the care and direction of the Episcopal Church. Colonel Davidson's illness hastened the accomplishment of this plan, and by September of 1942 I found myself the Academy's assistant superintendent and by March 1, 1944, its superintendent and rector. So it was that another school was added to the Church's already fine list of private preparatory schools.

Northwestern was founded at Highland Park, Illinois, in 1888, by Colonel Harlan Page Davidson, father of Royal Page. Fire destroyed the school at Highland Park, and in 1915 Colonel Royal Page Davidson moved the Academy to its new ninety acre site on the south shore of Lake Geneva, long famous as a summer residential community. By 1919 its present completely fireproof buildings were finished. Over a period of fifty-seven years the Academy has been famous for many things, chiefly for the development of the bicycle corps in 1898 and the automobile corps which reached its peak on the Glidden Tour of 1915. To this day the Academy has kept as museum pieces one of the old bicycles, the old single cylinder "battlewagon" and one of the early armored cars made at the Academy by Colonel Davidson and his boys. These were the forerunners of much of our modern mechanized equipment.

Important as these developments were Northwestern is more proud of the men she has produced and that have in their turn produced the Academy. In this present conflict, her graduates are everywhere the battle rages and they are giving a laudable account of themselves. Of the recent graduates in service, over two hundred and fifty are officers of the commissioned grade in the army or the navy and four are serving at West Point or Annapolis. Amongst these the Academy is famous for Captain Arthur Wermuth, the "one man army" of Bataan.

The Church in taking over was fully aware of the excellence of the Academy of which she was to be the guardian, and is most certainly alive to its greatness of the past and present. Yet it also knows that it too has a uniqueness and strength to give toward the enrichment of its life and program; and the integration of its past with the strength that the Church is giving, is already making for a vigorous and challenging future.

FAMILY LIFE IS THREATENED

London (wireless to RNS):—At least a third of the first-born children in Britain are being conceived extra-maritally, according to Dr. David Mace, secretary of the marriage guidance council and clinic. He bases his statement on the 1943 divorce and illegitimacy statistics for England and Wales. He warns that it presents a grave peril for family life in the postwar world.

A tense moment in a hockey game at Northwestern Military and Naval Academy

T. Z. KOO ON WAY TO CONFERENCE

New York:—Dr. T. Z. Koo, one of the secretaries of the World's Student Christian Federation, arrived in New York early this month, on his way to serve as an adviser at the San Francisco United Nations Conference. He stopped at Church headquarters for conferences with the Presiding Bishop and James Thayer Addison concerning the Church in China. Dr. Koo is an Anglican and he finds the life of the Christian Church in occupied China has been disrupted very little by the Japanese, and interest and Church attendance, he said, are higher than before the war. Dr. Koo had been in Shanghai since the outbreak of the Pacific war, and recently escaped to Free China.

Except for the removal of foreign workers, the Church has gone on in much the same way as before the war. Chinese clergy are free to perform their ministries, to preach and to travel in their districts. Only when they are "indiscreet" in their pro-nationalist or anti-Japanese sentiments are they questioned by soldiers. Dr. Koo said he knows of no Christian who is in jail because he is a Christian.

Churches are packed full, he said. "The Chinese people find in the Church a circle of friends where they can speak freely and have a relationship of community life which is safe from the invader. Also, nearly everyone in occupied China has lived through hard times and is thankful for deliverance. He has come to an awareness of a guiding force which has seen him through adversity, and he calls it God. He is more sober, more religious, less flippant, and the Church has meant a great deal to him."

COMMUNITIES HAVE CELEBRATION

New York:—Bishop Campbell of the Order of the Holy Cross and former Bishop of Liberia was the celebrant at the Eucharist which was held April 9th at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine to mark the centenary of the revival of communities for monks and nuns in the Anglican communion. The sermon was preached by Bishop Spence Burton, former superior of the Cowley Fathers and now the Bishop of Nassau. The largely attended service was made particularly colorful by the presence of representatives of religious orders in this country and Canada. The full cathedral choir furnished the music. In the afternoon a meeting was held in the synod house with Bishop Conkling of Chicago as the headline speaker. (See editorial this issue.)

LIKE TREATMENT FOR ALL

Washington (RNS):—A special directive to treat all religious denominations exactly alike and not single out any one for "special treatment" has been issued by the Department of State to all government informational agencies dealing with international problems, particularly those handling Latin-American affairs. This was revealed here by Archibald Macleish, Assistant Secretary of State, in a nationwide radio discussion program with other officials of the Department. Mr. Macleish, referring to charges that the Department of State had played favorites in Latin America especially, declared that the "strict policy of non-intervention was put down in black and white last week" in a directive to informational agencies. This directive read: "The policy of the United States Government in the dissemination of information abroad, where questions of religion are involved, is determined by the United States Constitutional guarantee of freedom of worship. All denominations will be treated alike, and no denomination will be singled out for special treatment."

sized the terrible responsibility of adults in this matter and stated the needs of the Negro people in the simple words: "We want for our children what you want for yours,—no 'special privilege' other than that."

Both Mr. Hughes and the Rev. David R. Hunter, rector of the Church of the Holy Spirit, Mattapan, explained the dire effect of race relations tensions on children, in a plea that youthful minds be not poisoned. Mr. Hunter, leader in the Good Neighbor Association which unites Roman Catholics, Protestants and Jews in a joint campaign against intolerance, stressed anti-Semitism as a very real danger, especially if a tragic depression were to follow in the wake of war, since it places the potent weapon of interracial hatred in the hands of agents for dictatorial government.

Lewis B. Franklin, right, scrawls his autograph for Dr. Thomas Pugh of Napoleonville, La., while Bishop Jackson looks on. Dr. Pugh has been a vestryman for seventy of his ninety-one years. He has been a Church member under all the Bishops of Louisiana, having been confirmed by the first, Leonidas Polk. Dr. Pugh has four grandsons in the service

HOW TO END RACE PREJUDICE

Boston:—"A sure way to get rid of race prejudice is to kill off all the adult population," was a statement, startling but basically true, made when the Church Home Society for the care of Episcopal children held its annual meeting at Emmanuel Church. The speaker was the Rev. Kenneth deP. Hughes, rector of St. Bartholomew's, Cambridge, an active Negro congregation, who illustrated by stories from real life his thesis that race prejudice is not naturally inherent in children, but something they catch from the mental attitudes and remarks of adults. He empha-

WASHINGTON PARISH CELEBRATES

Washington:—The Ascension celebrated its 100th anniversary on March 4th. Former parishioners from various parts of the country assembled, drawn by the ties of the past to this old parish which has served the city during some of the critical periods of the nation's history. The present rector is the Rev. Corwin C. Roach.

A New Colony for Cantonese Opened by Kimber Den

Inflation Prevents the Purchase of Cattle But Reclaimed Land Yields Large Rice Crop

By Kimber Den

Lichwan, Kiangsi, China:—I trust you must have received by this time my last letter of June 15th in acknowledgement of your last remittance of U. S. $1,000 through the central bank in Chungking. The other day there came another remittance of U.S. $1,000 through the same bank which we are glad to receive as always. (Mr. Den wrote this October 20, 1944. Since then we have sent your donations amounting to $2,000 and we hope soon to send him another $1,000. See page seventeen.—Ed.) It came in very timely to our rescue in the midst of our financial distress. You can imagine what a great relief to us on receiving this gift from you just at this time when we are having a hard struggle in maintaining our work. Its timely arrival seemed to be quite providential. At the same time I want to thank you most gratefully for all the efforts you make in your continuous supply of financial assistance to us. I don't see how we can carry on our work successfully at this hard time without this special help from you from time to time. I must assure you and all other good Christian friends in America who have a share in the support of our work here that every cent of money they gave has been used most profitably to the best advantage for a worthy cause. (A small indication of the inflation in China is that the letter from Mr. Den carried $15 in postage whereas originally a letter from China was 70c.)

In connection with our rehabilitation project for the newly arrived Canton refugees, about 150 in all, we have just succeeded in reclaiming another hundred acres of swamp land in the valley, all of which has been drained and turned into highly productive land. All of these refugees migrated from the South China seas, chiefly from the Malaya Peninsula where they were settlers for many generations. Since the Jap's invasion they were driven out by hunger and starvation. With the coming of this new group of refugees a third new colony has been established under our supervision. Not long ago I visited their colony on a short inspection tour. As I watched a group of them working in the hot sun, barefoot and knee-deep in muck, their bronze skin glistening with sweat, I could not help marvelling at the spirit of their hard toil and the epochal transformation that this war has wrought to them. Even the white-haired women were wielding spades and shovels on the farm with a vigor and a steadiness that would have done credit to any worker anywhere.

Owing to a lack of funds we did not provide them with any cattle to help them on the farm. However they have reaped a good crop of rice this year which gives much satisfaction to us all. Nothing gratifies me more than to help this group of hard-working refugees to rehabilitate themselves on a new basis of life both physically and spiritually. In the next issue of our news bulletin you will have a more complete report of this work. So I am not going to tell you any more in this letter.

The Japanese new drive on the Hunan-Kwangsi railroad threatens our line of communication with West China. Hence I have no idea at all how long it will take this letter to get to you. (Mr. Den was cut off from communication for a time but later reports indicated that communication with him had been reestablished.—Ed.) It is now two months before Christmas. Should it by chance reach you around the holy season please be kind enough to convey through THE WITNESS my best Christmas greetings and affectionate regards to all my friends in America. Owing to war interruptions it is impossible for me to write to all of them individually. However please assure them that I shall never fail to think of them all during that Holy Feast of our Lord's birth. With love as always, yours faithfully, Kimber. (Instead of arriving at Christmas the letter arrived the day before Easter. We know that Kimber Den would ask us to wish you all a Blessed Easter. —Ed.)

These Chinese lads being cared for by the Rev. Kimber Den love to sing Christian hymns and also the new revolutionary songs of China

The statement was approved by the CLID but was not sent to members since the next number of THE WITNESS is to feature an explanation of the agreement written by Mr. Dean Acheson, Assistant Secretary of State. This will then be reprinted and sent to all CLID members, and to any others who may wish copies in leaflet form.

Houston:—The diocese of Texas has received a gift of one million dollars from Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Cullen, wealthy Texas oilman. The money will be used for post-war construction of a hospital in this city. The donors also gave similar sums to three other hospitals in Houston, all within the same week.

BRONZE STAR MEDAL FOR CHAPLAIN

Washington: — Lieutenant Commander Merritt F. Williams, chaplain, has received the bronze star medal for outstanding service during the Solomons campaign. He served aboard the Wasp from June to September, 1942 and was a survivor when the carrier was sunk. He previously had received the purple heart medal for wounds sustained during that action. Admiral Nimitz, in the citation, states that "after the ship was mortally damaged and numerous casualties were being inflicted on her personnel as a result of terrific explosions aboard, he calmly and effectively assisted in attending to the seriously wounded and in getting them clear of the ship until the task was completed. While in the water and after his rescue, his efforts in behalf of others were outstanding. His conduct at all times was an inspiration to the other officers and men and in keeping with the highest traditions of the naval service."

Chaplain Williams was a member of the U.S. naval reserve during the first world war and reentered the service a few days after the attack on Pearl Harbor. Since his duty aboard the Wasp he has served at the bureau of naval personnel in Washington and is now on duty aboard the West Virginia. A graduate of the General Seminary, he served for three years in Alaska as a missionary; was later chaplain of Episcopal students at the University of Florida; rector of St. Philip's, Charleston, and canon at Washington Cathedral.

SAYS COOPERATION IS DOUBTFUL

Paris (wireless to RNS):—Cooperation between churches in France and the Soviet Union is doubtful at present, according to Prof. Nicholas Zander, vice-chairman of the Eastern Orthodox committee for ecumenical action. (It needs to be pointed out that Prof. Zander is on the faculty of the Russian Orthodox Theological Seminary in Paris, which was a rallying point for the anti-Soviet Russians who fled to France at the time of the Russian revolution. It can safely be said that anything approved by the Soviet government would be disapproved by these white Russian emigres.—Ed.)

DONALD B. ALDRICH CONSECRATION

Detroit:—The Presiding Bishop is to be the consecrator at the consecration of the Rev. Donald B. Aldrich as bishop coadjutor of Michigan, with Bishop Creighton of Michigan and Bishop Gilbert of New York the co-consecrators. The service, as previously announced here, will be at St. Paul's Cathedral on May 4th. The sermon will be by Bishop Creighton. Bishop Washburn of Newark and Bishop Page of Northern Michigan are to be the presentors, while the attending presbyters are to be Dean Kirk O'Ferrall of the Detroit cathedral and the Rev. Otis Jackson of Saginaw, Michigan. The litany will be read by the Rev. Henry Lewis of Ann Arbor.

MISSIONARY ARRIVES FROM PHILIPPINES

San Francisco:—The Rev. Raymond Abbitt reached San Francisco on March 30, the first member of the mission staff to arrive in this country since the liberation of the Philippines. He was stationed at Upi with Mr. L. G. McAfee and Mr. J. D. Mears.

CLERGYMEN PAID LOW SALARIES

New York:—Information Service of the Federal Council of Churches has issued an interesting break-down of the salaries of clergy based upon census figures. There were 140,077 clergymen in 1940 as compared with 148,848 in 1930. Of these 136,669 were men and 3,308 women. Of the men 112,509 reported that they were occupied as clergymen 12 months during 1939 and gave their incomes in the form of salary. Of these 51% received less than $1,200 a year; 24.4% less than $600 a year. There were 3,386 who received from $2,500 to $2,999; 5,597 got $3,000 to $4,999; there were 1,356 or 1.2% who received $5,000 a year or more. The figures reveal that there were 15,747 clergymen who received less than $100 a year in salary.

GERMAN CHURCHES ARE PACKED

Stockholm (wireless to RNS):—Churches throughout Germany were packed on Good Friday, with the thousands who were turned away listening to the services over loud speakers. Everywhere congregations joined in reciting prayers for an early peace.

Bishop Abbott of Lexington, thought to have been recovering so satisfactorily that he planned to go home from the hospital in a few days, died of a heart attack in the hospital in Lexington on April 4th. The funeral was on April 7th at Christ Church, Lexington.

NEW ARMY CHIEF OF CHAPLAINS

Washington:—Col. Luther D. Miller, veteran of 33 months of service in the Southwest Pacific, has been appointed army chief of chaplains. Col. Miller, who entered the army in 1918 and was accepted in the regular army in 1920, is an Episcopalian and is fifty-five years old. With the army he has served at many posts in this country and overseas. He succeeds Maj. Gen. William R. Arnold, a Roman Catholic, who has been given an important overseas inspection assignment.

EDITORIALS

San Francisco Parley

PROBABLY every church in this land will open its doors on that prayed-for day when the war in Europe shall have come to an end; a day that no one can yet fix but which draws surely nearer. Dead indeed would be the soul of a man who would not want to give thanks to God when that time comes.

But meanwhile another day—April twenty-fifth—is fast approaching which is equal in importance. For it will mark the beginning of the greatest venture that mankind has yet undertaken to bring order into a world in chaos; to initiate an organization to preserve peace. THE WITNESS has stood squarely for the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals which offer a definite base upon which those representing forty-four nations will attempt to build a structure for peace at this conference in San Francisco. It is encouraging that the start is being made while the people have the will to peace and are in a mood to undertake the obligations that peace demands no less than war.

So we join whole-heartedly with those who suggest that this day when the United Nations meet be set aside as a day of prayer. San Francisco, as Anthony Eden recently stated, may well be the world's last chance. We will do well to pray that we may have the same courage and daring that we have had in war; the same willingness to share with others of differing cultures in a corporate enterprise; the same determination to succeed at whatever cost. The task before us is not easy; it will require all the ingenuity and patience that men possess. It cannot be accomplished without the help of God.

Neither can it be accomplished without factual information upon which the people back home may act. Public opinion, as both the Secretary of State and Governor Dewey have said, will largely determine whether the conference is to succeed or fail. THE WITNESS is therefore sending its Managing Editor to San Francisco in order that this vital conference may be thoroughly reported. Mr. Spofford is also to serve on a central committee of national organizations which will meet daily during the conference to make recommendations for action to the people back home. These recommendations and reports will be relayed to you through THE WITNESS and also through The Churchman, the Southern Churchman, Forth, and the Press Relations Division of the National Council, all to be represented at the Conference by our Managing Editor.

An organization to insure peace surely is the Number One Objective of the Church for our generation. Knowing that you agree with that, we urge not only that April 25th be set aside as a day of prayer, but that there be organized in parishes committees that will follow closely the reports from the conference and take whatever action they believe the situation demands.

"QUOTES"

O GOD who has promised to hear the petitions of those who call upon thee, we humbly ask thy blessing upon the world conference in San Francisco. Guide the representatives of the liberty-loving nations in their deliberations. Give them a clear understanding of each other's problems. Knit them in closer bonds of brotherhood. Remove all hatred and bitterness and grant that wise plans may be evolved for the prevention of future conflicts and in bringing nearer the day when justice and universal peace shall reign. We ask in his name, Amen.

—Bishop Noel Porter
Authorized for the diocese of Sacramento

Keep the Facts Straight

A FEW weeks ago Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., addressed the Protestant Council of New York. The title of his address was "The Christian Church—What of Its Future?" The address made quite an impression upon those who heard it. Most of the New York papers featured it. It was suggested that it be printed in pamphlet form for wider distribution. This the Protestant Council did. The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America was asked to share the reprinting. This could not be done, except by affirmative action of the Council's publications committee and by approval of the executive committee. Mr. Rockefeller, an earnest Christian layman, in his address made a very fine plea for a deeper Christian fellowship between all denominations. Of course there may be things in the address with which one might not agree. But the fact of this layman speaking as an individual before the Protestant Council, making an honest plea for more Christian fellowship is to our way of thinking, an inspiration.

A Bishop of our Church however has sent a letter to all the clergy of his diocese, condemning Mr. Rockefeller's address, faulting the Protestant Council and the Federal Council of Churches; stating bluntly that he does not see how any priest can throw in his lot with these organizations and not be unfaithful to his ordination vows. He further states to quote him: "I believe also, that the only honest thing the Church can do at the next General Convention is to withdraw from the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, if the Federal Council maintains and does not repudiate its seeming approval and promulgation of such doctrine as this pamphlet sets forth."

Well! Well! Some of us feel the most dishonest thing we could do at this moment in the history of the Ecumenical Movement would be to withdraw from the Federal Council of Churches.

We also think it highly important to keep facts straight. The Federal Council did not, and has not, endorsed Mr. Rockefeller's address. That can be done only by endorsement of its executive committee. There are probably members of that committee who would endorse it. Others doubtless would not. But the fact is that, contrary to this Bishop, it was not endorsed. The Council merely aided in its distribution, just as it distributes many pamphlets that its officers consider timely and challenging and worthy of thought and discussion on the part of serious Church people.

The Protestant Council likewise, we are officially informed, did not endorse the address. That's another fact to keep straight. And both these facts the Bishop could have had by simply reaching for his phone.

Rather than block approaches to Christian fellowship let's keep open all channels to better understanding.

Religious Communities

RESTLESSNESS with conventional religion is reported among all the armed forces, most of all among the chaplains. Many are coming home seeking areas for self-relinquishment far more intense than that of parochial life. Where will these men and women turn? What has the Episcopal Church to offer them? In addition to the ministry and missionary work, there are our religious communities, of which there are now some thirty in the United States and Canada. All of them had representatives at the New York Cathedral of St. John the Divine on April 9th when a service and mass-meeting commemorated the fact that monks and nuns, after a several hundred years' absence, have been making their contribution to the Anglican communion for one hundred years.

We might speak only of past accomplishments—of the quiet, selfless way in which the orders have won their place against opposition and prejudice, of the significant work they are now doing. An important part of our missionary effort is carried on by the communities for women. But the future is our concern. Many persons now in the services and others who have had equally soul-stirring experiences will soon be facing the question of the reconversion of their lives. We believe there will be many who will not go back to an existence whose chief goal more or less consciously was making a living. They will need and demand something more thrilling, something that will retain or restore the sense of being in the service, whether of their country, their fellow men or their God. We know there is nothing that can offer such opportunities as the Church. There is truly satisfying life in the priesthood, the mission field, the Church Army and the orders, lay and clerical.

We recognize the continuing vitality of the traditional communities and we urge that the opportunity of dedication and usefulness in them be made known more widely to our people. We have a further word to revolutionary Christian spirits. The number and variety of religious communities is not yet complete. There is a field for Christian social experiment amongst families; celibate communities are not equal to this problem. Pertinent here is the rising interest in the Church of the first three centuries, for the early Church was itself a religious community of families. When will we begin to make the world-wide Church what it was then in a limited area—the family of families? The staggering missionary opportunities of the post-war world can hardly be met without the self-giving of religious communities. May the Spirit move us to vision and action in this sphere.

Notable Consecration

* The consecration of Archdeacon Harris as the Bishop of Liberia is a notable event. It is to take place in Norfolk, Va., April 17th and will be reported for The Witness by the Rev. Shelton Hale Bishop, the rector of St. Philips, New York. Those caring for extra copies of the issue of April 26th that will feature this story should order at once. The issue of April 19 is to feature articles by Mr. Dean Acheson of the State Department on the Bretton Woods Proposals and by Dr. Henry Atkinson of the Church Peace Union on the Significance of the San Francisco Conference. Those wanting extra copies of this number should at once send orders by air-mail or wire to the New York office. These numbers will be followed by issues carrying the direct reports from San Francisco on the United Nations Conference. See Editorial page seven.

The Christian Marriage

by Robert Findlay Thomas

Rector of St. John's Church, Huntingdon, Pa.

IN THE doctrine of the Incarnation a sacramental concept of the Christian life is implied. When the Son of God assumed a human body, the human body became in a new sense a potential means of grace. Thus the "physical" instincts of human nature became linked with spiritual achievement. This is most conspicuously true of the sex instinct since, because its use causes procreation, this instinct reflects God's own creative activity. Hence the improper use of the sex impulse is a peculiarly profane form of sin; while its rightful fulfillment—Christian marriage—is a sacrament.

Christian marriage, the indissoluble union of a man and a woman, is the divine law for human beings to whom Christianity has been mediated. ". . . and the two shall become one flesh: so that they are no more two but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder (Mark 10: 8-9)." Such is the teaching of Christ. (See also Mark 10: 11-12, and Luke 16: 18.)

Where Christianity prevails this concept of marriage somewhat affects civil law. Thus in this country South Carolina officially does not recognize divorce and the state of New York officially permits divorce only upon the grounds allowed in one version of our Lord's teaching (Matthew 5: 32—a version whose authenticity many scholars doubt). But other states provide an elastic catalog of grounds for divorce. Generally, civil law reflects the law of Christ only dimly.

It is to be expected that these standards should differ. Secular society is concerned with law and order. Christianity is concerned with spiritual adventure. The Christian life is not the conventional life but a life of peculiar cooperation with the purposes of God. The Christian standard admittedly is the more difficult. But Christianity is a source of divine power. It fortifies men and women with supernatural grace to meet the demands of the higher standard.

The truth is that the necessity for divorce usually represents a deficiency in character. Either the parties lacked the character to wait until their judgment was mature enough wisely to choose a mate, or else they lack the courage and unselfishness necessary to make the personal adjustments a successful marriage requires.

There are cases where the indissolubility of Christian marriage means hardship for one or both parties. Married couples whose continued union represents martyrdom to a standard merit our sympathy. But a standard cannot be observed by making exceptions. And not only is the Christian standard of marriage the law of Christ, but it is the standard which promises the greatest good for all humanity. Compromise with the divorce habit brings merited relief in a few cases. But in society as a whole it results only in broken homes, in children without parental guidance; in what is, according to the teaching of Jesus Christ, legalized adultery.

Because, it is claimed, many war marriages will have to be dissolved, some churchmen insist that the Church must relax her prejudice against divorce because "we owe it to our returning war veterans." But can this argument, based on patriotic sentimentality, be trusted? On the one hand we have the Christian law of peace on earth, and on the other hand the Christian law of marriage. Humanity has sinned against the Christian law of peace by committing the wholesale murder of war; can we absolve ourselves from that sin by committing a wholesale sin against the Christian law of marriage? No: the debt civilians owe war veterans is one thing; the debt of obedience both owe to the law of Christ is another. It is not our duty to adapt the Christian standard to humanity, or to any temporarily idolized class of humanity. But the adaption of humanity to the law of God is not only our duty; it is humanity's salvation.

IN PROVIDING grounds for annulment the state recognizes that not every alleged marriage contract is valid. Similarly the Church recognizes that not every supposed marriage constitutes a Christian marriage. When, either by divorce or annulment, civil authority dissolves a union, the Church may find it possible to repudiate the same union on the basis that, in the Christian sense, marriage never existed.

The present canon of the Protestant Episcopal Church recognizes nine nullifying impediments to marriage. Compassionate interpretation is possible in at least the following two of these impediments: 4) Mental deficiency of either party sufficient to prevent the exercise of intelligent choice. 7) Impotence or sexual perversion of either party undisclosed to the other.

In connection with number 7, the question remains: Just what is sexual perversion? Sadism and masochism are recognized as psychopathic distortions of (male and female respectively) sexual desire. And certainly the sexual impulse lies more in the mental and emotional realm than in the physical or chemical realm. Hence a "marriage" where one party has an apparently permanent psychoneurotic impulse toward extreme mental cruelty (see motion picture, The Suspect) conceivably could be annulled under reason 7. As a perversion, psychopathic sadism is at least as definite an impediment to the normal fulfillment of marriage as is homosexuality, which, in its degree, might itself require definition.

Also, the existence of the sacrament of Holy Matrimony presupposes that both parties are baptized and at least to some extent committed to the Church. It has been wisely suggested that the Church recognize by canon the nullifying impediment to Christian marriage implied in 1 Corinthians 7: 15. A Christian churchman may find himself technically linked in marriage with one who repudiates not only the Church but the marriage. It ought to be possible for the Church automatically to annul such a union.

So, in the case of a few war "marriages," as in the case of a regularly recurrent but very small percentage of civilian "marriages," the Church may be led to a merciful interpretation of the grounds for annulment. But it must remain clear that nullifying a union implies that the alleged marriage was, if not a very serious sin, at least a very grievous error.

Also it must be clear that we are not merely rationalizing by substituting one term for another. The word divorce connotes a habit of thought, a pagan philosophy of marriage, with which the Church cannot compromise. As a fact of Christian belief, the indissolubility of Holy Matrimony cannot be subject to canonical legislation. But by careful legislation and wise administration the Church must be prepared to determine what constitutes Christian marriage. And those who in the past have entered and abandoned unfortunate unions, but who sincerely commit themselves to the Church, must be given an opportunity to achieve true Christian marriage.

As Christian marriage is the richest expression of the human sexual instinct and, in fact, its only complete fulfillment, so parenthood is the climactic experience of marriage. There are valid reasons, such as economic poverty or physical disability, for temporarily avoiding parenthood; and valid reasons, such as hereditary disease, for avoiding it permanently. But the mere dread of the inconvenient sacrifices it involves in personal pleasure and freedom is not a valid reason for avoiding parenthood. Such a selfish and negative distraction from the true sacramental climax of marriage is a sin. It is a sin similar to that of substituting the negative distraction of promiscuity for the true expression of sexual love in marriage.

But if parenthood is the climax of marriage in normal cases, this does not mean that the marital union of a man and women isn't a corollary end in itself in all cases (". . . and the two shall become one flesh . . ."—Mark 10:8).

And obviously the marriage union involves reasonably frequent sexual intercourse. Continence within marriage may be temporarily desirable or necessary for special reasons. But for the purpose of certainly avoiding pregnancy continence for very long periods is necessary. For most people the Christian view precludes such continued continence in marriage. The sexual act is a sacrament; it is the outward and visible sign of the inward and spiritual grace of monogamous sexual love. And the advice of St. Paul, that a married couple should "not deprive one another" (1 Corinthians 7:5—Weymouth translation) is profitable.

But the Christian philosophy, with its respect for spiritual values and the sacredness of human personality, also precludes reckless propagation. The procreation of more children than can properly be cared for is a sin against the sacredness of human personality.

Thus planned parenthood, or the practice of birth control, by means other than continence, or sterilization, which makes parenthood permanently impossible, becomes not just a concession to human weakness, but in many cases a positive contribution to Christian marriage.

OFFICIAL Christianity now generally recognizes this principle. But the Roman Catholic Church, apparently, concedes only the principle, not the practice. As consistent with indulgence in the sexual act at all, the Roman Church approves only the rhythm method of birth control. This method —reliance on the so-called "safe" periods—is, by general medical agreement, only vaguely reliable. Approving the principle of birth control but countenancing its practice only according to a very doubtful method is, in the opinion of this writer, less sound Christian teaching than ecclesiastical quibbling.

Any use of artificial contraceptives is, it is claimed, contrary to "nature," and hence contrary to the will of God. But is what we observe to be natural law necessarily coincident with the moral and spiritual purposes of God? Such an assumption presupposes that the natural order is in a state of static perfection. Such is not the picture revealed in Romans 8, where St. Paul expresses the hope ". . . . that creation itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the children of God. For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain . . ."

Man's rebellion against God has become reflected in the whole natural order: man's sin has disturbed nature. But through man's redemption, the possibility of which follows from the Incarnation, nature itself will be "delivered from the bondage of corruption" into such a state of perfection as will be an adequate mirror of the divine glory.

Meanwhile, science and common observation confirm St. Paul's concept of a universe in a state of evolutionary flux. Our moral obligation is not slavish submission to nature's present travail. Our moral obligation is to seek the will of God for ourselves and for the world. This implies the use of human intelligence to achieve such readjustments in the operation of natural law as will promote man's spiritual good and hence God's glory; in other words, to cooperate with God in healing creation.

So, believing that avoidable disease promotes neither man's spiritual good nor God's glory, we strive to readjust nature by the use of penicillin, sulfa drugs, vaccination, and surgery. Also, believing that to freeze to death is a questionable act of piety, we use, in the earth's more frigid zones, artificial heat and warm clothing.

In the present stage of nature's evolutionary travail, there is extravagant waste in human, especially the male, reproductive resources. And nature does not provide for such desirable spacing of pregnancies as is necessary to conserve the sacrament of Christian marriage. Nature's deficiencies, unadjusted by human science, detract from positive Christian values. Hence the proper use, by married couples, of medically prescribed chemical or mechanical contraceptives, is not contrary to the historic Christian Faith.

A marriage that represents intelligent cooperation with the will of God enriches the lives of the married couple both in the natural and in the Christian senses. In fact holy matrimony mediates spiritual grace as definitely as do the specifically ceremonial sacraments. In striving to perfect the art of the sexual act itself, a husband and wife practice the virtues of humility, self-control, and forbearance. In childbirth the woman learns the discipline of fortitude in travail. Through courageously sharing the common and practical sacrifices involved in parenthood, both parties grow in Christian selflessness. And finally, through the difficult and delicate adjustments in personal desires married life requires, the married couple mature in Christian character and advance in knowledge of the Christian way, which is the way of fellowship.

Why Go to Church by the Rev. David K. Montgomery. Publishers—Morehouse-Gorham, $2.25.

In Why Go to Church, the Rev. David K. Montgomery, rector of St. Peter's Church, Morristown, N. J., has posed a question to which he has found few answers. Your reviewer turned the first few pages of Mr. Montgomery's book with some enthusiasm, hoping to find there a positive presentation of the reasons for going to church. In short order we were subconsciously fabricating all manner of defenses against his arguments. There is something about the manner of too many of our clergy that throws the layman on the defensive. Doubtless it is because these clergymen assume that right is on their side and that the burden of all blame sets solely upon the shoulders of the laymen. We felt that to be Mr. Montgomery's attitude.

To a layman, one of the best things that can be said about Christianity is the pattern of life it provides by which a Christian can be an exemplary citizen of his community. One of the best things that can be said about the Church is the stimulus it provides for following that pattern. It is wellnigh impossible for the sincere Christian, following in the path of Christ, to adjust himself to the discrepancy between the inspiration the service of worship should give and the inspiration it generally provides. For that reason a feeling of resentment is bound to result when the layman realizes his rector assumes none of the blame for his absence from the fold.

Perhaps only a layman could write a book for laymen, as Mr. Montgomery has attempted to do, that would be convincing proof for going to church. Perhaps many of our clergy are too near their altars to realize how different they look and sound from the nave; are too near their liturgy to ever understand their people and how to minister to them. Be that as it may, we believe the only persons who would be likely to stay with Mr. Montgomery to the bitter end of his book would be the same impassive souls who never question why.

One characteristic too often lacking in our laymen is piety. Yet Mr. Montgomery's book, purportedly written for laymen, swelters with piety. Indeed, that may be the reason for empty pews of a Sunday morning: too much piety in the pulpit and too little vitality; too little of the message of Christ brought to the man in the street in a way that squares with the facts of life as he meets them.

People don't go to church for precisely the same reason they are unlikely to read Mr. Montgomery's book: boredom at the botching of a real opportunity.

TO PUT IT BRIEFLY

What Happens at Baptism?

By

WILLIAM B. SPERRY

IT IS usually a baby that is baptized. The baby is bathed and powdered with special care and wears his very best dress because something of great importance is to happen to him. Other people beside the baby are involved because you just do not have babies without involving other people. These other people have been planning for the baby, hoping for it, working for it, because they love the baby and want others to love it. They picture the child growing up to a life of affection and usefulness. They look forward to this child's friends and associates and see a young man or woman taking a place in a world that is constantly creating new worlds out of the old chaos and blindness in which every age has lived.

As the parents and others who are drawn into the circle of interest make these plans they realize that they may make mistakes. They feel a sense of awe in assuming a responsibility so fraught with possibilities of good and evil. They call upon friends and advisors to assist them in matters of health and education.

But no matter how competent the advisors, they still feel that this responsibility is something beyond their powers to meet; beyond the powers of anyone they can bring in. They know their own shortcomings. Can they give—can these two people who know each other so well, so intimately—can they really provide this new person with the environment and the power to make their plans come true in this life? And, appalling thought, what of the life beyond!

They know they cannot, of themselves, give what they wish to give.

So they come to baptism. No matter whether the baby sleeps or yawns or smiles or yells he is held in the arms of a minister of the Church, water is poured on the child to indicate that as he entered a new environment at birth so now he again enters a new life, he is signed with a special sign, words are spoken to mark this new existence and he is given a name to carry with him throughout it.

The parents and godparents have placed this child in the body of that great company in which he can be a part of the best that man may know. Here they give him the stability that comes from being identified with the finest in the tradition of our race. Figuratively and literally they bring him to Jesus, the Christ. They make him a member of the Church.

This child will never be completely alone. He will always have the sustaining sense of knowing that he is a part of the stream of Christian men and women who have given faith and hope and love to a world where evil and strife are ever present but never completely triumphant.

What if the parents have shown weak and evil tendencies? All men do; but here in baptism this child is strengthened with the knowledge that he is one of a company enlisted "manfully to fight against sin, the world and the devil and to continue faithful until his life's end." At baptism that membership is sealed for all time and the child grows up in that wholesome knowledge. It does not guarantee him victory in every encounter but it does give him the knowledge that he does not fight alone.

But that is not all that happens. What of those who brought the child to baptism and those who took the pledges in the name of the child? To them baptism gives a new sense of their responsibility before God to use this "sense of belonging" in meeting their own conflicts. It gives them a realization of the preciousness of each soul and that Almighty God comes through the turmoil and fret of the world to include this child and also they themselves in his never ending care.

What happens when the baptism is of those of riper years? The same sense of belonging, of care, of personal relationship takes gentle possession of the one baptized and with it comes the knowledge of a spirit within and without that helps and will never stop helping. Water is poured on him as an illustration of the cleansing wholesomeness in which one lives in such a spirit. Words are pronounced that mark the admittance into an everliving body in which he will forever be the responsibility of the other members and they forever his.

Gov. Dewey Pleads for Success Of San Francisco

He Declares That the People Should Make The Conference Their Business by Action

Edited by W. B. Spofford

Albany:—Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York, 1944 Republican presidential candidate and an Episcopal church vestryman, issued a statement last week stating that the forthcoming San Francisco Conference on world security has a chance to establish a new era in which the peoples of the world will abandon "mutual hate, slaughter and destruction." It was part of his proclamation setting aside the week of April 16-22 as "World Order Week" in which he urged churches to devote Sunday, April 22, to "special consideration of the momentous occasion ahead and prayers for the success of the San Francisco Conference." "Once again," he continued, "civilization is given an opportunity to create an organization of nations whose purpose will be to establish peace on earth." But he said, as our editorial this week likewise stresses, that without the "whole-hearted support of the peoples no covenant can survive. It is, accordingly, vital that as many of them as can be reached must have an opportunity to understand the aims of the San Francisco Conference. There must be unlimited facilities for public discussions of the proposals first outlined at Dumbarton Oaks and now to be carried forward at the Golden Gate. All men and women in the United States, all men and women in the United Nations, should be made to feel that this is their business, their conference to result, we hope, in their covenant."

Again we call your attention to the editorial on page seven and urge you to act on the suggestion there set forth. Organize a parish group for action during the Conference.

Racial Discrimination

London (by wireless):—Removal of racial discrimination against native populations in British colonies was urged in a statement here by the conference of missionary societies in Great Britain and Ireland, representing all Protestant missions. Endorsed by the executive committee of the British Council of Churches, the statement referred specifically to racial restriction in Kenya and Northern and Southern Rhodesia, and called upon the British people to support government efforts to eliminate "artificial barriers to the progress and prosperity of native inhabitants."

The conference quoted a recent statement of the Episcopal Synod of the Church of England in South Africa in which color prejudice was denounced as "cruel, wasteful, and dangerous." (WITNESS, March 15)

Declaring that "great benefits" have been brought to the native peoples of South Africa through British rule, the conference stated it viewed with "grave misgiving" any changes in the existing political status of the African territories which would impair efforts to promote fair treatment for "every man, whatever his color."

A Union Service

New Rochelle, N. Y.:—The Protestant Churches of this city again joined forces for a union Good Friday service, held at Trinity Church where the Rev. Philip M. Styles is rector. Seven clergymen, representing the Episcopal, Baptist, Presbyterian, Methodist and Lutheran Churches took part. There were solos by Miss Sarah Brown of the Bethesda Baptist Church and Miss Lorraine Eley of Trinity Church.

Large Bequest

Haledon, N. J.:—St. Mary's Church has received an additional $25,000 from the estate of the late Frederick W. Budd, bringing the total to $100,000. The announcement was made to the congregation by Rector Gordon T. Jones at the Easter services. $35,000 has been invested, the income to be used for the current expenses of the parish. The balance has been invested in government bonds and will be used when permission is given to build a new church.

No More Subsidies

Paris (wireless to RNS):—The French Consultative Assembly has voted the immediate suppression of state subsidies to Church schools, which were inaugurated by the Vichy regime. The vote was 128 to 48, after a heated debate between Roman Catholic and communist deputies. Andre Philip, head of the parliamentary education commission, opposed state aid to denominational schools and stated that "religious education should be outside the school and financed by religious organizations in view of the separation of Church and state."

Reads the Lesson

Rome (wireless to RNS):—Commanding General Mark W. Clark, an Episcopalian, read the lesson at a non-denominational Easter service held here for headquarters troops of the allied 15th army group. He selected the lesson himself, John 20: 1-18, which recounts the story of the resurrection. The service was conducted by American chaplain Major Albett J. Anthony of Williamson, N. Y. and British chaplain Fred Smith of Dagenham, Essex. Meanwhile more than 150 chaplains held services for troops in all sectors of the 5th army front.

Washington Cathedral

Washington:—It is estimated that 10,000 people worshipped on Easter Day at Washington Cathedral at the eleven o'clock service when Bishop Angus Dun preached. At the Arlington National Cemetery the sunrise service was attended by Mrs. Roosevelt, General Marshall and Admiral King, the latter offering a prayer of great sincerity and beauty for the men in the armed services. Vice President Truman gave an Easter address at a Masonic service in Alexandria.

Praise for Jews

Moscow (wireless to RNS):—A message from Marshal Stalin praising Russian Jews for their contribution to the war effort was read at Passover services in the Moscow synagogue which was attended by more than 2,000 worshippers. The service was conducted by Rabbi S. S. Cherbrutsky and a prominent part was taken by the noted opera star, Alexandrovsky.

Attends Conference

Chungking (wireless to RNS):—The Rev. Frank W. Price, Chinese-born Presbyterian missionary, has been named to accompany the Chinese delegates to the San Francisco conference.

Expand Program

New York:—The United Council of Church Women, of which Mrs. Harper Sibley is president, is to hold a two day conference at Princeton April 22-24 to plan an enlarged program in social, industrial and race relations. Consultants at the conference will be F. Ernest Johnson of the Federal Council of Churches, Dr. Charles S. Johnson of Fisk University and Miss Katharine Lenroot of the federal children's bureau.

United Church Project

Lewiston, Me.: — The Lewiston-Auburn Council of Churches during Lent, sponsored a University of Life, meeting one night a week in each of the participating churches. According to the Rev. Norman L. Kellett, rector of Trinity Church, Lewiston, the university has had more than 700 registrations with an average attendance each week of over 600. The course was divided into four parts: 1) Living under tension for those who have men in the service or who work under the tension of the war factory or who find the problems of war-time living especially great; 2) Burning issues for the Church for those who are concerned about what we shall do beyond the conflict to make a decent world order where brotherhood and the family of nations will become a responsibility; 3) A living faith for those who are interested in evaluating the contribution of Christianity to civilization; and 4) Youth finding some answers for young people who wish to learn just how religion links up with life. Among those who led sessions were Dr. Kenneth C. M. Sills, president of Bowdoin; Senator Owen Brewster, of Maine; Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College; the Rev. Howard P. Kellett, executive secretary of the department of social service of the diocese of Massachusetts, and Lt. Col. Richard F. Saville, chief of veteran's personnel division. According to Mr. Kellett, the university of life has given the Council of Churches a great boost and it is now functioning in the fields of advertising, radio, canvass, young people, adult education and teacher training.

Dormitory Burns

Bris, Va.:—The dormitory for small boys at the Blue Ridge School, Bris, Virginia, was destroyed by fire on Friday, March 23rd. The Blue Ridge School is operated by the diocese of Virginia primarily for mountain children. The dormitory which was burned, known as Crawford Hall, was one of the oldest buildings, erected about forty years ago. It was a frame structure with kitchen, dining room, dormitory space for twenty-five boys and two rooms for members of the faculty. The loss was partly covered by insurance. The Rev. George P. Mayo, who has spent most of his ministry in mountain work, is the headmaster.

Marriage Agreement

Burlingame, Cal.:—Baptist minister Cecil Osborne is performing no more marriages unless both parties sign an agreement which he has drawn. The document in artistic printed form and bearing the names of the contracting persons, is presented to the newlyweds by Mr. Osborne with a request that it be framed and placed in a prominent place in their new home.

Mr. Osborne's new marriage agreement, reports Religious News Service, says: "We are in love. We love each other so much that we want to spend the rest of our lives together. We are so much in love that we want to establish a home, where we may throw our protecting love about our children, and rear them in an atmosphere of love and tenderness. We are so greatly in love that we want nothing to mar the beauty and lasting romance of our union. We believe our marriage will be a lasting one. But thousands of young couples equally in love have taken their sorrows and differences to divorce courts, where romance and bliss have ended in bitterness and recrimination.

"We believe that to make our marriage a glorious success we shall need the guidance of God. Therefore, we solemnly pledge ourselves: To pray regularly for Divine guidance in planning our home, our lives and our future; to attend as often as humanly possible the church of our choice; to seek the will of God in our lives; to go together to the minister who marries us, or to some other minister, with our differences, before going to a lawyer or court."

ument, it was disclosed by the Most Rev. William Stockums, senior auxiliary bishop of the Cologne archdiocese, reports Religious News Service. Bishop Stockums made the revelation after returning to the Cathedral from a home for the aged where he was in hiding to escape arrest by the Gestapo. He said both he and Archbishop Joseph Frings of Cologne had been forced to flee Gestapo agents during the Allied advance toward Cologne, because the aged Archbishop had denounced the party plan to convert the cathedral into a Nazi shrine.

Churchmen on Peace

London (by wireless to RNS):—Religious and cultural freedom must be assured to all as an integral part of any arrangement for readjustment of frontiers and the transfer of populations after the war, the British Council of Churches asserted in a statement issued here.

"These are rights which belong to man as man by virtue of divine creation," the Council said. "The denial of them contributed in large measure to the worsening of minority problems of the past. Their free recognition would alleviate otherwise difficult political arrangement, and might go far to make them acceptable."

Pointing out that leaders of the United Nations have "repeatedly affirmed their allegiance to such principles," the Council added that "they must now be given practical effect."

In discussing European frontier problems, the church body observed that "Christians as such have no particular competence to pronounce judgment" on technical, economic, and political issues, but it was "their duty to remind all that no lasting order of society can be built except upon the foundation of obedience to God's Will for His world."

"No society," it said, "can achieve peace and security that does not respect the personal rights of men and women, and is not based on freedom, justice, and good faith, for these are the will of God as Christ has made it known."

Declaring that Christians have "good cause to be grateful for the many proposals of statesmen of the United Nations looking toward the creation of an international organization," the Council expressed concern "at some of the possible implications of proposals for readjustment of frontiers, involving for great numbers of people either territorial transfer or at least a change of sovereignty."

"If, unhappily, it is the case that no better solution can be found for our inherited political problems," the statement said, "we urge that everything possible be done to safeguard human rights of those affected. However considerately carried out, such changes must inflict great suffering upon men and women, many of whom are quite innocent of responsibility for the evils it is sought to rectify."

There is also "grave danger," the Council warned, "of sowing seeds of future wars by the creation of new problems little less serious than those now demanding solution."

Church Estates

Moscow (by wireless): — Church lands in Hungary will be divided on the same basis as landowners' estates under proposed reforms approved by all parties in the Hungarian Front of National Independence, reports Religious News Service.

French Cathedrals

Washington, D. C.:—Twenty-two of the 25 famous cathedrals, chateaux and other historic buildings listed by the French government as part of the "cultural heritage of France" are now in liberated areas and all but one are either intact or only slightly damaged. This announcement was made by the fine arts and archives section of SHAEF in a report which reached the office of war information here through allied supreme headquarters in Paris. The only serious damaged church edifice is Rouen Cathedral, which, however, was found to have suffered "far less" from the 1944 Allied bombardment than Rheims Cathedral which was exposed to German attack in the last war. The damage to Rouen Cathedral can be repaired, the report said. The medieval cathedrals of Chartres, Amiens, Beauvais, Laon, Rheims, and Notre Dame in Paris, as well as the famous Sainte Chapelle in Paris, have remained safe and virtually unscarred, SHAEF announced. Strassbourg Cathedral was hit by two bombs in August, 1944, but the damage is insignificant and has not affected the stability of the structure or the sculptured portions.

New Radio Program

New York:—The American Bible Society has joined in the Your Life Today radio program that is featured each morning over the blue network. Eric M. North, general secretary of the society is the speaker each Monday during April and R. A. Betts is to be the speaker in May. It is expected that Francis C. Stifler, editor of the society and long a popular broadcaster, will join in the series later.

Distribute Clothing

New York:—War refugees wearing clothes collected by the churches of America will soon start back home from middle east camps to the Balkan countries. Bales of this clothing recently reached the homeless people at Tolumbat, UNRRA's camp for convalescents near Alexandria, Egypt. Distributed during Holy Week, the outfits brought rejoicing to 1200 boys and girls and nearly 1000 men and women who had been without adequate clothing since Nazi soldiers and bombs drove them from their native lands. According to Churchman Henry J. Kaiser, national chairman of the collection of clothing, each child received six garments. He also stated that the 230,000 pounds of clothing gathered by the American churches would outfit 40,000 refugees who are scheduled to leave several middle east camps for home during the next two months.

Church Buildings

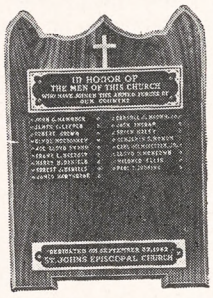
New York (RNS):—Churches planning postwar building and improvement programs were urged by the Rev. E. M. Conover, director of the interdenominational bureau of architecture, to raise funds now "with all possible speed" so that hampering church building debts may be prevented. For years, he stated, general church erection funds of Protestant denominations have been used largely to save churches from unfortunate financial situations brought about by poorly-managed church building ventures. He urged denominational leaders to insist that from now on church erection funds be used only for needed projects, particularly in unchurched communities and for the replacement of inadequate and outmoded buildings.

World Council Aids

Geneva (by wireless to RNS):—Barracks provided through the department of reconstruction and interchurch aid of the World Council of Churches will serve as temporary churches in destroyed cities along the channel coast of Normandy and in the Montbeliard district of Alsace-Lorraine in France. Financial aid from national reconstruction committees in Switzerland and the United States has enabled the World Council's Reconstruction department to approve the appeal of the French churches and of CIMADE, social work and evangelistic agency of the French Protestant youth movements, for barracks. Swedish churches will also provide such buildings.

Funds from American and Swiss churches have also made it possible to grant requests for help in supplementing tthe inadequate salaries of French pastors until the French churches are able to make substantial increases. Large grants of books published in Switzerland have been made in response to requests for Christian literature from isolated areas where pastors and laymen have lost their libraries. Churches in France, Belgium, and liberated Holland will choose the books desired.

Meet in Atlanta



Atlanta, Ga.:—The convention of the diocese of Atlanta is to be held at the cathedral here instead of at Macon as originally planned. The change is made to comply with the permission for the convention granted by the office of defense transportation. Bishop Walker is streamlining the meeting to compress everything in a one day session on May 8th. The Rev. Joseph T. Walker, army chaplain, is to speak at the opening service while the Rev. Edward G. Mullen, formerly of the Philippines, is to be the headliner at the Auxiliary meeting.

V-E Day Plans

New York (RNS):—For months now, the nation's religious forces have laid plans to mark the cessation of hostilities in Europe with observances calling the general public to reverent worship rather than revelry. In these plans, the churches have had the cooperation of business, civic, fraternal, and political organizations, and indications are that V-E Day for most Americans will be a solemn rededication to the ideals of a just and lasting peace for the world. Even as president Roosevelt led the country in prayer on D-Day last June when the Allies invaded Europe, so the chief executive is expected to call upon the public for similar meditation on V-E Day. Mrs. Roosevelt said the White House would follow "a general suggestion that all should join in prayers of thanksgiving but observe no celebration."

Leaders of all religious groups have issued appeals for reverent observance of Victory Day, and it is expected that most churches will remain open all day. While many churches will conduct individual services, many others will join in union worship in centrally located sanctuaries. In some cities combined religious and patriotic rallies will be held. To prevent widespread hilarity and revelry, reminiscent of the wild celebrations that marked the end of World War I, bars, taverns, and liquor stores in a number of communities will be closed for 24 hours with the announcement of V-E Day.

The department of evangelism of the Federal Council of Churches has prepared a service of worship for V-E Day, and thousands of requests for it have been received from church councils, ministerial associations, and individual churches, an indication, according to Jesse M. Bader, secretary of the department, that religious services are planned in the largest cities and the smallest communities.

Killed In Action

Reinbeck, N. Y.:—Chaplain Barret L. Tyler was killed in action on Luzon on March 15th. The Secretary of War so announced on April 3 to the Chaplain's father, the Rev. Barrett P. Tyler, whose home is here. Chaplain Tyler was a captain and was with the 43rd division artillery and since September, 1942, had been in service in the Southwest Pacific. He was 33 years of age, a graduate of Williams College and of the Episcopal Theological School. Prior to entering the army he was assistant at Trinity, Hartford. In 1942 he married Louise Biglow Gay of Philadelphia, who survives him. He also has two brothers in the service, both lieutenants in the army.

New Hymn Book

Washington:—A second edition of the folder, Hymns from Home, has been distributed by the army's office of chief of chaplains. About five million copies have been mailed to all service commands, and other outlets.

Still Time to Make an Easter Gift

Children like these, as well as their parents in many instances, are being cared for at the rural Christian Mission directed by the Rev. Kimber Den

Due to the Japanese invasion of nearby areas the work of the Mission has had to be greatly expanded. Yet there is greater difficulty in financing the work due to inflation.

Individual Church men and women, young people's organizations, parish groups, are urged to help in this vital work.

Donations are cabled through the Bank of China as often as the amount of donations available justify.

Condemn Vandalism

Denver, Colo.:—Recent outbursts of vandalism here, during which high school youths drove through the Spanish area of the city and threw bricks at homes, have led Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish leaders to issue an appeal for fair play.

"If, while our soldiers are fighting abroad, we allow conditions to develop at home to destroy this fair play society, we are traitors to our country," asserted a statement made through the Interracial Commission of the Denver Council of Churches.

Expressing belief that the acts were inspired by "certain unfair practices that lend themselves to the agitation of lawless individuals and groups," the churchmen called for elimination of all racial and religious discrimination.

Churches, synagogues, and other institutions were urged to conduct classes for parents and young people to impress upon them "the best traditions of American sportsmanship."

Urge Permanent FEPC

Washington, D. C. (RNS):—More than 30 Negro ministers from 21 states spent two days here visiting Senators and Congressmen from their localities to urge approval of a permanent fair employment practice commission. They also sent a letter to President Roosevelt asking his support of the measure. The assembly, called by the Washington bureau of the fraternal council of Negro Churches, commended Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York for his leadership in bringing about passage of the Ives-Quinn anti-discrimination law.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

THE REV. HERBERT HAWKINS
Rector at White River Junction, Vt.

The letter signed by the superiors of three religious orders states that due to directives of the Office of Defense Transportation "only those who can reach the cathedral on the morning of the 9th are invited." In other words the O.D.T. says you may not travel to this religious service except as we allow you to do so. I know many people who make these or similar restrictions an excuse for not getting to church; and I think it extremely dangerous for the Church to accept the principle that the O.D.T. may say who and who shall not attend a specific service. That is regulation of religion by the government.

ANSWER: It is clear from O.D.T. policies that the superiors of the religious orders were wrong. The O.D.T. has made it a matter of policy that "no permit is required for the holding of any meeting for religious worship or for ecclesiastical ceremony." (WITNESS, March 29)

THE REV. GERALD C. CLARKE
Rector at East Cleveland, Ohio

Congratulations Mr. Weber. I wonder if there are not others that are fed up with "the rigidity of both ritualistic and anti-ritualistic spikes." I hope you stay on the editorial board and keep up the good work.

FLORENCE V. MILLER
Churchwoman of Wilmington, Delaware

After reading Bill Spofford's article on the White reporting about Russia (WITNESS, March 29) I feel compelled to say how very glad I am that the space was given for it. It impressed me particularly because I read Leland Stowe's great book They Shall Not Sleep and am just finishing Edgar Snow's The People on Our Side and I was most interested and impressed by what both of these men had to say about the U.S.S.R.. No one could question the sincerity and integrity nor the wide experience of these two correspondents nor fail to admit the fact that they had a real opportunity to observe wartime Russia and the wonderful war effort the Russian people are making. It seems to me that if more Americans looked "shabby" and "poor" for the reasons the Russians do our returned fighting men might feel happier about conditions at home. There are still so many people with prejudices against the Soviet Union that to increase these in any way just on the eve of the San Francisco conference seems to me not only harmful to America as Mr. Davies suggests, but almost treasonable.

THE REV. EDWARD G. MAXTED
Retired priest of Pensacola, Fla.

I should like to write an article on the subject of Burial Laws in England Liberalized (WITNESS, March 22) but I fear the editors would not be sufficiently interested. But two comments I would like to make. First this new arrangement means that in future the Church of England will be the only religious body in England which will not be able to have exclusive ownership and use of a burial ground. Of course Roman Catholics may have their own burial grounds and so may others if they wish but not the Church of England. The ancient cemeteries were the churchyards of Church of England churches and in 1880, as THE WITNESS news item states, a law was passed allowing non-Church members to have their relatives buried in the ancient churchyards with any rite and ceremony and with any officiant they pleased. So ministers of all denominations conduct burials in Church of England burial grounds. This law had reference to existing churchyards but now apparently is to apply to all acquired in future.

The last sentence of the news item seems to suggest that many of the Church of England clergy are a bigoted lot. For some are accused of "insisting on graveyards rites undesired by bereaved families." Well I think I know what this means. Non-Church members often ask the rector to bury their dead and sometimes ask him not to use the Prayer Book service. But of course he can use no other.

THE REV. THOM WILLIAMSON
Rector at Narragansett, R. I.

Though seldom have I seen any letters to the editor have much good effect on a paper yet I am constrained to write to witness my general agreement with all the letters in Backfire for March 22. Also referring to Mr. Fletcher's statement about the communicant strength of the Episcopal Church, will he kindly tell us how to reconcile his figures with Mr. Stowe's which are just twice those given by Mr. Fletcher. And Mr. Fletcher is way behind in his obsequies of this same Episcopal Church. A chief justice of the Supreme Court made similar prognostications about 150 years ago, and still we go on and on. And perhaps—I say perhaps—someday our church may be the religious department of a labor union or Soviet and then THE WITNESS could go out of business. But I wish THE WITNESS would not be so dog-gone interesting otherwise.

THE REV. R. H. MIZE, JR.
Wakeeney, Kansas

The former Roman Catholic diocese of Concordia, Kansas, has changed its see city to Salina, Kansas, and its bishop, the Rt. Rev. Frank A. Thill, has taken the name "Bishop of Salina." Made under a decree of the sacred consistorial congregation and Pope Pius XII dated December 23, 1944, the action was not publicly confirmed until it was a fait accompli three months later. The Episcopal Church has not had a Bishop of Salina since 1903. Christ Cathedral was built in 1906.

The Presiding Bishop's Appeal

IN BEHALF OF THE CHURCH'S SEMINARIES

has brought more numerous and larger responses than ever before.

Some parishes find it more convenient to take such offerings later than the appointed day.

The important consideration is that every parish share in supporting the institutions where men prepare for that ministry upon which the life of the parish depends.

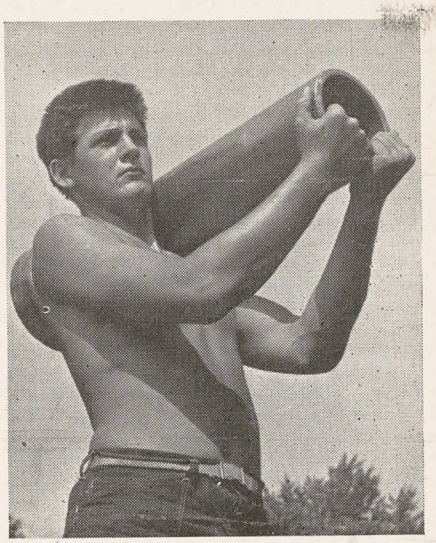
Plans Made for San Francisco By Church Groups

Committee Representing Many Groups to Meet Regularly to Study and Report Conference

By Rita Rubin

Washington:—A number of representatives of Church organizations will attend the United Nations Conference, opening in San Francisco April 25, but so far as can be learned none will attend in an official capacity. More than fifty national organizations, including the United Christian Council for Democracy, with which the CLID is affiliated, have been represented in conferences which have met at intervals in recent months for the purpose of promoting study of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. In order to most effectively participate in the Conference these organizations have created a committee which will meet constantly in San Francisco for the exchange of information, planning strategy and keeping their members informed on what is going on, so that the people of the country may take whatever action seems wise to help make the Conference a success. Through this committee contacts will be regularly maintained with the official American delegation, having been appointed consultants by the State Department.



Among those to serve on this committee are Walter Van Kirk, secretary of the Federal Council's commission on a just and durable peace; the Rev. Henry Atkinson of the Church Peace Union whose article is featured this week; Jane Evans of the National Peace Conference, which includes many Church peace groups; Clark M. Eichelberger of the American Association for the United Nations, who will be the chairman; Ulric Bell of Americans United; Mrs. Arthur Brin of the National Council of Jewish Women; James B. Carey of the CIO; W. E. B. DuBose of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Robert Norton of the American Legion; Catherine Schaefer of the Catholic Association for International Peace; James T. Shotwell of the Carnegie Peace Foundation.

The organizations affiliated with the UCCD are to be represented in San Francisco by William B. Spofford of THE WITNESS who has been invited by the committee headed by Mr. Eichelberger to meet regularly with them "to discuss plans and the state of public opinion." These meetings will be held from time to time, as occasions demand, at the International Center, headquarters of the committee. The organizations affiliated with the UCCD and who will be represented by Mr. Spofford are the Evangelical and Reformed Council for Social Reconstruction; the Presbyterian Fellowship for Social Action; the Unitarian Fellowship for Social Justice; the Methodist Federation for Social Service; the Rauschenbusch Fellowship of Baptists and the Church League for Industrial Democracy.

Mr. Spofford has also been granted press credentials to the Conference by the State Department and will report the Conference for THE WITNESS, the press bureau of the National Council, The Churchman, The Southern Churchman and Forth. The first of his reports will appear in this paper in the issue of May 3rd.

Meanwhile the Associated Church Press, meeting in Philadelphia, launched last week a move to have Church proposals for world order influence the Conference, according to Religious News Service. Asserting the accomplishments will be of "basic concern to the religious forces of America, Canada and the entire world," these editors of Protestants journals urged 1), that American and Canadian delegates should seek improvement in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals along the lines of the Cleveland conference of the commission on a just and durable peace; 2), should exert all possible influence to protect the United States from lapsing into a position of isolationism after the war; 3), that Church people should support the delegates and their governments in the adoption of a charter that will bring the United States and Canada into active brotherly cooperation with the other nations of the world.

The delegates also adopted a separate resolution memorializing the United States delegation to the Conference to advocate creation of a commission on human rights having as one of its objectives freedom of the press. It was proposed that international agreements be drawn up to guarantee a world free press. "Freedom of the press is vital to religious and racial freedom and tolerance in that potentially it offers equal voice to all faiths and races," the resolution stated. "The right of free and untrammelled access to news and the freedom to transmit it are conducive to a better understanding among the people of the world and hence a contributing factor to a just and lasting peace. Freedom of the press ultimately offers the most potent weapon against propaganda."

Whether lads like this will fight in World War Three will be largely determined at the Conference of the United Nations. It is for this reason that it is of such concern to us all

YOUTH CONFERENCE AT AUBURN

Auburn, N. Y.:—Four dioceses—Albany, Central New York, Rochester and Western New York,—are to join forces for a youth conference to be held here at St. Peter's, May 4-5. Purpose: to examine the place of youth work in the Church; to examine literature for youth issued by the National Council; to seek to apply it to local needs; to coordinate the youth work of the four dioceses. Leaders: Dr. Bertha Paulssen, professor of social psychology of Gettysburg Seminary and Miss Frances Young of the division of Christian education of the National Council.

RECONCILIATION IS NEAR

New York (RNS):—The terms, arrived at in conferences held with Russian Orthodox leaders in Moscow, whereby the two Orthodox Churches in America will be united have been made public. One body, headed by Metropolitan Theophilus, was suspended by the Mother Russian Church in 1935. It has a large number of communicants, most of whom have been considered anti-Soviet in attitudes. The other Church, headed by Metropolitan Benjamin, has a much smaller following, is pro-Soviet and is recognized by Moscow. The decree looking toward union calls for a general Church council, to be presided over by Archbishop Alexei of Yaroslav and Rostov, being sent to this country especially for that purpose. The council will elect a Metropolitan who will bear the title of Patriarchal Exarch of All America and Canada. The election is subject to confirmation by the Moscow Patriarchate, which recommends as candidates Metropolitan Benjamin and Archbishop Alexei, a follower of Theophilus, but the decree does not limit the sobor in its right to nominate others. However the elected candidate must be confirmed by Moscow. The decree also provides that "the right to confirm candidates for bishops, the right to reward clergy with higher titles and the right of appeal as regards bishops and clergy remain with the Moscow Patriarchate."

The decree also states, as a condition of recognition by Moscow, that the American Orthodox Church declare its abstention from political activities against the USSR and give corresponding orders about this to all the parishes. The final clause of the decree states that "In case of the acceptance of the above conditions by the sobor of bishops, headed by Metropolitan Theophilus, the interdict (suspension) laid upon the American Church by the Moscow Patriarchate on January 4, 1935 is removed immediately prior to the all-American sobor."

ABBEY MEMORIAL TO CIVILIANS

London (wireless to RNS):—A memorial to Great Britain's 60,000 civilians who have died in bombings will be placed in Westminster Abbey in the form of leather bound volumes containing the names of all men, women and children killed.

Leaders of the Canterbury Club at St. James' Cathedral, Fresno, California. Standing: June Potter, Jane Scott, Gene Fuchs, Bernice Naman, treasurer. Seated: Phyllis Marsh, vice-president, Betty Whitten, president, June Martin, secretary

SAN FRANCISCO SUPPORTED

New York:—Representatives of ten diocesan departments of social service met here April 5 and passed a resolution supporting the purposes of the San Francisco Conference. They stated that it should have the full backing of Church people. After urging that parishes should observe April 25th with special thoughts and prayer for the success of the Conference, the resolution stated that "We do this realizing the concern of the National Government that the people of the nation generally be made aware of the critical importance of the San Francisco Conference which may well become a turning point in the world's search for lasting peace. All sorts of weaknesses will be evident in any instrument which can be agreed upon at this time. But the Church must fight on supporting such world organization as will allow for creative change in the future looking toward the ideal. The probable end of hostilities in a substantial area in the reasonably near future and the meeting of the United Nations in San Francisco highlights the need for constructive action, thought, and prayer on the part of all Christian people. The very differences are our opportunity to show the reality of the faith by which we live."

DUTCH CHURCH PLAYS LEADING ROLE

Geneva (wireless to RNS):—Confronted by increasing political unrest and severe famine conditions, the church in German-occupied regions of Holland is becoming more and more the leading influence in national life, according to underground reports reaching here.

"The gain in Christianity's prestige is impressive," one report declared. "This is not only because preaching is taking on a political color, but because pastors and priests have measured up to the enormous social tasks before them. Pastors of different churches, for example, have undertaken the distribution of food packages from Sweden. The evacuation of children from the eastern provinces was organized by the churches and now pastors and priests are helping thousands who are living in hiding."

Comparison Made of Dioceses In Fifth Province

Figures Seem to Show That Church Is Making Little Headway in Communicants or Finances

By J. V. Blake
Layman of Akron, Ohio

Akron, Ohio:—The 5th Province in our Church shows a very clear-cut line between the Anglo-Catholics (hereinafter known as the A. C.'s) and the Prayer Book Churchmen (we shall call them the P.B.C.'s). There are seven strictly A. C. dioceses:—Chicago, Eau Claire, Fond du Lac, Milwaukee, Northern Indiana, Quincy and Springfield. On the other side are six:—Indianapolis, Michigan, Northern Michigan, Ohio, Southern Ohio, and Western Michigan. One or two of the second group may have A.C. tendencies but they are not militantly so. They are willing to let the parish decide what type it wants; if it happens to be a P.B.C. or an A.C. priest or ritual, either is acceptable at the diocesan headquarters. But such a tolerant attitude can hardly be found in the first group. They are definitely and belligerently A.C.

Before any reader begins to doubt the accuracy of the figures which follow, let it be known that they are taken from the Living Church Annuals of 1937 and of 1945. Now let us see how the 5th Province has grown in the years between 1936 and 1944.

Baptisms:—The A.C.'s increased by 20.2%; the P.B.C.'s by 58.8%. In the whole Church, the increase was 21.2%.

Confirmations: — The whole Church showed a decline of 9.6%. The A.C.'s went beyond and slipped back 13.3% but the P.B.C.'s declined but 1.2%.

Communicants:—The General church increased by 9.4%. But the A.C.'s of the 5th Province showed an increase of only 7.1% while the P.B.C.'s went ahead by 11.1%. As an example, it might not be improper to mention that in 1936 there were three strictly A.C. parishes in Cleveland; their combined communicant strength was 871. In 1944, they admit having but 644 members; a loss of 26.1%.

Church school scholars:—Here is a sad story which must give food for thought to one department at 281. The whole Church showed a falling off of 21.2%. In the 5th Province, the P.B.C.'s went back 17.4% while the A.C.'s declined by 17.3%. These comparisons are not due to a scarcity of priests in the various dioceses. In those years in the A.C. dioceses the number of priests increased from 373 to 389 while in the P.B.C. dioceses they decreased from 411 to 409. In the ratio of communicants to priests the A.C.'s went from 203 to 209, the P.B.C.'s from 242 to 270. There is also the ratio of priests to population. The A.C.'s remained almost stationary: one in 31,700 to one in 31,793 at present. But the P.B.C.'s assumed a heavier load: from one in 32,781 to one in 34,861. So the A.C's had a chance, by more intensive and personal work, to go ahead.

So much for the personal comparisons. There is another side and to one who is a vestryman it is most important—Finance. In total contributions between 1936 and 1944 the A.C's of the Province increased their giving by 36.1%; the P.B.C.'s by 57.5%. The total increase of the whole Church was 28.3%. Also the amount given per communicant by the A.C.'s increased from $19.01 to $24.15 or 27%. In the same years the P.B.C.'s increased from $19.98 to $28.33 or 41.8%.

Nor did the A.C.'s carry their share of the obligations of the work of the national Church. Over a year ago our general Church headquarters sent to all dioceses what they considered a fair quota. They asked the A.C.'s of the 5th Province for $83,610. They gave $73,344, although actually they did contribute $74,999. There is a cut of 10.3%. Only one of the A.C. dioceses accepted its full quota. But all of the P.B.C. dioceses did so, the sum being $154,300. The receipts from the A.C.'s averaged $0.924 per communicant while the P.B.C. receipts averaged $1.407—a difference of 52.3%. But neither should be especially proud of this pitifully small contribution.

One more comparison. In these seven A.C. dioceses there are now twenty-four fewer organized parishes and missions than there were in 1936. The P.B.C's lost but 18, and ten of these were in one small diocese that went through a fiery trial during these years so such a loss might be expected.

What do these figures mean?

CHANCELLOR

Alexander B. Andrews, distinguished attorney of Raleigh, is the chancellor of the diocese of North Carolina. He has also been a deputy to a number of General Conventions where he has been an outstanding leader

CHURCH MEETING ON PEACE

Oakland, Calif.: — John Foster Dulles, chairman of the commission on a just and durable peace is the scheduled headliner for a mass meeting to be held here April 22nd. The purpose is to crystallize the sentiment of churches in support of the San Francisco conference. It is being held under the auspices of the local council of churches and is expected to climax a series of conferences arranged by California churches.

WARNS OF DIVIDED PEACE

London (wireless to RNS):—A warning to "beware lest the peace divide what the war has united" was sounded in Westminster Abbey by Dr. Arne Fjellbu, acting bishop for liberated territories in northern Norway. He spoke at a service commemorating the German invasion of Norway and Denmark. Speaking in Norwegian, Danish, and English, Bishop Fjellbu voiced gratitude for the help given the occupied countries by the United Nations, and said that Norway and Denmark had been drawn together by common suffering.

Pastor Harold Sandbaek of Northern Jutland, a prominent figure in the Danish underground, who recently reached Sweden after a thrilling escape from the Gestapo, offered a special prayer of intercession. A collection was taken for Christian reconstruction in Norway and Denmark.

CONGREGATIONALISTS PLAN FOLLOW UP

New York (RNS): — After the San Francisco conference closes, Congregational Christian churches will hold "Town Meetings" and "United Nations Nites" in support of the Dumbarton Oaks peace proposals, it was announced here by the Congregational Christian council for social action. The meetings will climax a six-weeks study period on Dumbarton Oaks. Churches holding "Town Meetings" and "United Nations Nites" will forward letters and telegrams to U. S. senators urging them to support treaty proposals which commit the United States to responsible participation in the United Nations. The communications, it was stated, will indicate the number of persons present at the church meetings and the number of those in agreement with the peace proposals.

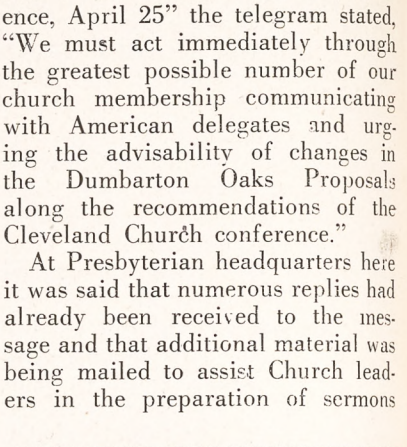
ROMAN CATHOLIC MASS MEETING

San Francisco (RNS):—As a prelude to the United Nations conference Roman Catholics of this city held a mass meeting on April 18th with Monsignor Fulton J. Sheen of Washington speaking on The Moral Basis of Peace. The meeting is said to have been supported by every Roman Catholic organization in the diocese, with the huge civic auditorium packed.

VATICAN MESSAGE TO MOSCOW

London (wireless to RNS):—Edward J. Flynn, personal envoy of President Roosevelt, carried a memorandum from the Vatican on his recent trip to Moscow. It sought clear-cut replies by the Soviet government to three specific propositions regarding East European Roman Catholics, it was learned from an authoritative source. It requested: 1, permission for Rome to send priests immediately to East European countries at present under Soviet occupation; 2, approval for the reopening of Church institutions in these areas; 3, assurances in regard to Russian intentions toward Italian prisoners in the USSR. The reaction of Molotov, Soviet minister of foreign affairs, was that the Soviet government could not specify its attitude toward East European Roman Catholics before determining their sentiments toward Russian occupation authorities. Indications were that while Premier Stalin is anxious to settle the status of Roman Catholics in Poland and other countries so as to avoid tension in these regions, a complicating factor is the strong opposition among Russian and other Orthodox Churches to any dealings with the Pope. Coming to Rome after his Moscow visit, Flynn was hopeful of speedy results from his talks with Russian leaders but had to leave empty-handed when expected replies to the Vatican memorandum failed to arrive from Moscow. He reached London a few days ago from Paris.

Meanwhile Roman Catholic seminaries have been reopened in a number of Polish dioceses according to the Moscow newspapers.



COLLECTIONS ARE GOOD

New York: — Treasurer Lewis B. Franklin of the National Council states that "our first report of collections for the year 1945 is encouraging. Omitting from our calculations the figures of the one diocese which has not yet filed an expectation for 1945 and notwithstanding the fact that eleven dioceses and districts have made no payment, the total payments to date are 112.9% of the amount due after allowing one month for collection."

URGE AMENDMENTS TO PROPOSALS

Philadelphia (RNS):—Moderator Roy Ewing Vale of the Presbyterian Church sent 5,500 telegrams to leaders of the denomination urging them to work for the improvement in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals along the lines recommended by the January conference of the commission on a just and durable peace. The telegrams were sent to all active pastors, college and seminary presidents and to synod and presbytery executives. The bill was paid by a "concerned layman." The wire urged personal appeals to people and appropriate sermons on Dumbarton Oaks on April 15 and 22. "If Christian public opinion is to be most completely felt at the United Nations conference, April 25" the telegram stated, "We must act immediately through the greatest possible number of our church membership communicating with American delegates and urging the advisability of changes in the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals along the recommendations of the Cleveland Church conference."

At Presbyterian headquarters here it was said that numerous replies had already been received to the message and that additional material was being mailed to assist Church leaders in the preparation of sermons and to acquaint members with the recommendations of the Cleveland conference. This conference, as WITNESS readers know, wholeheartedly supported the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, but did suggest nine amendments of a minor character.

Frances Young of the staff at National headquarters will be a leader when four New York dioceses combine for a conference on youth work. The conference meets in Auburn, May 4-5

RECONSTRUCTION DONATIONS

London (wireless to RNS):—Archbishop Fisher of Canterbury and other Church leaders here have proposed that V-E Day be celebrated with services at which collections will be taken for the reconstruction of Churches in Europe. A goal of a million pounds has been set.

Bretton Woods Agreement

THERE are few people who understand finance and banking and we surely do not pretend to. But we do know that the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, which we hope will be ratified at San Francisco, is no more important than the Bretton Woods Agreement which is really a part of it. So we are particularly happy to offer this week an article, written exclusively for THE WITNESS, explaining the agreement by Mr. Dean Acheson, Assistant Secretary of State. Mr. Acheson, as most of our readers doubtless know, is the son of the late Bishop of Connecticut.

Harry D. White, assistant secretary of the treasury and principal author of the plan, put the purpose of the plan very simply; "The ultimate aim of the program can be stated very simply; high levels of employment and rising standards of living." That some bankers object to the plan is to be expected. It is unorthodox and unprecedented and bankers are generally a conservative lot. Then too they are to have less voice and less control than formerly in the ordering of adjustments in currency exchange. So the powerful lobby of the financiers is at work in Congress.

But, as with Dumbarton Oaks, the final answer is in the hands of the people. By the careful reading of Mr. Acheson's article most of us will be able to make up our minds whether the plan is likely to improve the economic well-being of the peoples of the world. For those who want to study the plan in greater detail there are two pamphlets available for the asking from the U. S. Treasury, Bretton Woods, the President's Message to Congress and Bretton Woods Proposals.

As for THE WITNESS we support these Proposals as we have supported Dumbarton Oaks since we are convinced that they rise or fall together. We hope that you will also and that you will let your Congressman and Senators know just as soon as you reach a reasonable conviction on the matter.

Also we call attention to the article by Dr. Henry A. Atkinson in this number. In addition to being the secretary of the important Church Peace Union, Dr. Atkinson was last week named by the Secretary of State to be a Consultant to the United States Delegation.

Let Us Pray

ALMIGHTY God, our Father, in whose hands are the living and the dead, we give Thee thanks for Thy servant, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, who laid down his life in Thy service that justice and peace may be established in our country and throughout the world. Grant to him Thy mercy and the light of Thy presence that the good work which Thou hast begun in him may be perfected. So rule the heart and mind of Thy servant, Harry S. Truman, the President of the United States, that he, knowing whose authority he bears, may faithfully and obediently seek Thy honor and glory; through Jesus Christ, Thy Son our Lord. Amen.

What Do They Mean?

WHAT is the meaning of the figures presented in the article printed on page five this week? Mr. J. V. Blake who sent us the piece is a layman of the diocese of Ohio and was a deputy to four of the General Conventions. He compares statistics of two groups of dioceses in the Fifth Province. We believe his comparisons are fairly made. It must of course be recognized that generalizations are hazardous. There are always exceptions . . . on both sides. Some of the strongest parishes in the A. C. dioceses are "prayer book" parishes. Furthermore there are no doubt some extremely evangelical parishes, here and there, which have lost their grip and are in decline. Our reason for printing the article is that it throws some light on the statement frequently made, "the Anglo-Catholics are sweeping the Church." Anglo-Catholics among our readers are just as much interested in knowing these facts as Evangelical churchmen are. One clear inference that may be drawn from Mr. Blake's figures is that "central" or middle-of-the-road churchmanship is still more vital and alive than the extremer kind . . . in this case, than one extreme, the Anglo-Catholic. It may be equally true that central churchmanship is more vital than the other extreme viz. ultra-low-churchmanship. We would like to know what our readers make of these figures. They surely mean something!

Why the Objection?

JUST WHY representatives of Connecticut colleges, and particularly Church colleges like Trinity and Wesleyan, should object to an anti-discrimination law is hard to understand. Testifying before a committee of the legislation they indicated that they oppose discrimination in the selection of students on the basis of race, creed and color, but stated that they did not discriminate so there should be no law (see page 13). But Yale, Trinity and Wesleyan are not the only colleges in the state. Perhaps others do. If they do not, what are they worried about?

This whole matter of discrimination is, in our judgment, a matter for investigation and a good strong law with teeth in it would supply just that. Maybe these three colleges would establish the fact that there is no discrimination. But frankly we doubt it. And we doubt it because the president of one of these institutions told us not long ago that ten per cent of its total enrollment was about all the Jews it felt able to absorb. That, apparently, is considered discrimination under the terms of the proposed bill. And that, we suspect, is the reason it was opposed by the representatives of these colleges.

United Nations Conference

by Henry A. Atkinson

Secretary of the Church Peace Union and a Consultant to the U. S. Delegates

THE San Francisco Conference will be the most important meeting of our generation. Here, on April 25, 1945, will gather representatives of the United Nations to fill in the outlines of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals for world security and a lasting peace. All our hopes and fears for many years ahead hang upon the success of this meeting. Because people have proverbially short memories, the horrors of war in one generation are forgotten in preparations for a new war in the next. It is this fact that helps to perpetuate the ancient and barbaric habit of making war. History records at the end of each war the birth of a new hope that it will be the last. War has been the principal occupation of man throughout all history, and no one of any intelligence believes that the plans to be considered at San Francisco are something new. Dr. Little of Northwestern University used to say: "History does not actually repeat itself. Events following each other, generation after generation, may seem to move in a circle, but this is an illusion. The issues are not the same and conditions never repeat themselves. The truth is that history moves in a spiral and always upward."

In the effort to prevent war most of the proposals made in our day have been on the table many times before. During the Middle Kingdom a plan for the outlawry of war was promulgated by the Egyptian King that is startlingly similar in many respects to the Briand-Kellogg Pact. It was accepted and put into operation with a considerable degree of success. Under this scheme the Kings and high officials who had been forming "offensive and defensive" alliances agreed to give up war as a national policy and as a means of settling disputes. In the days of Isaiah there was formulated a kind of trade agreement between Assyria, Egypt and Palestine, in which each nation was promised a "square deal" in its economic relations with the others. The Holy Alliance at the end of the Napoleonic Wars was a grandiose effort on the part of Russia, Great Britain, Prussia and Austria, the four greatest powers of the early years of the Nineteenth Century, to maintain their position and prestige by sheer might of arms without regard to human rights. This group of sovereigns proclaimed their sacred purposes in "the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost." The frank purpose of the Alliance was to bolster the tottering thrones of Europe based upon the dying concept of the Divine right of Kings. This purpose was set forth in the treaty establishing the Alliance in these words: "that the four sovereigns should take such means as judged (by them) most salutary for the peace and prosperity of the nations and for the peace of Europe."

The Holy Alliance failed because the French Revolution and its slogan, "Liberty, Equality, Brotherhood," had undermined hoary traditions and the Rights of Man were proclaimed instead of the sacredness of the sovereign. The "fall of the Bastille" not only liberated the prisoners within its walls, but it freed the minds of men of their old warped social and political faiths.

The League of Nations was a most important milestone on the road to international peace. The League failed because it attempted too much. The nations could not or would not live up to their obligations. The control of power was left too much to the judgment of a mass meeting. The machinery to stop aggression was inadequate, but even then it was criticized in our country because it had "too much power." Actually the failure of the League was the failure of the United States to live up to its obligations.

THE San Francisco meeting will be the seventh in a series of conferences held during the war and will be the climax of a new movement for making peace. Never has a peace conference met before the victory has been won. Staff conferences have been held; agreements upon strategy have been secured; purposes and ideals have been set forward, but no statement such as the Atlantic Charter has ever before been drafted and adopted. The Moscow Declaration provided for the "establishment at the earliest practicable date of a general international organization, based on the sovereign equality of all peace-loving states and open to membership by all such states, large and small, for the maintenance of international peace and security."

The Crimea Conference, in addition to making plans for a complete military victory over Germany, reaffirmed the principles of the Atlantic Charter and agreed upon the meeting in San Francisco.

The details of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals should be familiar to us all. Their strength lies in their simplicity and realism. The most important proposals are as follows:

1. There shall be a Security Council, with Great Britain, the Soviet Union, China, the United States, and France as the backbone, each nation to have a permanent seat. In addition there will be elected by the General Assembly six other member states, their seats to be held for a term of two years, three retiring each year. Thus provision will be made for a rotation in membership among the smaller powers. The Council will have one specific responsibility: to maintain international peace and security and to prevent aggression even by the use of armed force, if and when necessary. This force is to be provided by all the nations as agreed upon by the Council; and, through consultation with the states, methods for providing this force and its utilization are to be worked out and agreed upon by all the nations in the world organization. Rules of voting must be established. Many changes have been suggested and more will be brought before the Conference. One of the questions, for instance, is this: suppose one of the five big powers steps out and becomes an aggressor, who will put it back in line? Here is where we, who believe in more than a mere police power to keep the peace, can have an influence. No power on earth and no combination of powers can prevent war, unless the United States, the Soviet Union, and Great Britain do their full share in support of the United Nations, and agree that under no circumstances will they resort to aggression. The methods of voting are secondary considerations. Given the right spirit, everything can be accomplished.

The Dumbarton Oaks Proposals are the best that have been presented to the world, for they gather up in themselves all that is best in the League of Nations, and add to it a touch of reality that the League lacked.

2. In addition to a Security Council there is to be set up an Assembly in which each of the United Nations will have a seat and a vote. This will be the nearest approach to a democratic control that can be devised.

3. There will also be an Economic and Social Council, and it is hoped that a Commission on Human Rights will be added.

4. Provisions are to be made for an International Court of Justice, and for Councils on Conciliation, Arbitration, etc.

We should all familiarize ourselves with the material which will be considered by the delegates to San Francisco. Some weeks ago representatives of the League of Women Voters in a Southern city asked a hundred women picked at random on the main streets of the city, "What do you know about Dumbarton Oaks?" Fifty women replied they had never heard of it; one woman thought it was some new kind of breakfast food but was not certain; another said "a movie actress I guess." An elderly woman replied, "I live in Georgia so I don't know." I have no doubt that the same question might have been asked of an equal number of men or women on the streets of almost any city in America, with about the same results.

The achievements of Dumbarton Oaks can be, and must be, made permanent at San Francisco. We, citizens, are the ones responsible. Almost any plan agreed upon can be effective if we all put behind it our faith and confidence. Without the moral support of all people in all lands, no machinery, however perfect, can be successful.

Our churches and religious people have a grave responsibility for the success of these deliberations. Let us pray, hope, and work, as never before, during these months that our victory in war may be followed by the establishment of a just and lasting peace.

Note:—As announced last week, and as reported in greated detail on page three of this number, the San Francisco Conference will be reported for THE WITNESS by our Managing Editor who is now on his way to San Francisco. Please read the announcement on the back page.

Meaning of Bretton Woods

by Dean Acheson

Assistant Secretary of the State Department

THE Bretton Woods Proposals for a monetary fund and international bank present the United States with the same alternatives it must face in considering any international problem: Are we going to aim at a collective security system in a world organized for peace, or are we going to fall back on the old system of trying to "go it alone"? This is as basic a question in the economic and financial fields as it is in the political and military ones. The proposals made at Bretton Woods are simply an attempt at international organization in the field of money.

During the period between the two world wars we learned that one of the results of the first war had been the destruction of the old international gold system. In the twenties and thirties, nations discovered various monetary devices which they employed to further their own national interests at the expense of other countries. Now, in the midst of this second world war, we know that in the field of international finance the United States can do one of two things: on the one hand we can say that we will play the game of monetary devices and exchange controls, even though in making that choice we must resign ourselves to destroying the economy of other countries and reverting to the law of the jungle. The Bretton Woods Agreements provide the other alternative.

These agreements are the product of constructive thinking by the experts of 44 countries. They point the way from financial chaos and economic warfare toward a new system based on cooperative action. (To push these agreements aside is comparable to a highly complicated irrigation system, calling in the medicine man instead of using the modern equipment of dams.)

The plans drawn up by the experts at Bretton Woods called for the establishment of a Monetary Fund and an International Bank. Since there has been a wide misconception regarding the four principal points relating to the Fund, it might be well to enumerate them.

First, each nation will agree to define its money in terms of gold.

Second, each nation will agree to keep its money within one per cent of its defined exchange value in terms of gold.

Third, each nation will commit itself not to restrict current transaction in its currency. That is, a nation will not prevent its people from buying and selling in order to preserve its exchange.

Fourth, each nation will consult with the Fund whenever a problem comes up which might make it necessary to change in any way the value of its currency.

These points are the basic elements of stability, for a change in the value of particular currency is not only important to the country making the change, but to all countries. When any one country starts tearing the fabric, it goes to pieces.

The Fund will create a big basket of currencies into which each country will put some of its own currency. In that way, any nation belonging to the Fund can come to that basket and obtain the currency of another nation when it has need for it and cannot obtain it as a result of normal trade.

LET us say, for example, that Country A lives by exporting wheat, which it sells in many parts of the world. In turn, it buys its agricultural machinery and various necessities from other countries. In the event of a drought which would mean that for a crop season no wheat could be produced, A would have to stop buying from other countries if it has no foreign exchange reserves. This would start a contracting process, which might ultimately spread over a large part of the world.

With the Monetary Fund in existence, however, Country A can come to the Fund, and draw pounds, or dollars, or francs, or whatever it needs to take care of its buying in the emergency. Then, with normal corps in later years, things will straighten themselves out again. In return for the aid given by the Monetary Fund, Country A puts some of its own currency into the Fund. If no one else wishes to draw on this currency, A must buy it back over a period of time. There will naturally be certain safeguarding provisions to prevent misuse of the Fund's resources by Country A, or any other country.

In the final analysis, the Monetary Fund is a form of collective security in the financial and economic fields. It gives to each country the strength of all members of the fund through means of a common reservoir.

The other, and equally important part of the

Bretton Woods Agreements, is the International Bank. The capital stock of this bank would be subscribed by all of the United Nations, but only 20 per cent of the total subscription would be paid in, while the remaining 80 per cent would be in the form of guarantee. The main function of the bank would be to examine loans which public or private investors wish to make, for either restoration or development projects, in the subscribing countries. If these countries were dealing solely with private bankers, the private banks might feel the risk was too great unless the loans carried unduly high rates of interest. The International Bank, on the other hand, will look at loans from a broader point of view. If a project is considered sound, the International Bank will guarantee the loan made by private banking institutions and it will insist that the government of the borrower's country also put its guarantee on the loan. In the event of a default, the lender would look to the government of the borrower's country and then to the International Bank. By virtue of the participation of many countries in the International Bank, the loss would be spread over the world.

The whole basis of the Bretton Woods Agreements is the conception of collective security and an expanding economy. Clearly, the flow of productive capital into international trade will be of great importance to the post-war world. Unless the war-devastated countries are able to re-establish themselves and to develop and progress economically, they cannot be customers for the great variety of goods produced elsewhere nor can they begin again to produce the goods needed to maintain a healthy and rising standard of living for all the peoples of the world.

Note:—Another article on this subject, "Money and Bretton Woods" also especially written for THE WITNESS will be in our next number. It is by Congressman Jerry Voorhis of California, an Episcopalian.

THE SANCTUARY

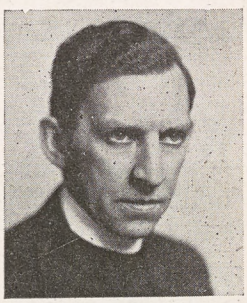
conducted by W. M. Weber

Economy of Abundance

Our sons like plants waved great in their youth,
Our daughters comely, gaily clad in their homes.

Our garners full, overflowing from base to eave;
No breakage, no leakage, no turmoil.

Our flocks in thousands, in myriads in our fields,
Our oxen stalwart, heavy burdened in our streets.



(Praise chorus:)
Happy the people to whom it is thus,
Happy the people whose God is the Lord.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

MR. BLAKE has presented an interesting set of figures in his piece on page five. He asks, as does the editorial in this number, "What do these figures mean?" And my answer is, "Not much."

You can't do a job of reporting by sitting in an office pouring over figures in a book. First of all is there any such thing as a strictly Anglo-Catholic diocese or a Prayer Book Churchmen diocese either, whatever that may mean? Some of the strongest parishes in Chicago for instance could not, by any stretch of the imagination, be called Anglo-Catholic. It is also true that Chicago has just liquidated a large debt which may have affected their giving.

Figures can mean very little. The three Anglo-Catholic parishes in Cleveland that had a loss of 26% in communicants may merely be parishes that are fussier in making reports. I presume most of us have heard of rectors who judge their success by figures and have been known to pad reports sent to diocese headquarters, upon which the figures in the Annual are based. I knew of a city once where there were two fairly large parishes. One was presided over by an ambitious rector. A secretary in the diocesan office was a member of his parish. He would get from her the figures turned in by the rector of the neighboring parish before sending in his own. Then he'd top the other fellow. This went on year after year until the ambitious gent, on the strength of his "success" reports 'twas said, was called to larger fields of usefulness. He's a big-shot rector now.

So too I am not one to believe that the amount of money kicked in to National headquarters indicates failure or success. There are too many factors involved. Why did they not give more? What does headquarters do with the money after they get it? Lots of facts to be dug up there. Figures are not unimportant but it is possible for a parish or a diocese to do a good Christian job even when it reports low figures, either of money or men.

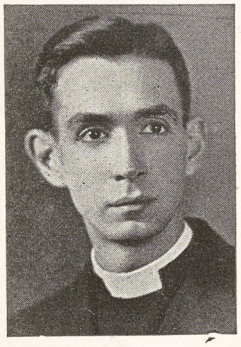
I do not mean that Mr. Blake's article is not an interesting one. It is and I have an idea there will be a lot of chinwagging over it. What I mean is that good reporting calls for a lot of leg-work and telephone calls . . . in this case getting as near as possible to all the facts behind the figures before drawing any conclusions.



Anyhow I'm on my way to San Francisco where, if there are fights, they will at least be important.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

"Let Us Give Thanks"

WE CHRISTIANS inherited from Judaism the sense of the sacredness of meals — that they fulfill not only physical and social needs, but also bear a spiritual signification. The table grace before and after meals consecrates them, as it were, as sacrifices of thanksgiving to the Father who sustains us in all our wants of physical health and social companionship. And by these blessings over His gifts our fellowship with Him is continually renewed that thereby we may be strengthened more and more in the life of service.

In a little book entitled The Ceremonies of Judaism Professor Abraham Idelsohn of Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati has this to say of Jewish "Table Ceremonies":

> "Before all meals at which bread is served (it being considered the main part of a meal) the Jew is obliged to wash his hands and while doing so, to pronounce a benediction, because he is to be purified for the table as a priest for the altar on which sacrifices are made. Therefore a certain sanctity attaches to the meal. A benediction must be recited over bread, which is frequently dipped in salt as a remembrance of the way the sacrifices used to be salted. 'If three have eaten at a table and have spoken there no words of Torah [i.e., the Old Testament Law], it is as if they had eaten of sacrifices to dead idols' (Ethics of the Fathers 3:4). After the meal, on weekdays, Psalm 137 and grace are chanted."

It was in such a context that our Lord instituted the Eucharist. And so the meal of God's family, the Church, became the normative mode of its worship and sacrifice of praise and communion whenever it assembled together to hear and receive His holy Word.

Thus the heart of the Eucharistic service is the act of "returning thanks," which we call the Prayer of Consecration. Its form is directly developed from the Jewish benedictions at table, which, like all Jewish benedictions, are prayers of praise addressed to God. It is quite probable that our Lord used at the Last Supper these ancient benedictions over bread and wine when "he gave thanks": "Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King Eternal, who bringest forth bread from the earth"; "Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King Eternal, who createst the fruit of the vine." After these blessings, when He administered to His disciples the bread and wine, He gave them a new signification by associating them with His Body and Blood offered for us in sacrifice. So when Christians gather at table and bid one another to "give thanks unto our Lord God" they bless the Father not only as the Creator and Provider of "gifts and creatures of bread and wine," but supremely for the redemptive "benefits procured unto us by the same."

But our table graces are not always in the form of a thanksgiving, such as, "For these and all His mercies, God's holy Name be praised and thanked." Oftentimes we invoke a blessing from Him upon the food and all who share in it: "Bless this food to our use and us to thy loving service." The invocation is, too, an ancient and universal form for the consecrating of material creatures to spiritual purposes. It requests the deity to identify himself with what is offered by taking it into his possession and making it instrumental to his person. So in our Eucharist we invoke the merciful God to bless, by the power of His creative and life-giving Word and by the Holy Spirit of unity and charity, the gifts which we offer, to make them instruments of His grace and the means of binding us to the Person of His Son in one Body. And in our "return of thanks" again after the sacred meal we ask that through this holy fellowship now established we may be assisted to perform that service in good works prepared for those who would walk after Him in the strength of His sustenance.

Trinity College Opposes Law To End Discrimination

Church College Joins with Representatives Of Yale and Wesleyan in Opposing the Bill

Edited by W. B. Spofford

Hartford: — Representatives of Yale, Trinity and Wesleyan appeared before a committee of the Connecticut legislature to oppose a proposed law to prohibit discriminations against students because of race, color or creed on penalty of losing present property tax exemptions. Speaking for Yale, F. H. Higgins said that the bill implied that discrimination was being practiced under the present system of admitting students. Attacking the bill as "vicious" and "preposterous," he said the bill if enacted would infringe upon the rights of colleges to select students. Arthur H. Huges, dean of Trinity, Episcopal Church college, likewise said the proposed bill implied the existence of discrimination and declared that such was not the case at Trinity. Richard T. Steele, representing Wesleyan, asserted that "you can't legislate against discrimination." The bill was supported by Margaret E. Connors of Bridgeport, legislative agent for the CIO. She gained prominence in the last election when she ran for Congress against Claire Boothe Luce but was defeated by a narrow margin. Others, several of them representing Church groups, also supported the bill.

Steak and Sinner

Shreveport, La.:—Steak fry evangelistic gatherings to make 100,000 new converts to Christ and the Church, has been proposed by the Rev. M. E. Dodd, director of the evangelistic crusade of the Southern Baptists. "Bring a steak and a sinner" is to be the slogan, with nice juicy steaks cooked over large grills while the band plays "Old Time Religion." Sounds good. Someone supply me with the steak points and I'll bring it myself, thus supplying both the steak and the sinner.

Young Adults

Buffalo: — A Young Adult's League has been organized in the diocese of Western New York, following a suggestion of Bishop Davis that the Church ought to do something for the age group of 20 to 35. It got under way at the cathedral on April 9th with the showing of the army picture, Battle in Russia. A second meeting is soon to be held when the organization will be completed.

Prayer Banned

London (wireless to RNS):—A ban on corporate prayer, imposed by the new Roman Catholic Bishop of Nottingham, has led to dissolution of the Leicester Christian Council, formed three years ago by representatives of the Anglican, Roman Catholic and Free Churches. A statement issued by the Protestant groups said the ban, which included corporate silent prayer, caused difficulties which convinced them that it was impossible to continue the Council.

Social Security

Washington (RNS):—A bill providing that the social security act be amended to permit the coverage of ministers and other employees of churches and religious organizations has been introduced in Congress by Senator Langer of North Dakota. It has been referred to the committee on finance. The General Convention of 1943 favored such action for lay employees but did not include the clergy since they have the benefits of the Church Pension Fund.

Washington Festival

Washington: — Dean John W. Suter of Washington Cathedral has announced a religious festival to be held at the Cathedral, May 10-13. It is the first of its kind to be held in this country, though precedent can be found in the great fairs held in English cathedral towns for centuries. In addition to the services there will be numerous exhibits in the field of architecture, art and allied subjects, musical programs and an outdoor field day by the students of the cathedral schools.

One of the services will be in the interest of unity, with Bishop Bell of Chichester, the Rev. Marc Boegner of France and the Rev. W. A. Visser 't Hooft of the World Council of Churches taking part. Bishop Angus Dun and the Rev. Frederick B. Harris, Methodist minister who is chaplain of the Senate, are among those announced as preachers during the festival.

Post War Problems

Detroit: — Mrs. Helen Mahon of Toledo was the speaker at a joint meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary and the Girls' Friendly Society, meeting here March 26th. She is on the national boards of both organizations. There were about 200 present to hear her address on vocations in the post-war world.

Union Meetings

London (wireless to RNS):—A group of Anglicans, Lutherans, and Orthodox were invited to an Easter Week conference, from March 29 to April 9, at St. John's Parish Church at Tideswell in Derbyshire. The meeting was arranged by the Rt. Rev. Alfred Edward John Rawlinson, Bishop of Derby, to give the groups an opportunity "to contrast and appreciate the value of their respective traditions in a setting of common worship, study, and fellowship."

Participants, both laymen and clergy, did have a chance to hear all the characteristic Lenten and Easter services of the three communions. Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians was that chosen as the special subject of study.

Bohlen Lectures

Philadelphia:—The Rev. Norman W. Pittenger of the General Seminary faculty is to give the Bohlen lectures at the Philadelphia Divinity School, May 15, 17, 22 and 24. The Church Which Is His Body is his subject.

Ordained at Sixty

Louisville, Ky.: — An interesting and unusual ordination took place at Christ Church Cathedral on March 21, when Bishop Clingman conferred deacon's orders on J. Farrand Williams. Retired from business as a wholesale druggist in Detroit, Mr. Williams had served as lay reader and Sunday school superintendent at Trinity mission for the past two years. He was a member of the cathedral chapter and the department of promotion of the diocese of Kentucky, and is on the Louisville Council of Churches committee on the General Hospital of Louisville. He served as lay reader at St. George's in Louisville, and is now deacon in charge of that parish. He is also assisting Archdeacon Weaver at St. Paul's parish. Mr. Williams is approaching the age of 60, so has joined the unusual ranks of perpetual deacons. He has been very active in Masonry, having held high posts, and he himself is a 33rd degree Mason.

Mason Elected

Dallas, Texas:—The Rev. C. Avery Mason, director of Forward in Service, was elected bishop coadjutor of Dallas on April 10th. The election was on the tenth ballot. He has not yet indicated whether he will accept.

C. O.'s Contribute

Philadelphia:—Greater control of jaundice, malaria, and typhus, is the result of experiments in which conscientious objectors have been serving as human 'guinea pigs,' according to reports received here from many parts of the world. Techniques of using DDT have been developed in tests performed on conscientious objectors. DDT is the powder that has halted or prevented epidemics of typhus. As typhus is known to be spread by lice, the C. O.'s voluntarily carried lice in their clothing for several weeks, so that the life span of the vermin and the effects of the various powders on them could be studied.

Several CO experiments have aimed to discover the causes of jaundice. Two of them are now going on. They involve artificial exposure to the disease and require living and eating in closest contact with filth, to simulate conditions in devastated areas, where jaundice is most prevalent. Also valuable have been the current malaria experiments in which the properties of curatives have been tried out on men who have been infected by malarial mosquitoes brought from the South Pacific.

More Social Work

Chicago:—Need for theological schools to include required courses in social work to prepare ministers for "the changing realities of contemporary living" was stressed here by the association of Church social workers. Making known the results of a study of catalogues from 100 leading theological seminaries, the association revealed that 10 schools offered 11 to 28 courses in social work, 24 offered 5 to 10 courses, 32 from one to four courses, and the remaining 34 no courses. A check of the courses listed as "required," it said, was "far from encouraging" for it showed that the majority of catalogues stated no requirement beyond a course in sociology, usually included in entrance requirements. About one-third of the schools required a course in Christian ethics, while more than one third of the bulletins made no requirement either in ethics, sociology or social work.

The association observed that "it is still possible, even in the case of many of the forward-looking schools, for a student to complete his theological education without having taken a single course in the field of social work," and added that "in the majority of schools, this seems to be the usual rather than the exceptional thing. While theological schools seem to value courses in the field of social work as 'electives' rather than as basic preparations for pastoral service," it said, "it becomes apparent whenever ministers and social workers meet together for discussion that ministers have not been educated to sense the value of social work and the church's relation to it."

Negro Leader

Raleigh, N. C. (RNS):—A Negro pastor has been elected president of the southern provincial council of the Congregational-Christian Churches. This is an interracial planning body of white and colored conferences. He is the Rev. William M. Lake of Graham, N. C.

French Relief

New York (RNS):—Five young people have been chosen from Protestant Churches to visit France for work with the Comite Inter-Mouvements aupres des Evacues, in its relief and rehabilitation program. They are Charlotte Califf of Jeffersontown, Ky.; Hyla Stuntz and Robert Tobias, both of Union Seminary; the Rev. B. Gibson Lewis Jr. of Glendale, Ohio, and the Rev. R. W. Teeuwissen of San Francisco. It has also been announced that Robert A. Root, newsman, is to be sent to Geneva as special correspondent for the World Council of Churches. He will interpret European Church news for the American religious press.

Churches Destroyed

London (wireless to RNS):—Nearly 5000 churches were destroyed in France between 1939 and 1945, according to reports here. The district of Aveyron is the only area where church property escaped damage. More than 11,500,000 francs have already been distributed to meet urgent church needs in 42 devastated dioceses, including Rouen, Rennes, Bayeux, Amiens, and Nancy. The money was raised by agencies set up after the last war to help restore parish life in war-affected areas. Donations for church relief have come from all parts of France and from the United States, but the amount collected is said to represent only a fraction of what is needed. In the dioceses of Carthage and Tunis alone, church losses are computed at nearly a billion francs.

Honor Dr. Cowling

Northfield, Minn.:—A dinner in honor of Donald J. Cowling, for thirty-six years the president of Carleton College, is to be held on May 14th. He is to retire at the end of the present academic year. He became president of the institution in 1909 at the age of twenty-eight and was probably the youngest college president in the country. Under his administration Carleton has become one of the recognized liberal arts institutions in the United States.

The college was founded by Congregationalists, and Dr. Cowling is a minister of that denomination, but the institution has always been nonsectarian and maintains close relations with the Episcopal Church.

Better Race Relations

New York:—The Congregational-Christian Churches are sponsoring a series of regional institutes on race relations this spring in Jackson, Miss., New Orleans and Atlanta. They will hold a national race relations institute in July.

Millions of Books

New York:—A total of 6,920,538 scripture volumes, which include Bibles, New Testaments and portions of the Bible, has been supplied to the armed forces during the war by the American Bible Society. In addition over a million volumes in forty different languages have been furnished to prisoners of war in many countries.

Interesting Work

New York:—At the urgent request of the Japanese Radio Section of the PWB, Bishop Norman S. Binsted of the Philippines has agreed to give some time each day to helping in that work. Bishop Binsted has notified the Overseas Department of the National Council, explaining that "their work is all in the Japanese language and they require a Japanese-speaking American to check over the translations before they are released. Unfortunately there are very few here who are qualified to do this, so I feel compelled to help them as much as my other work will permit."

Bishop Binsted advised further that Miss Nellie McKim and Miss Helen Boyle will remain in Manila until the first of May, to assist in the same work, under the Office of War Information.

Don't Pull Strings

Washington: — Chaplain Roger Barney, formerly the rector at North Conway, N. H., and Chaplain J. F. Hammond, formerly a Roman Catholic priest of Flushing, N. Y. were digging in for the night at Iwo Jima. Their spot was an abandoned Japanese gun emplacement. Father Hammond noticed a string leading into the ground and impairing the comfort of the foxhole so he cut it. Over the opening into which the string led he placed his makeshift pillow. For two nights the chaplains slept in comfort. Then the bomb disposal squad came along. One of the men took a look at the mysterious string and gave a yell. In two minutes he cleared out the chaplains and began investigating. Under Father Hammond's pillow he discovered a box of explosives, ready to go off at a tug of the string. He had been sleeping over the biggest booby trap that has so far been discovered on the island.

Bishop Atwood Dies

Washington:—Bishop Julius W. Atwood died here on April 10th in his 87th year. He was the Bishop of Arizona from 1911 to 1925.

Book of Friendship

London (wireless to RNS):—Children of the Streatham Hill Congregational Sunday school in London have prepared A Book of Friendship, designed for children of American Sunday schools as a contribution to international friendship. The volume, providing an interesting social survey of Britain as seen through the eyes of 10 to 12-year-old children, is leatherbound,

150th Anniversary

New York:—The Presiding Bishop was the preacher on April 8th at St. Mark's-in-the-Bouwerie, starting a series of services which mark the 150th anniversary of the laying of the cornerstone of the present building. Long before the existence of the present St. Mark's the site was memorable. Peter Stuyvesant had his chapel here as early as 1660 and he and many of his descendants are buried beneath the church. The present rector of the parish is the Rev. Richard E. McEvoy.

Welcome Nisei

New York (RNS): — Integration of resettled Japanese-Americans into Caucasian Churches in the west is proceeding "in an encouraging degree" says the Rev. Galen R. Weaver, pastor of an interracial church in Honolulu. He recently completed a field study for the commission on minority peoples of the Federal Council of Churches. He estimated that about 10 per cent of the resettled Japanese-Americans have affiliated with churches in the communities in which they have made their homes. A number have become Sunday school teachers, members of church choirs, and have joined in regular church activities. A few have been elected officers of church bodies. One Nisei clergyman has been appointed assistant minister in a Chicago Baptist church, Dr. Weaver reported, and about twelve are serving churches in other capacities.

Weaver said the Church's immediate task is to aid the resettlement of family units still in relocation centers, and that since many of these are Buddhists, church groups "need to develop real concern and extend helpfulness to Buddhists as well as Christian families."

From Philippines

New York: — Chaplain Robert C. Smith, S.S.J.E., is with American troops in Zamboanga, Philippine Islands. He wrote Presiding Bishop Tucker about Church property there, saying, "I could find no trace of either church. Finally after much walking and questioning, I discovered the school and hospital. It would be more accurate to state that I discovered what used to be the school and hospital. Nothing whatsoever of the hospital remains. The building was bombed so thoroughly that only the concrete foundation pillars remain standing. Among the debris of ruined beds, the rock, and fragments of equipment, I picked up a piece of broken tile which I hope to be able to get back to the States.

"The school was partially destroyed, American soldiers were cleaning up some of the debris and I suppose some unit of the army will be quartered in it. The sign in front remains intact. At the side of the school I discovered a pile of material and in it a copy of the Book of Common Prayer, and two copies of the old hymnal. Needless to say I shall treasure them. In the same pile I found hospital records including a ledger, patients' cards and pay roll forms. The building showed evidence that Japanese soldiers had been quartered there. Most of the furniture was gone, and broken phonographs, textbooks, and a piano were outside the school. In the ruins of the hospital I saw a small, white, child's chair. Its emptiness, amid the rubble, seemed an invitation and challenge to us to begin all over again when this tragic war is over."

To Honor Churchmen

New York:—A mass meeting in honor of three European Churchmen will be held at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine on May 17th. They are Bishop Bell of Chichester, the Rev. W. A. Visser 't Hooft, general secretary of the World Council of Churches, and the Rev. Marc Boegner, president of the French Protestant Federation. All three are members of the provisional committee of the World Council and are to visit the United States to confer with American members on problems of post-war relief.

Operate Radio

Alaska:—From the Rev. Henry H. Chapman of Christ Church, Anvik, Alaska, comes an instance of how radio and airplane now relieve suffering in a way not dreamed of when Mr. Chapman's father began his work there in 1887. At that time there was hardly more than one mail a year and no other means of communication for this isolated region along the southern Yukon River. Mr. and Mrs. Chapman are both licensed radio operators. The operator at Flat calls the Chapmans twice a day, at noon and 3, and calls the Jesuit Mission at Holy Cross at 11. When a man at Anvik broke his leg one evening recently and the mission nurse found it was too bad a break for her to handle, Mr. Chapman sent out calls at once but no one at that hour was listening to his frequency. Next morning he got in touch with Brother Feltes of Holy Cross and reported the emergency. Holy Cross at once tried to get Flat but Flat had just gone off the air until noon. Both at noon and at 3 reception was so bad that Flat could not hear Anvik, but Holy Cross was standing by, and at 3:15 relayed Anvik's difficulty to the goyernment hospital at Bethel. At 6 a plane and a nurse from Bethel arrived at Anvik and carried the patient away.

Aid to Veterans

New York (RNS): — During the past year eleven local federations of churches have set up departments to aid returning servicemen. They are in Boston, Chicago, Portland, Ore., Seattle, Denver, St. Louis, San Francisco, Los Angeles, New York, Philadelphia and Washington. All have appointed secretaries to help churches understand the needs of the men and to guide local churches in organizing programs and services. In Chicago, New York and Los Angeles the department also offers personal counselling services. The Detroit and Minneapolis councils also will soon name directors for similar work.

Ministers Speak Out

Seattle (RNS):—A group of ministers here, organized as an association, have gone on record "opposing the un-American and un-Christian attitude of the self-appointed leaders of a movement to eject all American citizens of Japanese descent from our country." The resolution declares that "The proposed action is so contrary to the spirit and letter of the constitution and the higher national ideals that we feel all good citizens of our nation should join in opposing the Fascist, racist philosophy and its proposed nazified action. It expresses a racial discrimination which we have strongly condemned in other countries, and which must be eliminated speedily if world organization for peace is to have a chance. We believe that our sons have fought and died for justice, equality, and

Due to the Japanese invasion of nearby areas the work of the Mission has had to be greatly expanded. Yet there is greater difficulty in financing the work due to inflation.

Individual Church men and women, young people's organizations, parish groups, are urged to help in this vital work.

peace throughout the world, and it is unthinkable that we at home should be false to these ideals for which we asked them to pay so high a price."

Need of Help

New York: — Episcopalian Paul B. Anderson, senior secretary of the YMCA in Europe, recently returned from a four-months' tour of France and told Religious News Service that while major needs are food, clothing and transport, one of the chief demands is for more Americans to assist in the rehabilitation of the country. He listed several categories of persons who are in greatest need of help. They include the 1,300,000 persons whose homes were completely or partly destroyed by bombings; the 1,700,000 evacuees who were brought from the north to the south of France, or who were moved from war areas before D-Day; and the families of 70,000 persons killed during the campaign of 1940, and 230,000 killed in bombings by Allied planes. In addition, there are the families of 1,850,000 war prisoners, approximately half of whom are still in Germany; and the families of 570,000 deportees and 706,000 forced laborers. Returning prisoners and deportees will also need assistance when they return to their homes.

Seek Union

London (wireless to RNS):—A move to seek closer union between the Presbyterian and Congregational Churches was initiated here by the latter denomination's general council. The proposal will be submitted to the assembly of the Presbyterian Church and, if acceptable, twelve representatives from each Church will meet in joint conference, authorized at its discretion to prepare a scheme of union for submission to both parent bodies.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

THE REV. JOHN T. GOLDING
Rector at Gloucester, Mass.

I get a great kick out of THE WITNESS. Beyond all doubt, it seems to me the best of all our Church papers. Occasionally the extreme party bias of some of the editorials gets in my hair but that is probably good for me. I do wish, however, that THE WITNESS would continue to stress fundamental issues and quit attacking individuals and groups within the Church with whom the editors do not happen to agree. One of our bishops who is really a great leader in the Church, tells me that he stopped—sometime ago—reading all Church papers, because all of them were entirely too partisan in one direction or the other. I think THE WITNESS is gradually getting away from this kind of thing and when it does, believe me, you cannot stop it.

After all, I sometimes wonder if psychology and psychiatry do not throw a revealing light upon much of our party bickering within the Church. Although our varying attitudes toward the Christian religion do tend to separate us into party groups, it is not so much theology that divides us as personal antipathy. Most rabid Protestant Episcopalians that I have ever met invariably have had to deal with an unpleasant Anglo-Catholic at some time in their past. And vice versa, many A.C.'s cannot forget the stupid and ill-informed attitude of some P.E. If we could only practise a little healthy psycho-analysis on both sides I think there would be a good deal less name-calling and consequently more genuine harmony. The fact is, the great body of our people, both clergy and laity, are not interested in party emphasis. There is bound to be such emphasis but if we would all try to "see ourselves as others see us" and get down to bed-rock together, the Church might take a really significant part in molding our common life in the post-war world. And if we don't do this, God help us.

REV. CHARLES E. CRAIK JR.
Rector of Emmanuel, Louisville

Your editorial in the Easter number made the usual mistake of using the Palm Sunday throng and the mob that cried "Crucify him" as an example of the fickleness of crowds. Obviously they were two different groups. Those who cried "Hosannah" were the enthusiastic pilgrims who had come down with our Lord from the north country. Those who were swayed by the temple priests were obviously the city rabble.

MR. F. C. PETERS
Layman of Philadelphia

Several weeks ago you printed a letter in Backfire from a soldier who stated that he was a member of a group meeting regularly for discussion of world issues, and that they would like to have copies of THE WITNESS. I am enclosing my check for $5 which will enable you to send ten copies to him for ten weeks.

ANSWER: Many thanks. We have many requests, particularly from chaplains, for copies. Whenever possible we send them a bundle of ten for whatever use they can make of them. But it is impossible for us to meet all these requests without the help of readers. So we are starting, with this gift from Mr. Peters, a Chaplain's Copies Fund, where we will list donations sent for this purpose. It will be found on page eighteen.

VALENCIA RAUP
Churchwoman of Englewood, Colorado

Your coy article about Readers Digest certainly rings the bell as your best, or is it worst, patter (WITNESS, March 29). When last October you started howling for buck-toothed Wallace your slip showed and it was red. Now you expose your hand with your quaint method of handling the book by William L. White. Why don't you, W. B. Spofford, shake off your ecclesiastical trappings, take off a brief period and personally visit Russia and Stalin. Then you could write an unbiased —if you could—article on the subject. During your absence a sparrow could comfortably nest in your little niche, thereby utilizing the space for some good. THE WITNESS holds the all high in being anything by an Episcopalian news sheet. But with the reading of each copy I look forward to the next issue, wondering if it will be as ludicrous as the previous leaflet.

MRS. IRVING A. EVANS
St. Andrew's School, Barrington, R. I.

The Rev. Mr. Kolb's article on children in rectories interested me immensely (WITNESS, April 5). I believe there is much truth in what he writes. My husband, the headmaster and rector of St. Andrew's School, and I are parents of six healthy grown children; two are ordained ministers; one is a printer; one daughter teaches and the other two are still in school. We are grateful for the joy these healthy youngsters have brought to our home. Through their music and fun we have learned to live.

SAN FRANCISCO CONFERENCE

"Once again civilization is given an opportunity to create an organization of nations whose purpose will be to establish peace on earth. It is vital that as many as can be reached must have an opportunity to understand the aims of the San Francisco Conference. There must be unlimited facilities for public discussion of the proposals first outlined at Dumbarton Oaks and now to be carried forward at the Golden Gate."

—Governor Thomas E. Dewey.

Agreeing with this statement, and many similar to it issued by prominent leaders, THE WITNESS is sending its Managing Editor to San Francisco to report the Conference. In addition to the reports of Mr. Spofford, THE WITNESS will carry the reports of Dr. T. Otto Nall of Religious News Service. Likewise we plan to feature interviews with leaders at the Conference, particularly those who approach the tremendous problems to face the delegates from a Christian point of view.

We urge Rectors and others to have copies available for distribution during the Conference. Many parishes have already organized Action Groups for discussion and whatever action in their judgement is called for.

Bishop of Liberia Consecrated In Southern Virginia

Bishop Penick Is the Preacher at Historic Service Held in Crowded Church in Norfolk

By Shelton Hale Bishop
Rector of St. Philips, New York

Norfolk, Va.:—It was a gloriously bright morning here on Tuesday last when people from many parts of the East and South began to gather at the Church of Christ and St. Luke for the consecration of the Rev. Bravid Washington Harris to be Bishop of the Missionary District of Liberia. The service was scheduled for 10:30 a.m., but by 9 o'clock there were one hundred or more people standing close about the entrance doors waiting for them to open. They were all colored people, of course, for was not "one of their own" going to be advanced to the highest office in the Episcopal Church. These were earnest, faithful Church people who had come from North Carolina, and from as far north as New York by car, by train, by boat, by plane. There was joyous and grateful excitement that with the strong breeze seemed to reflect their high mood.

This was more than that their friend was being elevated to the Episcopate. They were standing on the edge of Stockley Gardens, Norfolk; they were going to worship in this magnificent church, and there were to be no corners and back seats to which they would be motioned today. Today was a sign of the new world for which they lived and somehow the Rev. Mr. Harris was the symbol of what could come and he had made it all pretty much possible for them.

The Church was filled with more than 1,200 people when the Crucifer from Grace Church, where Mr. Harris had been rector for nearly twenty years, moved in at the head of the procession. (It must have been a wonderful day for that Norfolk lad.) Behind him were the flag-bearers, the choirs from St. Paul Polytechnic Institute in Lawrenceville, Virginia (who had come together by bus), and from Grace Church. They were followed by the students from Bishop Payne Divinity School in Petersburg, Virginia, and the visiting clergy, more than sixty of the Negro clergy, Florida to New York, and twenty-five other clergy mostly from the diocese of Southern Virginia. It was tremendously impressive to see so many brother clergy come to show their appreciation of all this day meant. Then followed the Bishops with the Bishop-elect in his striking rochet of egg-shell rayon. What a picture of a bit of the Kingdom on earth— what at least looked like Christian fellowship set out in a divisive world, and set down in the heart of Southern Virginia — black and white, side by side, in the chancel, in the pews, among the clergy and laity; the Presiding Bishop and Bishop Harris communicating colored and white alike kneeling side by side from the same paten and the same chalice. And here too, though few knew it, were the colored and white aristocracy as well as many a humble soul not belonging to the Church who had gotten a job, or release from jail, or five dollars that started him on a decent life, from this man standing up there in the middle aisle more covered with white than they thought any man could be.

Bishop Penick went to the pulpit to preach. This was a day for a message! "In the day that King Uzziah died, I saw the Lord sitting upon a throne high and lifted up." There was an unspecified reference to President Roosevelt's death, a description of the times in which the Hebrew king died and the shock that fell upon the people. Summoned into the temple Isaiah saw his vision. The religious leadership to which he was called had four steps: the sense of God's prevailing presence, purging from sin following a sense of unworthiness, conciousness of his neighbor and his neighbor's need, and his own surrender. Then the preacher turned to the Bishop-elect and said, in part: "Your elevation to the Bishop's office is the Church's seal of approval upon your personal traits of character and the high quality of your success in a new and pioneering field. . . . We have confidence that, under God, you will interpret Christ to all men, and especially to the members of your own great race.

Bishop Bravid W. Harris who became the Bishop of Liberia when he was consecrated in Norfolk on April 17th

And what is more, we believe that you are possessed of gifts that will enable the Negro to discover his own genius as a child of God, as he has not yet discovered it (italics mine) and make his own contribution toward the fulness of truth." And that was all!

Bishop Darst, Dr. John Johnson and Mr. Winston Douglas of Grace Church, read the necessary testimonials. Bishop Powell of Maryland read the Litany and very shortly thereafter all the Bishops present, twelve in number, including Bishop Baddeley of Melanesia and Bishop Demby, retired Bishop Suffragan of Arkansas, who with Bishop Juhan had been respectively Epistler and Gospeler, laid their hands on Bravid Harris and by the grace of the Holy Spirit he became the eighth Bishop of Liberia. The Presiding Bishop proceeded then with the Celebration of the Holy Communion. The special offering taken at the Service was for the work of Bishop Harris at his discretion in his new field and the combined choirs, with Miss Jeannette Cole, choral director at St. Paul's Polytechnic Institute, at the organ, sang two anthems.

Immediately after the service a luncheon was served in the diocesan house directly behind the church. It has been prepared jointly and was served by the committee of women from Christ and St. Luke Church and Grace Church. Here was further testimony of the accord and easy fellowship that ruled the day. While the more than 250 guests were served, several presentations were made to Bishop Harris, and Bishop Brown was a most gracious and jovial host. The gifts included an Episcopal ring presented by Dr. Edson Blackman of Charlotte, N. C. from the alumni of St. Augustine's College. Three gifts of money totalling $1,225 from white lay friends in Norfolk and Portsmouth, communicants of Grace Church, and from the churches with Negro congregations in Southern Virginia. The Episcopal vestments were donated by the Negro clergy. The Bishop's agenda came from the staff of the division of domestic missions, a Prayer Book and Hymnal, from Circle 2 of the Woman's Auxiliary of Grace Church, and the Bible used at the service, by the Bishop and Negro clergy of North Carolina.

Altogether it was a revolutionary day in the Church and in the hearts of many people beyond the borders of that Southern Virginia city.

BRITISH PRIMATE ENTHRONED

Canterbury:—Geoffrey F. Fisher, the Archbishop of Canterbury, was enthroned on April 19th in a colorful ceremony, reminiscent of the one held when William Temple was elevated to this high office. Attending the ceremony as the representative of the Episcopal Church was Bishop Sherrill of Massachusetts and Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, Methodist Bishop, represented the American Federal Council of Churches. Both of these Bishops are to visit Europe at once, the latter visiting chaplains and troops in the Mediterranean area while Bishop Sherrill will make like visits in the European theatre. Other dignitaries present at the enthronement were Archbishop Germanos of the Greek Orthodox Church, the Rev. Marc Boegner of the French Protestant Federation and acting Bishop Arne Fjellbu of the liberated areas of Norway. The Polish, Serbian, Ethiopian, Swedish, Finnish, Armenian and Danish Churches were represented by their London chaplains.

Those of you who are newspaper-minded and interested in release dates should know that someone jumped the gun on the story. The affair was a carefully guarded secret for security reasons. Nazis still are able to drop bombs, and might conceivably welcome the chance to drop a few on a flock of notable Church leaders. Our press relations department at 281 therefore was careful to state on the story "For release on or after Friday, April 20." THE WITNESS knew that the event was to take place, and that Bishop Sherrill and Bishop Oxnam were to attend, on April 2nd. We asked two officers of the Federal Council of Churches when was the earliest time we could run the story. They emphatically said — again stressing security — "your issue dated April 26." However the New York papers and presumably other papers carried the news on April 17th. We think we know who is guilty of the slip. In any case it is not our press department at 281, and certainly this time nobody is going to accuse us of breaking a release date.

DEEPEST SYMPATHY IS EXPRESSED

New York:—The Archbishop of Canterbury, Geoffrey Fisher, has cabled the Presiding Bishop in regard to President Roosevelt's death, expressing on behalf of the Church of England "deepest sympathy with the Episcopal Church and with the American people." The Archbishop adds, "The President's outstanding Christian faith and courage and his leadership in the Allied cause are a world-wide inspiration and strength. We praise God for his life, grieve for his death, and pray that Christian principles for which he strove with rock-like fidelity may prevail among men."

From Scotland the Bishop of Aberdeen, Herbert Hall, cables the Presiding Bishop: "The Bishop and diocese of Aberdeen tender respectful sympathy to the Episcopal Church of the United States, whose first bishop was consecrated in Aberdeen, upon the lamented death of the distinguished president and churchman." Bishop Hall's reference is to Samuel Seabury, whose consecration took place in Aberdeen Nov. 14, 1784; he was bishop of Connecticut and first bishop in the American Episcopal Church.

CANON R. J. MORRIS IS DEAD

Philadelphia: — Canon Richard Jones Morris, for many years the secretary of the convention of the diocese of Pennsylvania, died on April 15th. He was chaplain to Bishop Rhinelander and secretary to Bishop Garland and Bishop Taitt.

St. Andrew's a Unique School Of the Episcopal Church

The Boys Not Only Run a Successful Farm But Construct Buildings as Well as Study

By Rita Rubin

Barrington, R. I.:—An Episcopal Church School where boys are farmers, carpenters, cooks and various other things besides students is unusual but this is what a fine lot of boys are at St. Andrew's School. This school, founded by the Rev. William Merrick Chapin in 1893, is at present directed by the Rev. Irving Andrews Evans who is both rector and headmaster. Addressing a group of alumni and friends recently he told of how the boys had a tough time with their crops last year, as indeed did all Rhode Island farmers. But by working twice as hard they filled the barns with hay, a silo with good corn that was cut on the day of the severe hurricane that swept the east, and the bins with good potatoes.

"Our herd," said Mr. Evans, "is now producing sufficient milk to provide at least a quart of milk each day for each boy and a thousand hens have kept the fresh eggs and poultry supply at an adequate level."

The boys feed heifers, sheep, hogs, goats and chickens, care for horses and tractors — in other words learn by doing and have a swell time at it. There is carpentry too with the boys this year constructing under the direction of a member of the faculty a fine dairy house, later furnished with all the necessary equipment for clean and safe handling of milk. It is a good-looking building, constructed in harmony with the other property at the farm, and is conveniently located a few feet from the barn in the center of the rotary driveway. There is a long room on the front for receiving, cooling, pasteurizing and chilling the milk, with a walk-in refrigerating box in the middle, for milk, butter, poultry, etc. Entered from the back near the barn, is the milk receiving-room where the boys will bring their milk pails and pour the raw milk through strainers and through the wall into the front room for pasteurizing. There are to be adequate facilities for washing, steam-sterilizing of pails, cans, etc. A third room, well sealed from the others, provides space for the high pressure oil-burning boiler to be used to provide steam for the pasteurizer, hot water and steam for washing utensils and for heating the building in winter. The dairy is also equipped with a proper drainage system, electric lights, private phone to the farmhouse and barn and was enthusiastically approved by the representatives of the state department of dairy inspection.

But it is not merely the joy of creative work that the boys get at St. Andrew's. Ever since the war the essential war subjects of mathematics, aeronautics, physics, chemistry, electricity and kindred subjects have been stressed. There has been time, under the direction of an excellent group of teachers, also to teach good English, Latin, French, history, biography and the usual subjects one associates with a good secondary school.

Dr. Evans states that it is not easy running a school during war days, with changes in personnel, difficulty of supplies and other inconveniences. "But the students have come through without any trouble and the morale of all the boys continues at the high level of our school standard. We wish all our friends might get to know the School better and a welcome is extended to visit the campus at any time. Mr. Chapin's original motto, "Come and see" still holds good and the rector and his wife are always available to visitors."

Many of the boys are unable to contribute anything toward their education. The comparatively modest budget of $60,000 is therefore supplemented by gifts from parish organizations and the contributions of individuals, all of whom realize that St. Andrew's is one of the most effective agencies of the Episcopal Church.

DEPUTY PREMIER HITS AT VATICAN

Rome (wireless to RNS): — The Deputy Premier of Italy, Palmiro Togliatti, accused the Roman Church of interfering in national politics in a speech before the convention of the Communist Party of which he is a member.

"We know there are priests and leaders of great religious organizations who sincerely understand that today's conditions in Italian economic and political life must be changed," Togliatti said. "We know that in the North there are priests who fight side by side with our companions against the enemy. We know that in the entire machinery of the Church there exist numerous elements which understand that the democracy we seek to create does not exclude Christian idealism, but rather recognizes the support which Christian idealism can give to the constitution of a new political, economic and social regime in our country. On the other hand, we know there exists a conservative, reactionary sector which is fighting openly against us and on a ground in which it is difficult for us to intervene, such as refusing absolution and the last sacraments to comrades who die in the Communist faith but without denying their religious beliefs.

"The heads of the Catholic Church would do well to reflect seriously whether they should continue to permit an anti-Communist terrorism, anti-Communist not only in ideology but also in being directed against the Communist Party. It would be fatal for Italy to reopen the religious struggle here today. The intervention of the ecclesiastics to exercise terror with spiritual means against a legal political party participating in the government is a violation of the Concordat between the Catholic Church and the Italian state.

This attack on the Vatican was followed by a sharp attack on "leading Catholic groups" in Italy by Pravda. The writer, Kay Demidov, charged that the official Vatican paper "spares neither water nor soap to convince the world of the innocence of leading Catholic circles in respect to Fascism."

"It assures us," he wrote, "that precisely these groups, which lived peacefully with Fascist occupation forces in Rome, are the most solid in Europe, the strongest knights of democracy. And the reactionary Catholic newspaper shrilly curses the Soviet press which permitted itself to express doubts in this regard."

PARISH SPONSORS FORUM ON PEACE

Princeton, N. J.: — A forum on peace plans was held at Trinity Church here on April 13, with the Rev. Arthur L. Kinsolving as sponsor. The rector paid a tribute to President Roosevelt, declaring that "it is for us who remain to realize the ideals of international cooperation toward which he lifted the hopes of mankind."

The chairman of the meeting was Governor Walter E. Edge, and there were addresses by Senator H. Alexander Smith of New Jersey; President Harold W. Dodds of Princeton University and Frank Aydelotte, director of the school of advanced study. Dr. Dodds, whose paper was read for him because of illness, warned the audience that peace may be lost through the mistakes of those who most desire to win it — the sincere but uncompromising perfectionists, who in reality play into the hands of the isolationists. "Let us understand," he said, "that the attainment of the reign of law among nations will be a long process and that we cannot depend upon any statesmen performing a miracle to achieve it in a world of starving, broken and cynical people."

The conception of a Security Council and the enormous powers which are given to it under the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals were described by Dr. Aydelotte as a continuation of the alliance which is now winning the war. It is a recognition of the fact that the nations which wield the greatest powers should have a corresponding measure of responsibility. He expressed the conviction that the United States should support whatever agreement is finally reached at San Francisco. "We can succeed in the establishment of peace," he said, "only if we can avoid suspicion and hatred and act with courage, faith, generosity and good will."

URGES A STRONG PEACE

Philadelphia:—Judge Robert V. Bolger of the Orphan's Court told a congregation at Christ Church here on April 8th that the veterans of two world wars "most urgently plead for unqualified American participation in any international understanding that offers a reasonable chance of success in the maintenance of peace. We cannot afford the price of another world conflict by remaining aloof in isolationism."

The address was given as a part of the celebration of the 250th anniversary of the parish, which was founded in 1695. There are special services each Sunday throughout this year, with laymen speaking on special topics the second Sunday of each month at the invitation of the rector, the Rev. E. Felix Kloman.

Judge Bolger advocated compulsory military training as a temporary policy to serve until world organization is completed and has proven itself. He also advocated the teaching of the Bill of Rights in schools in order to implant a simplified code of political truth into the minds of children.

In speaking of the rehabilitation of European countries he said, "At this very propitious time some sound substitute should be found for the selfish and corrupt governments of Europe — a government that will dignify the people, and assure the political, social and economic freedom. Ultimate accord would likely lie in a federation of Europe patterned after our United States of America, and another remedy would be the development of the vast untouched resources of Africa, which if properly planned would afford economic opportunity to many of the downtrodden of Europe.

MERGER MOVE APPROVED

Conover, N. C. (RNS):—The proposed merger of the Evangelical and Reformed Church and the Congregational-Christian Churches was approved by the former denomination's southern synod at its annual meeting here. Endorsement was also given to the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, while in the field of industry management and labor were urged to strive for an adequate program of social insurance against unemployment, old age and sickness. The right of labor to collective bargaining was upheld and the principle of an annual wage for labor was endorsed. Likewise the need for better understanding between races was stressed, with equal political and economic rights for Negroes.

HOLY CROSS COMPANIONS TO HAVE RETREAT

Westwood, Mass.: — Miss Winifred Hulbert has announced that the retreat of the Companions of the Holy Cross will be held this year at Adelynrood, South Byfield, Mass., from July 7 to 9, with Dean Charles Taylor of the Episcopal Theological School as conductor.

AMERICAN CHAPLAINS FOR ARCHBISHOP

London (wireless to RNS):—The Rev. Frank H. Lash, chief American chaplain in London, and the Rev. John J. Weaver of Troy, Ohio, both Episcopalians, were among the chaplains to attend the Archbishop of Canterbury when he was enthroned on April 19th. This is believed to be the first time that American clergymen have been invited to take formal part in the enthronement of an Anglican archbishop.

EDITORIALS

Franklin Delano Roosevelt

THE legacy to this nation left by Franklin Delano Roosevelt is not limited to the memory of a noble man and his achievements, great as that is, nor to the speeches, papers, and public documents which he composed and which perpetuate his great spirit. The richest legacy he has left us is the memory and example of one who held a religious view of life, and who even in the most exalted office in our western world still spoke and acted as a humble devout Christian. The beautiful prayer which he composed was very appropriately used in the radio memorial programs on the day of his burial. The very phraseology of that prayer, as well as its feeling and spirit, was derived from the Book of Common Prayer. He was a loyal communicant and vestryman of the Episcopal church, both at Hyde Park and in Washington. He began his successive administrations with services of prayer and of self-dedication to the will of God. The picture we had of him at the Atlantic Conference, when he and Mr. Churchill worked out the terms of the Atlantic Charter, was taken on Sunday morning when those two great civil leaders and churchmen took time out for divine service on board a warship somewhere in the North Atlantic. He always felt a sense of religious responsibility for the great decisions he had to make—a responsibility to God as well as to his fellow men and to posterity. We Americans have had many very great men in the White House; but we venture to think that no president since Abraham Lincoln has so simply and genuinely placed his reliance upon the wisdom of God or submitted his ways more completely to the divine judgment. It was because he felt so deeply and saw so clearly that there was no other way to preserve freedom and justice and peace in our world than by going to war, that he could speak with a clear conscience and assure us that "the only thing we need fear is fear." That was no utterance of a bold self-confident nationalist but of a devout religious mind, conscious of a destiny which is not self-chosen but is the will of God for us. During the coming weeks, months, years, and centuries, may the spiritual legacy left to America by this great Christian layman survive and enrich all our thought and endeavour.

"QUOTES"

THREE things made President Roosevelt one of the greatest of our history. First he expressed the profoundest issues of the war so simply that every citizen knew we were fighting, not merely for our lives, but for the things that make our lives worthwhile. Secondly he held constantly before the nation the two supreme tasks of the modern world: the extension of social justice and the building of a community of nations. Finally he was great enough to see that accomplishments of such magnitude could only issue from a world in which renewal of spiritual value had taken place.

—The Rev. John Crocker
Headmaster of Groton School

A Notable Consecration

OUR hearts and minds are so intensely focused upon the tidal sweep of great events in the various fields of war, that we are in danger of overlooking the deep significance of events at home. One such event was the consecration of the Rev. Bravid W. Harris, at Christ and St. Luke's Church, Norfolk, Virginia, on April seventeenth, to be the eighth missionary Bishop of Liberia. We have an especial interest in Libera because it was the place chosen by the American Colonization Society for creating a Negro republic,—using a group of former American slaves as a nucleus. This plan was largely fostered by missionary minded people of our own Church. It was an effort to avert tension between the races.

We have not always maintained our interest and the people have suffered from alternate dictation and neglect on our part. At various times we have provided for Negro control and then have undercut possibility of real success by our indifference and neglect. Five years from now this missionary district will celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of its creation. It is quite fitting, therefore, that the district should be under the competent leadership of a Negro and that we should support this leader consistently, wholeheartedly and generously. We should frankly recognize that it is the white race which is really on trial in this matter. We started this enterprise. We have dallied with it. Now we must maintain it equitably and give Negro leadership a real chance to demonstrate its capacity.

Because of the national significance of this event, we could wish that the consecration had been given a more national setting and a wider representation in its participants than just those from south of Mason and Dixon's line. We can understand Dr. Harris' natural desire to associate his consecration with the vicinity of his former parish, but we regret that our common responsibility was not more clearly emphasized. Whatever may be our regret as to procedure, nevertheless we take pride in the fact and pledge Bishop Harris our prayerful support as he undertakes the responsibilities of his difficult and significant office.

A Noble Challenge

THE FIRST public statement by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt following the death of her husband is far more than a tribute to him. It is even more a challenge to us as the United Nations Conference opens in San Francisco. "While my husband was in Albany," Mrs. Roosevelt wrote, "and for some years after coming to Washington, his chief interest was in seeing that the average human being was given a fairer chance for 'life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.' That was what made him always interested in the problems of minority groups and of any group which was at a disadvantage. As the war clouds gathered and the inevitable involvement of this country became more evident, his objective was always to deal with the problems of the war, political and military, so that eventually an organization might be built to prevent future wars. . . . Perhaps, in his wisdom, the Almighty is trying to show us that a leader may chart the way, may point out the road to lasting peace, but that many leaders and many peoples must do the building. It cannot be the work of one man, nor can the responsibility be laid upon his shoulders, and so, when the time comes for peoples to assume the burden more fully, he is given rest. God grant that we may have the wisdom and courage to build a peaceful world with justice and opportunity for all peoples the world over."

As you read these words the Conference of the United Nations will be under way. May we lay upon our hearts and minds these noble words of a noble woman.

Let Us Win the Peace

by Richard Morford

Secretary of the United Christian Council for Democracy

AS CHURCHMEN of determined faith that the hope of mankind for justice and peace can be made a reality in our world, let's be positive about San Francisco. There are enough among us who will manage to see "black thunderclouds" over San Francisco and will provide all the warnings necessary. The facts are that forty-seven or more nations have sent representatives to San Francisco to work out at the conference table a plan for continuing into the postwar period a grand coalition of United Nations. This in itself, constitutes a fundamentally encouraging state of affairs. The coalition was created for the purpose of waging war. It is now to be reshaped and strengthened for the business of building peace. A realistic view of the war coalition must grant its amazing and unparalleled accomplishment in unity of purpose and strategy to achieve the military victory. It is the cynic who sees nothing in this unity already achieved which gives promise for the peace.

A man of positive, albeit conservative view, Walter Lippmann, says that the real accomplishment of the conferences of leaders of the great powers from Casablanca to Yalta was "the forging of a concerted strategy in war and for the period of pacification which we must pass through before the nations can hope to enjoy a settled and ordered peace." Accepting the fact that there has been some misunderstanding, friction and compromise he nevertheless declares ". . . . there is probably no example in history of a coalition managed so successfully on so vast a scale. Here rests the best hope of mankind that we may be able to manage a cooperative peace." The last sentence is particularly significant.

Some of us are prepared to build on this "best hope of mankind" which is the present working relationship among the United Nations, especially among the great powers. It is well to return in thought to Teheran as we go forward in San Francisco. We quote in part the declaration of the Big Three at Teheran:

"We express our determination that our nations shall work together in the war and in the peace that will follow. . . .

"We are sure that our concord will make it an enduring peace . . . .

"We shall seek the cooperation and active participation of all nations, large and small, whose peoples in heart and mind are dedicated, as are our own people, to the elimination of tyranny and slavery, oppression and intolerance. We will welcome them as they may choose to come into the world family of democratic nations. . . .

"We come here with hope and determination. We leave here friends in fact, in spirit and in purpose."

We have abundant reason to believe that good faith motivated this declaration. There has been no abrogation of its intention. We believe that good faith predominates now even though there are differences and misunderstandings to be resolved. True, ours is the responsibility of holding leaders to the fulfillment of their pledges by every constructive means at our disposal. It would be even more true to say that ours is the responsibility to help leaders fulfill the pledges made on behalf of all of us. A certain minority of folk speak and write in ways suggesting, rather than the desire to help, a satisfaction in throwing monkey wrenches into the works. A positive attitude toward San Francisco means as much as all else a positive attitude toward the Soviet Union. As church leaders can we meet the test? In the past we have definitely arranged our Church programs to include the cultivation of American-Chinese friendship. Our mission study has often emphasized our neighbors in the other Americas. What has been done through your church in the past year to cultivate American-Soviet friendship?

The newspapers read by your people by and large seize every opportunity to cast doubt on the good intentions of the Soviet Union so far as the peace is concerned. She is often depicted as the tyrannical despot over her own people, the self-delegated ruler of Europe tomorrow, as demanding to be the boss in the set-up of the San Francisco conference or she will not play ball, as the chief enemy of the peace. She is none of these things. This is not the place to argue the points of current difference in thinking between the Soviet Union and the Anglo-American leadership. The Soviet Union will have no truck with fascism; therefore it doesn't want to seat Argentina at San Francisco. She is determined that Poland shake completely loose of the reactionary landlord control and anti-Soviet regime of pre-war days. She wants the new provisional government of Poland seated at San Francisco. Mr. Stettinius expects Russia to do her part at once to broaden the base of the Lublin government, now at work in Warsaw, to represent all democratic elements among the Polish people, as the Big Three agreed at Yalta. If this is done Poland should take her place at San Francisco. Again, the Soviet Union asks three votes in the Assembly of the world organization. This contention should have full discussion at San Francisco; a fair resolution of the matter is possible certainly without a break in unity.

It is my personal judgment that we may have confidence in the present leadership of Russia. Their direction of affairs will be in the best interests of the welfare of all the people under their influence, toward realizing for them a free and secure life. We may expect from Mr. Stalin and his colleagues the same leadership we would expect here in our own democracy. It seems to me this applies equally to their direction of affairs within the Republics of the Union and to their relations with formerly occupied countries. In any event the cause of world friendship will be put forward by thoroughgoing attempts to understand the Soviet Union rather than by a carping criticism at every turn. This then is an appeal for self-examination leading, we hope, to the development of a more positive attitude toward San Francisco, without in any way sacrificing our right to criticize what is done there in the light of the imperatives of our Christian faith.

WE MUST recognize that San Francisco will not usher in world peace. It is not fair to peg our demands too high! San Francisco should, however, carry us some steps forward toward the establishment of a world organization through which international cooperation will become more possible. San Francisco should carry the nations some steps beyond Dumbarton Oaks. Amendments and additions to the Dumbarton Oaks proposals have been recommended in many quarters. At the invitation of the four governments participating at Dumbarton Oaks, other nations have been registering their criticisms and making suggestions for improvement. The American people have been doing their share of communicating with the State Department, its officials tell us. A not inconsiderable portion of the communications have carried Church identification; commendation is due people who have written.

Before the State Department now are carefully prepared recommendations by bodies of experts as well as countless common-sense proposals from ordinary citizens. As a result the Department feels its hand has been greatly strengthened for introducing into the San Francisco agenda some subjects which did not win major place in the results at Dumbarton Oaks or were postponed for later consideration.

One of these subjects on which Church people have taken an admirable and influential lead is that of dependent peoples and colonies coupled with the system of mandates. The State Department knows now that the overwhelming majority of Church people, probably a majority of the entire nation, believes that an international trusteeship for all colonies should be established in specific terms in the final charter of the world organization.

Announcement has been made that diplomatic exchanges are proceeding among the Big Five Nations to reach an understanding on international trusteeship for the former mandates and for enemy colonies captured in the war. Obviously this is insufficient assurance that the broad colonial problem will be fully and frankly discussed or that a plan for international trusteeship for all colonies will be entered in the final charter drawn up at San Francisco. But the wedge is in place and you and I must drive it in blow by blow until, in time, we shall crack this problem open. Justice will not be done the dependent peoples over night. There are some who would like to see a field day at San Francisco in which the United States delegation spearheads an attack to put Britain in the vise and squeeze out immediate independence for India, for instance. We shall not maintain unity or a sound working relationship by a reckless attack on Britain no matter how tenaciously she insists upon going her old way with the colonies. When Britain has reasonable assurance that the United States is prepared to cooperate with her economically in the postwar era and not squeeze out her life blood by attempted domination of trade, a monopoly in commercial aviation, or by some other competition, then we will be in sounder position to force the issue on colonies. What holds true about Britain in this respect goes for the other nations with colonial dependencies.

What has troubled Church people most is the fear that the great powers may swallow up the smaller nations politically and economically, moving their people around as pawns without regard to essential human rights or liberty. It is our duty to support reasonable demands of the smaller nations at San Francisco for full democratic rights in the world organization. It is possible that the people back home during the course of the conference may need to spur the American delegation on this point we have just raised or on some other, so that San Francisco may really achieve a reasonable advance over Dumbarton Oaks. No one is prepared to say to what extent American public opinion can make itself felt during the Conference. The principal national organizations interested in a just and durable peace, including the Churches, will be represented at San Francisco. They will exert what influence they can and reach out to their memberships for quick support in case of need.

It is a pleasure to report that the United Christian Council for Democracy, and the organizations which cooperate through this agency, has been taking its part in the coordination and promotion of a national educational program on Dumbarton Oaks these past months. Its secretary has been a member of an informal body for this purpose composed of representatives of some fifty national organizations. Out of this body a Strategy Committee of twelve has been chosen to constitute a group at San Francisco for all the organizations. By arrangement with the State Department, this group will have special opportunity to observe the discussions of the several committees where most of the work will be done and to confer with Mr. Stettinius and other members of the American delegation during the conference. It will then share information and judgments with the balance of the on-the-spot representatives. Frequent expressions of the views of the Strategy Committee will be sent to the national organization offices who will relay the word to their memberships. The United Christian Council has an extraordinarily competent on-the-spot representative in the person of the Rev. William B. Spofford, executive secretary of the Church League for Industrial Democracy and Managing Editor of THE WITNESS.

IF ANY one of us thinks that America will be able to do its share in winning the peace without his help, he is dead wrong. On the crucial proposals for world organization and cooperation which will confront the Congress steadily from this point forward, our leaders are determined to proceed cautiously, awaiting clear mandate from the people at home before they bring issues to the vote. They recognize how vast are the commitments asked, how tremendous the risks, what grave responsibility will be fastened upon this nation and its people. It is well, although this is a republican form of government, that those who represent us in the Congress should call for a direct expression of opinion from the people at home and be guided by it in voting.

This will be a long, hard summer for Christian citizens! We shall have to work continuously at the job of building the peace. Public opinion must be mobilized. Churchmen ought to take the lead. Congress must know how we feel every step of the way. When they delay, we must push them. When they threaten to stand in the way of full world cooperation, we must intervene. When they stand up to fight for American acceptance of responsibility in the world family of nations commensurate with her power, then we must be on hand with encouragement and approval.

The great turning point in the affairs of men and nations has arrived. It is within our power to lay the foundations of an enduring peace. We are fighting a war to a successful conclusion at a fearful cost in human lives. No sacrifice for the peace can begin to approach what has been given up in the war—the life blood of the nations. But what it does cost we must pay as rapidly as we have opportunity. Before us are a whole series of opportunities. We can make solemn compact with other nations to prevent any future aggression. We can pledge our friendliness, offer our resources. We can cooperate in winning economic security for all men. We can join forces to liberate men everywhere and to guarantee democratic rights for all.

The battle for peace will not be won by civilian generals alone whether gathered in San Francisco or Washington. It will be won by a host of common soldiers, the citizens in every nation, who back up the master plans drawn by their leaders. Surely, as Christians we count ourselves the soldiers of peace enlisted for the duration. The peace will be won by those who will dispel the "black thunderclouds," who are determined that unity among the nations shall be maintained in spite of differences. The peace belongs to those who will help concord to prevail for the sake of a common humanity, weary of death and destruction, praying for the chance to have life and to have it more abundantly.

Money and Bretton Woods

by Jerry Voorhis

Episcopalian and Congressman from California

IN THE beginning there wasn't any money because there wasn't any exchange of goods. Each of our primitive ancestors gathered what food he could and either ate it on the spot or hoarded it for his own use.

As civilization began to develop people exchanged things by barter. Those who had more meat or hides than they needed traded with tribes who could spare rough pieces of metal. As centuries passed, production gradually increased and with it greater possibility for the satisfaction of human wants. There developed the custom of using some universally needed commodity as a medium of exchange. In some societies hides were used for this purpose, in others metals, in others stones of special sizes and shapes. But always it was something that practically everybody had use for and which the possessor was, therefore, reasonably certain to be able to exchange for anything else he might want. The one thing that gave money value, then as now, was its acceptability—that is the willingness of people generally to accept it in exchange for goods.

The only trouble with this sort of money was its bulk and the inconvenience of handling it. Otherwise it was very good money indeed, for it could not disappear suddenly from existence and since it consisted of a commodity which was in general supply it was almost impossible for any small group of people to control it. As time went on, however, production became even more specialized and people began to exchange goods with others in comparatively remote regions. This required a type of money which was small in bulk and high in value. Thus precious metals came into use as money. Because it was possible to adulterate these metals or to pass them to the unsuspecting in short weight, such governments as existed began to put their stamp upon the coins to guarantee them to be of certain specified value. This was for the protection of the ordinary citizen against those who might seek to change for their own advantage the buying power of the unit of currency.

Precisely that same problem remains with us today and can be solved only by governmental action, as was the case in those earlier times.

As for gold and the "gold standard" today about all that really needs to be said is that they represent a relic of barbarism in which some people still believe. The only defense that can be made for the gold standard is to try to prove that the supply of gold in the world will increase over a period of time in exactly the same proportion as the supply of commodities and services increase. This is obviously a fantastic assumption. It has been demonstrated over and over again that a country's money was worth just as much if the country "went off" the gold standard as it was before, provided only that the amount of money in circulation was not inflated.

A great deal of interest centers at present around the Bretton Woods proposals. The purpose of stabilization of exchange rates between nations is in order to have international trade carried on, on a sound understandable basis so that exporters and importers can get paid in money of a dependable value and under circumstances where the money of their own country bears over a period of time the same relationship to the money of other countries.

The Bretton Woods proposals are twofold. First, the purpose of the Bank for Reconstruction and Development is to enable needy nations to borrow money in a self-respecting way from a bank set up by a group of governments instead of having to come on bended knee to private bankers and pay high rates of interest which in many instances rob the borrowing country of any net benefit from the loan. If loans can be made to nations like China at a sufficiently low rate of interest, China will have a chance to actually increase its level of production and its standards of living.

The purpose of the Stabilization Fund proposed by the Bretton Woods Conference is to prevent nations from artificially changing the value of their money in order to try to gain trade advantages. As an inducement to get nations not to do this, Bretton Woods proposes to make it possible for them to secure foreign exchange in an orderly way when they need it.

A great deal more might be said of the Bretton Woods proposals and some of it would have to be critical. By and large, however, it represents a constructive attempt to solve a difficult and pressing problem. But the main thing to remember is that it will do exactly no good to stabilize international exchange rates unless the purchasing power of the various currencies within the borders of individual nations is likewise stabilized. This seems to have been forgotten. The dollar can be tied to the pound in such a way that over a long period of time they will be exchanged at the ratio, let us say of 4 to 1. But unless meanwhile both the dollar and the pound are so controlled within America and England that each buys the same, or nearly the same amount of wheat and coal and steel and housing and electricity and textiles and mills and other important commodities—taken together—unless this is done mere stabilization of exchange ratios will have little meaning or beneficial effect.

The money system which is in use today consists mostly of credit and to a very limited extent, of cash money or "currency." The reason for this is simply that it has been found more convenient to transact business by the use of checks than by the use of cash. Money either in the form of cash or credit is "good" or "sound" money if it meets two basic conditions. The first of these is that the money be accepted without question at full face value by the government of the nation in which it is issued in payment for any debts owed to the government. The second is that there should be in circulation a volume of money which bears so constant a ratio to the flow of goods that its purchasing power does not vary from year to year or decade to decade. That we do not have money which meets the second of these standards is readily apparent.

THE modern money system was begun by the goldsmiths of the later Middle Ages. These enterprising individuals used to receive deposits of gold from people for safekeeping. At first they simply stored the gold and gave it out on order of the owners to the owners. But people frequently came to goldsmiths to borrow money and it was not very long before some of the goldsmiths discovered that they could lend more "money" than they actually had gold in their possession. This was because people usually did not want to take the gold out of the goldsmith's safekeeping. They would just take a sort of check saying that they had so much gold deposited with the goldsmith and would transact their business in much the same way as people now do with bank checks. The fact that only a minor fraction actually asked for physical gold made it possible for goldsmiths to have the same "gold" loaned out at interest to two or three or more borrowers at the same time.

This is exactly what modern banks do, except that the goldsmiths were acting illegally and punished if caught at this multiple lending, whereas we have passed laws which legalize this lending of fiat credit created by private banks, even though their reserves of real money amount to only a frac-

America and Religion

. . . "They are a religious people," observed Lord Bryce about Amercians a half century ago, with great understanding for the importance of this fact for their national ideology. American scientific observers are likely to get their attentions fixed upon the process of progressive secularisation to the extent that they do not see this main fact, that America is still the most religious country in the western world. Political leaders are continuously deducing the American creed out of the Bible. Vice-President Wallace, in his historic speech of May 8, 1942, spoke thus:

> "The idea of freedom — the freedom that we in the United States know and love so well — is derived from the Bible with its extraordinary emphasis on the dignity of the individual. Democracy is the only true political expression of Christianity. The prophets of the Old Testament were the first to preach social justice. But that which was sensed by the prophets many centuries before Christ was not given complete and powerful political expression until our nation was formed as a federal union a century and a half ago.

tion (about 1/5 at present) of the total of the deposit liabilities which they have promised to pay "on demand." Indeed we permit the banks to buy government bonds without having any cash reserves at all to make good the bookkeeping entries which they create for the express purpose of buying the bonds. This is on the theory that the government itself stands behind the bonds. In other words, if you are a banker, you can buy a government bond with money you create, but which actually is the credit of the government itself.

In practical effect, what such a system means is two things. First, that the volume of money at any given time is absolutely controlled by the willingness of banks to lend credit created on their books, and second, since the government refrains from creating money and lets the private banks do it instead, the only way in which money can be gotten into circulation is if either the government or private borrowers go in debt to the banks and thus induce the banks to create money in the form of demand deposits.

The evils of the system again are twofold. In the first place, it absolutely requires a never-ending increase in the volume of outstanding debt. Every dollar we get into circulation is tied to debt which someone must pay to the banks with interest. If private borrowers don't borrow, either we have to suffer a severe depression or else the government has to borrow in order to make the suffering less severe. After this war the only way we can, under the present debt-money system, pay off the $300,000,000,000 national debt will be to go still further into debt in order to keep enough money in circulation to buy the volume of goods which must be produced if we are to have a high national income. And without a high national income we know we can't possibly pay that debt.

The second evil of the system is that the volume of money in active circulation can be increased and decreased at the will of 15,000 different banks. The whole business life of the country is dependent upon the willingness of someone to borrow from the banks and the willingness of bank vice presidents to grant them the loans. Just as is the case with all other people who control the supply of certain commodities, it is to the interest of the banks that money be not too plentiful. Hence the natural interest of the banks in having an insufficiency of money in circulation, and hence the necessity of the government increasing the national debt and virtually compelling the banks to buy the bonds.

The way to correct this situation is to pass a law restoring to the Congress the power given it in the Constitution when that great document says, "Congress shall have power to coin money and regulate the value thereof."

Such a law would specifically provide that money be created by an agency of the Congress to the extent necessary to maintain a balance between the volume of money in circulation on the one hand, and the production of goods on the other. Enough money to accomplish this should be created and no more than enough at any given period. It should be spent into circulation by the government just exactly as if it had been raised by taxes. This would make it possible for a portion of the government's expenses to be paid without raising the money by means of taxation or increasing the national debt. In this way for the first time we would divorce our supply of money from the increase in debt of the country and in consequence of this would for the first time be free to maintain full employment and full production under all circumstances without increase of debt. Furthermore we could end inflation and deflation forever. They would be "against the law."

The essential thing is to divorce the supply of money from the volume of debt and to gear that money supply to the volume of real physical production. The purpose of money is to do the job it was intended to do—that is to be a vehicle to transfer all the goods and transact all the business of which a nation is capable at any given time and to do this without changes in the relationship between the money and the goods.

Excellent Good *Fair

Many Creeds One Cross. By Christopher E. Storrs. Macmillan, $1.75.

With the peoples of the world drawing closer together, it may happen that respect for other nationalities will cause some people to question the place of Christian missions in this one world. Should Christians still attempt to convert? Archdeacon Storrs of Northam in Western Australia answers this question with authority and conviction. The attitudes developed in the Jerusalem conference, in Rethinking Missions and in the writings of the crisis theologians are each considered and a more complete conclusion is reached than that found in any of these. He appreciates the place of history in the sacramental faith but never loses sight of the fact that human sin has perverted the general revelation of God to mankind. His chapters on Hinduism, Buddhism, Islam, Confucionism, and Shinto nationalism while written to be understood by the beginner are equal in value to a course in comparative religion. Every clergyman should have a copy of this book to circulate among his laymen after he has himself inwardly digested it. —S. A. T. Jr.

General Convention Not to Be Held in San Francisco

Bishops Agree That Situation in Pacific In 1946 Will Make That City Impossible

Reported by W. B. Spofford

New York:—It seems certain now, that the General Convention will not be held in San Francisco in 1946.

Bishop H. St. George Tucker, Presiding Bishop, disclosed that he has been in correspondence with Bishop Karl M. Block of California about it, and after conference with his standing committee, Bishop Block expressed the belief that even if the war in the Pacific were over by 1946, the period of demobilization, largely through the port of San Francisco, would make it impossible for the Convention to obtain accommodations.

California has decided therefore, that it would be wise to relinquish the 1946 Convention, but Bishop Block expresses the earnest hope that they may be hosts to the General Convention of 1949, which would be the 100th anniversary of the founding of the Church in California.

Bishop Tucker stated that when other arrangements are made for the Convention, he will issue a statement on the subject.

Laymen Meet

Syracuse, N. Y.:—More than 400 laymen attended the annual corporate communion of the Episcopal Churchmen's Association of Syracuse on Low Sunday. Bishop Malcolm E. Peabody of the Diocese of Central New York was the celebrant. Breakfast followed in the Masonic Temple, speaker at which was Rev. David R. Covell, chaplain of Hobart College, Geneva, N. Y. In his talk, Dr. Covell advised the laymen that the best way to win new members for the Church was to visit them in their homes.

Chaplain Killed

Richmond, Va.: — The Rev. Paschal Dupuy Fowlkes, chaplain in the army serving with the 507th Parachute Infantry of the 17th airborne division, was killed in action in Germany March 24th. Chaplain Fowlkes was born in Nottoway County, Virginia, in 1915. He graduated from the University of Virginia in 1936. After one year in business, he entered the Virginia Seminary. Upon being ordained deacon in 1940, he became deacon-in-charge, and later rector, of St. John's Church, McLean and Holy Comforter Church, Vienna, Virginia. He was appointed chaplain in 1942. After serving in the North African campaign and part of the Italian campaign, he was transferred to England and assigned to the airborne division. At the time of his death he had the rank of captain. In 1940 he married Elizabeth Rives Williams of Richmond, Virginia. They have two children.

A memorial service for Chaplain Fowlkes was held in St. Thomas' Church, Richmond, April 15th.

Bishop of Oslo Freed

Washington:—Norwegian patriots have freed Eivind Berggrav, Bishop of Oslo and Primate of the Church of Norway, and "taken him to safety," the Swedish radio said yesterday. The sixty-year-old bishop had been interned by the Nazis since 1942.

According to the broadcast, which was reported by the Federal Communications Commission and which quoted "an Oslo report," "the coup was carried out apparently by a group of about twenty men who obviously had no difficulty in overpowering the guards around his sporting lodge at Asker, near Oslo," where the bishop had been interned.

"As far as is known, the guards consisted of police only," the broadcast said, adding that only two of the police were on guard inside the lodge, while the rest were asleep in a near-by house.

Bishop Berggrav was deposed by Premier Vidkun Quisling in February, 1942, after he had made outspoken indictments of the Norwegian "new order" and specifically had condemned a decree by the Nasjonal Samling (Quisling Nazi party) that children from ten to eighteen years of age register for the Nasjonal Samling Ungdomsfylking (Nazi youth organization).

One report out of Norway at the time told how Quisling, his patience exhausted, shouted at the Bishop: "You triple traitor! You deserve to have your head chopped off." "Well, here I am," was said to have been the Bishop's calm reply.

Shortly after his deposition by Quisling, Bishop Berggrav was reportedly interned in the Bretvedt concentration camp near Oslo for having inspired the mass resignation on Easter Sunday, 1942, of every Norwegian minister as a state official.

Reports out of Norway said he was later released from the concentration camp on the orders of Adolf Hitler and confined in a summer lodge guarded by twenty men and surrounded by barbed wire. He was forbidden to speak to any one except his nearest relatives and his servants. This action was dictated, it was reported, by the public unrest caused by the Bishop's imprisonment in the concentration camp.

Bishop Berggrav was born in the much-bombed town of Stavanger. He became Bishop of Oslo in 1937, having previously been Bishop of Halogaland.

Visits Front

Italy (wireless to RNS): — The Archbishop of York, Cyril Garbett, visited the Italian front during Easter Week, with a tremendous schedule which took him from one end of liberated Italy to the other. He visited Naples, Forli, Assissi, Perugia, Rome and also visited fighting units in southern Italy. Among those with whom he conferred was General Mark W. Clark. The Archbishop stressed that he was "struck with the cheerfulness and hopefulness of the men, impressed by the difficult country which they have fought over and highly pleased with the excellence of army welfare work." He is scheduled to leave Italy toward the end of April.

Synagogue Service

Washington: — Chaplain Robert M. Crane, Episcopalian, formerly of Los Angeles joined with clergy of two other faiths in a service in Munchen-Gladbach, in the Schloss Rheydt Castle belonging to Joseph Paul Goebbels, Reich propaganda minister. The chaplains belong to the 29th Infantry Division and with Chaplain Crane, Chaplain Manuel Poliakoff, Jewish, and Chaplain William Crowley, Roman Catholic, held services for men of their respective faiths. Chaplain James G. DeLa-Vergne, who sent the information, commented that "it is interesting to note that the home of a man responsible for the destruction of many synagogues was the place picked for what may be the first Jewish service held by an American chaplain east of the Roer River."

The castle was "given" to Goebbels by the people of his boyhood home town, Munchen-Gladbach, complying with orders from the Nazi Party headquarters.

Clinical Conference

Philadelphia (RNS): — A city-wide clinical conference on "religion at work in the community," was held at the University of Pennsylvania on April 17. In announcing it Bishop Hart declared: "Intolerance and prejudice have made dangerous inroads on the American way of life and represent a serious menace. Nor is there any reason to expect that racial and group conflicts will subside merely with the coming of peace, unless practical steps are taken to combat bigotry and prejudice and to promote better understanding in the neighborhoods where conflicts and discriminations usually originate."

The conference, which was addressed by Methodist Ralph W. Sockman of New York, was arranged

Plastics in Church Lighting

Rambusch Lantern No. 11-G-165, first made for St. Francis of Assisi Church, New York City, has proved so popular that mass production methods are being installed. Costs are down to one-half and shipping costs are down even more. This lantern marks a new development in the science of church interior illumination in that it departs from the use of metal framework and adopts a more practical and serviceable material. The new lantern frames are made from a ligno-cellulose product which is durable, non-corrosive, easy to transport, assemble and install. The new diffusing material is plastic. It is shipped in flat sheets and bent into cylindrical form during assembly.

to stimulate churches, parishes, and synagogues to adopt and develop action programs for the community as a whole, regardless of race, religion, or nationality, Bishop Hart said.

Students Meet

New York (RNS): — The World Student Christian Federation will hold its first meeting in six years on May 21-28 at Union Seminary, with W. A. Visser 't Hooft of Geneva, Switzerland, presiding at all sessions. Plans for the post-war reconstruction of the movement in countries affected by the war will be mapped. Members of the executive committee from Holland, England, New Zealand, Canada, India, China, and possibly Belgium and France, are expected to attend.

Action Seminar

Washington (RNS):—A Churchman's Washington seminar convened here for three days to give members of Christian social action groups first hand information on the Dumbarton Oaks and Bretton Woods proposals as they relate to the United Nations Conference at San Francisco. Besides executive secretaries and members of social action groups, editors, public relations directors, youth, laymen and women leaders were present from the Northern Baptist, Congregational Christian, Methodist, and Presbyterian churches.

They interviewed Congressmen, particularly Senators, visited federal agencies, were guests of the State Department, and held discussions on current legislative issues. While the delegates had an unofficial status, being selected by councils of Christian social action and not by their denominations, the group represented those most actively engaged in shaping public opinion within the Church bodies participating in the seminar.

A highlight of the sessions was a dinner attended by Senators Harold H. Burton (R. Ohio), Joseph F. Guffey (D. Pa.), Carl A. Hatch (D. N. Mex.), and Charles W. Tobey (R.N.H.). The Senators voiced their hopes for the San Francisco Conference, and said the Churches had already done much to secure its success. They urged the churchmen not to seek perfection, but to support the results of the conference as the beginning of world order. It was also urged that the Bretton Woods proposals be given more support by church people, since these economic agreements, it was said, are basic to world peace.

Bishop Ludlow Speaks

Jamaica, L. I.: — Bishop Ludlow of Newark was the speaker at a dinner meeting of the Long Island chapter of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship held on April 12th. He spoke on the responsibilities and rights of the laity. One of the results of the conference was the organization of a laymen's group which will cooperate with the clergy group of the organization. Monthly meetings are planned, with joint meetings every other month.

United Nations Service

San Francisco:—Bishop Block of California has announced that a United Nations Service would be held at Grace Cathedral on Sunday, April 29th, the first Sunday after the opening of the United Nations Conference. The Presiding Bishop has been invited to preach.

Bishop's Funeral

Washington: — Bishop Malcolm Peabody of Central New York conducted the funeral of Bishop Julius Atwood at St. John's Church here on April 13, the day before the funeral of President Roosevelt who was his close friend. Bishop Angus Dun also took part in the service.

Consecrate Church

New York: — The Church of the Crucifixion is to be consecrated on May 3rd. The parish is in Harlem where a few years ago a small congregation of Negro Churchmen purchased a church belonging to the Reformed Church. The congregation has grown; it has worked hard under the able leadership of the Rev. E. E. Hall so that not only has the debt been paid but many improvements have been made in the structure, including the transformation of the interior into a beautiful Episcopal Church. We extend out congratulations.

Soldiers as Ministers

Washington (RNS): — The commission on army and navy chaplains has sent a questionnaire to some 8,000 chaplains to obtain the names of men in the service interested in entering the ministry after the war.

Japanese Hostel

Buffalo, N. Y. (RNS):—Plans for opening a hostel to give temporary shelter to families of Japanese Americans have been announced here by the council of churches. A possible site has been found and $3,500 is being raised to underwrite the project.

Orders Must Be Sent at Once to Receive Reports of

The United Nations Conference

"Once again civilization is given an opportunity to create an organization of nations whose purpose will be to establish peace on earth. It is vital that as many as can be reached must have an opportunity to understand the aims of the San Francisco Conference. There must be unlimited facilities for public discussion of the proposals first outlined at Dumbarton Oaks and now to be carried forward at the Golden Gate."

—Governor Thomas E. Dewey.

Agreeing with this statement, and many similar to it issued by prominent leaders, THE WITNESS is sending its Managing Editor to San Francisco to report the Conference. In addition to the reports of Mr. Spofford, THE WITNESS will carry the reports of Dr. T. Otto Nall of Religious News Service. Likewise we plan to feature interviews with leaders at the Conference, particularly those who approach the tremendous problems to face the delegates from a Christian point of view.

We urge Rectors and others to have copies available for distribution during the Conference. Many parishes have already organized Action Groups for discussion and whatever action in their judgement is called for.

Plan V-E Day

Boston: — Episcopal and other churches here have plans made for V-E Day. At St. Paul's Cathedral a series of services lasting 24 hours will be sponsored by the Council of Churches, with a Protestant minister conducting a service each hour of the day. At the Church of St. John the Evangelist a festival service will be held at which a solemn Te Deum, especially written for V-E Day by Everett Titcomb will be sung. At Christ Church in Cambridge the Rev. Gardiner M. Day has announced four thanksgiving services. Other churches have announced similar plans, with all churches open for prayer and meditation.

Yachtsmen Service

Mamaroneck, N. Y.:—A yachtsmen's service was held April 15th at St. Thomas's here with the Rev. Harold H. Kelley of the Seaman's Church Institute of New York as the preacher. This suburban town is the center of the greatest yachting and boating district in the world, according to Rector Frank Dean Gifford, so he thought it fitting to hold an annual service in the church which overlooks the harbor. A committee was formed of men interested in the sea and invitations mailed to all who had boats in the harbor. The church was decorated with signal flags, pennants and life preservers. The result was a notable service with a crowded church.

Church and Labor

Brooklyn:—Mary van Kleeck, director of Industrial studies of the Russell Sage Foundation and Charles Symington, industrialist, were the speakers at a conference sponsored by the social service department of the diocese of Long Island. The meeting was held at the Messiah and Incarnation on April 22, and was largely attended.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

REV. J. FRED HAMBLIN
Rector of St. John's, Newark, N. J.

I am amused at the answer given in Backfire to the question of the Rev. Richard Mortimer-Maddox regarding Spiritual Mobilization Inc. If THE WITNESS holds the views expressed in this answer why do they accept and print a full column ad on page 17 for the advancement of this organization? Your readers would like to see consistency in the pages of THE WITNESS.

ANSWER: Our position in regard to this is the same as that taken by other papers, both secular and religious: editorial opinion is not expressed in advertisements. As critics of this organization we have not felt justified in refusing them paid space to present their point of view. However we are by no means sure we are right and may change this policy.

DR. W. SINCLAIR BOWEN
Layman of Washington, D. C.

I have been reading THE WITNESS for many years and think a great deal of it but I am surprised and distressed you allowed such a photograph printed on the front of the last issue of The Archbishop of Canterbury sitting with an old black pipe in his mouth sucking in nicotine with each breath, what an example for other ministers to follow. He is disobeying God's command by defiling the temple of the Holy Ghost as is described in 1st Corinthians, 3rd chapter, 16-17 verses. I never saw dear Dr. Temple's picture taken in this way and I am surprised to see his successor permit his photograph to be taken like this.

ANSWER:—Too bad. And then we go and further encourage old black pipe smoking by running in the very next number a picture of the treasurer of the National Council, Lewis B. Franklin, caught in the same act. Tough job, this business of pleasing readers.

MR. HARRY C. ROGERS
Baptist Layman of Dove Creek, Colo.

As I send in my renewal I wish to say a few words to you. I hope this finds you and your associates well, with that same determined righteous purpose you have always shown. You are doing a wonderful job at the most critical moment in our age. We are now in the valley of decision and how well our leaders inform the people of the activities of fifth columnists will determine our destinies for twenty-five years. If our people can know the identity of the enemy within we can avoid an awful doom for our beloved America. You did a fine job on Bill White (WITNESS, Mar. 29). Long live THE WITNESS and its editorial staff which so wonderfully discloses the worthiness of the meek and so bravely champions the cause of the just.

REV. CHARLES E. CRAIK, JR.
Rector of Emmanuel, Louisville, Ky.

The well-known old Te Deum by Charles E. Stephens probably contains all the musical and liturgical faults mentioned by Prof. Shepherd. But this little congregation of Emmanuel, Louisville, averaging 50 a Sunday, doesn't let the choir do all the singing. The extra copies of the Te Deum are distributed in the congregation after each choir member has been supplied, and the canticle is sung with gusto by all. We have also used one of the Tours settings, but the congregation hasn't learned it sufficiently well to let out on it.

CAPT. ERNEST J MELCHERT
Chaplain at Camp Maxey, Texas

The Christian Marriage by Robert Findlay Thomas (WITNESS, April 12) is a piping good article which merits wide distribution. Many pamphlets have come and gone but none have dealt with the problem in such cogent manner, at least not those I have seen. Frankly I'd like to see it done in pamphlet form to be made available to chaplains in the services.

REV. CHARLES A. HIGGINS
Rector at Cape Girardeau, Mo.

Many thanks to J. Clemens Kolb for his research into the size of clergy families. I would like to see more articles of this kind in your magazine. Perhaps the brain truster at "281" who is responsible for a new pamphlet entitled The Christian Family could be induced to read them. The pamphlet contains six photographs extolling the virtues of the small family. It is certainly the wrong kind of propaganda for Episcopalians to distribute and I would like to see the entire edition of the pamphlet contributed to the next scrap paper drive.

CPL. FRANK E. NUMBERS
United States Army

In The Christian Marriage (WITNESS April 12) I have read one of the most outstanding articles of my experience. In the course of three years' service in the army I have seen dozens of pamphlets concerning marriage put out by various church and civic groups. None of them has been so well written in point of appeal to an ordinary laymen as this article, and I sincerely hope it may be possible to have this printed in pamphlet form in the near future. May I suggest that if it can be printed in this form, it be distributed to Chaplains and Special Service Officers because these two reach most of the men with their materials?

You are to be heartily congratulated for the inclusion of such a down-to-earth article in your magazine, and Dr. Thomas merits great praise for his plain and logical treatment of a question usually covered up with far too much meaningless piety by churchmen.

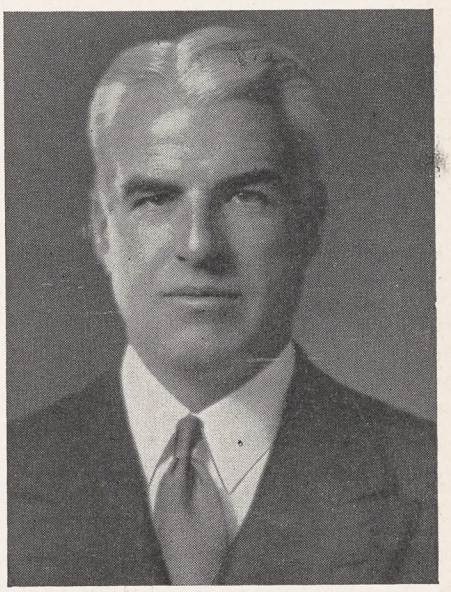
Firm Determination to Succeed Marks Nations Conference

Colorful Opening Meeting Silently Prays for Success of History Making Conference



By W. B. Spofford

San Francisco:—"No one of the large nations, no one of the small nations, can afford anything less than success in this endeavor. Each one of them knows too well what the consequences of failure would be. It is therefore with this strong bond of compelling mutual interest that this Conference of United Nations begins." Those words of Secretary of State Edward R. Stettinius Jr. in opening the Conference expresses the thought of everyone one runs into here—not only those with credentials enabling them to get past the many guards around the civic center, but also the people one meets casually in hotels and on the street.

For me the most moving event at the great meeting that opened the conference was the minute of "silent meditation" that Mr. Stettinius called for as soon as his heavy gavel banged out three blows with the words, "The Conference of the United Nations is now in session." There were 6,000 people in the theatre, with fully a thousand standing uncomfortably. Yet one heard not even a cough. It was an impressive silence. Most undoubtedly prayed and in their prayers were joined by millions throughout the world—yes, hundreds of millions—who are aware that on the success of this Conference depends the fate of mankind for generations to come. As a clergyman naturally I asked myself, "Why did he not ask for a minute of prayer?" But the answer is obvious—every culture on the face of this earth is represented here. All could meditate. Some could not pray and Mr. Stettinius was not going to embarrass them. But whether it was prayer or meditation, that minute was religiously moving.

The session itself was impressive in its simplicity. A long line of flags—forty-six in all—on the stage. That was all. And it was good staging on the part of someone that the flags of the Big Three were not centered, flanked by the lesser powers. The Stars and Stripes took a humble place near the end of the line, as did likewise the Union Jack and the Hammer and Sickle of the Soviet Union. It was symbolic of the sincere attempt being made to have this a United Nations Conference and not one in which the larger powers will ride roughshod over anyone. It was put into words by Mr. Stettinius: "In their purpose to build an enduring structure of world peace the people of the United States believe they are firmly united with all the other United Nations. They are united with the large countries which, of necessity, have had to bear the main burden of winning victory over our common enemies. They are united with the smaller countries so many of which have suffered the agony and destruction of conquest—all because of the failure of peace-loving people to unite in time against aggression before this war." And I am tempted to add a little side-note here for it was in 1938 that I attended another international conference in Mexico City. That one was not of nations but of peoples, with delegates representing unions and organizations pledged to oppose aggression and fascism and thus prevent war. Those gathered there less than eight years ago got little encouragement from their governments. Efforts to stand by Republican Spain against a Franco who was supported by Italian fascism and German naziism got pretty stiff opposition from Washington and Downing Street. "The failure of peace-loving peoples to unite in time against aggression in this war." True words indeed, and heartening that today at long last the delegates of forty-six nations meet officially to create an international organization to accomplish that purpose which a comparative handful of men and women pleaded for in the days before the war.

It is too soon to have any idea about what really is going on here in San Francisco. An impressive opening session; organization following that; rumors about this and that—Poland; number of votes in the Assembly; the Big Three agree;

Edward Stettinius, secretary of State and an Episcopalian, who heads the United States Delegation at the United Nations Conference in San Francisco the Big Three disagree. But there is nobody at this writing who knows anything definite. At least the newspaper men do not, and there are fully five hundred of them raising a great din as they pick away at their typewriters as I write. They write a line and stop—light a cigarette—put it down until it burns the edge of the table while they bang out a few more lines. And I have heard a good many shout to friends "What's the lead for this story?" So they write, as I do, of a great opening and a determination that one not only hears expressed but which is also felt, that whatever the obstacles, this United Nations Conference will succeed.

Meanwhile in a tiny office, a mile or so from the civic center where the Conference meets, sits Mr. Clark Eichelberger, director of the American Association of the United Nations. He is the chairman of a committee representing forty-two national organizations, a large number of them Church organizations; all determined to do everything possible to make this Conference a success. This committee is to meet over the week-end, too late for me to report in this number. But in my next report I hope to be able to give you not only a picture of the Conference, but what is the real job of a Church paper, to tell you something of the religious influences at work and what the leaders of religion who are here think you should do to further the building of a structure that will make for a just and lasting peace.

PEACE INSTITUTE IS HELD

Indianapolis, Ind. (RNS): — Churches were urged to organize study groups and inter-church activities to gain better understanding of world peace problems, at a church peace institute here. The institute was sponsored by the Indianapolis Church Federation, Council of Church Women, Butler University School of Religion, the YMCA, YWCA, and the United Christian Missionary Society of the Disciples of Christ. Asserting that peace "begins with relationships among individuals of various racial and national origins and faiths," the conference suggested that each church initiate community projects that will create the conditions of peace, and support movements toward cooperation and unity in missionary work abroad.

A resolution forwarded to the State Department and the U. S. delegation to the San Francisco Conference expressed belief that eventually the powers granted to the security council by the Dumbarton Oaks proposals should reside in the Assembly. It was felt by delegates that concentration of power in the hands of a few large nations was contrary to Christian principles.

MARITIME DAY IS SET

New York: — Presiding Bishop Tucker calls the attention of the Church to the national observance on May 22nd, of Maritime Day. The day was fixed by President Franklin Delano Roosevelt shortly before his death. The U. S. Maritime Commission suggests that Churches may wish to observe the day on Sunday, May 20 (which is Whitsunday.)

In his proclamation, the late President said, that as many thousands of patriotic men and women are toiling through the long hours of the day and night in the construction of the great fleets of vessels that carry the goods of victory to the distant battlefronts of the United Nations, and as the ships, sailing every ocean, have been manned by courageous officers and seamen all of whom have left the security of their firesides and many of whom have given their lives for the land of their allegiance, and as "the American people are looking forward to the days of lasting peace when the merchant fleets of the Nation, wisely used and vigilantly maintained, shall sail the seas freed from the perils of war," and then called upon the people of the United States to honor the Maritime service by displaying the flag on May 22nd.

Nearly 6,000 men of the Merchant Marine have given their lives supplying the armed services.

CONSECRATION DATE IS SET

Pittsburgh:—The Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving II is to be consecrated Bishop of Arizona at Calvary Church, his present parish, May 29th. The consecrator will be the Presiding Bishop with Bishop Walter Mitchell, retired bishop of Arizona, and Bishop Tucker of Ohio as the co-consecrators. The bishop-elect will be presented by Bishop Pardue of Pittsburgh and Bishop Scarlett of Missouri. Attending presbyters will be the Rev. Arthur L. Kinsolving of Princeton and the Rev. Richard H. Baker of Baltimore. The sermon will be preached by Bishop Powell of Maryland and the litany will be read by Dean Zabriskie of Virginia Seminary.

PROTESTANT LAYMEN'S FELLOWSHIP

San Francisco (RNS): — Organization of a Protestant Laymen's Fellowship to promote greater participation in church activities is planned here. Hughbert Landram, executive secretary of the San Francisco Council of Churches, will assist in a recruiting campaign to be conducted by interested laymen. "The Fellowship will not only promote greater participation in church affairs," said Landram, "but will aid in advancing the spiritual welfare of all men in our community."

SWEET BRIAR CONFERENCE CANCELLED

Baltimore:—The Sweet Briar Conference has been called off this year, according to an announcement by Boyd R. Howarth, chairman of publicity. It was done to comply with the ruling of the office of defense transportation.

Bishop Conrad Gesner, formerly the rector of St. John's Church, St. Paul, Minnesota, who was consecrated Bishop Coadjutor of South Dakota yesterday, May 2nd

CONFERENCE SUPPORTED BY PROTESTANTS

San Francisco (RNS):—As special intercessions for the success of the United Nations' Conference on International Organization, two mass meetings were held Sunday, April 22 under the sponsorship of Protestant Churches of San Francisco and Oakland.

The first mass meeting was at 3 p.m. in Oakland Auditorium and the speaker was John Foster Dulles, chairman of the commission on a just and durable peace of the Federal Council of Churches, and advisor to the United States delegation to the United Nations' conference. Bishop James C. Baker of the Methodist Church presided.

The second meeting was a mass worship in San Francisco's First Congregational Church and was held under the auspices of the San Francisco Council of Churches. The Temple of Religion and the Tower of Peace. Dr. Rudolph Coffee will preside.

Three Little Servicemen Talk About the Big Three

Crowds Cheer for the Dignitaries as Two Soldiers Get Playful with Their Crutches

By W. B. Spofford

San Francisco:—Outside the Civic Center several thousand waited for the delegations to arrive and march through the lines of military police, handsome chaps picked apparently for their size and looking snappy in their white spats and shining white helmits. There are 1200 of them here, quartered in newly constructed barracks near the Conference hall, to do guard duty and to challenge those who cannot show proper credentials.

The delegates of the United Kingdom arrive and handsome Anthony Eden receives a cheer as, bowing and smiling, he hurries into the Opera House followed by the Earl of Halifax and Laborite Clement Attlee who has come such a long way since his social service days in Limehouse. Inside photographers stand on a center table with their huge machines. The delegation stops, poses, flashes, they hurry to their seats.

It was interesting too that there was a good hand for the delegation of valiant Czechoslovakia, headed by Jan Masaryk. The crowd somehow sensed courage and suffering there. Field Marshal Jan Christian Smuts, a little old and feeble but still looking the fighting man in his smart uniform, heading the delegation of the Union of South Africa. China also received a good reception, while the delegations from Ethiopia, India, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon captured the imagination of the crowd by their flowing robes, resplendent headdress and copper skins.

Mr. Stettinius arrived. Not yet used to cheering crowds apparently for there was less of the politician's bowing to the crowd as he marched through the lines. Just a handsome man of dignity, small brief case under his arm, as he marched in for very serious business. American efficiency.

A cheer, a huge black car, and out stepped Mr. Molotov. He and Anthony Eden got the big hands from the crowd, not only I figured because they represented two great powers but because they are easily recognized. The Russian did all the proper things. Hat in hand he smiled his thank-you to the people, bowing. Like Eden he knew what to do with photographers; he stopped a few feet from the table where a dozen of them were dangerously perched; he started a faked conversation with Ambassador Gromyko; the bulbs flashed and the delegation entered the hall, all in civilian clothes incidentally, though one is an admiral and another a general.

So it went; Syria, Saudi Arabia; Yugoslavia; Turkey; Norway, with C. J. Hambro, big-shot of the old League of Nations, among them. Forty-six in all—not Poland yet, nor Argentina—but still forty-six, which is a lot of nations and a tough job for the leader of the band inside the hall which had to play snatches from national anthems as each delegation was ushered to their seats. The bandmen must have rehearsed long and late to do that job well, for sensitive feelings could not be hurt by mistakes.

It was nearly nine when I left the press room. I was tired and hungry. A friendly radio technician drove me to the postoffice to air-mail copy. A tough day for him, with the story of the opening day going over the air to all parts of the world. The Australians, the British, the Canadians, the Russians all have their own broadcasting studios in the conference building as well, of course, as the American networks. It was a hard day for this worker but he sensed the importance of it and was proud to play his part. He had only one complaint—they had given him no press ticket so that he was barred from the little room where the newsmen could get coffee and a snack. "And boy, I wanted a cup of coffee."

He dropped me at a restaurant at the corner of Market and New Montgomery where I got caught in a revolving door between a couple of G.I.'s. The lad in front, nineteen or so, was playing with his friend behind me. He had a heavy cane and limped badly—artificial leg, I found out afterwards. But the other lad was worse off—a crutch under each arm, with two game legs which he had difficulty in managing. Rather mean playing I thought, holding the door just to make it tougher for the boy on crutches. I said so. But the laughing G.I. figured it was OK: "Listen, mister; he's got to be on them things a long time. I'm just helping him to learn how to handle 'em."

A sailor sat alone in a booth for four; the G.I.s, still playing rough with each other, managed to get there with their artificial legs. And since there seemed to be no other place I asked if I might take the fourth seat. Two wounded G.I.'s and a black haired, black-eyed, thinly-nervous sailor. No decorations except the purple hearts on the soldiers. Amphibian insignia on the sailor's blouse and that was all.

"What do you men think of the conference?"

The wounded soldiers had other things on their minds. They had to learn to walk for one thing and they allowed they could manage a drink or two and a little food, then they figured they'd find a couple of girls. "Some girls'll go out with soldiers even if we can't dance," one said, "so let the bigshots whose pictures are in the papers look after the world for awhile." Nothing bitter, nothing cynical, just a crack that was worth a laugh to the wounded soldiers.

Not so with the sailor. He was nervous and drawn and very young. A college lad I gathered, though I did not ask him. "They better do this job right. And I'm only wondering if this crowd they have here can do that kind of a job. It would have a better chance I think if there were a few delegates from the places I've been. I've been lucky so far—four landings in the Pacific and not a scratch. Now I'm on my way back, wondering a little if my luck's run out. I've seen plenty and there's nothing pretty about any of it. And I'm not wearing any service stripes to remind myself or anyone else where I've been. I leave those with my mother. Maybe I'll come through the next one; maybe not. If I do here's the girl I'm going to marry." And even the wounded soldiers stopped their kidding for a minute as they looked at a snapshot of a very pretty girl. "Pretty lucky guy," was all that was said.

"Sure," said the sailor, "I'll say I am. She's a swell kid. Just the same there's a lot to think about. Maybe they are just setting things up so our kids in about twenty years will have to take what we got. I tell you, mister, these guys better do this job right."

And I wished right there that Handsome Anthony Eden and Smiling V. M. Molotov and Dignified Edward Stettinius, who had that afternoon received the cheers and applause of thousands, could sit down for an hour or so with these two legless soldiers and this sailor with such suffering black eyes. It would perhaps help them "do this job right." Maybe they have. I hope so.

UNUSUAL SERVICE IN DURHAM

Durham, N. C.:—A service of far more than diocesan interest was held in Durham, North Carolina on April 12th when the Rev. James Robertson Fortune was advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Edwin A. Penick. Bishop Penick also preached the sermon. Mr. Fortune's work is among the deaf people of the state. The church in which the service took place was Ephphatha Church, the building being erected some years ago especially for the deaf. Over thirty clergy were present at the service, eight of whom were missionaries to the deaf in various places. The service was conducted in the sign language and interpreted by some of the deaf clergy. Mr. Fortune is not deaf himself, but as his parents were, he grew up in a deaf community.

The missionaries to the deaf who were present at the ordination were the Rev. Messrs. J. Stanley Light, Herbert C. Merrill, Henry J. Pulver, William M. Lange, Otto B. Berg, Robert C. Fletcher, George F. Flick, and Guilbert C. Braddock. Also present was Bishop Edward Huntington Coley, retired Bishop of Central New York, who happened to be visiting in the neighboring town of Chapel Hill.

Shortly after the late Rev. S. S. Bost became rector of St. Philip's Church, Durham, he discovered a small colony of deaf people in his parish. He learned the language and became minister to them. After a few years he was able to get the assistance of Miss Robina Tillinghast, who conducted a Bible class and interpreted the regular services to them. About 1916 Roma C. Fortune, one of the deaf colony, offered himself for the ministry and was ordained deacon. Several years later he was advanced to the priesthood. He died in 1942 after a faithful ministry among his people. Shortly afterward his son James Robertson Fortune, offered himself to carry on his father's work. His work as a deacon has been most effective. He will have charge now not only of the church in Durham, but of small deaf congregations in the large towns of the Diocese.

The Rev. Donald Aldrich who is to be consecrated Bishop Coadjutor of Michigan at St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, tomorrow, May 4th. Rector of the Ascension, New York, he has recently served as a Navy chaplain. Prior to entering the service he was a member of THE WITNESS Editorial Board and continues to serve as a Contributing Editor and as a member of the Executive Committee of the Church Publishing Association

Mud Versus Money

WE SAW a farmer once, working on his land. Near him were some fowl and in the spring air the faint odor of the upturned earth. "Hick" we have heard him called, or "hayseed," and usually by the sort of city slicker who sits behind sets of telephones yelling out quotations which he gets from strips of paper that state the price of a new issue on an old stock held by a holding company that is refinancing some debilitated debentures to the credit of the board of directors following an agreement drawn up by the legal advisers of the majority of the shareholders of the common, (but not preferred), stock. Surely the real job is held by the man of the soil as he deals actually with things like food and such concrete commodities but yet our society is set up to give the primary importance to the financier or business executive and allow his artificial devices of remote control to determine the production and disposition of the fruits of the earth. The whole thing seems to be upside down so that we are not surprised to find that the food the farmer grows does not get eaten although many people in the world are very hungry.

Where is man's life rooted? Not surely in finance. The Christian answer is twofold: ultimately in heaven as the final goal of his development but first in the God created earth as the beginning and means of getting there. Man's social life, therefore, must be properly related to both the spiritual and economic orders. A healthy society is rooted in the soil to which all the sons of God have free and direct access. The earth is for man and any system of business which thwarts production and consumption in the interests of financial profits is a sinful barrier to the will of God for the welfare of mankind. The season of Rogationtide points up an inherent blasphemy in our way of doing things. How can we pray for plenty when we work for scarcity? It is to be hoped that one of the lessons to be learnt from this war is that the soil is primary and elemental. We can look forward through our increased technology to a return to reality in our living where more people seek their livelihood directly from the land in a system that is designed to facilitate the distribution of their products to those whose lot it is to dwell in cities.

"QUOTES"

WE BELIEVE that a supreme responsibility rests with the Church. The Church, being a creation of God in Jesus Christ, is called to proclaim to all men everywhere the way of life. Moreover, the Church which is now in reality a world community, may be used of God to develop His spirit of righteousness and love in every race and nation and thus to make possible a just and durable peace. For this service Christians must now dedicate themselves, seeking forgiveness for their sins and the constant guidance and help of God.

—Delaware Conference of the Commission for a Just and Lasting Peace.

An Unfair Attack

WE HAVE received a considerable number of letters, similar to the one in Backfire this week, jumping on us for not being critical of Mr. Rockefeller's speech. The fact is that we were not dealing with the speech. We were dealing with the charge made by the Bishop of Long Island that the speech had the endorsement of the Federal Council of Churches and the Protestant Council, which, we repeat, is not a statement of fact. We talked with three high ranking officers of the Federal Council and with one officer of the Protestant Council (which Bishop DeWolfe could have done and should have done before making his charge) and separately they explained to us the procedure that is necessary for pronouncements to receive their official endorsement. They explained further that they distribute or aid in distributing many pamphlets and leaflets which have not been first approved by their publications and executive committees. Those who have had experience with these committees know what a long and often tedious process it is to receive such official endorsement.

At the meeting of the WITNESS Editorial Board when this matter was considered there was no discussion of the merits of Mr. Rockefeller's speech. Certainly any who have read this paper for even a short time know that we consider theology of first-rate importance and that we believe a creedless Church would be a dying Church. The basis for Christian action, as we have frequently stressed, is the full historic faith of the Christian gospel, not merely goodwill and a hazy belief in God. We were not defending Mr. Rockefeller's speech or even considering it. We were saying that he spoke as an individual and that for a bishop to call upon the Episcopal Church to withdraw from the Federal Council for endorsing it, when they had not endorsed it, was, to put it mildly, unfair.

Michigan's Coadjutor

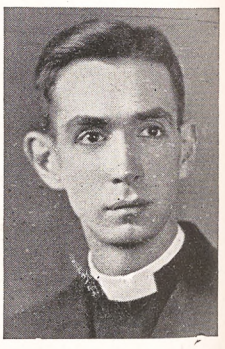
MICHIGAN is one of the great dioceses of our Church. It is strong in communicant strength, the eighth in the Church and the second west of the Atlantic seaboard. The diocese ministers to an industrial area which is in many respects the most strategic section of America. Religiously, that area is teeming with a welter of strange and fanatically emotional sects. Racially there is friction and unrest. Labor is strong and militant. All in all, it is an area throbbing with vitality as dangerous and foreboding as it is pregnant with promise. Last week a Bishop was consecrated to serve as Coadjutor in that diocese. He is well known to us because until he entered the Navy as a Chaplain, he was a member of our editorial board. Donald Aldrich is a preacher of distinction, a personality of grace and sensitivity and an excellent administrator. He has a rare social vision and is uniquely skillful in leading services of worship and in getting people to work together. We rejoice that the diocese of Michigan is to have his consecrated leadership.

Bishop Conrad Gesner

HAVING begun his ministry in South Dakota in 1927, Bishop Conrad Gesner is already well known and much beloved by the bishop and churchmen of that missionary district of which he was consecrated Bishop Coadjutor on May 2. As rector of the Church of St. John the Evangelist, St. Paul, since 1933, his ministry, parochial and diocesan, has been one of distinction in Minnesota. He has deepened the spiritual life of his people. He has carefully planned a constructive parish program, and given himself without reserve to its development. He has inspired in them an appreciation of diocesan opportunities of which they have taken full advantage. He has widened their horizon relative to the program of the General Church until that parish now has first rank in missionary giving in the diocese.

Greatly admired for his abilities, deeply respected for his convictions and the courage to stand by them, and affectionately regarded for his personal and spiritual qualities, Bishop Gesner has been a member of the bishop and council, chairman of the department of promotion; dean of the St. Paul Deanery; an examining chaplain; president and secretary of the standing committee; a delegate to General Conventions and Provincial Synods. As secretary, he is a member of the executive council of the Province of the Northwest.

His great humility is indicated in his words of acceptance of his election: "After conscientious searching and in mindfulness of the trust placed in me by the House of Bishops, I feel sure that it is my duty to accept my election . . . This only indicates my willingness to serve to the very best of my ability, and is not in any way to be construed as meaning that I feel adequate to so important and responsible position. May your prayers and those of the Church be with me as I prepare for this new adventure in the Lord."



Commenting on the event Bishop Stephen Keeler of Minnesota declared: "We in the Northwest rejoice in that the consecration of Bishop Gesner will not take him out of our Provincial boundaries, and as we return him to South Dakota we are deeply appreciative of the enrichment of our corporate life through his consecrated, devoted, and singularly effective ministry in Minnesota."

The Living Liturgy

Our Impracticable Psalter

OUR Church owes an inestimable debt of gratitude to the members of the committee of our Liturgical Commission who have produced the newly authorized lectionary for the Prayer Book daily offices. It is to be hoped that all the clergy—and for that matter, many of the laity—will have read carefully Professor Bayard Hale Jones' book, The American Lectionary (Morehouse-Gorham, 1944), which explains the principles which guided the committee in its monumental undertaking. Not least among their contributions is the good sense which they applied to the scheme of recitation of the Psalter by relating the selection of Psalms to the lessons. It ought to give the final blow to that wooden and utterly indefensible consecutive reading of the Psalter once a month which Cranmer imposed upon the Prayer Book. Professor Jones puts it mildly when he says, "There was no principle of appropriateness whatever." In any case, if one wishes to read the Psalms consecutively, one can do it in the Bible. Their liturgical recitation demands at the least an appointment of psalmody appropriate to the season, the day and the hour.

The lectionary committee did not have the authority to make any editorial revision of the text of the Psalter, and its recommendations to excise unedifying verses were necessarily limited to more extended passages. For so long as we insist on printing in the Prayer Book every single word of all 150 Psalms it is impracticable to hop, skip and jump through a psalm over isolated phrases or verses which offend Christian sentiment, or even good taste. And then one meets in the best of psalms some verse with a reference to an event or a custom no longer intelligible to a modern congregation. A clean-cut surgical operation on such psalms as 22, 38, 55, or 68, for example, would save many fine passages for common worship, which are now denied to our congregations because we cannot decently ask them to recite the whole poem. We should also omit those glosses and rubrics which crept into the text of the Psalter and which disturb the sense, such as 87:7 and 118:27. Composite psalms, notably 19, 24 and 144, we should separate into their original single parts; single poems, now appearing as two psalms, such as 9-10 and 42-43, ought to be put back together again; and we might well avoid the duplications, i.e., 53 is the same as 14, 40:13-17 appears again as 70, and 108 is made up of 57:7-11 and 60:5-12. Indeed we have already committed ourselves in our American Prayer Book to the principle of editing —cf. the psalms appointed as canticles, the psalms of the Burial Office, and Psalm 51 in the Penitential Office where we have dropped the gloss of verses 18-19 which so rudely contradicts verses 16-17.

The Psalter deserves certainly as careful an editing to make its use in worship intelligible and honest as we demand of our Christian hymnals. Is it a literalistic Biblicism that holds us back from doing so? Or do we expect the modern man to get around the obstacles put in his way by resort to an outmoded allegorizing? Literalists and allegorists both may read the Psalms to their heart's content in the Bible. But in the things which belong to "common prayer" we would do well to keep in mind St. Paul's principle: "I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding also." As a matter of historical fact the canonical Psalter is itself an edited book (or collection of books). And there is no evidence that the Jews used its entire contents in public worship.

It would also be a great boon if we could get the Psalms printed in the Prayer Book in such a way that they look like poems and not like disjunct, enumerated prose sentences. Their variety of meters, their stanza divisions and their refrains would then be evident, and by a glance at their structure the reader would be more readily assisted in comprehending their meaning. In place of the useless Latin titles we might even print headings in English giving the real subjects of the poems. A superb edition of this sort was published by the late Professor J. M. Powis Smith of the University of Chicago in 1926. His translation was reprinted in The Bible, An American Translation. A similar treatment of comparable excellence (though without subject headings) was produced by G. A. Cooke in his The Prayer Book Psalter Revised (Oxford, 1939). If we do print the psalms to make them appear what they are, namely hymns, we might even be aroused to treat them in our common worship as hymns, and so learn to sing them.

TO PUT IT BRIEFLY

What Happens at Confirmation?

By

WILLIAM B. SPERRY

AT CONFIRMATION some things happen that we see and hear and other things happen that we only feel and know. In most cases there is a larger congregation than usual, some of the vestry who seldom come to church are on hand and friends and relatives of those to be confirmed are present. The choir has a special anthem and the altar guild has made meticulous preparations in the sanctuary.

All this is neither foolish nor unimportant because confirmation is the completion of the ceremony in which those to be confirmed were made members of the Church. It is fitting that a special occasion be made of this further step in the Christian life. The children who were baptized have come to some maturity in the life of the Church and have grown familiar with its customs. They have been given special instruction in how to live as Christians. The adults who were baptized have also been instructed as suited to their age and needs.

We see the candidates for confirmation come forward to the altar rail and hear them ratify the vows that they made or were made for them at baptism. We then hear the bishop offer a prayer. It is one of the oldest prayers in the Prayer Book and it asks that the candidates be strengthened and that they increase daily in spiritual understanding and godliness. We then see the candidates kneel while the bishop lays his hands on each one individually and we hear him pray for each one again that they may be defended and may increase each day in knowledge and in attainment of Christian life.

So much for the things that are seen and heard at confirmation. But there is something else here that is felt and known by those confirmed. You will remember that when these persons became members of the Church their sponsors promised that they would be brought to the bishop "to be confirmed by him." The promise was not that they would be brought to the bishop to confirm their own vows. And the adults who were baptized said nothing about a later reaffirmation of their vows, but they all are now standing before the bishop asking for some special strength for participation in the work of this body of which they are members.

Part of confirmation is a mystery. The mystery is that by means of this ancient ceremony these members of the Christian Church are given a spirit of guidance, protection and strengthening in meeting the circumstances of life. This unseen and unheard presence is what confirms the candidate in his previous endeavors and this presence or Holy Spirit remains with him throughout life to be called upon and brought into the thought and action of every day.

The services of the Church have more meaning thereafter, particularly the service of Holy Communion in which the new member now participates and in which he renews this special Presence. This is so very true that confirmation is sometimes mistakenly regarded as joining the Church, which it is not, as the candidates were already members. It would be more correct to say that at confirmation the member of the Church and the soldier of Christ has taken on new responsibilities and has been given additional weapons.

Thus three things happen at confirmation. First, the baptism ceremony is completed by ratification of vows taken when the candidate was made a member of the Church. Second, the individuals confirmed are mysteriously strengthened and confirmed through an ancient ceremony of laying on of hands. Third, these now confirmed members of the Church are formally admitted to receive the Holy Communion.

An extremely clear discussion of confirmation which can be read carefully in less than an hour is published by the Forward Movement commission. It gives the New Testament origins, the early Church practices and it tells our own part and God's part in the rite. It is called Come to Confirmation. Ask your Rector for a copy.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

THREE NATIONS are winning the war, will take charge of Germany immediately after V-E Day and, through their united strength are the only powers that can keep peace for that long period during which the world must be rebuilt and international collaboration have a chance to develop. These nations, the United States, Great Britain and the Soviet Union, can say to nations, groups and classes: "A tremendous job is to be done; millions have to be fed and clothed; millions have to be reestablished in their homes; borders have to be defined; international trade established. There will be lots of bitter strife and disagreement. We are going to leave our guns alone while this job is done. What's more we are together going to see to it that you also leave your guns alone."

That is the realism of the situation and to say it bluntly is to take nothing away from the other United Nations who have made great contributions to the war effort, and have made sacrifices that certainly we here in the United States have not made. Nor is such action on the part of the Big Three going to deprive the smaller nations of their rights as sovereign states. Quite the reverse for without the armed might of the Big Three these small states would not long remain sovereign as past events abundantly prove.

It is no supposition that the Nazi gangsters believe that the Big Three cannot long remain at peace. It has been their line from the first and never more so than in these closing days of the European war, with their propagandists assuring the German people that they will be saved by conflicts (which of course they are encouraging) between the United Nations and particularly between Britain and the United States on the one hand and Russia on the other.

For the Roman Catholic hierarchy on the very eve of the San Francisco Conference to express "doubt and fear" about world security and to assail the Yalta Agreement as being inconsistent "with the sovereign equality of peace-loving nations" is to threaten that unity which must be maintained if World War Three is to be avoided. Even more threatening is their deliberate insult to our Russian ally, charged by these Roman bishops with maintaining a social order which is "essentially incompatible" with genuine democracy. I can understand the Vatican — and after all seven American Archbishops and three American bishops do not issue such a statement without Vatican approval — I can understand the weeping over Lithuania, Estonia and Latvia. For four years these countries have been republics of the Soviet Union, with their people looking toward Moscow not only politically but ecclesiastically as well. So too with Poland where the Vatican is losing out to the Orthodox. But for responsible American bishops to declare that Russia is run under a system that "herds the masses under dictatorial leadership, insults their intelligence with its propaganda and controlled press and tyranically violates innate human rights" is not only to aid Hitler and his gangsters but it is also to do a distinct disservice to the common people of the world, millions of whom are Roman Catholics, who are praying daily that out of this San Francisco Conference may come a structure which will give this world an enduring peace.

The Funeral Prayer

Requests have been received from a number of readers that we print the prayer said at the funeral of President Roosevelt by Bishop Augus Dun of Washington. We are happy to comply, believing that many subscribers will be glad to have and use this prayer.

O GOD of peace, who hast taught us that in returning and rest we shall be saved, in quietness and in confidence shall be our strength; By the might of thy Spirit lift us, we pray thee, to thy presence, Where we may be still and know that thou art God! through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Remember thy servant, Franklin Delano, O Lord, according to the favor which thou bearest unto thy people, and grant that, increasing in knowledge and love of thee, he may go from strength to strength in the life of perfect service in thy heavenly kingdom; through Jesus Christ our Lord.

O God, from whom every good gift cometh, we thank thee for the qualities of heart and mind which this thy servant brought to the service of our nation and our world. For steadfast courage in adversity; for clear vision of dangers to which many shut their eyes; for sympathy with the hungers and fears of common men; for trials met without surrender, and weakness endured without defeat; for unyielding faith in the possibility of a more just and ordered world, delivered from the ancient curse of war; we praise thee, O God.

And as we give thanks for his life and pray for thy merciful judgment on the imperfections which he and all of us have brought to our many callings, we beseech thee to take under thy good providence the lives and causes for which he spent himself.

Grant quietness of heart and comfort and the assurance of thy eternal love of those whose lives were knit to his in the bonds of family and of friendship.

Strengthen those on whom have fallen new responsibilities in the high tasks of government, that with simplicity of heart and sure trust in thee, they may accept as from thee the burden laid upon them.

Watch over the men and women of our forces by sea, by land, and in the air, in particular those of this household; Be thou their strength when they are set in the midst of so many and great dangers. And grant that whether by life or by death, they may win for the whole world the fruits of their sacrifice and a righteous peace.

Quicken and knit together in common loyalty the wills of this whole people, that we may resolutely take to ourselves the responsibilities bequeathed to us by our stricken leader.

Keep us in this land and those peoples who struggle at our side, steadfast and united in the unfinished task of war. Revive us when in weariness we are tempted to grow slack and each man to seek first his own advantage. As we look ahead to final victory, enable us to strive even more mightily in peace than in war to bring new freedom and dignity to every member of our human race, and to bear without stint our destined responsibilities in the family of nations.

Make ready our shoulders to carry the burdens of victory; to feed the hungry, to clothe the naked, to free the oppressed, and to lay the foundation for a more just and ordered common life for all thy people.

And do thou, with whom a thousand years are as one day, and before whom our lives pass like a watch in the night, help us to walk this day and all our days in the light of thine own eternity: through Jesus Christ our Lord.

The God of Peace, who brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, the great Shepherd of the sheep; Make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is well pleasing in his sight; through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory for ever and ever. AMEN.

For Church Schools

By

WILLIAM GRIME
Rector of St. Paul's, Great Neck, N. Y.

MANY teachers of children's confirmation classes are constantly looking for good supplementary material. They realize that these too-brief, rushed-through confirmation classes are just one more reason for the crumbling in the church loyalties of young people. If you do not mind going outside your own church for such information, you will find real help in My Church (Pilgrim Press, $1.00). The book is a recent revision of another book, My Confirmation. However, let me caution here. You will not agree with some of the interpretations in this book. You will find some factual errors in it, but you will appreciate some of the excellent methods and material that have been set down here in such concise, attractive form.

For instance, in the chapter on the Bible, you will find short paragraphs on "The meaning of some words about the Bible," "How to read the Bible," "How to read it for the help you need at the moment," "A glimpse at its contents" with a brief description of the contents of the sixty-six books. Going forward you will find topics like these: "Seeing for yourself what the Bible is like," "How it was written." The latter is broken down into seven historical periods.

Another chapter, "Christian beliefs," deals chiefly with such concepts as God, Jesus, Holy Ghost, and ourselves. The students through the fill-in method write a brief account of Jesus' life based chiefly on St. Mark's gospel. This is done because "if students are to love and follow Jesus, the first step is to learn the main facts of his life." Then comes a study of the creeds. "How the Apostles creed came to be and its meaning for us." Here is offered an understandable interpretation of what in general each part of the creed means, together with a series of questions challenging the students to relate their Christian beliefs to specific world-wide social purposes.

Especially interesting is the suggestion on page 143 in the chapter, "Enlisting parental cooperation." It recommends at least two meetings with the parents of the class, one near the beginning of the course, the other near its close. And it goes on to outline sixteen vital subjects which pastors, teachers, and parents might profitably think about together.

The last part of the book is concerned with "What can the Church do for you?" and "In what ways does the Church need me?" Throughout both these chapters you will be impressed with the stress that is laid upon personal decision, which must be informed, definite and deep. In this connection there is given an outline of all the major activities of the Church. Then comes the question would you care to tell your pastor some of the ways in which you are willing to serve God through his church? And after the following: "Desirous that my membership in the Church shall be really helpful to the Church and meaningful for me, and that through the Church my influence may count in some clear way for the Kingdom of God, and having thought over the uses I make of my time, I here set down my purpose and belief that out of the week's 168 hours I should give at least ..... hours to the activities of my church," opportunity is given to write down answers.

Your best plus the best in this book can surely enrich any year's course on confirmation instructions.

New Books

Excellent Good *Fair

_A Faith to Free the People_ by Cedric Belfrage. The Dryden Press, New York, 1944.

A re-working of the author's previous biography of Claude Williams entitled South of God, this book sets forth exactly what is meant—or should be meant—by social Christianity. Dealing with Mr. Williams' struggles against fascistic oppression in Arkansas and Michigan, this biography helps one understand just who, and what, the early Christian martyrs really were. Unless I miss my guess, this book should scare or embarrass at least ninety per cent of its readers. To the others, it will seem like a breath of fresh air!

—W. B. S., Jr.

_Slavery and Freedom_ by Nicholas Berdyaev. Scribners, $2.75.

This is not a book to be reviewed by a busy person. It should be read and pondered and reread before any adequate appraisal can be made. It is extremely meaty,—every page is packed with sentences each of which would make a sermon. It is the moral and spiritual equivalent of a plane ride in the stratosphere, maybe in a B-29, for it carries a lot of high explosives!

Seventeen Long Island Clergy Differ with Bishop

State That Bishop DeWolfe by His Statement Condemned the Entire General Convention

Edited by Rita Rubin

Brooklyn, N. Y.:—Seventeen clergymen of the diocese of Long Island have sent an open letter to Bishop DeWolfe, protesting against his recent circular letter to all the clergy of the diocese in which he said that the Episcopal Church should withdraw from the Federal Council of Churches (see WITNESS editorials, April 12 and this number). The letter follows:

"Your circular letter of March 26, addressed to the clergy of the diocese, has been carefully read by us all, and we whose names are subscribed below beg to make united reply. We should prefer to sit down with you in conference on this vital matter rather than resort to a letter. But since your letter has appeared in the daily press, we are of the opinion that this issue should be thought through in a more formal and public way.

"We are of one mind with you in thinking that an aspiration for a revitalized Christianity is readily understood and shared. We would go so far as to say that the subject of Church unity is so exceedingly vital that we are willing to overlook many inadequacies of statement in any utterance of an individual or a group. It would seem to us like 'straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel,' to lose sight of the great objective and stress the form of words.

"We have our Lord's injunction that we are to seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness. Unless the Kingdom is put first it matters little what comes second, whether it be baptism or the Lord's Supper. When the Kingdom is first, baptism and the Lord's Supper fall into their rightful and beautiful place. Are not our unhappy divisions today in the Church largely due to the fact that we have misdirected the minds of men from the supreme objective of the Kingdom and fixed them upon the lesser matters of the law, mint, anise and cummin?

"When you tell us that no priest can throw in his lot with the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America (and the Protestant Council of the City of New York) and remain true to the vow he took at his ordination, have you not indicted our General Convention and impugned the motives of a large number of bishops, priests and deacons? The President of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ has been our Presiding bishop, the Rt. Rev. Henry St. George Tucker. Many distinguished bishops and priests serve in various departments of the Federal Council.

"You declare that the only honest thing for our Church to do at the next General Convention is to withdraw from the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. It would seem to us a spiritual calamity for the Church to withdraw from the Council for the reasons you mention; and especially at this time, when the Christian Church should be united in order to make its contribution to the solution of the tragic problems of the world. Nor do we believe that we will withdraw so long as we keep first things first and seek the Kingdom of God."

The open letter was signed by the following clergymen: J. Phillip Anshutz, Church of the Holy Spirit; Lyman C. Bleecker, Cold Spring Harbor; Kermit Castellanos, St. Bartholomew's; Horace E. Clute, St. George's; Samuel Davis, East Hampton; Samuel M. Dorrance, former St. Ann's; George W. Essles, Richmond Hill; William Grime, Great Neck; E. A. Harding, Messiah and Incarnation; Charles W. Hubon, St. Mary's; John Howard Melish, Holy Trinity; William E. Melish, Holy Trinity; Harold Pattison, retired; Robert Rogers, retired; Thomas L. Settle, the Nativity; Rush R. Sloane, Locust Valley; Joseph H. Titus, Jamaica.

Archbishop's Sermon

Canterbury (RNS):—When Geoffrey Francis Fisher was enthroned as Archbishop of Canterbury on April 19th he spoke of the intimate association between the Anglican Church and the state in his sermon. "There is now the whole demon-ridden world to be reordered, and everything of stability and high purpose which man can find will be needed for the task," he said. "As through our long history, so now let the Church and nation stand together under God to their inter-related duty. The Church has much to put in order if it is faithfully to serve the nation. The nation has much to learn and unlearn if it is to heed what God says to it through his Church. For many years past, the two have been drawing apart. There is a possibility and fear that alienation may continue and increase. There is also a possibility, even a hope, certainly a challenge, that they should look again to one another in Christian faith which is unashamed to be definite, explicit and binding, wherein the Church and nation, each in its own share and function, may glorify God."

In speaking of the Church of England's place within the nation, the Archbishop added: "I thankfully associate with it the Free Churches of this land, which have borne their notable part in Christian witness, and in shaping our national character with a valiance for truth not to be neglected, and with a zeal for righteousness not to be quenched. Once there was little but contention and strife and bitterness between us. By God's goodness, for distrust there is now goodwill, for conflict cooperation, for controversy quiet evaluation of those truths of Christ which we hold in common, and of those which still divide us."

The Archbishop declared that the presence of Free Church representatives at the enthronement was "proof and prayer that in God's good time we may stand wholly together in one body of Christ to serve God and witness for him to this people."

Pointing out that the Church of England is more than the Church of Britain, the Archbishop said that even as "these islands have given birth to a commonwealth of nations all over the world, so has this Church given birth to a commonwealth of Churches in the far flung Anglican communion which looks to Canterbury as its mother Church. And as this nation has been a strength to other nations and is bound in ties of comity with all who share her ideals of ordered liberty, so this Church has close and growing fellowship in Christ with Churches of other communions which have concern for us as we for them that in the ecumenical Church of Christ we may with one voice glorify God."

Headed by the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, the new Archbishop was conducted to the high altar. After prayer, he received the pastoral crosier as symbol of his high office. Then on a Latin copy of the Gospels believed to have been given by Pope Gregory the Great to St. Augustine, he took the oath to protect the rights and liberties of "this Cathedral and Metropolitan Church of Christ at Canterbury."

The enthronement in the Cathedral was threefold: first by the Archdeacon of Canterbury in the Howley Throne, second by the Dean of Canterbury in the Dean's Stall, and third by the Dean in the marble chair of St. Augustine, used for enthronements since the 13th Century, and possibly earlier. The ceremony concluded in the Chapter House when the Dean and Chapter proffered their obedience to the new primate.

People Mourn

San Juan, P. R.:—Bishop Coadjutor Charles F. Boynton expressed surprise and pride with "the reaction of the people of Mayuguez, and even more of the members of St. Andrew's parish, concerning the death of President Roosevelt."

The Bishop continued, this account is from a woman worker at St. Andrew's: "I was in town about 6 P.M. when I first heard the news. Everybody who already knew was in tears and very excited. Before I reached the mission, the boys had started to toll the bells. The first reaction of our members was to run to St. Andrew's. Everybody was crying. I stayed for a while, and then went home where I found my father and mother listening to the radio and also crying. I ate some supper and came back to the mission and before 8 o'clock the mission was crowded, not only with the young people but with all our faithful older members and with many of the people you very seldom see here. The bells kept on tolling until 9:30 P.M. At 8:30 the boys asked if they could have a service even if there was no priest here. As I knew how much the service would mean to all the people there, I did not put too much objection, and put the black frontal on the high altar—the church was already crowded—looked for El Servicio para Difuntos, and some appropriate hymns, and Aristides—he is a postulant for Holy Orders—led the service. It was one of the most beautiful services I have ever attended. We invited Mrs. Oglesby, craft shop director, and Mrs. Hinds, to join us and as the service was in Spanish, we included for them a couple of prayers in English. After the grace the bells were tolled 63 times and then stopped. During this period everybody knelt very devotedly and prayed. Then I played the national anthem and everybody cried. Then they all left the mission.

"Last night I felt more proud of being an Episcopalian than I have felt ever before, when in a crisis like this one, our people's first thought was their church. Another thing which did surprise me was the different calls made by various business men and well known people of the town, who, knowing that President Roosevelt was an Episcopalian, came last night to the Mission asking for Fr. Alvarez in order to offer their sympathy."

At St. John's Cathedral, San Juan, Bishop Boynton reports a Memorial Service for the late President was held at the same time as the service at the White House. The governor, Guy Rex Tugwell, Mrs. Tugwell, the governor's aides, and other friends attended officially, along with many members of the Puerto Rican legislature. More than 400 people came, representing many faiths, including many Roman Catholics. Bishop Boynton officiated and read a short message.

Boston CLID

Boston: — The Rev. David D. Vaughan, executive secretary of the New England branch of the American Institute for Democracy, spoke on "Old American Ideals for New American Problems" at the annual pre-Diocesan Convention dinner of the CLID of Massachusetts on April 17th. Emphasizing the basic ideals of Christianity and American democracy, Dr. Vaughan stated that the new, important problems of our times could be solved with dispatch and justice if those same ideals were applied with faith and courage today. The meeting, which was attended by eighty persons and chaired by the Rev. Richard S. M. Emrich, also featured a short commentary on the CLID's current program by the Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher.

New Dormitory

Berkeley:—A new dormitory with rooms for 16 students, offices, refectory, and library wing, to be known as Denniston Hall, will be opened this summer. Originally a sorority house of the University of California, the building has been completely remodeled and attached to the Lincoln Library.

FREEDOM FIRST!

As victory and peace draw nearer, post war plans become more important and more definite.

A prior requisite to most else that matters in America is freedom—it must be vouched safe first.

Unless the democratic process, constitutional government, free pulpit, free press, free enterprise, free assembly and free speech become a popular and first demand, they will be lost.

It is the duty of clergymen of all denominations to proclaim a gospel of Freedom First. Jesus did. He insisted upon the sovereignty of individual souls under God.

Government paternalism leads inevitably to government domination. The further stateism develops the harder it is to resist. Now is the time to proclaim devotion to the American, Christian way of life and now is therefore the time to thwart trends toward a European pattern of state domination.

Are you interested in knowing more about this ten year old crusade which has clergy representatives in your vicinity?

was printed a greeting from himself. The total offering was $2,401. Representatives came from as far as Hickman, on the Mississippi River. Immediately following the service, a united meeting of the young churchmen was held in the cathedral house, with Dean Wicker of the Cathedral as speaker.

Berkeley Lectures

Berkeley: — Bishop Edward L. Parsons, retired bishop of California, gave the annual Foerster lecture on immortality at the University of California on April 10. Following a succession of lecturers which include William Ernest Hocking, Arthur Cushman McGiffert, Jr., James Bissett Pratt, and Douglas Clyde Macintosh, Bishop Parsons spoke on "Immortality and Fulfillment" and declared that belief in immortality makes a pragmatic difference in the spiritual quality of everyday living.

Summer Terms

Berkeley: — Two five-week summer terms will be given by the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, in cooperation with the Pacific School of Religion and the Berkeley Baptist Divinity School, beginning on June 18 and July 23 respectively. A full curriculum will be offered by the combined faculties, including Dean Henry H. Shires, Prof. Randolph C. Miller, and Prof. Pierson Parker. Among visiting lecturers will be Rev. Ralph Sockman. The courses will be open to clergy desiring "refresher" courses.

Saratoga Parish

Saratoga Springs, N. Y.:—Bethesda Church celebrated its Centennial in October, 1930, by planning a fifteen-year endowment program, offered and directed by the Church Life Insurance Corporation. It was the first parish in the Church to initiate such a program and the first to carry it successfully to achievement. The parish will have a $100,000 endowment principal mature in October next. Successful leadership in this effort has been given by the rector, Rev. Irving G. Rouillard, and his vestry. The rector came to this Church in December, 1917, and in the twenty-seven years of his rectorship has helped secure an endowment of $250,000, added a rectory, received for the Church a marvelous organ, and the church has in hand funds for a bell carillon for the Church tower, when they can be procured after the war.

Bethesda Church, the creation of Upjohn, is known for its beautiful architectural lines, for its stained glass, its beautiful reredos, and its heavy wrought-iron rood screen. A son of Bishop Hobart, Rev. John Henry Hobart, and an uncle of Gen. Jonathan Wainwright, Rev. Francis C. Wainwright, are numbered among the Church's former rectors.

Rev. Mr. Rouillard is president of the standing committee of the diocese of Albany, has been active in many phases of missionary, religious, educational and social service enterprises. He is a charter member and past president of the Rotary Club, and a past grand chaplain of Masons of the state of New York. His three older sons are in service, the eldest a member of the class of 1946 at West Point, after 1½ years in the army air force; the second, a lieutenant navigator in the air force; and the third, a navy air cadet, now in active flying training at Bunker Hill, Indiana. A daughter is at Skidmore college and a fourth son in high school.

Support FEPC

San Francisco (RNS): — Support for the Fair Employment Practice Bill now pending in the California Legislature to guarantee the right of employment to all persons — regardless of race, creed, color or origin — was voted here by the board of directors of the San Francisco Council of Churches.

Consecrate Church

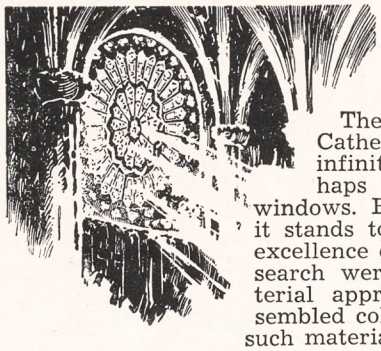
Muskogee, Okla.:—Grace Church here was consecrated on a recent Sunday by Bishop Thomas Casady. The parish is free of debt for the first time in its history. During 1944 and 1945 $9,500 in indebtedness was paid, and at the same time the parish spent about $2000 on improvements.

Bishop Thrown

New York:—Mentioning as an incident in the life of a missionary bishop the fact that he was recently thrown from his horse which had not yet been trained to the saddle, Bishop C. Alfred Voegeli assured the National Council that he is all right. Convocation came right after the accident, while his arm was not functioning any too well, and the Bishop is busy with all sorts of episcopal activities. Explaining the accident, Bishop Voegeli said that the saddle had only one stirrup and a rope bridle.

Consecrate Chapel

Milwaukee: — A new chapel was consecrated at St. James' Church here on April 15 by Bishop Ivins. It was given by the wife and children of Mr. Lloyd Raymond Smith, president of the A. O. Smith Corporation. Mr. Smith has been called one of the country's ten greatest industrialists. He was a great philanthropist but few know of his benefactions since he was very shy and disliked publicity. He died Christmas Eve. The first service, a private communion service for his family, was held in the chapel Easter morning.

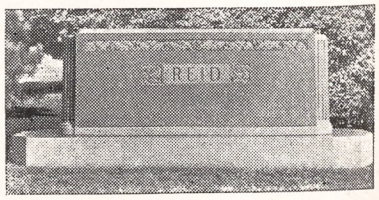


The chapel is at the head of the right hand aisle in the church. The most striking feature is the paneling which is nearly five hundred years old and came from the chapel of an ancient castle in Holland. Several experts say that there is no finer tracery paneling in the country. The effect is beautiful and rich, especially in the sternly simple, gothic church. The Rev. J. Clarence Lund is the rector.

Urge Peace

London (by wireless to RNS):— Warning delegates to the San Francisco Conference against "cynicism," the executive committee of the Society of Friends in Great Britain called for a "single-minded pursuit of the individual well-being of ordinary men and women."

"Many think," the statement said, "that the best the world can hope for is a precarious peace based on overwhelming force and lasting perhaps for ten or fifteen years. We trust that the delegates at San Francisco will not allow themselves to be paralyzed by this cynicism. Mankind can respond to noble ideas and purposes;



A Masterpiece of Beauty and Color

The beautiful rose window of the Cathedral of Notre Dame, a work of infinite beauty and splendor, is perhaps the masterpiece of all art glass windows. Built in the Thirteenth Century, it stands today unsurpassed in beauty and excellence of workmanship. If a world-wide search were made for a monumental material approaching the beauty of the assembled colors of the famous Rose Window, such material would be found in

WINNSBORO BLUE GRANITE

"The Silk of the Trade"

It is found, also, that the beautiful colors of Winnsboro Blue Granite come from the various crystals it contains which are identical in substance to many of the finest of precious stones and jewels of the order of the amethyst and moonstone. When the surface of this granite—which is a composite of these actual precious stone crystals—is highly polished, all the scintillating beauty and color of these jewels become visible.

Winnsboro Blue Granite is most lasting because it is composed of the most durable minerals known.

Like other high quality materials there are many inferior substitutes which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its durable qualities and lasting beauty.

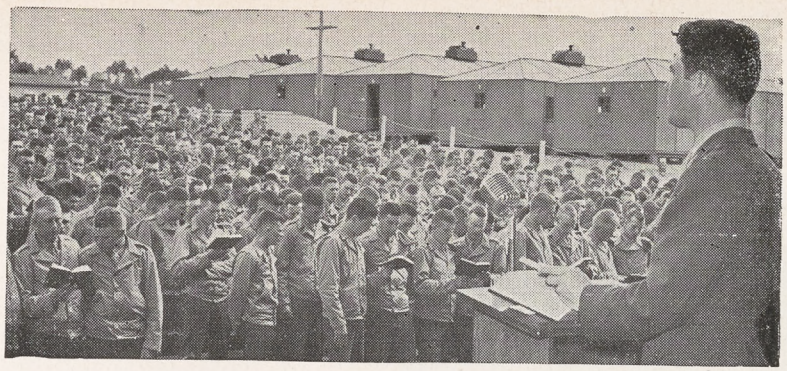
it awaits a leadership of courage and integrity.

"Men of every race and nation must be the beneficiaries of the new world order. The concentration of overwhelming power may temporarily prevent any fresh outbreak of aggression, but such measures are only a precarious expedient. Not by coercion and penalties will the world be turned from war and competing armaments, but by a single-minded pursuit of the individual well-being of ordinary men and women."

Blow to Missions

New York (RNS):—Failure to achieve racial democracy in America hampers missionary work in Asia and Africa, according to 60 per cent of 601 Protestant students of college level who participated in a survey conducted for the Student Volunteer Movement. Results of the survey were announced here by the Rev. Winburn T. Thomas, secretary of the movement. Sixty-seven per cent of the students, representing 37 Protestant denominations in 88 church, state, and private colleges and universities, disagreed with the statement that "missions are so linked with western economics and politics as to be an ally of western imperialism."

All but 11 per cent believed that Protestants should carry on missionary work in Latin America.



Thirty-one per cent of the students agreed that "world religion ultimately will be a synthesis of all faiths."

E. Stanley Jones, Methodist, was voted the "most outstanding missionary."

The survey, on the "Present Attitudes of Protestant Christian Students in Colleges and Universities toward the World Mission of the Church," was conducted by Miss Virginia J. Long, a student at the Biblical Seminary in New York.

Language School

Industrial College, Ga. (RNS):—A school to teach foreign languages to missionaries and ministers has been opened here by the Rev. Harry L. Floyd, formerly of Springfield, Ohio, and known as the preacher with "many tongues." Said to be the first enterprise of its kind, the school, located on the Industrial College missionary grounds, will be known as the "Foreign Language Institute." Construction has begun on dormitories for out-of-town students. Mr. Floyd said his school was being established to aid the many missionaries and young ministers expected to engage in missionary work after the war. Lack of knowledge of the native language, he said was often a handicap to Americans in teaching religion.

Goals of Conference

Washington (RNS):—Three documents of religious interest have been inserted in the Congressional Record by as many congressmen. Senator Carl A. Hatch (D. N.M.) inserted the statement of a joint study made by Catholic, Jewish, and Protestant organizations and issued under the title "Goals for San Francisco." The statement, he pointed out, was signed by the Rev. Edward A. Conway, S.J., of the social action department, National Catholic Welfare Conference; Rabbi Ahron Opher, secretary of the committee on peace of the Synagogue Council of America; and the Rev. Richard M. Fagley, associate secretary of the commission on a just and durable peace of the Federal Council of Churches.

A lecture entitled, "A Great Time to be Alive," delivered by Miss Margaret K. Patterson at the Calvary Baptist Church in Washington, was inserted in the record by Rep. Joseph R. Bryson (D. N.C.).

The sermon delivered by the Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, pastor of Foundry Methodist Church and chaplain of the U. S. Senate, at memorial services for Franklin D. Roosevelt in Constitutional Hall here was inserted in the record by Senator Lister Hill. (D. Ala.).

Intergroup Action

Newark, N. J.:—The Rev. John N. Borton, rector of St. Mark's here, acting as the chairman, has announced the formation of a council to coordinate the activities of several goodwill organizations in this city. The group, to deal with war and post-war tensions, is intended "to stimulate sound thinking and planning for interracial, interfaith and intercultural programs and activities."

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

VIRGINIA SUMMEY
Churchwoman of New York

Thank you for your blast at Mr. White's Report on Russia. I am showing it to friends and will send it to camp. But why publish a column advertisement of Spiritual Mobilization in the same number that carried a denunciation of the organization in Backfire. It is confusing.

ANSWER. Advertisements do not express editorial opinion and are open for the expression of honest opinion.

REV. GEORGE R. HEWLETT
Rector at Newton, New Jersey

The New York Times April 13 states that you criticize the Bishop of Long Island for his statement to the clergy about Mr. John D. Rockefeller's address to The Protestant Council and claim that the address was not endorsed by either the Council or the Federal Council of Churches. I have before me the printed pamphlet of this address with the following endorsement: "With the conviction that he expresses the thoughts of millions in this country, and outside it as well, who share his vision and long for its realization, The Protestant Council, together with the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, is distributing the address in pamphlet form." . . . If this is not an endorsement then what is it? If it was sent out without "official" endorsement then someone has made a bad blunder and it should be corrected.

There is no doubt but that the address "expresses the thoughts of millions" but that does not make it a true expression of Christianity. It simply shows that millions are taken in by high sounding and apparently liberal words that have no real meaning. Even a secular magazine like LIFE devoted its Easter editorial to show how absurd Mr. Rockefeller's position is. As the editor says it is not creeds and ritual that are our trouble but lack of theological thought.

Bishop DeWolfe is right when he says that if this wishy washy stuff represents the standpoint of the Federal Council we should withdraw from the Council. "The most dishonest thing we could do" would be to remain in it.

ANSWER: See Editorial.

MRS. MARTHER VICHWEG

Thank you for THE WITNESS. I read every bit of it and mostly with a very pleasurable reaction. I am thankful for the paper.

MISS M. C. GROVE
Churchwoman of Philadelphia

It seems to me that you have not been sufficiently critical of the Dumbarton Oaks proposals and should urge people to ask for amendments at the conference at San Francisco. I do not see why the Big Three should use their power to impose their will on the rest of the world. The people of India have their rights which have little chance of being recognized. The same is ture of the people of Africa and the smaller nations of Europe. It is power politics all over again and will likely lead us directly to world war three. There is but one basis for a lasting peace and that is justice for all nations and peoples, including the German people. If that nation, in spite of the crimes of its leaders, is to be split up and its people enslaved by the Russians or anyone else, then there will be a stored-up bitterness which one day will break out in a new war. We are supposed to be Christian. Let us therefore deal even with our enemies with mercy, charity and justice.

MR. E. G. ROBERTS
Layman of New York City

The article by William B. Sperry on baptism (WITNESS, April 12) was an excellent job and I hope that he may continue to explain to us the other services of the Church. We need a teaching Church and more information of this sort will be invaluable. I teach a class of teen age children and last Sunday I read to them this article and then we discussed it for the rest of the period. The children were attentive and interested and as grateful to Mr. Sperry as I was.

Thank you too for giving us that excellent account by the Rev. Kimber Den on his work in China. I have made modest contribution to this work and have asked others to do so and it helps to have information of this sort to stir the interest of people.

MISS L. E. BROOKS
Laywoman of Brooklyn, N. Y.

I want to thank you for the editorial on Religious Communities that appeared in the April 12th WITNESS. Our religious orders have made a notable contribution to the life of the Church and I am glad that they received this deserving recognition from THE WITNESS. Likewise I think the point you make that these times call for communities of a different sort is good. I have often wondered why some adventurous young clergyman did not go into slums and industrial areas and establish centers of Christian work.

MRS. JOHN BLIGHT
Churchwoman of Detroit

Having read with interest the letter by the Rev. Charles Lewis Biggs in Backfire of April 5 may I suggest that the Two Great Commandments and the Golden Rule be substitutes for the Creeds. It is my belief that if these had been recited as often and by so many people through the centuries as the Creeds have been that the world war would not have happened.

The Conference Will Succeed Say Leading Statesmen

Nothing Yet Has Happened to Indicate That Differences Cannot Be Settled Harmoniously

By William B. Spofford

San Francisco:—A world organization will be created at this meeting of the forty-nine United Nations. There is no doubt whatever about this in the mind of Mr. Stettinius and after attending innumerable press conferences and having had conversations with scores of people, delegates, advisers, writers and radio commentators, it certainly can be said that practically everyone shares his view. Among the thousands here there are of course the representatives of those forces who hope that this Conference will fail, and they are doing what they can to that end, by stressing differences over mechanism; by seeking to drive a wedge between the smaller nations and the great powers; and, particularly, by seeking to stimulate fear of the Soviet Union. But through it all the top leadership of this Conference smiles confidently, and nobody more than Mr. Stettinius who never meets with the press without assuring his audience that the United Nations Conference will not adjourn until a charter for a world organization has been written and approved.

Argentina, the first nation to be seated without the unanimous approval of the four sponsoring governments, was generally interpreted as a "crisis" and there was speculation all over the place as to whether or not the Russians would pack their bags and go home in a huff. However a few hours later Mr. Stettinius invited the press to use direct quotes when he said: "The Conference is proceeding very satisfactorily. The chairmen of the delegations of the four inviting nations had a very pleasant and harmonious meeting last night." Later in the day the Secretary of State, meeting 35 wounded veterans on the steps of the Opera House where the plenary sessions are held, shook hands all around and again authorized direct quotes for his greeting to these men: "We're going to make it so right here that this can't happen again. I promise you. That's what we are here for." Again at a press conference he assured the reporters and radio commentators that the delegates would stay in San Francisco until the Conference went through to a successful conclusion. And for those who may not be familiar with the technique of such press conferences, I point out that it is rarely that a statesman authorizes "direct quotes" and when he does you can be sure that there is little likelihood that he will later be proved wrong.

Mr. Stettinius of course is not the only statesman to maintain on optimistic attitude. "All the causes that made some form of international machinery desirable after the last war make it indispensable today," said Mr. Eden and his statement received vigorous applause. And even more vigorous applause greeted the remark of Dr. Soong: "We must not hesitate to delegate a part of our sovereignty to the new international organization in the interest of collective security. We must all be ready to make some sacrifices." Asked to elaborate on this at a press conference a few days later he declared that the proper thing to do when a man hit you was not to hit back but to call a policeman. Thus did an individual give up some of his "sovereignty" to the police. Nations must learn to act in a like manner, with the world organization acting as the policeman.

Disagreements over mechanism of course there have been and there will be others. The presidency was one — the first "crisis" for the headline hunters. But it turned out to be a simple matter and was quickly settled. The fact is that three proposals were put forward, all with roots in national customs. The Americans, largely because it is their custom, assumed that one president would be named and that he would be Mr. Stettinius as the chairman of the delegation of the host nation. It was therefore something of a shock to have Mr. Molotov, following an established practice in his country and elsewhere, propose that the chairmen of the delegations from the four inviting powers all be presidents upon an equal basis. As you know a third view prevailed — a compromise if you like, but one which was arrived at unanimously — whereby the Conference has four presidents with Mr. Stettinius in the drivers seat by being chairman of the presidents, chairman of the executive committee and chairman of the steering committee.

So too the matter of three votes in the Assembly for the Soviet Union. Russia was making excessive demands was the cry. The facts, as explained to a few of us by a member of the American delegation, were quite simple. It is generally understood that the delegations of twenty nations will almost invariably vote with the United States — as they did on the first test, the seating of Argentina, even though it is known that many delegates believed the Soviet position sound on this question, including some of the United States delegates. Among the forty-nine nations whose delegations have been seated one finds Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Nicaragua, Panama, the Philippines, with nobody of course pretending that they have sovereignty in any real sense. So likewise with the United Kingdom, with the Union of South Africa, New Zealand, Australia, Canada, Egypt, India (as it is represented here by Knights of the Court of St. James) more likely than not to vote as a group with the British delegation. The Soviet Union, looking at this picture, points out that their millions who have paid such a price for victory, might well be granted more than one vote. Everyone agreed. Another "crisis" was over.

The dispute over the seating of Argentina and the Russian insistence, which I think will persist, that Poland should be seated, was a more serious matter since it did bring about the first split in the Big Five. The USSR asked for delay in order that this "new question" might be studied to determine whether Argentina was genuinely on the side of the United Nations or not. The United States felt compelled to insist that Argentina be seated in order to maintain the solidarity of the nations of the western hemisphere. France abstained from voting, as likewise did China. And it was significant, I think, that Dr. Soong told the press the following day that China had not voted because it was "a new question" (thus agreeing with Mr. Molotov) and therefore the delegation has to receive instructions from Chungking which did not arrive in time for the vote. A reporter of course immediately asked him, "Have they yet been received, and if so, what were they?" To which the Chinese statesman replied in the language of diplomacy: "For your purposes the instructions have not yet arrived." (Loud laughter and applause.)

The important fact is that a few hours after this "crisis" Mr. Eden, Dr. Soong, Mr. Molotov were guests of Mr. Stettinius in his living quarters and sang their favorite chords shoulder to shoulder in the best barber shop manner, if one may be permitted to use his imagination a bit on the latter's description of the get-together as a "harmonious meeting."

The question of voting procedure and particularly the question of the so-called veto, has yet to come up. When it does there will be the attacks one has learned to expect from the perfectionists ("deterioration-ist," Max Werner calls them), the reactionaries, what is left of the isolationists, the anti-Soviet bunch. There will be another "crisis" but I think the end result will be a recognition that it is not in reality a veto being handed to any one of the Big Five in the Security Council, but rather a realistic recognition of the fact that these powers must arrive at solid agreement and thus present that united front which alone can guarantee peace. I might add that it was thus explained to a small group by a member of the American delegation, who also said that there was unanimous agreement in the American delegation on this matter.

There is also the question of colonial peoples which greatly concerns all liberty-loving people. . . . Trusteeships it is called this time; Mandates in the old League of Nations. Is imperialism to be frozen by this World Organization? The answer is that there will soon be released, probably before this story reaches you, a document dealing with the question. It has received the unanimous approval of the American delegation and is now in the hands of the delegations of the other three inviting powers. What the proposals are of course I do not know. I do know that when one of the top flight delegates was challenged on the subject by one of America's leading Negro educators, he received an answer which appeared to satisfy him. My own guess is that it will be a program which will exceed the fondest hopes of all except that small group of perfectionists who apparently refuse to be satisfied with anything less than the Kingdom of God in this year of our Lord, 1945.

To conclude: disagreements over mechanism and other matters, however important, are not of great significance unless they eventually demonstrate the inability of the nations to work together. For after all the main task of this Conference is to make that transition of the United Nations, led by the big powers, from war coalition to peace coalition. There is no indication whatever as I write that this transition will not be successfully made.

Service of the United Nations Held at the Cathedral

Bishop Block Preaches a Stirring Sermon
And the Earl of Halifax Reads the Lesson

By William B. Spofford

San Francisco:—A great service for the United Nations was held at Grace Episcopal Cathedral on Sunday, April 29th, with a congregation which filled the vast structure. In the front pews sat delegates to the United Nations Conference, while the presence in the chancel of Bishop Baddeley of Melanesia, who is about to fly back to the Solomon Islands, and a bearded Bishop of the Eastern Orthodox Church, attended by his chaplain, both in colorful vestments, gave an added international touch to the service. In the front pew sat Lord and Lady Halifax, while directly behind them sat two Negro delegates from the Union of South Africa. The scripture lesson was read quietly and simply by Lord Halifax, after being escorted to the Bible by the Bishop of California, the Rt. Rev. Karl Morgan Block. Scattered throughout the congregation were men and women wearing the uniforms of many nations, while worshipping inconspicuously in a pew toward the back of the nave was the Secretary of State and the Chairman of the Four Presidents of the Conference, Edward R. Stettinius Jr. It was truly an international service.

The hymns were appropriate for such on occasion and were sung with vigor and feeling by the congregation, led by the large boys' choir of the Cathedral: "Ancient of Days," "God of Our Fathers," "Almighty Father, Strong to Save," "Once to Every Man and Nation," Kipling's "Recessional," "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," while at the close of the service the whole congregation joined in the singing of a Solemn Te Deum of Thanksgiving.

One of the most moving parts of the service was a Litany, written by the Rev. Gilbert Symons who was present in the chancel, with petitions to God that the Church may be given new vision; a renewal of unity and "may be made alive again with the fire of her first devotion." Petitions were also raised "That all the members of every nation here assembled, putting self aside, may eagerly respond to every call to sacrifice and service," "That a wise and humble spirit may prevail in the councils of the nations, that they may be delivered from unscrupulous ambitions, selfish rivalries and mistaken policies," "That social life and industry may be so ordered that one man's good may not be another man's hurt, and that all may have a just share of wealth, security and freedom."

Bishop Block in his stirring sermon declared that "God's Fatherhood and the Brotherhood of man is not an idealistic dream but sober and grim realism. There is no room for the conception of a master race. Peace must be built on the united will of all nations, small and great, and on the common will to achieve justice. Christians must insist on the equality of human rights, irrespective of race, creed or color. The need is urgent, not alone for a new world organization, but for a new spirit on which to build it."

Dealing specifically with war and the attitudes taken as people contemplate a shattered world, the dislocation of peoples and the hatreds and immoralities that are so widespread today, the Bishop said that there were three possible attitudes to take. "First there is the attitude of despair. The ideals of mankind lie buried in the ruins of a boasted civilization. You can never be rid of war; mankind is endlessly combative. This attitude is poisonous and untrue."

"There is the attitude of stolid conservatism; the belief that we can rebuild the world as it once was. But after such an upheaval we cannot return to the status quo ante, and it would be almost immoral to try. We must have a different world. We must try to introduce a new industrial fraternalism to promote and maintain economic stability."

He concluded his sermon by urging the congregation to accept the discipline of the past and to learn its lessons. "We need faith in the God of history. Gods sovereignty has been vindicated. God's judgment is seen to be a persistent element in the structure of our universe. We cannot escape suffering for our own folly. The God of history is not to be identified with any national policy. He transcends them all. The judgments of time are always moral."

REGINALD H. GOODEN CONSECRATED

Los Angeles:—Dean Reginald H. Gooden was consecrated Bishop of the Panama Canal Zone on May 8th at St. Paul's Cathedral. The Presiding Bishop was the consecrator, and Bishop Blankingship and Bishop Gooden of Los Angeles, father of the new bishop, the co-consecrators. He was presented by Bishop Block of California and Bishop Stevens of Los Angeles; the attending presbyters were the Rev. Robert B. Gooden Jr., brother of the candidate, and the Rev. Perry Austin of Long Branch. Bishop Keeler of Minnesota read the litany and the sermon was preached by the Presiding Bishop.

Bishop Baddeley of Melanesia took part in the service for the United Nations and left that week for duty in the South Pacific

URGES NORTHERNERS STOP MEDDLING

Savannah:—Bishop Barnwell told the convention of the diocese of Georgia, after describing the service of consecration of Bishop Harris of Liberia, that "I have always felt that we people of the South knew how to deal with the Negro and this was one of the finest demonstrations of that fact. If outside people who do not know anything about the problem would not muddle we could work out these matters. With thirteen million Negroes to be integrated into the life of the United States this is bound to be one of the greatest problems to face the country in the years to come."

He pointed out that it was noteworthy that all eight of the bishops who were present at the consecration service were "from below the Mason and Dixon line." He also stressed the fact that the leading white parish in Norfolk, Va., turned over its church to the Negro congregation.

It might be added, in answering Bishop Barnwell, that the consecration of Bishop Harris might have been held in the Washington Cathedral, upon the invitation of Bishop Dun. Had it been held there it would have received the national recognition that such an event deserved. It is also certain that had it been held at the National Cathedral, it would have been attended by many more bishops, and they would not have all been from below the Mason and Dixon line. That the service was not held in Washington was due to the pressure of these Southern bishops who know so well "how to deal with the Negro."

UNITED NATIONS RALLY

Oakland: — John Foster Dulles spoke to an audience of eight thousand at the Oakland Auditorium before the opening of the San Francisco Conference. Sponsored by the East Bay Church Federation, Mr. Dulles gave the backgrounds of the conferences leading to the present one. Earlier in the week, Msgr. F. J. Sheen addressed a crowd of Roman Catholics at the same auditorium. Bishop Edward L. Parsons also addressed the people of Berkeley at St. Mark's Church. Almost all local ministers preached on some aspect of world peace at the Sunday morning services, both on April 22 and 29.

YOUTH COMMISSION HOLDS MEETING

Racine, Wis.:—The national youth commission of the Church held a five-day meeting at the DeKoven Foundation, Racine. Attending were deputations from each of the eight provinces, three young people and one adult comprising each group; four members at large, including two Negroes, one Japanese-American, and one American Indian; and the National Council's division of youth, led by its chairman, Bishop Charles C. J. Carpenter of Alabama. The Rev John E. Hines, Houston, Texas, was chaplain.

The commission met to study plans and program for the coming year — the period September 1945 to September 1946. Observance of youth Sunday and development of the united youth offering were studied and discussed in detail, and a series of study sessions on the united youth offering project is planned. The offering will be for medical aid for children in St. Luke's Hospital, Manila, and the study sessions will be planned to gain full participation, and to inform and interest all the youth of the Church. Youth Sunday, when the offering will be received, has been fixed for October 21.

On January 6, 1946 the Epiphany Feast of Lights will be observed, with special stress upon the missionary aspect of Epiphany, and a corporate communion of youth is planned for May 19.

The program includes other plans for study, such as an Advent series on the Gospels, a series of studies on Christian brotherhood, a study of the essentials of a Christian peace, Lenten study on the youth rule of life, and essentials of belief, and a late spring series on Christianizing your vocation.

The commission asks cooperation in the Inter-Church youth week observance, February 3, work in summer conferences and camps, development of service projects and special activities for the young men and women of the Church.

During the commission meeting, offerings were received at the various Church services, and these were voted to the discretionary fund of Bishop Bravid W. Harris, newly-consecrated for Liberia, and to the DeKoven Foundation at Racine.

New officers were elected: Betty Street of Oxford, Ohio is the new Chairman, and Priscilla Hannah of Pasadena, Calif., secretary.

The Earl of Halifax, a member of the delegation of the United Kingdom, confers with Admiral Sir James Somerville, head of the British Admiralty delegation. Lord Halifax read the lesson at the United Nations Service at Grace Cathedral in San Francisco

ST. MARGARET'S HOUSE HAS NEW DEAN

Berkeley: — Miss Katharine A. Grammar has accepted the post of dean of St. Margaret's House, which is the training school for women workers in the Church for the west. Located within a few yards of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific and the Pacific School of Religion, St. Margaret's students have access to the best faculties on the Pacific coast. Miss Ethel M. Springer, who has been dean for the past seven years, has retired.

BRONZE STAR AWARDED CHAPLAIN

Washington: — The Bronze Star has been awarded to Chaplain Charles F. Schilling somewhere in the European theatre. He was formerly the rector of Trinity, St. Augustine, Florida.

Victory in Europe

"ALL they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." That saying ought to be written over the whole Nazi tragedy, now drawing to a close after dragging down with it to destruction one of the greatest nations in history. What we are seeing before our very eyes these days is like what the prophets of old saw, when Babylon fell, and Nineveh, and Egypt, and the Empire of Alexander. These empires glorified might; they trusted in themselves—"the Assyrian worships his net." They were utterly ruthless, and paid no regard to moral standards, justice, honor, promises, or even common decency—and they fell. So likewise Hitlerism has fallen, and for the same reason. For there is a law of God, inexorable and not to be ignored, running through all of life. Nations are just as accountable to it as private men and women are. There is no nation that can exist "above the law" or "outside the law," for divine law governs our whole existence. The use of force to gain one's ends, regardless of the rights of others, is really sub-human, diabolical, hellish. And now Germany is being brought to bay and compelled to realize what the Nazi Antichrist has really accomplished—viz. the total ruin of a country once prosperous, happy, one of the choice centers of civilization and culture.

But the lesson is not for Germany alone. The cost of victory has been almost beyond imagination. Millions of men and women killed, maimed, blinded, starved, burned to death, in battle or in prison camp. They that take the sword perish—but others perish with them. Unless we can devise a just and peaceful order of society which will henceforth make Hitlerism forever impossible, and effectively prevent wars, we may as well give up pretending to be civilized, and revert to the jungle at once. May God grant that the San Francisco Conference will lead the way to that fairer, juster, more peaceful state of society!

But there is still another lesson — and this is for those who think that it is all right to temporize with evil; to appease wrongdoing and injustice; to "do evil that good may come;" to buy "peace in our time" by selling out the helpless; and to build up a strong bulwark against the threat to our own security, property, peace of mind by encouraging injustice toward others. These Tories and Isolationists who thought a few thousand pounds invested in Hitler would help to keep Communism at a safe distance; who went on, day after day, selling thousands of tons of copper to Germany, as late as August 1939 — so much of it that the London Stock Market went up; who sold planes to Germany that same month; who shipped oceans of oil to Japan, and scrap iron by the hundred thousand tons, expecting it would be used in China — or perhaps Russia; who sold oil to Italy to operate her Ethiopian War, and to Franco to crush the Spanish Republic —we belong to those people too, God forgive us! Individuals protested, but that is what we did, as a nation. "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." How are these people — and that includes us too — going to escape the judgment of God? We are already suffering it, to some extent — not we at home, but our sons and brothers who are dying vicariously in our place.

Let us not fool ourselves: we too stand in the need of repentance, and under the threat of divine judgment until we amend our ways and our doings — and get over our hypocritical, irresponsible disregard for human rights, so long as they are only violated somewhere across the seas and do not affect us. We know now how close home the divine judgment can come. Germany sinned, and is paying for it, in full. Japan has sinned, and is paying for it — with more to come the longer the war lasts. But we have sinned too, and are paying; and it is no time for us to get self-righteous, or to

For the United Nations Council

O RIGHTEOUS God, before whose throne all the nations shall be gathered to be judged; we ask thy blessing upon the members of the United Nations Council, now assembled in San Francisco. Lift their eyes above the lesser goals of national ascendancy, to the clear horizon of the brotherhood of man. Thine, O Lord, are the continents and islands, thine the children who dwell in every corner of the earth. Draw to thyself, therefore, we pray thee, the thoughts and desires of these thy servants who now labor to make our world secure, that their work, resting upon the foundation of truth and right, may endure from generation to generation; through him who is our peace, thy Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Rivalry with Russia

WE SOMETIMES despair of the accuracy in news reporting. For one thing news is handled so fast, and newspapers are made up so rapidly, and subject to such limitations of space, that public utterances, especially sermons, sometimes get misrepresented. A case in point is a newspaper account of the last sermon of Dr. Donald B. Aldrich as rector of the Church of the Ascension in New York. Dr. Aldrich is credited with saying "this country will have to outdo Russia, or in less than twenty-five years there will be another war, because Russia's only interest is in building up her economy for her millions of people." How are we to outdo Russia? The newspaper report does not answer this question, and leaves out what he said about social justice, equality of opportunity, brotherhood and fair play, and the equal recognition of Jews, Negroes, Nisei, and other minority groups in this country. Unless we outdo Russia in social justice and in sharing the privileges and opportunities of life, Russia is going to outdo us — and the result may be war. We are sure that the newspaper did not purposely misrepresent Dr. Aldrich; it merely left out his major premise — perhaps because that major premise is more or less commonly proclaimed these days in Christian pulpits and hence does not provide "news." The sermon was a beautiful, affectionate farewell addressed to a devoted parish by a devoted rector, at the end of twenty years of distinguished service. The diocese of Michigan is to be congratulated upon its new Coadjutor Bishop.

Studying Hebrew Is Fun

By

IRWIN ST. JOHN TUCKER
Rector of St. Stephen's, Chicago

HEBREW, in which the Old Testament was written, is a rollicking language full of violent stresses and strong rhythms, of rhymes both to the ear and the mind, of heavily compressed meanings which require whole sentences in English to translate a single word. Hebrew and Arabic are much the same language. But Hebrew received the stamp of a profound religious ideal, while Arabic is the medium of the Arabian Nights, a lustful literature unequalled in the world for uncleanness. Hebrew letters, however difficult at first glance, are a thousand times easier than Arabic.

Hebrew was the language of a race of strong emotions. When they laughed, they laughed uproariously. When they wept, they howled to high heaven. When they hated, it was with a wild consuming fury; when they cursed, it was with an awful vindictiveness the world has never equalled; and when they prayed, it was with a passion of adoration all races ever since have used with awed imitation as the pattern and standard of worship.

It was the language natural to a land of blinding light and deep shadow, of bitter desert cold and parching desert heat. The language of the Celt in his misty island is full of vague hints, of mystical allusions. But Hebrew deals in vivid, unmistakable pictures, outlined as sharply as the black shadow of a rock on the weary sand.

Much of the rich, racy flavor of the Old Testament is lost upon us because no translation can render its constant puns. Meaning of many passages depends entirely on untranslatable plays upon words. The dreariest text may break out suddenly into strong metrical rhymes which translated into English are flat and meaningless.

The Hebrew word for blood is "dam"; for man "Adam," for ground "Adamah."

"The Lord God formed Adam out of the dust of Adamah." To Noah he says: Shophek dam ha-adam, ba-adam damo yishaphek.

We translate it: "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed." But we lose the sonorous beauty of the phrase.

Women of Jerusalem made Saul miserable by their taunt: Hikkah Saul alepho, u-David b'ribbotho.

Its savage sarcasm lies in the fact that "aleph" means both "thousand" and "ox," so that they were really saying "Saul killed his ox, but David his multitudes."

The earth was tohu va-bohu. This sounds much more chaotic than "without form and void." One of the raciest of these passages describes the naming of Noah. The English says his father Lamech called him Noah — "comforter," saying "This shall comfort us concerning our work and toil of our hands, out of the ground which the Lord hath cursed." But the Hebrew is a rollicking drinking chorus, sung at harvest when wine flowed freely; for Noah, the "comforter" referred to, is wine.

Zeh yenahamenu
Mi-ma'asenu
u-me yitzbon yadhenu
min ha-adamah
Asher araroh Adonai!

"God cursed the ground, so that it brings forth thorns and thistles; and condemned us to labor; but Noah, the wine, comforts us after this toil."

We miss all this in English.

(For a sample of Hebrew cursing, Read Psalm 109:1-19; Psalm 69:21-28.)

(For the Christian antithesis, read Matthew 5:43 to end.)

DO LADS LIKE YOU NEED LITANIES? by the author of this column is now available. It is not to be considered "another course on the Prayer Book." It is released as a series of suggestions for teachers of standard courses who may be looking for other stimulating approaches which can quicken attention and real thinking when pupil interest has bogged down in boresomeness; for leaders and parents who need to see some of the poverty and possibilities of their children's religious understanding and experience; for clergy who may be looking for a week-day religious adventure with the Prayer Book; for young people's leaders to challenge their groups to do something like it; and for all those who, in the words of Canon Raven, Christ's College, Cambridge, "need encouragement as to what can be done under guidance if we are ready to trust the honesty and intelligence of young folks."

Here are some of the significant results of this effort: the teacher and class thought out and carried out this work together; they came to appreciate some of the good Christian gifts brought down to them from the past by others through the Church's life and influence; they had experience of carrying clearer meanings of sacred phrases up into their worship; they saw the religious needs of boys and girls remain the same from age to age; they showed us that twelve-year-olds are baffled by much of our Prayer Book language and that their language for the most part is quite simple; they revealed this age group is ready to consider some aspects of social problems for they are doing this in public school without any Christian reference or guidance; they also made it clear they like being needed and trusted to think for themselves better than just being talked to; they showed us that children can profit from study of prayers written for and by adults if the approaches and methods used meet their now-needs; and finally, they disclosed definite pride in belonging to such a Church group that aroused them to create something they could see from week to week was worthwhile both for themselves and their friends. Copies can be secured for ten cents each from the Department of Christian Education, 170 Remsen Street, Brooklyn, New York.

Pacifists and Peace

By

CANON GUY ROGERS

Rector at Birmingham, England

IT IS well known that the Christian Church, and by the Church I mean Church members, clergy and laity alike, has been divided on the subject of Christian duty during the present war. The vast majority were satisfied that of all the alternatives open to them the one which presented the least moral difficulty was to join in the defence of the country and the defeat of the Nazi menace.

A small minority decided on equally conscientious grounds to take as little part as possible in this defense and resistance. They did not feel free to refuse their money, taken from them in the ordinary course of taxation, or to feed themselves and their families with the food brought at great cost in human lives by the navy and merchant service. They continued to enjoy the rights of free speech and other privileges of citizenship guarded by the navy, army and air force in which they could not conscientiously serve.

The fellow-Christians respected their position although they could not always understand it. They appeared at tribunals to testify to their sincerity; they protested when differential treatment of them was attempted. They made much of the services they rendered to the community.

Now that the war is drawing to a close with a great peril averted, a great deliverance achieved, in which the conscientious objector, owing to his convictions, has taken little or no voluntary part, a perplexing situation has arisen.

Some conscientious objectors are now throwing themselves vigorously into the work of making the peace and demanding that it should be made upon lines which seem to imply that there had never been any serious danger to national security or the Christian faith, or to general morals or European culture. In other words, they are apparently asking for a peace in which security shall not be assisted by force but guaranteed by goodwill alone. Though prevented, by their principles, from fighting on behalf of civic rights threatened with extinction, they do not find it inconsistent to exercise these rights preserved through the sacrifice of others. They conscientiously claim to dictate national policy and occasionally do so with a touch of self-righteousness which their Christian brethren of the majority find a little trying!

We cannot help feeling that it is those who have suffered most and sacrificed most, the young Christian people of the services, who have the better claim to speak on behalf of the Christian Church. It is they and their children who come after them, who will have to bear the brunt, not the conscientious objector if things go wrong in the future. Their lives may depend on the coming settlement.

I venture to put this point of view before my friends of the Christian minority, asking them if it is not possible for them to be as tolerant to their brethren in the making of peace as we have been to them in the making of war. Some whom I know personally are sympathetic and understanding and quick to recognize the rights of other people's consciences as well as their own. Others however are less considerate. May I be allowed to say that the pacifism which, in our judgment, helped to bring us to the brink of political destruction in 1938 can hardly become the main plank in the Christian policy of 1945. If we of the majority and the minority are to work together to resist peace settlements based in revenge or racialism and to seek for a peace which will bring a new security to the peoples of Europe, based on righteousness and fellowship, we must have a better understanding than pacifism affords.

TO PUT IT BRIEFLY

What Happens at Holy Communion?

By

WILLIAM B. SPERRY

YOU will have noticed when the priest celebrates the Holy Communion that he is extremely careful to protect the bread and wine that has been consecrated. He allows no tiny particle to be lost and he guards it so that no profane substance is added. It will be well in writing about this most central and sacred act of the Church to follow a similar practice that nothing be added and nothing be lost. In our Book of Common Prayer beginning on page sixty-seven we see what happens. It is called the Order for the Administration of the Lord's Supper or Holy Communion. We know it by other names—the Eucharist and the Mass. We will not be confused by these names for though they have their special connotations they all refer to the same general act.

We begin with a prayer acknowledging that God knows what is in our hearts and we ask that our thoughts be purified by His Holy Spirit. We then hear the ten commandments and Jesus' summary of them. In the gospel and epistle we listen to Christ's teaching and hear it explained. We make a confession of faith. We then offer some of our material possessions to God. We pray for all of Christ's Church. We then are invited to the Lord's table if we are repentant, charitable and will humbly confess our sins.

We make the confession and the priest pronounces an absolution for those who are truly penitent. We then are reminded of some of the encouraging things Christ said to sinners after which, with the whole host of heaven, that is, in company with souls living in this life and beyond this life we join in praise.

We come then to the part of the service called the Consecration, on page eighty. The priest takes the bread and wine and while repeating words used by our Lord he lays his hands on the portions to be used for communion. He then offers these consecrated elements to God and offers thanks for all the benefits they will procure for us.

In the next section he calls upon God to bless and sanctify with His Holy Spirit these gifts that are offered so that as we receive them in remembrance of Christ's sacrifice we may also be receiving and partaking of Christ himself.

Then each person who comes to communion is given bread and told to "feed on Him in thy heart by faith." The wine is given the communicant as "the blood of our Lord Jesus Christ" and he is told to drink it "in remembrance that Christ's blood was shed" for us.

A prayer of thanksgiving is then offered because we have been able to receive "holy mysteries," "spiritual food." Then all join in a hymn of praise, the Gloria in Excelsis.

Certainly those who knelt penitent at the altar rail went away with a serenity and strength they did not have before. Much else has happened too. Dean Inge once wrote, "For us the Holy Communion is a sacrifice—that of ourselves; it is a commemoration of a sacrifice—that of Christ on the cross; it is also a representation of a sacrifice—that of the Son of God, regarded as an eternal act." Thomas Ken, writing nearly three hundred years ago said, "Lord, what need I labour in vain to search out the manner of thy mysterious presence in the sacrament when my love assures me that thou art there."

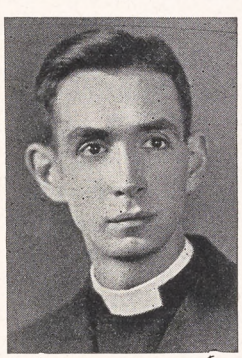
At Holy Communion we participate in a common meal and receive the benefit of a sacrifice made for all mankind. Before the altar we are leveled to be sharers of a common table and we are also exalted to the rank of co-workers with Christ—given His strength to do His work.



It frequently seems that the Holy Communion is a very individual thing where individuals go for help in their own particular need. This is true, but it is only true because the individuals there are members of the one family of mankind. It is God's table; it is Christ who provides the food; and the invitation is given us because we are members of his family.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

Intinction Et Cetera

MR. SIDNEY DARK recently remarked on his long experience as editor of The Church Times that a reference to the epiclesis would provoke enough "letters to the editor" to fill a whole issue of his paper, whereas a guarded note on the scandal of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners' slum property received as a rule only a courteous excuse from the Commissioners' office. Substitute "intinction" for "epiclesis" and you get a fair picture of an American editor's mail. It is with reluctance, therefore, that I am imposing upon the patience of our kindly Witness editors by digging up again this bone of contention. And I would not do so were it not that so many of our people consider the manner of administration of the Holy Eucharist as though it were an article of faith. It is, on the contrary, purely a matter of ceremonial, and as such is as liable to change as any other liturgical fashion.

It is not my intention here to argue the merits of receiving the consecrated wine by intinction. But it is only honest of me to state my belief that in due time this latest episode in the "warfare of science with theology" will result, as is usually the case, in the victory of science. Religion can ill afford to contend against truth, even the truth of geology or of hygiene, of history or of philology. And the Church long ago condemned as heretical the notion that what is true in one field of knowledge may be false in theology, and vice versa. In seeking the truth we should be on our guard against a facile appeal to statistics. No one denies for a moment that the vast majority of those who receive communion by a common cup (—and the clergy in particular, whom insurance companies find to be such good risks!) apparently suffer no harm thereby. But so long as the advocates of hygiene have any statistics on their side, they have proved their case.

Then there is the question of the legality of intinction, which seems to bother some of our bishops. Let us admit that the authors of our rubrics did not have in mind such a custom. Nonetheless all the requirements of our present rubrics are fulfilled if the communicant is allowed to dip his bread in a common cup delivered, if need be, "into his hands." One may demur that this is not a true act of "drinking." But does our common method of receiving a wafer conform any better to a true act of "eating," since communicants do not "visibly press with their teeth (as Saint Augustine saith)?" In either case the reception of bread and wine is no less real. The Holy Supper is not an ordinary, but a symbolic and ceremonial meal. One might as well then partake of its food and drink not in an ordinary, but in a symbolic and ceremonial way. Intinction preserves for us the "one cup." Many of our Protestant brethren (for hygienic reasons) have individualized the cup. But we need not point at them an accusing finger. We have, in most parishes, individualized the loaf with our separate wafers. The late Bishop Frere remarked rather sadly of this use "that the service has almost entirely ceased to be the 'Breaking of Bread.'"

A casual inquiry into the history of ceremonial will reveal no little variation in the Catholic custom of receiving the chalice. In the early centuries the people commonly partook from common cups, though not necessarily from the celebrant's cup. By about the seventh century this was changed in the Western Church to reception through a reed or tube (the fistula). This remained in general use until the withdrawal of the cup from the laity altogether in the later Middle Ages. The Eastern churches from about the eighth century have employed a form of intinction: the bread soaked in wine is administered by means of a spoon. This practice had its advocates also in the West in medieval times. In twelfth century England the bishops seem to have discussed the matter pro and con. And, of course, the chalice has been received in every conceivable posture—standing, sitting, kneeling, reclining, and bowing.

What was the use at our Lord's Last Supper? The evidence does not allow an absolutely certain answer. The Jew did not ordinarily drink from common cups, but each person at table had his own beaker. Emphasis was upon participation in the one blessing or benediction said by the head of the company. But there is some evidence that the Cup of Blessing customary after grace at the conclusion of meals on festival days and joyous occasions was passed around the table "to the right." Whether all drank out of this one cup or poured out of it into each one's individual beaker is debatable. In our New Testament accounts of the Last Supper Mark 14:23 implies the former, Luke 22:17 the latter.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

THERE is too much of me in this number. I only hope that the importance of this Conference may be accepted as my apology. I do however want to urge everyone to keep in mind that conflict makes the best newspaper story. And never before in history have so many reporters gathered in one place. Inquiry at the press office of the State Department revealed that there are more than 2000 accredited press-radio-newsreel people here. News agencies from all over the world have offices in the Conference center; so likewise with radio with not only all the American networks, but networks of Canada, Australia, Britain, the Soviet Union and other countries having set-up studios here. The press room, with hundreds of typewriters clicking all at once, sounds like a factory; a press conference is a mass meeting.

This great mass of men and women earn their living by writing stories acceptable to their papers. And the best story is a fight. To illustrate: one local paper carries the banner head: CHAIRMANSHIP DEMANDED BY U.S.; another shouts in big red letters: SOVIET DEMANDS OPPOSED; a third has an eight column head: NEW CRISIS SEEN IN RUSS ATTITUDE. The next day, the "crisis" settled by unanimous vote, the heads drop from eight columns to three and announce: CONFERENCE IN COOPERATIVE MOOD.

To me the reporting of this Conference has been bad. Again to illustrate: I have attended the Molotov press conferences and have heard him applauded for his wit and praised for his frankness. Then I have picked up papers an hour or two later to find these same reporters calling Mr. Molotov a "master of evasion," "the tricky Russian spokesman," "the mysterious Mr. Molotov."

I was deploring this to a friend of mine who is one of the top-ranking newsmen here. "I've stood all my life for freedom of the press," I said, "but I'm beginning to think there is too much of it here."

I got my ears properly pinned back. "It is not freedom that is the matter," he replied. "It is a lack of a realization of their responsibility. The press has a sacred obligation, particularly on such a history-making occasion as this, to be painstakingly accurate and to stress harmony and cooperation when they find it, as well as disagreements. That's where you fellows come in, Bill. If the Church had properly done its job more reporters would have an awareness of their responsibilities and obligations."

A lot of prayers have been authorized by bishops petitioning God to guide the statesmen so that peace and justice may be established. The number of reporters here and the skill, diplomacy and honesty they show may also prove of great importance to the world. So until some bishop authorizes a prayer for them I'd suggest that you remember them in your private devotions. They need them, I think, even more than the statesmen. But since I suspect that it may be some time before your prayers bring about the desired result, I suggest that you discount the scare-heads and conflict stories being pounded out on thousands of typewriters every day in San Francisco. There is harmony and cooperation where it counts most. That's the all important fact.

Dean Urges a Religious Faith For Nations Conference

Constructive Ideas Based on Justice Needed Says Dean Matthews of St. Paul's Cathedral

Edited by Rita Rubin

London (wireless to RNS):—The old League of Nations failed "largely because it did not frankly appeal to religious faith for its support," Dean W. R. Matthews of St. Paul's Cathedral asserted here as he warned that "any new plan for world security will fail unless it can be carried through by a wave of spiritual enthusiasm."

"It is regrettable," Dean Matthews told a united service of intercession for world recovery, held at St. Paul's under the auspices of the British Council of Churches, "that an attempt has not been made so far to enlist the conscience of mankind in support of world security."

The cathedral dean described the United Nations Conference at San Francisco as the "first step in the reconstruction of world order," and declared that "immense issues depend upon it."

"Never was there so much power in few hands — that is, the governments of great powers — and never, therefore, so great a responsibility," he said. "Merely to exploit victory would be fatal. What is needed is constructive ideas based on justice. We cannot pretend that grave anxieties do not exist, and it is the duty of Christians to speak plainly about them."

As "one cause for anxiety," Dean Matthews cited the position of smaller nations in the new security scheme. Expressing fear that "they will become appanages or puppets of one of the great powers," he added that "it would be tragic if rights were regarded as solely dependent on power."

Another cause for anxiety, he said, was the future of some liberated countries with regard to their internal constitution. The Four Freedoms and the Atlantic Charter "helped us to win the war," he insisted, and "we shall be disgraced if we abandon them in peace."

"Freedom for religion is a fundamental freedom," he stressed. "It includes liberty of association and communication. We must protest against restrictions on right of fellowship with Christians of other nations based on political grounds."

The Archbishop of Canterbury, the moderator of the Church of Scotland, and the moderator of the Free Church Federal Council took part in the service.

Dumbarton Oaks

Savannah:—Col. F. W. Altstaetter was a headliner at the annual meeting of the Georgia Auxiliary, explaining the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals. The women also heard the Rev. Hamilton West of Augusta on the same subject, while Mrs. Julia D. Kelly of Savannah reported on the Cleveland conference of the commission on a just and durable peace of the Federal Council of Churches. At the conclusion of the meeting a resolution was passed endorsing the Proposals in substance.

Taylor Stays

Rome (Wireless to RNS):—Myron C. Taylor, who has served as President Roosevelt's personal representative at the Vatican since December, 1939, has been confirmed by President Harry S. Truman to continue in that office, according to reliable sources here.

Prayerless Parley

Syracuse, N. Y.:—The Roman Catholic bishop of Syracuse and our own Bishop Malcolm Peabody joined in criticizing those in charge of arrangements for the San Francisco Conference because they did not arrange to have it open with prayer. Recalling that the Paris conference of 1919 had not opened with prayer, Bishop Peabody declared that "It accordingly fills me with regret and apprehension for the future as I consider the possibility of history repeating itself."

Asked to comment on the Bishop's statement from the Conference itself, Mr. Spofford sent this note: "Had Bishop Peabody been in the Opera House at that opening ceremony I am sure he would have agreed that Mr. Stettinius was correct in calling for a minute of silent meditation rather than for a prayer. Every culture on the face of this earth was represented at this opening. There was nobody present who could not meditate. There was nobody who did not. It was about the most soul-stirring minute I ever experienced. It was far better, in my opinion, than to have some ecclesiastical dignitary offer a prayer in which many present could not conscientiously join."

Auxiliary Meeting

Lexington, Ky.:—Mrs. Arthur M. Sherman, executive secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary, is to be the headliner at a diocesan Auxiliary which meets here at Christ Church on May 15th.

Bishop Speaks

Savannah:—Bishop Carruthers of South Carolina was the preacher at the service which opened the convention of the diocese of Georgia. He declared that the Church is the only institution that keeps before us the religious nature of man; preserves for us the worship of God; holds up for mankind the moral standard; is the only social solvent that makes for universal brotherhood.

Bishop Barnwell in his convention address said: "I was fighting twenty-five years ago for the League of Nations. I am now fighting for Dumbarton Oaks and the San Francisco Conference. I am very sure that the conclusions of the San Francisco Conference will be imperfect but if we try to play the part of Pontius Pilate, again standing aside to wash our hands of the blood of dying men, we shall again pay the bitter price; more bitter than the one we are paying now." Later the convention adopted a resolution supporting the basic principles of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, copies of which were sent to President Truman and Secretary of State Stettinius.

Leaves Parish

Washington:—The Rev. Flint Kellogg resigned some weeks ago as rector of St. Stephen and the Incarnation under pressure due to a controversy over churchmanship. No parties involved in the dispute were willing to comment for publication with the use of their names. However several persons involved told reporters here that basically it was a matter of churchmanship, with Mr. Kellogg seeking to "raise" the services and insisting on being called "Father" which was not to the taste of a large number of members of the parish. The dispute eventually was taken to Bishop Dun who heard at length from those who wanted the rector's resignation and those who supported him. Acting under the canons of the diocese the Bishop decided that differences had become so acute that it was to the best interest of both the parish and the rector that their relationship be severed. The Rev. Albert Lucas, headmaster of St. Alban's School and a canon of the Cathedral is temporarily in charge of the parish. His first sermon after taking charge was from the text, "Brethren, Love One Another."

More Teaching

Spokane, Wash.: — The convocation of Spokane, meeting here, backed up Bishop Cross in calling for increased instruction in the substance of the catechism and renewed attention to the Ten Commandments, to combat what the Bishop described as a wave of wartime immorality. The Rev. Raymond H. Clark of Pullman, head of the district college work commission, reported that he had found amazing ignorance of the Christian religion among college students. The convocation voted to set up a revolving reserve fund to help finance advance work in the district in the post-war period.

Deserving Tribute

Lexington, Ky.: — A deserved tribute was paid to the late Bishop Almon Abbott of Lexington by Mr. Charles N. Manning in a letter published in a local newspaper. Mr. Manning, who is president of a large bank, praised him for his simplicity, sense of humor, catholicity, his breadth and depth of understanding. Wrote Mr. Manning: "Without in any way detracting from his high office, he was a genial, kind, companionable man, vibrant with life, overflowing with love for all mankind."

Large Bequest

Boston:—For the first time since his consecration 15 years ago, Bishop Sherrill was absent from the annual convention of his diocese; his address at the service with which it opened on April 17, in Trinity Church, was read by the president of the standing committee, the Rev. Henry McF. B. Ogilby. After mention of the duties calling him to the European war area, including the visiting of as many chaplains as possible in his office as vice-chairman of the general commission on army and navy chaplains, Bishop Sherrill announced a memorial to the beloved and influential first dean of the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, through the establishment of the Dean Rousmaniere Memorial Fund for the benefit of the Cathedral Church, by the generosity of the late Mrs. Rousmaniere. The total of her gift and bequest is $500,000.

A second gift to the diocese is the beautiful estate, "Briarwood" on Buzzard's Bay, Cape Cod, by the children of the late Mrs. George H. Monks: Mrs. Constantin A. Pertzoff, the Rev. Gardiner Monks, and Commander John Monks. This gift commemorates a generous and devoted diocesan member and will be used as a conference center under the direction of Archdeacon Arthur O. Phinney, Clarence H. Poor, and O. Wellington Stewart.

Juicy Strawberries

Louisville:—One of the decisions made at the convention of the diocese of Kentucky, which met here April 17-18 at St. Andrew's Church, was to meet at Paducah in 1946. The chief reason given for the selection is that Paducah is in the heart of the strawberry district and the convention will be held at the height of the season. The convention this year was routine.

Earl of Halifax

San Francisco:—Each morning at a little before eight the Earl of Halifax leaves the Mark Hopkins Hotel, headquarters for the United Kingdom delegation to the United Nations Conference, and walks the short distance to Grace Cathedral to be present at the eight o'clock celebration of the Holy Communion. He has rarely missed a day since arriving in the city.

Kentucky Pastors

Louisville:—Bishop Clingman has approved the title of "pastor" for clergymen in charge of mission churches, rather than "vicar." He once told a clergyman in the diocese that he wished the term "pastor" might be generally used instead of "rector." The late Bishop Anderson of Chicago held the same opinion.

Break Record

Palm Beach, Fla.: — The Lenten offering of the children of Bethesda-by-the-Sea reached $1604, breaking all previous records. The women's guild of the parish has given $1800 to the health department of the county to provide the salary for one year for a visiting nurse, with the understanding that other organizations will provide an auto and other needed expenses.

New Sanctuary

Miami, Fla.:—The Rev. G. W. Gasque recently dedicated a new sanctuary at Holy Cross Church in memory of those who have given their lives in the war. It was given by various organizations and individuals of the parish, with the young people giving the altar rail.

Rector Is Called

Miami, Fla.: — Holy Comforter Parish, a mission two years ago, has called the Rev. William L. Hargrace, rector at Lake Worth, Fla., to be rector.

Service Men

Boston:—The Rev. George L. Cadigan of Salem, speaking as chairman of the commission on the returning service men, urged those attending the convention of the diocese of Massachusetts to have a thorough knowledge of local, state and federal agencies for the aid of veterans and the formation of parish committees to welcome and aid them. He also stressed the value of letter writing to men in the service. Staff Sgt. Russell, a handicapped veteran who had lost both hands, received an ovation as he told of his rehabilitation by the army chaplain who had helped him regain courage, and paid a tribute to President Roosevelt for the example he had set for all handicapped men.

Criticizes Council

Boston:—Methodist Bishop Lewis O. Hartman, speaking at a dinner of the Episcopalian Club of the diocese of Massachusetts, criticized the Federal Council of Churches for refusing to admit the Universalist Church to membership on doctrinal grounds. He declared that the doctrinal test must be eliminated and a test of brotherhood and service substituted.

Missionary Speaks

Emporia:—Dr. Mary Shannon, retired president of a Methodist College in China, addressed the diocesan meeting of the Kansas Auxiliary. The women called for prayers throughout the San Francisco Conference for its success. Earlier in the day the convention of the diocese had wholeheartedly endorsed the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals.

Acolytes Festival

Tampa:—The annual acolytes festival for those in the western deanery of the diocese of South Florida was held on April 22 at St. Andrew's. The Suffragan bishop-elect, Chaplain Henry I. Louttit, was the preacher. Eighty-nine acolytes from eleven parishes were present.

Secretary Speaks

Washington: — Under Secretary Joseph C. Grew was the speaker at a service on April 29th at Washington Cathedral at a special United Nations service. It was sponsored jointly by the Cathedral and the local Federation of Churches. A large number of ministers took part in the service in addition to Bishop Dun, Dean Suter and the cathedral staff.

Kansas Resolutions

Emporia:—A resolution was passed at the convention of the diocese of Kansas, meeting here at St. Andrew's, "offering prayers that you may be mindful of the solemn obligation and responsibility as witnesses to our Lord and his Church and the enlargement of his kingdom by means of the decisions made at the San Francisco Conference." It was sent to the delegates who are members of the Episcopal and Anglican Churches: Mr. Stettinius, Cordell Hull, Dean Gildersleeve and Anthony Eden. No mention is made in the story THE WITNESS received of Lord Halifax who is enough of a churchman to be at a service practically every day of the week.

A message was also sent to President Truman informing him that prayers are offered that God may bless his leadership as president. "The delegates to this convention are supporting you in every effort towards the establishment of the peace of God in this world."

Dr. Jessup Dead

Buffalo:—The Rev. Charles A. Jessup, dean emeritus of St. Paul's Cathedral and one of the most beloved men in the Church, died recently in his 83rd year. Until his final illness which began shortly before Christmas, he was active at the cathedral. It is recalled that when Bishop Brent went to Lausanne, Switzerland, to preside at the World Conference on Faith and Order in 1927 that Dean Jessup accompanied him as chaplain.

Back Bretton Woods

New York (RNS):—The Bretton Woods monetary proposals, and the suggested United Nations food and agriculture organization, were endorsed in principle here by the Laymen's Movement for a Christian World, in a statement issued by its chairman, Wallace C. Speers. Belief was expressed that the proposals represent the beginnings of a "cooperative economic approach, thoroughly in keeping with the religious and moral responsibility of the strong for the weak." It was urged that "they should be set in

Good news! A new book by

C. S. LEWIS

Beyond Personality

The author of the best-selling Screwtape Letters here writes about theology, "the science of God." Mr. Lewis says, "I think any man who wants to think about God at all would like to have the clearest and most accurate ideas about Him which are available." And so he sets them forth, in the lucid, charming style which has made him famous. All C. S. Lewis enthusiasts will welcome this new book. For those who do not already know him, it will be an excellent introduction to a modern master of religious writing. $1.00 motion immediately, even though imperfect, with the hope that public interest and experience will make self-evident the need for change and improvement."

"We believe it is the obligation of the Church, and particularly of laymen of every faith," the statement said, "to foster the development of economic cooperation throughout the world, based upon the commands of sense of duty, justice, mercy and human understanding. The best international political structure without economic cooperation will dissolve into certain war. With economic cooperation there is the possibility of universal self-support and lasting peace."

Choir Festival

Boston, Mass. (RNS): — Fifty choirs composed of 650 singers from many Protestant denominations took part in the eighth annual Festival of Choirs at Trinity Church here. They represented Baptist, Congregational, Episcopal, Lutheran, Methodist, Presbyterian, Universalist, Latter Day Saints, and community and college choral groups. Verdi's Requiem was sung in memory of the late President Roosevelt.

Receives Church Head

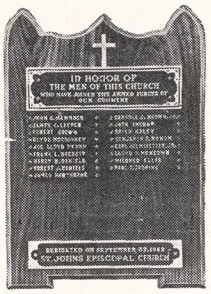
Moscow (wireless to RNS):—Archbishop George Cheorekjian, Catholicos of Etchmiadzine and acting head of the Armenian Gregorian Orthodox Church, was received at the Kremlin by Premier Josef Stalin, with whom he discussed affairs of the Armenian national Church. Also present was Ivan V. Polyansky, chairman of the Soviet council on affairs of religious cults. This was the second time in recent weeks that Premier Stalin has received Church leaders. Previously, Patriarch Alexei and other officials of the Russian Orthodox Church had an interview with the head of the Soviet government on matters concerning the Russian Church.

About 2,000,000 Armenians in the Soviet Union and an estimated 1,500,000 in other countries belong to the Armenian Gregorian Church.

Catholic Paper Attacked

Moscow (wireless to RNS):In a sharply-worded attack War and the Working Class criticized the Catholic Herald of London for allegedly praising the economic benefits brought to Austria by the Hitler regime and for advocating the plan for a so-called Danube Federation. Quoting the Catholic weekly as saying that under the German occupation land was developed as never before and industry in the Danube Basin placed on a firm Pan-European basis, War and the Working Class said: "Why did the Catholic paper have to resort to this belated praise of the Hitler occupants? It is absolutely clear now that no advocates will succeed in saving the Fascist regime, not only in Austria but in Germany itself. Reactionary Catholics have been frightened solely by the thought that the people of Central Europe may freely decide their fate. In order to take away from the people their only recently restored liberty, a plan is advanced for creation of a European or Danubian Federation."

One of His Last



New York (RNS): — One of the last letters signed by President Franklin D. Roosevelt before his sudden death was addressed to Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, president of the Federal Council of Churches and resident bishop of the New York Area of the Methodist Church, on the eve of the churchman's departure for England. Taking note of Bishop Oxnam's plans to attend the enthronement of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the late President said it exemplified "the spirit which should bind together Christians of all nations and loyalties in the bonds of fellowship and good will."

President Roosevelt also wished Bishop Oxnam success on his tour of the Mediterranean theater of operations on behalf of the general commission on army and navy chaplains.

"That visitation," he wrote, "will bear witness to the importance which we place on spiritual things and will, I trust, strengthen alike the morale of our chaplains and the forces to whom they minister."

Negro Moderator

Baltimore (RNS):—The Rev. John T. Colbert, Negro pastor of the Grace Presbyterian Church here, has been elected moderator of the Presbytery of Baltimore. The first Negro named to this office, Mr. Colbert will have jurisdiction over 73 Maryland churches.

Back Conference

New York (RNS):—Universal disarmament, an international bill of rights, justice to the Jew, and the outlawing of racial and religious incitement were urged by the Synagogue Council of America in a memorandum to the U. S. delegation attending the United Nations Conference at San Francisco. Hailing the conference as "the supreme opportunity of our generation to achieve and maintain universal peace and security by setting up an effective world organization," the Council voiced the "fervent prayer that the noble purpose of the conference be successfully accomplished."

The memorandum, prepared by the Council's committee on peace, stressed the need of machinery to prevent war, commissions to safeguard human rights everywhere, full restoration of civil and political rights to Jews, abrogation of the 1939 White Paper effecting immigration into Palestine, and provisions to outlaw incitement against religious and racial groups as well as discrimination against them.

Easter in Pacific

Easter Services Before Okinawa Held By Chaplain Edward J. Day Aboard a Coast Guard-Manned Assault Transport off Okinawa: War knows no holiday, but Coast Guardsmen, Marines, sailors and Seabees aboard this attack transport poised for the Allied strike against Jap-held Okinawa exercised "poetic license"—and for the first time in all history Easter was celebrated in March. Under the guidance of Chaplain Edward J. Day, who has served as chaplain aboard this invasion transport for the past 35 months, Easter services were conducted throughout Saturday, March 31, and Yank fighting men, garbed in battle-green and dungaree-blue, observed the resurrection of Christ a day in advance. Easter Sunday would be filled with bombs and shells as these same men smashed the Jap defenses of Okinawa to bring the war within 330 miles of the Jap homeland. Men on watch at gun and lookout stations were relieved long enough to attend religious services, then quickly returned to their posts.

Church was wherever man gathered in worship. In the chaplain's quarters, Christian Science services were held while below-decks, where the movies are shown and where, on occasions, men can buy ice cream and cokes, Chaplain Day held sway, perspiration dripping from his forehead to his vestments in the sultry atmosphere. Men in undershirts knelt and prayed. In one corner, a portable organ peeled Easter hymnals. Easter bonnets were steel helmets at the sides of the men. Easter fashions were lifebelts around their waists. Easter lilies were necessarily absent.

On the benches and folding chairs they sat, heads bowed. The tousled blond hair of a 'teen-aged Marine. The bald pate of a Seabee well in his forties. Men who were facing death were deep in contemplation of one who died and arose to live again.

Chaplain Day has been aboard this Coast Guard vessel for 35 months. As the ship's chaplain, he has been present at Yank amphibious assaults on Sicily, Salerno, Normandy and Southern France. Last May he spurned an offer of relief, turning down a chance to be with his wife and two children, Virginia and Edward, Mattapan, Mass., in order to be with "his ship and his boys." During 1944, he led 348 divine services, including five on other ships without chaplains. Yet religion is only a part of the responsibilities carried by Chaplain Day. The tremendous task of providing recreation for troops and crew is also part of his job.

"Troops are sometimes aboard ship for long periods," he explains, "and until we reach the invasion location, there's little for them to do. Their minds must be kept off thoughts of being wounded or killed; otherwise, they'd possibly go crazy. Nobody likes to face bullets, bombs and shells. Facilities to relieve this tension must be maintained."

A library as complete as that of a modern city gets a big play from all hands. Cards and games are checked in and out of the chaplain's office continuously. It's barely possible to walk the length of the ship without interrupting at least a dozen card games or a score of book-readers sprawled along passageways. And, in addition, Chaplain Day plans other forms of recreation. Enroute to Europe, he set up a makeshift band and played first trumpet himself, though he hadn't touched a trumpet in 22 years. In Europe on occasions when the Coast Guard-manned assault transport was in port, he arranged sightseeing trips to St. Mawes, Cornwall, twelve excursions to the Isle of Capri, ten to Rome and three to the ruins of Pompeii. In Scotland, he conducted 30 hikes to Loch Lomond and other scenic points.

"We landlubbers," he remarks, "enjoy getting our toes into real earth when we get a chance."

Chaplain Day is the former rector of St. Paul's Church, Overland, Missouri. He became a Navy chaplain in January, 1943. His toughest job, he admits, was to properly conduct Jewish New Year services and learn to sing appropriate Jewish hymns for the occasion.

MRS. W. R. SCHULTZE
Churchwoman of St. Louis

As a member of the speakers' board of the most active independent women's organization dealing with matters political in St. Louis, I found your articles on "The Meaning of Bretton Woods," and "The United Nations Conference" more useful than any of our club's recommended reading and pamphlets. Your editorial on the Bretton Woods agreement was a more pointed and understandable summing up of that situation than any in our club literature, and than any I've found in the newspapers or periodicals.

And for my first speech, feeling as I did that while our club information was complete and informative, it lacked motive power enough, I called a member of your editorial staff here, beseeched him to nearly declaim his own Dumbarton Oaks speech verbatim over the telephone, and with his permission have been "cribbing" it regularly when asked to talk on that subject.

Without the clear-eyed religious concept of the purpose of promoting a world peace organization, it is so much less possible to make the subject come alive for most listeners. THE WITNESS and its contributing editors show a hard-headed, unsentimental, aggressive religious attack on present world ills which is particularly useful to the rest of us.

THE REV. LAURENCE D. STUELAND
Chaplain, Marine Hospital, Ft. Stanton, N.M.

Thank God that you are not often called upon to print such letters as the one from the "Churchwoman" of Englewood, Colorado (WITNESS, April 19). If I may I should like to remind her that anyone who resorts to the method of referring to one's physical characteristics as a means of casting reflection upon their views and acts, even though some censure may be justified, places a label upon himself or herself which obliterates any self-terming of that individual as "Churchwoman" or "Christian." I am enclosing a check for the Chaplains' Copies Fund. With all good wishes and prayers for your guidance rather than destructive criticism.

THE REV. BURDETTE LANDSDOWNE
Rector at Dorchester, Massachusetts

At the recent convention of this diocese something happened which seems to me to resemble Nazi methods in dealing with minorities. The old game of "Tabling tactics" has been revived to shut out discussion of controversial questions.

In the morning session the order of business calls for presentation of subjects by resolutions to be referred to a special committee on resolutions which looks them over and reports them out to convention at the afternoon session. The Rev. George Paine and the Rev. Wolcott Cutler presented resolutions which were read to the convention, without comment. At the afternoon session the committee on resolutions made its report, recommending that both resolutions be tabled. When I arose and asked permission to speak I was informed that no word is permitted on a motion to table. No such motion had been made. The committee had simply made its report recommending the tabling of both resolutions.

As you can imagine I was considerably steamed up. I was tempted to make a few remarks but it was past time for adjournment so I kept quiet. But a number of people with whom I talked after convention feel that it is un-American and undemocratic to behave as the convention did. Not one word in support or in opposition to either resolution was permitted. Probably neither of them would have got enough votes to pass but the point is this: no free discussion was allowed. Clever lawyers, it seems to me, have fixed things so that one of the Four Freedoms has been violated right under our noses. Maybe I am over sensitive on this but I can't help but remember how the convention a number of years ago gave similar treatment to a resolution brought in by the Fall River clergy with reference to sweat-shop conditions in that city. At that time a lawyer got up and said "it is irrelevent" and made a motion to table.

When our men are suffering and dying for the Four Freedoms, one of which is freedom of speech, it seems to me unworthy of Church people to refuse a minority group of brethren in the same household of faith an opportunity to say a few words in support of their views. It seems to me the least that could have been done was to have granted three minutes to both Paine and Cutler to say a few words on their motions.

Boston too is a part of the United States where freedom of speech is sacred but sometimes denied.

MR. P. C. MOSER
Layman of New York City

I want to congratulate THE WITNESS for the excellent number of April 19th. Both the articles by Dean Acheson and Dr. Atkinson were extremely well done and surely timely with the highly important San Francisco Conference now in session. I hope that THE WITNESS is successful in persuading many parishes to organize groups to study the reports from the Conference and to take whatever action seems necessary. Certainly as Governor Dewey so well stated the conference can succeed only if it has the wholehearted support of the American people and the people of other nations as well.

Labor Takes Strong Position On World Organization

Great Mass Meeting Held in San Francisco Where Views Are Presented by Its Leaders

By W. B. Spofford

San Francisco:—There is no sense in presenting here what you will have read or heard days before. So I give one aspect of this scene that has been overshadowed by the big show but which will be important in the days ahead. It has hardly been mentioned in the local papers nor in the papers of New York, Chicago, Boston, St. Louis and other metropolitan areas that are air-expressing copies so that you may buy them in the leading hotels on the day of publication — more evidence of our One World.

PHIL MURRAY

Last week over 10,000 people gathered in the Civic Auditorium for a public meeting. Most of those there were workers; men and women of all races, creeds and color. There may have been present some of the many hundreds attending the United Nations Conference. But I made a conscious effort, both on entering and leaving, to spot one of the quarter-sized buttons which distinguish delegates and their advisors from the rest of mankind and I did not see one. I figure they did not consider it important.

It was. For speaking at the meeting were the chosen leaders of 60,000,000 organized members of trade unions, representing 35 nations. I listened to their speeches and left the hall believing that these men know who their enemies are, at home as well as abroad, and that they will use their power to enforce peace if these enemies start pushing the people toward World War Three. I do not mean that there was any of the class stuff. They talked of the need of cooperation between employer and employee; of raising the standard of living of peoples all over the world through mutual cooperation; and one of them, Philip Murray, a devout practicing Roman Catholic, preached a better sermon than I have heard in a long time on human values and the need of world brotherhood, basing it quite explicitly on his understanding and interpretation of the Christian religion. He talked about "good faith and understanding" which he translated into "more bread, butter, carpets on the floor and pictures on the wall. All workers want more of God's sunshine." Those workers in sweaters, open-neck shirts and hobbleboots may not have known it was the Christian religion but they did know what he was talking about.

He was not the only speaker to strike fire. There was Louis Saillant, one of the top leaders of the French Underground and now a member of the administrative committee of the newly organized World Trade Union Federation under whose auspices this meeting was held; H. T. Liu, representing the Chinese Association of Labor, who had arrived that day by plane; the dynamic, straight-thinking and suffering Lombardo-Toladeno, head of Mexican labor and the organizer of workers throughout Latin America; Sir Walter Citrine, typically British in accent and dress, and rather startling as he, in an Oxford accent, called upon the workers of the world to take action if fascism ever again raises its head.

There was also M. Tarasov who is in San Francisco in a double role. For he is not only on the administrative committee of the World Trade Union Federation, but he is also one of the USSR delegates to the United Nations Conference. An honest-to-god worker, this man, who learned his trade in the steel mills of Pittsburg and is now an officer of 26,000,000 organized trade unionists in Russia. His speech was not particularly good. His English is halting and his remarks were rather commonplace. But he did pretty much steal the show a couple of days later when these labor leaders held a press conference. For it is no cinch to sit before 500 or more reporters and allow them to shoot questions at you. They fired plenty at Tarasov — and gave him a hand at the end for his wit and straight-forward answers.

The significant thing about this labor press conference was the way these leaders of 60,000,000 workers gave straight answers to questions that have been consistently ducked by the statesmen at their innumerable press conferences. "Should not Polish labor be invited to participate in the new world labor federation?" And the answer was: "The organized workers of Poland will be invited to meet with us in Paris in September when our constitution is ratified." "Where does labor stand on freedom for India?" The answer: "There can be no effective labor movement unless a country is free. We are therefore of course for freedom for India." "What do you think should be the attitude of the governments of the United Nations toward Franco Spain?" The answer: "Organized labor calls upon governments to reconsider economic and other relations with Franco Spain and Argentina and all other fascist countries which, under the pretense of neutrality, are rendering aid and assistance to our enemies."

And so one could go down the line with the clear and straight-forward answers to questions that have been cleverly avoided by the leaders of nations here.

"We call for the immediate establishment of the freedoms of speech, press, assembly, religion, political association and the right to organize labor unions in all liberated countries."

"We call for the formations of governments which have the support of the people."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

"We pledge our every effort to preserve and strengthen the unity of the United Nations and to conduct a determined struggle against forces within our lands which seek to weaken our unity and sow seeds of distrust and suspicion amongst us."

"Measures must be taken to bring to justice all war criminals and those guilty of Nazi atrocities. The whole Nazi system must be liquidated."

"Thorough-going remedies must be found for the wrongs inflicted on the Jewish people. They must be enabled to continue the rebuilding of Palestine as their home land."

All these, and more, were the direct answers to questions asked by reporters. But the special concern of these labor leaders at this press conference was that there should be an effective Economic and Social Commission in the new world organization to deal with economic, social and other humanitarian problems. And as the representatives of millions they have delivered to the four presidents of the United Nations Conference proposed amendments to the Charter. They ask that there be added to chapter IX, section D, the following new paragraph:

> "The Economic and Social Council should make suitable arrangements for the participation, in its deliberations and in those of the Commissions established by it, of the World Trade Union Organization."

They also ask that there be added to chapter V, section B of the Charter the following new paragraph:

> "The General Assembly should make suitable arrangements with the World Trade Union Organization for its participation in an advisory capacity in the deliberations of the General Assembly and the Security Council."

In presenting these proposed amendments these representatives of labor based their claim not alone on the contribution of workers to the war effort, but more particularly upon the assistance they can give "in perfecting international cooperation in the economic sphere to remove the economic causes of war by assuring rising living standards, greater security and a more abundant life for all people."

Whether or not their requests will be granted, or even considered, I do not know. But I do know that the concern of these leaders of world labor is definitely in line with the concern of the Church for human welfare, as expressed in innumerable official Church pronouncements. We would do well therefore to take every legitimate means to support their requests.

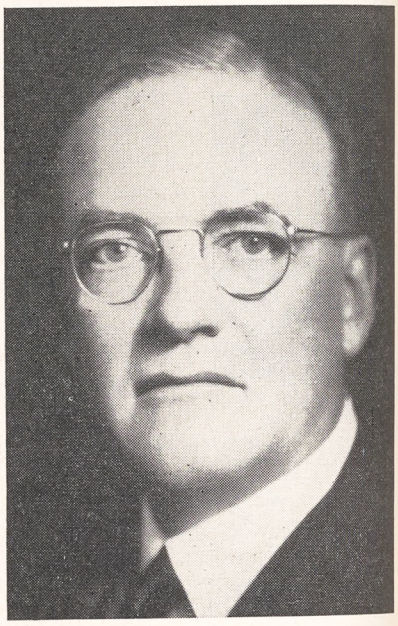
URGES ELECTION OF COADJUTOR

Hartford: — Bishop Budlong of Connecticut has sent a letter to the clergy and lay delegates of the diocesan convention urging that the status of Bishop Walter Gray be changed from that of a suffragan to coadjutor. He set forth the steps that had to be taken according to canons to bring about that end. The matter was acted upon at the convention on May 15th after this number of THE WITNESS had gone to press.

PROGRESSIVE PROGRAM FOR CANADA

Montreal, Que. (RNS): — Use of the radio, films, and drama as a means of religious education will be studied by the adult religious education committee of the Anglican synod of Montreal diocese, it was reported at the synod's annual sessions here.

"It seems to us," the committee said, "that if our Church continues to depend on the Sunday school and the weekly sermon as almost the only ways of teaching our people we shall have increasing numbers of religious illiterates."



Calling upon the Church to exert its influence in world politics, the diocesan council for social service declared that "in the great world struggle that is going on against Fascism, the Church cannot be neutral. The Church must enter this contentious field," it said. "In point of fact, it belies any pretence of neutrality with every prayer offered for the successful prosecution of the war."

A series of short-term courses for the clergy in personal counselling of returning service men and women was recommended by the committee on returned service men and women. The synod was asked to request the Diocesan College to provide such courses.

Lack of adequate housing facilities was deplored by the committee on housing, its report stating that "we would emphasize that the continued existence of bad housing and the toleration by Christians of congested areas in our cities is a great contributing cause to the prevalence of juvenile delinquency."

The report on juvenile delinquency and penal reform stressed the need of "a clearer understanding and recognition on the part of parents and other adults of their grave responsibilities before God toward children entrusted to their care."

Christian treatment of Canadians of Japanese origin was urged by the delegates in a resolution which termed recent legislation of the government by which Canadian-born citizens of Japanese origin may become defranchised as "cruel, unjust and inspired by racial prejudice."

John Foster Dulles, chairman of the Federal Council's commission on a just and durable peace is one of the leading consultants to the American delegation at the United Nations Conference

ST. CYPRIAN'S CHURCH CONSECRATED

Boston:—St. Cyprian's, Roxbury, now free of debt, was consecrated on May 6th. Twenty months ago, under the leadership of the Rev. David L. Ferguson, a campaign was started which finally raised $11,000 by members, with an added $1,000 for the endowment fund. Mr. Ferguson, a veteran of world war one, was responsible for building the church and parish house. This colored congregation was organized 35 years ago, first meeting in the homes of its members. Today there is a communicant strength of about 1,000 members, with an active parish and community program.

New Hymnal a Great Success Says Vicar of Mission

He Lists the New Hymns That Have Proven the Most Popular With Children and Adults

By Randolph Crump Miller
Professor at Church Divinity School of the Pacific

Albany, Calif.:—From the beginning, we took it seriously. Before our little mission received its new hymnals in September, 1943, we had introduced some of the best new hymns in mimeographed form. We were careful to purchase standard musical editions for the entire congregation. We had just procured a professional organist and choirmaster, Frank D. Humphreys. We were ready. Now that a year and a half has passed, we can evaluate the results. There were the obvious gains: tunes pitched so the men could sing them, chants arranged so the congregation could sing them and understand the speech-rhythm of the new pointing, an index for selecting hymns to match the theme of the service.

There were defects as well. An old hymn would be selected and the tune turned out to be unsingable, as in Kipling's Recessional, or a favorite hymn was missing as in We March to Victory. But the gains were great and the losses negligible.

There was a temptation to deluge the congregation with new hymns, for there were almost 200 of them from which to choose. During the period we introduced 38 hymns which were not in the 1916 hymnal. Only four of these were of doubtful success in practice. Every successful new hymn was repeated from two to four times during the year and the complaints were concerned with old hymns unfamiliar to this particular congregation. The hymns were introduced carefully, usually as the sermon hymn. The vicar made some mention of the hymn in the announcement period, and frequently the choir was asked to sing the first stanza, and then the congregation repeated the same stanza and went on through the hymn. Within a month the hymn was repeated without comment. Whenever possible the sermon was built around the new hymn, or a stanza of the hymn was used in the sermon. The congregation was taken into partnership and there was little if any resentment of these "new-fangled tunes."

My small congregation was used to singing and the cooperation of the congregation led to real enthusiasm. Care was taken to select hymns which are easy to sing and difficult tunes, especially plainsong, were carefully omitted. Finally, a list of about 200 carefully selected old and new hymns was composed as the basis for all future selections, of which 150 could be used in a given year. A similar list of about 60 hymns was prepared for the Church school.

Which hymns were most successful? We introduced 38, and 34 were good enough to put into the repertoire. Of these, 20 became favorites of various members of the congregation. Taking these in numerical order, the first one to take hold was Studdert-Kennedy's Awake, Awake to Love and Work! (156) which was introduced with a sermon on The Lark Is In the Sky. As the tune of Russell Bowie's O Holy City, Seen of John (494) is the same, both hymns were introduced within the same month. Four communion hymns were used. It took time to catch on to Bland Tucker's Father, We Thank Thee (195) because the tune is difficult, and the choir referred to it as the "did-ache" hymn. This Is the Hour of Banquet and of Song (206) was first sung to mimeographed notes, and was considered an old hymn by the time the hymnal appeared. We are still working on Owens tune for 207, Come, Risen Lord. We have used Come With Us, O Blessed Jesus (211), with its tune from Jesu Joy of Man's Desiring in place of the Gloria in Excelsis.

During the summer, the children worshipped with the adults, and we used four new children's hymns. Of course, the great favorite is I Sing a Song of the Saints of God (243), which we also used as the basis of a sermon last All Saints' Day. Father of Mercy (238), Martin Shaw's tune for Lamb of God (251), and Jan Struther's lovely We Thank You, Lord of Heaven (313) were well received.

The missionary hymns were repeated frequently. Awake, Thou Spirit of the Watchman (255) was used four times. We had some troubles with adults who lack a sense of humor with Remember All the People (262) with its line about the forests "where apes swing to and fro," but the children loved it. The missionary hymn which has caught the imagination of young and old alike is In Christ There Is No East or West (263), with its great music by Harry Burleigh.

Percy Dearmer's Sing Praise to God (299), with its mention of Socrates and Plato, has the same tune as 287, and we introduced these within a short period of time. We Gather Together (315) hardly counted as a new hymn, as everyone knows it. The Ferris melody for Gladden's Behold a Sower (401) was used frequently as a processional. Dearner's Book of Books (403) was used every time we preached on the Bible as a whole. Evelyn Cummins' The King's Highway (432), with its unusual tune by Arnold Bode, caught on with the children and adults, and was used in mimeographed form early in 1943.

For Mother's Day and Family Sunday, Bland Tucker's Our Father, by Whose Name All Fatherhood Is Known (504) proved singable and

The Dean of Canterbury, the Very Rev. Hewlett Johnson, who celebrated V-E Day in Moscow. The tall, elderly and dignified Churchman was grabbed by husky Russians as he left his hotel and tossed high into the air. Catching his breath and with tears streaming down his face he said: "Thank you very much and congratulations."

understandable. The new version of Eternal Father, Strong to Save (513) and Holy Father, in Thy Mercy (514) are being used everywhere.

The hymns on social action are excellent. The most successful have been Gilbert Chesterton's O God of Earth and Altar (521), Bowie's Lord Christ, When First Thou Cam'st to Men (522), and Fosdick's God of Grace and God of Glory (524). Several others in this category have not been tested by repetition in this congregation, and others are on the waiting list of available hymns.

Some of the hymns above have been used in the church school, where 14 new hymns were introduced. We use a different principle there, using the same hymns for four Sundays in a row, bringing one new one into the rotation each week until a new season forces a complete change. The most successful of the hymns mentioned above have been 262, 243, 263, 238, 432, and 504. The only complete failures were 103 and 112.

This is only a report on the experiment of one small mission, St. Albans, Albany, Calif., which has tried to be intelligent and forthright, without being radical. By using at least two old favorites with each new hymn, the conservatives have not been upset; and the majority has understood and enjoyed what we were doing. We can report that any average small congregation can sing the hymns we have listed. And we believe the new hymnal is a big success.

ALBANY ELECTS COADJUTOR

Albany, N. Y.:—The Rev. Frederick L. Barry, rector of St. Luke's, Evanston, Ill., was elected bishop coadjutor of the diocese of Albany on May 2. He was elected on the second ballot. He is forty-nine, unmarried and is a graduate of St. Stephens (Bard) College and the General Seminary.

WANTS ROMAN CHURCH IN COUNCIL

London (by wireless to RNS):—Absence of the Roman Catholic Church from the World Council of Churches was "regretted" by Dr. Cyril Forster Garbett, Archbishop of York, in an address here stressing the need for cooperation among the Christian churches in the cause of world peace.

"The ecumenical movement will not be truly ecumenical as long as the largest Church in Christendom is not represented in it. It might be possible for the Roman Catholic Church to cooperate, provided that the field of action was clearly defined, so as to preclude those matters of faith and worship in which it is unable to act with other Christian bodies."

"It is of equal importance," the Archbishop added, "that the Council should also have representatives of the Russian and Eastern Orthodox Churches."

BISHOP SHERRILL HEADS COMMISSION

Washington:—Bishop Sherrill of Massachusetts has been named chairman of the general commission on army and navy chaplains at the annual election of officers held here. Now touring Europe, Bishop Sherrill will succeed the Rev. William B. Pugh, stated clerk of the Presbyterian Church in the office.

WHITSUNDAY SERVICES IN ENGLAND

London (by wireless to RNS):—Headed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, leaders of all Protestant Churches in Great Britain have signed a call for united prayer on Whitsunday, May 20, for divine guidance "in the great task of post-war reconstruction." Declaring that the force of immorality, hatred, greed and selfishness let loose by the war "will be active in the days of peace," the petition, issued by the World's Evangelical Alliance, added: "We believe the situation is beyond human solution. We are convinced that Whitsuntide affords a special opportunity. We suggest, therefore, that there be an appeal to all Christian people to pray earnestly for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the church, the nation, and the world."

CONFERENCE ON WORK OF THE MINISTRY

Cambridge, Mass.:—The annual conference on The Work of the Ministry will be held at the Episcopal Theological School on June 1 to 3. This conference, designed for high school seniors and college men, seeks to present the various types of professional service which the Church's ministry includes. On the conference faculty are Dean Charles L. Taylor of E.T.S.; the Rev. William Brewster, headmaster of St. Mark's School; the Rev. Howard P. Kellett, who will lead the discussion on the Institutional Ministry; the Rev. Russell Hubbard, rural ministry; the Rev. T. Z. Koo, missionary work; the Rev. Charles Martin, college work; the Rev. Sherman Johnson, teaching; and the Rev. Harvey Butterfield, the work of the parish priest. The Rev. Charles Martin, rector of St. Paul's Church, Burlington, Vt., is chairman of the conference committee this year.

The Marshalls, son and father. Thomas C., after serving as rector of a number of parishes in Los Angeles became the chaplain of the Hospital of the Good Samaritan. He was also the organizer and first chairman of the diocesan department of social relations. Thomas R., the son, is now the rector of St. Paul's, Pomona, where his father once was rector and is now the chairman of the social relations department which his father founded

PHILADELPHIA CHURCH IS FOR SALE

Philadelphia:—St. James', one of the downtown churches here, has been offered for sale. Its transfer from the Episcopal Church will terminate 139 years of services. It was founded by Bishop White and he served as its rector until his death. Numerous plans have been tried to maintain the church, as more and more members moved away from the neighborhood, including mergers with other parishes, but all the efforts failed for various reasons.

William Blake: Christian Revolutionist

by Vida D. Scudder

Contributing Editor of The Witness

The vision of Christ that thou dost see
Is my vision's greatest enemy . . .

THIS couplet from Blake's fragmentary poem, The Everlasting Gospel, states a persistent fact in Christian history . . . A young workman lived in an obscure province of the Roman Empire:

He left his father's home to roam
A wandering vagrant without home.

After moving about the countryside for a short time as an itinerant preacher he made the authorities angry, and died a not unusual death, along with a couple of forgotten criminals. But he is not forgotten; he has been the centre of attention through all subsequent centuries; and men have not agreed about him. At first, some of his countrymen decided that he was the Messiah; presently we find multitudes from many nations regarding him, now as King, now as Comrade, now as Redeemer, now as Judge; and very generally as God Incarnate. Controversy has raged around him, and varying attitudes reflect successive phases in Western civilization:

Thine is the Friend of all mankind;
Mine speaks in parables to the blind.
Thine loves the same world that mine hates;
Thy heaven doors are my hell gates.
Both read the Bible day and night;
But thou read'st black where I read white.

Christ Innovator? Christ Fulfiller?

In Blake, we reach that rediscovery of Christianity as a revolutionary force which, long in abeyance, has spread and risen during the past hundred and fifty years till today it reaches high levels of general consensus in the ecclesiastical world. The exploration of spiritual experience which has determined choice of subjects in this little series has been focussed on inner disciplines and joys rather than on temporal affairs. But that is not the whole story. Our two final subjects, Woolman and Blake, were primarily concerned with inner realities, but they were also social revolutionists. Christian mysticism and revolution! They are not always allies, witness Karl Marx. But disaster awaits both unless they share their life, and men who respond to both have a special message for us.

Blake is an unconventional choice for our last Christian Classic; his genius is unrelated to that of recognized religious guides. He is neither theologian nor ethical teacher, and his controlling angel would never be invoked either by Aquinas or Luther, nor, for that matter, by Pascal or Bunyan. That angel is Imagination, and people often distrust him, even when they have felt the airs from Elsewhere blown by his wings. But perhaps he has more to do with spiritual experience than we realize. Also with history; he was very active in the revolutionary epoch at the close of the eighteenth century. Blake finds him a Christian angel. "Our own Imaginations" he exclaims, "where we shall live forever with Jesus Christ Our Lord," "I know of no other gospel," he writes again, "than the liberty both of body and mind to exercise the divine arts of imagination."

The Angel's chief function, in Blake's awesome and difficult Prophetic Books, is to reveal what happens in Eternity, and the shape of things to come in the perpetual conflict of Freedom with its adversaries; for Freedom is his watchword. But the angelic gift, in the exquisite simplicities of the earlier and better known Poems of Innocence and Poems of Experience, has wider appeal; it is social sensitiveness. Are not our sluggish imaginations largely responsible for our indifference to the world's cruelties, great and small? Blake in these poems reminds us of Shelley's words: he is "as a nerve o'er which do creep the else unfelt oppressions of the earth"

The beggar's rags fluttering in air
Does to rags the heavens tear.

He allows us no illusions. Modern philanthropy was just developing: a lovely poem records sweet pleasure in watching charity children at St. Paul's. Are we complacent? Presently we read:

Is this a holy thing to see
In a rich and fruitful land,
Babes reduced to misery,
Fed by cold and usurous hand?

Blake is master of defiant paradox. As his compassion generates angry scorn he strikes at a root of social wrong:

I wander through each chartered street
Through which the chartered Thames doth flow,
Marks in every face I meet,
Marks of weakness, marks of woe.

Chartered! That word, which he affects, is a good deal used by reformers now-a-days. The Angel is aflame, in the unfinished poem The French Revolution, or The Song of Liberty, epilogue to Heaven and Hell. Watching the Moving Picture of the times, Blake scores with scathing epithets his own country, has high hopes for America and France. We smile and sigh:

Though born on the cheating banks of Thames,
Though his waters washed my infant limbs,
The Ohio shall wash his stains from me;
I was born a slave, I go to be free.

But his Christian angel knows that our "manacles" are all "mind-forged."

The favorite hymn in his fatherland today is his great lyric:

I will not cease from mental strife,
Nor shall my sword sleep in my hand,
Till we have built Jerusalem
In England's green and pleasant land.

"Jerusalem is called Liberty among the sons of Albion," and Blake agrees with all Christian mystics that liberty can be built only from within. Wherefore his Christ is the Christ of the Revolution:

He cursed the scribe and pharisee,
Trampling down hypocrisy;
He scorned earth's parents, scorned earth's God,
And mocked the one and the other's rod;
His seventy disciples sent
Against religion and government

In both spheres, religion and politics, only Christ can make us free.

Alas! Blake saw the "Greatest Enemy" to his Vision in the Christ of the Established Church, where "black-robed priests" wander through the sweet "Garden of Love," "binding in briars my loves and desires." Disgust at conventional religion with its formalities and omissions pervades his poems. His passion for Liberty is that of his period; unanalyzed, naif; he is pure anarchist, and he reaches dangerous extremes in repudiating all restrictions, as anarchism always does: "O human Imagination! O Divine Body I have crucified! I have turned my back upon thee, into the wastes of Moral Law." We know what he meant. And penetrating deeper we are reassured; for he is no more audacious than St. Augustine: "Love, and do as you like." He denounces the negative revolt, the defiant self-assertion, which then as now betrayed true freedom, with as much vigor as he does dead conformity:

Mock on, mock on, Rousseau, Voltaire:
Mock on, mock on; 'tis all in vain.
You throw the sand against the wind
And the wind blows it back again.

His Love, which is the one creative, constructive, revolutionary force, is Agape, not Eros. His "little clod of clay" knows all about it:

Love seeketh not itself to please
Nor for itself has any care,
But for another gives its ease,
And builds a Heaven in Hell's despair.

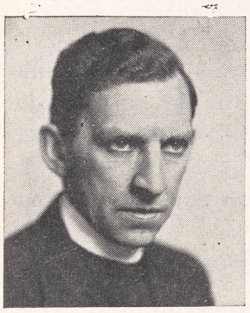
True, a "pebble of the brook" retorts, sneering unkindly:

Love seeketh only Self to please. . . . .
And builds a Hell in Heaven's despite . . .

But clay, not pebble, has the secret of life. The "Gates of Paradise" are "mutual forgiveness."

As our dear Redeemer said,
This the wine, and this the bread.

Blake's Vision of Christ is terrifying; it is partial; but it is authentic. It registers wholesome reaction from mechanical acceptance of authority in Church or State. Yet we should never forget that the Vision he called "enemy" may be authentic too; perhaps in the long run no Vision of Christ is enemy to another. Tradition was sacred to Jesus, part of his very being; continuity, loyalty to tradition, are glories of our faith. But in great revolutionary days, like his, like ours, Blake's Vision summons us. The Church, proclaiming this more and more clearly, calls Go Forward, and we can obey without fear if we abide in that world of Unseen Reality where Blake, like all Christian mystics, helps us to feel at home. Mysticism concerned exclusively with interior experience is more or less superceded today. Blake's poems reflect the conflicting forces hopelessly entangled in the civilization we know, and his Prophetic Books lead us into that area of stormy confusion in which we still wander. But in the world of Reality, our Vera Patria, where we "live forever with Jesus Christ our Lord," we can escape our "mind-forged manacles," and in freedom born of love echo the triumphant song:



Wherere his chariot takes its way,
There gates of death let in the day.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

THIS is the first Conference I ever attended where so much goes on that one is not quite sure what are the important things to report. It is a literal fact that each day a reporter can go to the press room, jot down the press conferences posted on the bulletin board, and spend the entire day running from one to another, held in hotel ball rooms scattered all over the city. There are luncheons, dinners, meetings. And there is the Palace Hotel where the reporters are staying, and the Press Club where out-of-town newsmen and radio commentators are being entertained, where one can go at any time of the day or night and join in a rumor or gossip huddle.

However in spite of this whirl which makes it so hard to see the forest for the trees, after more than two weeks of it, I think that a number of things can be said definitely. Most important of all, a Charter for a world security organization will be the final outcome of this United Nations Conference. It will be far from a perfect document and there will be many who are here as representatives of special interests who will be disappointed. There are a number of representatives of India who, whatever the subject at a press conference, manage to raise the question of the freedom of that country. So, likewise, with Palestine, Indo-China, Africa, Korea and numerous other places.. The Charter will dress all these problems up in pretty language about the welfare of the people and freedom at some future time. And, as Mr. Molotov said, "We all know the time will come when the voice of an independent India will be heard." But the fact is that the time is not yet for the very simple reason that the British Empire will not allow it. And what can be said of India can be said of every other colony or mandated area — nations are here to protect what they had before the war. Few, I presume, had much hope that it would be otherwise and the realistic view is to be thankful for a Charter which will establish a world organization which can and will maintain the peace and thus give nations and peoples time to solve the many baffling and complex economic, social and welfare problems that face the world. That I am sure will be accomplished and, however imperfect, it is a new achievement for the nations of this world for which we must be everlastingly grateful.

THERE are other things going on here about which I am less cheerful. That is the efforts being made, both inside the Conference and by powerful forces outside, to look upon this as a Conference to organize an anti-Soviet bloc. Unity of nations for world peace, and particularly unity of the Big Three, is accepted as a principle by everyone. But as soon as one gets down to a specific problem — Poland, the future of Germany, Austria, the Far East — one runs into the assumption by many that war is inevitable and particularly war between the two strongest powers on earth, the United States and the Soviet Union. Therefore, the smart thing to do is to maneuver for a strong position in anticipation of that struggle.

There is no journalist here who does a more painstaking job in checking facts than I. F. Stone. I've spent a considerable amount of time with him. He says: "We must recognize that there is no alternative between the achievement of full employment in America by peaceful means and new imperialist adventures and war. This is recognized by the progressives among the technical staffs and consultants of the American delegation, who fear a tendency to find a way out of a new post-war unemployment crisis by armed conflict instead of the peaceful, but painful, process of adjusting our economy to full employment. The contrast between full employment in the USSR and a new unemployment crisis after the war in the U.S.A. would be explosive. Many people fear the impact of so socially dangerous a contrast, but, while some of us conclude from it the necessity of a full employment program, others may think the contrast would best be avoided by an attempt to destroy the USSR."

It is not Stone alone who calls attention to this danger. Walter Lippmann likewise noted a tendency at the Conference to assume "that because Germany is prostrate, the German problem is no longer the paramount problem of the world." And he went on to point out "the fact that the main preoccupation of so many here has been not Germany but the Soviet Union."

Another correspondent, representing a conservative paper, has stated that there are only two members of the American delegation who have not been indulging in off-the-record anti-Soviet talk. These two are Dean Gildersleeve and Commander Stassen, who is, in the judgment of practically everyone here, the commanding figure of the American delegation.

All of this has been reflected time and again in press conferences, particularly the three that Molotov has so far held. I have attended them all and have heard him applauded by the press for his wit and the championing of peoples movements and the self-determination of all nations by the Soviet delegation. They opposed the seating of Argentina because it is a fascist power; they have given a ray of hope to Indian nationalists, which Mr. J. J. Singh, president of the India League of America, told me was headlined in every paper in that country; they have insisted that "the Polish question cannot be settled without the Poles"; they have supported the request of the World Trade Union Federation for admission to the Conference in an advisory capacity; they asked that there be written into the Charter paragraphs setting forth the rights of men to work and cultural development; when asked what would be their attitude if a proposal should be made to admit Franco Spain to the world organization (and there are those here working for that end) Mr. Molotov replied: "The answer is so obvious that it does not require comment." In other words the Soviet Union has held the torch for the peoples movements of the world. This has been clearly recognized by reporters in private conversations. And yet a large majority of them have gone to their typewriters to pound out anti-Soviet stories for their papers.

IN SPITE of this picture something more needs to be said. There are common people in this world and they will, in the final analysis, largely determine whether or not peace is to be maintained and what kind of a peace it will be. It is known that thousands of telegrams have been received from the American people by the American delegation protesting the seating of Argentina. The story is around that Paul Henry Spaak of Belgium supported Russia on the Argentina question not so much from conviction, but because he had his eye on the French municipal elections and saw the trend of things in Europe. The story is also widespread that the French delegation, likewise because of these elections, cabled De Gaulle asking that they be allowed to move for the seating here of the Warsaw government, thinking thus to strengthen themselves with the people of France.

After all people vote and elect governments and because they do the people throughout the world will have a great deal to say in the days ahead about the peace and its enforcement. The Charter creating a world organization will give them the time to make their will known.

'Teen Age' Christians

By VANCE HAYES
of the Witness Editorial Board

THERE is an ancient wheeze about two little girls who were comparing progress in their catechism class. "I've got to original sin," said one. "How far have you got?" "Oh, me," the other one answered. "I'm way beyond redemption."

There are a lot of people today who believe our entire young generation is way beyond redemption. On the other hand, there are those sympathizers of young people who quote newspaper and magazine articles which point up the sins of youth. The gag line is the reading of an 1898 or a 1904 date line implying, of course, that the youth of today is no worse or no better than the generations that came before.

Both these condemners of youth and their champions are wrong in their psychology. Why make an issue out of whether we are young or old? After all, we are all human beings and, paraphrasing Mark Twain, what could be worse than that? I only wish you young people of today were not so contaminated with the ways of your elders; for, just as it was the sin of indifference of my generation and my fathers' generation that brought on this war, so will your indifference bring on the next.

The issue, then, is not at all whether you are young or old. The issue is the times in which you live and whether you, as the men and women of tomorrow, are going to be any better prepared to cope with your times than your elders were to cope with theirs.

There is another time-worn gag about the college prof who asked a student what he knew about French syntax. The student's classic reply was: "Gosh, I didn't know the French had to pay for their fun." I'm afraid history has shown this to be about the most unfunny story that's ever been told. Not only have the French had to pay for their fun, the whole democratic world has had to pay for the sin of its indifference.

Nothing happens without cause and effect. You have been told that the cause of the war was Nazi greed and selfishness or Japanese egotism and cruelty. True, they affected the war. But our own indifference was one of the chief causes. Because we didn't know what was going on in the world, and because we didn't care, the Nazis and the Japanese were able to build their machines of war.

But our sin of indifference goes back much farther than that. It is hard to gauge just how far back it does go, but a lot of it rooted out of the misconception of one word — freedom. Americans, young and old, have had the strange notion that the words "freedom" and "indifference" are synonymous; that our God-given and government-protected gift of freedom is license to do just as we please about our own little selfish interests.

Henry Cabot Lodge, and all the little Henry Cabot Lodges, were so concerned with their own selfish interests after the last war that, for the sake of those interests, they refused to put teeth into the League of Nations that might have prevented this war.

In the boom that followed the last war, the barons of business and the wolves of Wall Street were so busy piling up fortunes for themselves — and the rest of us were so eager to climb on the bandwagon of prosperity — that no one bothered to apply the brakes to slow down the momentum until the whole thing crashed us into the slough of depression.

We were feeling oh! so sorry for ourselves and were still licking our wounds when rumblings of war were heard in Europe. It was then that our indifference reached a new low. Like a man whose house was in the middle of a fire, we locked our doors, closed our shutters and said, "If we mind our own business and don't pay any attention to the fire, it'll pass us by."

What a travesty! Because we refused to believe the Japanese would bring harm even to a fly, and because we didn't care what they did, we sent them boatload after boatload of scrap iron. We broke up old ships and packed them off to Tokyo. We tore down New York's Sixth Avenue "El" and sent it along; which they immediately moulded into weapons of destruction and later poured back into our boys on the beaches of Tarawa and Guadalcanal. The price we paid, and are still paying, for the sin of our indifference!

There was but one element that saved us from complete annihilation. It was the element of time. On the beach at Dunkirk and in the air over London our ally, the British, summoned up from somewhere a courage and strength that deterred the Germans from an immediate invasion of the British Isles and gave us time to prepare ourselves; for by this time we had discovered, at last, that the fire was beginning to eat at the foundations of our own house and that the time had come to do something about it.

The defense of the British gave us the time to gird ourselves for war. Today, our boys along the Rhine and on Iwo are giving you the time to prepare for peace. You owe it to them and to yourselves — and to your children — to put your inherited indifference behind you and to take advantage of that time element.

OVER and over again, young people say to me, "Why should I take things seriously. There's time enough to be serious when I get older. While I'm still young I'm going to have fun." I only wish you young people of today had time for the luxury of endless fun. But you haven't. Into your laps your elders have thrown the biggest job in the history of the world. In all of the story of the human race there are no times that can equal these in complications and confusion.

"Into the hands of our young people we must place a future fraught with misgivings. May God give them the strength to deal with that future courageously, unselfishly, and with justice for all men." These were among the last words spoken publicly by the late Wendell Willkie. He could have left no greater legacy to you young people than these words, if you will but heed them.

Among your many problems of the future is the problem of postwar employment. More than ten million Americans are in the armed forces. Already some ten per cent have been re-absorbed into civilian life. So far, this process has been accomplished without disruption to life on the home front; for, as we are still in the war, there is still a demand for labor in the industries that are feeding the war machine. But what is going to happen when that machine stops running and the other ninety per cent come home looking for peacetime jobs?

Although most of these men are not old in years, the experiences of war have matured them. Even at nineteen or twenty they are men, ready to assume a man's role in our society. Many of them have had advanced and specialized training in work that will be invaluable to them in peacetime occupations. You boys of today, when you are nineteen or twenty, will be no match for these returned veterans.

Nor must we forget that, after the war, the attitude of employers will be to give preference to honorably discharged veterans, even in cases where your training may be better than the veterans'. If our leaders are unable to cope with this avalanche of unemployed veteran personnel, and we are all tossed back into another postwar depression, what is to become of the too-vague ambitions of you young people for a successful future? Painting the picture at its blackest, the young people of today may become the forgotten generation of tomorrow.

But the picture is not yet that black. There are at least two things in your favor — the enthusiasm of youth and the element of time. The enthusiasm that gives you the urge to play can easily enough be translated into an exciting urge to learn and grow. It means facing up to life as it really is and putting behind you your escape into fun. It means finding out what the problems of the world are all about. It means a lot of investigation into the new industrial and scientific techniques so that you can pick a vocation for yourself that will provide you with a future in an uncertain postwar world.

It means finding out what our world neighbors are really like and putting behind you the moral disease of prejudice and discrimination against peoples and creeds you refuse to understand. It means doing the little jobs that come your way today with efficiency and thoroughness so that tomorrow you will be able to do the big jobs in the same way. It means, in summation, being a Christian in every sense of the word so that, through God's truth, you can take your place in leading the world into an era of sane, healthy and constructive peace.

Through their bungling and indifference we have seen what the past generations have done to the world. Today, everyone looks to you young people as the one great hope. But they also look upon you as the one unknown quantity separating the kind of world in which we have been living and the kind of world in which all decent peoples want to live. Young people, the future of the world is up to you. Are you going to do a better job than we did in the past?

Excellent Good *Fair

_How to Think of Christ._ By William Adams Brown. Charles Scribners. $3.00.

The posthumous publication of Wm. Adams Brown's volume on Christology is a fitting memorial to one who was primarily interested in the place of Christ in theology for the whole of his more than half-century of teaching. It is definitely written for the man of the street and might be titled "A layman's introduction to the problems of Christology." It is doubted whether a more thorough review of all the problems and positions in the theology of Christ has even been presented in language a layman can so easily read and fully understand.

The deficiency in the book is not that the author did not attempt to present all sides of the question, but that he did not himself grasp fully the points of view held by others. He takes Prof. Whitehead's two meanings of the world "reason" and makes the first, which identifies reason with the "critical function of the intellect," inapplicable to religion. The second, which concerns "value judgments of like and dislike, beauty or ugliness, praise or blame" is for Dr. Brown the element of reason which bears upon religion. Hence for him the creeds can have little real place and there is no difference between heresy and orthodoxy. Moreover he rules out Anglicanism when he limits the understanding of the relation between God and to the choice of the mystical or the ethical approaches. The Sacramental relations of God and Nature is not understood nor considered as a real possibility.

Christology remains to the end of the book a problem, and the truth of Jesus Christ is one of the questions which must be left undetermined. Perhaps the greatest value of this volume will be that it gives a personal case history which is representative of a period in the Presbyterian Church. Dr. Brown started as a Ritschlian, was upset by Albert Schweitzer and sent reeling by Karl Barth. —S.A.T., Jr.

*_One Kind of Religion._ By Helen Wodehouse. Cambridge University Press. $2.75.

This book reminds me of one written by Professor John Dewey, who pleaded that even though religion may have to be given up, "religiousness" should be retained. The author of this present book wants to keep the Christian religion but has great difficulty with beliefs in a personal God — and so she outlines "one kind of religion," her own. At least the "ancestry" of this faith is Christian. I do not think that there are many persons who will find much help from this book, partly because the implications of modern philosophy and science have not yet bitten in deeply enough into our consciousness. But it is a book to read carefully and think over — especially for teachers and preachers of the Christian faith who must address themselves to at least some people who occupy this advanced position in the intellectual no man's land — not only no man's, but no God's. It is a great sign of hope that the author clings as firmly to the Christian tradition as she does.

The book ought also to be read by those who think that our modern idea of divine personality is perfectly natural and completely orthodox. It will probably surprise them to learn that throughout most of the Christian centuries the doctrine of divine personality has been viewed as a heresy — God has no "personality." Personality is something human and limited; God is infinite being and cannot be described in our anthropomorphic language. So the problem has a somewhat different slant than one would assume at first glance. The reader who picks up this book had better be ready to do some good stiff thinking.

Church Must Convert Germany Says York Archbishop

Declares That the Maintaining of Peace Largely Falls Upon the Big Three Nations

Edited by Rita Rubin

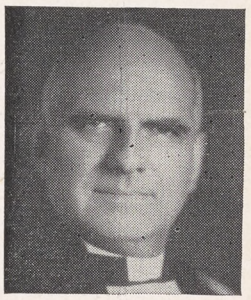
London (by wireless to RNS):—The work of reconverting Germany must be done by the German churches themselves, Dr. Cyril Forster Garbett, Archbishop of York, declared here in an address on the duties which rest upon churches "if they are to make their contribution to the cause of international peace."

Delivering the Burge Memorial Lecture, founded to promote international friendship through the churches, Dr. Garbett said: "Though little is known of the Churches in Germany, there is no doubt that as the Nazi terror is overthrown, there will be found churches and congregations which have kept the lamp of faith burning and have secretly deplored the crimes committed by their rulers. On the German churches above all will rest the heavy responsibility of bringing their people to a repentance of their crimes.

"The future peace of mankind will depend largely upon the birth of a new spirit in Germany. Where there is no repentance, forgiveness is immoral, if by forgiveness we mean the readmission of the offender to the fellowship he has broken and treating him as if he had committed no wrong. It would not be Christian but un-Christian if we said we forgave a Germany which showed no sign of a change of heart. Weapons must be taken and kept from Germany as from a homicidal maniac. Two generations of Germans have drunk in false and pernicious propaganda and have learned to regard as good what the Christian knows is evil. There is no hope for a permanent peace of Europe unless there is a conversion of the German people from the ways of violence and war. This cannot be effected either by material force or by outside agencies. It is sheer madness to think that the conquerors could send missionaries from their countries to reeducate the youth of Germany. They would be hated and scorned by those to whom they were sent. The work of the reconversion of Germany must be done by German churches."

Describing ways in which churches throughout the world can promote peace, the Archbishop asserted: "First, it will be the duty of churches in all lands to proclaim that war is contrary to the mind of Christ and that it is his will that all men should live in peace with one another. But the churches must not isolate peace as if it were a good in itself. It must always be associated with order and justice. The Christian churches in teaching that peace is God's will for man must make it plain that the only lasting foundations on which peace can be built are justice and order pervading the whole of life in all its relations, national, social, economic, and individual. Thus, peace is the national fruit and result of order and justice firmly established in society.

"Next, they must help the churches in Europe in the rebuilding of their life.



"Thirdly, Christian Churches must encourage and support proposals which aim at restraining the absolute sovereignty of totalitarian states. Unless this is done, war is inevitable. As the root cause of modern wars is in the unlimited claims of the sovereign state, we shall not make progress toward a peaceful order in Europe unless this sovereignty is checked. It can only be restrained by force. The greatest hope for the immediate future of mankind is in continued and closest cooperation between the three Allies who now possess the greatest material power, namely, the British Commonwealth, the United States of America, and Russia.

"This does not deny the greatness of France, the long endurance of China, or the heroic fighting qualities of the Poles. But the three great Allies at the end of the war alone will have sufficient material strength and resources to enable them to deter any would-be aggressor. For many years, the preservation of peace and order will depend upon their close cooperation. There are great ideological and economic differences between them, but all three are united in their deep desire for peace.

"Fourthly, the Christian Churches have a duty toward the nations from which they have been separated by war as well as toward those who have been allies."

Two Great Services

San Francisco: — Two great services were held at Grace Cathedral on the second Sunday of the United Nations Conference. In the morning there were 2,000 worshippers present at a Holy Communion service at which Bishop Edward L. Parsons, retired bishop of the diocese, was the preacher. In the afternoon a service for the British Commonwealth of Nations was held, likewise with every seat taken and many standing, at which Bishop Stevens of Los Angeles was the preacher.

On V-E Day four services of thanksgiving were held at the cathedral, with churches throughout the city likewise all having special services.

Mission Festival

Boston: — Trinity Church was filled with more than 2,000 children recently for the mission festival service when the Lenten offering was presented. The sermon was by the Rev. Phillips E. Osgood, rector of Emmanuel Church, with a choir of 850 from 55 parishes, leading the singing.

Officers Installed

New York:—Bishop Charles K. Gilbert inducted nine officers of the diocese auxiliary at a service at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

Half Million Needed

London (by wireless to RNS):—At least $500,000 will be required from public contributions to repair St. Paul's Cathedral here, over and above the sum that will be payable from government war damage funds. Among major restorations necessary will be that of the high altar, which was destroyed by a bomb, and the great organ, which was extensively damaged by another high explosive.

Race Relations

Boston:—A plea that each member of a minority group be regarded on his merits as a person rather than as a Negro or a Jew was made by the Rev. Bravid W. Harris, Bishop of Liberia, when he spoke to the Church Service League Women's division in the Cathedral Church of St. Paul. He surveyed the significant things happening in widely-flung sections of this country, among them the fly-by-night small sects led by rabble rousers, financed under cover, and aiming to stir up racial antagonisms. "Humanity has not yet learned to live together," he said.

Emphasizing that idealogies have no respect for barriers, the Bishop said we cannot afford to fail a second time in taking our share of world responsibility. There are 350 millions in Europe alone to be fed; but the present day worry is not over the physical means to cope with such problems, but the spiritual resources to ensure a durable peace.

Of outstanding moment is the resignation, effective June 1, of Miss Elise G. Dexter, president of the Massachusetts Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary and director of the diocesan Women's division. She has served with distinction, in succession to the late Miss Eva D. Corey, for four and a half years. At the meeting recently, Miss Dexter's letter of resignation was read and accepted with very deep regret. With the approval of Bishop Henry Knox Sherrill, Miss Laura Revere Little was nominated and elected to fill Miss Dexter's unexpired term.

The First Lady

Washington:—The President of the United States is a Baptist. However when living in Independence, Mo., Mrs. Truman and her daughter attended Trinity Church and Mrs. Truman sang in the choir. Since coming to Washington both have attended St. Margaret's Church more frequently than any other. Miss Truman was president of the Canterbury Club, Episcopal organization, at George Washington University last year.

Pray for Success

East Mauch Chunk, Pa.:—A service of prayer and intercession for the success of the United Nations Conference was held at St. John's Church here. Pastors, choirs and congregations of all the local churches were invited by the rector, the Rev. John Kenneth Watkins, and pastors of the Methodist, Reformed and Lutheran churches took part in the service, with the churches crowded. The service grew out of a sermon preached some weeks ago on the importance of the conference and a study group that was then organized by the women of the parish. On May 3 the women sponsored a meeting on the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals and on the 24th a forum on the San Francisco Conference will be held.

Seminary Lectures

Evanston, Ill.:—The Rev. Otis R. Rice of New York delivered the Hale Sermons at Seabury-Western Seminary on April 30 and May 1. He spoke on the Church's ministry to returning service men.

Burns Mortgage

Washington:—St. Alban's Church, located at the entrance of the cathedral close, burned its mortgage of $82,000 at the morning service on April 29th.

Missionary to Alaska

New York:—Mrs. Lois W. Cox of Berkeley, Calif., has been appointed missionary to Alaska, succeeding Miss Olive B. Tomlin as secretary to Bishop Bentley.

Heads Youth Work

New York:—The Rev. William K. Crittenden, student pastor as assistant professor of religion at Lafayette College is to become the executive of the National Council's youth work on September 1. He succeeds the Rev. Frederick H. Arterton who has accepted the rectorship of All Saints', Belmont, Mass.

New Deal for Indians

Toronto (RNS):—A new deal for the Indian was requested by the board of home missions of the United Church of Canada at its annual meeting here. Dr. J. C. Dorey, associate secretary of the board, called for appointment of a commission by the government to study every phase of Indian life. He said that the war which has taken many Indians in Canada out of the reserves to work in industrial plants in cities makes a resumption of their old life impossible, and that the educational uniform system applying equally to the Six Nations Reserve in Ontario and to the isolated bands at Island Lake in Northern Manitoba needed amendment. The Board's resolution declared that the Indian Act, passed many years ago and often revised, should be overhauled.

Visits Honolulu

San Francisco:—Miss Charlotte C. Tompkins of the national department of religious education arrived here May 5 on her way to Honolulu. She is to spend a month or six weeks there in general educational work, mostly with teachers and leaders of Church schools. She will also be one of the leaders at a youth conference where she will lecture on leadership training.

Church Schools

Richmond, Va. (RNS):—Six out of seven children in the public schools of Richmond go to Sunday school, but less than half are regular attendants, according to a survey conducted by the research and recommendations committee of the Richmond Ministerial Union. A total of 22,447 children replied to the questionnaire.

Of the 14,231 white children queried, 2,066 did not attend any Sunday school and 6,778 were not church members. Of 8,216 Negro children, 1,388 did not attend Sunday school and 2,666 were not church members. A total of 11,467 children said they were church members, and 8,064 others, both white and Negro, expressed a church preference.

Although the city's population has increased by about 45,000 persons since 1940, Sunday school membership in all churches showed a slight decrease, the survey revealed.

Church in Germany

Minneapolis (RNS):—The Church still has influence in Germany despite Hitler's preaching of paganism, P. O. Bersell, president of the Augustana Lutheran synod, reported here after conferring with religious leaders in Europe.

"There are chaplains in the German army," he said. "There is only one to 15,000 soldiers, compared to an average of one chaplain to every 1,000 American soldiers. But being forced to have any chaplains at all must be a bitter pill for Hitler."

Mr. Bersell said the Nazis arrested many church leaders for the attempt on Hitler's life last July 20, well aware of the fact that the Church is the only organized resistance force in Germany. "Although the plot has been generally publicized as military," he said, "it was also civilian. The Nazis suspected and arrested many church leaders. One such heroic pastor, when asked what his part in the attempt was, replied, 'As a Christian I could have nothing to do with a plot to murder a man, but I fully approve of the object.' He was shot the next morning."

In addition to Mr. Bersell, the Lutheran mission to Europe included Ralph H. Long, director of the national Lutheran council; and the Rev. Lawrence B. Meyer, publicity director of the Missouri synod. They visited Scotland, England, Sweden, France, and Switzerland.

The Church is stronger than ever in the Scandinavian countries, even the occupied ones, Bersell asserted. Although the destruction of church buildings has been beyond comprehension, he said, the immediate task after the war will be to supply hard-hit countries with new pastors, with Bibles, and with Christian literature. He said he felt it would be impossible to rebuild the destroyed cathedrals and other large buildings for many years.

From Philippines

New York:—The Rev. Arthur H. Richardson, headmaster of Brent School, Baguio, since 1934 and missionary in the Philippines since 1926, arrived at Church headquarters in New York, en route to join his wife and three children in Connecticut, from whom he has been separated for four years. While it has not yet been possible to visit the Mountain Province, Mr. Richardson believes that all buildings in Baguio have almost certainly been leveled by now, American bombing having finished anything the Japanese may have left. Brent School is for the children of American, British and other families temporarily resident in the Philippines. Nearly thirty of the students were unable to leave and were interned with all the other foreigners at Camp Holmes near Baguio. Classes were continued for them and for the many other children in the internment camps, as far as internment conditions allowed. The children have now been reunited with their families. Mr. Richardson was among the 500 internees who were brought down to Manila from the Mountain Province last December, packed into trucks for the long rough ride, and interned again, in Bilibid Prison, until the release last February.

has brought more numerous and larger responses than ever before.

Some parishes find it more convenient to take such offerings later than the appointed day.

The important consideration is that every parish share in supporting the institutions where men prepare for that ministry upon which the life of the parish depends.

To Elect Bishop

Middlesboro, Ky.:—The standing committee of the diocese of Lexington has called a special convention for June 26 for the purpose of either electing a bishop to succeed the late Bishop Abbott or to take steps toward reunion with the diocese of Kentucky.

Campbell in Montana

Livingston, Mont.: — The Rev. Wilbur C. Campbell, secretary of the nation's laymen's work, was the headliner at the convention of the diocese of Montana, meeting here May 7-9. He held a conference for one entire morning with the men of the diocese and was the speaker at the convention dinner. The business of the convention was routine, with Bishop Daniels presenting a report of progress.

Off to Germany

Pawtucket, R. I.:—The Rev. John W. Haynes, rector of Trinity, here, has been called by the State Department to do a specific task overseas and the vestry has granted him a six months' leave of absence. Mr. Haynes was formerly in charge of the American Church at Munich.

Soviet Friendship

New Orleans:—Dean William Nes of Christ Church Cathedral, addressing students of Tulane University, visualized a postwar world in which the United States and the Soviet Union will live in cooperation and friendship. Dean Nes considers stories that the Soviet Union is anticlerical, imperialistic and antidemocratic merely propaganda, and says the Russians are moving rapidly toward democracy which will soon make their government and ideology very close to that of the United States.

Anglicans and Orthodox

New York:—The Very Rev. Joseph Dzvonchik, a recent visitor to Moscow as one of the delegation of the Russian Orthodox Church of America was the headliner at a recent meeting of the Orthodox and Anglican Fellowship meeting here. The Rev. C. T. Bridgeman, formerly the representative of the Episcopal Church in Jerusalem, also addressed the meeting.

Pension Fund

New York:—The Rev. Nelson M. Burroughs, rector of Christ Church, Cincinnati, and Mr. Peabody Gardner of Boston have been elected trustees of the Church Pension Fund. Announcement is also made of the resignation from the board of the Rev. Anson Stokes Jr., who recently left Columbus, Ohio, to be the dean of the cathedral in Honolulu.

Bishop Davis, president of the Fund, announced that the total assets of the Fund at the end of 1944 amounted to nearly $39,000,000 and that pensions are being paid at the rate of $1,378,528 a year to approximately 2,500 beneficiaries.

Laguna Beach

Laguna Beach, Calif.:—The Rev. A. T. Phillips, formerly rector of Trinity, Mt. Vernon, N. Y., is now the rector of St. Mary's here. He is a native of Wales and came to the United States by way of Canada.

Help for Europe

New York:—The Presiding Bishop has asked all bishops to remember the Churches of Europe, and especially those of Greece, Yugoslavia, Holland, Norway and other liberated countries in connection with the victory in Europe. He states that appeals have come from the leaders of the Churches in these countries through the office of the World Council of Churches in Geneva. Many individual Churchmen and parish groups are already helping to revive the life and work of the Churches in these countries.

A Prisoner

Los Angeles:—Lt. James Yamazaki, United States army medical corps, has been reported a prisoner of war in Germany since Dec. 21. He is one of the sons of the Rev. John M. Yamazaki, D.D., a priest of this diocese. He is married, and his wife is living in Cincinnati, with his brother's family. Just five days after notice of his being missing in action was received, his seventeen-day-old infant son died in Cincinnati.

At It Again

San Francisco:—The Buchmanites, or as they prefer to have their movement called, the Moral Rearmers, are on the job here during the United Nations Conference. As is their established practice they are staying at the swank hotels, though just how they got in is a question since the regular guests have been thrown out to make room for the thousands having official business here. Also they apparently have crashed the carefully guarded gates of the Conference since one sees them riding about on the free navy buses which require the showing of credentials to enter. Their chief propaganda means is a play dealing with industry and international affairs, presenting the line that everything will be OK in this messy world if only everyone became a Buchmanite. It is the first time they have bobbed up in public since a year or so back when a flock of them got into a jam for trying to duck the draft.

Fish Cakes and Bacon

East Greenwich, R. I.:—Fish cakes with an egg dropped daintily on top, with a side order of bacon, was served the women of St. Luke's here after the early service. The cooks were members of the vestry, all rigged out in white aprons and chefs hats. The women paid for their meal but the vestrymen, ever gentlemen, turned the cash over to the United Thank Offering.

Large Offering

Washington:—The largest children's offering in the history of the diocese, amounting to over $9,000, was presented to Bishop Dun at a colorful service at the Cathedral. There were 547 in procession, carrying banners and crosses that designated each school, while at the presentation costumed children representing the various foreign mission fields, presented the offerings. There were over 2,000 attending the service.

Navy Project

Long Beach, Calif.:—The Rev. Norman E. Stockwell, recent graduate of the Episcopal Theological Seminary, is to work at the navy project here as assistant to the Rev. Truman P. Riddle. This growing work already has two chapels and two large Church schools.

Support Bretton Woods

New York (RNS):—The Council of Bishops of the Methodist Church has issued a statement here urging churches and communities to discuss the Bretton Woods proposals and make their opinion known "at the place decision is made before it is made to the end that an ordered and peaceful world may emerge." Released through its secretary, Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, the statement asserted that lack of organization in the economic and monetary field has been a major factor leading to war. It pointed out that "the fundamental necessity of international collaboration was a basic consideration" in the crusade for a new world order. The statement added that such collaboration "becomes effective only when the practical means to give expression to the ethical ideal are discovered and utilized. Hence, we must deal with concrete situations and problems. We must not refuse to do this. The new world order is not to be shaped in a vacuum. Recent expressions of principle in the fields of relief and rehabilitation, and food and agriculture, have been approved by the representatives of the people in Congress and have won wide support among the people generally.

"The United Nations monetary and financial conference reached agreement on the stabilization of currency and the provision of capital loans for economic development. In such highly technical fields we are dependent upon expert knowledge. We, ourselves, do not profess this knowledge. But common consent concerning economic measures must be achieved if war is to be avoided. We must find a way. Delegates from 44 nations assembled at Bretton Woods reached a common decision.

Bishop Harris Preaches

Philadelphia:—Bishop Bravid W. Harris, recently consecrated Bishop of Liberia, was the preacher at the eleven o'clock service at Christ Church on May 13th. In the afternoon the preacher was the Rev. Francis H. Craighill, Jr., rector of Bruton Parish, Williamsburg, Va., who is the president-general of the Descendants of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence. The services were held in connection with the 250th anniversary celebration being observed throughout this year at historic Christ Church.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

THE REV. FREDERIC B. KELLOGG
Episcopal Chaplain at Harvard University

Nothing weighs more upon the minds and hearts of all men these days than the problems of creating a permanent peace. One fact emerges more and more clearly from the news of the state of Germany: the German people do not realize that the responsibility for the indescribable barbarism of this war lies primarily upon their shoulders. They are not repentant. They feel that they fought or were fighting a defensive war and that they have been imposed upon by the Allies. This is largely due to the fact that their leaders have not revealed to them the brutality and viciousness of Nazi actions. A thoroughly repentant Germany, which is a most important factor in founding a permanent peace, cannot be obtained until all Germans, Nazis and otherwise, are made to comprehend the enormity of their crime.

A beginning has recently been made by showing the whole population of a town the details of horror in a nearby concentration camp. It is told that the German people were shocked and revolted by the sights inside Buchenwald.

I therefore respectfully suggest that the armies of the United States be instructed to carry out this policy to its fullest degree; that whenever possible German citizens be shown exactly what Nazi doctrine has brought upon this earth in the way of torture, suffering and barbarism. I suggest further that some of these concentration camps and places of torture be preserved for a suitable period as a witness to their crime, so that the Germans may not easily forget what they have done.

This would seem to me to be the first step in the rehabilitation of the German people. Men will not undergo re-education unless they realize the necessity for it. The first step is a realization of guilt and of the need for repentance. Their crime must be revealed to them.

MRS. EVERETT W. COUPER
Churchwoman of St. Paul, Minn.

Certainly we need fair employment practices and very urgent is the need for the federal committee by Congressional action. We need it also in the Church for I know of instances where Negro priests, well educated and trained, are paid far less for similar work than white priests.

* * *

MRS. ELTON C. HEALY
Churchwoman of Burlington, Wisconsin

What is coming to our Church and her teachings? The letter in April 5 Backfire by the Rev. Charles Lewis Biggs is very distressing. The creed is our profession of faith, compiled by ancient, Godly men. It takes less than a minute to say it. How much less time should a person want to give? The Commandments are cut down to two, and God gave ten. The sermon cut to ten minutes; Morning Prayer shortened or omitted and now the desire to shorten the creed. I know many persons dislike the sentence in the creed, "He descended into hell." That could have been, "He went to the place of departed spirits." And "I believe in the holy, catholic Church" could have been "I believe in the one, true, holy and universal Church." These two small changes would correct the things objected to. Or if the priest would teach the candidates for confirmation the meaning of these stumbling blocks there would be no desire for change.

MR. JAMES S. SMYTHE
Layman of New York City

I would like to commend the Rev. Shelton Hale Bishop for his excellent story of the consecration of the Rev. Bravid W. Harris to be the Bishop of Liberia. I myself am a Negro and I can assure your readers that we all took great pride in the fact that Archdeacon Harris has been elevated to such a high office in the Church. It was gratifying also to find such an excellent editorial about this great event in your editorial pages, though of course no regular reader of THE WITNESS should have been surprised for you have always shown a fair and courageous attitude in dealing with matters of race.

MISS JANE WINTERS
Churchwoman of Philadelphia

THE WITNESS surely is giving fine leadership in these critical days on the many vital issues that are before us. I refer particularly to the excellent articles by Dean Acheson on Bretton Woods in the issue of April 19, and the one in the same number by Dr. Atkinson which made the issues before the San Francisco Conference so clear. For you now to follow up these two with the articles by Richard Morford and Congressman Voorhis on these two vital subjects is a service for which your readers should be truly grateful. I am looking forward to the reports from San Francisco by Mr. Spofford for I have come to expect true understanding and insight from THE WITNESS editors.

Millions of Refugees Are Aided By the World Council

Estimated That There Are Thirty Million Refugees on the Continent of Europe Alone

By Henry Smith Leiper
American Secretary of the World Council of Churches

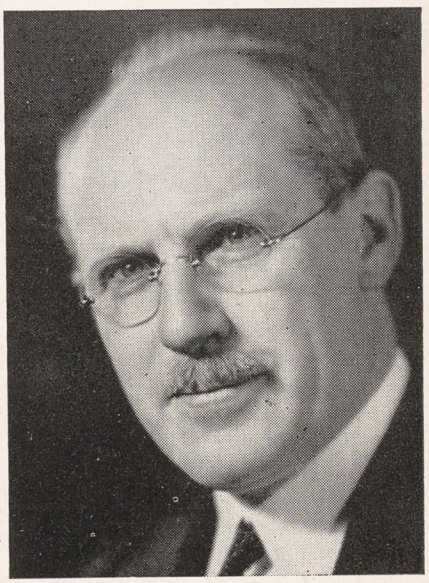
New York:—If there is any one thing on which all of the Churches of the world are already agreed it is that every follower of the Lord Jesus Christ is charged with the cultivation of the spirit of the Good Samaritan. With one-tenth of the human race dislocated from homes by the pressures and tragedies of war the problem of displaced persons looms as one of the greatest confronting the Churches.

Technically, there are distinctions made between those who are refugees in the sense of being stateless persons with no diplomatic protection and those that are merely dislocated within the borders of their own home countries for whom their governments will in due course make effective efforts at readjustments and possible return to familiar scenes.

When World War II broke out there were still 600,000 refugees from World War I who had not yet been located in permanent homes. It is estimated that there are now at least 30,000,000 refugees on the continent of Europe although it is clear that that estimate is much too low. Not by any means all of these are stateless persons although a very large number are in that category. Another huge number are exiled from their homelands and confront enormous difficulties. No provision is being made for their return.

Emergence of this problem was early recognized by the World Council's staff as a challenge and the commission on refugees was set up at Geneva to coordinate the activities of national committees which had sprung up in many helping countries.

Dr. Alphonse Freudenberg, a prominent member of Niemoeller's Dahlem parish in Berlin, himself an ordained minister although with many years' experience as a diplomat in the service of the Weimar Republic, became the director of the commission and through the whole period of the war he has rendered magnificent service. Support from the churches in America for his work has come largely through the generous action of the American Christian committee for refugees which, during certain periods, provided more than 80% of the funds used by his office.



Through various cooperating Church agencies in neighboring countries, as well as through the loyal and incredibly unselfish action of the Swiss Churches, the great work of fraternal good will has been accomplished and is still going on.

The growing difficulty of distinguishing between the work for those who are in the stricter sense of the term refugees and those who are displaced persons within their own country leads to a decision to amalgamate the commission on refugees with the new department of reconstruction and inter-Church aid, and in the near future Dr. Freudenberg's activities will be transferred. This does not however imply any cessation of activity for refugees. It only means that it will be carried on in larger context.

In the liberated areas of France a particularly fine piece of work has been done by CIMADE which is the Comite Inter-Mouvements Aupres des Evacues, a combination of the young people's organizations of the French Churches closely related to the administrative side of the Church life. It is under the able leadership of Mlle. Barot. To this organization the World Council's office has channeled gifts from the American Christian committee for refugees and other helping agencies in various countries.

As some indication of the world-wide character of the problem, which transcends all denominational as well as all national lines, it is interesting that the American Christian committee has dealt with refugees from 58 different countries. No statistics are at present available concerning the outreach at Geneva but it is undoubtedly even wider in scope.

In addition to the other activities in the office a great deal has been done in bringing together all the agencies interested in refugee welfare and notable studies of the problem have been issued by the Geneva office, which indicate a grasp of the problem and a true statesmanship in trying to meet it. This should bring comfort to those who feel discouraged at the inadequacies of the Churches in the face of an appalling world catastrophe.

RECONSTRUCTION PLANS ARE OUTLINED

eral secretary of the World Council of Churches, told a press conference here. The Geneva churchman is visiting this country to consult American church groups on overseas rehabilitation programs. "I do not think any of the churches are counting on having their reconstruction needs met from outside," Dr. Visser 't Hooft stated. "This applies even to Germany, where, about a year and a half ago, the Confessional Church organized its own reconstruction committee, looking forward to the day when they can start rebuilding, with perhaps some additional aid from abroad."

Taking part in the conference with Dr. Visser 't Hooft were Dr. Marc Boegner, chairman of the administrative committee of the World Council of Churches and president of the French Protestant Church Federation; and the Rt. Rev. George K. A. Bell, Bishop of Chichester, England, and a member of the provisional committee of the Council.

Chief concern of the French Protestant Church at the moment, Dr. Boegner stated, is the health of its pastors. "All of our clergy," he said, "are exhausted. Because many pastors were deported or became prisoners of war, those remaining have had to take care of from two to four parishes. All the while they have been without means of transport or communication, and they are handicapped by lack of shoes. Even to get shoes for pastors and their families would be a great help." He said it will be impossible to build new churches in France for several years because of lack of materials and means of transport. He added, however, that measures were being taken with the aid of Swiss and American churches to provide wooden huts in place of destroyed churches.

Bishop Bell said plans are also being made in Great Britain to utilize wooden huts as temporary churches, especially in new housing areas. "We have a three-fold program in the British Church," he stated. "First is our domestic program, replacing damaged churches, taking care of the needs of religious education, and provision of teachers in training colleges, etc. Second is our reconstruction program in the mission field, and lastly, church reconstruction in Europe."

London:—The picture is of a procession entering the ruins of St. Mark's Church, Bromley, Kent, which was destroyed by the Nazis. The occasion was the induction of the Rev. Jenkin Davies as priest of the parish by the Assistant Bishop of Rochester, Bishop J. C. Mann. Throughout England and the Continent are thousands of churches destroyed or partly destroyed which now must be rebuilt. The channel for this tremendous undertaking is the World Council's Commission for Service directed by Robbins W. Barstow whose article appears in this number.

FORMER HEADMASTER SPEAKS

New York: — The Rev. Michael Clarke, former headmaster of Repton, now the secretary of the Christian Frontier Movement in England, was the guest of honor at a luncheon May 7th given by the World Council of Churches. He declared that "Nations must regain a sense of the divine. Even Churches are weak in this respect. We must recover a new kind of Christian relations with our neighbors. People can no longer be regarded as means to ends. Human personality is of supreme value. We must use material resources as things put in trust in our hands for the present and future generations. We have now seen the consequences of forgetting these values and are ready now to consider them. This war may result in setting up a new civilization."

The speaker was introduced by Bishop Bell of Chichester who had arrived that day by plane from England.

The World Council of Churches Serves War Prisoners

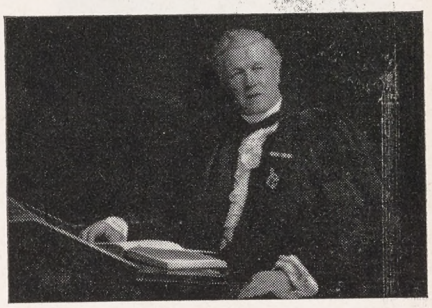
Carry On Religious and Other Activities For Millions of Men Behind Barbed Wire

By Roswell P. Barnes
Associate General Secretary, Federal Council of Churches

New York: — Isolated behind barbed wire, under constant surveillance from the watch tower, guarded by machine guns, millions of prisoners of war are living out the long weary days of waiting. Out of the excessively active life of combat they have been abruptly brought into inactivity, involving one basic struggle — the battle against boredom and demoralization. But, even though shut off far from their accustomed work and associations, they are not utterly alone. The Church is with them and they are in the Church, even in their captivity. And it must be remembered, even with V-E Day behind us, that it will be a long time before they are in a real sense liberated.

Take for example a recent report from a neutral visitor to a camp for American prisoners in Germany: A Protestant chaplain has been recognized by the German authorities as military chaplain. Every Sunday at two o'clock he holds a Protestant service in the American chapel in the camp. He also conducts Bible study classes and serves the prisoners in the "sick bay" and in the penitentiary. There is a library of religious books. Prayer books, hymn books, and worship material are available.

How is such a program made possible? Where do the materials and equipment come from? At the beginning of the war the provisional committee of the World Council of Churches set up the ecumenical commission for chaplaincy service to prisoners of war, with headquarters at Geneva, Switzerland. The war prisoners' aid of the YMCA was already arranging its work. In World War I the war prisoners' aid had cared for the total Christian ministry to prisoners. At that time there had been no international organization of the Churches which could provide a service on behalf of the Churches themselves.



When this war began however the World Council of Churches was in a position to provide such a service. Consequently an arrangement was concluded whereby a very close collaboration was established between the war prisoners' aid and the ecumenical commission for chaplaincy service to prisoners of war. It is difficult to draw the line between the services rendered by the two agencies. Generally speaking the ecumenical commission provides liturgical equipment, materials for the sacraments and worship, devotional literature, and in some cases, visiting clerical leadership. Bibles are provided by the American Bible Society and other societies. Along with supplying supplementary religious literature, music and pictures, war prisoners' aid provides the greater bulk of the service — libraries, texts for educational classes, athletic goods, musical instruments, equipment for dramatics and hand craft, and many other things. It also provides more extensive visitation to the camps by neutral secretaries. These regular camp visitors make contact with the chaplains to learn and to report their needs.

Much of the leadership of the religious activities is provided by clergymen from among the prisoners, but the materials must be sent in from the outside. During 1943 the ecumenical commission distributed from Geneva 188,524 religious books and pamphlets, the pamphlets being special Christmas and Easter booklets. 8,289 packages were shipped. Communion sets, altar cloths, vestments, candles, wafers, wine and sacred music represent principal items in the requests from camps which are answered as promptly as possible. The files of the ecumenical commission are filled with letters from prisoners thanking the commission for these items and for special theological books.

In some camps artists and artisans have with great skill and ingenuity transformed crude barracks into sanctuaries with mural paintings, altars, crosses and in some places even chancels. Red Cross packing boxes, colored glass from broken bottles and tin foil from chewing gum wrappers have been put to unprecedented uses. Crosses, altars, pulpits, and candelabra are sometimes expertly carved.

In trying to imagine the religious activities in the Churches of the Barbed Wire, we should remember that among the prisoners are skilled musicians and actors. In one camp in Germany the overture, 7 choruses, and 15 solos of The Messiah were rendered before an audience of about 700 officers and non-commissioned officers. In connection with the production, 200 sheets of music manuscript were written, copying out parts for orchestra and choir from a score provided by the society of sacred music of Geneva. Religious dramas are frequently produced.

Reports from the prisoners themselves and from the neutral secretaries who visit them emphasize three main values in this whole program of religious service:

J. Hutchison Cockburn is the senior secretary of the Department of Reconstruction and Inter-Church Aid of the World Council of Churches with headquarters in Geneva. Formerly the moderator of the Church of Scotland, Dr. Cockburn assumed his new duties on May 7th and told the press: "I see an immensity of tasks and generosity required if the churches in occupied countries now liberated are to face their problems with hope. If they are not to be swamped by the tidal wave which flooded them so terribly they will need the utmost help the Churches can give."

First: Religious activities and the deepening of religious experience are the most important factors in basic personal security and stability during the terribly difficult months of isolation and loneliness. The assistance provided by the YMCA and the Churches is a strategic contribution to the spiritual, moral and mental welfare of millions of men.

Second: The fact that help is sent demonstrates to the men that they are not forgotten. Thus they have a sense of being related to the outside world and especially to the groups and experiences that meant most to them back home.

Third: The maturing of religious experience and insight in a broad ecumenical setting is good preparation for leadership in the churches back home in the post-war period when the spiritual foundations of society must be rebuilt or strengthened if we are to achieve the better world for which these men and all of us have been striving.

BISHOP MANNING CONTINUES

New York: — Declaring that his physician has assured him that he would in a short time be fully recovered from his illness, Bishop Manning announced to the diocesan convention of New York that "I shall continue my work with you as your bishop." Following his brief address, upon the orders of his physician, he turned the chairmanship of the convention over to Bishop Gilbert.

MARTIN NIEMOELLER HAS HOPE

Cortina d'Ampezzo, Italy, near the Carnic Alps (wireless to RNS):— Germany's only hope for the future is in the Church, Pastor Martin Niemoeller declared here in the first public statement he has made since he became a prisoner of the Nazis eight years ago. Looking thin, but apparently in good health despite his long imprisonment, Pastor Niemoeller announced that he hopes to visit England and the United States before returning to his Dahlem parish in Berlin.

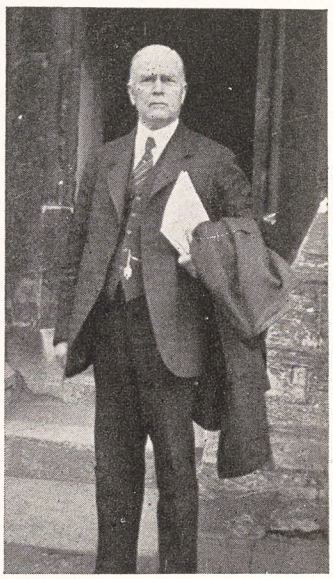
In an interview the Berlin pastor said he believed the only way Germany can get through the next few months and begin her future is through the influence of Christianity, particularly German Protestantism, aided by American Protestants.

ECUMENICAL SERVICE AT CATHEDRAL

New York:—Bishop Bell of Chichester, England; the Rev. W. A. Visser 't Hooft and the Rev. Marc Boegner of France, were the speakers at an ecumenical service held May 17th at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. It was under the auspices of the World Council of Churches and the World Student Christian Federation. Others taking part in the service were Bishop Charles K. Gilbert, Bishop Iriney of Dalmatia representing the Orthodox Church, the Rev. Joseph N. Sizoo of the Collegiate Church, the Rev. Benjamin E. Mays, vice-president of the Federal Council of Churches, the Rev. Douglas Horton, chairman of the American committee of the World Council, and John R. Mott, a vice-chairman of the World Council.

PENNSYLVANIA WILL HAVE BISHOP

Philadelphia: — Approval was given to the request for a suffragan by Bishop Hart when the convention of the diocese met here. A special convention will be held for electing as soon as approvals from a majority of bishops and standing committees are received. Suggestions for the office are to be sent to the deans of convocations or to any member of the standing committee. They will present not more than five names for nomination, with additional nominations allowed from the floor.



BISHOP PEABODY PRAISES WORLD COUNCIL

Syracuse:—Bishop Malcolm Peabody told the convention of Central New York that a global Christian community was taking form in the World Council of Churches. "It is not differences of belief we have to fear but secularization." Treasurer Lewis B. Franklin of the National Council also spoke, stating that China now has "great Christian leadership" and mentioned particularly T. V. Soong, head of the delegation for China at the United Nations Conference, who is a graduate of St. John's College, Shanghai.

RELIGIOUS FILM BY SOVIETS

Moscow (wireless to RNS):—Soviet authorities have released a thirty-minute film showing the recent election and enthronement of Patriarch Alexei. It is the first time since the revolution that a film has been devoted to religion. It is to be exhibited throughout the Soviet Union and it is said that audiences here, especially the young people unfamiliar with formal religious services, were deeply impressed.

Word has also been received from Moscow that worshippers throughout the Soviet Union jammed churches on May 6th when the Orthodox observed Easter.

John R. Mott is a vice-chairman of the provisional committee of the World Council of Churches. He is also, among many other things, honorary chairman of the International Missionary Council

ARCHDEACON BANYARD ELECTED BISHOP

Trenton:—Archdeacon Alfred L. Banyard was elected suffragan bishop at the convention of the diocese of New Jersey meeting here May 8th.

A LONG RECORD OF SERVICE

Wilmington, Del.:—Mrs. Frederick Bringhurst of St. John's, Wilmington, has set an enviable record for Sunday school teachers with some fifty-five years of service behind her. At the close of the current school year Mrs. Bringhurst will end her teaching career, but not, she hopes, her long association with St. John's Sunday school.

World Council of Churches

THE late Archbishop of Canterbury William Temple was known throughout the Churches as the leading protagonist of the plan for a World Council of Churches. In this effort he by no means stood alone. All over the world, and in all the Churches, are men and women who look hopefully toward the constitution of such a Council. It is still "in process of formation" and of course cannot be actually formed until after the war when free communication and travel will be possible once more. This does not mean however that nothing is being done. Here and there in various countries movements in the direction of cooperation and reunion, and what may be called "ecumenical" efforts, are taking place. In Hungary for example a new Ecumenical Council was inaugurated in 1943. It is composed of leaders of the Reformed and Lutheran Churches. In this country there are a number of reunion movements under way, notably between the Evangelical-Reformed Church and the Congregational-Christian Churches. There is also the movement toward the reunion of the Presbyterian and Episcopal Churches, to which THE WITNESS has often referred and is eager to support. Of course the war has set back the ecumenical movement and very seriously prevented what would otherwise have been a much speedier development, no doubt with a considerable measure of progress which might have been achieved by now. On the other hand, in the providence of God, the Ecumenical Movement is growing at a time when it will presently be called upon to undertake the greatest task confronting all civilization, that is the spiritual unification of mankind and particularly of Christendom, through the Church.

Some people who ought to know better scoff at the idea as an example of what they call "Pan-Protestantism," as if this were merely some kind of scheme for federation and cooperation between Protestants. A brief examination of the official statements thus far issued in the name of the movement ought to clear up this misunderstanding. The Ecumenical Movement, which is producing the World Council of Churches now in process of formation, is designed to embrace the whole Church. If Rome is left out, it is not because Rome has not been invited to successive World Conferences, but because Rome has declined the invitation. The Orthodox Eastern Churches are there, the Anglican Communion is there, the Reformed Church is there, the Protestant Churches—in fact all the Churches except Rome. It promises to become an expression of the catholic nature of the Church. If Rome refuses to recognize this—so much the worse for Rome.

It is characteristic of the Catholic Church that from the earliest centuries it has functioned through Ecumenical Councils. When in the course of time this method of Church organization and legislation gave way in the West to papal domination and dictation, and in the East to Byzantine imperialism, there were repeated protests and ever renewed demands for an Ecumenical Council. When at last one or two councils were held they were not really ecumenical; that is, they were not fully representative. At least one of the causes of the vast explosion in the 16th century was the refusal of the papacy to accede to the perfectly normal and catholic demand for an Ecumenical Council.

NOW in our time, four centuries later, there is a renewed demand for a Council representing the whole Christian Church. The tasks confronting the Christian religion in these days and in the days to come demand the whole strength of the whole Church. Each Church acting by itself without concert and without consultation with the others will be like an army made up of isolated regiments, whose commanders occasionally consult one another but on the whole prefer to move forward by themselves. The devil could not ask for a luckier break, and must chuckle to himself as he looks across and sees his opponents divided into these various competing, isolated regiments. The task before us, with a whole world to restore, to re-unite—or, not so much re-unite as really to unite for the first time—and bring back to sanity and spiritual wholeness: this task cannot be accomplished without something more than mere cooperation and good will. There must be an over-all strategy; but, in keeping with the nature of the Catholic Church, this over-all strategy will be the responsibility, not of one commander-in-chief who consults whom he chooses and assumes sole responsibility under God for his choices, but of an Ecumenical Council, representative of all the Churches assembled for the purpose. That is how the councilar principle has worked in the past—when it has worked. It is a principle characteristic of the essential nature of the Church. Hence the World Council of Churches, delayed as it has been by the war, and suffering serious reversals through the death of such great men of God as William Temple, William Paton, William Adams Brown, Theodore Hume, Herbert Willett, Richard Davidson—not to mention leaders on the Continent, and others elsewhere—the World Council of Churches is simply inevitable and must move forward to a victorious end; for it surely has behind it no less a spiritual force than the will of God.

The End of Divisiveness

by Douglas Horton

Chairman of the American Committee of the World Council of Churches

MOST readers of THE WITNESS will recall the Universal Christian Council for Life and Work which grew out of the Stockholm Conference in 1925, and the World Conference on Faith and Order, which held its first world conference at Lausanne in 1927. Out of these there grew a movement more and more inclusively an official council of the Churches. Foregleams of the idea had found expression in the writings of many Christian leaders: but to the late William Temple, Archbishop of Canterbury, more than to any other single person goes the credit for having brought about the action which culminated in the vote of the Oxford and Edinburgh World Conferences in 1937 in favor of the organization of a World Council. This was to begin by a union of these two movements which would provide an inclusive overarching organization concerned with all the manifold interests of the Christian Churches. Under the Archbishop's leadership a conference in Utrecht in 1938 drafted a constitution which was unanimously adopted by the representatives of more than 80 communions of every major type other than the Roman Catholic. Invitations were forthwith sent to the Churches. At this writing acceptance of the constitution by 85 Churches has made the provisional committee of the World Council already a more inclusive "organization ecclesiastically than any other which the Christian Church has ever known." (Quoted from the seventh volume of Kenneth Scott Latourette's History of the Expansion of Christianity.)

Dr. Temple was elected chairman and three secretaries were chosen for the Council, Dr. W. A. Visser 't Hooft, of Geneva; Dr. William Paton, of London; and Dr. Henry Smith Leiper, of New York.

The Universal Christian Council for Life and Work made available to the provisional committee its entire staff, its offices and all its assets; and the continuation committee of the World Conference on Faith and Order gave close collaboration. When therefore the war came, a well-knit, well-staffed organization found itself ready for the many major tasks which confronted it—tasks which only such a comprehensive body could have undertaken.

While it was—and is—strictly in process of formation from the constitutional point of view, it became de facto an effective instrumentality of the united churches almost from the day of its formation.

It cannot itself be a fully completed council until the first world assembly has been held and this is not within the range of possibility until a year or so after the end of the Asiatic War. The Utrecht meeting, anticipating the possibility of considerable delay in the holding of the world assembly because of world conditions, authorized the provisional committee to assume the responsibilities of the central committee as described in the constitution in the event of such a delay. The provisional committee has held meetings every year since 1938, only three of them, however, being full meetings. The first was held in Paris, the second in Zeist, and the third in Apeldoorn. Since the 1940 meeting in Apeldoorn, Holland, it has been possible to hold sectional meetings in various places.

DESPITE the difficulties and delays, time has by no means been lost and in almost every country where there are constituent Churches great progress has been made in arrangements to carry on the work of the World Council. In at least a half dozen countries the impulse to cooperate radiating from Oxford, Edinburgh, Utrecht, has resulted in the formation of national Councils of Churches, usually on the same constitutional basis as the World Council itself. Most notable in this connection is the organization of the British Council of Churches which had as its first chairman the chairman of the World Council, the late Dr. William Temple, and as the first chairman of its administrative committee, the late Dr. William Paton.

Because of the particular importance of the relationship of the Council to the younger churches and the Orthodox Church, special committees have been at work on these problems; but it should be noted that the Orthodox Churches which had been identified with the two movements which flow into the World Council, viz., the Life and Work and Faith and Order Movements, have indicated that they desire their members in these antecedent bodies to be regarded as placing them within the orbit of the World Council even though they have not been able, because of wartime conditions, to take action with respect to the new constitution.

At the present time the Council is operating under the leadership of its three vice-chairmen elected at Utrecht — the Rev. Dr. Marc Boegner, head of the French Churches; Archbishop Germanos, representative of the Ecumenical Patriarch; and Dr. John R. Mott. The successor to Dr. William Paton in London has been chosen in the person of the Rev. Oliver Tomkins, who carries on at Edinburgh House, which is the headquarters of the International Missionary Council.

The financial support of the Council has been steadily increasing, although Churches in a number of countries have been prevented from making any transfer of funds to the head office in Geneva. It is noteworthy that from a purely financial point of view the activities of the provisional committee in Geneva entail at the present time a total expenditure which, expressed in U. S. dollars, would represent over one-third of a million annually. The greater part of this is involved in the wartime emergency service described by other writers in this issue of THE WITNESS.

Those who have observed the progress of the Council find it easy to agree with Bishop Francis J. McConnell who, on the occasion of his retirement dinner in New York, said: "When the Church historian of the year 2044 writes the story of our time, he will say that the most important event of the 20th century for the Churches was the establishment of the World Council, because it marked the beginning of the end of interdenominational rivalry and divisiveness."

Director of the Commission For World Council Service

AS THESE words are written history is being made in a way that is breath-taking. By the time they are read, the countenance of Europe may well be changed, in anticipation of a social and spiritual resurrection after a protracted Calvery of strife, even if not yet in actual fulfilment. And this change of outward circumstance if and when it comes, will enable us to transfer at least a measure of our concern to the healing processes inherent in the Christian faith. Never in all human experience would there seem to have occurred such an opportunity for the full outpouring of an inclusive charity, even as there has never been such a holocaust of destruction and suffering.

The fellowship of Christians in the contemplated World Council of Churches provides a ready means for the expression of good-will in very concrete form. Although not yet officially consummated, this cooperative venture of more than fourscore church bodies is already functioning through its department of reconstruction and interchurch aid, based in Geneva, and the various national counterparts, of which the commission for World Council Service is the cooperating unit for the United States.

The task which confronts our Churches is a stupendous one both spiritually and materially. The pastors and people of the war-stricken lands have exhibited a type of heroism seldom seen since the days of the early Christian martyrs. They have dared defy their conquerors with word and deed, seeking to maintain as the rule of life the commandments of God, rather than the perversions of men. In this struggle they have achieved a depth of conviction and a degree of devotion that may well be the proper envy of many of us easy-going and quite comfortable churchmen and women. The greatest single service we can render to them is to try to match their faith and their sacrifice and in this way to gain a fuller spiritual harmony with them in the fellowship with Christ which they have attained.

But in addition to this there is much that we can do in the way of immediate helpfulness in this their hour of dire distress. We ought gladly to invest on their behalf substantial tokens of the rich talents God has given us by way of our unbombed cities and our unburned homes and our unfettered schools and our unmuzzled press and our unstarved children. Generous sharings of our means will do much, and how little that will cost us in terms of the sort of distress and privation which has been the sorry lot of our brethren.

The commission for World Council Service has been organized to serve as the channel for the operation of just such whole-hearted assistance in the salvaging and resuscitation of the Church organizations and activities of war-ravaged Europe. Working in closest relationship with the department at Geneva, the American commission is designed to be the agent of the Churches in a number of specific ministries.

Of immediate urgency is special relief for the pastors of the devastated areas. These devoted and heroic men have suffered even beyond the lot of most of their countrymen, for they have been in the very forefront of Christian resistance to the iniquities of the occupying authorities, and have had to sacrifice everything, their goods, many of them their liberty, and some of them their lives. They and their families deserve more than the mere subsistence relief that the various agencies, governmental or other, are seeking to provide. If they are to resume their place of leadership, we must help them with the rehabilitation of their homes and with more than the bare minimum of food and clothing. We would want to aid not only the pastors of the lands lately in subjection, but also the German pastors. Most of these have been courageous and outspoken against the Nazi doctrines and practices as to race and religion and have suffered much because of their convictions. By such a gesture of goodwill they can be helped toward a restoration of their confidence in the Christian gospel of love and they will thus be the more effective in fostering the renaissance of normal Church life in the erstwhile Reich.

THEN there is need for help in restoring the Protestant ministry in its numbers. There has been for several years an almost complete black-out of theological education. Young men who would have been preparing for the ministry have been serving in the armies or the underground, and in any case the seminaries and training centers have not been able to function. Some students are beginning their studies again in Paris under a theological faculty, but many we hope will be able to study in England, Scotland, and the United States. This will mean scholarship aid for most of them in greater or less degree. And as soon as possible the seminaries should be helped to resume their training program. This also will call for substantial subsidies from those of us who have come through these tragic years with so little of real privation or sacrifice.

Help with the Christian youth movement and with evangelistic campaigns will also be needed. The continent of Europe, according to those who know it best, is ready for a genuine revival of faith. The bitter experiences of the war have so influenced the hearts and minds of uncounted thousands of men and women and young people that they are unusually receptive to the message of the gospel. It is reported that evangelistic services are crowded and many lives are being touched and changed in significant fashion.

Another great need is for Christian literature — books, pamphlets, and periodicals. Most of the great libraries and printing houses on the continent have been destroyed. Every home or church demolished has meant the loss of many volumes. Millions of books of a religious nature were burned by the Nazis. There is a genuine hunger for the kind of Christian reading matter that comforts the heart and strengthens the soul. We have in hand lists of many books and pamphlets for which there is insistent and growing demand. The churches of Europe are asking us to get these printed in large quantities just as quickly as materials are available and necessary authorizations can be had.

There are also cooperative ministries, such as work among the refugees and evacuees in connection with the American Christian committee for refugees, the ecumenical commission for refugees, and CIMADE (Comite InterMouvements Aupres des Evacues), and work for the Axis prisoners of war in connection with the YMCA and the ecumenical chaplaincy commission.

Finally there is the need for help to the limit of our generosity in the matter of providing the physical equipment for the resumption of Church life and work. No complete or authentic figures are as yet available, but one need only read the news dispatches and look at the pictures from the front to realize the extent of damage done to the church structures in the towns and cities of the fighting zones and within the bombing radii. Some who are close to the situation have estimated that in Norway, Denmark, Holland, Belgium, France, Italy, and all of Eastern Europe — everywhere, in fact, except Spain, Sweden and Switzerland, probably one fourth of the churches have been totally destroyed, one fourth heavily damaged, one fourth lightly damaged, and only one fourth have escaped unscathed. It will be months at least before accurate statistics can be had. But these guesses are surely sound enough to give us some idea of the destruction and the task of repairing or replacing these houses of worship and centers of parishional life. The commission has already forwarded over a hundred thousand dollars to provide temporary barracks in devastated towns to serve as church centers, where religious services can be held and parish contacts and activities started again. The more permanent repairing or rebuilding will be of course a long range program, but the assurance of our help will greatly enhearten our desolated brethren, and give them courage to carry on and plan for the future.

Here, then, are some of the ways in which the Churches of America along with those of Switzerland, Sweden, and the British Isles, are responding to the cry of distress from stricken Europe. The effective ministry that can be rendered through the World Council of Churches is limited only by the measure in which men and women of the fellowship of Christ put into definite deeds and dollars the demonstration of their faith and their fraternity.

Faith and Order in the Council

by Angus Dun

The Bishop of Washington

THE proposal of a World Council of Churches came jointly from the two great ecumenical movements which held their meetings in 1937. Life and Work met at Oxford in July, and Faith and Order met at Edinburgh in August. Each appointed seven members to serve as a committee to complete the details of the plan for a World Council, to submit the completed plan to the Churches, and, when approved by the Churches, to convene the first Assembly of the World Council. This program has been fully carried out, though the war has delayed the calling of the first Assembly.

Indeed, the very idea of a World Council, meeting regularly, grew out of the successful meetings of Faith and Order and of Life and Work, in 1920, 1925, 1927, and of their continuation committees which met each year for sessions lasting three to five days. Since almost all the Churches were members of both movements, their representatives grew to know each other well through these frequent meetings and to feel the unique value of these personal contacts in stimulating the life of each Church at home as well as in promoting wider cooperation. The result was agreement to submit a plan "for the future of the ecumenical movement" to the Oxford and Edinburgh Conferences, to be prepared by a special meeting of thirty-five delegates prior to the conferences. At this meeting the first draft of the plan for a World Council was put on paper, sketching the general outline that was later embodied in the proposed constitution.

Not only has Faith and Order shared in sponsoring the World Council but it has voted, like the Life and Work movement, to merge itself in the World Council. It was voted at Edinburgh that the continuation committee of the Edinburgh Conference should become the World Council's Commission on Faith and Order. Thereafter, the direction of the movement will be in the hands of the same Churches as at present, but through their delegates appointed to the World Council Assembly. It was a happy symbol of this merger that the chairman of the Faith and Order continuation commission, Archbishop Temple, was chosen chairman of the World Council provisional committee.

When the constitution was drafted at the special conference held in Utrecht in May 1938, several long-tested principles of the Faith and Order movement were incorporated. The very first article, the "Basis," was the basis of the Faith and Order movement as laid down in the inaugurating resolution of 1910. The principle of direct responsibility to the Churches was adopted — "the Assembly shall be composed of official representatives of the Churches." While it was agreed that the main purpose of the World Council should be to facilitate common action, it was also agreed that all common action must be based on the free assent of the constituent Churches — no one was to be overruled by a majority vote.

This partnership in the World Council, far from being a compromise between the two movements, is the result of long experience. Faith and Order is concerned with the questions that divide the Churches, largely questions of doctrine and of Church order, while Life and Work has been concerned with promoting cooperation in the field of Christian service, disregarding as far as possible the existence of these differences. At first sight, these objectives seem in opposition, and there are still some people who think you can best promote progress in matters of Faith and Order by studiously avoiding any commitments in the field of Life and Work, and vice versa. But experience has shown that the opposite is true. Actually progress in one promotes progress in the other. They are complementary, mutually strengthening and indeed mutually necessary, for cooperation cannot get very far without the solving of difficulties that still prevent unity, nor can the study of these differences get very far without the mutual sympathy and confidence that comes from common Christian service.

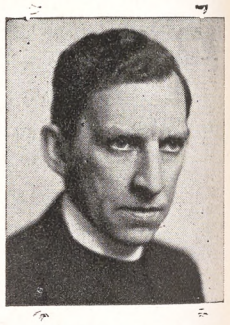
AS DR. WILLIAM ADAMS BROWN often put it, the field of Life and Work is in those areas where agreement makes united witness and common action possible, while that of Faith and Order is in those areas where differences of view prevent united witness or common action and so require further study. It is cause for rejoicing that the former areas are now seen to be so extensive that they enable us to join in world-wide cooperation for mutual service.



Thus it may be expected that when the World Council begins to function its agenda will mainly consist of practical, immediate questions, that is, questions in the field of Life and Work. The Faith and Order studies will be carried on in the special commission of theologians, as provided for in the constitution, article VI, reporting of course to the Assembly on the progress of their studies. When the commission is ready to present its completed reports for study and discussion by the Churches, then it will ask the Assembly to call a special world conference for that purpose. This conference may perhaps take the place of a regular meeting of the Assembly, or it may be held between the meetings of the Assembly. It will be composed of the delegates which each Church selects to represent it in the discussions of the report — a specially selected group since the subjects for discussion will necessarily involve matters of history, theology and Church order, so that Churches will wish to send their scholars and theologians. Such special conferences are contemplated in the constitution, article III, section 6, "The function of the World Council shall be (6) to call world conferences on specific subjects as occasion may require."

To sum up, Faith and Order is wholly committed to the World Council. Its leaders are cooperating with the leaders of Life and Work in setting it up. As soon as the first Assembly meets Faith and Order will cease to exist as a separate organization of the Churches. But its work will go on as a commission of the World Council. The regular meetings of the Assembly will be concerned largely with Life and Work questions, but every once in a while, at the request of the Faith and Order commission, they will ask the Churches to send special delegates to do what the Lausanne and Edinburgh Conferences have done: Take "the next step to unity through the clear statement and full consideration of those things in which we differ as well as of those things in which we are one."

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

San Francisco:—The world is a living, growing organism and it is impossible to prevent changes. For the United States to attempt to do so would lead us into another war, and probably on the wrong side. That statement was made by one of the top men associated with the American delegation at an off-the-record meeting, and he indicated that it was recognized by the delegations of the Big Five and doubtless by the representatives of most of the nations attending the Conference. And because it is recognized he believes that provision will be made in the charter to be written here, not only for amendments, but for periodic Constitutional Conventions of the World Organization when the entire Charter would be thoroughly revised in the light of new events.

If this is a fact, and certainly the position held by the speaker gave it great authority, it is one of the most encouraging things that has happened here. He had no doubt whatever that a Charter will be approved at this Conference, not a perfect document, but one which is a good start.

It was recognized from the start, he declared, by the four sponsoring nations that the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals was a cold document, lacking soul. This purpose, objective or soul, as he called it, has now been given to the Charter by writing into it such phrases as "with due regard for principles of justice and international law"; "the solution of international economic, social, cultural and other humanitarian problems and promotion and encouragement of respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, language, religion or sex."

Originally these objectives had been stated only in the section on the Economic and Social Council. It is now agreed among the Big Five and presumably by everyone else, that they shall also go in Chapter One which sets forth the basic objectives of the World Organization. It has also been agreed among the Big Five that there shall be a Human Rights Commission, which was one of the recommendations of the Cleveland conference of the Federal Council's commission on a just and durable peace. This holds out more hope to the little people of the world who, if words mean anything, will be encouraged to work for their own freedom and economic, social and cultural development.

PROBLEMS, of course, must not be minimized and I can merely state them briefly since I must give up space in this World Council number. There is the world court. Some want the old court brought back to life, others a new court. Some want nations compelled to bring their disputes to court and the decisions enforced by the World Organization if necessary. Others want the nations to come to court voluntarily. Progressives want a new court, compulsion and enforcement. But it appears at present that they are losing out.

There is a tangle on trusteeships, with the U. S. army and navy strong enough to force the U. S. delegation to say, through Commander Stassen, that nothing would be done at this Conference which would in any way interfere with the complete defense of the United States. That means that we are going to hang on to what we consider strategic defense areas, without placing them under the World Organization, and of course if we stick to that position it will force the other nations to do the same thing. In that event the peoples of the world certainly will not be relieved of that "crushing burden of armaments" they were promised in the Atlantic Charter.

On the matter of Regional Organization it looked for a time as though we were also to play a bad role by insisting that we would run the Western Hemisphere—Monroe Doctrine stuff—with little regard for the World Organization. Naturally if we play that game—and we may yet when the Charter goes to the U. S. Senate to be ratified—then Britain, France, Russia and everyone else able to do so will do the same and the world will be back in the old rut of power politics and blocs. However Mr. Stettinius told a press conference on the 14th that the U. S. delegates agreed that the world organization must be paramount, and the following day agreement was reached on this point with the Latin American nations. So at the time of writing, May 21, I can find no evidence that any delegation places regional security arrangements ahead of World Organization.

Meanwhile keep in mind that the final Charter has to be ratified by governments, including our Senate. That fact, I think, has made some of our delegates take a more conservative position than they otherwise would. But more on that next week.

New Books

Excellent Good *Fair

Rome and the Romans. By Grant Showerman. Macmillan. $2.50.

New issue of a magnificent account of Roman life by one of America's foremost classical scholars. Like its companion volume in The Macmillan Classical Series, Walter Miller's Greece and the Greeks, the book is beautifully written, amply illustrated, and fascinating to read. It would be a great help to the church school teacher — not to mention the clergyman — if he would read such books as these for the background of Graeco-Roman life in the first century, rather than depend upon such "helps" as the usual Teacher's Manual provides. These books are authoritative and are also written with imagination and with adequate learning. —F.C.G.

The World Council Must Reach The Local Community

No Ecumenical Church Is Possible Except As We Function as Members of the One Body

Edited by W. B. Spofford

New York:—The Rev. Samuel McCrea Cavert has devoted his life to seeking that cooperation and unity among the Churches which is essential if the Church is to be an effective instrument for the carrying out of God's will. He has worked toward this end as the General Secretary of the Federal Council of Churches and as an outstanding leader in the development of the World Council of Churches. It was therefore natural for us to turn to him for a statement on the progress of the World Council and what he considered necessary for its future development. Dr. Cavert's answers to our questions is contained in the following statement:

Dr. Cavert:—Historically, the development of a cooperative unity among the Churches had been under way about three decades before the World Council of Churches was projected. This is what would naturally be expected. The Christian groups that were near neighbors were the first to feel the pressure of need for working together. In our own country the Federal Council was formed in 1908, and one of its defined objectives was to help local churches to form councils for united action in their own communities.

The extension of the federated principle to the relation of Churches on a world-wide scale was in large measure a result of the experience of cooperation in smaller areas. When the World Council of Churches was projected in 1937 by the Oxford and Edinburgh conferences, federation was no longer a mere theory. Important experiments in federating for fellowship and united action in matters in which there was a common mind, without compromise of any distinctive conviction, had already been carried out. Up to this time, however, the idea of a world-wide federation among bodies of diverse historical traditions was too advanced a conception to seem practicable for a long time to come. The Faith and Order and the Life and Work movements were both international, it is true, but each of them had carefully limited functions. When it gradually became clear that these two were parts of a greater whole, the pattern which they adopted for their unification was that of the Council of Churches which had become familiar in several countries, particularly in the United States.

But if the World Council is thus indebted to the local and national councils of churches, the debt has been repaid many-fold. Today it is the ecumenical outlook, expressed in the World Council of Churches, which is the greatest stimulus to more effective cooperation in our own country. So long as our gaze was limited to our own localities or even to our own nation, the great advance which our federated efforts represent did not appear. It is only as we have begun to see church cooperation in Middletown or Jonesville as an integral part of a process that enables the Church to be more truly one Body of Christ throughout the world that the epochal significance of the movement is realized.

As a matter of fact, the seven years during which the World Council of Churches has been in process of formation have witnessed unprecedented progress in federation in the local, state and national areas. In some cases — as in Great Britain and Canada — the formation of the new national councils is directly traceable to the influence of the World Council. In scores of local communities in this country there are new councils which have come into being because the parishes wanted to feel themselves a part of the ecumenical movement. Indeed, the phrase "Make ecumenicity local" has almost become a slogan of city and county councils of churches. They regard it as one of their primary functions to represent the spirit of ecumenical Christianity locally and to educate the people of their own communities to think in terms of the world-wide Christian community. It is safe to say that there are few American cities, or even villages, that have not felt a new impulse to Christian fellowship and cooperative service as a result of the emergence of the World Council upon their horizon.

It is necessary, however, to remember that the real testing-time of the World Council is still to come and that in the long run its success will chiefly depend upon the spirit of unity that is found in local communities. It is not enough that a little group of ecumenically-minded leaders be committed to the enterprise. The rank-and-file of church members must be prepared to act ecumenically.

So the main part of the answer to our questions about the future of the World Council will not be given in any international headquarters in Geneva or London or New York. It will be given in all the communities where individual Christians actually dwell. No ecumenical Church is possible except as local congregations live and function as members of one body. As G. K. Chesterton once said, "Nothing is real until it is local." It is easy to be enthusiastic about the ecumenical Church when it is a beautiful picture on a world canvas at which we look admiringly but which has not yet required us to do anything about it at the point where we actually live. The real test will be what happens among the local churches in towns and cities everywhere.

To Be Married

New York:—Eleanor Jean Grant, daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. Frederick C. Grant, is to be married on June 23 to Laurence C. Tombs of Montreal. Until recently Miss Grant has been on the staff of the office of strategic services of the U. S. government. Mr. Tombs, formerly a member of the League of Nations secretariat, is now acting secretary of the international air transport association.

Bishop Louttit

West Palm Beach:—The Rev. Henry I. Louttit was consecrated suffragan bishop of South Florida at Holy Trinity yesterday, May 23. Bishop Wing of South Florida was the consecrator, with Bishop Mallett of Northern Indiana and Bishop Spence Burton of Nassau the co-consecrators. Bishop Juhan of Florida and Bishop Carpenter of Alabama were the presentors, while the attending presbyters were the Rev. Joseph M. Taylor of Miami Beach and the Rev. William Hargrove of Fort Pierce. The sermon was delivered by Bishop Penick of North Carolina and the litanist was Bishop Jackson of Louisiana.

Discuss Unity

London (wireless to RNS):—The Congregationalists and Presbyterians of England have set up a joint commission to discuss possibilities of organic union. Action was taken by the Congregationalists following an address by Chaplain W. T. Jones, recently released from a German prison camp, who told the assembly that "we chaplains were determined not to come back to the same disunion from which we went."

Elected Trustee

New York:—Marsden B. Candler of Woodmere, Long Island, has been elected a trustee of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, filling the place left vacant by the death of President Roosevelt. Mr. Candler, while a resident of Long Island, is a communicant of the Transfiguration in this city. Others elected as trustees were the Rev. Elmore McKee of St. George's and Mr. William M. V. Hoffman.

General Convention

Philadelphia:—The convention of the diocese of Pennsylvania extended an invitation to the national Church to hold the 1946 General Convention in Philadelphia. It was to have been in San Francisco but Bishop Block felt that transportation difficulties made it impossible. It has not yet been indicated whether or not the national Church will accept the Philadelphia invitation but it is considered likely.

No Conferences

Hendersonville, N. C.:—The Kanuga Conferences are not to be held this year because of travel restrictions.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE CULTURAL CRISIS

by Charles D. Kean

Our contemporary culture does not provide the orientation of life that enables us to understand history's meaning. What can give us a perspective upon history as a whole, provide an awareness of the meaning and dimensions of war? The Christian Gospel, says Mr. Kean, is the frame of reference by which historic and contemporary problems can be placed in proper perspective. $2.00

Support Conference

Middlebury, Vt.:—A committee of three, including Rector Harry H. Jones of St. Stephen's persuaded the town fathers of this New England town to call a special town meeting at which a resolution was passed, and sent to the two Vermont Senators, supporting and approving "without reservation the aims, purposes and hopes of the World Conference in San Francisco."

Washington Convention

Chevy Chase, Md.: — A unique service marked the opening of the convention of the diocese of Washington, held at the Cathedral the night before the business session which was held here at All Saints. The choirs of the diocesan churches augmented the cathedral choir in the singing of the hymns and furnished a striking segment in the long procession that wound its way through the cathedral aisles. An unique feature of the service was a litany especially prepared, arranged so that each department of the diocese, education, social relations, and Missions was taken in turn, representative in the petitions, of each department's special field of service. This was followed by the prayer for the diocese offered by the chairman of the standing committee. After the sermon by the bishop, the clerical and lay delegates standing before the altar in response to the charge by the bishop, repeated the following: "O God our Father, we stand in thy presence and ask thy help. Thou hast called us to a grave responsibility. Strengthen our hands and kindle our thoughts, that we may both perceive and know what things we ought to do. And also may have grace and power faithfully to fulfil the same. Amen."

This formed a marked feature of a very impressive service. The business of the convention the following morning was carried on with despatch and was completed in one day.

Christian Education

New York:—When the House of Bishops met last a resolution was passed calling for a thorough study of the department of Christian education, headed by the Rev. Daniel McGregor. Members of the division, with Bishop Dun as chairman, met here recently for a two day session to consider the matter, adding to their group a number of consultants who are experts in the field. It was agreed that every effort should be made to offer clergy and teachers guidance regarding the aims and content of Christian education and to put into their hands the best possible teaching aids. As a first step a syllabus is to be prepared which will attempt to state clearly the knowledge and experience which should be the personal possession of everyone after specific periods in their development. Emphasis was placed on the importance of carrying forward the work already begun of securing teaching aids for small church schools.

Committee in Charge

Philadelphia: — Bishop Oliver Hart is the chairman of a committee that will administer the affairs of the Philadelphia Divinity School until a successor is elected to fill the place left vacant by the resignation of the Rev. Allen Evans as dean. The executive secretary of the committee is the Rev. Vincent F. Pottle and other members are the Rev. James M. Collins and Dr. Thomas S. Gates. The school will open as usual in the fall. Dean Evans' resignation becomes effective in June.

Native Bishop

New York:—A fifth native born bishop for India was consecrated on May 6th when the Rt. Rev. Cherakarootu Korula Jacob became the bishop of Travancore and Cochin, succeeding Bishop Bernard C. Cornfield, resigned. The diocese has about 90,000 communicants, 126 churches and 52 native priests.

Seminary Commencement

New York: — Sixty-four students received degrees at the commencement of Union Seminary on May 16th. The highest degree awarded by the seminary, doctor of theology, went to Episcopalian William J. Wolf of Cambridge, Mass. The commencement marked the retirement from the presidency of the Rev. Henry Sloane Coffin.

Respond to Appeal

London (wireless to RNS):—Food supplies were dropped from planes in German-occupied western Holland following appeals by the Archbishop of Canterbury. He has recently received a letter from the synod of the Netherlands Reformed Church describing the plight of starving millions in the area.

Consecrate Church

West Palm Beach, Fla.: — Holy Trinity Church, built in 1923-24, was consecrated recently by Bishop Wing. The parish has had nearly a half-century of work and growth, culminating in the lifting of all debt on a property estimated to be worth $250,000. The Rev. Wiliam S. Turner is the rector.

Young Feople

Davenport, Iowa:—There were 23 parishes of the diocese of Iowa represented among the 250 young people who met on successive Sundays at St. Paul's, Des Moines, and Trinity Cathedral here. Regional organizations were set up, looking toward a diocesan organization to be formed at a young people's conference in July.

In a speech on the Church's reconstruction and advance fund at our recent diocesan convention, Mr. Robert Jordan, director of promotion for the National Council, made certain remarks implying that good Churchmen should give money to the fund to prevent certain areas of the world's surface from being communized instead of Christianized. A number of us feel that Mr. Jordan raised a false issue and it disturbs us greatly to learn that our official Church representatives are using political prejudice to raise money.

The antithesis to Christianity is not communism but paganism. The late Archbishop William Temple once said: "Communism is after all a Christian heresy; fascism is of the devil." We feel that the thing that should disturb the Church is not communism but paganism and would like to point out that the Church's real enemies are the ideologies of the enemies of the United Nations and not the government set-up of one of our allies.

Mr. Jordan's moral right to make such an appeal was weakened, rather than strengthened, by a remark that it was not the sort of thing that he could put in writing but that he felt free to say it in his speech.

A LIFE LONG EPISCOPALIAN
Of New York City

The editorial A Notable Consecration (WITNESS, April 26) was splendid. I had the honor of hearing Bishop Harris at St. John's Cathedral in New York. In the last paragraph you suggest a wish which I have long held that more consecrations could be help in New York, Boston, Washington and other metropolitan centers. The consecration of Bishop Harris would have been a great stride in democracy if it had been held during the San Francisco Conference, and held at the Washington Cathedral as Bishop Dun suggested.

As I know your sincerity in this racial matter I wish that you might urge a Negro Bishop for New York. There are many men who qualify: the Rev. Shelton H. Bishop, the Rev. John Johnson, the Rev. Randolph O. King, all of New York; the Rev. Dr. Plaskett of New Jersey; the Rev. Dr. Hughes of Massachusetts, to mention but a few. The Roman Church I believe has eight Negro bishops. It might be well for us to elect more Negro bishops to serve here in this country.

Rector at Greenwich, Connecticut

Evangelical and protestant Christians must feel deeply grateful to the Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Long Island for his observations and recommendations to the clergy of the diocese respecting Mr. Rockefeller's speech before the Protestant Council of the City of New York.

I had the privilege of listening to Mr. Rockefeller's address and, while deeply moved by the sincerity and earnestness of his appeal, I was not unmindful of the fact that he scarcely did justice to the historic content of Catholic Christianity and therefore perhaps revealed that he has not seen too clearly the grave difficulties confronting us who are eagerly desirous and concerned about Church unity.

Bishop DeWolfe is privileged to move at the next General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church that it withdraw from association with the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. But I dare to believe that if he does his motion will be defeated.

The Protestant Episcopal Church has not conferred absolute powers upon its bishops, but has clearly defined their prerogatives in its constitution and canons, and it is clear from a reading of its Ordinal that upon its presbyters is conferred the same responsibilities for defending the faith as the bishops.
