The first Hague Conference held in 1899 and the second one in 1907 were the most practical efforts up to that time to stop war. No real attempt had been made to create public opinion on a world-wide scale. Most people assumed with the easy optimism of that era that "God is in his heaven and all is right with the world." At the same time the policies of the great nations were leading to an inevitable conflict. It was during this period that Norman Angell wrote his book, "The Great Illusion" and the Nobel Peace Prize was established. Mr. Carnegie began at the same time to use his funds to prevent war. The Church Peace Union was established in 1914. The World Alliance was the result of the first peace conference of the Churches held in modern time.

The work of the American branch of the World Alliance is an integral part of the Church Peace Union's program. The two organizations are independent and operate under separate charters but have had a common office, with a unified secretariat at 70 Fifth Avenue, New York, for nearly thirty years. The two organizations have a network of some 900 committees covering the entire nation, and a specialized mailing list of additional workers. The World Alliance News Letter with a circulation of about 20,000 is edited and published jointly by the two organizations. The Alliance is an interfaith organization. In its membership are numbered representatives of all the churches and other religious organizations. Jews, Catholics and Protestants are working together for the development of world peace. The Alliance is not primarily interested in theological agreements or dogma; its only basis of agreement is that war is not only incompatible with the deepest tenets of religion, but that war itself is the greatest enemy of mankind. Unless we can devise some way to destroy war, war will destroy us all and all the things we hold dear.

The program of the World Alliance is frankly pragmatic, as will be seen by anyone who will take the trouble to read Dr. Charles S. Macfarland's very interesting and informative book, "Pioneers for Peace Through Religion," recently published by the Fleming H. Revell Company. The American branch of the World Alliance, together with the Church Peace Union, was instrumental in bringing together a meeting of Church leaders at a conference held at The Hague in October, 1919. Since that time there have been held about seventy-five additional national and international meetings of the world organization.

A record of the work of the World Alliance covers pretty much the history of international affairs for the last thirty years. The Alliance has based its work on the belief that there can be no peace between the nations except as there is developed an organization of the nations themselves. The Alliance supported the League of Nations, even before it became a reality. During the first world war the Alliance was instrumental in helping to create and make effective the League to Enforce Peace, out of which was developed the League of Nations itself. And in this support the Alliance never failed and never faltered. We did everything possible to help bring the United States into the League as a full-fledged member, and were bitterly disappointed when our country took a strong isolationist attitude and turned away from the best possibility for peace at that time. However, instead of sulking in its tents, the Alliance sought earnestly to bring our nation into the subsidiary organizations sponsored by the League. We campaigned for the World Court, for participation in the various commissions and committees; were represented in the International Federation of League of Nations Societies, and took part in deputations presenting matters of international importance to the League agencies. Our work was particularly effective in the field of human rights and minorities.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Then there emerged the movement in our own country for the outlawry of war. Dr. James T. Shotwell was instrumental in interesting Briand of France and his government in this movement. Briand came to the United States and as a result of the discussions, the Kellogg-Briand Pact for the Outlawry of War was written and signed by practically every nation in the world.

THE World Alliance has always worked for disarmament. When we see the trend toward excessive armaments and the disastrous effect on good relations between the nations, we wonder why intelligent statesmen do not put a stop to the whole system. On the other hand, when we see how the question of armaments has woven itself into the very fabric of national life and international contacts, we wonder how any statesman or group of statesmen can ever do anything worthwhile about controlling and preventing war. Nevertheless, we have supported every effort to lessen the heavy load. Disarmament is a necessary process for the establishment of peace. The disarmament conferences and agreements all failed because of a lack of trust and confidence among the nations themselves.

This attitude towards arms and armaments indicates one of the deeper convictions of the Alliance, i.e., that behind every international problem there are deep moral issues. The Churches and religious people in general are not particularly interested nor adroit in politics. They have not studied too thoroughly the ways to influence public opinion. Therefore the Alliance has undertaken to promote through study groups the use of educational material in churches, clubs, and other departments of the Churches. It has not undertaken to become a research organization in the technical sense of the word. Our feeling is that what we need is to make the facts already known accessible. We have enough knowledge today to create an effective world organization, and enough knowledge and "know-how" to establish permanent peace in the world. The problem is how can we create the will to peace. No one wants war, and yet like blind men on a rough path we stumble ahead toward the abyss of another war. How can the moral forces of the world be aroused and enough goodwill generated to overcome the difficulties — selfish and ideological — that are now making our way so hard?

During the war the World Alliance cooperated with a score of other organizations in a series of institutes, which were held in some thirty-five cities in every part of our country on the subject, "Win the War — Win the Peace." In every place where an institute was held there is now a cooperating committee, most of which are very effective. These institutes discussed the part being played by America and the other countries in preparing for the peace to come. When the Dumbarton Oaks Conference was held and its report published we felt a long step forward had been taken, for here we had the outline of a new world organization.

The World Alliance and the Church Peace Union were represented by unofficial advisers at the San Francisco Conference, and in association with the various committees helped create some of the institutions that might not have come into existence had it not been for the pressure of public opinion in our own country and from abroad. This was especially true in regard to the Social and Economic Council. The proposal was to make this Council a "committee" but after many private conferences and much public discussion, it was agreed that it should be a Council and put on the same level with the Security Council. As a part of its set-up is or will be the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization; the Commission on Human Rights, and a number of other important bodies in the framework of the United Nations.

The World Alliance is a service organization. Its purpose is to help in establishing the agencies that will make it easy for people to live together in peace and difficult for the nations to make war. We believe profoundly in the principles as enunciated in the Atlantic Charter and do not fail to realize the difficulties of their realization. The new methods of warfare in this atomic age raise new questions of state versus the individual, and this together with the clash of ideologies makes the high purpose of the Alliance one of overwhelming urgency. Statesmen, soldiers and generals are now calling upon religion to reinforce public opinion, so that the United Nations Organization may be made effective and that it be perfected as it works at its task, for this organization offers us all the best and ultimate hope of the world.

A meeting of the management committee of the World Alliance is to be held at Tring (Hertfordshire), England, July 8 to 12. There will be about twenty-five nations represented, and it will be proposed that the international body be fully committed to a program of inter-religious cooperation, and that as a cooperating group of religious minded men and women it takes its place in the councils of the new world Federation of United Nations Societies.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Bishop Manning Opposes Union In Convention Address

He Is Honored at Service of Thanksgiving
In Recognition of Twenty-fifth Anniversary

Edited by Sarah Dill

New York:—The way the daily newspapers of this city handled the convention address of Bishop Manning could be used as an argument why people who wish to be informed about the Church should read a Church magazine. Without exception the large circulation metropolitan dailies gave large space to his address at the synod house on May 14 so as to give the impression that the Bishop of New York gave an impassioned plea for Church union. What he actually did, of course, was to hit at the proposal now before the Church for union with the Presbyterians by declaring that "if the Episcopal Church were to abandon or compromise its Catholic belief as to the Church and the apostolic ministry in order to unite with one amongst the Protestant Churches it would not be a step toward Christian reunion but a step directly away from it." One of the morning papers headlined this as "Bishop Manning Renews Plea for a Single Christian Church."

Bishop Manning paid a glowing tribute to Bishop Charles K. Gilbert, suffragan, by offering a "tribute of deep personal affection which has strengthened and deepened as the years have passed, and to express to him my appreciation, and yours, of all that his life and work have meant to the diocese and to all of us during the whole fifteen years of his service as suffragan bishop of this diocese. No words could sufficiently express what Bishop Gilbert's work and service have meant to the Church, to the diocese, and to me." The tribute brought forth vigorous applause.

A special service of thanksgiving for the ministry of Bishop Manning, attended by most of the 800 delegates as well as about 2,000 visitors, closed the one-day convention. The occasion marked the 25th anniversary of his consecration as bishop, his 55th year in the priesthood, and his 80th birthday which was on May 12th.

Deputies to General Convention were elected by proportional representation (the Hare ballot whereby each voter lists names in the order of his preference). The result, announced the day after the convention due to the time it takes to count the ballots, were: clergy: Frederic Fleming, Roelif H. Brooks, Horace W. B. Donegan, Paull Sargent. Laymen: Admiral Reginald Belknap, Judge Augustus Hand, Clifford Morehouse, Clarence G. Michalis. Alternates: clergy: J. H. Randolph Ray, Francis J. H. Coffin, Harry Price, Louis W. Pitt. Laymen: Charles Burlingham, Charles A. Houston, Edward K. Warren, James Comley.

Newark YCS

Newark:—The Youth Consultation Service of the diocese of Newark has moved to larger quarters at 237 Broadway, this city, due to the increased number of requests for guidance and help from boys and girls requiring an expansion of staff and program. Miss Daphne Hughes is the executive secretary.

Labor-Management

Pittsburgh, Pa.:—Two of the top men in labor-management were the headliners at an institute on community problems at the University of Pittsburgh. They were David S. McDonald, secretary of the CIO steelworkers' union, and Lester Perry, president of Carnegie-Illinois Steel Co. Bishop Austin Pardue, in presiding, emphasized the importance of industrial relations and pointed out many of the questions which men and women hope may be satisfactorily answered to the benefit of the public generally.

Vermont Convention

Burlington, Vt.:—The convention of Vermont, meeting here May 7-8, passed a resolution favoring a World Government under Law. It was sent to various officials, including U. S. delegates to the Assembly and the Security Council of the United Nations. Another resolution, moved by the Rev. Charles Martin, rector of St. Paul's here, was passed urging parishes and Church people to do all in their power to save food and for the government to start compulsory rationing.

One of the highlights was a series of addresses on missionary work being done in the diocese.

General Convention deputies: clergy: Charles S. Martin, Harvey D. Butterfield, Francis R. Nitchie, Arthur R. E. Green. Laymen: E. A. C. Smith, Frederick Thayer, F. G. Austin, Oscar Rixford.

Hit by Auto

New York:—The rector of the Church of the Transfiguration, the Rev. J. H. Randolph Ray, was hit by an automobile last week and is now in a New York hospital. It is the second time he has been in such an accident.

Civil Rights Congress

Detroit:—Representatives of various Church, labor and civic organizations met here over the weekend of April 27th to discuss the threat to civil rights in the United States. Steps were taken to set up a permanent organization. The Church League for Industrial Democracy was represented by the Rev. William B. Spofford Jr. of Boston who is to become national executive secretary of the CLID the first of June.

Harry F. Ward, former professor at Union Seminary, and President Benjamin Mays of Morehouse College, Atlanta, Ga., are the honorary co-chairmen of the newly organized Congress. Dr. May is a vice-president of the Federal Council of Churches. Abolition of the Wood-Rankin Un-American Activities Committee; establishment of a permanent FEPC and the defeat of the Case bill were set as three of the immediate objectives. The Congress will absorb such organizations as the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties and the International Labor Defense, while the Detroit Civil Rights Federation and the Chicago Civil Liberties Committee will affiliate. Plans to establish similar community organizations in Los Angeles, Seattle, and several states is now underway. Headquarters is at 205 East 42nd Street, New York City, with Milton Kaufman as executive director.

Ecumenical Service

Chicago (RNS):—The largest ecumenical service ever to be held in the Chicago area served as the opening here of the two-day conference of the midwest branch of the American division of the World Council of Churches.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Held at the Rockefeller Memorial Chapel of the University of Chicago the service was attended by representatives of virtually all communions, except the Roman Catholic. More than 250 clergymen participated in the opening processional which was witnessed by a congregation of about 1,000 people.

The elaborate processional presented a colorful spectacle, with the brilliant robes of Orthodox and Episcopal bishops dotting the long lines of black ministerial robes of the Protestant clergy, many of whom wore their academic hoods of multicolored velvet.

Among bishops who participated in the service were: the Most Rev. Leonty, Russian Orthodox archbishop of Chicago; the Rt. Rev. Edwin J. Randall, suffragan bishop of the Episcopal diocese of Chicago; Eshai Mar Shimun, XXIII, of Chicago, patriarch of the Church of the East and the Assyrians; and Bishop J. Ralph Magee, resident Methodist bishop of Chicago.

The city's Greek Orthodox bishop was represented by the Rev. Gregory Carfopoulos.

Preceding the main address, which was given by Charles Taft, Episcopal layman of Cincinnati and member of the provisional committee of the World Council, the Lord's Prayer was recited in eight languages by eight different clergymen while the congregation repeated the prayer in English.

Hit Discrimination

Newark, N. J.:—The convention of the diocese of Newark, meeting May 7-8, refused to include an item in the diocesan budget for Bonnie Brae Farm, an institution of the diocese, until such time as the directors satisfy the diocesan authorities that there is no racial discrimination there.

Bishop Washburn in his address stated that General Convention should take positive action on the matter of union with the Presbyterian Church. Bishop Ludlow in his address urged greater democracy in the affairs of the diocese and stressed that women should have a hand in policy making.

General Convention deputies: clergy, Arthur Lichtenberger, Lane W. Barton, Charles L. Gomph, W. O. Leslie Jr. Laymen, Austin Murray, Spencer Miller Jr., Henry Stetson, Colonel Lydecker.

Pleads for Union

Albany, N. Y.:—Bishop Oldham, addressing the convention of the diocese of Albany, meeting here at the cathedral, May 7-8, spoke at length of the desired reunion of the divided Church. "We cannot with any sincerity pray for unity and turn our backs upon any practical plan. We must be prepared to make some venture to restore to unity the present broken body of Christ."

THE undersigned, one time Secretaries for College Work of the National Council, have formed a committee to encourage the preparation, reprinting and distribution of literature, from books to tracts, through the Canterbury Clubs in the colleges, and in the Church at large.

We invite correspondence, as to matter of any length that should be printed or reprinted, and as to material needed. We also would welcome offers of assistance from those interested in helping.

CANTERBURY COMMITTEE
821 16th St., N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.

1927-1930	C. Leslie Glenn, Rector of St. John's Church, Washington
1930-1933	W. Brooke Stabler, Headmaster of Cranbrook School, Bloomfield Hills, Michigan
1933-1934	Thomas H. Wright, Bishop of East Carolina
1934-1939	Theodore O. Wedel, Warden of the College of Preachers, Washington, D. C.
1939-1945	Alden D. Kelley, Dean of Seabury-Western Seminary, Evanston, Ill.
1946-	Thomas V. Barrett, Secretary for College Work of the National Council

Two Books for the Church School Library

Following Christ

Fifty-two Studies for Home and School

By SIBYL HARTON

In this book fifteen virtures are considered as they are revealed in the fullness of their perfection by Jesus Christ, then as each is exemplified in the life of a saint, and finally as they must be reproduced in ourselves as Christians. For group study or for individual reading as a sequel to juvenile lessons. $2.20

Members of Christ

By SPENCER H. ELLIOTT

Older students and teachers will find in this book a lucid and simple explanation of the faith of an Episcopalian. Contents: At the Font, What to Believe, Learning to Pray, What to Pray For, Right and Wrong, How to Repent, Sacramental Power, The Ideal of the Church.

The book is recommended in the Foreword by Derwyn T. Owen, Primate of All Canada, who writes, "It is a most readable work, full of stories illustrating religious truth, easy to read, and replete with instructions." $1.40

Morehouse-Gorham Co.
14 E. 41st St. New York 17

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

General Convention deputies: clergy: Allen W. Brown, C. V. Kling, Howard S. Kennedy, H. P. Kaulfuss. Laymen: Russell Carter, Chester F. Millhouse, Walter A. Farmer, Harold G. Green.

The diocesan Auxiliary met at the same time with an address by the Rev. Clifford Nobes of the Philippines a highlight of the meeting.

CPH Meeting

New York: — Bishop Binsted of the Philippines addressed the spring meeting of the Church Periodical Club of the diocese of New York, meeting at St. James'. The club has sent many medical books to the hospital in Manila and those at the meeting were therefore particularly interested in the account of the Church work there. Mrs. Edwin Gibbs, director of the club, presided.

Protest Roman Forms

London (wireless to RNS):—The National Union of Protestants, claiming a membership of 25,000, has started a campaign against "a Roman Catholic form of worship" in certain Anglican churches. A group of members interrupted a mass at St. Stephen's, Kensington, by shouting "We are here to protest against the sacrifice of the mass in this parish church of the established Church of England. According to article 31 it is illegal and we ask for its discontinuance." The police arrived to find the warden ejecting a number of struggling men and women. Members of the organization indicated their intention of making similar protests at other churches.

Deny Charges

London (wireless to RNS):— Charges made by Cardinal Griffin of England that "many Poles are in concentration camps" were denied by the Polish embassy. A spokesman declared that the Cardinal's charges were based on "entirely erroneous and misleading information. There are only camps for German criminals and racketeers in Poland. Concentration camps for Poles arrested on political groundes exist only in the morbid imagination of the press, influenced by London Poles." The spokesman added that the Roman Church, as well as other denominations, "enjoy full freedom in Poland." (See Talking it Over this week.)

Hit Bomb Test

Detroit:—The directors of the local council of churches last week directed the Rev. W. B. Sperry, secretary, to send a message in their name to President Truman urging that the proposed atomic bomb test at Bikini Atoll be abandoned. "Despite a sincere purpose," the message stated, "there is danger that it would be misunderstood or misinterpreted by other peoples. There is also amazement that our officials could look with complacency on the destruction of materials and live stock so soon after the world has emerged from the ravages of war. Additionally, there is revulsion at the waste of public money at a time when all of our resources should be turned to the rehabilitating of distressed people."

Mr. Sperry, a WITNESS editor, in sending us a copy of the letter suggests that other Church people send similar messages to the president.

Church and Labor

Detroit: — Plans were made last week for a workshop wherein representatives of labor and religion may learn better to understand each other. The workshop, planned at a dinner at the cathedral house, will be held monthly commencing in the fall, and will include a study of both church history and labor history; and a study of present day activities presented by clergymen who

THE CHURCH PENSION FUND

and its subsidiaries

administered for the benefit of the Church

THE CHURCH HYMNAL CORPORATION

Publishers of The Hymnal; Book of Common Prayer; A Prayer Book for Soldiers and Sailors; Book of Offices for Certain Occasions; Stowe's Clerical Directory.

THE CHURCH LIFE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost insurance and annuity contracts available to the clergy, lay officials and active lay workers of the Church, either voluntary or paid, and their immediate families.

THE CHURCH PROPERTIES FIRE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost fire and windstorm insurance on property owned by or closely affiliated with the Church, and on the residences and personal property of the clergy.

Further information available by addressing any of the above at

20 Exchange Place New York

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

will be accredited as reporters to labor union meetings, and labor leaders who will do likewise at diocesan conventions, meetings, etc. There will also be studies of the moral bases for industrial teamwork.

There were 80 representatives of Church and labor at the dinner which was sponsored by the diocesan department of social relations, the Rev. J. G. Widdifield, chairman, and the local Council of Churches, with the Rev. W. B. Sperry, a WITNESS editor who is director of social relations for the Council, the chairman. Taking part in the discussion were the Rev. Walton E. Cole, Congregationalist; the Rev. Frederick H. Olert, Presbyterian; the Rev. Paul Musselman, Episcopalian; Victor Reuther, brother of the president of the United Auto Workers, CIO, and educational director of the union; Morton Zimmerman, assistant to the president of the local federation of labor, and Prof. Alfred M. Lee of Wayne University. The proposal for the workshop was offered by Episcopalian Paul Musselman.

General Seminary

New York:—Commencement at the General Seminary was held May 20-22, with Bishop Conrad Gesner, coadjutor of South Dakota, preaching the baccalaureate sermon. The alumni essay was by the Rev. Morton C. Stone and the commencement address was by Prof. Gordon W. Allport of Harvard.

Commencement Speaker

Berkeley, Calif.: — Bishop A. W. Noel Porter of Sacramento is to be the speaker at the commencement of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific on June 6. The program begins with an alumni luncheon and meeting, with a dinner before the commencement exercises.

Union Approved

Berkeley, Calif.:—Following papers on unity and the ecumenical movement by Bishop Parsons and Bishop Sanford, the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship of the province of the Pacific, meeting here at St. Mark's, unanimously approved a resolution stating that "special responsibility rests upon this Church which initiated the negotiations." It asked that General Convention take action which would be positive and "not merely a formal reaffirmation of the original declaration of purpose approved nine years ago."

General approval was also given to the report of the commission on marriage, after those present had heard papers by Dean Henry Shires of the Divinity School and Canon Lovgren of Grace Cathedral, San Francisco. Special emphasis was made of the need for more and better pastoral counselling in preparation for marriage and the relation of the sexes.

The Rev. Francis P. Foote, rector at Burlingame, Calif., was chairman of the committee arranging the conference.

SUMMER SERVICES

New York City
CHURCH OF THE HOLY TRINITY
316 East 88th Street
The Rev. James A. Paul, Vicar
Sunday: H. C. 8 a.m. Morning Service, 11 a.m. Thursday, 11 a.m.

CHURCH OF ST. MARY THE VIRGIN
46th Street, east of Times Square
The Rev. Grieg Taber, Rector
Sunday Masses: 7, 9, 11 (High).
Evening Prayer and Benediction, 8.

ST. PAUL'S CHAPEL
Columbia University
The Rev. Stephen F. Bayne Jr., Chaplain
Daily (except Saturday): 8 a.m.
Sunday: Morning Prayer and Sermon, 11. H. C. 9 a.m. and 12:30 noon (no services June 3 to July 6).

Millbrook, New York
GRACE CHURCH
The Rev. H. Ross Greer, Rector
Services 8:30 and 11 every Sunday.
Located on Route forty-four.

Denver, Colorado
ST. JOHN'S CATHEDRAL
The Very Rev. Paul Roberts, Dean
The Rev. Harry Watts
Sunday: 7:30, 8:30, 9:30, 11, 4:30.
Wednesday, 7:15. Thurs. and Holy Days, 10:30.

ST. MARK'S CHURCH
The Rev. Walter Williams, Rector
Sunday: 7, 8, 9:30 and 11.
Wednesday, 11 a.m. Thurs. and Holy Days, 7 a.m.

Ann Arbor, Michigan
ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH
University of Michigan
The Rev. Henry Lewis, Rector
Sunday: H. C. 8 a.m. Morning Prayer, 11 a.m.
Canterbury Club (students and servicemen) 6 p.m.
Wednesday: H. C. 7:15 a.m.

St. Louis, Missouri
CHURCH OF ST. MICHAEL & ST. GEORGE
Washington University
The Rev. J. Francis Sant, Rector
The Rev. C. George Widdifield, Minister of Education
Sunday: 7:30 and 11 a.m.
Canterbury Club, 5:30 twice monthly.

Pittsburgh
CALVARY CHURCH
Shady and Walnut Aves.
The Rev. Lauriston L. Scaife, Rector
The Rev. Philip M. Brown
The Rev. Francis M. Osborne
Sunday: 8, 9:30, 11 a.m.; 8 p.m.
H. C. Friday and Holy Days, 10 a.m.

Palo Alto, California
ALL SAINTS' CHURCH
Stanford University
The Rev. Oscar F. Green, Rector
Services: 8 and 11.
Union Service: 7:45 p.m.

Cleveland
CHURCH OF THE INCARNATION
East 105th and Marlowe
The Rev. Robert B. Campbell, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 a.m.

Utica, New York
GRACE CHURCH
Genesee and Elizabeth Sts.
The Rev. Harold E. Sawyer, Rector
Sunday: H. C. 8. Morning Prayer and H. C. 11. Evening Prayer, 4:30.
Weekday: Tues. and Thurs. H. C. 10.
Wed. 12:30. Friday, H. C. 7:30.

Chester, Penna.
ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
Broad and Madison Sts.
The Rev. Stanley V. Wilcox, Rector
Service: Sunday: 8 and 10:30 a.m.
Wednesday at 10 a.m.

Ridgewood, New Jersey
CHRIST CHURCH
The Rev. A. J. Miller, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 a.m.
Friday and Holy Days: 9:30 a.m.

Tulsa, Oklahoma
TRINITY CHURCH
The Rev. E. H. Eckel Jr., Rector
Sunday: 7 and 8; Church School, 9:30 (Except August); Morning Service, 11 a.m.
H. C. Friday and Holy Days, 10:30.

Santa Monica, California
ST. AUGUSTINE - BY - THE - SEA
ST. AMBROSE CHAPEL
The Rev. W. N. Pierson
The Rev. D. J. Gallagher
The Rev. D. O. Platt
Sunday: 7:45, 9:30 and 11 a.m.; 7:30 a.m.
Daily 9:30 a.m. Thurs. 7:45.

Elkton, Maryland
TRINITY CHURCH
The Rev. J. Warren Albinson, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 9:30 a.m.
Wed. Litany, 8 p.m. Fri. and Holy Days, H. C. at 10 a.m.

Evanston, Illinois
ST. LUKE'S CHURCH
Lee and Hinman Streets
The Rev. Edward Thomas Taggard
The Rev. Joseph Barnes Williams
The Rev. Darwin Kieby, Jr.
Sunday: H. C. 7:30, 9 and 11.
Daily: H. C. 7:30 a.m. except Wed. at 7 and 11 a.m. Confessions Sat. 4:30-5:30 and 7:30-8 p.m.

Providence, Rhode Island
GRACE CHURCH
Mathewson and Westminster Sts.
The Rev. Clarence H. Horner, Rector
Sunday: H. C. 8 a.m.; Church School, 9:30 and 11 a.m. Morning Prayer and Sermon (H. C. first Sunday), 11 a.m.; Y.P.F., 5:30 p.m. Evening Prayer and Sermon, 7:30 p.m. Thurs. H. C. 11 a.m. Daily Noonday Prayers, 12 noon.

San Diego, California
ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
8th Avenue at C Street
The Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, Rector
The Rev. Harold B. Robinson
Sunday: 7:30, 11 a.m.; 7:30 p.m.
Fri. and Holy Days, 10 a.m.

Omaha, Nebraska
ALL SAINTS' CHURCH
The Rev. Fred W. Clayton, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 a.m. H. C. first Sunday at 11. Weekday, H. C. and Intercessions Wed. at 10 a.m.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SCHOOLS OF THE CHURCH

St. Andrew's School

An all-year boarding school for boys

West Barrington, Rhode Island

Established in 1893

Rev. Irving Andrew Evans, Rector

Wooster School

Danbury, Conn.

Small School. Near New York. Reasonable tuition. Accredited. Individual attention. Cardinal principles are Religion, Intellectual Excellence, Simplicity, Hard Work.

Write Rev. JOHN VERDERY
Ridgebury Road, Danbury, Conn.

CRANBROOK

Preparatory school for boys in grades 7 through 12. Post-graduate course. Beautiful, modern buildings. Single rooms in fire-resisting dormitories for all resident students. Small classes. Strong faculty. Graduates in leading colleges. Exceptional opportunities in arts, crafts, sciences, music, competitive scholarships. Broad program of athletics. Near Detroit. Over night by train from New York, six hours from Chicago. Catalog.

Rev. W. Brooke Stabler, Cranbrook School, Box W, Bloomfield Hills, Michigan

St. Paul's Polytechnic Institute

Lawrenceville, Virginia

St. Paul's offers Courses on the four year College level in the following fields—Industrial Education, Agriculture, Business Administration, Home Economics and Teacher Training.

J. ALVIN RUSSELL, A.M., D.D., President

THE NORTHWESTERN MILITARY AND NAVAL ACADEMY

Lake Geneva, Wisconsin

A distinctive preparatory school for boys 13 to 18, grades 9 through 12. Fireproof buildings and 90 acre campus, beautifully situated along lake shore. Excellent academic and military training together with a full complement of athletic activities. For information write to: The Rev. James Howard Jacobson, Superintendent and Rector.

"At the Nation's Shrine"

VALLEY FORGE Military Academy

Fully accredited college preparatory and Junior College for young gentlemen 12 to 20. Highest scholastic standards. 16 modern fireproof buildings. All sports. Motorized Field Artillery, Cavalry, Infantry, R.O.T.C. Band. For Catalog address:

Box W, Wayne, Pa.

MERCERSBURG

A distinguished preparatory school beautifully located in the mountains of Southern Pennsylvania. Modern equipment. Small classes; 10,000 Alumni. Close personal supervision of each boy. 85 miles from Baltimore and Washington on Greyhound route. Beautiful Chapel with famous Carillon. Junior School. Summer Session.

Charles S. Tippetts, Ph.D., Head Master
Box W, Mercersburg, Pa.

ST. AGNES SCHOOL

An Episcopal Country Day and Boarding School for Girls

Excellent College Preparatory record. Special courses arranged for girls not contemplating college. Day pupils range from Kindergarten to College Entrance. Boarders from Grade 8 to College Entrance.

MISS BLANCHE PITTMAN, Principal
Albany New York

LENOX SCHOOL

A Church School in the Berkshire Hills for boys 12-18 emphasizing Christian ideals and character through simplicity of plant and equipment, moderate tuition, the cooperative self-help system, and informal, personal relationships among boys and faculty.

Rev. Robert L. Curry, Headmaster
Lenox Massachusetts

THE CHOATE SCHOOL

Wallingford, Connecticut

A catalogue of the School will be sent upon request—with addresses of parents who know the School intimately through their sons.

The School tries to make its charges in the way great surgeons and doctors charge.

ST. MARY'S HALL

San Antonio, Texas

A residence and day school for girls. . . . Preparing for the leading colleges. Fully accredited curriculum. . . . Training in leadership and Christian character. Emphasizing outdoor sports, throughout the year. 4 acre campus—modern buildings—swimming pool.

Katharine Lee, A.M., Head Mistress
117 East French Place

The Hannah More Academy

Est. 1832. Episcopal school for girls, 10 to 19 years, accredited to leading colleges. Pleasant location in the country. College Preparatory and General Courses, Music, Art. All athletics and riding carefully supervised. Modern Equipment. Moderate rates because school not run for profit.

Janet Ward, B.S., M.A. Columbia University
Headmistress
Reisterstown, Md.

St. Mary's School

Sewanee, Tennessee

College Preparatory, General Courses
Junior Department

Dramatics - Music - Riding
Address: The Sister Superior C.S.M.

National Cathedral School

Resident and day school for girls. Located on 58 acres of the Cathedral Close. College preparatory and general courses. Strong emphasis on the Arts.

MABEL B. TURNER, Principal
Washington 16, D. C.

St. Paul's School for Boys

Mt. Washington, Baltimore, Md.

A Boarding and Day School for Boys
Established 1849

Boarding department—Grades 6 to 12
Day department—Grades 3 to 12

S. Atherton Middleton, Headmaster
Rev. Harry Lee Doll, rector of St. Paul's, Baltimore, chaplain and president of trustees.

ST. BERNARD'S SCHOOL

Gladstone, New Jersey

A Church Boarding School for Boys
Beautifully situated in the Somerset Hills of northern New Jersey.
Grades 7 through 12
Founded 1900 — Enrollment 78
Tuition, Board and Lodging $750

Address The Rev. Robert L. Clayton

BRECK SCHOOL FOR BOYS

Day and Boarding, Grades 1 thru 12

Preparation for college and that experience we call Life under highly trained men. Athletics of all kinds, including horseback riding.

Chester H. Desrochers, Headmaster
2477 Como Avenue, W. St. Paul 8, Minn.

SAINT MARY'S HALL

BURLINGTON, NEW JERSEY

Boarding and Day School for Girls.
Strong Elementary Department
College Preparatory, and General Courses.
Music - Art - Dramatics - Sports
Careful attention to individual growth and progress.

FLORENCE LUKENS NEWBOLD, Headmistress

St. Faith's School

Chartered by the Board of Regents
Approved by Synod of New York and New Jersey

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.

The Rev. Leonard W. Steele, B.A., B.D.
Rector and Principal

HOWE MILITARY SCHOOL

Training young Americans for leadership. R.O.T.C. Accredited college preparatory, business courses. Junior School. Small classes. Every boy participates in sports. Balanced program. Episcopal. Established 1884. Summer Camp, boys grammar school age. Catalogue:

COL. B. B. BOUTON
13 Academy Place, Howe, Indiana

ST. AUGUSTINE'S COLLEGE

Raleigh, North Carolina

Accredited Class A Church College for Negro Youth. Co-educational. B.A. and B.S. Degrees. Teacher Training; Religious Education; Commerce; Music; Physical Education. Address: President.

Legal title for bequests: Trustees of St. Augustine's College, Raleigh, So. Carolina.

SAINT MARY'S HALL

Faribault, Minnesota

81st Year

Bishop Whipple's famous church boarding school for girls, high school only. Thorough college preparation, comprehensive general courses. Beautiful buildings. Healthful climate.

Margaret Robertson, M.A., Headmistress

SEWANEE MILITARY ACADEMY

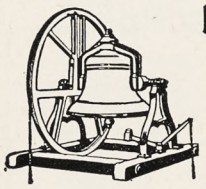
Thorough prep. for college. Summer session. Small classes—every boy instructed how to study. Private mountain domain of 10,000 acres in summer resort area. Endowed: moderate rates. 79th year. Catalogue.

Superintendent Box W, Sewanee, Tenn.

Voorhees N. and I. School

Junior College Denmark, S. C. High School

Co-educational. Accredited by State Dept. of Education of S. C. and the Southern Association of Secondary Schools and Colleges. Under the two Dioceses of S. C. and The American Church Institute for Negroes. Expenses reasonable. Limited scholarship aid for worthy students. Apply:



J. E. BLANTON, Principal.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Write us for
Organ Information
AUSTIN ORGANS, Inc.
Hartford, Conn.

Memorial Windows
In accordance with the best traditions of the craft. Notable installations in forty states and five foreign countries.
Illustrated material on request
The D'Ascenzo Studios
founded 1896
1604 Summer Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

ALTAR BREADS ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED
SAINT MARY'S CONVENT
KENOSHA • WISCONSIN

MENEELY BELL CO.
22 RIVER ST., TROY, N. Y.
BELLS

R. GEISSLER, INC.
71-79 W. 45th St., New York 19, N. Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS
EST. 1877

ERNEST W. LAKEMAN
Designer and Worker in
STAINED GLASS
2 CRESCENT PLACE
YONKERS, NEW YORK

Need a LAXATIVE?
Black-Draught is,
1-Usually prompt
2-Usually thorough
3-Always economical

25 to 40 doses only 25¢
Get BLACK-DRAUGHT
CAUTION: USE ONLY AS DIRECTED

St. Paul's Institute

Lawrenceville, Va.:—The 30th anniversary of the rectorship of the Rev. J. Alvin Russell will be observed at the commencement of St. Paul's Polytechnic Institute which is being observed from May 24 through Tuesday the 28th. On the program are Dr. A. G. Richardson, assistant state supervisor of Negro education; the Rev. Edgar C. Young, professor at the Bishop Payne Divinity School; the Rev. Churchill J. Gibson of Richmond; Dr. Dabney S. Lancaster, state superintendent of public instruction.

Service of Witness

Toronto, Canada: — A service of witness was held here on April 28 at the Maple Leaf Gardens at which six Protestant denominations, working in a new harmony under the Canadian Council of Churches, reaffirmed their common faith. About 16,000 people attended and there were a number of overflow congregations. The service was conducted by Archbishop Owen, with the address given by Prof. E. J. McCracken of McMaster University, Hamilton, who is soon to leave Canada to become the successor to the Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick at the Riverside Church in New York. The Toronto symphony orchestra and a choir of 1,500 voices led the musical part of the service. Dr. McCracken in his address stressed the richness and variety, but the basic underlying unity, of the denominations represented at the meeting, and warned the large congregation of the challenge the irreligion of today threw up to them.

HOUSE MANAGER
Churchwoman, 30-55, for Church residence for young women in large Eastern city. Room and board plus salary. Reply Box T, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N.Y.

ASSISTANT WANTED
Priest for curacy in active Connecticut Parish. Moderate churchmanship, leadership in field of Religious Education and Young People's activity. Salary $1800 per year, board and room provided in parochial institution. Send personal data and recommendation to THE WITNESS, Box M. C., 135 Liberty St., New York 6, N. Y.

WANTED
Director and Ass't Director for Church Orphanage in Eastern Seaboard city. Salaries: $1,800 and $1,500 respectively, plus room and board. 50 children. Must be religious, trained in social service, and, of course, fond of children. Write, stating qualifications, to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty St., New York 6.

A YOUNG PRIEST
with a position in New York seeks living quarters for himself, wife and baby in or near New York. Will take early services and work in the parish evenings without pay in return for small apartment. Write: Box B. THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6.

WILL SUPPLY
Priest is available for services in or near New York City, June 8, 15, 22 and the five Sundays in August. Available for Sunday duty only. Box S, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6.

Everything for the Episcopal Church
but vestments
A broad statement but we'd like to prove it.
Ammidon and Company
Horace L. Varian
Horace L. Varian, Jr.
31 South Frederick Street
Baltimore 2, Maryland

PURE IRISH LINENS NOW IN STOCK
for all Church needs, supplies constantly arriving, good qualities, also fine cottons. Samples free.
Mary Fawcett Company
Plainfield, N. J. Box 146

CATHEDRAL STUDIOS
Washington & London, England. Linens and materials by the yard, surplices, albs, Altar Linens, stoles, burses & veils. Materials by the yard. See my NEW BOOK "CHURCH EMBROIDERY" & CHURCH VESTMENTS a complete instruction. 128 pages, 95 illus. Price $5.67. And my HANDBOOK for ALTAR GUILDS, price 50c. Miss L. V. Mackrille, 11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington 15, D.C. 30 minutes from U. S. Treasury. Tel. Wisconsin 2752.

SURPLICES — STOLES
VESTMENTS
CHURCH HANGINGS
ALTAR LINENS
CASSOCKS
CLERICAL SUITS — CLOAKS
RABATS—RABAT VESTS—COLLARS—SHIRTS
Choir Vestments in All Styles
Inquiries Invited
C. M. ALMY & SON, INC.
562 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.

CAPS and GOWNS
For Choirs, Choral Groups, Graduation. Fine materials, beautiful work, pleasingly low prices. State your needs. Catalog and samples on request.
DeMoulin Bros. & Co., 1188 S. 4th St., Greenville, Illinois.

The Payne-Spiers Studios Inc.
Studios at Paterson, New Jersey
Carved Wood
Chancel Renovations Church Furnishings
Murals . Memorials Tablets
Stained Glass
·· Inquiries Solicited ··

HEADQUARTERS

for CHOIR GOWNS
PULPIT ROBES
Vestments • Hangings • Stoles
Embroideries, Etc.
NEW CATALOG on Request
NATIONAL CHURCH GOODS SUPPLY CO.
Division of
NATIONAL ACADEMIC CAP & GOWN CO.
821-23 ARCH ST. PHILADELPHIA 7, PA.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

MORTON O. NACE
Layman of Tampa, Florida

I have read with a great deal of interest the letter from Spencer Miller regarding pensions for the lay employees of the Church. As a full-time lay employee of the Church for the past twenty years this situation has been of great importance to me.

There are, apparently, far too many complications arising from any regular system such as is enjoyed by the clergy for the lay employees. It is most regrettable and perhaps some day this injustice can be corrected.

In the meantime a solution is offered that St. Andrew's Church in Tampa has carried out to the satisfaction of the Church and myself. This is a retirement policy that the Church pays the premium on and which protects myself and my family. The benefits actually are far greater than those from the Church Pension Fund or the social security act. I would urge parishes, dioceses and Church institutions to protect their employees in a like manner.

* * *

LOUIS WALLIS
Layman of Long Island

I have read The Cross which appeared in your Easter number several times on several different days. It's great. But there are people who will say that the author is a heretic because he compares the original figure on the Cross with sufferers in Spain, Detroit, etc. But I believe in his daring assimilation.

* * *

ROBERT H. MILLER
Rector at Collinsville, Illinois

Many of the articles on unity in THE WITNESS make me wonder if the Church should not pray to God—that in his mercy we be given a second Bishop Gailor? His profound scholarship, princely appearance, and his great heart and voice were always ready to speak for Christ and his Church—"Lord hear our prayer." I quote a few of his words on ths subject: have our present leaders forgotten this great bishop?

"The whole problem of unity with Protestant denominations hinges, it seems to me, upon the Christian meaning of ministerial priesthood. . . . This jealousy for the continuity of authority in the ministry springs from the conviction of the tremendous significance of the holy eucharist and the reverence due to it. And this conception of the eucharist grows out of the fundamental truth of the Christian religion, viz: (Acts XXV: 19), that the living Christ is a real objective and continuing presence with his people.

"The eucharist has a sacrificial significance, because it is the Divinely appointed pledge and symbol of our identification with and our inclusion in, the eternal sacrifice of the Son of God; and these who are authorized to administer it (Leitourgein, Acts XIII:2, and II Cor. IX:13) are of necessity a real priesthood. This affects our understanding of baptism and its complement the laying on of hands.

"Now this is no modern notion or interpretation of our religion but is coterminous with historic Christianity,—the common, consistant faith of Christians from the very beginning, implied in St. Paul's letters to the Corinthians, and handed on to us without a break from apostolic times. I believe that the Episcopal Church is committed to this faith; and therefore she insists upon the continuity of the ministry through the historic episcopate. My point is, that the Quadrilateral is a constructive position—the only constructive plan anybody has proposed,—and we can stick to it, and try to live up to it."

How the Church needs that great voice and mind today.

ST. JOHN'S MILITARY SCHOOL
Salina, Kansas

Since 1887 St. John's has been perpetuating the cultural traditions of the Church by stressing sound scholarship in Christian atmosphere.

Grades 6-12. Fully accredited. Bar I.L. Summer School and Camp in Colorado Rockies. Boys 8-15. Splendid equipment. 10,000 acres.

The Rev. R. L. Clem, Rector

St. Margaret's House
School for Christian Service and Deaconess Training School of the Pacific
A graduate school preparing women for Church positions in the fields of religious education, social service, and evangelistic work. Opportunity to work for advanced degrees. Special training for work in Orient.
ADDRESS THE DEAN
1820 Scenic Ave. Berkeley 4, California

CATHEDRAL CHOIR SCHOOL
NEW YORK
A Boarding and Day School for Boys
Established 1849
A BOARDING SCHOOL for the forty boys of the Choir of the Cathedral of Saint John the Divine. The boys receive careful musical training and sing daily at the service in the Cathedral. The classes in the School are small with the result that boys have individual attention, and very high standards are maintained. The School has its own building and playgrounds in the close. Fee—$350.00 per annum. Boys admitted 9 to 11. Voice test and scholastic examination. For Catalogue and Information address:
The CANON PRECENTOR, Cathedral Choir School, Cathedral Heights, New York City

ROWLAND HALL
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
Boarding and Day pupils. Accredited. Preschool, Lower school, College Preparatory and General courses. Graduates in many eastern and western colleges. All branches of music, dancing, art, drama. Indoor pool, tennis courts, riding, weekends of winter sports. Pleasant home life. Environment of geographical and historical interest. Altitude 4500. Boarding $1,000, Day $120-$350.
The Right Rev. Arthur W. Moulton, S.T.D., Rector

SCHOOLS

The Hospital of Saint Barnabas and the University of Newark offer a full course in NURSING
to qualified High School graduates. Scholarships available. Classes enter in February and September
Apply to
Director of Nursing
HOSPITAL OF SAINT BARNABAS
685 High Street Newark, N. J.

DE VEAUX SCHOOL
FOUNDED 1852
A Church school for boys. Thorough preparation for college. Military system of student government, developing sense of responsibility. Charges for grades seven and eight $1000; grades nine through twelve $1050. For catalog, address THE HEADMASTER, DeVeaux School, Niagara Falls, New York.

HOLDERNESS
In the White Mountains. College Preparatory and General Courses. Music and Crafts. For boys 12-19. All sports including riding. 200 acres of woods. New fireproof building. Individual attention. Home atmosphere.
Rev. Edric A. Weld, Rector
Box W. Plymouth, N. H.

MARGARET HALL
Under Sisters of St. Helena
(Episcopal)
Small country boarding and day school for girls, from primary through high school. Accredited college preparatory. Modern building recently thoroughly renovated includes gymnasium and swimming pool. Campus of six acres with ample playground space, hockey field and tennis court. Riding. Board and Tuition $800. For catalog, address: Sister Rachel, Prin. O.S.H., Box A. Versailles, Kentucky.

FORK UNION MILITARY ACADEMY
An Honor Christian School with the highest academic rating. Upper School prepares for university or business. ROTC. Every modern equipment. Junior School from six years. Housemother. Separate building. Catalogue. Dr. J. J. Wicker, Fork Union, Virginia.

CARLETON COLLEGE
Laurence M. Gould, D.Sc., President
Carleton is a co-educational liberal arts college of limited enrollment and is recognized as the Church College of Minnesota.
Address: Assistant to the President
CARLETON COLLEGE
Northfield Minnesota

KEMPER HALL
KENOSHA, WISCONSIN
Boarding and day school for girls offering thorough college preparation and training for purposeful living. Study of the Fine Arts encouraged. Complete sports program. Junior School department. Beautiful lake shore campus. Under direction of the Sisters of St Mary. For catalogue, address: Box WT.

Virginia Episcopal School
Lynchburg, Virginia
Prepares boys for colleges and university. Splendid environment and excellent corps of teachers. High standard in scholarship and athletics. Healthy and beautiful location in the mountains of Virginia.
For catalogue apply to
George L. Barton, Jr., Ph.D. Headmaster, Box 408

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

MEETING OF THE INTERNATIONAL COMMITTEE OF THE WORLD ALLIANCE, CHAMBY, SWITZERLAND, AUGUST, 1936. Religious leaders gathered here from forty-one nations, voiced the aspirations of millions of others seeking the means to prevent another war. Their efforts were earnest and sincere, but the obstacles were too great. As with all other agencies working for world peace during that period, this failure was due to exclusiveness—insufficient self-criticism —time wasted on non-essentials—lack of realism—a failure to fully estimate the strength of the opposition—variety of narrow nationalisms and inadequate appreciation of the values of world citizenship. Yes, they failed—but they tried!

TODAY WE HAVE BEEN GIVEN ANOTHER CHANCE. THIS TIME WE SHALL NOT FAIL.

A GREAT VICTORY — A GREAT PEACE

The greatest war in history has been won by the greatest and most complete victory of all times.

The Peace to be established puts a heavy responsibility upon the victors. We were big enough to win the war—are we big enough to win the peace?

These are days in which we deal in superlatives. This war cost billions and billions of dollars. The dead and wounded are estimated at 60,000,000 combatants and civilians. A generation of the best men in many nations dead, lost, crippled or handicapped by illness and the savage experiences of the war years. The world is filled with misery and woe. Cities on every continent lie in ruins. The people in most of Europe and a large part of Asia are hungry, sick, cold, homeless and in despair. The moral and spiritual losses cannot even be estimated.

Every agency must do its utmost. The new world organization of the United Nations will furnish the machinery and the necessary force to stop aggression. It remains for the men and women of good will in all nations to furnish the motivating power to help make effective that machinery, and without counting the cost, do everything possible to save, restore, and re-establish our civilization. "Victory is not the end, but the beginning. We must establish peace — a firm, just and enduring peace." This can be done if we will to do it. WE MUST DO IT. WE DARE NOT FAIL.

Winning the peace will be a triumph of persuasive forces. The strongest of all such forces is religion. War is waged in the minds of men before the shooting starts. There can be no adequate protection against the atomic bomb, chemical, and biological warfare except through the control of our national and international life by minds freed from hate, greed and selfishness.

The World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches was organized in the summer of 1914, to mobilize into a conscious force for international good will, men and women in all Nations who believe that ideal international relationships can best be secured through cooperation motivated by religious faith.

World Alliance for International Friendship
Through The Churches

70 FIFTH AVENUE Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication. NEW YORK 11, N. Y.

E, CHAMBY, SWITZE rations of millions of other es were too great. As w ess—insufficient self-critic pposition—variety of narro they tried!
WE SHALL NOT FAI
E ll times.
enough to win the war—
f dollars. The dead a best men in many nation ears. The world is fille Europe and a large p cannot even be estimate ions will furnish the m en of good will in all n ithout counting the cos not the end, but the done if we will to do rces is religion. War ection against the atro and international Wa
n the summer of 1914,
Nations who believe religious faith.
Friendshi
NEW YORK 11, N

The WITNESS

10¢ A COPY

LIBRARY COPY

JUNE 6, 1946

PUTTING COVERS ON TESTAMENTS OF BIBLE SOCIETY

THE BIBLE SPEAKS IN STORIES

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

THE CATHEDRAL OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE
NEW YORK CITY
Sundays: 8, 9, 11, Holy Communion; 10, Morning Prayer; 4, Evening Prayer; Sermons 11 and 4.
Weekdays: 7:30, 8 (also 9:15 Holy Days, and 10, Wednesdays), Holy Communion; 9, Morning Prayer; 5, Evening Prayer (Sung).

GRACE CHURCH, NEW YORK
Broadway at 10th St.
Rev. Louis W. Pitt, D.D., Rector
Daily: 12:30 except Mondays and Saturdays.
Sundays: 8 and 11 A.M. and 4:30 P.M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion 11:45 A.M.

THE HEAVENLY REST, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue at 90th Street.
Rev. Henry Darlington, D. D.
Sundays: Holy Communion 8 and 10 A.M.; Morning Service and Sermon 11 A.M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion, 11 A.M.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S CHURCH
NEW YORK
Park Avenue and 51st Street
Rev. Geo. Paull T. Sargent, D.D., Rector
8:00 A.M. Holy Communion
11:00 A.M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P.M. Evensong. Special Music.
Weekdays: Holy Communion Wednesday at 8:00 A.M.
Thursdays and Saints' Days at 10:30 A.M.
The Church is open daily for prayer.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH
Madison Ave. at 71st St., New York
The Rev. H. W. B. Donegan, D.D., Rector
8:00 a.m. Holy Communion.
9:30 a.m. Church School.
11:00 a.m. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 p.m. Evening Prayer and Sermon.
Wed., 7:45 a.m., Thurs., 12 noon Holy Communion.

THE CHURCH OF THE EPIPHANY
1317 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Charles W. Sheerin, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 A.M.; 8 P.M.
Daily: 12:05.
Thursdays: 7:30 and 11 A.M.

ST. THOMAS' CHURCH, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue and 53rd Street
Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, S. T. D., rector
Sunday Services: 8 and 11 A.M.
Daily Services: 8:30 A.M., Holy Communion.
Thursdays: 11 A.M., Holy Communion.

THE CHURCH OF THE ASCENSION
Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street, New York
The Rev. Roscoe Thornton Foust, Rector
Sundays: 8 and 9 H. C.; 11 A.M., 4:30, 8 P.M.
Daily: 8. Holy Communion.
5:30 Vespers—Tuesday through Friday.
The Church is open all day and night.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL
Buffalo, New York.
Shelton Square
The Very Rev. Edward R. Welles, M.A., Dean
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30 and 11.
Daily: 12:05 noon—Holy Communion
Tuesday: 7:30 A.M.—Holy Communion
Wednesday: 11:00 A.M.—Holy Communion.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH
Atlanta, Georgia
435 Peachtree Street
The Rev. J. Milton Richardson, Rector
9:00 A.M. Holy Communion.
10:45 A.M. Sunday School.
11:00 A.M. Morning Prayer and Sermon.
6:00 P.M. Young People's Meetings.

The WITNESS
For Christ and His Church

EDITORIAL BOARD: Frederick C. Grant, Editor; Arthur Lichtenberger, Chairman; William B. Spofford, Managing Editor; Lane W. Barton, Beverley M. Boyd, Dillard H. Brown, Roscoe T. Foust, Charles K. Gilbert, Hugh D. McCandless, Howard Chandler Robbins, William K. Russell, Sydney A. Temple Jr., Joseph H. Titus, William M. Weber.

★

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS: D. B. Aldrich, J. A. Bell, T. S. Carruthers, Adelaide Case, G. K. Chalmers, E. M. Cross, G. M. Day, Angus Dun, A. W. Farlander, T. P. Ferris, J. F. Fletcher, John Gass, C. H. Gesner, C. L. Glenn, G. C. Graham, J. M. Groton, G. I. Hiller, I. P. Johnson, T. R. Ludlow, C. S. Martin, R. C. Miller, Walter Mitchell, A. T. Mollegen, E. L. Parsons, E. L. Pennington, Rose Phelps, L. W. Pitt, Otis Rice, Cyril Richardson, Paul Roberts, V. D. Scudder, W. M. Sharp, W. B. Sperry, C. W. Sprouse, D. S. Stark, W. B. Stevens, J. W. Suter, S. E. Sweet, Alexander Zabriskie.

★

THE WITNESS is published weekly from September 15th to June 15th inclusive, with the exception of the first week in January and semi-monthly from June 15th to September 15th by the Episcopal Church Publishing Co. on behalf of the Church Publishing Association, Inc. Samuel Thorne, President; Charles A. Houston, Vice-President; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, Treasurer; Frederic D. H. Gilbert, Secretary.

★

The subscription price is $3.00 a year; in bundles for sale in parishes the magazine sells for 10c a copy, we will bill quarterly at 5c a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter, March 6, 1939, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879.

JUNE 6, 1946
Vol. XXIX No. 34

CLERGY NOTES

ANDREWS, S. W., former army chaplain, is now rector of Trinity, Milford, Mass.

CONDON, DONALD, former navy chaplain, was instituted rector of St. James', Woodstock, Vt., on May 12.

DAVIS, ROBERT E., assistant at St. Paul's, Richmond, Va., is now in charge of Christ Church, South Barre, and Christ Church, North Brookfield, Mass.

HANCOCK, JOHN J., deacon, is now assistant at St. Mark's, Medford, Oregon.

HODGKINS, HENRY B., former navy chaplain, is now rector of Christ Church, Pensacola, Fla.

HOLMES, WILLIAM A. B., formerly vicar at Berwick and Coles Creek, Pa., died on May 11th at the age of 82.

KATES, JEROME, celebrated the 25th anniversary of his rectorship at St. Stephen's, Rochester, N. Y. on May 5th.

LORD, JOHN C., retired, former rector of All Saints', Navesink, N. J., died on May 18th at Morristown, N. J., in his 84th year.

LUCAS, MARCUS M., formerly in charge of St. Paul's, Beloit, Kans., is now rector of St. Matthew's, Alliance, Neb.

MACCOLL, JAMES R., III, former navy chaplain, becomes assistant rector of Christ Church, Winnetka, Ill., on July 1.

NOURSE, JOHN W., was ordained deacon at Trinity, Rutland, Vt., on May 19 by Bishop VanDyck. He is a retired post office employee who has been a leader in this parish as director of boys' work. He intends to remain a deacon and continue at Trinity.

STUART, ALBERT R., former navy chaplain, is now rector of St. Michael's, Charleston, S. C.

WARD, H. HEWTON, formerly rector of Trinity, Lander, Wyoming, is now rector of the Transfiguration, Ironwood, Michigan.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

CHRIST CHURCH CATHEDRAL
Main and Church Sts., Hartford, Conn.
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30, 10:05, 11 A.M., 8 P.M.
Weekdays: Holy Communion, Monday, Friday and Saturday 8 A.M. Holy Communion, Tuesday and Thursday, 9 A.M. Holy Communion, Wednesday, 7 and 11 A.M. Noonday Service, daily except Monday and Saturday, 12:25 P.M.

CHRIST CHURCH
Cambridge
REV. GARDINER M. DAY, RECTOR
REV. FREDERIC B. KELLOGG, CHAPLAIN
Sunday Services, 8:00, 9:00, 10:00 and 11:15 A.M.
Weekdays: Wed. 8 and 11 A.M. Thurs., 7:30 A.M.

TRINITY CHURCH
Miami
Rev. G. Irvine Hiller, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services 8, 9:30, 11 A.M.

TRINITY CATHEDRAL
Military Park, Newark, N. J.
The Very Rev. Arthur C. Lichtenberger, Dean
Sunday services: 8:30, 9:30 (All Saints' Chapel, 24 Rector St.) 11 and 4:30 p.m.
Week Days: Holy Communion, Monday and Friday, 8 a.m. Holy Communion Wednesday and Holy Days, 12:00 noon. Intercessions Thursday, Friday and Saturday, 12:10 p.m. Organ Recital Tuesday 12:10.
The Cathedral is open daily for prayer.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
Montecito and Bay Place
OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA
Rev. Calvin Barkow, D.D., Rector
Sundays: 8 A.M., Holy Communion; 11 A.M., Church School; 11 A.M., Morning Prayer and Sermon.
Wednesdays: 10 A.M., Holy Communion; 10:45, Rector's Study Class.

GRACE CHURCH
Corner Church and Davis Streets,
ELMIRA, N. Y.
Rev. Frederick T. Henstridge, Rector
Sundays: 8 and 11 A.M.; 4:30 P.M.
Daily: Tuesday and Thursday, 7:30 A.M.
Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Holy Days, 9:30 A.M.
Other Services Announced

ST. MARK'S CHURCH
Texas Avenue and Cotton Street
SHREVEPORT, LA.
Rev. Frank E. Walters, Rector; Rev. Harry Wintermeyer, Curate.
Sundays: Holy Communion, 7:30; 9:25 A.M. Family Service; 11 A.M. Morning Prayer.
Holy Communion, first Sunday. 6 P.M., Young Churchmen.

CHRIST CHURCH
Nashville, Tennessee
Rev. Peyton Randolph Williams
7:30 A.M.—Holy Communion.
9:30 and 11 A.M.—Church School.
11 A.M.—Morning Service and Sermon.
6 P.M.—Young People's Meetings.
Thursdays and Saints' Days—Holy Communion 10 A.M.

GRACE CHURCH
105 Main Street, Orange, N. J.
Lane Wickham Barton, Rector
SUNDAYS
8:00 A. M.—Holy Communion
11:00 A. M.—Church School
11:00 A. M.—Morning Prayer and Sermon (Holy Communion first Sunday each month)
7:00 P. M.—Young People's Fellowship

CHRIST CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA
Second Street above Market
Cathedral of Democracy
Founded 1695
Rev. E. Felix Kloman, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services: 10 and 11 a.m.
Also—October-June, 4 p.m.
Weekdays: Tue., Thur., 12 noon; Wed., Fri., 12:25.
This Church Is Open Every Day.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

VOL. XXIX. No 33

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

JUNE 6, 1946

Publication Office, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago 37, Ill. Editorial Office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

Bible Is the Greatest Weapon Against Illiteracy

United Approach to the Needs of the World For the Bible Is Being Made by Societies

By Gilbert Darlington

Treasurer American Bible Society

New York:—There was a symbolism in the presence of the three men who spoke before the 130th Annual Meeting of the American Bible Society held here on May 9. One of them was Dr. Frank C. Laubach, world apostle of literacy and the others were the chiefs of chaplains of the army and the navy. It was the symbol of the gigantic shift in the program of the Bible Society from its war time responsibility to its postwar opportunity.

During the war and up to April first this year the Society distributed 9,158,359 Bibles, Testaments and Scripture Portions to service men and women, 83% of which were donated free through the chaplains.

While this service will continue on a peace-time basis and will revert to the minor though important element in the Society's program it has been through all the decades, the Society now faces a world which Dr. Laubach's form of missionary service brings into clearest focus—a world whose need must be met with courage and speed. Dr. Laubach has surpassed any man in history in his passion to help and his skill to achieve success in teaching the world's illiterate millions to read and write. He has developed in almost 90 languages a simple chart system for teaching adults to learn quickly and begin to teach their neighbors how to handle their native speech.

The world will never know enduring peace until individuals can be developed into self-respecting and effective citizens. Dr. Laubach made it perfectly clear that such a status could never come to men until they were released from the awful bondage of illiteracy and that, even then, it depended upon what they read. He reminded his audience that the Bible was the most available book in the world. Some part of it has been translated into 1068 different languages. There is not a literacy campaign in progress anywhere in the world in a language into which the Scriptures have not been put. Herein lies a solemn responsibility for Christian people everywhere. For the world is out to liquidate illiteracy and since it can, it must be given the Bible as the basis of its reading.

So today the American Bible Society faces the greatest challenge of its 130 years, a world that was never so keenly aware of the Bible's worth and at the same time never so bereft of copies of it. It faces China whose devotion to the Bible which had been deepening for several years before the war, has become today a veritable passion in many quarters. It is conceivable that the distribution in China alone will, not many years from now, equal that which was made in all the world last year.

It faces Latin America. In February this year twelve men met for four days in Rio de Janeiro. They came from every quarter of Latin America to confer with Dr. North of the American Bible Society and Dr. Temple of the British and Foreign Bible Society as they faced the almost unlimited expansion of Bible distribution opportunities among our Southern neighbors. The conference forecast the needs with commendable caution but even then foresaw a distribution in each of the next three years of approximately seven times what it was ten years ago.

And much the same can be said of India, Africa, Korea and the East Indies. Vast Russia will someday be open again to the ministries of God's holy word. Wide doors are opening on every hand.

And what is the strategy by which this thrilling challenge is being met? It is first of all one of support. The churches of the nation rose notably to the emergency in 1945 by increasing their giving from $508,000 to $1,134,000. The Episcopal Church increased its giving from $12,164, to $15,610 with commitments for a further substantial advance in 1946.

The other chief source of the Society's support is from individuals who last year advanced their gifts from $488,000 to $833,000 and which could be greatly advanced if all readers of papers like THE WITNESS could be brought to clearly see their responsibility. If ten percent of the Protestant Church members of this country read their Church periodicals and one out of five of these readers should respond with an annual gift of two dollars, from this promising source alone would come well over a million and a half dollars. Comparative figures reveal that over the years, and even during the recent war, the British people have individually supported their Bible Society much better than the American people have theirs. Here is a field for missionary cultivation that needs immediate attention.

But the strategy to meet the present opportunities for the Bible Society is developing on a broader scale. There met at Hayward's Heath not far from London for three days early in May, a group of official representatives from the Bible Societies of the United States, England, Scotland, Finland, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Holland, Germany, France, Switzerland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia. This was the first time in missionary history that any such representative group has met to plan a united approach to the needs of the world for the Bible. While much of the discussion centered, as it should, around the immediate needs of Bible-hungry Europe, the thinking of the group was world centered and should be hailed as the beginning of a program of global cooperation that, in the years to come, will mean better editions of the Scriptures, produced more quickly and delivered at a lower cost wherever they are needed. The new kind of a world which we are now building will also be new in this respect —that among the many more millions who are now going to be able to read any man will find it easier to acquire in his language a copy of God's word.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BETHLEHEM FAVORS UNITY

Wilkes-Barre, Pa.: — The convention of Bethlehem, meeting here May 14-15 at St. Stephen's, passed a resolution urging General Convention to "take a positive forward step toward the goal of organic unity with the Presbyterian Church." Another resolution was passed which stated that "it is our Christian responsibility actively to support the United Nations and develop a citizenry informed on such key issues as control of the atomic bomb, trusteeships for strategic bases and trade and financial problems on a basis of world cooperation." Still a third resolution placed the convention on record as urging Church people to fight discrimination against minority groups, and more specifically as it shows itself against Jews and Negroes.

The resolutions were in line with the convention address of Bishop Sterrett who had urged the convention to apply "the principles of justice and neighborliness among all our people" and who said that "there is sound reason to believe that the United Nations can succeed in its main purpose. May we give our support and make it clear that we intend to continue to do so." On the subject of union with the Presbyterian Church the Bishop declared that "definite steps in General Convention now, clearly recognizing the vital contribution of both communions to the purposes of God's Kingdom, and hailing the prospect of ultimate union, will do much to further the whole cause in the days ahead."

One of the highlights of the convention was an address by the Rev. Samuel M. Cavert, general secretary of the Federal Council of Churches, who recently returned from Europe. He said, at a joint meeting of the convention and the Auxiliary, that starvation in Europe was even worse than reported and pictured in newspapers and that it would undoubtedly get worse before summer is over.

General Convention deputies: clergy: Merrill M. Moore, W. Paul Thompson, Ralph A. Weatherly, Rodney Bracy. Laymen: Stanley V. Wood, Edward W. Warren, Alfred Darte, George Brittain. Alternates: clergy: William K. Russell, Thomas B. Smythe, Clarke R. Trumbore, Glen B. Walter. Laymen: Frederick Bertolet, Gordon M. Jones, Harry L. Pobst, Paul Gardner. Mrs. Elwood Allen and Mrs. George Taylor were elected by the Auxiliary to be their representatives at the triennium.

Chinese Scripture Portions are being carried by the office boy of the American Bible Society to the post-office in Kunming

COUNCIL SECRETARY BECOMES DEAN

Phoenix, Ariz.:—The Rev. James W. F. Carman, a field officer of the National Council, becomes the dean of the pro-cathedral here on September 1. Mr. Carman has been associated with the Council since 1944 and previously was the rector of the Ascension, Pueblo, Colo.

RHODE ISLAND MEETS

Providence: — Bishop James DeWolf Perry, in a letter to the convention of Rhode Island held here May 19-20, confirmed the announcement that he made a year ago: that his resignation should become effective October 15. He is at present ill but is reported as "doing extremely well" by his doctors.

The convention urged the saving of food and the return of rationing if necessary. It also directed the social service department to set up clinics on marriage, manned by clergymen, psychiatrists, attorneys, social workers.

General Convention deputies: clergy: John B. Lyte, William M. Bradner, Arthur F. Roebuck, John W. Butler Jr. Laymen: John Nicholas Brown, Charles R. Haslam, A. L. Kelley, Albert E. Thornley.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA CONVENTION

Staunton, Va.: — The convention of the diocese of Southwestern Virginia met here at Trinity Church, May 14-15, with women admitted as delegates for the first time since the diocese was founded in 1919. One of the highlights of the meeting was an address on the proposed marriage canon by C. Francis Cocke, chancellor of the diocese, who expressed the opinion that the average couple whose marriage might be impeded by special conditions would probably not be willing to go through with the delay, publicity and involved procedure prescribed in the canon in order to be married by an Episcopal clergyman.

Deputies to General Convention: clergy: J. Lewis Gibbs, Robert A. Magill, Carleton Barnwell, Richard H. Lee. Layman: C. Francis Cocke, Robert Whitehead, John M. Goldsmith, C. Clement French.

MAY 30TH-JUNE 6TH

* We were ready for the press with the issue of May 30th when the embargo on Second Class mail made it unlikely that copies could be delivered. This June 6th number therefore largely contains news that would have appeared in last week's issue which we were obliged to omit for reasons beyond our control. On page sixteen we present a quick review of later news to bring you up to date. Post Office rules permitting, we will issue a make-good number later in the summer at the time of General Convention.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Bibles Are in Great Demand In Germany and Japan

Germans Want Them to Replace Those Lost While Soldiers Have Interested Japanese

By Eric N. North
General Secretary American Bible Society

New York: — The major portion of the foreign distribution of the American Bible Society so far in 1946 has been to meet the needs of our former enemies, Germany and Japan. Although the religious backgrounds of the two nations are totally different, the demands from each country have exceeded anything the Society has probably ever known.

Germany is a country with a long Christian tradition. Like England it has grown up over more than a thousand years with the Bible. Since 1534 it has enjoyed the use of one of the most accurate translations of the Bible ever made,—Luther's. Furthermore, since Germany has for centuries had a large Protestant population, the Bible has been the more widely used.

Like many other so-called Christian countries, Germany has had Bible Societies of its own for a century or more. Then came Hitler. Like every tyrant he recognized the Bible as one of his foes. So the Bible was at first rewritten and then ruled out. For many months during the latter part of the war the publication of Bibles in Germany was forbidden. The wholesale destruction of Germany's industrial equipment by her conquerors left a nation both without Bibles and the means of producing them.

A close-up of the situation is given in a letter received shortly after V-E day from Olivier Béguin, the Bible Society's agent in Geneva, Switzerland. He reports the approximate needs laid before him by a member of the Church council of Munich. These are the terse sentences of the report: A half a million people have been bombed. They are without Bibles. Most of the refugees and displaced persons, if not all, are without Bibles or New Testaments. That means 1,200,000 Protestants have no Scriptures. If we want to give a Bible to each family we shall need 300,000 Bibles; and it would be a good thing to provide them also with New Testaments, two to each family if possible, which would mean 600,000. These figures, M. Béguin went on to say, were for immediate use and were for distribution in the Protestant Churches only. There are many political prisoners in Bavaria. Those who are Nazi adherents should be given special consideration and provided with Bibles, as this is the only way to lead them to a new conception of life. This, let it be remembered, is a report from but one city. Consider, then the opportunity for the whole of Germany.

While all of Germany is not open to American supplies, the area that is has produced a demand for which the Society is planning to supply more copies of God's word than it has ever done in so short a time for any nation. Between V-E day and the close of 1945 the Society shipped 4,800 Bibles, 417,000 Testaments and 572,000 Portions. Since then there have been shipped 390,000 more Bibles, 600,000 New Testaments and 500,000 Portions. It is estimated that a further need, to be met as soon as the present schedule of production is completed, will amount to an additional 450,000 Bibles, 1,250,000 Testaments and 500,000 Portions. When all those figures are added together, and to them are also added the 43,000 Bibles, 505,000 New Testaments and 1,169,000 Portions which the Society from July 1, 1940 to the end of the war, supplied to German prisoners of war, through its neutral Geneva Office, the total is 6,402,846 volumes of Scripture. Never, in all its history, has the Society served any single country to such an extent. The Society's average annual distribution of whole Bibles to the whole world for the decade closing with 1945 was less than half of that contemplated for Germany alone in the present crisis.

When one turns to Japan he confronts a nation which so far from reflecting a long Christian tradition, is a nation that has, to an unusual degree, succeeded in resisting the penetration of Christian missions for almost a century.

Following V-J day, however, with all compulsion to observe a state religion removed and, freed from the obligation to regard the emperor as divine, the Japanese turned their attention to their conquerors. What strange beings they seemed to be. Instead of a cold-blooded soldier bent on getting restitution, the American G.I. turned out to be a patient, friendly gentleman who was glad to help his one-time enemies out of the terrible predicament brought about by their defeat. What makes the American conqueror such a man? The Japanese are reputed to be the most literate nation on earth. They believe in books and use them. Was there a book that had made America? Yes, there is. This is of course a greatly oversimplified deduction, but it apparently is none the less a fairly true one; for how else can we understand the veritable deluge of requests for Scriptures that has come from the report of the commission of four American Churchmen who visited Japan last fall; from leaders of the Church in Japan; from United

A box of Bibles from the American Bible Society is lifted into an army troop carrier plane to be taken to German prisoners of war in Italy. At right is Col. Frank Brown, ranking chaplain in the Italian theater, who supervised the shipment

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

States army chaplains and from many others. There is an eagerness also to understand English on the part of the Japanese which brings the English Scriptures also into heavy demand. Through Chaplain Ivan L. Bennett of our forces in the Pacific the way was cleared with the military authorities for 100,000 Japanese Bibles, 2,500,000 Japanese New Testaments and 100,000 English New Testaments.

When all due allowance is made for the impulsiveness of this new interest on the part of the Japanese, and the mixture of motives that must be recognized in all human affairs, it still is true that just now Japan presents an unprecedented opportunity to press the claims of Christ; and there is no surer way of transmuting the good impulse into a continuing national attitude than to supply her people amply with the Scriptures.

The immediacy in this great opportunity cannot be overstressed. It may be some time before any effective number of missionaries can profitably return to Japan. But Bibles and Testaments supplied now to so literate a nation in so inquiring a mood is most clearly indicated.

It should be remembered that these millions of sacred volumes sent Germany and Japan are not dumped with more zeal than wisdom upon indifferent people. In the case of Germany the books are in urgent demand by people—millions of them—who have been for years regular readers but who have lost their copies along with all their other earthly possessions. In Japan the people are groping for a place to begin the rebuilding of their nation. They are finding in the typical American soldier just what the New Testament declares a man of good will may become. He is more than a conqueror. He is a forgiving friend. There is about him to that extent the spirit of Christ. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit" our men, the last men, maybe, in all the world to call themselves missionaries, are making the Bible the most popular book in Japan.

A church in a town of Kansas, of less than 2500 people, in April took up a special offering for Bibles for Japan and, as a result, sent the American Bible Society a check for $1500. This church performed with consummate skill in meeting adequately a missionary opportunity.

GENERAL CONVENTION DEPUTIES

Asheville, N. C.:—The following were elected deputies to General Convention at the convention of the diocese of Western Carolina: clergy: G. Floyd Rogers, Mark Jenkins, Charles G. Leavell, A. Rufus Morgan. Laymen: W. M. Redwood, A. B. Stoney, W. L. Balthis, George Wiese.

CONNECTICUT CONVENTION

Hartford: — Continued efforts toward unity of the Churches was urged by Bishop Budlong in his address at the convention of Connecticut, meeting here at the cathedral May 21. He expressed however the conviction that the Presbyterian and Episcopal Churches are not yet ready to merge. He also opposed changes in the marriage canon.

General Convention deputies: clergy: Raymond Cunningham, Frank S. Morehouse, Ralph D. Read, Thomas S. Cline. Laymen: Anson T. McCook, Tracy B. Lord, Oliver R. Beckwith, Wallace C. Hutton. Alternates: clergy: Robert S. Flockhart, Robert C. Dentan, Roger Anderson, Loyal Y. Graham. Laymen: Richard M. Coit, George E. Bulkley, Albert T. Dewey, George F. Greene.

DETROIT PARISH TO BUILD

Detroit:—St. Timothy's here, having completed a successful campaign for funds, is to erect a new church as soon as possible. It will cost in the neighborhood of $90,000. The announcement was made last Sunday when Bishop Creighton visited the parish to confirm a class of fifty-two persons presented by the rector, the Rev. John A. Scantlebury. The parish got its start in 1930 in a rented store and was admitted into union with the diocese as a parish in January, 1945. The congregation at present worships in a temporary frame structure.

SHRINE MONT CLERGY SEMINAR

Orkney Springs, Va.:—The Presiding Bishop is to head the faculty at the seminar for clergy to be held July 15-26 at Shrine Mont. The chaplain will be Churchill J. Gibson, while other courses will be offered by the Rev. C. Sturges Ball, the Rev. Frederick J. Warnecke, the Rev. Robert M. Olton, the Rev. William H. Dunphy and Miss Mary James. Dr. E. L. Woodward is the director of Shrine Mont.

Mike, the Cuicateco water boy, is being taught to read by a representative of the American Bible Society in Mexico

CONFERENCE FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

Tunkhannock, Pa.: — A conference for high-schoolers will be held at Camp Great Neck, near here, June 27-July 3. Called the Susquehanna Conference, the purpose is to present the teachings of the Church as the modern answer to present day problems of personal and social living. Young people from all parts of the country are invited, provided they are recommended by their rector. Among those giving courses are the Rev. Lane W. Barton, Miss Mildred Brown, Mrs. Dorothy Kling, the Rev. Kermit Castellanos, the Rev. William Grime, the Rev. Ernest Harding, the Rev. George MacMurray, the Rev. William K. Russell, the Rev. Joseph H. Titus, who is also the registrar, 155-24 90th Avenue, Jamaica, 2, N. Y. Fifteen dollars covers the total cost.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

EDITORIALS

It Is Your Bible

THE Bible is not a book but a library. It is a collection of the choicest and most valuable religious books of the ancient Hebrew-Jewish religion, plus the classic writings of the early Christian Church. The New Testament forms the climax and completion of the Old. We cannot dispense with either Testament. It is just as absurd to try to ignore the Old Testament as it would be to ignore the New. For Christians they belong together, the Old forming the inseparable and indispensable background of the New, without which it cannot be rightly understood. But it does no good merely to talk or write about the Bible. It must be read, if it is to help us. A good many Episcopalians—too many of them—seem never to look inside the Bible. The Prayer Book is their substitute — which of course contains a vast amount of Holy Scripture. But their excuse is a trifle weak. "This is not a Bible-centered Church," they say; "instead, it is centered in a Person." Quite true! But then the Bible itself is centered in that same Person, and so Bible and Church cannot be far apart, or opposed to each other, or unrelated!

Any Christian is in danger of being a weak and ignorant believer, and of being led away with "every wind of doctrine" and even with his own whims and prejudices, if he is not a consistent, regular, thoughtful, and devout reader of the Bible. Don't leave the Bible to the fundamentalists or the reactionaries! It belongs to the whole Church! Don't think you can be a sacramental Christian, and ignore the Bible; or even a social Christian, and never read the Holy Scriptures! The strength of our religion is that it is "reasonable" as well as a "religious and holy" hope. Not just in Advent, but the year round, read the Bible every day!

Your Help, Please

BECAUSE of continuing paper shortages THE WITNESS, as in the war years, will appear every other week from June 15 to September 15. We therefore ask those of you who are not to be away from home this summer for an extended period, to arrange to have your copies forwarded if at all possible. It is still hard to secure stencils or to get them cut so that it will be a great aid to us if you do not ask for summer address changes unless necessary. If your address change is permanent or for an extended period, please make the request for a change personally by letter or postal, giving both your old and new address, and allowing at least three weeks for the change.

We also urge those who plan Bundles during General Convention to place orders at this time. The Convention is early and you might forget to place your order while on vacation. Also because of paper shortages we will be limited in the number of copies we can print each week. We will enter the orders as they are received . . . first come, first served. There will be five Convention numbers: a pre-Convention issue, followed by four giving a complete coverage of Convention news.

Address changes and Bundle orders may be sent to either our office of publication, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago 37, Illinois, or our editorial office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N.Y.

"QUOTES"

EVANGELISM makes imperative a greater understanding of the purpose of the Church, the significance of its liturgy and surely, as a minimum, an appreciation for the simple, fundamental, Christian truths. We have been dismayed by the reports from our chaplains as to the woeful ignorance of the Christian Church and Christian truths on the part of men in the service. This has been corroborated by the clergy at home. We are at last beginning to see that we are really a nation of people largely pagan in their attitude towards religion and the Church as well as pagan in standards of living. Here is the first compelling motive for evangelization — to preach Christ to our own people at home.

—Wallace J. Gardner
The Bishop of New Jersey

Statement of Policy III

WE BELIEVE that the proposed marriage canon should be adopted. At the same time we are not fully convinced that legislation is the best method of promoting Christian observance of Christian ideals of marriage and home life. There is far more need for teaching than for legislation and much greater need for good example on the part of Christian partners in married life. If Church and state were identical, or if there were a state Church here in America (God forbid!), then there might be good reason for legislation on marriage on the part of the Church. But the present ambiguous position is an inherited one and we are in favor of the proposed canon as an improvement over the present one. But we hope that the Church will not go further and pass canons forbidding perjury, homicide, or sedition; or providing ways whereby murderers, liars and tax evaders may be restored to communion. If you want such canons you can find precedents in the ancient Church; but along with them goes the whole theory of Byzantinism or of Caesarism . . . the state is "the secular arm" of a Church which has itself become paralyzed and secularized without knowing it.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The principle that "hard cases make bad law" was recognized from the start by the commission on marriage; at the same time it was recognized that exceptions are bound to arise and that there are—indisputably are—Christians who should be permitted to remarry after a first marriage has broken down.

Moreover we favor the principle of planned parenthood. The archaic views of the Roman Church on this question are wholly out of touch with the conditions of modern life; they are logically inconsistent and cannot be justified by Christian teaching. Italy ought to be a sufficient demonstration, with about two hundred thousand young Italians each year for whom there are neither food nor jobs, thanks to the papal encouragement of fifteen-child families, subsidized by the Fascists. The end was war and desolation. What the policy of the Roman Church has cost the rest of us ought to be enough, in itself, to make us very suspicious of Roman Catholic policies and of Roman Catholic interpretations of morals.

This is the third of a series of statements setting forth the editorial policies of THE WITNESS. The views are composite and reflect a consensus of the editors and the executive committee of the Church Publishing Association for whom this magazine is published. A further statement will appear in our next number.

The Bible Speaks in Stories

by Francis Carr Stifler

Of the Staff of the American Bible Society

A WOMAN called me up in amazement not long ago to protest against a book she found on the newsstand. It was the Old Testament in "comics". I tried to calm her by telling her that this was inevitable. The Bible contains the best collection of short stories ever written. The wonder is that these stories did not long ago appear in strip-picture form. I am glad they have, for the strip picture is the language of millions of boys and girls in America who have had absolutely no knowledge of the Bible or of religion. Without the Bible in this popular American language most of them would never have known anything about the Bible at all. As it is, they are bound to get some of it through this channel and hundreds of them will be led thereby to reading the Bible itself.

Here as we seek to build a new world dedicated to peace are the people going to listen to the Bible? Indeed they will, for the Bible teachings are couched not so much in heavy philosophical lingo; the Bible's message, as someone has put it, is not argued out; it is acted out. The Bible talks about people, not ideal people, but real people, whose passions and virtues, whose failures and successes, whose loyalties and frivolities, keep them eternally alive.

I have a friend who in his recent years of partial retirement as a teacher and preacher of the gospel, has compiled a list of book titles derived from the Scriptures—not religious books, mind you, but novels, dramas, books of poetry. So far his list totals 1236 titles. Here are just a few of these newest titles; "The Coat of Many Colors", "Bricks Without Straw", "Generation of Vipers", "The Needle's Eye", "The Least of These", "The Angel With the Trumpet." There is a vivid Bible story behind every one of those titles that comes instantly to the mind of every reader among you who knows his Bible. The first one—that matchless biographical sketch of the youngest son in a big family whom his doting father had spoiled, the story which has been expanded by Thomas Mann into his monumental series of volumes just recently completed: Joseph and his Brethren, Joseph in Egypt, etc.; the second is from the story of Moses, reared from infancy in Pharoah's palace, whose passion for the relief of his oppressed fellow Hebrews, made him sicken of his easy court life in Egypt and wrought his soul into a rare combination of a labor-leader, a law giver and a national deliverer never equalled in all history; the third recalls John the Baptist, the colorful ascetic who suddenly appeared with almost hypnotic power to sway men's hearts, as he lifted the curtain upon that event in history that has changed and is still changing the currents of the world's life. The next two titles unlock the recollection of all to the matchless story-telling power of the Lord of Life whose consummate skill has fastened forever to the memories of men his uncompromising gospel call of return, repentance, renewal and realization of life eternal. The last title comes from the closing book of the Bible which whips up the imagination of every reader to consider the glories of a world in which his daily prayer is answered, a world where God's Kingdom has come and his will is being done on earth as it is in heaven.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

TELL me, who could understand Christmas without the stories of the shepherds and the wise men? Who could understand Easter without the triumphal entry, the cleansing of the temple, the conspiracy of Judas, the last supper, Peter's denial, Pilate's predicament, the two thieves on either side, Peter and John racing to the tomb, Mary thinking him to be the gardener, the evening walk to Emmaus, These are the stories, understandable by children and childlike races as well, that are still remolding the world. No man can fathom the mystery of life and death, but honest minds, however untaught, cannot fail to catch the transforming truth of these stories.

And now for a close-up of the greatest story ever told. Of course Jesus told it. We call it the Parable of the Prodigal Son. It is told in 322 words. Of these in our English Bible all but 63 are words of one syllable. It can be read in two minutes. There is not a cloud in its sky. No man can mistake its meaning. It is taken from home life which all men understand. Yet consider how clearly and completely the Bible speaks in this brief tale.

First of all is the unchanging fatherhood of God. Then comes the sonship of man. This is the gospel of hope, for while the boy was lost, and when he returned, filthy and diseased, he was still in the eyes of his father "my son".

Here is the perfect picture of sin. It is to be seen in the act of one who separates himself from God and seeks to give selfish direction to his own life. And what a picture of retribution, the gnawing of unrelieved hunger, the heartless refusal of the world to give the sinner what he so desperately needs; the awful waste with no apparent way to retrieve his losses.

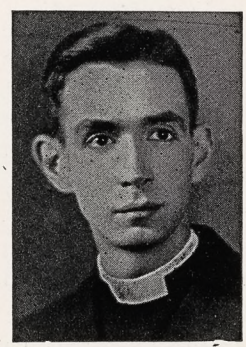
Then comes the turning point. How easily the story might have missed the point here. When the boy came to the end of his resources he might have blamed his father for being too indulgent, or some companion in sin who had led him astray, but no, the boy came clean. He said, "I have sinned". In a thousand ways the Bible keeps telling us this but we do not heed it. We will give God everything but a humble and a contrite heart.

Then came saving faith. The lad still believed in his father. Maybe the father's sense of justice, he thought, would not permit his restoration to any higher status than that of a servant, but the boy believed that though his sins were scarlet, yet the father would take him back.

Next comes the picture of repentance. Repentance is something more than tearful remorse. True repentance is the act of a hero. The prodigal turned his back on the old life, faced the humiliation of his filth and rags and went to his father.

Then comes the scene of forgiveness. Picture the father going down to the lower gate day after day hoping he might catch sight of his boy coming back. It must have been that way for Jesus says the father saw him "while he was yet a great way off." He must have been looking for him. Here is where the story ties up with that great verse in Romans "God commended his love toward us that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." I do not need any more gospel than that. Do you?

Here then is the Bible, with its unforgettable stories, as we find it all the way from the Garden of Eden to the city of gold with its walls of diamonds and its gates of pearl. How can anyone say that the Bible is dull? Or how can anyone miss its redemptive message? A story is a story in any language . . . which is one of the reasons why the Bible has become the most precious book men know in almost every land.



Adapted from a forthcoming book "The Bible Speaks," published by Duell, Sloane and Pearce. $2.00.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

Missions and the Prayer Book

THE Reformers who first compiled the Prayer Book in English were men of earnestness, conviction and determination. But one passion they singularly lacked—devotion to the world-wide mission of the Gospel. One will look almost in vain through the Prayer Books of 1549 and 1552 for any note of missionary enterprise. There is the petition in the Good Friday collect to "have mercy upon all Jews, Turkes, Infidels, and hereticks," and the general suffrage in the Litany, "That it may please thee to have mercy upon all menne." That is all. God's mercy, yes, but what about a little human effort? Most striking of all is the complete absence of any concern for evangelization of the infidel in the prayer for the whole state of Christ's Church in the liturgy of Holy Communion. One would expect something of the sort here above all places.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

There are reasons which explain, if they do not justify, the obtuseness of the Reformers to what we today consider the primary concern of Christians. When the Prayer Book was put together Christendom was rather tightly bound in Europe by the surrounding wall of Islam. The Mohammedan is not a very amenable subject for a missionary of Christ. The vast new continents which were being discovered by Europeans in the generation preceding the Reformation (remember 1492!) were as yet open only to the Roman Catholic nations, who, be it said to their credit, always planted the cross with their banners in their new dominions. In 1549 England was still an island, not yet an empire. Had the Prayer Book come to birth under Queen Elizabeth, after the exploits of Drake, Frobisher and Raleigh, it would have been as strongly nationalistic, but probably not as insular, as the liturgies of King Edward VI.

The 17th century saw the Prayer Book brought to America. The early colony in Jamestown took an interest in the conversion of the Indians until the disastrous massacre of 1622, when two-thirds of the settlers were killed. With them died all zeal for missionary work among the natives. When forty years later the Church of England revised the Prayer Book no account was taken of the missionary opportunity in the two colonies where it was established, Virginia and Maryland, except for a brief remark in the preface of the 1662 Book. The new office of Baptism of Those of Riper Years was commended as "useful for the baptizing of Natives in our Plantations, and others converted to the Faith."

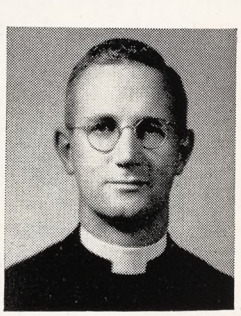
The turn of the 18th century saw the beginning of a new spirit. In 1701 Thomas Bray, who had visited Maryland as commissary of the Bishop of London, founded the famous Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. By the close of the century, in 1799, the Church Missionary Society had been formed. In the meanwhile England had become a world-power in both hemispheres, despite her loss of the thirteen American colonies. But the newly organized Protestant Episcopal Church in these colonies was too weak in resource and uncertain in its future to think of westward expansion, much less of foreign missionary ventures. The 1789 American Prayer Book had as little to say about missions as its English parent-book. But after the first generation of depression was passed the Episcopal Church soon found her place in the flowering of missionary effort at home and abroad which is the chief glory of 19th century Protestantism.

At the General Convention of 1853 a prominent group of clergy, headed by William Augustus Muhlenberg, presented a memorial to the bishops questioning whether the Church "with only her present canonical means and appliances, her fixed and invariable modes of public worship, and her traditional customs and usages, is competent to the work of preaching and dispensing the Gospel to all sorts and conditions of men." The bishops appended to their sympathetic reply a number of prayers "for consideration." These included a prayer for missions, and for the increase of the ministry. This seed bore fruit in the 1892 Prayer Book revision. The superb prayer for Missions ("O God, who hast made of one blood") by Bishop Cotton of Calcutta, 1858-66, was included, albeit in a sadly mangled version of the original. Also a new petition was added to the Litany: "That it may please thee to send forth labourers into thy harvest"—a prayer our Lord enjoined upon us, and one much on the minds and consciences of the 1853 Memorialists. The 1928 revision made some substantial additions to this meagre and all too tardy recognition of missions in the Prayer Book. But did it add enough? We shall talk about this next time.

Strategy and Tactics
For the Parish

By

FRANCIS O. AYRES JR.



Rector of St. John's, Waterbury, Connecticut

VESTRY LEADERSHIP

By CHARLES D. KEAN

Guest columnist this week who is the rector of Grace Church, Kirkwood, Missouri

THE canons of the Church provide for lay participation in parish government through the institution of the vestry. It is the only officially designated machinery through which the members of a parish may affect its policy and program in responsible manner. When the vestry is the official parish agency for lay participation in every aspect of policy and program planning, then lay representation is on a sound structural foundation.

Lay participation is always a challenging and perplexing problem in any church because of the natural tendency to refer all routine decisions and the actual carry-through in administration to the rector. But unless there is effective lay participation in both decisions and adminstration, the resulting policy and program are the rector's alone, with the people free to accept it or ignore it according to the way they feel about it.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Various mechanisms have been devised in many parishes to meet this problem, with no one system proving itself completely effective. What is actually involved is the meaningful delegation and acceptance of authority and responsibility, and systems tend to break down because either one or both of those two aspects is not clear. Even if the machinery does not break down, there is always the tendency that it will not operate unless the rector primes it and that with a change of administration it will cease to function entirely.

One very common method of enlisting lay participation is through an organization known widely as the Parish Council. What is usually meant by this term is a committee composed of representatives of the various parish organizations and departments. The difficulty with this device is that while the membership if responsibly selected to the extent that it is composed of officers duly elected by their groups, the duties and functions of the Council as a whole tend to be the creation of the rector and of those who share his particular vision. In other words, there is no functional basis for authority and responsibility in planning and administration of the program and policy of the parish as a whole other than the rector assigns, even though the vestry may have given official or tacit approval to the set-up.

While there are some parishes where the vestry personnel makes it impossible to broaden the vision and responsibility of this group, it would seem that the most effective method of enlisting lay participation in parish program and policy is through the vestry itself, since it is the only official lay organization structurally related to the parish. As a matter of fact, the vestry has a definite theological significance as a distinct check upon sacerdotal tendencies in our theory of the doctrine of the Church. But when this check is limited to finance and property, it may fulfill its theological premises on a minimum basis, but without really providing for lay leadership.

While the official duties of the vestry, as given in Canons 6 and 12 of the general canons, refer only to property and fiscal matters, diocesan canons go further. Section 7 of Canon 11, Missouri canons, and section 62 of the canons of Southern Ohio, declare in identical language that beyond the duties just described its members shall "act as helpers of the minister in whatever is appropriate to laymen for the furtherance of the Gospel." Canon 20, section 1, of the Virginia canons says: "It shall be the duty of the vestry . . . (b) to co-operate with the rector or minister in promoting the spiritual welfare of his cure, (c) to extend personally a hearty welcome to newly confirmed or transferred members of the congregation." The canons of other dioceses refer to responsibility for enacting parish by-laws — an authority which may conceivably apply to more than simply financial and property matters.

Where a broad construction is given to the vestry's duties, it is easily the most appropriate organization through which to provide for lay participation in parish management, because the vestry is an official body responsible, not to the minister but to the congregation. Consequently, when its duties are seen to include supervision of religious education, co-ordination of parish societies and groups, relationship of parish and community, and the like, not only are these things provided for in an administrative set-up, but they are provided for in a way that is functionally responsible and which makes possible real continuity.

No system in and of itself will be guaranteed effectiveness in advance. The more responsible a plan or organization is the better chance it has to fulfill its purposes.

A second article will follow in a later number on the tactical aspects of this strategy.

SANCTUARY

conducted by W. M. Weber

For Sinners Only

★ So many people are waiting for a "perfect Church" before they honor it with their additional presence. They do not realize, as Dick Sheppard once said, how lonely they would be in it, if it were a perfect Church! "There are too many hypocrites in the Church," cried a stentorian voice at an open-air meeting. John White gave right answer (open-air crowds always know when the answer is right) as he replied "Well, come in! There is always room for one more hypocrite." It is time for us to tell the outsider that the Church is not composed, — and never has been — of the people "who think they are good." In actual fact it is composed of the only people left in the world who happen to know we are bad; that we ourselves bear some of the responsibility for the selfishness that is ruining the world; and that we cannot get ourselves right. The Church is composed of the people who have accepted the thesis that something once happened in the world—to set at nought our disability,—through the Obedience of one man who was the only "Proper Man"; and have accepted His Offer to engraft us into Himself whereby alone we too can begin to become proper men: through Him to grow into something less manifestly selfish than we used to be. Thus we go to Church every Sunday, firstly to say openly—and anyone who wants can come and hear us,—that we are sinners and might just as well be blotted out; but also to claim forgiveness, and to declare our Faith that we can start again together in Him, cleansed and empowered.

—George MacLeod, We Shall Re-Build.
The Iona Community of the Presbyterian Church of Scotland.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Rev. Philip L. Shutt Joins Staff of The Witness

His Father Was Among the Group of Founders And the First Managing Editor of Magazine

By W. B. Spofford

Chicago:—For the second time in the history of THE WITNESS the name "Shutt" becomes associated with this magazine. On June 1 the Rev. Philip Leslie Shutt of the diocese of Chicago became assistant to the managing editor and will be in charge of the news pages specifically.

The late Charles J. Shutt, his father, was one of a small group of Church leaders to found this magazine. Heading the list was Bishop Irving P. Johnson, the retired Bishop of Colorado, who served as editor-in-chief from the founding until 1942. Associated with him in starting the venture was a group of distinguished Churchmen, now all dead: Bishop John C. Sage of Salina; Dean Francis White of Cleveland; Bishop James Wise of Kansas; Bishop Henry Mikell of Atlanta; George Parkin Atwater of Akron and later of Brooklyn. On the masthead of the first number, dated January 7, 1917, appeared the name of Charles J. Shutt as managing editor. He took up the task with the enthusiasm of an experienced newspaperman, ably backed by his wife who, prior to marriage, had also been a reporter. Back of them was Grandpa Shutt who had owned a string of newspapers in Illinois during and after the Civil War and who had taught his son the fine art of digging up news and putting it into type. Charles Shutt carried on in the difficult early days of THE WITNESS, never quite sure whether the money could be found to bring out the next number. He died in 1921 and was succeeded by the present managing editor.

Phil Shutt comes to us not only with a newspaper heritage but with experience of his own, having been a reporter on several Iowa daily and weekly newspapers and a correspondent for the Associated Press in that state. He is a college and seminary graduate with B.A. and B.D. degrees and comes to us from Trinity Church, Belvidere, Illinois. He had previously served parishes in Lombard, Ill.; Peru, Ind.; Quincy, Ill. and St. Paul, Minnesota. In the diocese of Chicago he has been a member of the department of publicity and in Belvidere has been the chairman of the Boone County infantile paralysis committee; chairman of the post-war planning committee; chairman of the price panel of OPA; an officer of the county ministerial association; advisor to the local youth center.

We introduce him to you with enthusiasm.

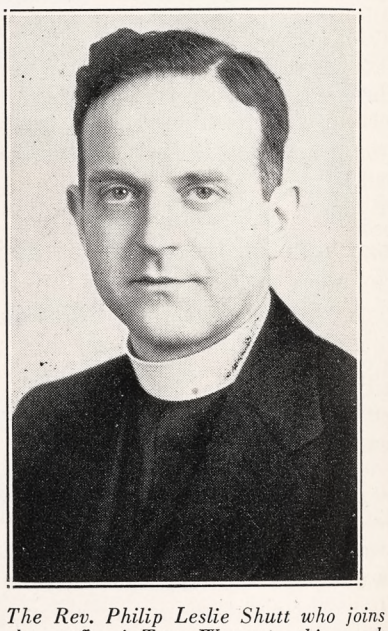
Race Relations

Oxford, Pa.:—A call for improved Church leadership in protecting and encouraging minority racial groups was sounded by Negro, white, and Japanese-American churchmen at the annual meeting of the National Conference of Church Leaders. The meeting was held at Lincoln University near here under the auspices of the department of race relations of the Federal Council of Churches in cooperation with the Home Missions Council of North America.

Pointing out that no evacuee was ever convicted of subversive activity, Nisei speakers declared that Japanese-Americans were evacuated from the West Coast at a time when Churches were not fully aware that pressure groups were forcing public opinion against a minority group.

"Masses of people in our country can always be aroused against a particular minority simply because of racism," the Rev. Jobu Yasamura, of the American Baptist Home Mission Society in New York, declared.

Henry W. Pope, USO director of services to Negroes, outlined the gains made for Negroes in the USO's race relations program at a panel discussion on how churches could increase such gains.



"Negroes have become more appreciative of their worth in many communities because planning with, and not for, individuals and groups has been one of the underlying principles of work in the USO," he asserted. "It has also provided white persons with an opportunity to meet Negroes with whom they may deal on a plane of mutual respect."

Southern ministers, evaluating the role of rural Negro churches, claimed there is no lack of community interest in the Church, but a need for well-trained courageous leadership.

George E. Haynes, secretary of the race relations department of the Federal Council, was in charge of the conference.

Junior Mission

Manchester, N. H.:—The Rev. Charles M. Serson of the Cowley Fathers of Canada, conducted a mission for the juniors of Grace Church here recently. Eighty-five children attended every afternoon to hear his simple, lively instructions illustrated by him in colored chalk on a blackboard and his exciting continued story about St. Patrick.

The Rev. Philip Leslie Shutt who joins the staff of THE WITNESS this week as assistant to the managing editor

The rector of the parish, Bradford Young, said to his congregation, "Fr. Serson has helped us feel the true unity of the Episcopal Church. A Cowley Father, sometimes considered the extreme of the Catholic party, he was primarily winning friends and followers for the Lord Jesus, so that ritualistic differences seemed unimportant even in this low-church parish. He is a Catholic Evangelical."

A year previous Fr. Serson conducted an adult mission at Grace, which was likewise enthusiastically received by both parish and community.

Karl Barth Returns

Geneva (wireless to RNS): — Dr. Karl Barth, Swiss Protestant theologian, has returned to Bonn University in Germany from which he was expelled during the early years of the Nazi regime because of his opposition to National Socialist teachings. Dr. Barth was invited by the rector of the university to renew his post on the theological faculty during the summer term. He is said to be the first foreign professor offered a teaching post in the British occupation zone since the war ended. Last winter Dr. Barth was invited to lecture in Berlin, but was unable to obtain a permit to enter the capital.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

New Missionaries

New York:—Miss Velma Benson, student at St. Margaret's House, Berkeley, Calif., has been appointed to teach at Boone, Wuchang, China. Miss Katherine S. Diehl of Sequin, Texas, is to be librarian for Central China College. Miss Lillian Weidenhammer, is to join the faculty of the same institution. She is from Gainesville, Ga. Miss Virginia Hebbert of Richmond, Va., is to be a medical social worker at St. James' Hospital, Anking.

Union Seminary

New York: — Sixty-eight students received degrees at the graduation at Union Seminary on May 16. The commencement address was by the Rev. Theodore C. Speers, Presbyterian pastor of New York. The speakers at the alumni dinner were Dean Virginia Gildersleeve of Barnard College; the Rev. Herbert H. Farmer of Cambridge, England, and President R. H. Stafford of Hartford Seminary.

Heads Ministers

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.:—The Rev. H. Ross Greer, rector at Millbrook and dean of the convocation of Dutchess County, was elected president of the Dutchess Ministerial Association on May 6th.

Relief Agency

New York:—Formation of a new Protestant relief agency—Church World Service—to consolidate the work of the Church Committee on Overseas Relief and Reconstruction, the Church Committee for Relief in Asia, and the Commission for World Council Service, was announced here. President of the new agency is Harper Sibley, Episcopalian, who served as chairman of both the CCORR and CCRA. A. Livingston Warnshuis of the Reformed Church in America is executive vice president and will head the executive staff. Participating bodies in the new agency include the Federal Council of Churches, the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, and the American Committee for the World Council of Churches, each of which will appoint five members. Five members also will be appointed by the United Council of Church Women, and some 50 denominations have been invited to send representatives and participate in the new committee.

National Cathedral

Washington (RNS): — Seventy Protestant Episcopal women from all parts of the United States were entertained at the White House by Mrs. Harry S. Truman who is an ardent Episcopalian although her husband, the President, is a Baptist. The White House guests, members of the women's committee of the National Cathedral Association which held an annual session here, later were entertained at tea by Bishop Angus Dun of Washington.

The meeting of the National Cathedral Association was featured by appeals for "full support" of the Washington Cathedral building fund, and for an aggressive membership campaign to enroll more leaders in the national Cathedral Association. Mrs. Theodore O. Wedel, secretary of the association, said it now has about 10,000 members, but that the 6,000 Episcopal parishes in the United States should be able to enroll many more.

Father and Son

New Haven, Conn.:—Bishop Robert B. Gooden of Los Angeles and his son, Bishop R. Heber Gooden of the Canal Zone, were the headliners at the alumni reunion at the Berkeley Divinity School on May 31.

Children's Service

Boston: — Nearly 2,000 children from 180 Church schools of the diocese of Massachusetts attended the mission festival service at Trinity Church on May 19. There were 62 junior choirs with crucifers and banner bearers. The Rev. Richard S. M. Emrich, suffragan bishop-elect of Michigan, urged them to fight against the subtle evils that attack the human heart and against the hunger and injustice rife in the world. The service was conducted by the rector of Trinity, the Rev. Theodore P. Ferris, assisted by the Rev. Halsey I. Andrews, president of the Church School Union and the Rev. David R. Hunter, executive secretary of the department of religious education.

Opposes Revision

Worcester, Mass.:—Bishop Lawrence of the diocese of Western Massachusetts in addressing convention here stated that he opposed a revision in the marriage canon at this time. "It would seem to me a tragedy in a time such as this, when the marital mistakes of wartime are coming to a head, for the Church to appear publicly to lower the standard of its marriage canon." On unity with Presbyterians he said that the value of different emphases and approaches in the work and worship of Christ should be recognized. "We should be willing to admit that God does not exclusively channel his spirit or grace through the Episcopal Church."

Dean's Wife Dies

Detroit: — Mrs. Ruth Robbins O'Ferrall, wife of Dean O'Ferrall of St. Paul's Cathedral, died suddenly of a heart attack on May 13th in her 57th year. Bishop Creighton officiated at the funeral on May 16th.

Oregon Deputies

Portland, Oregon: — Deputies to General Convention from the diocese of Oregon: clergy: L. E. Kempton, Charles M. Guilbert, Louis B. Keiter, Charles S. Neville. Laymen: Dean Vincent, B. F. Young, George Todd, H. C. Fixott.

Assistant Bishop

New York:—The Rev. K. T. Mao, principal of Soochow Academy and in charge of Grace Church, Shanghai, has been elected assistant bishop of Kiangsu, China. He will assist the Rt. Rev. William P. Roberts, bishop of Shanghai. He is 39 years old. He expects to visit the United States before his consecration, probably in the early fall.

Rector's Wife Dies

Brookline, Mass.: — Anne Elizabeth Ogilby, wife of the rector of the Church of Our Saviour, the Rev. Henry Ogilby, died suddenly in her sleep the night of May 9th in her 59th year. Her death followed the close of the diocesan convention at which she had been one of the hostesses at the luncheon for the wives of the clergy. Bishop Sherrill officiated at the funeral on May 11.

Oppose Canon

Richmond, Va.: — The convention of the diocese of Virginia, meeting here May 15-16, went on record as opposed to the proposed marriage canon. The chief reason for the action was that "an unreasonable burden would be placed on the bishop" and that he is given no clear criterion for the basis of any decision he might be called upon to make.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

A feature of the meeting was an address by Congressman Jerry Voorhis of California, who is canonically a resident of Virginia, on the duty of the Church in the world today. He spoke particularly of what atomic warfare would mean to the world. The convention later urged that the control of atomic energy be placed under international control, urging the "surrender of such national sovereignty as shall be necessary to accomplish this end."

Canons were changed so as to allow rectors to invite persons of other denominations to partake of the holy communion. A resolution was also passed, after considerable debate, recommending to General Convention that bishops be permitted to license lay readers to assist at the communion service by administering the bread and wine.

General Convention deputies: clergy: Herbert A. Donovan, S. B. Chilton, F. J. Warnecke, A. C. Zabriskie. Laymen: Ivey F. Lewis, Blake T. Newton, Albert A. Smoot, John B. Minor.

South Carolina

Orangeburg, S. C.:—Bishop Hart of Pennsylvania was the headliner at the convention of the diocese of South Carolina held here May 14-15. Bishop Carruthers in his convention address urged more clergy for the missionary areas of the diocese; representation in the convention of Negro congregations; full support of the food conservation program; full support of the foreign missionary program.

General Convention deputies: clergy: M. E. Travers, T. S. Tisdale, William Way, A. R. Stuart. Laymen: E. W. Duvall, B. A. Moore, C. S. Dwight, S. R. Lucas.

Shells for Bells

Seoul, Korea: — Three hundred Korean churches whose bells were confiscated during the war have been equipped with substitute chimes made from Japanese 240mm. mortar shells originally earmarked by American military authorities to be dumped into the sea. Church authorities acknowledge as their benefactor Maj. Roy B. Southworth, ordnance officer, who intercepted a carload of live shells marked for disposal, had then rendered harmless, and presented the new "bells" to the churches. About the size of a large waste basket, the shells have proved satisfactory in their new role.

Visit Vermont

Johnson, Vt.: — The homes of white people in this vicinity will be opened to 85 Negro children from New York's Harlem for the third year of a novel experiment in race relations, it was announced here by the Rev. A. Ritchie Low, pastor of the United Church. Mr. Low, who started the movement three years ago, said a number of the young people are returning to the same homes they visited last year, their hosts having made this request. The Vermont plan has proved so successful that church groups in Illinois, New Hampshire, Connecticut and Maine have adopted it. The Maine Council of Churches is heading the movement there.

Give to Cathedral

London (wireless to RNS):—The King and Queen made the first contribution to the Coventry Cathedral reconstruction fund with a gift of 500 pounds ($2,000). Dowager Queen Mary presented a Bible given to her by the Y.W.C.A. on her marriage in 1893.

The rebuilding fund was opened with an appeal signed by Lord Montgomery, U. S. Ambassador John G. Winant, and other leading personages. Total cost of restoring the cathedral will be $1,200,000 pounds ($4,800,000), but one third of this sum will be met by payments from the war damage commission.

New Church College

Danville, Ind.:—The dioceses of Indiana and Northern Indiana, at their conventions, approved a plan for the two dioceses to jointly ac-

KAMP KAWANDAG
IN CANADA

A great summer opportunity for boys in Canada's famous Muskoka Lake region. Diversified land and lake program. Church influences. For information address director

Rev. J. S. Ditchburn, Episcopal Chaplain. University Station, Bafon Rouge, Louisiana.

+ SHRINE MONT + Vacations: May to October for clergy, laity, families, friends. In Alleghenies, 100 miles due west of Washington by main Greyhound Bus & auto. Grounds of rare mountain beauty; mineral sprgs.; many recreations; modern lodges, cottages, central halls and rectory. Noted Cathedral Shrine — perpetual trust of the Church. Rates: $20 to $30 a wk—room, meals, service, ample baths. Prospectus. Rev. E. L. Woodward, M.D., D.D., Dir., Shrine Mont. Orkney Sprgs., Va. CLERGY SEMINAR: July 15-26. 11 days, $28: evening lectures open to all guests. Presiding Bishop, Honorary Dean.

COMING IN AUGUST

Tips to Teachers

by

VERNON McMASTER

Church School teachers and those who are preparing to become Church School teachers will welcome this much-needed guide to some fundamental approaches and principles of effective teaching.

The author makes his instruction painless by allowing the reader to "sit in" on a series of Tuesday night meetings of a pastor and his five teacher-trainees. In nine provocative discussions, the pastor helps his future teachers to understand the purpose of teaching, the child's way of learning, the goals of a Church School teachers, the tools which teachers can use, the weaknesses and strengths of workbooks, the value of a Church School library, and many other teaching problems. From time to time, the pastor summarizes his most important directions in a number of easily remembered "tips."

The appendix contains questions which test the reader's assimilation of the material and provides definite procedures for the reader to follow in making practical application of the instruction.

Chapter headings are as follows: Selected for Service, The All-Important Desire, Thinking and Doing, Center of the Target, A Contributing Member, Goal Ahead, Helps for You, Planning Together, Judgment Day.

Probable price, $1.25

MOREHOUSE-GORHAM CO.

14 E. 41st St. New York 17

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

quire Central Normal College located here. Plans call for a change in the character of the institution to provide a liberal arts education coupled with religious training. It will also continue to train teachers for schools in Indiana. A new name will also be given the college.

Bible Movies

New York:—Many people will soon be able to see and hear as well as read the Bible due to the establishment of the Charles Anson Bond memorial trust fund, the American Bible Society announced today. With the monies made available through this fund, financial arrangements have been made to complete the first in a series of productions in which the complete scriptures of the Bible will be narrated in sound and acted out in color motion pictures. It is expected that production will be started on the first three of 26 featured pictures within the next few weeks.

Because of the great length of the text of the Bible, each picture will cover a specific episode or a small series of chapters. In all, it is estimated that one hundred and fifty feature pictures will be required to present both the Old and New Testaments. The first three will be devoted to the Nativity, the Woman of Samaria and the Parable of the Sower. Following these, will be 26 pictures covering the four gospels.

Goes to China

New York:—Miss Carman Wolff, at present at Windham House, New York, has been appointed to teach at St. Hilda's School, Wuchang, China. She is a communicant of Trinity Church, Melrose, Mass.

Negroes Seated

Williamsburg, Va.:—The diocese of Southern Virginia is to allow Negro parishes to elect delegates to its convention hereafter. Previously Negroes have been represented by delegates elected by the Negro convocation. The convention also took under consideration a proposal to change the name of the diocese to Jamestown.

Summer Conferences

Burlington, Vt.: — The department of religious education of the diocese of Vermont has announced three conferences for this summer, all to be held at Rock Point School. Teaching at the adult conferences are the Rev. Charles S. Martin, the Rev. Robett Rodenmayer, the Rev. Massey Shepherd, WITNESS columnist, the Rev. Gordon Graham, WITNESS editor, the Rev. Bradford Young, the Rev. J. B. Midworth, the Rev. Harry H. Jones, Mrs. Benjamin Brewster and Mr. Vernon DeTar, organist of the Ascension, New York.

A conference for young people and one for younger boys will follow later in the summer.

Summer School

Sewanee, Tenn.:—The theological school of the University of the South opens a summer school on July 29 to remain in session through August. The faculty will consist of M. B. Stewart of the General Seminary; the Rev. Massey Shepherd, WITNESS columnist, of the faculty of Episcopal Theological School; the Rev. R. K. Yerkes, Sewanee professor who is the director of the school.

Japan to Rebuild

Tokyo (RNS):—Plans to restore many of the 71 Tokyo Anglican churches destroyed during the war were initiated here following services in Hibiya Hall launching a movement for rehabilitation of the Anglican movement in Japan. More than 5,000 Japanese churchmen attending the service heard Bishop Shinji Sasaki proclaim the re-establishment of the Japan Holy Catholic Church (Nippon Seikowai). Seven Japanese bishops and over 50 clergymen participated in the service at which numerous Allied dignitaries were present. It was regarded as the largest Christian service since the beginning of the war.

Urge Rationing

Wilmington: — The Auxiliary of the diocese of Delaware, meeting here last week in annual convention, unanimously passed a resolution favoring the return of rationing in order that we may better aid peoples abroad. They also favored the maintenance of price controls. A resolution also was passed urging support of the United Nations "with the ultimate and definite objective of establishing a constitutional federal world government"; and another recommending equality of opportunity in work, education, culture, housing, health and recreation among all races. Copies of the resolutions were sent to the state's Senators and Congressmen.

Social Workers

Detroit:—A team of college students sent by the Friends Service Committee will enter the western area of Detroit this summer to engage in social work with an emphasis on recreation. The Friends have arranged to have the team in the city for July and most of August, and during their stay they will live at Trinity Church. The Rev. John L. Knapp, rector of the parish, states that the gymnasium will be fitted up as a dormitory, and the team will use the church kitchen for the preparation of their meals. The team is being brought to Detroit by the Detroit council of social agencies, and while here, they will do recreational supervision and work among mothers, teaching them "Tot-Lot" technique. Tot-Lots are playgrounds for very small children, and may be operated on such small pieces of ground as a single vacant lot.

A SERVICE OF HOLY BAPTISM

Prepared from various sources by

The Rev. Joseph H. Titus

Submitted for consideration of the Church as a substitute for the Prayer Book Service.

$4 for 100 copies
10c for single copy

The WITNESS
135 Liberty Street New York 6, N.Y.

Apostle Group from a three lancet "Te Deum" Stained Glass Window executed by Rambusch for a large Brooklyn Parish

RAMBUSCH
Designers Decorators and Craftsmen
2 West 45th St ~ New York 19, N.Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

CATCH-UP NEWS

EDITED BY W. B. SPOFFORD

The box on page four will explain what this is all about. . . . Bishop Haines of Iowa is not going on that trip to Alaska this summer to study work there. Transportation difficulties. Probably next summer. . . . Richard Emrich will be consecrated suffragan of Michigan on June 11 at the cathedral in Detroit. Bishop Sherill will preach. . . . Prof. R. W. Battenhouse of Vanderbilt University joins the ETS faculty, Cambridge, in September as associate prof. of Church history. . . . Bishop Heistand of Harrisburg at diocesan convention held at Williamsport, urged further study of Church unity and the marriage canon.

N. Y. University now has a board of chaplains, representing Catholics, Jews and Protestants, to give counsel to students. Four of the 13 are Episcopalians: Louis W. Pitt, F. S. Fleming, N. A. Seagle, Charles E. Gus. The latter in addition to being a priest is prof. of engineering at N.Y.U. . . . Bishop Gardner celebrated 10th anniversary of consecration by entertaining the clergy on June 3. . . . ETS, Cambridge, commencement today, June 6. Commencement preacher, Raymond Calkins; alumni service preacher, Bishop Angus Dun.

At General Seminary commencement honorary doctorates went to Bishop Barry, Albany; Bishop Banyard, New Jersey; Bishop Gesner, South Dakota; Dean Kelley, Seabury-Western; Hamilton Kellogg, Houston, Texas; Canon M. F. Williams, Washington Cathedral. Ten men graduated, with ten others, former graduates, receiving degrees for additional work.

Presbyterians

No further plans for union with Episcopal Church was submitted to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, meeting at Atlantic City. They are waiting for some definite action on the part of Episcopal Church. "Several documents drafted in joint conference during the last eight years have been reported to General Assembly," the report stated, "but none has been acted upon by the Episcopal General Convention." A motion calling for negotiations leading to union with a third Church, in addition to Episcopal and Presbyterian South, was then unanimously adopted. (Their publicity office in N. Y. with whom we checked said "third" meant that the Presbyterians will consider an invitation to negotiate with any Church.) . . . Tightening of Presbyterian law pertaining to the remarriage of divorced persons was urged by a permanent committee. Now pastors are allowed to officiate at remarriage of the innocent parties or persons obtaining divorce for adultery or desertion, with remarriage to take place at least one year after final decree. . . . Union again: a committee of laymen reported to the Assembly that laymen want specific reports of union "not merely general reports of progress." The laymen also asked for more adequate representation of women in all legislative bodies of the Church. Likewise urged that youth, 20-35 be given a much larger share in official life and policy making. . . . The Rev. Frederick W. Evans, Troy, N. Y., pastor, was elected moderator over the Rev. Raymond Kistler, pres. of Beaver College (464-366). He succeeds the Rev. William B. Lambe of St. Louis. . . . Based on a two-year study a committee reported on placement of clergy, stating that ministers want some sort of help from a central authority but wish liberty to decide whether or not they will move to another church. Congregations also want help in removing pastors but with freedom to reject man recommended. A national dept. composed of 8 ministers and 7 elders has been set up to try to handle the problem.

Church and Politics

A group at the National Baptist Convention, held at Grand Rapids, tried to eliminate from the budget support for the Federal Council of Churches. Said Council too much mixed up in politics. They were defeated. . . . Convention asked President Truman to recall Myron C. Taylor as his representative at the Vatican by unanimous vote. . . . Meanwhile Southern Baptists sent a representative to join other Protestants who saw the President on June 5 urging Taylor's recall.

Vatican newspaper, Osservatore Romano, warned Romanists they would be exposed to "sanctions of canon law" if they voted for Marxist or any anti-clerical party. On June 1, eve before Italian election, Pope Pius gave his third address telling people how to vote. Previously he had told a large assembly of women of their obligation to vote and called for support of candidates who "respect religious freedom." . . . Cardinal Suhard of Paris issued a pastoral just before the French election on June 2 urging Romanists to vote for "the maintenance in France of spiritual ideals conformable with the genius of the nation." . . . In Boston at the annual meeting of the Catholic Press Ass'n a resolution was passed stating that "we consider ourselves morally bound to see justice done to the Polish and Baltic peoples" but then went on to say that "since it has been the traditional policy of the U. S. to avoid interference in the internal affairs of other nations we deplore the attempt to dictate to Spain, Yugoslavia and the Argentine Republic or any other country what kind of government they should have or who shall be their leaders."

While the Pope is telling Italians how to vote and a Cardinal is telling the French how to vote, the Roman Church in Czechoslovakia has forbidden priests to make any political speeches. Father Joseph Straka nevertheless spoke at a political rally and charged "reactionary" priests with seeking to monopolize the Catholic vote for "allegedly pro-Catholic, democratic and freedom parties." He said that the clergy oppose communism because of "fear of confiscation of Church lands. The Church has 20 per cent of all arable land in Slovakia and the average village priest has a splendid income. The clergy are materialistic, proud patriarchs and have little contact with the common people. Socialistic trends among younger priests are smothered by the terrorism of the older clergymen." He asserted that everything written abroad about alleged persecution of the Church in Slovakia is "a pack of lies."

In Knoxville, Tenn., a meeting of the American Fellowship Club, said to be an affiliate of the Ku Klux Klan, was recently held at which two men claiming to be ministers lashed out at "communism" and sounding a call for "white supremacy." . . . Leading Protestant ministers of Atlanta condemned efforts to revive the Klan. Presbyterian Herman Turner said: "People who endorse the Klan are vulgar, stupid, out-of-date, un-American, un-Christian." Joining in the condemnation were Dean Raimundo de Ovies of the Episcopal Cathedral and the Rev. Sumner Guerry, rector of the Epiphany.

Church of England

The Archbishop of Canterbury told the upper house of the convocation of Canterbury that any plan for a united Protestant Church of England must be preceded by an agreement on certain fundamental princi-

(Continued on page 18)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SCHOOLS OF THE CHURCH

St. Andrew's School

An all-year boarding school for boys

West Barrington, Rhode Island

Established in 1893

Rev. Irving Andrew Evans, Rector

St. Paul's Polytechnic Institute

Lawrenceville, Virginia

St. Paul's offers Courses on the four year College level in the following fields—Industrial Education, Agriculture, Business Administration, Home Economics and Teacher Training.

J. ALVIN RUSSELL, A.M., D.D., President

MERCERSBURG

A distinguished preparatory school beautifully located in the mountains of Southern Pennsylvania. Modern equipment. Small classes; 10,000 Alumni. Close personal supervision of each boy. 85 miles from Baltimore and Washington on Greyhound route. Beautiful Chapel with famous Carillon. Junior School. Summer Session.

Charles S. Tippetts, Ph.D., Head Master
Box W, Mercersburg, Pa.

THE CHOATE SCHOOL

Wallingford, Connecticut

A catalogue of the School will be sent upon request—with addresses of parents who know the School intimately through their sons.

The School tries to make its charges in the way great surgeons and doctors charge.

St. Mary's School

Sewanee, Tennessee

College Preparatory, General Courses
Junior Department

Dramatics - Music - Riding

Address: The Sister Superior C.S.M.

ST. BERNARD'S SCHOOL

Gladstone, New Jersey

A Church Boarding School for Boys
Beautifully situated in the Somerset Hills of northern New Jersey.

Grades 7 through 12
Founded 1900 — Enrollment 78
Tuition, Board and Lodging $750

Address The Rev. Robert L. Clayton

St. Faith's School

Chartered by the Board of Regents
Approved by Synod of New York and New Jersey

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.

The Rev. Leonard W. Steele, B.A., B.D.
Rector and Principal

SAINT MARY'S HALL

Faribault, Minnesota

81st Year

Bishop Whipple's famous church boarding school for girls, high school only. Thorough college preparation, comprehensive general courses. Beautiful buildings. Healthful climate.

Margaret Robertson, M.A., Headmistress

Wooster School

Danbury, Conn.

Small School. Near New York. Reasonable tuition. Accredited. Individual attention. Cardinal principles are Religion, Intellectual Excellence, Simplicity, Hard Work.

Write Rev. JOHN VERDERY
Ridgebury Road, Danbury, Conn.

THE NORTHWESTERN MILITARY AND NAVAL ACADEMY

Lake Geneva, Wisconsin

A distinctive preparatory school for boys 13 to 18, grades 9 through 12. Fireproof buildings and 90 acre campus, beautifully situated along lake shore. Excellent academic and military training together with a full complement of athletic activities. For information write to: The Rev. James Howard Jacobson, Superintendent and Rector.

ST. AGNES SCHOOL

An Episcopal Country Day and Boarding School for Girls

Excellent College Preparatory record. Special courses arranged for girls not contemplating college. Day pupils range from Kindergarten to College Entrance. Boarders from Grade 8 to College Entrance.

MISS BLANCHE PITTMAN, Principal
Albany New York

ST. MARY'S HALL

San Antonio, Texas

A residence and day school for girls. . . . Preparing for the leading colleges. Fully accredited curriculum. . . . Training in leadership and Christian character. Emphasizing outdoor sports, throughout the year. 4 acre campus—modern buildings—swimming pool.

Katharine Lee, A.M., Head Mistress
117 East French Place

National Cathedral School

Resident and day school for girls. Located on 58 acres of the Cathedral Close. College preparatory and general courses. Strong emphasis on the Arts.

MABEL B. TURNER, Principal
Washington 16, D. C.

BRECK SCHOOL FOR BOYS

Day and Boarding, Grades 1 thru 12

Preparation for college and that experience we call Life under highly trained men. Athletics of all kinds, including horseback riding.

Chester H. Desrochers, Headmaster
2477 Como Avenue, W. St. Paul 8, Minn.

HOWE MILITARY SCHOOL

Training young Americans for leadership. R.O.T.C. Accredited college preparatory, business courses. Junior School. Small classes. Every boy participates in sports. Balanced program. Episcopal. Established 1884. Summer Camp, boys grammar school age. Catalogue:

COL. B. B. BOUTON
13 Academy Place, Howe, Indiana

SEWANEE MILITARY ACADEMY

Thorough prep. for college. Summer session. Small classes—every boy instructed how to study. Private mountain domain of 10,000 acres in summer resort area. Endowed: moderate rates. 79th year. Catalogue.

Superintendent Box W, Sewanee, Tenn.

CRANBROOK

Preparatory school for boys in grades 7 through 12. Post-graduate course. Beautiful, modern buildings. Single rooms in fire-resisting dormitories for all resident students. Small classes. Strong faculty. Graduates in leading colleges. Exceptional opportunities in arts, crafts, sciences, music, competitive scholarships. Broad program of athletics. Near Detroit. Over night by train from New York, six hours from Chicago. Catalog.

Rev. W. Brooke Stabler, Cranbrook School, Box W, Bloomfield Hills, Michigan

VALLEY FORGE

"At the Nation's Shrine"

Fully accredited college preparatory and Junior College for young gentlemen 12 to 20. Highest scholastic standards. 16 modern fireproof buildings. All sports. Motorized Field Artillery, Cavalry, Infantry, R.O.T.C. Band. For Catalog address:

Box W, Wayne, Pa.
Military Academy

LENOX SCHOOL

A Church School in the Berkshire Hills for boys 12-18 emphasizing Christian ideals and character through simplicity of plant and equipment, moderate tuition, the cooperative self-help system, and informal, personal relationships among boys and faculty.

Rev. Robert L. Curry, Headmaster
Lenox Massachusetts

The Hannah More Academy

Est. 1832. Episcopal school for girls, 10 to 19 years, accredited to leading colleges. Pleasant location in the country. College Preparatory and General Courses, Music, Art. All athletics and riding carefully supervised. Modern Equipment. Moderate rates because school not run for profit.

Janet Ward, B.S., M.A. Columbia University
Headmistress
Reisterstown, Md.

St. Paul's School for Boys

Mt. Washington, Baltimore, Md.

A Boarding and Day School for Boys
Established 1849

Boarding department—Grades 6 to 12
Day department—Grades 3 to 12

S. Atherton Middleton, Headmaster
Rev. Harry Lee Doll, rector of St. Paul's, Baltimore, chaplain and president of trustees.

SAINT MARY'S HALL

BURLINGTON, NEW JERSEY

Boarding and Day School for Girls.
Strong Elementary Department
College Preparatory, and General Courses.
Music - Art - Dramatics - Sports
Careful attention to individual growth and progress.

FLORENCE LUKENS NEWBOLD,
Headmistress

ST. AUGUSTINE'S COLLEGE

Raleigh, North Carolina

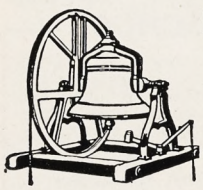
Accredited Class A Church College for Negro Youth. Co-educational. B.A. and B.S. Degrees. Teacher Training; Religious Education; Commerce; Music; Physical Education. Address: President.

Legal title for bequests: Trustees of St. Augustine's College, Raleigh, No. Carolina.

Voorhees N. and I. School

Junior College Denmark, S. C. High School

Co-educational. Accredited by State Dept. of Education of S. C. and the Southern Association of Secondary Schools and Colleges. Under the two Dioceses of S. C. and The American Church Institute for Negroes. Expenses reasonable. Limited scholarship aid for worthy students. Apply:



J. E. BLANTON, Principal.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Write us for
Organ Information
AUSTIN ORGANS, Inc.
Hartford, Conn.

Memorial Windows
In accordance with the best traditions of the craft. Notable installations in forty states and five foreign countries.
Illustrated material on request
The D'Ascenzo Studios
founded 1896
1604 Summer Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

ALTAR BREADS ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED
SAINT MARY'S CONVENT
KENOSHA • WISCONSIN

MENEELY BELL CO.
22 RIVER ST., TROY, N. Y.
BELLS

R. GEISSLER, INC.
71-79 W. 45th St., New York 19, N. Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE·BRASS·SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS
EST 1877

VESTMENTS
Cassocks - Surplices - Stoles - Scarves
Silks - Altar Cloths - Embroideries
Priest Cloaks - Rabats - Collars
Custom Tailoring for Clergymen
1837 Church Vestment Makers Over One Hundred Years 1946

COX SONS & VINING, Inc.
131 East 23rd Street, New York 10, N.Y.

Need a LAXATIVE?
Black-Draught is,
1-Usually prompt
2-Usually thorough
3-Always economical

25 to 40 doses only 25¢
Get BLACK-DRAUGHT
CAUTION: USE ONLY AS DIRECTED

Iowa Convention

Waterloo, Iowa:—Bishop Haines in addressing the convention of Iowa meeting here May 14-15, presented a program to be achieved by the time the diocese celebrates its centennial in 1953. He asked for an extension fund to further missionary work in the diocese; doubling the capacity of the summer conference grounds at Clear Lake; a student center with resident chaplain at Grinnel College; increased funds for clergy training and to aid women workers; increasing the episcopate fund to give relief to diocesan assessments.

The proposed marriage canon was approved in substance and principle, and a resolution was passed urging the resumption of rationing and a "famine meal" a week in every Christian home to conserve food.

General Convention deputies: clergy: Charles J. Gunnell, Stanley M. Fullwood, LeRoy Burroughs, Gordon V. Smith. Laymen: C. M. Cochrane, H. L. Horton, G. W. Martin, J. A. Thompson.

CATCH-UP NEWS

(Continued from page 16)

ples. . . . The convocation appealed to allied representatives to "make peace in Europe without delay" but to stand firm on the principles for which the United Nations fought, mentioning specifically "freedom, justice, and the right of all peoples to choose the form of government under which they will live." . . . Bishop Samuel Heaslett of Sheffield, England, is on his way to Japan. He will be joined there by Bishop Charles S. Reifsnider of the U.S.A. and the Rev. H. G. Watts of the Church of England in Canada to discuss rebuilding of Church properties in Japan.

ORGANIST WANTED
Suburban New York church with boy choir is seeking Organist and Choirmaster. Salary dependent upon experience. State age and references. Box J, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty St., New York City 6.

WOMAN DIRECTOR
Wanted a woman director of religious education for prominent New York Episcopal parish. Church School of 500. Single, 30 to 45 years. Apartment provided. Box WD, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty St., New York 6, N. Y.

WANTED
Director and Ass't Director for Church Orphanage in Eastern Seaboard city. Salaries: $1,800 and $1,500 respectively, plus room and board. 50 children. Must be religious, trained in social service, and, of course, fond of children. Write, stating qualifications, to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty St., New York 6.

A YOUNG PRIEST
with a position in New York seeks living quarters for himself, wife and baby in or near New York. Will take early services and work in the parish evenings without pay in return for small apartment. Write: Box B. THE WITNESS. 135 Liberty Street. New York 6.

WILL SUPPLY
Priest is available for services in or near New York City, June 8, 15, 22 and the five Sundays in August. Available for Sunday duty only. Box S, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6.

Everything for the Episcopal Church
but vestments
A broad statement but we'd like to prove it.
Ammidon and Company
Horace L. Varian
Horace L. Varian, Jr.
31 South Frederick Street
Baltimore 2, Maryland

PURE IRISH LINENS NOW IN STOCK
for all Church needs, supplies constantly arriving, good qualities, also fine cottons. Samples free.
Marv Fawcett Company
Plainfield, N. J. Box 146

CATHEDRAL STUDIOS
Washington & London, England. Linens and materials by the yard, surplices, albs, Altar Linens, stoles, burses & veils. Materials by the yard. See my NEW BOOK "CHURCH EMBROIDERY" & CHURCH VESTMENTS a complete instruction. 128 pages, 95 illus. Price $5.67. And my HANDBOOK for ALTAR GUILDS, price 50c. Miss L. V. Mackrille, 11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington 15, D.C. 30 minutes from U. S. Treasury. Tel. Wisconsin 2752.

SURPLICES — STOLES
VESTMENTS
CHURCH HANGINGS
ALTAR LINENS
CASSOCKS
CLERICAL SUITS — CLOAKS
RABATS—RABAT VESTS—COLLARS—SHIRTS
Choir Vestments in All Styles
Inquiries Invited
C. M. ALMY & SON, INC.
562 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.

VESTMENTS for CLERGY and CHOIR
Altar Linens . . . Embroideries . . . Tailoring . . . Episcopal Flags. Send for Catalog
J. M. HALL, INC.
14 W. 40th St., New York - Tel. CH 4-3306
Office & Salesroom
American Distributor of Stained Glass Windows for James Powell & Sons, Ltd., London, Eng.

The Payne-Spiers Studios Inc.
Studios at Paterson, New Jersey
Carved Wood
Chancel Renovations Church Furnishings
Murals Memorials Tablets
Stained Glass
-- Inquiries Solicited --

HEADQUARTERS

for CHOIR GOWNS
PULPIT ROBES
Vestments • Hangings • Stoles
Embroideries, Etc.
NEW CATALOG on Request
NATIONAL CHURCH GOODS SUPPLY CO.
Division of
NATIONAL ACADEMIC CAP & GOWN CO.
821-23 ARCH ST. PHILADELPHIA 7, PA.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

THADDEUS CLAPP
Rector of St. Mark's, Worcester, Mass.

A note of thanks for publishing the article by the Rev. DuBose Murphy "What Is Christian Marriage?" (WITNESS, May 9) It seems to me to throw a great deal of light upon a very confused subject. As every priest I have talked to about the subject is in favor of requiring civil marriage as a preliminary to a religious ceremony why can't our Church come out openly and endorse such a change? Incidentally it might also start working for a reform of existing marriage and divorce laws in the general direction of uniformity throughout the country. It would seem that if we had some order in civil marriage codes then we would be in a better position to examine Church discipline in relation to marriage. I also liked his idea of a changed Prayer Book service.

* * *

MISS L. M. CONRADE
Churchwoman of Upper Darby, Pa.

As a survivor of the recent steel strike and a resident of the Philadelphia area where strikes are going off like popcorn over a hot fire, I am interested in your labor articles. I think the Church should take more of an interest in the workers. They might at least be offered a choice between Christ and Lenin. Right now they have a choice between Lenin and a charming scheme known as the "pool of unemployed." It seems to me that the Church should be more active in teaching the brotherhood of all men as contrasted to the communists brotherhood of the workers. Class war is certainly not going to solve the world's problems, nor is the brotherhood of man without the fatherhood of God. If the Church displayed as much evangelistic zeal as the comrades it would be much better represented among the workers. I am not a red-baiter and I don't believe there are any plots afoot financed by Soviet gold. I even agree with the communists that the capitalist system is wrong. But I don't like their idea of class warfare. I think that the Christian system of eliminating class distinctions is better than the system of eliminating the people of certain classes.

* * *

P. S. DICKEY
Layman of Puyallup, Washington

The renewal of my subscription is the direct result of your printing in recent numbers the advertisements of Louis Wallis. I allowed my subscription to expire because, week after week, in the material printed I have failed to find in it any indication of a trend in meaning so ably expressed by Mr. Wallis in his advertisements. Perhaps for the same reason you did not publish Mr. Wallis' material as articles, I withheld writing you the reason I did not desire my subscription continued. May I express my appreciation and commendation to you for accepting and publishing these advertisements.

It is my belief that not only has God been found in world history, but also a very definite expression of his will. Again I believe that this may be proved beyond any reasonable doubt. To me this means ideals that may be attained are now known to be facts to which we must conform. During the past fifty years the fundamental theories upon which the sciences were based have been subject to revision. Mathematics alone, I understand, has remained constant.

In this general upheaval it is my belief that Christianity has remained constant. It is also my belief that the interpretation of Christianity as taught by the Church must undergo an upheaval and a revision in meaning. There is one truth and that truth is God. Christianity has had that truth. Science now has it. I believe that religion and science have now reached the cross roads and from now on must combine, recognize their equal dependency, and through the interchangeability of their knowledge, bring understanding.

ST. JOHN'S MILITARY SCHOOL
Salina, Kansas

Since 1887 St. John's has been perpetuating the cultural traditions of the Church by stressing sound scholarship in Christian atmosphere.

Grades 6-12. Fully accredited. Bar I.L. Summer School and Camp in Colorado Rockies. Boys 8-15. Splendid equipment. 10,000 acres.

The Rev. R. L. Clem, Rector

St. Margaret's House
School for Christian Service and Deaconess Training School of the Pacific
A graduate school preparing women for Church positions in the fields of religious education, social service, and evangelistic work. Opportunity to work for advanced degrees. Special training for work in Orient.
ADDRESS THE DEAN
1820 Scenic Ave. Berkeley 4, California

CATHEDRAL CHOIR SCHOOL
NEW YORK
A Boarding and Day School for Boys
Established 1849
A BOARDING SCHOOL for the forty boys of the Choir of the Cathedral of Saint John the Divine. The boys receive careful musical training and sing daily at the service in the Cathedral. The classes in the School are small with the result that boys have individual attention, and very high standards are maintained. The School has its own building and playgrounds in the close. Fee—$350.00 per annum. Boys admitted 9 to 11. Voice test and scholastic examination. For Catalogue and Information address:
The CANON PRECENTOR,
Cathedral Choir School,
Cathedral Heights, New York City

ROWLAND HALL
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
Boarding and Day pupils. Accredited. Preschool, Lower school, College Preparatory and General courses. Graduates in many eastern and western colleges. All branches of music, dancing, art, drama. Indoor pool, tennis courts, riding, weekends of winter sports. Pleasant home life. Environment of geographical and historical interest. Altitude 4500. Boarding $1,000, Day $120-$350.
The Right Rev. Arthur W. Moulton, S.T.D., Rector

SCHOOLS

The Hospital of Saint Barnabas and the University of Newark offer a full course in NURSING
to qualified High School graduates. Scholarships available. Classes enter in February and September
Apply to
Director of Nursing
HOSPITAL OF SAINT BARNABAS
685 High Street Newark, N. J.

DE VEAUX SCHOOL
FOUNDED 1852
A Church school for boys. Thorough preparation for college. Military system of student government, developing sense of responsibility. Charges for grades seven and eight $1000; grades nine through twelve $1050. For catalog, address THE HEADMASTER, DeVeaux School, Niagara Falls, New York.

HOLDERNESS
In the White Mountains. College Preparatory and General Courses. Music and Crafts. For boys 12-19. All sports including riding. 200 acres of woods. New fireproof building. Individual attention. Home atmosphere.
Rev. Edric A. Weld, Rector
Box W. Plymouth, N. H.

MARGARET HALL
Under Sisters of St. Helena
(Episcopal)
Small country boarding and day school for girls, from primary through high school. Accredited college preparatory. Modern building recently thoroughly renovated includes gymnasium and swimming pool. Campus of six acres with ample playground space, hockey field and tennis court. Riding. Board and Tuition $800. For catalog, address: Sister Rachel, Prin. O.S.H., Box A. Versailles, Kentucky.

FORK UNION
MILITARY ACADEMY
An Honor Christian School with the highest academic rating. Upper School prepares for university or business. ROTC. Every modern equipment. Junior School from six years. Housemother. Separate building. Catalogue. Dr. J. J. Wicker, Fork Union, Virginia.

CARLETON COLLEGE
Laurence M. Gould, D.Sc., President
Carleton is a co-educational liberal arts college of limited enrollment and is recognized as the Church College of Minnesota.
Address: Assistant to the President
CARLETON COLLEGE
Northfield Minnesota

KEMPER HALL
KENOSHA, WISCONSIN
Boarding and day school for girls offering thorough college preparation and training for purposeful living. Study of the Fine Arts encouraged. Complete sports program. Junior School department. Beautiful lake shore campus. Under direction of the Sisters of St. Mary. For catalogue, address: Box WT.

Virginia Episcopal School
Lynchburg, Virginia
Prepares boys for colleges and university. Splendid environment and excellent corps of teachers. High standard in scholarship and athletics. Healthy and beautiful location in the mountains of Virginia.
For catalogue apply to
George L. Barton, Jr., Ph.D. Headmaster,
Box 408

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

A New and better way for Japan?

THE BIBLE POINTS TOWARD IT

THE Emperor of Japan has renounced his claim to divinity. Will the Christian God replace him? Will these Japanese children and millions of others like them find Christ and His way? Or will they fall prey to some false religion which may lead them astray again, to become a menace to world peace?

The answer is largely in the hands of Christian Americans. Today these youngsters are a clean white page upon which the name of Jesus Christ can be enduringly inscribed. The first essential task is to get to them the story of Jesus in their own language as it is written in the Gospels.

Japanese Christian leaders have asked for immediate shipment of 100,000 Bibles and 2,500,000 Testaments. Our military authorities have assured the necessary transportation facilities. One million Testaments are already ordered and in process of production. All that is lacking is the funds.

We must not lose this great God-given opportunity to win a whole nation for Christ.

How many Bibles at $1 each, and Testaments at 20 cents each, will you give?

Please mail this coupon today!

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY
Bible House, 450 Park Avenue, New York 22, N.Y.

I gladly enclose $..... to send the Scriptures to Japan.

Name.....

Address.....

W-48 City..... State.....

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The WITNESS

10¢ A COPY

LIBRARY COPY

JUNE 13, 1946

WILLIAM AND MARY COLLEGE HAS FINE CHAPEL CHOIR . . . .

CHURCH SOCIETY FOR COLLEGE WORK

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

THE CATHEDRAL OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE
NEW YORK CITY
Sundays: 8, 9, 11, Holy Communion; 10, Morning Prayer; 4, Evening Prayer; Sermons 11 and 4.
Weekdays: 7:30, 8 (also 9:15 Holy Days, and 10, Wednesdays), Holy Communion; 9, Morning Prayer; 5, Evening Prayer (Sung).

GRACE CHURCH, NEW YORK
Broadway at 10th St.
Rev. Louis W. Pitt, D.D., Rector
Daily: 12:30 except Mondays and Saturdays.
Sundays: 8 and 11 A.M. and 4:30 P.M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion 11:45 A.M.

THE HEAVENLY REST, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue at 90th Street.
Rev. Henry Darlington, D. D.
Sundays: Holy Communion 8 and 10 A.M.; Morning Service and Sermon 11 A.M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion, 11 A.M.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S CHURCH
NEW YORK
Park Avenue and 51st Street
Rev. Geo. Paull T. Sargent, D.D., Rector
8:00 A.M. Holy Communion
11:00 A.M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P.M. Evensong. Special Music.
Weekdays: Holy Communion Wednesday at 8:00 A.M.
Thursdays and Saints' Days at 10:30 A.M.
The Church is open daily for prayer.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH
Madison Ave. at 71st St., New York
The Rev. H. W. B. Donegan, D.D., Rector
8:00 a.m. Holy Communion.
9:30 a.m. Church School.
11:00 a.m. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 p.m. Evening Prayer and Sermon.
Wed., 7:45 a.m., Thurs., 12 noon Holy Communion.

THE CHURCH OF THE EPIPHANY
1317 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Charles W. Sheerin, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 A.M.; 8 P.M.
Daily: 12:05.
Thursdays: 7:30 and 11 A.M.

ST. THOMAS' CHURCH, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue and 53rd Street
Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, S. T. D., rector
Sunday Services: 8 and 11 A.M.
Daily Services: 8:30 A.M., Holy Communion.
Thursdays: 11 A.M., Holy Communion.

THE CHURCH OF THE ASCENSION
Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street, New York
The Rev. Roscoe Thornton Foust, Rector
Sundays: 8 and 9 H. C.; 11 A.M., 4:30, 8 P.M.
Daily: 8. Holy Communion.
5:30 Vespers—Tuesday through Friday.
The Church is open all day and night.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL
Buffalo, New York.
Shelton Square
The Very Rev. Edward R. Welles, M.A., Dean
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30 and 11.
Daily: 12:05 noon—Holy Communion
Tuesday: 7:30 A.M.—Holy Communion
Wednesday: 11:00 A.M.—Holy Communion.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH
Atlanta, Georgia
435 Peachtree Street
The Rev. J. Milton Richardson, Rector
9:00 A.M. Holy Communion.
10:45 A.M. Sunday School.
11:00 A.M. Morning Prayer and Sermon.
6:00 P.M. Young People's Meetings.

The WITNESS
For Christ and His Church

EDITORIAL BOARD: Frederick C. Grant, Editor; Arthur Lichtenberger, Chairman; William B. Spofford, Managing Editor; Lane W. Barton, Beverley M. Boyd, Dillard H. Brown, Roscoe T. Foust, Charles K. Gilbert, Hugh D. McCandless, Howard Chandler Robbins, William K. Russell, Sydney A. Temple Jr., Joseph H. Titus, William M. Weber.

★

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS: D. B. Aldrich, J. A. Bell, T. S. Carruthers, Adelaide Case, G. K. Chalmers, E. M. Cross, G. M. Day, Angus Dun, A. W. Farlander, T. P. Ferris, J. F. Fletcher, John Gass, C. H. Gesner, C. L. Glenn, G. C. Graham, J. M. Groton, G. I. Hiller, I. P. Johnson, T. R. Ludlow, C. S. Martin, R. C. Miller, Walter Mitchell, A. T. Mollegen, E. L. Parsons, E. L. Pennington, Rose Phelps, L. W. Pitt, Otis Rice, Cyril Richardson, Paul Roberts, V. D. Scudder, W. M. Sharp, W. B. Sperry, C. W. Sprouse, D. S. Stark, W. B. Stevens, J. W. Suter, S. E. Sweet. Alexander Zabriskie.

★

THE WITNESS is published weekly from September 15th to June 15th inclusive, with the exception of the first week in January and semi-monthly from June 15th to September 15th by the Episcopal Church Publishing Co. on behalf of the Church Publishing Association, Inc. Samuel Thorne, President; Charles A. Houston, Vice-President; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, Treasurer; Frederic D. H. Gilbert, Secretary.

★

The subscription price is $3.00 a year; in bundles for sale in parishes the magazine sells for 10c a copy, we will bill quarterly at 5c a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter, March 6, 1939, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3. 1879.

JUNE 13, 1946
Vol. XXIX No. 35

CLERGY NOTES

ALVAREZ, FRANK R., curate of St. Stephen's church, Miami, Florida will become rector of Grace Church, Menomonie, Wis., effective July 1.

ANKER, HERMAN, former army chaplain is now assistant of Christ Church, Indianapolis.

BRAITHWAITE, WILLIAM A., formerly locum tenens of Zions Church, Greene, N. Y. is now rector of Trinity Church, Camden, N. Y.

DONALDSON, ROBERT G., was ordained priest by Bishop Jackson at Trinity, New Orleans, La., on May 15.

DUBOIS, ALBERT K., on terminal leave from the army as chaplain has resumed his duties as rector of St. Agnes Church, Washington, D. C.

GIDDINGS, RANDALL, assistant at St. Stephen's, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., was ordained priest on May 25 by Bishop Sterrett.

GOODWIN, CONRAD H., has resigned as rector of St. John's, Waynesboro, Va. because of illness and is retiring from the active ministry.

HALE, GEORGE B.S.H. was ordained priest by Bishop Maxon of Tennessee at Grace-St. Luke's Church, Memphis, May 21.

HONAMAN, EARL M., priest in charge of St. Stephen's Cathedral, Harrisburg, Pa., becomes rector of St. John's, Carlisle, Pa., June 23.

MIARS JR., BERNARD G., recently ordained as deacon will become curate of St. Stephen's church, Edina, Minn., effective July 1.

SMITH, OLIVER DOW, has resigned as vicar of St. Paul's, Mount Vernon, Wash., and associated missions to retire from the active ministry.

THOMPSON, PAUL, rector of Epiphany, Glenburn, Pa., has accepted the rectorship of Christ Church, Reading, Pa., effective October 1.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

CHRIST CHURCH CATHEDRAL
Main and Church Sts., Hartford, Conn.
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30, 10:05, 11 A.M., 8 P.M.
Weekdays: Holy Communion, Monday, Friday and Saturday 8 A.M. Holy Communion. Tuesday and Thursday, 9 A.M. Holy Communion, Wednesday, 7 and 11 A.M. Noonday Service, daily except Monday and Saturday, 12:25 P.M.

CHRIST CHURCH
Cambridge
REV. GARDINER M. DAY, RECTOR
REV. FREDERIC B. KELLOGG, CHAPLAIN
Sunday Services, 8:00, 9:00, 10:00 and 11:15 A.M.
Weekdays: Wed. 8 and 11 A.M. Thurs., 7:30 A.M.

TRINITY CHURCH
Miami
Rev. G. Irvine Hiller, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services 8, 9:30, 11 A.M.

TRINITY CATHEDRAL
Military Park, Newark, N. J.
The Very Rev. Arthur C. Lichtenberger Dean
Summer Services
Sunday
8:30 and 11:00 a.m.
Week Days
Tuesday, Thursday, Friday at 12:10; Wednesday and Holy Days, Holy Communion, 12 noon.
The Cathedral is open every day

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
Montecito and Bay Place
OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA
Rev. Calvin Barkow, D.D., Rector
Sundays: 8 A.M., Holy Communion; 11 A.M., Church School; 11 A.M., Morning Prayer and Sermon.
Wednesdays: 10 A.M., Holy Communion; 10:45, Rector's Study Class.

GRACE CHURCH
Corner Church and Davis Streets,
ELMIRA, N. Y.
Rev. Frederick T. Henstridge, Rector
Sundays: 8 and 11 A.M.; 4:30 P.M.
Daily: Tuesday and Thursday, 7:30 A.M.
Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Holy Days, 9:30 A.M.
Other Services Announced

ST. MARK'S CHURCH
Texas Avenue and Cotton Street
SHREVEPORT, LA.
Rev. Frank E. Walters, Rector; Rev. Harry Wintermeyer, Curate.
Sundays: Holy Communion, 7:30; 9:25 A.M. Family Service; 11 A.M. Morning Prayer. Holy Communion, first Sunday, 6 P.M., Young Churchmen.

CHRIST CHURCH
Nashville, Tennessee
Rev. Peyton Randolph Williams
7:30 A.M.—Holy Communion.
9:30 and 11 A.M.—Church School.
11 A.M.—Morning Service and Sermon.
6 P.M.—Young People's Meetings.
Thursdays and Saints' Days—Holy Communion 10 A.M.

GRACE CHURCH
105 Main Street, Orange, N. J.
Lane Wickham Barton, Rector
SUNDAYS
8:00 A. M.—Holy Communion
11:00 A. M.—Church School
11:00 A. M.—Morning Prayer and Sermon (Holy Communion first Sunday each month)
7:00 P. M.—Young People's Fellowship

CHRIST CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA
Second Street above Market
Cathedral of Democracy
Founded 1695
Rev. E. Felix Kloman, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services: 10 and 11 a.m.
Also—October-June, 4 p.m.
Weekdays: Tue., Thur., 12 noon; Wed., Fri., 12:25.
This Church Is Open Every Day.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

VOL. XXIX. No. 34

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

JUNE 13, 1946

Publication Office, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago 37, Ill. Editorial Office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

The Society For College Work Has a Notable Record

Samples of the Kind of Situations They Have Dealt With Encourages Wholehearted Support

By C. Leslie Glenn

Washington, D. C.:—The Church Society for College Work was started by two clergymen who sat down and marked a Living Church Annual, their parish files, and prepared lists of their friends and acquaintances and sent this message to the persons checked:

"The Church will never keep its strong clergy in the college towns as long as their salaries are so low. Will you give toward helping the college parishes provide a better ministry to students? About $100 a year would be a welcome gift from you!"

No one paid any attention to the last sentence, but gifts started coming in at $5 and $10, and the first year, 1935, about $3,000 was collected. It came mostly from the clergy and bishops, which was encouraging, because it showed that they generally shared the opinion of the founders, that the university was the place where help was needed. The smallness of the amount collected did not bother the Society because it was supposed that a large endowment would at once be secured and the work would flourish on the income from that. No such thing happened. The Society has never had an endowment except one gift of $10,000 from Bishop Fiske.

But the Society looks like an endowment and unconsciously acts like one. When out of its meagre resources, it gives $300 to the West Texas State Teachers' College to enable the vicar ministering to 700 Episcopal students to heat his house in the winter, the gift is called a "grant", which sounds like the Rockefeller Foundation giving $300,000 for cancer research. It's as if a parish treasurer reported a grant toward the telephone bill and a grant toward painting the kindergarten room.

The directors were chosen for their ability to handle millions of dollars, and when the millions come, they will be as capably managed as the Church Pension Fund. But right now to read the names on the letterhead always seems inconsistent with reading the kind of letter that is usually sent: "We are sorry to inform you that the Church Society for College Work can not make a grant of $65 toward the moving expenses of the new rector you have called. We are sure he will do a splendid work with the students at the college across the street from your church and regret deeply our inability to help you secure his services."

Money was not the Society's only object however. From the start, it considered itself a fellowship of prayer as well. In hundreds of churches and at private devotions daily the ministry to students is prayer for. Then too the Society has been a rallying point for exchange of ideas, for conference, for encouragement to lonely workers. In a given diocese one or two clergymen may be the only ones who happen to have colleges near their parishes, hence their opportunities and difficulties are not shared by their brethren at conventions and clergy conferences. Such men have received stimulus and ideas through the Society.

The Rev. W. Brooke Stabler, then chaplain of the University of Pennsylvania, was the first president. Through his efforts alone, a few generous people were led to give larger sums and in five years, the annual income of the Society had grown to $30,000. Here it has remained almost constant. During the war years the larger contributions were withdrawn but an equal amount was made up by many smaller gifts. This was according to the original understanding with the larger givers that they would make their gifts only for a few years. So this has been entirely healthy and indicates an increasing measure of popular understanding and support.

The Rev. John M. Burgess, appointed student chaplain at Howard University, Washington: the Rev. C. Leslie Glenn resumed the presidency of the Church Society for College Work: Miss Barbara Arnold, in charge of college work in New England

I was honored in being chosen the second president of the Society. As I had just entered upon my duties at St. John's Church, Washington, the Society moved to Washington, where it is intended that the headquarters will remain permanently. When I was called to active naval duty, the Rev. Charles H. Cadigan, rector of Christ Church, Bloomfield Hills, Michigan, was made president. Under his leadership, notable progress was made, in spite of war-time limitations. A sum of $100,000 was secured for college work in the state of Michigan. This was raised and will be administered by a separate board of directors living in Michigan, who can watch closely the use of the money in the colleges of that state. That board will be a regional board with a semi-autonomous relationship to the national board.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

This success in Michigan indicates one of the important future trends of the Society. It will stimulate local giving, and will teach regional groups how to secure support for the work in the colleges of their section of the country. This is shown by the development during the life of the Society of the Proctor Foundation at Princeton, the Bishop Rhinelander Foundation at Harvard, the endowment for college work in Louisiana, the college work in the diocese of Pennsylvania, and notably the endowment of the chaplaincy at the University of Pennsylvania by President Thomas S. Gates, one of the directors of the C.S.C.W. These and many other supporting movements for the Church's work in universities scattered over the United States have the common bond that their chief backers are also backers of the C.S.C.W. The Society is a "union" of those who are working to increase the resources on many campuses.

In the meantime, the income of the Society did not increase appreciably, but these collateral activities received wide support and are an encouraging sign of the Church's awakening to the importance of the university. The Society, however, must itself get more money for its treasury, so that it can in turn stimulate local efforts, and supplement local efforts in places that are still too weak to go alone.

In this emphasis, it was extremely fortunate in 1943 that the Society secured the services of Donald M. Wright as executive director. Mr. Wright is an engineer and business man, active in Church work, and he brought to the Society both devotion and skill.

During its early years, the question was asked as to the relation of the Society to the National Council. "The National Council has a secretary for college work, why have a Society?" is the way the question is usually put. The answer is that the Society exists to help the secretary for College Work, and to extend his influence by giving him more resources. The National Council spends about $40,000 a year on college work, but this amount will never increase appreciably, because the Council's chief concern must rightly be foreign and domestic missions.

The secretary of the Council is always elected secretary of the Society, and all of the living ex-secretaries of the Council are on the executive committee of the Society, with the exception of Bishop Wright, who is one of the directors. There has always been the closest cooperation between the two bodies. The Society is in a sense the extension of the National Council in the direction of the universities. But it has an independent status which enables it to move men into situations where more official action would be undesirable and where speed is essential.

When the war ended abruptly and the returning veterans began to take up their studies, it was important that those who had signified some interest in the ministry should be encouraged. This had been done ably by the Rev. Almon Pepper of our Church Missions House for the Presiding Bishop during the war, but he could not go on. The Society at once offered a salary to the National Council to carry on this work, and when the Council voted for understandable reasons that it would be inexpedient to add to its staff, the Society itself engaged a clergyman to devote all his time to it. Every veteran who expressed any interest in the ministry while in service is being kept in touch with by the C.S.C.W. and his rector and bishop notified.

Late last fall a group of younger clergy in Washington, Church Society members, were struck with the opportunity of the Episcopal Church at Howard University, one of the chief Negro colleges of the country. They persuaded the President of the University and the dean of the school of religion to take on an Episcopal priest to teach courses in religion and to act as special chaplain to Episcopalian undergraduates. Then they persuaded an outstanding clergyman of our Church to take the post. The C.S.C.W. gladly voted the salary for this work which will undoubtedly influence many colored students toward the Episcopal ministry but which will also provide a place for graduate study in theology for Negroes from other colleges.

The Canterbury Club at Christ Church, Seattle, which ministers to the students of the University of Washington. The Rev. Lewis J. Bailey is in the center and Miss Marion Barclay, director of student affairs, at the extreme left

Seven years ago at Vassar College, the Society was instrumental in raising funds to place a chaplain on the college staff. The Society supported him for three years and by that time the college authorities were convinced of the value of this office and continued the work as part of the regular faculty salaries.

These are spot samples of the kind of situation in which swift, imaginative aid is possible through the instrumentality of the Church Society for College Work. Still operating on a small budget, it is trying in every way to state the need for Christian influences in the colleges, and as fast as it collects any money to further this good work, it pays it out to the neediest. It enters its second decade with a hearty and prayerful band that may in time increase to a number sufficient to meet the great opportunity before the Church in the colleges.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Charles H. Cadigan Presents College Work Report

Announces the Election of C. Leslie Glenn As New President and Moving of the Office

By Sara Dill

Bloomfield Hills, Mich.: — The Rev. Charles H. Cadigan, President of the Church Society for College Work, announced on June 3rd, that the board of directors have selected the Rev. C. Leslie Glenn, Rector of St. John's Church, Washington, to succeed him on July 1st, as President of the Society. At the same time, the national headquarters of the Society will move from Bloomfield Hills to Washington, D. C., because it is felt that this is a natural center and one that is near the College of Preachers, where so many of our clergy visit. The new location will be 821 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Mr. Cadigan, as President, has done an outstanding piece of work in strengthening the Society during the difficult war years. He believes more than ever in the opportunity of the Church to inspire college youth to seek and uphold Christian standards in a world which so desperately needs them. He will continue as Vice President of the Society and also will be in charge of the Michigan regional office.

In his report to the Society's membership, Mr. Cadigan stated: "We can only claim to have made a beginning in our good work. A democracy hangs together only through a Christian way of life. It becomes clearer each day that a critical and most vital area in the conflict going on between God and the secular world lies right in our colleges. Although a relatively small group, these students, our future leaders, can be the saving minority of tomorrow. In the days ahead we must strive mightily to be assured that many more strong chaplains, women counsellors, and parish clergy are located in our college centers."

The following recent developments were reported for those who like specific figures on college work today: About 100 chaplains with the armed forces have stated their desire to serve in college posts. Most are married and need financial aid in such posts where the stipends average only $2500 a year.

College and university enrollments are expected to double by 1948 from the war-time figure of 1,172,000. A late government report states that 620,465 veterans are already studying.

College chaplains everywhere report the veterans are an outstanding group, hard-working and keenly aware of the spiritual implications of these times.

Within the last three years the Church Society has directly or indirectly inspired the raising of $500,000 (new dollars) for college work, notably in Louisiana, Southern Ohio, Minnesota, and Michigan.

A total of 1809 new members have joined the Society in the last three years. Of the old membership all but 10% have remained faithful contributors.

Informal parent membership drives have been organized in 16 dioceses involving 450 parishes. Everywhere, the Society's story has been received sympathetically. A by-product of this has been to spur the dioceses to greater action.

In closing his report to the Society's membership, Mr. Cadigan stated: "You can help here—each parish should have a Church Society for College Work committee. Just think, if only 50% of the parents in our Church who have children in college should join this Society, we would have 50,000 new members. In the meantime, our total national budget when combined with that of the National Council is still pathetically small—less than $100,000 a year; or about one-fourth the amount spent by the army and navy commission for chaplains during the war. I feel chagrined and challenged that the Presbyterian Church has just allocated from its Reconstruction and Advance Fund $500,000 toward the salaries of 39 new full-time college workers."

EFFECTIVE WORK AT SMITH

Northampton, Mass.:—One of the most effective programs of college work is that being conducted at Smith College by St. John's parish under the leadership of its rector, the Rev. R. N. Rodenmayer. The front door of the church opens on the main street and the back door on the campus. One-third of the student body are Episcopalians and during their college years students are gathered into the formal family life of the parish. An effort is made to demonstrate the relevance of the Christian faith to students in their own terms. There is a student chapter composed of one student from each college house appointed by the rector on an annual basis who serves in a liason capacity. The center of the program is worship. Sunday services are well attended and a corporate communion with breakfast on Wednesday mornings averages forty-five the year around. There is a student choir, altar guild and the church school uses the college girls for teachers. The rector holds open house every Friday night. Students are also permitted to borrow books from the rectory library and they circulate constantly.

Charles H. Cadigan presents a report as the retiring President of the Church Society for College Work

---

STUDENT CHAPLAIN IS NAMED

Seattle, Wash.:—With the appointment of a full-time priest for University work this coming fall, the diocese of Olympia is accepting the important challenge of the Church's work at the University of Washington located here. Christ Church, situated only three blocks from the campus, has become the center of student Church life during the past two years. Under the leadership of the rector, the Rev. Lewis J. Bailey, who will now devote full time to the work, assisted by Miss Marion Barclay, director of the Canterbury club, an expanding program will be carried out.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SIX HUNDRED FOR MINISTRY

Washington, D. C.:—As a result of a questionnaire sent to all Protestant chaplains in March, 1945, by the general commission on army and navy chaplains, nearly 600 service men expressed an interest in studying for the ministry, many of whom were Episcopalians, according to the Rev. C. Leslie Glenn, president of the Church Society for College Work and a former chaplain. Most of them were actively interested in the Church prior to their war experiences and all of them appear to have a strong sense of the opportunity for service that the Christian ministry offers.

ARCHBISHOP TO VISIT NEW YORK

New York (RNS):—The Archbishop of Canterbury will have a busy program when he comes to America in September to attend the General Convention at Philadelphia. On September 9 he will be the guest of honor at a luncheon here under the auspices of the American committee for the World Council of Churches. He will also speak at a joint service sponsored by the Protestant Council of the City of New York at Riverside Church the same evening.

ASKS FOR NEW DEPARTMENT

Marquette, Mich.:—Action recommending that General Convention liquidate the present department of Christian education of the National Council and establish a new department of religious education was taken recently when the convention of the diocese of Northern Michigan passed a resolution favoring the change.

Meeting in St. John's Church, Negaunee, the delegates also heard discussions on the proposed marriage canon and the merger with the Presbyterian Church. It was the concensus of opinion that the two churches are not ready for any such step and that any attempt to force a union at this time would be disastrous.

General Convention deputies: the Rev. Messrs. Carl G. Ziegler, W. P. D. O'Leary, H. Roger Sherman, E. R. A. Green; Messrs. W. P. Chamberlain, Vernon W. Aikins, L. I. Noyes and Briton Hall.

RUSSIAN ORTHODOX TO RECONSIDER UNION

New York (RNS):—Further steps toward reconciliation of the Russian Orthodox Church in America with the Church in Russia are expected to result from a sobor of the American Church scheduled to open in Cleveland next November 19. The sobor, or general council, will be the first held since 1937 and will be attended by eight bishops, 300 priests, and 300 laymen, representing 350 Orthodox dioceses in the United States and Canada.

Previous attempts to bring about reunion of the so-called dissident Russian church in this country with the Moscow Patriarchate ended in a stalemate last December. But at a meeting of Church delegates in New York about the same time, according to informants, a vote showed 90 per cent present favored reconciliation with Moscow on the basis of full autonomy for the American Church.

CANADIAN GROUP DISCUSSES UNION

Toronto, Ontario:—Action toward union of the Church of England in Canada and the United Church of Canada was discussed here recently by representatives of the two communions meeting as a joint committee. There has been talk of the possibility of such a union for several years in certain sections of both churches, but the present meetings constituted the first concrete move in that direction. The committees will report to their official bodies in September. Union of the two groups would bring a total membership of approximately 4,000,000.

Chaplain Nathaniel C. Acton visits the Sigma Psi Sigma at the University of Maryland

MISSOURI RURAL WORKERS MEET

St. Louis:—Clergy of the diocese of Missouri heard the Rev. C. M. Serson, S.S.J.E., Bracebridge, Ontario, outlined methods of rural work at a recent conference held May 30 and 31 at Bishop Scarlett's home, Webster Groves, Missouri. He stressed the importance of long service in any contemplated work, and suggested the technique of a permanent well-paid clergyman assisted by several younger men in what is called the "greater-parish field". He claimed that the perpetuation of denominational differences in rural areas was largely economic. The diocese is planning to open several new projects in the rural mission areas.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

EDITORIALS

Our Great Opportunity

WHEN millions of young men and women left their homes to go into the armed services, it was obvious that their home churches could no longer minister to them. Letters from the rector and an occasional parish leaflet might keep friendship warm but the ministry of the churches as it is generally understood cannot be maintained by these passing contacts. So clergymen were at once recruited to go into the army and navy. When some demurred, "How can we keep up the home church if the clergy leave for the war?" the answer was that the home church had left the old building and the minister was needed with the boys and girls, not with the building. In any event what happens in wartime with our parishioners going into the army and navy happens all the time in the colleges. Boys and girls between the ages of eighteen and twenty-one are generally not at home during most of the year. And this is true of millions, not simply of a small privileged group who can afford higher education. The opportunity to go to college is open today to any ambitious boy or girl with scholarship aid, self-help, etc. The Church is not yet awake to the similiarity between the opportunity for the minister in the services and the opportunity for the minister in the colleges. Or, to put it negatively, we are still trying to work a parish system based on geographic lines when for four years most of our ablest young people are no longer within the confines of our parish. This has been true for one hundred years and is one of the reasons why the Church has been losing influence. It is simply because its best young men are away from their rectors for an appreciable time.

But, during the past fifty years the results of the failure to recognize this situation have been marked. For during the past fifty years two things have happened: (1) the colleges have grown phenomenally beyond anything that is known in any other country. (2) the colleges have become secularized. The growth of the colleges in the United States is a social phenomenon that is hardly grasped. Its consequences for the Church are that while we might have missed one boy in the parish in 1875, today we miss twenty boys and ten girls, since for the same reason they are not at home from September to June. The gradual secularization of the colleges has not been deliberate but has been partly due to the complexity of modern education which calls for specialists and leaves out the old-time college president who was in holy orders. Then too, a vicious circle operates in that it is not possible to get enough men and women professors to teach religion because in turn the cause of Christianity has not been presented strongly enough to those who might become teachers of religion.

Some people believe that the parish next to the university is the answer to every problem, but here it should be pointed out if the parish church is weak and struggling, it usually cannot commend itself to faculty and students; and if it is a large prosperous church, the clergy are apt to be too busy with the parishioners to have much time for undergraduates. Work should be done through the parish churches, but there must be enough clergy on the staff of sufficient caliber supported by sufficient endowment to enable them to have time for faculty and students. This is the work to which the Church Society for College Work is dedicated. Here is a need and an opportunity and the Society means to meet it by raising money to support chaplains to the universities just as we did chaplains to the army and navy. The National Council cannot do this alone. The late Bishop Murray when president of the Council and Presiding Bishop said that it would always be unfortunate that the National Council had started as a missionary society which absorbed the board of religious education, because the Council would never get away from its primary concern with domestic and foreign missions. Bishop Murray did not want it to and no one wants to deflect from this great purpose which should be increased and expanded. But side by side with it must go a ministry to the colleges, to strengthen Christianity at home and to provide among other things, the missionaries for the field.

"QUOTES"

STUDENT work involves a bit of everything: counseling, speaking, preaching, teaching, leading discussions, planning meetings, projects, conferences, leading worship, calling on sick students in the infirmary — all of this and often much more, among both groups and individuals. Some say student work is a limited and partial ministry but those of us who have worked at it say that it can be the total ministry of Christ and his Church to the entire life of the campus, to the whole scene of American education and university life.

—Helen Turnbull
Director of Windham House.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

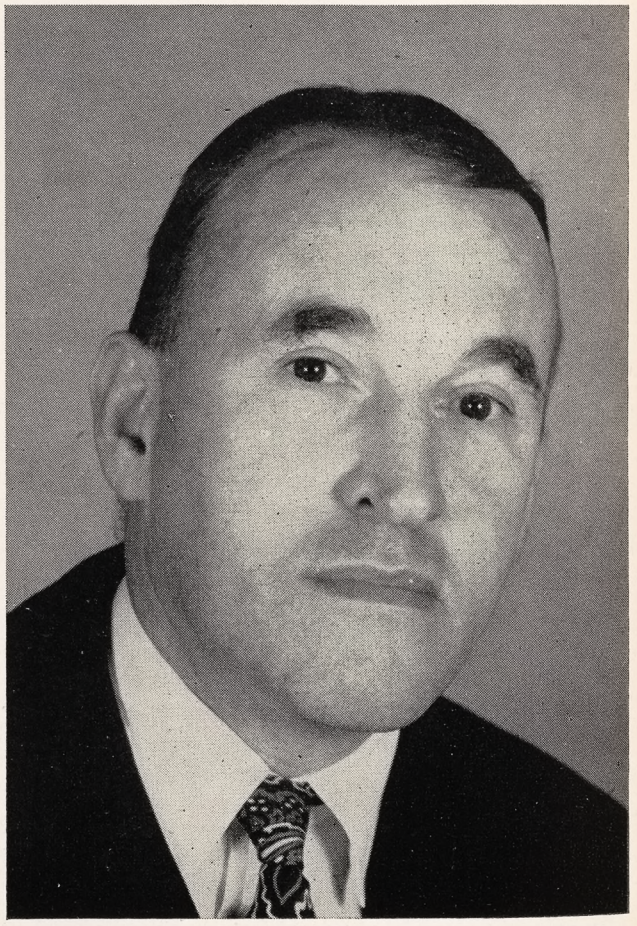
Pass It On to a Friend

IF YOU are a regular subscriber to THE WITNESS it is possible that you may receive two copies of this number, since it is mailed to all members of the Church Society for College Work and others, many of whom are doubtless regular subscribers. If you do receive an extra copy won't you kindly pass it on to a friend?

We also again remind you that THE WITNESS appears every other week during the summer. The next number therefore will be June 27th and will be devoted to the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship.

And if you will act on address changes as we suggested in the issue of June 6th it will be greatly appreciated—that is, do not request changes unless you are to be away for an extended time. Rather arrange to have your summer copies forwarded. Thanks.

Vets on Campus Are Serious



by Stephen Bayne Jr.
Chaplain, Columbia University

THE extraordinary thing about veterans on our campuses is their seriousness. Perhaps it is not as extraordinary as it seems when you reflect on what many of them have been through, indeed on what all of them have been through. For their seriousness is the result not specifically of battle and the rigors of active campaigning as much as it is of loneliness, the necessity of making decisions on their own, the need for finding new and untried standards of judgment, the experience of evaluating other men in their reactions to the same environment and the same temptations, and the experience of a common lot in a community of men. Added to this is the sense of having a strictly-defined and limited but nevertheless clearly-needed usefulness in society, (the first such sense many of them have ever had)—the result, in a phrase, of conscription and the experience of military life.

But extraordinary or no, the fact is that the accustomed life of an American campus is immensely changed these days. It is reported that on one large eastern campus 29 men showed up, out of 2,500 students, for the competition for the campus newspaper; (150 would have been an average turnout in 1936). Four baritones attended the first rehearsal of the glee club of another college, where thirty would have been expected in a "normal" year. The writer recently went to an intercollegiate debate with a total attendance of six. A major sport of another well known university—rowing—is currently threatened with extinction because out of 2000 students not enough had reported to make competitive rowing possible.

All this is so at a time when the pressure for admission to college and the number of students already in college has broken all records. 7,500 men are applying for 500 places in one well-known American college, and that is by no means a unique proportion. There is not one first-rank American college which is not already committed to handle more students than it has ever handled in a peacetime year before.

It is their seriousness which makes the deepest impression on you. This unprecedented tidal

Donald M. Wright has done a notable work as the Executive Director of the Church Society for College Work sweep and flood of students, this inundation of students—they are there for business and no mistake.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

In part it is occasioned by the simple fact that if they do not do at least average work, their government support stops. In part it is due to the fact that they are older than the ordinary run of college students. In part it is due to the fact that many of them are married. In part it is due to the fact that enough of them have had serious and important experiences that have matured them far beyond their years to make a profound difference to their whole generation. These are all significant and immeasurable facts.

BUT running through all these considerations is the fact that all of these students (whether they were prepared for it or not—whether they even knew it or not) have been required to play a man's part in life before they usually, if indeed ever, would have been required to. It has been demanded of them that they put their lives in jeopardy for their country and its beliefs. And once a man's life has been required of him, he can never be the same again. He may be better for it, or poorer and more bitter and more self-regarding—but he will not be "normal." Nor will his life be "normal"—in college or out of it.

That is the situation and the opportunity that is open to every student pastor and to the church which the student pastors serve. It is not a situation which can be met with tea-parties or smokers or club meetings or dances or organizations or literature or Sunday night suppers. It is not an opportunity which can be grasped or implemented with the toys and recreations of an 18-year old. It can only be met and used man-to-man. There is no way for the serious concerns of a veteran student to be satisfied except by meeting, knowing, testing, exhausting another man who has faith and who knows what he is talking about. He will not accept anything less.

If he has strong and true religious experience he will require of his pastor guidance in the application of it. If, as is equally likely, he has seen religion from afar, and shared in it as a stranger, and wondered about it, he will require of his chaplain interpretation and explanation. If he has received the interior verification of faith, as many did in the stresses of war, he will want his minister to add strength to strength and help him to establish his faith in the solid matrix of reason. If, as is quite as probable, he still is a seeker, wondering about the possible meaning and truth of religion in the atomic age, wondering about the relationship of religion to the tangled politics and meanings and complex history of this age, he will hope to find in his parson-friend a tranquil, strong, realistic ground for belief.

Whatever his situation, it is one which requires a man to answer it. It will not be answered by a group or a church service or a book alone. This is a man's world and he is called to play a man's part in it—that is the seriousness of the veteran. And he will find the help we want him to find only in the knowledge of another man, who believes and who can help his unbelief.

To the person who cares about college students and their religion — and that should be every member of the Church — one thing is needed: that we shall work and pray and give to send men to these veterans in college — to set the college clergy free from other tasks to spend their time man to man with veterans—to give the Church in colleges more pastors than we now have—to put more men to work—and to hold up their arms so that they can get their work done. It is very simple, and very, very serious indeed.

Dramatic Arts and Religion

By
WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD, JR.

FOLLOWING the excellent film, Marie Louise, the Swiss production unit has come up with another first-rate motion picture, The Last Chance. It concerns itself with the flight from war-torn Italy to neutral Switzerland of three war prisoners and a group of refugees of many nationalities, Dutch, Polish, Serbian, Austrian, German and Italian. Assisted by the working members of the underground, the majority of them make it after heroic sacrifice and cooperation.

The plot has been used many times in films. But in this instance it is noteworthy because it vividly delineates the unification of the motley group who at first were mutually suspicious and selfish. As they see the humble folk of Italy—a cart-driver, a farmer, a village priest, the members of the guerilla units—risk their homes and lives to push them along to freedom, they begin to see themselves as the "raison d'etre" for the war and, in the last analysis, the instrument for world fellowship, justice and peace.

The film does not preach the message. It doesn't even state it. And yet as the film develops its characters and plot, this is the overwhelming impression that wells up in the spectator. That is a sign of fine propaganda and fine motion picture production.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

A refreshing quality of the picture is that it employs five different languages, French, Italian, German, Serbian and English, and shows how the barrier of language is made nil by persons working in a common cause. Indeed the language which comes out poorest is English because one of the war-prisoners, an American, is a slangy individual who insists upon calling everyone "Jackson." On the whole he is pretty obnoxious.

The acting is uniformly fine with Ramona Cola in the part of the village priest who is shot by the Nazis for his underground activity, giving an outstanding performance. As with Marie Louise, this film is greatly enriched by the scenic background of the Swiss Alps. They give one the impression that the struggles of this little band of harassed people have an eternal quality and significance. The Christian doctrine of a providential God certainly supports this feeling.

To move from the "sublime to the ridiculous," I warn you against a "turkey" entitled The Bride Wore Boots reported to star Barbara Stanwyck, Robert Cummings and Diana Lynn. The only star of this picture is a horse named Albert.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

THE accomplishments of four people who graduated from college as recently as 1942 may not be out of place in this College Work Number. Within a few months of each other, I married Bebe Iannelli (sister of Fons whose navy pictures we ran on our covers this past winter) to John Ober and Marcia Spofford to Tony Russell. Graduating from Antioch College, these classmates moved to Greenmont Village, Dayton, a five hundred-family federal housing development that had just opened. They first decided the village needed a co-op and called a meeting to present the idea. There was opposition but enough people subscribed to open a store in one of their homes where a few groceries were sold. Today the co-op operates a super-market doing a business of about $14,000 a month and next week opens a modern co-op drugstore. This will be followed by a hardware and appliances store. John Ober is president; Marcia, secretary.

In the winter of 1944 Marcia, who specialized in child training in college, decided the village, with many working mothers, needed a nursery. A small one was opened under her direction. Today there are fifty tiny tots spending their days in a well-equipped new building, with a staff of four trained teachers and a dietitian, with Marcia as chairman of the nursery committee.

Next these young college graduates got the idea that there ought to be a village paper. They went to the activities committee, which collects 25c a month from each family for community affairs, and persuaded them that there should be something in the budget for a paper. So now there is a sixteen-page, multigraphed magazine, The Greenmont Forum, that is delivered free once a month to every home. It contains village news, editorials and articles on important topics, a good page for children, ample space for the gripes and opinions of villagers. And when short of copy, Tony, the chairman of the editors generally fills by lifting something from THE WITNESS.

But these four youngsters didn't stop there. Bebe works as an organizer for the United Electrical Workers (C.I.O.); Tony, an industrial engineer, finds time for volunteer organizing for the Professional and Office Workers (C.I.O.); Marcia was elected president of the Greenmont Women's Club a few months ago and turned it into a place for the discussion of current events, domestic and foreign. All are active in the Dayton Progressive Citizens' Committee which is affiliated with the Independent Citizens' Committee of the Arts, Sciences and Professions and Tony right now is busy helping to organize a Dayton branch of the Win the Peace Congress.

With it all Marcia became the mother of Lynn, now three, and Peter, one; Bebe presented husband John with twins just the other day. So home life has not been neglected.

Since the editing of this number of THE WITNESS and the last, Marcia was hit with polio and died on June 1, her twenty-seventh birthday. She died in the hospital where her friend Bebe, in another wing, was at the moment nursing her new-born twins.

As her father I'd like to say this: the answer to death is life. One mourns a wasted life. One rejoices for a useful life, even though the loss of her gnaws at your vitals. This girl lived a full life and, with her classmates, accomplished much for noble ends. Those who share the purposes for which she stood have closed ranks to bear down a bit harder to further their accomplishments.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

A Plea for College Chaplains

by Larry Barrett

Student at Princeton University

RIGHT at the moment a lot of people are lying awake nights, and they have reason. Strikes are crippling reconversion all over the nation. Prices climb steadily in spite of every effort to prevent inflation. A lot of luxuries and some necessities are almost impossible to find. Overseas a militant and aggressive Russia builds a new empire, while millions starve in Europe and Asia. These are immediate problems, and good reasons for worry, but many persons who are most worried about them are unaware of their greatest danger — the danger that by their very immediacy Russia, and labor, and inflation will make us forget other things less pressing at the moment, but far more important.

One of these far more important things is the education of our young people. We are apt to give too little thought to the problems which our colleges face now, for the newspapers headlines are crowded with more dramatic things. In spite of the slight attention they are given, these are appalling problems, and their very seriousness is demonstrable in facts. Facts both sounder and more numerous than can be summoned by most persons who talk about OPA.

The first of those facts is the common knowledge that our colleges and universities are running at far beyond the capacity for which they were built. They expect to be asked to teach next year just about twice as many young men and women as they ever did before the war. At Ann Arbor the University of Michigan has taken over the entire housing project that sheltered the workers of the Willow Run plant during the war. Students travel the eight miles to the university by 'bus. Others are living in trailers. Garages have been reconverted. Nearly everyone with a spare room in town has taken in students. There is nothing unique about Ann Arbor for it is happening all over the country.

This means that our universities and colleges will have to meet many problems of teaching and housing, but it means something much more important, too. It means that more of our youth are being given college training today than ever before. It means that American education, has, right now, a far richer opportunity than it has ever known.

THE second fact is that the kids who are in college today will be running this nation fifteen, twenty, and twenty-five years from now. Tomorrow's leaders in business are taking economics in crowded classrooms from Maine to California. Rooming, working, and learning with them are tomorrow's leaders of labor. The boys who will come in their time to take President Truman's and Mr. Byrnes' high places are gathered with their fellows at some campus coke counter. And most important, a high proportion of the men who will elect them — the doctors, lawyers, teachers and clergymen of the future—are busy with their books this very moment..

This fact, too, comes down to just one thing. It means that the kind of education we give now is going to make a lot of difference with the kind of country our children make for themselves tomorrow. Too often we have come to feel that the main reason for a college is to provide a man with tools he can use later in business or in his profession. We have overlooked the fact that perhaps the best thing four years on the campus could do for a boy would be to teach him to live a rich and productive life as a useful member of society.

The Rev. Henry Lewis, rector of St. Andrew's, Ann Arbor, has a conference with a student of the University of Michigan

Under this pressure to help make its students successful many colleges have shifted their curriculums to give new courses which satisfied the demand for the practical and the technical. They became training schools for business and the professions, but in so doing they lost their function as an education for living.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Most important, our colleges are no longer closely connected with the Church and the Church once was the great guarantee that a college education would be more than mere book learning. One hundred years ago there was hardly a college or university president who was not a clergyman. Today few are. In those days, with the colleges secure the Church wisely poured its money and its efforts into foreign missions. Still running under the momentum of two generations ago it continues to do so unaware that with this complete loss of influence on the colleges its most urgent need is at home.

For all these reasons a college education now has come down to pretty much a matter of keeping the marks above the flunk line, learning the facts, and getting the sheepskin. Yet knowledge without a dominating ethic is simply power without control. If we are not to let the present opportunity slide idly by and if we are to give our students the kind of an education that will enable them to make something decent of the world we leave them, we have got to help them to find a sense of values strong enough to dominate and control the facts they learn. We have got to find it soon.

THAT leads us to the next fact which is simply this—the one place where we can find such a scale of values and such an ethic for our youth is in the Christian faith. That modern man must turn to a deeper spiritual life if he is to find the answers to his present problems has more and more often been stated of late. It has become almost a truism. Indeed, there are few in our nation who would deny it now even if Hitler and Communism do. Nothing MacArthur has said was received with more profound approval than his remark on the decks of the Missouri that the future must be of the spirit. Admitting it to be true has nothing to do with accomplishing it.

The average boy or girl goes up to college as freshmen with a pretty complete set of values. Usually they are good ones, too—values he has learned in a good home, at his local high school, or in his church. But they are not really his own. They are something he has accepted. They are stamped on the outside and they don't last long. It doesn't take long to find one has to grow more through from inside. That is no easy thing to do. Usually some specific person has to help.

The pattern is familiar. Freshmen go to a nine o'clock class in sociology. The professor is an out and out socialist. He has all the answers. The facts are indisputable. There is no denying him even for a student that believes democracy is the only system for this nation of ours. At ten he leaves his economics for a course in English. This time the professor is a point-blank hedonist. Again there are the indisputable facts, the completely logical arguments. How is a freshman to answer him even if he was brought up in a Christian home? Then, at eleven he leaves English for history. Now it is the economic motive that is stressed. Life is nothing but a competitive balance of greeds. Every war, every event, is explained on the basis of sheer economic selfishness. Again there are the indisputable facts and undeniable logic.

Eventually, of course, the student does the normal and natural thing. It begins to dawn on him that logic and statistics can prove anything. If he has no other alternative he will probably accept the man who has the most impressive arguments and the best battery of facts. But if he can find someone he respects and admires he will chuck the lot of them. He will turn to a person who demonstrates the validity of his standards not by talking but by living. He will get to know him, if given half a chance. He will respect him and absorb his scale of values and will bank on them, logic or no logic.

The Rev. and Mrs. Muir entertain students at the University of Michigan. Mr. Muir of St. Andrew's is Episcopal Chaplain at the University

And the best and most direct way to provide our students with people like that who live the Christian faith is to give them capable Christian chaplains. This does not mean that you need clergymen on the campuses only to conduct chapel on Sundays. It does not mean stunted ascetics and milk-sop priests. It means experienced, well-rounded men who talk a language students understand and live a life they admire. More specifically, it means to get hold of some of these young chaplains who served through campaigns in Germany and the Pacific, before they take parishes where their abilities will profit less.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

A Full Time Student Chaplain At Howard University

John Burgess as the First Full Time Negro College Chaplain Marks Real Advance Step

Edited by Philip L. Shutt

Washington:—For the first time in the Church's work among Negroes, the Episcopal Church is providing a full-time student chaplain in a great Negro university. The Rev. John M. Burgess, at present in charge of St. Simon of Cyrene, Cincinnati, has been appointed to this position at Howard University by Bishop Angus Dun of Washington. This most important step in the developing strategy of our colored missionary work is being taken with the conviction that the Church must bring its influence to bear upon that level of life where the future leadership of the Negro race is being trained. Howard University, with an average enrollment of over 3,000, draws its student body from all sections of America and many foreign lands, and it is today perhaps the most influential, as well as the largest, institution for the higher education of Negroes in the nation. Bishop Dun and the Church Society have recognized the vital contribution the Episcopal Church can make to the religious life of the race's leaders by bringing to the Howard campus a chaplain who can devote his entire ministry to this field.

Mr. Burgess has also been invited by Dean Stuart Nelson of the Howard School of Religion to teach two courses. It is expected that as an important part of his work he may interest some men in the Episcopal ministry.

Students Study Problems

Avon Park, Fla.:—Earnestly seeking Christian solutions to their problems both on and off the campus, twenty-one Episcopal students met recently at diocesan camp Wingman for a Canterbury Club conference.

Acknowledging that college life today challenges the faith of Christian youth, conference members sought answers to their problems. Typical of their thinking was the following statement: "Christian life on the campus means more than merely going to church. The Christian attitude must be maintained at all times, toward all people. The Christian student will make campus contacts as broad as possible, be watchful for opportunities to be helpful and will cultivate charitable tolerance for professors unsympathetic toward religion, striving always to give the best possible effort to all assignments. If he finds his faith shaken he should devote time to a systematic study of his religion, especially attending faithfully at corporate worship."

Also recommended was a plan whereby students could do some type of missionary work during the summer months, as well as a program of better instruction by college chaplains.

Elmer L. Allen, student at the University of Florida, was elected president. Bishop Henry Louttit conducted the devotional periods.

Problem of Vets

Dallas, Texas:—The chief problem of college chaplains is the returned war veteran according to a concensus of opinion taken among college chaplains who met recently in Dallas as part of the promotional program of the seventh province. Proof that the ministry is effective was indicated by the report from All Saints chapel, Austin, Texas, where the Rev. J. J. M. Harte provides facilities for the use of veterans and their families in the parish house. They are allowed to use the kitchen and dining room to entertain their friends. Baby sitters are searched for among the members of the con-

The Rev. John A. Winslow, student chaplain at Texas Technological College and rector of St. Paul's, has a chat with one of his younger parishioners

If You Like This WITNESS
You Will Like Every WITNESS

If you are not receiving the magazine regularly at your home fill out the form, enclose just three dollars, and the paper will be mailed each week for a year.

Note to the Clergy: General Convention will be completely reported by a staff of five reporters. Place your order now for a Bundle by merely sending a postal with your name and address and the number of copies you wish each week during that period. We will bill at the end of Convention at 6c a copy.

THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6

Name _____

Street _____

City _____ Zone _____ State _____

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

gregation.

Similar reports were given by other chaplains and the fine work that the Canterbury clubs are doing was also stressed. Leader of the conference was the Rev. LeRoy Burroughs, student chaplain from Iowa State College, Ames.

Ninety Years Old

Minneapolis:—Members of Gethsemane Church celebrated the 90th anniversary of this large downtown parish May 23. The high point of the evening service was the confirmation of 50 children and adults by Bishop Keeler.

On April 4, 1856, Gethsemane was founded as Ascension Church but changed to its present title in November of that year. Bishop Kemper consecrated the church on December of the same year, and Bishop Whipple laid the cornerstone in April, 1883.

The present rector, the Rev. John S. Higgins and his assistant, the Rev. David R. Haupt, now serve a congregation numbering nearly 1,000 communicants.

Howe School Fire

Howe, Indiana:—Fire of undetermined origin completely demolished the academic building at Howe Military School May 27. Only the four brick walls remain. The building was constructed in 1907, housing class rooms, biology, physics and chemistry laboratories and an extensive library of 10,000 volumes. The school records were saved. Loss was estimated at about $200,000 with $100,000 extra for equipment. The fire loss was fully covered by insurance. A new building will be constructed as rapidly as materials are available, according to Col. Burrett B. Bouton, superintendent.

Fight Secularism

Chicago:—A call to laymen to assist the Church in counteracting the secularism which "dominates the radio, the press, and the public schools" was sounded here by Dr. Clark Kuebler, president of Ripon College, at a dinner sponsored by the National Council of Churchmen.

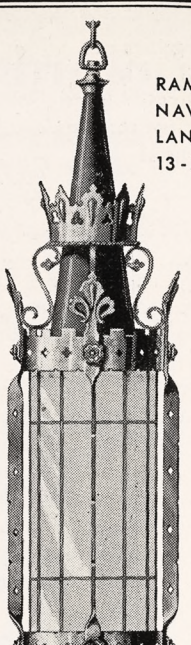
"The great need of the Church is instruction in the essentials of our faith," Dr. Kuebler asserted. "We laymen must assist the priests and bishops in the educational program of our denomination, but we must ourselves increase our knowledge of our faith if we are to teach it successfully."

The dinner, attended by thirteen midwestern bishops, was addressed exclusively by laymen among whom in addition to Dr. Kuebler were Dr. Wilbur G. Katz, dean of the University of Chicago Law School; V. Y. Dallman, editor and publisher of the Illinois State Register, and Edward Gusheem, Detroit public utilities executive.

Martin Niemoeller

New York (RNS):—Contrary to reports, Pastor Martin Niemoeller of Germany is not expected to visit the United States this summer. Neither the American committee for the World Council of Churches nor the Federal Council of Churches is planning sponsorship of such a tour by the German clergyman, it was learned here. Some Lutheran circles are discussing an American visit by Niemoeller late next fall or during 1947, but no definite plans have been made.

Kanuga Conferences



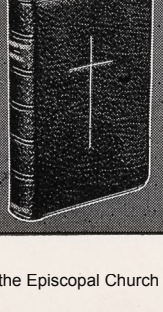
Hendersonville, N. C.:—The Rev. D. A. McGregor, executive secretary of the department of education of the National Council, will be a member of the faculty of the adult conference which will meet July 13-27 at Kanuga Lake. Miss Charlotte Tompkins, field workers for the department, will also teach a course

KAMP KAWANDAG
IN CANADA

A great summer opportunity for boys in Canada's famous Muskoka Lake region. Diversified land and lake program. Church influences. For information address director

Rev. J. S. Ditchburn, Episcopal Chaplain. University Station, Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

+ SHRINE MONT + Vacations: May to October for clergy, laity, families, friends. In Alleghenies, 100 miles due west of Washington by main Greyhound Bus & auto. Grounds of rare mountain beauty; mineral sprgs.; many recreations; modern lodges, cottages, central halls and rectory. Noted Cathedral Shrine — perpetual trust of the Church. Rates: $20 to $30 a wk—room, meals, service, ample baths. Prospectus. Rev. E. L. Woodward, M.D., D.D., Dir., Shrine Mont. Orkney Sprgs., Va. CLERGY SEMINAR: July 15-26. 11 days, $28: evening lectures open to all guests. Presiding Bishop, Honorary Dean.



Craftsmanship and Correct Lighting

Graceful form and fine craftsmanship, coupled with the latest features of correct lighting make this lantern a favorite among clergy and church architects alike. If you have a problem in church lighting, and are interested in reading a searching analysis of fundamental principles and latest practice in Church Lighting, write for a copy of our new free illustrated booklet.

RAMBUSCH
Designers Decorators and Craftsmen
2 West 45th St. ~ New York 19, N.Y.

OXFORD PRAYER BOOKS AND HYMNALS

NEW EDITION – JUST PUBLISHED

OXFORD BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER, with the new Lectionary. Combined in one volume with

THE REVISED HYMNAL, containing 600 hymns (201 new) with the melody to each one.

OXFORD ALTAR SERVICE, with new Chancel Prayer Books and Revised Hymnals to match.

At all booksellers. Booklet upon request.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS, 114 Fifth Avenue, New York 11

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

at the conference. The adult and college conferences will meet concurrently.

The clergy school, which will meet July 15-28, will be directed by the Rev. B. Duvall Chambers, Columbia, S. C. During the adult-college conference courses will be offered in religious education, personal religion, the Bible, the Prayer Book, the program of the Church, and the work of the Woman's Auxiliary.

The conference season will open with the Retreat for Women, June 3-6. It will be followed by the convention of the Woman's Auxiliary of Western North Carolina, June 6-7, and the Laymen's Conference, June 7-10.

The camp season will include the midget camp for girls, June 15-23, and the cub camp for boys, June 29-July 12. These camps are attended by boys and girls 10 and 11 years of age.

Social Emphasis

Charlotte, N. C. (RNS):—The Church must make an active contribution to the economic improvement of the South by championing the underprivileged, Dean B. Harvie Branscomb of the Duke University Divinity School, Durham, N. C., told the annual convocation of the North Carolina Council of Churches here. He urged that the Church put its own house in order by rejecting provincialism, providing adequate education for its ministers, supporting rural preachers and avoiding denominational duplication and inefficiency.

Another speaker, Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College, Atlanta, Ga., and vice president of the Federal Council of Churches, said the Church had no grounds upon which to criticize science. Science, he declared, can say to the Church, "For 19 centuries you have preached brotherhood, the sacredness of the human personality, the intrinsic worth of every soul, and yet your institution, the Church of the Living God, is the most segregated institution in America. Who are you to talk to scientists and educators? Clean your own backyard and come to us with clean hands if you would talk to us."

Urge Understanding

Geneva (wireless RNS): — A plea for better understanding between Catholics and Protestants was made here by La Vie Catholique, organ of the Swiss Catholic Federation, in a front-page article. It expressed regret over the indifference of Catholics toward such events as the recent meeting of the provisional committee of the World Council of Churches. Asserting it is "a considerable novelty" to see Protestant Christians who have been divided for centuries now showing unity in such gatherings, the publication called on Catholics rigorously to examine themselves in regard to their attitudes toward non-Catholics.

World Council Relief

Geneva (wireless to RNS):—First relief shipments to Poland and Finland through headquarters of the World Council of Churches have arrived safely, it was announced here by Frank Northam, director of the Council's material aid division. The supplies consisted of Swedish army surplus material bought in Stockholm and shipped directly from that point. Bills of lading mailed to Geneva show that 1,225 cases of canned meat were sent to the recon-

Investment Logic and Opinion

Issue A-455 describes a sound common stock with good income and good possibilities of appreciation. Copy on request to interested investors. Write Main Office or Asbury Park Branch.

Edward A. Viner & Co.
Member New York Stock Exchange
Managers of Investment Funds
11 Wall St. New York 5

New! SMALL WALL MAPS LARGE WALL MAPS

Full color reproductions of the fine maps in the WESTMINSTER HISTORICAL ATLAS TO THE BIBLE

REPRODUCTIONS of the beautiful, authentic maps of Bible lands which appear in The Westminster Historical Atlas to the Bible will soon be available as wall maps. There will be six maps in the small size, printed on cloth, with site indexes printed on each map, and these may be purchased in sets, with or without a tripod. Twelve wall maps will be available in the large size, printed on paper backed with cloth. The standard set contains eight maps in a wall rack and the minimum set consists of four maps in a wall rack. There is also a complete set of twelve maps—ideal for colleges and seminaries.

Detailed information and prices will be available upon request to your favorite bookstore, or

THE WESTMINSTER PRESS
Witherspoon Building
Philadelphia 7, Penna.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

struction committee representing Protestant churches in Poland, and 817 cases to a similar group in Finland. The same shipment contained 2,242 cases of meat and dehydrated vegetables from the Hilfswerk, relief organization of the Evangelical Church in Germany.

Cost of the relief supplies was met by a donation of $50,000 received from Protestant churches in the United States by Robbins W. Barstow, director of the World Council's commission for world service. Storage and shipping charges were paid by the World Council.

Degrees Conferred

Raleigh, N. C.:—Two veterans were among those who received degrees at the first commencement exercises held since the end of the war at St. Augustine's College, May 29. It was the 79th annual commencement of the institution, and marked the 30th anniversary of the Rev. Edgar H. Goold as head of the school. The Rev. Tollie L. Caution, secretary for Negro work of the National Council, delivered the baccalaureate sermon.

Pledge Aid

Boston:—A pledge card will be signed by members of the diocese of Massachusetts in a campaign to promote aid toward world relief, according to recommendations of a special food emergency committee headed by the Rev. Roger Bennett. They will be asked to pledge one or more of the following actions: one entirely wheatless day per week; two wheatless meals per day; a weekly cash contribution for famine relief; conservation of fats and oils by buying less, using and reusing renderings, turning in unusuable fats; and belief in government rationing of foods essential to famine relief.

One half of the duplex pledge cards is to be placed in the parish alms basin or sent to the diocesan house, and the other half to be posted prominently in the kitchen. The cards are being distributed in quantity to all parish clergy under auspices of the diocesan social service department.

For World Government

Wilmington, Del.: — The annual convention of the diocese of Delaware meeting at the Church of the Ascension, Claymont, adopted a resolution favoring the establishment of a constitutional federal world government to be implemented by whatever means necessary to enable it to establish and maintain justice, law and order among its citizens. The convention also urged the people of the United States, and their government to take adequate action to provide immediate aid to war-stricken areas and to return to rationing at home if need be. Equality in work, education, culture, housing, health and recreation among all races in the United States was also recommended.

General Convention deputies: The

SUMMER SERVICES

New York City
CHURCH OF THE HOLY TRINITY
316 East 88th Street
The Rev. James A. Paul, Vicar
Sunday: H. C. 8 a.m. Morning Service, 11 a.m. Thursday, 11 a.m.

CHURCH OF ST. MARY THE VIRGIN
46th Street, east of Times Square
The Rev. Grieg Taber, Rector
Sunday Masses: 7, 9, 11 (High).
Evening Prayer and Benediction, 8.

ST. PAUL'S CHAPEL
Columbia University
The Rev. Stephen F. Bayne Jr., Chaplain
Daily (except Saturday): 8 a.m.
Sunday: Morning Prayer and Sermon, 11. H. C. 9 a.m. and 12:30 noon (no services June 3 to July 6).

Millbrook, New York
GRACE CHURCH
The Rev. H. Ross Greer, Rector
Services 8:30 and 11 every Sunday.
Located on Route forty-four.

Denver, Colorado
ST. JOHN'S CATHEDRAL
The Very Rev. Paul Roberts, Dean
The Rev. Harry Watts
Sunday: 7:30, 8:30, 9:30, 11, 4:30.
Wednesday, 7:15. Thurs. and Holy Days, 10:30.

ST. MARK'S CHURCH
The Rev. Walter Williams, Rector
Sunday: 7, 8, 9:30 and 11.
Wednesday, 11 a.m. Thurs. and Holy Days, 7 a.m.

Ann Arbor, Michigan
ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH
University of Michigan
The Rev. Henry Lewis, Rector
Sunday: H. C. 8 a.m. Morning Prayer, 11 a.m.
Canterbury Club (students and servicemen) 6 p.m.
Wednesday: H. C. 7:15 a.m.

St. Louis, Missouri
CHURCH OF ST. MICHAEL & ST. GEORGE
Washington University
The Rev. J. Francis Sant, Rector
The Rev. C. George Widdifield, Minister of Education
Sunday: 7:30 and 11 a.m.
Canterbury Club, 5:30 twice monthly.

Pittsburgh
CALVARY CHURCH
Shady and Walnut Aves.
The Rev. Lauriston L. Scaife, Rector
The Rev. Philip M. Brown
The Rev. Francis M. Osborne
Sunday: 8, 9:30, 11 a.m.; 8 p.m.
H. C. Friday and Holy Days, 10 a.m.

Palo Alto, California
ALL SAINTS' CHURCH
Stanford University
The Rev. Oscar F. Green, Rector
Services: 8 and 11.
Union Service: 7:45 p.m.

Cleveland
CHURCH OF THE INCARNATION
East 105th and Marlowe
The Rev. Robert B. Campbell, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 a.m.

Utica, New York
GRACE CHURCH
Genesee and Elizabeth Sts.
The Rev. Harold E. Sawyer, Rector
Sunday: H. C. 8. Morning Prayer and H. C. 11. Evening Prayer, 4:30.
Weekday: Tues. and Thurs. H. C. 10.
Wed. 12:30. Friday, H. C. 7:30.

Chester, Penna.
ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
Broad and Madison Sts.
The Rev. Stanley V. Wilcox, Rector
Service: Sunday: 8 and 10:30 a.m.
Wednesday at 10 a.m.

Ridgewood, New Jersey
CHRIST CHURCH
The Rev. A. J. Miller, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 a.m.
Friday and Holy Days: 9:30 a.m.

Tulsa, Oklahoma
TRINITY CHURCH
The Rev. E. H. Eckel Jr., Rector
Sunday: 7 and 8; Church School, 9:30 (Except August); Morning Service, 11 a.m.
H. C. Friday and Holy Days, 10:30.

Santa Monica, California
ST. AUGUSTINE - BY - THE - SEA
ST. AMBROSE CHAPEL
The Rev. W. N. Pierson
The Rev. D. J. Gallagher
The Rev. D. O. Platt
Sunday: 7:45, 9:30 and 11 a.m.; 7:30 a.m.
Daily 9:30 a.m. Thurs. 7:45.

Elkton, Maryland
TRINITY CHURCH
The Rev. J. Warren Albinson, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 9:30 a.m.
Wed. Litany, 8 p.m. Fri. and Holy Days, H. C. at 10 a.m.

Evanston, Illinois
ST. LUKE'S CHURCH
Lee and Hinman Streets
The Rev. Edward Thomas Taggard
The Rev. Joseph Barnes Williams
The Rev. Darwin Kieby, Jr.
Sunday: H. C. 7:30, 9 and 11.
Daily: H. C. 7:30 a.m. except Wed. at 7 and 11 a.m. Confessions Sat. 4:30-5:30 and 7:30-8 p.m.

Providence, Rhode Island
GRACE CHURCH
Mathewson and Westminster Sts.
The Rev. Clarence H. Horner, Rector
Sunday: H. C. 8 a.m.; Church School, 9:30 and 11 a.m. Morning Prayer and Sermon (H. C. first Sunday), 11 a.m.; Y.P.F., 5:30 p.m. Evening Prayer and Sermon, 7:30 p.m. Thurs. H. C. 11 a.m. Daily Noonday Prayers, 12 noon.

San Diego, California
ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
8th Avenue at C Street
The Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, Rector
The Rev. Harold B. Robinson
Sunday: 7:30, 11 a.m.; 7:30 p.m.
Fri. and Holy Days, 10 a.m.

Omaha, Nebraska
ALL SAINTS' CHURCH
The Rev. Fred W. Clayton, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 a.m. H. C. first Sunday at 11. Weekday, H. C. and Intercessions Wed. at 10 a.m.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Rev. Messrs. Robert Hatch, John E. Large, William C. Munds, Nelson W. Rightmyer; Messrs. E. N. Carvel, W. Albert Haddock, Hudson D. Dravo, John M. Stewart. Alternates: the Rev. Messrs. Paul A. Kellogg, Henry N. Herndon, Walden Pell II, P. Malcolm Ferne; Messrs. J. Reese White, Robert H. Forman, John S. Reese IV, Macmillan Hoopes.

Ask Postponement

Cleveland:—The Woman's Auxiliary of the diocese of Ohio, meeting May 28 at Trinity Cathedral, voted to send a wire to Joseph Curran, president of the National Maritime Union, asking him in the name of humanity to postpone the strike set for June 15 in order to keep the food moving to famine-threatened areas all over the world. They also asked President Truman to resume food rationing and urged the passage of the McMahon Bill for civilian control of atomic energy.

Urges Unity

Cambridge, Mass.:—Final, favorable consideration of the proposed union of the Presbyterian and Episcopal churches was urged upon General Convention by members of St. John's Society, Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, at its annual meeting.

Urges Christian Unions

Philadelphia:—The labor movement is essentially a Christian movement, according to Joseph Wright, a representative of the Pennsylvania regional office of the CIO who spoke to members of the clerical brotherhood of the Diocese of Pennsylvania at the Church House. He pointed out that both labor and Christianity are striving to build respect for human rights, stressing the value of the individual, elimination of favoritism and influence in opportunities for promotion, making the world a better place in which to live.

"Many locals are being organized around a beer barrel and there is need for more organizing around an educational program," Mr. Wright said. "Labor leaders are realizing the truth as expressed in a recent Washington labor convention that the program 'has been built on sand unless things of spiritual value can be brought into it'."

The speaker also pointed out that the lack of Christian practice on the part of plant officials who are known as Church leaders is a matter that drives the men to wonder if Christianity is effective at all.

A governor of a certain state, leaving on a fishing trip, suddenly stopped. He had forgotten something . . . and went back for his current copy of . . . you guessed it . . . The Upper Room! "I never go any place without it," he explained.

A prominent doctor, starting on a vacation trip, remembered, a hundred miles from home, that he had forgotten to bring his copy of The Upper Room . . . stopped at a country church beside the road, looked up the minister, and got one!

On your vacation . . . as well as all summer long . . . be sure you have The Upper Room handy. Your daily devotions will mean just as much or more to you when off the beaten path or relaxed in mind and body.

The issue for the summer quarter—July, August, September—is now ready for mailing. Get a copy at your church, or if not available there, send us your individual subscription today.

Ten or more copies to one address, 5 cents per copy, postpaid. Single yearly subscriptions in U. S., Canada, and Latin America, 30 cents, postpaid; four years, $1.00. Other countries, 40 cents; four years $1.35. Order from

The Upper Room

Medical Arts Building Nashville 3, Tennessee

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Write us for
Organ Information
AUSTIN ORGANS, Inc.
Hartford, Conn.

Memorial Windows
In accordance with the best traditions of the craft. Notable installations in forty states and five foreign countries.
Illustrated material on request
The D'Ascenzo Studios
founded 1896
1604 Summer Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

ALTAR BREADS ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED
SAINT MARY'S CONVENT
KENOSHA • WISCONSIN

MENEELY BELL CO.
22 RIVER ST., TROY, N. Y.
BELLS

R. GEISSLER, INC.
71-79 W. 45th St., New York 19, N. Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS
EST. 1877

ERNEST W. LAKEMAN
Designer and Worker in
STAINED GLASS
2 CRESCENT PLACE
YONKERS, NEW YORK

Need a LAXATIVE?
Black-Draught is
1-Usually prompt
2-Usually thorough
3-Always economical

25 to 40 doses only 25¢
Get BLACK-DRAUGHT
CAUTION: USE ONLY AS DIRECTED

Rome Criticized

Atlantic City, N. J. (RNS):—"Aggressiveness of the hierarchy of the Roman Catholic Church in pressing for claims for a favored position of itself as a Church" was decried in a report submitted to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church. Fearful of religious liberty being abused, the Assembly listed several principles of religious liberty: 1) The true head and authority of the Christian Church is Jesus Christ, 2) No Church should seek for itself or tolerate others seeking for themselves a privileged political position or status, and 3) The government should put no discriminatory limitations upon the liberty of any one religious body or group.

Mixed Marriages

Richmond, Va. (RNS): — Mixed marriages are condemned as long as "the demands and rulings of the Roman Catholic Church remain unchanged" in a report by the permanent committee on moral and social welfare of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. (Southern) to be presented to the forthcoming General Assembly. Terming the requirements of the Roman Church "harsh and unfair," the report stated that in a mixed marriage the Protestant must surrender or compromise his personal convictions. What is even more serious, it involves the signing away of the spiritual birthright of unborn children by denying them the possibility of any religious training in the home other than that prescribed by the Roman Catholic Church."

ORGANIST WANTED

Suburban New York church with boy choir is seeking Organist and Choirmaster. Salary dependent upon experience. State age and references. Box J, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty St., New York City 6.

WOMAN DIRECTOR

Wanted a woman director of religious education for prominent New York Episcopal parish. Church School of 500. Single, 30 to 45 years. Apartment provided. Box WD. THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty St., New York 6, N. Y.

WANTED

Director and Ass't Director for Church Orphanage in Eastern Seaboard city. Salaries: $1,800 and $1,500 respectively, plus room and board. 50 children. Must be religious, trained in social service, and, of course, fond of children. Write, stating qualifications, to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty St., New York 6.

A YOUNG PRIEST

with a position in New York seeks living quarters for himself, wife and baby in or near New York. Will take early services and work in the parish evenings without pay in return for small apartment. Write: Box B. THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6.

WILL SUPPLY

Priest is available for services in or near New York City, June 8, 15, 22 and the five Sundays in August. Available for Sunday duty only. Box S, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6.

Everything for the Episcopal Church
but vestments
A broad statement but we'd like to prove it.
Ammidon and Company
Horace L. Varian
Horace L. Varian, Jr.
31 South Frederick Street
Baltimore 2, Maryland

PURE IRISH LINENS NOW IN STOCK
for all Church needs, supplies constantly arriving, good qualities, also fine cottons. Samples free.
Marv Fawcett Company
Plainfield, N. J. Box 146

CATHEDRAL STUDIOS
Washington & London, England. Linens and materials by the yard, surplices, albs, Altar Linens, stoles, burses & veils. Materials by the yard. See my NEW BOOK "CHURCH EMBROIDERY" & CHURCH VESTMENTS a complete instruction. 128 pages, 95 illus. Price $5.67. And my HANDBOOK for ALTAR GUILDS, price 50c. Miss L. V. Mackrille, 11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington 15, D.C. 30 minutes from U. S. Treasury. Tel. Wisconsin 2752.

SURPLICES — STOLES
VESTMENTS
CHURCH HANGINGS
ALTAR LINENS
CASSOCKS
CLERICAL SUITS — CLOAKS
RABATS—RABAT VESTS—COLLARS—SHIRTS
Choir Vestments in All Styles
Inquiries Invited
C. M. ALMY & SON, INC.
562 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.

VESTMENTS for CLERGY and CHOIR
Altar Linens . . . Embroideries . . . Tailoring . . . Episcopal Flags. Send for Catalog
J. M. HALL, INC.
14 W. 40th St., New York - Tel. CH 4-3306
Office & Salesroom
American Distributor of Stained Glass Windows for James Powell & Sons, Ltd., London, Eng.

The Payne-Spiers Studios Inc.
Studios at Paterson, New Jersey
Carved Wood
Chancel Renovations Church Furnishings
Murals Memorials Tablets
Stained Glass
-- Inquiries Solicited --

HEADQUARTERS

for CHOIR GOWNS
PULPIT ROBES
Vestments • Hangings • Stoles
Embroideries, Etc.
NEW CATALOG on Request
NATIONAL CHURCH GOODS SUPPLY CO
Division of
NATIONAL ACADEMIC CAP & GOWN CO.
821-23 ARCH ST. PHILADELPHIA 7, PA.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

W. D. CRAIG
Layman of Tenafly, N. J.

A new subscriber is hardly entitled to make suggestions but I am offering one because I feel that your publication should be more widely read. Something should be done to make individual subscription easier. Give the necessary information plainly in conspicuous type with a subscription blank and box it. I would have turned in a subscription long since if you had made it easier to do so.

ANSWER: No sooner said than done. There is a form on one of the pages this week which we hope many will use.

* * *

VIRGINIA SUMMEY
Churchwoman, New York

Though it is evidently too late for action on a protest to the government for the cancellation of the fantastic project of the bomb test, I should like to express my appreciation of the efforts made by the council of churches in Detroit, through the Rev. William B. Sperry. Every point of object is tabulated. Let us hope that weather conditions may prevent the test.

* * *

JACK E. WARNER
Sexton of St. Paul's, Jackson, Mich.

I hope you will continue to bring before the Church the need of an adequate pension system for its lay employees. I am 25 years old and am sexton of a large parish. Because I feel that I am constructively serving Christ and his Church I am happy in my work and may continue it for the rest of my life. Churches however are rarely guilty of overpaying either their clergy or lay employees so it is impossible for me to save money enough to take care of my family in my old age or if I should be disabled. Millions of laboring Americans are now protected by social security. It is only fair that loyal employees of the Church be as adequately cared for.

* * *

MRS. L. M. C. SMITH
Churchwoman, Washington, D. C.

These are the friends who came to my little girl Meredith's party and who send you this check for $15 instead of having had a cake and presents at the birthday party. They hope some Chinese child will be happier for it.

ANSWER: The note containing the donation had the signatures, in various types of script, of the following children in addition to Meredith who was celebrating her sixth birthday: Alice, Sue, Joanne, Watt, Radie, Ann, Leahigh, Gay, Ann. There were two at the party named Ann, that we know without claiming to be handwriting experts.

The same mail brought a letter from the Rev. Kimber Den, with $300 in Chinese stamps on the envelope which we have sent to Meredith. His letter is too long for Backfire but he thanks us for $1,000 in American money which went to him in Lent and asks us to express his thanks to the many WITNESS readers who made it possible. He also tells of the heartbreaking needs of the Chinese people and of his work on their behalf. "Please kindly ask all of my good friends in America to pray for me so that I may have more courage, strength and new vision to meet the great tasks ahead."

If there are those who are inspired by Meredith and her young friends to go without something so that Chinese children may have food, checks should be made to "Treasurer, CLID," and sent to the Church League for Industrial Democracy, 155 Washington Street, New York 6, N. Y. Donations are airmailed to Mr. Den as frequently as the amount justifies. In spite of the great inflation it is still true that $15 in American money will house, clothe and feed a Chinese child under Mr. Den's care for a month.

ST. JOHN'S MILITARY SCHOOL
Salina, Kansas

Since 1887 St. John's has been perpetuating the cultural traditions of the Church by stressing sound scholarship in Christian atmosphere.

Grades 6-12. Fully accredited. Bar I.L. Summer School and Camp in Colorado Rockies. Boys 8-15. Splendid equipment. 10,000 acres.

The Rev. R. L. Clem, Rector

St. Margaret's House
School for Christian Service and Deaconess Training School of the Pacific
A graduate school preparing women for Church positions in the fields of religious education, social service, and evangelistic work. Opportunity to work for advanced degrees. Special training for work in Orient.
ADDRESS THE DEAN
1820 Scenic Ave. Berkeley 4, California

CATHEDRAL CHOIR SCHOOL
NEW YORK
A Boarding and Day School for Boys
Established 1849
A BOARDING SCHOOL for the forty boys of the Choir of the Cathedral of Saint John the Divine. The boys receive careful musical training and sing daily at the service in the Cathedral. The classes in the School are small with the result that boys have individual attention, and very high standards are maintained. The School has its own building and playgrounds in the close. Fee—$350.00 per annum. Boys admitted 9 to 11. Voice test and scholastic examination. For Catalogue and Information address:
The CANON PRECENTOR,
Cathedral Choir School,
Cathedral Heights, New York City

ROWLAND HALL
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
Boarding and Day pupils. Accredited. Preschool, Lower school, College Preparatory and General courses. Graduates in many eastern and western colleges. All branches of music, dancing, art, drama Indoor pool, tennis courts, riding, weekends of winter sports. Pleasant home life. Environment of geographical and historical interest. Altitude 4500. Boarding $1,000, Day $120-$350.
The Right Rev. Arthur W. Moulton, S.T.D., Rector

SCHOOLS

The Hospital of Saint Barnabas and the University of Newark offer a full course in NURSING
to qualified High School graduates. Scholarships available. Classes enter in February and September
Apply to
Director of Nursing
HOSPITAL OF SAINT BARNABAS
685 High Street Newark, N. J.

DE VEAUX SCHOOL
FOUNDED 1852
A Church school for boys. Thorough preparation for college. Military system of student government, developing sense of responsibility. Charges for grades seven and eight $1000; grades nine through twelve $1050. For catalog, address THE HEADMASTER, DeVeaux School, Niagara Falls, New York.

HOLDERNESS
In the White Mountains. College Preparatory and General Courses. Music and Crafts. For boys 12-19. All sports including riding. 200 acres of woods. New fireproof building. Individual attention. Home atmosphere.
Rev. Edric A. Weld, Rector
Box W. Plymouth, N. H.

MARGARET HALL
Under Sisters of St. Helena
(Episcopal)
Small country boarding and day school for girls, from primary through high school. Accredited college preparatory. Modern building recently thoroughly renovated includes gymnasium and swimming pool. Campus of six acres with ample playground space, hockey field and tennis court. Riding. Board and Tuition $800. For catalog, address: Sister Rachel, Prin. O.S.H., Box A. Versailles, Kentucky.

FORK UNION
MILITARY ACADEMY
An Honor Christian School with the highest academic rating. Upper School prepares for university or business. ROTC. Every modern equipment. Junior School from six years. Housemother. Separate building. Catalogue. Dr. J. J. Wicker, Fork Union, Virginia.

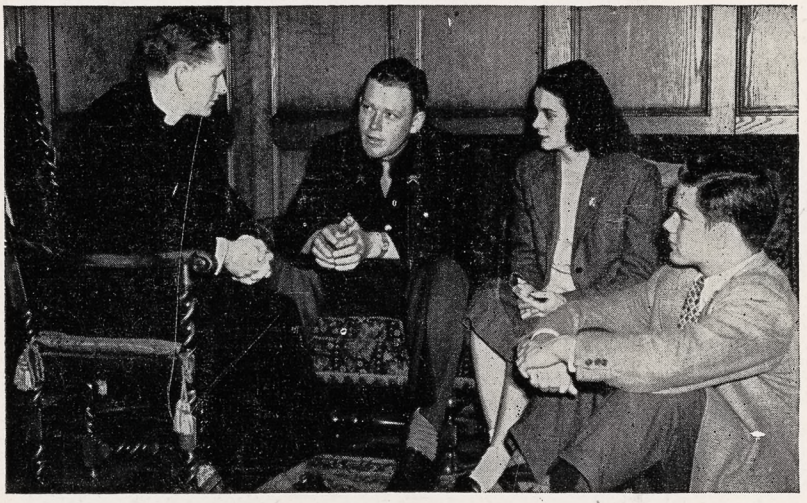
CARLETON COLLEGE
Laurence M. Gould, D.Sc., President
Carleton is a co-educational liberal arts college of limited enrollment and is recognized as the Church College of Minnesota.
Address: Assistant to the President
CARLETON COLLEGE
Northfield Minnesota

KEMPER HALL
KENOSHA, WISCONSIN
Boarding and day school for girls offering thorough college preparation and training for purposeful living. Study of the Fine Arts encouraged. Complete sports program. Junior School department. Beautiful lake shore campus. Under direction of the Sisters of St Mary. For catalogue, address: Box WT.

Virginia Episcopal School
Lynchburg, Virginia
Prepares boys for colleges and university. Splendid environment and excellent corps of teachers. High standard in scholarship and athletics. Healthy and beautiful location in the mountains of Virginia.
For catalogue apply to
George L. Barton, Jr., Ph.D. Headmaster,
Box 408

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

What Lies Ahead For Youth?



1. Can our youth battle the odds they must face without Christian faith to support and guide them?

2. Can Christian faith guide our democracy unless our college youth—the leaders of tomorrow — have strong Christian perspective?

3. Can democracy go forward unless selfishness is overcome by the militant Christian conviction of its youth?

Assure Their Away-at-College Religious Life and Leadership

The Church Society for College Work, an organization of clergy and laymen, is a non-profit, co-operating agency of the National Council of the Episcopal Church, incorporated in 1935, to promote knowledge and acceptance of Christ's religion and in other ways to foster and to strengthen the work of the Church in college and university centers.

Help place the ablest clergymen, chaplains and women counsellors in college towns. These Christian leaders will continue the religious training which youth began in their homes and home churches. Their influence helps boys and girls keep up their Church relationships when away at college.

Also help present the challenge to men and women students to go into full-time Christian work as ministers, teachers, and lay workers in the Church.

The Church Society for College Work
821 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C.

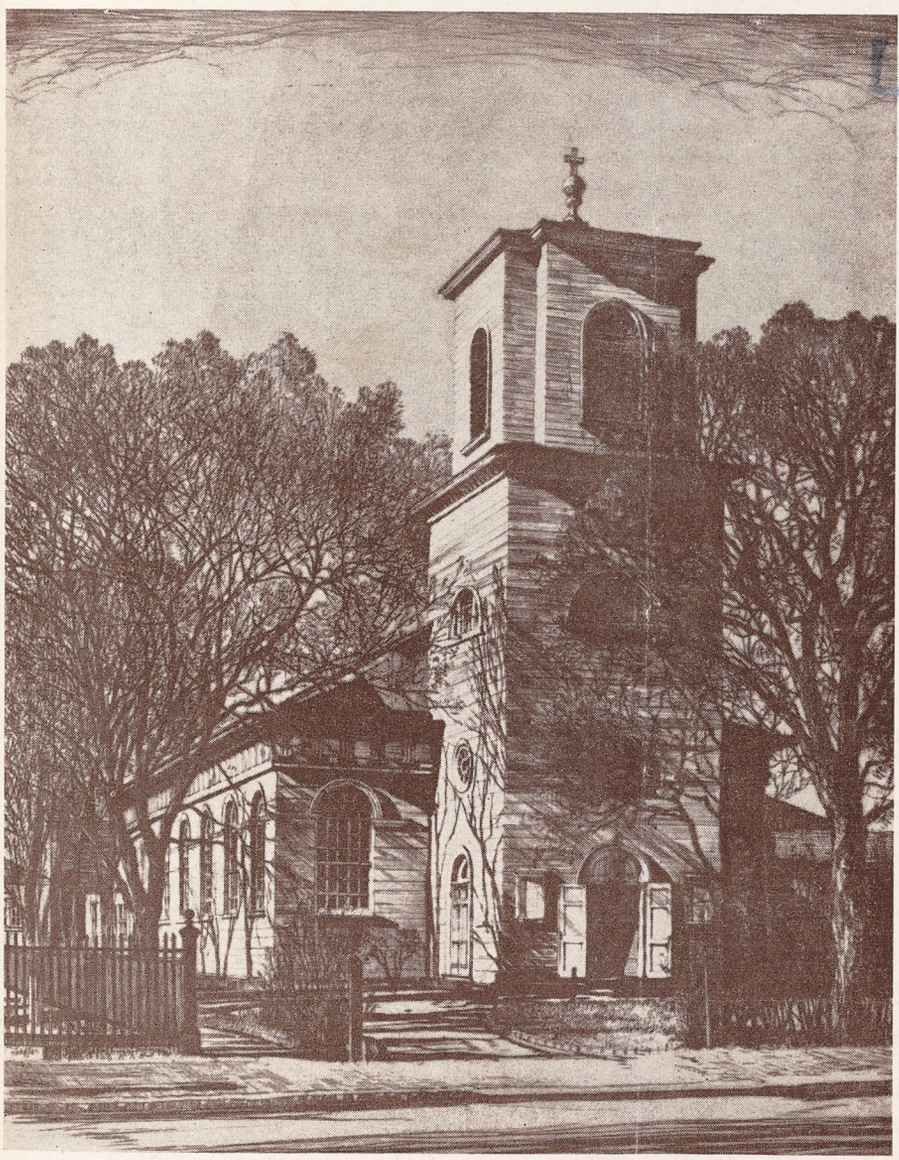
I would like more information on your activities and program ☐

To make certain your work among college youth goes forward, I will contribute ..... dollars payable ( ) herewith, or ( ) quarterly, or ( ) semi-annually.

Name .....

Address .....

..... Date.....



Please make checks payable to the Church Society for College Work.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The WITNESS

10¢ A COPY

LIBRARY COPY

JUNE 27, 1946

CHRIST CHURCH CAMBRIDGE HAS SIMPLE BEAUTY

EPISCOPAL EVANGELICAL FELLOWSHIP

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SCHOOLS OF THE CHURCH

St. Andrew's School

An all-year boarding school for boys

West Barrington, Rhode Island

Established in 1893

Rev. Irving Andrew Evans, Rector

Wooster School

Danbury, Conn.

Small School. Near New York. Reasonable tuition. Accredited. Individual attention. Cardinal principles are Religion, Intellectual Excellence, Simplicity, Hard Work.

Write Rev. JOHN VERDERY
Ridgebury Road, Danbury, Conn.

CRANBROOK

Preparatory school for boys in grades 7 through 12. Post-graduate course. Beautiful, modern buildings. Single rooms in fire-resisting dormitories for all resident students. Small classes. Strong faculty. Graduates in leading colleges. Exceptional opportunities in arts, crafts, sciences, music, competitive scholarships. Broad program of athletics. Near Detroit. Over night by train from New York, six hours from Chicago. Catalog.

Rev. W. Brooke Stabler, Cranbrook School, Box W, Bloomfield Hills, Michigan

St. Paul's Polytechnic Institute

Lawrenceville, Virginia

St. Paul's offers Courses on the four year College level in the following fields—Industrial Education, Agriculture, Business Administration, Home Economics and Teacher Training.

J. ALVIN RUSSELL, A.M., D.D., President

THE NORTHWESTERN MILITARY AND NAVAL ACADEMY

Lake Geneva, Wisconsin

A distinctive preparatory school for boys 13 to 18, grades 9 through 12. Fireproof buildings and 90 acre campus, beautifully situated along lake shore. Excellent academic and military training together with a full complement of athletic activities. For information write to: The Rev. James Howard Jacobson, Superintendent and Rector.

"At the Nation's Shrine"

VALLEY FORGE Military Academy

Fully accredited college preparatory and Junior College for young gentlemen 12 to 20. Highest scholastic standards. 16 modern fireproof buildings. All sports. Motorized Field Artillery, Cavalry, Infantry, R.O.T.C. Band. For Catalog address:

Box W, Wayne, Pa.

MERCERSBURG

A distinguished preparatory school beautifully located in the mountains of Southern Pennsylvania. Modern equipment. Small classes; 10,000 Alumni. Close personal supervision of each boy. 85 miles from Baltimore and Washington on Greyhound route. Beautiful Chapel with famous Carillon. Junior School. Summer Session.

Charles S. Tippetts, Ph.D., Head Master
Box W, Mercersburg, Pa.

ST. AGNES SCHOOL

An Episcopal Country Day and Boarding School for Girls

Excellent College Preparatory record. Special courses arranged for girls not contemplating college. Day pupils range from Kindergarten to College Entrance. Boarders from Grade 8 to College Entrance.

MISS BLANCHE PITTMAN, Principal
Albany New York

LENOX SCHOOL

A Church School in the Berkshire Hills for boys 12-18 emphasizing Christian ideals and character through simplicity of plant and equipment, moderate tuition, the cooperative self-help system, and informal, personal relationships among boys and faculty.

Rev. Robert L. Curry, Headmaster
Lenox Massachusetts

THE CHOATE SCHOOL

Wallingford, Connecticut

A catalogue of the School will be sent upon request—with addresses of parents who know the School intimately through their sons.

The School tries to make its charges in the way great surgeons and doctors charge.

ST. MARY'S HALL

San Antonio, Texas

A residence and day school for girls. . . . Preparing for the leading colleges. Fully accredited curriculum. . . . Training in leadership and Christian character. Emphasizing outdoor sports, throughout the year. 4 acre campus—modern buildings—swimming pool.

Katharine Lee, A.M., Head Mistress
117 East French Place

The Hannah More Academy

Est. 1832. Episcopal school for girls, 10 to 19 years, accredited to leading colleges. Pleasant location in the country. College Preparatory and General Courses, Music, Art. All athletics and riding carefully supervised. Modern Equipment. Moderate rates because school not run for profit.

Janet Ward, B.S., M.A. Columbia University
Headmistress
Reisterstown, Md.

St. Mary's School

Sewanee, Tennessee

College Preparatory, General Courses
Junior Department

Dramatics - Music - Riding

Address: The Sister Superior C.S.M.

National Cathedral School

Resident and day school for girls. Located on 58 acres of the Cathedral Close. College preparatory and general courses. Strong emphasis on the Arts.

MABEL B. TURNER, Principal
Washington 16, D. C.

St. Paul's School for Boys

Mt. Washington, Baltimore, Md.

A Boarding and Day School for Boys
Established 1849

Boarding department—Grades 6 to 12
Day department—Grades 3 to 12

S. Atherton Middleton, Headmaster

Rev. Harry Lee Doll, rector of St. Paul's, Baltimore, chaplain and president of trustees.

ST. BERNARD'S SCHOOL

Gladstone, New Jersey

A Church Boarding School for Boys
Beautifully situated in the Somerset Hills of northern New Jersey.

Grades 7 through 12
Founded 1900 — Enrollment 78
Tuition, Board and Lodging $750

Address The Rev. Robert L. Clayton

BRECK SCHOOL FOR BOYS

Day and Boarding, Grades 1 thru 12

Preparation for college and that experience we call Life under highly trained men. Athletics of all kinds, including horseback riding.

Chester H. Desrochers, Headmaster
2477 Como Avenue, W. St. Paul 8, Minn.

SAINT MARY'S HALL

BURLINGTON, NEW JERSEY

Boarding and Day School for Girls.
Strong Elementary Department
College Preparatory, and General Courses.
Music - Art - Dramatics - Sports
Careful attention to individual growth and progress.

FLORENCE LUKENS NEWBOLD, Headmistress

St. Faith's School

Chartered by the Board of Regents
Approved by Synod of New York and New Jersey

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.

The Rev. Leonard W. Steele, B.A., B.D.
Rector and Principal

HOWE MILITARY SCHOOL

Training young Americans for leadership. R.O.T.C. Accredited college preparatory, business courses. Junior School. Small classes. Every boy participates in sports. Balanced program. Episcopal. Established 1884. Summer Camp, boys grammar school age. Catalogue:

COL. B. B. BOUTON
13 Academy Place, Howe, Indiana

ST. AUGUSTINE'S COLLEGE

Raleigh, North Carolina

Accredited Class A Church College for Negro Youth. Co-educational. B.A. and B.S. Degrees. Teacher Training; Religious Education; Commerce; Music; Physical Education. Address: President.

Legal title for bequests: Trustees of St. Augustine's College, Raleigh, No. Carolina.

SAINT MARY'S HALL

Faribault, Minnesota

81st Year

Bishop Whipple's famous church boarding school for girls, high school only. Thorough college preparation, comprehensive general courses. Beautiful buildings. Healthful climate.

Margaret Robertson, M.A., Headmistress

SEWANEE MILITARY ACADEMY

Thorough prep. for college. Summer session. Small classes—every boy instructed how to study. Private mountain domain of 10,000 acres in summer resort area. Endowed: moderate rates. 79th year. Catalogue.

Superintendent Box W, Sewanee, Tenn.

Voorhees N. and I. School

Junior College Denmark, S. C. High School

Co-educational. Accredited by State Dept. of Education of S. C. and the Southern Association of Secondary Schools and Colleges. Under the two Dioceses of S. C. and The American Church Institute for Negroes. Expenses reasonable. Limited scholarship aid for worthy students. Apply:

J. E. BLANTON, Principal.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

VOL. XXIX. No. 35

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

JUNE 27, 1946

Publication Office, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago 37, Ill. Editorial Office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6. N. Y.

Bishop Sherrill Makes Plea For a Strong Evangelism

Says Christians Need to Emphasize It As Rev. Richard Emrich Is Made Bishop

By Wihla Hutson
Michigan Correspondent

Detroit: — Asserting that Christians "have been playing with Christianity and with Christ" Bishop Henry Knox Sherrill of Massachusetts strongly plead for their return to a real evangelical spirit of consecration at the setting apart of the Rev. Richard S. M. Emrich, Cambridge, to be suffragan bishop of Michigan in St. Paul's Cathedral, on June 11. An over-flow congregation numbering more than 1,000 heard him state that "the Christian Church in all of her branches is called by the necessities of today to place first things first, to be willing to do and dare great things in the name of Christ."

Using as his text "Are ye able to drink of the cup I drink of," Bishop Sherrill spoke of the loneliness of Christ's ministry as akin to that of a bishop, but he also pointed out that it was "the cup of sacrifice, of faith, of dauntless courage and of ultimate victory. He knew well what was before him, but he was completely consecrated to God's will."

Richard S. M. Emrich is consecrated Suffragan Bishop of Michigan. Left to right: Bishop Sherrill of Massachusetts, Bishop McElwain, retired Bishop of Minnesota; Bishop Dun of Washington; Charles L. Taylor, dean of the Episcopal Theological School; Bishop Emrich; Bishop Creighton of Michigan; Bishop Hobson of Southern, Ohio

The reality of Christian faith and practice the Bishop felt, lay in the intensity of that faith and of conviction, a singleness of mind and heart, which, if lost, meant annihilation. "The majority of Americans in and out of the Church fail to realize the extremely critical nature of our times, judging by their conversation and actions.

"But we have on the positive side the opportunity of laying foundation stones of a new era of peace and of understanding in which the gospel of Christ can spread as a unifying force in the hearts of men everywhere. If we fail in this, one needs to be neither a prophet not the son of a prophet to predict the destruction of the new forces at our disposal of all that we mean by civilization."

"Certainly in the Christian Church we have a right to hear the voice of God, a proclamation without fear or favor of those truths which alone can make possible a peace which is based upon the righteousness of God," Bishop Sherrill went on to say. "That the Church speaks with a divided and at times a contradictory voice is another one of the tragedies of our times and for which also we shall be judged by God. . . . The simple truth is that we need an experience similar to that of Whitsunday. Water cannot rise about its source. Secularism has taken its toll within as well as without the Church. Living with Christ in prayer, in sacrament, in public worship, in the fellowship of faithful people, in home, in office and factory is essential . . . Christ calls to the human heart but he also de-

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

EDITORIAL BOARD: Frederick C. Grant, Editor; Arthur Lichtenberger, Chairman; William B. Spofford, Managing Editor; Philip L. Shutt, News Editor; Lane W. Barton, Beverly M. Boyd, Dillard H. Brown, Roscoe T. Foust, Charles K. Gilbert, Hugh D. McCandless, Howard Chandler Robbins, William K. Russell, Sydney A. Temple Jr., Joseph H. Titus, William M. Weber.

★

THE WITNESS is published weekly from September 15th to June 15th inclusive, with the exception of the first week in January and semi-monthly from June 15th to September 15th by the Episcopal Church Publishing Co. on behalf of the Church Publishing Association, Inc. Samuel Thorne, President; Charles A. Houston, Vice-President; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, Treasurer; Frederic D. H. Gilbert, Secretary.

★

The subscription price is $3.00 a year; in bundles for sale in parishes the magazine sells for 10c a copy, we will bill quarterly at 5c a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter, March 6, 1939, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3. 1879.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

mands unusual consecration of mind."

Appealing directly to his auditors the bishop asked them to consecrate their minds and hearts in the language and experience of the present.

Concluding his stirring message with an admonition to the newly consecrated bishop, Bishop Sherrill stated, "You have felt deeply the contemporary problems and burdens of mankind. Your pen and your voice have been raised many times for righteousness, compassion and brotherhood . . . God has called you to a great responsibility and opportunity. May he grant you courage. loyalty, wisdom to answer in the consecration of yourself."

Following the service a luncheon was served in the Cathedral House where Bishop Emrich acknowledged the greetings of Presiding Bishop Tucker, his consecrator.

"The modern world believes that man is self-sufficient," he stated. "We do not believe that. Without the grace of God we fade and wither like flowers." He said that thoughts of the wonderful tradition of the service, and the fellowship represented in it were also strongly with him throughout the ceremony.

Consecrated as one of the two youngest bishops in the diocese of Michigan for over 100 years, and at 36, one of the youngest members of the House of Bishops, Bishop Emrich comes to his episcopate with a rich background of preparation in the evangelical tradition. He has been assistant professor of Christian social ethics at Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, and a contributor to the church press as well as an author.

Consecrators were Presiding Bishop Tucker, Bishop Creighton and Bishop McElwain. He was presented by Bishops Angus Dun and Henry Hobson. Others taking part in the ceremonies were: Dean Charles Taylor of the Episcopal Theological School, Bishop Wroth of Erie, Bishop Dallas of New Hampshire, and the Rev. Malcolm G. Dade, rector of St. Cyprian's church, Detroit. Mr. John C. Spaulding, chancellor of the diocese, read the evidences of election and the Rev. James G. Widdifield, secretary of the standing committee of the diocese, the evidences of ordination. The Rev. Irwin C. Johnson, rector of St. John's Church, Detroit, was master of ceremonies assisted by the Rev. Canon Charles W. Hughes of St. Paul's Cathedral.

Representatives of the Eastern churches and of other Protestant bodies witnessed the ceremonies.

BISHOP OXNAM HITS OUT

Grinnell, Iowa:—Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, president of the Federal Council of Churches, speaking here at the centennial convention of the Congregational - Christian Churches, hit recent statements of the Pope and Cardinal Spellman as "giving the impression that the Roman Catholic Church is summoning its members to a holy war against communism."

"Had these religious leaders attacked fascism with equal vigor the present holy war could be understood as a continuance of the struggle against totalitarianism in all its forms," Bishop Oxnam stated, "but it would appear that cooperation with some forms of totalitarianism is permitted. It is not totalitarianism, as such, that is fought. Witness the concordat with Mussolini and the concordat with Hitler, negotiated by the present Pope. Surely it is the doctrine of man that lies at the heart of totalitarianism that must be rejected, not simply the doctrine of man affirmed in the materialistic philosophy of communism. It is very difficult to understand cooperation with fascist Italy, nazi Germany, and fascist Spain, and holy war against communist Russia. What is the basis of the attack? Is it the announced atheism of communism that is condemned and the practiced atheism of fascism that is condoned?"

SEMINARY SUMMER SESSION

Berkeley, Cal.:—The Church Divinity School of the Pacific launched its summer session on June 23, with Prof. Pierson Parker as acting dean. A five weeks' session will be held with courses of study arranged especially for returning veterans, chaplains and clergy in the field who wish to study for the summer. The school has been planned jointly by the Berkeley Baptist Divinity School, the Pacific School of Religion, the San Francisco Theological seminary, and Church Divinity school.

At the commencement held June 6 Dean Henry Shires announced that over $6200 had been received from the theological seminary offering. Four men received the certificate of graduation and two the bachelor of divinity.

Among the many Bishops who are members of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship are Bishop Keeler of Minnesota; Bishop Clingman of Kentucky and Bishop Tucker of Ohio

CHURCH RECEIVES LARGE SUM

Los Angeles:—St. John's Church recently benefited through the payment by the Church Life Insurance Corporation of $116,474 representing the completion of an endowment fund begun 15 years ago. The Rev. George Davidson, rector of St. John's, initiated the fund with the corporation's assistance.

IF YOU LIKE IT

★This number of THE WITNESS is going to a considerable number of people who are not regular subscribers. We would like to suggest to them that if they like this number they will like every number. Three dollars sent to THE WITNESS, 6140 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago 37, Ill., or 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, will bring you the magazine every week for a year. May we also again urge subscribers not to ask for summer address changes unless you are to be away for an extended period. We still have difficulty in securing stencils and getting them cut. If you can arrange to have your home copy forwarded it will be a great aid to us. If not of course we will be glad to make the change if you will send us both your old and new address.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

EDITORIALS

Evangelical Fellowship

THIS number presents the aims and purposes of that organization. We commend to you the articles written by members of the Fellowship.

It is quite evident that the E.E.F., like the Episcopal Church, is comprehensive. There are no narrowly restrictive formularies to which members are required to give assent; the Fellowship is open to all members of the Episcopal Church who would "preserve the values of our Anglican heritage, Catholic and Reformed, and give them contemporary expression in the life and thought of the ecumenical movement through the fellowship of the Holy Spirit." Neat labels are easily devised and easily applied in our day. There are those in the Church who think that when they have a person tagged they have him completely classified on all matters of faith and order. But as Dean Inge reminded us some years ago, labels are often libels. We welcome this opportunity therefore to let members of the E.E.F. speak for themselves as they give expression, with varying accents, to a great tradition of our Church.

Steady!

A PSYCHOLOGIST recently pointed out how the present world neurosis is affecting our thinking in many realms of life. A startling example of this in the Church recently appeared in the New York Times. The rector of Trinity Church, New York, discussing the proposed union of the Presbyterian and Protestant Episcopal Church, is quoted as saying that it would be "criminal and unhappy if a small group of people should accomplish this vicious victory." Surely Dr. Fleming is aware that no "small group" can legislate for the Church. If steps are taken towards organic union they will only be so through the carefully considered and majority vote of the House of Deputies and House of Bishops of the General Convention. And to call it "criminal and vicious" is a strange commentary on the prayer of the Master, "That they all may be one."

But there follows in the newspaper report a sentence as full of inaccuracies as it has been our lot to read: "They want us to give up our organization, all that we have inherited; to give up our commitment to God; to give up the Book of Common Prayer; to abandon confirmation, communion and other sacraments, or give them a meaning other than we think they have; to have the Church controlled by laymen and elders." Where in the world has Dr. Fleming come by this series of misinformation? Since 1937, when our commission on unity first began its work at the behest of General Convention, there has been nothing published remotely suggesting any of these things. Here, in Dr. Fleming's statement, is individualistic Protestantism gone wildly rampant.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, recently met, heard a report which recorded with gratification the progress towards unity. We sincerely trust that our Presbyterian brethren will not imagine that the maudlin statement by Dr. Fleming represents the attitude of the Episcopal Church. And our own Church commission on unity, composed of all varieties of thought, must find this a strange reaction. Their report is not out; until it is such comments are both unwise and uninformed. Hysteria is not a healthy background for clarity of thought; steadiness and confidence in the wisdom of the Church is the only catholic attitude that is tenable.

"QUOTES"

THERE have been no better representatives of Christian social action than evangelicals. Their sensitivity to the love of Christ made them conscious of the appalling needs of great masses of humanity. They applied the gospel to human relations, economic conditions and racial differences. Moving from nationalism to a true internationalism, they are the forerunners of whoever initiates or inherits One World. Whether America moves paganward or outward into awareness of the human predicament and its solution in the gospel depends on whether the evangelical tradition gets shunted off into subjectivism and social repression, or whether it moves forward to levels of human concern drawn from the divine compassion.

—Alfred W. Swan

Statement of Policy IV

WE RECOGNIZE that Anti-Semitism is a weapon used by reactionary forces and must be combatted wherever it appears. But we do not recognize that Anti-Semitism is a Christian product and can be ended as soon as Christians agree to end it. It is far older than Christianity and it is a pity that Christianity has not done more to put an end to it. But it is a Jewish problem as well as a Christian and the Jews themselves can do much to put an end to it. Let Judaism be a religion, not a race or nationality and it will flourish better.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

On the Negro question the record of THE WITNESS for many years past represents the unanimous view of the editors. There can be no racial discrimination here if America is to achieve the promise of its destiny. This does not mean that all races are alike—thank God for diversity of gifts!—but it does mean that all must have equality of opportunity and that segregation and ostracism are un-American as well as un-Christian. And certainly in the Church all racial discriminations must be done away and kept away. Christianity subordinates secondary characteristics such as race, creed, color, country of national origin and sex and holds all equal in God's sight, deserving equal opportunities for jobs, education, voting, etc. We are all one in Christ.

This is the fourth of a series of statements setting forth the editorial policies of THE WITNESS. The views are composite and reflect a consensus of the editors and the executive committee of the Church Publishing Association for whom this magazine is published. Further statements will follow.

Our Protestant Heritage

by Gardiner M. Day

President of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship

THE Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship "invites to membership those who value the Protestant nature of our Church equally with its Catholic heritage and will share in adventurous action under the guidance of the Holy Spirit." We hear so much about the Catholic tradition in our Church that it is extremely easy for an Episcopalian to forget that his Church is an heir also to a great Protestant tradition. It is our purpose, in this brief article, to mention a number of these principles of the Protestant tradition which we feel are important for the life of our Church and are just as relevant to the present as they were when they were reborn in the sixteenth century. Parenthetically, it also should be stressed that while the terms "protest" and "reform" in form are negative, the movement they represent was, and is, positive and creative. Derivatively, "Protestant" comes from the two words "pro" and "testo," "to bear witness to." The Protestant reformers were bearing witness to truths which they believed were in danger of being submerged by Roman Catholicism. It should be also noted that these principles are fundamentally principles of Christianity but ones which the Reformation re-evaluated and underscored. Let us look at these principles.

Prior to the Reformation the Church taught that the only path to salvation was through the penitential system established by the Church. The only way a Christian could hope to avoid Hell in the next life was by confessing his sins to a priest, by fulfilling the prescribed penance, and receiving absolution, for the Church claimed that it held the sole key to salvation.

One of the great affirmations of the Reformation, and indeed Protestantism in all its historic forms, is that God is directly accessible to man. God has not placed between himself and man saints, bishops, and priests, through whom, alone, the individual can come into the presence of God. Rather as God spoke to Moses through the burning bush, to Samuel in the temple, to Paul on the road to Damascus, so he is ever seeking to guide man by his Holy Spirit through the still small voice of conscience. Through Jesus Christ, God once and for all directly revealed himself to sinful man. Jesus, by his example and teaching, continually made it clear that the love of God flows directly to any man, no matter how sinful, provided he sincerely and penitently turned to God. As a modern writer has put it: 'To allege that between God and a pilgrim who desires to come to him through Jesus Christ, the new and living way, some other person or some institution must mediate, is to impugn the one-for-allness of the Gospel and tarnish the chief glory of the Christian religion."

This truth is reaffirmed at every Communion service when the invitation, which dates from 1548, is read: "Ye who do earnestly repent you of your sins . . . draw near with faith."

It may be truthfully said that the Reformation rediscovered the Bible as the word of God. Protestantism affirms that the Bible provides the decisive norm of spiritual authority. Studied wth the eye of faith and under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, it offers to the individual a saving knowledge of God and of his will for human life. The individual needs the help of the Christian tradition and fellowship, but that tradition and fellowship is always subject to the living word of the scriptures and to Christ himself, who rules the Church today, as in the past ages, through his ever present spirit. As this is the one Protestant affirmation which is most generally recognized, we need not elaborate upon it.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

PROTESTANTISM reaffirms this doctrine which is made clear by St. Paul in his epistles, that man is not justified nor saved by his own learning, by a fulfillment of any codes, or by the execution of any external acts, but only through his own act of faith. A sinner, and every man is a sinner, is saved only when, recognizing that perfect goodness in the sight of God is not something that he can achieve by his own merit, he throws himself upon the mercy of God and expresses his faith in the redeeming power of Christ. His achievement of right relations with God is a personal transaction, an individual encounter between God and himself. His minister may counsel him and help him to find God, but neither his minister nor any institution can give to him or prevent him from receiving the grace of God which flows freely to him when he consecrates his life to God. Justification by faith asserts that the process whereby a man becomes right with God depends not upon the compliance with external rules and rites, but upon the inner attitude of the soul. This doctrine affords the firmest possible foundation for religious freedom, for it affirms that salvation of the individual is independent of all human authority. Man's external salvation is thus placed beyond the reach of all human tyranny, and he becomes, as Martin Luther so grandly proclaimed, in the most complete sense, a free man.

Protestantism, in all its forms, declares that no man or institution can have a monopoly over the approach of the human soul to God, but that the humblest individual, with faith in God through Jesus Christ, is, in the deepest spiritual sense, a priest in his own right, with ever free access to God. The reaffirmation of this doctrine, which had been largely lost during the Middle Ages, was one of the great contributions of the Reformation to Christian life. It had two special results.

In the first place, it led to a revival of religion among laymen as well as to a greater recognition of the importance of the laity in the life of the whole Church. In the second place, it put the vocation of being a Christian first and that of being a businessman, farmer, priest, etc., second. Protestantism proclaimed, and still proclaims, that the important distinction is not whether a man is a monk or lawyer, priest or businessman, but whether he is a true disciple of Jesus Christ. Phillips Brooks was echoing this same view when to someone who asked, "What can a humble individual like myself give to God?", he replied, "You can give to God the best that any man can give, namely, one good Christian life." As Luther wrote: "It looks like a great thing when a monk renounces everything, goes in to a cloister, lives a life of asceticism . . . on the other hand, it looks like a little thing when a maid cooks, cleans, and does other housework. But because God's command is there, even such a lowly employment, must be praised as a service of God . . ." In striking contrast to the medieval Church, Protestantism called Christianity to return to the New Testament in which there is no division of the Christian fellowship into clergymen and laymen but in which Jesus called all men to Christian discipleship.

THE reformers aimed to give the word "Catholicism" its original meaning, which was universal or ecumenical. They could not agree that only those merited the title Christian who were members of the Church of Rome and believed in the authority of the Pope. The Protestant cannot be part of a sectarian movement, strange as that may sound to modern ears. He believes that all who give their allegiance to God through Jesus Christ and strive to follow his way of life are members of the Body of Christ. Dr. John MacKay has put it, speaking of John Calvin, one of the leading Protestant reformers, "He was without exception the most catholically minded man of his time. He yearned all his days for the reunion of Christendom. Reformed Christianity is, therefore, untrue to its nature when it is sectarian and divided, when it lacks enthusiasm for the Church universal, for the one Holy Catholic Church, when it is uncooperative with other Christians, when it rejects unity because it cannot achieve uniformity, when it fails to hold the truth in love." While a complete synthesis of unity and liberty has never been reached in either Protestantism or Catholicism, the ecumenical movement of our time is a conspicuous witness to the ideal of a universal Christian fellowship or Catholic Church which Protestantism is striving to build. While there are many divisions to be overcome, Protestantism is today struggling, through the World Council of Churches, toward the realization of a great inclusive Christian community which, God grant, may some day be the Body of Christ throughout the world.

The Reformation was a revolt against a totalitarian Church. It declared that the mind of man could not be bound by a system of infallible doctrine, nor his spirit by an elaborate penitential system, nor his will by the commands of an ecclesiastical hierarchy. Protestantism proclaimed, and has always proclaimed, "the glorious liberty of the children of God." Today we take our liberty so much for granted that we forget it is rooted and grounded in our religion. Nevertheless, it is only because men and women in every generation since that day in 1517 when Martin Luther tacked his thesis on the Wittenburg Cathedral, have been willing to give their lives to secure and preserve that liberty for us that we enjoy it now. One of our chaplains spoke with discernment when he wrote from Italy, "My experience has certainly taught me one thing; it is not true to say that American democracy was nourished and inspired by Christianity. One has to say, to be truthful, that it was nourished and inspired by Protestant Christianity." Had not the Reformation been able to throw off the yoke of a totalitarian Church, these United States would not be in existence today.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Let me close this article by making my own a paragraph of the editorial which began the publication of that excellent magazine Theology Today:

"At a time like this, when the defeat of one form of tyranny may easily give place to another, when evidence multiplies that new totalitarianisms are germinating in the hushed silence that is enforced by the onslaught on the old, it behooves Protestant Christians to rediscover and reappraise their heritage. Our era was born, and our spiritual heritage formed, in that tremendous rebirth of Christian insight and power known to history as the Protestant Reformation. It becomes clear that the struggle for spiritual freedom will have to be fought over again in our time. The Protestant mind that was born in the disciplined freedom of Christ must once again strip for action, clear its decks of inhibitions, and order its energies to battle stations. Without taking up towards the personalities, the trends, and the emphases of the Reformation an idolatrous and uncritical attitude, it is our conviction that insights of lasting significance were attained in that movement which we need to recover and deepen today, and that spiritual conquests were made then which must be maintained inviolate."

Approach to Social Problems

by Charles D. Kean

Rector of Grace Church, Kirkwood, Missouri

IF THERE is any text that seems made to order for the Episcopal Evangelical understanding of the approach to social problems, it is Philippians 3:20, as given in the Moffatt translation—"but we are a colony of heaven." This text is true to the evangelical spirit of this and every other age, while at the same time it is related specifically to that social concern which is the note of the "liberal" spirit in our times.

"But we are a colony of heaven"—It is our conviction as evangelicals that the church of Christ itself comes into being precisely as men and women, discovering themselves to be united in fellowship through faith in Jesus Christ, address themselves concretely to those specific problems of their world which make for conflict between men. In one sense, the church of Christ is continually re-created age after age in the social decisions men make because of their higher loyalty. The vitality of the church of Christ does not depend upon its lineage, its organization, its institutions, its ministry, its sacraments, but rather these things themselves derive their practical meaning from the concern of the fellowship as a Colony of Heaven with such problems of a suffering world as unemployment and international peace.

The distinctive evangelical note is on the universal need of mankind for redemption through Christ Jesus. Our world by nature is not a perfect world. No conceivable process of deduction from the order of creation will ever result in a perfect world. No matter what social advances men make, the need for redemption through Christ Jesus will always be the primary religious issue.

What this means concretely is that the evangelical can accept realistically the fact that mankind is divided into various groups, which because of their nature tend to compete with each other and often to attempt to destroy each other. These groups are national, racial, cultural and economic in origin. Man by nature, in other words, is divided and his external divisions are reflected in his troubled soul. The result of these competing divisions is depression and war, and exploitation and poverty and insanity.

One does not need to be in the evangelical tradition to recognize this much of man's problem to be sure. Any socially interested person can say as much, and can also point out that the nature of these groupings and the nature of the conflict between them is revolutionary—that these groups tend eventually to be replaced by other alignments, the way the political set-up of the Middle Ages gave way to the modern nation-state, and the modern nation-state today is in the period of transition. Likewise, the kind of conflict changes from the kind of warfare men knew in the Middle Ages to the highly technological and economic nature of modern conflicts of all sorts.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The distinctive evangelical recognition is that the perennial problem of man is shown in his social life since all groups functionally serve the pretensions to autonomy of their members. In an unredeemed world this results is inevitable conflict, and as long as the world remains unredeemed to that extent social distress will remain even though group alignments shift and methods of conflict change.

The cancellation of man's group life is not the answer to the problem on its fundamental level. In certain detailed cases groups will disappear, and in others they will not. Man will always have to have concrete and specific group loyalties because of the way life happens to be. Even in a perfect co-operative, where ownership of the factory is in the hands of the consumers, not every consumer is the actual manager and not every one is master of every specialized process of production, and the difference of economic functions makes for competing groups. While the answer to the race problem may some day involve the merger of all races there will always be identifiable minorities of other kinds, and the process of racial merger will in any event be long and protracted.

ON THE fundamental level the answer to the problem of man's competing groups, which is the root form of all social difficulty, is in redemption—in conscious and deliberate and radical conversion to Christianity. The Christian is not one who lives in a world where everything has been reduced to a least common denominator. The Christian is one who has accepted a higher loyalty which is in creative contradiction to the way of the world. A Christian on the level of history still remains an American or a Russian or a Chinese or a Czech, etc., and he still remains either white or black or yellow as far as skin goes; and he still remains either a manager or a white-collar worker or a technician or a laborer or a farmer. There will always be tension between these groupings which can be the occasion for actual conflict. But the Christian is one who recognizes the claim of a higher loyalty—a fellowship in Christ which overreaches and sublimates the tension between all lesser groupings, and consequently is reflected in the way a man in one group regards men in other groups.

The need of the world is not for the cancellation of its group life but for the redemption of its group life. When men in groups acknowledge no higher loyalty, then the life and problems and demands of their immediate group loyalties—nation, class, race—are normative and subject to no ultimate controls. When men in groups acknowledge the claim of the fellowship in Christ, then their practical relationship to their historical groups is transformed. The groups themselves remain but they are used differently. The dissimilarities instead of being inevitable sources of conflict are transformed into opportunities for creative co-operation.

When the Episcopal evangelical looks at the process of redemption, he again using our text recognizes that there is no meaning to redemption outside of social life. Man abstracted from society is like a butterfly on a pin. He is no longer a true, living butterfly. Consequently, to recognize the claim of the colony of heaven means to accept a vital concern in every social factor which affects the lives of men and women and children who are all potential members of the colony. The meaning that redemption through Jesus Christ has for me must include a recognition that I am part of the fellowship of man for whom Christ died. There is no real meaning to the idea of individual salvation.

IT FOLLOWS, therefore, that to call one's self a member of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship involves accepting as a true description of man's situation and God's answer a sense of fellowship in Christ as the divine response to the need of divided man in a divided world. If words are to mean anything vital, this recognition of fellowship carries with it a driving concern for those who in the design of God are its members. Canon Scott Holland's statement, "The more I study the Incarnation, the more I am concerned about drains," can be given a very definite evangelical interpretation.

Our concern with the need of man for a world order, for interracial peace, for economic justice and democracy, for the provision of adequate housing and educational opportunities for all people, for the protection of the peoples of the world against the predatory power of organized wealth, for control of the atomic bomb, for co-operation with Russia—all these and all other social problems are the result of a consciousness that we are a colony of heaven through Jesus Christ our Lord. Whereas divided man can never solve these problems, but rather be crucified by them age after age, we believe that we can in the faith of Christ crucified provide a framework in which the tensions of society are given a different setting, and the spirit of Christian brotherhood can be accepted as the law.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Church and the Evangelical Fellowship

By

J. CLEMENS KOLB

Chaplain at the University of Pennsylvania

WHEN a person hears the words, Evangelical Fellowship, the question must flash across his mind, "Now what connection does that have with the Church? Is it an integral part of the Church or is it something that is tacked on?" The very title, "The Church and the Evangelical Fellowship," might indicate that the two are distinct. It might suggest that the Church could exist without the Evangelical Fellowship and that the Evangelical Fellowship could exist without the Church. I cannot think of any charge that would give me more distress of mind if it were true, or that gives me a greater sense of righteous indignation because of its falsity.

Certainly in the beginning it was not so. Had this article, "The Church and the Evangelical Fellowship," been written in the first century instead of in the twentieth, no one would have been able to distinguish between the Church and the Fellowship, for they were one. Rather the Church was born within that fellowship of eleven evangelists who gathered together for worship and who went out from their worship to tell the world about the life, death, resurrection and divinity of Jesus Christ.

Furthermore, that first evangelical fellowship of the apostles didn't just go out to preach; they went out to found a fellowship which they called a Church. One might have thought that St. Paul would not be too interested in the Church, because he said of the gospel, "I neither received it of man nor was I taught it but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." In spite of that, he, of all men, labored to found and extend the fellowship of the Church.

The evangelical doesn't think less of his Church than those who are not so minded; he thinks more, for the Church is both the seat of authority and the source of inspiration. Christ founded a Church, not a hierarchy. The New Testament was written by the Church, to the Church and for the Church. If any man thinks that an evangelical slights his Church, let him change his mind before the sun goes down.

There are two reasons however why the evangelical has been charged with neglect of the Church, due to two misunderstandings. The evangelical believes that we must preserve the great doctrines of the Reformation; that is, the access of every man to God, the freedom of every man in Christ and justification by faith. Now the real point is that it is only within the fellowship of the Church that these aims and doctrines can be realized. The analogy to school is a pertinent one. The Rev. Theodore Wedel has used it in his splendid book, The Coming Great Church, but I don't hesitate to use it again. The aim of the institution known as the school is to set men free from ignorance and to help them to approach problems with trained minds. But where can this type of mind be fostered and developed save in the institution? Granted that there are a few self-made men, a few geniuses, who get by without the institution. Even they would have been enriched by it. It was not their virtue that they didn't go to school; it was their handicap. No man has felt the lack of school quite as keenly as the really intelligent man who who has had to make his way independent of it.

Again, as Dr. Wedel points out in his analogy to school life, a college isn't just classes and faculty. There is such a thing as the school spirit. A man might read all about Harvard or Yale or Penn, he might take all courses by correspondence; but if he never came into the fellowship of the institution, he would know little about it and have only the slightest understanding of the meaning of a college education.

So, in a much greater way, with the evangelical and his Church. There is nothing that is quite so important to him. But the purpose of the Church is not to be an end in itself but to make possible man's direct access to his God and to give him a spiritual freedom that otherwise he would never have.

Sometimes an institution, even though it be the mystical body of Christ, thinks it is an end in itself and puts all its energies into the glorification and perpetuation of the institution. In fact that is the ever-present danger within any institution—that a hospital begins to live merely as a club for doctors and nurses, with the care of the patients a secondary consideration; or a college begins to look at itself as purely a place for research and to provide an adequate livelihood for intelligentsia; and a Church sometimes lapses over into this same error and begins to be more interested in the Church as an institution than it is in the people that it is designed to serve. That is what the evangelical seeks to avoid. The Church is to bring men into the fellowship of the faith and to give them access to God. The Church does not pretend to be God himself.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

THE second reason why evangelicals are sometimes thought to be weak on the doctrine of the Church is simply this, that evangelism has sometimes been marred by individualism and even by prima donna-ism. Now an individualist and a prima donna are no more evangelicals than aesthetes and sacristy rats are Anglo-Catholics. The evangelical believes with all his heart and soul that religion should be personal; but he is the very last man to claim that it should be individualistic, for an individualistic religion without any sense of the fellowship is a denial of all that the evangelical stands for. You do not find evangelicals standing among the spiritual snobs who claim that their religion is their own. I have heard people make that statement, but they were no evangelists and their religion wasn't their own and they didn't make it up.

Last of all when it comes to the place of authority in speaking for the Church there are two views. One is the papal view, wherein one man speaks for the whole Church, claiming that in matters of faith and morals he can speak infallibly. He may be guided by a hierarchy and a college of cardinals, but that is not the point. He has the right to speak without relationship to the fellowship if he chooses. That is not the Protestant view. It is not the evangelical view. Rather, the Church must make its decisions from within the fellowship. Our Protestant Episcopal Church, which makes no decision without representation from all groups within the Church, bishops, priests, laity, is an essentially evangelical Church. And our Church, believing as it does that the Church is the mystical body of Christ and yet is not an end but a means, is an evangelical Church. And our Church, preserving as it does, the catholic heritage, must not neglect the heritage of the Reformation either. May the day never come when either of its heritages is abandoned.

Liberal Evangelical Theology

by Randolph Crump Miller

Professor at the Church Divinity School of the Pacific

THE beliefs of the Liberal Evangelicals have frequently been misinterpreted or caricatured by its opponents. For our purposes, we have listed six typical criticisms and then give the essence of Liberal Evangelical teaching on these points. It has been said that Liberal Evangelicals believe 1. Man is essentially good, and will inevitably get better through education and better environment. 2. Jesus was a great moral teacher, but is not to be adored. 3. Prayer is the affirmation of the highest values. 4. The creeds are poetry. 5. The sacraments are mere dramatic devices. 6. The Church is not essential to Christianity.

Now there are people who share this shallow, optimistic creed but they are not to be found among those Liberal Evangelicals who are members of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship.

The Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship believes that God wills his church to be "catholic in its inclusiveness, liberal in its essential spirit, and evangelical in its witness for the gospel of Christ." To achieve this three-fold goal Christianity must be interpreted so it will make sense to the modern man, apply to our social life, make worship simple and dignified, and bring Christians together in unity.

Man, created in the image of God, has potentialities for goodness and thus may become a true child of the heavenly Father. Man is marked off from other animals because he is a worshiper of God, who, in turn, places a special value on man. But man, in his freedom, is a treasonable and disobedient slave, who is disloyal to God and is thus a sinner. Man is also a dupe, and his self-deception becomes clear when we analyze the conflicting motives of men. Man is a complex and contradictory person.

"This view of man as a child of God and still a sinner able to achieve positive goodness in freedom and yet only by the grace of God; seeking the kingdom and yet receiving it only from God; as a child of God in a tragic human situation and yet living the abundant life; as saved through the atonement of Jesus Christ and yet needing to be saved through repentance and commitment; as an individual and yet finding sanctuary only in the Church and as loved of God and yet suffering God's judgment" is a liberal and biblical doctrine of man.

To save man from this predicament, God did not send a moral example, a great teacher, or even an impersonal "logos," to tell us what it all means.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

God sent Jesus Christ "to reconcile the world to himself." The Liberal Evangelical says that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God. It is God who saves us from our sins. The chain of consequences by which we suffer judgment is broken by the self-giving love of Christ.

Because God is love, that is a universe of law in which men are punished for their sins. There is an unchanging moral order. Because God is love and men are sinners. God loved the world so much that he gave his only begotten son. God forgives through the power of the Cross, which is a prepayment for our sins. Forgiveness is prepaid, and yet man must pay for it.

ONLY as man comes to God prepared to change his ways of disobedience and to seek God's will, does God receive him as his son. We are to be heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ. "Our hope is that we may be as Jesus, not that we may be Christ's." "If we ever get to be like him, it will be through him." "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the fellowship of the Holy Spirit"—in this order—is the means by which man through repentance and commitment comes under the reign of God.

When a man is "in Christ," he lives by prayer, and "More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of.

Wherefore, let thy voice
Rise like a fountain for me night and day."

Prayer is not for the purpose of changing God; it is not magic; it is not auto-suggestion. It is to change men, to channel God's purposes into existence, and to bring about "Not my will, but thine, be done." Prayer is a source of strength for facing obstacles, for overcoming evil with good, for becoming reconciled to the inevitable, and for insight into God's will.

Prayer is personal communion with the Father of Jesus Christ, and we can pray for anything that is worthy of Jesus Christ in whose name we ask it.

The Liberal Evangelical thinks so much of prayer that he believes that the "morning and evening offices of prayer, praise, and preaching are worthy to be the principal service of the day." Prayer is the basic means whereby man is enabled to receive God's grace and thus fulfill God's purpose for him.

The creeds are poetry, but they are also affirmations of faith. They are true insofar as they are supported by Scriptures. The basic authority for Liberal Evangelicals is the Bible and not the Church, and the creeds are expressions of the Church's faith.

The Bible is the record of God's revelation in history and is the ultimate norm for faith and morals. Tradition and the creeds help in understanding the Bible, and all are subject to the critical investigations of the modern mind.

It is here that "Liberalism" becomes clear as a method, as an attitude toward seeking truth at any cost to cherished opinions. It is the conviction that revelation is still open, and that men can find God's truth by honest searching. It is a spirit of open-mindedness and tentativeness and humility before the facts and values of life. While this attitude does not produce faith (which is an act of decision of the total personality), liberalism safeguards faith against false claims of those within and outside the Church. Tradition and opinion are always subject to the living word of scripture and to the living Christ who rules the Church through the Holy Spirit.

The sacraments are more than dramatic devices, which is why Liberal Evangelicals oppose the dramatic imitations of Rome, in favor of more sedate renderings of these means of grace. The Lord's Supper has the unseen Christ as host. It is a fellowship meal, a corporate act of commemoration of Christ's life, cross, and resurrection. It is an offering of the total self to God and a personal communion with Christ as the congregation spiritually receives the body and blood of Christ to be strengthened and refreshed in soul.

"Come, risen Lord, and deign to be our guest;
Nay, let us be thy guests; the feast is thine;
Thyself at thine own board make manifest
In this our sacrament of bread and wine."

The Christian Church finds its historic roots in Judaism. Through the life, work, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ, God entered into a new agreement ratified by the life and death (the blood) of Jesus Christ.

THE Church, then, is the people who have entered this covenant relationship with the father of Jesus Christ. The Church exists to fulfill God's purposes in history and beyond history. The visible Church is in the world, with all of the historical, political, economic, and social limitations which finite existence imposes upon it. At the same time, the Church stands over against the world, claiming to pronounce judgment upon the world from a non-worldly point of view.

The Church, called into being by God through Jesus Christ, is the congregation of faithful people, wherein the true word of God is preached and the sacraments are duly ministered. It is preserved by various external means and chiefly by the Christian faith and life within it. Liberal Evangelicals are jealous of their heritage of an historic ministry, and while this ministry may be

(Continued on page 18)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Canadian Reunion Committees Adopt New Proposals

Anglicans and United Church to Study Plan Whereby Both Their Ministries Act in Unity

Edited by Philip L. Shutt

Toronto (RNS):—A proposal that ministers of the Church of England in Canada and the United Church of Canada be permitted to serve congregations of either communion has been unanimously adopted by reunion committees of the two Churches. The proposal will be passed on to both Churches for study.

Issued by two sub-committees appointed by commissions on reunion of both bodies, the report is confined to proposals for a mutually acceptable ministry, described as "the primary barrier to that large reunion which we all desire."

The joint committee proposes that "the ministers of each communion be set apart into the other type, with the result that the ministry of each would be able to serve the other."

The statement recalled that the initial step toward union was taken by the general synod of the Church of England in Canada when it invited the United Church to "enter into conversations" on the question. The United Church immediately responded and appointed fifteen representatives to meet with a corresponding number of representatives from the Church of England.

In 1944, a nation-wide committee was appointed by each communion, while the two fifteen-man groups were instructed to act as sub-committees of the larger bodies and draw up practical schemes for consideration.

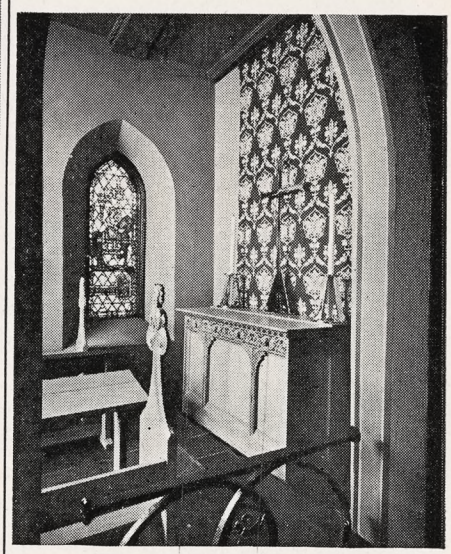
The work of the two sub-committees during the past three years, the statement explained, has been confined to the one project of the provision of a mutually acceptable ministry.

Prominent among the leaders of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship are the Rev. Elmer B. Christie, rector of the Epiphany, Seattle; the Rev. Wilbur L. Caswell, rector of St. Paul's, Yonkers, N.Y.; the Rev. Robert C. Batchelder, Jr., rector of St. James', Lancaster, Pennsylvania

Honorary Degrees

Gambier, O.:—Among those to receive honorary doctorates at the commencement at Kenyon College, June 21-24, were Dr. T. Z. Koo of China; the Rev. Louis M. Hirshon, recently elected dean of Christ Church Cathedral, Hartford, and the Rev. Donald V. Carey, rector of Grace Church, Grand Rapids, Michigan.

Floods Damage Churches



Harrisburg, Pa.:—When the Susquehanna and other rivers in the diocese of Harrisburg overflowed their banks recently, Christ Church, Milton, had its basement filled and the nave was flooded with water over the tops of the pews. Other churches suffering from the flood were Christ church, Williamsport; St. Andrew's, Tioga; St. Luke's, Blossburg; St. Paul's, Wellsboro; and St. Paul's, Lock Haven. The resultant damage was not as great however as in the flood of March 1936.

Prof. Hatch Honored

Cambridge, Mass.: — Climax of the commencement program of the Episcopal Theological School was the tribute paid by bishops and alumni to William H. P. Hatch who is retiring after 29 years of distinguished service as professor of the literature and interpretation of the New Testament. A book, Munera Studios, written by scholars who have studied under him was given to him, and the alumni, faculty, and students joined in presenting to him a beautiful desk. Eight men received the bachelor of divinity degree.

Reports Progress

Paducah, Ky.: — Bishop Charles Clingman reported advance steps in a number of churches throughout the diocese to members of the annual convention held in Grace church. New rectories and new churches were being built in several

Children's Chapel
ST. JOHN'S CHURCH, SHARON, PA.
Warner & Mitchell, Architects

Just a corner of the charming Children's Chapel upon whose walls are painted the story of the Children's Crusade. If you are planning a Children's Chapel or Baptistry, it would be well for you to see the other interior photographs which show the interesting work of renovation executed by Rambusch.

RAMBUSCH
Designers Decorators and Craftsmen
2 West 45th St. ~ New York 19, N.Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

For a better understanding of your Christian faith
read

The Man Who Wanted to Know

By JAMES W. KENNEDY

In this book, Mr. Jones, an average parish member, wants to know more about religion. He attends a school of religion, and there is led to understand how to read the Bible, how to think of God, how to draw nearer to the person of Christ, and how to look on life and duty in the light of His purposes for us. Those who read what the author has written will be prepared to be better Churchmen because they have been helped to realize the great ideal expressed by St. Paul — that we should "have the mind of Christ."

Because of its refreshing approach this book is particularly valuable for lay instruction and for inspiring the clergy to present the Christian faith more adequately to adults.

"Delightfully written. Thoroughly comprehensive, yet elemental enough for the average Churchman who wants to know what he may, must, and can believe."

—THE WITNESS

Price, $2.00

Morehouse-Gorham Co.
14 East 41st St. New York 17

localities. The Bishop urged strong support of the new department of visual education.

Deputies to General Convention: Rev. Messrs. R. C. Board, Wm. H. Langley Jr., Custis Fletcher, W. F. Rennenberg and Messrs. Alex. Galt Robinson, E. J. Wells, G. Edgar Straeffer and Stanley D. Petter.

Marcia Russell Nursery

Greenmont Village, Ohio:—Those who read Talking It Over in our June 13 number will be interested to learn that a memorial service for Marcia Spofford Russell was held in the community center here last week, and that the village nursery was dedicated to her and named Marcia Russell Nursery.

$200,000 Gift to RAF

Minneapolis, Minn.:—From Bishop Stephen E. Keeler comes the news of a gift of $200,000 for the Reconstruction and Advance Fund. This gift has been made by the Citizens Aid Society of Minneapolis, and has been announced by its president, Mrs. George Chase Christian. It has been designated specifically for pastoral work of chaplains of the army and navy, and is to be administered by the army and navy commission of the National Council.

Greek People Thankful

New York, N. Y.:—Acknowledging the gift of $15,000 for the Church of Greece, made through the World Council of Churches, Prof. Hamilcar S. Alivisatos, a representative of the Greek Church in Tokyo, Japan, has written officials of the Episcopal Church expressing the appreciation of the Greek people. He said that the money "'has been wisely distributed especially among the northern dioceses of the Church of Greece, where they have the most destructed churches."

Dean for Philadelphia

Philadelphia, Pa.:—Bishop Oliver Hart conducted the installation of Investment Logic and Opinion

Supplement 4621 describes a guaranteed stock with 4% income and good possibilities of appreciation. Copy on request to interested investors. Write Main Office or Asbury Park Branch.

Edward A. Viner & Co.
Member New York Stock Exchange
Managers of Investment Funds
11 Wall St. New York 5

LET YOUR CHURCH TOWER PLAY A

FULL CHORUS

OF MELODIOUS SONG

—not just a solo part!

Organ, Choir, and Bells may be combined in all their beauty with

Schulmerich
CARILLONIC BELLS AND TOWER MUSIC

From Schulmerich research in electronics has come the modern means to transform your church tower from a silent finger in the sky into a source of full-bodied celestial music. Schulmerich Tower Music brings a new message of joy and hope to each listening heart, stressing with articulate loveliness the spiritual message of your church.

With Schulmerich Tower Music, this audible beauty is not confined to a solo of bells or chimes, but includes the church's full message in song. The stirring harmonies of the choir, the full majesty of the organ and the sweet-throated song of Carillonic Bells may all be blended as you choose.

Only modern electronics can make possible so full and compelling a chorus of sound, and only Schulmerich Carillonic Bells and Tower Music have the exquisite clarity and tonal-beauty worthy of your church program. Their installation is handled simply and expertly, without construction inconvenience. No tower is necessary. No church is too large or too small. Send for our descriptive literature. Address Dept. W-12.

Schulmerich ELECTRONICS, INC.

CARILLONIC BELLS · TOWER MUSIC SYSTEMS · ACOUSTIC CORRECTION UNITS · SOUND DISTRIBUTION SYSTEMS · CHURCH HEARING AIDS

SELLERSVILLE, PA.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

the Rev. Frank D. Gifford, formerly rector of St. Thomas' church, Mamaroneck, N. Y., as dean of the Philadelphia Divinity School in St. Andrew's Collegiate chapel on June 6. The honorary degree of doctor of divinity was conferred upon the Rev. Stanley R. West, rector of Calvary church, Consohocken, Pa., who has served as the alumni representative on the board of overseers of the school for fifteen years.

Degrees Conferred

Sewanee, Tenn.:—Two of the youngest members of the episcopate received honorary degrees of doctor of divinity at the commencement of the school of theology of the University of the South: Bishop-coadjutor John E. Hines of Texas, a graduate of the class of 1930, and Bishop Thomas Wright of East Carolina who graduated from Sewanee in 1923. Thirteen bishops were present, and over 200 alumni. Seven men, members of the class of 1946, also were honored.

Commencement Speakers

New Haven, Conn.:—The work of the Episcopal Church in the Canal Zone and in Colombia, and of conditions in Costa Rica and Nicaragua was described by Bishop Heber Gooden of the Panama Canal Zone at the recent commencement exercises of Berkeley Divinity school. His father, Bishop Robert Gooden of Los Angeles, was the commencement speaker. Both father and son are graduates of Berkeley. Bishop Heber Gooden was given the honorary degree of S.T.D.

The Rev. William B. Spofford, managing editor of THE WITNESS, was selected as the alumni preacher for 1947.

Father and Son Celebrate

Westfield, N. Y.:—It was a proud son who joined with his father in celebrating the 50th anniversary of the father's ordination when the Rev. Fred Eastman, rector of St. Peter's Church here welcomed the Rev. F. S. Eastman the early part of June. The elder Eastman had given faithful service in several parishes and is now actively engaged as executive secretary of St. Philip's Society which concerns itself with evangelism, religious art, and publications of Christian literature. Another son, the Rev. Eric Eastman is chaplain at Pine Camp, N. Y.

Catch-Up Service

Detroit, Mich.:—"Pentecost, that's what it was—a regular Pentecost!" said Bishop Frank W. Creighton of Michigan, with shining eyes, following his annual "catch-up" confirmation service June 3 in St. Paul's cathedral. One could hardly blame the bishop for his enthusiasm; for the response to this annual service has increased year by year, until this year, 117 candidates were presented by 19 clergymen.

KAMP KAWANDAG
IN CANADA
A great summer opportunity for boys in Canada's famous Muskoka Lake region. Diversified land and lake program. Church influences. For information address director
Rev. J. S. Ditchburn, Episcopal Chaplain.
University Station, Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

IN the long summer days . . . at home or on vacation . . . do you reserve a part of the day for your soul?

For this quiet time, you will find very real spiritual uplift from the daily devotions in The Upper Room.

For each day of the year, The Upper Room (issued quarterly) presents an appropriate daily devotion, consisting of a quotation from Scripture, a meditation, a brief prayer and a thought for the day—all compiled or written by outstanding churchmen and women . . . of different denominations, especially gifted, and abreast of the times.

Ten or more copies to one address, 5 cents per copy, postpaid. Single yearly subscriptions in U. S., Canada, and Latin America, 30 cents, postpaid; four years, $1.00. Other countries, 40 cents; four years, $1.35. Order from

THE UPPER ROOM
Medical Arts Building Nashville 3, Tennessee

BRUGLER HOUSE
on Rye Lake, near White Plains, N. Y., offers clergymen and other active Church workers the quiet surroundings of a small estate for a holiday or vacation. For information and rates, write
Lindley M. Franklin, Jr., Secy.
281 Fourth Ave., New York 10, N. Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The "catch-up" confirmation was begun for the convenience of clergy having candidates who had missed Episcopal visitations for one reason or another.

Missionary to Testify

New York:—The Rev. John G. Magee, former missionary and now Episcopal chaplain at Yale university, has been called to Tokyo by the war department to testify in the war crimes trial. He was in China from 1918 until 1940. Most of that time he was in charge of the Church of the Victorious Word, of which he was the founder.

Bishop Resigns

New York:—Bishop Colmore of Puerto Rico has sent his resignation to the Presiding Bishop. It will be acted upon at the General Convention in September. He has been the Bishop of Puerto Rico for 33 years.

Bishop's Wife Dies

Hartford, Conn.: — Funeral services for Mrs. Frederick G. Budlong, wife of the Bishop of Connecticut, were held in Christ Church cathedral here June 14. She was an efficient member of the house committee of the Church Home, and served faithfully on the boards of the Woman's Exchange, Y.W.C.A., the Children's Museum and the St. Barnabas' Guild for nurses. She also held several honorary diocesan offices. The Budlongs have one son, Harrison M. Budlong who, recently was discharged as a navy lieutenant.

Women Barred

Geneva, N. Y. (RNS):—A proposal which would allow women to become eligible for election as church officials was turned down by delegates to the Rochester diocesan convention recently.

100% BURNPROOF IRONING BOARD COVER

$2.98

New Tex-Knit ironing board cover made from "Asbeston" — amazing new fabric perfected by the U. S. Rubber Co. for wartime use. GET WAFFLE-KNIT COTTON UNDERPAD, $1.00. Send your check or money order now. Money-back guarantee.

Sizes: 48", 54", 60"

WEISER PRODUCTS
Dept. LG, 743 9th Avenue, New York 19, N.Y.

RUSSIA FOR CHRIST

The Great Challenge of This Age

50 Russian and Ukrainian Christians have answered the Call to carry the Gospel to their people.

The Bible House of Washington, D.C., formerly the Italian Embassy, now the property of the Russian Bible Society, where refugee Russian Christians from the "displaced persons" camps in Europe will be housed and trained for missionary and Bible colportage work.

Will You Help?

Can we, who are living in beautiful, safe America, visualize even a little bit what multitudes of our fellow Christians have gone through in Europe? Are not many of us, who are provided with all the necessities of life, in the United States, like the rich man in Christ's parable, while the poor and wounded Lazarus of Europe is lying at our heart's doorstep, and we notice him not, and do not hear his groanings for help? Does not the Word of God remind us of our sacred duty to our fellowmen, even if they be strangers to us, for the man who had fallen among the thieves on the way from Jerusalem to Jericho was a stranger to the Samaritan. And the name of the despised Samaritan has been changed into that of the "Good Samaritan," because he was moved by compassion to help a stranger from another race.

Appeals From Europe

On the 29th of March 1946 an urgent letter came to the Russian Bible Society from a refugee camp in Belgium signed by 33 Russian and Ukrainian Christians who have come through great suffering. They ask for theological and missionary training so they can return to minister to their people. As we began to pray for these first thirty-three refugees in Belgium, and our hearts went out to them in increasing measure, other letters from refugee Russian Christians in other camps in Europe began to reach our Washington Office.

A young Russian brother who had been a Sunday School teacher in Pastor Malof's Church in Eastern Europe writes: "I got news about your Bible School. The Brethren here desire to get to that School. Our names are in the supplementary list which we shall be sending to you through an American brother. I ask of you very much please help us to get to the School. My father died two years ago. My mother remained weeping on the shore of the river Daugava, when I was leaving Riga. My youngest brother Enoch was arrested by the Germans and carried away somewhere to Germany, and nothing has been heard of him since. I now turn to you as my spiritual father and ask you to do what is possible that I may get over to you." From a refugee Lutheran Pastor, writing to us under the auspices of the Evangelical Lutheran Church of Augsburg, Germany: "Dear Pastor Malof:—I felt impressed to write you and ask for special prayers. I feel as though you can give me some advice through God. Here is my problem. I was brought here by the nazis in 1944, and now I am a displaced person with my family of four. I would like to attend your Bible Seminary and become a missionary under the Russian Bible Society. Would it be possible for me and some other Latvian Lutheran pastors to come to the United States and enter your seminary and from there be sent as missionaries? It is the most critical time we have ever seen in our lives and we would be glad to come to a country where we would be allowed to continue in our calling. I sincerely hope that you be in a position to help in this time of need. Please give this matter your immediate attention to lift the burden from our shoulders, through the help of God". Rudolph K".

Share In This Work

In response to these moving appeals the Russian Bible Society has decided to receive in the first instance fifty of these worthy Russian refugee Christians in our Bible Institute. We alone cannot do it, we look for help to the Lord above, and to His faithful stewards here below. The passage of each will be $300; first year of training, room and board $50.00 monthly, $600; total $900. The funds are needed immediately as we desire to negotiate with the U. S. Government to bring them. How blessed it would be if 50 churches or Sunday Schools, Bible Classes or individuals would each sponsor the needs of one of these missionary candidates! This is a most unusual opportunity and privilege. Never before in the whole history of America has there come an appeal from such a large number of refugee Russian Christians to be brought to America, and to be trained as soul winners. Bible teachers, evangelists, missionaries and Bible colporteurs. In future through their preaching, thousands of Russians will come to Christ, and by helping them now, you will have a share in that great harvest of souls.

Note: Pastors and churches desiring to have a personal visit from Pastor Malof, President of the Russian Bible Society, or from another representative may send invitations to the Russian Bible Society, P. O. Box 2709, Washington, D. C. Readers who would like to read Pastor Malof's thrilling life story, with 45 illustrations, "SENTENCED TO SIBERIA", the story of his missionary work in Russia, persecution, imprisonment, sentenced to Siberia and God's wonderful deliverance may send their orders to the same address. Price $1.00 including postage.

Please cut this out and forward with your gift to:
THE RUSSIAN BIBLE SOCIETY, INC. P. O. Box 2709, Washington, D. C.
Dear Russian Bible Society:

In response to your appeal in the Witness I have the pleasure of enclosing my gift:
For the Refugee Missionary Student passage and support $.....
For the Russian Bible publishing fund $.....
For Pastor Malof's Life Story "SENTENCED TO SIBERIA" $.....
Each contributor will be kept advised of the progress of this work through the magazine "Russia Calling" subscription deduction 50c.

Name .....

Address .....

"And this I do for the Gospel's sake, that I may be partaker thereof with you". 1 Cor. 9:25

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Exploring . . .

There are many kinds of exploration, all of them exciting. One kind involves discovering the foundations of our Christian Faith, following out its implications, and assessing the means of applying it in life. This is partly what Theological Education means to the young men who are preparing for the ministry. Humanly speaking, the future of the Church hangs on their quest.

What infinitely detailed care goes into a scientific expedition or into polar exploration! If the Seminaries are to fulfill their function, the best the Church has to give, in resources, support, and critical concern, must be brought to bear upon them.

THE GENERAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, New York City.
BEXLEY HALL, Gambier, Ohio
BISHOP PAYNE DIVINITY SCHOOL, Petersburg, Va.
CHURCH DIVINITY SCHOOL OF THE PACIFIC, Berkeley, Calif.
DIVINITY SCHOOL OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA.
BERKELEY DIVINITY SCHOOL, New Haven, Conn.
EPISCOPAL THEOLOGICAL SCHOOL, Cambridge, Mass.
NASHOTAH HOUSE, Nashotah, Wis.
SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn.
SEABURY-WESTERN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, Evanston, Ill.
VIRGINIA THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, Alexandria, Va.

THE CHURCH PENSION FUND

and its subsidiaries

administered for the benefit of the Church

THE CHURCH HYMNAL CORPORATION

Publishers of The Hymnal; Book of Common Prayer; A Prayer Book for Soldiers and Sailors; Book of Offices for Certain Occasions; Stowe's Clerical Directory.

THE CHURCH LIFE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost insurance and annuity contracts available to the clergy, lay officials and active lay workers of the Church, either voluntary or paid, and their immediate families.

THE CHURCH PROPERTIES FIRE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost fire and windstorm insurance on property owned by or closely affiliated with the Church, and on the residences and personal property of the clergy.

Further information available by addressing any of the above at

20 Exchange Place New York

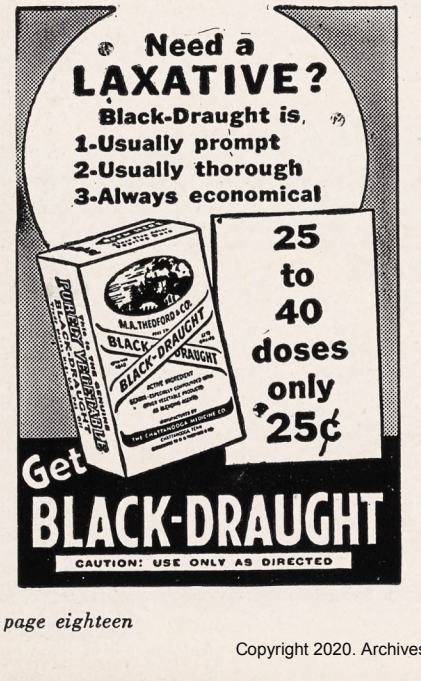
Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Write us for
Organ Information
AUSTIN ORGANS, Inc.
Hartford, Conn.



Memorial Windows
In accordance with the best traditions of the craft. Notable installations in forty states and five foreign countries.
Illustrated material on request
The D'Ascenzo Studios
founded 1896
1604 Summer Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

ALTAR BREADS ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED
SAINT MARY'S CONVENT
KENOSHA • WISCONSIN

MENEELY BELL CO.
22 RIVER ST., TROY, N. Y.
BELLS

R. GEISSLER, INC.
71-79 W. 45th St., New York 19, N. Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS

ERNEST W. LAKEMAN
Designer and Worker in
STAINED GLASS
2 CRESCENT PLACE
YONKERS, NEW YORK

LIBERAL EVANGELICAL—

(Continued from page 12)

adapted to meet changing circumstances, it should not be discarded. While the episcopate should be maintained in "the coming great Church," this does not mean that non-episcopal ministries are not true ministries of the word and sacraments.

This view of the Church is a big one, and it is the Liberal Evangelical belief that "the Church has never been Catholic enough," for almost all those who use the name "Catholic" are among the most sectarian groups of Christendom. Thus, while the Liberal Evangelicals believe in organic union with the Presbyterians, they also believe in keeping the historic ministry and the Prayer Book, even to obeying the spirit of the rubrics, Offices of Instruction, and 39 Articles, in the Church to come.

Liberal Evangelicals, as represented in the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship, are concerned to make use of the best possible scholarship to maintain the best in the traditions, customs, and Prayer Book of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and to follow "the central trend" of being open to new truth without discarding what is good in the past. It refuses to be overwhelmed by Anglo-Catholic modernism or obscurantism and guards against excesses of secular optimism as well. It seeks to uphold the doctrine, discipline, and worship of the Protestant Episcopal Church by preserving permanently the positive principles of the Reformation and by applying Christianity to all the problems of modern life. And because it is truly "liberal," it can "give an answer to every man that asketh a reason for the hope that is in it."

MEMORIAL RESOLUTION

Resolved: that the 38th annual convention of the missionary district of Nevada, meeting at St. Peter's Church, Carson City, May 12, 1946, being the third Sunday after Easter, express to Mrs. Garth Sibbald and family and to the wardens, vestry and congregation of Trinity Parish, Reno, our profound sense of loss to the missionary district of Nevada in the sudden death of the Reverend Garth Sibbald and extend to them our condolences.

SECRETARY WANTED

Interesting position New York area. Good stenographer. Able to take responsibility. Reply: Box CM, WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

POSITION WANTED

Trained nurse, churchwoman, fifty, seeks position as nurse or housemother in boys' school. Experience. References. Box ML, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6.

ASSISTANT WANTED

Young, ordained, liberal evangelical, married clergyman wanted with special interest in young people and calling. $2,800. References. Rev. David H. Weeks, 646 Orchard Parkway, Niagara Falls, N. Y.

WOMAN DIRECTOR

Wanted a woman director of religious education for prominent New York Episcopal parish. Church School of 500. Single, 30 to 45 years. Apartment provided. Box WD, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty St., New York 6, N. Y.

Everything for the Episcopal Church
but vestments
A broad statement but we'd like to prove it.
Ammidon and Company
Horace L. Varian
Horace L. Varian, Jr.
31 South Frederick Street
Baltimore 2, Maryland

PURE IRISH LINENS NOW IN STOCK
for all Church needs, supplies constantly arriving, good qualities, also fine cottons. Samples free.
Mary Fawcett Company
Plainfield, N. J. Box 146

CATHEDRAL STUDIOS
Washington & London, England. Linens and materials by the yard, surplices, albs, Altar Linens, stoles, burses & veils. Materials by the yard. See my NEW BOOK "CHURCH EMBROIDERY" & CHURCH VESTMENTS a complete instruction. 128 pages, 95 illus. Price $5.67. And my HANDBOOK for ALTAR GUILDS, price 50c. Miss L. V. Mackrille, 11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington 15, D.C. 30 minutes from U. S. Treasury. Tel Wisconsin 2752.

SURPLICES — STOLES
VESTMENTS
CHURCH HANGINGS
ALTAR LINENS
CASSOCKS
CLERICAL SUITS — CLOAKS
RABATS—RABAT VESTS—COLLARS—SHIRTS
Choir Vestments in All Styles
Inquiries Invited
C. M. ALMY & SON, INC.
562 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.

VESTMENTS for CLERGY and CHOIR
Altar Linens . . . Embroideries . . .
Tailoring . . . Episcopal Flags. Send for Catalog
J. M. HALL, INC.
14 W. 40th St., New York - Tel. CH 4-3306
Office & Salesroom
American Distributor of Stained Glass Windows for James Powell & Sons, Ltd., London, Eng.

The Payne-Spiers Studios Inc.
Studios at Paterson, New Jersey
Carved Wood
Chancel Renovations Church Furnishings
Murals Memorials Tablets
Stained Glass
·· Inquiries Solicited ··

VESTMENTS
Cassocks - Surplices - Stoles - Scarves
Silks - Altar Cloths - Embroideries
Priest Cloaks - Rabats - Collars
Custom Tailoring for Clergymen
1837 Church Vestment Makers Over One Hundred Years 1946
COX SONS & VINING, Inc.
131 East 23rd Street, New York 10, N.Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

JOHN M. KRUMM
Rector of St. Matthew's, San Mateo, Calif.

I know that Bill Spofford is irrepressible but here's a dissent anyway on his Talking It Over (May 23). Are we to have nothing but name-calling in the current discussions in the realm of U. S.-Russian relations? I haven't read Piper's article (Spofford doesn't tell us where it appeared or where we can get hold of it) but the answer that Bill Spofford makes is pretty inadequate. No facts. Just a series of epithets—"The man should see a psychiatrist", "His Hitler 'big-lie' technique", "it's poisonous stuff, making for war." Now, where does this get us? His reference to the "familiar iron-curtain gag" indicates that Bill doesn't believe that correspondents have a hard time getting admitted into the Soviet Union. Has he heard about Drew Middleton trying to get in for the New York Times? Then I am really alarmed when good old Civil Liberties Spofford says, "The perpetrators ought to be tried as enemies of humanity." I know he grudgingly admits that we have free speech and a free press in the U. S., but I get the impression he thinks that is too bad since it allows people to get us involved in World War III.

All in all, Bill sounds like a poor imitation (maybe not so poor) of the Daily Worker. I've never yet heard Bill admit he was wrong, so I don't expect an answer. But this gets something off my chest anyway.

ANSWER: Prof. Piper's piece was not in any publication but was a letter which presumably he sent out widely since it was an off-set job. Those interested can I imagine get copies by writing Prof. Otto A. Piper, Princeton, N. J. If we are going to use our freedom, as many are now doing, to get into a war with the Soviet Union, it is my considered opinion that we won't have freedom or anything else very long—W.B.S.

* * *

IRVING B. HOLLEY
Layman of Torrington, Conn.

The writer, noting that there were none of our Church's publications on the reading tables of the Torrington Library, suggested at a recent meeting of the men's club of Trinity Church that we pass the hat and rectify this glaring inadequacy, a complacency that is not in keeping with the great mission of our Church. Enough was given to subscribe to THE WITNESS, The Churchman and FORTH for a year.

ANSWER: Many thanks, and we hope other men's clubs, vestries, guilds etc. will follow the example of the men of Trinity, Torrington.

* * *

WILLIS M. ROSENTHAL
Rector at Columbus, Nebraska

I do think you are doing something worthwhile that is needed in our Church life, even though I think an occasional nasty article like Dr. Van Dusen's recent ultimatum is very nearly inexcusable—but apparently we Churchmen are as much of a test of his Christian charity as he is of ours. And the picture of the bishops at a New Jersey consecration and the comments on their garb was just plain stupid. On the other hand, your editorials and articles about Christianity in social action, and Dr. Shephard's articles on the Prayer Book, are far more important in themselves and far outweigh the unpleasant things and the weaknesses. So, best wishes, and keep THE WITNESS coming my way.

* * *

ROBERT REDDISH JR.
Rector at Wymore, Nebraska

Perhaps it is because I had more time than usual to read it in leisurely manner but it seemed to me that your May 16th issue was the best I have ever read in any Church magazine. Congratulations on the work you are doing.

ST. JOHN'S MILITARY SCHOOL
Salina, Kansas

Since 1887 St. John's has been perpetuating the cultural traditions of the Church by stressing sound scholarship in Christian atmosphere.

Grades 6-12. Fully accredited. Bar I.L. Summer School and Camp in Colorado Rockies. Boys 8-15. Splendid equipment. 10,000 acres.

The Rev. R. L. Clem, Rector

St. Margaret's House
School for Christian Service and Deaconess Training School of the Pacific
A graduate school preparing women for Church positions in the fields of religious education, social service, and evangelistic work. Opportunity to work for advanced degrees. Special training for work in Orient.
ADDRESS THE DEAN
1820 Scenic Ave. Berkeley 4, California

CATHEDRAL CHOIR SCHOOL
NEW YORK
A Boarding and Day School for Boys
Established 1849
A BOARDING SCHOOL for the forty boys of the Choir of the Cathedral of Saint John the Divine. The boys receive careful musical training and sing daily at the service in the Cathedral. The classes in the School are small with the result that boys have individual attention, and very high standards are maintained. The School has its own building and playgrounds in the close. Fee—$350.00 per annum. Boys admitted 9 to 11. Voice test and scholastic examination. For Catalogue and Information address:
The CANON PRECENTOR,
Cathedral Choir School,
Cathedral Heights, New York City

ROWLAND HALL
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
Boarding and Day pupils. Accredited. Preschool, Lower school, College Preparatory and General courses. Graduates in many eastern and western colleges. All branches of music, dancing, art, drama Indoor pool, tennis courts, riding, weekends of winter sports. Pleasant home life. Environment of geographical and historical interest. Altitude 4500. Boarding $1,000, Day $120-$350.
The Right Rev. Arthur W. Moulton, S.T.D., Rector

SCHOOLS

The Hospital of Saint Barnabas and the University of Newark offer a full course in NURSING
to qualified High School graduates. Scholarships available. Classes enter in February and September
Apply to
Director of Nursing
HOSPITAL OF SAINT BARNABAS
685 High Street Newark, N. J.

DE VEAUX SCHOOL
FOUNDED 1852
A Church school for boys. Thorough preparation for college. Military system of student government, developing sense of responsibility. Charges for grades seven and eight $1000; grades nine through twelve $1050. For catalog, address THE HEADMASTER, DeVeaux School, Niagara Falls, New York.

HOLDERNESS
In the White Mountains. College Preparatory and General Courses. Music and Crafts. For boys 12-19. All sports including riding. 200 acres of woods. New fireproof building. Individual attention. Home atmosphere.
Rev. Edric A. Weld, Rector
Box W. Plymouth, N. H.

MARGARET HALL
Under Sisters of St. Helena
(Episcopal)
Small country boarding and day school for girls, from primary through high school. Accredited college preparatory. Modern building recently thoroughly renovated includes gymnasium and swimming pool. Campus of six acres with ample playground space, hockey field and tennis court. Riding. Board and Tuition $800. For catalog, address: Sister Rachel, Prin. O.S.H., Box A. Versailles, Kentucky.

FORK UNION MILITARY ACADEMY
An Honor Christian School with the highest academic rating. Upper School prepares for university or business. ROTC. Every modern equipment. Junior School from six years. Housemother. Separate building. Catalogue. Dr. J. J. Wicker, Fork Union, Virginia.

CARLETON COLLEGE
Laurence M. Gould, D.Sc., President
Carleton is a co-educational liberal arts college of limited enrollment and is recognized as the Church College of Minnesota.
Address: Assistant to the President
CARLETON COLLEGE
Northfield Minnesota

KEMPER HALL
KENOSHA, WISCONSIN
Boarding and day school for girls offering thorough college preparation and training for purposeful living. Study of the Fine Arts encouraged. Complete sports program. Junior School department. Beautiful lake shore campus. Under direction of the Sisters of St. Mary. For catalogue, address: Box WT.

Virginia Episcopal School
Lynchburg, Virginia
Prepares boys for colleges and university. Splendid environment and excellent corps of teachers. High standard in scholarship and athletics. Healthy and beautiful location in the mountains of Virginia.
For catalogue apply to
George L. Barton, Jr., Ph.D. Headmaster,
Box 408

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Enroll in Support of These Principles

The Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship provides a means by which progressive laymen and clergy can take positive steps in bringing more vigorous life to the Church. As members of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship, they can give personal action and support to a program for more effectively applying the power of Christ to man's problems in the world today.

OBJECTIVES

- Interpretation of the Christian faith in contemporary terms.
- The rigorous application of Christian principles to social life.
- Immediate action towards organic Church unity.
- Loyalty to The Book of Common Prayer.
- Extension of the missionary enterprise of the Church.

THE EPISCOPAL EVANGELICAL FELLOWSHIP

THE REV. GARDINER M. DAY
President

THE REV. J. CLEMENS KOLB
Secretary

THE REV. BEVERLEY M. BOYD
Vice President

THE REV. JOSEPH H. TITUS
Treasurer

In order to advance these objectives, you should enroll in the Fellowship now so as to aid in plans being made in preparation for the General Convention of this September.

THE REV. JOSEPH H. TITUS,
155-24 Ninetieth Ave.,
Jamaica 2, N.Y.

Kindly send me pamphlets outlining the purposes and program of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship and enroll me as:

Sustaining	$10.00
Cooperating	5.00
Active	2.00

The Rev.
Mr. _____

Mrs.
Miss
Address _____

_____

Parish _____

PLEASE MAKE CHECKS PAYABLE TO THE EPISCOPAL EVANGELICAL FELLOWSHIP.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The WITNESS

10¢ A COPY

LIBRARY COPY

JULY 11, 1946

W. BROOKE STABLER CONFERS WITH BOYS AT CRANBROOK . . . .

THE COST OF PENSIONS

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

THE CATHEDRAL OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE
NEW YORK CITY

Sundays: 8, 9, 11, Holy Communion; 10, Morning Prayer; 4, Evening Prayer; Sermons 11 and 4.
Weekdays: 7:30, (also 9:15 Holy Days, and 10, Wednesdays), Holy Communion; 9, Morning Prayer; 5, Evening Prayer. Open daily 7 A.M. to 6 P.M.

GRACE CHURCH, NEW YORK
Broadway at 10th St.
Rev. Louis W. Pitt, D.D., Rector
Daily: 12:30 except Mondays and Saturdays.
Sundays: 8 and 11 A.M. and 4:30 P.M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion 11:45 A.M.

THE HEAVENLY REST, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue at 90th Street.
Rev. Henry Darlington, D. D.
Sundays: Holy Communion 8 and 10 A.M.; Morning Service and Sermon 11 A.M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion, 11 A.M.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S CHURCH
NEW YORK
Park Avenue and 51st Street
Rev. Geo. Paull T. Sargent, D.D., Rector
8:00 A.M. Holy Communion
11:00 A.M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P.M. Evensong. Special Music.
Weekdays: Holy Communion Wednesday at 8:00 A.M.
Thursdays and Saints' Days at 10:30 A.M.
The Church is open daily for prayer.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH
Madison Ave. at 71st St., New York
The Rev. H. W. B. Donegan, D.D., Rector
8:00 a.m. Holy Communion.
9:30 a.m. Church School.
11:00 a.m. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 p.m. Evening Prayer and Sermon.
Wed., 7:45 a.m., Thurs., 12 noon Holy Communion.

THE CHURCH OF THE EPIPHANY
1317 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Charles W. Sheerin, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 A.M.; 8 P.M.
Daily: 12:05.
Thursdays: 11:00 and 12:05.

ST. THOMAS' CHURCH, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue and 53rd Street
Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, S. T. D., rector
Sunday Services: 8 and 11 A.M.
Daily Services: 8:30 A.M., Holy Communion.
Thursdays: 11 A.M., Holy Communion.

THE CHURCH OF THE ASCENSION
Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street, New York
The Rev. Roscoe Thornton Foust, Rector
Sundays: 8 and 9 H. C.; 11 A.M., 4:30, 8 P.M.
Daily: 8. Holy Communion.
5:30 Vespers—Tuesday through Friday.
The Church is open all day and night.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL
Buffalo, New York.
Shelton Square
The Very Rev. Edward R. Welles, M.A., Dean
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30 and 11.
Daily: 12:05 noon—Holy Communion
Tuesday: 7:30 A.M.—Holy Communion
Wednesday: 11:00 A.M.—Holy Communion.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH
Atlanta, Georgia
435 Peachtree Street
The Rev. J. Milton Richardson, Rector
9:00 A.M. Holy Communion.
10:45 A.M. Sunday School.
11:00 A.M. Morning Prayer and Sermon.
6:00 P.M. Young People's Meetings.

The WITNESS
For Christ and His Church

EDITORIAL BOARD: Frederick C. Grant, Editor; Arthur Lichtenberger, Chairman; William B. Spofford, Managing Editor; Philip L. Shutt, News Editor; Lane W. Barton, Beverly M. Boyd, Dillard H. Brown, Roscoe T. Foust, Charles K. Gilbert, Hugh D. McCandless, Howard Chandler Robbins, William K. Russell, Sydney A. Temple Jr., Joseph H. Titus, William M. Weber.

★

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS: D. B. Aldrich, J. A. Bell, T. S. Carruthers, Adelaide Case, G. K. Chalmers, E. M. Cross, G. M. Day, Angus Dun, A. W. Farlander, T. P. Ferris, J. F. Fletcher, John Gass, C. H. Gesner, C. L. Glenn, G. C. Graham, J. M. Groton, G. I. Hiller, I. P. Johnson, T. R. Ludlow, C. S. Martin, R. C. Miller, Walter Mitchell, A. T. Mollegen, E. L. Parsons, E. L. Pennington, Rose Phelps, L. W. Pitt, Otis Rice, Cyril Richardson, Paul Roberts, V. D. Scudder, W. M. Sharp, W. B. Sperry, C. W. Sprouse, D. S. Stark, W. B. Stevens, J. W. Suter, S. E. Sweet, Alexander Zabriskie.

★

THE WITNESS is published weekly from September 15th to June 15th inclusive, with the exception of the first week in January and semi-monthly from June 15th to September 15th by the Episcopal Church Publishing Co. on behalf of the Church Publishing Association, Inc. Samuel Thorne, President; Charles A. Houston, Vice-President; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, Treasurer; Frederic D. H. Gilbert, Secretary.

★

The subscription price is $3.00 a year; in bundles for sale in parishes the magazine sells for 10c a copy, we will bill quarterly at 5c a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter, March 6, 1939, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois under the act of March 3, 1879.

JULY 11, 1946
Vol. XXIX No. 37

CLERGY NOTES

BERGER, CHAS. P. JR., was ordained priest June 18 at Cambridge by Bishop Sherrill and will be curate of St. John's, Waterbury, Conn.

BUTT, H. FAIRFIELD, rector of St. George's, Rumson, N. J., has resigned to be rector of Christ church, Baltimore.

COX, THOMAS, was ordained deacon June 9 by Bishop Penick of North Carolina in St. Paul's, Winston-Salem.

CREECH, ROBERT J., was ordained priest June 23 by Bishop Washburn and will become vicar of Harrington Park, N. J. Sept. 1.

LAYTON, WILFRED, was ordained deacon by Bishop Creighton June 17 in St. Paul's, Flint, Mich., and will continue as assistant and organist.

MAY, CHARLES, was ordained deacon by Bishop Creighton June 17 in St. Paul's, Flint, Michigan and will be on the staff.

REESE, GORDON M., formerly executive secretary of the Army & Navy commission in Honolulu became canon to the Ordinary and director of youth activities for the Diocese of California June 1.

SAFFORD, D. WADE, has resigned as rector of Christ church, Kensington, Md.

TROTTER, JESSE McL., rector of Grace, Amherst, Mass., and chaplain of Amherst College will resign Sept. 1 to become assistant professor of theology at the Virginia Theological Seminary.

WOLF, FRED, was ordained priest June 23 by Bishop Conkling of Chicago and will be in charge of Trinity, Belvidere.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

CHRIST CHURCH CATHEDRAL
Main and Church Sts., Hartford, Conn.
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30, 10:05, 11 A.M., 8 P.M.
Weekdays: Holy Communion—Monday and Thursday, 9 a.m.; Tuesday, Friday and Saturday, 8 a.m.; Wednesday, 7:00 and 11:00 a.m. Noonday Service, daily 12:15 p.m.

CHRIST CHURCH
Cambridge
REV. GARDINER M. DAY, RECTOR
REV. FREDERIC B. KELLOGG, CHAPLAIN
Sunday Services, 8:00, 9:00, 10:00 and 11:15 A.M.
Weekdays: Wed. 8 and 11 A.M. Thurs., 7:30 A.M.

TRINITY CHURCH
Miami
Rev. G. Irvine Hiller, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services 8, 9:30, 11 A.M.

TRINITY CATHEDRAL
Military Park, Newark, N. J.
The Very Rev. Arthur C. Lichtenberger Dean
Summer Services
Sunday
8:30 and 11:00 a.m.
Week Days
Tuesday, Thursday, Friday at 12:10; Wednesday and Holy Days, Holy Communion, 12 noon.
The Cathedral is open every day

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
Montecito and Bay Place
OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA
Rev. Calvin Barkow, D.D., Rector
Sundays: 8 A.M., Holy Communion; 11 A.M., Church School; 11 A.M., Morning Prayer and Sermon.
Wednesdays: 10 A.M., Holy Communion; 10:45, Rector's Study Class.

GRACE CHURCH
Corner Church and Davis Streets,
ELMIRA, N. Y.
Rev. Frederick T. Henstridge, Rector
Sundays: 8 and 11 A.M.; 4:30 P.M.
Daily: Tuesday and Thursday, 7:30 A.M.
Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Holy Days, 9:30 A.M.
Other Services Announced

ST. MARK'S CHURCH
Texas Avenue and Cotton Street
SHREVEPORT, LA.
Rev. Frank E. Walters, Rector; Rev. Harry Wintermeyer, Curate.
Sundays: Holy Communion, 7:30; 9:25 A.M. Family Service: 11 A.M. Morning Prayer. Holy Communion, first Sunday. 6 P.M., Young Churchmen.

CHRIST CHURCH
Nashville, Tennessee
Rev. Peyton Randolph Williams
7:30 A.M.—Holy Communion.
9:30 and 11 A.M.—Church School.
11 A.M.—Morning Service and Sermon.
6 P.M.—Young People's Meetings.
Thursdays and Saints' Days—Holy Communion 10 A.M.

GRACE CHURCH
105 Main Street, Orange, N. J.
Lane Wickham Barton, Rector
SUNDAYS
8:00 A. M.—Holy Communion
11:00 A. M.—Church School
11:00 A. M.—Morning Prayer and Sermon (Holy Communion first Sunday each month)
7:00 P. M.—Young People's Fellowship

CHRIST CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA
Second Street above Market
Cathedral of Democracy
Founded 1695
Rev. E. Felix Kloman, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services: 10 and 11 a.m.
Weekdays: Wed. 12 noon and 12:30.
Saints Days: 12 noon.
This Church Is Open Every Day.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

VOL. XXIX. No. 37

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

JULY 11, 1946

Publication Office, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago 37, Ill. Editorial Office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

Unity Commission Makes Report But Fails To Agree

Submits Two Reports For Study By Delegates To General Convention Meeting in September

By Philip L. Shutt

New York:—Dividing 10 to 7, with one member refusing to sign, the Commission on Approaches to Unity with the Presbyterian Church this week presented majority and minority reports to General Convention delegates for study. The document, consisting of 23 typewritten pages, presents in detail findings which the Commission has been considering since General Convention met in 1943.

Because of their length THE WITNESS can only present a condensed version of the reports to its readers which follows:

"In all discussions and negotiations relative to union with the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America the effort has been made to give due consideration to two great underlying principles. First, the subject under discussion is not the cooperation or federation of the two Churches but organic union means ultimately, to quote the language of a formal resolution adopted by the Commission at one of its meetings, 'one Church, with one standard of faith, one communicant list, one ministry, one system of government.' This conception of the final goal before us, therefore, has directed all the discussions of the Commission and underlies the plan herewith submitted.

"Secondly, the members of the Commission have sought to bear in mind that the enterprise now being carried on by the Episcopal and Presbyterian Churches is but one phase of that ecumenical movement in progress throughout Christendom. We have tried therefore to envisage not only the union of two particular communions, but also the ultimate reunion of all disciples of our Lord . . . Out of these studies and negotiations has come a plan entitled 'A Proposed Basis of Union' which follows . . . The document still leaves a number of important issues for further negotiations—for example, the organization of the General Assembly or Convention, and property and contractual rights. The latter problem has received careful preliminary study from a committee of this Commission."

Following this preamble comes the proposed basis for union. The majority report outlines the following considerations:

1. The unity of Christians is not merely a pious aspiration, it is essential if the Church is to live and to fulfill its mission both at home and abroad.

2. The aim of the negotiations is to achieve such a basis of union that other Churches can adhere to it so that, if it be God's will, the union of the two Churches can be the nucleus of a more inclusive union.

3. The essential purpose is to find a means whereby each uniting Church may contribute its heritage of faith, order and practice to the united body and each may recognize and be assured that those things which are precious to its people are preserved in the united Church.

4. DOCTRINE. The Bible is accepted as the Word of God; the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds as defined by the first four General Councils of the undivided Church are to be statements of belief; the Confession of Faith and the Catechisms, and the Prayer Book with the Articles of Religion contain the system of doctrine received by both Churches.

Teachers in the united Church may instruct from any of these formularies consistent with the Basis of Union, and where conflicts are disclosed such conflicting teachings shall not be taught as necessary to salvation or so as to break membership in the united Church.

5. GOVERNMENT. There shall be a series of graduated councils (or judicatories) within the parish within the diocese or presbytery, and within the province or synod; and there shall be a supreme judicatory, the General Assembly or Convention.

6. MINISTRY AND LAY LEADERSHIP.

a. All men ordained after the effective date of the union will bear the authority of both traditions, as will also those already in the ministry.

b. Bishops shall have the powers and duties traditionally theirs exercised in concurrence with the Presbytery.

c. In the ministry of the Word and the Sacraments of the Gospel presbyters (priests) share equally with bishops.

d. At such time as the union is effected, in every diocese and presbytery there shall be formal services of mutual recognition and extension of authority to minister in the united Church. (Editor's note: the Formulary follows).

e. Candidates shall be first ordained deacons and serve one year but must serve a stated probationary period before receiving the Diaconate.

f. The Churches recognize the right of congregations to select their pastor either directly or through officers chosen by themselves subject to the discretion of the bishop and presbytery.

g. Ruling elders: Lay representatives of the people set apart by prayer and the laying on of hands by a presbyter (priest). They serve in the Church councils. They also will have pastoral charge of a congregation lacking a minister.

7. OTHER PROVISIONS.

a. Baptism. The use of water in the name of the Trinity is the method by which candidates are incorporated into the Church. A profession of faith shall be required by adults and by sponsors of children.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

b. Confirmation. A public renewal of baptismal vows administered by the laying on of hands with prayer by the bishops, or by a presbyter (priest) duly authorized by the bishop and presbytery.

c. The Lord's Supper. Bread and wine shall be used and every rite shall contain (1) A confession of sin and a declaration of God's forgiveness; (2) a commemoration of the Lord's death and passion, and the recital of His words and acts with a prayer of thanksgiving and consecration, a presentation of the elements, an invocation of the Holy Spirit, and the Lord's Prayer; (3) and the Apostles' or Nicene Creeds on appropriate occasions.

d. Ordination. The true ordainer is God Who through the words and acts of the Church's representatives commissions and empowers. There shall be the imposition of hands, with prayer, an authorization to minister, and a designation of the office to which the candidate is being ordained. All ordinations of presbyters (priests) and deacons shall be by the bishop and presbyters (priests) of the presbytery of jurisdiction who shall join in the laying on of hands. Consecration of bishops shall be by at least three bishops, and presbyters representing the jurisdiction. When a congregation shall request it the bishop and presbytery shall require of the pastor-elect a promise to maintain the doctrine and worship in accordance with the forms to which the parish is accustomed.

8. WORSHIP. There will be a common service book in due time including a variety of liturgical and non-liturgical forms to meet the needs and to preserve the distinctive values in the two traditions of worship. A liturgical commission shall consider such a book of worship and authorize its use but until that time the Commission may set forth forms of worship which any presbytery may authorize for use in the diocese.

Concluding the majority report the commission recommends that (1) the group be continued and to consider negotiations further with the Presbyterians and other Christian bodies; (2) the report shall be decisively acted upon by the General Convention of 1949 after serious study is given it by dioceses, (3) the Presiding Bishop shall be requested to present the Proposed Basis to Lambeth Conference in 1948 for its consideration and advice, and (4) that in its report to General Convention of 1949 shall be incorporated the actions of dioceses resulting from their study.

This report was signed by Bishop Robert Strider as chairman and Bishops Stephen Keeler of Minnesota, Benjamin Washburn of Newark, and the Rev. Messrs. Sherman Johnson, T. O. Wedel, Alexander Zabriskie (secretary), and Messrs. W. L. Balthis, Alexander Guerry, John C. Spaulding, and G. F. Thomas.

The fine choir of St. Augustine's College as it leaves the chapel following service. At the rear of the procession is the Rev. Edgar H. Goold, for many years the president of this famous Church college

MINORITY REPORT:

Those who signed the minority report felt they could not sign the majority report nor recommend the Proposed Basis for study because to quote the opening sentence, "we judge that the proposals radically distort the religion of our Lord. We see no point in asking the Church to study for a period of years what we are certain would, if adopted, cause only disunity among ourselves and superficial unification with others."

They objected on the following grounds:

1. The Commission was not appointed, as has been asserted in some quarters, to accomplish union with the Presbyterians at any price. Because there was no debate and no opposition to the 1937 Resolution in regard to unity it is clear evidence the Resolution was not understood then as it has been interpreted by some recently.

2. We vigorously repudiate any "complusion" under this resolution to accept without question whatever the Presbyterians insist upon.

3. One fact has remained constant and unchanged through the centuries that only a bishop can validly ordain. The Presbyterians deny this by asserting their ministry is the same as the episcopate and they will not accept the formula as a supplemental ordination.

4. The Presbyterians strenuously assert the parity of Orders, that is that bishops, priests and deacons are all on the same level of authority and a bishop has no more spiritual power than a priest or deacon. This has been a historic Presbyterian principle and the commission has been informed "we will never give it up."

5. A minister is in no sense a priest beyond any other sincere Christian believer according to their official beliefs.

6. The Proposals would ultimately do away with the Prayer Book for the Presbyterian element vastly outnumbers the Episcopal; so it is absurd to suppose that the new book of worship will favor our historic Prayer Book.

7. The proposais would automatically remove the Episcopal Church from the Anglican orbit of Churches and make it a member of the Pres-

(Continued on page 17)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Cranbrook School Builds Boys Into Christian Men

Preparatory School Teaches High Ideals And Also Emphasizes the Christian Life

By Sara Dill

Bloomfield Hills, Mich.—Cranbrook School, located in this lovely suburb of Detroit, is a preparatory school for boys in grades seven through twelve. Uniquely among its contemporaries the school was established in 1926 by Mr. and Mrs. George C. Booth with the professed objectives of training boys not only in a good general education, but also "in the Christian life, in high moral idealism, and the practice of religion" as the deed of gift states. The school was first opened in 1927 under Dr. W. O. Stevens who was largely responsible for the establishment of these objectives. In 1944 the Rev. W. Brooke Stabler, previously headmaster of the Avon school, at Avon, Conn., became headmaster and under his direction the school is not only continuing its excellent work but is striving for even higher standards of scholarship and citizenship.

Cranbrook comprises ninety acres of beautiful rolling land twenty miles northwest of Detroit and is equipped to take care of about 200 resident students and half as many day boys from the surrounding community.

All boarding students live in single rooms in modern, fire-resisting dormitories which are closely supervised by resident instructors. All of the students take part in the school's work which is designed not only to render valuable services to the school but also to give the boys a feeling of responsibility and participation in the more practical aspects of the school's operations.

Now in its twentieth year the school has graduated some 750 boys most of whom served in the recent war, 37 giving their lives in this service.

Thirty-four instructors teaching English, mathematics, foreign languages, fine and industrial arts, natural and physical sciences, music and physical education have approximately 15 pupils in an instruction group. This means that the teacher can become well acquainted with his boys so that he can give them necessary help and also judge their work and effort.

The buildings at Cranbrook were designed by Eliel Saarinen, internationally famous architect who for many years has been president of the Cranbrook Academy of Art. In 1931 he received the gold medal of the New York Architectural League for this work. The buildings include the main school building, three dormitories, an arts and science building, a dining hall, an auditorium, an infirmary, and various residences and service buildings.

The school is affiliated with nearby institutions of a similar type for girls as well as for professional training so that the combined schools cover an area of more than 300 acres.

Together they make one of the most unique cultural and educational centers in America.

Enjoying a fast game of softball on the fine athletic field at St. Faith's School, Saratoga Springs, N.Y. The School is chartered by the board of regents of New York and is approved by the synod of New York and New Jersey

RURAL WORKERS HONOR KOLB

Madison, Wis.:—When the town and country leadership summer school meets July 8-19 at the University of Wisconsin the Episcopal church, through its own conference on rural work will join in honoring the 25th anniversary of Prof. J. H. Kolb of the Agricultural College whose enthusiasm for such a project has greatly aided rural religious efforts. The National Council at its May meeting passed a resolution asking Presiding Bishop Henry St. George Tucker to send a greeting of appreciation to Prof. Kolb for what he has accomplished. This is the only rural conference for church work in America that has a quarter of a century's history behind it.

At the same time Episcopalians from all geographical sections of the Church who are active in the rural field converge upon Madison for their own conference headed by the Rev. Clifford Samuelson, associate secretary for domestic Missions of the National Council. Over 400 Episcopal bishops, priests, and laity have attended the conference during the past 25 years.

CLERGY COME TO AGREEMENT

Philadelphia:—Twelve clergymen of this city representing opposite schools of churchmanship, concerned over what they termed "the recent increase in 'party' strife within the Episcopal Church" met together recently so successfully that what appeared as difficulties were found to be less fearsome. They subscribed to the following: "We believe in our Lord Jesus Christ as God incarnate in this world. We believe that the historic Church was created by Him as the Family through which He might work His will in this world. We believe that the Holy Communion is the central act of Christian worship in which our souls are fed." It was signed by the Rev. Messrs. J. G. Armstrong 3rd, Thomas Burgess, G. R. Condit, K. R. Forbes, D. W. Gateson, J. C. Kolb, E. F. Salmon. J. K. Shryock, S. T. Steele, G. A. Trowbridge, C. E. Tuke, and E. B. Wood.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Christians Challenged By Work In Palestine Today

American Chaplain Says Palestine Test Case Urging Church to Meet Challenging Work Now

By Philip L. Shutt

New York:—Christianity faces a great challenge in Palestine, according to the Rev. Dr. Francis Bloodgood who has just returned from Jerusalem where he served as American chaplain to the Anglican bishop of that area. In an exclusive interview granted THE WITNESS he pointed out that the Christian schools, especially those sponsored by the Y.M.C.A., as well as the Hebrew university in Jerusalem are centers of reconciliation, for all nationalities attend classes. Lectures on living together are so crowded that the SRO sign is always in evidence, Dr. Bloodgood stated.

He said further that the religious side of the picture has been so blotted out by the politically explosive side that the Christians in Palestine, who are for the most part Arabians and of the Orthodox faith feel their brethren outside have forgotten them.

Dr. Bloodgood also told of a mission in Tellamer far to the north supported by the American Church where 10,000 Assyrians live who were relocated by the defunct League of Nations. An American priest is needed who is also an expert in agriculture. He must be a single man.

When Dr. Bloodgood left Jerusalem in May of this year the Arabian-English difficulties had not then affected the work of the Church. He stated that the Anglican bishop and staff are without adequate transportation and need a station wagon badly.

Living conditions are none too good in Jerusalem itself, nor in Palestine where thousands of refugees and pilgrims pour in. For example, there are some paralyzed older persons who live 60 feet underground many of whom have seen no daylight for a long period, he reported.

Dr. Bloodgood took some moving pictures of the work and will soon be prepared to show them as well as to lecture and preach. He feels Americans do not know much about religious conditions in Palestine. He thinks that the political problems should be the responsibility of the United Nations Council. "Palestine could well serve as a test case for the effectiveness of the Council," he said, "because so many explosive elements are present in a small area that are common in larger sections of the world."

He is preparing a full report which will be given to the Presiding Bishop whose representative he was, and General Convention will hear from him.

The Rev. Kimber Den in charge of the delivery of a truckload of American flour to the destitute farmers of China. Mr. Den is in back of the man with the sack on his shoulder. In addition to carrying on this relief work for the government, Kimber Den continues to direct centers where children and refugees are cared for. Donations for the work can be sent to the Church League for Industrial Democracy, 155 Washington Street, New York 6, N. Y. Fifteen dollars will clothe, house and feed a Chinese orphan for an entire month

CHURCH LEADERS TO EUROPE

Washington, D. C.:—Bishop Henry K. Sherrill of Massachusetts who is also chairman of the general commission on army and navy chaplains has announced that two prominent church leaders will leave soon for an extended visit to the chaplains in the armed forces in both the European and the Far Eastern theatres of operations. Dr. Samuel M. Cavert, general secretary of the Federal Council of Churches will go to Europe, and Dr. C. Oscar Johnson, minister of the Third Baptist Church, St. Louis, and former president of the northern Baptist convention will go to the Far East. The purpose of the visits which have been officially authorized by both the Army and Navy, will be to confer with chaplains concerning their work and to assure them of the continuing support of the churches.

BISHOP OLDHAM IN ENGLAND

Albany, N. Y.:—Bishop G. Ashton Oldham has gone to England to attend conferences as an official representative of several international organizations and expects to be absent six weeks. As president of the World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches, he will attend a conference of the Alliance at Pendley Manor and later will be the guest of Archbishop Fisher. At Canterbury he will represent the Episcopal church on the consultative body planning the 1948 Lambeth conference. He will also preach in the Portsmouth cathedral and at St. Paul's, London.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

EDITORIALS

Christian Education

THE obvious lack of moral incentive in the acts of men today demands renewed attention to the subject of Christian education. We of the WITNESS Board feel that, with the home and the school increasingly secularized, it is incumbent upon the Church to place this in the very forefront of its interests and efforts.

To meet today's crisis new attitudes and methods are called for. The old-time "Sunday School" is no more adequate than the horse and buggy in an air-minded age. With the choice of life or death facing the world Christian education must be even more "functional" than secular education. While it cannot neglect the informational side, in the little time that the average Church School has on Sunday at its disposal it must put its emphasis on relating the Christian ideals and purposes to the desperate art of living in a revolutionary age. We would make our own the four objectives set forth by William Clayton Bower in his excellent book, "Christ and Christian Education." Briefly these are: 1. The achievement of a Christ-like personality in attitudes and motives; 2. A searching criticism and reconstruction of society that it may be brought in harmony with Jesus' teaching of the Kingdom of God; 3. A study of the funded experience of the Christian past in order to interpret and resolve the issues which we face in the present; 4. The building of a fellowship, the Church, to meet both the needs of the individual and to act as a sustaining and propulsive power in an anarchic society.

All this means that the center of gravity in our Church Schools must be changed from teaching to learning, from the curriculum to the child, from the acquisition of facts to the relating of values to life and experience. In other words, every opportunity to practice Christianity must be scrutinized and studied. It also means that the dogmatic approach—"Jesus loves me, this I know, for the Bible tells me so"—must give way to a much freer and more adventurous search for truth, secure in the knowledge that "God is not the God of the dead but of the living."

In order to accomplish these ends much greater student participation is called for in our Church School so that our young people will be conscious of their responsibility to plan as well as to assist in executing their spiritual nurture—and to enjoy the doing of it. This involves the recognition that the child is an individual in his own right, not simply an undeveloped adult, and his worship experiences must be on a level that he can assimilate and respond to.

We do not share the belief that Church Schools have had their day; as a matter of fact they are something quite new in the history of the Church. The science of education has made great strides in the past generation; the newer methods offer many challenging opportunities. We deplore what we believe to be a defeatist attitude on the part of some of the clergy who, because of the great amount of effort involved to revise our Church Schools, retreat to the superficial catechetical method or turn to the "Children's Eucharist" as the easiest way out. Great times call for greater endeavors; if the coming generation is to be equipped to meet the overwhelming problems that confront it the Church must rouse itself and turn its energies to those with whom its future rests.

"QUOTES"

THE most dangerous thing about the Ku Klux Klan in the South is the fact that its queer, perverted ideology has somehow, in the minds of the uninformed, gotten mixed up with Christianity. The limited success of this effort to identify the Klan with religion, and the enemies of the Klan with irreligion has given the KKK a considerable portion of its following. This has been profoundly disheartening and in no small measure alarming. Today it is correspondingly heartening to see the authorized spokesmen of the Churches stripping the pretense from this vicious propaganda. Courageous ministers for many decades have stood against this bigoted, barbaric organization, but in the past they have fought their battles in relative isolation. But since the postwar revival of the Klan the forces of organized religion have begun to advance in phalanx.

—Miami Daily News

Cult of Simon

We are in receipt of a folder put out by the Monument Builders of America, Inc. (Len Arnold, public relations director) entitled Prayers for Peace. If the morticians lobby succeeds in getting Congress and the President to bring back what is left of the mangled bodies of the brave men who fell on foreign battlefields there will be a demand for tombstones so this association is preparing not only to sell them but to suggest that they be properly inscribed with prayers for peace. We would not condemn this organization either for its enterprise in seeking a market or would we question its motives in using a book of prayers for peace to sell tombstones. We would however use this incident to call to the attention of readers that there was once a man named Simon who sought to enhance his profession by buying the services of the Holy Spirit (Acts, 8).

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Religion has often been useful to enterprising entrepreneurs. Church societies are frequently solicited by Aunt Emma's Flavoring Extracts to drum up a demonstration before a crowd of church ladies (at 25c per head). Undertakers are only too eager to supply churches with posters and attractive signs and fans for summer congregations and chairs for bridge parties. Even that conservative group known as the National Association of Manufacturers has been known to solicit the aid of ministers to lend respectability to their efforts to spread propaganda in local communities.

Simon Magus was never canonized but he should have been if only to provide a patron saint for those who would make use of religion to sell their wares. We believe it is beneath the dignity of the Church to be used as a commercial agency. We believe it is beneath the dignity of the clergy to write prayers to help sell tombstones. We wish that every church which has accepted favors—such as fans, posters and chairs—bearing the name of the undertaker who has provided them might remove them. The business of the Church is to proclaim the Gospel, not to make money or enjoy advantages at the price of becoming an advertising medium.

The Cost of Pensions

by Robert Worthington

Executive Vice-President of the Church Pension Fund

THE paper entitled "The Cost of Pensions" in the April 25th issue of THE WITNESS is both interesting and well-considered. It raises many pertinent questions—too many to be discussed adequately in the limited space allotted to this article. Some of them have to do with the principles adopted by the General Convention when the fund was instituted. Others proceed from the recent decision of the trustees of The Church Pension Fund to move towards increasing the assessment rate to 10 per cent, from its present level of 7½ per cent. These latter questions will be discussed in the present article.

Perhaps the most important is whether a 10 per cent rate may not be too high unless it is accompanied by the promise of expanded benefits. Mr. Graf is correct in his point that, at present levels of assessable salaries in the Church and of the invested assets of the Fund, the increase in assessment rate will produce more income than is lost by a drop from 3½ per cent to 2¾ per cent in interest. This relation is, however, necessary. Income has to be sufficient to balance the value of the new promises taken on each year and this value will be higher if only 2¾ per cent interest can be expected between now and the time the promises are fulfilled than if 3½ per cent is expected. The value will not be the same. Here we have a technical point not too readily understandable by the unversed, but nevertheless basic. For if the income is not kept in step with the promises, the promises are meaningless.

Another way of putting it is to say that if the assessments are increased now to a rate of less than 10 per cent of salaries, there would later,—if surplus had not already been used up and bankruptcy encountered,—have to be a further increase to a figure higher than 10 per cent. The 10 per cent rate is the rate that can remain constant throughout the years and still bring the promises to fulfilment, ceteris paribus.

In the judgment of the Trustees and their actuary, the present circumstances as well as the outlook for the future dictate a 10 per cent rate. They would like to believe a lower rate would do, but they cannot.

Mr. Graf makes the statement "Since the Fund has been accumulating nearly $1,000,000 surplus each year since 1917 for actuarial purposes and future protection the only conclusion which can be drawn is that the Fund is asking for more than it expects to get, or that it wishes to increase its surplus, or that it anticipates a further decline in investment income and wants to be prepared for such an unhappy event."

It is evident that by surplus Mr. Graf means excess of income over disbursements each year. Surplus here is a misnomer, although clearly unintentional. The growth in the assets, which seems to be what Mr. Graf is referring to, is most important. It is only on account of this growth that there can be certainty back of the pension promises. At the end of 1945 the value of the promises (actuarial reserve liabilities) was $35,741,465, and there had to be and were balancing assets. This sum of money plus interest to be earned on it will be completely disbursed by the Fund to the present beneficiaries and the present large group of active clergy, and their families, in recognition of the services of these clergy prior to January 1, 1946.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The phrase "for actuarial purposes" in the sentence quoted above is not accurate. The reserves do not exist for actuarial purposes. They exist to afford the protection promised. The role of the actuary is simply to compute their value. Mention is made of this fact here because it should not be overlooked that actuarial science is a tool and not an end. The end is pensions that can be counted on.

The interests of the clergy and the Church would be served very definitely by a larger surplus than that existing at the present time, namely $1,896,155. This is a small surplus for a fund of $40,000,000. For example, a serious market set-back in security prices (already very high) could reduce surplus by several hundred thousand dollars. Again, the change to the 2¾ per cent interest assumption at the end of the year will call for a transfer of several hundred thousand dollars from the present surplus to reserves. Finally, the present surplus is not sufficient to allow a change to a 2½ per cent interest assumption, a step that may be necessary in the future. Surplus should be built up.

IT MUST be remembered that the Fund, unlike an insurance company, operates with a small margin between mortality assumptions and mortality experience. For instance, if the Fund were operated by an insurance company, the assessment rate in the past would not have been as low as 7½ per cent, nor would a rate as low as 10 per cent in the future be acceptable. The mortality tables on which the reserves are calculated are tables built up by the Fund's own experience, with periodic adjustments to meet changing trends. Insurance companies on the other hand use general mortality tables that are considerably more conservative than the tables used by the Fund. Because the Fund operates on a small margin, the assessment rate can be lower than would otherwise be necessary, and the extra benefits aggregating $6,000,000 over the years have been appropriated. Moreover, most insurance companies are issuing annuity contracts at the present time on a 2 per cent interest assumption, which in itself would require a very substantially higher assessment (premium) rate than called for by a 2¾ per cent interest basis.

The possibility is suggested by Mr. Graf that the Fund anticipates a further decline in investment income. Unfortunately there is no clear evidence that the down trend of yields which has existed for many years has halted.

Mr. Graf mentions the administrative costs of the Fund, and suggests that it might be administered by a large banking house with pension facilities for a very considerable saving. Some time ago a special study was made of the costs of the Fund and other funds working in the same field. It was found that the Fund had the lowest ratio of expenses to assets, namely 0.32 per cent, of the six funds in its own size category; in the ratio of salaries to assets it was also lowest at 0.18 per cent; and in the ratio of rent to assets two had a lower figure than the Fund's 0.023 per cent and three a higher figure.

The largest items of expense are, in order: Compensation of employees, investment advisory fee, custody and care of securities, rent, office supplies and printing, postage and publications. The expense of the following fall under $2,000 a year: Medical expense, auditing expense, actuarial expense, travel, depreciation of furniture and fixtures. The consulting actuary for years has contributed without fee his very important services. The Fund's legal advisers—and their help is constantly needed—have always contributed their services without charge.

The compensation of employees is determined by the law of supply and demand. In other words, the compensation runs parallel to what other companies competing in the same market pay for equivalent capacities. The rent of the office, contracted for some years ago at a favorable rate, is even more favorable under present-day circumstances. The fees paid the investment advisers and the custodians of the securities are low. We suggest that any one particularly interested in these matters ask qualified experts in the field of investments whether a fee of $16,000 a year for first-class investment advisory service on a portfolio of $37,000,000, and a custodian fee of $8,300, are reasonable.

The assumption that some other administrator, such as a bank as suggested by Mr. Graf, or an insurance company, could operate the Church's pension system more cheaply than the Church itself may not have been made with the benefit of one consideration, namely that all the clerical work of record-keeping and bookkeeping, supervision, office space, supplies, postage, services, etc., would be required no matter by what group the Fund is administered. In addition, a commercial company taking on a responsibility and service of this sort would expect a reasonable profit over and above the cost.

WE DO not believe the suggestion of Mr. Graf that the administrative cost would be no greater if there were 65,000 clergy a constructive comment. The cost of operating a pension system consists largely of wages paid directly to the organization's workers or indirectly as the major part of the cost of supplies, printing, security handling, services and so forth. The staff that would be needed to handle twice as many accounts as the Fund's present 6,500 accounts would certainly have to be increased. The work that would have to be done on 13,000 accounts would be doubled, nearly twice the office space would be required, postage would be exactly doubled, etc. Without question certain of the costs would not be doubled but every expense item would be increased.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

At the end of his paper Mr. Graf asks whether, following an increase in the assessment rate to 10 per cent, it may not be possible to augment the inadequate pensions now granted. The Trustees hope so. Such increases will necessarily be in the nature of expansion of the "extra benefits." There is but one thing which is more on the Trustees' minds and hearts, namely to make the basic promises secure. After that they are truly eager to increase the benefits. But the answer must be postponed for a year or two until the net results of the increase (if approved by General Convention) are revealed.

Recent Publicity Explained

by Louis Wallis

RELIGION in the crisis now confronting the world is the subject of publicity material which has recently appeared in the advertising columns of this journal under successive headings as follows: "A Serious Word About Your Inherited Religion," "The Tragedy of the Forgotten Jehovah," "New Methods in Biblical Interpretation Imperatively Needed."

Many religious leaders feel that organized religion has not yet spoken adequately in the present situation. Our national and international difficulties are approached with abundant moral earnestness and personal devotion. But these very qualities tend to obscure the fact that religious people must find their bearings more definitely in terms of the conditions which they hope to influence.

The Church is Bible-related, and must in some way recover and reassert its basis in the prophetic doctrines at the foundation of Scripture. Today's crisis indeed should presently compel a new declaration by the churches regarding the significance of the Bible and its religion, around which progressive elements can rally in the struggle for a better world. But a number of obstacles present themselves in the pathway of such an endeavor. How can we restore the voice of ancient prophecy without lapsing into futility and fanaticism? Many of the concrete demands of the prophets were utopian and impractical, such as the abolition of interest on money and the cancellation of loans at the end of seven years. The Bible does not supply a program of economic readjustment applicable to modern society; nor does it even furnish the materials out of which a scheme of social reform can be constructed for our times. The prophets lived in the immediate presence and urgency of terrible economic problems: These men preached the God of Israel as the divine champion of justice for "the poor and needy"; while the worship of "other gods," which they attacked, was complicated in its very essence with oppression and exploitation of the underprivileged; and the pressure of the struggle against Baal was an impelling force in the evolution of Israel toward ethical monotheism. During that long historical experience, men learned to find God amid the daily stress of secular life and in the powerful imperative of the moral law. But the democratic impulse of prophecy has been largely frustrated and obscured by the aristocratic, priestly element in the Jewish and Christian religions. The priest has always tended to collide with the work and influence of the prophet. Nevertheless, both prophet and priest have had their legitimate place in the development of the Judeo-Christian tradition. The question is how to interpret both factors in such a way as to release the prophetic witness in the religion which we have inherited from Bible times.

PARADOXICALLY, the scribes in the Babylonian Exile saved the monotheism of the prophets by building around it the fence of the priestly "Law." The five books of the Law, containing minute requirements of worship and also the utopian demands of the prophets, became the Bible of the Jewish community after the Babylonian Exile. But a reactionary party assumed control; and the prophets themselves, who had been creative in the evolution of monotheism, came to be looked upon as mere interpreters of the Law; so that the books of the prophets were never considered to be an organic part of the Jewish Bible proper. The names of the great literary prophets were never, or but rarely, given to Jewish children, and hence are not borne by characters in the Gospels, the Acts, and the Pauline Epistles.

The name of Jehovah, the God of the prophets, freely spoken before the Exile, was forbidden to be uttered after the Captivity; and therefore it is conspicuously missing in the New Testament. The impractical economic demands of the prophets, contained in the Law, were made null and void by a rabbinic legal instrument, "The Prosbul"; and the old social problems, which the prophets had fought, reappeared in Judaism under new forms. This indurated system was challenged by Jesus; and although it continued to stand unchanged, the social forces unleashed by the Crucifixion made possible the spread of ethical monotheism in the gentile world. The old prophetic struggle between Jehovah and Baal emerges in the New Testament as conflict between God and Mammon. The striking contrast between the emphasis upon rich vs. poor in the first three Gospels, and the priestly atmosphere of the Pauline epistles, is the measure of the change made necessary by the rise and expansion of Christianity. The progress of monotheism in the Roman Empire, and in medieval Europe, could not, under the circumstances prevailing in those times, carry the weight of economic agitation and reform.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

But under present conditions, the Bible is generating social conscience about problems caused by economic forces which operate beyond the orbit of individual, or personal, volition. These problems call for public, or collective, action. What is organized religion to do about them? Something has been accomplished in recent decades by numerous resolutions demanding economic justice. Such action has undoubtedly had an educative, moral effect, helping to clear the way toward the future. But resolutions of this nature may easily drop into the limbo of cant formulas which are safe, respectable and harmless. And yet, on the other hand, organized religion cannot sponsor definite programs of social reconstruction without virtually becoming a political party which excludes from its membership all who do not favor the proposals in question.

We need to realize that the social-economic problem in the Bible is not peculiar to the communities with which the Scriptures deal. It assimilates with general history in a perspective which includes elements common to all nations. There is a close affinity between social forces operating in Bible times and the forces at work in the development of western civilization. This important fact, long known to investigators, is made evident by recently issued studies of international scholars under the direction of authorities at Cambridge university, England. Biblical data, about which there is no dispute, can be used as the basis of a broad, comparative declaration, or statement, on social justice by religious people of all creeds. Such a statement, in tentative form, will soon be proposed for discussion in the hope that, either as modified or as essentially unchanged, it may prove to be available for endorsement by organizations and individuals interested in giving a more definite orientation to the social conscience in the present crisis. It will make no reference to controversial points in Biblical criticism or theology.

More Time to Teach

by David R. Hunter

Director of Religious Education in Massachusetts

EVERY season is open season as far as the Sunday Church School is concerned. Not a winter passes without some person of note taking a pot shot at our Sunday educational program which is caught up and syndicated throughout the land. For all of this unfavorable publicity the professional religious educator should be only grateful, for we need all the adverse publicity we can get. We will forever be helpless without it.

As a matter of fact almost any one of us can add to the evidence which demonstrates our weakness. One need only turn to the statistics to come upon facts which are close to shocking. A study of enrollment statistics cannot always be depended upon to prove very much, but in this case the statistics are so startling they cannot be avoided. Enrollment in our Church Schools throughout the country during 1944 and 1945 fell to a point lower than it had ever been since the year 1890. In the Diocese of Massachusetts, except for the year 1919, enrollment has never been as low since the Western Diocese was created in 1901. Now of course the war played a part in this, and yet to be satisfied with that explanation is to miss the real meaning of these figures. During all the years from 1890 to the present the communicant strength of our Church here in the United States has more than tripled, while Church School enrollment has averaged about the same. From 1894 to 1942 the total figure for continental United States was always in the 400,000's, with one exception when it fell below. For over half a century it fluctuated and varied no more than 1/7th of the largest enrollment attained. There can be little wonder then that laymen almost everywhere are filled with skepticism about the value of the Church School of our day.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Many factors have contributed to this situation, but one of the most basic factors is to be seen in the very time structure of the Church School which in the midst of our developing secular culture finds itself increasingly incapable of coping with that culture. The first half of this century has marked the development of a form of secularism which is unparalleled in the previous history of our country. Now in our day it has finally taken a form which has resulted in building a people, our own people, whose living is organized essentially apart from God. Living in the midst of a culture of this type that recognizes no essential or determining relationship to God, our Church Schools instead of increasing the amount of time available for instruction in an effort to further equip their children to combat and change the secularism all around them, have decreased that time, so that at the present it is the normal thing for a faithful Church School pupil to devote no more than twenty to thirty minutes a week to religious instruction apart from worship.

Any person who gives that fact a moment's thought will recognize the futility of such a program. It is not possible to point to a single basic subject in our weekday school system that could be mastered by a single pupil if the pupil had no more time to give to it than our children devote to religious education. How can we possibly expect any child to develop a sound religious life buttressed by the faith of our fathers, capable of withstanding the secularism of our day, if not overwhelming it, with no more opportunity than this for basic instruction. The answer is that we cannot expect them to do so, and that explains in part why the secular spirit has been able to make such deep inroads upon the culture of our generation.

Now in meeting this situation there are a number of points at which a Department of Christian Education could begin, some of which would hardly constitute a beginning, for we have been active there for some time. We could make it possible for teachers to secure the training most of them admit they so desperately need, something we have been trying to do and which we should look forward to doing with increasing efficiency. There can be no doubt that one of the weak points in our whole program of religious education is our system of untrained leadership.

ANOTHER starting point is with respect to the curriculum resources and teaching materials available for instruction. This has long been a crying need in the Church Schools up and down the land, and it is good to know that several promising developments are on the horizon, both in the National Division of Christian Education and in several Dioceses.

These are tasks we must not fail to accomplish, but they hardly constitute a new approach, and by themselves they do not promise any more for the next fifty years than they produced during the last half century. The real place to begin is with respect to the whole question of time. If it is true that the child cannot master any subject of basic importance on a thirty-minute per week basis, how can we hope to do anything with the best curriculum and the best trained teachers in the land if we continue as we are?

The solution, more than one leader feels, is to be found in what is known as the extended Church School session, something that has been tried with success in a number of parishes throughout the country, some of them small, some large, but a project which apparently has never been sponsored by a National or Diocesan Department of Christian Education. The extended Church School session is a program which makes use of the whole of a Sunday morning for purposes of education and worship. Instead of participating in the program of the Church for one hour on a Sunday morning, two and one-half hours are made available to children. For the average child this means that the teaching time is at least doubled and in many cases tripled. With all of the problems that go with this increased apportionment of time, this would seem to be a most necessary starting point and the very least we can do toward rectifying the present situation.

The two immediate problems with which one is confronted when the extended Church School session is contemplated are the apparent scarcity of teachers and the limitations of available space. Neither of these problems is to be underestimated, but neither should they be permitted to rule out all thought of the extended session. Church Schools of all sizes have solved them once the combined forces of leadership and laity determine to make more time available. The primary prerequisite is a deep seated conviction that the Church School institution as we now know it simply cannot work, and a determination to change it at its very base. When this spirit comes into being within a parish, it becomes perfectly obvious that more teachers are necessary, that they require more adequate training and that the persistent problem of teaching space can and will be solved. There are a few instances of this in our own diocese, and a growing file of letters from various parts of the country provide other examples.

In many ways the Church School is an index to

(Continued on page 18)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Brotherhood Host to Archbishop Of Canterbury September 7

Mass Meeting Under Auspices of Brotherhood Of St. Andrew to Hear First Public Address

Baltimore:—The office of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew here, one of the leading layman's organizations of the Episcopal Church, has announced that the coming visit of Archbishop Geoffrey Fisher of Canterbury to America is for the specific purpose of speaking before a huge mass meeting of that organization to be held Sunday afternoon, September 7 in Convention Hall, Philadelphia, at 3:30 o'clock. The meeting will climax a week-end of activity of the Brotherhood when delegates from all sections of the Church in America will hold their triannual convention. The Archbishop, coming from a Canadian visit will be the guest of the Brotherhood prior to his visit to General Convention September 9.

At the executive committee meeting of the Brotherhood held in March 1945 it was determined to invite an outstanding Anglican leader to speak at the pre-Convention mass meeting and with the approval of Presiding Bishop Henry St. George Tucker, the Archbishop of Canterbury was asked to speak. He accepted in September. The Presiding Bishop at the same time invited him to visit General Convention.

This will be the second visit of an Archbishop of Canterbury to America in the history of the Episcopal Church.

Edited by Philip L. Shutt

Plan Meeting

London (by wireless to RNS):—Plans are nearing completion here for the first international conference of Christians and Jews ever held. Over 125 Protestant, Roman Catholic, and Jewish delegates from many parts of the world will gather for week-long sessions opened at Oxford on July 30.

Bishop Honored

Denver:—The commemoration of Bishop Fred Ingley's twenty-fifth anniversary of his consecration was held in St. Barnabas parish here on St. Barnabas Day. The two servers at the Holy Communion were his son, Hansen Ingley, and Ted Hoover, the first child he baptized after his consecration. The Bishop received a pen and pencil set, a check for $4,500 from the people of the diocese accompanying a book of memories in which the names of the donors were inscribed, and Mrs. Ingley was given two silver plates.

New Instructor

Philadelphia:—Dean Frank Gifford has announced the appointment of the Rev. Charles M. Coldren as instructor in dogmatic theology and ethics at Philadelphia Divinity School. Mr. Coldren has just been discharged as a Navy chaplain after three years' service. He was rector of St. Nathaniel's Church here before entering the service.

Greek Theologs

New Haven, Conn.: — Eighteen young Greeks will arrive in the United States next fall to do advanced work in American theological seminaries according to an announcement by the Rev. Edward R. Hardy, professor in Berkeley Divinity School here representing the Presiding Bishop in making the arrangements. Most of the men have finished their course in theology at the University of Athens.

CLID Meet

Washington: — Several members of the Church League for Industrial Democracy were among the 550 students at the school of political action techniques sponsored by the national citizens political action committee on June 27-29. Among the speakers at the session dealing with the organization of clergymen for political action was the Rev. William Spofford Jr., executive secretary for the CLID.

Leads Fight

Portland, Ore.:—Stirred into action by the charge of Bishop Benjamin Dagwell that the city is permitting people to live in fire-traps, an ordinance was recently passed to correct the situation. The Bishop is chairman of the city's housing commission.

Raise $30,000

Richmond, Va. (RNS): — An endowment fund for the maintenance of the Episcopal church building here where Patrick Henry gave his famous "Liberty or Death" oration is being raised by Alexander W. Weddell, former Ambassador to Spain and president of St. John's Church Foundation Inc. So far $30,000 has been given with more to come.

Niemoeller Invited

New York (RNS): — The Federal Council of Churches has been authorized by its executive committee to extend an invitation to Pastor

OXFORD PRAYER BOOKS

FOR PEW USE

with the New Lectionary

We are glad to announce that copies of the Pew Edition of the Oxford Prayer Book, with the new lectionary, will be ready about April 1st.

As the supply is rather limited may we suggest that you order from your bookseller soon so as to avoid disappointment. Size 5½ x 3⅜ x 13/16 inches.

No. 7400 Black cloth, square corners.....50c
No. 7402 Bound in red cloth.....50c

At all booksellers OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS, NEW YORK

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Martin Niemoeller, German Church leader, to address the Council's biennial convention next December in Seattle, Wash. A nation-wide speaking itinerary will be planned.

New Dean

Hartford, Conn.: — The Rev. Louis Melbourne Hirshon, since 1935 rector of St. Stephen's, Sewickley, Pa., has been elected dean of Christ Church Cathedral. A graduate of Harvard, he was ordained deacon and priest in 1925 by Bishop Rogers of Ohio. In the diocese of Pittsburgh he has served as an ex-

SUMMER SERVICES

New York City
CHURCH OF THE HOLY TRINITY
316 East 88th Street
The Rev. James A. Paul, Vicar
Sunday: H. C. 8 a.m. Morning Service, 11 a.m. Thursday, 11 a.m.

CHURCH OF ST. MARY THE VIRGIN
46th Street, east of Times Square
The Rev. Grieg Taber, Rector
Sunday Masses: 7, 9, 11 (High).
Evening Prayer and Benediction, 8.

ST. PAUL'S CHAPEL
Columbia University
The Rev. Stephen F. Bayne Jr., Chaplain
Daily (except Saturday): 8 a.m.
Sunday: Morning Prayer and Sermon, 11. H. C. 9 a.m. and 12:30 noon (no services June 3 to July 6).

Millbrook, New York
GRACE CHURCH
The Rev. H. Ross Greer, Rector
Services 8:30 and 11 every Sunday.
Located on Route forty-four.

Denver, Colorado
ST. JOHN'S CATHEDRAL
The Very Rev. Paul Roberts, Dean
The Rev. Harry Watts
Sunday: 7:30, 8:30, 9:30, 11, 4:30.
Wednesday, 7:15. Thurs. and Holy Days, 10:30.

ST. MARK'S CHURCH
The Rev. Walter Williams, Rector
Sunday: 7, 8, 9:30 and 11.
Wednesday, 11 a.m. Thurs. and Holy Days, 7 a.m.

Ann Arbor, Michigan
ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH
University of Michigan
The Rev. Henry Lewis, Rector
Sunday: H. C. 8 a.m. Morning Prayer, 11 a.m.
Canterbury Club (students and servicemen) 6 p.m.
Wednesday: H. C. 7:15 a.m.

St. Louis, Missouri
CHURCH OF ST. MICHAEL & ST. GEORGE
Washington University
The Rev. J. Francis Sant, Rector
The Rev. C. George Widdifield, Minister of Education
Sunday: 7:30 and 11 a.m.
Canterbury Club, 5:30 twice monthly.

Pittsburgh
CALVARY CHURCH
Shady and Walnut Aves.
The Rev. Lauriston L. Scaife, Rector
The Rev. Phiiip M. Brown
The Rev. Francis M. Osborne
Sunday: 8, 9:30, 11 a.m.; 8 p.m.
H. C. Friday and Holy Days, 10 a.m.

Palo Alto, California
ALL SAINTS' CHURCH
Stanford University
The Rev. Oscar F. Green, Rector
Services: 8 and 11.
Union Service: 7:45 p.m.

Cleveland
CHURCH OF THE INCARNATION
East 105th and Marlowe
The Rev. Robert B. Campbell, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 a.m.

Utica, New York
GRACE CHURCH
Genesee and Elizabeth Sts.
The Rev. Harold E. Sawyer, Rector
Sunday: H. C. 8. Morning Prayer and H. C. 11. Evening Prayer, 4:30.
Weekday: Tues. and Thurs. H. C. 10.
Wed. 12:30. Friday, H. C. 7:30.

Chester, Penna.
ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
Broad and Madison Sts.
The Rev. Stanley V. Wilcox, Rector
Service: Sunday: 8 and 10:30 a.m.
Wednesday at 10 a.m.

Ridgewood, New Jersey
CHRIST CHURCH
The Rev. A. J. Miller, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 a.m.
Friday and Holy Days: 9:30 a.m.

Tulsa, Oklahoma
TRINITY CHURCH
The Rev. E. H. Eckel Jr., Rector
Sunday: 7 and 8; Church School, 9:30 (Except August); Morning Service, 11 a.m.
H. C. Friday and Holy Days, 10:30.

Santa Monica, California
ST. AUGUSTINE - BY - THE - SEA
ST. AMBROSE CHAPEL
The Rev. W. N. Pierson
The Rev. D. J. Gallagher
The Rev. D. O. Platt
Sunday: 7:45, 9:30 and 11 a.m.; 7:30 a.m.
Daily 9:30 a.m. Thurs. 7:45.

Elkton, Maryland
TRINITY CHURCH
The Rev. J. Warren Albinson, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 9:30 a.m.
Wed. Litany, 8 p.m. Fri. and Holy Days, H. C. at 10 a.m.

Evanston, Illinois
ST. LUKE'S CHURCH
Lee and Hinman Streets
The Rev. Edward Thomas Taggard
The Rev. Joseph Barnes Williams
The Rev. Darwin Kieby, Jr.
Sunday: H. C. 7:30, 9 and 11.
Daily: H. C. 7:30 a.m. except Wed. at 7 and 11 a.m. Confessions Sat. 4:30-5:30 and 7:30-8 p.m.

Providence, Rhode Island
GRACE CHURCH
Mathewson and Westminster Sts.
The Rev. Clarence H. Horner, Rector
Sunday: H. C. 8 a.m.; Church School, 9:30 and 11 a.m. Morning Prayer and Sermon (H. C. first Sunday), 11 a.m.; Y.P.F., 5:30 p.m. Evening Prayer and Sermon, 7:30 p.m. Thurs. H. C. 11 a.m. Daily Noonday Prayers, 12 noon.

San Diego, California
ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
8th Avenue at C Street
The Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, Rector
The Rev. Harold B. Robinson
Sunday: 7:30, 11 a.m.; 7:30 p.m.
Fri. and Holy Days, 10 a.m.

Omaha, Nebraska
ALL SAINTS' CHURCH
The Rev. Fred W. Clayton, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 a.m. H. C. first Sunday at 11. Weekday, H. C. and Intercessions Wed. at 10 a.m.

CARILLONIC BELLS

Make the Loveliest Memorial of All...

As a memorial for those who gave their lives in service, inscribe their names, not in perishable substances, but in the skyward tones of music—in Carillonic Bells, whose glorious song will rise day after day in praise and homage.

This is the tribute that none will have to seek out, that will not yield its lustre to time. The tribute of Carillonic Bells, will send its message, pouring out in melody the wordless certainties of faith. And, listening, hearts will know, remember, reverence, those in whose honor the golden music sounds.

Schulmerich Carillonic Bells, surpassing all chimes or bells, are eminently suitable for such a memorial. A quarter-century of electronic science has enabled Schulmerich to develop tones of luminous beauty, clearly audible, even at a distance, and responsive to the most exacting degrees of modulation. They are simple to install, require no additional structure, and are moderate in cost.

If you, too, would like to create a memorial in music for those whom you have loved and lost, we shall be glad to send you a descriptive booklet giving complete details. Please address Dept. W-13.

Schulmerich ELECTRONICS, INC.

CARILLONIC BELLS • TOWER MUSIC SYSTEMS • ACOUSTIC CORRECTION UNITS • SOUND DISTRIBUTION SYSTEMS • CHURCH HEARING AIDS

SELLERSVILLE, PA.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

amining chaplain and on the department of missions. His previous ministry was as assistant minister of Grace Church, Sandusky, Ohio, and as rector of St. Paul's church, Maumee, Ohio. No date has been set for his induction as dean.

Aids Orthodox

Chicago:—More than 15,000 food conservation pledge cards were distributed among the communicants of this diocese on June 9 to open a campaign which will aid famine relief in Europe. Bishop Wallace E. Conkling has announced that all money raised by the churches will be divided equally and sent to the Orthodox church in Greece, Hungary, Serbia, Bulgaria, and Poland. Each church family has been asked to keep the pledge card on its dinner table until the famine emergency has ended.

Resigns

New York:—The Presiding Bishop has received the resignation of Bishop James M. Maxson of Tennessee for action by the House of Bishops in September. Bishop Maxson is 71 years old and has been bishop since 1935.

Protest Memorial

Milwaukee:—St. James, this city's largest Episcopal parish has protested the erection of a five million dollar World War memorial because it involves the use of the Church's property as well as another church, a grade school, a dairy, and several large office and apartment buildings. Joining in the protest was Bishop B. F. P. Ivins, and Chancellor Howard T. Foulkes. The matter will finally be decided by the County Board of Supervisors.

Laymen Meet

Hartford, Conn.:—The first Connecticut Diocesan Laymen's conference was held at Trinity College here June 22 and 23 under the sponsorship of the diocesan department of program and budget. Bishop Oliver Hart of Pennsylvania was the leader of the conference. Other speakers included Richardson Wright, editor

ST. KATHERINE'S HOME

Provides medical and pediatric care for unmarried mothers and their babies. Case work is provided by outside organizations. Girls receive practical domestic training and thorough training in baby care. Address inquiries to

Executive Directress,
32 Reservoir Avenue
Jersey City, New Jersey

Your Church Teaches!

THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH has always taught the fullness of the "faith once delivered unto the saints". Every true and loyal communicant of the Church knows that. They also know the fundamental truths of the faith as set forth in the Book of Common Prayer.

BUT, there comes a time when the instructed laity welcome a refresher course in the "faith of our fathers" and there has always been a great need for a more widespread teaching of the faith. That need is now being filled by the youngest and fastest growing organization within the Church today.

THE NATIONAL GUILD OF CHURCHMEN is just one year old yet its members, already totaling into the thousands, represent every state in the Union. Its aim and purpose is to maintain, defend and propagate the historic doctrine, practice and teaching of the Anglican Communion as held by the Episcopal Church and contained in the Book of Common Prayer. It is an organization of and for the laity.

MAY WE SEND you a FREE copy of our current tract entitled "Your Church Teaches"? Written in a plain, direct, easy-to-read style it packs a lot of teaching into a few short pages and lists Prayer Book references for every truth it expounds.

Fill in and mail the coupon today for your copy.

National Guild of Churchmen

Formerly National Council of Churchmen

Eastern Province Office: 145 West 46th Street, New York 19, N. Y.

Western Province Office: 1026 Merchandise Mart, Chicago 54, Ill.

NATIONAL GUILD OF CHURCHMEN
145 West 46th Street
New York 19, N. Y.

Please send me a FREE copy of the tract "Your Church Teaches".

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY & STATE _____

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

of House and Garden, Frank Gulden, trustee of Berkeley Divinity school, an active member of the Presiding Bishop's committee on laymen's work, and Bishop Frederick Budlong. One hundred and twenty-five delegates, representing parishes and missions throughout the state were present to help develop the interest and increase the participation of laymen in the activities of the church.

Ends Rectorship

New York:—The congregation of St. George's, Stuyvesant Square, heard with much regret on June 28 that the Rev. Elmore M. McKee, for the past 10 years rector of this historic church and prominent in city and diocesan affairs had tendered his resignation effective September 30. He did not announce his future plans.

School Honor

Fairbault, Minn.:—For the 39th time Shattuck Military academy here has been placed on the honor roll of schools of the United States war department according to headmaster Donald J. Henning.

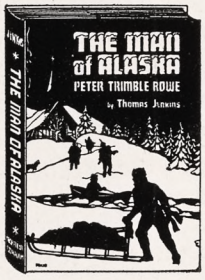
Offering Grows

Dallas: — An increase of $1,300 in the Lenten Mite Box offering of this Diocese was noted recently when at a special service in St. Matthew's Cathedral, children presented Bishop Harry Tunis Moore with an offering of $4,280.

Bishop of Erie Dies

Erie, Pa.:—Bishop Edward Pinkney Wroth of Erie died suddenly June 22 while in the midst of episcopal duties. Cause of his death was a coronary thrombosis. He was consecrated on September 14, 1943 after successful rectorships in Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Washington. Before his elevation to the Episcopate he had been a member of the diocesan commission on church schools, of the executive committee of the diocese of Erie and an examining chaplain.

He is survived by Mrs. Wroth and three children. The funeral was held from St. Paul's cathedral, June 26, and the body was shipped to Darlington, Maryland, his birthplace for burial.



Bishops Plan

New York, N. Y.:—Bishop Charles S. Reifsnider, now in Japan, has informed the Presiding Bishop

Have you read these?

The Man of Alaska: Peter Trimble Rowe

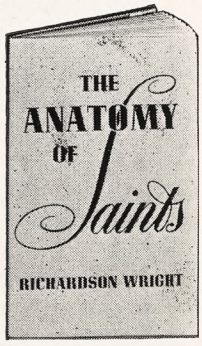
By THOMAS JENKINS

Here is the story of the rich and almost legendary life of the "Sourdough Bishop," who was a trail breaker in Alaskan missionary work. His is a record fraught with adventure and excitement — with glimpses into such episodes as the Klondike gold rush, experiences with the Indians, the coming of the first railway, and perils in the wilderness—as well the more important matters of religious life and work.

"There is not a dull page in this book. Frequently the narrative is interspersed with humor and anecdote; and some delightful sections are in the Bishop's own words, simple, direct, realistic, which take us to the heart of his gospel and give us insights into the childlike faith which led him to undertake a task from the dangers and hardships of which most of his generation would have quailed. This book, like the Bishop, will make missionary history."



—The Pacific Churchman.

The Anatomy of Saints

By RICHARD WRIGHT

Foreword by W. Appleton Lawrence, Bishop of Western Massachusetts

How we can be more like the saints, as we pursue the routine of our daily lives, as we prepare for a vocation, as we participate in the activities and worship of the Church, is discussed by Mr. Wright in this booklet. He uses four "type" saints as examples for us to follow: St. John the Baptist, St. John the Evangelist, St. Peter and St. Mary.

The author of this booklet is the editor of House and Garden and author of the pamphlets, "Before Breakfast," "Before Lunch," "Before He Comes," and a number of books on various subjects. The booklet was issued for The Presiding Bishop's Committee on Laymen's Work.

Price, 65 cents

Morehouse-Gorham Co.

14 East 41st St. New York 17

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

of a conference he had with the Japanese bishops and Anglican leaders recently at which time future plans for the Japanese church were discussed. "The Japanese church is impoverished beyond expectations," the Bishop said. It was revealed that 71 church buildings were destroyed of which 53 request help to rebuild a simple barrack construction for worship purposes. Nearly all of the clergy are at present doing part-time secular work but plans are under way by which their salaries may come from church congregations.

Camp Sold

Detroit, Mich.: — Camp Frisbie, near here was sold recently after 25 years' use by the diocese for conferences, parish picnics etc. Meetings will be held at Camp Chicagami near Alpena, Mich., hereafter, the first of which was the Older Boys' conference beginning July 6.

Camp Site

Decatur, Ala.: — Bishop Charles S. Carpenter has announced the purchase of a permanent Diocesan camp-site for the diocese of Alabama which is a step forward in a new program for conferences in that diocese. The camp, near here, is named after the late Bishop William McDowell. Young people of the Diocese have given offerings the past few years towards a chapel in his memory to be built at the camp.

Honor Bishop

Sewanee, Tenn.:—A tablet to the memory of Bishop James Craik Morris, late bishop of Louisiana was unveiled here recently at the Commencement exercises of the University of the South.

Meeting Successful

Detroit, Mich.:—Reporting a full registration the annual Girl's conference of this diocese was held June 22 to June 28 at Holiday House, Pine Lake, under the auspices of the diocesan Girls' Friendly society.

Torok Appointed

New York:—Bishop Charles B. Colmore of Puerto Rico, now in this country, has announced his appointment of the Rev. John Torok for college work at the University of Puerto Rico, San Juan. He will also do missionary work in the field.

Unity Commission

(Continued from page 4)

byterian orbit . . . "We should not only become merely one of several hundred other Protestant sects but also a new kind of Presbyterian Church."

This report was signed by Bishops Goodrich Fenner of Kansas, Harwood Sturtevant of Fond du Lac, the Rev. Messrs C. Rankin Barnes, Leicester C. Lewis, and Claude W. Sprouse, and Messrs. Howard T. Foulkes, and James G. Mitchell. Mr. Mitchell agreed with the report but desired to supplement its findings.

The Commission, in all of its meetings has met secretly and it was not until last week end that the reports were ready for distribution.

Church Conference

Wellesley, Mass.:—After a three years' intermission due to the war the 39th season of the Wellesley conference for church workers opened again under the direction of Bishop Stephen E. Keeler of Minnesota beginning June 24 and lasting through July 3. Dr. Richard Niebuhr of the Yale Divinity school headlined the conference discussing

THE CHURCH PENSION FUND

and its subsidiaries

administered for the benefit of the Church

THE CHURCH HYMNAL CORPORATION

Publishers of The Hymnal; Book of Common Prayer; A Prayer Book for Soldiers and Sailors; Book of Offices for Certain Occasions; Stowe's Clerical Directory.

THE CHURCH LIFE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost insurance and annuity contracts available to the clergy, lay officials and active lay workers of the Church, either voluntary or paid, and their immediate families.

THE CHURCH PROPERTIES FIRE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost fire and windstorm insurance on property owned by or closely affiliated with the Church, and on the residences and personal property of the clergy.

Further information available by addressing any of the above at

20 Exchange Place New York

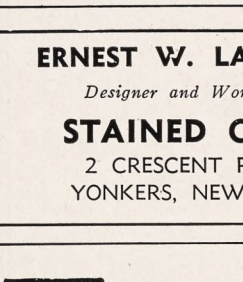
Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Write us for
Organ Information
AUSTIN ORGANS, Inc.
Hartford, Conn.



Memorial Windows
In accordance with the best traditions of the craft. Notable installations in forty states and five foreign countries.
Illustrated material on request
The D'Ascenzo Studios
founded 1896
1604 Summer Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

ALTAR BREADS ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED
SAINT MARY'S CONVENT
KENOSHA • WISCONSIN

MENEELY BELL CO.
22 RIVER ST., TROY, N. Y.
BELLS

R. GEISSLER, INC.
71-79 W. 45th St., New York 19, N. Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER
FABRICS + WINDOWS
EST. 1877

ERNEST W. LAKEMAN
Designer and Worker in
STAINED GLASS
2 CRESCENT PLACE
YONKERS, NEW YORK

Need a LAXATIVE?
Black-Draught is,
1-Usually prompt
2-Usually thorough
3-Always economical

25 to 40 doses only 25¢
Get BLACK-DRAUGHT
CAUTION: USE ONLY AS DIRECTED

"The Christian Answer to the Problems of Man." Other leaders of the widely varied curriculum included the Rev. William B. Spofford, managing editor of THE WITNESS, National Council member Mrs. John E. Hill of Philadelphia, Dean William Strickland, fellow of Trinity College of Music, London, and Bishop Henry Knox Sherrill.

More Time to Teach

(Continued from page 12)

the health and strength of the educational process throughout the whole structure of the parish. When sound learning is taking place in the Church School, learning that is entitled to the same respect accorded good secular education, the Church School becomes a leaven for learning in the home and in every parish activity. There was a time when the home was the educational leaven to which the Church was greatly indebted. Now the times have changed and the Church has the major part of the responsibility. If shabby, haphazard education is offered through the Church School, it will put a blight on whatever possibility exists for stimulating the religious educational process elsewhere. Sound religious learning begins in the Church School or, in the lives of most, it does not begin at all.

A number of parishes in the Diocese of Massachusetts are now giving serious consideration to the extended Church School session, and it is hoped that their number will grow. The full resources of the Diocesan Department will be at their command to meet the needs and solve the problems that go with an expanding program. Certainly nothing less than a program conceived on a broader scale than our present one can hope to turn the tide of a culture that would dare to live in an atomic age on nothing more than its own resources.

DIRECTOR WANTED
Director of Religious Education wanted; good salary; state qualifications, experience and salary expected in first letter. Rev. Claude A. Beesley, 1826 Huff Ave., Wichita Falls, Texas.

SECRETARY WANTED
Interesting position New York area. Good stenographer. Able to take responsibility. Reply: Box CM, WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

POSITION WANTED
Trained nurse, churchwoman, fifty, seeks position as nurse or housemother in boys' school. Experience. References. Box ML, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6.

ASSISTANT WANTED
Young, ordained, liberal evangelical, married clergyman wanted with special interest in young people and calling. $2,800. References. Rev. David H. Weeks, 646 Orchard Parkway, Niagara Falls, N. Y.

WOMAN DIRECTOR
Wanted a woman director of religious education for prominent New York Episcopal parish. Church School of 500. Single, 30 to 45 years. Apartment provided. Box WD, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty St., New York 6, N. Y.

Everything for the Episcopal Church
but vestments
A broad statement but we'd like to prove it.
Ammidon and Company
Horace L. Varian
Horace L. Varian, Jr.
31 South Frederick Street
Baltimore 2, Maryland

PURE IRISH LINENS NOW IN STOCK
for all Church needs, supplies constantly arriving, good qualities, also fine cottons. Samples free.
Marv Fawcett Company
Plainfield, N. J. Box 146

CATHEDRAL STUDIOS
Washington & London, England. Linens and materials by the yard, surplices, albs, Altar Linens, stoles, burses & veils. Materials by the yard. See my NEW BOOK "CHURCH EMBROIDERY" & CHURCH VESTMENTS a complete instruction. 128 pages, 95 illus. Price $5.67. And my HANDBOOK for ALTAR GUILDS, price 50c. Miss L. V. Mackrille, 11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington 15, D.C. 30 minutes from U. S. Treasury. Tel Wisconsin 2752.

SURPLICES — STOLES
VESTMENTS
CHURCH HANGINGS
ALTAR LINENS
CASSOCKS
CLERICAL SUITS — CLOAKS
RABATS—RABAT VESTS—COLLARS—SHIRTS
Choir Vestments in All Styles
Inquiries Invited
C. M. ALMY & SON, INC.
562 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.

VESTMENTS for CLERGY and CHOIR
Altar Linens . . . Embroideries . . .
Tailoring . . . Episcopal Flags. Send for Catalog
J. M. HALL, INC.
14 W. 40th St., New York - Tel. CH 4-3306
Office & Salesroom
American Distributor of Stained Glass Windows for James Powell & Sons, Ltd., London, Eng.

The Payne-Spiers Studios Inc.
Studios at Paterson, New Jersey
Carved Wood
Chancel Renovations Church Furnishings
Murals Memorials Tablets
Stained Glass
·· Inquiries Solicited ··

VESTMENTS
Cassocks - Surplices - Stoles - Scarves
Silks - Altar Cloths - Embroideries
Priest Cloaks - Rabats - Collars
Custom Tailoring for Clergymen
1837 Church Vestment Makers Over One Hundred Years 1946

COX SONS & VINING, Inc.
131 East 23rd Street, New York 10, N.Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

MR. S. C. HIGGINS
Layman of Hammond, Indiana

A revision of the Prayer Book may be necessary; certainly a visit to some parishes and missions in some dioceses should convince laymen and clergy that the offices of the Prayer Book are changed and revised from time to time by each minister to suit his own peculiarities or perhaps those of the congregation. Morning Prayer is almost a thing of the past in this part of the world. Evening Prayer has been replaced with the Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament which is not in the Prayer Book. The Communion Service is cluttered up with the ceremonies of the medieval age. The service is called the "Mass" and there seems to be many kinds of "Masses."

It is implied that confession to a priest is necessary before coming to "Mass." The reserved sacrament is on the Holy Table in spite of the fact that the Prayer Book and the Thirty-Nine Articles say no. After the blessing the "last gospel" appears. At times the Virgin Mary or some other saint is asked to intercede for the faithful.

From one layman's point of view there should come with the revision of the Prayer Book an effort to secure some uniformity in the Church services. As it now stands the clergy follow their own school of churchmanship and the laymen look on dazed and groggy.

* * *

MR. VICTOR D. CRONK
Layman of La Grange, Illinois

The Rev. W. O. Cross inquires why Catholics don't love the masses (WITNESS May 16). Probably most do, but we are not told to love the masses. We are told to love our neighbor, not the same thing.

The sense of social justice in other countries, or any country, is part of the overall picture. Once the viewpoint that we call 'modern' begins to obtain, the Churches in those countries soon come to appreciate their opportunities. For many years before 1918 there were strong bodies of dissenters in Russia, notably the Stundists, or Baptists. Did they set the state Church an example of social consciousness? If so, I never heard of it. But why touch so inadequately on the social service work of the Church of England, and not at all on that of the Roman Church in the United States? This kind of special pleading would no doubt fault the Apostle Paul quite severely for counselling the submission of a slave to his master.

* * *

GEORGE B. GILBERT
Priest of Middletown, Connecticut

I note with interest the article about private schools (WITNESS, May 9). During the 30's before the war a very careful painstaking study of private school graduates compared to public school graduates was made by Prof. Victor Butterfield of Wesleyan University, now president of that institution. Of the approximately 700 students almost exactly half were from each type of school. As far as possible the study covered not only their student days but some considerable time afterwards. As to the latter it was found 20% of public school won distinction while 11% of the others did. Only 55% private school men went through to graduation while 70% of the others did. 26% of public schools were put on probation. 40% of private schools were of those graduating; more than twice as many made Phi Beta Kappa from the public schools as from the private.

One conclusion was that the private school boy is "clocked"—run by a bell—so that when the freedom of college life is his, the lid blows off. He is better prepared in books but not in all round manner living, and loses his book learning advantage. The private school boy "gets more careless"—does not have as "sharp a conscience" as the public school boy.

Perhaps because he springs from all stages of society the public school boy was found to have more a desire and ambition.

My personal observation leads me to feel very strongly that spending so many of the formative years of a boy's life in practically one strata of society sadly misfits many for helpful living among all sorts and conditions of men.

ST. JOHN'S MILITARY SCHOOL
Salina, Kansas

Since 1887 St. John's has been perpetuating the cultural traditions of the Church by stressing sound scholarship in Christian atmosphere.

Grades 6-12. Fully accredited. Bar I.L. Summer School and Camp in Colorado Rockies. Boys 8-15. Splendid equipment. 10,000 acres.

The Rev. R. L. Clem, Rector

St. Margaret's House
School for Christian Service and Deaconess Training School of the Pacific

A graduate school preparing women for Church positions in the fields of religious education, social service, and evangelistic work. Opportunity to work for advanced degrees. Special training for work in Orient.

ADDRESS THE DEAN
1820 Scenic Ave. Berkeley 4, California

CATHEDRAL CHOIR SCHOOL
NEW YORK

A Boarding and Day School for Boys
Established 1849

A BOARDING SCHOOL for the forty boys of the Choir of the Cathedral of Saint John the Divine. The boys receive careful musical training and sing daily at the service in the Cathedral. The classes in the School are small with the result that boys have individual attention, and very high standards are maintained. The School has its own building and playgrounds in the close. Fee—$350.00 per annum. Boys admitted 9 to 11. Voice test and scholastic examination. For Catalogue and Information address:

The CANON PRECENTOR,
Cathedral Choir School,
Cathedral Heights, New York City

Virginia Episcopal School
Lynchburg, Virginia

Prepares boys for colleges and university. Splendid environment and excellent corps of teachers. High standard in scholarship and athletics. Healthy and beautiful location in the mountains of Virginia.

For catalogue apply to
George L. Barton, Jr., Ph.D. Headmaster,
Box 408

SCHOOLS

The Hospital of Saint Barnabas and the University of Newark offer a full course in NURSING
to qualified High School graduates. Scholarships available. Classes enter in February and September

Apply to
Director of Nursing
HOSPITAL OF SAINT BARNABAS
685 High Street Newark, N. J.

DE VEAUX SCHOOL
FOUNDED 1852

A Church school for boys. Thorough preparation for college. Military system of student government, developing sense of responsibility. Charges for grades seven and eight $1000; grades nine through twelve $1050. For catalog, address THE HEADMASTER, DeVeaux School, Niagara Falls, New York.

HOLDERNESS

In the White Mountains. College Preparatory and General Courses. Music and Crafts. For boys 12-19. All sports including riding. 200 acres of woods. New fireproof building. Individual attention. Home atmosphere.

Rev. Edric A. Weld, Rector
Box W. Plymouth, N. H.

MARGARET HALL
Under Sisters of St. Helena
(Episcopal)

Small country boarding and day school for girls, from primary through high school. Accredited college preparatory. Modern building recently thoroughly renovated includes gymnasium and swimming pool. Campus of six acres with ample playground space, hockey field and tennis court. Riding. Board and Tuition $800. For catalog, address: Sister Rachel, Prin. O.S.H., Box A. Versailles, Kentucky.

FORK UNION
MILITARY ACADEMY

An Honor Christian School with the highest academic rating. Upper School prepares for university or business. ROTC. Every modern equipment. Junior School from six years. Housemother. Separate building. Catalogue Dr. J. J. Wicker, Fork Union, Virginia.

CARLETON COLLEGE

Laurence M. Gould, D.Sc., President
Carleton is a co-educational liberal arts college of limited enrollment and is recognized as the Church College of Minnesota.

Address: Assistant to the President
CARLETON COLLEGE
Northfield Minnesota

KEMPER HALL
KENOSHA, WISCONSIN

Boarding and day school for girls offering thorough college preparation and training for purposeful living. Study of the Fine Arts encouraged. Complete sports program. Junior School department. Beautiful lake shore campus. Under direction of the Sisters of St Mary. For catalogue, address: Box WT.

ROWLAND HALL
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH

Boarding and Day pupils. Accredited. Preschool, Lower school, College Preparatory and General courses. Graduates in many eastern and western colleges. All branches of music, dancing, art, drama Indoor pool, tennis courts, riding, weekends of winter sports. Pleasant home life. Environment of geographical and historical interest. Altitude 4500. Boarding $1,000, Day $120-$350.

The Right Rev. Arthur W. Moulton, S.T.D., Rector

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SCHOOLS OF THE CHURCH

St. Andrew's School

An all-year boarding school for boys

West Barrington, Rhode Island

Established in 1893

Rev. Irving Andrew Evans, Rector

Wooster School

Danbury, Conn.

Small School. Near New York. Reasonable tuition. Accredited. Individual attention. Cardinal principles are Religion, Intellectual Excellence, Simplicity, Hard Work.

Write Rev. JOHN VERDERY
Ridgebury Road, Danbury, Conn.

CRANBROOK

Preparatory school for boys in grades 7 through 12. Post-graduate course. Beautiful, modern buildings. Single rooms in fire-resisting dormitories for all resident students. Small classes. Strong faculty. Graduates in leading colleges. Exceptional opportunities in arts, crafts, sciences, music, competitive scholarships. Broad program of athletics. Near Detroit. Over night by train from New York, six hours from Chicago. Catalog.

Rev. W. Brooke Stabler, Cranbrook School, Box W, Bloomfield Hills, Michigan

St. Paul's Polytechnic Institute

Lawrenceville, Virginia

St. Paul's offers Courses on the four year College level in the following fields—Industrial Education, Agriculture, Business Administration, Home Economics and Teacher Training.

J. ALVIN RUSSELL, A.M., D.D., President

THE NORTHWESTERN MILITARY AND NAVAL ACADEMY

Lake Geneva, Wisconsin

A distinctive preparatory school for boys 13 to 18, grades 9 through 12. Fireproof buildings and 90 acre campus, beautifully situated along lake shore. Excellent academic and military training together with a full complement of athletic activities. For information write to: The Rev. James Howard Jacobson, Superintendent and Rector.

"At the Nation's Shrine"

VALLEY FORGE

Fully accredited college preparatory and Junior College for young gentlemen 12 to 20. Highest scholastic standards. 16 modern fireproof buildings. All sports. Motorized Field Artillery, Cavalry, Infantry, R.O.T.C. Band. For Catalog address:

Box W, Wayne, Pa.

Military Academy

MERCERSBURG

A distinguished preparatory school beautifully located in the mountains of Southern Pennsylvania. Modern equipment. Small classes; 10,000 Alumni. Close personal supervision of each boy. 85 miles from Baltimore and Washington on Greyhound route. Beautiful Chapel with famous Carillon. Junior School. Summer Session.

Charles S. Tippetts, Ph.D., Head Master
Box W, Mercersburg, Pa.

ST. AGNES SCHOOL

An Episcopal Country Day and Boarding School for Girls

Excellent College Preparatory record. Special courses arranged for girls not contemplating college. Day pupils range from Kindergarten to College Entrance. Boarders from Grade 8 to College Entrance.

MISS BLANCHE PITTMAN, Principal
Albany New York

LENOX SCHOOL

A Church School in the Berkshire Hills for boys 12-18 emphasizing Christian ideals and character through simplicity of plant and equipment, moderate tuition, the cooperative self-help system, and informal, personal relationships among boys and faculty.

Rev. Robert L. Curry, Headmaster
Lenox Massachusetts

THE CHOATE SCHOOL

Wallingford, Connecticut

A catalogue of the School will be sent upon request—with addresses of parents who know the School intimately through their sons.

The School tries to make its charges in the way great surgeons and doctors charge.

ST. MARY'S HALL

San Antonio, Texas

A residence and day school for girls. . . . Preparing for the leading colleges. Fully accredited curriculum. . . . Training in leadership and Christian character. Emphasizing outdoor sports, throughout the year. 4 acre campus—modern buildings—swimming pool.

Katharine Lee, A.M., Head Mistress
117 East French Place

The Hannah More Academy

Est. 1832. Episcopal school for girls, 10 to 19 years, accredited to leading colleges. Pleasant location in the country. College Preparatory and General Courses, Music, Art. All athletics and riding carefully supervised. Modern Equipment. Moderate rates because school not run for profit.

Janet Ward, B.S., M.A. Columbia University
Headmistress
Reisterstown, Md.

St. Mary's School

Sewanee, Tennessee

College Preparatory, General Courses
Junior Department

Dramatics - Music - Riding
Address: The Sister Superior C.S.M.

National Cathedral School

Resident and day school for girls. Located on 58 acres of the Cathedral Close. College preparatory and general courses. Strong emphasis on the Arts.

MABEL B. TURNER, Principal
Washington 16, D. C.

St. Paul's School for Boys

Mt. Washington, Baltimore, Md.

A Boarding and Day School for Boys
Established 1849

Boarding department—Grades 6 to 12
Day department—Grades 3 to 12

S. Atherton Middleton, Headmaster
Rev. Harry Lee Doll, rector of St. Paul's, Baltimore, chaplain and president of trustees.

ST. BERNARD'S SCHOOL

Gladstone, New Jersey

A Church Boarding School for Boys
Beautifully situated in the Somerset Hills of northern New Jersey.

Grades 7 through 12
Founded 1900 — Enrollment 78
Tuition, Board and Lodging $750

Address The Rev. Robert L. Clayton

BRECK SCHOOL FOR BOYS

Day and Boarding, Grades 1 thru 12

Preparation for college and that experience we call Life under highly trained men. Athletics of all kinds, including horseback riding.

Chester H. Desrochers, Headmaster
2477 Como Avenue, W. St. Paul 8, Minn.

SAINT MARY'S HALL

BURLINGTON, NEW JERSEY

Boarding and Day School for Girls.
Strong Elementary Department
College Preparatory, and General Courses.
Music - Art - Dramatics - Sports
Careful attention to individual growth and progress.

FLORENCE LUKENS NEWBOLD, Headmistress

St. Faith's School

Chartered by the Board of Regents
Approved by Synod of New York and New Jersey

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.

The Rev. Leonard W. Steele, B.A., B.D.
Rector and Principal

HOWE MILITARY SCHOOL

Training young Americans for leadership. R.O.T.C. Accredited college preparatory, business courses. Junior School. Small classes. Every boy participates in sports. Balanced program. Episcopal. Established 1884. Summer Camp, boys grammar school age. Catalogue:

COL. B. B. BOUTON
13 Academy Place, Howe, Indiana

ST. AUGUSTINE'S COLLEGE

Raleigh, North Carolina

Accredited Class A Church College for Negro Youth. Co-educational. B.A. and B.S. Degrees. Teacher Training; Religious Education; Commerce; Music; Physical Education. Address: President.

Legal title for bequests: Trustees of St. Augustine's College, Raleigh, No. Carolina.

SAINT MARY'S HALL

Faribault, Minnesota

81st Year

Bishop Whipple's famous church boarding school for girls, high school only. Thorough college preparation, comprehensive general courses. Beautiful buildings. Healthful climate.

Margaret Robertson, M.A., Headmistress

SEWANEE MILITARY ACADEMY

Thorough prep. for college. Summer session. Small classes—every boy instructed how to study. Private mountain domain of 10,000 acres in summer resort area. Endowed: moderate rates. 79th year. Catalogue.

Superintendent Box W, Sewanee, Tenn.

Voorhees N. and I. School

Junior College Denmark, S. C. High School

Co-educational. Accredited by State Dept. of Education of S. C. and the Southern Association of Secondary Schools and Colleges. Under the two Dioceses of S. C. and The American Church Institute for Negroes. Expenses reasonable. Limited scholarship aid for worthy students. Apply:

J. E. BLANTON, Principal.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The WITNESS

10¢ A COPY

LIBRARY COPY

Mary Higginson Photo

JULY 25, 1946

SERVICE FOR YOUTH WELCOMES A YOUNG GIRL SEEKING HELP

EPISCOPAL SERVICE FOR YOUTH

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

THE CATHEDRAL OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE
NEW YORK CITY

Sundays: 8, 9, 11, Holy Communion; 10, Morning Prayer; 4, Evening Prayer; Sermons 11 and 4.
Weekdays: 7:30, (also 9:15 Holy Days, and 10, Wednesdays), Holy Communion; 9, Morning Prayer; 5, Evening Prayer. Open daily 7 A.M. to 6 P.M.

GRACE CHURCH, NEW YORK
Broadway at 10th St.
Rev. Louis W. Pitt, D.D., Rector
Daily: 12:30 except Mondays and Saturdays.
Sundays: 8 and 11 A.M. and 4:30 P.M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion 11:45 A.M.

THE HEAVENLY REST, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue at 90th Street.
Rev. Henry Darlington, D. D.
Sundays: Holy Communion 8 and 10 A.M.; Morning Service and Sermon 11 A.M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion, 11 A.M.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S CHURCH
NEW YORK
Park Avenue and 51st Street
Rev. Geo. Paull T. Sargent, D.D., Rector
8:00 A.M. Holy Communion
11:00 A.M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P.M. Evensong. Special Music.
Weekdays: Holy Communion Wednesday at 8:00 A.M.
Thursdays and Saints' Days at 10:30 A.M.
The Church is open daily for prayer.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH
Madison Ave. at 71st St., New York
The Rev. H. W. B. Donegan, D.D., Rector
8:00 a.m. Holy Communion.
9:30 a.m. Church School.
11:00 a.m. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 p.m. Evening Prayer and Sermon.
Wed., 7:45 a.m., Thurs., 12 noon Holy Communion.

THE CHURCH OF THE EPIPHANY
1317 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Charles W. Sheerin, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 A.M.; 8 P.M.
Daily: 12:05.
Thursdays: 11:00 and 12:05.

ST. THOMAS' CHURCH, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue and 53rd Street
Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, S. T. D., rector
Sunday Services: 8 and 11 A.M.
Daily Services: 8:30 A.M., Holy Communion.
Thursdays: 11 A.M., Holy Communion.

THE CHURCH OF THE ASCENSION
Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street, New York
The Rev. Roscoe Thornton Foust, Rector
Sundays: 8 and 9 H. C.; 11 A.M., 4:30, 8 P.M.
Daily: 8. Holy Communion.
5:30 Vespers—Tuesday through Friday.
The Church is open all day and night.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL
Buffalo, New York.
Shelton Square
The Very Rev. Edward R. Welles, M.A., Dean
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30 and 11.
Daily: 12:05 noon—Holy Communion
Tuesday: 7:30 A.M.—Holy Communion
Wednesday: 11:00 A.M.—Holy Communion.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH
Atlanta, Georgia
435 Peachtree Street
The Rev. J. Milton Richardson, Rector
9:00 A.M. Holy Communion.
10:45 A.M. Sunday School.
11:00 A.M. Morning Prayer and Sermon.
6:00 P.M. Young People's Meetings.

The WITNESS
For Christ and His Church

EDITORIAL BOARD: Frederick C. Grant, Editor; Arthur Lichtenberger, Chairman; William B Spofford, Managing Editor; Philip L. Shutt, News Editor; Lane W. Barton, Beverly M. Boyd, Dillard H. Brown, Roscoe T. Foust, Charles K. Gilbert, Hugh D. McCandless, Howard Chandler Robbins, William K. Russell, Sydney A. Temple Jr., Joseph H. Titus, William M. Weber.

★

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS: D. B. Aldrich, J. A. Bell, T. S. Carruthers, Adelaide Case, G. K. Chalmers, E. M. Cross, G. M. Day, Angus Dun, A. W. Farlander, T. P. Ferris, J. F. Fletcher, John Gass, C. H. Gesner, C. L. Glenn, G. C. Graham, J. M. Groton, G. I. Hiller, I. P. Johnson, T. R. Ludlow, C. S. Martin, R. C. Miller, Walter Mitchell, A. T. Mollegen, E. L. Parsons, E. L. Pennington, Rose Phelps, L. W. Pitt, Otis Rice, Cyril Richardson, Paul Roberts, V. D. Scudder, W. M. Sharp, W. B. Sperry, C. W. Sprouse, D. S. Stark, W. B. Stevens, J. W. Suter, S. E. Sweet. Alexander Zabriskie.

★

THE WITNESS is published weekly from September 15th to June 15th inclusive, with the exception of the first week in January and semi-monthly from June 15th to September 15th by the Episcopal Church Publishing Co. on behalf of the Church Publishing Association, Inc. Samuel Thorne, President; Charles A. Houston, Vice-President; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, Treasurer; Frederic D. H. Gilbert, Secretary.

★

The subscription price is $3.00 a year; in bundles for sale in parishes the magazine sells for 10c a copy, we will bill quarterly at 5c a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter, March 6, 1939, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879.

JULY 25, 1946
Vol. XXIX No. 38

CLERGY NOTES

BERNHOEFT, ERNST was ordained deacon by Bishop William Thomas of Brazil recently and will be in charge of Calvary, Santa Rita and missions.

CRAIG, WILLIAM E., a member of the Los Angeles city missions staff, died July 3 at the age of 61.

DOUGLASS, CHARLES H., upon his release as navy chaplain will become rector of Trinity, Bessemer, Ala.

FINDLAY, CHARLES W., for nearly 25 years rector of St. Andrew's, Albany, N. Y., has resigned to become rector of St. Philip's, Wiscasset, Maine, October 1.

HATFIELD, J. LYON has resigned as rector of Holy Cross, Utica, N. Y., to become rector of St. Stephen's, Bridesburg, northeast Philadelphia.

HOUTEN, VAN EDWARD was deposed from the priesthood June 14 by Bishop William T. Manning at his own request.

MAYBERRY, DONALD W., former Marine Corps chaplain will become rector of Trinity parish, Wilmington, Del., Sept. 1.

MILLS, LAWRENCE, assistant at Trinity, Princeton, N. J., will become rector of Immanuel church, New Castle, Del., and in charge of Christ Church, Delaware City, effective August 1.

MILTON, WM. H., rector-emeritus of St. James', Wilmington, N. C., died June 26 at age of 68.

SKARDON, MAJOR STEPHEN of Waterboro, S. C., was ordained deacon July 3 by Bishop Thomas Carruthers.

WOOD, DEAN HUBERT S., Garden City, L. I., was recently awarded the honorary degree of doctor of divinity by Bishop's University, Lennoxville, Quebec.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

CHRIST CHURCH CATHEDRAL
Main and Church Sts., Hartford, Conn.
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30, 10:05, 11 A.M., 8 P.M.
Weekdays: Holy Communion—Monday and Thursday, 9 a.m.; Tuesday, Friday and Saturday, 8 a.m.; Wednesday, 7:00 and 11:00 a.m. Noonday Service, daily 12:15 p.m.

CHRIST CHURCH
Cambridge
REV. GARDINER M. DAY, RECTOR
REV. FREDERIC B. KELLOGG, CHAPLAIN
Sunday Services, 8:00, 9:00, 10:00 and 11:15 A.M.
Weekdays: Wed. 8 and 11 A.M. Thurs., 7:30 A.M.

TRINITY CHURCH
Miami
Rev. G. Irvine Hiller, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services 8, 9:30, 11 A.M.

TRINITY CATHEDRAL
Military Park, Newark, N. J.
The Very Rev. Arthur C. Lichtenberger Dean
Summer Services
Sunday
8:30 and 11:00 a.m.
Week Days
Tuesday, Thursday, Friday at 12:10; Wednesday and Holy Days, Holy Communion, 12 noon.
The Cathedral is open every day

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
Montecito and Bay Place
OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA
Rev. Calvin Barkow, D.D., Rector
Sundays: 8 A.M., Holy Communion; 11 A.M., Church School; 11 A.M., Morning Prayer and Sermon.
Wednesdays: 10 A.M., Holy Communion; 10:45, Rector's Study Class.

GRACE CHURCH
Corner Church and Davis Streets,
ELMIRA, N. Y.
Rev. Frederick T. Henstridge, Rector
Sundays: 8 and 11 A.M.; 4:30 P.M.
Daily: Tuesday and Thursday, 7:30 A.M.
Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Holy Days, 9:30 A.M.
Other Services Announced

ST. MARK'S CHURCH
Texas Avenue and Cotton Street
SHREVEPORT, LA.
Rev. Frank E. Walters, Rector; Rev. Harry Wintermeyer, Curate.
Sundays: Holy Communion, 7:30; 9:25 A.M. Family Service: 11 A.M. Morning Prayer. Holy Communion, first Sunday. 6 P.M., Young Churchmen.

CHRIST CHURCH
Nashville, Tennessee
Rev. Peyton Randolph Williams
7:30 A.M.—Holy Communion.
9:30 and 11 A.M.—Church School.
11 A.M.—Morning Service and Sermon.
6 P.M.—Young People's Meetings.
Thursdays and Saints' Days—Holy Communion 10 A.M.

GRACE CHURCH
105 Main Street, Orange, N. J.
Lane Wickham Barton, Rector
SUNDAYS
8:00 A. M.—Holy Communion
11:00 A. M.—Church School
11:00 A. M.—Morning Prayer and Sermon (Holy Communion first Sunday each month)
7:00 P. M.—Young People's Fellowship

CHRIST CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA
Second Street above Market
Cathedral of Democracy
Founded 1695
Rev. E. Felix Kloman, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services: 10 and 11 a.m.
Weekdays: Wed. 12 noon and 12:30.
Saints Days: 12 noon.
This Church Is Open Every Day.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

VOL. XXIX. No. 38

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

JULY 25, 1946

Publication Office, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago 37, Ill. Editorial Office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

Unity Report One of Merit And Distinction

The Report Fulfills Three General Ideas And It Preserves Heritage of Our Church

By Gardiner M. Day
Contributing Editor

Cambridge, Mass.: — The report of the joint commission on approaches to unity has at last appeared, and we believe not only that the proposed basis of union between the Episcopal Church and the Presbyterian Church is a document of great merit and distinction, but that it will prove to be a notable milestone on the road to Christian unity. The representatives of the two Churches have tried and, we believe, succeeded remarkably well in working out a proposal that fulfills three general principles: 1. To maintain in the United Church the essential principles of the faith and practice of each Church, or in other words, to unite the Churches not on the basis of one Church surrendering to the other (or compromising) any fundamental beliefs in its heritage but rather of preserving by adding together, or blending, the essential contributions of each Church in a United Church; 2. To preserve those things which are precious in the heritage of each Church so that the fellowship of the Episcopal Church in the Anglican Communion and the Presbyterian Church in the Alliance of Reformed Churches will be continued; 3. To ground the plan on such fundamental principles that the basis of union of the two Churches can be the nucleus for the eventual achievement of a united Christendom.

The heritage which we Episcopalians cherish is definitely preserved: namely, our sources of doctrine, the Bible, the Creed, the Book of Common Prayer, and the Articles of Religion; the threefold ministry of bishops, priests, and deacons; the two sacraments "Christ ordained in his Church," Baptism and Holy Communion; and the succession of bishops and ordination by bishops possessed of the powers and duties traditionally theirs.

Underscored should be the fact that the Prayer Book is protected from any attempts at revision for twenty-five years when the Prayer Book will be presumably the basis of a Book of Common Prayer for the United Church revised and enriched from the heritage and experience of both Churches.

Underscored, also, should be the fact that the proposal is a plan for Church unity and not Church uniformity. The Church of St. Mary the Virgin in New York may continue to have Solemn High Mass while its neighbor, the First Presbyterian Church, will celebrate the Lord's Supper and another nearby church, St. Bartholomew's, will have a service of Holy Communion. If any one of these churches, in its customary celebration of Holy Communion, does not already include them, in the United Church it has agreed to incorporate the following essentials of the service: bread and wine; a confession of sin and a declaration of God's forgiveness; a commemoration of the Lord's death and passion, and the recital of his words and acts in the institution of the sacrament, in or with a prayer of thanksgiving and consecration; a presentation of the elements to God and a self offering of all the communicants; an invocation of the Holy Spirit upon the elements and the congregation; the Lord's Prayer; and the Apostle's or the Nicene Creed on appropriate occasions. Thus, while the cup (common or individual) and the posture of the congregation (kneeling or sitting) would be an observable difference between "former" Presbyterian and Episcopal Churches in the United Church the essential service would differ little more between the various parishes than the present service in St. Bartholomew's differs from that in St. Mary's.

Meanwhile, through the spiritual sharing which would naturally be encouraged by the greater intimacy of fellowship in the United Church, the traditions of the two Churches would gradually grow together. For surely, any plan of union must assume that the stream of the two traditions must flow side by side for a time before they can carve out a common bed and become completely one stream.

The majority of the commission does not present this proposal as a perfect plan to be adopted immediately, but as the basic outline of a means of union to be commended by General Convention for the study of the entire Church during the next three years. Indeed, a number of matters such as whether the governing body of the United Church shall meet in one or two houses is left for later determination. During the three years period the commission would be continued to study all suggestions for the improvement and modification of the plan, including the suggestions of the Lambeth Conference in 1948, looking toward the presentation of a more complete plan in 1949.

While we cannot agree with the minority report's assertion that the Presbyterians have not accepted the episcopate as definitely as Episcopal clergymen are required to accept it, that the Prayer Book is not carefully safeguarded, nor that the plan would remove our Church from the "Anglican orbit of Churches," even if the minority were correct in their judgment and we be wrong, we would still affirm that a plan worked out with such care and consecration through nine years of consultation should be studied by the whole Church, so that under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, if it be God's will, the organic union of the two Churches may be transformed in the years ahead from a pious aspiration to a glorious reality.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

We hope that General Convention this September will commend the plan to the whole Church for study, passing the resolutions requested in the majority report by such a large vote that everyone will know that the Episcopal Church means to achieve the goal of organic unity which it formally declared to be its purpose in the General Convention of 1937.

BISHOP BLASTS RUMOR

New York: — That ecclesiastical politics were uppermost in the minds of some of the clergy and laity of the Episcopal Church since the publication of the recent report on unity with the Presbyterians was apparent this week when a rumor was started that a vote trading deal was allegedly under consideration between supporters of a liberalized marriage canon and opponents of the unity report. The suggestion of such a deal appeared in the editorial columns of the Christian Century, Protestant weekly, on July 17. Bishop Cameron J. Davis, chairman of the joint commission on holy matrimony immediately issued a denial.

The so-called "trade" consisted of a plan wherein the liberals would join with the unity opposition to defeat the report of the commission on unity and in return the latter would support the passage of a liberalized marriage canon.

THE WITNESS investigated the rumor but was unsuccessful in tracing it to its origin. Bishop Davis, when contacted issued the following statement: "As chairman of the joint commission on holy matrimony I have no knowledge of, and I am sure there is no basis in fact for, the rumor. The best answer I can think of is that I myself am going to vote for the majority report of the commission on approaches to unity as a basis for further study."

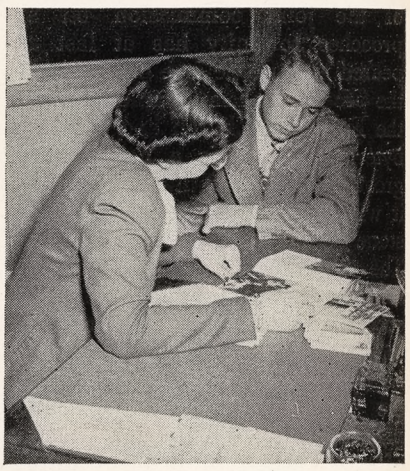
OVER 600 HELPED

Boston:—During 1945, 626 children were helped in some way by the local Episcopal Service for Youth agency according to Ralph S. Barrow, director. Staff shortages existed and the finding of foster boarding homes continued difficult but of this large number 229 children were given foster care in foster homes, in schools and suitable institutions. The peculiar problems of children affecting the work of the society are the black market in adoptions, the so-called crime wave among youth, and race tensions, Director Barrow stated. The society here has a long and successful record of care for Negro children and Negro social workers have been welcomed to its staff.

AGENCY HAS BIRTHDAY

Nashville: — The Youth Service Bureau of the diocese of Tennessee recently completed its first year of work as the youngest member of the ESY. The executive secretary, Mrs. Valmore W. Lebey, has recommended another trained worker for her staff to take care of the case load, and in addition to her social welfare work she has been addressing Auxiliary groups on Christian social relations, the family and race relations.

CHICAGO AGENCY SERVES MANY



Chicago:—One of the most interesting highlights in the past two years of the casework handled by the ESY here has been the combining of casework services in St. Mary's Home for girls and Lawrence Hall for boys. These three agencies now form the Episcopal child care agencies of the diocese, although as always service is open to all children and girls regardless of race or creed, according to Mrs. Ruth G. Higgins, executive secretary. The needs of adolescents have been met through a program of psychiatric service, vocational guidance, long time care and supervision in the foster home, own home or girls' club, by qualified case workers and by spiritual counseling of Chaplain Gordon E. Brant, rector of the Advent.

AGENCY KEEPS MODEL HOME

Philadelphia:—One of the unique contributions to social case work by the local Girl's Service Bureau, one of the agencies of the ESY, has been the operation of an attractive building where a small study home is maintained for the girl who is preparing for a new experience in a foster home of her own, according to Mrs. Anne Boyce Harris, new executive secretary. The governing board of the agency under the presidency of Clarence Brown has offered fellowships for graduate training to present and prospective staff members.

NEGRO WORK STRESSED

Long Island:—The Rev. Jonathan Sherman, Bellerose, president of the Long Island ESY, announced recently that in line with the interest of the whole diocese in inter-racial work, the Youth Consultation Service which has always served both white and Negro communities expects to add to its staff in order to do more effective work in the new and over-crowded Negro sections of Brooklyn and Queens. A special grant for this purpose has been allotted by the Greater New York Fund.

The Episcopal Service for Youth is often called upon to aid boys as well as girls

RECOGNITION FOR WOMEN IS ASKED

New York:—The national executive board of the Woman's Auxiliary recently adopted a resolution to be presented to General Convention asking that the word "laymen" also include lay women whenever the word appears in official documents. The action came as the result of a demand on the part of the women attending the Cleveland General Convention in 1943 for representation on parish vestries and in diocesan conventions as delegates. A survey was made by the executive board of several different denominations including the Episcopal Church and it was found that lay women were taking an increasingly active part in parochial affairs.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Function of the ESY in Its New Advisory Role

It Still Combines the Best of Spiritual, Psychological and Social Work in Church

By Charles W. Sheerin
President of the Episcopal Service for Youth

New York: — With the changing of the name of the Church Mission of Help to Episcopal Service for Youth a social work agency of long experience in the Episcopal Church enters a new phase of its successful career still combining the best of spiritual, psychological and social work in the Church.

It was in 1919 that General Convention authorized a national council of Church Mission of Help after several years of outstanding leadership by the Rev. James Huntington, OHC, the Rev. William T. Manning then rector of Trinity Church, and Mrs. John M. Glenn in promoting such an organization. Since that time work and techniques have grown and the newer discoveries of psychiatric and psychological research have been added to the older skills of pastoral and social work.

The work with emotional problems of youth and case work have come to absorb the whole attention of the staff so that it was thought wise to change the name to Episcopal Service for Youth in harmony with the demand for such a counseling agency.

Originally Father Huntington chose the name "Church Mission of Help" because he wanted a name that was Christian and carried no other implication except that it was to "help." It was a most modern name thirty-five years ago but today three things can be obstacles when the name is used. First the word "help" has become closely associated in the minds of many people with paternalism and a hypocritical feeling of false charity. Secondly the word "mission" has fallen into disrepute. Thirdly, as the work has grown, new functions have been added and a large part of the work today is constructive consultant work with young people who have been in no serious difficulty.

It has been the pride of this organization that it has never allowed its standards to fall below the highest ideal; which is to combine the best social work standards with the best spiritual and psychiatric techniques. Consequently, the personnel must have the best training that can be obtained. One of the greatest needs consequently, it is pointed out, is more sources of scholarship funds for with the advanced training required, desirable candidates must often be refused unless their education can be completed with the aid of scholarships.

New opportunities are constantly opening up for the increase of societies. The national office has assisted in surveying situations for various dioceses and while it should be happy if it could always agree to help with the establishment of new work the standards must never be lowered. The society is fortunate in not only having churchwomen who are trained social workers but in having among the national officers and board members leaders in social work in the Church.

General Convention grants the agency $8,000 a year but the budget calls for almost four times that amount which is made up by gifts from local societies and friends.

The Episcopal Service for Youth, formerly the Church Mission of Help, has a fine reputation among professional social agencies for its Youth Consultation Service

The following dioceses now have societies affiliated with the national organization: Albany, Chicago, Connecticut, Long Island, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Newark, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Southern Ohio, Tennessee, Vermont, and Western New York.

ESY LEADER IS CHOSEN

Memphis:—The Tennessee state conference of social work has elected as its president for 1947 Miss Agnes W. Grabau, CMH executive secretary in recognition of her contribution to improving the social conditions affecting young people. She is also working on an adoption bill to be submitted to the state legislature.

EASTON DIOCESE JOINS SEWANEE

Easton, Md.: — Bishop William McClelland has announced that the diocese of Easton has been received into the Sewanee family becoming one of the combination of dioceses that owns the University of the South at Sewanee, Tenn.

Dr. Alexander Guerry, vice-chancellor, informed the Bishop that a resolution adopted by a recent convention of Easton seeking membership in the confederation had been favorably received. Easton is the northernmost diocese in the Sewanee confederation and the twenty-third to be admitted to the group.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

EDITORIALS

We Rejoice

WE BELIEVE we express the satisfaction of the entire Church that the report of the joint commission on approaches to unity has been released. Prior to the publication of this report the discussion relative to unity was necessarily of a very general nature and dealt with what it was hoped or feared the commission might do. We rejoice in its content. We believe that it will prove to be a significant document, not simply in our dealings with the Presbyterians but to all Christian groups who are thinking about and working for the reunion of the Body of Christ.

What seems to us one of the most constructive and far-reaching aspects of the report is that it gives expression to the principle of mutual recognition. Bishop Sherrill speaking five years ago stated, "If in approaching the Presbyterians or any other Protestant communion, we expect in any way that they will admit that their ministry of the word and sacraments is invalid, then we shall be grievously disappointed." The commission's report provides that after the proposed union has been effected all ministers will be ordained by bishops and clerical members of the Presbytery, which means that from that time on we would have in the united Church a ministry recognized by both traditions. But what of those ordained prior to the effecting of this union? It is in this area that much trouble has been encountered. As long as any segment of the divided Church takes its stand upon the proud claim, "We be children of Abraham" affirming that its ministry is valid because it has a long ancestry, and asserts or implies that the ministry of other segments are invalid because they do not have the same ancestry, there can be little hope of reunion except by submission or absorption.

We rejoice that the report states in this matter, "At such time as the union is effected, in every diocese and presbytery there shall be a formal service of mutual recognition and extension of authority to minister in the united Church." We believe this principle to be both realistic and consonent with the mind of Christ, who reminded those who boasted of their descent from Abraham, "If ye were Abraham's children, ye would do the works of Abraham." This same principle finds expression in other provisions of the proposed basis of union in that the teaching and worship of the two Churches are mutually recognized. We have long contended that the Church if it is to be truly catholic must provide for diversity of teaching and practice, so long of course as that diversity does not contravene the Bible and the faith and practice of the primitive Church. The section on worship states, "It is anticipated that in due time the united Church will have a common service book which will express the unity and breadth of its life and work, and which will include a variety of forms, liturgical and non-liturgical, to meet the needs of the various parishes and groups within the Church, and to preserve the distinctive values in the two traditions of worship."

Confirmation is to be administered "by the laying-on-of-hands with prayer by the bishop, or by a presbyter (priest) duly authorized by the bishop and presbytery." Thus confirmation, far from being "abandoned" as some of our Anglo-Catholic friends claim, is not only preserved but is brought into line with the "catholic practice" of the Orthodox Churches in which confirmation from the earliest times has been administered by presbyters. The report also assures to the united Church the primitive office of the ruling (lay) eldership.

We rejoice further that the joint commission on approaches to unity is asking General Convention not to approve this report but only to commit it to the Church for study during the next triennium. So important and momentous a matter as this proposed basis for union should not be decided by this Convention. It is at this point that we find the minority report little short of startling. They would not permit the Church even to study this plan! Shades of the Vatican Index Expurgatorious!

We sincerely hope and believe that the Conven-

"QUOTES"

THE Episcopal Church has a great responsibility to its youth in these difficult months of reconstruction after the chaotic war years. The insecurity of youth, disruption of family, neighborhood, and community life, and the uncertainties of our international situation are challenges to us all. The well trained personnel of Episcopal Service for Youth is a positive asset to the diocese and to the individual parish in aiding in some of these difficult personality problems so common in our present life. Parish leaders and those interested in social problems in the wider community should welcome this organization as an additional resource in their common problem.

—Walter W. Pettit, Director, New York School of Social Work, Columbia University.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

tion meeting in Philadelphia will approve the recommendation of the commission. There is much in the report that needs to be studied, weighed and possibly amended and modified, but that is all to the good. We believe the two negotiating bodies which prepared this report were guided in their deliberations by the Holy Spirit and we pray that the Church as it undertakes this study may also seek the guidance of the Holy Spirit that under him we may move forward towards a reuniting of the Body of Christ.

Do We Trust Our Commission?

THE clergy received a letter recently signed by thirty-eight of their brethren and laity of the Church. The letter enclosed a petition which, as the letter states, "speaks for itself." The petition is to be presented to the House of Bishops at the Philadelphia meeting of the General Convention. Those who received the letter were asked that if they agreed with the petition and its purposes would they be willing to sign it and get others to sign it, and two pages for signatures were furnished.

The first paragraph of the resolution asks that "the resolution of the 1937 General Convention in regards to unity with the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America be so clarified that it shall be understood that it does not commit our Church to any plan for unity which would destroy our historic Anglican heritage. We ask this because the resolution has been misunderstood by Presbyterians and is causing bitter and dangerous controversy in the Episcopal Church."

It is our understanding that this Church has always operated on democratic principles; the House of Bishops and the House of Deputies, working as separate but coordinating bodies, concurrence by each being necessary even in the election of missionary bishops. The commission on approaches to unity is a commission of General Convention—that means both houses. They have published their report. In fact there is a majority and a minority report. Why should a petition be sent to the House of Bishops before a fair hearing has been heard in both houses on the report of the commission? Have we no faith in the integrity of the men appointed to such an important commission?

There are excellent scholars in the House of Deputies. Some from both Houses have served on the commission on approaches to unity. They have had their differences of opinion as evidenced by the majority and minority reports. Why this sudden move to appeal over the heads of the duly elected diocesan deputies to General Convention? Let the usual canonical and democratic processes have their way!

Such tactics question the integrity of our legally constituted commission. We hope that the vast majority to whom the petition has been sent will not sign it. Let the Convention speak for itself. It alone can pass authoritatively upon the reports of its commissions.

Adolescence---The Enigma

by Irene M. Josselyn, M.D.

Psychiatric Consultant, ESY, Chicago

THERE is no age group concerning which more is written and less understood than the adolescent. Probably one of the greatest factors in our ignorance is related to a predominant characteristic of adolescence. Psychologically the adolescent is fluid with the fluidity not of a stream but of a tidal wave. Thus when we observe a phenomenon of his personality, long before we have defined it and thought what to do about it, the pattern is changed. With mercurial motility the psychological structure evades us.

Dominant in most evaluations of the problem of adolescence is the question of the conflict over sexual adjustment. Rather precipitously plunged into biological maturity, the adolescent is confronted with physical and emotional experiences which are frightening, exciting, and baffling to him. The demands of his sexual maturation would, evaluated biologically, indicate the desirability of early marriage. The complexities of civilization require more than physical maturation for constructive marriage; as a result, marriage is delayed. Other solutions must be sought. Not in the far distant past one panacea that was advocated was "sex education," a recommendation based upon the assumption that the problem of the age was lack of knowledge. The panacea failed, and in many situations, when unwisely handled, increased the turmoil in the child. This was inevitable since the basic conflict is of emotions, not of the intellect. Psychological maturation, with all of its implications of broader requirements in addition to psycho-biological sexual maturation in the primitive sense, is slower than biological growth. Thus part of the conflict of this period has to be lived through in order for the individual to find himself.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Another aspect of this age group that is less frequently stressed, but which is of equal importance, and is perhaps more significant in the cases at least of the excessively disturbed adolescent, is the conflict between the dependency needs and the desire to be independent. It is this problem that most often brings a parent to someone for advice. Frequent references are made to the adolescent's desire to be independent. The adolescent feels a capacity to take care of himself to an extent that ignores the value of that type of experience the parent feels only fifty years of struggling with the world can give adequately. To the parent the teen-age individual is still a child. To the individual the parents are stogy, unintelligent mid-victorians, who really know nothing of life as it is lived at present. Both of course are partly right. The battle is always almost lost because they are both partly wrong. The confusion is increased because of the so-often forgotten part of the struggle for independence, that part which is due to the adolescent's fear of independence. Understanding, tolerant parents, teachers, and social workers often retreat in confusion because they thought the adolescent wanted to be independent, only to find themselves a victim of a bitter attack because they aren't supportive. The dilemma can be diagrammatically presented in this fashion:

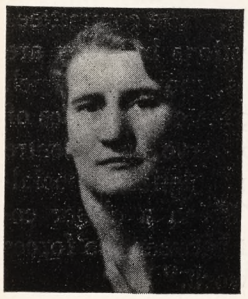
The adult offers advice, and is told he or she is treating the individual like a child; after all, he certainly can make some decisions on his own. So when the opportunity presents itself again the lesson is well learned. Instead of giving the advice the reassuring statement is made that, after all, he is not a child and can really decide the question for himself. Then comes the bitter accusation that the adult is not interested, does not care what happens, will never give help as other adults give to his friends. The situation however is not as confusing as it may seem. Given the support of an adult's advice, the fear of being on one's own is allayed, and the wish to be independent gains strength. Pressed on the other hand to be more independent, the panic over facing the world as an independent person increases in intensity. To the truly interested adult the bafflement lies in the fact that he or she is inevitably one step behind, since gratifying one aspect of the child's need immediately strengthens the opposite need. It is the skillful adult who can give enough support to quiet the fear but not enough to jeopardize the growing independence.

THERE is a bright spot in this picture of what often seems like all out warfare both between the environment and the child, and within the child himself. The adolescent is typically a conformist. At first this is not apparent since in the world of adults he seems to wish to violate many of the standards and decry much of the philosophy of the world in which he has been brought up. His conformity, which is of an extent, at times, to reach almost paralyzing intensity, is to his peers. If the group is wearing blue jeans to high school, not all the articles by Emily Post or threats of disciplinary measures by the faculty will keep him from wearing blue jeans. The group has decreed and only the group can free. Adults are often disturbed by this group control, fearing either a bad influence or lack of individuality on the part of the child involved. Actually it is the source of the stablest security the adolescent finds and is probably the most valuable contributing factor that makes it possible for most adolescents to pass on to adulthood without having brought about all the catastrophies to his own and the family's future that the adults observing have predicted.

Linked with this group solidarity is an idealism that has tenacious hold. The attitude represented may be a constructive or a destructive attack on the problems of reality. The underlying characteristic however is that the ideas have the abstract, all-encompassing nature of an ideal. The adolescent may oppose all accepted tenets but that rejection becomes a tenet in itself to which he devotes limitless fervour. Cold logic rarely therefore undermines, more often it strengthens the philosophy, since these abstract concepts offer internal security to the individual. If threatened the resultant panic is met by rallying all the defenses against the force threatening from without.

All adolescents however do not weather the teen-age period, to slip into healthy, stable adulthood. There are at least two reasons for this failure. In the greatest number of cases the cause of this misdirection of growth rests not in the experience of adolescence, but rather in the early childhood situations that either were not apparent enough to be recognized or, which is much more frequent, were unwisely handled. With the instability of the adolescent period, these problems and the distortion in growth that has resulted from them, become manifest, and for the first time demand serious consideration. Any attempt to correct the condition must be oriented to the cause, not the resultant effect of the disturbance. The second reason for failure at the adolescent level is the occurrence of some experience beyond the capacity of the individual to deal with it. Because of the lack of crystallization of the personality at this age, the child has fewer resources to deal with the pressures of reality than at any other time. Thus, unwise handling, severe emotional deprivations, or severe disruption of the environment may prove too great a burden, with a resultant disintegration of the personality.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.



What are the implications in this evaluation of the adolescent in terms of the teacher, the parent, and the social worker working with this age group? First and foremost the individual adolescent must be understood as a person, not as a type, with an evaluation of the total picture in terms of the past as well as the present and the future. Further he then needs the support of an adult, but a type of support that is stable, secure, and yet not paralyzing of growth. He needs close contact with his peers with subtle direction into a constructive rather than a destructive group. He needs opportunities for social and work experiences with both his own and the opposite sex and with adults who can comprehend the adolescent's point of view. Above all, he needs time to grow and an environment that is both stimulating to growth and tolerant of its uncertain pace.

New Service for Youth

by Edith F. Balmford

Executive Secretary of Episcopal Service for Youth

THIS post-war period of reconstruction represents change not only in industrial manufacture and our whole plan of economy, but also in the more human and intimate aspects of the lives of individuals and families. Tremendous adjustments are demanded. Youth, on whom military service and war production have borne especially heavily, face the greatest uncertainties with the need for new plans and for a very rapid transition in thinking and activities. The great majority are successfully facing the changes and are at work or seeking further education. Some are not. This is true whenever crises, such as war or economic depression, occur. Those who have grown up with the feeling of emotional security generally weather the storm best but there are some who need special counseling and encouragement. To give this has always been the aim of the Episcopal Service for Youth, better known to many of our readers by its old name, Church Mission of Help.

In what ways is this post-war period different, in the problems created, and the demands on the organization? It must be remembered that the differences are in degree, and represent expansion and developments rather then sharp changes. We do however see certain trends.

The number of young people coming to the diocesan societies for counsel and help has increased. This has been true throughout the war, and continues. It has naturally led to increase in staff in a number of societies.

The proportion of boys and young men is greater. The earlier work was chiefly for girls, although the ideal of serving both boys and girls was frequently stated. New branches starting work are for girls and boys; one of the oldest societies has changed its policies to include boys, and in one city where CMH has been the pioneer in introducing social case work, a recent survey recommends that the work be expanded to include boys.

The problems presented and questions asked represent an increasing variety and of course reflect the pressures of the times. There is space here for only the briefest glance at a few. Planning one's education and vocation has always been a concern of youth and now there are an unprecedented number who have had a serious interruption and who find it hard to settle back and look ahead. Some of the younger group, too, are confused and we are meeting high school students as well as young veterans, men and girls, who want advice. Arrangements are made for vocational tests and frequently these young people want to talk over other things, sometimes reflecting a deep-seated problem.

There are the young couples marrried early in the war, whose lives have followed diverse paths, who are finding each other difficult. They can have the counsel and help of the case worker and often of the chaplain. In some instances a psychiatrist is needed too. There are sweethearts and friends who need help in understanding changed attitudes and relationships. There are also girls with children born out of wedlock who seek counsel and assistance in meeting the complicated task of planning for themselves and their babies.

There are the young people who without much preparation earned good incomes during the war, who find it hard to face the fact that for peacetime work they need education and training.

There are those who as adolescents felt the war through its various effects on the family. It has been said that the experience bore most heavily on them since it came at a time when their philosophy of life was just forming.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

IN THE armed forces great attention has been given to the prevention of emotional or mental breakdown. The various services assigned experts to observe and talk with the men who were working under especially severe strains. This was done so that at the least sign of difficulty a man could be given rest and treatment. This was good economy of human resources in wartime. In our every day lives too it is good economy of human happiness and usefulness, to give help before problems become too great. CMH has always emphasized the importance of preventing difficulties and has sought to use its knowledge and skills in recognizing and interpreting the early signs of maladjustment. It is of course necessary to have the understanding and cooperation of people who have a natural contact with adolescents and youth —their parents, teachers, pastors, club leaders, and others. One result is seen in the increased counsel and guidance sought by young people of our own parishes.

As the diocesan societies meet their heavier and more varied tasks and as other dioceses and communities recognize the need for this service to youth, there are many calls on the national organization. The annual conferences afford opportunity for exchange of experience among the societies, and also for information about other developments in the Church and in social work. More visits from national staff members are requested, as local organizations look at the changing needs that confront them, and consider places for using the valuable experience accumulated over the years to give the most effective service now.

The Episcopal Service for Youth, or CMH, has the unique characteristic of being an agency of the Church and a recognized agency in the field of social work, taking its place in the work and thinking of national and international agencies. There are similar relationships on the local level in the diocesan societies. This integration is essential both for exchange of information and for mobilizing all possible resources that can be helpful to the young people we serve.

During the war we have all been pressed to meet the emergencies of the moment. The pressures have not lessened, but we can begin to see ahead and plan. The national committees in CMH have been in the main considering ways and means of managing under wartime conditions—for instance considering staff needs when the shortage of social workers numbered several thousand; selecting the most important of many urgent requests for studies, or help in planning or organizing. The committees will continue to face these questions but they are also looking at long-time plans, many of which can be summed up in one of the stated purposes of the national organization: "To serve as a centre of information for the diocesan societies, especially in studying the means by which a closer cooperation may be brought about between the forces of religion and those of social work."

The Episcopal Youth Service

by Joseph F. Fletcher

Professor at Episcopal Theological School

AS A LONG established and conscientious casework service in the Episcopal Church—in fact, the only accredited agency of the kind in the Church—the subject of personal counseling is as close to the heart of the Episcopal Service for Youth, formerly the Church Mission of Help, as to the clergy's. It has taught us a lot about the value of high-standard performance and about the Church's role as a yardstick and pioneer in meeting human needs in the modern community.

Since ESY is a federation of casework agencies in the Church, functioning nationally, we have a right to turn to it, and to look at it, more and more. It has been a teaching source in the Church's life as well as a practical resource.

The service is concerned with personal counseling especially in four ways. They are: 1) the nature of personal counseling; 2) its relation to casework under Church auspices; 3) the interaction of casework and group work in the parish program, and 4) working relations with community agencies.

Supposing we define personal counseling first of all with the idea that a definition should contain all essentials: "Personal counseling is skilled listening aimed at discovering the internal tensions and external pressures with which a person is struggling, and at evaluating his capacity for dealing with them; then, without discounting his personal responsibility, it marshalls his capacities and resources (personal and social) so as to relieve the tensions and pressures to a point where the person, with an understanding of his situation, is able to deal with them himself."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Our definition suggests at least five important phases of counseling: 1) human problems are both personality and social (environmental) problems; 2) counseling is listening first, but not only that in most cases—the counselor often needs to do something, for or with the client; 3) counseling is a cooperative enterprise, the person (or client or patient or subject) being "the party of the first part"; 4) the solution (or therapy or help) depends upon the person's insight and initiative; 5) the solution involves both personality and social reorganization but not manipulation.

In parishes depending upon their size and their financial and personnel resources, there may be several available counselors. First there is the rector who in his capacity as pastor tries to individualize the needs of his people and those brought to him. Theological education is making great strides forward in training clergy for pastoral counseling by modern standards of skill, particularly in those schools which train students along clinical lines comparable to social work education. For pastors and indeed all counseling under Church auspices we may add religious resources to the personal and social resources to be mobilized in a person's interest, according to our definition. In the old days CMH workers used to refer to this as the "spiritual plus" in case work.

Besides the rector there may be other ministers and social workers, teachers and group work leaders (such as choir and club directors). All of these functionaries have a real responsibility to make their work person-centered and to learn and practice the art of skillful guidance of souls. The ministry of the laity is just as real as the ministry of the ordained. In our Church the lay ministry is perhaps more easily fulfilled along pastoral lines than liturgically or evangelically. As for ESY we need to note that counseling is what professional social work means by casework—and good counseling methods in the parish will utilize auxiliary resources like ESY which exists as a specialized resource serving more than one parish.

A GOOD question always asked and a searching one is: What is this "spiritual plus" in Church counseling? What are the peculiar resources of religion as it is brought to bear in the art of helping people out of trouble? We can risk sentimentality and describe the "plus" by the simple word love. If we were being theological we might call it grace for the grace of God is channeled not only through the sacraments but also through the "rapport" or "dynamic relationship" which is essential to personal counseling. Non-theological people call it "sympathy" but it's the same thing.

However when the clergy and parish workers are aware of all the diagnostic and service tricks of the trade there are many problems beyond their role because resources are called for which the parish cannot provide or skills needed with which they are not equipped. The simple time-factor is often too great for parish workers to follow through with a case. Referral of such problems to some auxiliary agency like ESY is the sensible and constructive step to take.

The parish program is primarily a group work program—if we may apply social work terms to a form of association and a group process far older than social work itself! At the same time, the pastoral phase of the Church's work individualizes human needs and values within the parish pattern of fellowship and group association.

Group therapy in psychiatric practice and mental hygiene assumes a bigger place all the time. From this point of view we in the Church might profitably explore the importance of our fellowship pattern and corporate worship. If we sometimes feel hurt because community agencies don't turn to parish groups to meet their clients' needs we might pause to think how little we who do personal counseling in the parish have used our own group resources! Casework agencies and especially the ESY have long been aware of this important feature of Church life.

Our parishes need to make use of agencies in the community. The ESY, too, depends upon the facilities of others. We in the Church need to be anxious for what we can give as well as what we can get, in relation to ESY or non-church related agencies. This agency's workers would be happy to cooperate and advise with a parish which tried to give through recruiting potential foster homes, for example, as a way of avoiding too much institutional care for neglected and dependent children. We can turn to ESY for suggestions in mobilizing likely people in our parishes to serve as agency boards and otherwise exercise the lay ministry in the community.

This youth service has earned the right to advise the Church how to provide the means to meet unmet needs without hanging on to them in a reactionary way once the community as a whole has also seen the need and assumed responsibility for it. For it was CMH that pioneered in helping unmarried mothers and yet when the community stepped into the breach there have been plenty of voices in CMH that called for a new deal along another growing edge of human need, especially youth. The Church keeps her own youth in a way by consultation with agencies with that kind of spiritual plus.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Church Social Work---A Vocation

by Mrs. Kendall Emerson

Vice President Episcopal Service for Youth

SOCIAL work as a profession has made great gains during the war years in an understanding by the public of its usefulness, its special fields of competence, and its basic body of knowledge. This applies especially to social case work, the job of being helpful to human beings, one by one, through individual counseling. Persons with case work training have been placed, during the war, in important positions in the armed services, industry, and other new fields, indicating recognition of the unique contribution they are able to make.

Recognition of the value of social case work has carried with it recognition of the reasons for adequate preparation for it. Because it deals with the delicate and intangible field of human personality and human relationships, it is of the greatest importance that the practitioner be thoroughly competent. Yet because there have always been people who were naturally gifted in being helpful to their fellows, there has existed a tendency to think that sympathy and good will are all that are needed, even when not accompanied by unusual gifts of perception and understanding. More and more there is a realization of the value of knowledge and skill, added to these essential qualities. I am told that this is also being recognized in our theological seminaries, through increasing attention to practical training in pastoral care.

Church people in general have recognized medicine, nursing, teaching, religious education, music as vocations in the Church for which very specific preparation is needed, and indeed they demand this preparation. There are still however those who believe that for the practice of case work professional preparation need not be added to fundamental qualities of personality.

I am making no plea for the trained worker without these qualities of character. We want the Church's social work job to be done by women—and men, too—who are first of all happy, healthy, well-balanced people, able to care deeply for other human beings, to be endlessly patient, to be helpful constructively, without imposing their own wills and prejudices. We all know that there are in social work, as in other professions, those who have acquired certain technical knowledge without having the spiritual force and human sympathy to use it effectively. Leaders and teachers of social work try hard to steer that kind into other activities, and Church people have reason to be wary of them.

GIVEN the right person however we want to see her fundamental abilities sharpened and brought to fullest use through the discipline of professional training. Without this it seems to us to be most unwise to give her the responsibility of working with the complex stuff of human problems and adjustments. This includes the basic four years of college undergraduate preparation followed by the full two year course in a recognized school of social work leading to a master's degree. One of the most important aspects of this training is the supervised field work which goes on throughout the whole course. We believe she should continue to have good supervision as she develops from a student into an experienced case worker.

Finally, but first rather than last, we expect something else of the Church social worker. We feel that she must be a deeply and truly religious person who is aware of what her relationship to God is intended by him to be, who is trying to realize that relationship through prayer and the sacraments of the Church, and who has begun to see other people in terms of what God wants for them. It is not enough for a Church social worker to be sympathetic toward another person's religion merely because it seems to meet his particular emotional needs; or to be able to work tactfully with the clergy, or to be familiar with the Church because of family background. Her religious convictions must be based on her own experience if it is to be effective in her work.

Workers are needed who are sincerely practicing Christians, who are well adjusted, outgoing people, and who have full professional training. Can this not be a special challenge to young people in search of a vocation and to those who are guiding them? Should it not also be a challenge to every churchwoman already a trained social worker, who has not yet considered seriously whether her vocation may be in service through the Church? There have never been enough trained social workers and certainly never enough of the right kind for work in the Church. The need is great and the opportunities for service are many.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

News From Diocesan Agencies Indicate Busy Year

Case Workers Face Youth Problems Boldly Through the Support of Church and Laity

Edited by Philip L. Shutt

Newark:—Youth consultation service in this diocese has recently increased its facilities for rendering service by moving to larger quarters and the change has been noted in a recent remark which was overheard when a young person said, "This is the nicest place I ever came to for help. The others were all dingy!" The new headquarters are in a duplex, three-story building which was offered without rental cost by St. James' Church, the Rev. Percy T. Olton, rector. The property is part of an estate recently deeded to that church. Episcopal youth are utilizing the services of this agency in increasing numbers and rectors are finding its resources a helpful supplement to their pastoral ministry, reports Miss Daphne Highes, executive secretary.

Recommends CMH

Bridgeport, Conn.: — Community effort such as is shown in the Episcopal Service for Youth is the most comprehensive answer to the problems of juvenile delinquency in Connecticut, said Judge Stanley P. Mead recently in the local juvenile court. The Bridgeport agency devotes a large proportion of its time to preventative work among young girls whose problems of adjustment might eventually bring them into court if they are not helped. The work has grown so that it may soon be necessary to open a branch in Hartford, Miss Florence C. Sanford, executive secretary said recently.

No Hotel Room

Philadelphia:—The committee on arrangements for General Convention is asking that visitors do not come to the meeting due to lack of hotel accommodations. They are anxious to enable those who will be in or near Philadelphia at the time of the Convention to attend the opening services. The opening service will be held at the Convention Hall on Tuesday, September 10, at 10:30 o'clock. Tickets for admission to this service will be given to all bishops, deputies and delegates to the Women's Auxiliary. Visitors may secure tickets as far as they are available by writing to General Convention Headquarters, 202 S. 19th St., Philadelphia, 3. The United Thank Offering service will also be held at the Convention Hall on Wednesday, September 11 at 8 o'clock. No tickets will be issued for this service and visitors will be welcome.

This lad is turning to one of the many branches of the Episcopal Service for Youth for aid in solving his problem

Advises Vets

Baltimore: — Counsel given to a number of young women veterans of the various armed services referred by the Red Cross was reported among the many 1945 activities of the Maryland ESY at the annual meeting of the society by Mrs. J. Carrol Jones, executive secretary. The president of the local agency is the Rev. John K. Mount Jr., rector of St. Bartholomew's, who was chairman of the committee that selected the title "Episcopal Service for Youth" as the new name for the national agency.

Indians Meet

Sioux Falls, S. D.:—The annual gathering of Episcopal Indians of South Dakota at Niobrara, Standing Rock Reservation, was highlighted recently by the offering of over $8000 for mission work. Three men, two of whom were Indians, were ordained by Bishop Conrad Gesner, coadjutor of the diocese. All three are at work among the Indians. The absence of Bishop W. Blair Roberts who was recuperating from an illness at Rochester, Minn., was a source of disappointment to everyone.

A similar meeting was held by the Arickara and Sioux tribes at Breien, N. D. at the same time. Bishop Gesner confirmed a number of young people from the reservation chapels for Bishop Douglass Atwill who was also convalescing from an illness.

Church Offerings

New York: — Collections on expectations to July 1, 1946 from the dioceses of the Church were very good but did not reach the record set in the first six months of 1945, according to Treasurer Lewis B.

Why Such a Rush?

When we suggest that you order your Bundle for General Convention as early as this we do so for two reasons:

1. The Convention is early in September. Order now so that you will not neglect it during the summer.

2. There are still paper shortages and so we will be limited in the number of copies we can print. We will enter the orders as they are received—first come, first served. As we plan things at the moment there will be five General Convention Numbers, one a Pre-Convention Number giving valuable information about the Convention questions, places to visit, etc. This will be followed by four numbers giving complete reports of the Convention.

Use this Form and Mail at Once Please to

THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

Enter order for ..... copies of the General Convention Numbers.

Name .....

Street .....

City .....

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Franklin of the National Council. In that year collections were 125% of the amount due, allowing one month for collection and remittance. This year the mark achieved is 118%. Of 89 dioceses in the United States 71 have either exceeded or paid-up their July expectations and the same holds true of the foreign field. According to the figures Alabama would appear to have had the largest increase in contributions over expectations in the approximate sum of $12,000.

An Active Church

Bage, Brazil:—Activities of the Episcopal Church of Southern Brazil have recently centered around three items. The newly adopted Church flag of Brazil was used for the first time at a corporate communion of youth here recently. The design is a red St. George's cross on a white field, with the five white stars of the constellation of the southern cross arranged in a blue canton.

Six prisoners, carefully prepared by the lay director of the Chapel of the Holy Spirit in the city jail here were recently confirmed by Bishop Athalicio Pithan. This is the first time that a class of prisoners has been presented in the chapel which has pioneered in the work among prisoners. A library is at the rear of the church where classes for the illiterate are conducted daily.

Each noon-day a free dinner is provided for the underprivileged in the city of Dom Pedrito, in the annex of the Episcopal Church. The work was undertaken by the Rev. Ramon Gomez, rector of the church, because of the complete lack of governmental and social agencies assistance in that area. The municipal authority now contributes for the cost of the food, but facilities and supervision are in charge of the parish.

Court Ruling

New Orleans (RNS):—Whether a Church organization can be held responsible for insuring job restoration rights to a World War II veteran may be decided here. Henry Hamilton Jr., ex-serviceman, has filed suit against the diocese of Louisiana in the Federal District Court for return to his pre-war job as athletic coach and teacher at a school owned and operated by the diocese. The case is expected to set a precedent for it will ascertain the extent of the liability of a Church body for employment rights in various institutions.

Back to China

New York: — Five women from the China mission staff, who were detained in the United States by the war, sailed from New Orleans July 3 returning to China. They are: Olive B. Tomlin and Hazel F. Gosline, teachers; Bessie May Sims, evangelistic worker; Anne Lamberton, business manager of St. Luke's hospital, Shanghai and her sister May Lamberton who was a teacher at St. John's University. The Misses Lamberton were interned in Shanghai and returned to the United States on the Gripsholm.

New College

Danville, Ind.: — The establishment of a new Episcopal college became a fact on July 8 when a new board of trustees was elected for Canterbury college here. The school will be operated jointly by the dioceses of Indianapolis and Northern Indiana. The new members of the trustees include 10 lay and clerical members from the Episcopal Church

Church of England Seeks Special Funds—

$3,000,000 for training of ex-service men for ordination—according to a joint appeal to the English Church by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York. A news item reports that they speak of this program as the paramount need of the Church.

Our Seminaries are not asking for special appeals; perhaps they ought to. Certain it is that increased interest on the part of the whole Church, wider responsibility, and more general support are essential if we are effectively to meet the needs of our own Church.

BERKELEY DIVINITY SCHOOL, NEW HAVEN, CONN.; BEXLEY HALL, GAMBIER, OHIO; BISHOP PAYNE DIVINITY SCHOOL, PETERSBURG, VIRGINIA; CHURCH DIVINITY SCHOOL OF THE PACIFIC, BERKELEY, CALIF.; DIVINITY SCHOOL OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA; EPISCOPAL THEOLOGICAL SCHOOL, CAMBRIDGE, MASS.; THE GENERAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, NEW YORK CITY; NASHOTAH HOUSE, NASHOTAH, WIS.; SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF THE SOUTH SEWANEE, TENN.; SEABURY-WESTERN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, EVANSTON, ILL.; VIRGINIA THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, ALEXANDRIA, VIRGINIA.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

and two members from the past board of trustees of Central Normal college as it was formerly known. Bishop Richard Kirchoffer of Indianapolis is the president of the board and Bishop Reginald Mallett of Northern Indiana is vice-president. Mr. John A. Kendall of Danville was elected secretary. The school will be headed by Dr. Edgar C. Cumings, a churchman and a graduate of Indiana and Chicago Universities.

Pacifists Meet

Orleton Farms, Ohio:—Members of the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship in the 6th province met here recently to consider ways and means of evangelization within the Episcopal Church, stressing particularly the practical application of pacificism in its various spheres. Leaders of the conference were the Rev. Oscar Seitz, Mr. Parnell Benson, and John Yungblut.

New Camp

Rose Hill, Miss.:—Through the efforts of Bishop Duncan Gray a hotel resort property here has been acquired by the diocese of Mississippi for summer conference grounds. It will also be used as a recreational center for the diocese and will be open all year. At present the Rev. and Mrs. Bradner J. Moore are in charge. The building is about 10 years old and in excellent condition surrounded by a tract of 210 acres and a 40 acre artificial lake well stocked with fish.

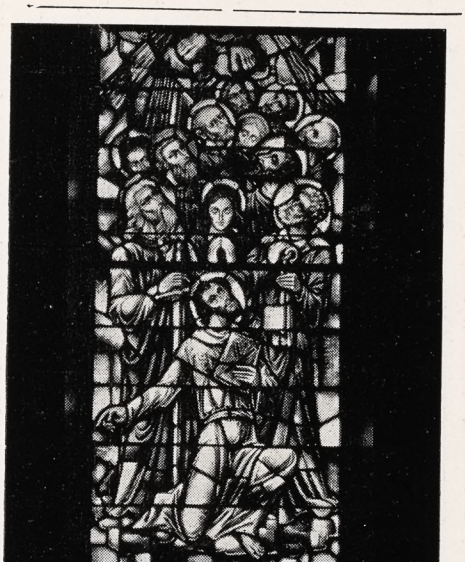
Long Service

Louisville, Ky.: — Ernest Arthur Simon retired as organist and choir director of Christ Church Cathedral here recently after a service of forty-five years. Many men and boys who had served under him attended a reception in his honor given by Bishop Charles Clingman.

Seventy Years Old

Bismarck, N. D. — St. George's Church here recently celebrated the 70th anniversary of its establishment making it the oldest Episcopal church in the missionary district of North Dakota. A class of 30 adults was confirmed by Bishop Douglass Atwill assisted by suffragan-bishop B. T. Kemerer of Minnesota. It is believed to be the largest confirmation class of adults ever presented in North Dakota. St. George's is also the oldest original church building in Bismarck.

Meets at Madison



Madison, Wis.:—Ten clergy and one layman of the Episcopal Church are among the students who registered here for the fourth industrial relations institute for Church leaders which began July 8 at the University of Wisconsin. Clergy and lay workers of several major communions attend regular classes and field trips together with representatives of trade unions from the CIO, AFL and independent unions. The Rev. Almon R. Pepper, executive secretary of the division of Christian social relations, was one of the leaders.

Boys Sacrifice

Gladstone, N. J.:—Deciding that corsages for a junior prom were a frivolous expense at a time when the world has many starving persons, the boys at St. Bernard's school here worked out a plan with their girls and gave the money to world relief.

Give Advice

Chicago:—At a recent meeting of the General Theological Seminary alumni of the Chicago area a significant resolution was passed to be brought to the attention of General Convention. Because there has been so much criticism of the department of religious education of the Nation-

Apostle Group from a three lancet "Te Deum" Stained Glass Window executed by Rambusch for a large Brooklyn Parish

RAMBUSCH

Designers Decorators and Craftsmen

2 West 45th St ~ New York 19, N.Y

BOOKS from

MOWBRAYS, LONDON

The First Three Years

By Reginald Lumb

Four talks to parents on what and how to teach about the Church. The author outlines principles on which to make out a scheme of training for the pre-school child. Paper, 60 cents

The Next Three Years

By Reginald Lumb

This book presents in simple terms what is necessary for the growth of Christian character in the four, five and six-year-olds. The author emphasizes the importance of building up the religious sentiment.

Paper, 60 cents

Following Christ

By Sibyl Harton

Fifty-two studies which examine fifteen qualities as they are revealed by Jesus Christ, as each is exemplified in the life of a saint, and finally as they must be reproduced in ourselves as Christians. Junior-high level. Paper, $1.90

Spiritual Direction

By Sibyl Harton

This valuable booklet defines spiritual direction, describes the characteristics of wise direction, the effects of wise direction, obligations incurred, the relationship and its responsibility. Paper, 60 cents

Christian Life in the Modern World

By Frances Underhill

This book will help the ordinary person to live a Christian life, and to know something of the ways of adoration and prayer. Its sixteen chapters deal in a straightforward manner with the important aspects of religion. $2.10

Morehouse-Gorham Company

14 E. 41st St. New York 17

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

al Council, the alumni felt some constructive suggestions would be welcome. Among the many suggestions agreed upon were the following: 1) an integrated and harmonious action of all the church's teaching agencies from kindergartens to seminaries in a united teaching plan; 2) instruction in the philosophy and spirit of the Prayer Book be given chief place in all curriculums; 3) stressing of methods to train laymen in religious education on the part of seminaries; 4) constant and harmonious consultation between seminaries, national council departments and the field; and 5) a new plan of campaign lead by the seminaries to turn the tide of defeat and disaster, based upon existing conditions.

Legion Head

Havana, Cuba: — The American Legion here has elected Bishop A. Hugo Blankingship of Cuba as its commander for the coming year.

Advance Work Begins

Spokane, Wash.: — The convocation of the diocese of Spokane meeting at the Cathedral of St. John the Evangelist, authorized the annual expenditure of one fourth of an accumulated total of a fund begun in 1945 for advance work in the diocese. Bishop Cross urged that the district develop its own clergy in his convention charge. General Convention deputies: Dean C. E. McAllister and James B. Bronson.

St. Augustine Conference

Raleigh, N. C.:—A course on the Church and the public health program was one of the new features of the St. Augustine's Conference for church workers sponsored by the American Institute for Negroes and the college held at the college June 10-14. Dr. Walter Hughes of the North Carolina health service and Mrs. Jennie Taylor, co-ordinator of public health education conducted the course. Other instructors and leaders were from the National Council and the general Church making the conference large in numbers and successful.

Merge Colleges

New York (RNS):—The thirteen existing Christian colleges in China are to be consolidated into nine institutions to meet China's postwar needs, according to a plan adopted here by the associated boards for Christian colleges in China. The plan, result of a three-year study, places the nine universities in seven key centers, and aims to end duplication of activities, raise academic standards, and lead to a fuller utilization of physical plants, teaching services, libraries, and scientific equipment.

In the North China area Yenching University in Peiping will continue as before the war. In Tsinan, Shantung province, the arts college in Cheeloo University is to be replaced

SUMMER SERVICES

New York City
CHURCH OF THE HOLY TRINITY
316 East 88th Street
The Rev. James A. Paul, Vicar
Sunday: H. C. 8 a.m. Morning Service, 11 a.m. Thursday, 11 a.m.

CHURCH OF ST. MARY THE VIRGIN
46th Street, east of Times Square
The Rev. Grieg Taber, Rector
Sunday Masses: 7, 9, 11 (High).
Evening Prayer and Benediction, 8.

ST. PAUL'S CHAPEL
Columbia University
The Rev. Stephen F. Bayne Jr., Chaplain
Daily (except Saturday): 8 a.m.
Sunday: Morning Prayer and Sermon, 11. H. C. 9 a.m. and 12:30 noon (no services June 3 to July 6).

Millbrook, New York
GRACE CHURCH
The Rev. H. Ross Greer, Rector
Services 8:30 and 11 every Sunday.
Located on Route forty-four.

Denver, Colorado
ST. JOHN'S CATHEDRAL
The Very Rev. Paul Roberts, Dean
The Rev. Harry Watts
Sunday: 7:30, 8:30, 9:30, 11, 4:30.
Wednesday, 7:15. Thurs. and Holy Days, 10:30.

ST. MARK'S CHURCH
The Rev. Walter Williams, Rector
Sunday: 7, 8, 9:30 and 11.
Wednesday, 11 a.m. Thurs. and Holy Days, 7 a.m.

Ann Arbor, Michigan
ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH
University of Michigan
The Rev. Henry Lewis, Rector
Sunday: H. C. 8 a.m. Morning Prayer, 11 a.m.
Canterbury Club (students and servicemen) 6 p.m.
Wednesday: H. C. 7:15 a.m.

St. Louis, Missouri
CHURCH OF ST. MICHAEL & ST. GEORGE
Washington University
The Rev. J. Francis Sant, Rector
The Rev. C. George Widdifield, Minister of Education
Sunday: 7:30 and 11 a.m.
Canterbury Club, 5:30 twice monthly.

Pittsburgh
CALVARY CHURCH
Shady and Walnut Aves.
The Rev. Lauriston L. Scaife, Rector
The Rev. Phiip M. Brown
The Rev. Francis M. Osborne
Sunday: 8, 9:30, 11 a.m.; 8 p.m.
H. C. Friday and Holy Days, 10 a.m.

Palo Alto, California
ALL SAINTS' CHURCH
Stanford University
The Rev. Oscar F. Green, Rector
Services: 8 and 11.
Union Service: 7:45 p.m.

Cleveland
CHURCH OF THE INCARNATION
East 105th and Marlowe
The Rev. Robert B. Campbell, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 a.m.

Utica, New York
GRACE CHURCH
Genesee and Elizabeth Sts.
The Rev. Harold E. Sawyer, Rector
Sunday: H. C. 8. Morning Prayer and H. C. 11. Evening Prayer, 4:30.
Weekday: Tues. and Thurs. H. C. 10.
Wed. 12:30. Friday, H. C. 7:30.

Chester, Penna.
ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
Broad and Madison Sts.
The Rev. Stanley V. Wilcox, Rector
Service: Sunday: 8 and 10:30 a.m.
Wednesday at 10 a.m.

Ridgewood, New Jersey
CHRIST CHURCH
The Rev. A. J. Miller, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 a.m.
Friday and Holy Days: 9:30 a.m.

Tulsa, Oklahoma
TRINITY CHURCH
The Rev. E. H. Eckel Jr., Rector
Sunday: 7 and 8; Church School, 9:30 (Except August); Morning Service, 11 a.m. H. C. Friday and Holy Days, 10:30.

Santa Monica, California
ST. AUGUSTINE - BY - THE - SEA
ST. AMBROSE CHAPEL
The Rev. W. N. Pierson
The Rev. D. J. Gallagher
The Rev. D. O. Platt
Sunday: 7:45, 9:30 and 11 a.m.; 7:30 a.m.
Daily 9:30 a.m. Thurs. 7:45.

Elkton, Maryland
TRINITY CHURCH
The Rev. J. Warren Albinson, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 9:30 a.m.
Wed. Litany, 8 p.m. Fri. and Holy Days, H. C. at 10 a.m.

Evanston, Illinois
ST. LUKE'S CHURCH
Lee and Hinman Streets
The Rev. Edward Thomas Taggard
The Rev. Joseph Barnes Williams
The Rev. Darwin Kieby, Jr.
Sunday: H. C. 7:30, 9 and 11.
Daily: H. C. 7:30 a.m. except Wed. at 7 and 11 a.m. Confessions Sat. 4:30-5:30 and 7:30-8 p.m.

Providence, Rhode Island
GRACE CHURCH
Mathewson and Westminster Sts.
The Rev. Clarence H. Horner, Rector
Sunday: H. C. 8 a.m.; Church School, 9:30 and 11 a.m. Morning Prayer and Sermon (H. C. first Sunday), 11 a.m.; Y.P.F., 5:30 p.m. Evening Prayer and Sermon, 7:30 p.m. Thurs. H. C. 11 a.m. Daily Noonday Prayers, 12 noon.

San Diego, California
ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
8th Avenue at C Street
The Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, Rector
The Rev. Harold B. Robinson
Sunday: 7:30, 11 a.m.; 7:30 p.m.
Fri. and Holy Days, 10 a.m.

Omaha, Nebraska
ALL SAINTS' CHURCH
The Rev. Fred W. Clayton, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 a.m. H. C. first Sunday at 11. Weekday, H. C. and Intercessions Wed. at 10 a.m.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

by a college of rural reconstruction and the college of science will be continued. In East China it is proposed to consolidate the four Christian colleges into one strong university in Shanghai with six colleges—arts, science, medicine. engineering, law and commerce. The four institutions to be merged are St. John's University, the University of Shanghai, Soochow University and Hangchow Christian College.

The new plan recommends that a central administrative body control the University of Nanking and Ginling College for Women, although the latter will be preserved as an autonomous women's school.

Hua Chung College at Wuchang in Central China and Lingnan University in South China are to be restored to previous positions and maintained as strong centers of leadership.

Fukien Christian University, Hwa Nan College for Women and Fukien Union Theological College will coordinate their facilities at a single educational center at Foochow. There will be a college of arts and a college of science. A college of rural reconstruction will probably replace the present college of agriculture.

West China Union University in Chengtu will continue its current growth. Colleges of arts, of science, and of medicine and dentistry are to be further built up.

The Rev. Henry P. Van Dusen, president of Union Seminary, who was chairman of the planning committee, was elected president of the associated boards. The Rev. J. Thayer Addison, in charge of foreign missions of the National Council, indicated that such a plan was underway at the recent Council meeting (WITNESS, May 9).

Laymen Meet

Roanoke, Va.:—One hundred and twelve laymen of the diocese of Southwestern Virginia gathered here recently to push forward the work of the Laymen's League of the diocese. This was the first meeting since 1941 due to war conditions, although a number of parish branches carried on as normally as possible. Bishop Phillips urged the men to assume their full share in the work as well as the financial support of the diocese. Mr. Robert Turner of Charleston, W. Va., gave a description of the work done by Alcoholics Anonymous.

Women Ministers

Atlantic City, N. J. (RNS):—The recent General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church approved the ordination of women as pastors and passed a resolution submitting the question to the 268 presbyteries. Final action may come in 1947 if two-thirds of the presbyteries approve.

Conference Meets

Philadelphia, Pa.: — The summer conference of the diocese of Pennsylvania was held July 7 to July 12 at Beaver college, Jenkintown, Pa., under the auspices of the department of Christian Education. Leaders of the meeting included Suffragan-Bishop William Remington, Elizabeth Falck, missionary from Shanghai on furlough, and the Rev. William B. Spofford Jr., CLID executive secretary.

Receives Honor

Gambier, Ohio: — President Gordon Keith Chalmers of Kenyon college received the honorary degree of LL.D., from Brown university at the 178th commencement exercises June 17. A graduate of Brown, the educator has been prominent in school circles for several years, serving as a special consultant to the Army Air forces in Washington, twice president of the Ohio College association, and founder of the well-known Kenyon Review. Recently he was on the Governor's advisory committee in Ohio on higher education.

Church Damaged

Newport, R. I. (RNS):—Two Episcopal churches here were broken into by vandals, and one was dese-

BRUGLER HOUSE

on Rye Lake, near White Plains, N. Y., offers clergymen and other active Church workers the quiet surroundings of a small estate for a holiday or vacation. For information and rates, write

Lindley M. Franklin, Jr., Secy.
281 Fourth Ave., New York 10, N. Y.

ST. JOHN'S MILITARY SCHOOL
Salina, Kansas

Since 1887 St. John's has been perpetuating the cultural traditions of the Church by stressing sound scholarship in Christian atmosphere.

Grades 6-12. Fully accredited. Bar I.L. Summer School and Camp in Colorado Rockies. Boys 8-15. Splendid equipment. 10,000 acres.

The Rev. R. L. Clem, Rector

Schools for Social Service Work

The following schools for social service work are approved by the American Association of Schools of Social Work. Where the letters (M) or (P) appears they refer to specialized programs approved by the American Association of Medical Social Workers or the American Association of Psychiatric Social Workers. The WITNESS recommends them to those of the clergy who are frequently asked to refer prospective students of social work to professional schools.

University of Pittsburgh
School of Applied Social Sciences
Pittsburgh 13, Pa.
Wilbur I. Newstetter, Dean
(M), (P)

Boston College
School of Social Work
126 Newbury St.
Boston 16, Mass.
Dorothy Book, Dean

West Virginia University
Department of Social Work
Morgantown, West Va.
Emily M. Sunley, Head
(One year standard curriculum)

Washington University
The George Warren Brown School of Social Work
St. Louis 5, Missouri
Benjamin Youngdahl, Dean
(M), (P)

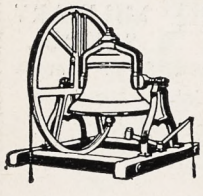
University of Pennsylvania
School of Social Work
2410 Pine St.
Philadelphia 3, Pa.
Kenneth L. M. Pray, Dean
(P)

Boston University
School of Social Work
84 Exeter St.
Boston 16, Mass.
Richard K. Conant, Dean
(P)

Smith College
School for Social Work
Northampton, Mass.
Florence Day, Director
(P)

Nashville School of Social Work
412 21st Avenue South
Nashville 4, Tenn.
Lora Lee Pederson, Director

Atlanta University
School of Social Work
347 Henry St. S. W.
Atlanta, Georgia
Forrester B. Washington, Director



University of Denver
School of Social Work
Denver 10, Colorado
Florence M. Hutsinpillar, Director

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Write us for
Organ Information
AUSTIN ORGANS, Inc.
Hartford, Conn.

Memorial Windows
In accordance with the best traditions of the craft. Notable installations in forty states and five foreign countries.
Illustrated material on request
The D'Ascenzo Studios
founded 1896
1604 Summer Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

ALTAR BREADS ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED
SAINT MARY'S CONVENT
KENOSHA • WISCONSIN

MENEELY BELL CO.
22 RIVER ST., TROY, N. Y.
BELLS

R. GEISSLER, INC.
71-79 W. 45th St., New York 19, N. Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE·BRASS·SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS

ERNEST W. LAKEMAN
Designer and Worker in
STAINED GLASS
2 CRESCENT PLACE
YONKERS, NEW YORK

Need a LAXATIVE?
Black-Draught is
1-Usually prompt
2-Usually thorough
3-Always economical

25 to 40 doses only 25¢
Get BLACK-DRAUGHT
CAUTION: USE ONLY AS DIRECTED

crated within a week. Considerable damage was done to St. George's. The Rev. David E. Evans, rector, said the vandals desecrated the altar, upturned a missal stand, threw candles, matches and cigarette butts around, broke a window, drank a bottle of altar wine and made off with another. Trinity church also reported a break in but nothing was disturbed.

Single Clergy

London (by wireless to RNS):—Britain's housing shortage may force the Anglican diocese of Blackburn to ordain only men who will pledge to remain single for several years, according to Bishop Wilfred M. Askwith. Also contemplated are clergy houses in towns in which assistant curates of several parishes can live together.

Workers Meet

Lawrenceville, Va.:—The 21st annual session of the provincial summer school for colored church workers of the third province will be held here July 22 through the 26th. Leaders on the program include Bishop Noble C. Powell of Maryland and the Rev. Tollie L. Caution, secretary for Negro work of the National Council.

YOUTH DIRECTOR
Young woman is wanted as Director of young people's work in a southern diocese. Would prefer one also with experience in Christian Education. Reply giving qualifications and references. Box 142, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION
Director of Religious Education wanted. Good salary. State qualifications, experience and salary expected in first letter. Rev. Claude A. Beesley, D.D., 1826 Huff Ave., Wichita Falls, Texas.

POSITION WANTED
A priest retiring from active parish work this year would like to settle on East or West side of the Hudson River where small home can be rented and where the services of an extra priest is needed. Box T, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

WANTED: Young woman as Director of young peoples' work in a southern diocese. Would prefer one also with experience in Christian Education. Reply giving qualifications and references. Box ??? THE WITNESS.

DIRECTOR WANTED
Director of Religious Education wanted; good salary; state qualifications, experience and salary expected in first letter. Rev. Claude A. Beesley, 1826 Huff Ave., Wichita Falls, Texas.

SECRETARY WANTED
Interesting position New York area. Good stenographer. Able to take responsibility. Reply: Box CM, WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

POSITION WANTED
Trained nurse, churchwoman, fifty, seeks position as nurse or housemother in boys' school. Experience. References. Box ML, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6.

ASSISTANT WANTED
Young, ordained, liberal evangelical, married clergyman wanted with special interest in young people and calling. $2,800. References. Rev. David H. Weeks, 646 Orchard Parkway, Niagara Falls, N. Y.

WOMAN DIRECTOR
Wanted a woman director of religious education for prominent New York Episcopal parish. Church School of 500. Single, 30 to 45 years. Apartment provided. Box WD. THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty St., New York 6, N. Y.

Everything for the Episcopal Church
but vestments
A broad statement but we'd like to prove it.
Ammidon and Company
Horace L. Varian
Horace L. Varian, Jr.
31 South Frederick Street
Baltimore 2, Maryland

PURE IRISH LINENS NOW IN STOCK
for all Church needs, supplies constantly arriving, good qualities, also fine cottons. Samples free.
Mary Fawcett Company
Plainfield, N. J. Box 146

CATHEDRAL STUDIOS
Washington & London, England. Linens and materials by the yard, surplices, albs, Altar Linens, stoles, burses & veils. Materials by the yard. See my NEW BOOK "CHURCH EMBROIDERY" & CHURCH VESTMENTS a complete instruction. 128 pages, 95 illus. Price $5.67. And my HANDBOOK for ALTAR GUILDS, price 50c. Miss L. V. Mackrille, 11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington 15, D.C. 30 minutes from U. S. Treasury. Tel. Wisconsin 2752.

SURPLICES — STOLES
VESTMENTS
CHURCH HANGINGS
ALTAR LINENS
CASSOCKS
CLERICAL SUITS — CLOAKS
RABATS—RABAT VESTS—COLLARS—SHIRTS
Choir Vestments in All Styles
Inquiries Invited
C. M. ALMY & SON, INC.
562 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.

VESTMENTS for CLERGY and CHOIR
Altar Linens . . . Embroideries . . . Tailoring . . . Episcopal Flags. Send for Catalog
J. M. HALL, INC.
14 W. 40th St., New York - Tel. CH 4-3306
Office & Salesroom
American Distributor of Stained Glass Windows for James Powell & Sons, Ltd., London, Eng.

The Payne-Spiers Studios Inc.
Studios at Paterson, New Jersey
Carved Wood
Chancel Renovations Church Furnishings
Murals Memorials Tablets
Stained Glass
Inquiries Solicited

VESTMENTS
Cassocks - Surplices - Stoles - Scarves
Silks - Altar Cloths - Embroideries
Priest Cloaks - Rabats - Collars
Custom Tailoring for Clergymen
1837 Church Vestment Makers Over One Hundred Years 1946

COX SONS & VINING, Inc.
131 East 23rd Street, New York 10, N.Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

THE REV. DAVID R. HUNTER
Secretary of Religious Education, Mass.

The official WITNESS statement of policy, number 4 (June 27) having to do with anti-Semitism is completely outside the tradition of the magazine. Technically the statements you make about this social evil are true but they are purely academic statements with very little relevance to the contemporary scene. As such they will give real comfort to the anti-Semites in our Christian fellowship.

It is true that anti-Semitism "is a Jewish problem as well as a Christian and the Jews themselves can do much to put an end to it," but it is true also that the Jews are doing much more than Christians to this end. Knowing that one erring Jew brings discredit to all of Judaism, their leaders are trying desperately to convey this fact and raise to a yet higher level the morality of a people whose high ethical and moral standards probably are without a peer. Jews are devoting hours of their time and giving sacrificially of their means to combat both the "Jewish" and "Christian" causes of anti-Semitism, while Christians do little more than talk. Anyone who has tackled the problem seriously either in Boston or New York will recognize this to be so.

Your attack on Zionism deserves a full reply but suffice it to say that there is a place in historic Judaism for Zionism. Christian civilization in this country has made Zionism almost a mandatory program for the Jew. He knows now that he needs his own nation to grant him the protection accorded all other peoples. This is not an entirely happy solution but who are we to criticize?

Shame on you for such shabby policy writing. Is THE WITNESS big enough to change its official policy?

* * *

MR. JOHN KREMER
Layman of Philadelphia

The indictment of Anglo-Catholicism by the Reverend Wilford O. Cross in THE WITNESS is very severe. If we could have a little of chapter and verse it would help those of us who call ourselves Catholic to more clearly see ourselves as others see us. Undoubtedly the responsibility is on us and undoubtedly we have fallen short, but it would be interesting to know the source of the information which the writer of the article used to justify such an attack.

Those who practice sincerely the Catholic life well know their shortcomings, and also know something of the other side. They know of the devoted Religious who are quietly and faithfully doing acts of mercy every day. They know of open churches which are not closed from early morning to night, and of the comfort they give to the stricken. They know how faithfully the Sacraments are administered. They know of the efforts made to better the lot of our colored brethren, and of colored priests who are outstanding in their ministrations.

This is not said in self praise, but only to be fair, and certainly these all have their direct application to social progress. How often do you find a Catholic parish which is classified as fashionable?

I can't help but think of the reply of the Irish mother tucking her seven children into the spring wagon on a hot day after Mass. When the priest asked her if she approved of his sermon on Matrimony—"Faith," she said, "I wish I knew as much about Matrimony as you do."

* * *

ADELAIDE CASE
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

I do not like the statement about the Jews (WITNESS, June 27)—indeed I am shocked by it and I hope it will be amended before it is finally accepted as a plank in the platform adopted by THE WITNESS. Why make a moral judgment on the Jews as a people? Of course they are not angels and saints any more than the rest of us. But to imply that their sufferings are their fault, that is pretty terrible. Their persistent non-conformity has made them a scape-goat. Again and again they have been wounded for our trangressions. This non-conformity, when not self-chosen, has been thrust upon them.

The solution of the Jewish problem is exceedingly complex and difficult. No doubt it waits upon some profound change in the social and economic basis of our whole culture. Meantime let us not say that if they forget their race things will be all right when in so many cases this has been quite untrue historically. Rather let us look sympathetically at some of the solutions the Jews themselves are proposing. One of them is further immigration into Palestine and the establishment there of a Jewish homeland. I am astonished that THE WITNESS has not given more space to the presentation and discussion of this significant movement.

St. Margaret's House
School for Christian Service and Deaconess Training School of the Pacific
A graduate school preparing women for Church positions in the fields of religious education, social service, and evangelistic work. Opportunity to work for advanced degrees. Special training for work in Orient.
ADDRESS THE DEAN
1820 Scenic Ave. Berkeley 4, California

CATHEDRAL CHOIR SCHOOL
NEW YORK
A Boarding and Day School for Boys
Established 1849
A BOARDING SCHOOL for the forty boys of the Choir of the Cathedral of Saint John the Divine. The boys receive careful musical training and sing daily at the service in the Cathedral. The classes in the School are small with the result that boys have individual attention, and very high standards are maintained. The School has its own building and playgrounds in the close. Fee—$350.00 per annum. Boys admitted 9 to 11. Voice test and scholastic examination. For Catalogue and Information address:
The CANON PRECENTOR,
Cathedral Choir School,
Cathedral Heights, New York City

Virginia Episcopal School
Lynchburg, Virginia
Prepares boys for colleges and university. Splendid environment and excellent corps of teachers. High standard in scholarship and athletics. Healthy and beautiful location in the mountains of Virginia.
For catalogue apply to
George L. Barton, Jr., Ph.D. Headmaster,
Box 408

SCHOOLS

The Hospital of Saint Barnabas and the University of Newark offer a full course in NURSING
to qualified High School graduates. Scholarships available. Classes enter in February and September
Apply to
Director of Nursing
HOSPITAL OF SAINT BARNABAS
685 High Street Newark, N. J.

DE VEAUX SCHOOL
FOUNDED 1852
A Church school for boys. Thorough preparation for college. Military system of student government, developing sense of responsibility. Charges for grades seven and eight $1000; grades nine through twelve $1050. For catalog, address THE HEADMASTER, DeVeaux School, Niagara Falls, New York.

HOLDERNESS
In the White Mountains. College Preparatory and General Courses. Music and Crafts. For boys 12-19. All sports including riding. 200 acres of woods. New fireproof building. Individual attention. Home atmosphere.
Rev. Edric A. Weld, Rector
Box W. Plymouth, N. H.

MARGARET HALL
Under Sisters of St. Helena
(Episcopal)
Small country boarding and day school for girls, from primary through high school. Accredited college preparatory. Modern building recently thoroughly renovated includes gymnasium and swimming pool. Campus of six acres with ample playground space, hockey field and tennis court. Riding. Board and Tuition $800. For catalog, address: Sister Rachel, Prin. O.S.H., Box A. Versailles, Kentucky.

FORK UNION
MILITARY ACADEMY
An Honor Christian School with the highest academic rating. Upper School prepares for university or business. ROTC. Every modern equipment. Junior School from six years Housemother. Separate building. Catalogue Dr. J. J. Wicker, Fork Union, Virginia.

CARLETON COLLEGE
Laurence M. Gould, D.Sc., President
Carleton is a co-educational liberal arts college of limited enrollment and is recognized as the Church College of Minnesota.
Address: Assistant to the President
CARLETON COLLEGE
Northfield Minnesota

KEMPER HALL
KENOSHA, WISCONSIN
Boarding and day school for girls offering thorough college preparation and training for purposeful living. Study of the Fine Arts encouraged. Complete sports program. Junior School department. Beautiful lake shore campus. Under direction of the Sisters of St Mary. For catalogue. address: Box WT.

ROWLAND HALL
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
Boarding and Day pupils. Accredited. Preschool, Lower school, College Preparatory and General courses. Graduates in many eastern and western colleges. All branches of music, dancing, art, drama Indoor pool, tennis courts, riding, weekends of winter sports. Pleasant home life. Environment of geographical and historical interest. Altitude 4500. Boarding $1,000, Day $120-$350.
The Right Rev. Arthur W. Moulton, S.T.D., Rector

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SCHOOLS OF THE CHURCH

St. Andrew's School

An all-year boarding school for boys

West Barrington, Rhode Island

Established in 1893

Rev. Irving Andrew Evans, Rector

Wooster School

Danbury, Conn.

Small School. Near New York. Reasonable tuition. Accredited. Individual attention. Cardinal principles are Religion, Intellectual Excellence, Simplicity, Hard Work.

Write Rev. JOHN VERDERY
Ridgebury Road, Danbury, Conn.

CRANBROOK

Preparatory school for boys in grades 7 through 12. Post-graduate course. Beautiful, modern buildings. Single rooms in fire-resisting dormitories for all resident students. Small classes. Strong faculty. Graduates in leading colleges. Exceptional opportunities in arts, crafts, sciences, music, competitive scholarships. Broad program of athletics. Near Detroit. Over night by train from New York, six hours from Chicago. Catalog.

Rev. W. Brooke Stabler, Cranbrook School, Box W, Bloomfield Hills, Michigan

St. Paul's Polytechnic Institute

Lawrenceville, Virginia

St. Paul's offers Courses on the four year College level in the following fields—Industrial Education, Agriculture, Business Administration, Home Economics and Teacher Training.

J. ALVIN RUSSELL, A.M., D.D., President

THE NORTHWESTERN MILITARY AND NAVAL ACADEMY

Lake Geneva, Wisconsin

A distinctive preparatory school for boys 13 to 18, grades 9 through 12. Fireproof buildings and 90 acre campus, beautifully situated along lake shore. Excellent academic and military training together with a full complement of athletic activities. For information write to: The Rev. James Howard Jacobson, Superintendent and Rector.

"At the Nation's Shrine"

VALLEY FORGE Military Academy

Fully accredited college preparatory and Junior College for young gentlemen 12 to 20. Highest scholastic standards. 16 modern fireproof buildings. All sports. Motorized Field Artillery, Cavalry, Infantry, R.O.T.C. Band. For Catalog address:

Box W, Wayne, Pa.

MERCERSBURG

A distinguished preparatory school beautifully located in the mountains of Southern Pennsylvania. Modern equipment. Small classes; 10,000 Alumni. Close personal supervision of each boy. 85 miles from Baltimore and Washington on Greyhound route. Beautiful Chapel with famous Carillon. Junior School. Summer Session.

Charles S. Tippetts, Ph.D., Head Master
Box W, Mercersburg, Pa.

ST. AGNES SCHOOL

An Episcopal Country Day and Boarding School for Girls

Excellent College Preparatory record. Special courses arranged for girls not contemplating college. Day pupils range from Kindergarten to College Entrance. Boarders from Grade 8 to College Entrance.

MISS BLANCHE PITTMAN, Principal
Albany New York

LENOX SCHOOL

A Church School in the Berkshire Hills for boys 12-18 emphasizing Christian ideals and character through simplicity of plant and equipment, moderate tuition, the cooperative self-help system, and informal, personal relationships among boys and faculty.

Rev. Robert L. Curry, Headmaster
Lenox Massachusetts

THE CHOATE SCHOOL

Wallingford, Connecticut

A catalogue of the School will be sent upon request—with addresses of parents who know the School intimately through their sons.

The School tries to make its charges in the way great surgeons and doctors charge.

ST. MARY'S HALL

San Antonio, Texas

A residence and day school for girls. . . . Preparing for the leading colleges. Fully accredited curriculum. . . . Training in leadership and Christian character. Emphasizing outdoor sports, throughout the year. 4 acre campus—modern buildings—swimming pool.

Katharine Lee, A.M., Head Mistress
117 East French Place

The Hannah More Academy

Est. 1832. Episcopal school for girls, 10 to 19 years, accredited to leading colleges. Pleasant location in the country. College Preparatory and General Courses, Music, Art. All athletics and riding carefully supervised. Modern Equipment. Moderate rates because school not run for profit.

Janet Ward, B.S., M.A. Columbia University
Headmistress
Reisterstown, Md.

St. Mary's School

Sewanee, Tennessee

College Preparatory, General Courses
Junior Department

Dramatics - Music - Riding
Address: The Sister Superior C.S.M.

National Cathedral School

Resident and day school for girls. Located on 58 acres of the Cathedral Close. College preparatory and general courses. Strong emphasis on the Arts.

MABEL B. TURNER, Principal
Washington 16, D. C.

St. Paul's School for Boys

Mt. Washington, Baltimore, Md.

A Boarding and Day School for Boys
Established 1849

Boarding department—Grades 6 to 12
Day department—Grades 3 to 12

S. Atherton Middleton, Headmaster
Rev. Harry Lee Doll, rector of St. Paul's, Baltimore, chaplain and president of trustees.

ST. BERNARD'S SCHOOL

Gladstone, New Jersey

A Church Boarding School for Boys
Beautifully situated in the Somerset Hills of northern New Jersey.
Grades 7 through 12
Founded 1900 — Enrollment 78
Tuition, Board and Lodging $750

Address The Rev. Robert L. Clayton

BRECK SCHOOL FOR BOYS

Day and Boarding, Grades 1 thru 12

Preparation for college and that experience we call Life under highly trained men. Athletics of all kinds, including horseback riding.

Chester H. Desrochers, Headmaster
2477 Como Avenue, W. St. Paul 8, Minn.

SAINT MARY'S HALL

BURLINGTON, NEW JERSEY

Boarding and Day School for Girls.
Strong Elementary Department
College Preparatory, and General Courses.
Music - Art - Dramatics - Sports
Careful attention to individual growth and progress.

FLORENCE LUKENS NEWBOLD, Headmistress

St. Faith's School

Chartered by the Board of Regents
Approved by Synod of New York and New Jersey

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.

The Rev. Leonard W. Steele, B.A., B.D.
Rector and Principal

HOWE MILITARY SCHOOL

Training young Americans for leadership. R.O.T.C. Accredited college preparatory, business courses. Junior School. Small classes. Every boy participates in sports. Balanced program. Episcopal. Established 1884. Summer Camp, boys grammar school age. Catalogue:

COL. B. B. BOUTON
13 Academy Place, Howe, Indiana

ST. AUGUSTINE'S COLLEGE

Raleigh, North Carolina

Accredited Class A Church College for Negro Youth. Co-educational. B.A. and B.S. Degrees. Teacher Training; Religious Education; Commerce; Music; Physical Education. Address: President.

Legal title for bequests: Trustees of St. Augustine's College, Raleigh, No. Carolina.

SAINT MARY'S HALL

Faribault, Minnesota

81st Year

Bishop Whipple's famous church boarding school for girls, high school only. Thorough college preparation, comprehensive general courses. Beautiful buildings. Healthful climate.

Margaret Robertson, M.A., Headmistress

SEWANEE MILITARY ACADEMY

Thorough prep. for college. Summer session. Small classes—every boy instructed how to study. Private mountain domain of 10,000 acres in summer resort area. Endowed: moderate rates. 79th year. Catalogue.

Superintendent Box W, Sewanee, Tenn.

Voorhees N. and I. School

Junior College Denmark, S. C. High School

Co-educational. Accredited by State Dept. of Education of S. C. and the Southern Association of Secondary Schools and Colleges. Under the two Dioceses of S. C. and The American Church Institute for Negroes. Expenses reasonable. Limited scholarship aid for worthy students. Apply:

J. E. BLANTON, Principal.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The WITNESS

10¢ A COPY

LIBRARY COPY

AUGUST 8, 1946

Headquarters of the World Council of Churches in Geneva

WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

ST. JAMES LESSONS FOR CHURCH SCHOOLS

ILLUSTRATED SERIES

I. The Lord Jesus and Children (ages 6-8)
How the children may love God and work for Him.

II. Jesus, Lord of Heaven and Earth (ages 7-9)
The Life of Our Lord and His presence among men.

III. Friends of The Lord Jesus (ages 8-10)
The Lives of outstanding Christian men and women.

IV. The House of The Lord Jesus (ages 9-11)
A study of the Church building.

V. Christian Virtues (ages 10-12)
A study of the Ten Commandments.

VI. The Lord and His Servant (ages 11-14)
Confirmation course based on First Office of Instruction.

VII. The Lord and His Church (ages 12-15)
Confirmation course based on Second Office of Instruction.

VIII. The Lord Jesus Reveals God (ages 13-16)
The Life and Teachings of Jesus as they are found in the New Testament.

IX. How God Prepared for the Coming of Jesus (ages 14-17)
The story of the making of the people of Israel into a nation.

The Lessons are published at cost, without profit. First 3 Teacher's Manuals are 40 cents each —all other books, Pupil's and Teacher's, are 60 cents each. These prices include postage and handling charges in U.S.A. only.

CHECKS MUST ACCOMPANY ORDERS—NO BOOKS SENT ON APPROVAL

Orders and inquiries should be addressed to:

ST. JAMES LESSONS, Inc.

865 Madison Avenue New York 21, New York

THE CHURCH PENSION FUND

and its subsidiaries

administered for the benefit of the Church

THE CHURCH HYMNAL CORPORATION

Publishers of The Hymnal; Book of Common Prayer; A Prayer Book for Soldiers and Sailors; Book of Offices for Certain Occasions; Stowe's Clerical Directory.

THE CHURCH LIFE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost insurance and annuity contracts available to the clergy, lay officials and active lay workers of the Church, either voluntary or paid, and their immediate families.

THE CHURCH PROPERTIES FIRE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost fire and windstorm insurance on property owned by or closely affiliated with the Church, and on the residences and personal property of the clergy.

Further information available by addressing any of the above at

20 Exchange Place New York

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

VOL. XXIX. No. 39

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

AUGUST 8, 1946

Publication Office, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago 37, Ill. Editorial Office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

The Berlin Refugee Problem Graphically Described

What the Churches Are Doing in the City In Humane and Orderly Population Transfers

By Robert Wood
World Council of Churches Correspondent

Berlin:—The situation in Berlin has improved. That is, only 1,500 deportees from the east are now arriving daily in the German capital!

No longer do they form a miserable flotsam in and around the railroad stations. Their misery has been organized and solidified, so that the superficial would say the problem has been "solved." Actually, above all that has happened is a recognition that there is a problem. That has brought some improvement, in which, fortunately, Christian people have taken a big part.

Two workers for the German Protestant relief agency, Wolfgang Rohde and Korola von Rüdt, guided me around Berlin to show how the German-speaking refugees of the east, driven out because they were of "German race," are being treated. Little things on the way gave a picture of the setting in which these people arrive. Of course acres of buildings are crumbled and gutted. Where a boarded-up store is doing business there were queues of people who hoped to buy a dried herring. To combat the food shortage a group of women were working in a garden in a parkway on a boulevard. In the great central park, a wasteland with only a few bombed-up trees, people were gathering wood—but you have to have a license from the police to do that!

The first refugee center, in the Russian sector, was a one-time factory whose dark interior and wood stairs reminded me of New York tenements into which I've stepped. Off the courtyard was a dim kitchen where three women had a few loaves of bread and were brewing some soup—which is a standard diet in a place like this. In a small playroom without toys were several children, some of whom had their heads shaved, against the disease and insects which had attacked their scalps, thanks to the lack of soap. There was a children's sleeping room where a boy was putting on his shoes made of cloth-like fabric. A first-aid room had a bit of medicine and bandages, —war left-overs; the churches had received some of this from the World Council of Churches in Geneva but sent it on to the Russian zone where the need was worse.

But the real heart of this center was the great common room, filled with two-decker bunks, where men, women and children were herded to vegetate. There were 800 at the center, and a good share of them were in this dim, ill-smelling room now. The windows were boarded. There were gunny-sacking mattresses, and no blankets.

These people stared curiously at the visitors. Then a few bolder crowded round to tell their stories. It was remarkable that many were women, boys and girls, though few infants under two. The reason for this was clear as they told their stories. A woman named Elsa Hallacker said she was from Pomerania. She had her two children with her; it had been a year or more since she had had news of her husband, a soldier, now a POW or dead; she showed the paper with which the Poles had ordered her to leave her home. Another woman, alone, had lost a one-year-old child from hunger; her three sisters and mother had been taken to Russia; her husband, a prisoner of war, did not know where she was but she hoped to find him when she got to the British zone.

Such were their experiences. They had lost touch with husbands. They had been expelled from Poland or Danzig or Pomerania or East Prussia and had lost touch with relatives who had not yet been deported. On the way, they said, the Poles had plundered them, taken luggage, blankets, shoes and clothing, even rings. After a few days here they would be transported on to the Russian or British zones in the west to find a home in that unknown world already overrun with deportees. In France and Czechoslovakia and Germany, I

Some of the German war veterans recently released from Russian POW camps are pictured at the entrance of the building where they are being housed in Berlin. The German Protestant churches operating on a self-help basis, collected blankets, clothing and medicine and distributed some of it here.

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

EDITORIAL BOARD: Frederick C. Grant, Editor; Arthur Lichtenberger, Chairman; William B. Spofford, Managing Editor; Philip L. Shutt, News Editor; Lane W. Barton, Beverly M. Boyd, Dillard H. Brown, Roscoe T. Foust, Charles K. Gilbert, Hugh D. McCandless, Howard Chandler Robbins, William K. Russell, Sydney A. Temple Jr., Joseph H. Titus, William M. Weber.

★

THE WITNESS is published weekly from September 15th to June 15th inclusive, with the exception of the first week in January and semi monthly from June 15th to September 15th by the Episcopal Church Publishing Co. on behalf of the Church Publishing Association, Inc. Samuel Thorne, President; Charles A. Houston, Vice-President; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, Treasurer; Frederic D. H. Gilbert, Secretary.

★

The subscription price is $3.00 a year; in bundles for sale in parishes the magazine sells for 10c a copy, we will bill quarterly at 5c a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter, March 6, 1939, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3. 1879.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

have seen many badly dressed people. But this was the first time I had seen children without shoes.

The next place we visited, a similar big, dark, old building, was a center for soldiers who had come back from POW camps in Russia. It was almost as if the film were starting to run over again. Here I saw men, several of them without arms or legs. But the big room with the bunks was much the same, the people sitting around with nothing to do, the air heavy with the stink of weary, unwashed bodies, the light even less, if anything, than in the last place. The director, Karl Achtelstetter, who had been in an American POW camp, was talking with a young man who told me he was Oswald Pakroppa from East Prussia. He was 18, had had typhus, and had been in a POW camp in Asia. He did not know where his mother was and was going on west in a few days. In the hospital room I saw another young soldier, only 17, who had been there four weeks.

The hospitalized men were mostly suffering from under-nourishment. As the women at the last place had no word from their husbands, these veterans had lost touch with wives and children. For example, I stopped at the bedside of a blind man. He was from Silesia, which the Poles have taken over, and he had heard nothing of his wife and two children since August, 1944. He had lost his eyes in fighting in Rumania and had just arrived from a POW camp down there. In the next bed was an 18-year-old; the facts: Home, Stettin; wounded on Russian front 13 months ago; no word from parents in 14 months. For such the German Protestants had collected from their own members, and distributed here, some blankets, clothing and medicine.

Here are a few highlights about another "home" we visited, a city-sponsored orphanage to which the German churches had also given blankets. There were 67 children of deportees. Some of the parents were dead, others had been lost on the migration from the east. When these children were not just milling around, they were occupied with simple things: learning to sew, rolling a ball to knock over little wood trees, looking at a few toy houses, eating a thickish soup (which was all there was for lunch!). Their hope was to be adopted into some Berlin family which was already living in hunger and crowded rooms.

There is not much hope in this picture but I ran into a ray of it at a fourth center which was sponsored by the home mission movement of the German Lutherans. Another large room, more bunks, more waiting to go on to the west, more ignorance of what awaited there. Here was a woman from Silesia with one child, who had last heard from her soldier-husband in January, 1944. Here was a woman from Czechoslovakia whose child had had typhus. Here was a man, lying on a mattress, without sheets or blankets, two ragged coats over him. Under-nourished, he had been in bed a month, too weak to get up. He had got supplementary rations; that is, although most refugees got four-fifths of a pound of bread and a quart of soup each day, he got in addition some soup and two slices of bread, one with butter and one with wurst. The bit of hope which had come into this place was the receipt, three weeks before, of some powdered milk, sugar and chocolate which had been bought with American Church members' money and sent in by the World Council of Churches at Geneva. Of course, that had been only for the children, and it was quickly gone—but maybe more would be coming. In fact, there were hopeful signs that the American Churches and the World Council would be able to send more and more as time went on.

Such is the concrete reality of population transfers in Germany this year. It was such situations which prompted the executive committee of the World Council of Churches to pass a resolution in which leaders of many nations, including the United States, Britain, Norway, France, and others, asked the Allies to improve the situation. They asked arrangements for the reception of evacuees, adequate supply of food and relief, and provision for settlements in new homes.

Fancy as is his own dress, the Archbishop of Canterbury (right) finds something remarkable about the collar Bishop Eivind Berggrav of Norway is wearing. In center is Martin Niemoeller in his black pastor's robe. At left are Dr. Erling Eidem, Swedish archbishop; Prof. Eugene Choisi, former dean of theology at the University of Geneva, and Dr. Chester Miao, secretary of the National Christian Council of China in the Japanese-occupied area.

Finally, these churchmen said they are persuaded the old policy toward Germany, "aggravated as it is by the compulsory transfer of large numbers of people from other countries into a smaller Germany, ought to be re-examined, lest, by condemning millions of Germans either to be fed by charity for an indefinite period or to die from starvation until the population fits the new frontiers, it bring ruin, not only upon Germany, but on Europe."

A hardened newspaperman who had not seen Germany hinted to me he thought that was "soft." After what I saw in Berlin, I am sure it is a temperate statement of sound common sense.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

New Zealand A Leader in Unity Groups Down Under

The Council of Churches Represents Action In Ecumenical Movements Among Christians

By Herbert W. Newell
Secretary of the Council of Churches, New Zealand

Christchurch, N. Z.—When Samuel Marsden, priest of the Church of England, had settled the first missionaries of the Church Missionary Society in New Zealand in 1822, he suggested to the Wesleyan Methodists that they should come and open up work in a different district.

Something of this indifference to denominationalism has remained a characteristic of certain elements of New Zealand life. In rural and in city life, laity and ministers of various denominations will serve on the same committees and support recurring social functions of the churches but they will not take matters any further. Amongst the laity, in particular, few have felt that there is any particular problem in the divisions. There is truth in the charge that the country's greatest heresy is sectarianism.

The Maoris with their strong sense of community have suffered most from this attitude of denominational ossification. What had been their bond of union was now the chief force to break them into groups and the result has been that today more than one-third of the Maoris have left the regular churches and joined the so-called Ratana and Ringatu movements.

Moreover, it was sectarianism which forced the government against its will in the education act of 1877 to make the national education system secular. In consequence the Church as a body has not had any appreciable influence in the political and social developments in the last half century.

The last 25 years has seen a growing dissatisfaction with this easy-going churchmanship. The Presbyterians, Methodists, and Congregationalists have made two attempts at reaching corporate unity. Within the Church of England, in harmony with similar trends in England, there has been a growing number of clergy who have taken up the Anglo-Catholic position until in certain dioceses they now form a majority. This has resulted in a certain reaction against an examined attitude of indifference to questions of validity of orders and sacraments and in some instances to an impatience among the rest towards what is thought to be an Anglican exclusiveness, and a revived interest among Presbyterians in their own Church position. The Baptists and Methodists have to a lesser degree shared this tendency. Within this apparent revival of denominational awareness a movement began with more ecumenical promise, at first little noticed but growing in significance.

In 1921 under the initiation of Dr. West-Watson, the bishop of Christchurch, now the Archbishop of New Zealand, the Council of Religious Education was formed. Six Churches collaborated in improving their educational work. This council set up a youth committee which soon became a vigorous body. It issued year by year a combined Bible-class syllabus. It formed numerous regional youth councils which drew together for a variety of purposes the young people of the Churches. Once a year the secretaries and the leaders of the youth departments of all the Churches came together for four or five days of conference before the year's work began. The Student Christian Movement took a leading part in giving this council depth and earnestness, in sending out into the service of the youth movements a succession of men and women trained to think of the place of the Church catholic in a rounded Christian experience.

When the study department of the Faith and Order Movement began to call from Geneva and New York for people to prepare for the conference to follow on Lausanne it found numbers of people in New Zealand ready. It was the Council of Religious Education which selected persons to go to Oxford and Edinburgh in 1937 and when they returned sent them touring the country with the message.

In April, 1941, the National Council of Churches in New Zealand was formed in unity with the World Council and those who represented the Churches on this council already for the most part knew each other well. It seemed no new or revolutionary thing that they should aim at the same objectives: (to quote from the constitution) "to examine existing differences between the Churches in order to bring out the underlying unity; to facilitate common action by the Churches on all matters where there is agreement or the possibility of agreement." Two more Churches' bodies have since joined the National Council which now combines eight denominations together making up more than 90 per cent of the Church people of the Dominion other than Roman Catholics who number 15 per cent of the whole population.

The National Council of Churches has grown both in strength and in awareness of its specific task as the servant of the Churches in matters which they can only do together. On the domestic side the "Campaign for Christian Order" for two years during the height of the war sought to bring home to the people as a whole the relevance of Christian values and principles of conduct to the issues of national life. The University of New Zealand, hitherto a strictly secular body, agreed to the institution of divinity degrees of a high standard, and an united Church approach to education authorities and to teachers has prepared for a fresh consideration of the place of religion in education.

This little boy in make-shift clothing, who was deported from the east "back" to truncated Germany, is pictured at a former factory in Berlin where he was herded with 800 refugees.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

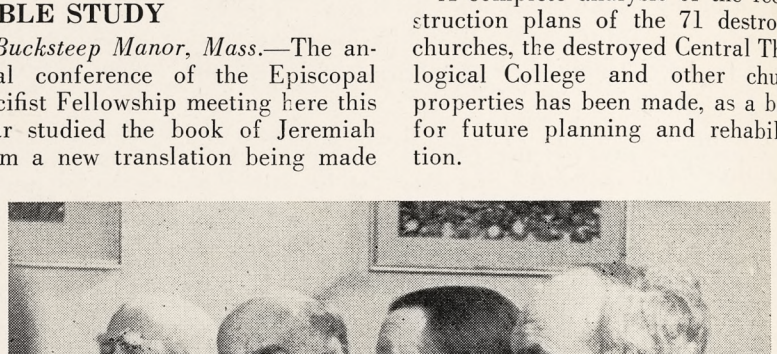
In Christchurch in September, 1945, for the first time all the New Zealand Churches met together in conference through 200 official delegates to consider five questions of common concern, 1) the presentation of the evangelical message under present day conditions, 2) the future of the Maori people, 3) community, more especially in the South Pacific, 4) Christian order in the use of the land, industry and commerce, and 5) education. It was a happy thing that three United States chaplains with the Pacific forces were able to attend the conference and contribute to its work. The message issued at the conference spoke of "the sheer joy of fellowship, a deep sense of unity in diversity, a growing sense of the guidance of the Holy Spirit and a wonderful measure of agreement." A report entitled "They Met at Christchurch" is procurable from the office of the National Council of Churches in New Zealand, P. O. box 297, Christchurch, New Zealand.

Through the National Council of Churches the Churches now make united approach to the government on many issues such as the recent inquiry into the question of the future population of the Dominion.

Careful preparation is being made for the next big step forward, a national conference on faith and order. Sixteen groups up and down the country are drawing Christians of all kinds together for the first time to examine the doctrines of the Church, the ministry and the sacraments. These studies, together with the work of the continuation committee of the Christchurch conference, are likely to be co-ordinated with the recent far-reaching proposals of the study department of the World Council for a world-wide consideration of the "Order of God and the Present Disorder of Man" with a view to the World Assembly of 1948.

The National Council of Churches has also done a great service to the Churches of New Zealand by the growing fellowship with the similar sections of the Ecumenical Movement in many countries and communions. The connection with the World Council of Churches has been of special benefit to the Churches in a happily united country like New Zealand. It has helped to give deeper significance into the doctrine of the Church and to make the Churches see their divisions as unhappy. It has brought a new sense of responsibility before God for national issues. It has brought the Churches consciously into the family of Christian people throughout the world.



PACIFISTS IN BIBLE STUDY

Bucksteep Manor, Mass.—The annual conference of the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship meeting here this year studied the book of Jeremiah from a new translation being made by Dean Charles L. Taylor of Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, who also headlined the conference as leader. Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce was chairman of the conference and Bishop William Appleton Lawrence was host. Others who took part in the study program were Mrs. Leslie D. Hawkridge, the Rev. Messrs. Wolcott Cutler, Sydney Temple, and Roger W. Bennett.

NIPPON SEIKOKWAI PLANS FUTURE

Nippon, Japan—Some 500 bishops, priests and missionaries of the Episcopal Church in Japan, known as the Nippon Seikokwai, met here recently in a conference to discuss rehabilitation plans and to consider the future of the Church in this country. Ten dioceses were represented from 278 parishes and chapels. It marked also the final sessions of the Japanese Church attended by the representatives of the English, American and Canadian Churches, who, following a survey of conditions for several weeks expect to fly back to their respective countries to report. Bishop Charles S. Reifsnider, the representative of the Episcopal church will make his report to General Convention in September.

A complete analysis of the reconstruction plans of the 71 destroyed churches, the destroyed Central Theological College and other church properties has been made, as a basis for future planning and rehabilitation.

Four World Council leaders form a virtual bas-relief at the Geneva meeting. Left to right—John R. Mott of America; the Archbishop of Canterbury; Dr. Eidem, the Swedish Archbishop, and Bishop Ingve Brilioth of the Swedish Lutheran Church.

START WORK AGAIN ON CATHEDRAL

New York—Several additions and improvements will be made at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine here this summer for the first time since the war ended. Work on the cathedral completely stopped during the war. One of the marked improvements will make it possible to remove the first row of stalls on both sides of the choir to give a better view of the sanctuary and high altar.

OFFERS FREE TB AID

Phoenix, Ariz.—From the income of the Nettie May McCracken trust fund, St. Luke's sanitorium here is able to offer free care for two Episcopal clergymen a year suffering from tuberculosis, according to a recent statement from Bishop Arthur Kinsolving. Treatment constitutes rest, artificial collapse, pneumothorax and chest surgery as recommended by the medical staff.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

EDITORIALS

Irresponsible Journalism

ONE of the tricks of the human mind, so psychiatrists inform us, is to project to others our own worst faults. Whether or not this accounts for the charge made by the editors of the Christian Century that a pre-convention deal between liberals and catholics had been made we do not know. Commenting on the report of the commission on unity, the magazine states that "it is rumored that the issue is already settled by a pre-convention deal. In this alleged compact, the advocates of a 'more liberal' divorce canon are expected to combine with opponents of merger to defeat the union, in return for which the anti-union element will permit a loosening of the divorce canon." It may be the way the editors of the Christian Century would settle these issues but diligent inquiry by THE WITNESS fails to uncover one single bit of evidence that the charge, which reflects on the honesty of all Episcopalians, is based on fact.

We first of all called Charles C. Morrison, Christian Century editor, long distance to ask him for the source of his information. With embarrassed confusion he said that he did not know but that if we would call back in an hour we could talk with Harold Faye of their editorial staff who doubtless could give us the answer. Mr. Faye, however, said that he was not at liberty to reveal the name of the persons who had told them of the alleged deal, nor was he willing to tell us the geographical area where the gossipers lived. He justified the editorial on the grounds that if the story were true those making the deal would be smoked out, whereas if it were false it would be denied.

We have since been in communication with a number of Church leaders, both liberal and catholic, who would most likely know of any deal if there was one. We have yet to find one who has even heard gossip of such a deal. Mr. Spencer Ervin of Philadelphia, who recently circulated a petition against Presbyterian-Episcopalian unity, informs us that "I know nothing of it. If the rumor be true it is strange that the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship is supporting both union with the Presbyterians and the proposed marriage canon, don't you think? I might add that I know a fair number of influential men on the catholic side and have never heard a breath of such a proposal from any of them."

Canon Bernard Iddings Bell of Chicago, likewise a leading catholic, declares: "To the best of my knowledge, and I think I know what is going on hereabouts, there is no basis whatever for Dr. Morrison's statement. When challenged for the source of his alleged information he refused to divulge it, thus laying himself open to imputation of a particularly disgusting sort of gossip journalism. The editorial reflects on the honesty of all Episcopalians of course since if there were a deal it would have to be one made by Anglo-Catholics with other parties in the Episcopal Church."

Another catholic who flatly denies any knowledge of any such deal is the Rev. Leicester C. Lewis, a member of the unity commission and a signer of the minority report. He is also vicar of St. Luke's, a chapel of Trinity Church, New York, which is not without significance. The rector of Trinity, the Rev. Frederic Fleming, could not be reached, but his secretary informs us that if Mr. Lewis knows nothing of any such deal then she is sure Mr. Fleming does not.

The Rev. Stephen Bayne, the secretary of the marriage commission, who can be said to be both liberal and catholic, indignantly denies the rumor, whereas the chairman of this commission, Bishop Davis, as we reported in the issue of July 25, states that "I have no knowledge of, and I am sure there is no basis in fact, for the rumor."

Liberal churchmen are equally prompt with their denials. The Rev. Gardiner M. Day, president of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship; the Rev. Joseph H. Titus, treasurer of that organization; the Rev. Beverley Boyd, a vice-president of the EEF; Dean Alexander Zabriskie, a member of the unity commission, all declare that they have not even heard suggestions of such a deal.

What the editors of the Christian Century have to know is that Episcopalians of different schools can stage a most sincere and often entertaining scrap without even remotely threatening a split in their ranks as Episcopalians. For thirty years we have covered General Conventions and on numerous occasions, when debate was hot, have been asked by reporters: "Is a split likely?" Our answer has always been, and will continue to be,

"QUOTES"

WHEN the Church historian of the year 2044 writes the story of our time, he will say that the most important event of the 20th Century for the Churches was the establishment of the World Council, because it marked the beginning of the end of interdenominational rivalry and divisiveness.

—Bishop Francis J. McConnell

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

"These fellows will end their fight with a love feast."

What's more, Episcopalians, whatever their churchmanship, will close ranks and fight back-to-back when attacked by any group or individual outside their fellowship. The editorial of the Christian Century, with its completely unfounded charge of gutter politics, is a case in point.

Presidential Impressions

by Goeffrey Francis Fisher

The Archbishop of Canterbury

THERE is a story in England that once a train was passing a large mental hospital whose name was Hanwell. A traveller alone in a carriage with another man observed "how grim Hanwell looks from the train," whereupon to his alarm the other man said with a wild eye, "not half so grim as a train looks from Hanwell." The story illustrates the difference between the inside and the outside point of view! For many years I saw the Ecumenical Movement from the outside. My work gave me no particular contacts with it: I read occasional reports, I was stirred by the great Ecumenical gatherings. Both William Temple and William Paton were friends of mine, and I heard much from them. It was clearly a good thing, a movement towards greater Christian understanding and collaboration: it had my interest and goodwill. That is probably just where a good many of my readers now stand. Since then I have come inside and am asked to give my impressions.

As a new Archbishop I came right inside when I attended the meeting of the provisional committee of the World Council in Geneva last February, and for the first time got the inside view. Incidentally I was, I am told, the first Archbishop of Canterbury since pre-reformations days to visit the continent in his official capacity, and certainly the first to say prayers from Calvin's pulpit in the Cathedral of St. Pierre in Geneva. That in itself signifies something.

What were my impressions? I shall not try to describe the work we did or the plans we formed in preparation for the first assembly of the World Council. Let me confine myself to generalities which in themselves are striking enough.

First there was the strange fact that everything was at the same time so extraordinary and so ordinary. Remembering the Christian history of the last 400 years, one could not but think it extraordinary that representatives of so many diverse denominational traditions, Orthodox, Anglican and Protestant, should be assembled in one room speaking of things touching the work and witness of the Church, should gather in one Cathedral to express their faith in common prayer to God through Jesus Christ. More than that, they also represented nations which in the war just ended had been victors, neutrals, enemy-occupied and defeated. And yet it was from the start just ordinary. We had not forgotten our religious or our political history or our different points of view: but we were at home with one another. Why? Because one loyalty and love bound us all to our Lord Jesus Christ and we were all engaged in his business. That was the secret of our security and trust in one another.

It was extraordinary, as all God's gifts are: it was ordinary, because all his gifts when they come to us seem so natural. Here was his gift of fellowship in a faith which overleapt national differences and hostilities and drew together in sympathy members of divided Christian communions. What the nations cannot command, the Churches can because they look to the same Lord. This meant much to all of us, but most, I think, to those who by the exigencies of war had been cut off from the outside world, isolated from contacts with Christians beyond their own borders and passed through the fires of lonely suffering and martyrdom. That it meant so much to them and to us to meet again reveals how far we have already travelled. Go back, not so many years, and each denomination was well content to dwell in its own borders and not go outside them. But if it means so much and if the World Council is to mean anything, the kind of experience which I have tried to indicate of our extraordinary-ordinary security and trust born of a common faith in Christ must not exist only among leaders of the Churches but must be repeated all through the company of Christian people everywhere.

SECONDLY, feeling sure that God had brought us so far and meant us to go forward, I felt, too, a common understanding that we must not outrun God's pace of movement, but must imitate his patience and move only as he gives it us to move. The World Council is at its beginnings: it cannot speak for the Churches, but can only serve them:

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

what it does matters only in so far as it helps the Churches to think and act and glorify God together. The Churches have delegated no authority to it: it must justify itself by its own wisdom and by the help it gives to, and receives from, its members. And yet it is an instrument formed under the guiding hand of God through great servants of God, and God will give the increase. Already it has renewed the sense of the Una Sancta, the one Holy Catholic Church as a reality in the mind of Christ, to which in one measure we all already belong and in another have yet to receive. In so far as we share in it, there is abundant work ready to our hands in this tormented world in testifying to Christ and his way of redemption against the disintegrating and destructive forces of unbelief. In doing that together, we shall not only serve his kingdom together: we shall deepen the fellowship of the Churches to a point at which differences can be understood, respected, analyzed. That must come first, before they can be resolved in a fuller realization of the will and working of Christ. One step at a time. A long step has been taken. We thank God and take courage. He will determine our future course. But in the World Council we walk together as friends in a common service, and look forward patiently and hopefully to what may be, and if we are faithful, will be.

"Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him and he in God." There is our charter, and the unity we possess. The World Council expresses it. And at the same time by its very nature, by the fact that great Churches are still outside it, the Council declares that there is an unity which we do not possess. That Christ will lead us to it is our hope.

"... Which A Woman Took"

by Margaret T. Applegarth

Chairman, World Council's Committee on Education

WOMEN are more essential to the Ecumenical Movement than anybody has ever yet acknowledged, except our Lord himself, who included them in all his daily walks and talks in the most astonishingly natural way: so natural that sometimes we forget to read between the lines—since there may be more in this than meets the eye. For the fact that, deliberately, he described the kingdom of heaven as leaven "which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal until the whole was leavened," continues to be a more exciting and a more demanding recipe than most Christian women have ever tried! Exciting: because in those masculine days when Jesus was here among men, it was unusual for a rabbi to trouble to interpret his message in terms framed to catch a woman's imagination—my kingdom, as silent as your yeast: reaching out and out and out in an infectious fashion from your four walls to earth's remotest bounds, altering everything everywhere—race, caste, creed, nation. Demanding: because it presupposed initiative, a faultless formula needing a forehanded housewife, enough ingredients always on hand, a recipe properly remembered, properly measured. And the finished loaf matters, too—with whom will you share it? These are little daily domestic dramas older than Christendom, and very precious; yet still utterly appropriate for any woman in any pew on any Sunday.

About the same time that John Ruskin was saying: "The history of humanity is not the history of its wars, but the history of its households," Frances Willard was stating it from a woman's angle: "There are no working plans for a Christly world save the expansion of the home in the world, so that no human being shall be motherless." Which is simply another way of saying . . . which a woman took.

For it is possible to go through the history of humanity picking out its headline households where the quiet miracle began working its conscious contagion, out and out: Consider Lydia, business woman, venturing to become Europe's first convert, receiving Paul into her home—alien creed, alien type becoming acceptable and dear to her entire family. Consider Priscilla and Aquila, lately from Italy, influencing a Jew from Africa while he stayed under their roof, so that Apollos could go out to spread the leaven of their enthusiasm through Greece. Consider Lois and Eunice creating in Timothy enough eagerness and wisdom to carry the good news into Phrygeia, Galatia, Berea, Corinth. Consider Dorcas making little garments which caused her friends genuine heartbreak after her death, as they saw she had lavished all this lovely detail on clothes to go out to unknown households. Consider early Christian maidens flung to the lions, burned at the stake, yet singing with such rapture that onlookers were haunted by their radiance: "What have they?" Well, they had enough leaven to be hid in three measures of Roman barbarism until the whole land began to be changed.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

This is such stuff as Christian womanhood has been made of; the Ecumenical Movement beginning to come true as, more and more women identified themselves with "the whole family of the whole Church in the whole world; a family which is interracial, international and inter-denominational, because of a common Father, a common purpose, a common love." Coming down across the centuries it is possible to see how France, England, Scotland received this leaven which three women took—first, there was Queen Clotilda whose tender devotion to her Lord convinced the rough Clovis, master of all Frankish men, that here was a God worth trying; so he and all his three thousand soldiers were baptized. Somewhat later, Clotilda's granddaughter, Bertha, was sent to England to marry King Ethelbert, accompanied by her own priest, building her own little St. Martin's chapel in Canterbury for her daily devotions; later, when Pope Gregory sent Augustine from Rome to convert the Angles, it was Queen Bertha who persuaded Ethelbert to meet Augustine under an oak—and the beauty of the chanted litanies, and the lovely simplicity of the friars, convinced him. And when their daughter Ethelberga went north to wed Edwin, King of Northumbria, it was natural for her to take a priest, also; so that the leaven in royal hands had crossed seas and borderlines within the record of one household, into three nations.

EMERSON once said: "You ask me, what is civilization? I reply: It is the power of good women!" But not the tepid passionless goodness content to sit in a pew on Sunday morning upholding the status quo, viewing with alarm those flaming souls who have flung themselves into the anti-slavery and the suffrage and the missionary movements of our own country, traveling incredible distances with incredible discomforts—leaven in hand, to be hidden in how many a ladylike audience, in spite of ridicule in high places; as witness this pastoral letter sent out in 1840 by the General Associations of Churches of Massachusetts against women who spoke in "promiscuous assemblies": "When woman assumes the place and tone of a public reformer, she yields the power that God has given her for her protection, and her character has become unnatural. If the vine whose strength and beauty is to lean upon the trellis, thinks to assume the independence and overshadowing nature of the elm, it will fall in the dust in shame and dishonor. We therefore regret the mistaken conduct of those who encourage females to bear an obtrusive and ostentatious part in measures of reform, and we do not countenance any of that sex who so far forget themselves as to itinerate in the character of public lecturers and teachers."

Quaint as this sounds echoing down the hundred years (reminiscent of St. Paul; who, in his letters, mentioned with thorough approval 15 women and 18 men, by name!), the disturbing discovery of our own day is that most denominations are still reluctant to elect women to significant positions, either on the national or local levels, so that Christian women who recognize their own leadership qualities now find outlets in (1) their women's missionary activities, (2) outside the church proper, in Y.W.C.A., League of Women Voters, and various clubs, and (3) in ecumenical relationships offered by local councils of church women, where they welcome possibilities for interdenominational work and fellowship. Also, on each first

This little refugee girl expresses her pleasure at being able to have food once more provided through help from the World Council of Churches.

Friday in Lent, on the initiative of women the World Day of Prayer is observed by women in 51 different countries on earth, through the use of the same worship service sent out many months in advance (10,000 observances are held in the U.S.A. alone; another 2,000 in Canada).

Lillian Smith once said that we do small things about race because we are unwilling to do the big things. In much the same way, the woman in the usual pew does the usual small things about ecumenicity; if she is unusual, she may join a study group to learn about the practices and liturgies of other denominations, thus gaining insights on Christian history and new reverences for varying religious viewpoints. But the more she comes to love the ecumenical idea, the more she feels it is leaven which a woman could take and hide in the three measures of worldly indifference—if she only knew how!

Meanwhile, a ready-made bit of Christian leaven awaits her, which she hardly wants to handle: for last March in Columbus, the Federal Council of the Churches asked all its member Churches to do what they could to erase segregation from their own ranks—as unchristian and undemocratic. Yes, she has the leaven for this, all right—it being purely a household affair. Instead of taking that leaven she probably makes the less ecumenical gesture of packing a box of old clothes for Europe. If she emptied more of the clothespress, to the point of actual inconvenience, it might be a nobler substitute. For both race and relief are ecumenical naturals where the supposed tenderness of a woman has its real opportunity to shine; indeed, in other lands, during all the war years, Christian women under the oppressor have displayed such tenderness superbly, under constant peril of arrest and imprisonment, as the files of the World Council of Churches could disclose.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Consider Madeleine Barot in France, inspiring French youth to form "CIMADE" to befriend the hunted refugees from all lands and creeds; helping them to escape underground into Switzerland, perhaps; or to endure the horrors of homelessness. Consider Norwegian mothers, during the occupation years, daring to send their children out into the black streets with wet sponges, after curfew, to erase the malicious Nazi signs from certain shops: "This Is a Jewish Store, It Is Forbidden to Trade Here." Consider young Mrs. Hoekendijk and her husband in the Netherlands, secretly rescuing 450 Jewish orphans from Nazi cruelty by persuading Dutch housewives to hide and feed these little waifs, although their homes were stripped of all necessities even for their own children—for in Holland also it is true that "there are no working plans for a Christly world, save the expansion of the home in the world, so that no human being shall be motherless." And in this rosary of saintly names, let us close with that of the Rev. Mrs. Tamaki Uemura, the first Japanese civilian allowed outside of Japan, who has been speaking in the United States since last May—amazingly gentle, but with enough flintlike firmness to have hidden twelve forbidden Koreans under her roof! Then, her church having been bombed, she preached to her congregation in her own home, until the fragile floor gave way; when she had initiative enough to find a carpenter in another town. And through all the eight war years, she sponsored ardently the Chinese-Japanese student prayer fellowships, so that these interchanges of intercession never stopped . . . leaven which a woman took!

For as in the days of our Lord, his kingdom continues to be as silent as yeast; and he expects its infectious influence to reach out and out from each Christian household on earth.

Seminarians and Ecumenicity

By

ROBERT S. BILHEIMER

Secretary of the Interseminary Movement

IT IS well known that one of the largest contributions which has been made to the emergence of the Ecumenical Movement generally has been that of the student Christian movements. In pioneering towards Christian unity, in achieving that basic understanding of Christian fundamentals upon which all ecumenical advance rests, and in providing leadership, their role has been a significant one. The World's Student Christian Federation has been a chief means for the achievement of ecumenical Christianity.

The interseminary movement, as part of the World's Student Christian Federation (the total U.S.A. branch of which is the United Student Christian Council), is the student movement in the theological seminaries. It has a special purpose. Sponsored by the national student committee of the Y.M.C.A. and the American committee for the World Council of Churches, it exists to bring home to students, through the traditional functions of a student movement, the full significance of ecumenical Christianity.

It is generally recognized that one of the most urgent problems before the ecumenical movement is that of achieving a vigorous expression of the mission and unity of the ecumenical Church at the local level. By confronting theological students, who are, of course, the ministers of the churches in the future, with the wide-ranging claims of the world Church, the interseminary movement seeks to contribute to the solution of this problem. The achievement of an ecumenical consciousness and commitment on the part of theological students is its central aim.

The means by which this is done are five-fold:

First, the interseminary movement is a student movement. Its major activities are planned and promoted by theological students themselves. Eight different regional councils, which among them cover the main regions throughout the country, are composed of representatives elected from approximately one hundred seminaries. These councils are responsible for all of the activities of the movement within their respective regions. Each has student officers and an operating budget which is contributed wholly by seminary student bodies.

Associated with each regional council is a field representative of the movement. These men are students in seminary, who are engaged for one year to do their seminary field work for the interseminary movement. Each receives a modest stipend from the national interseminary committee and his work is supervised both by the national committee and by the field work department of his seminary. The work of the field representatives is of the utmost importance, not only because through this means more program activities are scheduled, but because as students they can challenge their contemporaries to the claims of ecumenical Christianity as perhaps no one else can do. Through the total work of the regional councils and the field representatives, as well as in basic intent, the interseminary movement is a student movement.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Conferences form a second major part of the work of the interseminary movement. Between twenty and twenty-five conferences annually are held, of different types and duration. They are, as indicated above, planned and promoted and financed by students. While it is not possible to indicate in detail the themes of these meetings, it may be said that they all deal with some aspect of the mission and the unity of the Church. The foremost leaders of the Churches speak at them, thus providing an unusual opportunity for seminary students to meet at first hand those engaged in the active work of the Church and the ecumenical movement.

Thirdly, the movement, through the regional councils, has scheduled some outstanding speakers to visit the seminaries. In this way students are able to confer for a longer and more leisurely period with men who know from present experience the problems and opportunities before the Church as a whole.

THE fourth means by which the interseminary movement seeks to fulfill its purpose is the establishment of study groups, organized on individual seminary campuses. For over a year, the interseminary committee has been in the process of having written and published a series of five volumes. These books, known as the interseminary series, seek to set forth in positive and comprehensive fashion the essential task, message and nature of the Church in the modern world. The titles indicate their general contents: The Challenge of Our Culture, Vol. 1, Clarence T. Craig, ed.; The Church and Organized Movements, Vol. 2, Randolph Crump Miller, ed.; The Gospel, the Church and the World, Kenneth Scott Latourette, ed.; Toward World-wide Christianity, O. Frederick Nolde, ed.; and What Must the Church Do, by Henry P. Van Dusen. Thirty-two different authors representing ten of the major Churches in this country have contributed to this survey of the ecumenical Church and its function. The volumes will be available and widely distributed among the general Christian public; they have been specially produced, however, for the purpose of study in the theological seminaries, in order that there may be available to seminary students a fresh appraisal for these post-war days.

The fifth aspect of the interseminary movement program is a national conference of seminary students on "The Order of God and the Present Disorder of Man." This conference, the theme of which is the same as the theme for the forthcoming assembly of the World Council of Churches, will bring together from 1000 to 1500 theological students from most of the seminaries in the country. The above mentioned volumes form study material as preparation for it; the conference comes as a climax to the entire program. The impetus gained from it, and particularly from the internationally known speakers—from Europe, Asia and this country—who will form its leadership, are expected to provide a significant step forward for the ecumenical movement among seminary students in this country.

The interseminary movement is hardly an organization. It is distinctly a movement, depending for such effectiveness as it may have, upon the contagion of student conviction, as this in turn is motivated by the demands of Christ. The purpose of the movement is in essence spiritual: to assist in bringing forth in the seminaries that renewed dedication to Christ and his Church which will result in a more effective witness in these fateful days.

SANCTUARY

conducted by W. M. Weber

Miracles, Not Uniform but Rational

. . . If God is personal, if His being is better expressed in human will and character than in mechanical motion and unconscious life, miracles with adequate cause are neither impossible nor unnatural. It is blind instinct which works on in monotonous uniformity where conditions are exceptional. It is rational character which from time to time will violate uniformity in the interest of rational consistency.

—Charles Gore, The Incarnation of the Son of God.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Unity Commission Group Give Reasons for Support

Meeting Informally Four Majority Members State Why They Favor the Basis of Union

Edited by Philip L. Shutt

New York:—In submitting their report to General Convention the majority of the commission on approaches to unity did not indicate their reasons for favoring the proposed basis for union. On the other hand the minority did expound their objectives, ably and at some length. It therefore seemed to some members of the commission, in the interests of fair play, that some members of the majority should indicate why they favor the plan. Four members of the majority, finding themselves together at a meeting held for another purpose, therefore drew up a statement. In submitting it they make no pretense to speak for all of the majority, nor was any attempt made to secure the signatures of others of the majority. The four are Dr. Alexander Guerry, vice-chancellor of the University of the South; Prof. Sherman E. Johnson, professor at the Episcopal Theological School; the Rev. Theodore O. Wedel, warden of the College of Preachers; Dean Alexander C. Zabriskie of Virginia Theological Seminary. Their statement follows:

We are in favor of the proposed basis of union, because it is the nature of the Christian Church to be united, and we wish to support any sound plan which gives real hope of restoring this unity. No Christian dare be complacent about a break in the fellowship of those who accept the good news of salvation through Jesus Christ. The disunity of Christians is intolerable and unthinkable. "Is Christ divided?"

A plan for the union of two Churches must, if it is to succeed, be both fair and realistic. The proposed basis of union deals fairly with our heritage. It safeguards our sources of doctrine—the Bible, the Creeds, the Book of Common Prayer, and the Articles of Religion. It continues the threefold ministry of bishops, priests, and deacons. It provides that the episcopate shall have its traditional powers and duties and that the succession of bishops shall be maintained. Every celebration of baptism and the holy communion will contain those elements which we consider essential for their due performance. Confirmation and other sacramental rites will be available. Any usage connected with wording which has been permitted under our Prayer Book will continue to be permitted. Unusual care is taken to protect the Prayer Book against speedy and radical amendment, and congregations are assured the right to maintain their traditional wording as long as they so desire. In view of statements made by the Lambeth Conference and the Archbishop of Canterbury relating to the South India scheme, it appears that Episcopalian clergy and people would continue to be in communion with the See of Canterbury. Episcopalians will forfeit nothing of their heritage if they enter into this union.

It is also fair to the Presbyterians. As we shall be able to teach from the Prayer Book, so they may use the Westminster Confession. Just as the episcopate is preserved, so is the ruling eldership, and with it the office of lay deacon and the parish council system by which the laity have a greater opportunity to take part in the spiritual government of the church. Not only is the episcopal succession preserved; so is the presbyterial, for ministers representing the presbytery will participate in the laying on of hands in consecrations and ordinations. The presbytery will assist the bishop in many pastoral and administrative functions, much as the standing committee does now. Although many congregations may wish to have the bishop confirm new communicants, it will be possible for a duly authorized presbyter to confirm, as in the Eastern Orthodox Churches. Presbyterian methods of worship, and the right of congregations to maintain them, are guarded as carefully as the Book of Common Prayer. What is extremely important to Presbyterians is that the Basis of Union does not repudiate their ministry and sacraments. Ministers of b o t h Churches will be formally commissioned to minister in the United Church, while at the same time their former ministry is explicitly recognized.

The proposed basis of union is not only in accord with the Bible, the Christian tradition, and the genius of the two Churches; it also takes account of the realities of the situation. If Episcopalians and Presbyterians are to unite, they must be ready to bear with one another. We must deal with each other as branches of the Holy Catholic Church in full good standing; the Episcopalian making no pronouncements against Presbyterian orders and sacraments, and the Presbyterian putting to one side those clauses in his Confession of Faith which offend many Episcopalians. Neither Church can be expected to condemn or repudiate its saints and founding fathers. We Episcopalians cannot demand Presbyterians to accept theories regarding the episcopate, the priesthood, and the sacraments which go beyond those doctrines which the Prayer Book explicitly demands. Nor can the Presbyterians expect the Episcopalians to teach the "parity of ministers," even though presbyters take part in consecrations. As we understand the philosophy underlying the proposed basis of union, it is this: The Churches are substantially one in the faith, and where they differ, the differences are not so serious that they need destroy the fellowship. We believe this to be true. Are the two Churches prepared to adopt this assumption and act upon it? Otherwise, we can see no prospect of union being achieved between the Episcopal and any other reformed Church in any foreseeable future. We say this because a plan of union between our Church and some other Protestant Church other than the Presbyterian might indeed differ in many details from this plan, but the underlying methods and assumptions would remain the same. Some day the Episcopal Church must decide what its reunion policy shall be.

That is not to say that the basis of union, as it stands, is perfect or complete. Much remains to be done in working out the governmental machinery. Both the Churches have a series of graduated councils or judicatories. The Presbyterian Church is a good example of a representative democracy in which the highest court has absolute legislative and judicial powers, and in which clergy and lay elders have equal votes. The Episcopal Church is, by contrast, weighted on the conservative side. It has many checks and balances,

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

WANTED
5943 MINISTERS BY EASTER 1947

. . . to expand the ranks of our Crusade for Freedom through the Protestant churches of America.

Four thousand and fifty-seven ministers in nineteen denominations and in every section of the nation are already representing us.

Freedom is in peril here because of communist infiltrations, because of rising pagan stateism toward what Paul Hutchinson calls the mortal-God level, and because unworthy leftists have sought to substitute a form of Marxism for historic Christianity.

However many religious adjectives may be used by communists to deceive impractical idealists and humanitarians, communism is anti-God and anti-American.

Root Freedom must be restored and vouched safe in America so that the lamps of Freedom can gradually be rekindled over the earth. Our freedom cannot be taken for granted. It is worth fighting for. American citizens have a right to expect leadership in the Crusade for Freedom from their churches and ministers. Such leadership needs to be mobilized for effectiveness. This twelve-year-old organization invites inquiries and participation, in your own way and in your own area of influence.

We do not fight for any single freedom—speech, press, pulpit, enterprise, or assembly. We crusade for Freedom in the spiritual, first-cause sense. For recognition of man as a child of God, man as master (not slave) of the State, for the democratic process, for constitutional government, for return to the American way of doing things and for development of a Christian "climate" of Freedom in which all freedoms can live as they justify themselves and deserve preservation. May we send you our monthly bulletin?

SPIRITUAL MOBILIZATION
Title Guarantee Bldg., Los Angeles 13, Calif.
Roosevelt Hotel, New York 17, New York
First Nat'l Bank Bldg., Chicago 3, Illinois

Advisory Committee

Chairman, DONALD J. COWLING, President Carleton College 1909-1945; ROGER W. BABSON, Statistician; UPTON CLOSE, Author, Commentator; CARY EGGLESTON, Physician; DE WITT EMERY, Founder National Small Business Men's Association; EDGAR J. GOODSPEED, Bible Scholar, Author; THEODORE GRAEBNER, Professor Theology, Author; ALFRED P. HAAKE, Economist, Lecturer; ALBERT W. HAWKES, United States Senator; SAM HIGGINBOTTOM, Missionary; RUPERT HUGHES, Author; RUFUS B. VON KLEINSMID, Chancellor University of Southern California; ROBERT A. MILLIKAN, President California Institute of Technology; FELIX MORLEY, Author, Editor; ALFRED NOYES, Author; NORMAN VINCENT PEALE, Clergyman; CHANNING POLLOCK, Author, Dramatist, Lecturer; LEONARD E. READ, President Foundation for Economic Education, Inc.; ROBERT GORDON SPROUL, President University of California; RAY LYMAN WILBUR, Chancellor Leland Stanford University.

James W. Fifield, Jr.....Director
Donald J. Cowling .....
.....Chairman Advisory Committee

Spiritual Mobilization
Title Guarantee Bldg., Dept. WO
Los Angeles 13, Calif.

I am a minister of a church and in sympathy with your Crusade for Freedom. Place me on your representative list to receive your publications. I understand there are no financial obligations.

Name .....
Church .....
Street .....
City .....State.....

such as the device of voting by orders, and many powers are reserved to the bishops, to the clergy, and to the congregations. The negotiating groups have tried to write out a governmental plan which will combine the two. We have not, however, been able to settle whether the highest council should have two houses or one, how much power the lay and clerical orders should have, and what the functions of provincial synods should be. We have confidence that out of frank and friendly discussion will emerge a solution of these and other problems which will be mutually acceptable.

What the commission asks is modest enough. It is that the Church devote three years to the serious study of these proposals and then decide whether we should go ahead along these lines. We who sign this statement will be favorably disposed toward constructive amendments which will improve the proposed basis of union, and we expect to work for its final adoption because we believe it to be religiously sound and practically feasible.

Christian reunion has always been an urgent task. It is now, if possible, more urgent than ever. There is a world to be captured for Christ. The gospel must still be proclaimed to millions in all the continents and islands of the earth. We must stand against injustice and cruelty, and bear witness to the claims of justice, mercy, forgiveness, and other Christian principles in the relationships of individuals, families, classes, races, and nations. This is not a work which any existing Church can do by itself, least of all after this greatest war in history, when the world is disillusioned, suspicious, sad, and broken.

Twenty years ago the movement toward Church unity was greatly encouraged by the atmosphere of international cooperation which produced the League of Nations. Today the absolute necessity of understanding and peace is even more keenly felt, even though in the perplexing post-war period each economic group, political party, nation and Church is tempted to seek its own advantage. In this time of decision, we appeal to the Church to show the world the true way toward its unity. We trust that however great the discouragement and obstacles, the Episcopal Church will exhibit its true spiritual vitality by standing for the unity of Christians in a world which threatens to be torn apart by hatred and fear.

BOOKS from
MOWBRAYS, LONDON

The Christian Attitude

By JAMES WAREHAM

A collection of simple Considerations and Devotions for use in Retreat. These addresses will be useful for those making a private Retreat, and for busy parish priests called upon to conduct short Retreats. $1.05

Called of God

By LUCIUS CARY

Twelve essays on the Religious Life; with an introductory essay on nature and meaning of the Religious State. Some chapter headings: On Vows, Temporary and Final; On Religious Life and Ecclesiastical Authority; On Religious Vocation. $2.10

Christian Ideals in Daily Life

By F. G. BELTON

A series of provocative essays on the implications of certain problems of faith and conduct. Some subjects discussed: The Cruelty of God, The Unanswered Prayer, The Cross and the Spiritual Life, The Appeal of the Mass, Is Prudence a Virtue? Excellent for group discussions or class lectures. $1.20

The Mass and Its Meaning

By MARCUS DONOVAN

Brief addresses for the parish communion containing instruction on the significance of the Mass, and an explanation of some portion of those things read during the celebration. $1.20

The Movement Christwards

By P. T. R. KIRK

An attempt to show the significance of the Incarnation to the various problems, social and sociological, which confront us at the present day. $1.20

Morehouse-Gorham Company
14 East 41st Street
New York 17, New York

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Unique Music

Decatur, Ala. — A barbed wire fence provides music for St. Peter's mission here in the open country. An abandoned school house is used for weekly services. To this place of worship the Rev. E. M. Chapman takes an album of hymn records and an electric turn-table. Electricity is obtained from a nearby tenant house using two strands of barbed wire fence. The people say that the charged fence helps materially in keeping their cattle and horses out of the corn and cotton as well as improving the music for their services.

Supports Unity

Sweetbrier, Va. — The advanced conference of the province of Washington meeting here recently memorialized the coming General Convention to take favorable action in regard to organic unity with the Presbyterians.

Enters Politics

St. Louis—The Rev. Charles C. Wilson, rector of Grace Church here, has filed for the Democratic nomination for Congress in the 13th Missouri district comprising the north end of the city to succeed Cong. John J. Cochrane, St. Louis progressive, who is expected to retire because of illness. Mr. Wilson, who is past president of the Missouri association for social welfare, has been active in supporting welfare projects. His work to finance the purchase of the Delmo Labor Homes from the Farm Security Administration, so that their occupants might own them, won him state-wide attention a year ago. He is still treasurer of the corporation controlling the Homes project.

Plan Campaign

Madison, Wis.—That rural clergy and lay leaders are alive to the needs of religion in the present day was amply endorsed by the annual national Episcopal conference on rural Church work which met here July 8-19. A drive to enlist clergy and an appeal to the people of all racial backgrounds in America were suggested among several recommendations. Changes were made in future plans for this conference. It was decided to have a rotating pol-

OXFORD BIBLES

are made in so great a variety of styles and prices that there is one to suit every occasion and every purse

At all booksellers

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS, N. Y.

for those who cherish the heritage of the years

...the dramatic story of the growth of Christian movements, seen through sixty years of unique service—

ADDRESSES and PAPERS of JOHN R. MOTT

For the church and its leaders here is basic documentation on the development of modern, world-wide, Christian institutions. The life and leadership of no other layman than John R. Mott provide such a body of source material. Perspective on strategy for the Christian advance emerges in these six volumes:

Vol. 1. The Student Volunteer Movement
Vol. 2. World's Student Christian Federation
Vol. 3. Young Men's Christian Association
Vol. 4. Young Men's Christian Association
Vol. 5. International Missionary Council
Vol. 6. General Addresses and Papers

. . . a set for reference and challenge in the home, church, school, college, library. The first two volumes are ready; Vols. 3 and 4 will be ready in November; Vols. 5 and 6 will be ready in February, 1947. Your order for the set placed with your bookstore now brings each volume to you as ready for $6.00. Separate volumes, $7.50.

AT YOUR CHURCH BOOKSTORE

Association Press

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

icy of changing locations in three-year cycles among the several mid-western universities, the Madison conference to be used as a graduate training school to supply leaders for other regional conferences.

The conference emphasized Negro work, looking forward to a period when all clergy may have complete equality wherever they may be called upon to serve. A three-year certificate was given to the Rev. Granville Peaks Jr. of Virginia, the first time the award has been given to a Negro.

In addition to Mr. Peaks four other Episcopalians received certificates indicating they had completed the three-year course in training for rural Church leadership. They are the Rev. Messrs. Ethan Allen, Saugatuck, Mich.; Raymond Gayle, Bucyrus, Ohio; Charles Hawtrey, Waverly, Iowa, and Fred Raasch, Independence, Kansas.

Tries Unity

Brooklyn—A grass roots movement looking towards Church unity has been started by the Phi Sigma fraternity of Christ Church, Bay Ridge, N. Y. This is a national order for high school boys dedicated to service and fellowship in the Church, of which the Rev. Joseph H. Titus, rector of Grace Church, Jamaica, is chaplain. Recently the boys initiated a chapter in the Ft. Hamilton Presbyterian Church at Bay Ridge, this being the first group taken in outside the Episcopal Church. Additional Presbyterian chapters are being planned.

Churches Unite

Denver—After several months of careful planning and with the full approval of their vestries, three Episcopal Churches here have announced a united program of Christian education. The Church of the Ascension, St. Mark's, and St. Thomas' will cooperate in the use of a common curriculum and teaching methods. They will, at the same time, retain their separate identities in administration. A cooperative course of study covering a period of the next five years has been outlined and is in preparation by the rectors of the three parishes. Three qualified instructors from the public schools will be employed. Adults, and particularly parents, will be invited to attend adult classes in each parish studying the same subjects on an adult level, and meeting at the same time with the Church schools.

"Jim Crowism"

Silver Bay, N. Y. (RNS):—The greatest obstacle to the world-wide spread of Christian missions is the "Jim Crowism of the Church in the United States." The Rev. Charles T. Leber of the Presbyterian Mission Board declared here in a keynote address opening the annual Silver Bay conference on the Christian mission to the post-war world. "We must strip the Church of a hard and stubborn layer of pride and prejudice which reveals itself in a false sense of white superiority," said Leber. "It is too late to argue about racial segregation."

New Aide

New York—The Rev. Charles E. Fish, rector of Christ Church, Xenia, Ohio, will become assistant secretary in the National Council's youth division September 1. He has been editor of the Southern Ohio diocesan youth paper, The Beacon, and a member of the youth commission as well as of the religious education committee of that diocese. He graduated from Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Mass., in 1943.

Asks Expression

London (by wireless to RNS):—Efforts for Church reunion must be preceded by agreement among Free Churchmen that the issue is worth pursuing, Archbishop Geoffrey Francis Fisher of Canterbury declared here at the Methodist conference of

Send For This BIG · NEW · 1947 HANDBOOK For Sunday School Workers

112 Pages 1000 Illus.

Lists over 5000 Tested Helps and Ideas. A ready reference with complete descriptions of Lesson Helps, Story Papers, handwork, visual aids, gifts, books, etc. Everything you need to lead, teach or manage a Sunday School. Mail Coupon for Your FREE Copy NOW.

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

I am ☐ Pastor, ☐ Supt., ☐ Teacher, ☐ Worker in ☐ Begin., ☐ Pri., ☐ Jr., ☐ Inter-Sr., ☐ Y. P., ☐ Adult Dept(s). of_____Church

813-CH North Grove Avenue, Elgin, Illinois

DAVID C. COOK PUBLISHING COMPANY

Keep the memory of Heroes and loved ones alive with the song of

CARILLONIC BELLS

Remember, not in the silence of sorrow, but in ringing, faith-filled music, those who have put on, so young, the shining investiture of immortality. Let Carillonic Bells ring out for them, stirring the air in music as golden and triumphant as the youth they wear unfading. Let bells sing their valor through the lanes and fields they knew, the streets they walked, the homes they loved, to the listening hearts of those who loved them. From any tower or building, the glowing tones of Schulmerich Carillonic Bells can sing their memorial, day after day, in a tribute ever new, with an inspiration never old.

No finer memorial bells can be chosen than those constructed by Schulmerich electronic engineers. They are convenient to install, requiring no additional structure, modernly compact in size and cost. Carillonic Bells are the master-result of a quarter century of electronic science. Radiantly clear, the tones blend from deep-throated beauty to a delicate, high purity. The full sweetness of their tone far surpasses any other chimes or bells made.

If you would like to have Carillonic Bells installed as a memorial for those beloved in your community, we shall be glad to send you a descriptive brochure, giving complete details.

Write to our Department W-14

Schulmerich ELECTRONICS, INC.

CARILLONIC BELLS · TOWER MUSIC SYSTEMS · ACOUSTIC CORRECTION UNITS · SOUND DISTRIBUTION SYSTEMS · CHURCH HEARING AIDS

SELLERSVILLE, PA.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Great Britain. He recalled that when he put the issue to the last annual meeting of the Free Church Federal Council, the only answer he got was from one man who described reunion as a "phantom or mirage."

Trains Nurses

Tokyo, Japan—St. Luke's College of Nursing here is being heavily drawn upon for nursing training and to provide nurses, according to Major Grace E. Alt, chief of the army's nursing affairs division. A council of nursing education has been formed, and a three-year demonstration school has opened headed by St. Luke's graduates, all of whom are Japanese.

Support Pastor

Port Huron, Mich. (RNS):—Ministers and laymen of the Detroit Methodist Conference have formed a committee to back the Rev. John Safran, minister of the Marysville church, who was discharged by his official board for opposing racial discrimination in a baccalaureate sermon at the high school. At a luncheon of the conference branch of the Methodist Federation for Social Justice, unofficial organization of ministers and laymen devoted to social action, a committee was named to wait on Bishop Raymond J. Wade, head of the Detroit Area, and the conference cabinet of district superintendents, to support Safran's denunciation of race discrimination in employment in the St. Clair River communities.

Unintelligent Restoration

London (wireless to RNS):—Many British cathedrals have been damaged by "unintelligent" restoration work, the Archbishop of York, declared in a sermon here. He said that "misplaced zeal has swept away much that was beautiful and valuable and replaced it by what is cumbersome, inappropriate and vulgar."

"Educated public opinion today," Dr. Garbett asserted, "is vigilant against repetition of disastrous past errors. Never in their long history have British cathedrals been more used than at the present time. They no longer stand apart from the dioceses, but are mother churches in reality as well as in name."

Labor Chaplain

Washington, D. C. (RNS):—Appointment by Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of two ministers of the New York east conference of the Methodist Church as "chaplains to organized labor" was praised here by Frederick E. Reissig, executive secretary of the Washington Federation of Churches, and Frederick Brown Harris, chaplain of the Senate. The chaplains are the Rev. Charles G. Webber of Richmond, Va., and the Rev. Nelson H. Cruick-

GOD AND THE ATOM

by

Msgr. Ronald Knox

"a brilliant analysis of the shock resulting from the bombing of Hiroshima and of the popular tendency to regard the atom as near to infinite in power."—The Living Church.

"a delight to read . . . he does not leave his readers without good advice and reasons for hope." — The Church Times (London).

"Msgr. Knox's lucid, simple and yet profound analysis is most welcome."—The New York Times.

$2.00

SHEED & WARD

63 Fifth Avenue New York

FREE!

for the return of the coupon . . .

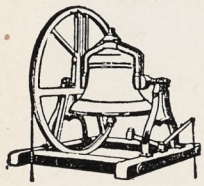
A BOOK THAT ANSWERS THE PROBLEMS OF THE CHURCH ORGAN COMMITTEE

This is not a "piece of advertising". It is the most comprehensive collection of information ever compiled between two covers on the subject of planning for, selecting and installing a new church organ. It is written in non-technical language, but from the architectural and engineering viewpoint. Until — soon — you can see and hear the new Wurlitzer Organ, this book will answer your most perplexing problems and enable you to plan intelligently and scientifically. Yours for the return of the coupon at the bottom.

Organ Division
The Rudolph Wurlitzer Co.
North Tonawanda, N. Y. Dept. WT-8

Your Name.....

Your Church.....



Your Address.....

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Write us for
Organ Information
AUSTIN ORGANS, Inc.
Hartford, Conn.

Memorial Windows
In accordance with the best traditions of the craft Notable installations in forty states and five foreign countries.
Illustrated material on request
The D'Ascenzo Studios
founded 1896
1604 Summer Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

ALTAR BREADS ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED
SAINT MARY'S CONVENT
KENOSHA • WISCONSIN

MENEELY BELL CO.
22 RIVER ST., TROY, N. Y.
BELLS

R. GEISSLER, INC.
71-79 W. 45th St., New York 19, N. Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE·BRASS·SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS

ERNEST W. LAKEMAN
Designer and Worker in
STAINED GLASS
2 CRESCENT PLACE
YONKERS, NEW YORK

Need a LAXATIVE?
Black-Draught is,
1-Usually prompt
2-Usually thorough
3-Always economical

25 to 40 doses only 25¢
Get BLACK-DRAUGHT
CAUTION: USE ONLY AS DIRECTED

shank of Washington, D. C. Both are active in labor circles. "We ought to wear a path to labor, just as we ought to wear a path to every organized group," Dr. Harris declared.

Adopts Church

Louisville, Ky. (RNS):—Members of Christ Church Cathedral here have sent the first of a regular series of food packages to their "adopted" Catholic parish of Moselle in the war torn vicinity of Metz, France. Clothes, seeds, and any other materials that may be used to help the community get on its feet are being sent.

Negro Leader

New York, N. Y.:—Appointment of Fenton B. Sands, a Negro, for work as an agricultural missionary in Liberia is announced by the Overseas department of the National Council. Recently separated from the Army in which he was an air corps instructor he hopes to leave for Liberia October 1. He received a degree in agronomy from Cornell univeristy in 1942. His wife, a trained dietitian will accompany him.

Gets Rectory

Penacook, N. H.—St. Mary's Church here is rejoicing over the gift of a home given to it by Mrs. Mabel S. Locke to be used as a rectory.

All classified ads are 6 cents a word for one insertion; 5 cents a word for three or more. 50 cents added for keyed ads to cover postage and handling. Minimum cost for any insertion, $1. Copy is to be sent to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

CLERGY RETREAT
September 3-6, Adelynrood, South Byfield, Mass., under the auspices of the Brotherhood of the Way of the Cross. Conductor, Rev. Charles W. F. Smith. Cost, $6.10. For reservation or further information write to Rev. Sherrill B. Smith, Superior, F. V. C., Swansea, Mass.

FOR SALE
Desirable farm 250 acres in beautiful Piedmont, Virginia, 60 miles from Washington on Highway. Magnificent view of Blue Ridge Mountains and Shenandoah National Park. Building suitable for school, convalescent home or home for aged. Pictures and views on request. Price $67,500. Apply A. R. Pulliam, Culpepper, Va.

YOUTH DIRECTOR
Young woman is wanted as Director of young people's work in a southern diocese. Would prefer one also with experience in Christian Education. Reply giving qualifications and references. Box 142, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION
Director of Religious Education wanted. Good salary. State qualifications, experience and salary expected in first letter. Rev. Claude A. Beesley, D.D., 1826 Huff Ave., Wichita Falls, Texas.

POSITION WANTED
A priest retiring from active parish work this year would like to settle on East or West side of the Hudson River where small home can be rented and where the services of an extra priest is needed. Box T, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

Everything for the Episcopal Church
but vestments
A broad statement but we'd like to prove it.
Ammidon and Company
Horace L. Varian
Horace L. Varian, Jr.
31 South Frederick Street
Baltimore 2, Maryland

PURE IRISH LINENS NOW IN STOCK
for all Church needs, supplies constantly arriving, good qualities, also fine cottons. Samples free.
Marv Fawcett Company
Plainfield, N. J. Box 146

CATHEDRAL STUDIOS
Washington & London, England. Linens and materials by the yard, surplices, albs, Altar Linens, stoles, burses & veils. Materials by the yard. See my NEW BOOK "CHURCH EMBROIDERY" & CHURCH VESTMENTS a complete instruction. 128 pages, 95 illus. Price $5.67. And my HANDBOOK for ALTAR GUILDS, price 50c. Miss L. V. Mackrille, 11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington 15, D.C. 30 minutes from U. S. Treasury. Tel Wisconsin 2752.

SURPLICES — STOLES
VESTMENTS
CHURCH HANGINGS
ALTAR LINENS
CASSOCKS
CLERICAL SUITS — CLOAKS
RABATS—RABAT VESTS—COLLARS—SHIRTS
Choir Vestments in All Styles
Inquiries Invited
C. M. ALMY & SON, INC.
562 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.

VESTMENTS for CLERGY and CHOIR
Altar Linens . . . Embroideries . . .
Tailoring . . . Episcopal Flags. Send for Catalog
J. M. HALL, INC.
14 W. 40th St., New York - Tel. CH 4-3306
Office & Salesroom
"Orders taken for serge cassocks for J. Wippell & Co., Ltd."

The Payne-Spiers Studios Inc.
Studios at Paterson, New Jersey
Carved Wood
Chancel Renovations Church Furnishings
Murals Memorials Tablets
Stained Glass
Inquiries Solicited

VESTMENTS
Cassocks - Surplices - Stoles - Scarves
Silks - Altar Cloths - Embroideries
Priest Cloaks - Rabats - Collars
Custom Tailoring for Clergymen
1837 Church Vestment Makers Over One Hundred Years 1946

COX SONS & VINING, Inc.
131 East 23rd Street, New York 10, N.Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

MR. RICHARD SAVAGE
Layman of New York

As a regular reader of three Episcopal Church papers, including THE WITNESS, I am not only surprised but a bit shocked at the stress given to unity and the marriage canon. Are the leaders of our Church so lacking in vision that they are unaware that unless more vital matters are justly settled the 1946 General Convention may well be the last? THE WITNESS, practically alone of our papers, has urged better international relations, particularly with the USSR; civilian control of atomic energy; full production and employment, without which we will have another world depression leading to world war three. This is all to the good. But I have yet to see any indication that the Convention plans to give any leadership in these vital areas but is rather to concern itself solely with questions which might well wait until the human race decides whether or not it has the intelligence to so order affairs that it will remain on this planet. Mr. Truman in his address at the meeting of the Federal Council of Churches earlier this year declared that a true prophet is demanded for these times. Has the Episcopal Church such a prophet? If so I for one hope that he may speak with tongues of fire this coming month in Philadelphia.

* * *

MR. A. H. TURNEY
Layman of Houston, Texas

I believe everybody recognizes the good work the Pension Fund does for our clergy. Those who criticize do so constructively, recognizing that the Fund has not yet accomplished the purpose sought at its inauguration: security for the sick and old. May I therefore make a few suggestions:

1. Until the Fund can pay a living pension to all, remove all restrictions about length of service in one parish.

2. Pay up from surplus, deficiencies in premiums for those delinquent from necessity and not choice (published figures indicate this would be a very small sum) thus allowing these men the current minimum instead of having the miserable $50 a month for married men cut.

3. Let every bishop having retired men living in his diocese do his utmost to provide them with enough work so they can live and not barely exist, if unable to obtain secular work.

4. Let every parish provide a living wage for supplies. I know of cases that are disgusting, whether rector or parish bear the responsibility. For example, friends tell me of the omission of the Sunday early service and weekday services, seemingly so they can pay but a small sum for supplying one service a week.

The Rev. F. K. Howard (WITNESS, May 16) suggests a good plan. But how many rectors now having charge of such missions would be willing to relinquish the income from them? It is no good shutting our eyes to the fact that some of our clergy are out after every possible dollar.

Let us hope that something will be done about this serious matter and that it does not end in just talk and letters.

* * *

MRS. JOHN M. SWIFT
Churchwoman of Boston

I have come to expect important news stories on pages three and five of each number of THE WITNESS. Mr. Day's article in the July 25th issue certainly is not news, however important his opinion may be on the subject of unity. It is definitely an article rather than news. I hope you will follow your long established policy of presenting news in the front pages.

ANSWER: Correct. This number was devoted largely to the Episcopal Service for Youth, with very limited space for other material. We therefore varied from our usual practice of printing only news on pages 3-6 in order to present Mr. Day's timely article.

ST. JOHN'S MILITARY SCHOOL
Salina, Kansas

Since 1887 St. John's has been perpetuating the cultural traditions of the Church by stressing sound scholarship in Christian atmosphere.

Grades 6-12. Fully accredited. Bar I.L. Summer School and Camp in Colorado Rockies. Boys 8-15. Splendid equipment. 10,000 acres.

The Rev. R. L. Clem, Rector

St. Margaret's House
School for Christian Service and Deaconess Training School of the Pacific
A graduate school preparing women for Church positions in the fields of religious education, social service, and evangelistic work. Opportunity to work for advanced degrees. Special training for work in Orient.
ADDRESS THE DEAN
1820 Scenic Ave. Berkeley 4, California

CATHEDRAL CHOIR SCHOOL
NEW YORK
A Boarding and Day School for Boys
Established 1849
A BOARDING SCHOOL for the forty boys of the Choir of the Cathedral of Saint John the Divine. The boys receive careful musical training and sing daily at the service in the Cathedral. The classes in the School are small with the result that boys have individual attention, and very high standards are maintained. The School has its own building and playgrounds in the close. Fee—$350.00 per annum. Boys admitted 9 to 11. Voice test and scholastic examination. For Catalogue and Information address:
The CANON PRECENTOR,
Cathedral Choir School,
Cathedral Heights, New York City

Virginia Episcopal School
Lynchburg, Virginia
Prepares boys for colleges and university. Splendid environment and excellent corps of teachers. High standard in scholarship and athletics. Healthy and beautiful location in the mountains of Virginia.
For catalogue apply to
George L. Barton, Jr., Ph.D. Headmaster,
Box 408

SCHOOLS

The Hospital of Saint Barnabas and the University of Newark offer a full course in NURSING
to qualified High School graduates. Scholarships available. Classes enter in February and September
Apply to
Director of Nursing
HOSPITAL OF SAINT BARNABAS
685 High Street Newark, N. J

DE VEAUX SCHOOL
FOUNDED 1852
A Church school for boys. Thorough preparation for college. Military system of student government, developing sense of responsibility. Charges for grades seven and eight $1000; grades nine through twelve $1050. For catalog, address THE HEADMASTER, DeVeaux School, Niagara Falls, New York.

HOLDERNESS
In the White Mountains. College Preparatory and General Courses. Music and Crafts. For boys 12-19. All sports including riding. 200 acres of woods. New fireproof building. Individual attention. Home atmosphere.
Rev. Edric A. Weld, Rector
Box W. Plymouth, N. H.

MARGARET HALL
Under Sisters of St. Helena
(Episcopal)
Small country boarding and day school for girls, from primary through high school. Accredited college preparatory. Modern building recently thoroughly renovated includes gymnasium and swimming pool. Campus of six acres with ample playground space, hockey field and tennis court. Riding. Board and Tuition $800. For catalog, address: Sister Rachel, Prin. O.S.H., Box A. Versailles, Kentucky.

FORK UNION
MILITARY ACADEMY
An Honor Christian School with the highest academic rating. Upper School prepares for university or business. ROTC. Every modern equipment. Junior School from six years. Housemother. Separate building. Catalogue. Dr. J. J. Wicker, Fork Union, Virginia.

CARLETON COLLEGE
Laurence M. Gould, D.Sc., President
Carleton is a co-educational liberal arts college of limited enrollment and is recognized as the Church College of Minnesota.
Address: Assistant to the President
CARLETON COLLEGE
Northfield Minnesota

KEMPER HALL
KENOSHA, WISCONSIN
Boarding and day school for girls offering thorough college preparation and training for purposeful living. Study of the Fine Arts encouraged. Complete sports program. Junior School department. Beautiful lake shore campus. Under direction of the Sisters of St Mary. For catalogue, address: Box WT.

ROWLAND HALL
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
Boarding and Day pupils. Accredited. Preschool, Lower school, College Preparatory and General courses. Graduates in many eastern and western colleges. All branches of music, dancing, art, drama Indoor pool, tennis courts, riding, weekends of winter sports. Pleasant home life. Environment of geographical and historical interest. Altitude 4500. Boarding $1,000, Day $120-$350.
The Right Rev. Arthur W. Moulton, S.T.D., Rector

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

To all the Readers of the WITNESS

Dear Friends:

I feel sure that you share my increasing concern about the present trends in world affairs and the lack of decisive influence on the part of the Christian Church. If not by any means a negligible factor, it certainly is not the vital force in the world of today that it should be—that it must be if humanity is not to sink back into the Dark Ages.

And yet we can show a real advance over the situation as it was at the close of the last war. At that time the machinery for making Christian unity real had not been found—now we have a network of cooperating Christian centers in various parts of the world and there are ninety-three non-Roman communions associated in the World Council of Churches. And the World Council, though still technically in process of formation, already has a record of fine work accomplished and a program-in-action which, if successfully carried out, should go a long way toward fulfilling the heart's desire of so many of us for a Christian world order.

The chief lack at present is a greater "spread" of the ecumenical movement among the multitude of believers, the men and women who form our Christian public. Too much of the responsibility and planning for the future is left to a handful of devoted pioneers. They resemble a detached company trying to hold a vital bridgehead with inadequate numbers.

There are three ways in which you can reinforce this united effort and help build it into the consciousness of millions of our fellow-Christians in America: by making a personal gift; by getting a group or society in your church or community to do so; or by securing a gift from the congregation of your church as a whole.

This letter is a frank request for your interest and support. It is only a feeble echo of Christ's plea for one-ness among those who love Him, yet I trust that it will not fall on deaf ears. Come and share now in this great enterprise, once described by Archbishop Temple as "the great new fact of our day."

Faithfully yours,

Henry Smith Leiper

Executive Secretary

The American Committee for the World Council of Churches

297 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, New York

(Gifts may be addressed to W. Rodman Parvin, Treasurer)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The WITNESS

10¢ A COPY

LIBRARY COPY

AUGUST 22, 1946

ST. ANDREW'S SCHOOL
WEST BARRINGTON, R.I.
HAS A FINE CHAPEL

EPISCOPAL PACIFIST FELLOWSHIP

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SCHOOLS OF THE CHURCH

St. Andrew's School

An all-year boarding school for boys

West Barrington, Rhode Island

Established in 1893

Rev. Irving Andrew Evans, Rector

Wooster School

Danbury, Conn.

Small School. Near New York. Reasonable tuition. Accredited. Individual attention. Cardinal principles are Religion, Intellectual Excellence, Simplicity, Hard Work.

Write Rev. JOHN VERDERY
Ridgebury Road, Danbury, Conn.

CRANBROOK

Preparatory school for boys in grades 7 through 12. Post-graduate course. Beautiful, modern buildings. Single rooms in fire-resisting dormitories for all resident students. Small classes. Strong faculty. Graduates in leading colleges. Exceptional opportunities in arts, crafts, sciences, music, competitive scholarships. Broad program of athletics. Near Detroit. Over night by train from New York, six hours from Chicago. Catalog.

Rev. W. Brooke Stabler, Cranbrook School, Box W, Bloomfield Hills, Michigan

St. Paul's Polytechnic Institute

Lawrenceville, Virginia

St. Paul's offers Courses on the four year College level in the following fields—Industrial Education, Agriculture, Business Administration, Home Economics and Teacher Training.

J. ALVIN RUSSELL, A.M., D.D., President

THE NORTHWESTERN MILITARY AND NAVAL ACADEMY

Lake Geneva, Wisconsin

A distinctive preparatory school for boys 13 to 18, grades 9 through 12. Fireproof buildings and 90 acre campus, beautifully situated along lake shore. Excellent academic and military training together with a full complement of athletic activities. For information write to: The Rev. James Howard Jacobson, Superintendent and Rector.

"At the Nation's Shrine"

VALLEY FORGE Military Academy

Fully accredited college preparatory and Junior College for young gentlemen 12 to 20. Highest scholastic standards. 16 modern fireproof buildings. All sports. Motorized Field Artillery, Cavalry, Infantry, R.O.T.C. Band. For Catalog address:

Box W, Wayne, Pa.

MERCERSBURG

A distinguished preparatory school beautifully located in the mountains of Southern Pennsylvania. Modern equipment. Small classes; 10,000 Alumni. Close personal supervision of each boy. 85 miles from Baltimore and Washington on Greyhound route. Beautiful Chapel with famous Carillon. Junior School. Summer Session.

Charles S. Tippetts, Ph.D., Head Master
Box W, Mercersburg, Pa.

ST. AGNES SCHOOL

An Episcopal Country Day and Boarding School for Girls

Excellent College Preparatory record. Special courses arranged for girls not contemplating college. Day pupils range from Kindergarten to College Entrance. Boarders from Grade 8 to College Entrance.

MISS BLANCHE PITTMAN, Principal
Albany New York

LENOX SCHOOL

A Church School in the Berkshire Hills for boys 12-18 emphasizing Christian ideals and character through simplicity of plant and equipment, moderate tuition, the cooperative self-help system, and informal, personal relationships among boys and faculty.

Rev. Robert L. Curry, Headmaster
Lenox Massachusetts

THE CHOATE SCHOOL

Wallingford, Connecticut

A catalogue of the School will be sent upon request—with addresses of parents who know the School intimately through their sons.

The School tries to make its charges in the way great surgeons and doctors charge.

ST. MARY'S HALL

San Antonio, Texas

A residence and day school for girls. . . . Preparing for the leading colleges. Fully accredited curriculum. . . . Training in leadership and Christian character. Emphasizing outdoor sports, throughout the year. 4 acre campus—modern buildings—swimming pool.

Katharine Lee, A.M., Head Mistress
117 East French Place

The Hannah More Academy

Est. 1832. Episcopal school for girls, 10 to 19 years, accredited to leading colleges. Pleasant location in the country. College Preparatory and General Courses, Music, Art. All athletics and riding carefully supervised. Modern Equipment. Moderate rates because school not run for profit.

Janet Ward, B.S., M.A. Columbia University
Headmistress
Reisterstown, Md.

St. Mary's School

Sewanee, Tennessee

College Preparatory, General Courses
Junior Department

Dramatics - Music - Riding
Address: The Sister Superior C.S.M.

National Cathedral School

Resident and day school for girls. Located on 58 acres of the Cathedral Close. College preparatory and general courses. Strong emphasis on the Arts.

MABEL B. TURNER, Principal
Washington 16, D. C.

St. Paul's School for Boys

Mt. Washington, Baltimore, Md.

A Boarding and Day School for Boys
Established 1849

Boarding department—Grades 6 to 12
Day department—Grades 3 to 12

S. Atherton Middleton, Headmaster
Rev. Harry Lee Doll, rector of St. Paul's, Baltimore, chaplain and president of trustees.

ST. BERNARD'S SCHOOL

Gladstone, New Jersey

A Church Boarding School for Boys
Beautifully situated in the Somerset Hills of northern New Jersey.

Grades 7 through 12
Founded 1900 — Enrollment 78
Tuition, Board and Lodging $750

Address The Rev. Robert L. Clayton

BRECK SCHOOL FOR BOYS

Day and Boarding, Grades 1 thru 12

Preparation for college and that experience we call Life under highly trained men. Athletics of all kinds, including horseback riding.

Chester H. Desrochers, Headmaster
2477 Como Avenue, W. St. Paul 8, Minn.

SAINT MARY'S HALL

BURLINGTON, NEW JERSEY

Boarding and Day School for Girls.
Strong Elementary Department
College Preparatory, and General Courses.
Music - Art - Dramatics - Sports
Careful attention to individual growth and progress.

FLORENCE LUKENS NEWBOLD,
Headmistress

St. Faith's School

Chartered by the Board of Regents
Approved by Synod of New York and New Jersey

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.

The Rev. Leonard W. Steele, B.A., B.D.
Rector and Principal

HOWE MILITARY SCHOOL

Training young Americans for leadership. R.O.T.C. Accredited college preparatory, business courses. Junior School. Small classes. Every boy participates in sports. Balanced program. Episcopal. Established 1884. Summer Camp, boys grammar school age. Catalogue:

COL. B. B. BOUTON
13 Academy Place, Howe, Indiana

ST. AUGUSTINE'S COLLEGE

Raleigh, North Carolina

Accredited Class A Church College for Negro Youth. Co-educational. B.A. and B.S. Degrees. Teacher Training; Religious Education; Commerce; Music; Physical Education. Address: President.

Legal title for bequests: Trustees of St. Augustine's College, Raleigh, No. Carolina.

SAINT MARY'S HALL

Faribault, Minnesota

81st Year

Bishop Whipple's famous church boarding school for girls, high school only. Thorough college preparation, comprehensive general courses. Beautiful buildings. Healthful climate.

Margaret Robertson, M.A., Headmistress

SEWANEE MILITARY ACADEMY

Thorough prep. for college. Summer session. Small classes—every boy instructed how to study. Private mountain domain of 10,000 acres in summer resort area. Endowed: moderate rates. 79th year. Catalogue.

Superintendent Box W, Sewanee, Tenn.

Voorhees N. and I. School

Junior College Denmark, S. C. High School

Co-educational. Accredited by State Dept. of Education of S. C. and the Southern Association of Secondary Schools and Colleges. Under the two Dioceses of S. C. and The American Church Institute for Negroes. Expenses reasonable. Limited scholarship aid for worthy students. Apply:

J. E. BLANTON, Principal.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

VOL. XXIX. No. 40

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

AUGUST 22, 1946

Publication Office, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago 37, Ill. Editorial Office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

Commission on World Affairs Seen As Anti-Russian

Church Leaders Approve Commission Idea But Are In Doubt About Vatican Tie-Up

By William B. Spofford

New York:—Action taken by the special committee on international affairs of the World Council of Churches meeting at Cambridge University, England, August 4-8, in setting up a permanent world commission on international affairs composed of thirty Protestant and Eastern Orthodox Church leaders has been met here with mixed feelings. While Church leaders approve the idea of such a commission they are cautious about endorsing its purposes and some have expressed fear that it will have an anti-Russian bias. Statements in the secular press attributed to John Foster Dulles, new vice-chairman of the commission and apparent leader of the American delegation to the Council, imply a suspicion of the Soviet Union since he advocates bringing about a peaceful solution to international difficulties along apparently Vatican-inspired lines. It is generally thought that such cooperation would almost immediately align official western Christianity against Russia.

THE WITNESS asked a number of churchmen to comment on the functions of the new commission. Word came back from the secretaries of a couple of them that their bosses were lost in the wilds of Canada and could not be reached. Others declined to comment on the grounds that they did not have sufficient information to make worthwhile statements.

Those replying are headed by Presiding Bishop Henry St. George Tucker who comments:

"I certainly cannot conceive of the World Council nor any of its commissions, joining with any group in an anti-Russian campaign. We may not approve of Russia's domestic policies any more than the Russians approve of ours, but after all the responsibility for determining domestic policies falls upon the people of the respective countries. There are doubtless many areas of disagreement between the Russians and ourselves in regard to foreign policies but it would seem to me that what we are trying to do is to find some way in which nations who disagree can work together in achieving world peace and unity. This is difficult, but anything resembling an anti-Russian campaign would make it impossible. It would seem to me that the great contribution which the Christian religion can make is to demonstrate the possibility of a 'Fellowship of Uncongenial Minds.' It is easy even on the human level to cooperate with those with whom we agree, but only the grace of God can make possible a real fellowship of uncongenial minds. It is a time when we need to ponder seriously on the implications of our Lord's words, 'If ye love them which love you, what have ye?'

"I am afraid this does not answer your inquiry satisfactorily but perhaps it may show why I would disapprove our joining with the Vatican or any other group in an anti-Russian campaign."

The Rev. William H. Melish, associate rector of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, and chairman of the National Council for American-Soviet Friendship, has this to say:

"Church cooperation to influence world politics must be judged by its results. An international commission is good in theory. In practice its leadership and strategy are crucial. In both respects the Cambridge conference stirs apprehension. The Churches must help lessen the tension between the west and the Soviet Union. They must re-establish relations with the Moscow Patriarchate. Cambridge has made both tasks more difficult. For the conference, without a statement of qualification, to call for top-level cooperation with the Vatican in the light of the Pope's resumption of an anti-communist crusade and his affirmation of the corporate state as the ideal Christian society can only compound the suspicions of the Soviet Union and new European democracies that western religious bodies are going to permit themselves to be used to buttress existing political systems. Nor will the American representation on the new commission allay such fears, for few things have so influenced American public opinion towards an anti-Soviet orientation as have Mr. Dulles' recent political writings. Nothing is more tragic than that the World Council of Churches, committed to help bind the nations together should by its first actions serve to drive them still further apart. Since an international commission is now in existence, Church opinion must influence its orientation to make certain it expressed a deeper ethical insight."

The Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher, professor of practical theology and social studies at the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Mass., said:

"The death last week of the Metropolitan Eulogius, in Paris,

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

EDITORIAL BOARD: Frederick C. Grant, Editor; Arthur Lichtenberger, Chairman; William B. Spofford, Managing Editor; Philip L. Shutt, News Editor; Lane W. Barton, Beverly M. Boyd, Dillard H. Brown, Roscoe T. Foust, Charles K. Gilbert, Hugh D. McCandless, Howard Chandler Robbins, William K. Russell, Sydney A. Temple Jr., Joseph H. Titus, William M. Weber.

★

THE WITNESS is published weekly from September 15th to June 15th inclusive, with the exception of the first week in January and semi monthly from June 15th to September 15th by the Episcopal Church Publishing Co. on behalf of the Church Publishing Association, Inc. Samuel Thorne, President; Charles A. Houston, Vice-President; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, Treasurer; Frederic D. H. Gilbert, Secretary.

★

The subscription price is $3.00 a year; in bundles for sale in parishes the magazine sells for 10c a copy, we will bill quarterly at 5c a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter, March 6, 1939, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3. 1879.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

high lights the World Council's bid for tandem harness with the Vatican. Eulogius resubmitted to the Moscow patriarchate a year ago, after decades of schism which was political in nature (anti-Soviet), not religious. Orthodox Christianity is healing its divisions as anti-Soviet politics is abandoned by Orthodoxy. Only the Vatican remains firm in its anti-Russian policy, which is aimed against both the Soviet regime and the Orthodox Church. Roman Catholic missionaries followed the Panzer units into Eastern Europe only five years ago. There is complete mistrust of the Vatican in Orthodox circles. They understand why the Bruce Publishing Company, a Roman Catholic concern, publishes Hamilton Fish's book calling for atomic war now against Russia.

"For many years the ecumenical Protestants of America have, with conscious or unconscious political motives, sought unity with the schismatic (anti-Soviet) elements of Orthodoxy, even while they were repenting themselves of their schism. The World Council's proposal would close the door on further understanding with the Eastern Churches. It moves into the Vatican Line. It is the American delegation which has pressed this proposal, against protests from the European delegations. One American (Reinhold Niebuhr) has even proposed an open policy of forgiveness towards unde-Nazified Germany in terms which even the British members had to protest. Mr. Dulles, leader of the American group, recently published a series of anti-Russian articles in Life, now being mailed broadcast in the form of Readers Digest reprints! Deliberate identification of the "Protestant Bloc" with the Vatican is no doubt a clarification of its tendencies, but it deals a tragic blow to peace at the secular level, and to ecumenicity at the Church level."

THE PICTURE ON THE COVER

West Barrington, R. I.:—Unique among Church Schools is St. Andrew's, an institution of the diocese of Rhode Island. The school is for boys of lower income families and is an industrial and farm school, with all the students doing work on the farm and in the shop which not only helps greatly in financing the extensive program, but does much to equip the boys for later life. The center of the school life is the chapel, pictured on the cover this week. The rector of the school is the Rev. Irving Andrew Evans who has not only expanded the industrial and farm facilities but has also so raised the scholastic standards that it ranks high among the secondary schools of the country.

EPISCOPAL PACIFIST FELLOWSHIP

By W. Russell Bowie
Professor at Union Seminary

New York:—When the second world war began a number of men and women members of the Episcopal Church in and around this city were moved to confer together to see whether it was still possible to continue the disassociation from war which many persons in the Church, and indeed the Church itself by official utterances, had proclaimed as something which all Christians must consider. Prominent in these first meetings, as in later ones, were Bishop W. Appleton Lawrence of Western Massachusetts, the Rev. Elmore M. McKee, rector of St. George's church, New York, and Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, one of the leading laywomen of the Church. After conferences of the original small group an all day meeting was held at the Church of the Incarnation to which a much larger number of persons both from New York and from other communities came.

It was at this time that Bishop Lawrence was chosen chairman of what then began to be called the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship, an office which he accepted and in which he gave devoted leadership throughout the period of the last war. At the time when the Fellowship was formed Bishop Paul Jones was still living and he was present at the all day conference at the Incarnation. More than almost any other man in the Church he had become a symbol of resistence to war and of courageous devotion to his convictions. It was felt by others that the same standard which he had raised needed to be lifted up again as a rallying point for those who believed as he had believed, and as a support for those young men who had been influenced by many pronouncements of the Church and who undoubtedly as the war progressed would feel compelled to refuse military service.

Since that time the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship has enrolled some hundreds of members in all parts of the country including laymen and laywomen and clergy of all orders including bishops. In annual conventions and in other smaller gatherings the Fellowship has drawn its members together for mutual counsel. Its most important activity has been the support of conscientious objectors who were sentenced under the selective service act to prison or to civilian public service camps. Mrs. Ernest G. Stillman of New York, the Rev. C. Lawson Willard, treasurer, and Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce of New York, have been the individuals through whom most of the work of personal counseling of men imprisoned in the camps and their families have been conducted.

Compared with the total membership of our Church, the numbers of the Fellowship have been small. Nevertheless, the fact that it has existed has been a witness to the incompatibility of Christianity and war which the beloved Dick Sheppard so winsomely exemplified in England, and which may be not without its effect in the period when the results of the war are reckoned up.

Prominent in the membership of the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship are Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce of New York; Dean Paul Roberts of Denver; Prof. Adelaide Case of the Episcopal Theological School

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

How Civilian Public Service Worked for the C O's

For Most of the Conscientious Objectors
It Was a Poor Answer to Their Problems

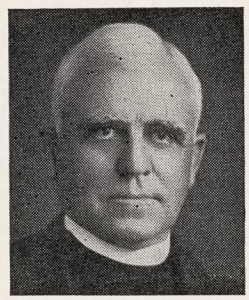
By Roger W. Drury
Former CPS Worker

New York:—The story of civilian public service comprises America's dealings with one sector of her conscientious objector problem during the second world war. C.O.'s fell perforce into three classes: those who refused to submit to the selective service act or were misjudged by its local boards—these men have served prison terms for their conscience—; those who, under the law, accepted non-combatant military service—these men served, sometimes heroically, in the medical corps—; and those who elected civilian service, according to the act's hopeful phrase: "work of national importance under civilian direction." The work of the third group was called civilian public service. How did it start. how develop and how end?

It was proposed that the men in this third group should do jobs of civilian character in the public interest and for the benefit of others. This was agreed at the start by the selective service system officials and by those members of the historic peace Churches who took the lead in accepting the administrative yoke of CPS under SSS regulation. But whereas the government thought in terms of a CCC pattern of labor camps doing forestry and conservation work, and viewed the problem as one of meshing a group of recalcitrants at least into the remote outer gears of total war mobilization, the Friends, Mennonites and Brethren wanted human service projects disconnected from prosecution of the war for the drafted C.O.'s placed under their care. Few of the men themselves knew any more than the draft boards which put them on their trains when their numbers came up, what manner of experience lay ahead of them. Yet they, as well as the other chief partners in the enterprise, peace Churches and selective service, powerfully influenced the pattern that was evolved.

Selective service, guided primarily in detailed policy by the fear of losing political prestige in its handling of C.O.'s, sought projects occupying large groups of assignees in locations where public contacts would be too few to provoke friction. Neither pay, nor compensation for accidents, nor dependency benefits were allowed. The policy was: hide them and squeeze them, and get as much work from them as possible meanwhile. Under this approach, the program early congealed to a point were unrest or even suffering by the assignees could scarcely dent some of its basic evils.

And unrest there was in plenty. It began with the peace Churches. Committed to a way of reconciliation in a world ripped by hatreds, death and distrust, they could not honestly expect the men in CPS camps to adjust to a steady diet of water-hole digging, forest fire fighting and seclusion. They pleaded unrestingly with SSS for a broader reading of "work of national importance," until finally after about a year, a group of C.O.'s started work as attendants in a state mental hospital. This urgently needed work soon became an acceptable part of the program in SSS eyes, and at the peak of CPS enrollment over 40% of all the men were engaged in it. The pressure to expand service opportunities grew apace. One by one, small public health, medical research and other special projects were grudgingly approved in Washington, but even at best, a great portion of the drafted C.O.'s continued restively in remote camps.



As groups of well-qualified C.O.'s sought and were repeatedly denied opportunities for relief service overseas, especially in China, many CPS men were increasingly forced, within the narrow confines of their daily tasks, into the bitterest sort of self-contemplation. Resentment against such SSS curbs on personal liberty as denial of pay or accident compensation, made even more galling the sense of being helpless onlookers in the general futility of war's destruction. This resentment was further frustrated by the benevolent interposition of the peace Church administration, acting as a buffer between assignees and the government which drafted them.

Thus, long before CPS began to be demobilized, a process still lagging far behind the armed services, a state of aching equilibrium was reached between government, Churches and men. Like a brake lining, the Church administrators of CPS units and camps were caught more and more between the inflexible restraints of selective service and the irrepressible eagerness or importunacy of the men. CPS began to smoke, and the energy and imagination of the peace Church administrators was gradually consumed in the process.

It commenced to be evident that beyond exerting a certain liberalizing tension on SSS, the peace Churches' voluntary administration was proving of more benefit to the government than to the men. In the dark foundry of the conscriptive system, the peace Churches found themselves with growing frequency a hammer in the raised hand of selective service, closing shackles upon men whose term of service they had hoped to illuminate and ennoble.

(Continued on Page 17)

Other leaders of the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship include the Rev. Wolcott Cutler of Charlestown, Mass.; Bishop Walter Mitchell, the retired bishop of Arizona and the Rev. W. Russell Bowie, professor at Union Seminary

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Why I Want to Be a Pacifist

by Raymond S. Hall

First Parachute Chaplain in World War II

THE average soldier was very eager to get into combat. At times his morale was low because he couldn't seem to wait any longer. He wanted to get a crack at the lousy so and so's. All this changed a short while after he had his first taste of actual combat. Fighting was "blood, sweat and tears." It was monotonous. It was dirty. It was too cold or too hot. It was waiting hour after hour, day after day. It was sweating it out, air raids, enemy artillery. It was snatching a bite to eat when possible. It was catching a few winks here and there. It was hell!

Perhaps a few illustrations will show what soldiers thought of war. Some men hoped and prayed that they might be wounded so that they could get out of action—at least for awhile. They wanted to get back home. It wasn't because they were unpatriotic, but it was because they were taking part in something too tremendous for them to understand. So much terrible suffering seemed to be so useless when they couldn't help but feel that there would be more wars in the future.

There were two medics in my outfit, Jim and Bill. They had been buddies since the activation of the regiment. You would always find them together. During the fighting at Carentan, a few days after the Normandy invasion, they were working at the regimental aid station. Casualties were pouring in all day. Bill went out with the ambulance to bring back some of the wounded. He was returned on a stretcher—dead—ten minutes after he had been talking with Jim. An "88" had landed near him. There wasn't a mark on his body, but the concussion had killed him instantly. Jim broke down. "Chaplain, I can't understand it at all. Here are civilized people killing and being killed. It's all crazy. It doesn't make sense. The more I think about it, the more I think I'll go crazy trying to figure out why people fight wars."

There were many men who felt the same way. They were forced to harden themselves as they went along. It was kill or be killed. Men no longer thought about country. Home was in their minds day and night. When would it be over? When could they get home?

There were others in prison camps who were forced to spend a great deal of time alone. They thought things out. So many said that there must never be another war. Many made resolutions that if they ever got back home again that they would do all in their power to help prevent another war. We talked with many Germans, Poles and Russians. Those who saw the worst of it couldn't understand war. It was something above and beyond them. They hoped and prayed that it would soon end.

Many men came back from the first world war with the same attitude. We came back from the second world war thinking the same, but most of us aren't doing anything about it.

How many of us are identified with organizations striving for peace, How many of us are better Church members and more devout Christians? Some of us have become pessimists and say "What's the use? There will only be another war anyway."

Every person who desires peace ought to do something active about it. He should become identified with some peace organization. If he does nothing about the peace, then he can't be sincere in his desire.

I HAVE a number of friends who were pacifists during the war. I admired them for the tenacity with which they clung to their convictions when people, and many times brother Christians, were assailing them on all sides. They believed that according to God's law it was wrong to kill. Some became conscientious objectors and suffered intensely, and in many cases were neglected by their own Churches, even though they took their stand because of Christian principles.

I think that we all believe that it is wrong to kill, but many of us compromise because we are against aggression. Your writer is as guilty as the rest. Yet no matter what we believe, it is wrong to kill. We can't get around that basic law, "Thou shalt not kill." Certainly wars don't solve the problem of aggression. Perhaps there is some other way we can try?

A few weeks ago I attended the summer conference of the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship. There I found people that I want to see more of in the future. Here are people who are actively trying to prevent wars. They have been working, studying and praying together during the war, and they go into the future in the same manner. They have suffered much because of their convictions, but it has only served to weld them together more and more. It has made them even more devout and thoughtful. These people have a spirit that we all ought to have. They go into all fields of human relationships in an attempt to find the answers that will enable men to live with one another as brothers. More than anything else they pray.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

There are two types of membership, regular and associate. The regular member refuses to bear arms or take part in war. The associate member believes that war is wrong but doesn't pledge not to bear arms or take part in war. Personally, I wish I could become a regular member, but, knowing my own limitations, I have decided to become an associate member. Like many others I must confess that I have always been the sort of person who, when hit, wants to strike back. We are all made that way. The problem is one of overcoming self. Perhaps that it why we all are not pacifists, because we haven't learned to control ourselves. In my better moments I want to "turn the other cheek." With God's help and with the help of this organization I have a conviction that in the future I will learn to turn the other cheek. Here is my opportunity to take an active part in the prevention of war. My own personal experiences have taught me its futility. I had to learn the hard way. War is the most fiendish thing that the mind of man has conceived. All of us must do something to prevent another. Here is a splendid opportunity. Pacifists have the best answer but the hardest way to follow. That is why I want to try to become a complete pacifist.

Why A Pacifist Fellowship?

by W. Appleton Lawrence

Bishop of Western Massachusetts

I PICKED up an interesting hitch-hiker the other day. He was a college graduate, a lawyer. He had seen action, a good deal of it, in Europe. He had been home long enough to see the great contrast between what he had hoped and fought for, and what was actually taking place in the world and here in America. He was thoroughly disillusioned and pessimistic in spite of his youth and natural idealism.

I told him that I had felt exactly the same after the last war, which I had supported with all of my enthusiasm and ability, with the result that I was a pacifist, and had been for some years; that I had started on the road toward pacifism out of a spirit of disillusionment but that I had followed it up by restudying the Gospels, reading a bit of history, and re-thinking some of my theology, with the result that my pacifism was no longer based on disillusionment but rested firmly and fundamentally on theological convictions; that it was apparent during the war that those whose pacifism had been based on any less firm ground had discovered that their foundations were undercut by such arguments as necessity (what else is there to do but fight?), expediency (surely it is the lesser of two evils), patriotism (you certainly don't want the Germans or Japs to rape your sister or to overrun the country), and similar very definite and practical reasons.

The result of our conversation was that he wanted to know more and so I was glad to have this request to write this article which may serve as an answer for those who, like him, may be dissatisfied with present day trends.

In the report of the Oxford Conference we find it plainly stated: "War is a particular demonstration of the power of sin in the world and a defiance of the righteousness of God as revealed in Jesus Christ and him crucified. War involves compulsory enmity, diabolical outrage against human personality, and a wanton distortion of truth. No justification of war must be allowed to conceal or minimize this fact." It then goes on to say, "The search for the will of God is a matter of agonizing perplexity for the Christian whose country is involved in war," and continues, "In this respect there is a difference of opinion which issues in three main positions being held by those who are sincerely and conscientiously Christians. (1), Some believe that war especially in its modern form is always sin, being a denial of the nature of God as love, of the redemptive way of the cross and of the community of the Holy Spirit; that war is always ultimately destructive in its effect, and ends in futility by corrupting even the noblest purpose for which it is waged" . . . and therefore some "are constrained to refuse to take part in war themselves, to plead among their fellows for a similar repudiation of war in favor of a better way, and to replace military force by methods of active peacemaking." Then it speaks of the other two positions, namely, those who would support just wars as waged to vindicate what they believe to be an essential Christian principle, and those who believe that the state is the agent divinely appointed to preserve a nation and that therefore a Christian's duty is to obey.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

It is the first position which certain people within the Episcopal Church hold and banding themselves together make up the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship. We would rest our case on no special passage of the New Testament but rather on the spirit and practice of our Lord, who, in the wilderness, rejected the ordinary ways of man for accomplishing good ends and undertook to overcome evil with good, even though the sinfulness and wickedness of man was such that eventually he found himself facing the cross. It is our conviction that Jesus made a consistent life practice of overcoming evil not by violence but by the way of forgiving and reconciling love. This method, we believe, is not a mere appendage to the Gospel but its very core and condition. Jesus went to the cross rather than betray the love method. We believe that Jesus' positive command to love even our enemies is still a required and not an elective course in Christian living.

I find, however, that what troubles most people is the seeming impractical, futile ineffectiveness of such a position and attitude in the face of an aggressive, virulent, and threatening power such as Nazism presented and so I wish to make a few plain statements about pacifists and pacifism as I know them.

I WANT to make clear first, that pacifists are not neutrals. They, as well as others, can and do distinguish between aggressor and victim, right and wrong, guilty and innocent. We are not isolationists. We are as deeply concerned and care as much as anyone for those who suffer in other lands. Nor are we passivists, supinely acquiescing to the evil which is rampant or the power which ravages the innocent and which knows no justice. We take to heart the words "As he died to make men holy let us die to make men free" and do not change them to "let us kill to make men free." We are not appeasers. We hate the word and the practice. Christ went to the cross himself. He did not offer his disciples instead. He did not wait for compulsion. He set his face deliberately towards Jerusalem. We believe that war is wrong, that it does not really settle anything except the question as to which power has the greatest military machine. We believe that war is not only wrong but that it is futile; that for victor and vanquished alike it is destructive and contagiously contaminating; that it inevitably drags us down to the level of our enemies so that if they use conscription, we must; if they sink merchant vessels without warning, we eventually follow suit; if they bomb innocent women and children, we are led to do the same thing. The pacifist even believes that preparation against the possibility of war serves to create a psychology which eventually leads us into war; that strong armies and navies do not really intimidate the desperate but only irritate; that adding to our security only serves to make others insecure. Pacifists believe that the only adequate defense against our enemies is not to destroy them but to convert them and make them our friends; that this can be done only by fair dealing, by being ourselves just and generous and having concern and regard for the rights and needs of others as well as our own. We believe that this cannot be accomplished in a minute and only can be attained by the relinquishment of absolute national sovereignty, and by the limiting of armies and navies to the level and instrumentalities of police power.

BUT the pacifist also knows that he still lives in an armed, selfish, and warlike world where there is glaring injustice and where there are bound to be conflicts. What then? This condition has been true in all ages. When people asked St. Chrysostom, years ago, "Ought we not to resist evil?", he replied, "Indeed we ought, but not by retaliation. Christ hath commanded us to give up ourselves to suffering wrongfully, for thus shall we prevail over evil. For one fire is not quenched by another fire." Americans would suffer under such a program. They would be stood up against a wall and shot. But Americans suffer when we go to war. The pacifist knows that a price must be paid for peace and freedom. He is willing to pay that price, but he wants his suffering and his death if needs be, to be effective. The pacifist thinks that the world has tried war for many centuries and that war is not only not the answer but that war is, as the Oxford conference stated, "a particular demonstration of the power of sin in this world and a defiance of the righteousness of God as revealed in Jesus Christ and Him crucified," and that therefore it is time we tried another way—the Christian way. That the cross and not the sword is the nation's surest weapon of defense because only a kingdom built on love and sacrifice, on truth and justice, can endure. The pacifist believes that in the long run moral power is more than a match for miliary power; that dying for a cause is better than killing for a cause; that the forces of righteousness are in the long last greater than the forces of evil; and that, for Christians, the primary question is not whether pacifism will work immediately and practically but rather, what is the will of God as revealed in Jesus Christ?

The Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship exists because certain people within the Episcopal Church who have these common convictions feel the need of the support and comfort and courage that such a fellowship provides. It exists to bear witness and testimony to others within and without the Church, as to what pacifism stands for and is trying to accomplish. It exists because some of us believe that the fact that we cannot reach perfection is hardly a sufficient reason for not striving to move towards it; that we cannot and must not wait for the world to become Christian before we apply and practice Christian ethics. We are anxious that others who are haunted by a feeling that Christianity has an answer to the world's problems which perhaps has been missed, will want to join with us in seeking and fulfilling this way which Christians in the early Church and some in all centuries since have believed to be the way of Christ.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Four Years in CPS

By B. T. PIERCE

For Four Years in Civilian Public Service

I REPORTED to Ashburnham, Mass., in March of 1942. This was one of the first small camps administered by the American Friends Service committee, and I was the thirty-fifth camper to arrive. We were busy there building our camp recreation hall and camp infirmary. Those of us on government project cut the still existing hurricane damaged trees and generally reduced the fire hazard in that part of the state. We fought several forest fires, half of us working all night, the other half all day. It was fairly important work. All summer long we spent digging water holes in the woods. These were built to last six years, and were also quite important in the reduction of hazards from forest fire.

In October we were picked up and moved from Ashburnham to Gorham, N. H. This was a dreadful move. The camp in Gorham was not fit to live in. It had been a CCC camp years before and only one of the dormitories was safe to live in, the others had badly rotted sills. Morale began to go down at that time with the group I was with, and kept right on going. For the next four months I drove a truck. The CCC had left a great deal of U. S. forest service equipment lying around, and I picked it up and put it where it belonged. At the end of January I joined the project and for the rest of my stay there did what the other boys had been doing as work of national importance. I cut wood, not to reduce any fire hazard, but to keep us warm. When the temperature was below -20 we did not go out to work, but the thermometer showed itself reluctant to do so except on one or two occasions. It was, perhaps, the most futile time I ever spent in my life.

In March of 1943 I was transferred to the Brattleboro retreat, a mental hospital in Brattleboro, Vt. Our unit there was small, only twenty-five. I was sent to work my first day with no instruction at all. I knew I was being put on a bad ward but I had no idea how bad or what to do when a patient got difficult. I put in quite a day. The next day I spent washing walls and then was moved to the suicidal building where I spent most of my time with occasional tours of duty in other buildings. It was fascinating work in some ways, for the alertness of the attendant meant sometimes the life of the patient and sometimes the attendant could hit the right note and help the patient turn the corner on the road to recovery. In all truthfulness, this last was very occasional.

There is nothing we didn't do at Brattleboro. We fed people by spoon, and we helped hold them to be fed by tube. We gave a small amount of hydrotherapy such as continuous baths and wet sheet packs. I was taught a moderate amount of massage, but as the attendants became fewer as time went on these treatments had to be cut out for lack of time. We took care of the physically sick, we laid out the dead, we scrubbed walls and floors, we helped in the hospital operating room, we served meals, we put patients in restraint, and some of us prevented suicide.

At the time I left the retreat when my discharge came through this year I was second in charge of the suicidal building under the only trained nurse there was at the hospital. I worked in the operating room a great deal and was responsible for its clean instruments and gadgets. I made all the solutions they felt they could teach me, and I did all of the sterilizing done there. I was taught the use of all the operating instruments, I was taught how to fold the operating room linen (there is a lot of it and many varieties) and how to make dressings. I assisted at emergency treatments for such things as stabbings; gave insulin and morphine injections; and prepared the penicillin injections but did not give them as I did not feel capable of giving the deep intramuscular injections.

My experiences were not in the least unusual. We all had fairly frightful and frightening things happen to us and we all made ourselves useful in ways quite unexpected by us. We all have learned that we can do a lot more than we thought we could no matter how distasteful it seems. I don't believe that any of us will go into the work for life, but I am sure we are all grateful in different ways for having had the experience.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Military Memories

By
O. R. MONTGOMERY
A Private in the U. S. Army in World War II

"G. I. JESUS," a voice called to the chaplain as he walked past enclosure "C" of the army prison camp. The chaplain was infuriated, and he ordered the enclosure commander to line up the prisoners.

"Listen, you men," the chaplain said, "there's one thing I want you to know. I'm no panty-waist." Then he took his coat off. "Now I haven't got my officer's bars on, and if the man who called me a G. I. Jesus has any guts, he'll step forward and we'll settle this, man to man." But no one moved. The prisoners knew that fourteen days on bread and water in a cold, dark dungeon awaited the man who dared answer the chaplain's challenge.

The chaplain's fury upon being called "G. I. Jesus" indicated that he was well aware of the hypocrisy of putting himself at the beck and call of his military superiors while at the same time declaring Jesus to be his master. And his instinctive recourse to the threat of force further belied the sincerity of his calling.

The conscientious objector in the army, or the 1AO as he is classified under the selective service system, probably more than the chaplain realizes the inconsistancy between the soldier's code and the way of the prince of peace. The main purpose of an army is to kill the enemy, and one way or another the 1AO must play a part towards this end if he is to escape punishment. It is true that many conscientious objectors made what was apparently to them a satisfactory adaptation to the army scheme by service in hospitals helping the sick and wounded. And these men gained great respect from the doctors with whom they worked. Other 1AOs were decorated as heroes for aiding wounded men on the battlefield.

Nevertheless many conscientious objectors were subjected to varying degrees of compulsion to give up their convictions. At one army induction center there was a sergeant assigned to interview men who had been classified 1AO by selective service. This sergeant by means of threats and personal vilifications sought to question the sincerity of 1AOs and to persuade them to change their draft classifications.

1AOs often received basic training of a combat nature. Great numbers were forced to take hand-to-hand combat training. They were taught how to crawl up behind a man and the best way to put a knife in so that the man would not cry out. Along with other men in drill they were ordered to practice charges screaming and shouting, not only to terrify the enemy but to make themselves more bloodthirsty. Conscientious objectors were made to walk guard duty and to perform auxiliary military police duty armed with clubs.

Towards the end the war was no longer fought with much regard for the principles of the Geneva convention. And the medical department gave full arms training to its personnel including training in the use of rifle, bayonet and hand grenade. At one large training camp it was the practice to order all men including conscientious objectors to take this training, and those who refused did so at their own peril. 1AOs who refused to take the particularly objectional parts of this training were punished for the most part only to the extent of being assigned to kitchen police work. But an example was made of a few who were particularly non-cooperative and they were given heavy prison sentences up to 12 years. Under this sort of pressure more than half of the 1AOs at this camp took full arms training.

MANY conscientious objectors entered the army believing that army leadership and army personnel were inspired by high principles. They felt that both the army and the conscientious objector were seeking a similar goal, that the difference was as to method. What a disillusioning experience army life was to them. According to army official propaganda the main reason for fighting the war seemed to be simply to get the other side before the other side got our side. And very little was said about the great democratic ideals for which the army was supposedly fighting. In the army the conscientious objector found a caste system in which a select few, the officer clique, selfishly took all rights and privileges for themselves. The inner rot of the army, a complete lack of idealism, came to the surface in mass drunkenness, an ever higher venereal disease rate, and an army way of speaking consistently profane and vulgar.

The army Chaplain was not so much a religious leader as a morale builder that one went to as to a wailing wall with personal problems and complaints. Apparently the really important communications with God were left to certain high ranking generals who intervened directly with God by means of special prayers and songs to arrange victory for our side. However we like to believe that the muddy infantry man who met death daily on the battlefield came face to face with a different God than the army god of battle.

During the war tens of thousands of men were tried by general court martial and given sentences ranging anywhere from one to twenty years and up. Probably even more men were tried by special and summary court martial and given lighter sentences. Whether these were good men or not, for the most part they were sentenced for the same reason—they would not cooperate with the military machine; they had refused to obey an order or they had been absent without leave.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Among these men the army punished were some conscientious objectors. Here is the experience one of them had before a military court. When he entered the room there was a sergeant hiding behind the door with a loaded riffle. As soon as the door closed the sergeant tossed the riffle to him. Apparently he was supposed to catch the riffle, hold it, and find out how really easy it was to carry a riffle. However when the riffle was tossed to him he simply stepped aside and let it fall on the floor. The result was a loud bang, a hole in the ceiling, and a great ducking under tables by the members of the court.

Another conscientious objector was seized by the army at an induction center where he had reported for a physical examination. He was sentenced to ten years for refusing to put on a uniform. He served almost three years in army prisons before he was able to get a hearing before a United States federal court. It took the court approximately half an hour to ascertain the facts of the case and to decide that this man had never been under the jurisdiction of the army and in effect had been kidnapped by them. He was freed on the spot.

THE army prison camp is the mailed fist with which the army punishes the man who will not cooperate in their game of war. The testimony at the recent trials of the officers and guards from the army guardhouse at Lichfield, England, reveals some of the brutalities that take place in these camps. In these prisons it is a standard practice as a punishment for the breaking of rules to put men in unlighted dungeons without clothing or bedding and to keep them there on bread and water for two weeks at a time. And there is evidence of men being kept in "the hole," as such punishment is called, for considerably longer periods. Men are beaten and often severely mistreated in these camps. Guards are commended for shooting prisoners trying to escape.

It is perhaps only natural that men in army prison camps tend to be friendly to the conscientious objector. The prisoner instinctively knows that the army way of life is wrong and the conscientious objector offers promise of a better way of life.

Unfortunately, although many people talk of refusing to fight if another war comes, most of them will be compelled to fight. Without a doubt the army will create enough concentration camps and in general institute the proper amount of terrorism to force the great mass of people to fight. If we don't get rid of the military humbug now, we certainly won't be able to do anything after the shooting starts. At present military minded and aggressive men have much too much to say in American diplomacy if we are to stay at peace with the rest of the world. They want to serve on the atomic energy commission which under their leadership would shortly become mainly the atomic bomb commission. Military men want to continue the peace-time conscription way of life apparently forever.

More important than simply limiting the power of the military is to get down to brass tacks in the struggle for a brotherly and peaceful world. Through UNRRA we ought to contribute two or three times as much food as we do at present, or whatever amount is necessary to completely eliminate hunger. To call a spade a spade, if the parable of the good samaritan really means anything, why don't we let down our immigration barriers to unwanted and displaced peoples? Another means of creating world friendship would be international youth exchange on a mass scale. And how about setting an example for the rest of the world of the way democracy ought to work—meaning specifically equality of opportunity, good medical care, no racial intolerance, and a lot more too? The truth is that to have peace means doing many things, but fundamentally it means spending our dollars and making considerable sacrifices towards a brotherly and livable world rather than a military world of war and mass suicide.

"Liberty and Justice For All"

By
THEODORE R. LUDLOW
Member of the Commission on Conscientious Objectors

AS ONE who did a chaplain's work in world war I, I remember with a heavy heart those men who were occasionally encountered in camps with overalls on instead of a uniform and a broad yellow stripe painted down both the front and back of their clothing. This was the army's way of showing its contempt for those who would not or did not fight. To this public ignominy was too frequently added the epithets of those who passed by. Outside of military camps I also remember the giggling girls who dashed up to men who were not in uniform and inserted white feathers in their buttonholes without inquiring as to why such persons were not in uniform.

We have made some progress since those days, but not all of the progress that should and could be made in our attitude toward those who conscientiously differ from us. Because of the unjust treatment accorded many conscientious objectors in the last war, the General Convention of 1934 created a commission on non-combatant war service to secure for members of the Protestant Episcopal

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Church the same rights and privileges enjoyed by members of the so-called peace Churches in world war I. A resolution passed by both Houses at this same Convention reads as follows:

> "RESOLVED THAT the General Convention affirms that war, as a method of settling international disputes, is incompatible with the teachings and example of our Lord Jesus Christ, and that when nations have solemnly bound themselves by treaty, covenant or pact, for the pacific settlement of international disputes, the Convention holds that the Christian Church in every nation should refuse to countenance any war in regard to which the government of its own country has not declared its willingness to submit the matter in dispute to arbitration or conciliation, and that, in the language of its Bishops' Pastoral of 1933, the Church must wage unremitting war against war. "War is outlawed and solemn peace pacts affirm it. . . . As Christians we can have no part in any program that is designed to violate the principles enunciated by the Prince of Peace. War is murder on a colossal scale. . . . The Christian Church cannot and will not deny loyalty and fealty to its Lord by being party in any scheme, national or international, that contemplates the wholesale destruction of human life."

Brave words! How distant and unreal they sound today.

To implement these resolutions, the National Council in 1940 made provision for the registering with the executive secretary of Christian Social Relations such persons as were unwilling to bear arms because of their conscientious convictions. Under this provision some two hundred persons, members of our Church, registered and when the selective service act was passed later on, they were informed concerning their rights under that law.

The selective training and service act became law in September, 1940. The Congress profited by the experience gained in world war I and made provision for conscientious objectors to register as objectors and to perform non-combatant service of national importance. It provided that conscientious objectors should be removed from military camps and be detained or employed in other places. It appointed special officers to examine each conscientious objector personally and also allowed religious agencies to provide some care for those who were assigned to civilian service. During world war II, there was not evident the hysteria in connection with this matter that took place in world war I.

Curiously enough, these well-intentioned legal provisions resulted in practical effects which deny the effort of the law to provide justice for a minority. These effects came about by reason of the ways in which the provisions of the law were locally interpreted and actually resulted in the imprisonment of over three times as many conscientious objectors as were imprisoned in the last world war. These interpretations produced (1) a narrower basis of recommendation as to what constituted conscientious objection; (2) inadequate provision for civilian service of national importance; (3) control of the conscientious objectors by military officers at all critical points in their career; (4) no provision for appeal except on the part of those assigned to civilian public service to work without pay and, in fact, to support themselves and their dependents as best they could; (5) the prohibition of those who were on detached service (those who served as guinea pigs in government experimental service) from receiving all of the wages they so earned, although this was allowed in world war I; (6) no provision was made for the care of dependents nor for compensation for injury or death in such service.

During the present war, 103 members of the Protestant Episcopal Church have been in civilian public service camps and 15 of them have been in prison. For the most part, they and their dependents have been cared for by the "peace Churches" because the best efforts of our own commission to provide for them have been inadequate.

In 1943 the General Convention set up a joint commission on conscientious objectors:

> (a) To assure the members of this Church who by reason of religious training and belief are conscientiously opposed to participation in war of the continuing fellowship of the Church with them and care for them; (b) to maintain through the committee on conscientious objectors under the department of international justice and good will of the Federal Council of Churches an official relationship under the provisions set up by the selective service act; and (c) to inform the Church from time to time of the situation in its several aspects and to receive and raise such funds on a purely voluntary basis as are needed for the support of active members of our Church who are conscientious objectors and whose personal funds are inadequate; in such manner and in such sums as the National Council may approve—the necessary expenses of the commission being met out of other funds."

The efforts of the commission to discharge the responsibilities laid upon it by the General Convention will be found in its report to General Convention. By its own efforts, it has raised certain sums of money, but it is not enough to repay the Churches who have generously cared for our people as well as for their own. Here is a moral obligation which the Church should face and meet irrespective of any individual attitude toward war.

For conscience' sake, these men have endured hardship without pay, without provision for their dependents and without provision for possible injury or death in the course of the work assigned. Out of the total number of conscientious objectors, 24 of those who served in civilian public service were killed in the discharge of that service. It so happens that, so far as we know, no one of our own Church members was killed, but they are being mustered out of the service at a rate of 5 per cent as compared to 50 per cent with the armed services. They receive no mustering-out pay, they have no additional aids, no job priorities and no guarantee that they will have their old job back.

Men who obey their conscience are going to be needed as a bulwark of the nation in the difficult days ahead. In the present moral let-down of our people, it hardly seems necessary to argue such a point. Too many times, the most vociferous people are those who have had the least acquaintance with

(Continued on page 17)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Seek Five Million Dollars To Support Rural Work

Leaders In Rural Church Work Ask Funds Of General Convention Promised In 1932

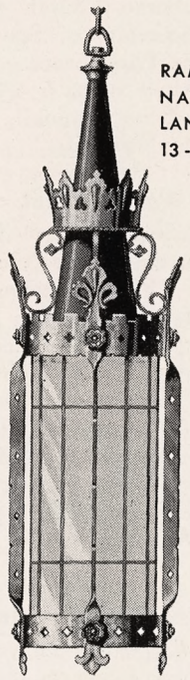
Edited by Philip L. Shutt

New York:—Calling upon General Convention to fulfill its 15-year-old promise of raising $5,000,000 to establish a missionary program for rural America, the national conference on rural work of the Episcopal Church meeting at Madison, Wisconsin, has now released its findings and expresses the fear that unless the Church takes such an immediate step to actively promote a rural life program it will become a declining urban group.

The report attacks the present General Convention set-up as being too largely urban in representation, the department of promotion of the National Council as being mainly interested in materials for city parishes, and just as strongly faults most of the Church seminaries for not providing adequate training courses in town and leadership training.

The report makes certain recommendations: 1) a redefining of the Church's position on theological education advocating a major financial responsibility for clergy training by the Church; 2) the establishment of a central agency for the acceptance of candidates whose own dioceses or missionary districts are unable to train them, and a central placement bureau both under the personnel committee of the National Council; 3) courses in Christian education for smaller churches where there may be, as an example, schools with four teachers or less; 4) cooperation with secular agencies and other religious agencies in ministering to the total community; 5) college pastors to be trained in rural work since most students come from the town and country; 6) clergy to be given basic training fitting them to serve in any part of the Church's work especially in the town and country field; 7) use of the national center for field training of rural clergy at Parkville, Missouri, for clergy whose theological education lacks such emphasis; 8) either a full time officer in charge of planning and survey as an assistant to the secretary for rural work or the use of three or four part-time assistants capable of evaluating rural projects; 9) no restrictions as to what seminary candidates for the ministry, irrespective of race, shall attend; 10) that it be the policy of dioceses to define, print and distribute to each bishop and diocesan chairman of missions and Church extension a program for rural work; 11) the use of radio transcriptions on local stations written in simple and direct language based upon the Prayer Book rather than using programs like the Church of the Air; and 12) discriminating use of visual aids.

The Rev. Charles G. Hamilton, Aberdeen, Miss., was chairman of the findings group and was joined by Irwin St. John Tucker of Chicago, Ralph Kendall of Alabama, Frederick Raasch of Kansas, Norman Stockett of Quincy, Ill., Ruth Whinfield of Fond du Lac, Wis., William Davidson of Montana, and Harry Robbins of Alabama, as co-signers.



Budget Committee

Sewanee, Tenn.:—Bishop R. Bland Mitchell of Arkansas, vacationing here, has issued the following statement as the convenor of the program and budget committee of General Convention:

"Under the action of the 1943 General Convention creating the joint committee on program and budget for 1946, the resolution provided that this Joint Committee shall afford opportunities for public hearings, both before and during General Convention of 1946.

"Because of the opening day (Tuesday), the joint committee can have a pre-Convention session of only one day (Monday) which, perforce, must be devoted mainly to organization and the setting up of its many sub-committees and dividing out the work. The committee, therefore believes that it would be better for all concerned if public hearings may be deferred until after the Convention has opened, thus allowing the committee its one pre-Convention day in which to get its affairs arranged so as to be ready for hearings.

"However, since the resolution calls for provision of opportunities for public hearings before Convention, as the convenor of the committee I ask the courtesy of your columns to give notice that the joint committee on program and budget will meet at 10 a. m. (daylight time) Monday, September 9, in The Bishop White Room, second floor of Houston Hall, 3417 Spruce Street, Philadelphia; and that those desiring hearings on that day may write me

Craftsmanship and Correct Lighting

Graceful form and fine craftsmanship, coupled with the latest features of correct lighting make this lantern a favorite among clergy and church architects alike. If you have a problem in church lighting, and are interested in reading a searching analysis of fundamental principles and latest practice in Church Lighting, write for a copy of our new free illustrated booklet.

RAMBUSCH
Designers Decorators and Craftsmen
2 West 45th St. ~ New York 19, N.Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

to that effect, giving Philadelphia address (and phone number, if possible) at which the committee may notify them the approximate hour it will be far enough along in its work to hold public hearings.

Bishop Mitchell's address until September 1 is Sewanee, Tenn.; after that he is to be addressed at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, Philadelphia.

America's Faults

Fremont, Neb. (RNS):—G. Franklin Koch, executive secretary of the board of social missions of the United Lutheran Church suggested here that Secretary of State Byrnes admit to the Paris peace conference that the United States is selfish, suspicious, and has economic and imperialistic ambitions.

Women Meet

Grand Rapids, Mich.:—The third biennial assembly of the United Council of Church Women will be held here from November 11 to 15, according to an announcement made by Mrs. Harper Sibley of New York, president. Two thousand women representing 68 Protestant denominations are expected to attend from America and foreign countries. The chief theme of the conference will be "Till we attain to the unity of faith."

Archbishop Guest

New York:—When the Archbishop of Canterbury comes to this city in September one of the numerous functions he will attend is a reception and dinner given by the Church Club at the Waldorf-Astoria hotel Monday evening, September 16.

Welfare Group

Romney, W. Va.:—"If the Church people through cowardice or inertia stand idly by in the bleachers watching the struggle for justice in the arena, we have no reason to lament if intelligent, sensible and vigorous young adults go into secular reform movements leaving the Church to those who do little but express sorrow over its ineffectiveness," said the Rev. Ben W. Tinsley, rector of St. Matthew's, Charleston, W. Va., in addressing the conference on social relations sponsored by the department of Christian social relations of the diocese which met here July 27-29. Questions such as feeding Europe, the relationship of parishes to community agencies, and methods of combating projudice and hatred were discussed under such leaders as the Rev. Almon R. Pepper, executive secretary of the division of social relations of the National Council, Miss Dorothy Stabler, associate secretary for social relations of the Woman's Auxiliary, and the Rev. Beverley M. Boyd, WITNESS editor and executive secretary of the department of Christian social relations of the Federal Council of Churches.

SUMMER SERVICES

New York City
CHURCH OF THE HOLY TRINITY
316 East 88th Street
The Rev. James A. Paul, Vicar
Sunday: H. C. 8 a.m. Morning Service, 11 a.m. Thursday, 11 a.m.

CHURCH OF ST. MARY THE VIRGIN
46th Street, east of Times Square
The Rev. Grieg Taber, Rector
Sunday Masses: 7, 9, 11 (High).
Evening Prayer and Benediction, 8.

ST. PAUL'S CHAPEL
Columbia University
The Rev. Stephen F. Bayne Jr., Chaplain
Daily (except Saturday): 8 a.m.
Sunday: Morning Prayer and Sermon, 11. H. C. 9 a.m. and 12:30 noon (no services June 3 to July 6).

Millbrook, New York
GRACE CHURCH
The Rev. H. Ross Greer, Rector
Services 8:30 and 11 every Sunday.
Located on Route forty-four.

Denver, Colorado
ST. JOHN'S CATHEDRAL
The Very Rev. Paul Roberts, Dean
The Rev. Harry Watts
Sunday: 7:30, 8:30, 9:30, 11, 4:30.
Wednesday, 7:15. Thurs. and Holy Days, 10:30.

ST. MARK'S CHURCH
The Rev. Walter Williams, Rector
Sunday: 7, 8, 9:30 and 11.
Wednesday, 11 a.m. Thurs. and Holy Days, 7 a.m.

Ann Arbor, Michigan
ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH
University of Michigan
The Rev. Henry Lewis, Rector
Sunday: H. C. 8 a.m. Morning Prayer, 11 a.m.
Canterbury Club (students and servicemen) 6 p.m.
Wednesday: H. C. 7:15 a.m.

St. Louis, Missouri
CHURCH OF ST. MICHAEL & ST. GEORGE
Washington University
The Rev. J. Francis Sant, Rector
The Rev. C. George Widdifield, Minister of Education
Sunday: 7:30 and 11 a.m.
Canterbury Club, 5:30 twice monthly.

Pittsburgh
CALVARY CHURCH
Shady and Walnut Aves.
The Rev. Lauriston L. Scaife, Rector
The Rev. A. Dixon Rollit
The Rev. Thaddeus A. Cheatham, D.D.
Sunday: 8, 9:30, 11 a. m.; 8 p. m.
H. C. daily 8 a.m., Fridays, 7:30 and 10 a. m.
Holy Days, 10 a. m.

Palo Alto, California
ALL SAINTS' CHURCH
Stanford University
The Rev. Oscar F. Green, Rector
Services: 8 and 11.
Union Service: 7:45 p.m.

Cleveland
CHURCH OF THE INCARNATION
East 105th and Marlowe
The Rev. Robert B. Campbell, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 a.m.

Utica, New York
GRACE CHURCH
Genesee and Elizabeth Sts.
The Rev. Harold E. Sawyer, Rector
Sunday: H. C. 8. Morning Prayer and H. C. 11. Evening Prayer, 4:30.
Weekday: Tues. and Thurs. H. C. 10.
Wed. 12:30. Friday, H. C. 7:30.

Chester, Penna.
ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
Broad and Madison Sts.
The Rev. Stanley V. Wilcox, Rector
Service: Sunday: 8 and 10:30 a.m.
Wednesday at 10 a.m.

Ridgewood, New Jersey
CHRIST CHURCH
The Rev. A. J. Miller, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 a.m.
Friday and Holy Days: 9:30 a.m.

Tulsa, Oklahoma
TRINITY CHURCH
The Rev. E. H. Eckel Jr., Rector
Sunday: 7 and 8; Church School, 9:30 (Except August); Morning Service, 11 a.m. H. C. Friday and Holy Days, 10:30

Santa Monica, California
ST. AUGUSTINE - BY - THE - SEA
ST. AMBROSE CHAPEL
The Rev. W. N. Pierson
The Rev. D. J. Gallagher
The Rev. D. O. Platt
Sunday: 7:45, 9:30 and 11 a.m.; 7:30 a.m.
Daily 9:30 a.m. Thurs. 7:45.

Elkton, Maryland
TRINITY CHURCH
The Rev. J. Warren Albinson, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 9:30 a.m.
Wed. Litany, 8 p.m. Fri. and Holy Days, H. C. at 10 a.m.

Evanston, Illinois
ST. LUKE'S CHURCH
Lee and Hinman Streets
The Rev. Edward Thomas Taggard
The Rev. Joseph Barnes Williams
The Rev. Darwin Kieby, Jr.
Sunday: H. C. 7:30, 9 and 11.
Daily: H. C. 7:30 a.m. except Wed. at 7 and 11 a.m. Confessions Sat. 4:30-5:30 and 7:30-8 p.m.

Providence, Rhode Island
GRACE CHURCH
Mathewson and Westminster Sts.
The Rev. Clarence H. Horner, Rector
Sunday: H. C. 8 a.m.; Church School, 9:30 and 11 a.m. Morning Prayer and Sermon (H. C. first Sunday), 11 a.m.; Y.P.F., 5:30 p.m. Evening Prayer and Sermon, 7:30 p.m. Thurs. H. C. 11 a.m. Daily Noonday Prayers, 12 noon.

San Diego, California
ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
8th Avenue at C Street
The Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, Rector
The Rev. Harold B. Robinson
Sunday: 7:30, 11 a.m.; 7:30 p.m.
Fri. and Holy Days, 10 a.m.

Omaha, Nebraska
ALL SAINTS' CHURCH
The Rev. Fred W. Clayton, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 a.m. H. C. first Sunday at 11. Weekday, H. C. and Intercessions Wed. at 10 a.m.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

ST. JAMES LESSONS FOR CHURCH SCHOOLS

ILLUSTRATED SERIES

I. The Lord Jesus and Children (ages 6-8)
How the children may love God and work for Him.

II. Jesus, Lord of Heaven and Earth (ages 7-9)
The Life of Our Lord and His presence among men.

III. Friends of The Lord Jesus (ages 8-10)
The Lives of outstanding Christian men and women.

IV. The House of The Lord Jesus (ages 9-11)
A study of the Church building.

V. Christian Virtues (ages 10-12)
A study of the Ten Commandments.

VI. The Lord and His Servant (ages 11-14)
Confirmation course based on First Office of Instruction.

VII. The Lord and His Church (ages 12-15)
Confirmation course based on Second Office of Instruction.

VIII. The Lord Jesus Reveals God (ages 13-16)
The Life and Teachings of Jesus as they are found in the New Testament.

IX. How God Prepared for the Coming of Jesus (ages 14-17)
The story of the making of the people of Israel into a nation.

The Lessons are published at cost, without profit. First 3 Teacher's Manuals are 40 cents each —all other books, Pupil's and Teacher's, are 60 cents each. These prices include postage and handling charges in U.S.A. only.

CHECKS MUST ACCOMPANY ORDERS—NO BOOKS SENT ON APPROVAL

Orders and inquiries should be addressed to:

ST. JAMES LESSONS, Inc.
865 Madison Avenue New York 21, New York

The Seminaries Are on the Spot

They are being compared with our Law, Medical and other professional schools. It's no joke that people seem more concerned about the training of men to care for their tonsils and their last wills and testaments than about the preparation of those who are to be their spiritual guides. But that is what the comparison seems to prove.

No one wants the Seminaries to be luxury institutions, but the Church must see to it that they are not kept at the present starvation level in necessary equipment, faculty support and scholarship funds.

BERKELEY DIVINITY SCHOOL, NEW HAVEN, CONN.; BEXLEY HALL, GAMBIER, OHIO; BISHOP PAYNE DIVINITY SCHOOL, PETERSBURG, VIRGINIA; CHURCH DIVINITY SCHOOL OF THE PACIFIC, BERKELEY, CALIF.; DIVINITY SCHOOL OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA; EPISCOPAL THEOLOGICAL SCHOOL, CAMBRIDGE, MASS.; THE GENERAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, NEW YORK CITY; NASHOTAH HOUSE, NASHOTAH, WIS.; SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF THE SOUTH, SEWANEE, TENN.; SEABURY-WESTERN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, EVANSTON, ILL.; VIRGINIA THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, ALEXANDRIA, VIRGINIA.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Student Center

New Orleans:—The diocese of Louisiana has purchased a lot adjoining the campus of Tulane University and Newcomb College here on which to erect a student center for Church work among the students of the two affiliated schools. It is to be known as the Francis Lister Hawks Student Center and construction is planned for early 1947.

Senior Warden

St. Louis:—The rare privilege of presenting his senior warden as a candidate for the piresthood was afforded the Rev. W. B. T. Hastings, rector of St. Paul's, Overland, recently when Bishop William Scarlett ordained Arthur B. Geeson. Mr. Geeson was mayor of Overland and sales manager of an industrial concern and lay-reader in charge of St. Paul's during his rector's absence as a navy chaplain. He has been placed in charge of Carondelet parish which has been under the pastoral care of Christ Church Cathedral and will also take charge of Christ Church mission, Afton.

Press Meeting

Philadelphia:—National Diocesan Press, the organization of editors of diocesan papers and magazines in the Episcopal Church will hold its annual meeting September 9 in Philadelphia in St. Stephen's community house from 2 until 7 o'clock, the Rev. G. R. Madson, Albany, Ga., president of the organization, announces.

Preceding the actual business of the association will be a series of papers and discussion on matters of concern to the editors. This will be the first meeting since the General Convention dinner meeting three years ago in Cleveland, Ohio, intervening meetings have been made impossible by the war.

Generous

Hillsdale, Mich.:—The Episcopal Church ranked fourth in 1945 in the total amount of contributions for benevolent purposes among 20 Protestant denominations according to statistics released here by the home office of the United Stewardship Council based upon reports from the national officers of the cooperating bodies. But it was almost at the bottom of the list in the amount of gifts per member for foreign missions.

Episcopalians gave $7,068,676 for all benevolent purposes to be exceeded by the Methodists, who gave the most, and by the Southern Baptist and northern Presbyterian Churches. In the total gifts for all purposes the Episcopal Church with $40,181,098 was topped again by the Methodists, Southern Baptists and northern Presbyterians.

Church support for foreign missions revealed that the Episcopal Church ranked tenth and that it gave only $.43 per member to rank sixteenth in the per capita estimate.

Announce Plans

Berkeley, Calif.:—The Church Divinity School of the Pacific will open its 53rd year September 18 with a capacity enrollment, classes beginning on the 23rd. A new program includes a careful supervision of the devotional life of the students. The Rev. Henry Shires is dean.

New Bishop

New York:—The Rev. Quentin K. Y. Huang was consecrated bishop of South China and Hong Kong August 14 in All Saints' Church, Santa Barbara, Cal., by Bishop A. A. Gilman of Hankow assisted by Bishops Y. Y. Tsu and W. Bertrand Stevens. The new bishop received his master's degree from the University of Pennsylvania and holds two degrees from the Philadelphia Divinity School. He has been working among students in Kweiyang, Free China, and will now take the work done by Bishop Tsu who will be in charge of the Church's new central office in Nanking.

Quakers

Philadelphia (RNS):—The civilian public service section of the American Friends Service Committee will be liquidated August 31 it was announced here. An interim committee will carry on services to Quakers affected by the draft. Formed in January 1941 Friends CPS totaled 10 camps and 21 units which served about 3.000 young men of draft age. They rendered service in fire fighting, soil or forest conservation, mental hospitals, and other work.

BRUGLER HOUSE

on Rye Lake, near White Plains, N. Y., offers clergymen and other active Church workers the quiet surroundings of a small estate for a holiday or vacation. For information and rates, write

Lindley M. Franklin, Jr., Secy.
281 Fourth Ave., New York 10, N. Y.

Just Published

Tips to Teachers

by

Vernon McMaster

Church School teachers and those who are preparing to become Church School teachers will welcome this much-needed guide to some fundamental approaches and principles of effective teaching.

The author makes his instruction painless by allowing the reader to "sit in" on a series of Tuesday night meetings of a pastor and his five teacher-trainees. In nine provocative discussions, the pastor helps his future teachers to understand the purpose of teaching, the child's way of learning, the goals of a Church School teacher, the tools which teachers can use, the weaknesses and strengths of workbooks, the value of a Church School library, and many other teaching problems. From time to time, the pastor summarizes his most important directions in a number of easily remembered "tips."

The appendix contains questions which test the reader's assimilation of the material and provides definite procedures for the reader to follow in making practical application of the instruction.

Chapter headings are as follows: Selected for Service, The All-Important Desire, Thinking and Doing, Center of the Target, A Contributing Member, Goal Ahead, Helps for You, Planning Together, Judgment Day.

$1.25

* * *

MOREHOUSE - GORHAM CO.

14 E. 41st St. New York 17

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Liberty and Justice

(Continued from page 12)

real hardship and are chiefly concerned with furthering their own interests. They are so noisy that they sometimes sound like a great crowd, but it is the still small voice that provides the only sure direction for the nation. The nation remains sound only when complete justice is done to minorities. The nation and the world need the direction of Christian conscience. Irrespective of our own beliefs about war, these people are entitled to justice both as fellow citizens and fellow Christians. We hope and pray that those who are now imprisoned for conscience' sake will soon be released, and that the example of President Roosevelt in extending a general amnesty to those who stood out for conscience' sake in the last war will soon be followed by a similar act to those who took such a stand in the present war.

What are you willing to do to further liberty and justice for all?

How Civilian Public Service Worked for the CO's

(Continued from Page 5)

Some CPS men insisted upon and finally got camps under direct government supervision, in which they felt freer to resist the establishment of the system of forced payless labor in which they were involved. Then six months after the end of the Pacific war, the American Friends Service Committee withdrew from its direct responsibility for a large share of the program, feeling that continued cooperation with SSS in administering drafted C.O.'s was a condoning of conscription as well as of the fixed evils of CPS.

Space does not permit a detailed account of the types of work accomplished by men in CPS, but some evaluation of the program as a whole may be in order. A majority of CPS men would agree, I think, that it was wrong in principle for the government to draft men without pay, or dependency allotments or injury compensation. And this wrong begat the more insidious evils of careless project selection and careless job planning by the government agencies directing actual work. With a few striking exceptions, there was steady and unnecessary waste of time and talents in CPS camps. What is unpaid-for is unvalued. The demoralization produced by this single factor invisibly riddled every good fruit of CPS, robbing it of much of its worth.

The cooperating Church agencies, Brethren, Mennonite, Friends, Episcopal, and others, by undertaking the cost of administering many camps and units, including maintenance of the several thousands of assignees involved, found themselves in a superficially good position to counsel and guide the men and to influence SSS policy. In practice, the men very often distrustfully viewed the Church agency as an arm of the government, however, while SSS for its part, irked by Church sympathy with the C.O.'s, did not hesitate at times to push the agencies aside and issue its authoritarian dictates direct to the men. It seemed sometimes that the authority of the Church agencies was either by tolerance of SSS or not at all.

Selective service has felt that CPS provided the best solution yet devised for handling a dissident minority in wartime. It offered a well-controlled and sufficiently punitive restraint for men who would otherwise be a burden on the prison system. Under its roundabout suasion, some men preferred to subdue their principles and join the army, rather than leave wife or children destitute, and, of course, such conversions made good political capital for SSS in Congressional hearings.

CPS was one of those experiments which have to be tried once. It is certainly one which must never be repeated. Only a few great goods will remain to sweeten its memory. Among these are the fruits of some of the medical guinea pig experiments in which a handful of CPS men were allowed to participate, and the harvest of public enlightenment on mental hospitals which should

General Convention

Will Be Completely Covered by THE WITNESS by a staff consisting of Five Writers.

The Rev. Frederick C. Grant

The Rev. W. B. Spofford — The Rev. Philip L. Shutt

Mrs. Frederick C. Grant — The Rev. W. B. Spofford Jr.

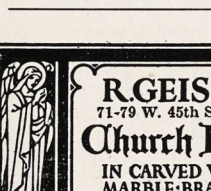
There will be five numbers starting with the Pre-Convention Number of September 5, with the last of the five presenting a comprehensive review of the accomplishments of the Convention. THE WITNESS for these five numbers will be sent in bundles of ten or more for distribution in parishes at 6c a copy. Please order at once by using the form below or sending a postal stating the number desired. We will then bill at the end of Convention.

NO FURTHER DIRECT MAILING IS TO BE DONE SOLICITING ORDERS. THEREFORE PLEASE ACT ON THE ABOVE SUGGESTIONS AT ONCE.

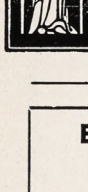
The Witness, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

Enter order for_____copies of the five General Convention Numbers. I will send payment at 6c a copy on receipt of bill following Convention.

Name_____



Street_____ City_____ Zone_____



Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Write us for
Organ Information
AUSTIN ORGANS, Inc.
Hartford, Conn.

Memorial Windows
In accordance with the best traditions of the craft. Notable installations in forty states and five foreign countries.
Illustrated material on request
The D'Ascenzo Studios
founded 1896
1604 Summer Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

ALTAR BREADS ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED
SAINT MARY'S CONVENT
KENOSHA • WISCONSIN

MENEELY BELL CO.
22 RIVER ST., TROY, N. Y.
BELLS

R. GEISSLER, INC.
71-79 W. 45th St., New York 19, N. Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE·BRASS·SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS
EST 1837

ERNEST W. LAKEMAN
Designer and Worker in
STAINED GLASS
2 CRESCENT PLACE
YONKERS, NEW YORK

Need a LAXATIVE?
Black-Draught is
1-Usually prompt
2-Usually thorough
3-Always economical

25 to 40 doses only 25¢
Get BLACK-DRAUGHT
CAUTION: USE ONLY AS DIRECTED

follow a return of the many hundred CPS attendants to their home communities.

These benefits are not enough to have justified the concealment of so large an element of punitive servitude, behind the fine name of Civilian Public Service.

CLERGY NOTES

COOL, WILLIAM I. JR., was ordained priest July 16 by Bishop Austin Pardue in St. Thomas's Church, Barnesboro, Pa., and is priest-in-charge of St. Thomas's and also Trinity, Patton.

COLE, A. E., rector of Trinity, Bloomington, Ind., has been elected a director of Rotary International to become the first American clergyman so honored.

D'AMICO, CANON S. R., director of religious education for the diocese of Rhode Island, and Miss Alice Virginia Shepherd were married July 21 at the Church of the Transfiguration, Edgewood, by Bishop Granville Bennett.

EDWIN, CHARLES J., assistant at St. Andrew's, Fort Worth, Tex., will become rector of the Good Shepherd, Norwood, Ohio, September 1.

FREEMAN, ARTHUR C., was ordained deacon by Bishop Duncan Gray in St. Columba's, Jackson, Miss., July 24.

GRIBBIN, R. EMMET JR., assistant at the Chapel of the Cross, Chapel Hill, N. C., becomes rector of Harcourt parish and chaplain of Kenyon College, Gambier, Ohio, effective Sept. 15.

HACKWELL, R. LLOYD, former navy chaplain, will become rector of St. Andrew's, Albany, N. Y., where he is now assistant, Oct. 1.

HARGATE, ARTHUR W., rector of Trinity, Coshocton, Ohio, becomes rector of St. Timothy's, Massillon, Ohio, Oct. 1.

HARRIMAN, CHARLES G., rector-emeritus of St. Peter's, Albany, N. Y., died suddenly July 28 at his home in Greenfield, Mass.

LAMBERT, GUY W., was ordained deacon by Bishop-coadjutor Conrad Gesner at the Good Shepherd, Standing Rock reservation June 29 and will be in charge of St. Elizabeth's, Wakpala, S. D.

LANDON, HAROLD R., rector of St. Thomas's, Port Clinton, Ohio, becomes rector of St. Paul's, Steubenville, Ohio, Sept. 15.

LEAKER, ARTHUR W., was ordained priest by Bishop James DeWolfe Perry at St. John's Cathedral, Providence, R. I., Aug. 6.

MARTIN, SIDNEY U., was ordained deacon by Bishop-coadjutor Conrad Gesner June 29 at the Good Shepherd, Standing Rock Reservation, and will be in charge of St. Luke's, Ft. Yates, N. D.

MILLER, BENJAMIN has resigned as vicar of St. Mark's, Downey, Calif., to become locum tenens at Grace Church, Glendora, Calif., Sept. 1.

MOORE, EDWARD O., was ordained deacon by Bishop-coadjutor Conrad Gesner June 29 at the Good Shepherd, Standing Rock Reservation, and is in charge of the Church of Jesus, Rosebud Agency, S. D.

NOCE, SISTO J., 65, vicar of St. Anne's Spanish American Mission, El Paso, Tex., died July 30 after a brief illness.

REISTER, ROBERT A., assistant at St. Paul's, Chicago, becomes rector of All Saints', Appleton, Wis., Sept. 1.

SCOVIL, ARCHDEACON CHARLES B., associate rector of St. Andrew's, Kansas City, Mo., died July 9.

TAYLOR, CHARLES E., rector of All Saints', Toledo, Ohio, becomes rector of St. Augustine's, Gary, Ind., Sept. 1.

WATTLEY, DONALD H., rector of Grace Church, New Orleans, for 21 years, resigned Aug. 16.

WEST, PAUL L., former business man, was ordained deacon by Bishop Fred Ingley Aug. 6 in the Ascension, Pueblo, Colo., and will enter Seabury-Western this fall.

ASSOCIATE RECTOR
Wanted: Associate rector, 40 years or under, for large Midwest city parish; conservative churchman. Good salary, splendid opportunity. Reply to Box FT, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty St., New York, 6.

WOMEN SUPERVISORS
Wanted: Mature women, preferably Episcopalians, as supervisors children's home, Long Island. Pleasant surroundings, fine Christian atmosphere. Give training, experience, age, references, photo. Reply to Box GC, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty St., New York, 6.

Everything for the Episcopal Church
but vestments
A broad statement but we'd like to prove it.
Ammidon and Company
Horace L. Varian
Horace L. Varian, Jr.
31 South Frederick Street
Baltimore 2, Maryland

PURE IRISH LINENS NOW IN STOCK
for all Church needs, supplies constantly arriving, good qualities, also fine cottons. Samples free.
Mary Fawcett Company
Plainfield, N. J. Box 146

CATHEDRAL STUDIOS
Washington & London, England. Linens and materials by the yard, surplices, albs, Altar Linens, stoles, burses & veils. Materials by the yard. See my NEW BOOK "CHURCH EMBROIDERY" & CHURCH VESTMENTS a complete instruction. 128 pages, 95 illus. Price $5.67. And my HANDBOOK for ALTAR GUILDS, price 50c. Miss L. V. Mackrille, 11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington 15, D.C. 30 minutes from U. S. Treasury. Tel. Wisconsin 2752.

SURPLICES — STOLES
VESTMENTS
CHURCH HANGINGS
ALTAR LINENS
CASSOCKS
CLERICAL SUITS — CLOAKS
RABATS—RABAT VESTS—COLLARS—SHIRTS
Choir Vestments in All Styles
Inquiries Invited
C. M. ALMY & SON, INC.
562 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.

VESTMENTS for CLERGY and CHOIR
Altar Linens . . . Embroideries . . . Tailoring . . . Episcopal Flags. Send for Catalog
J. M. HALL, INC.
14 W. 40th St., New York - Tel. CH 4-3306
Office & Salesroom
"Orders taken for serge cassocks for J. Wippell & Co., Ltd."

The Payne-Spiers Studios Inc.
Studios at Paterson, New Jersey
Carved Wood
Chancel Renovations Church Furnishings
Murals Memorials Tablets
Stained Glass
-- Inquiries Solicited --

VESTMENTS
Cassocks - Surplices - Stoles - Scarves
Silks - Altar Cloths - Embroideries
Priest Cloaks - Rabats - Collars
Custom Tailoring for Clergymen
1837 Church Vestment Makers Over One Hundred Years 1946
COX SONS & VINING, Inc.
131 East 23rd Street, New York 10, N.Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

WALTER MITCHELL
Retired Bishop of Arizona

The Rev. Mr. Longley did the whole Church a great service when he started the discussion with respect to the next Presiding Bishop, but the discussion has not gone far enough (WITNESS, Feb. 28). Both as to this matter and everything else affecting the life of the Church, we shall not get very far until we agree and act upon it that "The Work Comes First", and individual workers, no matter who and no matter how much we love them are, after all, important only as they set forward the work. As I have had occasion to say before, we are too tender of persons and that practice should cease. In discussing the sort of man we should select next time, we are apt to list qualities which no one man has ever had and that he must be a saint to boot. I should like to get down to earth and mention just one thing in particular.

THE CHURCH MISSIONS HOUSE NEEDS CLEANING OUT! And I do not refer to the building. This house cleaning is long over-due. Any one familiar with the situation knows that but, as I say, we are so tender of persons, to date we have done nothing. Some, not close enough to the situation to do more than to point out this need, have done that. As far back as the General Convention in Cincinnati—nine years ago—the committee on budget and program came right out and said that such a cleaning out was necessary and (I write from memory but I think I am correct as to the effect of their statement), the secretaries should understand this. That was plain notice that at least some of the secretaries should take the hint, if such a plain statement could be called a hint. It also put the new Presiding Bishop and National Council on notice that action would be expected. This report was accepted by both Houses of General Convention, which makes it about as wide an opinion of the whole Church as we can get.

The Presiding Bishop and National Council have done a grand job. As a result, they have the confidence of the Church as a whole as, I think it fair say, none of their predecessors have in a long time. But they have failed as to this particular and most important job of cleaning house. Hence my suggestion THAT NO BISHOP NOW A MEMBER OF THE NATIONAL COUNCIL WOULD BE APT TO DO THIS JOB PROPERLY. We are too tender of persons. Such bishops would agree that the job badly needs doing but he would be apt to be on such friendly terms with the personnel that he just might not have what it takes to do the job properly.

There is nothing unusual in this situation. It is apt to be so as to any organization or institution in the Church. A generation ago the University of the South was in equal need of a house-cleaning. When a friend was elected Vice Chancellor (executive head to those who do not know Sewanee), I urged him to tackle this job almost as soon as he went into residence; otherwise, he would find himself on such intimate terms with the personnel that he would just not have the heart to clean house. He agreed that the job was long overdue; he meant to do it but he waited too long and never did, to the great damage of the University.

The work comes first. Since the law of averages is against any bishop now on the Council being hard boiled enough, let us not run that risk by electing any of them. They are all good friends and it is not easy to write this, but the work comes first.

* * *

REV. RICHARD WILKINSON
Priest of Augusta, Pa.

It gives me great pleasure to say that THE WITNESS keeps on the same high plane, always progressing, keeping up with the time and conditions, be they ecclesiastical or anything else. You do a wonderful job for the Church's reading constituency.

ST. JOHN'S MILITARY SCHOOL
Salina, Kansas

Since 1887 St. John's has been perpetuating the cultural traditions of the Church by stressing sound scholarship in Christian atmosphere.

Grades 6-12. Fully accredited. Bar I.L. Summer School and Camp in Colorado Rockies. Boys 8-15. Splendid equipment. 10,000 acres.

The Rev. R. L. Clem, Rector

St. Margaret's House
School for Christian Service and Deaconess Training School of the Pacific
A graduate school preparing women for Church positions in the fields of religious education, social service, and evangelistic work. Opportunity to work for advanced degrees. Special training for work in Orient.
ADDRESS THE DEAN
1820 Scenic Ave. Berkeley 4, California

CATHEDRAL CHOIR SCHOOL
NEW YORK
A Boarding and Day School for Boys
Established 1849
A BOARDING SCHOOL for the forty boys of the Choir of the Cathedral of Saint John the Divine. The boys receive careful musical training and sing daily at the service in the Cathedral. The classes in the School are small with the result that boys have individual attention, and very high standards are maintained. The School has its own building and playgrounds in the close. Fee—$350.00 per annum. Boys admitted 9 to 11. Voice test and scholastic examination. For Catalogue and Information address:
The CANON PRECENTOR,
Cathedral Choir School,
Cathedral Heights, New York City

Virginia Episcopal School
Lynchburg, Virginia
Prepares boys for colleges and university. Splendid environment and excellent corps of teachers. High standard in scholarship and athletics. Healthy and beautiful location in the mountains of Virginia.
For catalogue apply to
George L. Barton, Jr., Ph.D Headmaster,
Box 408

SCHOOLS

The Hospital of Saint Barnabas and the University of Newark offer a full course in NURSING
to qualified High School graduates. Scholarships available. Classes enter in February and September
Apply to
Director of Nursing
HOSPITAL OF SAINT BARNABAS
685 High Street Newark, N. J.

DE VEAUX SCHOOL
FOUNDED 1852
A Church school for boys. Thorough preparation for college. Military system of student government, developing sense of responsibility. Charges for grades seven and eight $1000; grades nine through twelve $1050. For catalog, address THE HEADMASTER, DeVeaux School, Niagara Falls, New York.

HOLDERNESS
In the White Mountains. College Preparatory and General Courses. Music and Crafts. For boys 12-19. All sports including riding. 200 acres of woods. New fireproof building. Individual attention. Home atmosphere.
Rev. Edric A. Weld, Rector
Box W. Plymouth, N. H.

MARGARET HALL
Under Sisters of St. Helena
(Episcopal)
Small country boarding and day school for girls, from primary through high school. Accredited college preparatory. Modern building recently thoroughly renovated includes gymnasium and swimming pool. Campus of six acres with ample playground space, hockey field and tennis court. Riding. Board and Tuition $800. For catalog, address: Sister Rachel, Prin. O.S.H., Box A. Versailles, Kentucky.

FORK UNION
MILITARY ACADEMY
An Honor Christian School with the highest academic rating. Upper School prepares for university or business. ROTC. Every modern equipment. Junior School from six years. Housemother. Separate building. Catalogue. Dr. J. J. Wicker, Fork Union, Virginia.

CARLETON COLLEGE
Laurence M. Gould, D.Sc., President
Carleton is a co-educational liberal arts college of limited enrollment and is recognized as the Church College of Minnesota.
Address: Assistant to the President
CARLETON COLLEGE
Northfield Minnesota

KEMPER HALL
KENOSHA, WISCONSIN
Boarding and day school for girls offering thorough college preparation and training for purposeful living. Study of the Fine Arts encouraged. Complete sports program. Junior School department. Beautiful lake shore campus. Under direction of the Sisters of St. Mary. For catalogue, address: Box WT.

ROWLAND HALL
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
Boarding and Day pupils. Accredited. Preschool, Lower school, College Preparatory and General courses. Graduates in many eastern and western colleges. All branches of music, dancing, art, drama Indoor pool, tennis courts, riding, weekends of winter sports. Pleasant home life. Environment of geographical and historical interest. Altitude 4500. Boarding $1,000, Day $120-$350.
The Right Rev. Arthur W. Moulton, S.T.D., Rector

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

LET'S PAY OUR JUST DEBTS

Photo by Ed Nafzigev

SMOKE JUMPER C. O. Paratrooper used in fighting forest fires. Smoke Jumpers Camp, Huson, Montana

Ninety members of the Episcopal Church have served as conscientious objectors during World War II. Because their religious convictions forbade them to enlist in the armed forces of our country they were sent by the government to C. P. S. (Civilian Public Service) camps and later were assigned as orderlies to mental hospitals, as smoke jumpers in the U. S. Forest Service and human guinea pigs in medical experiments. Their record of service during the war years is a remarkable report to read.

These men however had to serve without pay, without provision for dependents, with no G. I. Bill of Rights and had to maintain themselves to cover food and lodging (cost in C. P. S. camp $30 a month). Most of these men had no resources to support themselves, much less their families. Over the years a deficit of $50,000 grew. The General Convention of 1943, recognizing this very real obligation to these men, set up a commission to raise funds for their support. $10,055.67 has been so far raised by this commission. 300 members of Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship have contributed $33,918.68 of their own money for this same purpose.

$6,000 is still owed by the Episcopal Church to the Historic Peace Churches who have temporarily met OUR obligations. SO LET'S PAY OUR JUST DEBTS!

Many of these ninety young men, loyal to our church and its teaching found their convictions from such statements as the following taken from the Pastoral Letter issued by the House of Bishops in 1933.

> "War is outlawed and solemn pacts affirm it. . . . As Christians we can have no part in any program that is designed to violate these principles enunciated by the Prince of Peace. War is murder on a colossal scale. . . .. The Christian Church cannot and will not deny loyalty and fealty to its Lord by being parties in any scheme, national or international, that contemplates the wholesale destruction of human life."

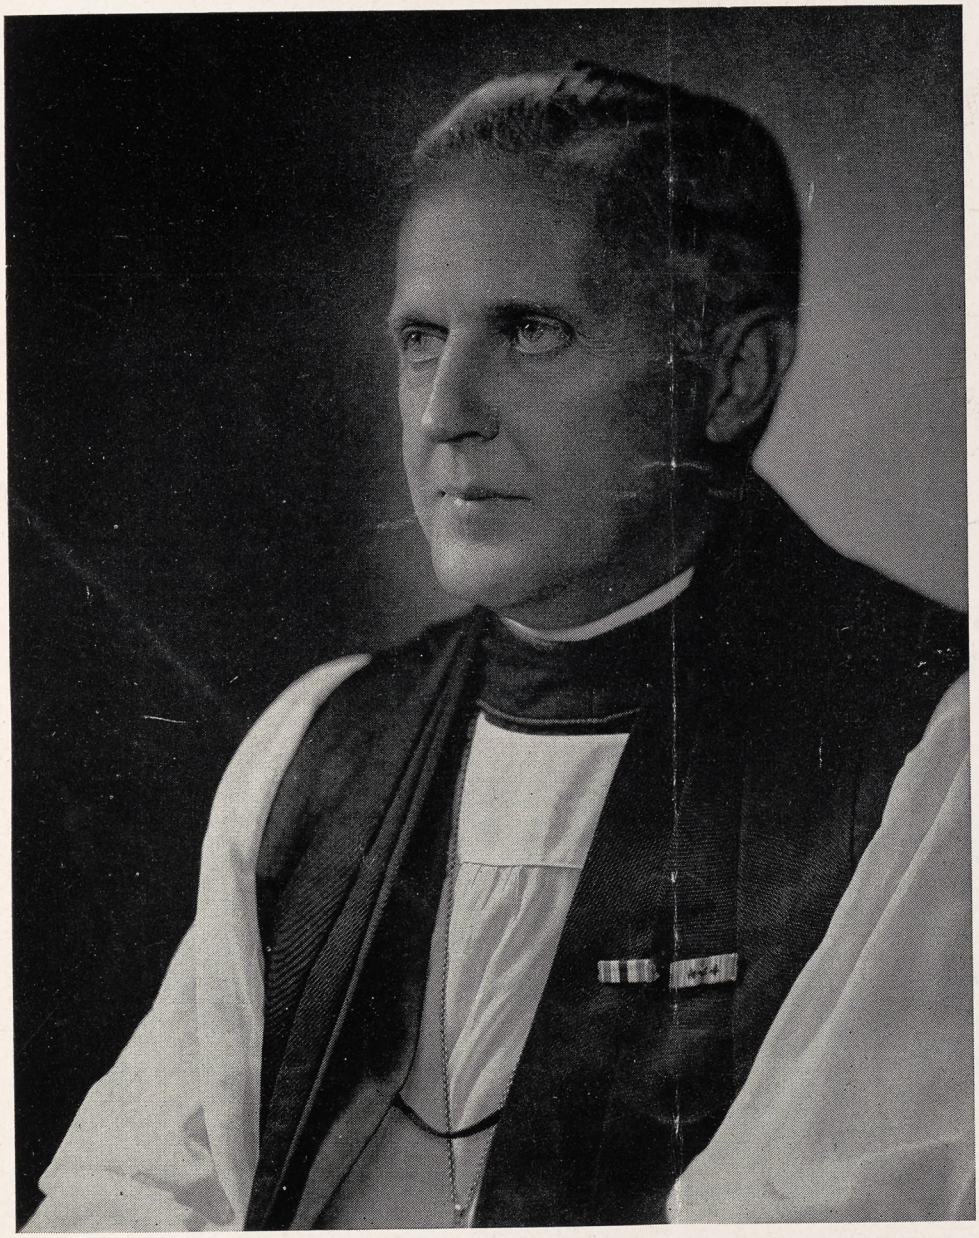
It is understandable in view of such statements as this why some of our members should have felt moved to become C. O.'s and we of the church have an obligation as General Convention says, "To assure such persons of the continuing fellowship of the church with them and care for them."

SEND YOUR CONTRIBUTION TO THE TREASURER,

EPISCOPAL PACIFIST FELLOWSHIP

53 Wall Street, New Haven 11, Conn.



Further inquiries regarding the E. P. F. should be addressed to:
Mrs. Henry H. Pierce, 9 East 94th St., New York 28, New York.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

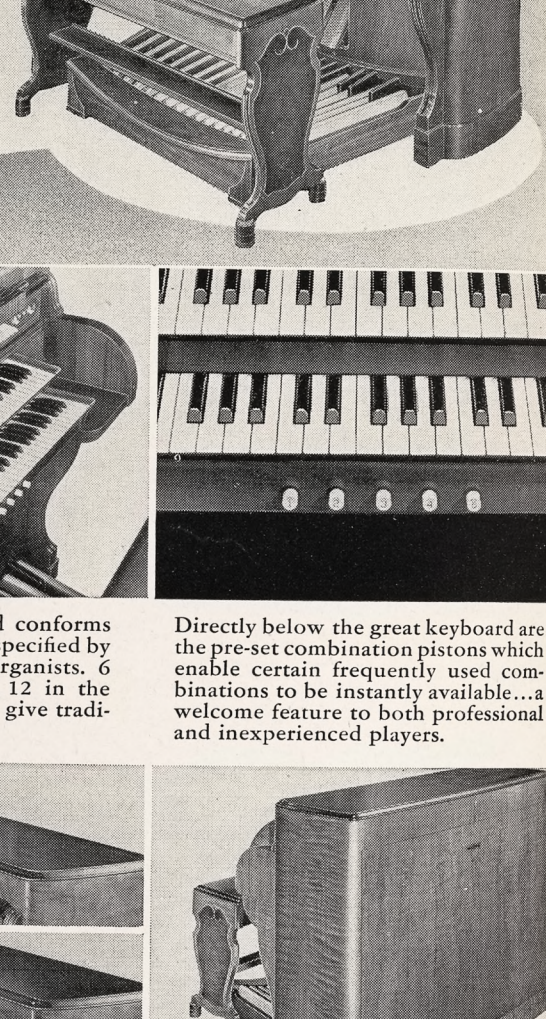
LIBRARY COPY

The WITNESS

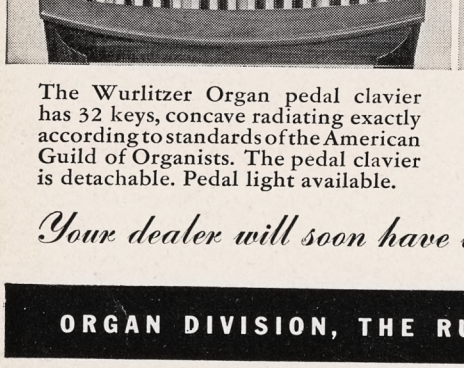
10¢ A COPY

SEPTEMBER 5, 1946

BISHOP OLIVER HART
OF PENNSYLVANIA
HOST OF CONVENTION

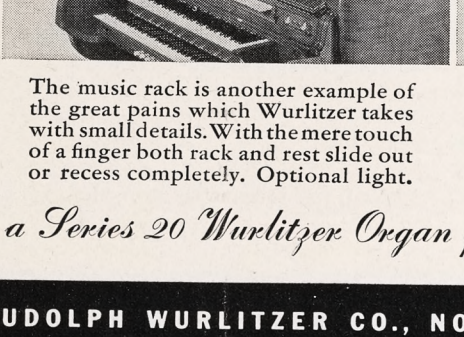


THE COMING GENERAL CONVENTION



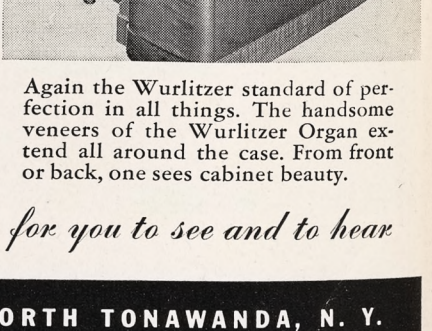
Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

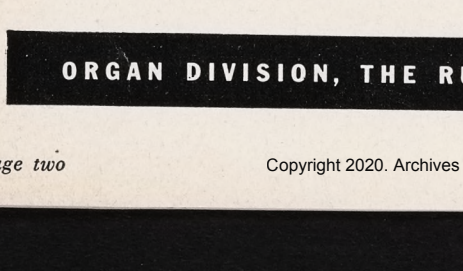
Preview of the superb new



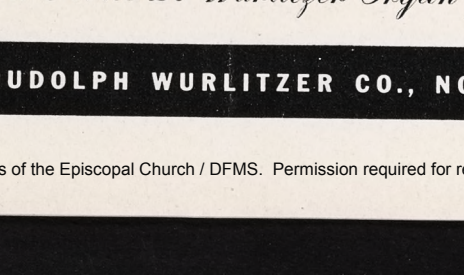
WURLITZER ORGAN

Music's Richest Voice...

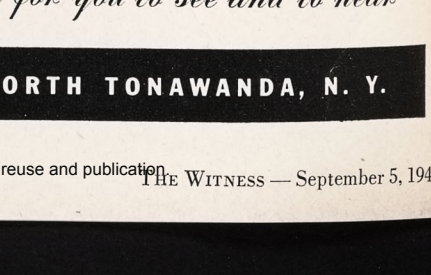




Wurlitzer, long skilled in cabinet-making, has lavishly used expensive veneers to make the new Organ superbly handsome. Open, as at the top of this page, or closed, as here, it will enrich any religious setting.



The two-manual keyboard conforms to all playing dimensions specified by the American Guild of Organists. 6 stop tablets in the Pedal, 12 in the Swell and 15 in the Great give traditional pipe-organ variety.



Directly below the great keyboard are the pre-set combination pistons which enable certain frequently used combinations to be instantly available...a welcome feature to both professional and inexperienced players.

The Wurlitzer Organ pedal clavier has 32 keys, concave radiating exactly according to standards of the American Guild of Organists. The pedal clavier is detachable. Pedal light available.

The music rack is another example of the great pains which Wurlitzer takes with small details. With the mere touch of a finger both rack and rest slide out or recess completely. Optional light.

Again the Wurlitzer standard of perfection in all things. The handsome veneers of the Wurlitzer Organ extend all around the case. From front or back, one sees cabinet beauty.

Your dealer will soon have a Series 20 Wurlitzer Organ for you to see and to hear ORGAN DIVISION, THE RUDOLPH WURLITZER CO., NORTH TONAWANDA, N. Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication

VOL. XXIX. No. 41.

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

SEPTEMBER 5, 1946

Publication Office, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago 37, Ill. Editorial Office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

A Busy Convention Program Planned for Delegates

Business Sessions, Teas, Dinners Provide A Full Program for Those in Attendance

By Philip L. Shutt

New York:—When several thousand leaders of the Church gather in Philadelphia September 10-20 for the 55th triennial General Convention they will find days and nights filled with activities from special services to dinners according to the program recently issued by national headquarters here. Special committees under the direction of Bishop Oliver J. Hart have been making preparations weeks in advance and this Convention will be a busy one. The visit of Archbishop Geoffrey Francis Fisher of Canterbury highlights the parade of distinguished onlookers for it will be only the second time in the history of the Church that an Archbishop of Canterbury has attended. Then, too, Philadelphia offers many historic reminders of the influence of the Episcopal Church in the early days of our country and pilgrimages to these places of interest are part of the Convention program. Churches of the city have made plans for welcoming visiting clergy and laity. Because of the crowded housing conditions visitors have been requested to stay away except for the opening services.

Sessions of the Convention will be held on the campus of the University of Pennsylvania, some distance from the downtown section of the city but adequate transportation is planned. Headquarters and information booths will be in Houston hall, 3417 Spruce St. Registration of bishops, deputies, and national council members will be handled on Monday and Tuesday, September 9 and 10 in the foyer of Irving auditorium. Woman's Auxiliary delegates register at the museum of the University. Youth leaders will be recorded at the Christian Association building on the campus. Mail should be addressed to General Convention in care of the University of Pennsylvania. There is a cafeteria located in the basement of Houston hall prepared to serve lunch each day only to members of the Convention and the Woman's Auxiliary. For those who find time for recreation guest cards for golf clubs and other clubs will be provided.

Churches providing daily services of Holy Communion are St. Clement's, 20th and Cherry streets; St. Mark's, 1625 Locust; Holy Trinity, 19th and Walnut; St. Stephen's, 10th above Chestnut, and in West Philadelphia, The Saviour, 38th above Chestnut, and St. Mary's, 3914 Locust street.

Every deputy or delegate is urged to make a pilgrimage to old Christ Church, 2nd street north of Market where the first General Convention was held. Here in 1695 the first place of worship for members of the Church of England was established. Part of the building was erected in 1727.

Sixty-nine years ago General Convention voted to have the Presiding Bishop preach at the opening public service. This event occurs Tuesday, Sept. 10 at 10:30 o'clock in Convention hall, and bishops and clergy will form in a vested procession. Tickets of admission will be given to all bishops, deputies and delegates to the Woman's Auxiliary, and visitors may secure them as far as they are available. At this service announcement will be made of the total of the Reconstruction and Advance Fund, and dioceses and missionary districts will present their offerings. For this occasion the stage of the great hall will be transformed into a chancel. In the center of the platform an altar 14 feet long will be erected against a background of red brocade bordered in blue and gold. The canopy over the altar is of red and gray brocade and the frontal and superfrontal is of deep red. Flanking the altar will be two stained glass windows. Above the altar an 8 foot cross of blue and gold will be hung. Six towering gold and blue candlesticks as well as gold vases filled with white flowers will decorate the altar. Presiding Bishop Henry St. George Tucker, Archbishop Fisher and host-bishop Oliver J. Hart will occupy chairs in the sanctuary and bishops will sit in stalls on both sides of the chancel. Vested choirs and clergy will sit in the center section of the hall facing the chancel.

Business sessions of the Convention begin at 2 o'clock on Tuesday when committees on dispatch of business report and then the hours for the remaining meetings will be fixed by action of each house.

Joint meetings for all bishops and deputies and delegates to the Woman's Auxiliary are planned for Wednesday, Sept. 11, when the report of the National Council is heard and the general Church program for 1947-1949 presented. That afternoon. Bishops Alfred Gilman of Hankow, and Robin Chen of An-

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

EDITORIAL BOARD: Frederick C. Grant, Editor; Arthur Lichtenberger, Chairman; William B. Spofford, Managing Editor; Philip L. Shutt, News Editor; Lane W. Barton, Beverly M. Boyd, Dillard H. Brown, Roscoe T. Foust, Charles K. Gilbert, Hugh D. McCandless, Howard Chandler Robbins, William K. Russell, Sydney A. Temple Jr., Joseph H. Titus, William M. Weber.

★

THE WITNESS is published weekly from September 15th to June 15th inclusive, with the exception of the first week in January and semi-monthly from June 15th to September 15th by the Episcopal Church Publishing Co. on behalf of the Church Publishing Association, Inc. Samuel Thorne, President; Charles A. Houston, Vice-President; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, Treasurer; Frederic D. H. Gilbert, Secretary.

★

The subscription price is $3.00 a year; in bundles for sale in parishes the magazine sells for 10c a copy, we will bill quarterly at 5c a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter, March 6, 1939, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3. 1879.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

king will tell of their work. The second joint session is Thursday noon, Sept. 12, when the Archbishop of Canterbury has tentatively agreed to speak.

Corporate communions for women of the Church will be held in Convention hall on Wednesday, Sept. 11, and for laymen at the Church of the Holy Trinity, Sept. 12. At the woman's service the United Thank Offering, always the climax of the untiring efforts of Churchwomen, will be presented on the gold alms basin used only for this purpose since 1889.

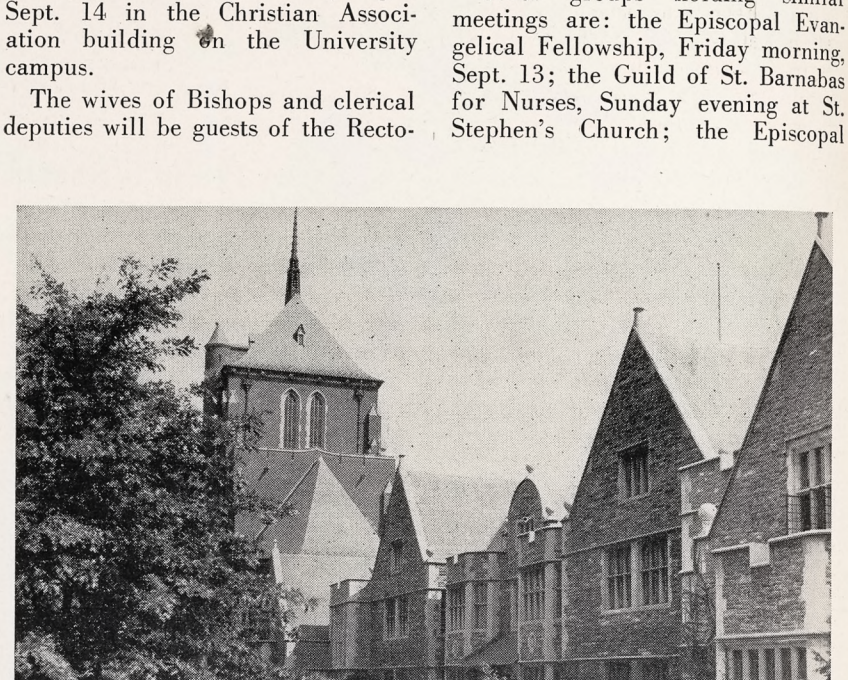
The Woman's Auxiliary have their own business sessions at the same time as the Convention. Mrs. Clinton S. Quin, wife of the bishop of Texas will preside. Mrs. William P. Hobby, executive vice-president of the Houston Post, better known as Col. Hobby when head of the WACs during the war, will be parliamentarian. Prominent speakers at special conferences will include Bishop Angus Dun of Washington; Frances Perkins, former secretary of labor; Mrs. Arthur M. Sherman, executive secretary of the Auxiliary, and Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam who is also president of the Federal Council of Churches.

Missionary work of the Church will be stressed at a mass meeting in Irving auditorium on Thursday night, Sept. 12, at 8 o'clock addressed by Bishops Norman Binsted of the Philippine Islands and Bravid Harris of Liberia, as well as Dr. T. Z. Koo, of the World Student Christian Federation.

No business sessions are planned for the week-end. The Philadelphia newspapers will publish lists of guest preachers at the different Churches for Sunday.

Delegates will be able to choose several dinner functions and special meetings of allied Church organizations. A subscription luncheon honoring the Archbishop will be held Wednesday noon, September 11 at the Bellevue Stratford hotel given by the Bishops of Pennsylvania and the Standing Committee. That same evening four Evangelical groups will join in sponsoring a reception and dinner to the Presiding Bishop, Archbishop Fisher, and Bishop Hart at this hotel. Over 1000 persons are expected to meet and hear the Archbishop. Addresses will also be given by Bishop Beverly Tucker of Ohio and Churchman Charles P. Taft of Cincinnati.

On Thursday night, Sept. 12 the Church Congress will gather in the ballroom of the Bellevue for dinner. That same evening in different hotels throughout the city the seminaries will hold meetings.



Another large dinner will be that for members of the first triennial youth convention on Saturday night, Sept. 14 in the Christian Association building on the University campus.

The wives of Bishops and clerical deputies will be guests of the Rectory club of the diocese of Pennsylvania at tea in the Churchwoman's club, 1919 Walnut street Monday afternoon, Sept. 16, from 4 to 6 o'clock.

Provincial dinners will be held also on the 16th beginning at 6 o'clock. Provinces I, II, and III meet at the Bellevue Stratford; IV, V, VII, and VIII at the Benjamin Franklin, and Province VI at the Sylvania hotel.

Also included in the unofficial program is the corporate communion and breakfast of the Church League for Industrial Democracy at 7:30 on Saturday morning, Sept. 14, in Holy Trinity Church. Retired Bishop Edward L. Parsons of California, president of the CLID, will be the celebrant assisted by Bishops Beverly Tucker of Ohio and W. Appleton Lawrence of Western Massachusetts. Bishop William Scarlett of Missouri will speak at the breakfast in the Homestead restaurant across the street from the Church. The Rev. William B. Spofford Jr., executive secretary, has announced that matters of strategy and planning will also be discussed.

Other groups holding similar meetings are: the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship, Friday morning, Sept. 13; the Guild of St. Barnabas for Nurses, Sunday evening at St. Stephen's Church; the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship, Tuesday morning, Sept. 17 in St. Stephen's; the Church Historical Society at the University club, Wednesday evening, Sept. 18, and the Church Society for College Work dinner at the Hotel Philadelphian.

Houston Hall at the University of Pennsylvania where the House of Bishops will meet. It will also be the headquarters of General Convention

Many Convention guests will want to take the tour of historic places arranged for Sunday afternoon, Sept. 15. That evening there will be a service of re-consecration in Calvary Church, a memorial to Bishop White, the first Presiding Bishop.

The wives of the bishops are invited to a luncheon honoring Mrs. Fisher, wife of the Archbishop, at Strawberry Mansion on Thursday, Sept. 19.

Final sessions of the Convention will be held Friday, Sept. 20.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

General Convention to Consider Many Urgent Matters

Lively Debates Expected On Many Issues That Determine the Church's Future Work

By William B. Spofford

New York:—Few General Conventions have had such important matters before them as the triennial meeting which opens in Philadelphia on September 10th. There are nineteen commissions to give an accounting of their deliberations since the 1943 Cleveland Convention. Of these three stand out; unity with the Presbyterian Church and the proposed changes in the marriage canons. In addition there is the report of the budget and program committee, which first receives a proposed budget from the executives of the National Council, goes through it item by item, with hearings given to those who care to appear before it, after which it is presented at a joint session of the two houses, with recommendations. Newspapers give little attention to this since there is little to give it news value. Nevertheless if you want to know what the Church is going to do for the next three years, and how much it is going to cost, the place to go is to the room where this committee will be in session sixteen hours a day. While its members are sweating it out, the two Houses of Convention will be amusing themselves, and the public through newspaper headlines, with heated debates on less relevant matters as far as the life of the Church is concerned.

Whether the Convention will deal, through resolutions, with such matters as control of the atomic bomb, international relations, race relations, social security, remains to be seen. The commission on social reconstruction headed by Bishop Scarlett of Missouri undoubtedly will raise these and other matters relative to the question as to whether or not mankind is to continue to live on this planet. (The article by Joseph F. Fletcher elsewhere in this number says about all that needs to be said on this subject.)

Elections will be exciting, and particularly this year since a new Presiding Bishop is to be elected and also a President for the House of Deputies. They are important positions since the appointment of committees is largely in their hands, and in the case of the Presiding Bishop he has the responsibility of being the number one administrator of the national work of the Church, as well as its spiritual head, in the years ahead. Throughout the summer there has been a good deal of conferring and letter-writing aimed at lining up delegates for candidates.

Most frequently mentioned for Presiding Bishop is Bishop Henry Knox Sherrill of Massachusetts. He is known at home and abroad for his fine work as head of the army and navy commission. He has demonstrated his abilities as the executive head of one of the Church's strongest and most efficiently run dioceses. Everyone seems to agree that he would do an outstanding job as the headman at 281. Nevertheless he will undoubtedly be opposed by some who fear his liberalism. Others, it is reported, will be against him on the ground that "he is too young"—being but 56, the age when business men start thinking of retiring.

Others mentioned prominently for the office are Bishop Strider of West Virginia, the chairman of the unity commission; Bishop Stevens of Los Angeles, who is a middle-of-the-road churchman and would doubtless be acceptable to both Anglo-Catholics and Liberals; Bishop Lawrence of Western Massachusetts whose gifts as a leader have been amply demonstrated; Bishop Clingman of Kentucky who, like Bishop Sherrill, has a fine reputation as an administrator; Bishop Wallace J. Gardner of New Jersey, who is said to have the backing of one section of the Anglo-Catholic group; Bishop Keeler of Minnesota, who not only has been a fine executive in his own diocese, but has given real leadership as a member of the National Council. One thing can be said historically however: nobody prominently mentioned for the office in the pre-convention gossip and lobbying ever has been elected. It therefore might well be a dark-horse.

Thomas S. Gates, chairman of the trustees of the University of Pennsylvania, is the general chairman of the General Convention committee

As for the presidency of the House of Deputies, unhappily vacant at the moment, a move is on to elect a layman. To do so would be a departure from tradition since clergymen alone have held the office. But it is generally known that Owen J. Roberts, former judge of the Supreme Court and a delegate from Pennsylvania, is to be nominated. Dean Claude W. Sprouse of Kansas City, second in the election in 1943, is sure to be again nominated and is the most likely candidate if the deputies insist upon a clergyman. Others who are mentioned and who will, presumably, be nominated, are the Rev. Charles W. Sheerin, former vice-president of the National Council and now rector of the Epiphany, Washington; Dean Sidney E. Sweet of St. Louis, and the Rev. Don

GENERAL CONVENTION

* The next number of THE WITNESS will present complete reports of the opening days of General Convention. This will be our issue of September 19 since we are on an every other week basis from June 15 to September 15. The numbers for September 26 and October 3 will also be devoted exclusively to Convention news. The issue of October 10th will be a Post-Convention number, with a review of action taken and an appraisal of accomplishments. A large number of parishes, commencing with this present number, are distributing copies through our Bundle Plan. It is of course too late for us to send others copies of this number. But those desiring Bundles of the four remaining Convention Numbers should send orders at once to either our Chicago or New York offices as given on page three. We will then bill you at 7 cents a copy following Convention. No Bundle orders can be accepted for less than ten copies for each of the four numbers.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Frank Fenn of Baltimore who was a candidate in 1943.

Another precedent will be shattered if Mrs. Randolph Dyer of St. Louis is seated as the first woman deputy. The Missouri delegation is asking the House of Deputies to interpret the word "layman" in the canons to include women. Opposing this action will be those who will argue that once women are seated the time will not be far distant when the majority of deputies will be women. Whatever is decided, it will mark a milestone in General Convention history.

The two reports which will create the most discussion are undoubtedly those on holy matrimony and unity with the Presbyterians. Bishops and deputies will be asked to consider changes in the present Church law on holy matrimony which would set up a permanent ecclesiastical court in every diocese to advise the bishop as to the disposal of a divorce case when the parties wish to remarry, and to also handle other disciplinary matters. Adultery, said to be scripturally unauthentic, will be omitted as grounds for divorce and only the abuse of marriage as a "physical, spiritual and mystical union created by mutual consent of heart, mind, and will" to quote the commission's report. is to be the ground upon which the ecclesiastical authorities are asked to make their decision as to the standing of the divorced persons in the eyes of the Church. If the permanent diocesan groups and the bishop cannot decide, the subject is passed on to the permanent commission to be set up nationally which will advise the diocesan authorities as to the merits of the cases brought before them. Clergy are strongly urged to give pre-marital instruction and parties to a marriage shall be asked to sign a statement which signifies their understanding of marriage as a life-long mutual fellowship for the procreation of children and their spiritual and physical upbringing. Because the tone of the report is decidedly liberal there is already opposition to its theses which will create energetic debate.

THE WITNESS published in detail the findings of the commission on approaches to unity (July 11) and it is significant that this one report has created more pamphlet warfare previous to Convention than any other subject.

The report on conscientious objectors may cause heated discussion since it is reported that a resolution is being prepared strengthening its clauses. The commission is asking General Convention to set up machinery to care for C.O's and for raising funds for them, after which it will ask to be discharged.

The commission on rural work is submitting a strongly worded report calling upon the Church to give wholehearted support to town and country work (WITNESS, August 25). The army and navy commission will report over $600,000 raised by direct appeal during 1944 and 1945, and will also recommend that the Church do something to provide discharged chaplains with work commensurate with their abilities.

The commission on architecture and allied arts will present an official seal for the presiding bishop recommending its adoption. In red, white, and blue, it will have a red cross on a white field symbolizing our connection with the mother Church of England, a St. Andrew's cross, representing our Scottish heritage in our liturgy, and nine small crosses indicating the nine dioceses which originally formed the Episcopal Church. The commission also asks for a list of competent Church architects to be made and kept available, booklets on advice for planning of small churches, more publicity in the Church press, and the establishment of diocesan committees on architecture.

Of interest to delegates will be the information from the committee which has been assisting the Russian Orthodox Church. Eighty-five per cent of its financial grants has gone to the support of the theological academy in Paris, France and scattered sums to individual churches. No financial assistance was asked for from the Soviet Church. The Good Friday offering portion of $19,000 was of help to the Russian Church in Europe. The commission asks to be continued.

After 12 years of successful effort the Forward Movement commission will make a full report of its activities. While it has appeared to be a publishing effort, because of the tremendously popular booklets on scripture meditation and some 65 related titles, the commission will point out that much consideration was given to setting up local diocesan evangelical groups and the different ministries to college youth, rural life and other units of the Church's life. Over $96,000 has been given as financial aid to many organizations and groups and sometimes to needy GI's. The commission will recommend that if it is continued it be kept unofficial and untrammeled, and used as a contact without partisanship between educational processes and the Church, but that it will remain as before under the Presiding Bishop.

The advisory commission on the work of deaconesses will urge the emphasis of opportunity for work in the Church by consecrated women willing to forego normal family life. It recommends that provision be made for them if they become disabled or seek retirement.

Mrs. Randolph H. Dyer of Missouri is the first woman ever to be elected a deputy to General Convention. Whether the word "layman" will be interpreted to include women will be decided by whether or not she is seated

The members of the Church serving on the Federal Council of Churches have explained in their report to General Convention what a great opportunity is provided for inter-Church cooperation. These leaders also point out that the Council speaks officially only through its biennial meeting or its executive committee and that reports and pamphlets published by departments or individuals may not necessarily reflect agreement of the Council.

If the plans of the commission on the see of the Presiding Bishop are adopted by General Convention it will be located in an area near Washington, and specifically in Arlington county, Virginia. The diocese of Virginia is willing to cede a 32

(Continued on page 17)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

EDITORIALS

Our New Presiding Bishop

THE editors of THE WITNESS have deliberately omitted from the following statement many qualifications for the office of Presiding Bishop which they think any bishop should have. Only those special capabilities which the times demand from the leader of our Church are given.

An English mayor once took office with the promise that he would make every effort to avoid partiality on the one hand and impartiality on the other. We imagine that while he found such fence-sitting difficult, he knew how to maintain a precarious balance. We want no man-pleaser in the position of Presiding Bishop, but a father in God who knows how to say yes and no and whose decisions will be clear cut and definite; the primary qualification for that office it seems to us is decisiveness.

Along with such decisiveness we would like to have the other qualities which make an able administrator. The Presiding Bishop and no one else must be the head man at 281. Policies are discussed and formulated at National Council meetings, directives are handed down by General Convention, but the Presiding Bishop is what his title says he is, the presiding officer of the National Council and the administrator of its affairs. To meet such a requirement, let the Church choose for this office the most capable executive that can be found in the House of Bishops.

But while we would have an able administrator, we would like a man who believes in the democratic process. There are some dioceses in the Church in which there is a remarkable spirit of fellowship and it is due in large part to the way in which the bishops of those dioceses seek the help of clergy and laity in making plans and setting policy. We are confident that such democratic leadership wins the confidence of people throughout the Church.

The Presiding Bishop must believe in the Church's mission. That calls for much more than a demonstrated interest in the missionary work of the Church, although that is important. It calls for a man who knows that the Church has a gospel and that the Church is sent with that gospel to men everywhere and in every area of life. He will be concerned not only with missions in the traditional sense, but he will see to it that the Church is in the thick of the struggle for economic and social justice, for racial equality, for world order.

The Presiding Bishop must be a man who has proved by his actions that he will carry on our participation in the ecumenical movement. We want no ecclesiastical isolationist in the office on the fourth floor front of 281. The primary job of Presiding Bishop is, of course, to be the leader of the Episcopal Church, but his job is also to maintain and further the cooperation of our Church with the Federal Council and with the World Council of Churches.

In this global age another essential is a bishop who has a comprehensive view of what is happening in the world and first hand experience with world affairs to give substance to his attitudes. A man who has already committed himself to the cause of ecumenicity and who is in touch with the great political and social movements of our world is the man with the proper stature to preside over the destinies of the Episcopal Church in the next decade.

Convention Prayer

ALMIGHTY GOD, who alone canst quicken thy servants to hear thee and obey, we pray for all Bishops and Deputies to the General Convention and Delegates of the Woman's Auxiliary of this Church, that they may be cleansed by thy Spirit from all unworthiness. Give them a world vision of the mission of thy Church; grant them patience and insight, faith and obedience to thy holy will, that being themselves led of thee, they may by thy Spirit lead thy people on from strength to strength in the work of thy Kingdom; through Jesus Christ, thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

Chance for Progress

WE BOAST that the Episcopal Church is democratic. Certainly there are few clergymen who haven't preached sermons drawing the parallel between the legislative set-ups of the U. S. government and the Church. In doing so we remind our people that it is a Church in which laymen have equal voice and vote with rectors and bishops. We have had to remain rather silent on the subject of women, saving face with the crack: "The women, God bless 'em, the Church could not exist without their devotion." Thanks to the diocese of Missouri, General Convention now has a chance to make a beginning in correcting our undemocratic attitude by seating, promptly and with trumpets, Mrs. Randolph Dyer as a deputy.

It is on much the same grounds that we would like to see the Hon. Owen J. Roberts elected president of the House of Deputies. In spite of our boast of the place of laymen in the Church, never in our entire history has a layman held this high office. And it is taking nothing away from the clergymen mentioned for the office, all of whom are our friends, to say that it is doubtful if there will be any man in the House better qualified for the post. Justice Roberts is, first of all, a devoted Churchman. As senior warden of St. John's, Washington, he was zealous in every work of the Church, faithful in attendance, president of the men's club, skillful in presiding at vestry meetings. During the war, when this parish was without a rector, it was chiefly due to his leadership and the men he gathered around him, that the parish continued to thrive. His election to be chairman of the committee on nominations for Bishop for Washington met with universal approval in the diocese and the conduct of the committee meetings was above reproach. It is a tribute to their careful work that the man they gave as first choice was selected as Bishop.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

As a public servant he is known for his honesty and absolute fearlessness. He resigned from the Supreme Court chiefly because he wanted to devote the remaining years of his life to the cause of world peace and the various religious and philanthropic organizations in which he is interested. His resignation was a surprise since he was known as one of the younger justices in vigor and outlook.

Justice Roberts is easy to meet, affable, fond of jokes, but exceedingly earnest and enthusiastic for good causes. He is an expert parliamentarian and makes a splendid presiding officer. And, above all, he is a layman.

The Church and Its Press

by Virginius Dabney

Editor of the Richmond Times-Dispatch

THOMAS JEFFERSON was right when he said: "Our liberty depends on the freedom of the press, and that cannot be limited without being lost." Jefferson was probably the most maligned and abused man of his generation, but despite the calumnies that were systematically heaped upon him by hostile newspapers, he never modified his view that a free press is a vital and indispensable bulwark of our civilization.

William Cullen Bryant, a distinguished newspaper editor for half a century, as well as a poet, once declared: "The press is a mill that grinds all that is put into its hopper. Fill the hopper with poisoned grain and it will grind it to meal, but there is death in the bread."

The importance of maintaining the purity of the "grain" cannot be overemphasized. Some of the least admirable of newspaper publishers and editors are among those calling loudest for "freedom of the press," but the fact remains that once this freedom, in the true sense, is undermined or poisoned, the road to dictatorship is open.

No one would contend that there is serious danger of dictatorship in the Protestant Episcopal Church, and the arguments for freedom of the Church press are not absolutely identical with those which apply to the secular newspapers. At the same time, the arguments in the two cases parallel one another closely, and the principles involved are much the same.

The suggestion has been made that the four magazines of the Episcopal Church with national circulations be given an annual subsidy by the Church. It is proposed that this method of aiding the four publications be used for the first time as a substitute for paid advertising—the means employed in the past, and terminated because of the depression. The editors of the four papers are strongly opposed to the subsidy method, but they favor the resumption of advertising by the Church.

They are right. A subsidy is something which inevitably places the subsidized person or institution under obligation to the source of the funds. Advertising, on the other hand, is a commodity purchased at a rate commensurate with its value, which means that the publisher of advertising need feel no obligation to the advertiser. A good deal of nonsense has been spoken and written about the supposed subservience of American newspapers to advertisers. In almost a quarter of a century of active newspaper work, I have never been threatened even once either directly or indirectly by an advertiser. There was a time when advertisers indulged in such practices, and sometimes successfully, but that time is past—at least insofar as my knowledge extends. Subsidies, on the other hand, are apt to be lethal in their impact upon the newspaper which accepts them.

Editor's Note: This article appears also in The Churchman, Living Church and Southern Churchman this week.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

There is no intention here of closely comparing proposed subsidies from the Church to the four papers with, for example, the subsidies which the French munition makers and the Comite des Forges used in corrupting so large a percentage of the French press in the 1920's and 1930's, but there are striking analogies, nonetheless. The French papers were placed under heavy obligations to the armament manufacturers the instant they accepted funds from that source, just as the Episcopal papers would be indirectly, if not directly, committed as soon as they took a subsidy from the Church. In such an event, their freedom to criticize the official position of the Church would be seriously hampered.

At the present time, the Church is faced with two questions of paramount importance, both of which are to come before the General Convention. These relate to the proposed union with the Presbyterians and to liberalization of the marriage laws. Both are controversial and solutions in both should be reached only after the most thorough airing of all viewpoints, from ultra-conservative to extreme liberal. Where can these viewpoints be thoroughly canvassed, except in the Church press? But if that press is subsidized and subjected to anything remotely approaching official control, there will be grave danger that only the "official" position will find expression in its columns.

THOSE in position of power in the Church need the constant stimulus of free and frank discussion in the Church press. All persons who exercise authority over considerable periods run the risk of getting into a rut, of taking the easiest way, of becoming ultraconservative. They are entirely sincere, and they may see no reason at all for the presentation of a dissenting viewpoint in the Church papers, but the fact is that the more fixed they are in this opinion, the more necessary it is that their position be subjected to periodic editorial scrutiny. The Church press should serve as a gadfly to those in posts of power, and should be the means of introducing the beneficent catharsis of open discussion into the area of debate.

Any member of the Church should be free to express himself in the press of the Church. He should have this avenue through which to reach the membership on matters of moment, whether or not his views happen to coincide with those of persons in authority. If his views are sincerely advanced, no other criterion need be applied. Since the secular press is not likely to provide space for the discussion of denominational matters, the Church press should be the untrammeled vehicle for such expressions.

Three examples may be cited from the recent history of The Southern Churchman to buttress this thesis. A question relating to the communion service will come before the General Convention because it was broached in a letter to the editor of that paper. Two diocesan conventions accepted the concept of the letter writer, and the matter will have the attention of the General Convention, in consequence. A subsidized paper might well have declined to provide a forum for this particular discussion, since it might have preferred to stay within the present canonical framework. Furthermore, The Southern Churchman is publishing a series of articles on the authorship of the Gospel according to St. John, embodying a radical new idea. In no other way could the author have got this idea effectively before the Church for its critical appraisal. While the thesis which this series sets forth may be entirely fallacious, it is good to have a means of testing whether it is or not. The third example from the current files of The Southern Churchman is to be found in its recent publication of a series of articles by Negroes dealing with the Negro in the Church. Similar examples from other Church papers could be cited.

It should be clear from the foregoing that a free and unsubsidized Church press which provides a forum of uninhibited expression for all is a priceless asset. No one will agree with everything that is said in the editorials, articles and letters appearing in such a press. But the essential thing is that there be no official rein upon the papers, and that they furnish a forum for the interplay of ideas.

The Episcopal Church is a mixture of ancient Catholicism and modern Protestantism, a bridge Church which holds within its grasp the two strands of Christian heritage. As a bridge Church, it tends to walk officially down the middle of the road, while many individual members tend to lean to one side or the other. In this situation, an unsubsidized Church press fills the valuable role of criticising the extremists in both camps, and of bringing them back to a common position which all can hold. It serves, therefore, as a safety valve of incalculable significance.

The editors of The Churchman, THE WITNESS, The Living Church and The Southern Churchman are men who can be trusted with this responsibility. They have exercised it discriminatingly in the past, and we need have no fear of their failure to do so in the future. If they are given the advertising revenue which they require, together with an adequate number of subscriptions, they can be counted on to make their organs more effective than ever in promoting the great objectives of the Church. But an official subsidy would be a grave step backward. Despite the unquestioned sincerity and good intentions of those providing it, a subsidy would be the "poisoned grain" of which William Cullen Bryant spoke, the grain which carries within itself the seeds of death.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Marriage Canon Procedure

by Bishop Cameron J. Davis

Chairman of the Commission on Matrimony

THE questions that have been raised by the proposed canon of the joint commission on holy matrimony have to do chiefly with its workability. A number of dioceses have approved it in principle. But, it is asked, can it be administered effectively? And, since the bishop's judgment under it rests so often upon an analysis of personality and character rather than upon objective tests or facts, can it be administered with sufficient accuracy and uniformity to avoid "ecclesiastical Renos" on the one hand and inconsistent rigidity on the other?

This article is in reply to these questions. It deals with possible procedures. Lack of time has made it impossible to submit it to all the members of the commission so that it has not been acted upon officially by that body. It is, however, a composite of suggestions made by a sub-committee of the commission, namely Mr. Jackson Dykman, chancellor of Long Island, The Rev. Burton Easton, The Rev. Beverley Boyd, The Rev. Stephen Bayne, Jr., and the chairman.

In the first place we call attention to the fact that under the present canon there is often laid upon the bishop the necessity of careful inquiry into character and personality. This is true particularly in application for a declaration of ecclesiastical nullity for which the canon provides. One of the impediments listed in the present canon is "lack of free consent." Lack of free consent cannot always nor even generally be proved by objective evidence. Sometimes the only evidence obtained by the civil court is the sworn statement of the plaintiff. In the Church's conception of marriage, if the bishop believes it to be more than a civil contract, he must then make careful inquiry into the character and personality of the applicant. The determination of a person's freedom and accountability is one of the most difficult and delicate exercises required of men and still is one that is required every day. Granted that the consent given to marriage is vastly greater and more complicated than most others, the problem under the present canon must often be faced by a conscientious bishop and demands for its solution careful inquiry into personality. And as a matter of fact this today gives rise to a very wide variety of episcopal judgment in the several dioceses.

The proposed canon frankly recognizes the subjective character of these judgments as necessary. Because it holds that Christian marriage is more than a civil contract, because it holds that it is a mystical and spiritual union, it holds also that the tests as to its existence must be as well in the realm of the spiritual, in qualities of personality and will. But it provides for a guiding body which will make for uniformity but which the Church today does not possess, namely the permanent commission. And as an offset to the subjectivity of an individual judgment it provides a diocesan court or advisory council.

Neither of these bodies is a court of nullity. The canon purposely refrains from describing the bishop's judgment as an "ecclesiastical annulment." The courts are rather courts of inquiry: their function is more pastoral than legal. They are to aid the bishop in the exploration of whether there was lack of freedom or competence to give complete consent in either party to a former marriage.

It would seem then that procedure under the proposed Canon would be as follows: The permanent commission will issue a blank form of application for use in the several dioceses. This will set forth the applicant's desire for a judgment on the ground that complete consent was not given to the former marriage by one or both of the parties. This application will also state (a) the ecclesiastical status of the applicant, i.e., date and place of baptism, and if confirmed, of confirmation; (b) name and location of the applicant's parish together with the rector's certificate that the applicant is a member in good standing. ("Good standing" should be defined by each diocese. It should include regular attendance.) (c) Length of time of such membership, and a statement of whether the applicant consulted a minister before legal action was taken to terminate the former relationship; (d) a copy of the civil court's decree and the summons or complaint with a further certificate that the interlocutory judgment has been made final; (e) a copy of the minutes of testimony in the civil action if possible; (f) last known address of the other party to the civil action.

These papers having been presented and found in order, and a year having elapsed since the final judgment, the diocesan court will be ready to proceed in its inquiry as to whether the marital bond as the Church conceives it, in fact exists.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

IN THE proceedings it should be borne in mind that the burden of proof rests upon the applicant, and, if possible, the other party to the previous marriage should be given opportunity to be heard. And the court will not only examine the testimony presented but will exercise the right of examining the applicant.

The evidence presented may be to the existence of one of the impediments listed in the present canon. It may be evidence of the presence of a defect, physical or psychical, developed or incipient at the time of marriage which would clearly make complete consent impossible or at least gravely remote. The evidence of this latter kind would lie in three fields. First, did the parties to the former marriage reveal, in their life together, unmistakable signs of such a fundamental lack of consent? Cruelty of an unusual nature, compulsive sexual abnormalities, irresponsible alcoholism, emotional immaturity so great as to be an arrested development—behaviour, in a word, which clearly revealed not simply an evil will but a crippled will, crippled beyond the bounds of responsibility.

Second, what were there in the circumstances of the marriage in question which bear on the court's inquiry? The length and character of the courtship, the preparation and readiness of the parties to consent to marriage, the intentions, as far as they can be discovered, of the parties (as revealed, for example, in pre-marital agreements as to children, divorce, etc.), the physical relations between them, environmental factors at work (the influence of parents and friends, of religious bias, of racial prejudices), the fact of children and the characteristics of the family life—these, and many others are factors which would throw light on the nature of the relationship between two persons which is what the court would be exploring.

Third, what evidence is there of growth, change, maturity, conversion, which would affect the judgment of the applicant and the court as to his future? The court would require certainly that there be positive evidence that a second marriage would not repeat the pattern of the first—the court would require it and any applicant who took the trouble to get as far as the court would surely insist upon it.

In actual procedure it is to be expected that the applicant's pastor would normally play a large part in the preparation of the application and in the presentation of evidence. Very likely each diocesan authority would instruct both clergy and laity in the nature and principles of its procedure. Indeed the possibility of any successful administration of the proposed canon would hinge on the intelligent and informed preparation of the Church as a whole for its use, and on the active leadership of pastors in screening applications before they are submitted and in preparing them for submission.

This procedure will take time and effort. It should. There are few things which the Church does in the field of pastoral and social work of greater importance. It will be difficult. It would be much easier to say simply that the Church will not marry anyone whose previous marriage contract has been dissolved by a civil court during the lifetime of the other spouse. But would the Church then express the mind and spirit of her Lord? And would she then be facing her pastoral and social responsibility fairly? She cannot, if true to the spirit of Christianity, turn her back upon this critical problem of human life because it is a hard problem. She must make a beginning towards a solution, and this is what the proposed canon if adopted will accomplish.

Quick or Dead?

By

JOSEPH F. FLETCHER
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

THE General Convention in Philadelphia will reveal, conclusively, whether the Episcopal Church has the moral and spiritual stature we like to claim for it. The grim facts, as gleaned from pre-convention discussions, tend to show that the Church's mood is Neronian. There is a marked disposition to fiddle while fire rages all about us.

There would be no sense in ignoring details of household administration: good management requires us to do something about such little things as a new Presiding Bishop; a budget; divorces; pension-premium percentages; unity with another small body, the Presbyterians. But they are little things, on any view of the Church's redemptive mission and the world's tragic, crucial, condition. If these ecclesiastical minutiae, these trivia of organized religion, claim and keep the center of the stage it will be, on perspective, only sound and fury signifying nothing. We may have to swallow the bitter truth that Churchmen have lost all sense of proportion as seen by the sensitive people of this generation. This unhappy generation. If present debate is any sign of the reigning mood there is good reason to fear that we have not only lowered our sights instead of raising them, but that we have filed them off!

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

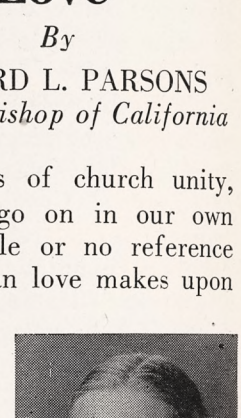
God reconciling the world to himself through Christ. The Church, as the body of Christ, meeting to argue molehills while the American government turns its stockpile of atom bombs into a mountain of fear and destruction. The tension and contrast is intolerable. As Hutchins of Chicago has put it, there is no use in even talking about rest from world war (to say nothing of presbyter-bishops!) if we cannot control ourselves when armed with uranium-235. The atom bomb faces us, for the first time in civilization's policy discussions, with the question of survival. In this context the Convention's agenda takes on something of the shape of a pre-schizophrenic conversation.

THERE are four questions before men of God just now which come first in every effort of word and deed. They do not exclude other realities; but they make them pale in comparison. There is the matter of the bomb, first and foremost, and its control for peace. This is the 64 dollar question for which the world seeks prophetic light and leading. Second, there is the urgent and truly moral question of understanding with Soviet Russia; the task of pressing our diplomats to relieve Russia's fears of Britain and the U.S.A., rather than legalistic arguments about voting procedures which only ignore and get around the fears. Here again the bomb casts its shadow, the stockpile. The alternative to mutual understanding with Russia is not a parting of the ways but a clash of forces. War. Third, there is the matter of economic security and full production in an age when the demands of war have proved that God endows us with the brains and materials for an age of plenty. And fourth there is the problem of racial justice, tied inescapably at home to our flagrantly undemocratic voting procedures and Judge Lynch politics, and abroad to the growing colonialism of our nation and Britain.

It will not be enough for the Convention to receive a few pre-digested and smoothly worded resolutions on these departmental matters. They are the real pay off for religious leadership. If the Churchmen cannot sweat them out as a fellowship in Christ, and provide light with courage and leading, then we are indeed without hope among men. Nor will it be good enough to talk as men of good will. Men of good will are a dime a dozen. The test that waits upon the Convention is whether we can give leadership in these crucial issues in operational terms; who does what under which circumstances?



There are sure to be some who complain that Churchmen cannot lay down programs, only recite principles. The world knows the principles already; we repeat them in our nightmares. Actually, there will be people in Philadelphia who know how to speak the word of God to the human situation in more than verbalistic terms. Let them speak out. If they do not it is sure that they will forever after hold their peace. Silence is a better word. Dead silence. Spectator theology is a very dead theology now that the issues of life are so widely drawn, and so tightly drawn. The world's despair gives the Church its evangelical chance. Aut vincere aut mori.

The Plea of Love

By

EDWARD L. PARSONS
Retired Bishop of California

IN THE current discussions of church unity, certainly in those which go on in our own Church papers, one finds little or no reference to the demands which Christian love makes upon us or to the part which it should play in our search for solution of our problems. One would sometimes think that salvation depends upon bishops or a particular doctrine concerning the episcopate or a particular view of the sacraments or what you will. But St. Paul seems to make it fairly clear that the one thing needful to bring man into reconciliation with God is love. St. John is equally emphatic. It is not that these other things are not important. It is that the most important thing is what love does with them and to them in creating and developing fellowship among men.

This is a plea that we let love take its course; let it dominate our thinking; let it touch with its heavenly glow all the problems which must be faced as we work towards unity—and they are many. It is a plea that can be made only in humility, only with the knowledge that any judgment may be wrong, that we, all of us, try as we will, are chained by inheritance, by education and by our social environment. We come to our discussions with our prejudices, our presuppositions, our likes and our dislikes. We can but pray that in the flood of God's love they may grow less and less and love grow more and more.

What then happens when we try to make love, which is the longing for fellowship, primary in our thinking and our actions? Here are some of the answers to that question as they come to one seeker after unity. The first and most important result is that our desire for unity is lifted from an amiable hope, or an Utopian ideal which can be realized only in some vastly distant future, to a passion for the achievement of God's will. We recognize that disunity among Christians is a daily and hourly repudiation of the fundamental meaning of our religion. There are plenty of good reasons for achieving unity, but in the end they all go back to the fact that God is love and that therefore there can be no ultimate realization of the meaning of life and human society save in unity. To this the Church is the witness. In this a divided Church fails. As love sweeps over us we grow impatient of delay, not in the sense of hurry but in the deep sense of the urgency of God's will. We are troubled daily by our divisions. We are happy in Church councils which help us to get nearer to other Christians. Direct negotiations, be it with those who rejoice in their Protestantism or those who are sure that Catholicism is the only true faith, are a joy. We must break down barriers. We must open the way for the surging flood of God's love. That is the first thing that happens.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

And the second is another lifting, this time of all the discussions and the controversies above pettiness and bitterness. Is there anything more humbling to a Christian thinker than the fact that men talk of the odium theologicum or anything more disturbing to the Christian reader of history than the large place filled by the quarrels of Christians. There must be differences. It would be a dreary world if there were not. But why cannot Christians, we ask, settle their differences in peace, in quietness and in love. God's love will always find a way if we give him a chance. And by the same token why should Christian men who have only tried to open ways to achieve the purpose of God's love be constantly attacked because they are "disturbing" the peace of the Church. No step forward has ever been taken without someone being disturbed. Look at Nicea! Look at the England of Cranmer's day! Change always comes hard for some of us, but peace without change is death. The point for Christians is that if they have love flooding their hearts they don't get angry, they don't despair, they don't accuse. They sit down quietly and talk it over. If we think especially of our own Church, they get up to debate in General Convention let us say, not trying just to win votes but rather to discover the way of love.

STILL another change comes to pass when the spirit of love dominates. Men's hearts go back, their minds are focussed more and more upon him who was the incarnation of love rather than upon the traditions of the elders, more upon the life-giving spirit than upon the letter which killeth. Always with Christ the child of God comes first. Always with him the question is not "what is the law?" but "what is the effect of the law upon human beings?" The sabbath is made for man, not man for the sabbath. Episcopacy, priesthood, sacraments, creedal statements, liturgies all are made for man. Love is concerned with what they do to and for man. As they are held do they divide rather than unite? Are they exclusive or inclusive? Are they held rigidly, inflexibly, measuring all men on a Procrustean bed or do they recognize the vast diversity of human natures and human needs? Love keeps insisting upon such questions as fundamental.

Or to put it another way: because love's horizons are wide, the primary question in the love-dominated heart is not of theology or of ecclesiastical standing but of relation to God. "Can we pray together?" is fundamental. Do we have the same views of history, of the Church, of the sacraments? Those must be in some sense secondary. We cannot measure John Woolman by the thirty-nine articles nor John Bunyan by the Westminster Confession.

And therefore as we come to the problems of unity under the guidance of love we are very humble. We know that our vision of truth is very inadequate. We know that everywhere there are saints of God who whatever their theological views, are and can be united with us in the deeps of the love of God. It is this love we must translate into the fabric of life, the visible structure of the Church of God. We are sure that living and working in that love the questions which divide us will find solution and a larger and nobler vision of Christ's Church be revealed. Sometimes these questions touch faiths which are very precious to us. Sometimes we are fearful lest this decision or that may hurt a cherished faith; but love gives us confidence in the victory of truth and love forbids that refuge, which, alas, is sometimes held as a threat, the refuge of a further schism.

The dire need of the world today is Christian love. Love has the persuasive power to bring men to unity. Love has the compelling power to hold men in unity. To his Church God has entrusted the revelation of the meaning and power of love. In our divisions it is denied. In our unity it triumphs.

There is not a word which I have said that cannot be refuted, not a point which a keen debater cannot sweep away—and yet? and yet? St. Paul gave love the supreme place among Christian virtues and the Lord Christ is the Incarnation of God who is Love.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Convention Meets in Setting Of Historic Interest

Over 1200 Delegates Will Have a Chance To Refresh Themselves in Church History

Edited by Philip L. Shutt

Philadelphia:—Those Episcopalians fortunate enough to attend General Convention this year who may have lost some sense of historical perspective in Church affairs will have opportunities of refreshing it as several thousand delegates from all over the country gather here Sept. 9-20. For this city can claim several firsts in the history of the Episcopal Church. It was where the first General Convention was held in Christ Church in September 1785; it was the home of the first Presiding Bishop, William White; here it was that our Prayer Book was set forth and ratified; the Constitution of the Church was adopted here; the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society was formed in this city; the first missionary bishops of the Church, Jackson Kemper and William Boone, were sent forth from Philadelphia; the first Sunday School in the country was established here, and the Lenten offerings for missions were begun here by Mr. John Marston of St. John's, Cynwyd.

Students of Church history will recall that the first General Convention was a preliminary to the actual organization of the Church after the Revolution for it drafted a tentative Constitution, sent a communication to the bishops in England regarding consecration of American bishops, and took steps to revise the English Prayer Book to conform to the newly won independence from the mother country.

The General Convention, the supreme legislative body of the Church, meets every three years and is made up of a House of Bishops and a House of Deputies. Either House may originate and propose legislation but it does not become Church law until ratified by both. All of the bishops of the Church are members of the first House. Retired bishops may speak but not vote. Four clergy and four laymen from each diocese and one clergyman and one layman from each missionary district comprise the second House.

Bishop Scarlett of Missouri will present the report of the Commission of Social Reconstruction and will be the speaker at the breakfast following the corporate communion of the CLID on September 14

THE CHURCH PENSION FUND

and its subsidiaries

administered for the benefit of the Church

THE CHURCH HYMNAL CORPORATION

Publishers of The Hymnal; Book of Common Prayer; A Prayer Book for Soldiers and Sailors; Book of Offices for Certain Occasions; Stowe's Clerical Directory.

THE CHURCH LIFE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost insurance and annuity contracts available to the clergy, lay officials and active lay workers of the Church, either voluntary or paid, and their immediate families.

THE CHURCH PROPERTIES FIRE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost fire and windstorm insurance on property owned by or closely affiliated with the Church, and on the residences and personal property of the clergy.

Further information available by addressing any of the above at

20 Exchange Place New York

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Presiding Bishop Henry St. George Tucker will conduct the business sessions for the last time this Convention, while the House of Deputies must elect their presiding officer. The Rev. Franklin J. Clark, secretary of the Deputies, will call that group together and preside until the new head is elected.

The first General Convention was attended by sixteen clergymen and twenty-four laymen. At this Convention there will be approximately 150 bishops, 325 clergymen, 325 laymen and some 500 women delegates to the Woman's Auxiliary. Ranks will be swelled somewhat by some alternates to the delegates and by guests. The delegates to the first Convention represented seven of the original thirteen states. When the Convention meets this time 74 dioceses and 28 missionary districts in the United States and in overseas missionary districts have representation.

Brotherhood

Philadelphia: — The Brotherhood of St. Andrew, which is the oldest and largest organization for men and boys in the Church, will open its 49th convention, Friday, Sept. 6 at the Benjamin Franklin hotel. This is the first convention to be held since the war and delegates from all parts of the United States and Canada are registered. One of the highlights of the meeting will be the dinner held on Sept. 7 at the hotel with Archbishop Geoffrey Fisher of Canterbury and Gov. Edward Martin of Pennsylvania as honored guests. Principal speakers will be Presiding Bishop Henry St. George Tucker and President Clark Kuebler of Ripon College. This dinner meeting will be principally devoted to youth and its problems so that the division of youth of the National Council will have strong representation. Dr. Carl Zapffe, prominent consulting metallurgist of Baltimore, president of the Maryland Assembly of the Brotherhood will act as toastmaster.

The other big event is the mass meeting in Convention hall on Sunday afternoon when the Archbishop will make an address on the subject of world brotherhood. Others taking part in this program are John Foster Dulles of New York, Bishop Bravid Harris of Liberia, and the Presiding Bishop. There is no charge for admission to this mass meeting.

During the convention sessions discussion groups will be led by: Bishop Everett Jones of West Texas; the Rev. Messrs. John B. Fort, Springfield, Mass.; Thorne Sparkman, Chattanooga, Tenn.; John I. Hartman, Lancaster, Pa., and C.I.O. representative John G. Ramsey.

Pre-Convention Meeting

New York:—A full program has been arranged for the triennial meeting of the Daughters of the King preceding General Convention in Philadelphia. Gathering at Holy Trinity Church Sept. 5-9 this society of lay women will find the arrangements of interest since it will be the first general session since 1940. Joining with the Brotherhood of St. Andrew on Sunday, Sept. 8 members will jointly sponsor the mass meeting to hear Archbishop Fisher. Discussion leaders of regular sessions are: Bishops Oliver Hart of Pennsylvania, Stephen Keeler of Minnesota, G. Ashton Oldham of Albany; the Rev. Messrs. Nathan B. Groton, rector of St. Thomas', Whitemarsh, Pa.; W. Roulston McKean, rector of St. Matthew's, Philadelphia; Frank Salmon, host rector, and chaplain Clarence W. Brickman of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

Chaplains Honored

New York:—When army and navy chaplains and former chaplains meet in Philadelphia on Thursday, Sept. 12 they will find a special program arranged in their honor.. One of its highlights is the awarding of war crosses to all World War II chaplains. A buffet luncheon is under consideration. Bishop Hart has asked that chaplains who can be present notify him as soon as possible at 202 South 19th St., Philadelphia, 3.

Pacifists to Meet

Philadelphia:—Bishop Kaines of Iowa is to be the speaker at the breakfast which will follow the corporate communion of the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship to be held here at St. Stephen's at 7:30 the morning of September 12th. Mr. Douglas Steere of the Society of Friends will be the speaker at a similar meeting at St. Stephen's on the 17th.

Negroes Meet

Philadelphia:—One of the preliminary General Convention meetings is that of the eighth annual triennial conference of Church workers among colored people according to a program just issued by the Rev. Jesse F. Anderson, rector of St. Thomas' Church and host to the sessions. Beginning Wednesday night, September 4, the conference lasts through Saturday, September 7, when the climax comes in the consecration of St. Thomas' by Bishop Oliver J. Hart at 11 o'clock. Round table discussions have been planned led by such persons as the Rev. Tollie L. Caution, secretary for Negro work of the National Council, retired Bishop E. Thomas Demby of Arkansas, Bishops William P. Remington, suffragan of Pennsylvania, Charles Voegoli of Haiti, Bravid W. Harris of Liberia, W. Bertrand Stevens of Los Angeles, the Hon. Hubert T. Delany, justice

Tone
That Reflects Workmanship

The skilled hands of Moller craftsmen fashion in wood, metal and leather, an instrument eminently worthy of the world's finest music.

The name Moller is a synonym for the ultimate in pipe organ achievement—the instrument best fitted to express the full beauty of your musical program.

★

DELEGATES TO THE TRIENNIAL GENERAL CONVENTION IN PHILADELPHIA MAY SEE AN OUTSTANDING EXAMPLE OF MOLLER CRAFTSMANSHIP IN THE ORGAN AT CONVENTION HALL, PHILADELPHIA.

M.P. MÖLLER
THE ARTIST OF ORGANS · THE ORGAN OF ARTISTS
HAGERSTOWN, MARYLAND

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

of the domestic relations court, city of New York, the Rev. William B. Spofford, managing editor of THE WITNESS, and other clergy and lay leaders.

Convention Guest

New York:—Among the distinguished guests to attend the General Convention will be the Rev. Gilbert Cope, secretary of the Coventry Council of Churches and editor of The Magnificat, official paper of the English society of Socialist clergy and ministers. Mr. Cope, who is travelling in this country as guest of the Anglican Fellowship for Social Action (Canada) and the C.L.I.D., will speak briefly at the C.L.I.D.'s corporate communion and breakfast to be held in the Church of the Holy Trinity, 19th and Walnut Streets, at 7:30 a.m. on Saturday, September 14th. Others who will participate in the session will be Bishop Parsons, president of the C.L.I.D., and Bishop Scarlett, chairman of the Church's Commission on Social Reconstruction.

College Workers

New York:—The Church Society for College Work announces that it will sponsor a public dinner in Philadelphia on September 18 to which members of the society, deputies to the General Convention and others interested in the work of the Church in colleges and universities are invited. Speakers will be Dr. Gordon K. Chalmers, president of Kenyon College, Gambier, Ohio; Prof. George Thomas, Princeton department of religion; and the Rev. C. Leslie Glenn of Washington, president of the society who will also serve as toastmaster. About 200 can be accommodated according to the Rev. Thomas Barrett, executive secretary of the college work division.

Visitors

Washington, D. C. (RNS):—With an average of 300 daily visitors so far this summer, the Washington Cathedral is experiencing a return of the peace-time American habit of visiting national shrines of the capital area. Visitors come from every state in the union.

Bishop Improves

Detroit:—Bishop Frank W. Creighton of Michigan is making a good convalescence at home from an operation which he underwent earlier in the summer. It will be some time, however, before he can engage in any of his official duties.

Meanwhile, Bishop Richard S. Emrich, the new suffragan, has arrived with his family from Cambridge, Mass., and the Emrich family has made its home in Ann Arbor.

Staff Worker

Washington:—The Rev. Calvin H. Elliott, just released from active duty in the navy chaplaincy and formerly at St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston, has joined the Church Society for College Work staff here. He is avidly concerned about the veteran and the Church to act now upon this vital and potential group of men. At the moment while settling into civilian routine he is obtaining his flying license in order to use aircraft in expediting and extending the help and influence of the Society.

Bishop Better

Sioux Falls, S. D.:—Bishop W. Blair Roberts returned recently from the Mayo clinic, Rochester, Minn., where he had been receiving treatment for an infection in his right wrist. He announced he would be unable, however, to attend General Convention, but was making a good recovery.

School Grows

New York:—Conditions at St. John's University, Shanghai, are improving rapidly with increased enrollment and the repairing of war damaged buildings by the local mission. All buildings are expected to be in use this fall and the athletic field will be rebuilt. Funds for the university have been raised locally from wealthy Chinese families and from other sources.

Union Plan

Montreal (RNS)—A proposed plan for union with the Canada conference of the Evangelical Church will be discussed by the General Council of the United Church of Canada when it meets here next month.

The plan differs from that being considered by the United Church and the Church of England in Canada in that it is a proposal for organic unity. The Anglican agreement would be in the nature of a cooperative system with an interchange of ministers between the two denominations.

Unique Feature

Philadelphia:—Unique feature in connection with the General Convention and the triennial meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary here will be a presentation of women's work in

3 books to increase your understanding —of Church music

IN EVERY CORNER SING

By JOSEPH W. CLOKEY

This practical booklet will help you to listen to worship music intelligently and to know good worship music when you hear it. "Mr. Clokey has brought together in this small volume the advice, observations, and philosophy of a church musician in a very exceptional way." — The Saint's Herald. 50 cents

—of prayer

PRAYER AND THE SERVICE OF GOD

By DANIEL T. JENKINS

A thoughtful discussion of what prayer really is and does, this book is written especially for those who find it difficult to pray in these times. The book is small enough for your pocket or purse and contains about 150 pages. $1.50

—of religious art

THE MADONNA IN ART

Booklet

A real incentive to learn an appreciation of the masterpieces of religious art is this booklet which contains seventeen richly-hued portraits of the Mother of Christ as interpreted by the master Madonna painters, together with illuminating facts about each artist. Size 3½x6". 15 cents each.

Quantity prices somewhat less

Morehouse-Gorham Co.
14 E. 41st St. New York 17

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

When You Come
To Philadelphia

plan to visit the

Presbyterian Ministers' Fund

The home office stands close by Holy Trinity Church on Rittenhouse Square.

Since 1717 the Fund has been standing by ministers and their families.

Visitors cordially welcomed. Inquiries cheerfully answered.

Presbyterian Ministers' Fund
1805-07 Walnut Street
Philadelphia 3,
Pennsylvania

ALEXANDER MACKIE,
President

the Church in the form of a 5-scene play, directed by Rev. Harold Bassage, assistant at St. George's Church, New York. Bishop Oliver Loring of Maine; the Rev. Russell Staines, St. Mark's Church, Berkeley, Calif.; Miss Bernice Jansen, former missionary to Japan; Miss Adelaide T. Case, professor of Christian education, Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge; the Rev. Messrs. Clifford Samuelson, division of domestic missions, and A. Ervine Swift, overseas division will lead a panel discussion presided over by Mrs. Arthur M. Sherman, executive secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary.

General Convention

(Continued from page 6)

square mile of land with 4 parishes and several missions having a combined communicant strength of 1,175 as the special province for the head of the Episcopal Church. It is thought by the commission that this location is good because it is easily accessible to New York headquarters, to Washington Cathedral where the presiding bishop has an Episcopal throne, and to the country as a whole.

Other commissions and committees that will submit reports are those on Church debt, music, liturgics, faith and order, theological education. Whether or not there will be reports by the commissions on the legal title of the Church, clergy placement, retirement of clergy, clergy salaries, status of provinces and social insurance for lay employees, this latter one of the hotly debated issues before the 1943 Convention, remains to be seen. In any case no reports from these commissions had been received by the secretary of the House of Deputies, the Rev. Franklin Clark, when this number of THE WITNESS went to press.

Another matter which will come before Convention is whether or not the assessment of the Church Pension Fund should be raised from 7½% to 10% of clergy salaries. It is thought that this issue also will cause a lively debate.

That about covers it. Anything we have overlooked will be covered thoroughly in our Convention numbers, the first of which is the issue of September 19th which will report the first week of Convention.

CHURCH-CRAFT Pictures
FORMERLY CATHEDRAL PICTURES
BIBLE STORIES PHOTOGRAPHED IN COLOR

Announce...

A Change in Name
The Same Company—The Same Service—The Same Goal

NEW Picture Slide Sets
45 Bible Story Sets Completed by Sept. 30

NEW Christmas Story *
"Christmas Blessings"—40 Slides, Program Guide Free

NEW Producing Connection
The Cecil B. de Mille Pictures Corp. for our new Slides

OUR recognized leadership assures you the Best of Bible Story Slides in Natural Colors. Here is the visual aid that vividly presents the Gospel message and its glorious salvation truth. Biblically correct and technically unrivalled. Thrills young and old, quickens Bible interest, deepens spiritual conviction.

 See Your Dealer—*Order Early
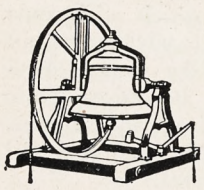
Expected demand for "Christmas Blessings" urges prompt ordering. Church-Craft Bible Story Slides—all in natural colors—size, 2x2 inch in protective glass binders, sold in sets only, standard price per slide 60c.

Color circular, with full list of Church-Craft Bible Story Slide Sets. Free from your dealer on request.



CHURCH-CRAFT PICTURES, St. Louis 3, Mo.
FORMERLY CATHEDRAL PICTURES

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Write us for
Organ Information
AUSTIN ORGANS, Inc.
Hartford, Conn.

Memorial Windows
In accordance with the best traditions of the craft. Notable installations in forty states and five foreign countries.
Illustrated material on request
The D'Ascenzo Studios
founded 1896
1604 Summer Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

ALTAR BREADS ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED
SAINT MARY'S CONVENT
KENOSHA • WISCONSIN

MENEELY BELL CO.
22 RIVER ST., TROY, N. Y.
BELLS

R. GEISSLER, INC.
71-79 W. 45th St., New York 19, N. Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE·BRASS·SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS
EST 1837

ERNEST W. LAKEMAN
Designer and Worker in
STAINED GLASS
2 CRESCENT PLACE
YONKERS, NEW YORK

Need a LAXATIVE?
Black-Draught is
1-Usually prompt
2-Usually thorough
3-Always economical

25 to 40 doses only 25¢
Get BLACK-DRAUGHT
CAUTION: USE ONLY AS DIRECTED

CLERGY NOTES

ABSON, MELVIN, rector of St. Paul's, Brownville, N. Y., is now rector of Emmanuel Church, East Syracuse, N. Y.

BOYD, JAMES C., Pittsburgh, Pa., rector of the Advent, died August 19.

CATLIN, LLEWELLYN B., rector of St. John's, Versailles, Ky., is now rector of Christ Church and St. Andrew's Chapel, Mt. Pleasant, S. C.

CLEBSCH, WILLIAM A., was ordained deacon July 26 by Bishop Dandridge of Tenn., and will assist at St. Paul's, Lansing, Mich., working with Michigan State College students.

COBURN, JOHN B., assistant at Grace Church, N. Y. City, is now rector of Grace Church, Amherst, Mass.

COOK, ROBERT M., was ordained priest by Bishop Dandridge of Tenn., July 25, and is in charge of St. Andrew's, Harriman, Tenn.

GARDNER, JOHN A., rector of St. Andrew's, Providence, R. I., will resign from the active ministry Oct. 1.

HARRIS, T. CECIL, rector of Trinity, Hayward, Calif., is now non-parochial because of ill health and may be addressed at Holliday House, Pacific Grove, Calif.

HEBBERGER, PAUL F., was ordained priest by Bishop R. Bland Mitchell of Arkansas for the Bishop of Missouri in Christ Church Cathedral, St. Louis, and is rector of St. Peter's, Smyrna, Del.

HOAG, DEAN VICTOR of Eau Claire, Wis., has resigned to become associate rector of Trinity, Tulsa, Okla., effective November 1.

JOHNSON, ROBERT I., founder and director of the Good Shepherd Hospital for Negroes, New Bern, N. C., and rector of St. Cyprian's and Archdeacon for Colored Work in the diocese of East Carolina died August 5.

KANAGA, MILTON S., rector of St. James', Lindsay, Calif., will become rector of Trinity, Coshocton, Ohio and in charge of Zion Church, Dresden, Oct. 1.

KEW, CLINTON, J., former rector of St. Clement's, Greenville, Pa., is now rector of St. James', Youngstown, Ohio.

KING, HANFORD L. JR., was ordained deacon by Bishop W. Appleton Lawrence of Western Mass., in All Saints', Worcester, and will study at Union Theological Seminary, New York, this fall.

LOVGREN, BERNARD N., former canon of Grace Cathedral, San Francisco, has been appointed dean of the Cathedral.

POWERS, HENRY, rector of St. Margaret's, Annapolis, will become rector of St. Helena's, Beaufort, S. C., effective October 1.

RAUSCHER, RUSSELL T., former navy chaplain, is now vicar of St. Matthew's, Iowa Falls, Iowa.

ROBINSON, KENNETH R., ordained deacon by Bishop Lawrence of Western Mass., is now assistant minister at St. Peter's, Albany, N. Y.

ASSOCIATE RECTOR

Wanted: Associate rector, 40 years or under, for large Midwest city parish; conservative churchman. Good salary, splendid opportunity. Reply to Box FT, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty St., New York, 6.

WANTED

A man as Sacristan for Sunday duty in New York City Church. Apply by letter stating age and experience to THE WITNESS, Box 53, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

GRADUATE NURSE

Wanted—A graduate nurse for Church institution, District of Columbia. Fair salary, interesting work. Write Box HM, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty St., New York 6, N. Y.

ASSISTANT WANTED

Suburban southern California parish seeks the services of an assistant minister, preferably a young man. Churchmanship moderate. An excellent opportunity for the right man. State age, experience, etc. Box CS, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty St., New York 6, N. Y.

STAMMER?
This new 128-page book, "Stammering, Its Cause and Correction," describes the Bogue Unit Method for scientific correction of stammering and stuttering—successful for 45 years. Free—no obligation.
Benjamin N. Bogue, Dept. 5800, Circle Tower, Indianapolis 4, Ind.
GET THIS FREE BOOK!

Everything for the Episcopal Church
but vestments
A broad statement but we'd like to prove it.
Ammidon and Company
Horace L. Varian
Horace L. Varian, Jr.
31 South Frederick Street
Baltimore 2, Maryland

PURE IRISH LINENS NOW IN STOCK
for all Church needs, supplies constantly arriving, good qualities, also fine cottons. Samples free.
Mary Fawcett Company
Plainfield, N. J. Box 146

CATHEDRAL STUDIOS
Washington & London, England. Linens and materials by the yard, surplices, albs, Altar Linens, stoles, burses & veils. Materials by the yard. See my NEW BOOK "CHURCH EMBROIDERY" & CHURCH VESTMENTS a complete instruction. 128 pages, 95 illus. Price $5.67. And my HANDBOOK for ALTAR GUILDS, price 50c. Miss L. V. Mackrille, 11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington 15, D.C. 30 minutes from U. S. Treasury. Tel. Wisconsin 2752.

SURPLICES — STOLES
VESTMENTS
CHURCH HANGINGS
ALTAR LINENS
CASSOCKS
CLERICAL SUITS — CLOAKS
RABATS—RABAT VESTS—COLLARS—SHIRTS
Choir Vestments in All Styles
Inquiries Invited
C. M. ALMY & SON, INC.
562 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.

EARN EXTRA MONEY FULL OR PART TIME
New FREE, 42 page book entitled "How to Become a Successful Salesman," written by salesmen, has enabled thousands of men and women to find happiness, freedom and success as independent salespeople. Send a penny postcard with name and address to
SPECIALTY SALESMAN MAGAZINE
Dept. L G
307 N. Michigan Ave. Chicago, Illinois

The Payne-Spiers Studios Inc.
Studios at Paterson, New Jersey
Carved Wood
Chancel Renovations Church Furnishings
Murals Memorials Tablets
Stained Glass
·· Inquiries Solicited ··

VESTMENTS
Cassocks - Surplices - Stoles - Scarves
Silks - Altar Cloths - Embroideries
Priest Cloaks - Rabats - Collars
Custom Tailoring for Clergymen
1837 Church Vestment Makers Over One Hundred Years 1946
COX SONS & VINING, Inc.
131 East 23rd Street, New York 10, N.Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

DON FRANK FENN
Rector St. Michael and All Angels, Baltimore

I rarely write to the Editor, but I am moved to do so by the editorial "Do We Trust Our Commission?" (WITNESS, July 25). Quite frankly, the editorial board of THE WITNESS is quite inconsistent. THE WITNESS is constantly urging us to write our Congressmen and Senators to petition for this, that, and the other thing in social legislation. Please understand, I'm all for this. I do it, and further urge other people to do it, and yet it is true that many of our Senators and Congressmen are well-educated, intelligent people who in many cases have given much more thought to the subject about which we write than we have.

What is the difference between that and a petition addressed to the House of Bishops, which is comparable to the Senate, on the subject of "Report of the Commission on Approaches Toward Unity"? Certainly the lay-people of this Church have a right to express themselves on this subject as much as all subjects before the Congress of the United States. Dozens of my people who have given prayerful and careful thought to this subject, who have read the report that will be made to the General Convention have expressed their great gratitude for the opportunity to do something about a situation that has filled their hearts with foreboding.

I shall not comment on the report itself, but I could not help ribbing you just a little about the inconsistency of policy. You know how highly I value our friendship, even though so far as the Church is concerned we do not see eye to eye.

* * *

MR. FRED NEWTON
Layman of Philadelphia

I want to thank THE WITNESS for publishing the excellent article on religious education by the Rev. David R. Hunter (WITNESS, July 11). As the director of a Church School it was helpful to me and I plan to read it at the meeting of teachers before we open in September.

* * *

MARY B. ANTHONY
Churchwoman of Providence, R. I.

I have received from the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship the pamphlet, "A Plea for Greater Democracy in the Episcopal Church" which interests me very much. I certainly agree with your point of view and I am thankful that the subject is being taken up before the General Convention. It seems amazing that they have been trying for 114 years to make the Church more representative in its conventions. I hope some progress may be made this year.

But why stop at men being the representatives for the whole Church, do not the women have as much interest as the men and do they not give as much time, thought, devotion to the Church as the men? In counting the numerical strength of the Church the women are counted. The Church needs them quite as much as the men and needs them in their councils. The women should be given an equal share with the men and an equal share in opportunities and responsibilities.

I believe it is not good for men to arrogate to themselves and I also believe that the Church needs the women's point of view. Even though the representation in the House of Deputies was made up equally of men and women laymen still the Convention would have many more men in it than women, the clergy and the bishops. Then, too, the clergymen are more vocal at meetings than the men.

What will the Convention do about seating the woman delegate who has been elected from Missouri? I hope something definite will be done in Convention, I am sure it would be a forward step.

Christchurch
VIRGINIA
SCHOOL for BOYS

Intermediate School. Seventh to Ninth Grades. Upper School. College Entrance Requirements. This school is a member of the system of schools in the diocese of Virginia. Apply to The Headmaster, Christchurch School, Christchurch, Va.

ST. JOHN'S MILITARY SCHOOL
Salina, Kansas

Since 1887 St. John's has been perpetuating the cultural traditions of the Church by stressing sound scholarship in Christian atmosphere.

Grades 6-12. Fully accredited. Bar I.L. Summer School and Camp in Colorado Rockies. Boys 8-15. Splendid equipment. 10,000 acres.

The Rev. R. L. Clem, Rector

St. Margaret's House
School for Christian Service and Deaconess Training School of the Pacific
A graduate school preparing women for Church positions in the fields of religious education, social service, and evangelistic work. Opportunity to work for advanced degrees. Special training for work in Orient.
ADDRESS THE DEAN
1820 Scenic Ave. Berkeley 4, California

CATHEDRAL CHOIR SCHOOL
NEW YORK
A Boarding and Day School for Boys
Established 1849
A BOARDING SCHOOL for the forty boys of the Choir of the Cathedral of Saint John the Divine. The boys receive careful musical training and sing daily at the service in the Cathedral. The classes in the School are small with the result that boys have individual attention, and very high standards are maintained. The School has its own building and playgrounds in the close. Fee—$350.00 per annum. Boys admitted 9 to 11. Voice test and scholastic examination. For Catalogue and Information address:
The CANON PRECENTOR, Cathedral Choir School, Cathedral Heights, New York City

Virginia Episcopal School
Lynchburg, Virginia
Prepares boys for colleges and university. Splendid environment and excellent corps of teachers. High standard in scholarship and athletics. Healthy and beautiful location in the mountains of Virginia.
For catalogue apply to
George L. Barton, Jr., Ph.D. Headmaster, Box 408

SCHOOLS

The Hospital of Saint Barnabas and the University of Newark offer a full course in NURSING
to qualified High School graduates. Scholarships available. Classes enter in February and September
Apply to
Director of Nursing
HOSPITAL OF SAINT BARNABAS
685 High Street Newark, N. J.

DE VEAUX SCHOOL
FOUNDED 1852
A Church school for boys. Thorough preparation for college. Military system of student government, developing sense of responsibility. Charges for grades seven and eight $1000; grades nine through twelve $1050. For catalog, address THE HEADMASTER, DeVeaux School, Niagara Falls, New York.

HOLDERNESS
In the White Mountains. College Preparatory and General Courses. Music and Cratts. For boys 12-19. All sports including riding. 200 acres of woods. New fireproof building. Individual attention. Home atmosphere.
Rev. Edric A. Weld, Rector
Box W. Plymouth, N. H.

MARGARET HALL
Under Sisters of St. Helena
(Episcopal)
Small country boarding and day school for girls, from primary through high school. Accredited college preparatory. Modern building recently thoroughly renovated includes gymnasium and swimming pool. Campus of six acres with ample playground space, hockey field and tennis court. Riding. Board and Tuition $800. For catalog, address: Sister Rachel, Prin. O.S.H., Box A. Versailles, Kentucky.

FORK UNION MILITARY ACADEMY
An Honor Christian School with the highest academic rating. Upper School prepares for university or business. ROTC. Every modern equipment. Junior School from six years. Housemother. Separate building. Catalogue. Dr. J. J. Wicker, Fork Union, Virginia.

CARLETON COLLEGE
Laurence M. Gould, D.Sc., President
Carleton is a co-educational liberal arts college of limited enrollment and is recognized as the Church College of Minnesota.
Address: Assistant to the President
CARLETON COLLEGE
Northfield Minnesota

KEMPER HALL
KENOSHA, WISCONSIN
Boarding and day school for girls offering thorough college preparation and training for purposeful living. Study of the Fine Arts encouraged. Complete sports program. Junior School department. Beautiful lake shore campus. Under direction of the Sisters of St Mary. For catalogue, address: Box WT.

ROWLAND HALL
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
Boarding and Day pupils. Accredited. Preschool, Lower school, College Preparatory and General courses. Graduates in many eastern and western colleges. All branches of music, dancing, art, drama Indoor pool, tennis courts, riding, weekends of winter sports. Pleasant home life. Environment of geographical and historical interest. Altitude 4500. Boarding $1,000, Day $120-$350.
The Right Rev. Arthur W. Moulton, S.T.D., Rector

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

CARILLONIC BELLS

Make the Loveliest Memorial of All...

As a memorial for those who gave their lives in service, inscribe their names, not in perishable substances, but in the skyward tones of music—in Carillonic Bells, whose glorious song will rise day after day in praise and homage.

This is the tribute that none will have to seek out, that will not yield its lustre to time. The tribute of Carillonic Bells, will send its message, pouring out in melody the wordless certainties of faith. And, listening, hearts will know, remember, reverence, those in whose honor the golden music sounds.

Schulmerich Carillonic Bells, surpassing all chimes or bells, are eminently suitable for such a memorial. A quarter-century of electronic science has enabled Schulmerich to develop tones of luminous beauty, clearly audible, even at a distance, and responsive to the most exacting degrees of modulation. They are simple to install, require no additional structure, and are moderate in cost.

If you, too, would like to create a memorial in music for those whom you have loved and lost, we shall be glad to send you a descriptive booklet giving complete details. Please address Dept. W-15

"The Sweetest Music Ever Tolled"

WILL BE

PLAYED DAILY FROM IRVING AUDITORIUM

The University of Pennsylvania

AT THE

CONVENTION OF THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH

PHILADELPHIA

Week of September 10, 1946

A few of the Episcopal Church Installations throughout the country.

CHRIST CHURCH, Waukegan, Ill.
TRINITY CHURCH, Staunton, Va.
CHRIST CHURCH, Williamsport, Pa.
TRINITY CHURCH, Greeley, Colo.
CHURCH OF THE INCARNATION, Santa Rosa, Calif.
ST. PAUL'S CHURCH, Medina, Ohio

You are cordially invited to inspect the Carillonic Bells installation, or write us for complete information.

Schulmerich ELECTRONICS, INC.

SELLERSVILLE, PENNA.

CARILLONIC BELLS - TOWER MUSIC SYSTEMS - ACOUSTIC CORRECTION UNITS - SOUND DISTRIBUTION SYSTEMS - CHURCH HEARING AIDS

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The WITNESS

10¢ A COPY

SEPTEMBER 19, 1946

LIBRARY COPY

OWEN J. ROBERTS
ELECTED PRESIDENT
HOUSE OF DEPUTIES

(story on page four)

GENERAL CONVENTION NEWS

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

THE CATHEDRAL OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE
NEW YORK CITY

Sundays: 8, 9, 11, Holy Communion; 10, Morning Prayer; 4, Evening Prayer; Sermons 1 and 4.
Weekdays: 7:30 (also 9:15 Holy Days, and 10, Wednesdays), Holy Communion; 9, Morning Prayer; 5, Evening Prayer. Open daily 7 A. M. to 6 P. M.

GRACE CHURCH, NEW YORK
Broadway at 10th St.
Rev. Louis W. Pitt, D.D., Rector

Daily: 12:30 except Mondays and Saturdays.
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M. and 4:30 P. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion 11:45 A. M.

THE HEAVENLY REST, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue at 90th Street
Rev. Henry Darlington, D.D.

Sundays: Holy Communion, 8 and 10 A. M.; Morning Service and Sermon, 11 A. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion, 11 A. M.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S CHURCH
NEW YORK
Park Avenue and 51st Street
Rev. Geo. Paull T. Sargent, D.D., Rector

8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evensong. Special Music.
Weekdays: Holy Communion Wednesday at 8:00 A. M.
Thursdays and Saints' Days at 10:30 A. M.
The Church is open daily for prayer.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH
Madison Ave. at 71st St., New York
The Rev. H. W. B. Donegan, D.D., Rector

8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
9:30 A. M. Church School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evening Prayer and Sermon.
Wed., 7:45 A. M., Thurs., 12 Noon Holy Communion.

THE CHURCH OF THE EPIPHANY
1317 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Charles W. Sheerin, Rector

Sunday: 8 and 11 A. M.; 8 P. M.
Daily: 12:05.
Thursdays: 11:00 and 12:05.

ST. THOMAS' CHURCH, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue and 53rd Street
Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, S.T.D., Rector

Sunday Services: 8 and 11 A. M.
Daily Services: 8:30 A. M., Holy Communion.
Thursdays: 11 A. M., Holy Communion.

THE CHURCH OF THE ASCENSION
Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street, New York
The Rev. Roscoe Thornton Foust, Rector

Sundays: 8 and 9 H. C.; 11 A. M., 4:30, 8 P. M.
Daily: 8, Holy Communion.
5:30 Vespers—Tuesday through Friday.
The Church is open all day and night.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL
Buffalo, New York
Shelton Square
The Very Rev. Edward R. Welles, M.A., Dean

Sunday Services: 8, 9:30 and 11.
Daily: 12:05 noon—Holy Communion.
Tuesday: 7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
Wednesday: 11:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH
Atlanta, Georgia
435 Peachtree Street
The Rev. J. Milton Richardson, Rector

9:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
10:45 A. M. Sunday School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Prayer and Sermon.
6:00 P. M. Young People's Meetings.

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

EDITORIAL BOARD: Frederick C. Grant, Editor; Arthur Lichtenberger, Chairman; William B. Spofford, Managing Editor; Philip L. Shutt, News Editor; Lane W. Barton, Beverly M. Boyd, Dillard H. Brown, Roscoe T. Foust, Charles K. Gilbert, Hugh D. McCandless, Howard Chandler Robbins, William K. Russell, Sydney A. Temple Jr., Joseph H. Titus, William M. Weber.

★

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS: D. B. Aldrich, J. A. Bell, T. S. Carruthers, Adelaide Case, G. K. Chalmers, E. M. Cross, G. M. Day, Angus Dun, A. W. Farlander, T. P. Ferris, J. F. Fletcher, John Gass, C. H. Gesner, C. L. Glenn, G. C. Graham, J. M. Groton, G. I. Hiller, I. P. Johnson, T. R. Ludlow, C. S. Martin, R. C. Miller, Walter Mitchell, A. T. Mollegen, E. L. Parsons, E. L. Pennington, Rose Phelps, L. W. Pitt, Otis Rice, Cyril Richardson, Paul Roberts, V. D. Scudder, W. M. Sharp, W. B. Sperry, C. W. Sprouse, D. S. Stark, W. B. Stevens, J. W. Suter, S. E. Sweet, Alexander Zabriskie.

★

THE WITNESS is published weekly from September 15th to June 15th inclusive, with the exception of the first week in January and semi-monthly from June 15th to September 15th by the Episcopal Church Publishing Association, Inc. Samuel Thorne, President; Charles A. Houston, Vice-President; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, Treasurer; Frederic D. H. Gilbert, Secretary.

★

The subscription price is $3.00 a year; in bundles for sale in parishes the magazine sells for 10c a copy, we will bill quarterly at 5c a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter, March 6, 1939, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879.

SEPTEMBER 19, 1946
Vol. XXIX No. 42

CLERGY NOTES

BROWN, RICHARD T., candidate for holy orders, is lay-reader in charge of St. Augustine's mission in Detroit, Mich.

BUGLER, WILLIAM J., recently released as chaplain from the Canadian army, is now in charge of St. Mary's, Detroit.

DAY, EDWARD J., Lenox School, Mass., is now assistant at St. Paul's, Stockbridge, in addition to his duties at the school.

HALL, WILLIAM, formerly a chaplain with the Canadian army, took charge of St. Mark's, Marine City, Mich., Sept. 1.

HATFIELD, J. LYON, former rector of Holy Cross, Utica, N. Y., is now rector of St. Stephen's, Brideburg, Pa.

KNAPP, JOHN L., resigned Sept. 1 as rector of Trinity, Detroit, Mich., to become rector of Trinity, Marshall, Mich.

PUGH, ERNEST B., curate of Grace Church, Utica, N. Y., is now rector of St. Augustine's, Ilion, N. Y.

SCHULTZ, PAUL T. JR., rector of Emmanuel, West Roxbury, Mass., will be rector of Atonement, Westfield, Mass., effective Sept. 16.

SMITH, BIRNEY W. JR., was ordained priest June 23 by Bishop Creighton of Michigan in St. Matthew's, Detroit, and is now in charge of St. Mary's, Keokuk, Iowa.

SPURRIER, WM. A., ordained deacon by Bishop Lawrence of Western Mass., is now teaching at Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn.

STINNETTE, CHARLES R. JR., recently separated from the army as chaplain, will do graduate work in pastoral psychiatry at Columbia University with residence at Union Theological Seminary, New York.

TEMPLE, REV. SYDNEY A., on leave of absence as rector of the Mediator, New York, because of health, is now active as rector of the parish.

THOMAS, ROBERT F., former rector of St. John's, Huntington, Pa., is now rector of Christ Church, Point Pleasant, W. Va.

WATTS, DAVID E., ordained priest July 25 by Bishop Dandridge of Tenn., is in charge of Christ Church, Tracy City, Tenn.

WICHER, EDWARD A. JR., ordained deacon August 3 by Bishop Block of California is curate of St. Luke's, San Francisco.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

CHRIST CHURCH CATHEDRAL
Main and Church Sts., Hartford, Conn.
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30, 10:05, 11 A. M., 8 P. M.
Weekdays: Holy Communion—Monday and Thursday, 9 A. M.; Tuesday, Friday and Saturday, 8 A. M.; Wednesday, 7:00 and 11:00 A. M. Noonday Service, daily 12:15 P. M.

CHRIST CHURCH
Cambridge
REV. GARDINER M. DAY, RECTOR
REV. FREDERIC B. KELLOGG, CHAPLAIN
Sunday Services, 8:00, 9:00, 10:00 and 11:15 A. M.
Weekdays: Wed. 8 and 11 A. M. Thurs., 7:30 A. M.

TRINITY CHURCH
Miami
Rev. G. Irvine Hiller, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services 8, 9:30, 11 A. M.

TRINITY CATHEDRAL
Military Park, Newark, N. J.
The Very Rev. Arthur C. Lichtenberger, Dean
Summer Services
Sunday
8:30 and 11:00 A. M.
Weekdays
Tuesday, Thursday, Friday at 12:10; Wednesday and Holy Days, Holy Communion, 12 noon.
The Cathedral is open every day.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
Montecito and Bay Place
OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA
Rev. Calvin Barkow, D.D., Rector
Sundays: 8 A. M., Holy Communion; 11 A. M., Church School; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer and Sermon.
Wednesdays: 10 A. M., Holy Communion; 10:45, Rector's Study Class.

GRACE CHURCH
Corner Church and Davis Streets
ELMIRA, N. Y.
Rev. Frederick T. Henstridge, Rector
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M.; 4:30 P. M.
Daily: Tuesday and Thursday, 7:30 A. M.
Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Holy Days, 9:30 A. M.
Other Services Announced

ST. MARK'S CHURCH
Texas Avenue and Cotton Street
SHREVEPORT, LA.
Rev. Frank E. Walters, Rector
Rev. Harry Wintermeyer, Curate
Sundays: Holy Communion, 7:30; 9:25 A. M., Family Service; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer.
Holy Communion, first Sunday. 6 P. M., Young Churchmen.

CHRIST CHURCH
Nashville, Tennessee
Rev. Peyton Randolph Williams
7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
9:30 and 11 A. M.—Church School.
11 A. M.—Morning Service and Sermon.
6 P. M.—Young People's Meetings.
Thursdays and Saints' Days—Holy Communion, 10 A. M.

GRACE CHURCH
105 Main Street, Orange, N. J.
Lane Wickham Barton, Rector
SUNDAYS
8:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M.—Church School.
11:00 A. M.—Morning Prayer and Sermon. (Holy Communion first Sunday each month)
7:00 P. M.—Young People's Fellowship.

CHRIST CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA
Second Street above Market
Cathedral of Democracy
Founded 1695
Rev. E. Felix Kloman, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services: 10 and 11 A. M.
Weekdays: Wed., 12 noon and 12:30.
Saints' Days: 12 noon.
This Church Is Open Every Day

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

VOL. XXIX, No. 42

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

SEPTEMBER 19, 1946

Publication Office, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago 37, Ill. Editorial Office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

Controversial Issues Debated At General Convention

A More Liberal Marriage Canon and Unity With Presbyterians Cause Much Speaking

By The Editors

Philadelphia:—Debate of the two controversial issues before General Convention, change in the marriage canon and unity with the Presbyterian Church, featured the first week, though neither was presented until the fourth day. The first three days saw nothing much of anything happen as far as actual legislation is concerned.

The net result of the action in Deputies on unity, and it is yet to come before the Bishops, was continuation of the commission and its negotiations with the Presbyterians; the authorization of a formal statement, in harmony with the Lambeth Quadrilateral, of faith and order on the basis of which the Church will proceed to organic federation and intercommunion with the Presbyterians and any other interested Christian body; requesting Lambeth Conference of 1948 to appoint a standing commission on the reunion of Christendom "to consider all specific approaches to unity."

The Bishops, after hours of debate, unanimously passed a new canon on marriage, yet to be approved by Deputies, the result of consultations by a committee. Essentially it provides for remarriage in case of civil divorce or annulment for causes essentially existing before marriage or contrary to Christian marriage ideals. It includes a doctrinal statement on what the basis of matrimony should be, and lists impediments to marriage. An interim committee is suggested which will obtain from dioceses their decisions, collating and publishing them once a year. This committee will serve until next Convention. An advisory board to the bishop is for each diocese to determine. If approved by Deputies, which is likely, it means a new canon on marriage after 21 years of efforts to that end.

Confusion worse confounded characterized the first day's deliberations in the House of Bishops upon the joint commission's report on holy matrimony. After an able presentation by the chairman, Bishop Cameron Davis of Western New York, the consideration of this important change in the marriage law of the Church was befouled by parliamentary tactics and, as one bishop said, "assinine amendments" so that after two hours of wrangling the matter was postponed until the following day.

The crux of the opposition was the provision for the court of advice to the bishop. This provision was placed in Canon 17 which Bishop Davis asked to be considered first. After considerable debate Bishop Davis said his committee had a change up their sleeve which would answer the criticism, and when pushed to tell it said it was to change the word "court" where it appeared to "council of advice." Thereafter this was known as the up-the-sleeve amendment. Bishop Wallace Conkling of Chicago opposed it on the grounds it was not workable in a metropolitan center where a dozen or more requests for opinions on remarriage or divorce weekly flooded his mails.

Another interesting feature was the slowness of debate on the question and even good-humored attempts of Presiding Bishop Tucker to get his brethren to speak seemed for a while to be of no effect. This was true when the house went into the committee of the whole. But they got into such a state over this procedure they thought it wiser to again sit as a deliberative house. While this made debate freer it caused confusion as amendments were presented, voted down, reconsidered, voted down and reconsidered again. Even the presiding officer lost some of his accustomed aplomb in conducting the business session and the debate ended on a note of tiredness and frustration.

On the second day of debate, Friday, the report being a special order of business, various attempts were made to clarify the confusion of the preceding day. Bishop Malcolm Peabody of Central New York opposed any liberalization of the canon and went so far as to advocate the forbidding remarriage by the Church of divorced persons under any circumstances.

Dean Claude Sprouse of Kansas City, Missouri, was a good second to the Hon. Owen J. Roberts for the office of the House of Deputies: 338 to 236

He was joined by Bishop Wallace Conkling of Chicago who spoke against the lowering of standards and that while it is right to recognize human nature it must not be yielded to, and lower standards to the lowest common denominator. He characterized present legislation as being like a corpse in a coffin with roses about it.

Bishop Scarlett of Missouri arose in opposition to Bishop Peabody's proposal on the ground that it does not allow even the innocent person a right to Christian marriage. He offered an amendment but the presiding officer ruled it out of order. Then, Bishop Gravitt of Upper South Carolina, tired of the procedure moved that the matter be referred to a committee to be reported upon Saturday morning. On this committee were Bishops William Scarlett of Missouri, Cameron Davis of Western New York, Wallace Conkling of Chicago, John J. Gravitt of Upper South Carolina, and W. H. Penick of North Carolina.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Meanwhile the House of Deputies on Friday used up the entire day, and everyone's nerves, with endless speech making, on the question of unity with the Presbyterians.

In presenting the report, Dr. Alexander Guerry of Tennessee said that the majority group were only asking that the Convention submit, without approval or disapproval, for study by the Church the proposed bases of union with the Presbyterian Church, with action to be deferred until the General Convention of 1949. In the meantime it was proposed that negotiations with the Presbyterians should be continued. The commission, he said, was not asking for a decision on any section or any commitment at this time. It was merely an opportunity for the people of the Church to study concrete means, which might yet be amended after further study —rather than have before them only the abstract ideal of unity. This latter idea was also echoed by the Very Rev. Alexander C. Zabriskie of Virginia, who was given the remainder of Dr. Guerry's time.

The opening argument for the minority report was given by Dr. Howard T. Foulkes of Milwaukee, who first read in detail the printed report. His time was divided with the Very Rev. Claude W. Sprouse of West Missouri, who said that the minority report was not a negative report but an affirmative, constructive one. He made much of the word "concurrence," the laity having to "concur" with the Bishop in certain Episcopal decisions and acts, as provided in the proposed bases of union. He also predicted that the Book of Common Prayer would be lost after 25 years.

These opening addresses were followed, believe it or not, by eighty-four speeches of three minutes each, with the good humor and firm hand of President Owen J. Roberts, and the excellent time keeping of Charles Sheerin, Dean McAllister and Anson McCook keeping the delegates from talking endlessly. The day ended without vote after summing up statements by Clifford Morehouse and Clark Kuebler of Fond du Lac for those opposing the majority report, and Canon Theodore O. Wedel of Washington and Mr. Charles P. Taft of Cincinnati for those favoring the report.

Other matters:

Legislation making madatory the

(Continued on page 16)

by a man who knows his way around. The Rev. Franklin Clark resigned, had his resignation accepted; the Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, former assistant, was nominated for the office and was elected; the Rev. Charles H. Long of Philadelphia and the Rev. Fred Hamlin of Newark were appointed assistant secretaries, all within a space of four minutes and twenty-three seconds by the watch. All we can say at this writing is that if the Hon. Owen J. Roberts does not slow down he will do two things—have the Convention adjourned before this number of THE WITNESS can go to press; two, make it impossible ever to elect a clergyman to the office again.

Lt. Governor E. N. Carvel of Delaware is one of the many distinguished laymen attending General Convention. Here he is shown discussing affairs with his rector, the Rev. R. Y. Barber who recently completed a long term as a member of the state board of welfare.

OWEN J. ROBERTS PRESIDENT

Philadelphia:—The Hon. Owen J. Roberts, former Supreme Court Justice, is the first layman ever to be elected President of the House of Deputies. But two men were nominated: Mr. Justice Roberts by the Rev. Charles Sheerin of Washington, and Dean Claude Sprouse of Kansas City by the Rev. Roelif Brooks of New York, followed by dozens of speeches seconding the nominations. There were 576 votes cast, two of which were defective. Mr. Justice Roberts received 338 votes and Dean Sprouse, 236. Judge Roberts was escorted to the platform by Dean Sprouse and the Rev. Mr. Brooks; made a speech which was a gem for brevity (32 words) and then gave a demonstration of how a meeting could be run

Mr. Roberts, an outstanding and devoted layman (WITNESS, Sept. 5), was appointed to the Supreme Court of the United States in 1930 by President Hoover. He filled the position with distinction, resigning in July, 1945, to devote himself to the furthering of world peace and to his many Church and civic interests. In addition to his Church activities these include the presidency of the United Nations Council of Philadelphia; many positions connected with the war effort; a trustee of the University of Pennsylvania where the Convention is being held. A recent picture of Mr. Justice Roberts is on our cover.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Expanded Missionary Program Urged By Bishop Tucker

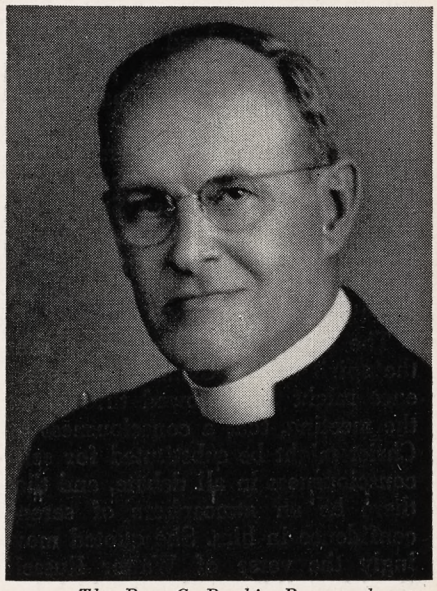
Twelve Thousand Attend the Great Service Which Opened the 55th General Convention

By W. B. Spofford Jr.

Philadelphia:—Early on September 10th crowds began to gather before the municipal auditorium on the campus of the University of Pennsylvania where the opening service of the 55th General Convention was to commence at 10:30 o'clock. It was a very warm day and wilted clerical collars and perspiring brows testified to the humidity as old friends met and shook hands on the steps of the building. A steady stream of delegates and guests entered the huge auditorium filling it by the hour of service. Official figures placed the attendance at 12,000.

As the auditorium filled up strains of organ music helped cover the sound of shuffling feet and rustling programs. Massed choirs of boys, men and women gathered from churches in the diocese of Pennsylvania occupied the front seats. Directly behind them sat the clergy and lay deputies. The long procession was headed by the crucifer and behind him the Church flag and the American flag. The hoods of many colors added color to the line of march. Bishops dressed mostly in black chimeres but wearing brilliantly colored hoods followed the deputies taking their places on either side of the altar. At the end of the procession was Archbishop William Hardie of the West Indies, the Archbishop of Canterbury and his chaplains and the Presiding Bishop.

Before the offertory, Bishop Hart of Pennsylvania welcomed the assembly and made routine announcements. The lessons were read by the Rev. Franklin Clark, secretary of the House of Deputies and the Rev. John H. Fitzgerald, secretary to the House of Bishops. Bishop William Remington, suffragan of Pennsylvania, read morning prayer.



Thousands joined in singing "Christ is the King" as Presiding Bishop Henry St. George Tucker took his place in the pulpit to give the opening sermon of the Convention.

Emphasizing the critical nature of the times, in which all men are confronted by the choice between individual and social progress or utter disaster, he called upon the communicants of the Protestant Episcopal Church to dedicate themselves more completely and honestly to the winning of Christ's justice and peace. Using two texts, "How hard it is for them that trust in riches to enter into the Kingdom of God" and "With men it is impossible, but not with God: for with God all things are possible." (St. Mark 10:24 & 27), he beseeched Church members to abstain from the temptation of Pharisaical hypocrisy which looks upon wealth and power as absolute symbols of Christian truth and goodness.

Under the Christian view, he stated, wealth imposes a two-fold responsibility upon its possessors. First, it must be regarded as a trust to be used not only for one's own needs but also for helping those who lack the opportunity or capacity to provide for their own essential requirements and, secondly, it imposes the responsibility to provide those opportunities and conditions under which all men, regardless of tongue, race or nation, might develop their richest latent capacities. Linking man's material need with his spiritual need, he said, "We are earthen vessels and in our approaches to our fellow men we can be of real service only in so far as we are carriers of heavenly treasure. Our ministrations have a real value, but it is a passing value unless it also serves as an opportunity for bringing men to a recognition of God and their dependence upon him."

Applying the same principle to social institutions such as the Church and state, Bishop Tucker said, "The attainment of world peace and world unity depends upon the further moralization of the relationships between those groups which we call nations. Through the U. N. the countries are attempting to create a framework within which the problems that so often in the past have led to war can be peaceably resolved. This may ultimately result in a body of international law to which the nations will, in theory, be bound to conform. While, no doubt, means for enforcing this law will be devised, that law will be effective only to the degree that there is a will to obey among those to whom it applies. Too often, however, we pay lip service to our conscience by making a resolution or by enacting a law which, if we were honest with ourselves, we would have to acknowledge runs counter to those impulses by which our actions are going to be determined. The statement of a purpose is made a vicarious atonement for its non-execution."

Stating that we must look to God

The Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, deputy from Los Angeles, is serving his fourth Convention, three as assistant secretary of the House of Deputies and at Philadelphia as secretary, succeeding the Rev. Franklin Clark, retired to furnish the remedy for law's ineffectiveness, Bishop Tucker said that God had sent his own Son to condemn sin in the flesh that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us who walk not after the flesh but after the spirit. "The cynical remark, human nature being what it is, idealistic schemes will not work is true enough on the human level. God has, however, provided in Christ Jesus a way by which human nature and its impulses can be changed until our inclinations are brought into accord with our obligations. When the love of Christ has kindled in our hearts an answering love, selfish and sensuous objectives lose their appeal

(Continued on page 18)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Faith, Home, World and Missions Discussed By Auxiliary

Divide Into Discussion Groups for Various Topics Following a Meditation and Address

By Mrs. F. C. Grant

Philadelphia:—The Woman's Auxiliary Triennial meeting opened in the Museum of the University of Pennsylvania. The circular auditorium of beige brick was reasonably cool in the terrific heat, and the lighting around the circumference excellent, but extremely difficult for delegates sitting in the center of the room.

Mrs. Clinton S. Quin presided with great dignity and distinction. Mrs. Roger Kingsland of West Virginia the vice-president, and Mrs. W. P. Hobby, Texas, parliamentarian, sat on her right. On her left were Mrs. Arthur Sherman and Miss Mildred Capron. About them the flags of the United States, the Episcopal Church and the University of Pennsylvania, together with colorful autumn flowers, made an effective background.

The presiding officer asked that the spirit of the Cambridge conference might be followed throughout the meeting, that a consciousness of Christ might be substituted for self-consciousness in all debate, and that there be an atmosphere of serene confidence in him. She quoted movingly the verse of Walter Russell Bowie's well-known hymn which has been chosen as the keynote of the Convention.

Give us, O God, the strength to build
  The city that hath stood
Too long a dream, whose laws are love,
  Whose ways are brotherhood,
And where the sun that shineth is God's grace for human good.

Mrs. Francis Packard cordially welcomed the convention to Philadelphia and received a response from the auxiliary through Mrs. L. A. Short of Lexington.

Mrs. Geoffrey Fisher, the wife of the Archbishop of Canterbury, was then introduced. She was impressed by the size of the meetings. Those of the Mothers' Union of Britain of which she is now president are smaller, but she added that the organization, with a membership of five hundred thousand women throughout the Empire, was "not to be sniffed at." She commented that in her husband's sermons at home and in those of Bishop Tucker's here, she found the same hard truths spoken with courage. She hoped that the Triennial would bring about the rededication of every member.

Delightful speeches were also made by Mrs. W. W. Peder, the president of the Daughters of the King, and by vivacious Mrs. Quentin Huanq, the grand-daughter of a Buddhist priest and the wife of the new bishop of Kwanming.

Because the assistant presiding officer was nominated a year ago, the committee lists are now complete and include women from every diocese and missionary district. A report on the rules of order was passed as read, while resolutions on the budget for the United Thank Offering for 1946, the revision of the by-laws, the place of women at the General Convention and the representation of minority groups were all referred to committees.

Mrs. U. Grant Beath of Pennsylvania reported 473 accredited women present, delegates, board members, province presidents, and the previous presiding officer, Mrs. Edwin Allen Stebbins. It speaks very well for the flexibility of the Woman's Auxiliary and their noted ability to train new material that over half of the delegates have never been to a Triennial before.

The present meetings deal with four chief topics, the Christian faith, the Christian home, the Christian world and the World mission of the Christian Church. Each of these topics is treated by Bishop Dun in a meditation, in a speech by a member of the Auxiliary particularly familiar with the field, by discussion groups in which the Convention will be divided into twelve groups under twelve leaders, and finally by summaries from a planning and action committee and a message on findings at the close of the meeting.

Miss Frances Perkins, one of the headliners to address the Auxiliary meeting during its sessions, spoke on Friday. The personal needs of human beings and the obligations of Christians to society as a whole were rarely mentioned or discussed forty years ago, Miss Perkins observed. But Church groups have been agitating and developing Christian social action, starting with immediate and concrete needs and working out to wide support of fundamental principles. She urged that a deepening individual personal sense of obligation for society is necessary to good community life in America.

Mrs. Sam H. Morris is attending the Triennial of the Auxiliary. She is president of the Auxiliary in Arizona and represents the eighth province on the national executive committee

Next week, in addition to Bishop Oxnam who is to speak on world citizenship, there will be addresses by Bishop Harris of Liberia; Bishop Elfram Salinas of Mexico; Bishop Lewis of Nevada and others from missionary fields.

Women are gladly attending the joint meeting of the House of Deputies and the House of Bishops whenever possible since they are interested in the lively debates on marriage and on unity with the Presbyterian Church.

The United Thank Offering of $1,631,576 has given enormous satisfaction to the Auxiliary as a whole and should give even further

(Continued on page 17)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

EDITORIALS

A Good Start

THE fifty-fifth General Convention has returned to the place of its birth. Here in 1789 the Constitution of the Protestant Episcopal Church was adopted, and the history of the Church as a separate entity from the Church of England of colonial days was begun. There have been sixteen General Conventions in Philadelphia, some of them very important, matching the importance of the original convention of 1789. Here in 1820 the General Theological Seminary was authorized; here in 1865 the first convention after the Civil War was held—signalized by the responses of the southern dioceses at the roll call: though their names had always been called, in spite of the war, for the Episcopal Church was one which the war did not divide. It may well be, as Bishop Oliver Hart has said in his welcome to the present Convention, that the 1946 Convention will go down in history as equal in importance with any that has been held in the City of Brotherly Love.

Though we write from an hour early in the session of this Convention, it is clear that a wonderful spirit of progress has taken hold. The seating of Mrs. Randolph Dyer as a deputy from Missouri (the first woman deputy in our history) was prompt and almost without debate—the only questions raised were from that peculiar angle which appeals so strongly to some minds, viz. the precedent, if it is going to be established, has to be well and firmly established, with plenty of whereases, so that it may not in future be questioned.

The overwhelming election of Justice Owen J. Roberts as President of the House of Deputies was another forward step. In the 157 years of the General Convention there has never been a lay president, heretofore, even though in theory there is no reason why any deputy may not be elected. It is time the laity asserted themselves a little more, and that time is now—they are already doing it! Ecclesiastical bodies that tend to become clerical (and most of them do) end up usually by making the laymen mere yes-men, and make it appear that the issues before the Church are purely theological, and sometimes purely personal. It is a very bad thing when religion becomes professionalized, or its welfare identified with the interests of one class or group. And we must say that Justice Roberts' manner of pressing forward the business of the House of Deputies, his manifest fairplay and utter courtesy combined with a great parliamentarian's firmness of grip, his immense practicality and clearness of mind—which results in the deputies knowing exactly where they are every minute, and avoids the vast entanglements of conflicting motions and resolutions—if the new President of the House of Deputies continues in his stride and pace, the choice of a layman for that office will be fully justified.

All this augurs well for the days to come, when the tremendous issues that confront us are going to be debated: Reunion with the Presbyterian Church, the Marriage Canon, and other issues. Perhaps, let us earnestly hope, the laymen and the women of the Episcopal Church have discovered their voices, before it is too late, and have decided to speak up and be heard. That is what General Convention is for: and the constitution of the Church provides that the House of Bishops shall be balanced by a house of clerical and lay deputies, the clergy and the laity being equal in number and that house not being a "lower house" (as in English common parlance) but on a parity —as far as the General Convention goes—with the House of Bishops. Now that our laymen are talking, let us hope they will keep up the good custom; the more articulate they are, the better for the Church!

The Minorities

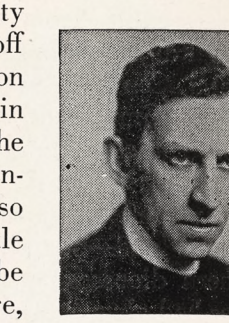
CHURCH workers among Colored people held a conference in Philadelphia for four days just before the opening of General Convention. Two things can be said about it: for devotion to Christ and his Church and for a first rate affair in every way it could hardly be surpassed. It was marked by tolerance and understanding at a time, at home and abroad, when bitterness would be understandable. We congratulate those responsible for the program.

But why should there be a conference of Negro Churchmen at all? Of course it was not called as such. It was for Church workers among Colored people. The fact nevertheless is that, with the exception of a half dozen whites, most of whom were there because they were on the program, it was a 100% Negro affair. It was a case of voluntary segregation. Negroes and other minorities ought to be represented in General Convention.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

South Florida has repeated its fine gesture of three years ago by electing the Rev. John E. Culmer, a Negro, as a deputy. Haiti is represented by the Rev. D. E. Morisseau, a Negro; Honolulu by the Rev. Wai On Shim, a Chinese, and Puerto Rico, Mexico and Cuba have natives as clerical delegates. And in the House of Bishops there is Bishop Bravid W. Harris of Liberia. But the presence of these men, fine as they are, serves chiefly to stress the Jim-Crow character of all our General Conventions. Certainly race from any Christian point of view is a secondary characteristic and men—and women, too, we hope from now on—should be elected deputies solely for their devotion, intellect, leadership. And if this happened we know that there would be many Negroes and other minority groups taking their seats beside their white brethren.

And as is so often the case, it is the women of the Church who are making a beginning in correcting our un-Christian and undemocratic attitude. At this Convention, as formerly, there are five dioceses with two delegations attending the Triennial of the Auxiliary, one white and one Negro. But it will be the last time, unless the Triennial votes down the unanimous recommendation of the national executive board which is most unlikely. The board has expressed the conviction "that all members should work together without discrimination or division within the Church, which is the body of Christ, and that the women of the Church should aim at complete integration of all racial groups in their organizations." So, while working for the ideal, an interim plan is proposed whereby from now on every diocese will be represented by only one delegation and this delegation, if the diocese has at least three congregations and at least 225 communicants of any minority group, shall be entitled to one additional delegate from that group.



Shall Be Entitled does not mean, obviously, that a diocese must elect a Negro, a Japanese, a Chinese, if these minorities have the required number of communicants. But it surely is a strong recommendation that they should. And, judging from past performances, we hazard the opinion that the women representing the Church in the Triennial will promptly take whatever steps are necessary if they discover that the present change in their by-laws does not further their purpose of eventually ending discrimination completely.

General Convention would do well to follow the example of the women by instructing the committee on canons to recommend such revision in the general Church canons as to guarantee representation to minorities.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

IT IS ALWAYS possible to write pretty pieces about General Convention: the pageantry of the opening service; the splendid fellowship; the meeting of old friends; the unity in diversity. I've tossed off my share in past Convention years. And I can say again that all of these make the Philadelphia Convention enjoyable. I have to say also that, so far, there is little awareness that this may be the last Convention. Sure, you are sick of hearing about the atomic bomb. So am I. But the thing exists and it makes men's eyes melt in their sockets and run down their cheeks like tears. John Hersey has told us all that in his story of Hiroshima in the August 31st New Yorker. Anyone reading it is made thoroughly aware that what the scientists have been telling us is perfectly true: use it and mankind on this earth is probably through. Nevertheless millions of Americans have been so completely taken in by the campaign against Russia—a campaign which amounts to a conspiracy against humanity—that they talk glibly about dropping bombs on our ally as though we are completely immune from such a catastrophe.

General Convention, if it is to give leadership to confused humanity, must speak out on this issue which overshadows everything else—and we say "issue" rather than "issues" since world affairs have so far developed that control of the atom bomb and American-Soviet relations are inseparable. And since we are addressing Christians it is not out of place to suggest that the Golden Rule be the text for any pronouncement—the Pastoral of the House of Bishops possibly. In other words, how does the world look from Moscow rather than Philadelphia?

Let's put ourselves in the other fellow's shoes: wouldn't the world look something like this if you were sitting in Moscow:

1. The U. S. has the atom bomb. It is creating stockpiles. Their leaders assure the world that they are too civilized to use it. Yet the U. S. has used it.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

2. In Moscow we are told that a U. S. base in Iceland is none of our business. We know nevertheless that Iceland is but 1,000 miles from our borders whereas it is 3,500 from the nearest border of the U. S.

3. We know that the U. S. has a $6,000,000 air base in Arabia. We know that this is but 1,000 miles from us and 7,000 miles from the U. S. We wonder what American newspapers and commentators would say if we made a deal with Venezuela to establish a similar base there?

4. We know that the U. S. has bases throughout the Pacific as well as in Iceland and Greenland. All of them are nearer the borders of the Soviet Union than they are to the shores of the U. S.

5. We hear leaders of the U. S. protest vigorously against our proposal that the Dardanelles be internationalized. Yet the Dardanelles is closer to Odessa than the Panama Canal is to New Orleans. What would the U. S. say if the proposal were made that it have nothing whatever to say about the control of Panama?

6. We know that during the war agreements were made by the United Nations, including the U. S., Russia and Britain, to wipe out fascism everywhere. We now know that representatives of the U. S. as well as Britain are hobnobbing with known Nazi collaborationists in Greece, Yugoslavia, Poland, Germany, China—about everywhere.

7. We know that the Roman Catholic hierarchy, for reasons best known to itself, is anti-Soviet to the point of being willing to risk an atomic war. We now discover western Protestantism, through the World Council of Churches, creating a commission on international affairs, which, among other things, is to "consult from time to time with other organizations holding similar objectives in the advancement of particular ends." And we read in the press that one of the leading spokesmen for the commission states that there must be close cooperation with the Vatican.

8. We know that this spokesman for world Protestantism, John Foster Dulles, this summer wrote articles on the Soviet Union for magazines with a combined circulation of fifty million. The basic thought in his articles was that the U. S. should "get tough" with us and that in the event this policy fails that the people of the U. S. should be prepared to fight us. So we look up the record of this leader of American and world Protestantism and we find that in 1939 he was attorney for the Franco regime; the attorney for Count Rene de Chambrun, son-in-law of the French traitor, Pierre Laval; as late as last year the attorney for the discredited Polish government-in-exile in an attempt to recover some sixty million dollars resting in the Bank of France.

In April, 1941, the New York Tribune exposed the Nazi agent, Gerhard Alois Westrick who was trying to get help for Hitler from the Texas Oil Corporation. Westrick, arrested finally by the French, was defended by John Foster Dulles who said of him (Drew Pearson, September 26, 1944): "I don't believe he has done anything wrong. I knew him in the old days and I had a high regard for his integrity."

We know, too, that Senator Claude Pepper of Florida said of this leader of Protestantism on October 10, 1944: "One of Mr. Dulles' foreign connections, which I believe the American people are especially entitled to know about, is his relationship to the banking circles that rescued Adolph Hitler from the financial depths and set his Nazi Party up as a going concern."

And going a bit further back we know that Mr. Dulles, speaking in New York on March 23, 1939, said: "There is no reason to believe that any of the totalitarian states, either separately or collectively, would attempt to attack the United States. Only hysteria entertains the idea that Germany, Italy or Japan contemplates war against us."

We have read, too, the recent United Press dispatch dealing with hitherto secret documents of the 1919 Paris Peace Conference, released by the State Department, which states that "John Foster Dulles, top Republican Party expert on foreign affairs and now a GOP advisor to Secretary of State James F. Byrnes, helped draft the plan for blockading Bolshevik Russia in 1919."

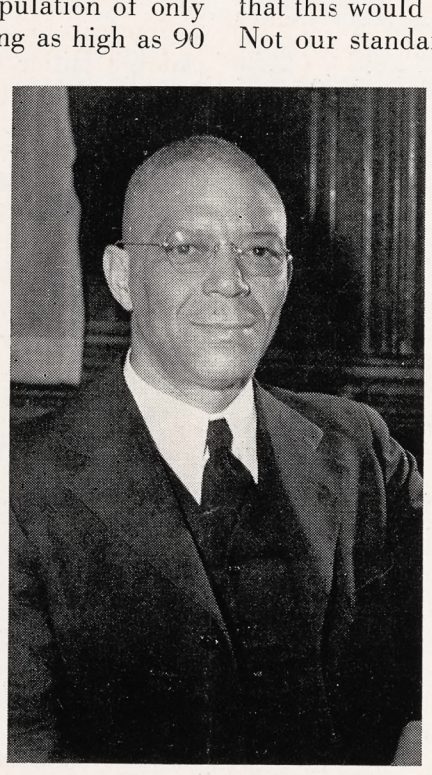
That blockade we in Russia remember well. We remember well also the effort made by the armies of many nations, including the U. S., to crush us at that time.

So it will be understandable, we hope, to our friends in America if we are uneasy as we sit here in Moscow. Atom bombs; surrounded by bases; British and American warships near our shores; leading Americans advocating war at once against us; the Roman hierarchy shrieking against us; and now, added to it all, a gentleman high in the counsels of World Protestantism whose record belies his oft-noble words.

Bishops and Deputies: Consider please, how the world looks from Moscow. Then speak boldly so that the world, threatened with extinction, may hear.

"Do to others as . . ."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.



All God's Children

by Bravid W. Harris

Convention Address by the Bishop of Liberia

THERE is a large group of God's children which no man can number. The multitudes whom men in part of the world call "coolies"; in another, "untouchables"; and in still another, "serfs and peasants"; and in my own part of the world, with a certain condescension, "natives" in their own land. You will find them on all continents by one designation or another.

The problems are many. The first, that of ignorance and at best a school population of only five per cent, with illiteracy running as high as 90 per cent; diseases, which doom God's children both before and after they are born. Modern medical science has the answer to many of these diseases but for various reasons the answers may as well not be known. Poverty is still another, growing out of their ignorance of even the most elementary modern techniques, and ignorance of the values of wealth in natural resources with which a good God has surrounded them.

But wait. Millions still even approach their fellows crouching on all fours. Others are afraid even to approach at all, but rather stand afar off with outstretched hands. Private citizens are still lashing their fellows in some parts of the world and with impunity. Forced labor, another name for human slavery, is still a factor in my Continent. The Dark Ages. It is still practiced in some areas and condoned in others even by a certain branch of God's Church.

We, with all our class warfare and racial strife, live in a part of God's world, where even the lowest live in hope of better things to come; and they do come.

It is one of the chief functions of God's Church to set forward this hope. The multitudes for whom I plead do not ever have such hope. They think, if indeed they think at all on these matters, that theirs is the condition for which they are born.

Somehow I feel that God is getting weary with man's inhumanity to man. When I see men's and women's heads used as we use beasts of burden, then I wonder if we have ever read Christ's bitter condemnation of some very religious people of his day.

I have been shocked by Christian people who have said to me, "do you mean that these peoples should be brought up to our standard of living; to want the things we want and have? They are perfectly happy where they are, and why disturb them? Why not leave them alone?" I submit that this would be easy, but I am afraid disastrous. Not our standard of living but one commensurate with their essential dignity and capabilities, the essential dignity of sons of God.

One of the fundamental principles of the Christian religion is that of the sacredness of human personality. The most sacred thing in all of God's creation is one of his children, and not so much in himself but because he is a child of God. Somehow we must come to see men as men and never something less than man.

But we cannot come to any such conception except it grow on us out of our faith in God. A faith in the light of which we see men not as they are, but as they are capable of becoming, bearing on their very personality the image of him who created us.

While these observations in general still stand there are some on a slightly higher level. Among these I observe general restlessness, uneasiness and even frustration in the people of the south central and some western parts of Africa.

I AM afraid that men forget that they cannot live as free men even among slaves without implanting in their breasts the feeling that they enjoy a freedom which is denied others. So it seems to me that it is well within the function of the United Nations Assembly either to draw, or cause to be drawn, a blueprint for the future development of these people; and give responsible government a reasonable length of time for their realization.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The country which I serve is in an unique position in this regard. We have the great opportunity and challenge to show the way, to blaze the trail in the development of free men and a free society on a Continent which desperately needs such an objective demonstration. My feeling is that the task can more easily be accomplished in our country, and further, that it can more easily be accomplished in a social order which is more or less primitive than in one where the task would be more or less changing an established way. Are we willing to help in such an undertaking?

We propose to get under these problems as far as our resources will permit. It is the business of education to develop the mind and skills which our day will continue to demand. But education without Christian character is not only questionable, but dangerous. This is the function of religion.

Unless our mission is about this then we might with profit re-examine the grounds of the compulsion laid on us by God. There is one spirit and only one even as we are called in one hope of our calling—the spirit of Christ—in which we transcend the barriers which now divide.

But before we can embark with any effectiveness on our world mission the immediate imperative is building a more genuine Christian fellowship at base. Our witness on the mission field can arise to no greater heights than that at the home base. The call is for a new conception of our God and his purpose for us and his children. We need not embark on such a mission with any easy optimism. But our Christianity is a call to a selfless and a sacrificial life. It means a new surrender to his will and above all courage, nurtured and strengthened by the strength which God alone supplies to follow where he leads. The chances are that our commitment will lead us to the foot of the Cross. But if the captain of our salvation could not escape, neither can we.

Convention Highlights

There were two "firsts" the first day: the first layman was elected President of Deputies; the first woman was seated as a deputy. But there were those in Deputies who thought the entrance of Bishop McElwain, retired Bishop of Minnesota and Bishop Oldham of Albany was to challenge the seating of a woman on constitutional grounds, and all the more so since Bishop McElwain is an authority on constitution and canons. The secretary had just read: "Missouri, Mrs. Randolph Dyer" in the roll call when it was announced that a deputation from the Bishops was present with a message. "The bishops are going to object to the seating of a woman" was quickly whispered about. The two dignitaries marched to the stage in a dead silence. Bishop McElwain went to the mike: "The House of Bishops announces to the House of Deputies that it is organized and ready for business." Turning on their heels, out they marched, apparently quite unaware that they had entered the House of Deputies at one of the dramatic moments in the history of the Episcopal Church . . . the acceptance by 576 men of the first woman ever to sit in the House of Deputies as a delegate.

* * *

There may be a canon or something requiring it but one rather wished, in the hot stuffiness of the convention hall, that some way could be devised to avoid a roll call. It took exactly forty-five minutes to read the names of several hundred deputies . . . and it was never "Smith" but "The Rev. James Hughes Rilley Smith." Waiting for "Missouri: Mrs. Randolph Dyer" of course helped. Nobody knew exactly what would happen there. Then later on the tension was snapped a bit when the secretary read: "Mr. Pot of Gold." The response "here" caused a thumbing through the printed list of deputies to reveal that it was Mr. Potter Gould of Georgia.

* * *

The Rev. Franklin Clark wound up his long service as secretary with dignity and determination. Anson McCook insisted upon renominating him. Frank Clark however, in a pretty little speech, said he meant it when he said he was to resign. He remained long enough to see that Rankin Barnes succeeded to the office, shook hands with the new secretary, marched off the stage. A couple of minutes later when Walter Stowe of New Jersey offered a resolution commending "our late secretary"—as though he had dropped dead in the wings—Franklin Clark was not even present to receive the tribute from the deputies. Apparently he was already on his way to that garden in New Jersey and that handball court in New York.

* * *

Hotel lobbies were filled with perspiring delegates and visitors for Philadelphia greeted the Convention with 100% humidity and a 90 degree temperature. But among those who appeared the coolest was Archbishop William Hardie of the West Indies. Attired in the Anglican costume of gaiters and apron he walked benevolently among the persons gathered at the Bellevue-Stratford, headquarters of the Convention. Interviewed he said how friendly the American people were on his first visit to this country and how much he was impressed with its beauty and busy-ness. Times Square, on Saturday night, gave him one of his big thrills. He reads and enjoys THE WITNESS.

(Continued on page 17)

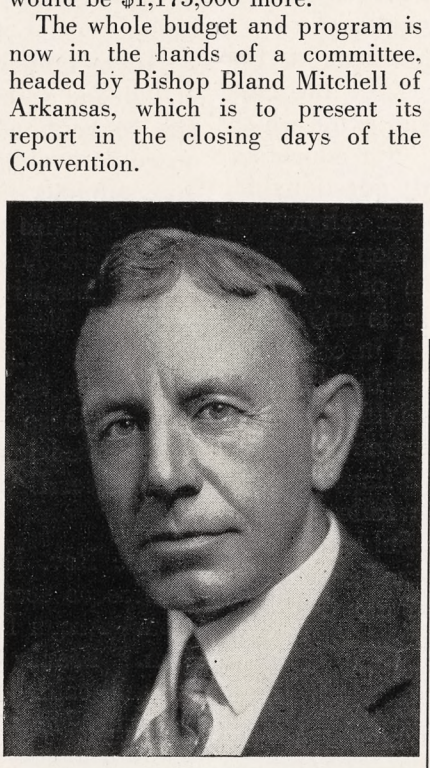
Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

A Greatly Increased Budget Presented to Convention

Expansion of All Work at Home and Abroad Explained by Treasurer Lewis B. Franklin

Edited by Philip L. Shutt

Philadelphia: — The budget for the national work of the Church, administered from the Church Missions House, was $2,735,058 in 1946. If the recommendation of the National Council is accepted the budget in 1947 will be $3,213,769, an increase of $478,711. The budget was presented at a joint meeting of the two Houses of General Convention on September 11th in a handsomely printed thirty-six page book, with colored cover and many pictures. It was explained by Treasurer Lewis B. Franklin.



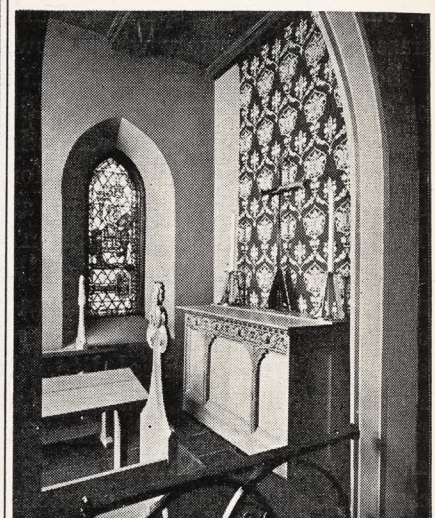
"The enlarged budget," he said, "provides for new workers in the domestic field, more help for our Negro churches and schools, support of our new work in Colombia, South America, enlarged work in the Philippines, support of Bishop Harris' new plan for Liberia and more adequate assistance in other areas. The new budget calls for an increase in the appropriation to China in the amount of $118,952. Now is the time above all others when our missionaries are needed in that great land, just emerging from ten long years of war and still beset by famine and civil strife."

He explained also that the Church in Japan, self-supporting before the war, was in the proposed budget for $40,518. The budget also provided $19,000 to produce a new curriculum for Sunday schools, and the promotion department is jumped from $150,000 in 1946 to $205,000 in 1947 for "a more adequate staff and larger funds for conferences and visual education."

Mr. Franklin also stated that the organization at headquarters "is understaffed in the higher brackets" and that the proposed budget gives "some relief in this area as well as increased salaries to both officers and staff to meet at least part of the increased cost of living."

When he came to the matter of how this increased budget is to be raised, he stated that "it is upon the increased gifts of the people of the Church that reliance must be placed" and he ended his speech with the announcement that the budget in 1948 would be $825,000 more than this year and that the 1949 budget would be $1,175,000 more.

The whole budget and program is now in the hands of a committee, headed by Bishop Bland Mitchell of Arkansas, which is to present its report in the closing days of the Convention.



Lewis B. Franklin, treasurer of the National Council, presents the budget to General Convention calling for $478,711 more in 1947; $825,000 more in 1948 and $1,175,000 more in 1949

Approved Consultation

New York (RNS): — Establishment of unofficial and informal consultation between the World Council of Churches and leaders of the Roman Catholic Church was approved by the Vatican as early as 1939, according to minutes of a World Council meeting held in Geneva, Switzerland, last February and published here for the first time.

The minutes revealed that seven years ago the late Archbishop William Temple of Canterbury, at that time chairman of the provisional committee of the Council, sent a letter to the Vatican giving information about the World Council which is composed of Protestant and Orthodox Churches. The Archbishop, it was disclosed, received a reply from the Most Rev. William Godfrey, apostolic delegate in Britain, to the effect that consultation in an entirely unofficial way would be approved. A book is now in preparation by the Council giving documents concerning relations with the Roman Catholic Church and an analysis of some of the relevant statements. In addition, that collaboration is regarded as desirable by World Council leaders was indicated at the recent conference of Church leaders at Cambridge, England, which set up a commission of the Churches on international affairs. Also, prior to the opening of the Cambridge meeting, Protestant leaders from eight nations were asked to make known their views in the matter and they agreed that there should be some kind of a satisfactory understanding at a high level.

Children's Chapel
ST. JOHN'S CHURCH, SHARON, PA.
Warner & Mitchell, Architects

Just a corner of the charming Children's Chapel upon whose walls are painted the story of the Children's Crusade. If you are planning a Children's Chapel or Baptistry, it would be well for you to see the other interior photographs which show the interesting work of renovation executed by Rambusch.

RAMBUSCH
Designers Decorators and Craftsmen
2 West 45th St. ~ New York 19, N.Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Face Problems

Lakeside, Ohio (RNS): — Departing from the usual procedure of adopting resolutions, members of the national conference of young churchmen meeting in session here passed a series of commitments in which they pledged personal action to achieve Christian goals. One of these goals was the suggestion that a national staff leadership division be set up in the Federal Council of Churches. They also committed themselves to the removal of race discrimination.

At the same time Methodist youth leaders meeting at Grand Rapids, Michigan, demanded the end of racial discrimination through the abolition of the central (Negro) jurisdiction in their Church. They also urged full support of the United Nations organization, and daily prayer and worship for the cause of a lasting international peace.

Labor Troubles

Winnipeg (RNS): — Canadian Anglican bishops issued a statement here deploring the prolonged and widespread industrial strife which is disuniting the people of the nation. Meeting in connection with the general synod of the Church, the bishops asserted that industrial unrest has provided a unique opportunity for Canadian churchmen. "The Church cannot forget that Jesus was a working man," they stated. "After 20 centuries his sermon on the mount is the only charter of man's hope, happiness, and peace."

Fine Record

New York:—A summer of preparation for General Convention is crowned by a splendid record of payments from dioceses on their expectations, Lewis B. Franklin, treasurer of the National Council reported to the September meeting of that body. The payments are equal to 111 per cent of the amount due to the close of August, and is unusually good according to Mr. Franklin in view of Reconstruction and Advance Fund efforts.

World Peace

Philadelphia: — "We won't become brothers by force," Archbishop Geoffrey Francis Fisher of Canterbury told 10,000 persons gathered in Convention Hall here Sept. 8 at the national convocation of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

In his first public appearance in the United States, the Archbishop emphasized the importance of Christianity as being the only basis for world peace. "We must believe in, pray for and work for brotherhood."

On the preceding evening he attended a banquet of the Brotherhood apologizing for the lateness of his train. "As I traveled through this glorious country I could only think what a pocket handkerchief sort of country England is. But of the very best linen."

Other speakers at the banquet told of plans for enlisting laymen in Church activities and especially

Scholars of Skill

★

The craftsmen who custom-make Möller organs have devoted themselves to the study of their craft, have never ceased to be scholars in the standards of skill.

Their continuing achievement is proved anew in every Möller organ they create. Designers, architects, wood-carvers, acoustical, tonal and voicing experts, each is a special artist in his field, each brings to his details of construction the creative freshness, the alertness and devoted care, that only the mind and hand of an artist can bestow upon his work.

Thus, each Möller organ is the proud result of a creative inspiration and effort too individual to be measured. It can, nevertheless, be instantly perceived in the remarkable beauty that distinguishes the finished instrument. Its nobility of tone, stately appearance, make Möller the natural and finest choice for churches, schools and colleges, and for concert performances.

M.P. MÖLLER
THE ARTIST OF ORGANS · THE ORGAN OF ARTISTS
HAGERSTOWN, MARYLAND

When You Come To Philadelphia

plan to visit the

Presbyterian Ministers' Fund

The home office stands close by Holy Trinity Church on Rittenhouse Square.

Since 1717 the Fund has been standing by ministers and their families.

Visitors cordially welcomed. Inquiries cheerfully answered.

Presbyterian Ministers' Fund
1805-07 Walnut Street
Philadelphia 3, Pennsylvania

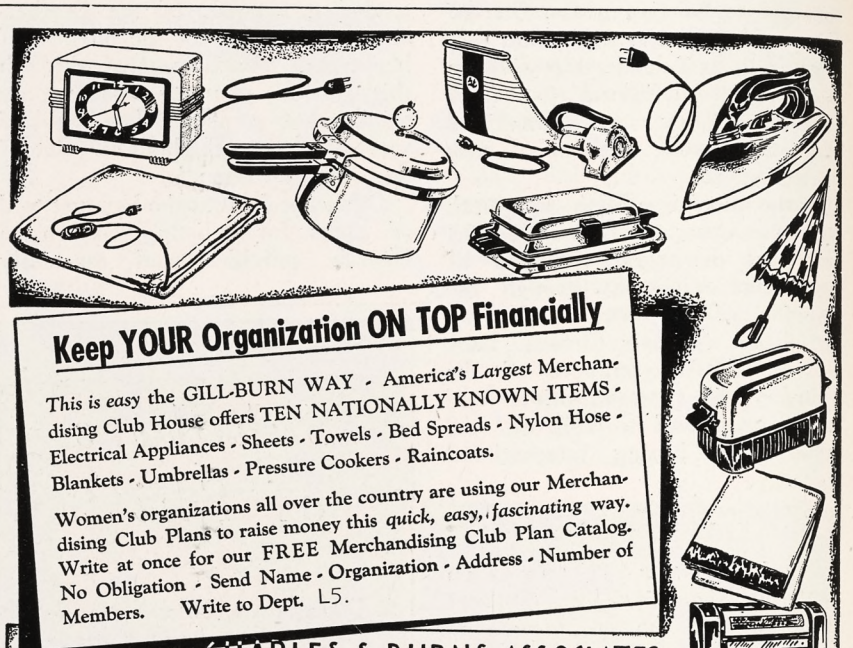
ALEXANDER MACKIE,
President

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

youth on college campuses. The laymen's movement has sent a man to Paris to form a prayer group in the gallery of the Peace Conference to pray for the conditioning of the delegates toward the doing of God's will, President Clark Kuebler of Ripon College, head of the movement, announced to the assembled guests.

Consecrate Church

Philadelphia: — The Bishop of Pennsylvania, the Rt. Rev. Oliver J. Hart, consecrated St. Thomas' Church on September 7th. Many attending the conference of Church Workers among Colored People, held at this parish, stayed over for the service. The parish has shown remarkable progress under the direction of the Rev. J. F. Anderson and with over 1200 communicants is one of the largest parishes in the country.



Urges Union

Winnipeg (RNS): — Archbishop Derwyn T. Owen, head of the Church of England in Canada, urged the union of all Christian groups before the General Synod held here. "We must draw closer together within the Church itself . . . The way of controversy has proved a fruitless way to better understanding. I believe the way of understanding, of study, of fellowship in prayer is proving to be a way of helping heal the wounds of the past."

The Archbishop asked that the Synod study for the next three years the plan for a mutual ministry.

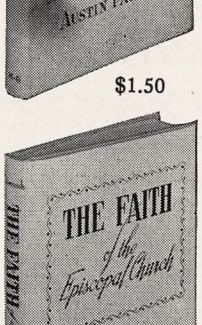
Scores Warmongers

Lakeside, Ohio (RNS):—Post-war prophets who daily predict the advent of a third world war were

NEW AND FORTHCOMING BOOKS

$1.50

He Lives



by Austin Pardue

Based on the author's religious experience, this book shows us that we must accept much on faith—that we must practice the religion of the Prayer Book—that our knowledge thereby gained and proved by devotional practice will enable us to "experience the joy of the doctrine of the Communion of Saints."

The Faith of the Episcopal Church

by Frank Damrosch, Jr.

The Episcopal Church " . . . which neither claims infallibility nor denies the truths that are in other faiths, offers to the American people a religion that is reasonable and that satisfies the needs of the soul."—The Rev. Frank Damrosch, Jr.

$1.50

Tips To Teachers

by Vernon McMaster

Consisting of a series of nine provocative discussions in the guise of Tuesday night meetings between a pastor and his five teacher-trainees, this much-needed guide to some fundamental approaches and principles of effective teaching will be welcomed by Church School teachers and those who are preparing to become Church School teachers.

$1.25

Postage Additional

MOREHOUSE-GORHAM CO.

14 E. 41st Street
New York 17, N. Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

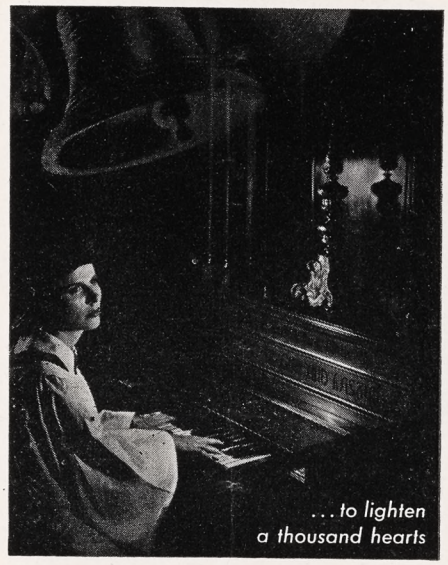
scored here by Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, president of the Federal Council of Churches, in a keynote address opening the national conference of young churchmen. About 350 delegates, most of them ex-service men under 30 years of age, attended. "The American will not be duped by the stupid propaganda that would turn him from the task of establishing world law and order based on economic justice and racial brotherhood," said the Bishop. "Protestant and Roman Catholic alike must beware lest their property interests silence prophetic utterance and they must cleanse themselves of those political entanglements that make chaste conduct impossible . . ."

Gen. MacArthur

New York: — Arrangements have been made by Gen. Douglas MacArthur for the commission of the National Council to fly from Manila to Shanghai next month, and in addition, to Japan, China, and the Philippines. Church officials of the commission are the Rev. Messrs. James Thayer Addison, Lewis B. Franklin, Robert A. Magill, and Mrs. Arthur Sherman.

Youth Meeting

Louisville, Ky.:—On October 4-6 an all youth convention will be held for young churchmen of this diocese in Trinity Church, Owensboro, to hear reports of delegates to the national youth convention held in Philadelphia. Other advance plans call for a series of missionary meetings to be led by Bishop T. S. Chen of Anking, China.



National Council Meets

New York:—"Christianity can be the greatest force towards promoting democracy and its ideals in post-war Japan," Bishop Charles Reifsnider reported to members of the National Council meeting in pre-convention session here Sept. 5-7. He pointed out that the Shinto shrines in the rural districts had been abolished so there was an open opportunity for evangelization in these areas. He also said that 71 buildings needed work done on them and that the economic life of the Church had been seriously hurt by the war. Not only was there a large reduction in communicants reported but pastoral supervision was handicapped because ministers had to resort to secular jobs to supplement their income. While the Japanese countryside was prosperous looking, Bishop Reifsnider contrasted it with the starvation in the cities.

The progress of the Reconstruction and Advance fund engaged the attention of the Council the first day and created a minor flurry in the otherwise routine program when Bishop Hobson of Southern Ohio objected to the words "successful completion" in a resolution commending the department of promotion for its efforts on behalf of the fund. He pointed out that the fund was now not only considerably below the eight million dollar goal but that it looked as if it might not be more than seven millions. So the department of promotion, by an amendment to the resolution, was complimented on what it had done towards the progress of the campaign.

There was a general sentiment on the part of most of the Council members for an established policy in regard to allocation of funds from the RAF and to have in their hands when they met a statement of how the money had been already spent and what the future askings were with reasons for the requests. A special committee was appointed to bring in a statement of policy and did so on the second day.

Then missionary bishops taking

As lovely to see as it is to hear, the Liberty carillon produces the realities of tons of great bells from the magic of only a few ounces of metal. Precision tuned and with a musical range from three to five octaves, it is played with all the artistic expression and effect of a fine carillon of cast bells.

And now Liberty Leadership has produced another amazing first — a two-octave instrument for limited budgets but with all the tonal beauty of "The Big Liberty". We cordially invite you to hear it at a resident service associate near you. Write for his address today, and plan now to have this magnificent Voice of the Cathedrals ringing from your church this Christmas.

LIBERTY Carillons Inc.
CARILLON HEADQUARTERS
551 FIFTH AVENUE, New York 17, N.Y.
CARILLON DESIGNERS • BUILDERS • CONSULTANTS
CREATORS OF AUDIBLE MEMORIAL SHRINES

To be published shortly

The LIVING LITURGY

by

THE REVEREND MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, Jr., Ph.D.
Episcopal Theological School
Cambridge, Massachusetts

Dr. Shepherd's column, The Living Liturgy, was voted top place in a questionnaire sent to 1000 subscribers of THE WITNESS. In his book, the author of this column has included many of the articles already printed in THE WITNESS, together with some new material. At the back of the book will be found a suggestion revision of the Office of Holy Baptism.

The wide range of Dr. Shepherd's lively essays will appeal to all who are interested in the music, architecture, and liturgy of the Church. Those who have read and enjoyed Dean Ladd's popular Prayer Book Interleaves, published by Oxford in 1942, will want to own The Living Liturgy, which the author considers to be a 'footnote' volume to Dr. Ladd's work.

Order now from your Bookseller or directly from the Publisher.
$2.25

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS
114 Fifth Avenue
New York 11, New York

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

part in a discussion of the kind of missionaries needed and the training they should receive, made an interesting interlude in the formal agenda of the sessions. A fervent plea for aid for Liberia was made by Bishop Bravid Harris in a prepared statement which received applause.

Urges Voting

Pittsburgh:—In a special letter to the communicants in his diocese, Bishop Austin Pardue recently called upon them to fulfill their responsibilities as Christians by registering to vote. "Politicians regard as of no consequence the religious vote in America," he stated, "and it is time that we remedy the situation."

New Bishop of Erie

Erie, Pa.:—The Rev. Harold E. Sawyer, 56, rector of Grace Church, Utica, New York, since 1924 was elected Bishop of Erie on the fifth ballot at a special convention of the diocese held Sept. 4 in St. Paul's Cathedral here. He will succeed Bishop Edward P. Wroth who died this summer.

The bishop-elect is a graduate of Trinity College, and of the General Theological Seminary. He also has a master's degree from Columbia University.

He is president of the standing committee in the diocese of Central New York, president of the examining chaplains, chaplain of St. Luke's hospital, Utica. He has been a deputy to General Convention four times. Prior to his rectorship in Utica he served as curate of St. Agnes' Chapel, New York from 1918 to 1923.

Others nominated for the office were the Rev. Messrs. Don Frank Fenn of Baltimore; Thomas L. Small of Oil City, Pa.; Malcolm DeP. Maynard of Milwaukee; Francis Bloodgood of Milwaukee; James E. Foster, Gary, Indiana; William T. Heath of Buffalo; Wilford O. Cross of Kittanning, Pa.; Frederic B. Atkinson, Batavia, Ohio; Lauriston L. Scaife, Pittsburgh; Henry S. Sizer Jr., Meriden, Conn., and Ray E. Carr of LaGrange, Ill.

Marriage Laws

Toronto (RNS):—Revision of the marriage laws of the Church of England in Canada, which would have the effect of making remarriage possible for the innocent party of a divorce, is proposed in a motion scheduled to be placed before the Church's general synod when it meets in Winnipeg in September. The proposal was made by Chancellor R. V. Harris of Halifax.

Free Churches

Williams Bay, Wis. (RNS):—Protestant Churches must open their memberships to people of all races and nationalities if they are to maintain principles of Christian brotherhood, the commission on minority rights and group tensions declared at the national adult work planning conference held here at Conference Point Camp on Lake Geneva. The commission further recommended that denominations be urged to include more material on racial understanding and international relationships in their curriculum material for Church schools.

Layman Honored

Savanah, Ga.:—Hugh Hill, an active member of Christ Church here and lay chairman for the Reconstruction and Advance Fund in the diocese of Georgia, was recently elected president of the Chamber of Commerce.

Hit Lynching

Atlanta (RNS):—Clergymen of the Episcopal Church here have joined with ministers of other denominations in assailing the recent lynching of four Negroes at Monroe, 30 miles east of Atlanta. "We can think of no atrocity in this generation of our state quite so loathsome and ominous," their statement said.

CONTROVERSIAL ISSUES

(Continued from page 4)

presentation and acceptance of the resignation of bishops on reaching the age of 72 was adopted by the Bishops by a vote of 86 to 15. The matter now goes to Deputies before becoming law.

Union of the missionary district of Western Nebraska and the diocese of Nebraska was approved by the Bishops. They also voted to continue the missionary district of North Texas and a bishop will be elected to fill the vacancy there before the close of Convention.

The following resignations were accepted: Bishop Perry of Rhode Island; Bishop Moulton of Utah; Bishop Moore of Dallas; Bishop Reifsnider, formerly of Japan; Bishop Maxon of Tennessee; Bishop Manning of New York; Bishop Huston of Olympia; Bishop Davis of Western New York; Bishop Colmore of Puerto Rico; Bishop Aldrich, coadjutor of Michigan.

Recommendations that a Presiding Bishop's See be established was defeated by the House of Bishops by a vote of 70 to 30.

There was applause at one of the joint sessions when the Presiding Bishop announced that the Reconstruction and Advance Fund had reached a total of $7,057,919. And there was further rejoicing over the announcement of an all-time high for the United Thank Offering which was $1,631,576.

FOR CLERGY ONLY

You, Alone, Can Help

Clergymen in Greece, Holland, Austria, France, China, and the Philippines desperately in need of clerical clothing, vestments and the traditional appointments for worship. These items are beyond price. You alone can meet this need with a gift of a cassock, a vestment, a clerical suit, communion and other altar vessels.

All clothing and vestments should be cleaned and repaired before shipment. A label should also be sewn in the garments and a tag attached to altar vestments on which the name and address of the sender is printed in indelible ink. All articles for distribution by the authorities of the Churches in Europe and Asia where the need is greatest should be shipped postpaid before October 15 to:

THE PRESIDING BISHOP'S FUND FOR WORLD RELIEF
281 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Convention Highlights

(Continued from page 11)

The Archbishop of Canterbury fascinated 1100 people who attended a luncheon in his honor with an address on the relationship of Church and state. "A full share of the good things for everyone and at the same time freedom—that is the problem. How to solve the problem I do not know since I am no expert in such matters," he said. But he seemed to please most of the audience since he stated that he was very sure that "neither your country nor mine will solve the problem in the Russian way."

* * *

Judge Augustus Hand of New York, one of our most distinguished laymen, wasn't fooling when he went to bat for Mrs. Dyer. It looked for a time as though she would be seated without a peep from anyone. However when Franklin Clark, secretary, said at the end of the roll call, "Speak now or forever hold your peace," the Rev. Tom Akeley of Maine wanted to know if a woman could be seated. The venerable New York judge then made his lively little speech to the effect that it was "absolutely preposterous in this day and age not to permit women to serve as deputies." Then came Lawyer Lydecker of Newark, Charles Taft of Southern Ohio, Layman Cochran of Oklahoma, with motions and substitute motions until the House hardly knew where they were. But after defeating the Cochran motion to refer the matter to the committee on canons, Anson McCook of Connecticut proposed voting "yes" or "no" on seating Mrs. Dyer, leaving the matter of canons to worry about later if anyone wants to raise the question. Whereupon Mrs. Dyer was voted a deputy by an overwhelming majority. It was clearly the will of the House that she should be admitted, with a good deal of impatience shown when anyone raised objections.

* * *

To the strains of "Praise my Soul the King of Heaven" deputies from all of the dioceses processed to the sanctuary of the Municipal Auditorium where they placed certificates on a gold offering plate held by the Presiding Bishop. These indicated the Reconstruction and Advance Fund offering. Immediately they were taken to an armored car and rushed downtown to be counted at one of the Philadelphia banks.

FAITH, HOME

(Continued from page 6)

impetus to their splendid program. Some of the money will go toward larger salaries and retiring allowances for missionaries; some for better equipment, including typewriters, larger printing allowances, bicycles, gasoline and radios. The women of the Church feel that it expresses to some degree their gratitude for reunited families, the strength that has come to them through sorrow, and a growing sense of stewardship.

Women Meet

Washington: — One of the first post-convention conferences for women will be held here Sept. 30-Oct. 1 at St. Paul's Church to hear reports about General Convention and what was accomplished at the Triennial Auxiliary sessions. This conference takes the place of a number of separate meetings held formerly through the winter. Bishop and Mrs. Angus Dun will entertain the whole group at tea on the afternoon of the opening day.

BUT WHAT CAN The Upper Room DO FOR ME?

WHAT are the basic values of The Upper Room? Why has it grown to be the most widely read religious periodical in the world? What can I expect The Upper Room to do for me? How can The Upper Room make me a better Christian?

The Upper Room encourages regularity in one's devotions. With its brief page it is a constant reminder that we need to set apart at least a portion of each day for communion with God.

The Upper Room gives helpful guidance to one's devotions. Many good people have been discouraged in their devotional life because they have not known what passages of Scripture lend themselves best to contemplation and inspiration or how to frame their prayers. The Upper Room lifts up selected passages and offers suggested prayers.

The Upper Room brings to one the enrichment of the thoughts of other minds and hearts. Many Christians from all over the world contribute to it. Thus it opens up new avenues of thought and offers the benefit of the interplay of many minds.

Get a copy of the October-November-December issue now at your church, or if not available there, send us your individual subscription today. Ten or more copies to one address, 5 cents per copy, postpaid. Single yearly subscriptions in U. S. Canada and Latin America, 30 cents, postpaid; four years, $1.00. Other countries, 40 cents; four years, $1.35. Order from

THE UPPER ROOM

Medical Arts Building Nashville 3, Tenn.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Write us for
Organ Information
AUSTIN ORGANS, Inc.
Hartford, Conn.

Memorial Windows
In accordance with the best traditions of the craft. Notable installations in forty states and five foreign countries.
Illustrated material on request
The D'Ascenzo Studios
founded 1896
1604 Summer Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

ALTAR BREADS ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED
SAINT MARY'S CONVENT
KENOSHA • WISCONSIN

MENEELY BELL CO.
22 RIVER ST., TROY, N. Y.
BELLS

R. GEISSLER, INC.
71-79 W. 45th St., New York 19, N. Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE·BRASS·SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS
EST 1877

ERNEST W. LAKEMAN
Designer and Worker in
STAINED GLASS
2 CRESCENT PLACE
YONKERS, NEW YORK

Need a LAXATIVE?
Black-Draught is
1-Usually prompt
2-Usually thorough
3-Always economical

25 to 40 doses only 25¢
Get BLACK-DRAUGHT
CAUTION: USE ONLY AS DIRECTED

EXPANDED MISSIONARY

(Continued from page 5)

and those to which Christ directs us become for us the pearl of great price."

Calling for more complete Christion dedication, Bishop Tucker suggested that "we were tempted to interpret the victory won in the war as an elimination of threatened danger, which left us free to exploit our opportunity. During the past year we set our hands to this task only to find that the seeds which inevitably produce a harvest of calamity are still deeply imbedded in human nature. This present occasion calls for the full use of all the capacity and resources with which God has blessed us, but it also reminds us that these will be effective only in proportion as we accept the leadership of him whom God has sent. From the beginning the purpose of Christ was 'to seek and to save them that are lost' and this purpose was universal in scope. No problem is resolved today on lesser than world terms. If we are to have international law there must be a universal will to obey. A moral plague in China or Africa will spread its direful influence to every section of the globe."

Calling for a progressive expansion of the Church's missionary program, Bishop Tucker said that to follow Christ in the contemporary revolution is to enlist under one whom God sends forth to carry forward his purpose to a new stage of development. (See page twelve for proposed missionary program.) "The war with all its evil and tragedy supplied us with a sense of cause strong enough to unify our aims and to call forth our utmost capacity. Now that its pressure is removed, our attention tends to be dissipated among countless little aims, or becomes absorbed in the satisfaction of those selfish impulses which have such an irresistible fascination for a will that is not committed to some great enterprise. Christ opens our eyes to what William James called 'a moral equivalent of war.' He invites us to enlist in a cause whose success or failure involves the alternative of worldwide welfare or disaster. It is a cause in which no individual or body of individuals can be neutral. Shall we not, therefore, lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith?"

Everything for the Episcopal Church
but vestments
A broad statement but we'd like to prove it.
Ammidon and Company
Horace L. Varian
Horace L. Varian, Jr.
31 South Frederick Street
Baltimore 2, Maryland

PURE IRISH LINENS NOW IN STOCK
for all Church needs, supplies constantly arriving, good qualities, also fine cottons. Samples free.
Marv Fawcett Company
Plainfield, N. J. Box 146

CATHEDRAL STUDIOS
Washington & London, England. Linens and materials by the yard, surplices, albs, Altar Linens, stoles, burses & veils. Materials by the yard. See my NEW BOOK "CHURCH EMBROIDERY" & CHURCH VESTMENTS a complete instruction. 128 pages, 95 illus. Price $5.67. And my HANDBOOK for ALTAR GUILDS, price 50c. Miss L. V. Mackrille, 11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington 15, D.C. 30 minutes from U. S. Treasury. Tel. Wisconsin 2752.

SURPLICES — STOLES
VESTMENTS
CHURCH HANGINGS
ALTAR LINENS
CASSOCKS
CLERICAL SUITS — CLOAKS
RABATS—RABAT VESTS—COLLARS—SHIRTS
Choir Vestments in All Styles
Inquiries Invited
C. M. ALMY & SON, INC.
562 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.

VESTMENTS for CLERGY and CHOIR
Altar Linens . . . Embroideries . . . Tailoring . . . Episcopal Flags. Send for Catalog
J. M. HALL, INC.
14 W. 40th St., New York - Tel. CH 4-3306
Office & Salesroom
"Orders taken for serge cassocks for J. Wippell & Co., Ltd."

The Payne-Spiers Studios Inc.
Studios at Paterson, New Jersey
Carved Wood
Chancel Renovations Church Furnishings
Murals Memorials Tablets
Stained Glass
Inquiries Solicited

VESTMENTS
Cassocks - Surplices - Stoles - Scarves
Silks - Altar Cloths - Embroideries
Priest Cloaks - Rabats - Collars
Custom Tailoring for Clergymen
1837 Church Vestment Makers Over One Hundred Years 1946

COX SONS & VINING, Inc.
131 East 23rd Street, New York 10, N.Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

REV. CHARLES R. STINNETTE, JR.
United States Army Chaplain

May I say a word about the current discussion concerning the proposal "to study" unity with other Christian bodies. It would seem to me that there is a note of insecurity in articles on this issue which read either proponent out of the Church on the basis of Prayer Book loyalty. When we begin to speak of "the great betrayal" in these discussions perhaps it should be a signal for all of us, conscious of our own most grievous sin, to look into our own hearts, our own Prayer Book loyalty and the religion of Christ.

* * *

REV. JAMES CARMAN
Trinity Cathedral, Phoenix, Arizona

There has been a great deal said of late about cleaning out 281. The cry once again is "Let them resign and give the new Presiding Bishop a chance." Having just resigned from the aforesaid institution may I, through you, make a comment? If there is merit in the suggestion let's do it right. Let's make it a policy applying to all who are paid workers in the Church. Whenever a diocese gets a new bishop let all the clergy resign. Give the new man a chance. How can we expect a new bishop to succeed handicapped as I hear many are? Let's not be cowards and ask others to step out into the cold, cold, world. Let's all be brave and do it. Let's make it 100%.

ANSWER: We believe the top executives at 281 should place their resignations on the desk of the new Presiding Bishop, just as members of the Cabinet do when a President takes office. It is assumed that the new Presiding Bishop would not accept them all and perhaps none. As for all the clergy resigning their parishes when a new bishop takes office, we would remind Mr. Carman that rectors are called to parishes not by diocesan bishops but by parish vestries (Canon 20 "Of the Filling of Vacant Cures"). In our judgment this is a very important canon with which laymen, and particularly vestrymen, ought to be more familiar than most of them apparently are.

* * *

ROBERT H. WHITAKER
Former Navy Chaplain

Arrival of THE WITNESS was always an event during the eighteen months I was in the Pacific. This is still so as I resume the life of a civilian. Its down-to-earth presentation of vital issues, its fearless editorial policy applying scorching criticism in high places and in low, and its thoroughly progressive application of the Gospel to the whole of life inside and outside the Church, to my mind, make good religious journalism. Yes, I read THE WITNESS for amusement, too, especially when some irate reader has drawn and quartered the managing editor and, thinking him neatly disposed of, with triumphant glee raises the Red flag over his temporary grave.

Another fine feature of THE WITNESS is its policy of free debate, never hesitating to discuss an issue because it may not be popular. The recent issue headlining the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship is an excellent example of this. As always, my blood pressure varied from page to page. But it was a job well-down: informative, thoughtful, and (as it should be) provoking. Although I have never seen my way clear to adopt the particular pattern of thinking upheld by the EPF, I found it most gratifying that the pages of THE WITNESS could be opened to such a statement of its position thus affirming "the continued fellowship of the Church" with this group.

Each articie was admirable but the one I liked and disliked most was "Military Memories." Perhaps it was because I have heard many a GI gripe which has demanded more than the usual parochial pat on the hand some of us may have applied to our kindly elderly ladies. I do not question the truth of Mr. Montgomery's statements. Some of them are altogether too true. I share his indignation. I do, however, feel sorry for the "Chaplain [who] was not so much a religious leader as a morale builder" but I am inclined to remark that if that were all he was, it was his own fault regardless of his commanding officer's ideal of a chaplain. Personally, I found the Naval Chaplaincy a most satisfying wartime experience and I would never have forgiven myself if I had missed this opportunity of serving my contemporaries. The charges of "GI Jesus" (strangely enough, I had never heard it before. and I think I have been around a little) or "morale builder" do not disturb me too much for I (along with a considerable number of our clergy) have the deep personal satisfaction of having placed myself in a situation where there was a job to be done—and a job which only a priest of the Church living among his men could perform. But, no hard feelings Mr. Montgomery. Thanks a lot for your frank statement.

* * *

MRS. E. L. WOODSTOCK
Churchwoman of Pittsburgh

Peace! What a travesty. My son, along with myriads of other starry-eyed youths volunteered in the service and how disillusioned some have become . . . even embittered. You have a large order in trying to change "man's inhumanity to man." We scan the horizon and miss what is close to us, to wit, just being kind to those we meet everydav in our lives. Hunt for the cause and cure of war and it is our own next door.

Christchurch
VIRGINIA
SCHOOL for BOYS

Intermediate School. Seventh to Ninth Grades. Upper School. College Entrance Requirements. This school is a member of the system of schools in the diocese of Virginia. Apply to The Headmaster, Christchurch School, Christchurch, Va.

Virginia Episcopal School
Lynchburg, Virginia
Prepares boys for colleges and university. Splendid environment and excellent corps of teachers. High standard in scholarship and athletics. Healthy and beautiful location in the mountains of Virginia.
For catalogue apply to
George L. Barton, Jr., Ph.D Headmaster,
Box 408

SCHOOLS

The Hospital of Saint Barnabas and the University of Newark offer a full course in NURSING
to qualified High School graduates. Scholarships available. Classes enter in February and September
Apply to
Director of Nursing
HOSPITAL OF SAINT BARNABAS
685 High Street Newark, N. J.

DE VEAUX SCHOOL
FOUNDED 1852
A Church school for boys. Thorough preparation for college. Military system of student government, developing sense of responsibility. Charges for grades seven and eight $1000; grades nine through twelve $1050. For catalog, address THE HEADMASTER, DeVeaux School, Niagara Falls, New York.

HOLDERNESS
In the White Mountains. College Preparatory and General Courses. Music and Crafts. For boys 12-19. All sports including riding. 200 acres of woods. New fireproof building. Individual attention. Home atmosphere.
Rev. Edric A. Weld, Rector
Box W. Plymouth, N. H.

MARGARET HALL
Under Sisters of St. Helena
(Episcopal)
Small country boarding and day school for girls, from primary through high school. Accredited college preparatory. Modern building recently thoroughly renovated includes gymnasium and swimming pool. Campus of six acres with ample playground space, hockey field and tennis court. Riding. Board and Tuition $800. For catalog, address: Sister Rachel, Prin. O.S.H., Box A. Versailles, Kentucky.

FORK UNION MILITARY ACADEMY
An Honor Christian School with the highest academic rating. Upper School prepares for university or business. ROTC. Every modern equipment. Junior School from six years. Housemother. Separate building. Catalogue. Dr. J. J. Wicker, Fork Union, Virginia.

CARLETON COLLEGE
Laurence M. Gould, D.Sc., President
Carleton is a co-educational liberal arts college of limited enrollment and is recognized as the Church College of Minnesota.
Address: Assistant to the President
CARLETON COLLEGE
Northfield Minnesota

KEMPER HALL
KENOSHA, WISCONSIN
Boarding and day school for girls offering thorough college preparation and training for purposeful living. Study of the Fine Arts encouraged. Complete sports program. Junior School department. Beautiful lake shore campus. Under direction of the Sisters of St. Mary. For catalogue. address: Box WT.

ROWLAND HALL
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
Boarding and Day pupils. Accredited. Preschool, Lower school, College Preparatory and General courses. Graduates in many eastern and western colleges. All branches of music, dancing, art, drama. Indoor pool, tennis courts, riding, weekends of winter sports. Pleasant home life. Environment of geographical and historical interest. Altitude 4500. Boarding $1,000, Day $120-$350.
The Right Rev. Arthur W. Moulton, S.T.D., Rector

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

I can make you a MASTER OF ENGLISH give me only 15 minutes a day

THE mastery of English is one of the greatest assets in the business world. It gives you a tremendous advantage over others who lack it.

Words are most valuable tools. To those who know how to use them skilfully go rich rewards—money, power, position. For words are the foundation of all thought, all speech, and all writing. You think in words, and it is impossible to think in words you do not possess.

To broaden your thinking and strengthen the power of your mind you must first increase your vocabulary. A limited vocabulary usually means limited thought, limited power, and limited authority.

People judge your mental ability by your use of English. If your language is stiff and stilted, if your speech is slovenly, if you make obvious mistakes in grammar and pronunciation, you are under a serious handicap. If your speech is clear and precise, your expressions varied and interesting, you are recognized as a person of culture and ability.

The BIG JOBS usually go to men who are able to express themselves in fluent, convincing, clear-cut English. People have confidence in such men—but never in those who are always groping for words and whose thoughts are hazy and indistinct.

A PERSONAL PLAN FOR SUCCESS

As we all know, right now business and industry are working at top speed—planning to take advantage of the opportunities that lie ahead for peacetime America. Are you planning, too? Are you, personally, going to be ready to take your place in the coming era? Are you going to be prepared for the limitless opportunities of a new, a hustling, and a vastly different business world?

LATER MAY BE TOO LATE

Right now is the time to prepare for success. Don't put it off Whatever your present job, whatever your postwar prospects, one thing is certain, a command of English is all-important—it's a "MUST" in any peacetime success plan. Grenville Kleiser, originator of the famous course in Practical English and Mental Efficiency can help you—as he has helped thousands of others—obtain the goal you have set for yourself. This world authority will teach you how to use words with ease and confidence—if you will give him JUST 15 MINUTES OF YOUR SPARE TIME EACH DAY. No involved rules of grammar or principles of rhetoric—just a simple, straightforward, inspiring method that will accomplish wonders for you.

LEARN MORE ABOUT THIS COURSE

Learn all about this famous course NOW. Send for a copy of Mr. Kleiser's Booklet: "How to Become a Master of English." It is absolutely FREE. Chock-ful of information on English, and on Mr. Kleiser's new, common-sense method of teaching it. Just fill out the coupon below and mail to us. No obligation—and no agent will call.

Step Up in Your Job
Turn Words into Dollars
Become a Convincing Speaker
Increase Your Vocabulary
Write Tactful, Forceful Letters
Build a Reliable Memory
Avoid Common Errors
Gain Self-Confidence
Use the RIGHT WORD in the RIGHT PLACE

FREE

FUNK & WAGNALLS COMPANY
Publishers of the Famous STANDARD DICTIONARIES

Funk & Wagnalls Company, Dept. 350
354 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

Please send me by mail, free of charge, the booklet "How to Become a Master of English," together with full particulars of the Grenville Kleiser Mail Course in Practical English and Mental Efficiency.

NAME .....

ADDRESS .....

CITY ..... STATE .....

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The WITNESS

10¢ A COPY

LIBRARY COPY

SEPTEMBER 26, 1946

BISHOP HENRY SHERRILL, NEW PRESIDING BISHOP, WITH THE ARCHBISHOP AND BISHOP G. B. OXNAM (story and addresses this issue)

GENERAL CONVENTION NEWS

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

THE CATHEDRAL OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE
NEW YORK CITY

Sundays: 8, 9, 11, Holy Communion; 10, Morning Prayer; 4, Evening Prayer; Sermons 1 and 4.
Weekdays: 7:30 (also 9:15 Holy Days, and 10, Wednesdays), Holy Communion; 9, Morning Prayer; 5, Evening Prayer.
Open daily 7 A. M. to 6 P. M.

GRACE CHURCH, NEW YORK
Broadway at 10th St.
Rev. Louis W. Pitt, D.D., Rector

Daily: 12:30 except Mondays and Saturdays.
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M. and 4:30 P. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion 11:45 A. M.

THE HEAVENLY REST, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue at 90th Street
Rev. Henry Darlington, D.D.

Sundays: Holy Communion, 8 and 10 A. M.; Morning Service and Sermon, 11 A. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion, 11 A. M.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S CHURCH
NEW YORK
Park Avenue and 51st Street
Rev. Geo. Paull T. Sargent, D.D., Rector
8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evensong. Special Music.
Weekdays: Holy Communion Wednesday at 8:00 A. M.
Thursdays and Saints' Days at 10:30 A. M.
The Cnurch is open daily for prayer.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH
Madison Ave. at 71st St., New York
The Rev. H. W. B. Donegan, D.D., Rector
8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
9:30 A. M. Church School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evening Prayer and Sermon.
Wed., 7:45 A. M., Thurs., 12 Noon Holy Communion.

THE CHURCH OF THE EPIPHANY
1317 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Charles W. Sheerin, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 A. M.; 8 P. M.
Daily: 12:05.
Thursdays: 11:00 and 12:05.

ST. THOMAS' CHURCH, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue and 53rd Street
Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services: 8 and 11 A. M.
Daily Services: 8:30 A. M., Holy Communion.
Thursdays: 11 A. M., Holy Communion.

THE CHURCH OF THE ASCENSION
Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street, New York
The Rev. Roscoe Thornton Foust, Rector
Sundays: 8 and 9 H. C.; 11 A. M., 4:30, 8 P. M.
Daily: 8, Holy Communion.
5:30 Vespers—Tuesday through Friday.
The Church is open all day and night.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL
Buffalo, New York
Shelton Square
The Very Rev. Edward R. Welles, M.A., Dean
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30 and 11.
Daily: 12:05 noon—Holy Communion.
Tuesday: 7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
Wednesday: 11:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH
Atlanta, Georgia
435 Peachtree Street
The Rev. J. Milton Richardson, Rector
9:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
10:45 A. M. Sunday School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Prayer and Sermon.
6:00 P. M. Young People's Meetings.

The WITNESS
For Christ and His Church

EDITORIAL BOARD: Frederick C. Grant, Editor; Arthur Lichtenberger, Chairman; William B. Spofford, Managing Editor; Philip L. Shutt, News Editor; Lane W. Barton, Beverly M. Boyd, Dillard H. Brown, Roscoe T. Foust, Charles K. Gilbert, Hugh D. McCandless, Howard Chandler Robbins, William K. Russell, Sydney A. Temple Jr., Joseph H. Titus, William M. Weber.

★

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS: D. B. Aldrich, J. A. Bell, T. S. Carruthers, Adelaide Case, G. K. Chalmers, E. M. Cross, G. M. Day, Angus Dun, A. W. Farlander, T. P. Ferris, J. F. Fletcher, John Gass, C. H. Gesner, C. L. Glenn, G. C. Graham, J. M. Groton, G. I. Hiller, I. P. Johnson, T. R. Ludlow, C. S. Martin, R. C. Miller, Walter Mitchell, A. T. Mollegen, E. L. Parsons, E. L. Pennington, Rose Phelps, L. W. Pitt, Otis Rice, Cyril Richardson, Paul Roberts, V. D. Scudder, W. M. Sharp, W. B. Sperry, C. W. Sprouse, D. S. Stark, W. B. Stevens, J. W. Suter, S. E. Sweet, Alexander Zabriskie.

★

THE WITNESS is published weekly from September 15th to June 15th inclusive, with the exception of the first week in January and semi-monthly from June 15th to September 15th by the Episcopal Church Publishing Co. on behalf of the Church Publishing Association, Inc. Samuel Thorne, President; Charles A. Houston, Vice-President; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, Treasurer; Frederic D. H. Gilbert, Secretary.

★

The subscription price is $3.00 a year; in bundles for sale in parishes the magazine sells for 10c a copy, we will bill quarterly at 5c a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter, March 6, 1939, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879.

SEPTEMBER 26, 1946
Vol. XXIX No. 43

CLERGY NOTES

BARKER, H. RUSSELL, formerly assistant at the Chapel of the Incarnation, New York, is now rector of Zion, Hudson Falls, and St. James', Fort Edward, N. Y.

CLARK, HUGH S., former army chaplain, is now rector of the Redeemer, Pittsburgh, Pa.

CLARK, WALTER L., died at his home at Benicia, Calif., on September 8th.

CRIPPS, WALTER T. H., formerly canon of the cathedral, Spokane, Wash., is now assistant at the Ascension, Pittsburgh, Pa.

DAVIS, ROY, formerly curate Grace Church, Oak Park, Ill., is now assistant at St. John's, Ames, Iowa.

HULTGREN, HAROLD G., formerly in charge of St. James', Long Beach, N. Y., is now assistant at the Advent, Boston.

JENKINS, ALBERT E., formerly curate at All Saints', Pasadena, Calif., is now the rector of St. Matthias', Whittier, Calif.

KOULETSIS, NICHOLAS, ordained deacon in June, is now curate at St. Luke's, Racine, Wisconsin.

LEWIS, EDWIN T., has resigned as rector of St. Matthias' Church, Whittier, Calif., to retire from the active ministry.

MARNER, W. JAMES, formerly assistant rector of St. Paul's, Oakland, Calif., will become assistant rector and organist-choirmaster at St. James', Wichita, Kansas, on October 1.

ROLLIT, A. DIXON, formerly assistant at St. Thomas' Chapel, New York, is now assistant at Calvary, Pittsburgh, Pa.

SHAW, ROBERT M., former navy chaplain, is now rector of All Saints', Pittsburgh, Pa.

WHITLEY, HARRY B., formerly of Puerto Rico, has accepted the rectorship of St. Stephen's, Wyandotte, Michigan.

WILSON, HERBERT A., of the Detroit Episcopal City Mission Society, is now in charge of St. Alban's, Manistique, and St. Paul's, Nahma, in the diocese of Northern Michigan.

WITHERS, ROBERT JR., of Farmville, Va., will have charge of Holy Trinity, Grahamville-Ridgeland, Va., and associate missions Nov. 1.

WITTKOFSKI, JOSEPH, formerly in charge of St. Paul's, Monongahela, Pa., is now in charge of St. Mary's, Charleroi, Pa., and the Transfiguration, Clairton, Pa.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

CHRIST CHURCH CATHEDRAL
Main and Church Sts., Hartford, Conn.
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30, 10:05, 11 A. M., 8 P. M.
Weekdays: Holy Communion—Monday and Thursday, 9 A. M.; Tuesday, Friday and Saturday, 8 A. M.; Wednesday, 7:00 and 11:00 A. M. Noonday Service, daily 12:15 P. M.

CHRIST CHURCH
Cambridge
REV. GARDINER M. DAY, RECTOR
REV. FREDERIC B. KELLOGG, CHAPLAIN
Sunday Services, 8:00, 9:00, 10:00 and 11:15 A. M.
Weekdays: Wed. 8 and 11 A. M. Thurs., 7:30 A. M.

TRINITY CHURCH
Miami
Rev. G. Irvine Hiller, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services 8, 9:30, 11 A. M.

TRINITY CATHEDRAL
Military Park, Newark, N. J.
The Very Rev. Arthur C. Lichtenberger, Dean
Summer Services
Sunday
8:30 and 11:00 A. M.
Weekdays
Tuesday, Thursday, Friday at 12:10; Wednesday and Holy Days, Holy Communion, 12 noon.
The Cathedral is open every day.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
Montecito and Bay Place
OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA
Rev. Calvin Barkow, D.D., Rector
Sundays: 8 A. M., Holy Communion; 11 A. M., Church School; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer and Sermon.
Wednesdays: 10 A. M., Holy Communion; 10:45, Rector's Study Class.

GRACE CHURCH
Corner Church and Davis Streets
ELMIRA, N. Y.
Rev. Frederick T. Henstridge, Rector
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M.; 4:30 P. M.
Daily: Tuesday and Thursday, 7:30 A. M.
Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Holy Days, 9:30 A. M.
Other Services Announced

ST. MARK'S CHURCH
Texas Avenue and Cotton Street
SHREVEPORT, LA.
Rev. Frank E. Walters, Rector
Rev. Harry Wintermeyer, Curate
Sundays: Holy Communion, 7:30; 9:25 A. M., Family Service; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer.
Holy Communion, first Sunday. 6 P. M., Young Churchmen.

CHRIST CHURCH
Nashville, Tennessee
Rev. Peyton Randolph Williams
7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
9:30 and 11 A. M.—Church School.
11 A. M.—Morning Service and Sermon.
6 P. M.—Young People's Meetings.
Thursdays and Saints' Days—Holy Communion, 10 A. M.

GRACE CHURCH
105 Main Street, Orange, N. J.
Lane Wickham Barton, Rector
SUNDAYS
8:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M.—Church School.
11:00 A. M.—Morning Prayer and Sermon. (Holy Communion first Sunday each month)
7:00 P. M.—Young People's Fellowship.

CHRIST CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA
Second Street above Market
Cathedral of Democracy
Founded 1695
Rev. E. Felix Kloman, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services: 10 and 11 A. M.
Weekdays: Wed., 12 noon and 12:30.
Saints' Days: 12 noon.
This Church Is Open Every Day

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

VOL. XXIX, No. 43

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

SEPTEMBER 26, 1946

Publication Office, 5140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago 37, Ill. Editorial Office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

Bishops Accept Unity Action Of House of Deputies

By W. B. Spofford Jr.

Full Afternoon of Lively Debate Results In Close Votes and Passage of Resolutions

Philadelphia:—Following a lively and interesting debate the House of Bishops concurred with the House of Deputies (WITNESS, page 3, Sept. 19) by adopting the report on unity with the Presbyterians. This provides for further conversations with the Presbyterians and negotiations for unity but, as amended by the bishops, asks for diocesan-wide studies of the whole question of unity and the ecumenical movement. The bishops also requested that suitable material for study be prepared by the Presiding Bishop, the National Council's department of Christian education, the joint commission on unity and the commission on faith and order. A resolution was also passed, offered by Bishop Henry W. Hobson of Southern Ohio, directing the Presiding Bishop to submit the matter of unity, including the Majority Report which was rejected by this Convention, to the Lambeth Conference of 1948 for consideration and advice.

The debate centered around amendments offered by Bishop Robert Strider of West Virginia, calling for general study of the subject by the whole Church, and amendments to the amendments by Bishop Hobson which would have submitted the report of the joint commission and other documents relating to unity with the Presbyterians to the Church for study. In the midst of the debate, Bishop Wallace Conkling of Chicago asked if the Hobson amendment would not be a "back-door" to getting approval of the Majority Report of the Commission on Unity to which Bishop Hobson calmly replied that it was a "front-door policy." Bishop Conkling, therefore, offered an amendment to the Hobson amendment by eliminating any reference to "the reports of the commission on unity or other material." The Conkling amendment was defeated 58 to 52. A standing vote on the Hobson amendments then rejected his plan to have the Church study the majority and minority reports by a margin to 14 votes, 64 to 50.

The afternoon's debate was opened by Bishop Strider who called for the unanimous concurrence with the action of the deputies in the interest of Church peace and harmony. "I am not voting to concur because I believe this action is anything like the action expected of us," he said. "Nor because I think it is indicative of profound Christian faith, and not because it can be squared with our 1937 action. Neither do I do so because such concurrence is fair to the Presbyterians, nor because it will promote unity. I do so in the interest of peace within the Church and in the hope that a larger unity will be eventually possible."

Bishop Hobson followed with his proposed amendment stating that, while he would like peace within the Church, he didn't like to win peace by dodging important issues. "I do not feel that there has been any real progress in the past nine years and I do not believe that we have considered the real issues," he said. "We are shying away from the real issue, which is the validity of Presbyterian orders, and I say that we must inform the world what we really believe or withdraw and say that we are not ready."

Challenging Bishop Hobson, Bishop Conkling said that when he took his oath as bishop he promised to fight all erroneous and strange doctrine which he felt was present in the concern to study the report of the commission on unity further. He stated that "until we have our own house in order, we cannot offer the privileges of our communion to others."

Then, in rapid succession, bishops proceeded to the microphone to have their say. Bishop Angus Dun of Washington stated that he could not look on the proposed basis for unity as founded on strange and erroneous doctrine and suggested that it was psychologically impossible for individuals to study unity as an abstraction. "Persons study matters which have a decisive effect upon their lives. They study when they have to make a choice that concerns them. By bringing to them the report of the commission, based on many years of conscientious work by experts," he said, "we give our people the dynamic for study."

Bishop Robert Strider of West Virginia presented the report on unity to the House of Bishops as the chairman of the commission

Bishop Coadjutor Frederic Barry of Albany said, "We ought to be realists. I have made a study of the Church in the state of New York and find that we are but a two per cent Church. Why do we not realize that this is true elsewhere and that there is a real indifference to what our Church does here?"

Retired Bishop Edward Parsons of

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

California gave one of the most resounding speeches of the afternoon when he warned the House that it was not acting "off in some obscure corner but in full view of the whole Christian world" and said that it was inconceivable to think that "the Church would not be guided by the Holy Spirit in making a study of these matters. What have we got to fear by taking this vital matter to the Church at large?" he asked. "Certainly, if we truly believe what we claim, we will receive divine guidance in our studies and discussions."

Bishop Coadjutor J. E. Hines of Texas said "Let the grass root people wrestle with unity" lest some day a monument be raised over Christendom with the inscription "rent asunder by bitter sectarianism." Bishop Elwood Haines of Iowa stated that "the resolution of the House of Deputies is an evasion and a postponement of the issue. I ask for a defeat of all amendments, a refusal to concur with the House of Deputies and beginning all over again on this whole matter."

Bishop Benjamin Ivins of Milwaukee said that he realized that his participation in the debate might prejudice some of his brethren but that he felt that, if words mean anything, "how can we honestly present ourselves as a via media, as some of us wish, to the Christian world if we carry through discussion and action on this matter."

Bishop Coadjutor Charles F. Boynton of Puerto Rico suggested that world and Church unity seemed to be progressing along the lines of federalization, as in the Federal Council of Churches, and the United Nations, and stated that it was his belief that having the Churches working together on federated projects was a wiser way to proceed than along the lines of organic unity.

Bishop John Walker of Atlanta, Ga., gave a strong speech for continued study of the proposed basis for unity by saying "We are spiritually slothful, fearful and lazy. We cannot supinely turn our backs on this God-given opportunity to promote unity. It is downright sinful. We should tackle these difficulties with the idea of assimilating differences."

Others who spoke in the debate were Bishops Powell of Maryland, Tucker of Ohio, Creighton of Michigan, and Moody of Lexington. The final vote, concurring with the action of the House of Deputies and calling for study of unity and ecumenicity, with the motion that the Presiding Bishop submit the matter to Lambeth, was passed unanimously.

BISHOP SHERRILL ELECTED PRESIDING BISHOP

Philadelphia: — Bishop Henry Knox Sherrill was elected Presiding Bishop on September 17th and will succeed Bishop Henry St. George Tucker on January 1st. Under the canons he is required to resign as bishop of Massachusetts in order to devote his full time to heading the national work of the Church. He fills the position until he is 68, which means a 12 year tenure of office since he is now 56.

Bishop Sherrill is a graduate of Yale and of the Episcopal Theological School. After serving for three years as curate at Trinity, Boston, he enlisted as a chaplain in World War I. He became rector of Trinity on leaving the service in 1919 and was elected bishop of Massachusetts in 1930. Through World War II Bishop Sherrill was head of the army and navy commission, and travelled widely, at home and abroad, both as the head of this commission and as a representative of the Federal Council of Churches. He has made several visits to England and Europe during the past two years to confer with Church and government officials on relief and other problems.

The editorial in THE WITNESS for September 5, Our New Presiding Bishop, did not name Bishop Sherrill as the bishop we would like to see elected. However, we there set forth the qualifications we believe a Presiding Bishop should have, and they so accurately list the qualities possessed by Bishop Sherrill that it can now be said that we had him in mind.

Our cover picture this week is of three outstanding men at General Convention: the new Presiding Bishop, Henry Knox Sherrill, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, whose address to the Auxiliary is printed in this number. The picture was taken at Canterbury Cathedral in 1945 at the time of the enthronement of the Archbishop.

Three General Convention leaders have a chat: Bishop Oliver J. Hart of Pennsylvania, host of the Convention; the Hon. Owen J. Roberts, president of the House of Deputies and Bishop Arthur R. McKinstry of Delaware

BISHOP REIFSNIDER SPEAKS ON JAPAN

Philadelphia: — An impassioned plea for an aggressive Christian missionary program in Japan was presented to the House of Bishops by Bishop Reifsnider, formerly a missionary in Japan.

"We have a wonderful opportunity to present Christ to the Japanese," he said. "A vacuum was created by the defeat and collapse of the nation. If we do not give them aid, they will turn to Communism. If we fail to take this God-given opportunity, the cause of Christianity in Japan will be set back at least a decade, and probably never will return."

The Bishop praised the leadership of General MacArthur, and quoted him as emphasizing that Japan's future rested with Christian leadership.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Auxiliary Elects To National Council and Its Board

Adopts Amendment Looking Toward Ending Of Racial Segregation and Discrimination

By Mrs. F. C. Grant

Philadelphia: — The triennial meeting of the Auxiliary elected the following as members of the National Council at their meeting on the 18th: Mrs. John E. Hill of Philadelphia; Miss Anne W. Patton of San Marino, Calif.; Miss Adelaide T. Case, professor at Episcopal Theological School, and Mrs. Harper Sibley of Rochester, N. Y., who is now president of the international Council of Churchwomen.

The day before the meeting elected new members for its own national executive board: Mrs. Alfred M. Chapman of Washington Crossing, Pa.; Mrs. John F. Head of Atlanta; Mrs. Roy Hoffman of Oklahoma City; Mrs. Francis L. Thompson of Helena, Ark. These four were eligible for a second three-year term and were reelected.

New members elected were Mrs. Rollin T. Chamberlin of Chicago, who is president of the Auxiliary in that diocese; Mrs. Francis O. Clarkson of Charlotte, N. C.; Mrs. Lewis D. Pilcher of Petersburg, Va., president of the Auxiliary of Southern Virginia, and Mrs. Theodore O. Wedel of Washington, D. C., who is vice-president of the Auxiliary in the diocese of Washington.

The board consists of 21 members, with eight others elected by the provinces, one representing each of four other national Church societies, and the executive secretary, Mrs. Arthur Sherman.

The United Thank Offering budget was adopted on the 18th and provides for an addition of $200,000 to the pension fund for women workers; $984,000 for the support of women missionaries (there are about 100 at present, with others to be appointed); and $491,126 for 17 miscellaneous items, including $100,000 for the Church in Japan; $150,000 for new buildings in mission fields; $90,000 to aid work done in cooperation with other Churches.

The change in the by-laws whereby each diocese and district will be represented by but one delegation was passed. This provides that in any diocese (which means practically if not all) where there is a minority group with three congregations or 225 communicants, that this minority may be represented by an additional delegate to the triennial. (WITNESS editorial, Sept. 19.) There were delegates who spoke against the change as being contrary to democratic principles on the ground that a woman should not be elected solely because she was an Indian, a Negro, etc. However, delegates from South Florida, Florida, East Carolina, Upper South Carolina and other Southern dioceses spoke strongly for the change. One of the most effective speeches was made by Mrs. Dean, one of the Negro delegates from South Florida, who said: "It is a step forward. Of our 105 dioceses throughout the United States only five are now represented by a delegation of Negro women. In the future, if our by-laws are changed, there will be one Negro representative from each diocese. The so-called 'integrated' dioceses of the South in reality send only white representatives and that is unfortunate for the Colored people need leadership. In the words of the old spiritual, it seems to those of our people in the Episcopal Church as though we were beginning to 'climb Jacob's ladder'."

The report of the committee on the place of women in the Church, presented by Prof. Adelaide Case, and which called for representation of women in the House of Deputies, was strongly supported by the delegates. However, the vote favoring it was but 2 to 1 so that many felt that it should not be presented to the House of Deputies until more united action could be secured. (The report was presented to the House of Deputies by Spencer Miller Jr. of Newark, but since it requires unanimous consent to re-introduce a subject, it was not considered. The Deputies had previously voted, 262 to 256, not to change the word "layman" to "lay person." The matter will be the subject of an editorial in our issue of October 3.—Ed.)

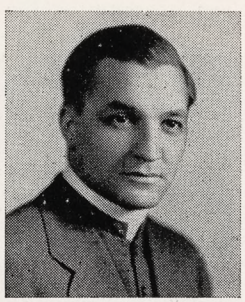
Bishop Oxnam's stirring address to the Auxiliary is presented in this number of THE WITNESS so it is unnecessary to say anything further here except to report that it was enthusiastically received. But I should like to say more about the address of Miss Frances Perkins than it was possible to report in the issue of September 19th.

She congratulated the Auxiliary on its United Offering, but also on its gift of leadership in Christian thinking, both within and without the Church. She admires the way in which the Auxiliary teaches women to work together, bringing them from specific incidents within the parish to larger issues, as from the predicament of old Mrs. Jones to universal old age pensions.

Thirty or forty years ago, there was no discussion of human needs. Recreation centers were unheard of. The program of the Woman's Auxiliary like that of other humanistic agencies is of slow growth. It turns our minds to Community with a capital C and to a sense of reality in the common life.

Frances Perkins, former secretary of labor, addresses the women of the Church at General Convention

We should appeal more to natural law, to our common feeling of response to God, our duty to God. As our conception of the care of the aged grew, agitators stepped in and we had a great economic movement for "$30 every Thursday." Americans are at their best when agitated and everyone expressed some opinion.



On the whole, however, it is purpose we lack. Is our aim to develop a Christian society or to give our people material welfare? Our soldiers abroad, when asked what America is like, have stressed ball games and soda fountains and have missed the answer. They do not think of what American society can be. "I believe in democracy," a young girl said, "as I believe in the Nicæan creed." There must be a systematic program of prayer. The increased use of the sacraments is essential. Out of this only will come leadership, a sense of community and a knowledge of supernatural strength.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

MISSIONARY BISHOPS ARE ELECTED

Philadelphia: — Three missionary bishops were elected by the House of Bishops on September 17th. The Rev. Lane W. Barton, a member of the WITNESS editorial board and the rector of Grace Church, Orange, N.J., was elected bishop of Eastern Oregon. He will succeed Bishop Remington who is now the suffragan bishop of Pennsylvania.

The Rev. Stephen C. Clark, rector of St. Mark's, Pasadena, Calif., was elected bishop of Utah where he will succeed Bishop Moulton who retired at this Convention.

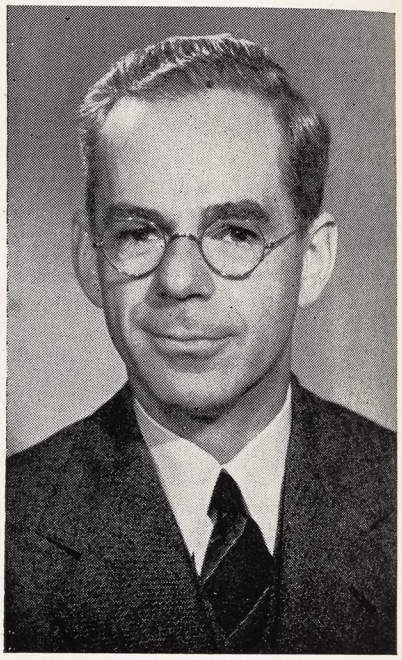
The Rev. George H. Quarterman, rector of St. Philip's, Ardmore, Oklahoma, was elected bishop of North Texas and will succeed Bishop Seaman who retired three years ago.

All three have stated that they will accept the positions.

URGES STUDY OF MARX

Philadelphia: — "Churchmen throughout the world must seriously study the tenets of Marxianism if they hope to understand the contemporary world," said the Rev. Gilbert Cope, executive secretary of the Society of Socialist Clergy and Ministers of England, speaking at the CLID breakfast at the General Convention on September 14th. The meeting, attended by approximately one hundred members and presided over by Bishop E. B. Parsons, president of the CLID, followed a corporate communion in the Church of the Holy Trinity.

Citing the fact that a large portion of the world's surface is being ruled under a system of political-economic socialism, with more people turning to such a form of rule continually, Mr. Cope stated that churchmen, if they hoped to have a responsible voice in our era, must understand the many points in which the teachings of Marx are compatible with the Christian gospel and be prepared to withstand a strong and concerted drive on the part of American conservatives to prevent this country and the world from advancing to true political and economic democracy. He said that he was amazed at the vehemence of the anti-Soviet Union drive which is expressing itself in the American press and stated that he feared that the United States was not expanding democracy sufficiently at home to prevent a possible "strong-man" regime from coming into power. He cautioned against having the Churches unite in such a way that it might be construed by the peoples of the world as a coalition against the revolutionary surge of the times.



Speaking on the program also was Bishop William Scarlett, chairman of the Church's commission on social reconstruction, who outlined the plans of the commission to bring out a Penguin Book entitled The Church Takes A Stand, containing papers by William Ernest Hocking, Reinhold Niebuhr, Eleanor Roosevelt, Frances Perkins, Stringfellow Barr and others dealing with the Christian social position in today's world. He stated that the commission hoped to set up a series of regional conferences to discuss and analyze this book during the next triennium so that some comprehensive program could be worked out for adoption at the next General Convention.

BANS LIBERAL DIVORCE

Montreal (RNS):—A 58 page report on Christian marriage made to the General Council of the United Church in Canada here urged that any attempt to extend the grounds of divorce be resisted and that the Church support current efforts to make marriage laws in the provinces more uniform.

URGES PERPETUAL DEACONS

Philadelphia:—The report of the commission on the perpetual diaconate and the ministry for laymen was presented to the bishops by Bishop Stephen Keeler of Minnesota. Ordination of outstanding consecrated business or professional men to the perpetual diaconate was recommended as a means of strengthening the Church's work in small towns and communities with buildings and congregations available for services, but with no ordained men to conduct them. These men would receive their livelihood from their businesses or professions, and would not be a burden on parochial or diocesan budgets. The report was received by the House of Bishops, and steps taken to prepare legislation to carry out its recommendations.

Professor Wilber G. Katz is one of the many prominent laymen at the Convention. On the faculty of the law school of the University of Chicago, he is a deputy from the diocese of Chicago

DEPUTIES AGREE ON MARRIAGE

Philadelphia: — The final action on the new marriage canon is as it was reported in the issue of September 19th since the deputies agreed with the action taken by the bishops. An article explaining the action will appear in the October 10th WITNESS by Bishop Davis, the chairman of the commission.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

EDITORIALS

Action on Unity

OUR Presbyterian brethren have been wonderfully patient with us during these past nine years and we hope their patience and their understanding will continue. We are really making progress, though slowly! The report of the commission on approaches to unity was the occasion of a whole day's debate in the House of Deputies. It was finally received, the next day, with two major revisions. The deputies voted to continue the commission, but instead of "The Proposed Basis of Union" being the subject of study by the whole Church during the coming three years, it was decided to ask the commission "to prepare a statement of faith and order, in harmony with the Lambeth Quadrilateral, upon which" we are "prepared to enter into intercommunion and to proceed toward organic federation with the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. or with any other interested Christian body," and to report to the Convention in 1949. "Cordial greetings" are to be extended to the Presbyterians and gratitude for their "brotherly courtesy," and an invitation to them to prepare a similar formulation, also "taking into account the points of the Lambeth Quadrilateral." Further, the Lambeth Conference of bishops to be held in 1948 is to be asked to appoint a standing commission on reunion, "to consider all specific approaches to unity, in which any Church of the Anglican Communion is concerned."

Some of us naturally view all this as a defeat for the commission. But in reality it is a step forward—not a long one, but a sure and firm one. If our commission does draw up such a statement, similar in some ways, perhaps, to the one published in England in 1938 (Doctrine in the Church of England), we shall have gone far toward establishing a unified and central position among ourselves. If it is properly prepared, as we should certainly expect it to be prepared by the scholars now on the commission, firmly based upon the official statements and formularies of the Episcopal Church as found in Holy Scripture and in the Book of Common Prayer, and with due regard to Anglican history and tradition, we may be sure that only good can result. With such a formal statement in hand, some of the Convention speeches in opposition to the majority report would have been simply impossible. Nor could the facile assumption any longer be made, as it is now often made, that "the Church teaches" this or that particular doctrine which some individual or group has selected out of various non-Anglican sources, in complete defiance of the settled standards and traditions of the Protestant Episcopal Church. In the long run, this will be a decided advantage, not only to Episcopalians but also to our patient friends, the Presbyterians—and likewise to all other Protestant Christians with whom we hope eventually to join hands in the reunited Church.

Yet to Come

SPACE limitations prevent us from giving readers in this number a number of important news items which were in hand at press time. We assure you, however, that action taken at General Convention which is not reported this week will be found in the number for October 3rd. Among these will be a report of the final action taken on the budget and program of the National Council and a story about resolutions and pronouncements on social and international affairs. The number for October 10th will review the entire Convention action, with a feature article by Bishop Cameron Davis, chairman of the commission on the marriage canon, on the meaning of the new marriage canon, and another by the Rev. Theodore O. Wedel, member of the commission on unity, which will state just where we stand on the matter of unity with the Presbyterian Church in the light of action taken in Philadelphia.

Rome Declines

ONCE more the Roman Catholic Church has been invited to share with the Protestant world in taking a united stand on issues which confront the whole Christian world, and once more it has declined. At least this is implied by an article in the sharp-tongued Osservatore Romano, which usually voices the Vatican. "Jesus Christ founded 'the Church,' not 'the churches' and the 'World Council' of them," it says. This is smart, quotable, superficially logical, but simply ignores the reality of the situation. The tone and attitude it adopts toward Evangelical Christianity sounds very much like the tone and attitude Mussolini and the fascists used to adopt toward the democracies.

We might retort that our Lord did not "found" the Roman Church either, in the sense in which this Italian article uses the verb; Christ was the "founder" of the whole Catholic Church, and is its true head and Lord. But he did not "found" it by laying down a scheme of doctrine or practice: the historic organization of the Church was a later development under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. And the Ecumenical Church has never acknowledged the peculiar Roman theories of government, the supremacy of the Pope, his claims to unique authority and to occasional infallibility, and so on.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

But the Osservatore's article should serve one good purpose at least: it ought to be a warning to those among us who think that the way of reunion lies in the Romeward direction rather than in the direction of Protestantism, i.e., of non-Roman Christianity. The road to reunion with Rome is closed, and will remain closed as long as Rome persists in its totalitarian attitude toward all other Christians. Meanwhile, the road that leads toward reunion and real ecumenicity lies on the other side. And that is the side where Anglicanism has most to gain, as well as most to contribute.

Responsibility As World Citizens

by G. Bromley Oxnam

An Address to the Auxiliary by the President of the Federal Council of Churches

IT WAS precisely 150 years ago today that the Farewell Address of George Washington was printed. The American of that day confronted a continent and his primary obligation was to establish national unity. The American of today is confronted by a world and is obligated to cooperate creatively with other nations to build a united world. Washington held that national unity was the main pillar in the edifice of real independence, tranquility at home, peace abroad, safety, and prosperity. It is equally true that world unity is essential to these ends in contemporary society. Fearful that wars between the states might endanger liberty, he saw in unity the "main prop of . . . liberty" and concluded "The love of the one ought to endear to you the preservation of the other." It is now true that the liberty of the sovereign nation is dependent upon such exercise of that sovereignty as shall be necessary to establish world order, since freedom of the nation is finally dependent upon the world unity that issues in true security. When Washington faced the question whether a common government could embrace so large a sphere as the continent, he wrote, "Let experience solve it. To listen to mere speculation in such a case is criminal. We are authorized to hope that a proper organization of the whole, with the auxiliary agency of governments for the respective subdivisions, will afford a happy issue to the experiment. 'Tis well worth a fair and full experiment." Washington distrusted the patriotism of "those, who in any quarter may endeavor to weaken its bands." To those who question the ability of the United Nations to bring law and order to a sphere as large as the world, the same answer must be given, and those who would weaken its bands should find their patriotism questioned.

Washington was opposed to alliances between the American states, and insisted upon union. It is intelligent problem solving within the United Nations upon which world peace rests. Peace will not be found in the military alliance of parts of the world against similar military alliances of other parts of the world. Security is not to be found in alliance. It lies in unity, in which the parts obey the law democratically determined by the whole.

George Washington abhorred the party spirit that put sectional or other interest before national interest. He argued that change should be effected by democratic and constitutional means and repudiated change sought by usurpation, holding that the right of the people to establish government presupposes the right of the people to change it and likewise the duty of all to obey established law until changed by an authentic act of the people. He saw in dissension the eventual disorder that inclines people to "seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual" and points out with amazing pre-vision that such a society would be reared on the "ruins of public liberty."

COMMUNISTS who refuse to expound their views in democratic freedom and face the searching criticism of those who reject the philosophy of materialism, who repudiate the doctrine of dictatorship, and who refuse serfdom of socialization; communists who infiltrate labor and other organizations under orders from abroad and who follow party line for revolutionary ends; fascists who send out their fifth columns and plot once again for the seizure of power before the smoking ruins of their destroyed cities are cool; fascists who would hide their own sinister designs by masquerading themselves as the saviours of mankind from communism; capitalists who refuse to cooperate in those basic revisions of the economic life, that must be made if democracy is to be extended to the economic life; capitalists who are willing to face the deluge tomorrow if their vested interests can be preserved today, and who therefore cooperate with the fascist to destroy the communist; ecclesiastics who put the power, property, and prestige of the Church before the good of the common man; ecclesiastics who declare war on communism, sign concordats with fascism, and fail to summon the Church to the democratization of its own organization; ecclesiastics of whatever religious persuasion who regard the institutions of religion as ends in themselves rather than means to enthrone the teaching and spirit of Jesus in the heart of the individual and the practices of society; and all with eyes to see and ears to hear who prefer ignorance and intolerance, to light and love; must be brought to bear on an informed public conscience and repudiated by Americans who believe in democracy and seek liberty, equality and fraternity. There is no place in America for dictatorship, whether of communist, fascist, capitalist, or Church. Attempts to use force, whether the coercion of physical force or the coercion of falsehood, will be resisted by a free people who know it is truth that frees, it is the lie that enslaves. The American people are unafraid of ideas and in the freedom of our civil liberties are willing to hear any man state his views and peacefully to win adherents to them. When he has won a majority, the people will use their freedom to vote their convictions. But he refuses to be coerced by the bludgeoning of propaganda, left or right, backed by attempts to establish propaganda proposals by means of force.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

WASHINGTON declared "Nothing is more essential than that permanent inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others should be excluded;—and that in place of them just and amicable feelings towards all should be cultivated. The nation, which indulges towards another an habitual hatred, or an habitual fondness, is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable, when accidental or trifling occasion of dispute occur . . . The government sometimes participates in the national propensity and adopts through passion what reason would reject."

Our foreign policy must be based upon our national interests considered in terms of world good. It must not be determined by class interests, religious interests, or any other interest that puts itself before the common good. World peace demands that the big powers shall learn how to live together. Peaceful relations between the United States and Russia can and must be maintained. At present neither government trusts the other. Peace will not be maintained by one or the other seeking to appease the other. It calls for a realistic facing of the problems to be solved, and the friendly meeting of technically competent leaders pledged to solve these problems in terms of world good. It calls for concrete acts upon the part of both nations designed to re-establish trust. Each nation must understand there is a line beyond which the other dare not pass in the matter of fundamental convictions. Understanding can be reached before such lines are passed if there be a policy that arises from the honest desire to reach understanding. The Church must dissipate the suffocating fog of pessimism that assumes a third world war is inevitable. Washington declared religion and morals to be the base of unity. Let the Church proclaim the moral principles and release the religious dynamic essential to world unity.

Convention Highlights

The University of Pennsylvania is not overlooking any details in entertaining the Convention. For instance, outside the door of the House of Bishops sits pretty Emily Snyder, a nurse from the hospital across the street. When THE WITNESS had a little chat with her to find out what it was all about she said: "Oh, the university office thought it would be well for a nurse to be here when the bishops meet. Some of them do look rather old and feeble so I'm here to give first aid, just in case. You know—fainting for instance. They tell me there'll be a lot of excitement in some of the debates, like on this marriage business for instance. Course I'm a Lutheran myself and don't know much about what's going on here. Must say I haven't heard anything exciting enough to cause anyone to faint yet. Looks like I'm in for a pretty dull week."

* * *

There was a good deal of talk around the lobbies about statements made by the Archbishop of Canterbury in a pre-convention address at a luncheon of the World Council of Churches in New York which seemed to be against Church unity. In the newspapers, which gave a lot of space to his address, he was quoted as saying: "I should hate it if we all merged into one show. It would be perfectly dreadful. When two or three churches try to get together it only results in each one sticking up for his own constitution." However the Archbishop stopped in the middle of his written address before a joint session, delivered just a few hours before the subject of Presbyterian-Episcopal unity was to come before the House of Deputies to say: "If any have read in the press my remarks made in New York, and have interpreted them as an expression of my opinion on any matter to come before this Convention, I wish to take this opportunity to say that I had nothing of the sort in mind. I had, and have, no intention whatever of expressing any opinion about any of your schemes—on unity with the Presbyterian Church, or anything else. It would be quite improper for me, as a visitor, to do so."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Which is about as far, we suppose, as an Archbishop can go in apologizing.

* * *

Rectors in and about Philadelphia got a rest from sermon writing last week. On Sunday the 15th the pulpits at 122 churches were occupied by bishops and clerical delegates to the Convention. No lay deputy or delegate to the Auxiliary meeting was invited to preach apparently—at least none appeared in the long list. Most of them had assignments in or fairly close to Philadelphia. But not Bishop Avery Mason of Dallas who travelled to Pittsburgh to preach at the Ascension.

* * *

When the new bishops were introduced in the House of Bishops, among them was Bishop Donald B. Aldrich. He doubtless was the first bishop to have resigned from his office before there had been an opportunity to present him as a new Bishop. He resigned as Coadjutor of Michigan a few months after his consecration because of a heart condition. He told THE WITNESS here, however, that he had completely recovered. The position in Michigan is now filled by Bishop Richard (Joe) Emrich, recently consecrated Suffragan.

* * *

The Archbishop of Canterbury, in his address to the Convention, brought a smile to the face of Bishop Oldham of Albany by endorsing a proposal made by the American bishop this summer when he attended a meeting of the planning committee for the Lambeth Conference, to be held in London in 1948. The Lambeth Conference of Anglican Bishops throughout the world meets every ten years. Bishop Oldham's proposal, which the Archbishop said was receiving favorable consideration in England, is that five years after each Lambeth Conference there should be a sort of World General Convention, attended by clerical and lay delegates as well as bishops representing the Anglican Churches throughout the world. If the proposal is acted upon favorably by the 1948 conference it is likely that such a World General Convention will be held first in the United States in 1953.

* * *

Present and former army and navy chaplains nearly stole the show from the Archbishop the day he addressed Convention. Immediately following his address, Bishop Sherrill took over to present the report for the commission on army and navy chaplains. He stated that he did not know whether there were seats enough on the platform—a couple of dozen—for them but he would be glad if any chaplains present came to the stage. Fully 125 clergymen, some still in uniform, came forward—so many in fact that some could not even get on the stage. There is a rule against applause, but the more than 2,000 persons present burst into vigorous handclapping. Bishop Sherrill solemnly read the names of those who lost their lives in service and closed the spontaneous demonstration with a short memorial service.

* * *

The Journal of Portland, Oregon, carried this interesting bit of Convention news: "Owen J. Roberts, retired U. S. supreme court justice, was elected president of the House of Clerical and Lay Deputies of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and fled with between $2,000 and $3,000."

We hasten to add that the make-up man for the paper dropped a line in the wrong place. The corrected line (italics above) should have gone in another news item which was headed, "Gunmen Stick Up Seattle Bank."

* * *

One of the press services at the Convention, sending out a story of the service of holy communion which preceded the election of the Presiding Bishop, called it a "service of holy communism." The operator doubtless is a fellow-traveller.

* * *

During debate in the House of Bishops on the marriage canon the Schulmerich Chimes, which are played at regular intervals during the day, rang out with the familiar hymn, two lines of which caused smiles to appear on the faces of the bishops, "by schims rent asunder, by heresies distrest." The chimes, incidentally, at the request of President Roberts, are used as a call to the deputies that their House is to meet in five minutes.

* * *

The Women's Auxiliary is urging all delegates to read John Hersey's great article, Hiroshima, which is being run serially in one of the Philadelphia papers. One wishes there were the time and opportunity to have it read aloud to a joint session of the Convention.

* * *

During his short stay in this country, the Lord

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Archbishop of Canterbury, the Rt. Hon. Geoffrey F. Fisher, has totalled up nearly as many honorary academic degrees as President Truman. The latest in the series was bestowed upon him on September 12th by the University of Pennsylvania. Both he and Presiding Bishop Tucker received the honorary degree of doctor of laws at a special convocation of the University's trustees.

The Anglican Church

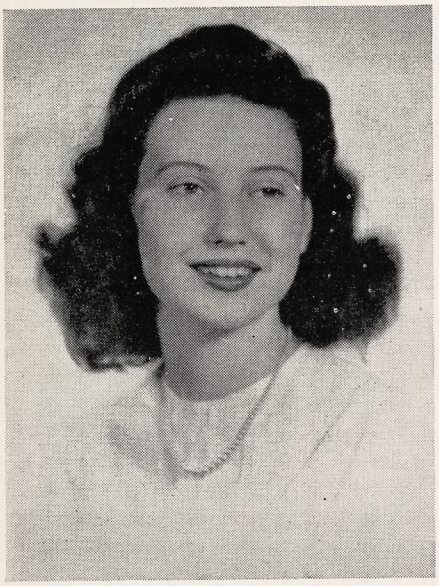
by Geoffrey Francis Fisher

From an Address to General Convention By the Archbishop of Canterbury

IF OUR Anglican Church is to fulfill its task and discharge the responsibility which Our Lord lays upon it, it must be coherent in its own life and practice. The Anglican Communion embraces many national Churches, provincial in name or character and a large number of dioceses not yet organized as separate provinces or national Churches. They are spread all over the world. The name Anglican is already a misnomer; it indicates their remote origin; but it does not at all describe their present condition. They are indigenous Churches not only here and in England and in the British Dominions, but in India, China, Japan, Ceylon, Africa East and West. Wherever they are, they stand for a particular tradition within the Holy Catholic Church of Christ: and until that tradition is taken up into a wider fellowship, they must cohere. But separated as they are by geography, by race and tongue, by environment, how shall that be? They are not, I think, to be overcome by any form or unified control or by giving any overruling power to a Lambeth Conference or any other body. The autonomy of provinces or national Churches is not an accident of history with us; it embodies a principle which is derived from the New Testament and from the early Church and which is to be preserved and treasured. Yet it may well be that more attention should be given to securing a frequent and effective interchange of thought and understanding throughout the communion to assist in coordination and correlation, to giving mutual encouragement and increasing unity of action. This is a matter which, I hope, may engage the attention of the next Lambeth Conference. Autonomy is no more important and absolute than in the secular field sovereignty should be. It is limited by obedience to the essentials of the faith and of the corporate life of the Church. It is these essentials, as we have been led to see them, which create our fellowship in one communion.

WHAT is the final authority within our communion? The Bible has its authority with us—but it does not stand alone. Tradition, the working out in history of the Christian faith, has its authority—but it does not stand alone. Empiricism, the living voice of today's thought and spiritual experience, has its authority, but it does not stand alone. The past has shown that any one of these, taken in isolation as the one authority, leads to confusion and loss. Each requires constant correction from the others. We believe that in each the Holy Spirit speaks to us, though in each what he would say may be misinterpreted by the fallibility of man. In the Anglican communion we rely upon the fellowship of the Holy Spirit, speaking to us through a fellowship of authorities, the Bible, tradition and the voices of today expressing himself in a fellowship of Churches. That is our unity. Of its nature it cannot have definition in a supreme council, a code, a confession. It carries with it the Bible as the record of what God has spoken and done in Christ: it orders its life by creed and sacrament and those corporate acts which unite it to the Church of Pentecost: it looks upward to God and outwards on the world of human experience and seeks to hear what God would say to us and do through us now. The Book of Common Prayer units us not by the letter of it but because it represents the union of scripture and tradition and empiricism which is the mark of our tradition.

I have not spoken to you of the secular world. I have not described the task of the Church in presenting with new fire and zeal the challenge of Christ to that world, or called you afresh to it. These things are ever present to our minds and in our prayers and service. If I have spoken only of this communion to which we belong, it is partly because it is natural for one who holds my office with its historic place in that communion so to do; it is partly because to that communion I owe all I am and give all the loyalty of my heart; it is yet more because I believe that as God had done great things, for all our faults, for us and through us, so God still has a work for us to do, of great moment, for him, for his redeeming purpose, for the whole Church and for the world. May we be faithful, and his will be done.



Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Episcopal Young People Face World Problems Boldly

They Ask for Study of Soviet Issues In Their First National Convention

Edited by Philip L. Shutt

Philadelphia: — Enthusiastic young people from 85 dioceses as well as from Alaska, Puerto Rico, Mexico, Liberia, and Hawaii held their first national convention here Sept. 14-16 in the Christian Association building on the campus of the University of Pennsylvania. The convention, sponsored by the United Movement for Christian Youth, official Episcopal youth organization, was arranged and conducted by the young people themselves. Charming Betty Street of Cincinnati was presiding officer of the sessions.

Miss Priscilla J. Hannah of St. Mark's, Pasadena, attending General Convention as a delegate from Los Angeles to the Youth Conference, is secretary of the National Youth Council

That the young people today think and have opinions on world issues was illustrated in the resolutions introduced and unanimously adopted. Aware of the importance of the Soviets they asked that a survey be made of the possible relationships that might exist between the youth of the two nations recommending that the study be printed in unit form in their national church magazine Plan. They asked for full and definite information about the activity of Christian Churches in the Soviet union and the attitude of the country towards such groups.

Interracial attitudes and relations were considered and it was resolved that study, prayer and action be the basis for the Christian solution to interracial problems.

Significantly the delegates sought means whereby they could work towards the unity of the Church especially in regard to the Presbyterians, resolving to cooperate with Presbyterian young people in a study of each other's problems and through prayer, work and study labor for union of all Christian groups.

Another important resolution was the provision for the appointment of a special committee on world relief which was to gather data on definite projects of world relief, assign these projects to the diocesan youth groups and to publish periodic reports in the Church press of progress made.

The convention also endorsed the efforts of the World Council of Churches and of the international youth conference to be held in Oslo, Norway, next year.

A banquet on Saturday night, Sept. 14, had as its toastmaster Dr. I. Q. of radio fame, who is James McClain, a theological student at Seabury-Western seminary. Nineteen young people from Hawaii presented native songs and dances and one young woman dressed in a cellophane hulu skirt and brassiere stole the show. A mass meeting open to the general public heard Bishop Harry Kennedy of Honolulu present the Christian solution for the race problem as seen in the life of the Church in Hawaii where all work together for the promotion of brotherhood among diverse groups. The Rev. William Crittenden, executive secretary of the division of youth of the National Council, spoke of the significance of young people's work in the Church and presented the major emphases of the youth program.

On Sunday there was a corporate communion in St. Mary's Church and the offering was given to Bishop Bravid Harris for his work in Liberia.

Other action taken by the conference included continued support of the United Nations; calling upon the Presiding Bishop to issue a call for a wheatless period each week or to figure out some other feasible means of meeting the current world need through personal deprivation, with the young people pledging

Apostle Group from a three lancet "Te Deum" Stained Glass Window executed by Rambusch for a large Brooklyn Parish

RAMBUSCH

Designers Decorators and Craftsmen

2 West 45th St ~ New York 19, N.Y.

The Bible Expositor and Illuminator

Complete Study Quarterly on the International Sunday School Lesson Topics

For Pastors
Sunday School Superintendents
Bible Class Teachers

Price, 35c a single copy, $1.25 a year, by subscription
Order yours today

UNION GOSPEL PRESS
Cleveland 1, Ohio

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

themselves to further such a project.

New members of the national youth commission elected are John Booty of Detroit; Eleanor Anderson of Springfield, Mass.; Robert Larkin of Upland, Calif.; Anne Stonry of Charleston, S. C.

At the opening of the conference several speakers declared that there was a disposition on the part of too many young people to follow blindly the leadership of clergy advisors on issues before them, and they urged that the conference be in fact a youth affair where they would decide issues for themselves. There was a marked indication throughout the meetings that they were doing just that. In fact one clergyman said to one of the officers of the conference: "It is too bad that the resolutions passed here could not be passed by General Convention." To which he replied: "When we get into General Convention in a few years we will pass them."

Free Service

Washington, N. C. (RNS): — A new dry cleaning plant which has opened here has advised "all churches and Christian organizations" that robes and church paraphernalia will be cleaned free of charge. Carl Swicegood, proprietor, in announcing the policy stated that "I have never charged for this kind of work in my 35 years of experience."

No Vice-President

Philadelphia:—A motion by Clifford P. Morehouse of New York and seconded by Peter Day of Milwaukee, calling for the election of a vice-president for the House of Deputies was voted down. Instead any vacancy in the presidency is to be filled by the secretary and the first assistant secretary, in that order, until the next Convention.

Installation Service

Philadelphia:—A suitable installation service for the new Presiding Bishop, to be held at Washington Cathedral or some other appropriate place, was endorsed September 18 by the bishops.

Proposed Service

Philadelphia: — A proposal by Alexander G. Robinson, lay deputy from Kentucky, that a service be provided for the solemnizing of the adoption of children, was adopted by the House of Deputies. He said that the commission on the Prayer Book had approved the idea and he recommended that the matter be referred to the liturgical commission for its consideration with a view to their providing a service for experimental use during the next three years.

Bishop Resigns

Philadelphia: — Bishop John C. White of Springfield (Ill.), who announced last week that he would not conform to Convention action requiring the resignation of bishops at the age of 72, changed his mind on September 18, when he suddenly announced to the bishops that his resignation was in their hands. It was accepted. He is 79 years old. He stated that he had decided to resign after consulting with his friends in the House of Bishops.

Translation of Bishops

Philadelphia: — The House of Bishops has approved legislation permitting the translation of bishops from dioceses or missionary districts, providing they have served at least five years.

Assessment Increased

Philadelphia: — Both Houses of Convention have approved the report of the trustees of the Church Pension Fund whereby the assessment of clergy salaries is increased, effective January 1, 1947, from 7½% to 10%. The action was taken in both Houses without debate.

Evangelical Societies

Philadelphia:—Over 1,200 Church people jammed the large ballroom at the Bellevue-Stratford hotel on September 11th for a dinner in honor of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The management of the hotel stated that it was the largest dinner ever held there. It was sponsored by the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship; the Evangelical Education Society; the Protestant Episcopal Church League; the Society for the Promotion of Evangelical Knowledge. In addition to the Archbishop, the speakers were Bishop Beverley D. Tucker of Ohio and Mr. Charles P. Taft of Cincinnati.

On the morning of the 14th the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship held a corporate communion, followed by a breakfast meeting, at which the Rev. Gardiner M. Day of Cambridge presented a report as the retiring president. There was also a brief address on unity by a member of the commission, the Rev. Sherman Johnson of the Episcopal Theological School. Officers elected were the Rev. Charles D. Kean of Kirkwood, Mo., president; the Rev. Charles F. Penniman of St. Louis, first vice-president; the Rev. J. Clemens Kolb of Philadelphia,

Spiritual HEALING
Healing belongs in the Church
Do you read SHARING, a magazine devoted to spiritual healing, telling what is being done and what you can do to fulfill Christ's command: "Heal the Sick!"
Published monthly—12 pages—$1 a yr.
Send for sample copy
Dr. John Gayner Banks, Editor
2243 Front St., San Diego 1, Calif.
Dept. W

Greater Than Gold—and yet No Scale Can Measure It

★

There is no word that can encompass it—no scale that can weigh it—and yet it is imperative to a masterpiece, and present in every Möller organ.

It is the devotion that a genuine artist applies to his work, the immeasurable willingness to take pains, to contribute more than is required, to make of each minute detail a work of art.

In the construction of Möller organs, such devotion is a constant factor. It is applied throughout every stage of construction, from the preliminary designs to the final installation. It is responsible, equally with skill and experience, for the superb performance, the glorious tone and accuracy, which distinguish Möller as a master-instrument.

M.P. MÖLLER
THE ARTIST OF ORGANS · THE ORGAN OF ARTISTS
HAGERSTOWN, MARYLAND

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

second vice-president; the Rev. Malcolm Ward of Maumee, Ohio, secretary; Miss Elsie Hutton of New York, treasurer.

Delay Action

Winnipeg (RNS):—The lower house of the General Synod of the Anglican Church voted here after a two-day discussion not to alter the Church's canon on divorce and remarriage but to study it for the next three years.

Other action taken by the General Synod sought a solution to the refugee problem, asking all nations to share responsibility for the settlement of refugees, and endorsed the principle of full collective bargaining. This was the first such action in the history of the synod.

Rural Work

Philadelphia:—In a stirring appeal for a strengthening of rural work, including an entirely new and realistic approach, William V. Dennis, professor of rural sociology at Pennsylvania State College, said that the Church must act now. General Convention three years from now may be too late. Our work and activities, he said, are largely city centered. We are still an urban Church, and all of our cities are dying, while rural areas become increasingly pagan.

Dr. Dennis, who has served for years on the joint commission for rural work, also gave figures to show that the average age of active clergymen has risen constantly. There is need for more younger men to be attracted to our seminaries, and for our seminaries to develop a better approach to the rural problem. The Church must develop a better attitude toward such fields of service.

Citing the approach which the Roman Catholic Church initiated some years ago, Dr. Dennis said that one Roman Catholic city church had furnished funds for the establishing of sixty new rural churches in the surrounding territory. We, he said, must consider every church in every city a center of genuine missionary activity in the area in which it stands.

We must, he continued, take action now in an effort to create deeper appreciation of the rural parson and his work. Each diocese must recognize its responsibility to develop a dynamic program in this field of action.

We are, he said, faced with but two alternatives: 1. Proceed in a

Send For This BIG · NEW · 1947 HANDBOOK For Sunday School Workers

112 Pages 1000 Illus.

Lists over 5000 Tested Helps and Ideas. A ready reference with complete descriptions of Lesson Helps, Story Papers, handwork, visual aids, gifts, books, etc. Everything you need to lead, teach or manage a Sunday School. Mail Coupon for Your FREE Copy NOW.

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

I am ☐ Pastor, ☐ Supt., ☐ Teacher, ☐ Worker in ☐ Begin., ☐ Pri., ☐ Jr., ☐ Inter-Sr., ☐ Y. P., ☐ Adult Dept(s). of_____ Church

813-CI North Grove Avenue, Elgin, Illinois

DAVID C. COOK PUBLISHING COMPANY

Size, 5¼" x 3⅛"
Postage Additional

The Story of Jesus

A New 32-page Booklet, The Story of Jesus, offers to its readers the highlights of the life of Christ. The text is from the King James Version of the Bible; the illustrations are full-color reproductions of famous Old Masters.

The frontispiece is Carlo Maratta's painting, Holy Night with this inscription from St. Luke: "For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." Some of the other illustrative masterpieces are: Shepherds in Adoration by delle Motti, Boy Christ in the Temple by Hoffman, Baptism of Jesus by Maratta, Christ Blessing the Little Children by Vogel, The Transfiguration by Raphael, The Last Supper by Rubens, and Jesus Appears to Magdalene by Fra Angelico.

This booklet is simple enough to be understood and loved by the small child, and yet the adult will appreciate the appropriateness and beauty of the illustrations and the inspiring selections of Biblical verse. Price, 20 cts.

Per copy, $.20 ea.
50 copies, $.16 ea.
100 copies, $.14 ea.
300 or more, $.12 ea.

MOREHOUSE-GORHAM CO.
14 E. 41st Street New York 17, N.Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

sincere open minded way to meet these needs in the next quarter century, or 2, continue our complacent attitude in the seminaries and in satisfaction with the work already established in non-urban areas.

Woman's Commission

Winnipeg (RNS):—A commission on employment of women workers was set up by the General Synod of the Church of England in Canada following charges by delegates that the treatment of women workers was disgraceful. The pension committee was also asked to study the question of providing adequate retiring allowances for deaconesses.

Disarmament

Chicago (RNS):—Delegates to the national convention of the Fellowship of Reconciliation here asked the United States to propose world-wide disarmament and to lay down arms if other nations do not. The fellowship, an organization of religious pacifists, voted to launch a strong campaign advocating American support of world-wide disarmament and stated that the government should take the initiative. Other plans call for an amnesty day demonstration in Washington, D.C., and by many returning their draft cards on October 16 to show their dissatisfaction with peacetime conscription.

Bishop for Chaplains

Philadelphia:—The bishops voted on September 18 to so change the constitution as to provide for a suffragan bishop to supervise the work of chaplains. Approval by the 1949 General Convention is required before it becomes effective.

Back Labor

Charlotte, N. C. (RNS): — The North Carolina synod of the southern Presbyterian Church at its annual session here adopted a resolution recognizing the right of labor to organize and asking ministers to study conditions of labor and wages. The synod also asked President Truman to increase his efforts to bring Jewish refugees to the United States.

Win Youth

Chicago (RNS): — The Churches of Russia are faced with the crucial problem of winning over the generation that has grown up since 1917 without any knowledge of vital Christianity, Ralph Sockman, Methodist pastor of Christ Church, New York, declares in the current issue of the Christian Century published here. Dr. Sockman was one of seven representatives of the American Society for Russian Relief who toured Russia this summer.

Seek Exchange

Lakeside, Ohio (RNS):—A resolution recommending that the Federal Council of Churches initiate steps looking toward the exchange of young churchmen between Russia and the United States for the purpose of achieving better understanding between the two peoples, was adopted here by 350 ex-servicemen at the closing session of the national conference for young churchmen.

One recommendation brought before the final session asked for equal opportunity of education for all races though not necessarily through the immediate removal of

BRUGLER HOUSE

on Rye Lake, near White Plains, N. Y., offers clergymen and other active Church workers the quiet surroundings of a small estate for a holiday or vacation. For information and rates, write

Lindley M. Franklin, Jr., Secy.
281 Fourth Ave., New York 10, N. Y.

THE CHURCH PENSION FUND

and its subsidiaries

administered for the benefit of the Church

THE CHURCH HYMNAL CORPORATION

Publishers of The Hymnal; Book of Common Prayer; A Prayer Book for Soldiers and Sailors; Book of Offices for Certain Occasions; Stowe's Clerical Directory.

THE CHURCH LIFE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost insurance and annuity contracts available to the clergy, lay officials and active lay workers of the Church, either voluntary or paid, and their immediate families.

THE CHURCH PROPERTIES FIRE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost fire and windstorm insurance on property owned by or closely affiliated with the Church, and on the residences and personal property of the clergy.

Further information available by addressing any of the above at

20 Exchange Place New York

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

segregation. It was explained that the segregation clause had been inserted as a compromise to Southern delegates. But a number of ex-GIs, including several Southerners, took exception to the statement on the ground that while it might be expedient to compromise with a sectional viewpoint it was not ethical to compromise with the Christian gospel of the brotherhood of all races.

Laymen Meet

Southborough, Mass.: — The annual laymen's conference of Massachusetts met here Sept. 14-15 with 200 in attendance. This conference has in the past played a constructive part in the preparation of the every member canvass. Leadership is from business executives chiefly in addition to the clergy.

Both large and small churches held their special group meetings under the direction of Frank P. Bennet Jr., of St. John's Church, Saugus, and Samuel Hall Jr., of Trinity Church, Boston. Chairman of the conference was Victor G. Harnish of Christ Church, Waltham, and Byron T. Atwood of Grace Church, Salem. Also on the program were the Rev. Fred Arterton, rector of All Saints' Church, Belmont, and Philip H. Stafford, diocesan treasurer and executive secretary of the field department.

Progress in Mexico

Philadelphia: — Bishop Salinas y Velasco of Mexico told THE WITNESS in a special interview that the government of Mexico has taken care of peasants and workers in his country through social legislation to counteract the influence of the Roman Catholic Church and that under government supervision progress is being made in improving their economic life. The people are getting better wages, but there are many strikes because of the high cost of living.

The government is combating illiteracy and is providing tools and equipment to help in agriculture. It has also established an agricultural bank. Attempts are being made to awaken the people to their own rights. In this way the government is partly succeeding in getting Mexicans from out under the Roman Catholic influence.

The Roman Catholics in return institute special organized parties os-

THE VOICE GOVERNOR

Give It a Chance
CORRECT BODY MECHANICS DOES IT
RALPH M. HARPER

"This work may be the most accurate study of the voice as a whole which has been published.

"The original observations on which the conclusions are based were made by Phillips Brooks' voice teacher—the result of unpublished study extending over a period of 70 years. Miss Hooker entrusted her notes to the author who, thus far, has spent 32 years in research.

"Phillips Brooks was happy in having a Physician who counseled him to take daily voice lessons for a year. For the remaining 17 years of his life he continued to profit by occasional instruction, saving himself from what he acknowledged 'vocal catastrophe.'

"His voice problem was strikingly similar to that of Wendell Willkie. The author is on record with an opinion, written two years before Willkie's death, that with voice lessons similar to those of Phillips Brooks many more useful years could have been added to the career of this national leader.

Yale University:

"I think so much of your work G—Suiting the Body and the Voice Governor that I put it on my required reading list for the voice class of the Yale Drama School. Actors and public speakers are becoming more and more aware of the fact that the best way to develop a good speaking voice is by developing a good singing voice, and that neither of these goals can be achieved without adequate breath control. Your writing on this point is scientific and clear and cannot help but be useful to any student or teacher who will take the trouble to study it."—Marshall Bartholomew, Associate Professor of Singing and Director of Undergraduate Musical Activities, Yale University.

Milwaukee State Teachers College

"You have filled a long felt need in my own work in fundamentals of speech and voice production. You have given scientific information in language that is functional. Students can understand it, and they become enthusiastic to work for the high standard of a beautiful voice and the correct body mechanics so necessary in its production." — Elizabeth Anhalt, Head of the Department of Speech, Milwaukee State Teachers College, Wisconsin.

160 PAGES, CLOTH BOUND 45 ILLUSTRATIONS, $3.00
At All Bookstores

E. C. SCHIRMER MUSIC CO.
221 COLUMBUS AVENUE, BOSTON 16, MASSACHUSETTS

They Begin to Understand!

For twelve years Spiritual Mobilization has been sounding an alarm against the loss of spiritual freedom—root freedom in America. A great many clergymen have not understood what we were talking about. They liked the humanitarian talk of the federal administration, and the various bureaus, presumably to help the common man—the forgotten man.

They couldn't believe that socialism, fascism, communism, or any other ism could ever reach a totalitarian level in America. They felt all efforts to protect Freedom in the interest of constitutional government, the democratic process, etc., were "much ado about nothing" or "a front for special interests" or "a partisan political campaign."

But since the end of the war they have been doing more sober thinking. They are gradually examining the departures from American procedure—the curtailments of freedom—and are realizing they have responsibilities to check those tragic trends. Then in the midst of this postwar rethinking there has appeared a book, "The New Leviathan" by Dr. Paul Hutchinson, who is known and respected by all clergymen for his articles and editorship of the Christian Century.

That book has given a lot of preachers the jolt that was needed. They are, at long last, beginning to understand. They are putting aside their prejudices and viewing matters objectively, realistically, and with genuine shock. They are embarrassed to realize they have been party to this trend toward a mortal God state. What can they do about it?

They can enlist in Spiritual Mobilization (more than 4,000 ministers have) and can make their every contact count for saving Freedom. Through this organization they can have the undergirding of bulletins, tracks and books for distribution . . . occasional visits from traveling representatives who will tell them what other ministers are doing . . . and other helps. Some are applying for full time employment. Would you like more information without obligation?

SPIRITUAL MOBILIZATION
Los Angeles Chicago New York
Advisory Committee

Chairman, DONALD J. COWLING, President Carleton College 1909-1945; ROGER W. BABSON, Statistician; UPTON CLOSE, Author, Commentator; CARY EGGLESTON, Physician; DE WITT EMERY, Founder National Small Business Men's Association; EDGAR J. GOODSPEED, Bible Scholar, Author; THEODORE GRAEBNER, Professor Theology, Author; ALFRED P. HAAKE, Economist, Lecturer; ALBERT W. HAWKES, United States Senator; SAM HIGGINBOTTOM, Missionary; RUPERT HUGHES, Author; RUFUS B. VON KLEINSMID, Chancellor University of Southern California; ROBERT A. MILLIKAN, President California Institute of Technology; FELIX MORLEY, Author, Editor; ALFRED NOYES, Author; NORMAN VINCENT PEALE, Clergyman; CHANNING POLLOCK, Author, Dramatist, Lecturer; LEONARD E. READ, President Foundation for Economic Education, Inc.; ROBERT GORDON SPROUL, President University of California; RAY LYMAN WILBUR, Chancellor Leland Stanford University.

James W. Fifield, Jr. ..... Director
Donald J. Cowling ..... Chairman Advisory Committee

Spiritual Mobilization
Title Guarantee Bldg., Dept. W9
Los Angeles 13, Calif.

I am a minister of a church and in sympathy with your Crusade for Freedom. Place me on your representative list to receive your publications. I understand there are no financial obligations.

Name .....
Church .....
Street .....
City ..... State .....

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

tensibly to cooperate with the government but to burrow into government departments and regain its influence. The Church goal is to control the government but it is not done openly.

The only thing the Roman Catholic Church is interested in in its relationship to Protestantism is to destroy it, according to Bishop Salinas. For example, the people are stirred up against the Protestants by pastoral letters and even promote killing of natives to gain their ends. Often Protestant churches are stoned and their pastors killed.

The bishop felt there was little Communistic influence and where it existed, as among intellectuals, was of a mild kind.

Centennial

Philadelphia: — Calvary Episcopal Church, Northern Liberties, which maintains a mixed congregation of whites and Negroes, and is a monument to Bishop William White, first Presiding Bishop of the Church, was re-consecrated Sunday night, Sept. 15 at a special Service conducted by Bishop Oliver Hart of Pennsylvania. Calvary will hold its centennial anniversary in September this is part of the program. Rector is the Rev. Thomas Logan, formerly pastor of St. Michael's and All Angels', who came to Calvary in 1945. Over 30 persons will be presented for confirmation to Bishop Hart on Sunday, Sept. 29.

Shows Growth

Easton, Md.: — Bishop William McClelland recently expressed optimism over the growth of this diocese in a letter to the clergy. He pointed out an increase of 31 per cent in the collective budgets of the parishes and to the addition of more than 600 communicants since his consecration in 1939. At the same time he expressed alarm over the decrease in the number of children enrolled in the Church schools.

Foreign Bishops

Philadelphia: — Among the distinguished guests of General Convention were Bishop Huang K'uei-yuan of Hong Kong who is in charge, under Anglican Bishop Ronald Hall of Hong Kong of the Mandarin-speaking portion of a vast diocese stretching across southern China which includes a large section of the Burma road. He was in charge of the last refugee train which left Hankow before its capture by the Japanese. Other well known bishops from foreign shores who visited Convention were Archbishop William Hardie of the West Indies, Bishop Robin Chen of Anking and Bishop Bravid Harris of Liberia.

Field Officer

New York:—The Rev. Stanley M. Fullwood, rector of Trinity Church, Muscatine, Iowa, for the past nine years has been appointed field secretary for the National Council representing province VI, with headquarters in Omaha, Nebraska. He has been an examining chaplain in Iowa, editor of the Iowa Churchman, vice-president of the diocesan council, and is a fellow of the College of Preachers. He has also held several provincial offices.

Chapel Dedicated

Tahoe City, Calif.:—A summer chapel here built by the diocese of Sacramento has attracted many visitors. More recently a rock wall, constructed along the 550 foot frontage, was dedicated in honor of service men and women with their names inscribed on it, according to Bishop Noel Porter.

Church Kindergarten

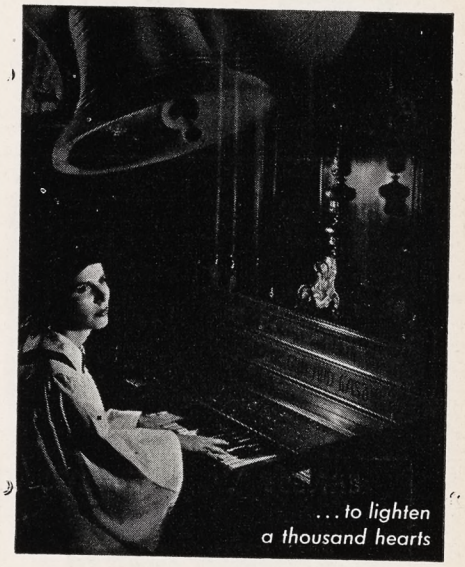
Savannah, Ga.: — So successful was the week-day kindergarten sponsored last year by the Church of the Good Shepherd here that it has opened again with thirty pupils, the limited number. This is a new adventure in religious education in the diocese of Georgia. The director and head teacher is Miss Rose Shanklin, formerly of Benton House, Chicago, who will be assisted by Mrs. W. G. Sheriden, a graduate of Georgia State College and Duke University.

Relief Workers

New York:—The Rev. Raymond E. Maxwell, formerly rector of St. Mark's Church, St. Louis, is one of three persons to be selected by Church World Service, which coordinates relief work for major Protestant groups, to serve on the CRALOG liaison committee in the British and French-occupied zones of Germany.

The other two members are Rev. and Mrs. James C. Flint, Congregationalists from Great Neck, L.I.

Joint Commission to Study 281



Philadelphia: — A joint commission is to be appointed to study the duties of the Presiding Bishop in relation to the National Council. They will review and analyze the administrative organization of the Council and its departments and recommend, where deemed advisable, changes in departmental and administrative functions. The sum of $2,000 was provided for the expenses of the commission.

Ask Study of Unity

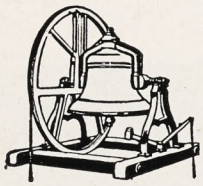
Winnipeg (RNS):—The House of Bishops of the Anglican Church recommended here that a report on reunion with the United Church of Canada be received and commended for study for the next three years.

Canada Synod Seats Woman

Winnipeg (RNS): — Mrs. R. E. Woodhouse of Ottawa, president of the Dominion Board of the Woman's

As lovely to see as it is to hear, the Liberty carillon produces the realities of tons of great bells from the magic of only a few ounces of metal. Precision tuned and with a musical range from three to five octaves, it is played with all the artistic expression and effect of a fine carillon of cast bells.

And now Liberty Leadership has produced another amazing first — a two-octave instrument for limited budgets but with all the tonal beauty of "The Big Liberty". We cordially invite you to hear it at a resident service associate near you. Write for his address today, and plan now to have this magnificent Voice of the Cathedrals ringing from your church this Christmas.



LIBERTY Carillons Inc.
CARILLON HEADQUARTERS
551 FIFTH AVENUE, New York 17, N.Y.
CARILLON DESIGNERS • BUILDERS • CONSULTANTS
CREATORS OF AUDIBLE MEMORIAL SHRINES

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Write us for
Organ Information
AUSTIN ORGANS, Inc.
Hartford, Conn.

Memorial Windows
In accordance with the best traditions of the craft. Notable installations in forty states and five foreign countries.
Illustrated material on request
The D'Ascenzo Studios
founded 1896
1604 Summer Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

ALTAR BREADS ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED
SAINT MARY'S CONVENT
KENOSHA • WISCONSIN

MENEELY BELL CO.
22 RIVER ST., TROY, N. Y.
BELLS

R. GEISSLER, INC.
71-79 W. 45th St., New York 19, N. Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE·BRASS·SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS
EST 1877

ERNEST W. LAKEMAN
Designer and Worker in
STAINED GLASS
2 CRESCENT PLACE
YONKERS, NEW YORK

Need a LAXATIVE?
Black-Draught is,
1-Usually prompt
2-Usually thorough
3-Always economical

25 to 40 doses only 25¢
Get BLACK-DRAUGHT
CAUTION: USE ONLY AS DIRECTED

Auxiliary, is the first woman to be given full delegate status at the General Synod of the Church of England meeting here. The Synod had authorized such action three years ago provided she was seated by the ecclesiastical province of the diocese naming her.

Anniversary

Detroit—Members of the clergy and laity of the diocese of Michigan met here recently at the home of the Rev. and Mrs. Gordon Matthews to help them celebrate their silver wedding anniversary. Over 200 friends attended the open house. Mr. Matthews is at present executive secretary of the diocese.

New Worker

Augusta, Ga.—Miss Rose Shanklin of Clemson, N. C., a specialist in pre-school and kindergarten programs will come to the Church of the Good Shepherd here in September to organize the work in these departments of the Church School. At present she is assistant nursery director at Benton House, Chicago.

Bid to Workers

Vienna (wireless to RNS): — An immediate aim of the Roman Catholic Church in Austria is to win back the loyalty of workers who were alienated during the Nazi regime, Theodore Cardinal Innitzer, Archbishop of Vienna, declared in an interview here. He reported that improvements have taken place in all phases of church life since the liberation of Austria last summer.

"We must bridge the gap between the Church and the workers," Cardinal Innitzer said. "We must not bind ourselves so strongly to the conservative parties that the workers feel that the Church belongs to these groups."

The 70-year-old churchman warned, however, that priests must not meddle in politics. He recalled his order to Church officials last Fall forbidding priests to make political statements or to engage in political activities without special authorization, and said "the new policy has worked out very well." The cardinal's order did not affect Catholic lay groups.

EARN EXTRA MONEY FULL OR PART TIME
New FREE, 42 page book entitled "How to Become a Successful Salesman," written by salesmen, has enabled thousands of men and women to find happiness, freedom and success as independent salespeople. Send a penny postcard with name and address to
SPECIALTY SALESMAN MAGAZINE
Dept. 2G
307 N. Michigan Ave. Chicago, Illinois

Everything for the Episcopal Church
but vestments
A broad statement but we'd like to prove it.
Ammidon and Company
Horace L. Varian
Horace L. Varian, Jr.
31 South Frederick Street
Baltimore 2, Maryland

PURE IRISH LINENS NOW IN STOCK
for all Church needs, supplies constantly arriving, good qualities, also fine cottons. Samples free.
Marv Fawcett Company
Plainfield, N. J. Box 146

CATHEDRAL STUDIOS
Washington & London, England. Linens and materials by the yard, surplices, albs, Altar Linens, stoles, burses & veils. Materials by the yard. See my NEW BOOK "CHURCH EMBROIDERY" & CHURCH VESTMENTS a complete instruction. 128 pages, 95 illus. Price $5.67. And my HANDBOOK for ALTAR GUILDS, price 50c. Miss L. V. Mackrille, 11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington 15, D.C. 30 minutes from U. S. Treasury. Tel. Wisconsin 2752.

SURPLICES — STOLES
VESTMENTS
CHURCH HANGINGS
ALTAR LINENS
CASSOCKS
CLERICAL SUITS — CLOAKS
RABATS—RABAT VESTS—COLLARS—SHIRTS
Choir Vestments in All Styles
Inquiries Invited
C. M. ALMY & SON, INC.
562 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.

VESTMENTS for CLERGY and CHOIR
Altar Linens . . . Embroideries . . . Tailoring . . . Episcopal Flags. Send for Catalog
J. M. HALL, INC.
14 W. 40th St., New York - Tel. CH 4-3306
Office & Salesroom
"Orders taken for serge cassocks for J. Wippell & Co., Ltd."

The Payne-Spiers Studios Inc.
Studios at Paterson, New Jersey
Carved Wood
Chancel Renovations Church Furnishings
Murals Memorials Tablets
Stained Glass
-- Inquiries Solicited --

VESTMENTS
Cassocks - Surplices - Stoles - Scarves
Silks - Altar Cloths - Embroideries
Priest Cloaks - Rabats - Collars
Custom Tailoring for Clergymen
1837 Church Vestment Makers Over One Hundred Years 1946

COX SONS & VINING, Inc.
131 East 23rd Street, New York 10, N.Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

MR. ALFRED R. LOUCH
Layman of Los Angeles

As an Episcopalian and as a conscientious objector I wish to thank you for your recent issue of THE WITNESS devoted to a discussion of the various aspects of conscientious objection in this war. As one of a group of strikers at the Civilian Public Service camp at Glendora, California, protesting by this method the many evils of the CPS system brought out in the article "How Civilian Public Service worked for the CO's" by Roger W. Drury, I wish to thank you on behalf of this group for that very fair evaluation of the CPS program.

Our strike here at Glendora is now in its fifth month, and in spite of the arrest of all of the strikers, and the approaching prosecutions and possible prison sentences, it continues to hold to the five aims formulated at the beginning of the strike: 1) that we should receive pay for work required, 2) that some system of dependency allotments, accident compensation, and death benefits should be set up. 3) that the demobilization schedule of CPS men be put on an equal basis with discharges in the armed forces, 4) that civilian control should replace the arbitrary military authority now exercised over the camps by Selective Service officials, and 5) that the strikers, in order that the right to strike might be preserved, not be penalized for their action of protest. For five years none of these aims have been met by Selective Service, although, in the case of the first two, Congress provided for pay not to exceed rates paid the armed forces (Public Law 630) and although, in the case of the fourth, the military officials in Selective Service are such in direct violation of the law which provides for "civilian direction" of the camps.

Already six strikers at a camp in New York have been sentenced to 18 months in a Federal penitentiary, which indicates the only response of the government to an action of protest.

Thanks again for your very fair discussion of the CPS system.

* * *

MR. ROBERT MANN
Layman of Memphis, Tennessee

I am a regular reader of THE WITNESS and enjoy it very much, but I was very much surprised when I read the August 22 issue and found it devoted entirely to pacifism. Is this the editorial viewpoint of THE WITNESS, or (as I hope) are you allowing the pacifists to speak for themselves in your columns?

I was amused to see that one of the writers seems to think that because a certain conference "plainly stated" that war was a sin, it must be. Anyone but a fool knows that, but it seems to me that's not reason enough for our country to refuse to arm itself adequately when the alternate is absolute destruction of, not only our physical possessions, but also what is more important, our ideals.

Nor do I believe that the Christ would endorse the stand of non-combatants. If he would, why did he not condemn military service in the face of the greatest military power the world had ever seen—that of Rome? Why should our church protect conscientious objectors when we certainly must realize that it would be absolutely fatal for everyone in our country to refuse to bear arms? Especially since the rest of the world is armed to the teeth and has no idea of disarming? Are we fools enough to believe that everyone would drop their arms the minute we did? I don't recall that this has been the case in the past.

As Christians we don't believe in conquering by the sword, but if the Christians of the Middle Ages hadn't taken up the sword against the Saracen, very likely Christianity would have perished then and there. Can we honestly say all men who served in the armed forces were sinners for not refusing to fight?

Let's wait until the clouds of war are not quite so thick before advocating disarmament and pacifism.

ANSWER: Signed articles in THE WITNESS do not necessarily state the position of the editorial board. We do believe, however, that all points of view should be heard.

* * *

MR. F. C. BRIGGS
Layman of New York

THE WITNESS is to be congratulated for the excellent number of September 5 which so clearly presented the issues to come before General Convention. It was a thorough report which will make it possible, I am sure, for all readers to follow the action in Philadelphia with interest and understanding. You are bringing out a lively and timely paper—the best of several religious journals that I receive.

* * *

MRS. GEORGE CARR
Churchwoman of Pittsburgh

The two editorials in THE WITNESS for September 5 were excellent. You surely stated clearly the capabilities which the times demand of the new Presiding Bishop. One only hopes that the House of Bishops will be guided to elect such a man. I agree also that it would be tragic in this day and age for a House of Deputies not to seat the one woman who has been elected a deputy. With women serving in Congress and in many positions of importance our beloved Church would look real silly not to give women the place they have earned. Also I hope that a layman may be elected President of the House of Deputies and I am glad that THE WITNESS saw fit to endorse such an outstanding man as Judge Owen J. Roberts.

Christchurch
VIRGINIA
SCHOOL for BOYS

Intermediate School. Seventh to Ninth Grades. Upper School. College Entrance Requirements. This school is a member of the system of schools in the diocese of Virginia. Apply to The Headmaster, Christchurch School, Christchurch, Va.

Virginia Episcopal School
Lynchburg, Virginia
Prepares boys for colleges and university. Splendid environment and excellent corps of teachers. High standard in scholarship and athletics. Healthy and beautiful location in the mountains of Virginia.
For catalogue apply to
George L. Barton, Jr., Ph.D. Headmaster,
Box 408

SCHOOLS

The Hospital of Saint Barnabas and the University of Newark offer a full course in NURSING
to qualified High School graduates. Scholarships available. Classes enter in February and September
Apply to
Director of Nursing
HOSPITAL OF SAINT BARNABAS
685 High Street Newark, N. J

DE VEAUX SCHOOL
FOUNDED 1852
A Church school for boys. Thorough preparation for college. Military system of student government, developing sense of responsibility. Charges for grades seven and eight $1000; grades nine through twelve $1050. For catalog, address THE HEADMASTER, DeVeaux School, Niagara Falls, New York.

HOLDERNESS
In the White Mountains. College Preparatory and General Courses. Music and Crafts. For boys 12-19. All sports including riding. 200 acres of woods. New fireproof building. Individual attention. Home atmosphere.
Rev. Edric A. Weld, Rector
Box W. Plymouth, N. H.

MARGARET HALL
Under Sisters of St. Helena
(Episcopal)
Small country boarding and day school for girls, from primary through high school. Accredited college preparatory. Modern building recently thoroughly renovated includes gymnasium and swimming pool. Campus of six acres with ample playground space, hockey field and tennis court. Riding. Board and Tuition $800. For catalog, address: Sister Rachel, Prin. O.S.H., Box A. Versailles, Kentucky.

FORK UNION
MILITARY ACADEMY
An Honor Christian School with the highest academic rating. Upper School prepares for university or business. ROTC. Every modern equipment. Junior School from six years. Housemother. Separate building. Catalogue Dr. J. J. Wicker, Fork Union, Virginia.

CARLETON COLLEGE
Laurence M. Gould, D.Sc., President
Carleton is a co-educational liberal arts college of limited enrollment and is recognized as the Church College of Minnesota.
Address: Assistant to the President
CARLETON COLLEGE
Northfield Minnesota

KEMPER HALL
KENOSHA, WISCONSIN
Boarding and day school for girls offering thorough college preparation and training for purposeful living. Study of the Fine Arts encouraged. Complete sports program. Junior School department. Beautiful lake shore campus. Under direction of the Sisters of St. Mary. For catalogue address: Box WT

LENOX SCHOOL
A Church School in the Berkshire Hills for boys 12-18 emphasizing Christian ideals and character through simplicity of plant and equipment, moderate tuition, the cooperative self-help system, and informal, personal relationships among boys and faculty.
Rev. Robert L. Curry, Headmaster
Lenox Massachusetts

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Prophetic, Lay Religion vs. Priestcraft

Protestantism is a prophetic, lay religion. It logically emphasizes the claims of social justice, like the great Hebrew prophets. It is completely opposed to priestly mediation between God and man. The tendency of progressive Protestantism is to see God not only in Biblical history, but also to find Him as the partner of man in the stream of general history and in the cosmic process. The discovery of atomic fission suggests that the atom is a constantly seething focus of God's power, and that there was no original "creation" of a universe consisting of small, hard, material particles, in the conventional sense. Protestant religion tends to move away from orthodoxly understood supernaturalism and the miraculous.

An alien ecclesiastical organization, reciting its ritual in a foreign tongue, tending to obscure social justice behind a cloud of theological supernaturalism, is now rapidly moving to penetrate the vitals of the American republic. Proclaiming infallible knowledge of the Bible, it asserts that non-Catholic religious bodies have no right to interpret and teach the Scriptures.

It accepts the historicity of the Jewish priesthood as having been objectively organized around an alleged matter-of-fact sanctuary known as "The Tabernacle in the Wilderness" (Vide Dr. C. L. Souvay, Professor in the Roman Catholic Kenrick Seminary, St. Louis, writing under the imprimatur of Cardinal Farley, in Catholic Encyclopedia). In other words, the "infallibility" centering at Rome declares that the "Tabernacle" was an actual fact, built according to revelation from the Almighty. But the same revelation provides also that the desert sanctuary shall be enclosed in a personnel-pattern of remarkable, startling, and arresting character:—It is completely in charge of tribes which are said to be descended from Leah, the legendary unloved wife of Jacob, to the ignominious exclusion of tribes which are said to be descended from Rachel, the legendary beloved wife of Jacob, as follows:

The "Tabernacle" is depicted in a narrative known as the "Priestly Document", which composes the topmost layer in the literary strata of the Pentateuch. The Tabernacle itself allegedly stands in the very center of the camp of Israel in the wilderness. On its eastern, or front, side "toward the sunrise", occupying the most honorable position, are three Leah-tribes (Judah, Issachar, Zebulun). On the south side are two Leah-tribes (Reuben, Simeon), together with a Leah-bondmaid-tribe (Gad). On the north side are stationed three other slave-girl-tribes, one of which (Asher) is descended from Leah's bondmaid; while the others on the north side (Dan, Naphtali) are derived from Rachel's bond-maid. The priests come from a special clan in the Leah-tribe of Levi; while the sanctuary itself is entirely surrounded by a police-guard of lower grade Levites. But the climax of the story relates to the back side, or west, of the structure, where the refuse material from a sanctuary would naturally be thrown out: Here, in obscurity and in humiliating subordination to the Leah-tribes, and even to the tribes descended from the bondmaids;—here, in ignominious insignificance, we find "the camp of Ephraim", consisting of three tribes (Ephraim, Manasseh, Benjamin) the only tribes descended from Rachel, the legendary beloved wife of Jacob.

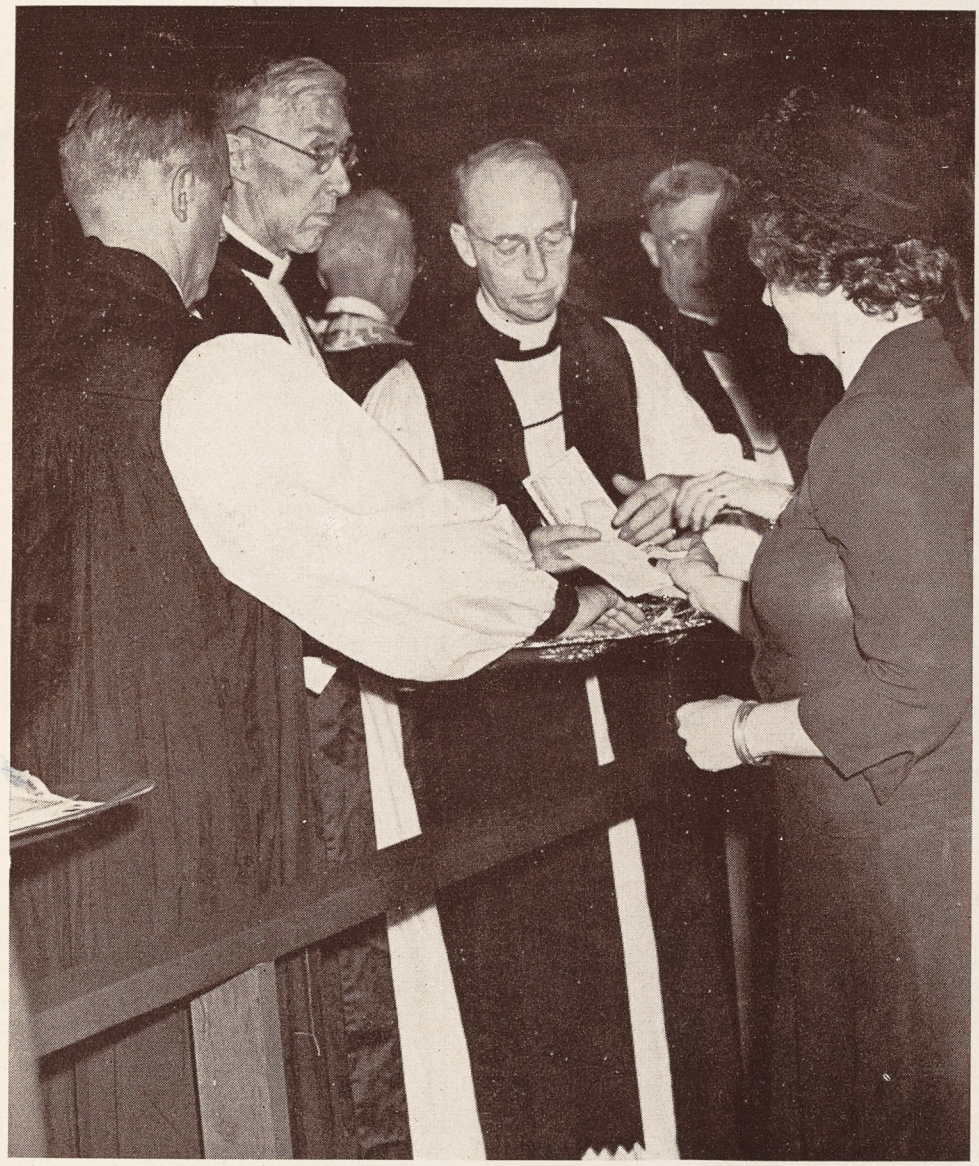
The "Priestly Document", containing the Tabernacle-narrative, is anti-Ephraimite and pro-Judaic. The nature of the Tabernacle as a Leah-monopoly can be easily verified by noting the legendary tribal origins in Genesis and checking them alongside the camp stations in Numbers. The Hebrew Bible is "bottlenecked" through Jewish priestly writers, who labored in the Babylonian Captivity and after, at a period when the Ephraimites (identified with Rachel) had already vanished into the void and were known as "the lost tribes".

Roman Catholic interpreters of Scripture have never shown any knowledge that the "Tabernacle in the Wilderness" was not a literal fact, but was merely post-exilic propaganda against the "lost tribes" of Ephraim. Modern Protestant Biblical scholarship long ago opposed the historicity of the Tabernacle (Hastings, Dictionary of the Bible, IV, 666). But its character as a vindictive, imaginary Leah-monopoly, growing out of tension between social groups in Israel, gives new point to critical scholarship and punctures effectively the Catholic assumption that infallible knowledge of Scripture is enthroned on the Tiber.

Hebrew prophecy arose in Ephraim. It was aborted in Judah by the tragic failure of King Josiah's reformation and the rise of the Jerusalem Tammany. Judah, on the map, lay wedged in between Ephraim on the north and the enemy Edom on the south: "Jacob divided the people . . . into two bands . . . Rachel and Joseph hindermost", i.e., farthest from the Edomites. The Judaic scribes in the Babylonian Exile were unable to gainsay the legend that Leah, the mother of Judah, was thrust out of Jacob's tent in the same way that the tribe of Judah was thrust out of the Hebrew nation by the Ephraimite, or Josephite, rebellion against the house of David.

Resenting the prestige of the Rachel-Joseph-Ephraim element in history and legend, the post-exilic scribes transformed the prophetic religion into an ecclesiastical cult by means of the pro-Judaic, anti-Ephraimite "Priestly" document, centering around the "Tabernacle". This material is endorsed as actual history by the Roman Catholic hierarchy. The disclosure and public discussion of the Tabernacle in its real nature is possible only under the free, scientific regime of progressive Protestantism and modern evolutionary Judaism. (In addition to the Catholic Encyclopedia as above, consult Steinmueller. Companion to Scripture Studies, published under imprimatur of Cardinal Spellman. Professor Steinmueller is teaching in the Seminary of the Immaculate Conception, at Huntington, Long Island, N. Y.).

—Louis Wallis



—Advertisement

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The WITNESS

10¢ A COPY

LIBRARY COPY

OCTOBER 3, 1946

UNITED THANK OFFERING IS RECEIVED BY BISHOPS AT CORPORATE COMMUNION

GENERAL CONVENTION NEWS

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

THE CATHEDRAL OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE
NEW YORK CITY
Sundays: 8, 9, 11, Holy Communion; 10, Morning Prayer; 4, Evening Prayer; Sermons 11 and 4.
Weekdays: 7:30, 8 (also 9:15 Holy Days and 10, Wednesdays), Holy Communion; 9, Morning Prayer; 5, Evening Prayer. Open daily 7 A.M. to 6 P.M.

GRACE CHURCH, NEW YORK
Broadway at 10th St.
Rev. Louis W. Pitt, D.D., Rector
Daily: 12:30 except Mondays and Saturdays.
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M. and 4:30 P. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion 11:45 A. M.

THE HEAVENLY REST, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue at 90th Street
Rev. Henry Darlington, D.D.
Sundays: Holy Communion, 8 and 10 A. M.; Morning Service and Sermon, 11 A. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion, 11 A. M.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S CHURCH
NEW YORK
Park Avenue and 51st Street
Rev. Geo. Paull T. Sargent, D.D., Rector
8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evensong. Special Music.
Weekdays: Holy Communion Wednesday at 8:00 A. M.
Thursdays and Saints' Days at 10:30 A. M.
The Church is open daily for prayer.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH
Madison Ave. at 71st St., New York
The Rev. H. W. B. Donegan, D.D., Rector
8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
9:30 A. M. Church School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evening Prayer and Sermon.
Wed., 7:45 A. M., Thurs., 12 Noon Holy Communion.

THE CHURCH OF THE EPIPHANY
1317 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Charles W. Sheerin, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 A. M.; 8 P. M.
Daily: 12:05.
Thursdays: 11:00 and 12:05.

ST. THOMAS' CHURCH, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue and 53rd Street
Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services: 8 and 11 A. M.
Daily Services: 8:30 A. M., Holy Communion.
Thursdays: 11 A. M., Holy Communion.

THE CHURCH OF THE ASCENSION
Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street, New York
The Rev. Roscoe Thornton Foust, Rector
Sundays: 8 and 9 H. C.; 11 A. M., 4:30, 8 P. M.
Daily: 8, Holy Communion.
5:30 Vespers—Tuesday through Friday.
The Church is open all day and night.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL
Buffalo, New York
Shelton Square
The Very Rev. Edward R. Welles, M.A., Dean
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30 and 11.
Daily: 12:05 noon—Holy Communion.
Tuesday: 7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
Wednesday: 11:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH
Atlanta, Georgia
435 Peachtree Street
The Rev. J. Milton Richardson, Rector
9:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
10:45 A. M. Sunday School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Prayer and Sermon.
6:00 P. M. Young People's Meetings.

The WITNESS
For Christ and His Church

EDITORIAL BOARD: Frederick C. Grant, Editor; Arthur Lichtenberger, Chairman; William B. Spofford, Managing Editor; Philip L. Shutt, News Editor; Lane W. Barton, Beverly M. Boyd, Dillard H. Brown, Roscoe T. Foust, Charles K. Gilbert, Hugh D. McCandless, Howard Chandler Robbins, William K. Russell, Sydney A. Temple Jr., Joseph H. Titus, William M. Weber.

★

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS: D. B. Aldrich, J. A. Bell, T. S. Carruthers, Adelaide Case, G. K. Chalmers, E. M. Cross, G. M. Day, Angus Dun, A. W. Farlander, T. P. Ferris, J. F. Fletcher, John Gass, C. H. Gesner, C. L. Glenn, G. C. Graham, J. M. Groton, G. I. Hiller, I. P. Johnson, T. R. Ludlow, C. S. Martin, R. C. Miller, Walter Mitchell, A. T. Mollegen, E. L. Parsons, E. L. Pennington, Rose Phelps, L. W. Pitt, Otis Rice, Cyril Richardson, Paul Roberts, V. D. Scudder, W. M. Sharp, W. B. Sperry, C. W. Sprouse, D. S. Stark, W. B. Stevens, J. W. Suter, S. E. Sweet, Alexander Zabriskie.

★

THE WITNESS is published weekly from September 15th to June 15th inclusive, with the exception of the first week in January and semi-monthly from June 15th to September 15th by the Episcopal Church Publishing Association, Inc. Samuel Thorne, President; Charles A. Houston, Vice-President; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, Treasurer; Frederic D. H. Gilbert, Secretary.

★

The subscription price is $3.00 a year; in bundles for sale in parishes the magazine sells for 10c a copy, we will bill quarterly at 5c a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter, March 6, 1939, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Vol. XXIX No. 44
OCTOBER 3, 1946

CLERGY NOTES

ARNOLD, HOWARD S., formerly rector of the Holy Comforter, Washington, is now rector of St. Barnabas', Leeland, Md.

BARRALL, HERBERT M., curate at St. John's, Waterbury, Conn., was ordained priest on September 7 at St. Stephen's, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., by Bishop Frank Sterrett.

BRADY, CHARLES H., rector of St. Barnabas', Denver, Colo., has resigned and will study for a year at Union Seminary, New York.

DUN, ANGUS JR., was instituted as rector of Christ Church, Hamilton and Wenham, Mass., Sept. 8 by Bishop Henry K. Sherrill. He had previously served on the staff of Christ Church, Cambridge.

GARNETT, WILLIAM B., former navy chaplain, is now curate at Christ Church, Whitefish Bay, Wisconsin.

GILLISS, CARTER S., former army chaplain, is now rector of Christ Church, Washington.

GREAVES, LYMAN B., formerly of St. George's, Nanticoke, Pa., is now rector of Christ Church, Kensington, D. C., and the Chapel of St. James, Garrett Park.

GROSS, FREDERICK S., S.S.J.E., was ordained priest by Bishop Oliver Loring of Maine Sept. 3 in St. John Evangelist's Church, Boston. He will return to Caribou House, Maine.

HAMILTON, FRANCIS M., formerly rector of St. Mark's, Pikesville, Md., is now rector at Silver Spring, Md.

LANGLANDS, CHARLES F., former rector of Addison Parish, diocese of Washington, is now rector at Kissimee, Fla.

LUKENS, ALEXANDER M., former navy chaplain, became rector of St. Barnabas', Denver, Colo., on September 8th.

PATRICK, W. E., rector of All Saints', Oxnard, Calif., chaplain in World Wars I and II, has been promoted to colonel in the chaplains reserve corps.

SHUTT, PHILIP L., news editor of THE WITNESS, is now part-time assistant at St. James-the-Less, Scarsdale, N. Y.

WHITAKER, ROBERT H., former navy chaplain, is to study at the University of Edinburgh.

WILBUR, PAUL D., former army chaplain, is now rector of Trinity, Covington, Ky.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

CHRIST CHURCH CATHEDRAL
Main and Church Sts., Hartford, Conn.
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30, 10:05, 11 A. M., 8 P. M.
Weekdays: Holy Communion—Monday and Thursday, 9 A. M.; Tuesday, Friday and Saturday, 8 A. M.; Wednesday, 7:00 and 11:00 A. M. Noonday Service, daily 12:15 P. M.

CHRIST CHURCH
Cambridge
REV. GARDINER M. DAY, RECTOR
REV. FREDERIC B. KELLOGG, CHAPLAIN
Sunday Services, 8:00, 9:00, 10:00 and 11:15 A. M.
Weekdays: Wed. 8 and 11 A. M. Thurs., 7:30 A. M.

TRINITY CHURCH
Miami
Rev. G. Irvine Hiller, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services 8, 9:30, 11 A. M.

TRINITY CATHEDRAL
Military Park, Newark, N. J.
The Very Rev. Arthur C. Lichtenberger, Dean
Summer Services
Sunday
8:30 and 11:00 A. M.
Weekdays
Tuesday, Thursday, Friday at 12:10; Wednesday and Holy Days, Holy Communion, 12 noon.
The Cathedral is open every day.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
Montecito and Bay Place
OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA
Rev. Calvin Barkow, D.D., Rector
Sundays: 8 A. M., Holy Communion; 11 A. M., Church School; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer and Sermon.
Wednesdays: 10 A. M., Holy Communion; 10:45, Rector's Study Class.

GRACE CHURCH
Corner Church and Davis Streets
ELMIRA, N. Y.
Rev. Frederick T. Henstridge, Rector
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M.; 4:30 P. M.
Daily: Tuesday and Thursday, 7:30 A. M.
Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Holy Days, 9:30 A. M.
Other Services Announced

ST. MARK'S CHURCH
Texas Avenue and Cotton Street
SHREVEPORT, LA.
Rev. Frank E. Walters, Rector
Rev. Harry Wintermeyer, Curate
Sundays: Holy Communion, 7:30; 9:25 A. M., Family Service; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer.
Holy Communion, first Sunday. 6 P. M., Young Churchmen.

CHRIST CHURCH
Nashville, Tennessee
Rev. Peyton Randolph Williams
7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
9:30 and 11 A. M.—Church School.
11 A. M.—Morning Service and Sermon.
6 P. M.—Young People's Meetings.
Thursdays and Saints' Days—Holy Communion, 10 A. M.

GRACE CHURCH
105 Main Street, Orange, N. J.
Lane Wickham Barton, Rector
SUNDAYS
8:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M.—Church School.
11:00 A. M.—Morning Prayer and Sermon. (Holy Communion first Sunday each month)
7:00 P. M.—Young People's Fellowship.

CHRIST CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA
Second Street above Market
Cathedral of Democracy
Founded 1695
Rev. E. Felix Kloman, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services: 10 and 11 A. M.
Weekdays: Wed., 12 noon and 12:30.
Saints' Days: 12 noon.
This Church Is Open Every Day

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

VOL. XXIX, No. 44

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

OCTOBER 3, 1946

Publication Office, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago 37, Ill. Editorial Office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

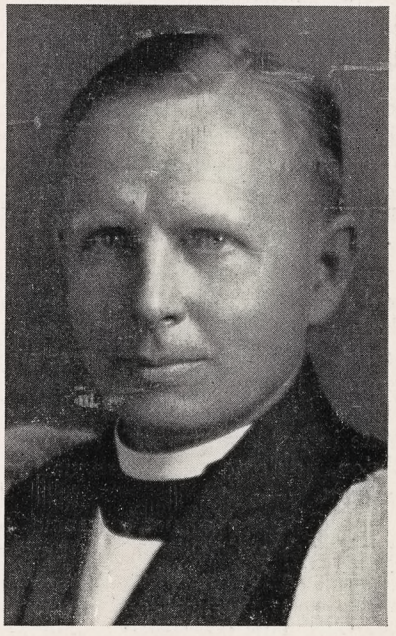
Bishops Resolutions Defeated By House of Deputies

Lay and Clerical Deputies Unwilling to Urge Friendship Between United States and Soviets

By William B. Spofford

Philadelphia: — On the closing day of General Convention the House of Deputies gave themselves a pat on the back in a resolution praising the press "for their full and understanding reports of this Convention." They stated that the press, by faithful reporting, "helped to show a groping world that the Christian Church is a living, growing body, able and eager to do its part in the making of a better world."

I can say that the House of Bishops did the best it could to justify such a resolution but was almost invariably blocked by the House of Deputies. First a resolution was introduced on the control of atomic energy. Owen J. Roberts, president of the Deputies, relinquished the chair to talk on this and made an impassioned speech against the resolution as offered and presented a substitute which condemned the United Nations as futile and called for world government now. Nobody uttered a single word in support of the United Nations, and Judge Roberts' resolution passed with but one man voting against it, and we suspect he voted against it for the wrong reasons.



When this resolution came before the House of Bishops two days later, with not more than half of the bishops in their seats, it probably would have passed had it not been for the alertness of Bishop Parsons, the Presiding Bishop, Bishop Scarlett of Missouri, Bishop Beverley D. Tucker of Ohio and one or two others. Bishop McElwain had quickly moved concurrence when Bishop Parsons jumped to his feet to point out the importance of the resolution, moving that it be referred to a committee. The Presiding Bishop, speaking from the chair, likewise said: "If I understood the resolution correctly it is a slap at the United Nations. If so it is a very serious matter." Whereupon, by vote of the bishops, it was referred to a committee.

This committee, headed by Bishop Scarlett, the next day presented an entirely new resolution as a substitute for the one which had passed unanimously by the Deputies. In the strongest terms it supported the United Nations, declaring that it "has already demonstrated the value of the Security Council" and stated that through its various councils and commissions "has laid the foundation for an effective agency to advance social justice, human rights and the general welfare" and then went on to say that "the United Nations is our present best hope and the only established agency through which the peoples of the world can at this time pursue the establishment of world law." After thus backing the existing United Nations, the resolution went on to declare that a federal world government would be desirable "as soon as possible."

The resolution was presented by Bishop Sterrett of Bethlehem and was strongly supported by Bishop Henry W. Hobson of Southern Ohio, who declared that "the Church should be in the vanguard in the support of such an effort to outlaw war and develop brotherhood among nations, rather than in the rear guard. Let's take the lead in this great ideal for insuring peace and the welfare of the world."

It passed the House of Bishops by an overwhelming vote. The Deputies later concurred, thus throwing out the resolution sponsored so vigorously by Mr. Roberts.

The day before Convention closed, Bishop Scarlett offered a resolution in the House of Bishops urging friendship with the Soviet Union. It declared "that the building of world order, to which the American people and their duly elected representatives are irrevocably committed, is a task which demands the sustained effort of all men of good will. It is as well a task central to our Christian faith as one which gathers added significance from our deep conviction that Christianity offers the only solid ground on which to build a decent world. The achievement of world order will come not without strivings, tensions and agony of spirit. For while 'we are members

Bishop Penick of North Carolina was the vice-chairman of the House of Bishops and presided in the absence of the Presiding Bishop one of another', and stand alike under the judgment of God, we are also members of a family of nations who differ widely from one another in religious, social, economic and political ways of life. These very differences and diversities of culture enrich the world community, and at the same time give rise to tensions and misunderstandings. This is particularly true in the case of the Soviet Union and the Western Democracies. To conclude that the only way in which these tensions between the Soviet Union and the United States can be resolved is by war would be calamitous and to contemplate such a war in the name of religion, unthinkable. It would be to reject completely the power of good will, mutual understanding and cooperation between peoples which we are seeking to implement through the United Nations. Moreover, there is a record of two centuries of unbroken friendship between the peoples of our country and of Russia, under varying forms of government, which should buttress our conviction in an appeal to history.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

"In view of the enormous peril to civilization of modern warfare, both nations must be prepared to make reasonable concessions. With God, and under his guidance, all things and all right solutions are possible.

"In the words of the report of the Federal Council of Churches, we 'as Christians base our view of life on the belief in the dignity and worth of man as a child of God . . . That is a conviction to which we must hold fast. The faithful practice of that belief has . . . wrought a remarkable degree of political and religious freedom.' Standing firm in that belief we must demonstrate both within our nation and in our dealings with all peoples that justice and freedom under law are the enduring foundations of a peaceful world. These convictions, recently expressed by the President of the United States and the Secretary of State in our dealings with the Soviet Union, deserve our unequalified support.

"While we do not presume to speak with authority on the precise steps to be followed by our government in its political and economic relations with the Soviet Union, we are convinced that in faith and fellowship with the Russian peoples we can mitigate the tensions and suspicions that exist between our two countries."

The resolution, which passed the House of Bishops unanimously, ended by commending the proposal which was approved by the 1943 General Convention "to send one or more bishops to Russia to confer with the leaders of the Holy Orthodox Church and express to them our faith in the power of true religion to become a healing of the nations."

The resolution however was voted down, without debate, by the Deputies by a substantial majority, with even a large number of the clergy voting against it. Apparently the deputies will risk an atomic and germ war if the alternative requires friendship with the Soviets. Anyhow they turned down the resolution which had unanimously passed in the House of Bishops.

Later it was moved in Deputies to reconsider that part of the resolution which reaffirmed the action taken in 1943 to send a delegation to confer with the leaders of the Orthodox in Russia. By this time about half of the deputies had gone home, with only 350 present and voting, so that 234 affirmative votes were necessary for a two-thirds vote. There were 232 voting "yes" and 118 voting "no." So this action, which the Bishops had approved unanimously, and which both Houses had passed at the Cleveland Convention, was lost by two votes. Thus have our relations with the Soviet Union "progressed" in the past three years as far as the House of Deputies is concerned.

The most progressive thing that the Deputies did was to pass a resolution, offered by Mr. Spencer Miller Jr. of Newark, commending President Truman for saying that he will ask Congress to admit to the U. S. a greater number of displaced and stateless persons than is provided under our present quotas; and another, offered by the Rev. Richard Preston of Western Massachusetts, reaffirming the resolution of the 1943 Convention which urged the inclusion of lay employees of the Church under the federal social security act. It was perhaps these two actions which they felt justified their closing resolution that "the Christian Church is a living, growing body, able and eager to do its part in the making of a better world." But having listened to discussions in both Houses through the ten days of Convention I most emphatically state that such a resolution would have come with better grace from the Bishops, who, as is always the case, revealed an awareness of the sort of the world we are living in that was almost totally absent in the House of Deputies.

The missionary Bishops administer the chalice at the corporate communion of the Woman's Auxiliary at General Convention

NO TRANSLATION OF BISHOPS

Philadelphia: — Legislation approved by bishops permitting the translation of bishops from dioceses or missionary districts, providing they have served for at least five years, was rejected by the deputies by a vote of 143 to 359.

PLANNED PARENTHOOD APPROVED

Philadelphia: — General Convention adopted a resolution commending the dissemination of information by doctors and hospitals leading to a more wholesome family life. Planned Parenthood is the new name for this—it used to be called birth control.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

New Presiding Bishop Comments On Pressing Problems

Says that He Hopes the Door Is Still Open For Unity with the Presbyterian Church

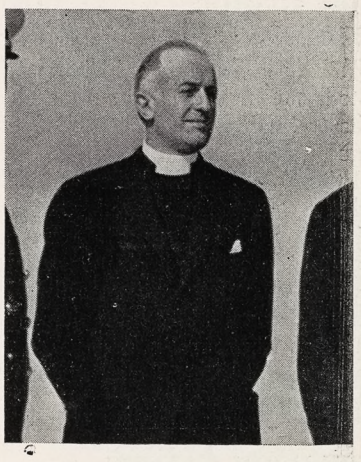
By W. B. Spofford, Jr.

Philadelphia:—"My hope is to see the forces of Christianity come to bear on the pressing problems of our historical period," Bishop Henry Knox Sherrill, new Presiding Bishop of the Church, told reporters soon after the announcement of his election on September 17th. He said that there should be a new spiritual outlook within the hearts of men and called for a united Christian approach to world problems. "I think this is pressing," he said, "because I am not sure there's so much time. Go to Europe and see what's happened there. It can happen here unless we have a peace which is based on righteousness."

Bishop Sherrill said "the problem is between Christianity and paganism. The forces of evil are always in the open. Our strength must lie in unity. He who believes in Christ can give a strong and cooperative answer to the needs of men everywhere today."

Commenting on Church unity further, Bishop Sherrill queried "how can the Church ask the nations to cooperate unless they are to cooperate themselves? Other people can say to us too easily, 'Physician, heal thyself!' I don't see any hope of immediate Church unity in many directions but there are such great issues before the world today that none of us has any right to emphasize those of secondary importance. What we think of Christ is supreme. What kind of vestments we wear is of secondary importance. I still hope that the door is kept open for union with the Presbyterians."

When questioned on the new marriage canon, the new Presiding Bishop said that in his opinion, "it is an improvement." Believing that it has not weakened the Church's stand that marriage is a life-long union, he said that "it only affords the bishop greater leeway and responsibility."



Asked how he felt the Church could help in world affairs, he said, "We can educate our people to a study of the facts—to an impartial study of facts with a background of Christian teaching and Christ's teaching. Through the World Council of Churches we can be a tremendous force, not only in relief, but in all kinds of ways. The immediate need of Europe are the needs of bare subsistence—food and coal and clothes. It's no good giving starving people tracts and pamphlets before you give them something to eat." Asked about his position in regard to atomic energy, Bishop Sherrill said "time is running out and we must put the atomic bomb under the control of an international organization."

The twentieth Presiding Bishop diplomatically turned aside a ticklish question in the best tradition of the late President Roosevelt when asked where his allegiance would lie in case the Brooklyn Dodgers (Dem Bums) should win the National League pennant (half game behind on day of interview) and have to face the Boston Red Sox in the world series. Born in Flatbush and for 16 years Bishop of Massachusetts, Bishop Sherrill smilingly said that he, personally, rooted for the Boston Braves. "Give me a 2 to 1 game, anytime," he said. Asked if he were planning to attend the series, he replied, "I'm not wealthy enough for that."

On the last day of the Convention, Bishop Sherrill was presented to the House of Deputies, which received him with a guard of honor and vociferous applause. In a brief address to that body, he expressed his deep gratitude for his election and said, "I know my own inadequacies better than you do. I pledge you my consecration of all that I have, but that is a small thing unless that same consecration is given on the part of our Church people."

Saying that the Church has a task of such major importance that it will demand the utmost loyal cooperation, Bishop Sherrill said that he was not asking peace at any price. "I am wondering if a short period of rest is not needed. Rest a little from converting ourselves to reach out into the world. Let us look out and get a little rest rather than taking ourselves up by our roots and looking too closely at ourselves. No one can realize the tragic nature of our time and of our day. I wouldn't take any position in the Church if I couldn't continue to express my own personal convictions."

"I have missed something in this Convention of the urgency of the day," he said, "so I hope you will tell your people when you go home about the work that is being done in the missionary field and not what Dr. so-and-so said about amendments to certain canons. We are united in a great missionary enterprise. I get tired of quotas and percentages. We do little in sight of the need of the world and the demands of the Church. We need less respectability and more fanaticism. We ought to have a half million or a million for the rural field and for educational efforts to convert others to Christ."

The newly elected Presiding Bishop as he recently stepped from a plane after visiting Europe. "Go to Europe and see what's happened there. It can happen here unless we have a peace that is based on righteousness."

With his thought obviously on the world situation, Bishop Sherrill stated that "we should have a knowledge of what sacrifices are needed today. Let's be broad-visioned, big-hearted. Let us see that the only hope of the world and the future is that human nature shall be changed into the stature of the fulness of Christ. Christianity is not a luxury or a conventionality. It is everything or it isn't much of anything. To answer that call of Christ, I ask more than your loyalty. I ask the consecration of all that you are."

Final action on budget and program is omitted from this number for lack of space. It will be reported in the issue of October 10th. We can say however that the Convention substantially approved the budget as offered by the National Council which was reported in our issue of September 19. Our next number will also feature the meaning of the new marriage canon by Bishop Davis, chairman of the commission, and the action on unity by Canon Theodore O. Wedel, member of the commission. We will also have asked a number of bishops and deputies for brief comments on "What I Think the Convention Accomplished."—Ed.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

THE PICTURE ON THE COVER

Philadelphia:—Delegates to the triennial of the Woman's Auxiliary present the United Thank Offering at the corporate communion held at General Convention. The offering was over $1,600,000 and broke all records. Shown in the picture, left to right, are Bishop Hart of Pennsylvania, Presiding Bishop Henry St. George Tucker, Bishop Harris of Liberia (back to camera), Suffragan Bishop William Remington of Pennsylvania, Bishop Stoney of New Mexico and Southwest Texas. The woman presenting the offering was not identified.

MORE BISHOPS RESIGN

Philadelphia:—The bishops accepted the resignation of Bishop Robert Gooden as suffragan of Los Angeles, effective July, 1947. He will then have reached the age of 72 when retirement is required. The resignation of Bishop Blair Larned as suffragan of Long Island was also accepted thus making it possible for him to become bishop in charge of American Churches in Europe. Long Island was granted permission to elect another suffragan.

NEW BOOK CAUSES DEBATE

Philadelphia:—There was a great deal of debate in the House of Deputies over the announced intention of the commission on social reconstruction, headed by Bishop Scarlett, to bring out its report in the form of a book, "Toward a Better World," which is expected on the news stands this month in a 150,000 edition. There were those who insisted that the commission has no authority to publish a book which would seem to have the sanction of the Church. The issue was finally resolved by the passage of a resolution commending the commission for publishing statements concerning the application of Christian principles to social problems but instructing the commission to have inserted in any volumes issued the statement "that the views therein expressed are those of the authors only and are not official statements on behalf of this Church."

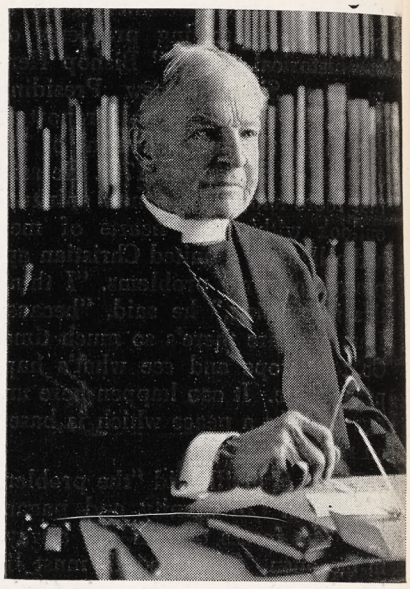
COMMISSIONS GET FUNDS FOR WORK

Philadelphia: — The liturgical commission was voted $1,500 by General Convention for its work; $500 to the committee on the state of the Church; $500 to the joint committee on structure and organization of General Convention; $5,000 for expenses of delegates to the Federal Council of Churches and a like amount for delegates to the World Council of Churches. An appropriation of $6,000 was also approved for the joint commission on unity; $2,400 for the commission on rural work for the next three years; $2,500 for supervising publication of supplement to annotated edition of constitution and canons; $5,250 for work of the commission on faith and order; $3,000 for commission on theological education; and $9,000 for the triennium for the Church Historical Society plus $1,800 to the Historical Magazine.

SEEK LARGE FUND FOR RELIEF

Philadelphia: — General Convention authorized the National Council to seek not less than a million dollars annually for the next three years for the relief and inter-Church aid programs coordinated by Church World Service through the World Council of Churches and the National Christian Councils in Eastern Asia. The director of the division of promotion, Robert Jordon, plans to leave for Europe shortly with two expert movie cameramen to take pictures of destitution in Europe. It is planned to show these later at Church gatherings as a part of the method for raising the fund.

ADMINISTRATION OF CHALICE



Philadelphia:—The deputies did not concur with the bishops in an amendment to the canons which would permit a layman to administer the chalice in holy communion.

NO REVISION NOW OF PRAYER BOOK

Philadelphia: — No action was taken by General Convention on a request that a tentative revision of the Prayer Book be made and presented to the Church for study.

THE STATE OF THE CHURCH

Philadelphia:—The report of the committee on the state of the Church revealed that we have passed the one and one-half million mark in number of communicants in the continental dioceses. The number of parishes and missions shows a slight increase. But the number of baptisms has remained almost static in the past three years. "Sermons must be preached on the subject of baptism," the report continued, "and parents must be reminded of the necessity of this sacrament. We look with utter disfavor on the prevalent fad of making the sacrament of holy baptism the occasion for a cocktail party."

Bishop James DeWolf Perry, former Presiding Bishop, whose resignation as Bishop of Rhode Island was accepted by the House of Bishops

Lay and youth work were commended, but lack of Christian stewardship within the Church was noted. "We need not only sermons on stewardship, but also willingness of Christians to venture in its practice. The cheerful discharge of the financial obligations of individual Christians to the work of Christ's Kingdom will increase the resources of the Church, both financial and spiritual."

SEEK GREATER ECONOMY

Philadelphia: — General Convention passed a resolution directing the National Council to continue surveys of work in missionary districts, seeking to effect economies in administration wherever possible.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

EDITORIALS

A New Precedent Established

THE seating by the House of Deputies at General Convention of a duly elected woman delegate from the diocese of Missouri does more than shatter an old precedent of 157 years standing; it establishes a new precedent to which future Conventions can refer for all time. Even the hasty adverse action taken by the House without debate just prior to adjournment on Saturday the 14th, when more than a hundred and thirty delegates were absent, on the constitutional committee's proposal to change the wording of the constitution from "laymen" to "lay persons" will not be controlling. It may suggest a seeming inconsistency if not a confusion on the part of the deputies on the issue raised in the proposed change in wording. The vote itself stood 263 to 256. But the woman delegate was legally seated by the Convention under the present constitution and women delegates duly elected by the dioceses can in the future be seated under Article IV of the present constitution by similar action of the House.

The basis for such a conclusion rests upon the sound and ancient principle of constitutional assemblies that "every Assembly is the judge of the qualifications of its own members." The United States constitution, adopted in Philadelphia in September, 1787, was used by members of the Protestant Episcopal Church as a model for the constitution which they adopted two years later in 1789 at its first Convention in Philadelphia. Section 5 of article 1 of the federal constitution reads in part as follows: "Each house shall be the judge of the elections, returns and qualifications of its own members, and a majority of each shall constitute a quorum to do business." That is an accepted principle of constitutional law and practice.

The definition of the word "layman" in ordinary usage and in ecclesiastical law is clear and explicit. "One of the people in distinction from the clergy; one of the laity," says Webster's dictionary; "One of the laity," states the Oxford dictionary. The word "layman" in Corpus Juris and Bouviers Law Dictionary reads, "In ecclesiastical law, one who is not an ecclesiastic nor a clergyman, one who is not a member of the legal profession, one who is not a member of any profession." Here then there is no ambiguity, no reference to sex. The explanatory note attached to much legislation defines men whenever used in a general statute as including women. The word "man" as defined in Corpus Juris is "generically the human race; mankind; human beings collectively." The cases defining the word "man" and "men" are no less explicit. The rule of law is that man or men is always considered to be used in the generic sense unless the context indicates otherwise. One of the leading cases is 36 Missouri Appeals, 107, which states that "man means mankind which is generic and includes women."

It is significant that the final paragraph of this section 4, article 1 of the constitution, in which the word "layman" appears, also states "Each diocese shall prescribe the manner in which its deputies shall be chosen." This embodies in a sentence the revolution wrought by the Protestant Episcopal Church when they changed the center of political gravity from the king to the people—from appointment of bishops by the king to election by the people through convention. Power is thus in the local diocese to determine who is to be a deputy to General Convention. Each such duly elected deputy will be seated hereafter irrespective of sex.

BUT if the law and the dictionaries are explicit in the definition of laymen, so, too, is the practice in the Church. The Anglican Communion, which provides guidance on so many questions of Church policy, has long since recognized that laity means lay people and that includes women.

The house of laity of the Church Assembly in England, which is the corresponding body to the General Convention, has admitted women for many years. Approximately a third of this Assembly are women whose contribution to the life and work of the Church is notable. The Church in Canada has similarly admitted women to the General Synod if elected by the dioceses.

In our Church women are now admitted to full status in diocesan conventions in no less than 29 dioceses and missionary districts. It is clearly within the power of such dioceses by appropriate action to designate women as deputies to the General Convention. The National Council, which is set up on a tripartite basis, such as General Convention, and carries forward the work of the Church between Conventions, has for the past 6 years welcomed women in its membership—designated by the Woman's Auxiliary.

The women of the Church, who with magnificent generosity gave $1,600,000 in their United Thanks

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Offering through the Woman's Auxiliary, have petitioned the privilege of a closer integration in the work of the Church is an earnest of their intention to share more organically in the life and work of the Church, in the following words:

Whereas, the work of our Lord and His Church requires the full strength of the membership of the Church, and

Whereas, an extensive study shows that women in all Christian Communions are sharing in increasing numbers in important responsibilities in parishes, regional groups, and legislative assemblies, and

Whereas, the women of the Episcopal Church in Triennial meeting assembled in 1937 went on record as supporting the participation of women in parish vestries and diocesan conventions,

BE IT RESOLVED, that we request the General Convention so to interpret the word, LAYMEN, in the constitution, canons, and other official documents of the Church, that it will be understood to include lay women as well as lay men, and further,

BE IT RESOLVED, that we call upon the women of the Church to prepare themselves to cooperate with the fullest devotion in all types of work open to the laity of the Church.

It is custom—and custom alone, then, that has deprived the women of our Church in the past from participation in the work of General Convention. No constitutional barriers stand in the way of their participation. Each succeeding Convention can, in the exercise of its constitutional warrant, do what the Philadelphia Convention did—seat the duly accredited women delegates. A salute to Missouri which has shown us the way and the truth!

The Pastoral Letter

Of the House of Bishops

PROPHETIC voices have cried out through these past years of conflict, warning of the time when having won the war, we might lose the peace. That time is now upon us.

Our brave men allied with the brave of other lands saved mankind from the adversary of flesh and blood. But mankind is not yet saved. More subtle adversaries, "the rulers of the darkness of this world" have entered the field. They would make easy prey both of the victors, who are weary and impoverished, and of the vanquished who are desperate in their utter ruin. It is all too true that hundreds of millions are famished and bankrupt in body and goods; but far more is it true that the spirit of mankind cries out for rescue lest it perish.

At home we have confusion and vexation in every quarter, but these fade to nothingness once we become aware of the desperate plight of the world about us.

May it please God that the nations will never again resort to war as the means of settling their differences. Even as the war ended arms increased to such fantastic power that we face the specter of mankind's obliteration. Only with the armour of God can we withstand this evil day: with truth; righteousness; the gospel of peace; faith in our sovereign God and his power to save; the quick spirit speaking his word within men's hearts, moving them to do his will; and with unceasing, believing prayer.

All earthly devices have failed, but let no one scoff at the overcoming power of Christ's Church once she employs the weapons of the Spirit. For with them she can bring forth not mere idle professions and empty words but food to feed hungry bodies, shelter for the homeless, work for the unemployed, peace among factious brethren, peace among nations, solution of strife between races, and classes, forgiveness and reconciliation between those who once hated each other to the death—in short, the peace of God. We are no such fools as to think that our single communion, the Episcopal Church, can do all this alone, but we do believe that Christendom presenting an evermore united front can lead all men of good will into the fulfillment of God's eternal purpose.

We are conscious of the weakness resulting from the divisions within the Christian Church, and in deep penitence we ask God's forgiveness for whatever we have done or left undone to cause or prolong these divisions. We are thankful for the growing unity with other branches of the Christian Church which has come to us through the fellowship and work of the Federal Council of Churches and the World Council of Churches.

While we have not yet discovered a common basis upon which we may achieve organic union with the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., we shall continue in our search for it, so that such union may be achieved. During the war men put race, politics, personal prejudice, and self-advantage aside. In the face of the immense task confronting us let us rise above all differences, let us strive with a noble spirit for the values of eternal worth.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

In joining the warfare against widespread selfishness, secularism and greed these questions press insistently upon us: Are we truly penitent for our share in the world's sin and suffering? Will what we seek bring God's peace? Does it heal? Does it let in light and reasonableness upon ignorance and perversity? Does it cheer the despondent? Does it again take up the burden and march onward? It is a "must," a first thing of the Kingdom of God? Does it issue in positive action for the common good? Does it cost us anything? Does it cost thought, searching of heart, amendment, sacrifice of lesser loyalties and cherished prejudices? Does it cost in self-denial, time, money, energy? Does it call us to hazard anything? Does it force us out of a snug place into the unknown, into some hardship? Let us charge ourselves with the necessities of the task:

In World Relief

We must provide food, clothing, shelter, credits, and all that will revive the spirits of broken peoples. We must help the peoples of the world to raise their standards of living through their own productive efforts. The Church is calling upon us to give at least a million dollars each year as our share in the inter-church relief program carried on by Church World Service.

In World Peace

The world situation demands Christian steadiness and courage in our insistence upon the exercise of justice and good will in the face of rumor, misunderstanding, and power politics among the nations; support of such steps as will lead to the strengthening of the United Nations, to make it an effective organization to promote human welfare and a just and durable peace. We believe that it is possible to bring about among the nations of the world a lasting peace, because Jesus Christ pointed the way to such a peace; that we should think and talk in terms of such a possibility, lending our aid to human agencies, not closing our eyes to reality, but daring to act on the premise that peace ultimately depends upon the Christian standard of life, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and soul and mind, and thy neighbor as thyself."

In Racial Understanding

While opposing resolutely injustice to minorities, we must strive to give a positive demonstration personally, and by groups, to the fact that Christians, at least, act toward all men as brothers under the one Heavenly Father.

In Industrial Peace

Here we try first to learn the realities underlying and causing disputes, and seek reasonable and equitable remedies, meanwhile bearing inconvenience so that a solution may be found. Without a strong sense of responsibility to God and the common weal there can be no hope of anything approaching peace in the industrial area. If the parties concerned in the disputes are governed only by self-interest, anarchy will prevail and the life of the nation continue disturbed. An irresponsible labor movement is no better than irresponsible capital.

The Christian Family

The unit of any Christian civilization worthy of the name in the Christian family. It is besieged from without and betrayed from within. Lack of adequate housing, mobility of family groups, economic tensions and pressures have weakened the foundation of the home. Infidelity, the growing incidence of divorce, and parental delinquency have imperiled further its integrity and security. We must at all hazards bring Christ into the home.

The central hope of achieving this is in a renewed dedication of man and woman to lifelong unselfishness in the bonds of holy matrimony. Only through discipline, devotion and unselfish sacrifice sustained by the power and love of God can man and wife achieve an evermore perfect unity. Only through a complete acceptance of the duties of Christian parenthood can the home fulfill its function to secure a regenerated society. The Christian home is essential in the life of the Church and only the Church can undergird the Christian home.

The obligation of the Church to teach its youth in no sense relieves the home of a primary responsibility. Children obtain a set of character in the very earliest years and largely from the conduct patterns which they see at home. If young parents will acquaint themselves with the insights and information necessary to teach children the simple truths of God, of Christ and his Church with the same fidelity that they use in learning how to meet a child's physiological and emotional needs, the re-establishment of the Christian home is possible even among the difficulties so prevalent in a restless, hurried and pre-occupied age. We lay upon the hearts of our people the priority of worship. Deserted altars imperil the home, and destroy the fellowship that can build the still greater fraternity of the whole family of God.

In Christian Education

Cooperating with the home all responsible groups must realize that the Church school is not a mere afterthought in parish life but a major parish project. It deserves the complete support of all groups and individuals in personal service and in financial support. We call the attention of clergy and vestries to their present and continuing responsibility in this field.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Rebuilding Destroyed Properties

With deep gratitude for the loyalty and faithfulness revealed in the worthy gifts of many for the rebuilding of our war destroyed properties, through the Reconstruction and Advance Fund, we must ever be conscious of our failure to reach the goal that would provide all the monies for essential needs. Our people must therefore realize the necessity of continuing appeals for large gifts for capital expenditures in order that demolished churches, hospitals and schools may be rebuilt and adequately equipped.

The Gospel of Peace

The charge of Christ, "Go ye into all the world" has special urgency. Our individual response in the past has been feeble. We have spent each year for personal luxuries many times what we have given to the Church of Christ. Such a paltry response is a disavowal of our claim to allegiance.

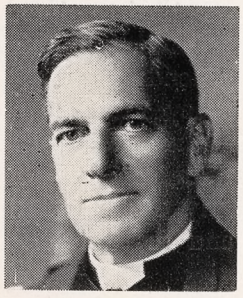
Lack of knowledge is a chief cause of the indifference of many. We who are aware of our privilege must unite in a program which will provide all members of the Church with a more complete and inspiring knowledge of the Church's work and of our opportunities to serve Christ at home and overseas. The missionary budget for 1947, adopted by General Convention, will require contributions for the Church's program exceeding the giving in 1946 by $651,829, now reduced by a contribution of $60,000, from the U.T.O. Unhappily some of this increase must be used to meet the cost of inflation; and the budget calls for additional increases in 1948 and 1949.

Any hope for the ultimate triumph of justice and good will, for the coming of God's Kingdom on earth, depends on a more courageous and sacrificial witness to the gospel of Christ in all the world. The clergy and laity of the Church are urged to face anew the chief task that Christ committed to his followers; to enlist the full membership of the Church through prayer, worship, service and gifts in making Christ known to every race and nation.

The Youth of the Nation

In a global war we turned to our youth to save us from catastrophe. It is fitting that in our present dilemma, the youth of the Church should be heard. Representatives from all but three of our eighty-eight dioceses and districts and from five extra-continental districts met at the time of our General Convention. They made brave and high resolutions, and we believe that by God's help they will strive "to force the vision into realization." Let us join hands with these our sons and daughters.

This is their program: to support the world mission of the Church in all fields, the World Council of Churches and the United Nations; to study interracial questions and work for reconciliation by prayer and action; to exercise self-denial in food and luxuries and specifically to support areas of need; to obtain and study reliable information about the Russian people; to make a united youth offering for the Christian youth of Japan, and to dispatch to them a message of good will. They have resolved to institute in their homes the habit of family worship. They have pledged themselves to work for reunion with our separated Christian brethren. We call upon the Church to give these interested and devoted young people the encouragement of our prayers and our example.



A thousand avenues are open for high and noble Christian action. Let us take them, praying always with supplication in the spirit and watching thereunto with all perseverance. In ten thousand places let us pray and work with the promise of our God upon us.

Call To Evangelicals

By
BEVERLEY D. TUCKER
The Bishop of Ohio

Opening Address of Toastmaster at the Evangelical Dinner at Bellevue-Stratford, September 11

THE word "Episcopal" in the official name of our Church is witness to the fact that in our polity we have maintained the continuity of the historic ministry. We still have bishops, and with all their faults, we love them still! The word Protestant in our name is witness to the evangelical character of our Church; the fact that we would constantly renew our contact with the living springs of the Christian evangel, as revealed in the New Testament. For the evangelical churchman the mind and spirit of Christ is ever the central loyalty, and the reality and value of every ecclesiastical tradition must justify itself in the light of its responsiveness to that test.

Moreover, the evangelical not only looks backward to the historic Jesus Christ for his unfailing standard and test, but he looks forward to the distinction and guidance of the Holy Spirit into ever new adventures for Christ in the yet unwritten future. We should keep ever fresh in outlook the valedictory of our Lord to his disciples on the eve of his departure. "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot hear them now. Howbeit when the spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

There are new and clarion calls to the evangelical today to make his Christian contribution within the fellowship of our Church. The world's great need in this critical hour is for some central principle of unity, some instrument through which nations will be led to adjudicate their differences under the rule of law and order, rather than through the distinctive forces of international warfare. To that cause the Church brings the evangel of the unity of the human race in Christ Jesus. That is the motive of the missionary adventure of the Church, which has been a cardinal principle of the evangelical.

If the Christian Church, however, is to proclaim with conviction its evangel of the unity of human race in Christ Jesus, it is a duty of first importance for the Church to demonstrate that unity in its own corporate life. The earliest vindication of the bishop in the Epistle of Ignatius was that the bishop was needed as a center of unity in the community. Is not this the God-given time and opportunity for us to contribute our historic ministry as a center of unity for the divided religious groups of America? Our immediate opportunity is with one of the great evangelical Churches, the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., to whom we have made the proposal of working with them to achieve organic unity as in accordance with God's will. I want to express my conviction that our Church can take no more significant step for the cause of religion in our country than to go forward with this proposal.

An address at the dinner of the Evangelical Societies at General Convention.

Convention Highlights

The Rev. John E. Culmer of South Florida didn't get very far with his request for double time for his speech on unity. He announced to President Roberts that "Since I represent 65,000 Negro churchmen I asked for six minutes instead of the usual three." He got his answer like a shot, "You have three minutes, sir." When THE WITNESS asked Mr. Culmer who had authorized him to speak for 65,000 Negroes, since he was elected by the diocese of South Florida and not by all the Negro Churchmen in the country, he laughed and said: "They told me to say that." There was no opportunity to press the matter further but presumably "they" meant the group that was organized to defeat the majority report. Both sides of course had their caucuses, with their leaders described by Justice Roberts as "ambassadors, plenipotentiaries and diplomatic agents."

* * *

The secretary of the House of Bishops in announcing a meeting of the bi-racial committee inadvertently called it the "bi-social" committee, which was considered advanced thinking on racial matters.

* * *

During a discussion of matters relating to the Church Pension Fund, in speaking of the tables of pension figures, Secretary Fitzgerald of the House of Bishops read of "the iniquities in the pay tables." It proved to be a typist's error. It should have been "inequalities."

* * *

A prominent Roman priest was reported to have had a room in one of the leading hotels, presumably to be on hand to receive those who were to secede from the Episcopal Church in case the majority report on unity was accepted.

* * *

During the debate on the revised unity proposal in the House of Deputies Chairman Roberts said, "In order to reduce the temperature I wish to make a couple of announcements," thus restoring restless deputies to good humor.

* * *

The headwaiter in the bar of the Bellevue-Stratford, dolled up in a dinner jacket, looks so much like Justice Roberts that late one evening a deputy (name on request) was overheard arguing with him about the unity proposals. The headwaiter actually had a hard time persuading him that he was not the president of the House of Deputies and only succeeded with the help of one of his waiters.

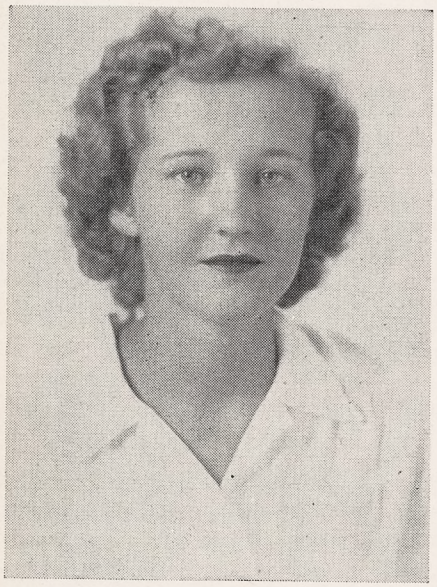
* * *

We asked the Presiding Bishop how he felt in winding up the affairs of the Convention and his office. He said that every resolution passed took a load off of his shoulders and made him feel that he needed a rest. "After all," he said, "I have been in this business since 1899 when I went to Japan and I think it's about time I was relieved."

* * *

A letter from Justice Roberts to THE WITNESS: "Thank you for the typographical error in the Oregon paper that had me fleeing from the Convention with between $2,000 and $3,000. I shall keep it as an interesting souvenir. I am a better man than I thought."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.



Women of the Church Issue A Triennial Message

Findings State Basic Needs and Recommend Specific Subjects for Study and Action

By Mrs. F. C. Grant

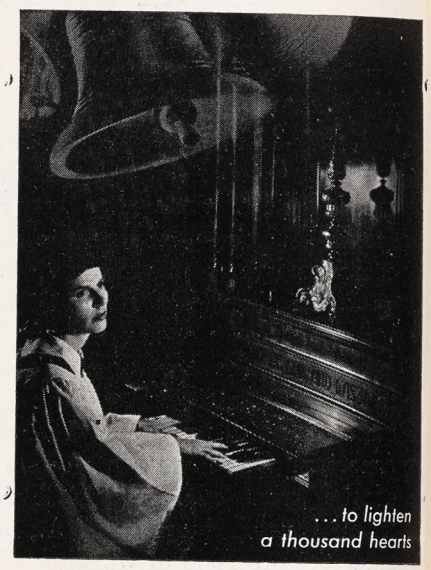
Philadelphia:—The women of the Auxiliary issued what amounts to their own pastoral letter at the closing session of the triennium as follows:

"Our times are urgent, these are days we dare not waste. Our building for God must begin today—not tomorrow. It must begin with ourselves. Only those can build peace who have peace within themselves. Only those can build a fellowship with God who learn to live so close to him that their smallest acts are done in his name and in his spirit. Only those can find all-embracing faith who have the utter conviction that his claim is above all others in their lives.

Miss Sarah Lewis, the attractive representative for Florida at the Youth Conference held at General Convention

"Our building of God's city must be deeply concerned with the building of Christian homes and Christian communities, for these must be built on the love of Christ, and this love constrains us to care for our brothers unto the farthest corners of the earth.

"To build this city of God, we pray for strength. We pray for tools. This Triennial Meeting has given us new strength and new tools —it has reassured us that God is power and that they that wait on the Lord shall renew their strength. It has laid the cornerstone for a community of builders called throughout the ages the Christian Church—it has strengthened the bonds of fellowship that cut across space and time, even across and under the barriers which now exist within the Church itself. We must try to find resemblances to other people — not differences — to find unity in diversity — to see other people as Christ saw them, as individual members of a great multitude.



"These times are urgent. To you and to me, comes the imperative call to become women of deeper inner conviction that through our lives all men everywhere may be led to seek after God and find him."

Under the chairmanship of Mrs. Harold W. Whinfield of Sheboygan, Wis., diocese of Fond du Lac, the Triennial's committee on planning and action brought in its findings, which were adopted by the delegates. The findings outline a program of study and action for the women of the Church for the next three years. They summarize or include suggestions from four subcommittees, one on Christian faith, chairman, Mrs. E. B. Christie, Seattle; one on the home, chairman, Mrs. J. S. Barss of Andover, Mass.; a third on the Christian world, chairman, Mrs. B. H. Harvey of Manila, and a fourth on the world mission of the Church, chairman, Mrs. N. E. Wicker of Louisville, Ky.

Regarding Christian faith the findings said in part that some basic needs are personal responsibility and integrity, constant Christian attitudes and the need "to counteract apathy with action, bitterness with brotherhood, and confusion with conviction." Among subjects for study are the beliefs central to Christianity, teachings characteristic of the Episcopal Church, how to read the Bible, the use of the Book of Common Prayer. Suggested actions are briefly stated: "Worship, evangelize, cooperate, work, pray, and give."

For the Christian family, some basic needs stated by the findings included parental responsibility, certainty about standards, adequate housing, economic security, satisfying work, creative recreation. Recommending study of family life in every aspect, the findings recommend as action to begin early to give young people responsibility in parish life, to urge families to cooperate more fully with community agencies for strengthening family life, to work for improvement of films, radio programs and popular literature, to open more homes to foster children.

(Continued on page eighteen)

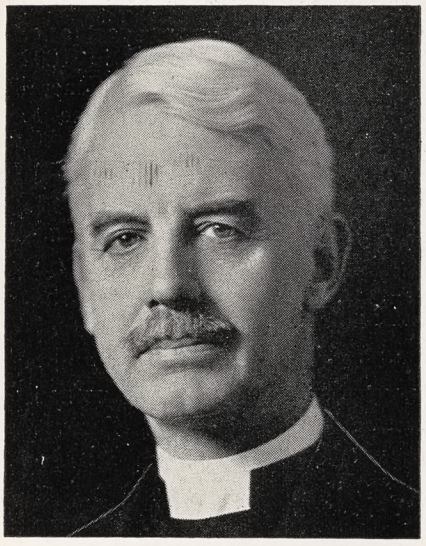
As lovely to see as it is to hear, the Liberty carillon produces the realities of tons of great bells from the magic of only a few ounces of metal. Precision tuned and with a musical range from three to five octaves, it is played with all the artistic expression and effect of a fine carillon of cast bells.

And now Liberty Leadership has produced another amazing first — a two-octave instrument for limited budgets but with all the tonal beauty of "The Big Liberty". We cordially invite you to hear it at a resident service associate near you. Write for his address today, and plan now to have this magnificent Voice of the Cathedrals ringing from your church this Christmas.

LIBERTY Carillons Inc.
CARILLON HEADQUARTERS
551 FIFTH AVENUE, New York 17, N.Y.
CARILLON DESIGNERS • BUILDERS • CONSULTANTS
CREATORS OF AUDIBLE MEMORIAL SHRINES

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.



Georgia Churchwomen Speak Out Against Lynchings

Mrs. Harper Sibley, Episcopal Church Leader Presents Their Resolutions to President Truman

Edited by Philip L. Shutt

Washington, D. C. (RNS):—Mrs. Harper Sibley, prominent Church woman of Rochester, New York, president of the United Council of Churchwomen, was one of a number of religious, labor, and racial leaders who called on President Harry Truman at the White House and urged him to take definite steps to stop the wave of lynchings in the South.

She read the following statement,

James Thayer Addison who leaves San Francisco by plane on October 7 to study the needs of the Church in China, Philippines, Japan. Other members of the commission are Lewis B. Franklin, Mrs. Arthur M. Sherman and the Rev. Robert A. Magill which, she said, had been formulated by the Georgia Council of Churchwomen: "Every churchwoman in Georgia who takes her religion seriously must be distressed and horrified by the brutal crime against innocent and helpless people which has been perpetrated in our state. Lest silence should seem to give consent to this humiliating event, we call upon churchwomen in every section of Georgia to speak out in this crucial hour against all intolerance and injustice and especially when shown toward members of any minority group, remembering that race hatred was the chief characteristic of the enemies we so recently gave our sons and treasure to defeat."

Others in the delegation headed by Paul Robeson, noted Negro baritone, included Rabbi Irving Miller of the American Jewish Congress, and the Rev. William H. Jernagin, president of the Fraternal Council of the National Council of Negro Churches.

New Council Members

Philadelphia: — General Convention elected the following as new members of the National Council: Bishop Mitchell of Arkansas; Bishop McKinstry of Delaware; the Rev. John S. Higgins of Minnesota; Messrs. C. M. Davis of East Carolina; Charles P. Taft of Southern Ohio; S. S. Schmidt of Harrisburg; Clark J. Kuebler. Those nominated by the Auxiliary and elected by the Convention were listed in THE WITNESS last week.

Praise for Roberts

Philadelphia: — Well deserved praise for Owen J. Roberts for his splendid job as president of deputies was one of the last actions taken by that house. Among other things it praised him for "his unfailing courtesy and for his great fairness in the treatment of all persons and problems. In making his rulings he has shown soundness of judgment combined with clarity of expression. The work of this house, and through it, of the Church at large has received a new stimulus through Mr. Justice Roberts' efforts."

New Residence

Philadelphia:—Bishops Lawrence, Budlong and Powell are the bishops on a joint commission which will seek a residence for the new Presiding Bishop. Bishop Sherrill had suggested the advisability of a residence in the vicinity of New York which would serve as the home of the Presiding Bishop and serve as "an hostel for the entertainment of bishops and missionaries who may from time to time find it necessary to consult with the Presiding Bishop and National Council, and perhaps a suitable dwelling for certain permanent members of the National Council."

Presiding Bishop

Philadelphia: — General Convention set the salary of the Presiding Bishop at $15,000 a year. The Convention also accepted the resignation of Bishop Sherrill as bishop of Massachusetts and gave permission, at his request, for the diocese to elect

ST. KATHERINE'S HOME

Provides medical and pediatric care for unmarried mothers and their babies. Case work is provided by outside organizations. Girls receive practical domestic training and thorough training in baby care. Address inquiries to

Executive Directress,
32 Reservoir Avenue
Jersey City, New Jersey

Unexcelled Tonal Beauty

★

The skilled hands of Möller craftsmen build for Beauty. In wood, metal and leather, they fashion instruments eminently worthy of the world's finest music.

Artists of the console find in Möller Organs the medium best fitted to express their ideals, with the ultimate in brilliance and responsiveness.

M.P. MÖLLER

THE ARTIST OF ORGANS · THE ORGAN OF ARTISTS

HAGERSTOWN, MARYLAND

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

a bishop coadjutor. The reason for a coadjutor rather than a bishop is because, under the canons, Bishop Sherrill's resignation does not have to become effective until June, 1947, and the diocese wished to elect at the earliest possible moment.

San Francisco Next

Philadelphia: — General Convention accepted the invitation of the diocese of California to hold the 1949 convention in San Francisco.

College Work

Philadelphia:—Over 400 people crowded the dining room of a local hotel for the dinner of the Church Society for College Work. They heard leaders in college work ask for more men for this work and for more intensive and extensive Christianity in education. Among the speakers were the Rev. C. Leslie Glenn, president of the society; Mrs. Harper Sibley of Rochester, N. Y.; Gordon Chalmers, president of Kenyon College; Prof. George Thomas of Princeton University, and Bishop Everett Jones of West Texas, who declared that "More men have come back from the war more confused than ever. There are no long waiting lists of candidates for the ministry. We need religion rather than revival. Veterans are a field we should turn to in force. We need a strategy for getting vital clergy, interesting veterans in the ministry, who are lost to us and to their own best qualities. But we can find them."

Rural Meeting

Philadelphia:—About 75 persons from rural districts gathered for discussion of rural Church work for the first time at any General Convention on Sept. 18. Addressed by the Rev. Clifford Samuelson who told of plans for future rural work, now that there was a sizable budget item for advance work, the assembly also saw colored slides of the Roan Ridge, Missouri, project. This is a center for Church work among rural people in the diocese of West Missouri and is an experimental station. To it seminary students and women workers come for actual work among rural persons. This is only one of several such projects sponsored by the department of domestic missions of the National Council. Those who attended the Convention also saw the trailer of the Girls' Friendly Society which goes about the countryside and brings information about the rural work of the Episcopal Church. It was parked in front of Irvine Hall most of the Convention, and the Wednesday night meeting saw it appear in the colored slides as evidence of its usefulness.

The Rev. Mr. Samuelson, who is secretary for rural work, listed 12 advance projects that his department is undertaking. These are: 1) national and regional Church conferences during the summers at colleges, 2) town and country institutes held in seminaries, 3) southern leadership training school in mountain areas, 4) student field service in strategic places, 5) rural study scholarships for colleges, 6) lectureships on rural work in seminaries, 7) inter-church cooperation in the rural field, 8) the opening of 10 new fields for rural church work, 9) surveys of dioceses to determine where assistance in rural work should be given, 10) travel expenses of department workers, and 11) new evangelistic efforts.

Following his presentation there was a lively discussion on rural problems out of which came several valuable suggestions for future work.

A. G. Cummins Dies

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.:—The sudden death on Sept. 22, after a short illness, of the Rev. Alexander Griswold Cummins, 77, rector emeritus of Christ Church here, and editor and owner of The Chronicle, a monthly Church paper saddened many friends through the Church. He was a pronounced critic of anything that smacked of Anglo-Catholicism and emphasized the liberal evangelical teachings of those who agreed with him and who looked to him as their leader.

Born in Smyrna, Delaware, the son of Alexander Griswold and Louisa Hayes Cummins, he attended the public schools, graduating from Swarthmore College in 1889 which gave him an honorary doctor of letters in 1909. Ordained in 1892 after a period of study at General Theological Seminary he came to

Haddam House

Arrived! with rich cargo
for a faith-hungry world

. . . . the signature of a cooperative, planned publishing program that will tailor a literature to fit the religious, moral, and ethical questions and needs of our time. Directed especially to young people, this new publishing adventure seeks as authors fresh voices that can give leadership.

HADDAM HOUSE Editorial Board, representing the Edward W. Hazen Foundation, educators, and youth leaders from the various Christian churches and agencies, is concerned with arousing and guiding interest in vital issues of today.

Keep on the lookout for the HADDAM HOUSE ship. It will bring five to eight books a year. Here are the first two.

BEYOND THIS DARKNESS

Roger L. Shinn

Out of his own faith which withstood testing in combat and prison camp, a former G.I. gives a positive, straightforward statement of what Christianity has to say to our time. Writing "in ink what others have written in their lifeblood," he shows the difference between belief in Christianity and sustaining Christian faith and proves that there is a resource beyond intellectual concepts. For drifting youth in this post-war period of disillusionment such honest testimony drops anchor into bedrock. $1.00

CHRISTIAN FAITH AND MY JOB

Alexander Miller

How can I be an honest Christian while on my bread-and-butter job? Young people everywhere are asking how it is possible to get ahead in this competitive society if one's Christian convictions are sincere. In this frank facing of a daily dilemma, a youth leader of international reputation makes a direct, hard-hitting application of the Christian understanding of life to personal conduct in our industrialized order. $1.00

You can be sure to get all forthcoming HADDAM HOUSE books by placing a standing order with your bookstore now as you get the first two.

Association Press

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Christ Church in 1900 retiring on July 1 this year.

In addition to his publishing business he was also secretary of the Protestant Episcopal Society for the Propagation of Evangelical Knowledge, president of St. Barnabas' hospital fund, state charities visitor. member of the board of Evangelical Education Society, and prominent in diocesan administrative commissions.

Funeral services were held Sept. 25 in Christ Church conducted by Bishop Charles Gilbert of New York, a life-long friend.

Conferences

Washington:—Plans for the fall term of the College of Preachers here have been announced by the Rev. Theodore O. Wedel, warden of the college. Clergymen from all parts of the United States will attend the sessions, meeting at the college on the grounds of Washington Cathedral in groups of twenty-five for intensive study under the guidance of outstanding preachers and teachers. The first session opening on Sept. 23 was led by the Rev. Douglas Horton, a member of the Congregational - Christian Churches General Council who discussed the theology of the New Testament. The next meeting was from Sept. 30-Oct. 5 when preaching the psalms was considered under the direction of Provost F. H. Cosgrove, Trinity College, Toronto. Others who will have seminars on preaching are the Rev. Messrs. Roland F. Palmer and Granville M. Williams of the Cowley Fathers. Dean Alden D. Kelley of Seabury-Western Seminary, Evanston, Ill., and Canon V. Auguste Demant of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, are also to conduct courses of study.

McKee Joins Friends

Philadelphia:—The Rev. Elmore M. McKee who resigned as rector of St. George's, New York, in June is to join the central European staff of the American Friends Service Committee on October 7th.

Stranded

San Francisco: — When 400 missionaries representing 123 denominations on their way to China were stranded here recently by the seamen's strike it looked as if going-away plans would be held up. But the party was held anyway in the War Memorial opera house where the United Nations was born. The missionaries filed in a great processional to the flag decked stage, and over 4000 persons packed the auditorium to hear speeches of farewell.

Celebrate

New York:—One of the features of "Country Week," an annual patriotic observance in Brazil is the lighting of a symbolic fire or torch of liberty and sending it cross-country by a runner, from whom communities and groups light their torches. This year the torch was first lighted at the tomb of the late President Roosevelt and flown to Brazil. After what is said to be the longest cross-country run in history the fire was brought to Trinity Church, Porto Alegre, and carried into the choir accompanied by the vestry and the clergy while the national anthem was played.

Speaks Out

Seattle:—"If you want to have a totalitarian government the first thing you have to do is to destroy the worship of God," Frank Rose, labor relations director of the Republican party and former head of the teachers' union here told churchmen of Trinity parish recently. Mr. Rose cited disintegration of man's belief in a moral code as the cause of current labor strife, and said that

CHURCH-CRAFT Pictures

FORMERLY CATHEDRAL PICTURES

BIBLE STORIES PHOTOGRAPHED IN COLOR

Announce...

"CHRISTMAS BLESSINGS"*

A NEW set of natural color slides on the Christmas Story that provides a complete Worship program—suggested Order of Service, well known Christmas hymns, especially prepared recitations.

Beautifully tells the ageless story of Christ's birth in a NEW WAY. Four gripping episodes or chapters: Christmas Blessings — Lost, — Promised, — Provided, — Proclaimed. 40 Glass Bound Slides to the Set—includes Church-Craft Story sets No. 6 "The Birth of Jesus" and No. 8 "The Visit of the Wise Men"—Complete with Program Guide $23.50.

NEW NAME
The same Company—
The Same Service—
The Same Goal

NEW SLIDE SETS
45 Bible Story Sets Completed by Sept. 30

NEW CHRISTMAS STORY
"Christmas Blessings" —40 Slides, Program Guide Free

NEW PRODUCER
The Cecil B. de Mille Pictures Corp. for our new Slides

 See Your Dealer—*Order Early

Expected demand for "Christmas Blessings" urges prompt ordering. Church-Craft Bible Story Slides—all in natural colors—size, 2x2 inch in protective glass binders, sold in sets only, standard price per slide 60c.

Color circular, with full list of Church-Craft Bible Story Slide Sets. Free from your dealer on request.

CHURCH-CRAFT PICTURES, St. Louis 3, Mo.

FORMERLY CATHEDRAL PICTURES

Third Annual Church Building Issue

CHURCH MANAGEMENT

*Trends in Church Building *Heating *Building for Worship *Air Conditioning *Use of Ceramic Tile *Floor Plans of Projected Buildings *Windows *Religious Education *Profusely Illustrated

New subscriptions will be accepted to start with this special (October 1946) issue.

$2.50 per year. Two full years $4.00

CHURCH MANAGEMENT

1900 Euclid Avenue Cleveland 15, Ohio

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

spiritual values must be brought back to the people.

Support for Wallace

New York:—The Church League for Industrial Democracy sent a statement to ex-secretary of Commerce, Henry A. Wallace, on September 21st, thanking him for the vigorous leadership that he has given to the liberal and progressive forces of the United States in his recent letter and statement on the foreign policy of the Truman administration. The statement said in part, "We regret deeply that you have been forced to resign from the government but urge you to speak forth even more powerfully with a prophetic voice to show exactly how the contemporary aims and actions of the government, backed up by reactionary forces in industry and the press, lead this nation and the world down the path towards a civilization-destroying war."

Plans Canvass

Poultney, Vt.; — The Rev. John Norris, rector of St. John's Church here, and chairman of the diocesan department of promotion for Vermont has announced plans for a thorough every member canvass this fall. The diocese will be divided into five districts with a chairman in each one responsible for his own campaign. They in turn will confer with parish and mission chairmen in their areas and at several fall meetings they will hear speakers from the National Council's department of promotion.

Protest

Detroit: — Letters from churchmen of this city protesting the inclusion of members of the Council of Churches in the clinic on political technics sponsored by the Michigan Citizen's committee recently ended in the council endorsing such involvement over the criticism of the Rev. Adolph Studer, council president and acting executive secretary. The council also agreed that the Church should take an active interest in politics as a means of correcting social evils.

Endorsed

New York (RNS):—Former Secretary of Commerce Henry A. Wallace, an Episcopalian, was lauded for his stand on international affairs by the Methodist Federation for Social Service recently through its secretary, the Rev. Jack R. McMichael. In a telegram sent to Mr. Wallace he said, "We are confident that you

THE VOICE GOVERNOR

Give It a Chance
CORRECT BODY MECHANICS DOES IT
RALPH M. HARPER

"This work may be the most accurate study of the voice as a whole which has been published.

"The original observations on which the conclusions are based were made by Phillips Brooks' voice teacher—the result of unpublished study extending over a period of 70 years. Miss Hooker entrusted her notes to the author who, thus far, has spent 32 years in research.

"Phillips Brooks was happy in having a Physician who counseled him to take daily voice lessons for a year. For the remaining 17 years of his life he continued to profit by occasional instruction, saving himself from what he acknowledged 'vocal catastrophe.'

"His voice problem was strikingly similar to that of Wendell Willkie. The author is on record with an opinion, written two years before Willkie's death, that with voice lessons similar to those of Phillips Brooks many more useful years could have been added to the career of this national leader.

Yale University:

"I think so much of your work G—Suiting the Body and the Voice Governor that I put it on my required reading list for the voice class of the Yale Drama School. Actors and public speakers are becoming more and more aware of the fact that the best way to develop a good speaking voice is by developing a good singing voice, and that neither of these goals can be achieved without adequate breath control. Your writing on this point is scientific and clear and cannot help but be useful to any student or teacher who will take the trouble to study it."—Marshall Bartholomew, Associate Professor of Singing and Director of Undergraduate Musical Activities, Yale University.

Milwaukee State Teachers College

"You have filled a long felt need in my own work in fundamentals of speech and voice production. You have given scientific information in language that is functional. Students can understand it, and they become enthusiastic to work for the high standard of a beautiful voice and the correct body mechanics so necessary in its production." — Elizabeth Anhalt, Head of the Department of Speech, Milwaukee State Teachers College, Wisconsin.

160 PAGES, CLOTH BOUND 45 ILLUSTRATIONS, $3.00
At All Bookstores

E. C. SCHIRMER MUSIC CO.
221 COLUMBUS AVENUE, BOSTON 16, MASSACHUSETTS

WITH

Carillonic Bells

Let your church tower pour out the ever glorious songs of The Saviour's birth through the rich, golden voice of Schulmerich Carillonic Bells. Here is the instrument best fitted to translate the songs of the ages into songs in the air, with tones of purest beauty.

You may have the joyous voice of Carillonic Bells in your church this Christmas. No season could be more appropriate than this, to dedicate a memorial that proclaims joy and peace to heart and home. Early inquiry is necessary if installation by Christmas is desired.

BELLS
ADD EXPRESSION TO THE ORGAN, TOO!

Carillonic Bells is the perfect percussion instrument to provide the organ with the widest range of colorful bell harmonics. Tone source effects are greatly increased while control and operation from the console are complete. Renowned organists enthusiastically acclaim Carillonic Bells with Organ—"a new medium of musical expression".

For information address Dept. W-16

Schulmerich ELECTRONICS, INC.

SELLERSVILLE, PA.

CARILLONIC BELLS · TOWER MUSIC SYSTEMS · ACOUSTIC CORRECTION UNITS · SOUND DISTRIBUTION SYSTEMS · CHURCH HEARING AIDS

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

will not abdicate your right and responsibility to continue to express your honest convictions concerning the greatest problem before our world."

Conference

Providence:—The fall session of the diocesan school sponsored by the department of Christian education of the diocese of Rhode Island will be held here Monday evenings in October at All Saints' Church, with outstanding teachers and clergy on the faculty.

Changed

Winnipeg (RNS):—The General Synod of the Church of England in Canada here approved several changes in the Prayer Book, most outstanding of which is an alternate form in the wording of baptism. The present phrase, "for as much as all men are conceived and born in original sin" was protested by Dean S. H. Elliott of Victoria because, he said, there was often a harassed look on the face of parents when they heard their child was born in "sin." The alternative form will read, "seeing that all men of their own nature are inclined to evil" and will be used on trial for three years. Another revision provided for a special brief service for emergency baptism of children by laymen.

Evangelism

London (By wireless to RNS*)*:—A Christian "commando" campaign to reach all sections of the population will be launched here by the Church of England next April enlisting at least 1,500 clergymen and laymen in London plus an equal number from the provinces in a great evangelistic effort.

Unity Moves

Montreal (RNS):—Further negotiations between the United Church of Canada and the Anglican Church were recommended in a report to the General Council of the United Church held here recently. The Very Rev. J. R. P. Sclater of Toronto said "it is agreed that the first step towards reunion should be the achievement of a mutually acceptable ministry."

Sidesteps

Montreal (RNS): — The General Council of the United Church of Canada sidestepped the issue as to whether married women can be ordained in the Church when it decided to pass back to the Montreal Presbytery the case of Mrs. Margaret Butler. She was graduated with her husband from a theological seminary, but was not ordained with him. The referral to the Montreal Presbytery was on a technical point in Church law.

School Opens

Geneva (By wireless to RNS*)*:—For the first time since the Nazi annexation of Austria, when all Evangelical schools were ordered closed, a Protestant school was opened recently in Vienna. It is being conducted by an interdenominational committee of the World Council of Churches in a former orphanage. Enrollment is limited to 47 first and second grade pupils.

Education

Sydney, Australia (By wireless to RNS*)*:—Improved government educational facilities for Australia's aboriginal natives and half-castes were urged by the South Australian synod of the Church of England. It recommended establishment of a college for their exclusive use.

Coincident with the appeal was a protest by Bishop Batty of Newcastle, New South Wales, against use of the Central Australian aboriginal reserve as a rocket testing site.

THE CHURCH PENSION FUND

and its subsidiaries

administered for the benefit of the Church

THE CHURCH HYMNAL CORPORATION

Publishers of The Hymnal; Book of Common Prayer; A Prayer Book for Soldiers and Sailors; Book of Offices for Certain Occasions; Stowe's Clerical Directory.

THE CHURCH LIFE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost insurance and annuity contracts available to the clergy, lay officials and active lay workers of the Church, either voluntary or paid, and their immediate families

THE CHURCH PROPERTIES FIRE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost fire and windstorm insurance on property owned by or closely affiliated with the Church, and on the residences and personal property of the clergy.

Further information available by addressing any of the above at

20 Exchange Place New York

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Write us for
Organ Information
AUSTIN ORGANS, Inc.
Hartford, Conn.

Memorial Windows
In accordance with the best traditions of the craft. Notable installations in forty states and five foreign countries.
Illustrated material on request
The D'Ascenzo Studios
founded 1896
1604 Summer Street — Philadelphia 3, Pa.

ALTAR BREADS ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED
SAINT MARY'S CONVENT
KENOSHA • WISCONSIN

MENEELY BELL CO.
22 RIVER ST., TROY, N. Y.
BELLS

R. GEISSLER, INC.
71-79 W. 45th St., New York 19, N. Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS

ERNEST W. LAKEMAN
Designer and Worker in
STAINED GLASS
2 CRESCENT PLACE
YONKERS, NEW YORK

Need a LAXATIVE?
Black-Draught is,
1-Usually prompt
2-Usually thorough
3-Always economical

25 to 40 doses only 25¢
Get BLACK-DRAUGHT
CAUTION: USE ONLY AS DIRECTED

Women of the Church

(Continued from page twelve)

A long list of needs for a Christian world include the Christian faith, health and sanitation, education, leisure, recreation, a sense of community, cooperation among racial, religious, economic groups, opportunity for work and creative activity and emotional fulfillment. Recommending study of community problems and world problems, industrial relations, child welfare, opportunities for under-privileged groups, race relations and world peace, the findings recommend as action more use of the Church's private schools, more use of released time for religious education, improvement of Sunday schools, leadership training, sharing in the work of world agencies for relief and rebuilding, supporting the efforts of labor organizations to improve the conditions of their members, voting with care and teaching young people their responsibility as citizens, working for better race relations, supporting the United Nations and its activities, praying in thoughtful, specific ways, and both as employers or employed, trying to further Christian cooperation.

In connection with the Church's mission the findings state the need of a new appreciation of the missionary, increasing emphasis on Christian vocations for young people, rehabilitation of child life all over the world. Suggested study includes the whole subject of missionary work, specifically, the Episcopal Church's program, comparative religion, basic human rights, and the whole subject of faith and order. Cooperation in interdenominational activities is urged, closer cooperation with young people, and emphasis on the Episcopal Church's work of reconstruction and advance.

Acting on a resolution received from several dioceses and brought to the house by the reference committee, of which Mrs. W. H. Grimball of Charleston, S. C., is chairman, the delegates voted unanimously to recommend to the women of the Church a study of the Lambeth Quadrilateral as a basis of unity with all Christian bodies.

STAMMER?
This new 128-page book, "Stammering, Its Cause and Correction," describes the Bogue Unit Method for scientific correction of stammering and stuttering — successful for 45 years. Free — no obligation.
Benjamin N. Bogue, Dept. 5800, Circle Tower, Indianapolis 4, Ind.
GET THIS FREE BOOK!

Everything for the Episcopal Church
but vestments
A broad statement but we'd like to prove it.
Ammidon and Company
Horace L. Varian
Horace L. Varian, Jr.
31 South Frederick Street
Baltimore 2, Maryland

PURE IRISH LINENS NOW IN STOCK
for all Church needs, supplies constantly arriving, good qualities, also fine cottons. Samples free.
Mary Fawcett Company
Plainfield, N. J. Box 146

CATHEDRAL STUDIOS
Washington & London, England. Linens and materials by the yard, surplices, albs, Altar Linens, stoles, burses & veils. Materials by the yard. See my NEW BOOK "CHURCH EMBROIDERY" & CHURCH VESTMENTS a complete instruction. 128 pages, 95 illus. Price $5.67. And my HANDBOOK for ALTAR GUILDS, price 50c. Miss L. V. Mackrille, 11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington 15, D.C. 30 minutes from U. S. Treasury. Tel Wisconsin 2752.

SURPLICES — STOLES
VESTMENTS
CHURCH HANGINGS
ALTAR LINENS
CASSOCKS
CLERICAL SUITS — CLOAKS
RABATS—RABAT VESTS—COLLARS—SHIRTS
Choir Vestments in All Styles
Inquiries Invited
C. M. ALMY & SON, INC.
562 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.

VESTMENTS for CLERGY and CHOIR
Altar Linens . . . Embroideries . . . Tailoring . . . Episcopal Flags. Send for Catalog
J. M. HALL, INC.
14 W. 40th St., New York - Tel. CH 4-3306
Office & Salesroom
"Orders taken for serge cassocks for J. Wippell & Co., Ltd."

The Payne-Spiers Studios Inc.
Studios at Paterson, New Jersey
Carved Wood
Chancel Renovations Church Furnishings
Murals Memorials Tablets
Stained Glass
-- Inquiries Solicited --

VESTMENTS
Cassocks - Surplices - Stoles - Scarves
Silks - Altar Cloths - Embroideries
Priest Cloaks - Rabats - Collars
Custom Tailoring for Clergymen
1837 Church Vestment Makers Over One Hundred Years 1946

COX SONS & VINING, Inc.
131 East 23rd Street, New York 10, N.Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

MR. DANIEL E. WILLARD
Vestryman of Nebraska City, Nebr.

The most edifying word I have seen ever is the communication "The Plea of Love" by Bishop Parsons (WITNESS, Sept. 5). I wish this article might be read by every churchman of every denomination in the land, and particularly by those Episcopalians who seem to regard religion as the Church—"episcopacy, priesthood, sacraments, creedal statements, liturgies." "Love never faileth." The Man of Galilee taught love for our fellowmen. This seems to me to be the aim and purpose of his teaching. He suffered for his love of man. I do not find in his teachings that he laid emphasis on creed, holy communion, or Church formularies. "The dire need of the world today is Christian love," truthfully says Bishop Parsons. Instead the emphasis seems to be laid in sacraments—the saving of our own souls. Seeking salvation seems to me to savor of selfishness, and has little to do with love for our fellowmen, which seems to my mind to be the essence of religion.

* * *

REV. PERCY T. OLTON
Rector of St. James', Newark, N. J.

Congratulations on your scoop in reporting General Convention. In the same mail with the Sept. 19th number of THE WITNESS I received another of our Church papers. I searched this latter paper in vain for news of the Convention. There wasn't a single word in reference to what was going on in Philadelphia. Then I turned to THE WITNESS and got all the news to date. It was a fine piece of reporting and those of us who could not be present thank you for it.

* * *

MRS. R. ALFRED HASSLER
Churchwoman of New York

The Sept. 5 issue of THE WITNESS just fell into my hands today, and I had the pleasure of reading Joseph Fletcher's penetrating article. I was certainly glad to see that some theologians are still able to put their fingers on the crux of our religious problem. What he says tells exactly why the Church has been losing its best young people to the cause movements, where they have been finding more fertile ground for the seed of the Kingdom of God.

As Mr. Fletcher states, even in these times it is necessary to keep our houses in order. But to keep our houses in order to the exclusion of living in them is what appears to be the policy of many of our churchmen. It is tithing mint, cummin and anise without paying attention to the weightier matters of the law. One wonders whether all of Christ's tears today would be shed over Jerusalem.

* * *

MRS. GULIAN LANSING
Member of the Auxiliary's executive board

Since I have sometimes written to you in protest, I take particular pleasure in writing this time to thank you for your editorial (WITNESS, Sept. 19) on the resolution on racial integration and the interim plan for racial representation presented by the national executive board to the Triennial. It is gratifying because we did work very hard, both in board meetings and in a special bi-racial committee, to produce a clear statement of our convictions and, at the same time, to deal realistically with existing conditions.

I wonder if you would feel it expedient to mention that the Auxiliary of Newark and of New Jersey each had a Negro in its regular five-member delegation. Could you also pay some tribute to the fine spirit of the women of the Negro Auxiliaries who expressed their willingness to give up four-fifths of their representation so that more women from more parts of the country might be able to have a part in the national planning and work? Their expressed willingness to sacrifice in order to share their privileges and to help develop stronger Negro leadership augurs well for the spirit which we may expect to find in delegates who may attend future Triennial meetings.

* * *

REV. ELIOT WHITE
Clergyman of New York

I have just been reading the grand article by Spofford in the Sept. 19th WITNESS. My warm thanks and congratulations. The spirit of truth and righteousness hath not left himself without a true witness, clear-voiced and sorely needed. If, as seems to be the case at present, it is William vs. Convention, so much the worse for the latter if it does not take up the challenge with earnestness and courage.

* * *

MR. P. L. SNOW
Layman of New York

It was heartening to me to discover a clergyman of the Church with the vision shown by the Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher of the Episcopal Theological School in his article "Quick or Dead?" (WITNESS, Sept. 5). As important as unity with the Presbyterian Church is, and also the marriage canon, I cannot see that either matter much unless the world learns how to control the atom bomb. And the control of this deadly weapon depends, I am afraid, on working out understandings with that powerful ally, Russia. It is shocking to find so many of my friends denouncing Russia without any apparent facts upon which to base their opinions and I have far too many friends who are saying quite openly that we ought to use the bomb against Russia while we alone (if this is the case) possess it.

Christchurch
VIRGINIA
SCHOOL for BOYS

Intermediate School. Seventh to Ninth Grades. Upper School. College Entrance Requirements. This school is a member of the system of schools in the diocese of Virginia. Apply to The Headmaster, Christchurch School, Christchurch, Va.

Virginia Episcopal School
Lynchburg, Virginia
Prepares boys for colleges and university. Splendid environment and excellent corps of teachers. High standard in scholarship and athletics. Healthy and beautiful location in the mountains of Virginia.
For catalogue apply to
George L. Barton, Jr., Ph.D. Headmaster,
Box 408

SCHOOLS

The Hospital of Saint Barnabas and the University of Newark offer a full course in NURSING to qualified High School graduates. Scholarships available. Classes enter in February and September
Apply to
Director of Nursing
HOSPITAL OF SAINT BARNABAS
685 High Street Newark, N. J.

DE VEAUX SCHOOL
FOUNDED 1852
A Church school for boys. Thorough preparation for college. Military system of student government, developing sense of responsibility. Charges for grades seven and eight $1000; grades nine through twelve $1050. For catalog, address THE HEADMASTER, DeVeaux School, Niagara Falls, New York.

HOLDERNESS
In the White Mountains. College Preparatory and General Courses. Music and Crafts. For boys 12-19. All sports including riding. 200 acres of woods. New fireproof building. Individual attention. Home atmosphere.
Rev. Edric A. Weld, Rector
Box W. Plymouth, N. H.

MARGARET HALL
Under Sisters of St. Helena
(Episcopal)
Small country boarding and day school for girls, from primary through high school. Accredited college preparatory. Modern building recently thoroughly renovated includes gymnasium and swimming pool. Campus of six acres with ample playground space, hockey field and tennis court. Riding. Board and Tuition $800. For catalog, address: Sister Rachel, Prin. O.S.H., Box A. Versailles, Kentucky.

FORK UNION
MILITARY ACADEMY
An Honor Christian School with the highest academic rating. Upper School prepares for university or business. ROTC. Every modern equipment. Junior School from six years. Housemother. Separate building. Catalogue. Dr. J. J. Wicker, Fork Union, Virginia.

CARLETON COLLEGE
Laurence M. Gould, D.Sc., President
Carleton is a co-educational liberal arts college of limited enrollment and is recognized as the Church College of Minnesota.
Address: Assistant to the President
CARLETON COLLEGE
Northfield Minnesota

KEMPER HALL
KENOSHA, WISCONSIN
Boarding and day school for girls offering thorough college preparation and training for purposeful living. Study of the Fine Arts encouraged. Complete sports program. Junior School department. Beautiful lake shore campus. Under direction of the Sisters of St Mary. For catalogue address: Box WT

LENOX SCHOOL
A Church School in the Berkshire Hills for boys 12-18 emphasizing Christian ideals and character through simplicity of plant and equipment, moderate tuition, the cooperative self-help system, and informal, personal relationships among boys and faculty.
Rev. Robert L. Curry, Headmaster
Lenox Massachusetts

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

An Invitation To Readers of This Magazine

FROM THE PUBLISHERS OF THE

FUNK & WAGNALLS New Standard ENCYCLOPEDIA

Please Accept WITH OUR COMPLIMENTS

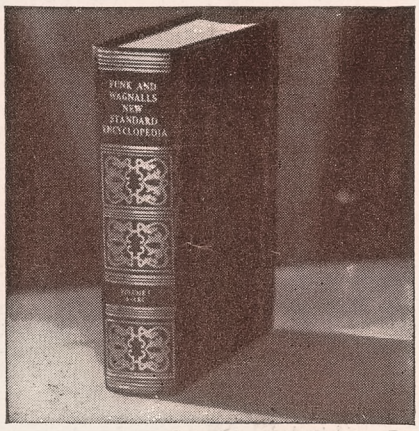
Volume One of the New 1946 Edition—Now On Press!

ALL WE ASK YOU TO PAY IS TEN CENTS TO COVER COST OF MAILING IT TO YOU

WE ARE now on press with our Fall 1946 Edition of the Funk & Wagnalls New Standard Encyclopedia, which in previous editions sold over 15,000,000 volumes—an amazing record.

This latest edition, newly revised, we have allocated among the newspapers and magazines carrying our Fall advertising program. In accordance with this plan, we have set aside 1,500 sets for readers of this magazine and now invite you to become the owner of a set—making you this extraordinary offer to enable you to become acquainted with the volumes before you decide to buy.

We want to send you Volume I of the set with our compliments. Merely send us 10c to cover our mailing cost—more as evidence of your good faith than anything else. This volume is yours to keep without any further obligation on your part. If, after examining Volume I, you want the rest of the 27-volume set, you may receive it at a ridiculously low price through our book-a-week plan, explained later in this announcement. Or, if you want no further books, you merely drop us a post card saying so, and that ends the matter.



Some Facts About This Encyclopedia

We expect to enclose with Volume I a small pamphlet giving the facts to show that this is one of the finest encyclopedias anyone can buy for home use—unsurpassed by any other at any price.

In the meantime, we want to give you a few of the facts printed in the pamphlet, so as to interest you in taking the trouble to send for Volume I.

The new Fall 1946 Edition contains over 52,000 subjects, covered in separate articles. Compare this with any other encyclopedia in the world. You will find that it is at least 30% more than encyclopedias costing you up to six times as much as ours.

Each volume (comprising about 500 double-columned pages) contains over a quarter of a million words—over 7,000-000 words in all—which will give you some idea of the completeness of coverage of each subject.

Copyright 1946 Unicorn Press

Each volume is as up-to-date as human ingenuity can make it. In this edition the subjects have been revised to cover events of this last year, and each volume, as it goes to press, is brought finally up-to-the minute. Our unique book-a-week delivery plan, bringing you the volumes almost as they come off the presses, makes it the most up-to-date of encyclopedias. Better still—later volumes, delivered to you during this Fall and Winter—will contain events which have not yet occurred!

Easy-Reading, Authoritative, Handy Volumes

Editor-in-chief of the original edition was Frank H. Vizetelly, the beloved "Viz" of radio fame, and the editor of the unexcelled Funk & Wagnalls New Standard (unabridged) dictionary. Surrounded by a host of authorities in many fields, he brought this immense work into being.

But the books are easy to read! Your children in grammar and high school can read them with profit. Free of technical details abstruse wording and dry-as-dust-research specialist attitude—and free also of concise, over-abbreviated, fact-omitting brevity—this grand encyclopedia will be your rainy evening companion for many years to come.

And, in spite of their truly enormous contents, each volume can be held in one hand! Gone is the old-fashioned, bulky, cumbersome format—big, heavy books that easily drop and as easily break. Here is a new, streamlined, USABLE set that is attractive, interesting and handy for daily reference.

Nor does the almost incredibly low price we have set on the remaining volumes indicate the quality of materials and labor that went into the printing and binding of the set. We have used a high-grade book paper, cover board, and binding cloth. The printing is crisp and clear-cut, and the work of binding has been done by one of the largest and best-known firms in the field. These are first-quality books, as of course you will soon see for yourself.

Unique, Book-a-Week Plan for the Balance of the Volumes

Our plan, which has been tested and approved by many thousands of appreciative purchasers, gives you the books almost as quickly as they come off the presses.

The first few volumes are now on press. Volume I is delivered to you immediately. Two weeks later, unless you cancel your reservation after examining Volume I, the next two volumes are mailed to you. Two weeks after that the following two volumes are sent you, and so on. You thus receive your volumes, freshly off press, at the rate of volume a week.

YOU DO NOT PAY FOR ANY BOOKS IN ADVANCE—We enclose a bill with each two volumes, which you pay within five days after receiving the books. Considering the amazingly low price of the set, and the fact that you pay for it at the rate of only a book a week, our own pay-as-you-go plan therefore puts no strain at all on any pocketbook.

How much are the volumes? Here's the surprise. You pay only $1.39 for the De Luxe Binding, plus 11c mailing cost. The complete set thus costs you only a small fraction of what other high-grade encyclopedias would cost you and we want only the opportunity to PROVE to you that ours is unexcelled for your use.

A Choice of Editions

With this announcement we offer you a choice between our De Luxe Edition and our Library Edition of the encyclopedia.

The De Luxe Edition, at $1.39 per volume, is bound in dark blue, leather-grained cloth, stamped in red and gilt, as illustrated here, with head and tailbands, and harmoniously stained page-tops. Endpapers and frontispieces are color reproductions of woodcuts by Hans Alexander Mueller, renowned artist in that medium, the frontispieces being a set of woodcut portraits of American Presidents.

The Library Edition costs slightly more ($1.89 per volume plus the same 11c mailing cost), and has all the features described above, plus a more expensive binding. The covers of this superfine edition are in a tan linen-weave cloth, with red and black title panels, decorated with genuine 22 carat gold leaf, bright and untarnishing—making in all an extremely handsome and dignified set of books.

You may have your choice of these editions in sending for Volume One, at the same 10c mailing cost. However, before indicating your choice of editions in the coupon below, please remember the difference in price. And hurry! Fifteen hundred sets are not many for a magazine of such large circulation as this one. First come, first served. Send off the coupon TODAY!

UNICORN PRESS, Authorized Publishers
Brooklyn 1, New York

I enclose 10c in coin or stamps, for which please send me Volume I of the Fall 1946 Funk & Wagnalls New Standard Encyclopedia in the edition checked below:

☐ DE LUXE ☐ LIBRARY

Please also reserve the balance of a set for me in the same edition.

If I decide to cancel the reservation after examining Volume I, I will write you saying so, and there will be no further obligation; otherwise you may send me two more volumes every two weeks, and I will pay within 5 days after receiving them, at the rate of $1.39 per volume plus 11c mailing cost for De Luxe Edition (or $1.89 per volume plus mailing cost for Library Edition)—and that is all!

Volume I is mine to keep in any event.

Name .....

Address .....

City, Zone and State TW-745

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The WITNESS

10¢ A COPY

LIBRARY COPY

OCTOBER 10, 1946

BISHOPS RECEIVE COMMUNION FROM THE PRESIDING BISHOP AS BISHOP HART ASSISTS

CONVENTION ACCOMPLISHMENTS

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

THE CATHEDRAL OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE
NEW YORK CITY
Sundays: 8, 9, 11, Holy Communion; 10, Morning Prayer; 4, Evening Prayer; Sermons 11 and 4.
Weekdays: 7:30, 8 (also 9:15 Holy Days and 10, Wednesdays), Holy Communion; 9, Morning Prayer; 5, Evening Prayer. Open daily 7 A.M. to 6 P.M.

GRACE CHURCH, NEW YORK
Broadway at 10th St.
Rev. Louis W. Pitt, D.D., Rector
Daily: 12:30 except Mondays and Saturdays.
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M. and 4:30 P. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion 11:45 A. M.

THE HEAVENLY REST, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue at 90th Street
Rev. Henry Darlington, D.D.
Sundays: Holy Communion, 8 and 10 A. M.; Morning Service and Sermon, 11 A. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion, 11 A. M.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S CHURCH
NEW YORK
Park Avenue and 51st Street
Rev. Geo. Paull T. Sargent, D.D., Rector
8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evensong. Special Music.
Weekdays: Holy Communion Wednesday at 8:00 A. M.
Thursdays and Saints' Days at 10:30 A. M.
The Church is open daily for prayer.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH
Madison Ave. at 71st St., New York
The Rev. H. W. B. Donegan, D.D., Rector
8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
9:30 A. M. Church School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evening Prayer and Sermon.
Wed., 7:45 A. M., Thurs., 12 Noon Holy Communion.

THE CHURCH OF THE EPIPHANY
1317 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Charles W. Sheerin, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 A. M.; 8 P. M.
Daily: 12:05.
Thursdays: 11:00 and 12:05.

ST. THOMAS' CHURCH, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue and 53rd Street
Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services: 8 and 11 A. M.
Daily Services: 8:30 A. M., Holy Communion.
Thursdays: 11 A. M.. Holy Communion.

THE CHURCH OF THE ASCENSION
Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street, New York
The Rev. Roscoe Thornton Foust, Rector
Sundays: 8 a.m. Holy Communion.
11 a.m. Morning Prayer, Sermon.
8 p.m. Evening Song and Sermon; Service of Music (1st Sun. in month).
Daily: Holy Communion, 8 a.m. Tues., Thurs., Sat.; 11 a.m. Mon., Wed., Fri.
5:30 Vespers, Tues. through Friday.
This Church is open all day and all night.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL
Buffalo, New York
Shelton Square
The Very Rev. Edward R. Welles, M.A., Dean
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30 and 11.
Daily: 12:05 noon—Holy Communion.
Tuesday: 7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
Wednesday: 11:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH
Atlanta, Georgia
435 Peachtree Street
The Rev. J. Milton Richardson, Rector
9:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
10:45 A. M. Sunday School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Prayer and Sermon.
6:00 P. M. Young People's Meetings.

The WITNESS
For Christ and His Church

EDITORIAL BOARD: Frederick C. Grant, Editor; Arthur Lichtenberger, Chairman; William B. Spofford, Managing Editor; Philip L. Shutt, News Editor; Lane W. Barton, Beverly M. Boyd, Dillard H. Brown, Roscoe T. Foust, Charles K. Gilbert, Hugh D. McCandless, Howard Chandler Robbins, William K. Russell, Sydney A. Temple Jr., Joseph H. Titus, William M. Weber.

★

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS: D. B. Aldrich, J. A. Bell, T. S. Carruthers, Adelaide Case, G. K. Chalmers, E. M. Cross, G. M. Day, Angus Dun, A. W. Farlander, T. P. Ferris, J. F. Fletcher, John Gass, C. H. Gesner, C. L. Glenn, G. C. Graham, J. M. Groton, G. I. Hiller, I. P. Johnson, T. R. Ludlow, C. S. Martin, R. C. Miller, Walter Mitchell, A. T. Mollegen, E. L. Parsons, E. L. Pennington, Rose Phelps, L. W. Pitt, Otis Rice, Cyril Richardson, Paul Roberts, V. D. Scudder, W. M. Sharp, W. B. Sperry, C. W. Sprouse, D. S. Stark, W. B. Stevens, J. W. Suter, S. E. Sweet, Alexander Zabriskie.

★

THE WITNESS is published weekly from September 15th to June 15th inclusive, with the exception of the first week in January and semi-monthly from June 15th to September 15th by the Episcopal Church Publishing Co. on behalf of the Church Publishing Association, Inc. Samuel Thorne, President; Charles A. Houston, Vice-President; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, Treasurer; Frederic D. H. Gilbert, Secretary.

★

The subscription price is $3.00 a year; in bundles for sale in parishes the magazine sells for 10c a copy, we will bill quarterly at 5c a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter, March 6, 1939, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Vol. XXIX No. 45
OCTOBER 10, 1946

CLERGY NOTES

BASKERVILL, LEWIS A., released from the army chaplains corps, is now vicar of St. Augustine's mission, Oakland, Calif.

CARRINGTON, F. L., formerly of St. Paul, Minn., is now rector of the Redeemer, Superior, Wisconsin.

CHAPMAN, JAMES J., retired priest of the diocese of Virginia, died Sept. 10 at his home in Gordonsville.

DENNIS, BENJAMIN, 94 retired priest of the diocese of Virginia, died Sept. 13.

GRAHAM, DAVID W. C., formerly rector of St. Paul's, Bellingham, Washington, and chaplain in the army, is now rector of St. Paul's, Walnut Greek, Calif.

HINSHELWOOD, GEOFFREY C., rector of St. Stephen's, San Luis Obispo Calif., will become rector of Trinity, Hayward, Oct. 31.

HOHLY, HAROLD, rector of Christ Church, Bronxville, N. Y., has been elected chairman of the commission on Christian social relations of the diocese of New York succeeding the Rev. Elmore M. McKee, who recently resigned.

MERYWEATHER, THOMAS A., formerly associate rector of St. Luke's and the Epiphany, Philadelphia, is now rector of the Church of the Advocate, Philadelphia.

O'GRADY, GERALD B. JR., chaplain at Cornell University since 1943 and assistant rector of St. John's, is now chaplain of Trinity College, Hartford, Conn.

SHAW, GEORGE C., 79, rector of several Churches in the diocese of Virginia until his retirement in 1937, died Sunday, Sept. 15.

STURGIS, RICHARD L., locum tenens of St. Stephen's, Goldsboro, N. C., is now archdeacon of the Wilmington district and priest-in-charge of St. Andrew's and associate missions, Wrightsville.

THOMAS, LOUIS O'V., assistant rector of St. Andrew's, Jackson, Miss., will become rector of Trinity, Natchez, Nov. 1.

WALLACE, DAVID R., formerly vicar of St. Augustine's mission, Oakland, Calif., has retired as of Sept. 30.

WHITEFIELD, WILLIAM J., was ordained priest Sunday, Sept. 29, at the Holy Comforter, Atlanta, Ga., by Bishop John Walker and will continue in charge of the parish.

WIECHERT, HILLMAN R., formerly rector of Trinity, London, Ohio, is now associate rector of Grace Church, Medford, Mass.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

CHRIST CHURCH CATHEDRAL
Main and Church Sts., Hartford, Conn.
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30, 10:05, 11 A. M., 8 P. M.
Weekdays: Holy Communion—Monday and Thursday, 9 A. M.; Tuesday, Friday and Saturday, 8 A. M.; Wednesday, 7:00 and 11:00 A. M. Noonday Service, daily 12:15 P. M.

CHRIST CHURCH
Cambridge
REV. GARDINER M. DAY, RECTOR
REV. FREDERIC B. KELLOGG, CHAPLAIN
Sunday Services, 8:00, 9:00, 10:00 and 11:15 A. M.
Weekdays: Wed. 8 and 11 A. M. Thurs., 7:30 A. M.

TRINITY CHURCH
Miami
Rev. G. Irvine Hiller, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services 8, 9:30, 11 A. M.

TRINITY CATHEDRAL
Military Park, Newark, N. J.
The Very Rev. Arthur C. Lichtenberger, Dean
Summer Services
Sunday
8:30 and 11:00 A. M.
Weekdays
Tuesday, Thursday, Friday at 12:10; Wednesday and Holy Days, Holy Communion, 12 noon.
The Cathedral is open every day.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
Montecito and Bay Place
OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA
Rev. Calvin Barkow, D.D., Rector
Sundays: 8 A. M., Holy Communion; 11 A. M., Church School; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer and Sermon.
Wednesdays: 10 A. M., Holy Communion; 10:45, Rector's Study Class.

GRACE CHURCH
Corner Church and Davis Streets
ELMIRA, N. Y.
Rev. Frederick T. Henstridge, Rector
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M.; 4:30 P. M.
Daily: Tuesday and Thursday, 7:30 A. M.
Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Holy Days, 9:30 A. M.
Other Services Announced

ST. MARK'S CHURCH
Texas Avenue and Cotton Street
SHREVEPORT, LA.
Rev. Frank E. Walters, Rector
Rev. Harry Wintermeyer, Curate
Sundays: Holy Communion, 7:30; 9:25 A. M., Family Service; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer.
Holy Communion, first Sunday. 6 P. M., Young Churchmen.

CHRIST CHURCH
Nashville, Tennessee
Rev. Peyton Randolph Williams
7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
9:30 and 11 A. M.—Church School.
11 A. M.—Morning Service and Sermon.
6 P. M.—Young People's Meetings.
Thursdays and Saints' Days—Holy Communion. 10 A. M.

GRACE CHURCH
105 Main Street, Orange, N. J.
Lane Wickham Barton, Rector
SUNDAYS
8:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M.—Church School.
11:00 A. M.—Morning Prayer and Sermon. (Holy Communion first Sunday each month)
7:00 P. M.—Young People's Fellowship.

CHRIST CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA
Second Street above Market
Cathedral of Democracy
Founded 1695
Rev. E. Felix Kloman, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services: 10 and 11 A. M.
Weekdays: Wed., 12 noon and 12:30.
Saints' Days: 12 noon.
This Church Is Open Every Day

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

VOL. XXIX. No. 45

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

OCTOBER 10, 1946

Publication Office, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago 37, Ill. Editorial Office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

Convention Accomplishments Stressed in Letters

Opinions Mixed On Unity But All Pleased With Election of Bishop Henry K. Sherrill

New York:—THE WITNESS asked a number of Bishops and Deputies to the 1946 General Convention to commend briefly on "What I Think the General Convention Accomplished." We present their replies:

* * *

HENRY WISE HOBSON
The Bishop of Southern Ohio

For a Church which is generally as slow moving and conservative as the Protestant Episcopal church this past Convention accomplished more along most lines than I dared hope for. We elected a courageous, liberal and far-seeing man as Presiding Bishop. The House of Deputies elected, and had the privilege of sitting under the chairmanship of one of the great leaders—who possess true vision—in the world today. After twenty-one years of struggle we adopted a Christian marriage canon. A resolution on world government was adopted which puts the Church among the leaders who are expressing sound policies in building for peace.

We made certain that Bishops would resign in obedience to constitutional requirements. We accepted a big job in our share of the world relief program.

True, we went around in a circle on Presbyterian-Episcopal unity, mainly due to a widespread ignorance of the subject, but we did reaffirm our intention to find a common basis upon which union can be achieved. Most important of all we faced the world mission of the Church with a courageous spirit and adopted a missionary budget which holds a more worthy goal before our Church people. This Convention impressed me more and more with the fact that it takes the Episcopal Church a long time to move, but with patience there's much hope for great progress in the years ahead.

JOHN E. HINES
Bishop Coadjutor of Texas

This General Convention overwhelmed one bastion of entrenched conservatism and stormed the ramparts of a half-dozen others. In the realm of Christian marriage, this Convention, at long last, put the force of the Protestant Episcopal Church behind the spirit of the New Testament. Just how closely we were able to approach the Christian pattern of marriage it will take years to determine. However, heartening

Bishop Hines of Texas thinks there is much still to be desired possibilities lie within the new canon.

We elected a man to be our Presiding Bishop who will not be afraid to grapple with the grave issues challenging all Christendom. In a very real sense, the "times" and the "man" have met.

We have adopted a budget which, if supported at home, may prove to be a decisive factor in the coming struggle for the mission fields of the world between Roman and non-Roman Christianity.

We recognized (not enough, but some) the profound importance of the laity in our Church by electing a layman as the presiding officer of the House of Deputies, and by "bowing" to the vanguard of what is destined to be a representation of women in our legislative body.

Those who had ears heard an unanswerable argument that our Church must recapture rural areas or atrophy.

We came to the "Valley of Decision" with reference to Church unity, and we turned back—having taken counsel of our fears!

We showed that we still had heroic stuff within us; but we also showed that few of us really wanted to be heroes—because the cost is still prohibitive for most Episcopalians!

FRANK W. STERRETT
The Bishop of Bethlehem

While I was sorry the General Convention did not adopt the majority report on unity and remain convinced that the fear of dire and disruptive results from three years' study was not well founded, I am not one of those who feel discouraged or who maintain that the Convention accomplished little or nothing. There were heartening evidences of readiness for greater cooperative fellowship with other Christian communions in federal, national and world councils, and of a forward outlook on conditions at home and abroad.

Talks with many clergymen and laymen make it clear that we need much more information about many things before we can have the sympathetic understanding that is vital for strong action. Much can be accomplished between now and San Francisco.

HARRY LONGLEY
Rector of St. John's, Charleston, W. Va.

Three years ago, I came away from General Convention disappointed and, in my Church Bulletin, called it "the do nothing convention." This time, I came away with a distinct feeling of hope for the future. Perhaps nothing very great happened at Philadelphia with the exception of the great United Thank Offering and the election of Henry Knox Sherrill as Presiding Bishop; but there was very evident an undercurrent of determination to move forward effectively in the affairs of the Church. As a result of General Convention, it should be crystal clear to those in executive positions that there is dissatisfaction in the Church over vision-less and ineffective leadership in many places. The contest over the election of National Council members, the appointment of a strong committee to investigate the workings of the National Council, and of another committee to study the relation of the Presiding Bishop to the National Council, together with the talk in the lobbies and certain other significant announcements and actions all combined to make the directive plain. The Church wants effective action on the part of its leaders. I believe that the Convention said this plainly. The tide has turned away from past mediocrity. The trend is good.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

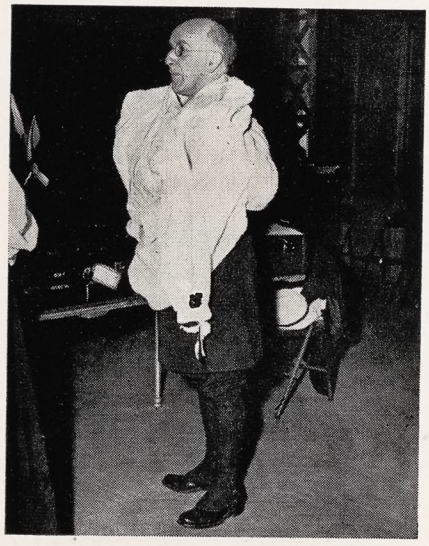
EDWARD R. WELLES
Dean of St. Paul's, Buffalo

General Convention chalked up five major accomplishments. First, a distinguished layman, Mr. Justice Roberts was elected to preside over the House of Deputies. He did this with humor, dispatch, and fairness. Second, the Convention showed that it wants reunion, but on terms that will not jeopardize either part of our dual Protestant-Catholic heritage. Third, after years of controversy, a new marriage canon was adopted with enthusiastic acclaim from all sides. Fourth, a 25% larger budget for 1947 was undertaken which includes: a raise in missionary salaries from starvation (at present inflation prices) to subsistence levels, a new awareness of the urgency of rural work, and throughout a realistic forward-looking program. The fifth accomplishment of General Convention was the friendly spirit in which even the most controversial debate was conducted.



FREDERIC M. P. PEARSE
Chancellor of diocese of New Jersey

So far as deeds are concerned, no Convention ever accomplishes very much. But in Philadelphia, with little or no debate we adopted new canons on Holy Matrimony which, instead of weakening, strengthened the Church's position on what constitutes a Christian marriage. The reference to Lambeth Conference of the proposals for union with the Presbyterians, and submitting them to the people in the pews, were forward steps in the right direction.

Limiting debate as we did on such matters, the deputies were afforded a fuller opportunity of considering the various proposals made to aid in the great task of bringing peace to the peoples of all nations and spreading the Gospel among them.

WILBER G. KATZ
Dean of Law School,
Chicago University

In addition to approving a program and budget which commits the Church to advance in education and missions, the General Convention accomplished two things. The debate on unity proved that in spite of the incendiary pre-convention build-up, we can discuss such a question with no more than "normal" evidences of fear and pride; the decision avoided stamping as worthy of study with a view to action in 1949, a plan so vague as to justify the fears of many that some of the strongest elements in our heritage would be jeopardized. The second accomplishment of the Convention was the embodiment in the canons of the view that Christian marriage requires a competence and consent beyond those requisite for a civil contract; that serious defects of personality may make free consent impossible and the party not spiritually competent. This provision makes it clear that psychiatrists, as well as priests and lawyers, are needed for the councils of advice which the Bishops may establish.

The Archbishop of Canterbury vests for a service at the General Convention

ROBERT HATCH
Dean of St. John's Cathedral,
Wilmington

Many of us left General Convention with mixed feelings. Much good was accomplished. The election of a man of outstanding ability as our new Presiding Bishop, the more elastic marriage canon, the increased budget with its emphasis on the needs of missionary and rural work—all of these promise a new, forward-looking chapter for our Church.

In the earlier days of the Convention the action on unity was disheartening. It was not so much a question of whether or not the majority report was perfect in all details. It was a question of whether or not the Episcopal Church was willing to make an honest and searching study of one concrete plan for unity.

Fortunately the situation was relieved by the House of Bishops. Study will continue during the next triennium. New approaches may yet be found. The door is not closed. Sound doctrines need not fear the effects of patient reassessment and open-minded debate.

Further comments on the General Convention by Bishops, Deputies and delegates to the Auxiliary Triennial will appear next week.

BECOMES CANON IN PARIS

Columbus, Ohio:—The Rev. Richard S. Zeisler, formerly on the staff of Trinity Church here will leave October 17 for Paris, France, to become canon of Holy Trinity Cathedral. He will also teach at the American School which is reopening for the first time since the war. The American and French governments have given him special permission to bring in relief supplies. He informs THE WITNESS that he will be happy to carry messages or news of people to Paris. Until his sailing on the maiden voyage of the S. S. America he may be reached at 85 Hamilton Park, Columbus 3, Ohio.

INDONESIAN AID SOUGHT

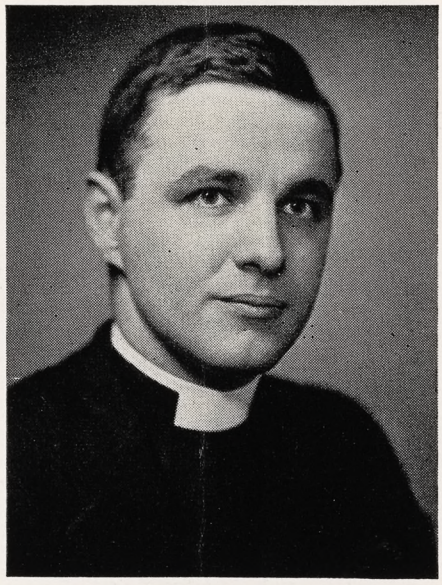
Geneve (by wireless to RNS):—Plans to solicit aid of American and international missionary groups toward reconstruction of Protestant missions in Indonesia were discussed at a recent missionary conference held at Batavia, the first of its kind since the war. It was agreed that two guiding principles should be that Indonesia must be considered a mission field for Indonesian churches and that the Gospel must be applied to all spheres of life.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Nearly Eleven Million Dollar Budget for Three Years

Salary Raises and Increased Appropriations All Along the Line Account for Larger Sum

By W. B. Spofford



Philadelphia: — General Convention unanimously adopted a National Council budget for the next three years totaling $10,856,887, divided as follows: for 1947 the sum of $3,386,887; 1948 calls for $3,560,000; 1949 the sum is $3,910,000. It is left to the National Council to determine whether the increased budgets for 1948 and 1949 are justified. The increase for next year over 1946 is $651,829. The budget was presented at an afternoon meeting of a joint session and was approved the same day by deputies, which was considered rapid action for such an important matter. The bishops approved the budget the following day.

Good news was brought to the session from the Auxiliary with the announcement that $60,000 had been appropriated from the United Thank Offering for the 1947 budget. Interest from trust funds and miscellaneous items of income means that $2,735,097 must be given by the people of the Church, as against $1,883,804 in 1945, the last full year to be reported.

The budget provides for salary increases for missionaries and for executive and staff workers at 281 which total $68,000 "as a safeguard against inflation." These increases are further protected by a resolution directing the National Council "to protect the salary increases by making those items the very last to suffer reduction."

Declaring that the Church weeklies offer "the most effective channel for the presentation of new plans and urgent opportunities to the members of the Church," the sum of $6,000 was written into the budget for advertising in the four magazines. This actually restores an item which was dropped from the budget in the depression years.

A commission consisting of six bishops, six presbyters and twelve laymen is also to be created which is "to keep in touch with the developments arising from the program and budget, with an executive committee of the commission meeting from time to time with the National Council." This commission is also to meet in the convention city sufficiently in advance of General Convention to consider the proposed budget to be offered, thus taking some of the pressure from the hard-working budget and program committee which sweat it out sixteen hours a day in Philadelphia, as they have done at previous conventions. The sum of $4,500 was appropriated for the triennium for the expenses of this commission.

Dean Robert Hatch of Delaware was a member of the hard working committee on Budget and Program. His answer to "What General Convention Accomplished" is in the story starting on page three

In presenting the report Bishop Mitchell of Arkansas, chairman, pleaded for a larger vision in the mission field. "The hour for vital witness to our faith is notably at hand," he read from the report. "Your committee approved the increased budget recommended by the National Council and calls to the attention of every devoted Churchman the task which confronts us in helping to reunite a broken world.

"The real concern of the people of our Church should be over the fact that this great and wealthy Church should find difficulty in financing a budget for 1947 which represents the cost of a three cent postage stamp per week per communicant. To meet the vast problem and opportunity in China, Japan, India and the islands of the sea, we face the terrifying cost of a one cent stamp per week per communicant.

"This then does not become a financial problem at all. It is not expressive of the economic level in this Episcopal Church. The national income in America today is at its highest point in history. The problem is vision—not finance.

"We desire to lay upon the heart and conscience of the Church the need of more adequate provision for those who carry the good news of God to mankind. Salaries of Church workers, clergy or lay, are low at the best. So the bulk of the increase in the budget is for salaries."

Of interest to youth is the provision of an appropriation of $500 a year for the next three years so that when the second national youth convention of the Church meets at San Francisco there will be $1500 to underwrite expenses.

The National Council was commended for its surveys of work in missionary districts and urged to continue them; China was pointed out as the greatest field for missionary opportunity; Japan, the Philippines, and the Panama Canal zone as well as American Churches in Europe came in for increased askings.

MAY GO TO JAPAN

New York: — Bishop Shirley H. Nichols of Salina, former bishop of Kyoto, Japan, may soon go to Japan for six months to survey conditions of the Church there, according to information received by THE WITNESS. During discussion on the state of the Japanese Church in the House of Bishops at General Convention it was generally agreed that because of his long experience in that field he would be the logical person to make the survey, and it was stated that as soon as negotiations could be completed with the Japanese authorities his name would be suggested. The formal appointment will be made by the new Presiding Bishop Henry Knox Sherrill, but it has not yet been officially announced.

Bishop Nichols was consecrated as the third missionary bishop of

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Kyoto in 1928 and served until 1940 when war conditions caused him to leave and he resigned his jurisdiction. In 1943 he was elected the fourth missionary bishop of Salina.

COUNTRY CLUBS LISTED

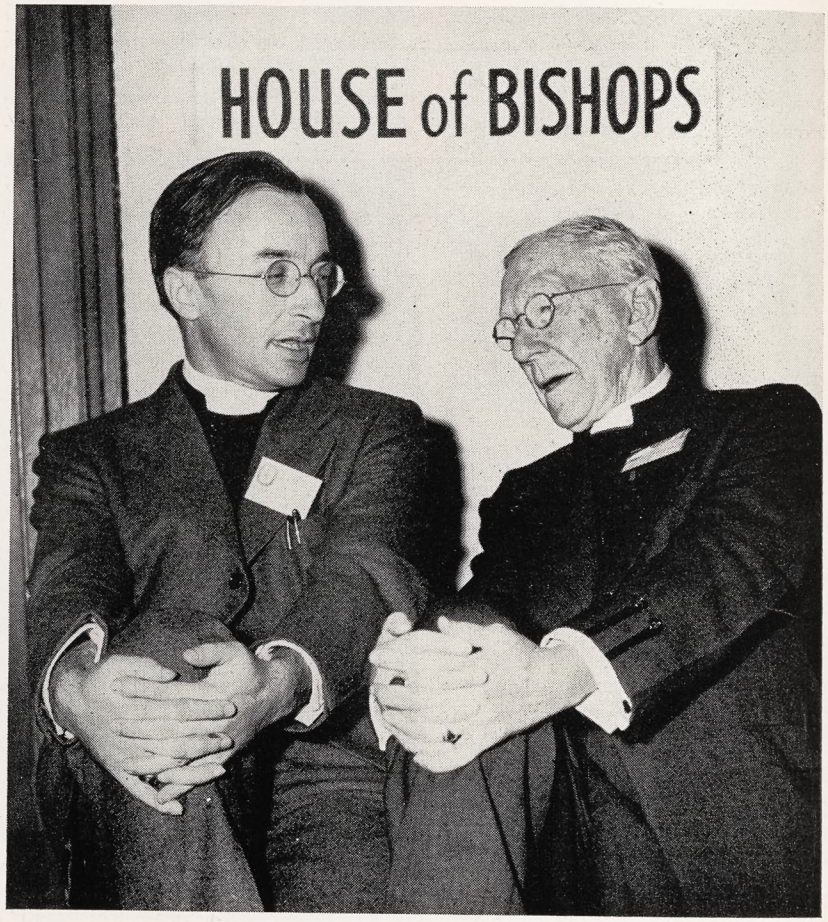
Rehoboth Beach, Del.: — Bishop and Mrs. Oliver J. Hart took a couple of days to "unlax" following General Convention, coming to this resort. The Bishop sent THE WITNESS a guide issued for the convenience of visitors by the chamber of commerce. Under the heading of "Country Clubs" it lists All Saints' Episcopal Church and the Westminster Presbyterian Church. Spofford says it is the strongest argument against Episcopal-Presbyterian union he has heard yet.

NEW BISHOP IN CHINA

New York:—Notice of the consecration of the Rev. Mao Keh-Tsung to be assistant bishop of the diocese of Kiangsu, China, has been received here at Church Missions House. Bishop Philip Tsen of Honan was the consecrator assisted by Bishops John Curtis of Chekiang, William Roberts, Kiengsu, William White, formerly bishop of Honan, and Frank Houghton, formerly bishop of East Szechwan. The event took place on August 6.

FIRST AMERICAN TO ENROLL

New York: — Miss Constance White of this city, a communicant of St. George's Church has been honored by being selected to attend the new Ecumenical Institute at Celigny, Switzerland, as the first American to enroll in this school. Established by the World Council of Churches, it offers students a variety of lay training courses. Miss White intends to follow a course which will prepare her for ecumenical religious journalism. Her classmates will be about 60 young people from many of the war-affected countries of Europe and Asia. She has been in promotion and editorial work for the Church here, and a contributor to religious journals.



CHURCH CONGRESS DINNER

Philadelphia: — More than 500 persons filled the ballroom of the Hotel Philadelphian, Sept. 12, to hear the Archbishop of Canterbury give an address revealing the axioms of Christian thought that have come into conflict with the secular world. "The duty of the Church," he said, "is to make people aware of these conflicts and to bring them to realize that man is dependent upon God."

Bishop Walter H. Gray of Connecticut was the toastmaster and introduced the guests of the evening who were Mrs. Fisher, wife of the Archbishop, Bishop and Mrs. Oliver Hart of Pennsylvania, Archbishop Hardie of the West Indies, Mrs. Clinton Quin, national president of the Woman's Auxiliary, and Mrs. Francis Packard, president of the Pennsylvania diocesan branch.

ENGLAND CELEBRATED UN WEEK

London (by wireless to RNS):— Special sermons were preached by Anglican and Roman Catholic cathedrals throughout Britain in connection with United Nations week starting Sept. 29 to be climaxed by a special United Nations service in St. Paul's Cathedral on Sunday, October 20 attended by King George.

Bishop Emrich, suffragan of Michigan, has a chat between sessions at General Convention with Bishop Moreland, retired bishop of Sacramento. The latter is the oldest member of the House of Bishops and Bishop Emrich is the youngest

YOUNG PEOPLE MEET

Brattleboro, Vt.:—St. Michael's Church here, of which the Rev. Clarence C. Silvester is rector, recently joined other denominations in promoting a state-wide Christian youth convention. It was addressed by many leaders of young people outside of Vermont, and stimulating discussions were held. Over 300 attended.

CANON LIEF RESIGNS

Providence:—Canon Richard Lief, since 1941 executive director of the department of Christian social relations of the diocese of Rhode Island will leave Nov. 1 to become director of the Episcopal city mission society of Los Angeles. He was active in promoting a juvenile court for Rhode Island, and was often consulted on social problems by many agencies. Under his supervision six paid chaplains and six volunteers have been making visits to all of the state institutions.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

EDITORIALS

The Christian Gentleman

AT THE General Convention, Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek was referred to as a "Christian gentleman." The proof given for the statement was that during his spare moments during the war he translated the New Testament into Chinese. Unfortunately, there are more important and valid criteria for judging both a gentleman and a Christian.

On June 23rd, 69-year-old Professor Ma Hsu-lin, formerly of Chekiang University, and 50-year-old Dr. Lei Chieh-chuen, woman professor in Spochow University, were beaten to the streets of Shanghai by agents of the Kuomintang Gestapo. Their sin? As representatives of the Democratic League, they were urging that China have peace and that the United States get its troops and supplies out of their country.

On July 11th, Li Kung-po, a liberal writer and educator, was shot while out on a walk with his wife and children, and on July 17th, Prof. Wen I-tu, of the Southwest Associated University, was killed in front of the office of Kunming's Democratic Weekly. In both cases, the murderers were gangsters hired by the Kuomintang.

Those are just sample incidents. There have been many more cases. It is conceivable that, even while they were occurring, a good "Christian gentleman" was sitting in his study translating the Beatitudes.

The situation in China, to all thinking people, is the most dangerous threat to world peace now existing. The situation is confused, admittedly. Confusion, however, has been bred by the refusal of the United States government and army to let any honest light be shed on the subject. It has been bred by the rigid censorship applied by the Kuomintang government which consistently refuses to issue visas to any members of opposition groups to get out of the country and present their case.

But some light does get through and that light shows that our government, in collaboration with the "Christian gentleman" of Nanking, is pursuing a devious and anti-democratic path. Prof. J. Spencer Kennard, Jr., resident of China for 26 years, says "It is not just Communists who are crying imperialism to America's policies in China, but every Chinese patriot of whatever party affiliation. I except only the cliques whose rule we are now fastening upon a resentful people by the force of American arms."

In China, we see the picture of four hundred million people being ground into a poverty which makes living almost unendurable. We see the inhumanity of a feudal, dictatorial system under which peasants and workers are victimized by money lenders and landlords, protected by the most powerful politicians in the Kuomintang. And then, if we have the eyes to see and the ears to hear, we behold this mass of humanity awakening to the possibility of true democracy and forging political and economic hammers with which to break their restrictive chains.

Rather than helping the mass break those chains, however, we find our arms and planes used by Chiang Kai-shek as a vital link in the shackles. Dean Acheson, Under-Secretary of State, confirmed on July 31st that "the equivalent of thirteen Chinese armies of three divisions each have been supplied with American arms and equipment, and some twenty of these divisions have received thorough American training."

Also, from reports and articles that we have seen, the Churches and their leaders often do all they can to bolster that old regime on the theory that a "Christian gentleman," even with bloodied hands and a guilty conscience, is better than having political and economic power in the hands of the people. Thus, once again, those who wish to exploit both material resources and human personality sit down in their plush chairs, puff their expensive cigars and chuckle! The game has worked before and, apparently, is good for one more twirl.

"QUOTES"

WE LAYMEN need desperately a Christian evangel, expressed in modern terms, adapted to modern methods. It can work. Can we devise a political system of conducting our foreign affairs so as to avoid war with Russia and build friendly relations with her and the rest of the world? Certainly we can. But it takes a number of qualities in our state department and federal administration generally which seem now absent. Christian qualities of understanding in the political process is only one of them. It is a deeply technical problem, but it can be illuminated by Christian idealism in the men at the top and down the line.

—Charles P. Taft
From an address at General Convention before the Evangelical Societies

Sign of Progress

GENERAL Convention approval of the new Revised Standard Version of the New Testament is a step that all who know that version will approve. It is more like the familiar Authorized Version than the American Standard R. V. which it replaces. It is in greater accord with modern scholarship. It uses the language of today, just as the King James' Bible used the language of 1611, or the Vulgate that of Jerome's time, or the original Greek the language of the first century. Perhaps a few older persons will miss the "familiar cadences" of the old translation; but the new generation will have the New Testament in a language they can understand and remember. And by the way, some of the most ardent champions of the old version that we have met have turned out to be persons who scarcely read the Bible at all!

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Another important step forward is the deletion of the "exception clause" from the marriage canon. This is not a matter of New Testament text, but of historical interpretation. There is no question that the words stood in Matthew's Gospel from the beginning; but they simply did not mean what the canon (up to now) has made them mean. It is a triumph for intelligent interpretation of the Bible, and means that at long last the Episcopal Church is beginning to take seriously what her scholars have been teaching in the seminaries for many years! This is a sign of progress, and we hope it means that the study of Holy Scripture is entering a new era among us—as the 1611 Bible inaugurated a new era of Bible study, and the 1881 revision, and the 1901.

Convention and Unity

by Theodore O. Wedel

Canon of Washington Cathedral and Member of Commission

IT IS VERY difficult for a member of the commission on approaches to unity, a signer of the majority report, to express an objective view of the action of General Convention on the unity issue. Many of the speakers of the opposition accused the "Basis of Union" of subverting the Church's fundamental faith, and of being (as the minority report actually says) "repugnant to the mind of Christ" and "the religion of our Lord." As I listened I felt that, if they were right, I and my colleagues ought to be tried for heresy. All that happened at Philadelphia can still receive hopeful interpretation except the revelation of this deep cleavage in our Church family—a cleavage which neither majority vote nor suppression of documents nor reference to Lambeth will heal. The compromise resolution which finally passed has given us a breathing space. But our opposed convictions will have to meet each other again on the firing line of debate and decision.

One could say to the opposition, "You have, perhaps, got rid of the 'Basis of Union' by relegating it to historic archives, but you have not got rid of us who believe in what it stood for. You and we are still brethren in the same Church, and, we trust, brethren 'in the Lord.' The difficult task of resolving our differences of conscience has only just begun."

Clearly, the clashing convictions on the unity issue have deep roots. They go down to the level of an ultimate divergence in the doctrine of divine grace. They will not be easily resolved.

The debate in Philadelphia was full of confusions and misunderstandings. "The Basis of Union" is a complex document. I can assert, as one member of the commission who was privileged during most of nine years to spend many hours in conference with Presbyterian scholars, that it takes a long time to understand another Church. Differences between Churches are often a matter of nomenclature and symbols, not of basic faith. Could the "Basis of Union" have been accompanied by a full commentary, members of our Church might have been surprised to discover how "Catholic" many Presbyterian formularies actually are. Surprise might have come also in the realization of how genuine on the part of the Presbyterian negotiators was their acceptance of the historic episcopate, of the "three orders of the ministry" (leaving our preface to the ordinal intact), of our sacramental developments, and a host of other details. Commentary was sadly needed to explain our yielding in the matter of organizational nomenclature. The phrase "bishop in concurrence with the presbytery," for example, is not half so frightening when for "presbytery" you substitute "standing committee and diocesan convention."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Furthermore, no member of our commission wanted the "Basis of Union" to be accepted for study as anything more than it was meant to be—a first sketch. It was a reply to the invitation of 1937. "Here is what organic union looks like. Corporate criticism is now invited." In my opinion the concept of organic union itself ought to receive searching reexamination. Alternatives exploring the possibilities of a "federal union" should by all means be tried. It was not a surprise to me personally that, as the confusions at Philadelphia prove, the ideal of organic union is probably premature. The 1937 resolution, one must remember, used the phrase, and our past negotiations have remained true to this directive. Any union must be organic, involving, at the very least, intercommunion and mutual ministerial recognition. But might not this retain a federal principle also in which our present autonomy in government and liturgy could be preserved? Such a union—call it "organic federation" for want of a better term—would avoid half at least of the scruples which the "Basis of Union" aroused in the hearts of scores of delegates who were by no means opposed to negotiating on a basis of generosity with a non-episcopal Church.

THE debate in Philadelphia did not make clear that all the negotiations between the two Churches were and are subject to amendment, or even to a "starting over again," except one. This is the issue of recognition of the other Church as part of the "Church of God" and consequently recognition of its ministry and sacraments. The story of our nine years of negotiating with the Presbyterians has clarified this issue. We can see clearly now that without an honest mutual recognition no non-episcopal Church will be able to consider meaningful union without violating its conscience and repudiating its own history.

The hopeful aspect of the action of the General Convention of 1946 is that we are back at last to 1937 and can go forward from there. We have moved "the previous question." Our Church has now to wrestle with the central issues of Church reunion. We should have faced these issues and settled our own internal dilemma of conscience before we burdened another communion with the embarrassments of our disunity. The Episcopal Church, blithely voting a union resolution like that of 1937, and then repudiating those who tried to carry out its mandate, has little notion of the courtesy and Christian forbearance which our Presbyterian brethren have shown. We owe them an act of penance.

A nineteenth century German theologian, Vilmar, once prophesied that the twentieth century would see an agonized wrestling with the doctrine of the Church comparable to that of the early Church with the doctrine of the two natures of Christ. May God not now be laying upon the Anglican Communion the vocation to face the inner tension in our historic fellowship, and with his help to resolve it? The whole ecumenical movement awaits the solution.

The next triennium, in obedience to the resolution passed at Philadelphia, could, if we are all willing, become one of the most fruitful periods in our Church's history. The Quadrilateral is not as provocative a document to elicit frank debate as the "Basis of Union" would have proved itself to be. But a wrestling out of the doctrine of the ecumenical Church may be the burden laid upon us. It will mean agony and heart-searching, and a laying bare of our clashing convictions of conscience. Yet there will be no real peace among us, nor united action on the ecumenical scene, until we have, in repentance and trust, faced each other. We can relegate the debate at Philadelphia to history. We cannot, however, blot out the revelation there made manifest of our torn corporateness. We need healing. May we humbly turn to God for it.

Dramatic Arts and Religion

By
WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD, JR.

I COMMENTED previously on the un-Christian and anti-democratic manner in which Hollywood deals with the racial question. Now comes word from England concerning a picture entitled Men of Two Worlds which, for the past two years, has been before the technicolor cameras of Two Cities Film Co. The picture has not been imported into this country but, from advance comments, one sincerely hopes that it will be.

The theme of the picture is the dramatic conflict between the new and old Africa in the battle against the dreaded scourge of sleeping sickness, which still takes many lives each year. The hero of the film is an African Negro who is educated in England and shows promise of being a truly great pianist. In spite of his artistic genius, he chooses to serve his native people and elects to return to Africa to build and strengthen the communal growth. Back home, he comes into conflict with the dark superstition of witchcraft and the film's main struggle shows him and his white friends trying to bring enlightened medical and social methods to his people.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Musical symbolism is used throughout the film. The picture opens with a shot of a pair of black hands crashing down on a piano keyboard in a midday concert at the London National Gallery. But in back of this and antagonistic to it is the insistent African drum beat, token of ignorance, poverty and disease. The struggle between Beethoven and the jungle drums continues through the whole picture.

Husky, left-wingish Robert Adams, a close friend of Paul Robeson, plays the lead role in the film and the second lead goes to Eseza Makumbi, a Ugandi native who was in high school at the age of seven and is now the first African-trained woman teacher at Kings College. Eric Portman and Phyllis Calvert, both familiar to American audiences, play a British district commissioner and a white woman doctor who assists the educated African youth in his effort to help his people.

A fine social purpose could be achieved if Men of Two Worlds could be shown on the screen of American theaters.

The New Marriage Canons

by Cameron J. Davis

Bishop of Western New York and Chairman of the Commission

AFTER twenty-one years of study the Church has at last adopted canons on holy matrimony which unlike the present canons reflect the doctrine of marriage that is expressed in the Prayer Book form of solemnization. This doctrine is, in brief, that Christian marriage is more than a civil contract; it is a physical, spiritual and mystical union of two persons, like "the mystical union that is betwixt Christ and his Church"; that if such a union is once formed it is life-long and cannot be dissolved by divorce. It is formed by the will of God when two free and competent persons give their mutual consent of heart, mind and will to it; but if that consent is not complete by reason of lack of freedom or competence to give it, the marital bond in the eyes of the Church does not exist; if the consent was complete, given by two free and competent persons, it does exist even though the civil court has annulled the marriage or divorced the parties. It is the responsibility of the bishop to discover whether the bond exists.

The canons were adopted unanimously by the House of Bishops and almost unanimously by the House of Deputies. They differ from the canons proposed by the joint commission in that they make a diocesan court or council of advisors permissive rather than compulsory. Secondly, they do away with the permanent commission and substitute for it by resolution a special committee of the House of Bishops to which is given the same duties as were given the permanent commission, that is, the duties of collecting judgments, publishing findings therefrom to the House of Bishops, and giving advice, in order that a code of precedents may gradually be formed. Thirdly, they restore the "impediments" listed in the present canon with the addition of two more, namely "concurrent contract inconsistent with the contract constituting canonical marriage" which requires right intention, and "defects of personality" which of course derives from the Church's doctrine of marriage as a spiritual union to which consent of heart, mind and will must be given by persons free and competent to give it. Fourthly, they restore by resolution the two sub-sections (a) and (b) of section 3 in canon 15 with the omission of the clause which authorizes a minister under certain conditions to bless the parties to a marriage contracted otherwise than as the Church allows, though the amended canon does not forbid him to do so.

Thus the canons adopted retain the principle on which the joint commission's proposals rest and all of the essential procedure though somewhat simplified. Practically they open a way through which the Church can treat each case of marital failure on its individual merits, and as a problem of character rather than wholly by legal and objective tests. Objective tests may be available in a case, but an analysis of personality traits is the essential in any case to the formation of a judgment. A civil divorce or annulment creates a presumption that defects of personality or some other impediment existed in the first place, but the presumption is not always correct. For example many divorced people find after their divorce that they are still spiritually bound to each other and are therefore married again to each other. The attendant conditions of the marriage, the history of the marriage, and the character and life of the applicant all must have a bearing in determining whether the marital bond exists. Wide discretion is given the Bishops in administering the canons. This is as it should be. It is a pastoral rather than a legal problem. And in dealing with a personality problem legalistic tests cannot be specified.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

ON THE other hand, the Church's doctrine is clearly stated, and the bishops are bound by their vows to conform to and to guard it, as they are to any other doctrine of the Church. We believe Jesus' teaching to be that a God-made marriage is indissoluble, no matter what the civil courts do, but we believe, too, that all marriages are not necessarily God-made marriages, and in such cases the Church may give permission to remarry. Thus the duty of the Church to build united homes is made possible of fulfilment in many cases where formerly she could do nothing; the Church in many cases can now make contact when a new home is contemplated after a previous failure.

It was undoubtedly the consciousness of this all-important duty along with the feeling that our present canon has put up bars to such contact and has also been ineffective in stemming the tide of divorce amongst our people that brought forth unanimous approval of the new canons.

The resolutions adopted with the canons are also important. The most important of all is the following: Resolved, that this Convention shall, and it does hereby, direct that the National Council, through its divisions of Christian education and Christian social relations, in co-operation with such other agencies as may be involved, and in consultation with the commission on holy matrimony, to prepare suitable guides for the preparation of persons for holy matrimony, offices of instruction on the nature of Christian marriage, the responsibilities and duties of family membership, and the doctrine and discipline of this Church in regard to holy matrimony, and to use every effort to obtain the use of such material in the parishes and missions of this Church.

For no canons will work unless the people are instructed; and no canons will maintain the Christian doctrine of marriage unless children and adults alike are taught the blessings and the responsibilities of a united family life.

The canons differ from the present canons in omitting the "exception clause." This is partly because it is of doubtful scriptural authenticity and also because a physical act of infidelity in itself ought not to be taken as determining evidence of the nonexistence of a spiritual union.

In conclusion it should be noted that by inference no minister is permitted to marry a person previously married during the lifetime of the former spouse, unless the applicant is an active member of this Church in good standing who has obtained permission from the bishop of his or her domicile to be so married. This provision will also guard the bishop from a multiplicity of cases. It is to be noted also that the new canons do not go into effect until January 1, 1947.

Enemies of the Church

By

J. CLEMENS KOLB

Chaplain at University of Pennsylvania

THE General Convention has just left our campus. Since the House of Bishops met right here in Houston Hall where I have my office, and the House of Deputies met next door, I was able to see a good deal of the Convention. We have had a good many conventions of one kind or another at the university and we have never had one that had more pleasant people. As that comes not from me but from the managers of the buildings, you may be certain that it is true; for it is the managers and the help that carry the brunt of a convention. The manager of Houston Hall is a Methodist. His wife is an Episcopalian. I told her that if she was going to make an Episcopalian out of her husband, she had better do it before Convention because she would never get him afterward. But now Convention is over and I am going to baptize their baby in the Episcopal Church. Her husband said he met only one man in the whole Convention who wasn't a gentleman. He is strong for the Episcopalians.

Furthermore, both in the House of Deputies and in the House of Bishops, there was a courtesy that was good to see. One had the feeling that even when the Church was most sharply divided, the arguments always rose above the personal.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

There was never a hint of such a convention as that reported by the historian, Ammianus Marcellinus, in the year 355, when two bishops, Damasus and Ursinus "engaged in bitter strife because of their opposing interests and the supporters of both parties went even so far as conflicts ending in bloodshed and death. In the struggle, in which Damasus was victorious through the efforts of the party which favored him, it is a well-known fact that in the Basilica Sincinius, where the assembly of the Christian sect is held, in a single day one hundred thirty-seven corpses of the slain were found; and it was only with difficulty that the long-continued frenzy of the people was afterward quieted."

There was no long-continued frenzy at the 55th Triennial. There was no frenzy at all. Some people said that the majority report on unity would split the Church. It didn't. Even if it had been voted on, it wouldn't. There are those who say that if we ever achieve organic unity with the Presbyterian Church, it will split the Church. I don't believe it. If we didn't split on the Civil War, I don't believe we are going to split on the Presbyterians. If nothing else, we have exhibited a genius for staying within the same fold and we have proven time and again that the Church has very wide arms to enfold the differences among her people.

Yet, everybody knows that there is a great deal of tension within the Episcopal Church—far too much tension. We are not the only Church that is troubled within as well as without. And yet I am wondering if we do not have more than most? For while other Churches may be split on the liberals versus the conservatives, our own basic differences spring from another source and that is from our two heritages, Catholic and Protestant. Everyone has heard the saying that half the Episcopal Church looks towards Rome and the other half toward Geneva. There is just enough truth in that saying to keep it alive. The pity of it is that I can't see why we can't have bifocal vision and look at both Rome and Geneva. In fact, in just that kind of vision lies the real solution to our problem. One of the reasons for our present differences and tensions is the fact that whether we say so or not, we would like to apply the solution of the Roman Church to our internal tensions. The Roman Church brooks no opposition. There is no such thing as a loyal opposition within her fold. The liberal movement of the last century was crushed. The present day growth of the liturgical movement within the Roman Catholic Church is due in part to the need for it and in part to the fact that it is the only place where a man with a liberal spirit can take a stand. Liberalism in the Roman Church is coming in via the back door of the liturgical movement.

I THINK that there are Anglo-Catholics and Evangelicals within the Episcopal Church who would like to apply the Roman solution. They would like to make the whole Church Evangelical or the whole Church Anglo-Catholic, and they bend all their efforts toward this end. If a church is vacant, no matter what its churchmanship, one party would put in a high churchman who would gradually "educate" the people; and the other party would try to see that the new rector was a black-tie Protestant, sure to lead the people in the right way. Now that is wrong, and everybody down in his heart knows it is wrong; but some of this sort of thing goes on just the same.

Fortunately, in our Church neither side has the power and most of the leaders have too much Christianity and too much realization of the true history of their Church to want it to be merely Catholic or merely Protestant.

There is another solution common among evangelical Churches. When they disagree, they split into minor bodies until there are sects within sects within sects. I don't know how many branches of the Mennonite Church there are, but they are many. The causes of the schisms within some of the evangelical bodies would be humorous if they were not so pathetic.

What is the real solution to this problem? The other day at Convention one of the younger bishops made a remark I like: "I have one ecclesiastical enemy," he said, "and he is the man who is not an inclusive churchman." That seems to me the only statement that a good Episcopalian can make and the only stand that a good Episcopalian can take, insistence on the inclusiveness of the Church. When a man says the Evangelical influence is ruining the Church, I say, let him be anathema. Or when a man says that the Anglo-Catholics are ruining the Church, let him be anathema, too.

I grant that it is the lunatic fringe on both sides that causes most of the trouble; but sometimes we vote for a candidate on the lunatic fringe not because we think he is a very good churchman but because he will fight our side of the battle. Now if there is anyone who simply goes out to make the Church as Anglo-Catholic as he can or as Evangelical as he can, let him know that he is not an Episcopalian, that he is a sectarian—and the worst kind of a sectarian, for he is trying to create a sect within the Church and he blindly, foolishly thinks that a part is the whole and that one side of the Church, his side, can speak or ought to speak for the whole Church.

The outward courtesy at our Convention was good to see; but it will be still better when the outward courtesy springs from a deep conviction that Catholic and Protestant belong in the Episcopal Church, and that both Rome and Geneva are capital cities in the Kingdom of God.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

A Summary of Action Taken By General Convention

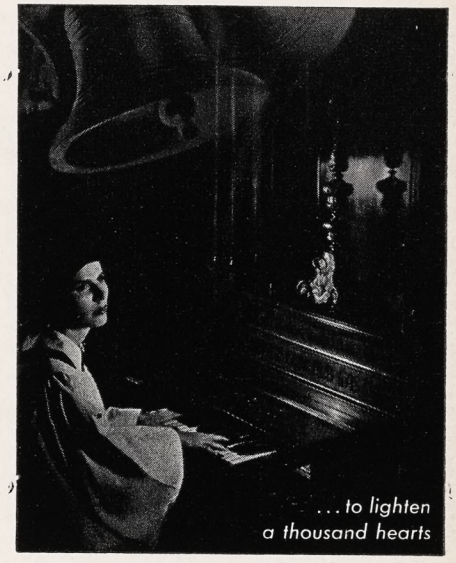
Very Little Legislation Stands Out as Being Significant Except the New Marriage Canon

Edited by Philip L. Shutt

Philadelphia: — In this brief review of action taken at General Convention we will say nothing here about what undoubtedly were the most important: unity; marriage canon; budget and program; resolutions on social issues; elections. The first three of these are reviewed and appraised by articles in this number; social issues were covered in the story on page 5 last week, and the elections of course were reported in our issue of September 26th. As a matter of fact practically everything else done at General Convention has been reported already but we present this summary with the hope that it will be useful to many readers.

There were many new bishops who watched the precedings of their elders with what must have been secret amusement. However, two forward steps were taken by the Convention, the first of which was the restoration of the division of Christian Education to the rank of a department with increased power and responsibility in producing Church school material (a sore point with many clergy) and supervising youth work, the second was the taking of initial action in providing for a suffragan bishop to have charge of the Church's work in the armed forces to be finally decided in 1949. After a brief, but stimulating debate, the canonical retirement of all bishops at 72 was made definite. If the pension and allowance for such bishops amounted to less than $2,500 the difference would be made up from General Convention funds.

A joint commission was established to look into the matter of providing an official residence for the Presiding Bishop near New York together with a chapel, a house for guests of the national Church, and dwellings for certain staff members. A proposal to give the Presiding Bishop an area of jurisdiction in Arlington County, Virginia, was rejected. The House of Bishops also accepted the resignations of 12 bishops for reasons of age or ill health, the resignation of Bishop John Chanler White of Springfield causing the greatest surprise since he announced it during the closing hours of the Convention, after having said previously that he would not resign under any circumstances.



The House of Deputies had one of its finest presiding officers in the person of Justice Owen J. Roberts, and created a precedent by seating Mrs. Randolph Dyer of St. Louis as the first woman deputy. But by a narrow vote defeated a proposal to change "layman" in the Constitution to "lay persons" which would have permitted women to serve as deputies in the future. (See WITNESS editorial, Oct. 3). The Convention voted to increase the Pension asssessment from 7½ per cent to 10 per cent to compensate for reduction in assumed rate of interest due to decline of yield on investments but not until after much verbal protest. Other action saw the deputies establish several new commissions including one to prepare a canon defining "communicant," one to consider the raising of a fund to supplement inadequate pensions of the clergy and their dependents, one to study business methods, responsibilities, control, ownership, and property management of Church affiliated institutions all to report to the 1949 General Convention.

Another important action which received less attention than it should was the appointment of committees to study the whole set-up at the Church Mission House and to study the relationship of the Presiding Bishop to the whole work of the Church.

Little need be said about the Triennial of the Woman's Auxiliary since there is little legislation at this conference. But they did present a record-breaking Thank Offering of more than $1,600,000; listened to inspiring speeches by Bishop Oxnam of the Methodist Church, Frances Perkins, former secretary of labor, and Bishop Angus Dun of Washington. The women, as usual, were forward-looking and progressive in dealing with social and international questions and so changed their constitution and by-laws as to go a long way toward ending racial discrimination at future Triennials.

To this reporter, attending his first General Convention the most impressive sight was the vast array of personalities from all over the world who, although sometimes taking part in heated arguments on the Convention floor, yet met as friends outside the deliberative halls. That there was bustle and confusion was to be expected, but the business of both houses was carried forward with courtesy and dispatch unusual in the handling of so many people.

The only side-shows of interest were the private sessions of partisans on the unity question, reminding one of smoke-filled political convention

As lovely to see as it is to hear, the Liberty carillon produces the realities of tons of great bells from the magic of only a few ounces of metal. Precision tuned and with a musical range from three to five octaves, it is played with all the artistic expression and effect of a fine carillon of cast bells.

And now Liberty Leadership has produced another amazing first — a two-octave instrument for limited budgets but with all the tonal beauty of "The Big Liberty". We cordially invite you to hear it at a resident service associate near you. Write for his address today, and plan now to have this magnificent Voice of the Cathedrals ringing from your church this Christmas.

LIBERTY Carillons Inc.
CARILLON HEADQUARTERS
551 FIFTH AVENUE, New York 17, N.Y.
CARILLON DESIGNERS • BUILDERS • CONSULTANTS
CREATORS OF AUDIBLE MEMORIAL SHRINES

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

rooms, and the meetings of commissions and extra-curricular Church organizations for dinners, speeches, and propaganda.

A word of summary should be said, too about Philadelphia's hospitality. The hotel personnel were courteous; the street car conductors invariably helpful, and the taxi-drivers friendly.

UN Delegates Welcome

New York (RNS) : — A resolution welcoming officers and delegates of the United Nations General Assembly, scheduled to convene in this country Oct. 23, was adopted here by the executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches.

"We pray that God," said the resolution, "may so guide and bless their deliberations that the peoples may be led to undertake those curative and creative tasks of reconstruction through which new international fellowship may be achieved and the perils of our common insecurity may be allayed."

Displaced Persons

New York (RNS) :—President Truman and members of Congress were urged here by the executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches to take immediate steps to permit the entry into this country of a large number of displaced persons, pointing out that their plight may be even more critical when UNRRA comes to an end.

Vestry Conferences

Syracuse, N. Y.: — So that the work of the Church at home and abroad may be better known, a series of ten vestry conferences are being held throughout the diocese of Central New York addressed by Bishop Harry S. Kennedy of Honolulu, George W. Laycock, director of the Hospital of the Good Samaritan, Raleigh, N. C., and the Rev. Thomas V. B. Barrett of New York, secretary of the National Council's division of college work.

Similar conferences for the clergy on the subject of worship have been recently conducted by Bishop Malcolm Peabody assisted by president John M. Potter of Hobart College, and Rev. Massey H. Shepherd of Cambridge, columnist for THE WITNESS.

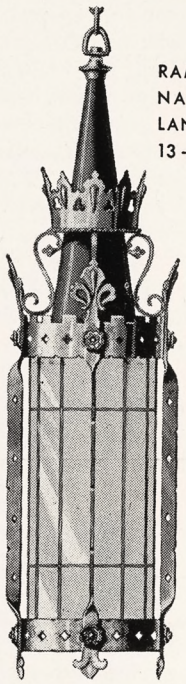
J. WIPPELL & Co LTD
Established 18th Century
Clerical Tailors & Robe Makers

SPECIAL OFFER: CLERGY CASSOCKS

Wippell Cassocks, individually cut and tailored, incorporate all the little refinements of detail which make for so much extra comfort and convenience in wear

Single or Double Breasted, of Fine All Wool Serge $39.50

Quotation does not include Cincture, Belt or Girdle



Clergy Surplice, Slightly Gathered
Pure Irish Linen $13.50

Clerical Cloaks to cover cassock, Waterproof Melton $39.00

Patterns sent on application

55 & 56, High Street, EXETER, England
(also 11, Tufton Street, Westminster, S.W.1, London, Eng.)

RAMBUSCH
NAVE LANTERN
13-XG-54

Craftsmanship and Correct Lighting

Graceful form and fine craftsmanship, coupled with the latest features of correct lighting make this lantern a favorite among clergy and church architects alike. If you have a problem in church lighting, and are interested in reading a searching analysis of fundamental principles and latest practice in Church Lighting, write for a copy of our new free illustrated booklet.

RAMBUSCH
Designers Decorators and Craftsmen
2 West 45th St. ~ New York 19, N.Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Tribute to Rector

Albany:—The Rev. Charles W. Findlay, for nearly 25 years rector of St. Andrew's Church here, and a leader in community activities, was honored recently by a reception attended by hundreds of friends who came to bid him farewell as he left to become rector of St. Philip's, Wiscasset, Maine. During his rectorship the new church was erected and its debt paid off so that it may soon be consecrated.

Study Economics

New York (RNS):—A national conference on the Church and the economic order to instill in lay leadership a desire to study from a cooperative standpoint the relation of the church to the economic order will be held under the auspices of the Federal Council of Churches in Pittsburgh, Pa., Feb. 18-20, 1947. Some 400 delegates from many religious groups are expected to be present, mostly laymen.

Parish Birthday

Baltimore: — The Church of the Holy Nativity here, served by the Rev. Hugh W. S. Powers, will celebrate its thirty-fifth anniversary as a parish the week of October 13. A full program has been planned for the week climaxed by a confirmation service and a service of thanksgiving at which Bishop Noble C. Powell of Maryland will preside. A free-will offering has been asked to help remove a $49,000 mortgage on the church. During the rectorship of Mr. Powers the parish has had a most successful career, and has made a place for itself in the surrounding community.

School Opens

Raleigh, N. C.:—St. Augustine's College here opened its 79th year recently with a record enrollment of 360 Negro students taxing the capacity of the school. More than half are ex-GI's. Bishop Edwin A. Penick of North Carolina was the principal speaker at the opening service.

Painless Death

New York (RNS): — Voluntary euthanasia, which Webster's says is the "practice of painlessly putting to death persons suffering from incurable disease as an act of mercy" practiced under careful safeguards is not contrary to Christianity, according to a statement by 40 Protestant clergymen of this city. Prominent Episcopalians signing the statement were the Rev. Russell Bowie, Union Theological seminary, and Editor Guy Emery Shipler of the Churchman. They were joined by Unitarian, Universalist, Presbyterian, and other clergymen.

Church Crusade

Los Angeles (RNS):—Twenty denominations will take part in a huge Church crusade here beginning Oct. 13 under the direction of the Rev. Guy Black, associate secretary of the general board of evangelism of the Methodist Church. A house to house survey will be conducted as part of a religious census and a visitation campaign closing with a series of services at the great Shrine auditorium will anticipate the conversion of many to Christianity.

Anti-Semitism

London (By wireless to RNS*)*:—The rise of anti-Semitism and the denial of human rights to other religious minorities in Europe are evils "which civilized men cannot tolerate," Archbishop Geoffrey Francis Fisher of Canterbury declared at an inaugural rally here on the eve of the week-long international conference of Christians and Jews at Ox-

The September selection of The Religious Book Club

THE STORY OF THE FAITH

By William Alva Gifford

A book by a scholar for the man in the street which gives a vivid and readable history of Christianity, from its Hebrew heritage to the present-day. Thirty centuries of world and church history are brought together in an intelligible whole, showing how the growth of the faith was related to the times. Its characters become alive, its institutions are set in their contemporary scene, and Christian theology is stated in the simplest terms and connected with its early sources in history and experience.

Dr. Gifford devoted the leisure hours of more than ten years to the writing of this comprehensive volume. It is the result of many more years of scholarly study and research. His purpose was to give to those people who do not have professional training in either philosophy or theology a book which would help them to be intelligent about the Christian Church — how it acquired its faith, what is its present position and what are its prospects.

$5.00

MACMILLAN 60 Fifth Ave., New York 11

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

ford university. Of the recent King David hotel bombing he said, that, "the deed was not done by the Jews but by some Jews and has been utterly condemned by Jewish leaders in Palestine and throughout the world . . . Let us be careful not to condemn the whole people of Jews or others for the evil deeds of some."

At the same conference Jewish religious leaders urged unity of Christianity and Judaism in the common task of promoting world peace in a message prepared for presentation. The statement was issued from the "Jews of Jerusalem."

Hope in Church

Washington (RNS): — The church can—and will—take the lead in establishing permanent peace by helping to channel atomic energy into ways that will help the human race, Rep. Ellis E. Patterson (D.-Calif.) told the House of Representatives in a speech.

"Through the voice of the Church the people will be informed and in turn their representatives in government will take heed. Atomic energy has appeared upon the world's horizon as a force which can glorify or destroy man, the choice is up to man himself. More than ever before, we, as decent citizens of whatever nation we may belong to, must take advantage of the wisdom of the great religious leaders to guide us into safe waters."

Seek Labor Support

Milwaukee, Wis.: — A drive to "mobilize the forces of the Church to carry the gospel more effectively to the farm and factory workers of the nation" was mapped here at the annual conference of The Methodist Church's board of evangelism. James S. Chubb, associate secretary of the board, charged that "labor unions are not aware of the existence of God and the Church, and the Church is not aware of the existence of labor unions." He said "We must reveal the gospel to them." To facilitate its program, the board acted to establish five additional schools of evangelism throughout the nation, increasing to 17 the total number it maintains. In addition, the Church will step up its use of radio programs and its distribution in homes of evangelistic publications.

Canon Is Honored

Washington: — Canon Merritt F. Williams of Washington Cathedral has been awarded the gold star by the navy. It is "for meritorious service in connection with the combat operations against the enemy as chaplain aboard the West Virginia during the period of July 1, 1944 to July 13, 1945." A veteran of both world wars, Chaplain Williams had previously been awarded the bronze star for his services to wounded crewmen aboard the war-lost aircraft carrier Wasp.

Goes After the Men

Buffalo, N. Y.:—The average American church has a preponderance of women in its pews, says Dean Edward R. Welles of St. Paul's Cathedral. Declaring that "religion is failing if men aren't active in the church," Dean Welles hopes to raise the ratio of men in his own congregation in which women usually outnumber men 3 to 1. Instead of doing all their residential calling during the day—the custom in most churches—Dean Welles and his two canons, the Rev. Robert E. Merry and the Rev. Henry H. Wiesbauer, will make some of their calls at night "to reach the men who work days." In some cases calls will be made on non-attending members at their places of business.

The junior vestry will organize a lay team of more than 100 men "to try to sell the rest of the men on the idea of coming to church regularly." In addition the cathedral will publish a magazine "for men only" and will run newspaper and radio advertising "slanted" for men.

Tri-State Rest Home

(near Port Jervis, New York)

Restful Christian surroundings - Open all year - Beautifully situated - 35 acres high and dry - On the scenic Delaware River - An ideal vacation, summer or winter . Wonderful meals - Permanent guests accepted - Special attention to the elderly and convalescents - Nurse in attendance - Reasonable rates - Send for Free illustrated folder.

ELMO L. BATEMAN
Director
Irvington 11 New Jersey

Creative Thinking On the Creed

WITH A CONFIRMATION CLASS

By
the Rev. William Grime, M.A.
St. Paul's Church, Great Neck, N.Y.

Foreword
by
Dr. Adelaide Teague Case

"A grand job of teaching coming alive! This pamphlet deserves a very wide distribution."
—Theodore O. Wedel

The Department of Christian Education of the Diocese of Long Island
170 Remsen Street
Brooklyn, N. Y.

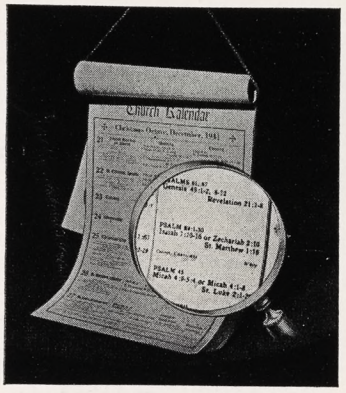
(THIRD PRINTING)
Ten cents per copy.

A Thousand Years of Craftsmanship are fulfilled in every Moller organ

The creative artistry that designs and constructs every part of a Moller organ owes its existence less to modern inspiration than to a continuance of the past. It is the direct inheritance of a tradition, a creed of craftsmanship developed by medieval masters, and maintained today by hands and minds that work with an artist's dedication.

Thus, the Moller organ made for you is made with the craftsman's skill that prefers to take pains in the cause of perfection. It is an individual master-work, fashioned by artists. Plans of the inner and external structure are drawn expressly for your needs. Expert draughtsmen study the setting you propose and prepare special drawings of exterior design.

The materials are selected by experts, treated by exclusive processes that assure long wear. Valves, wiring, wind chests, are constructed by time-proved methods. Piping and voicing are individually handled by specialists. Only artists are willing to devote such tireless concentration to detail. Only artists have a hand in the construction of a Moller organ.



M.P. MÖLLER
THE ARTIST OF ORGANS · THE ORGAN OF ARTISTS
HAGERSTOWN, MARYLAND

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

A KALENDAR PLUS . . .

The Christian Year and Church Kalendar 1947

A Kalendar which contains 112 pages of vital information for all Church workers.

With the necessary revisions it has proven its value for 71 years.

This Kalendar as you will see in the illustration is arranged for hanging on the wall and is beautifully and tastefully printed.

It is worth noting that you have a Kalendar plus . . . the dates of the Christian Year and the days and festivals of the Church Year . . . plus the many uses listed below.

You will find . . .

Church Calendar
Church Colors
Morning and Evening Lectionary
Saint's Days
Altar Linen
Ember Days
Rules for Sacristans
Suggested Hymns
Church Holidays
Altar Society Notes
Vestments, their color, care, and use
Church Dictionary
Duties of Wardens and Vestrymen
Suggestions for Servers
The Rector, his election and call

Why not discover the value of this Kalendar this year, if you have not already used it, and have at your fingertips the Churchly information you need.

An excellent Christmas gift for a friend.

Published November 1st.

Price $1.25 ($1.35 postpaid)

Order from the publishers or your bookseller.

H. M. JACOBS COMPANY

Publishers

1907 Walnut Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Write us for
Organ Information
AUSTIN ORGANS, Inc.
Hartford, Conn.

Memorial Windows
In accordance with the best traditions of the craft. Notable installations in forty states and five foreign countries.
Illustrated material on request
The D'Ascenzo Studios
founded 1896
1604 Summer Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

ALTAR BREADS ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED
SAINT MARY'S CONVENT
KENOSHA • WISCONSIN

MENEELY BELL CO.
22 RIVER ST., TROY, N. Y.
BELLS

R. GEISSLER, INC.
71-79 W. 45th St., New York 19, N. Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS
EST 1837

VESTMENTS
Cassocks - Surplices - Stoles - Scarves
Silks - Altar Cloths - Embroideries
Priest Cloaks - Rabats - Collars
Custom Tailoring for Clergymen
1837 Church Vestment Makers Over One Hundred Years 1946

COX SONS & VINING, Inc.
131 East 23rd Street, New York 10, N.Y.

Need a LAXATIVE?
Black-Draught is,
1-Usually prompt
2-Usually thorough
3-Always economical

25 to 40 doses only 25¢
Get BLACK-DRAUGHT
CAUTION: USE ONLY AS DIRECTED

Archbishop in Albany

Albany: — Archbishop Geoffrey Francis Fisher of Canterbury finished his tour of Canada and the United States by visiting here Sept. 23 and 24. He preached to an overflow congregation at the cathedral, speaking convincingly of the world problems faced jointly by Britain and America, and also set forth in his persuasive way the catholicity and evangelical character of the Anglican communion.

Bogus Degrees

Montreal (RNS):—Bogus degrees are out so far as the United Church of Canada is concerned. Its general council voted here that degrees must be certified by the presbyteries. "We don't want men in the ministry getting degrees by reading a couple of books, writing a thesis and paying $2 to somebody outside our jurisdiction," General Secretary Gordon Sisco said.

Brooklyn Slipping

Brooklyn (RNS): — Traditionally known as the "city of churches" Brooklyn has experienced a severe decline of organized religion, according to a survey released here by the Brooklyn Church and Mission Federation. It also shows that Roman Catholicism and Judaism have declined, but Negroes and Lutherans have been saving the day for Brooklyn Protestantism. The growth of the Negro population however has pointed up another acute problem for the churches, say the survey. A lay commission of all churches is planned to help check the decline.

AN ACCORDION

WANTED: An accordion by a missionary in Arizona who would find much use for such a portable musical instrument in holding midweek services in outlying areas of his mission field where no other music is available. This request has Bishop Kinsolving's support. Perhaps you have an accordion not now in use you could donate for this purpose. If so, write Box 23, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

POSITION OFFERED

WANTED: Churchwoman experienced in institutional buying and planning of meals to take charge of kitchen. Salary and maintenance. Particulars on request. Write Mother Superior, C. T., Bethany Home, Glendale, Ohio.

POSITION WANTED

Woman, eighteen years' experience in Religious Education, desires change of work. Write Box 10, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

POSITION OFFERED

Trained social worker, aged 30-40, for large New York Episcopal Church. Family case work experience in religious organization preferred. Write Box 12, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

ALTAR OFFERED

Will donate altar and canopy, Romanesque style, large, to any church which can use it. Material is wood with gilded ecclesiastical coloring. Presently in St. Martin's Church, New York. It might be cut down for use in a smaller church. In excellent order. Write Rev. J. H. Johnson, 230 Lenox Avenue, New York 27, N. Y.

Everything for the Episcopal Church
but vestments
A broad statement but we'd like to prove it.
Ammidon and Company
Horace L. Varian
Horace L. Varian, Jr.
31 South Frederick Street
Baltimore 2, Maryland

PURE IRISH LINENS NOW IN STOCK
for all Church needs, supplies constantly arriving, good qualities, also fine cottons. Samples free.
Mary Fawcett Company
Plainfield, N. J. Box 146

CATHEDRAL STUDIOS
Washington & London, England. Linens and materials by the yard, surplices, albs, Altar Linens, stoles, burses & veils. Materials by the yard. See my NEW BOOK "CHURCH EMBROIDERY" & CHURCH VESTMENTS a complete instruction. 128 pages, 95 illus. Price $5.67. And my HANDBOOK for ALTAR GUILDS, price 50c. Miss L. V. Mackrille, 11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington 15, D.C. 30 minutes from U. S. Treasury. Tel Wisconsin 2752.

SURPLICES — STOLES
VESTMENTS
CHURCH HANGINGS
ALTAR LINENS
CASSOCKS
CLERICAL SUITS — CLOAKS
RABATS—RABAT VESTS—COLLARS—SHIRTS
Choir Vestments in All Styles
Inquiries Invited
C. M. ALMY & SON, INC.
562 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.

The Payne-Spiers Studios Inc.
Studios at Paterson, New Jersey
Carved Wood
Chancel Renovations Church Furnishings
Murals Memorials Tablets
Stained Glass
-- Inquiries Solicited --

A SERVICE OF HOLY BAPTISM
Prepared from various sources by
The Rev. Joseph H. Titus
Submitted for consideration of the Church as a substitute for the Prayer Book Service.
$4 for 100 copies
10c for single copy
The WITNESS
135 Liberty Street New York 6, N.Y.

STAMMER?
This new 128-page book, "Stammering, Its Cause and Correction," describes the Bogue Unit Method for scientific correction of stammering and stuttering — successful for 45 years. Free — no obligation.
GET THIS FREE BOOK!
Benjamin N. Bogue, Dept. 5800, Circle Tower, Indianapolis 4, Ind.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

HENRY P. VAN DUSEN
Dean of Union Seminary

As a long-time and warm admirer of THE WITNESS, will you permit me to say that the lead article in your August 22nd issue strikes me as one of the most regrettable pieces of irresponsible journalism which has appeared in the religious press in some time.

You head your article "Commission on World Affairs Seen As Anti-Russian." You state that the new Commission falls under suspicion of advocating "bringing about a peaceful solution to international difficulties along apparently Vatican-inspired lines."

There is not, so far as I can discover, the remotest justification for either of these charges. It happens that I served as chairman of a committee at the Cambridge Conference which was charged with drawing up the charter for the new Commission. In the discussion regarding the Commission, there was not one word uttered, either publicly or privately, which could possibly be interpreted as giving it an orientation either Anti-Russian or pro-Vatican. The relevant paragraph of the Commission's Charter is the last of the aims to which its efforts are to be directed:

"9. To concert from time to time with other organizations holding similar objectives in the advancement of particular ends."

An earlier phrasing of this paragraph read somewhat as follows: "To cooperate from time to time with other organizations, Catholic and Jewish, holding similar objectives, etc." The wording was changed to eliminate the word "cooperate" on the ground that this might suggest a closer collaboration than was possible or intended, and by the elimination of the specific reference to "Catholic and Jewish" organizations on the ground that this reference was too restrictive. Incidentally, these changes were made on the suggestion of a member of the Conference against whom you and your correspondents level special attack.

As for Professor Fletcher's comment, Dr. Fletcher talks sheer nonsense. He speaks of "the World Council's bid for tandem harness with the Vatican." He says, "For many years the ecumenical Protestants of America have, with conscious or unconscious political motives, sought unity with the schismatic (anti-Soviet) elements of Orthodoxy." "The World Council's proposal would close the door on further understanding with the Eastern Churches." He concludes, "Deliberate identification of the 'Protestant Bloc' with the Vatican is no doubt a clarification of its tendencies, but it deals a tragic blow to peace at the secular level, and to ecumenicity at the Church level."

There is not one iota of truth in Professor Fletcher's charges. The same sequence of World Council meetings of which the Cambridge Conference was one took further steps to reestablish relations with all the Churches of Eastern Orthodoxy including the Church of Russia—an objective on which the World Council has been unremittingly at work.

Mr. Melish is equally irresponsible, and untruthful, when he declares that the Cambridge Conference called "for top-level cooperation with the Vatican." There could be no more damning disclosure of the unfairness of your whole article than the objection to Mr. Dulles as one of the American members of the new Commission on International Affairs on the ground that he is anti-Soviet, combined with the careful omission of any reference to the fact that another of the American members of the Commission is Bishop Oxnam whose frank and vigorous criticisms of Vatican policy are known to the whole Protestant world.

This letter contains strong words. They are strong, they are not exaggerated. How can we hope to educate ordinary church folk in an intelligent and fair attitude toward world problems when Christian journals from which they have a right to expect trustworthy guidance stoop to such distortion of truth?

ANSWER: We asked a number of Episcopalians to comment on the newly organized committee on international affairs of the World Council and also on Mr. Dulles' statement reported from London that the committee hoped to work closely with the Vatican. The Presiding Bishop, Mr. Melish and Prof. Fletcher were kind enough to respond and we were glad to print their comments. There are two facts we would point out: first, the Vatican is, as everyone knows, anti-Soviet to the point of being willing to risk a third world war. Mr. Dulles, high in the affairs of the World Council, has connections that can be described only as fascist, as was pointed out in THE WITNESS for September 19, where we gave chapter and verse. These two facts, in our judgment, justified Prof. Fletcher and Mr. Melish in making the statements that appeared in our issue of August 22.

* * *

MR. R. D. CRAIG
Layman of Philadelphia

Apparently all your excitement about the efforts of John Foster Dulles to get the World Council to play ball with the Vatican in their anti-Soviet game is a false alarm. You uttered your solemn warning in your September 19 number and then followed in the 26th issue with the editorial "Rome Declines." I take it that even if Mr. Dulles and the Council are ready to join in a holy crusade against Russia that the Vatican prefers to carry on alone.

Christchurch
VIRGINIA
SCHOOL for BOYS

Intermediate School. Seventh to Ninth Grades. Upper School. College Entrance Requirements. This school is a member of the system of schools in the diocese of Virginia. Apply to The Headmaster, Christchurch School, Christchurch, Va.

Virginia Episcopal School
Lynchburg, Virginia
Prepares boys for colleges and university. Splendid environment and excellent corps of teachers. High standard in scholarship and athletics. Healthy and beautiful location in the mountains of Virginia.
For catalogue apply to
George L. Barton, Jr., Ph.D. Headmaster,
Box 408

SCHOOLS

The Hospital of Saint Barnabas and the University of Newark offer a full course in NURSING
to qualified High School graduates. Scholarships available. Classes enter in February and September
Apply to
Director of Nursing
HOSPITAL OF SAINT BARNABAS
685 High Street Newark, N. J.

DE VEAUX SCHOOL
FOUNDED 1852
A Church school for boys. Thorough preparation for college. Military system of student government, developing sense of responsibility. Charges for grades seven and eight $1000; grades nine through twelve $1050. For catalog, address THE HEADMASTER, DeVeaux School, Niagara Falls, New York.

HOLDERNESS
In the White Mountains. College Preparatory and General Courses. Music and Crafts. For boys 12-19. All sports including riding. 200 acres of woods. New fireproof building. Individual attention. Home atmosphere.
Rev. Edric A. Weld, Rector
Box W. Plymouth, N. H.

MARGARET HALL
Under Sisters of St. Helena
(Episcopal)
Small country boarding and day school for girls, from primary through high school. Accredited college preparatory. Modern building recently thoroughly renovated includes gymnasium and swimming pool. Campus of six acres with ample playground space, hockey field and tennis court. Riding. Board and Tuition $800. For catalog, address: Sister Rachel, Prin. O.S.H., Box A. Versailles, Kentucky.

FORK UNION
MILITARY ACADEMY
An Honor Christian School with the highest academic rating. Upper School prepares for university or business. ROTC. Every modern equipment. Junior School from six years. Housemother. Separate building. Catalogue. Dr. J. J. Wicker, Fork Union, Virginia.

CARLETON COLLEGE
Laurence M. Gould, D.Sc., President
Carleton is a co-educational liberal arts college of limited enrollment and is recognized as the Church College of Minnesota.
Address: Assistant to the President
CARLETON COLLEGE
Northfield Minnesota

KEMPER HALL
KENOSHA, WISCONSIN
Boarding and day school for girls offering thorough college preparation and training for purposeful living. Study of the Fine Arts encouraged. Complete sports program. Junior School department. Beautiful lake shore campus. Under direction of the Sisters of St Mary. For catalogue address: Box WT

LENOX SCHOOL
A Church School in the Berkshire Hills for boys 12-18 emphasizing Christian ideals and character through simplicity of plant and equipment, moderate tuition, the cooperative self-help system, and informal, personal relationships among boys and faculty.
Rev. Robert L. Curry, Headmaster
Lenox Massachusetts

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Enrich your life...

...and increase your reading pleasure through the RELIGIOUS BOOK CLUB

 You can qualify for our Club's free services by purchasing only six books of your own choice in the course of a year. You are invited to accept the following valuable benefits *at no cost!

1 YOU RECEIVE, delivered at your door, any book you order, at bookstore prices or less. You avoid the time, trouble and expense of shopping. You get any book in English when you want it—your own choice of spiritual volumes, or biographies, fiction, history, travel or cultural works.

2 YOU GET one book free for each 4 "primary selections" you accept. A "primary selection" is the work named by our Club's Advisory Committee as the outstanding book of spiritual value published during that month. You NEVER have to take a "primary selection," but if you do, it counts toward a free book.

3 YOU SAVE money frequently by a "double selection," two books offered at a substantial, combined discount. (You accept or reject either book, just as you please.)

4 YOU ARE INFORMED in advance each month of important new general and religious books in the free Religious Book Club Bulletin, telling you of books with real spiritual value that you might otherwise miss in the flood of ephemeral works.

You may ask how our Club can give you so many extras at no cost. Here is the answer: Publishers allow us a discount from regular prices for our help in distributing their books. That enables us to give members free books, a free monthly book-bulletin, and frequently lower prices on primary selections. Your book budget goes much further . . . while we still have enough left to run the Club.

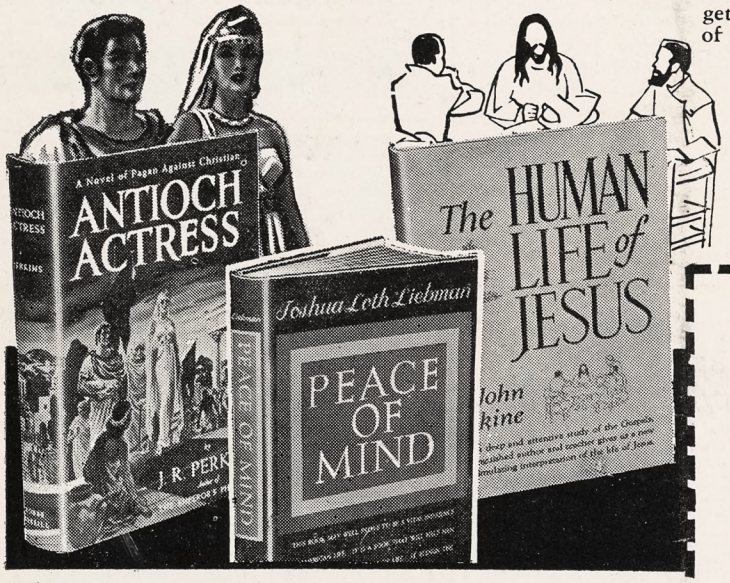
So you have everything to gain by joining. There is no fee. You do not agree to spend any set amount. You may return any book you don't like, and get full credit. You get the book you would read anyhow, for the same price or less, plus a few cents postage.

YOU ONLY AGREE TO BUY 6 BOOKS A YEAR—YOUR OWN CHOICE . . . AT YOUR OWN TIME!

We cordially invite you to enjoy membership in our Club, now in its nineteenth year. In that period, we have distributed millions of volumes to ministers and spiritually-minded laymen. Your best guarantee of the Club's high standards is the noted men and women of our advisory committee, listed below.

As soon as you enroll, you will get your first Religious Book Club Bulletin and your free book noted below. We will also show you how to take full advantage of your membership and how to secure this month's primary selection.

To join the Club, just fill in and send this coupon. You risk nothing, because you can drop your membership in 30 days if you want to. Mail the coupon to begin enjoying our Club's benefits this month.



IMPORTANT:—If you join our Club within 30 days you will get—in addition to all other benefits—your choice of any one of the following best-sellers free!

ANTIOCH ACTRESS, J. R. Perkins (regular price $2.75). Colorful novel of pagan against Christian.

PEACE OF MIND, J. L. Liebman (regular price $3.00). Brilliant blend of religion and psychology.

THE HUMAN LIFE OF JESUS, John Erskine (regular price $3.00). An absorbing and reverent biography.

Just fill in and mail this coupon today. You risk nothing.

EDITORIAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE: Chairman—Rev. Samuel McCrea Cavert. Members—Rev. Lloyd C. Douglas • John Foster Dulles • Right Rev. Angus Dun • John Erskine • Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick • Mildred McAfee Horton • Rev. John A. Mackay • Rev. Charles Clayton Morrison • Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam • Charles Seymour • Pitirim A. Sorokin • Rear Admiral William N. Thomas • Rees Edgar Tulloss.

THE RELIGIOUS BOOK CLUB
Port Authority Bldg., 76 Ninth Ave., N. Y. 11

Please enroll me as a member, and send me at once my copy of the FREE book I have checked below. I am not committed to take more than six books during the coming year and I agree to notify you promptly during any month in which no book is wanted. I reserve the right to cancel my subscription within 30 days merely by returning the book or books accepted under this offer. The price of the book to be sent to me each month is to be retail price (less if double selection) plus postage. A bill is to be sent with each book and I agree to pay it within ten days of receipt. Please send me as my FREE book:

- ☐ Antioch Actress, by R. Perkins
- ☐ Peace of Mind, by Joshua Loth Liebman
- ☐ The Human Life of Jesus, by John Erskine

Name.....

Street and No.....

City, Zone, State 12

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The WITNESS

10¢ A COPY

LIBRARY COPY

OCTOBER 17, 1946

RIDING IS A FAVORITE SPORT FOR GIRLS AT HANNAH MORE ACADEMY

DISCIPLINE OF THE LIBERAL

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

THE CATHEDRAL OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE
NEW YORK CITY
Sundays: 8, 9, 11, Holy Communion; 10, Morning Prayer; 4, Evening Prayer; Sermons 11 and 4.
Weekdays: 7:30, 8 (also 9:15 Holy Days and 10, Wednesdays), Holy Communion; 9, Morning Prayer; 5, Evening Prayer. Open daily 7 A.M. to 6 P.M.

GRACE CHURCH, NEW YORK
Broadway at 10th St.
Rev. Louis W. Pitt, D.D., Rector
Daily: 12:30 except Mondays and Saturdays.
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M. and 4:30 P. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion 11:45 A. M.

THE HEAVENLY REST, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue at 90th Street
Rev. Henry Darlington, D.D.
Sundays: Holy Communion, 8 and 10 A. M.; Morning Service and Sermon, 11 A. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion, 11 A. M.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S CHURCH
NEW YORK
Park Avenue and 51st Street
Rev. Geo. Paull T. Sargent, D.D., Rector
8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evensong. Special Music.
Weekdays: Holy Communion Wednesday at 8:00 A. M.
Thursdays and Saints' Days at 10:30 A. M.
The Church is open daily for prayer.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH
Madison Ave. at 71st St., New York
The Rev. H. W. B. Donegan, D.D., Rector
8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
9:30 A. M. Church School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evening Prayer and Sermon.
Wed., 7:45 A. M., Thurs., 12 Noon Holy Communion.

THE CHURCH OF THE EPIPHANY
1317 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Charles W. Sheerin, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 A. M.; 8 P. M.
Daily: 12:05.
Thursdays: 11:00 and 12:05.

ST. THOMAS' CHURCH, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue and 53rd Street
Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, S.T.D., Rector
Sun 8, 11, 4. Daily 8:30 HC; Thurs. 11 HC., Daily except Sat. 12:10.

THE CHURCH OF THE ASCENSION
Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street, New York
The Rev. Roscoe Thornton Foust, Rector
Sundays: 8 a.m. Holy Communion.
11 a.m. Morning Prayer, Sermon.
8 p.m. Evening Song and Sermon; Service of Music (1st Sun. in month).
Daily: Holy Communion, 8 a.m. Tues., Thurs., Sat.; 11 a.m. Mon., Wed., Fri.
5:30 Vespers, Tues. through Friday.
This Church is open all day and all night.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL
Buffalo, New York
Shelton Square
The Very Rev. Edward R. Welles, M.A., Dean
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30 and 11.
Daily: 12:05 noon—Holy Communion.
Tuesday: 7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
Wednesday: 11:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH
Atlanta, Georgia
435 Peachtree Street
The Rev. J. Milton Richardson, Rector
9:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
10:45 A. M. Sunday School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Prayer and Sermon.
6:00 P. M. Young People's Meetings.

The WITNESS
For Christ and His Church

EDITORIAL BOARD: Frederick C. Grant, Editor; Arthur Lichtenberger, Chairman; William B. Spofford, Managing Editor; Philip L. Shutt, News Editor; Lane W. Barton, Beverly M. Boyd, Dillard H. Brown, Roscoe T. Foust, Charles K. Gilbert, Hugh D. McCandless, Howard Chandler Robbins, William K. Russell, Sydney A. Temple Jr., Joseph H. Titus, William M. Weber.

★

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS: D. B. Aldrich, J. A. Bell, T. S. Carruthers, Adelaide Case, G. K. Chalmers, E. M. Cross, G. M. Day, Angus Dun, A. W. Farlander, T. P. Ferris, J. F. Fletcher, John Gass, C. H. Gesner, C. L. Glenn, G. C. Graham, J. M. Groton, G. I. Hiller, I. P. Johnson, T. R. Ludlow, C. S. Martin, R. C. Miller, Walter Mitchell, A. T. Mollegen, E. L. Parsons, E. L. Pennington, Rose Phelps, L. W. Pitt, Otis Rice, Cyril Richardson, Paul Roberts, V. D. Scudder, W. M. Sharp, W. B. Sperry, C. W. Sprouse, D. S. Stark, W. B. Stevens, J. W. Suter, S. E. Sweet, Alexander Zabriskie.

★

THE WITNESS is published weekly from September 15th to June 15th inclusive, with the exception of the first week in January and semi-monthly from June 15th to September 15th by the Episcopal Church Publishing Co. on behalf of the Church Publishing Association, Inc. Samuel Thorne, President; Charles A. Houston, Vice-President; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, Treasurer; Frederic D. H. Gilbert, Secretary.

★

The subscription price is $3.00 a year; in bundles for sale in parishes the magazine sells for 10c a copy, we will bill quarterly at 5c a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter, March 6, 1939, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Vol. XXIX No. 46
OCTOBER 17, 1946

CLERGY NOTES

BARRALL, HERBERT M., was ordained priest by Bishop Sterrett of Bethlehem on Sept. 7 in St. Stephen's, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and is curate at St. John's, Waterbury, Conn.

HEAGERTY, WILLIAM B., retired priest of Los Angeles, died on Sept. 20 at his home at Sierra Madre, Calif.

HEILIGSTEDT, C.A.G., dean of St. John's Cathedral, Quincy, Ill., has resigned to do mission work in the diocese of Fond du Lac.

HOMER WILLIAM O., of the monastery of the Little Portion, is now curate at the Incarnation, Detroit.

MANN, WILLIAM S., formerly of All Saints', Tupelo, Miss., is now the rector of St. John's, Laurel, Miss.

McCREA, THEODORE H., formerly curate of St. Martin's, Providence, R. I., is now in charge of St. John's in the White Rock section of Dallas, Texas.

McELWAIN, HAROLD, was ordained deacon in St. John's Church, Old Orchard, Maine by Bishop Loring Sept. 30 and is in charge of St. Paul's Church, Portland.

SPERRY, WILLIAM B., director of social service of the Detroit Council of Churches, has resigned to become vicar of Christ Church, Detroit, November 1.

STURGIS, RICHARD L., locum tenens of St. Stephen's, Goldsboro, N. C. is now rector of St. Andrew's, Wrightsville and archdeacon of the Wilmington district.

THOMAS, LOUIS, formerly assistant at St. Andrew's, Jackson, Miss., is now rector of Trinity, Natchez, Miss.

VAN METER, WILLIAM S., was ordained priest by retired Bishop Jenkins of Nevada for the Bishop of Oregon Aug. 25 in St. Mark's, Portland, Oregon. He is chaplain at Oregon State Training School, Woodburn.

WELLS, HOLLY, formerly rector of St. John's, Laurel, Miss., is now chaplain of All Saints' College, Vicksburg, Miss.

WILLIAMS, CHAS. W., formerly assistant at St. Francis', San Francisco, Calif., is now curate of Christ Church, Alameda.

WILLIAMS, WALTER, 74, retired priest of the diocese of Virginia, died Sept. 17 in Richmond.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

CHRIST CHURCH CATHEDRAL
Main and Church Sts., Hartford, Conn.
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30, 10:05, 11 A. M., 8 P. M.
Weekdays: Holy Communion—Monday and Thursday, 9 A. M.; Tuesday, Friday and Saturday, 8 A. M.; Wednesday, 7:00 and 11:00 A. M. Noonday Service, daily 12:15 P. M.

CHRIST CHURCH
Cambridge
REV. GARDINER M. DAY, RECTOR
REV. FREDERIC B. KELLOGG, CHAPLAIN
Sunday Services, 8:00, 9:00, 10:00 and 11:15 A. M.
Weekdays: Wed. 8 and 11 A. M. Thurs., 7:30 A. M.

TRINITY CHURCH
Miami
Rev. G. Irvine Hiller, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services 8, 9:30, 11 A. M.

TRINITY CATHEDRAL
Military Park, Newark, N. J.
The Very Rev. Arthur C. Lichtenberger, Dean
Summer Services
Sunday
8:30 and 11:00 A. M.
Weekdays
Tuesday, Thursday, Friday at 12:10; Wednesday and Holy Days, Holy Communion, 12 noon.
The Cathedral is open every day.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
Montecito and Bay Place
OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA
Rev. Calvin Barkow, D.D., Rector
Sundays: 8 A. M., Holy Communion; 11 A. M., Church School; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer and Sermon.
Wednesdays: 10 A. M., Holy Communion; 10:45, Rector's Study Class.

GRACE CHURCH
Corner Church and Davis Streets
ELMIRA, N. Y.
Rev. Frederick T. Henstridge, Rector
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M.; 4:30 P. M.
Daily: Tuesday and Thursday, 7:30 A. M.
Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Holy Days, 9:30 A. M.
Other Services Announced

ST. MARK'S CHURCH
Texas Avenue and Cotton Street
SHREVEPORT, LA.
Rev. Frank E. Walters, Rector
Rev. Harry Wintermeyer, Curate
Sundays: Holy Communion, 7:30; 9:25 A. M., Family Service; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer.
Holy Communion, first Sunday. 6 P. M., Young Churchmen.

CHRIST CHURCH
Nashville, Tennessee
Rev. Peyton Randolph Williams
7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
9:30 and 11 A. M.—Church School.
11 A. M.—Morning Service and Sermon.
6 P. M.—Young People's Meetings.
Thursdays and Saints' Days—Holy Communion, 10 A. M.

GRACE CHURCH
105 Main Street, Orange, N. J.
Lane Wickham Barton, Rector
SUNDAYS
8:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M.—Church School.
11:00 A. M.—Morning Prayer and Sermon. (Holy Communion first Sunday each month)
7:00 P. M.—Young People's Fellowship.

CHRIST CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA
Second Street above Market
Cathedral of Democracy
Founded 1695
Rev. E. Felix Kloman, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services: 10 and 11 A. M.
Weekdays: Wed., 12 noon and 12:30.
Saints' Days: 12 noon.
This Church Is Open Every Day

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

VOL. XXIX. No. 46

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

OCTOBER 17, 1946

Publication Office, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago 37, Ill. Editorial Office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

Comments On Accomplishments Of General Convention

Boston Layman Thinks Much Has Been Lost By Shortening the Time of the Convention

New York:—Last week we presented a number of answers to the question "What I Think General Convention Accomplished." There are a number of replies presented this week, concluding the subject:

* * *

BEVERLEY D. TUCKER
The Bishop of Ohio

In general, I would say that the Philadelphia Convention was at its best in the election of its leaders and somewhat disappointing in its action on specific measures.

The election of Bishop Henry K. Sherrill as Presiding Bishop, and that of Justice Owen J. Roberts as President of the House of Deputies, will give the whole Church a high sense of confidence and satisfaction. Moreover there was a splendid spirit of fellowship in this Convention, which came to expression particularly in the innumerable evening dinners, at which the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Presiding Bishop, and the Bishop of Pennsylvania were the distinguished guests.

In measures under consideration by the Convention I was deeply disappointed that we could only continue our negotiations with the Presbyterians and take no step forward. On the other hand, this conservative action was somewhat redeemed by the progressive note sounded in the pastoral letter of the House of Bishops and by the unanimous action taken upon the new marriage canon.

NORMAN B. NASH
Rector of St. Paul's School

The best accomplishment of the Convention was the election of our strongest leader as Presiding Bishop. Next to that, the reforms in our canons on marriage and divorce registered progress. The House of Deputies did well to seat the lady from Missouri, but evidently frightened itself, and absurdly rejected the canonical changes consistent with its own action. The Convention did great harm to the cause of reunion by its action on the Plan of Union with the Presbyterians, combining timidity with an isolationism worthy of a sect.

STOUGHTON BELL
Chancellor Diocese of Massachusetts

The fact that the Convention was put through in ten days when those in attendance were war weary and sick of all the international bickering that is going on all around us may have been a large factor in what I shall describe as its failure to accomplish very much in a constructive way. I am not unmindful of the election of Bishop Sherrill as Presiding Bishop. This I believe was very constructive. I also believe that the passage of the new matrimonial canon was constructive. While it is subject to differing interpretations it is a distinct advance in my opinion, and when clarifying amendments are offered in the next Convention the argument that this is what we have had for a long time, let's not change it unless, etc., will have disappeared.

The Rev. Norman B. Nash, rector of St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H., says that the General Convention combined "timidity with an isolationism worthy of a sect"

The situation on unity is not lost. On the contrary, we are to have a pronouncement from Lambeth before our next Convention and I doubt not that the whole subject will be more generally studied than it has been in the past.

Before I close I do want to refer again to the ten-day session. At Kansas City we had an opportunity to come to know many Bishops and Deputies in the many social gatherings and to learn of the doings of other dioceses. Neither in Cleveland nor Philadelphia was this possible. Personally, I believe this is a serious lack in a religious gathering of any kind. It may be that this contributed to the sharpness of the party lines so very tightly drawn. I hope that future Conventions will not be so short.

H. W. B. DONEGAN
Rector St. James' Church, New York

As I think of what was accomplished by General Convention I have the distinct impression that it made definite progress in many directions. It gave us a new marriage canon that is merciful and realistic. It voted three million dollars for world relief, evidence of the Church's desire to help suffering humanity. It revealed an awareness of the opportunity and obligation to Christianize the world by giving unanimous approval to an increased budget that envisions larger work overseas. Full support was given to the plan of National Council to establish the Episcopal film and radio commission thereby demonstrating that the Church is adopting modern methods for the presentation of the world mission of the Church. The Convention expressed its intention to seek closer cooperation and joint action with other churches, the Federal Council of Churches and the World Council of Churches in facing together in the light of our Christian faith the material, moral, and spiritual issues of the day. The disposition of the report on approaches to unity was an endeavor to advance. Proof that the laity have rights and privileges in our Church was given by the election of the Hon. Owen J. Roberts, and the presence of Mrs. Dyer in the House of Deputies.

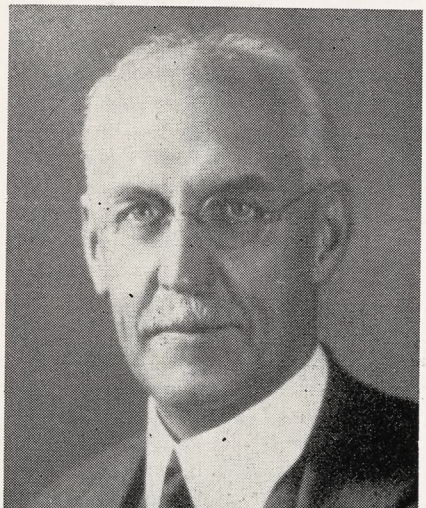
Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Finally, the choice of Bishop Sherrill as Presiding Bishop revealed the desire of the Church for vigorous forward-looking leadership in the days ahead. These are some of the accomplishments of the 55th session of General Convention. They clearly indicate that the Church is not standing still or going backward, but moving slowly yet surely forward.

CHARLES W. SHEERIN
Rector of the Epiphany, Washington

While disappointed that General Convention did not go further in its attitude towards many big things, particularly Christian unity, to me the outstanding accomplishment was its election of Bishop Sherrill as Presiding Bishop. After all, the Church works through men, and God's spirit uses human personalities. With such a leader as Bishop Sherrill, we can be sure that the attitude of the Church will never be allowed to narrow down into small matters of mere Church management.

The marriage canon is at least better than the old canon, and some of us feel it is a great step when we rise above the mere legalities of the secular court in our attitude towards marriage in general. Perhaps most of us forget that this legislative body we call General Convention must accomplish for the next three years much in the way of budget planning, and the necessary legal work that the life of the Church might go on. Ten days is a pretty short time to do all that must be done every three years and hope or expect such a body also to reach heights of Christian statesmanship in matters such as unity and social questions. Perhaps we ought to meet every two years or even every year.



In the House of Deputies we could not have had a better spirit, and I believe that much of this was due to Justice Roberts' remarkable ability as a presiding officer. My feelings of disappointment are overcome by the fact that in the persons that were selected as the leaders of our Church, we have great hope for the future.

MRS. LEWIS D. PILCHER
Southern Virginia Delegate to Triennial

The Triennial meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary left no doubt in the minds of those present that we are living in a completely disorganized, disillusioned world where war and hatred and strife are rampant. It awakened in each of us an increasing awareness of our responsibility as Christians to meet these changing times with faith and determination that out of the chaos a better world for all peoples shall arise.

There were three emphases that recurred again and again as directives in this task. First, the necessity for deepening and strengthening our own faith; faith in God and faith in the historic teachings of the Christian Church; second, the necessity for a more effectual witness, in every area of life, to the transforming and redeeming love of Christ, by those who dare to call themselves Christian; third, the conviction that, as we appropriate God's power we shall be given the strength to build for peace, for brotherhood and for unity of purpose.

Religion and democracy are two

Stoughton Bell, chancellor of the diocese of Massachusetts, expresses the hope that future General Conventions will not be so short of the pillars upon which the structure of American life has been built. I believe the women of the Church have greatly strengthened these pillars in passing a by-law which entitles "each Diocese with at least three congregations and with at least two hundred and twenty-five communicants of any racial minority group to one additional delegate from each of those groups" at the Triennial meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary.

If we are to build this city of God it can only be done as we think together, work together, plan together and share together as children of a common Father who gives to each without respect of person, tribe, nationality or race.

JOHN C. SPAULDING
Chancellor Diocese of Michigan

The election of Bishop Sherrill as Presiding Bishop was the most important act of the Convention, and met with general approval. The three new missionary bishops also were well chosen. A notable legislative feature was the adoption of a new marriage canon. While not entirely clear, it is an improvement on the old one. The question of retirement of Bishops was settled by canons clearly making retirement compulsory at 72. The proposal for unity with the Presbyterians was defeated, but the commission was continued, and the possibility of future action is not entirely destroyed.

J. MILTON RICHARDSON
Rector of St. Luke's, Atlanta

The General Convention faced a choice of submitting the majority report of the commission on approaches to unity to the Church for study or of killing the possibility of union with the Presbyterian Church in the foreseeable future. Its choice was to permit laymen to study the plan or to kill the plan. Unfortunately the latter alternative was taken. Beyond the plausible reasons that were given for not permitting the Church to study the plan one could not help but feel that the real reason beneath the plausible reason was a lack of genuine interest in unity.

EAST CAROLINA CLERGY MEET

Washington, N. C.: — The clergy of the diocese of East Carolina gathered at the diocesan camp near here the last week in September at the usual annual clergy conference to discuss plans for future work in the diocese, and to attend an inspiring quiet period under the direction of the Rev. A. Ronald Merrix, field officer of the National Council for the eighth province.

THAYER ADDISON IS ILL

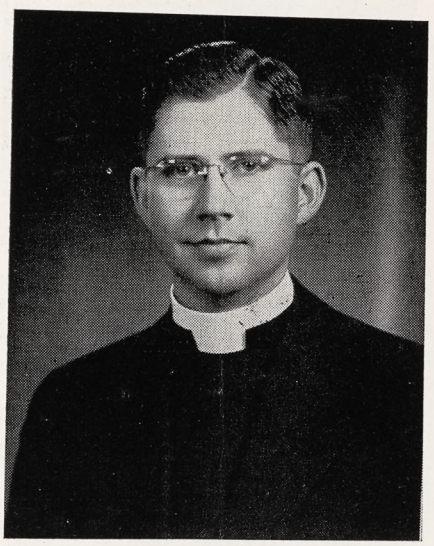
New York:—A cable from Guam was received at Church headquarters here on October 11 reporting that the Rev. J. Thayer Addison, vice-president of the National Council, suffered a heart attack and is now in the naval hospital where he is receiving efficient care. Mrs. Addison remains with him and both will return to the U. S. as soon as a steamer is available. Meanwhile, the rest of the commission, consisting of Lewis B. Franklin, Mrs. Arthur M. Sherman and the Rev. Robert A. Magill, who left San Francisco on October 7th to study the mission fields in the Orient, have gone ahead. It is announced, however, that they probably will omit the planned visit to Japan.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Great Tasks Before the World Discussed at Kenyon

Dr. Harold Laski Declares that Democracy Cannot Live Without Changes in Society

By Frederick C. Grant



Gambier, Ohio:—Kenyon College is one of our strongest historic ties with Great Britain and the Church of England. Founded in the wilderness of Ohio five generations ago by the indefatigable missionary Bishop, Philander Chase, the first funds for the erection of the college were raised by the bishop in England. The college bears the distinguished name of Kenyon, as the second Lord Kenyon made the original contribution of money. Bexley Hall, its divinity school, was named for Lord Bexley, another donor. The town was named for Admiral Lord Gambier, another generous benefactor.

DR. CHALMERS

A significant conference has just been held there, under the leadership of Gordon Keith Chalmers, president of the college, on "The Heritage of the English-speaking Peoples and their Responsibility," attended by over 500 visitors and participants, and with addresses by English and American scholars of note in politics, literature, political economy, government, law, religion and the press. The general tone of the conference was optimistic but deeply serious, and tremendous stress was laid in paper after paper upon the great responsibility of the English-speaking peoples for the peace and welfare of the world.

Perhaps the most dramatic session was the one addressed by Prof. Harold Laski of the University of London and member of the present Labor government of Great Britain, who spoke on the need for a new renaissance; the other address was by Senator Robert A. Taft of Ohio, on justice and liberty for the individual. The two addresses were almost a debate. Mr. Laski pointed out that with the technology of 1946 a United States tied to the demands of 1940 will have 16 million unemployed before long (which means 48 million on relief). Democracy cannot survive unless there is a change in the organization of society: there must be a fuller degree of effective participation in government by the mass of the people. Voting now and then is not enough: "Citizenship means the contribution of your instructed judgment to the public good." He quoted Plato: "I judge a society by this test, does the minister of education rank higher than the minister of war?" Capitalist democracy is no longer able to satisfy the needs of society: the needs of the community are prior to those of any group. Mr. Taft stated that he was in agreement with most of what Mr. Laski had said: "The bases of our thinking must be reconsidered in a time when the needs of the whole world are to be considered." Government is the safeguard of liberty under law, and equal justice is the most essential part of liberty—but for the past twenty-five years the conception of "equal justice under law" has been declining. The senator cited his experience with the administration of the Wagner Act and the experience of the nation with the O.P.A. in evidence.

The Rev. J. Milton Richardson, rector of St. Luke's, Atlanta, Ga., a clerical deputy, thinks the Church lacks a genuine interest in unity

Professor Ananda Coomaraswamy of Boston stated the Indian viewpoint, criticizing the British program and record in India, but without convincing many of his hearers when he suggested that India had little to learn from the west, even in medicine and agriculture. But his paper should be required reading for those enthusiastic people who wish to substitute foreign missions for everything else in the Church—education, social welfare, even worship. For a generation now, "missions" has carried all before it, often without any awareness of the intellectual, moral, and spiritual struggle involved in presenting Christianity to India, say, or China, or the Moslem world. One of the finest papers was that of Professor Douglas N. Bush of Harvard, on the ethical tradition in English literature, a paper which reflected a wholesome reaction against much of the unidealistic novel-writing of today.

Distinguished guests of the conference were the very charming young couple, the present Lord Kenyon and his bride, now making their first visit to America. Their friendliness and democratic spirit won every one to them.

The sermon was preached by the Archbishop of Quebec, Dr. Carrington, who emphasized the common elements of law, literature, and religion as well as language that bind us together, and also the great responsibility that lies before the English-speaking peoples today. "Nationalism has no place in the world we are now entering, and has little right in the world of the past. Greece, Rome, Britain, America—all of them have been great borrowers, skillful at taking over the traditions and institutions and ideas of other peoples, and justifying their place in history by their ability to pass on these institutions and ideas to other peoples. So it must be still. We must be sharers as well as borrowers, and take into account the needs of the whole world and not merely those of ourselves."

Optimism, humility, diversity, confidence, a fundamental faith—these were the notes stressed in the conference. We were proud to share in a conference which got down to the things that really matter in our common life, where religion and learning were geared to the needs of the world, and where it was recognized that privilege and responsibility are linked together indissolubly, in the law of God and in the nature of things. And we were proud to see a college of the Episcopal Church pulling its full weight in the intellectual world of our time.

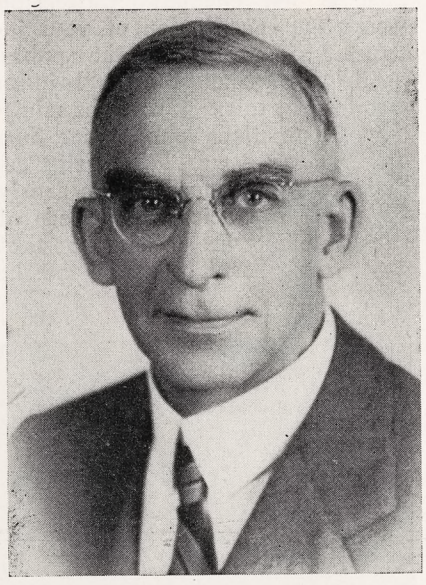
Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

LAYMAN READS EPISTLE

Great Barrington, Mass.:—For the first time in the history of St. James' Church here a layman read the epistle during the service of Holy Communion, when Lord Audley, a British peer assisted in the ceremony. The New York press made it a precedent in the Episcopal Church, but it was almost immediately pointed out by Church officials that it had been done elsewhere and there was no Church law prohibiting such participation.

BISHOP-ELECT IN UTAH

Ogden, Utah: — The Rev. S. C. Clark of St. Mark's Church, Pasadena, Calif., recently elected missionary bishop of Utah will visit the parishes and missions in his new field Oct. 8-11 accompanied by his wife. During his stay in Utah he will formally announce his acceptance of his election and expects to move to Salt Lake City Nov. 30, the date of his resignation as rector of St. Mark's. His consecration will be sometime in December.



QUIZ-MASTER ORDAINED

Louisville (RNS):—Dr. I. Q. of radio fame who quit the air waves last June to study for the ministry at Seabury-Western Seminary, Evanston, Ill., was ordained deacon here in his home town recently by Bishop Charles Clingman of the diocese of Kentucky. His real name, James Wesley McClain, is little known. He expects to do missionary work in his diocese.

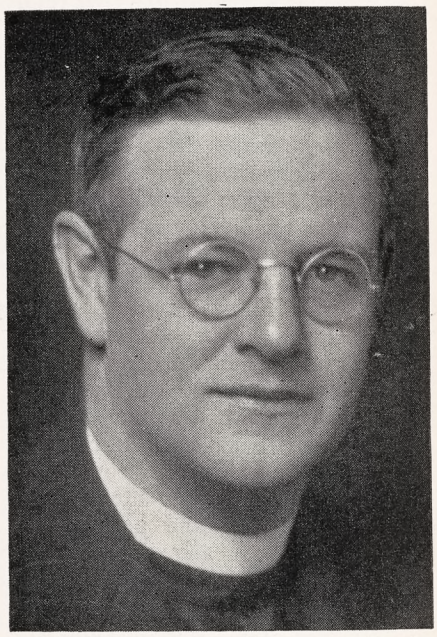
WAR INDUSTRY AREAS AIDED BY CHURCH

New York: — The report of the National Council's committee on work in the war industry areas has been released here indicating the vast program of the Church in aiding dioceses and parishes meet the problems caused by mass migration of peoples into such areas. Bishop-Coadjutor Edmund P. Dandridge of Tennessee, chairman of the committee, submitted the facts at a recent meeting of the National Council showing among other things: 1) a total of 33 dioceses were helped either with their own Church work in these war industry areas or with an interchurch program, 2) 26 dioceses operated Episcopal Church programs, and 15 participated in cooperative planning, 3) over a five year period 16 clergy, 15 women and two laymen were employed specifically for work in these fields, 4) nearly 4,000 families of Episcopalians were found among the new populations and over 7,000 individuals not in families, 5) 520 persons were baptized, 304 confirmed, and 164 buried, 6) total Church school attendance was reported as 16,658 and 7) $6,000 was received through regular pledges, and $9,741 in open offerings.

"In making this report," said

John C. Spaulding, chancellor of the diocese of Michigan, speaking on unity, says "the possibility of future action is not entirely destroyed"

Bishop Dandridge, "we are conscious of the fact that thousands of parish churches extended their regular program and activities in many ways in order to meet the needs of new people among them. Many dioceses assumed additional financial responsibility for extending their programs and had no need to call on National Council. We believe that in this program a national strategy has been successfully carried through as well as the promotion of corporate responsibility."



CALIFORNIA EEF HAS MEETING

Berkeley, Calif.:—It was generally agreed here at a recent meeting of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship to discuss the results of General Convention that the cause of the Church had been advanced even by the politically minded compromises which were the chief achievement in the major issues. However, President John Leffler commented that he had trouble finding divine guidance or inspiration at General Convention.

INTERFAITH GROUP BACKS UN

Syracuse, N. Y. (RNS): — An interfaith group has been formed here to unite Protestant, Roman Catholic and Jewish religious bodies in support of the United Nations organization.

"We need to remind ourselves in and out of season that the hope of peace and progress for the future lies along the road of conference and cooperation, rather than conflict," said Rabbi Benjamin Friedman in announcing the organization of the group.

The Rev. Charles W. Sheerin of Washington sees lack of statesmanship in matters such as unity and social questions

PACIFIC SCHOOL TERM OPENS

Berkeley, Calif.: — The 54th year of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific opened Sept. 18 with 50 students for the ministry. Of these 15 new students, 13 are on the "G.I. Bill" after extended service in the armed forces. Due to the large influx of married students a seminar has been planned on the life of a clergyman's wife. There will also be a number of interseminary meetings planned by the Rev. Messrs. Randolph C. Miller and Hugh Vernon White, the latter a member of the staff of the Pacific School of Religion.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

EDITORIALS

Deputies to Bishops to Deputies

EVERYONE presumably knows how difficult it is to correct misstatements by newspapers. Newsmen have to have "spot news," which means a story that has an up-to-the-minute flavor and gives the headline writer something to work on. If the story later proves to be incorrect or inadequate it's just too bad; the reporter has to have another spot-story the next day and he hasn't space to correct his previous mistake.

All of which is illustrated by the reporting of General Convention. The day Justice Roberts took the floor in Deputies to object to a resolution on international affairs had been dull. Reporters were asking each other what in the world they could send their papers since little had happened. Mr. Roberts saved the day. A former Supreme Court Justice made a stirring speech on the futility of the United Nations and persuaded the Deputies to pass his amendment which supported world government. That was, quite correctly from a reporter's angle, the story of the day. But as every Episcopalian knows, action is not completed by General Convention until it has been approved by both Houses. The House of Bishops not only did not concur with the Roberts' resolution but insisted that an entirely new one be drafted, which was later passed by both Houses. And this document, which is the official action of Convention, instead of minimizing the importance of UN, declares that "the United Nations is our present best hope and the only established agency through which the peoples of the world can at this time pursue the establishment of world law."

Nevertheless agencies that are campaigning for world government are now using the rejected Roberts' resolution as propaganda material. One of them, World Federalists, USA, Inc., is circulating a document headed "Episcopal Church Begins to See" which quotes Justice Roberts at considerable length and speaks of the "confusing optimism about UN." Also Miss Tracy D. Mygatt, New York secretary of an organization called Campaign for World Government, writes THE WITNESS about "The significant action taken in passing Judge Roberts' amendment on world government" and says that she assumes the action "is binding on the Church for the succeeding three years, and if on the Church then also on Church publications." With that assumption she asks that THE WITNESS publish an article written by her as secretary of the above organization, "explaining more of the reasons" for the action which she thinks General Convention took.

We have written her of course to tell her that the Convention did not pass the Roberts' resolution, explaining that it was rejected by the Bishops, and enclosing a copy of the October 3 WITNESS which carried a report of the completed General Convention action. The newspapers had the Deputies making an unassisted double play. The play however was Deputies to Bishops to Deputies, with the Bishops saving the game with their skillful handling of the ball. So if any readers are confused over just what did happen, or are receiving erroneous reports from world government pressure groups, we suggest that they turn back to page three of our October 3rd number for the correct story.

"QUOTES"

THE organizations of religion must not only preach democracy but must themselves reveal democracy in their organizational structure and routine practice. Ecclesiastical organizations based on autocracy are not designed to give effect to democracy. Authoritarianism is repugnant to democratic man whether it be heard in voice of a fascist dictator or seen in the pageantry of ecclesiasticalism. Free men demand the right to make up their minds in the realm of religion as well as in politics. The property interests of a Church must never be put before the personality interest of the people. Power must be democratically controlled because it corrupts a religious institution just as it corrupts a political institution. The freedom therefore that religion demands and which is necessary for the proclamation of its faith, if religion would counteract ideology, must be universal. It is not a freedom which one section of religion can claim for itself and deny to others.

—Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam.

Minority Defeats Majority

LORD HELP US! This is not meant to be a bit of exclamatory slang but a sincere prayer. How can anyone pray otherwise who has read that the House of Deputies refused to concur in a resolution urging friendship between the United States and the Soviet Union. Like the Southerner who stopped reading books about the Civil War because he always thought his side would win until the last chapter, we still can't believe this can happen in our Church.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

How come this so great lack of faith? It is clear that this warlike antagonism to Russia arises from two sources. There is the propaganda which originates in the Vatican and is forcefully promulgated all over the world, and particularly in America, by the Roman publicity agents. Then there are those so strongly wedded to the status quo that they would rather see an atomic war than to have their investments threatened by new ideas. They are using the great power of press and radio, which they largely control, to turn public opinion against the Soviets. That the laymen who represent our Church at General Convention are largely from this economic group is of course perfectly obvious.

The Bishops had spoken boldly and sensibly by declaring that "to conclude that the only way in which these tensions between the Soviet Union and the United States can be resolved is by war would be calamitous and to contemplate such a war in the name of religion unthinkable." By failing to concur with this resolution the Deputies inferred, however innocently, that "such a war in the name of religion is thinkable."

It has to be said, of course, that a majority of the Deputies did favor the resolution as it was received from the Bishops. The vote was on whether or not the resolution should be reconsidered which requires a two-thirds vote. There were 232 who voted "yes" and 118 voting "no". Thus was the majority defeated by just two votes and the damage done.

It is a grave responsibility for the Episcopal Church and it is one which rests upon us all. Pastors and people alike who are tied to no line but Christ's are required for leadership now to repair the damage. Ministers particularly must rise to this occasion who are unwilling "to reject completely the power of good will, mutual understanding and cooperation between peoples." Preachers are needed in the Episcopal Church as never before who can present convincingly to the people the good news that there is a greater power than the power of war.

Discipline of the Liberal

by Frederick C. Grant

The Editor of THE WITNESS

IT MIGHT surprise some persons to learn that a group of Christians gathered for a day in 1946, to consider the subject, "The Discipline of the Liberal." It has been said that liberalism is dead — but apparently, like Mark Twain's obituary, "the report is slightly exaggerated." Even the official title of the liberal group in the Episcopal Church has been taken away: they are no longer "Liberal Evangelicals," but are now "Episcopal Evangelicals." But the liberal tradition, the liberal outlook, the liberal movement is not so easily disposed of. Its tradition is too old, too deeply rooted: Anglican Liberalism goes back of the Anglo-Catholic movement, back of the Oxford Movement, back of the Cambridge Platonists, beyond Hooker, to the earliest Oxford Reformers—Colet, Erasmus, Sir Thomas More—and even past them to a strain in English Church life, even before the Reformation, which can fairly be called liberal. It has nothing to do with "the liberalism of the twenties" (i.e., the 1920's) here in America. It is no name for disagreement or for loss of faith, or for compromise with science or sociology or with a purely scientific, humanitarian, modern ethics. It is an old name, and is itself an adjective, describing and qualifying something positive. A liberal theology opposes an obscurantist or reactionary theology: but it is a theology, not the lack of one. A liberal faith is a particular kind of faith—but it is certainly faith, not its absence. Liberal churchmanship is opposed to narrow, authoritarian, ceremonious, ultra-dogmatic churchmanship: but it is still churchmanship, it is still loyal—devoted to the Church, not merely to the "Church Idea", but to the actual, historical institution, Christ's One, Holy, Catholic Church.

What then is liberalism, in the Anglican Communion, and what kind of person is the liberal? We might try to list the characteristics of this movement and its leaders: Liberalism—i.e., the liberal—believes in the proper use of reason. So does the Catholic. So, at the opposite extreme, does the rationalist. But the liberal does not set faith and reason in opposition, and insist that either one must be followed to the exclusion of the other. There is no point at which reason must give up, and faith takes its place—nor does reason crowd faith out completely. Instead, both proceed side by side, and, as Browning held, faith does not help reason more than reason helps faith. That is authentic liberalism. As a great English bishop of the 18th century took for his motto, "Let reason and the will of God prevail." And its first expression is what Dean Inge has called "The Platonic Tradition in English religious thought"—a theme further developed and carried even farther back by our own Paul Elmer More.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Another characteristic note is enthusiasm for learning. We hear much criticism these days of "the Renaissance man"; and it is true, he had his dark moments, not to say his shady side. He relied too much upon human skill, human ability and power. But that was in the heyday of his youth, when his blood ran hot. And the examples usually chosen for reprehension were not the great creative minds of the Renaissance, but the lawless and the egotistical—the men of power who, as a rule, work some good but much havoc in any and every generation where they happen to appear. The creative minds were the poets, the painters, the architects, the scholars—not the tyrants of the rival Italian city-states or the warrior popes who patronized learning, but crushed all opposition in their pursuit of earthly power and wealth.

The genuine liberal cherishes learning—from whatever source. And he insists upon learning as the companion of piety. An ignorant clergy is utterly incompatible with a faith which is to be learned and taught. True, some men have not this gift; then let them pursue their humble way in peace and quiet, and let them stay out of the pulpit, out of the study, out of the lecture hall—and not force lower standards of education upon the Church. Learning, or scholarship, is not necessary to salvation; but learning is indispensable in those who are to lead others, counsel them in the way of godliness, help them in facing their problems, expound to them the teaching of Holy Scripture, and formulate the theology and morals of the Church.

THE true liberal is averse to over-much defining in theology. The fundamental principles of the Christian faith are relatively few and simple—and are more concerned with daily living than with abstruse speculation. In fact, the Christian dogmas (i.e., the authoritatively defined doctrines, set forth by ecclesiastical councils) are few in number—you can read most of them in the creeds. But since the Reformation there has been a veritable flood of theological definitions—as in the great Protestant confessions and catechisms, and in the decrees and the catechism of the Council of Trent, on the Roman side. And the trouble is, the presuppositions of all these elaborate definitions are untenable: the Holy Scripture is not a quarry of proof-texts from which to build these solid structures; no one system of theology can be found in the Bible, which is a book of religion, not of theology. The best that systematic theology can do is infer something from these sacred books, and then formulate the inferences in a consistent, logical system. But how many systems have been produced in this way! They cannot all be true, in every detail! On a long view, this late-mediaeval and Reformation and Post-Reformation zeal for exact definitions is seen to be largely the result of the infusion of Aristotelian logic into the traditional body of Christian doctrine. Aristotle is no longer the last word in physics, logic, and metaphysics: but the scholastic legacy is still with us, and is an incubus hard to be rid of, in theology. The liberal is eager to be free from this burden, and to go back to simpler, freer ways of religious thinking.

What a strange world a man must live in, for whom religion is chiefly a matter of argument—like the endless polemics, sometimes clever, sometimes stupid, of the paid propagandists with their columns of argument in newspapers and their endless output of pamphlets and tracts! Meanwhile, religion itself, the worship of God and obedience to his will, is in danger of being altogether lost from view.

AS I have already suggested, the liberal believes in the historical and literary interpretation of the Bible, as it is called. Coleridge once wrote an essay on the subject, and his theme was this: "View the Bible as you would view any other book, and you will discover how unlike any other book it is." You must hear for yourself the authentic word of God in it, speaking to you. This is what the Reformers described as the word of God speaking internally to us, from the external Book.

It is a further consequence of this same principle that the liberal is much more concerned with conduct, with the practice of religion, with the application of the Gospel to human life, than he is with doctrine. And that is exactly what we find in the Bible. The biblical religion, throughout the Old Testament and the New, is a religion of faith manifest in works. You might call it a lay religion, rather than an ecclesiastical or theological religion. Speculation, philosophy, definitions of doctrine (though legitimate in their place) have little place in the Bible. I do not discount theology: but the ratio of theology to morals, or to ethics, or to the practice of religion, is a very modest one, in the Bible.

At the same time, the liberal is an enthusiast for the social good. He conceives religion as practice, not as dogma, primarily; and he thinks of the Church as called to serve society. "I am among you as one who serves," said our Master; the corollary follows: the Church exists to serve, not itself, but society, the people, the world. We look back 400 years and marvel that some people were actually unaware (especially in the Church) of the vast changes taking place in the world. Will historians 400 years hence wonder why we—or any of us—were unable to recognize the signs of the times in 1946? The present social revolution going on in our world is the greatest upheaval since the 16th century.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

But there is another aspect of liberalism that works against it, practically, in the rough and tumble of actual politics. We are terrible individualists, and—politically speaking—we shall never win unless we merge, or submerge, our individualism (and lose it) in devotion to a cause more important than the career of any individual. This calls for a higher quality of idealism among us, and for selfless devotion to the true welfare and progress of Christ's Holy Church, as we conceive it. But right here is the great weakness of liberalism: the liberal will not join, or form, a party—he insists upon being an individual. Therefore liberalism is no match for a vigorous, determined party, with its program and discipline, its concentration of support to back one man after another, its grooming of men for key positions, its planned seizure of one post after another in the Church. How do liberals vote? As individuals! And so other factors enter in: money, family, personal friendship, the old school tie! Nothing ever prevents two good liberals from candidating for the same post, and thus dividing the liberal vote! It happens again and again—and the party of reaction or of opposition wins the victory. That is our tragedy, and the end of our course is nothing less than gradual extinction! We never even think of looking for the man who can win the votes, whether he comes from Texas or Oklahoma or the Philippines, and then backing him through thick and thin, forcing every possible rival within the party to fall in line and back him up! But that is how victories are won and how parties succeed.

A further article on this subject by Dr. Grant will appear in our issue of October 24th.

Sunday School Material

by David E. Holt

Rector at Silver City, New Mexico

THE Episcopal Church must face at once the fact that its Sunday Schools are in a chaotic condition. This is largely due to our Church having neglected to provide any interesting, inspiring, practical Sunday School lesson material. The "Digest of Questionnaire" of the division of education showed that there is no such material available.

The name "Sunday school" is here used instead of the name "Church school" because the attempt to change to the latter term reveals one cause for the neglect to provide for the standard school with sessions of little more than one hour, a whole week between sessions. No courses which are said to be "suitable for use in week-day religious education groups on public school time" or for any other purpose can be suitable for the peculiar conditions of the Sunday school. An expert in religious education usually seems to be a person who has no comprehension of actual conditions.

As one who has for years had to struggle with small Sunday schools I would like to give some specifications for the lesson material which is needed in the hope that others will add their ideas to a demand which will have to be provided for by some publisher, by some organization, or by a reconstructed and renamed division of the Sunday school of the National Council.

There should be a departmental graded series of lessons, published each year, preferably quarterly. A dated lesson for each Sunday should have full and complete teacher's helps. These helps should include suggestions for presentation as well as additional information. The skilled teacher would make adaptations but the greatest number need this definite guidance. Most of the other larger denominations provide quarterlies for their schools. Most Episcopal schools still use quarterlies, resorting either to the very defective Episcopal Church Series or to publications of other denominations or of undenominational concerns. Freshness can be secured only by planning on a regular cycle of subjects with reworking prior to each quarter with enough flexibility to introduce timely topics.

The series should be prepared specifically for the schools of the Episcopal Church, that is, it should be adapted to the Church year, the Prayer Book, and the normal generally accepted observances of this Church. As long as this continues to be the Episcopal Church all official and semi-official publications should be required to use nomenclature found in the Bible, The Book of Common Prayer, and the constitutions and canons of this Church and to contain nothing at variance with its doctrine, discipline and worship. This would exclude all reference to Father Smith, the seven sacraments, the mass, etc. It should avoid ecclesiolatry, priestcraft, emphasis on millinery, and above all should avoid a bigotry that would stand in the way of Church unity.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

In content the lessons should be modern. Legendary material should be treated as such from the beginning, especially in the teacher's helps but also in the pupils' material. The attitude toward Biblical criticism, science, social problems, history, now assumed in most of our theological seminaries should prevail. Too often Sunday schools have taught too much that has had to be unlearned. Good scholarship should never be sacrificed lest intellectual respectability be lost. Before publication each course should be sent to the appropriate professors of all of our major seminaries with a request for comment.

No matter what the cost the series must be colorful, illustrated, interesting, varied in treatment and in format. It must be assumed that classes are not composed of little saints and eager scholars but of normal American boys and girls. There will be little home study so the greatest possible use must be made of the half hour or forty minute class period and this will be done only if the assignment looks fresh, interesting and inspiring to both teacher and pupil.

IF THE course is God-centered, Christ-centered, or Bible-centered it will be all three. If Church-centered it will tend too much to traditionalism, sacerdotalism, or sectarianism. If pupil-centered it defeats its own ends, becomes vague, faddistic, and loses sight of the main ends in fixing on the whims of the present or the shallow experience of the individual teacher or pupil. There is a corpus of knowledge which a child should be taught to know and believe, and test for himself to his soul's health. Use of the catechism and other elements should lead up to confirmation at about the end of the sixth grade. There is a possibility that with a well planned system of lessons beginning with the kindergarten and going through high school, using a half hour fifty-two Sundays in the year for fifteen years, some introduction to this corpus might be given to most pupils. Flexibility should provide for the introduction of new missionary lessons each Lent and also for timely topics at the appropriate age level. For instance, when General Convention determined to find a way to organic union with the Presbyterian Church that became a policy of this Church. If this system had been in use classes would have been introduced about the Presbyterian Church, the advantages of the union, etc. Or when General Convention passes resolutions on social subjects, as soon thereafter as possible lessons should be introduced about them. Commissions of General Convention ought to release their reports before January of the year Convention is to meet and something of these reports should be discussed at least in the senior classes.

In addition to the pupils' and teachers' material there should be superintendent's material including outlines and suggestions as to seasonal assembly or opening service conduct. Plans should be sent forth well in advance for Christmas, Lent, Easter, Rally, etc. Missionary, Christmas box, and other units should be worked into regular curriculum not sent out to compete with schedules already set up.

For many reasons most Sunday Schools of the Episcopal Church will have to depend on untrained teachers. So-called modern methods would require far more training than is available even in metropolitan centers. A week or so at a summer conference can not give much training. Those who prepare the material must remember that in most schools there will be no person of their own preparation, personality or prestige. The material will have to be used by the untrained yet if there is a definite series there will be opportunity to give some help in improving its use through teachers' classes and conferences.

The material should be reasonable in price with all essentials included in the original order. This fact will perhaps make it impossible for any publisher or small group to prepare a course and keep it going. A staff and all of the resources of a national organization would be needed. Yet no other investment would more surely advance the cause of Christ.

No parish or mission would be required to use the material in whole or in part. Parishes able to afford a professional director of religious education might well experiment with other methods. Most Sunday schools would be grateful for such help. Lesson material is not everything but it is the one key element upon which all else depends. We shall not get adequate faculties until we can, instead of repelling with dullness or complications, attract them by offering the use of such interesting and practical tools.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

And The Mountain Labored . . .

by

WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD, JR.
Executive Secretary, Church League for Industrial Democracy

BEFORE the General Convention, an ex-army chaplain asked the head of the most dynamic of the veterans' organizations if that group's members knew of the unity proposals and whether they didn't think that the union of the Protestant Episcopal and Presbyterian Churches was a small step in the right direction. The answer was short and sweet. "Listen, chaplain, these fellows aren't interested in stuff like that."

The man was right. The veterans of world war two are interested in things like world peace, housing, jobs, education, health facilities, elimination of discrimination and segregation, decent food and clothing and reasonable prices. They are fighting for them by pushing doorbells to get out the vote, by lobbying, by challenging the leadership of the American Legion and the V.F.W. Church unity? "Listen, chaplain, we aren't interested in stuff like that."

While General Convention met, Henry Wallace made a speech and was fired. Prices continued to rise. More unions were forced to "hit the bricks." Millions of new families were still living doubled-up. A trial got underway in Lawrenceburg, Tenn.

And so the General Convention featured eighty-one, mostly puerile speeches on the question of whether or not to study union for three more years and but one real speech on world peace. This latter elicited no debate, discussion or conflict. It featured many talks on a new marriage canon—but no discussion of a housing situation which has helped to raise our divorce rate to one out of three marriages. It discussed Negro work in the Church and ignored such things as the rising lynching rates. It did, thank heavens, discuss conscientious objectors but where were the pros-and-cons on the continuation of the draft, American battle ships in the Mediterranean and marines in China?

During the Convention, I visited a Jewish settlement where I worked while in college. The all-Jewish staff was both disgusted and amused. At that very time, their co-religionists were being put in concentration camps in Cyprus and arrested in Haifa. They looked for some leadership from the Episcopal Church and when they read the papers all they found was froth.

There have been many editorials and speeches on the great work done by the General Convention of 1946. They would have sounded much better in 1900 than in year two of the atomic age. Many persons in the Church, from bishops through rectors and seminary students to many lay men and women, bid farewell to the Convention with a fundamental question left unanswered. Why, in this time of confusion and crisis, does the Holy Spirit seem to choose to work through secular groups like the A.V.C., the P.A.C., the N.A.A.C.P. and the Southern Conference of Human Welfare instead of the Church? Or, put another way, why did the mountain labor so strenuously for ten full days and come forth with nothing that fundamentally answers or deals with the great needs of the world? Many of us would really like to know.

SANCTUARY

conducted by W. M. Weber

Where Lies Sanity?

★ They gave the party in an alcove just outside of Ward Thirty-three . . .

Two women in civilian dress assisted at the party. Virginia had a sickening conviction that they were church or club women earning merit badges and the privilege of telling over teacups about exotic and dangerous adventures among the insane. In loud saccharine voices these amateur social workers explained that there was to be a very gay game with prizes. Virginia was unable to concentrate on anything but the bitter difference between her clothes and the costumes of the hostesses, but the other patients got through the game of lotto without effort or enthusiasm. They played it as if it were a chore to be got out of the way. When a lady filled a row she announced it and she took her prize, a candy bar, and divided it among the other players at her table. The hostesses were upset about this dividing and would try to explain that when you won you were entitled to keep the prize for yourself. The sick ladies looked at the well ladies and did not understand; they had quite forgotten the ways of the world.

—Mary Jane Ward, The Snake Pit. Random House, 1946.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

China and Hawaii Provide Rich Fields for Missionaries

Resident Bishop Tells About Opportunities Before New York Woman's Auxiliary Meeting

Edited by Philip L. Shutt

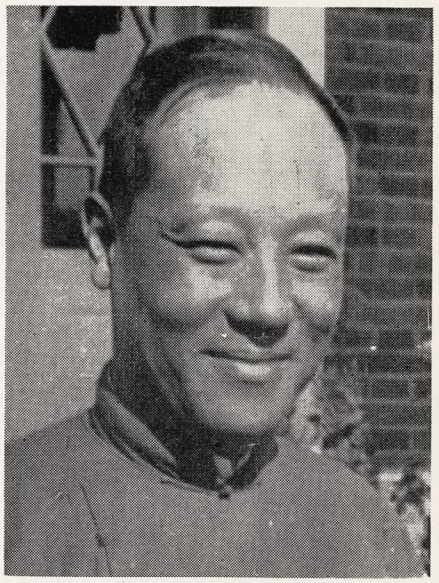
New York:—Over 400 Episcopal women of the diocese of New York met for luncheon October 5 at the Hotel Astor to hear Bishop Robin T. S. Chen of Anking, China, and Bishop Harry S. Kennedy of Honolulu tell of the wealth of missionary opportunities in their fields.

Bishop Chen pointed out in the course of his remarks that there was no objection as far as he could see on the part of Nationalists or Communists to the work of the Church. "In fact," he said, "just before I left China we had a letter from two leading Communist delegates praising the work of the Church and inviting us to send workers into their areas. The post-war years are presenting greater opportunities to the Church and a challenge to greater effort than it met in wartime. The Chinese should do everything to live up to the expectations of their friends, especially Christians, in the United States."

He also pointed out that the problems created by economic deterioration, civil strife and political corruption demand new leaders who will be first-class men and women capable of struggling with illiterate people.

Bishop Kennedy inspired the meeting by his picture of mission work in the diocese of Honolulu. Particularly was this true when he told of the lack of race prejudice. "Over there," he said, "we people of all races live together and like it. Two great factors are responsible for this, first the work of the early Christian missionaries and second, the gentle nature of the people of the islands."

Both bishops plead for realistic approaches to the solution of the many problems presenting themselves in opening new fields of work.



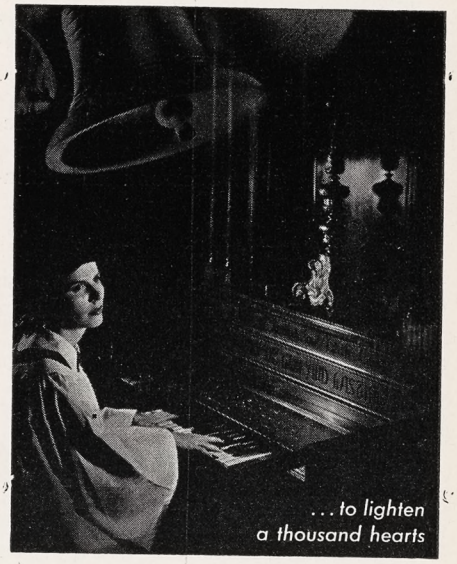
Bishop Charles A. Voegeli of Haiti told of educational opportunities in his area, emphasizing in particular the need for nurses and pastoral care for lepers.

Mrs. J. S. McCulloh of Rye, N.Y., president of the diocesan Auxiliary presided. Suffragan Bishop Charles K. Gilbert of New York brought the greetings of Bishop William T. Manning who was unable to be present.

Twenty-three missionary workers also attended the luncheon.

Visits Bethlehem

Mt. Pocono, Pa.: — The headline speaker at the clergy conference of the diocese of Bethlehem, meeting here for three days following General Convention, was Bishop Thomas N. Carruthers of South Carolina. In four lectures on preaching he spoke of the way sermon ideas come alive as a minister studies and ministers to his people. He sketched methods of developing sermons and how to illustrate them. Also addressing the conference was Dean Frank Gifford of the Philadelphia Divinity School who spoke of the rise in the seminaries of the concept of a ministry steeped in practical attainments as well as scholastic knowledge. The Rev. G. Clayton Melling, chairman of the art and engineering commission of the diocese, presented a report based upon a recent inspection tour of diocesan property. The report was entitled "Chronic headaches in church maintenance" and pointed to the flaws in upkeep and repair which are sure to result soon in expensive repair jobs.



Bishop Robin T. S. Chen, assistant bishop of Anking, China, told the Auxiliary of New York that the Communists of China praised the work of the Church and "invited the Church to send workers into their area"

There was a good deal of discussion of General Convention action, with Bishop Sterrett explaining the meaning of the new marriage canon. Disappointment was expressed over the failure of Convention to take more positive action on the matter of unity.

Wallace Writes CLID

New York:—"I deeply appreciate the message of support from the Church League for Industrial Democracy," Henry A. Wallace stated in a personal letter to the C.L.I.D.'s executive secretary on October 7th. In replying to the C.L.I.D.'s statement of regret at his resignation

As lovely to see as it is to hear, the Liberty carillon produces the realities of tons of great bells from the magic of only a few ounces of metal. Precision tuned and with a musical range from three to five octaves, it is played with all the artistic expression and effect of a fine carillon of cast bells.

And now Liberty Leadership has produced another amazing first — a two-octave instrument for limited budgets but with all the tonal beauty of "The Big Liberty". We cordially invite you to hear it at a resident service associate near you. Write for his address today, and plan now to have this magnificent Voice of the Cathedrals ringing from your church this Christmas.

LIBERTY Carillons Inc.
CARILLON HEADQUARTERS
551 FIFTH AVENUE, New York 17, N.Y.
CARILLON DESIGNERS • BUILDERS • CONSULTANTS
CREATORS OF AUDIBLE MEMORIAL SHRINES

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

from the Cabinet and expression of thanks for the lead he has given American liberals and progressives, Mr. Wallace said: "You don't know how much it has encouraged me to receive the spontaneous response of many thousands of people—those who, through political alertness and action, ultimately will determine whether we are going to live in a world at peace, or whether we are going to be swept into a world-wide holocaust. We must all of us keep up the good work, each in his own way." Mr. Wallace, of course, is a well-known Churchman.

Young People Meet

Camp Wingmann, Fla.: — The Young People's Service League of South Florida held its annual convention here September 29-30, with delegates present from twenty-four parishes in addition to many counsellors and clergy. Highlighting the affair were reports of General Convention which were made by delegates to the youth convention held over the first week-end in Philadelphia.

Consecrate Church

Detroit: — Bishop Creighton consecrated the Church of the Incarnation here on September 29th, following a celebration of the Holy Communion conducted by the Rev. Clark L. Attridge, rector. Memorials were blessed at the service, including a plaque honoring the eighty-one men of the parish who served in the war; a stained glass window which was a memorial; and a bronze cross inlaid in the floor of the sanctuary to commemorate the consecration of the building.

The evening before there was a banquet with mortgage burning ceremonies and addresses by Suffragan Bishop Emrich and the Rev. Darwin Kirby Jr., curate at St. Luke's, Evanston.

The Incarnation, one of the few Anglo-Catholic parishes in the diocese, was formed in 1940 by the merger of St. Barnabas' and St. George's.

Aid from Hannah More

Reisterstown, Md.: — Students at Hannah More Academy here who are members of the missionary society voted at their first meeting this year to adopt two Chinese orphans, which makes a total of three supported by the students. In addition the society aids a girls' school in Belgium. Then they voted to get in touch with St. Mark's mission in Alaska where they had an "adopted child" for many years. The child grew up and became self-supporting so that the society now is offering similar help to another.

The headmistress of Hannah More, Miss Janet Ward, reports "interesting and appreciative letters from the orphanage which cares for our Chinese proteges" while the head of the school in Belgium recently sent a picture of the students "all clad in warm and adequate outfits which had been bought with Hannah More's contributions. The sight of this little group of grateful children has made our girls even more enthusiastic about doing as much as possible for relief in the lands that are still in such dire need of help."

Incidentally the picture on the cover this week shows a Hannah More student enjoying one of the favorite sports at this famous old school for girls.

Scheme Goes Forward

Boston (RNS):—A further step toward the creation of a unified Church in South India was taken by the Assembly of the South India United Church when it approved the proposed merger with British Methodists and the Anglican Churches in India, Burma, and Ceylon. News of this action was cabled here to the American Board of Foreign Missions of the Congregational-Christian Churches of America.

"It means full organic union between Congregationalists, Presbyterians and Episcopalians, based on the historic episcopate in a constitutional form," said the Rev. Raymond Dudley, secretary for India of the board.

J. WIPPELL & Co LTD
Established 18th Century
Clerical Tailors & Robe Makers

SPECIAL OFFER: CLERGY CASSOCKS

Wippell Cassocks, individually cut and tailored, incorporate all the little refinements of detail which make for so much extra comfort and convenience in wear

Single or Double Breasted, of Fine All Wool Serge $39.50
Quotation does not include Cincture, Belt or Girdle

Clergy Surplice, Slightly Gathered
Pure Irish Linen $13.50

Clerical Cloaks to cover cassock, Waterproof Melton $39.00

Patterns sent on application

55 & 56, High Street, EXETER, England
(also 11, Tufton Street, Westminster, S.W.1, London, Eng.)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

THE CHURCH PENSION FUND

and its subsidiaries

administered for the benefit of the Church

THE CHURCH HYMNAL CORPORATION

Publishers of The Hymnal; Book of Common Prayer; A Prayer Book for Soldiers and Sailors; Book of Offices for Certain Occasions; Stowe's Clerical Directory.

THE CHURCH LIFE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost insurance and annuity contracts available to the clergy, lay officials and active lay workers of the Church, either voluntary or paid, and their immediate families.

THE CHURCH PROPERTIES FIRE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost fire and windstorm insurance on property owned by or closely affiliated with the Church, and on the residences and personal property of the clergy.

Further information available by addressing any of the above at

20 Exchange Place New York

Size, 5¼" x 3⅛"
Postage Additional

The Story of Jesus

A New 32-page Booklet, The Story of Jesus, offers to its readers the highlights of the life of Christ. The text is from the King James Version of the Bible; the illustrations are full-color reproductions of famous Old Masters.

The frontispiece is Carlo Maratta's painting, Holy Night with this inscription from St. Luke: "For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." Some of the other illustrative masterpieces are: Shepherds in Adoration by delle Motti, Boy Christ in the Temple by Hoffman, Baptism of Jesus by Maratta, Christ Blessing the Little Children by Vogel, The Transfiguration by Raphael, The Last Supper by Rubens, and Jesus Appears to Magdalene by Fra Angelico.

This booklet is simple enough to be understood and loved by the small child, and yet the adult will appreciate the appropriateness and beauty of the illustrations and the inspiring selections of Biblical verse. Price, 20 cts.

Per copy, $.20 ea. 100 copies, $.14 ea.
50 copies, $.16 ea. 300 or more, $.12 ea.

MOREHOUSE-GORHAM CO.
14 E. 41st Street New York 17, N.Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Bishop Moore Honored

Dallas: — Retirement of Bishop Harry Tunis Moore as bishop of Dallas was marked by a special service and breakfast Oct. 4 in St. Matthew's Cathedral here. A special festival service was held a week later in the same place with Bishop Robert N. Spencer of West Missouri, as preacher, and Bishop C. Avery Mason, assisting. Bishop Mason's installation as bishop of the diocese is expected to take place Nov. 11.

Bishop Essex Honored

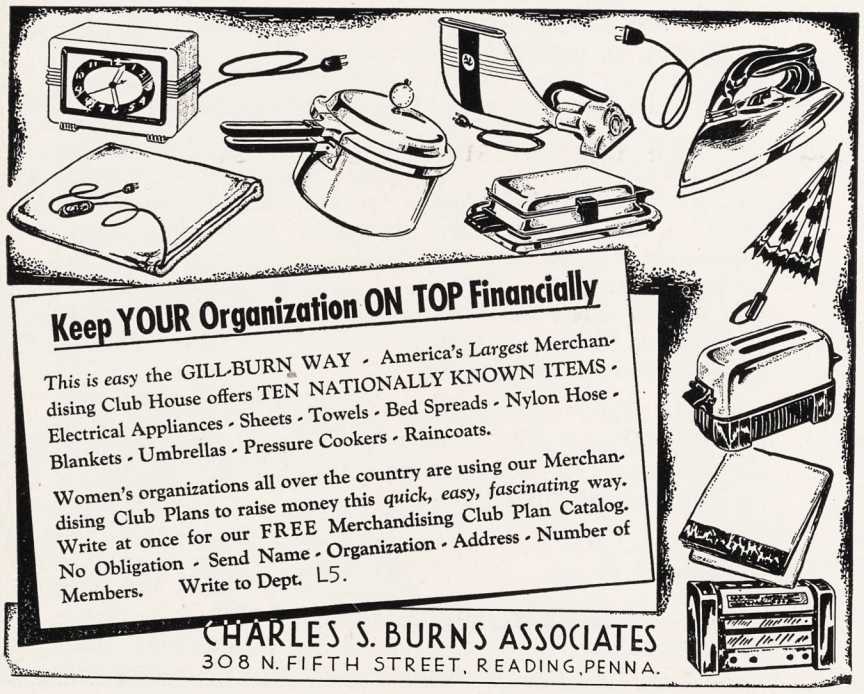
Peoria, Ill.:—Over 400 churchmen of the diocese of Quincy gathered here Sept. 30 to join Bishop William L. Essex in celebrating the tenth anniversary of his consecration. Several gifts were made to the bishop, the main one being checks and gifts amounting to $600 with a pledge by the laity of the diocese that additional gifts would be made up to $2500 so that the bishop might attend Lambeth Conference in London in 1948. The Rev. John K. Putt of Griggsville, on behalf of the clergy, presented him with a small hand wrought swivel for his pectoral cross in the shape of a miter. Zion mission, Brimfield, announced that it had balanced its budget for the year as a gift. Because Bishop Essex is an indefatigable golfer one vestry gave him a dozen balls.

The bishop paid tribute to the clergy and laity of his diocese who had helped in its progress, and outlined future projects.

Guests present from outside the diocese were Bishops James DeWolfe of Long Island, who gave a congratulatory speech; John Chanler White of Springfield, Edwin J. Randall, suffragan of Chicago, and Louis B. Whittemore of Western Michigan.

Berkeley Opens

New Haven, Conn.:—The Berkeley Divinity School opened Sept. 23 with nineteen new men to make a total of thirty-three in the student body. For the first time since the beginning of the war Berkeley has on its staff for the autumn term an English lecturer in the person of Canon-Chancellor Vigo Auguste Demant of St. Paul's Cathedral, London. He will deliver lectures in the fields of moral and pastoral theology and speaking engagements for him throughout the Church are now being arranged.



LEARN
MILLINERY
AT HOME

Design and make exclusive, salable hats right from the start of this remarkable course, under the personal direction of one of America's noted designers. Complete materials, blocks, etc., furnished. Every step illustrated. Establish your own profitable business—or make, retrim, repair hats for the trade. Low cost and easy terms. Free national placement department. Expert milliners in demand. SEND COUPON TODAY.

LOUIE MILLER SCHOOL OF MILLINERY
225 N. Wabash Ave., Dept. 5010,
Chicago 1, Ill.

Yes, please send me your FREE Illustrated Catalog!
(Print)
Name .....
Address .....

Keep YOUR Organization ON TOP Financially

This is easy the GILL-BURN WAY - America's Largest Merchandising Club House offers TEN NATIONALLY KNOWN ITEMS - Electrical Appliances - Sheets - Towels - Bed Spreads - Nylon Hose - Blankets - Umbrellas - Pressure Cookers - Raincoats.

Women's organizations all over the country are using our Merchandising Club Plans to raise money this quick, easy, fascinating way. Write at once for our FREE Merchandising Club Plan Catalog. No Obligation - Send Name - Organization - Address - Number of Members. Write to Dept. L5.

CHARLES S. BURNS ASSOCIATES
308 N. FIFTH STREET, READING, PENNA.

Whose Responsibility Freedom?

We all want Freedom for ourselves and our children but we expect someone else to be responsible for it.

Rights involve responsibilities and the right of Freedom is no exception to that rule.

If individuals do not accept responsibility then, properly, government will and must take over rights and authorities which are vital to Freedom.

It is our fault as citizens, not Congress' fault, that we have moved so far into pagan, stateist patterns of controls. It will be our fault if we do not reverse the trend before it reaches the totalitarian level.

We shall get what we deserve, be it slavery or Freedom, measured by our willingness to accept responsibility and carry it with integrity and honor. The peril of what Paul Hutchinson calls the "mortal God state" is already upon us. Only courageous people can be free men!

The democratic process, constitutional government, and the basic freedoms are costly in responsibility but upon them depend the things that matter most in life. Communism, socialism, fascism, or stateism cannot take root in a society of responsible citizens.

Christian ministers have special responsibilities and special opportunities to champion Freedom; capital F. Freedom, root Freedom, and spiritual Freedom—the firstcause Freedom on which all small letter freedoms must depend. Each of us must make this matter of Freedom our personal responsibility.

Are you interested in receiving our regular bulletins? In a personal visit with one of our representatives? In having literature to distribute to your parish? Would you like Dr. Paul Hutchinson's book "The New Leviathan?" Let us hear from you!

SPIRITUAL MOBILIZATION

Los Angeles Chicago New York

Advisory Committee

Chairman, DONALD J. COWLING, President Carleton College 1909-1945; ROGER W. BABSON, Statistician; UPTON CLOSE, Author, Commentator; CARY EGGLESTON, Physician; DE WITT EMERY, Founder National Small Business Men's Association; EDGAR J. GOODSPEED, Bible Scholar, Author; THEODORE GRAEBNER, Professor Theology, Author; ALFRED P. HAAKE, Economist, Lecturer; ALBERT W. HAWKES, United States Senator; SAM HIGGINBOTTOM, Missionary; RUPERT HUGHES, Author; RUFUS B. VON KLEINSMID, Chancellor University of Southern California; ROBERT A. MILLIKAN, President California Institute of Technology; FELIX MORLEY, Author, Editor; ALFRED NOYES, Author; NORMAN VINCENT PEALE, Clergyman; CHANNING POLLOCK, Author, Dramatist, Lecturer; LEONARD E. READ, President Foundation for Economic Education, Inc.; ROBERT GORDON SPROUL, President University of California; RAY LYMAN WILBUR, Chancellor Leland Stanford University.

James W. Fifield, Jr. ..... Director

Spiritual Mobilization
Title Guarantee Bldg., Dept. AES
Los Angeles 13, Calif.

I am a minister of a church and in sympathy with your Crusade for Freedom. Place me on your representative list to receive your publications. I understand there are no financial obligations.

Name .....

Church .....

Street .....

City ..... State .....

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Says Army Failed

Webster Grove, Mo.: — "The United States army has substituted psychiatry for religion and custom as the basis upon which to control the conduct of troops," Dr. William E. Hocking, professor-emeritus of philosophy at Harvard, told the annual fall clergy conference of the diocese of Missouri, which was held at the bishop's home, here on Sept. 30 and Oct. 1.

Dr. Hocking said that after his own Plattsburg days in 1914 he had believed in the value of compulsory military training but that today he no longer did because "the army has failed in its moral job." In the course of his three addresses to the conference, he spoke on "God in civilization," "God in international matters," and "God in history."

"The political situation in the world is such," he asserted, "with its spiritual and political complexities, that the Church cannot evade uttering words to guide the minds of Christians toward righteous solutions. It can pronounce on the ingredients of a just and durable peace." Dr. Hocking said that he did not believe the statement, given to "The Stars and Stripes" by Archbishop Fisher before his enthronement in Canterbury, in which he said the Church could not be involved directly in the necessary compromises of the peace, would be repeatable today.

Troops in China

New York: — The campaign to withdraw American troops from China being held under the joint auspices of the National Committee To Win The Peace and the Committee For a Democratic Far Eastern Policy this week received the strong endorsement of religious leaders in China and the United States.

In a cable from Shanghai to Miss Maud Russell, executive director of the Committee For a Democratic Far Eastern Policy, Mrs. Herman C. E. Liu (Wang Li-ming), founder and general secretary of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of China, expressed the "wholehearted support" of 10 Chinese people's organizations for the campaign to end one-sided intervention in internal Chinese affairs. Known as the "Frances Willard" of China, Mrs. Liu is a member of the People's Political Council and a graduate of Northwestern University.

The "Get-out-of-China" campaign will be climaxed by the Conference on China and the Far East which will be held in San Francisco from October 18 to 20th to discuss the current crisis in the Orient. More than 750 delegates are expected to attend the conference which has been called by Brigadier General Evans F. Carlson, famed Marine leader of "Carlson's Raiders," and a number of distinguished Americans in cooperation with the Win The Peace group and the Far Eastern committee.

Among the organizations endorsing the conference is the Church League for Industrial Democracy that will be represented by the Rev. Edward J. Mohr. Among religious leaders endorsing it are Bishop Walter Mitchell, retired bishop of Ari-

For a time of world upheaval—

THE BIBLE IS HUMAN

By Louis Wallis

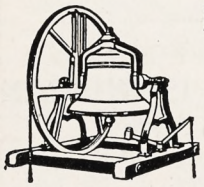
From Professor James Moffatt, Union Theological Seminary: "I am sure, even in these distracting days, that it will find the audience it deserves, and appeal to readers who still have an open mind." $2.50

Columbia University Press
New York 27, N. Y.

"Bursting at the Seams"

That is the report from many of our Church's theological schools — an encouraging sign of vitality in the Church.

And the best part of it is that most of the new students already know at first hand the urgency of the task ahead, the capacity for good and for evil in humankind, and the power of God alone to save us. Support for the seminaries now will help them fulfill their responsibility to these men and to the Church.



BERKELEY DIVINITY SCHOOL, NEW HAVEN, CONN.; BEXLEY HALL, GAMBIER, O.; BISHOP PAYNE DIVINITY SCHOOL, PETERSBURG, VA.; CHURCH DIVINITY SCHOOL OF THE PACIFIC, BERKELEY, CAL.; DIVINITY SCHOOL OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA; EPISCOPAL THEOLOGICAL SCHOOL, CAMBRIDGE, MASS.; THE GENERAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, NEW YORK CITY; NASHOTAH HOUSE, NASHOTAH, WIS.; SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF THE SOUTH, SEWANEE, TENN.; SEABURY-WESTERN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, EVANSTON, ILL.; VIRGINIA THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, ALEXANDRIA, VA.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Write us for
Organ Information
AUSTIN ORGANS, Inc.
Hartford, Conn.

Memorial Windows
In accordance with the best traditions of the craft. Notable installations in forty states and five foreign countries.
Illustrated material on request
The D'Ascenzo Studios
founded 1896
1604 Summer Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

ALTAR BREADS ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED
SAINT MARY'S CONVENT
KENOSHA • WISCONSIN

MENEELY BELL CO.
22 RIVER ST., TROY, N. Y.
BELLS

R. GEISSLER, INC.
71-79 W. 45th St., New York 19, N. Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE·BRASS·SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS
EST 1837

ERNEST W. LAKEMAN
Designer and Worker in
STAINED GLASS
2 CRESCENT PLACE
YONKERS, NEW YORK

Need a LAXATIVE?
Black-Draught is,
1-Usually prompt
2-Usually thorough
3-Always economical

25 to 40 doses only 25¢
Get BLACK-DRAUGHT
CAUTION: USE ONLY AS DIRECTED

zona; the Rev. Stephen H. Fritchman, Unitarian leader; Dean Edwin McNeill Poteat of Colgate-Rochester Seminary; the Rev. Jack McMichael, director of the Methodist Federation for Social Service; the Rev. Harry F. Ward, professor-emeritus of Union Seminary and the Rev. William B. Spofford Jr., director of the CLID.

Leaders Die

Natchez, Miss.:—The diocese of Mississippi recently lost two of its most liberal leaders. The Rev. Joseph Kuehnle of this place died on September 26. For thirty years he preached a gospel of liberal and social emphasis in a traditional and aristocratic parish. He fought the KKK in the days after world war one and was a leader in all liberal movements.

Another leader lost to the Church in September was Wallace Battle, the founder and head of the Negro college at Okolona, and nationally recognized as a leader of his race. Originally a follower of the Booker T. Washington tradition, he came in later years to a more realistic and advanced position. He was forced to leave Okolona before sundown for objecting to local thugs shooting his students. The school survives, a monument to a great Negro.

Labor Service

Detroit:—The third annual labor service, arranged by the department of Christian social relations of the diocese of Michigan in consultation with labor leaders, was held in St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, on Sunday, September 29th. After greetings were presented to the congregation by Anthony Tashnick of the A.F.L. and James Wishart of the C.I.O., the Rt. Rev. Richard S. Emrich, suffragan bishop of the diocese, preached a sermon in which he outlined the chief Christian social principles and their bearing upon the history of the labor movement. The service, arranged by the Rev. James G. Widdifield, rector of St. Paul's Memorial Church and chairman of the department, was the third of its kind, designed to promote better understanding between the leaders of the Church and the leaders of labor. Assisting in the service were Dean Kirk B. O'Ferrall of the Cathedral, the Rev. William B. Sperry, newly elected vicar of Christ Church, Detroit, and the Rev. James G. Widdifield.

POSITION OFFERED
Bishop of Northeasten Diocese invites correspondence with clergymen interested in fields involving parish and mission. $2400 and rectory. Box C, care of THE WITNESS. 135 Liberty St., New York 6, N. Y.

Everything for the Episcopal Church
but vestments
A broad statement but we'd like to prove it.
Ammidon and Company
Horace L. Varian
Horace L. Varian, Jr.
31 South Frederick Street
Baltimore 2, Maryland

PURE IRISH LINENS NOW IN STOCK
for all Church needs, supplies constantly arriving, good qualities, also fine cottons. Samples free.
Mary Fawcett Company
Plainfield, N. J. Box 146

CATHEDRAL STUDIOS
Washington & London, England. Linens and materials by the yard, surplices, albs, Altar Linens, stoles, burses & veils. Materials by the yard. See my NEW BOOK "CHURCH EMBROIDERY" & CHURCH VESTMENTS a complete instruction. 128 pages, 95 illus. Price $5.67. And my HANDBOOK for ALTAR GUILDS, price 50c. Miss L. V. Mackrille, 11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington 15, D.C. 30 minutes from U. S. Treasury. Tel. Wisconsin 2752.

SURPLICES — STOLES
VESTMENTS
CHURCH HANGINGS
ALTAR LINENS
CASSOCKS
CLERICAL SUITS — CLOAKS
RABATS—RABAT VESTS—COLLARS—SHIRTS
Choir Vestments in All Styles
Inquiries Invited
C. M. ALMY & SON, INC.
562 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.

The Payne-Spiers Studios Inc.
Studios at Paterson, New Jersey
Carved Wood
Chancel Renovations Church Furnishings
Murals Memorials Tablets
Stained Glass
-- Inquiries Solicited --

A SERVICE OF HOLY BAPTISM
Prepared from various sources by
The Rev. Joseph H. Titus
Submitted for consideration of the Church as a substitute for the Prayer Book Service.
$4 for 100 copies
10c for single copy
The WITNESS
135 Liberty Street New York 6, N.Y.

VESTMENTS for CLERGY and CHOIR
Altar Linens . . . Embroideries . . . Tailoring . . . Episcopal Flags. Send for Catalog
J. M. HALL, INC.
14 W. 40th St., New York - Tel. CH 4-3306
Office & Salesroom
"Orders taken for serge cassocks for J. Wippell & Co., Ltd."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

LEON C. W. KETTRING
Former Major, U. S. Army

After wandering over a large section of the United States and overseas during more than four and a half years in the army, plus what I have seen since coming out of the service, this offering is given for the consideration of those who are looking for sermon themes. Stay away from book reviews, deep theological subjects and some of the other obscure ideas that are heard. Instead, the world's people need a great deal of talking to about sincerity, honesty and practical workings of the golden rule. Preach more of modern application of Christ's teachings. Also more of what God did in teaching faith and discipline to his chosen people. Needed very much is carefully and forcefully given sermons on good workmanship. People really want religion—genuine Christian religion, and the Episcopal Church can provide it. The Church is the lighthouse of civilization. People need guidance more in the basic teachings of Christianity than in the deeper ones. Teach them and we will get farther along toward world peace in the long run and life, at once, becomes much more livable.

* * *

REV. WALTER N. WELSH
Rector at Oradell, New Jersey

Of course you have read the last issue of FORTH magazine. I hope you have made a special note of the article on "Six Philadelphia Churchmen," and its sub-heading "representative of the men and women who are the Church in Pennsylvania."

I wonder where the coal miner in his shack in the anthracite regions comes in. I wonder whether the grandmother with her home congested by the housing shortage belongs or not. I wonder if that steelworker in Pittsburgh, or that fellow in Philadelphia who wants "brotherly love" even for the Russians haven't done yeomans' jobs for the Kingdom. And what about the "form" and vitality of youth.

Is the Protestant Episcopal Church a philanthropic society or a Christian brotherhood? Perhaps the FORTH list represents the Church in Pennsylvania. If so, then I reverse my stand that unity with the Presbyterians is a good thing. It would be a top-heavy holding company in Pennsylvania.

One of the things that seem to "come naturally" these days to publicity departments of certain "humble and contrite" Christian bodies is the setting forth in print and half-tone of exhibit-A Christians whose stature and countenance, not to mention business and political acumen, might sell the faith to admiring spectators in the back pews. The Roman Church used Senator Wagner and Representative Luce. Must we mimic them in this way, too?

This is a symptom of the disease of secular success which is constantly eating at the core of Christian life. It is a stumbling block to the average Christian who is earnestly seeking the meaning of the Christian answer to our economic confusion.

I suppose it is the nature of the news policy of publications, including the WITNESS that makes it necessary from time to time to single out leaders who deserve recognition, but to constantly dig out one strata and call them "the Church," that's different!

Now again, on the same thesis in a different chapter, the National Council has released the picture "Go Forth" which uses the Hollywood pattern of putting Negroes as "help" in a Christian missions picture for the sake of so-called comic relief. The argument that it might be an average doctor's family doesn't help at all from the economic point of view of the Negro. "Woe unto him from whom the offense cometh!"

Is the WITNESS going to let these matters get by?

* * *

EDWARD G. PARISH
Layman of New York

The reports of General Convention that appeared in the September 19 and 26 numbers of THE WITNESS were superb. As a mere layman, without too much knowledge of the finer points of the issues under consideration, I was able to follow them in your pages and come out with a clear understanding of what it was all about. The Highlights also added a great deal to the numbers, making the Convention human, and your pictures were good, too, particularly those on the covers. To have such a fine picture of three of the leaders, the Archbishop, the New Presiding Bishop, and Bishop Oxnam, on the cover of September 26th was particularly appropriate. The Church ought to be proud to have such a lively and interesting journal.

* * *

MRS. F. S. ROSE
Laywoman of Boston

The report of the young people's convention in Philadelphia (WITNESS, Sept. 26) was interesting and some of us at least were glad to learn that these youngsters were interested in the live issues of our day. The reports by Mrs. Grant of the Auxiliary meetings also I thought very well done. In fact the General Convention numbers of the magazine were of a high order all along the line.

Christchurch
VIRGINIA
SCHOOL for BOYS

Intermediate School. Seventh to Ninth Grades. Upper School. College Entrance Requirements. This school is a member of the system of schools in the diocese of Virginia. Apply to The Headmaster, Christchurch School, Christchurch, Va.

Virginia Episcopal School
Lynchburg, Virginia
Prepares boys for colleges and university. Splendid environment and excellent corps of teachers. High standard in scholarship and athletics. Healthy and beautiful location in the mountains of Virginia.
For catalogue apply to
George L. Barton, Jr., Ph.D. Headmaster
Box 408

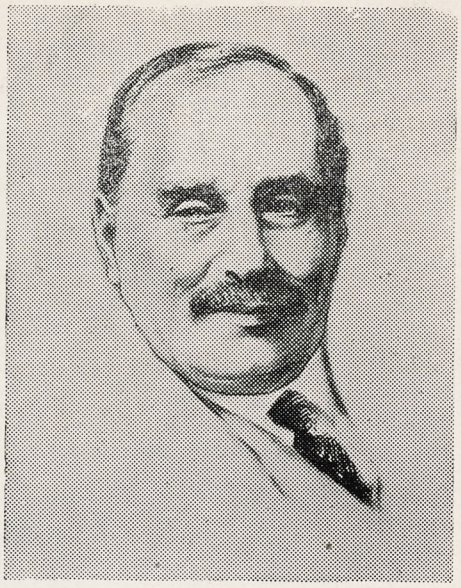
SCHOOLS

The Hospital of Saint Barnabas and the University of Newark offer a full course in NURSING
to qualified High School graduates. Scholarships available. Classes enter in February and September
Apply to
Director of Nursing
HOSPITAL OF SAINT BARNABAS
685 High Street Newark, N. J

DE VEAUX SCHOOL
FOUNDED 1852
A Church school for boys. Thorough preparation for college. Military system of student government, developing sense of responsibility. Charges for grades seven and eight $1000; grades nine through twelve $1050. For catalog, address THE HEADMASTER, DeVeaux School, Niagara Falls, New York.

HOLDERNESS
In the White Mountains. College Preparatory and General Courses. Music and Crafts. For boys 12-19. All sports including riding. 200 acres of woods. New fireproof building. Individual attention. Home atmosphere.
Rev. Edric A. Weld, Rector
Box W. Plymouth, N. H.

MARGARET HALL
Under Sisters of St. Helena
(Episcopal)
Small country boarding and day school for girls, from primary through high school. Accredited college preparatory. Modern building recently thoroughly renovated includes gymnasium and swimming pool. Campus of six acres with ample playground space, hockey field and tennis court. Riding. Board and Tuition $800. For catalog, address: Sister Rachel, Prin. O.S.H., Box A. Versailles, Kentucky.



FORK UNION
MILITARY ACADEMY
An Honor Christian School with the highest academic rating. Upper School prepares for university or business. ROTC. Every modern equipment. Junior School from six years. Housemother. Separate building. Catalogue. Dr. J. J. Wicker, Fork Union, Virginia.

CARLETON COLLEGE
Laurence M. Gould, D.Sc., President
Carleton is a co-educational liberal arts college of limited enrollment and is recognized as the Church College of Minnesota.
Address: Assistant to the President
CARLETON COLLEGE
Northfield Minnesota

KEMPER HALL
KENOSHA, WISCONSIN
Boarding and day school for girls offering thorough college preparation and training for purposeful living. Study of the Fine Arts encouraged. Complete sports program. Junior School department. Beautiful lake shore campus. Under direction of the Sisters of St. Mary. For catalogue address: Box WT.

LENOX SCHOOL
A Church School in the Berkshire Hills for boys 12-18 emphasizing Christian ideals and character through simplicity of plant and equipment, moderate tuition, the cooperative self-help system, and informal, personal relationships among boys and faculty.
Rev. Robert L. Curry, Headmaster
Lenox Massachusetts

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

H. G. WELLS
1866-1946

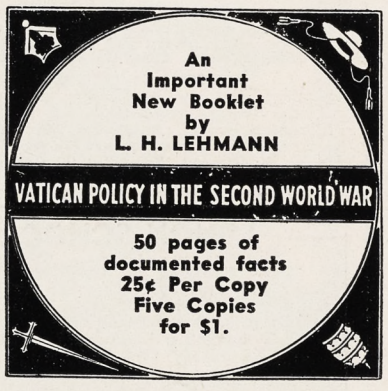
"This was a man whose word was light in a thousand dark places. When he was angry, it was because he knew, far better than we did, that life need not be a sordid, greedy scramble."

J. B. PRIESTLEY

At the cremation, London, August 16, 1946

Read

his last, his angriest book



CRUX ANSATA—

An historical summary of the political activities of the Roman Catholic Church. Cloth Bound—$1.75

Also Get a Copy of

"BEHIND THE DICTATORS"—by L. H. Lehmann. Cloth Bound — $1.75

A fully documented analysis of Vatican-Fascist relations.

Special Combination Offer All three books for $3

Good only if you Use this coupon →

Agora Publishing Co., Dept. 084WW
120 Liberty Street
New York 6, N. Y.

Enclosed please find $.....
for which send me

.....Special Combination at $3
.....copies Crux Ansata at $1.75
.....copies Behind the Dictators at $1.75
.....copies of Vatican Policy 25c each, 5 for $1

Name .....

Address .....

City..... State.....

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The WITNESS

10¢ A COPY

LIBRARY COPY

OCTOBER 24, 1946

ST. JOHN'S SCHOOL AT SALINA, KANSAS HAS CRACK SQUAD

(story on page four)

ARTICLE BY FREDERICK C. GRANT

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

THE CATHEDRAL OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE
NEW YORK CITY
Sundays: 8, 9, 11, Holy Communion; 10, Morning Prayer; 4, Evening Prayer; Sermons 11 and 4.
Weekdays: 7:30, 8 (also 9:15 Holy Days and 10, Wednesdays), Holy Communion; 9, Morning Prayer; 5, Evening Prayer. Open daily 7 A.M. to 6 P.M.

GRACE CHURCH, NEW YORK
Broadway at 10th St.
Rev. Louis W. Pitt, D.D., Rector
Daily: 12:30 except Mondays and Saturdays.
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M. and 4:30 P. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion 11:45 A. M.

THE HEAVENLY REST, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue at 90th Street
Rev. Henry Darlington, D.D.
Sundays: Holy Communion, 8 and 10 A. M.; Morning Service and Sermon, 11 A. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion, 11 A. M.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S CHURCH
NEW YORK
Park Avenue and 51st Street
Rev. Geo. Paull T. Sargent, D.D., Rector
8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evensong. Special Music.
Weekdays: Holy Communion Wednesday at 8:00 A. M.
Thursdays and Saints' Days at 10:30 A. M.
The Church is open daily for prayer.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH
Madison Ave. at 71st St., New York
The Rev. H. W. B. Donegan, D.D., Rector
8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
9:30 A. M. Church School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evening Prayer and Sermon.
Wed., 7:45 A. M., Thurs., 12 Noon Holy Communion.

THE CHURCH OF THE EPIPHANY
1317 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Charles W. Sheerin, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 A. M.; 8 P. M.
Daily: 12:05.
Thursdays: 11:00 and 12:05.

ST. THOMAS' CHURCH, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue and 53rd Street
Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, S.T.D., Rector
Sun 8, 11, 4. Daily 8:30 HC; Thurs. 11 HC., Daily except Sat. 12:10.

THE CHURCH OF THE ASCENSION
Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street, New York
The Rev. Roscoe Thornton Foust, Rector
Sundays: 8 a.m. Holy Communion.
11 a.m. Morning Prayer, Sermon.
8 p.m. Evening Song and Sermon; Service of Music (1st Sun. in month).
Daily: Holy Communion, 8 a.m. Tues., Thurs., Sat.; 11 a.m. Mon., Wed., Fri.
5:30 Vespers, Tues. through Friday.
This Church is open all day and all night.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL
Buffalo, New York
Shelton Square
The Very Rev. Edward R. Welles, M.A., Dean
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30 and 11.
Daily: 12:05 noon—Holy Communion.
Tuesday: 7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
Wednesday: 11:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH
Atlanta, Georgia
435 Peachtree Street
The Rev. J. Milton Richardson, Rector
9:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
10:45 A. M. Sunday School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Prayer and Sermon.
6:00 P. M. Young People's Meetings.

The WITNESS
For Christ and His Church

EDITORIAL BOARD: Frederick C. Grant, Editor; Arthur Lichtenberger, Chairman; William B. Spofford, Managing Editor; Philip L. Shutt, News Editor; Lane W. Barton, Beverly M. Boyd, Dillard H. Brown, Roscoe T. Foust, Charles K. Gilbert, Hugh D. McCandless, Howard Chandler Robbins, William K. Russell, Sydney A. Temple Jr., Joseph H. Titus, William M. Weber.

★

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS: D. B. Aldrich, J. A. Bell, T. S. Carruthers, Adelaide Case, G. K. Chalmers, E. M. Cross, G. M. Day, Angus Dun, A. W. Farlander, T. P. Ferris, J. F. Fletcher, John Gass, C. H. Gesner, C. L. Glenn, G. C. Graham, J. M. Groton, G. I. Hiller, I. P. Johnson, T. R. Ludlow, C. S. Martin, R. C. Miller, Walter Mitchell, A. T. Mollegen, E. L. Parsons, E. L. Pennington, Rose Phelps, L. W. Pitt, Otis Rice, Cyril Richardson, Paul Roberts, V. D. Scudder, W. M. Sharp, W. B. Sperry, C. W. Sprouse, D. S. Stark, W. B. Stevens, J. W. Suter, S. E. Sweet, Alexander Zabriskie.

★

THE WITNESS is published weekly from September 15th to June 15th inclusive, with the exception of the first week in January and semi-monthly from June 15th to September 15th by the Episcopal Church Publishing Co. on behalf of the Church Publishing Association, Inc. Samuel Thorne, President; Charles A. Houston, Vice-President; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, Treasurer; Frederic D. H. Gilbert, Secretary.

★

The subscription price is $3.00 a year; in bundles for sale in parishes the magazine sells for 10c a copy, we will bill quarterly at 5c a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter, March 6, 1939, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879.

OCTOBER 24, 1946
Vol. XXIX No. 47

CLERGY NOTES

BESSETTE, THEODORE A., priest-in-charge of St. James', Kemmerer, Wyoming, has accepted a call to become rector of the Ascension, Salida, Colo., early in November.

BURT, JOHN N., former navy chaplain is now chaplain to Episcopal students at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor.

DeCAMP, BENJAMIN C. JR., formerly vicar of Christ Church, Harlan, Ky., is now curate of St. Paul's, Oakland, Calif.

HASKELL, LOUIS A., rector of St. Paul's, Suffolk, Va., has accepted a call to St. John's Church, Florence, S. C., Dec. 1.

HAUBER, JOSEPH A., has resigned as rector of Ascension, Silver Spring, Md., to teach in Florida.

MACE, WARREN EDWARD, formerly rector of Christ Church, Sherburne, N. Y., is now rector of the Holy Comforter, Washington, D. C.

MANN, WILLIAM S., minister-in-charge of All Saints', Tupelo, Miss. has accepted a call to St. John's, Laurel, Miss., effective Nov. 1.

MEADOWCROFT, rector of All Angels', New York City, has accepted the rectorship of Grace Church, Charleston, S. C., effective Jan. 1, 1947.

NISHI, SHUNJI F., formerly assistant at Christ Church, Cambridge, Mass., is now taking graduate work at Columbia University, N. Y., and is assistant to the chaplain.

NORRIS, DEACONESS ANNA C., for 25 years a worker in the diocese of Pennsylvania, now retired, died Oct. 3 in Philadelphia after a long illness.

PARKE, JOHN H., formerly assistant at St. James', Greenfield, Mass., is now rector of St. John's, Worcester, Mass.

VEAZIE, HENRY P., formerly rector of St. Francis-in-the-Wood, San Francisco, has resigned because of ill health. His new address is 27 Diaz St., San Francisco, 12, Calif.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

CHRIST CHURCH CATHEDRAL
Main and Church Sts., Hartford, Conn.
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30, 10:05, 11 A. M., 8 P. M.
Weekdays: Holy Communion—Monday and Thursday, 9 A. M.; Tuesday, Friday and Saturday, 8 A. M.; Wednesday, 7:00 and 11:00 A. M. Noonday Service, daily 12:15 P. M.

CHRIST CHURCH
Cambridge
REV. GARDINER M. DAY, RECTOR
REV. FREDERIC B. KELLOGG, CHAPLAIN
Sunday Services, 8:00, 9:00, 10:00 and 11:15 A. M.
Weekdays: Wed. 8 and 11 A. M. Thurs., 7:30 A. M.

TRINITY CHURCH
Miami
Rev. G. Irvine Hiller, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services 8, 9:30, 11 A. M.

TRINITY CATHEDRAL
Military Park, Newark, N. J.
The Very Rev. Arthur C. Lichtenberger, Dean
Sunday Services: 8:30, 9:30 (All Saints' Chapel, 24 Rector St.), 11 and 4:30 p.m.
Week Days: Holy Communion Wednesday and Holy Days, 12:00 noon, Friday, 8 a.m. Intercessions Thursday, Friday, 12:10; Organ Recital Tuesday, 12:10.
The Cathedral is open daily for prayer.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
Montecito and Bay Place
OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA
Rev. Calvin Barkow, D.D., Rector
Sundays: 8 A. M., Holy Communion; 11 A. M., Church School; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer and Sermon.
Wednesdays: 10 A. M., Holy Communion; 10:45, Rector's Study Class.

GRACE CHURCH
Corner Church and Davis Streets
ELMIRA, N. Y.
Rev. Frederick T. Henstridge, Rector
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M.; 4:30 P. M.
Daily: Tuesday and Thursday, 7:30 A. M.
Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Holy Days, 9:30 A. M.
Other Services Announced

ST. MARK'S CHURCH
Texas Avenue and Cotton Street
SHREVEPORT, LA.
Rev. Frank E. Walters, Rector
Rev. Harry Wintermeyer, Curate
Sundays: Holy Communion, 7:30; 9:25 A. M., Family Service; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer.
Holy Communion, first Sunday. 6 P. M., Young Churchmen.

CHRIST CHURCH
Nashville, Tennessee
Rev. Peyton Randolph Williams
7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
9:30 and 11 A. M.—Church School.
11 A. M.—Morning Service and Sermon.
6 P. M.—Young People's Meetings.
Thursdays and Saints' Days—Holy Communion, 10 A. M.

GRACE CHURCH
105 Main Street, Orange, N. J.
Lane Wickham Barton, Rector
SUNDAYS
8:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M.—Church School.
11:00 A. M.—Morning Prayer and Sermon. (Holy Communion first Sunday each month)
7:00 P. M.—Young People's Fellowship.

CHRIST CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA
Second Street above Market
Cathedral of Democracy
Founded 1695
Rev. E. Felix Kloman, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services: 10 and 11 A. M.
Weekdays: Wed., 12 noon and 12:30.
Saints' Days: 12 noon.
This Church Is Open Every Day

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

VOL. XXIX. No. 47

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

OCTOBER 24, 1947

Publication Office, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago 37, Ill. Editorial Office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

Cultural Missions Treatment Offers a Contrast

Two Distinguished Churchmen of America Report of Their Visit to Soviet Union

By W. B. Spofford

New York:—Eleven delegates from the Soviet Union, all members of cultural groups, were invited to the United States as guests of the American Slav Congress. Each of them received a letter from our department of justice, dated September 19, demanding that they register and make public statements of their activities while in this country. A second letter from the department, dated October 4th, threatened to regard their failure to register as a violation of the criminal provisions of the law which provides for a fine of not more than $1,000, imprisonment for not more than two years, or both.

The visitors refused to register, cancelled all of their appointments to address American audiences, and arranged to return to their native land at the first opportunity. They were supported in this by Jacob M. Lamokin, Council General of the USSR, who told the press that the demand of the department of justice was a "surprising" action to be taken against members of a cultural mission who were here as guests of an American organization. "I must emphasize," he said, "that these delegates all are very prominent persons in cultural fields and they came here as guests."

A number of Americans visited the Soviet Union this summer, also as guests. In the delegation were two leading churchmen, the Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, minister of Christ Methodist Church, New York, and the Rev. Louie D. Newton, president of the Southern Baptist Convention. By way of contrast in the way the two delegations were treated we here present the report of their visit written by Dr. Sockman and Dr. Newton:

Because we know that you will be interested in such observations of religious life in the Soviet Union as we had the opportunity to make, we are taking this occasion to transmit some of our impressions during our recent trip.

As you know, we went to the Soviet Union on July 12th at the invitation of the Soviet government as part of the delegation representing Russian Relief. During our three weeks stay in the Soviet Union we were guests of the government and were received everywhere with a cordiality which was, to say the least, heart-warming.

We travelled more than 5000 miles within the USSR in a plane which was placed at our disposal by the government. Our tour, which we planned ourselves, took us to cities as widely separated as Leningrad in the far north and Tbilisi in the Georgian Republic. Our movement throughout was unrestricted. There was not a single request for information by any member of the delegation which was not granted. We took hundreds of photographs. In Moscow we were afforded the privilege of addressing the Soviet people over the radio. In short, we travelled with as complete freedom as any tourist might have in our country.

Of course it is difficult, after a trip of only a month in a country which numbers nearly 200,000,000 in population, to draw generalizations which are valid. We can, however, report on our direct experience. The single most vivid impression upon the delegation, we think, was the unbelievable devastation wrought upon the Soviet Union by the invasion and occupation of the Nazi armies. We can report that we saw American clothing and other relief supplies being used wherever we went. We talked with hundreds of people and everywhere the story was the same—the Russians knew of American aid through Russian Relief, were deeply appreciative of it and asked us to carry back messages of thanks and friendship to the American people.

Naturally our primary interest was in the religious life of the Soviet Union. We visited churches and talked with many religious leaders, among them the Patriarch Alexei, the Archbishop of Odessa, Dr. Yakhov Zhidkov, Pastor M. A. Orlov and many others in Moscow, Leningrad, Minsk, Tbilisi, and elsewhere. We discussed church affairs with Mr. Polyansky and Mr. Karpov, the government representatives who are charged with relations with the church, and with Baptist pastors everywhere we went.

So far as we were able to observe there is freedom of religious worship. All of the ministers and other religious leaders with whom we talked assured us that there was no governmental censorship of the pulpit. Of course the pulpit does not conceive its message to cover certain social aspects which our American ministers discuss. However, the churches do have their own philanthropies and may present petitions for the redress of any community problem.

The Russian religious leaders with whom we spoke stressed strongly the separation of Church and State. Both government officials in charge of church relationships and ecclesiastical leaders with whom we spoke agreed that church membership is growing. Certainly we had ample evidence of religious interest in the crowded churches which we visited and in the long queues of people waiting admission so that they might join in church services. One Sunday morning, as a matter of fact, members of our delegation had some difficulty getting through the crowds at the Greek Orthodox Cathedral in Moscow. It was only when the congregation learned that we were Americans that they made way for us to get into church. At the same hour Dr. Newton was preaching to a congregation of 2000 in the First Baptist Church of Moscow.

On several occasions we were given an opportunity to extend greetings to the worshippers at church services, including Jewish congregations.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

There is a great deal more to tell you than can now be written within the limitations of a letter, but we can at least pass on our major conclusions to you. From direct observation we feel that there is a considerably greater interest in religion in the Soviet Union than many of us have been led to believe. As far as we could see, no obstacles are interposed by the Soviet government which would prevent the free growth and development of religious institutions or the right of individuals to pursue their faiths and worship as they please. We found a number of churches making improvements in their buildings, an indication, we feel, of the forward strides of religious faith in Russia.

Certain images remain vividly in our minds. The stark ruins of cities like Stalingrad and Minsk reveal the heroism of the Russian people under conditions which we in America cannot quite realize. Our thoughts, however, turn to the future, rather than to the past, and we think of those children whom we saw in the camps — children, orphaned by the war who need clothing, care and affection. They are now the responsibility of those of us who remain — we saw the garments which had been sent— we saw the need for much more clothing. We saw the gratitude for our gifts and the affection which the average person in Russia has for the average American. Amid the tension of diplomacy these human bonds, we feel, are our greatest hope for peace.

We hope that we may soon have an opportunity to report at greater length on the delegation's tour, but we felt that you would be pleased to have some word, no matter how brief, upon the occasion of our return.

THE PICTURE ON THE COVER

Salina, Kansas:—The present day Crack Squad of St. John's Military Academy shows military skill, the result of an interest in precision drilling that goes back to 1904 when the drill squad from this school entered in a nation-wide competition at the St. Louis world fair and won a series of honors competing against colleges and universities. The present drill consists of intricate foot movements accompanied by distinctive manual arms. A rapid cadence somewhat faster than double quick time is used and the climax of the drill comes with the presenting of the colors by the color guard which receives the Queen Anne salute from the drill squad. Exhibitions have been given throughout all the middle west at various kinds of public functions and before many military and civic dignitaries.

UNIVERSITY GETS BELLS FROM SCHULMERICH

Philadelphia:—Schulmerich Electronics, Inc., installed their Carillonic Tower Bells at the University of Pennsylvania as a service to General Convention. Hymns were played at regular intervals, and at the request of Justice Roberts they were used to notify Deputies that their House was to go into session in five minutes. Authorities at the University enjoyed the bells so much and received such favorable comment on their operation that they have given the company a contract to keep the bells permanently with complete automatic equipment. The University intends to use the equipment for keyboard playing on special occasions and automatic strike throughout the day-time hours. Also a special short musical program each day is being considered since the University Hospital across the street from Houston Hall recognized their therapeutic value.

APARTMENT SOUGHT BY PRIEST

New York:—A Chinese priest who is studying at Union Seminary desires an apartment for wife and two young daughters within reasonable commuting distance, possibly in exchange for help with services. He speaks fluent English. Anyone who knows of such an apartment please write THE WITNESS.

NEW YORK CLERGY HEAR DEMANT

New York:—Canon V. A. Demant of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, was the principal speaker at the 19th annual clergy conference of this diocese which met at the synod house Oct. 23. He told of the position the Anglican Communion has in the solution of present world problems. Others who addressed the meeting were Bishops William T. Manning and Charles K. Gilbert as well as the Rev. William Sprenger, director of the city mission society.

St. John's Military Academy, Salina, Kansas, in addition to maintaining an excellent Church School, also has the Bar I-L Ranch composed of over 10,000 acres in Grand County, Colorado, where boys combine wholesome play with study

A FESTIVAL OF FAITH

Washington:—A festival of faith in which all Protestant churches of this city will participate has been planned for Oct. 27 in Washington Cathedral. Preacher at this service will be the Rev. Abdel Ross Wentz, a member of the provisional committee of the World Council of Churches and president of Gettysburg Theological Seminary. Bishop Angus Dun, who is also chairman of the committee on strategy of the Washington Federation of Churches, will preside.

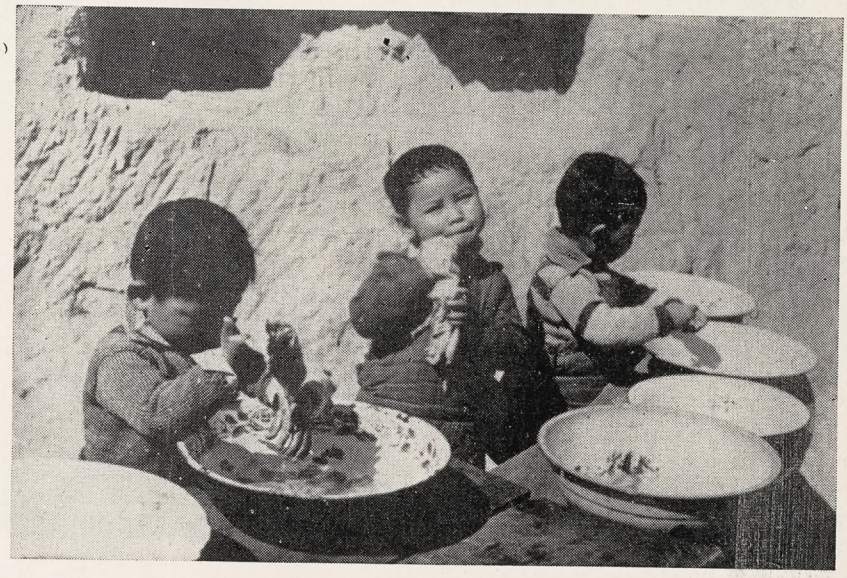
Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Rev. Kimber Den Opens New Work Covering a Wide Area

Plans Also Made to Open a Home for Children Who Were Made Blind as a Result of the War

By Kimber Den

Nanchang, China:—Bishop Lloyd Craighill sent me a copy of THE WITNESS, the first I have seen since the war ended. You can imagine how thrilled I was and especially to see that it carried a report of my work. You were absolutely right in telling my American friends that our needs for their financial support in post-war reconstruction are, in many ways, far greater than the war period.



According to the new plans of the Kiangsi Christian Rural Service Union the scope of our service will be extended to five new areas in five strategic points covering several hundred miles. The current budget calls for $1,000 a month, U. S., at the present rate of exchange and in addition we hope to raise $20,400 in America as capital for farming implements and industrial machinery. After a year and a half all the work is expected to be self-supporting and self-perpetuating.

For the convenience of business transactions we have removed our head office to Nanchang from Lichwan which is too far isolated in the interior of the province. From this capital of the province I can more easily supervise the work and attend to things without spending too much time travelling.

Since coming here I have not attempted to open any new orphanage here as there is quite a large one in the city under the control of the local charity board and in which I am taking a keen interest. But I am planning to start a school for the blind children in China as I believe there are many hundreds of them suffering the loss of sight as a result of the war. It is a piece of work very much neglected by both our Church and the government. But it is always my great joy to dig in and do something for those neglected "ones of our least brethren." Perhaps it takes as much to run a school for blind children as it does for orphans. In any case we shall soon see. Any help for this new work will be greatly appreciated.

My heart sinks with pains when I think of those multitudes in war-torn areas in different parts of the world, especially in China. They are suffering not only from lack of food and clothing but more still from insecurity, fear and uncertainty, owing to political unrest. It is high time for the Christian Church at large to get busy in doing something to avert the disaster which threatens the world today. I am glad that the Church committee for China Relief is still functioning in the United States. For it is not enough to meet the present needs by relying merely upon such organizations as UNRRA in post-war rehabilitation work.

General Convention is soon to meet in Philadelphia. I hope that this message may reach you in time to convey my warmest greetings to my many friends there. I learn that there will be a delegation coming out to China soon after Convention. I hope very much that THE WITNESS may accompany the group. If such is to be the case you will, I hope, be my special guest if you do care to come to my humble country for a short visit. You can imagine how thrilled I should be in having the pleasure of taking you around to see all of the work in different fields in which THE WITNESS and its readers have played such a vital part. It would certainly be a fulfillment of my long-cherished hope.

Hundreds of children like these are being cared for in China by the Christian Rural Service Union directed by the Rev. Kimber Den. Any caring to help the expanding program are asked to make checks payable to "Treasurer CLID" and send to the Church League for Industrial Democracy, 155 Washington Street, New York 6, N.Y.

Any caring to contribute to Kimber Den's work should make checks payable to "Treasurer, CLID" and send to the Church League for Industrial Democracy, 155 Washington St., New York 6, N. Y.

PLAN CHURCH SCHOOL PROGRAMS

Wilmington, N. C.: — An adventure in training church school teachers was recently successfully completed in the diocese of East Carolina when two institutes were held under professional direction. These were part of a Christian education program sponsored by the diocesan department on Christian education under the leadership of Bishop Thomas Wright and the Rev. James Ferneyhough, rector of St. John's here, and chairman of the department. Church school material from many different publishers was presented as well as religious books and other printed matter relating to Church school teaching. Miss Frances Young of the National Council's division on Christian education was the headliner at the two meetings held respectively at St. Paul's, Edenton and St. James', Wilmington.

FOREIGNERS TO STUDY HERE

New York:—According to a statement by Church World Service, five Episcopal theological seminaries have given scholarships to foreign students from war-affected countries.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The schools are Virginia, Seabury-Western, General, Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, and Berkeley. The students will prepare themselves for ministry and religious leadership in their home lands. Twenty-six students will make up the first company of visitors. Most of them will be graduate students and will remain here at least a year. Presbyterian, Methodist, and the Union Seminaries are also offering scholarships to foreign students.

YOUTH TRUST INC. ORGANIZED

Ft. Wayne, Ind. (RNS):—To encourage practical Christian living a $100,000 non-profit trust corporation to be known as Youth Trust Inc. was announced here by Baptist layman David Hogg. Episcopal parson Irwin St. John Tucker of Chicago is one of the directors. The trust will disseminate literature, establish training centers, promote lectureships, and advance money for needy students. The educational activities will emphasize the practical side of Christian life over doctrines and theology.

WILL VISIT NEW FIELD

Pendleton, Ore.:—The Rev. Lane W. Barton, bishop-elect of Eastern Oregon plans to tour his new field in December with Mrs. Barton, following his consecration at Norwalk, Ohio in November. In mid-January or early February he plans to take over his new jurisdiction. His acceptance has been received with much pleasure by the Church people of that diocese.

SEES RELIGIOUS COOPERATION

Geneva (by wireless to RNS):—Signs of cooperation between the Russian Orthodox Church under the Moscow Patriarch and the Protestant and other Orthodox Churches of the world through the World Council of Churches continues to mount, according to general secretary Visser 't Hooft who conferred this summer with Moscow religious leaders. The recent official visit of Seraphim Rodioroff, Russian priest, to the World Council headquarters here is a case in point indicating the Moscow patriarch wants first-hand impressions.

To strengthen this belief news sources from Moscow reveal that Patriarch Alexei asserted recently that the patriarchate is studying the problem of the ecumenical movement which is regarded in Church circles throughout the world as that sponsored by the World Council of Churches.

The Patriarch also told this news service that no decision had been made to send a representative to the council of bishops of the Russian Orthodox Church in America scheduled to meet late in November at Cleveland. Major discussions at this meeting are expected to revolve around the question of reconciliation of the so-called dissident groups here with the Moscow patriarchate.

COLORADO ASKS FOR CHAPLAIN

Denver:—Because of the enrollment of more than 1,200 students who gave their Church preference as Episcopalian in the colleges and universities of Colorado, Bishop Fred Ingley has issued to his diocese a plea for the employment of a student pastor who would make his headquarters at the University of Colorado, Boulder, where more than 600 of these students are registered.

Mrs. Francis Lewis Luce is in charge of the work at Ruge Hall, student center at the Florida State College for Women at Tallahasse

EXPLAINS UMCY

New York: — The United Movement of the Church's Youth, known as UMCY, is not a youth organization in the technical sense as reported in THE WITNESS (Sept. 26) according to national secretary William Crittenden but is a program for all of the youth of the Episcopal Church. It has no constitution, officers, dues, or membership list. Participation in its program is for every young person in the Church between the ages of 14 and 25. It is a coordinating agency for other youth groups. The recent National Convention held at Philadelphia heartily endorsed UMCY's program urging all young people to support PLAN, the official program and emphases in pamphlet form.

CONVENTION DISCUSSED

Atlanta:—Feeling that his congregation should know more fully than through sermons what happened at the recent General Convention, the Rev. Matthew M. Warren, rector of All Saints' here, is promoting a series of weekly parish suppers when delegates from the diocese of Atlanta will relate their experiences and reactions. This program follows a similar one held during Lent when the problems of General Convention were discussed.

LAYMAN SCORES COMPETITION

Richmond, Va. (RNS): — Competition by Protestant denominations to secure numerical strength was scored here by Richmond banker Thomas C. Boushall, who told a conference of Episcopal laymen that the important function of the Church is to reach those with no religious connections. He also criticized clergymen who devote more time to economic and political matters than to the spirituality of man.

LAYMAN WILSON ACTIVE

Syracuse, N. Y.:—W. Dexter Wilson, vestryman and Sunday school superintendent of All Saints' Church here, and a member of the standing committee of the diocese of Central New York has recently been appointed as representative from the second province on the Presiding Bishop's committee on laymen's work.

NEW OFFICERS IN CNY

Syracuse: — The Rev. Frederick T. Henstridge, rector of Grace Church, Elmira, N. Y., was recently elected president of the standing committee of the diocese of Central New York to succeed the Rev. Harold E. Sawyer, rector of Grace Church, Utica, who will be consecrated bishop of Erie Nov. 6. The Rev. Franklin P. Bennett, rector of St. Paul's Church, Syracuse, was elected secretary.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

EDITORIALS

The Meat That Perisheth

ONE might use as a text for a homily on the present meat situation those words of Job: "they wander for lack of meat." For surely the public has been led by the newspapers, with an eye to political advantage, to wander far from reality in an over-simplification of the problem. It is only necessary to point out, now that price control has been removed, that the present great purchasing power and hence over-consumption, will result not only in exorbitant prices but an even more acute shortage in the not distant future. Meanwhile in Canada, with price control and rationing, there is a satisfactory supply of meat at a decent price—and butter at forty-five cents a pound.

But more important is it for us to recognize the indisputable fact that what we have just experienced is a strike—a strike of packers and cattlemen for higher profits. One can imagine the headlines, the hue and cry that would be raised, if meat production stopped because laborers went on strike in the industry. Let's be fair and not wander: strikes for wages or profits—is there any essential difference? Strikes are enjoyed by no one, everybody suffers, not least the consumer. What is to be learned is that something is radically wrong with a system that permits, nay, entails, the devastating economic damage that strikes, whether of management or employees, can create.

Since this is an economic matter it is also a religious one. For economics deals with the relations of men and their welfare, and men are related inevitably to God. "Labor not for the meat that perisheth but for the meat which endureth into everlasting life." Until our sense of values is reversed we shall be far from realizing those words of the Master.

"QUOTES"

TODAY no man lives for himself alone. This means fellowship between individuals, between classes, between nations and races. The greatest task that lies before the Christian Church today is to promote this fellowship. Should it wane and die no peace can either come or survive. The Christian is learning in the hard way that it is against God's will to live for self alone. Therefore, we must withstand all tendencies that undermine Christ's ideals of fellowship and unity. However great the obstacles, Jesus Christ and the Christian religion give us the strong power we need to overcome them. Only thus is lasting peace possible. Only thus can we gain freedom in a new order in accordance with God's plan.

George Paull T. Sargent
Rector of St. Bartholomew's,
New York

Franco's Finger Man

A NEWS dispatch has been received by THE WITNESS which states that Enrique Cardinal Pla y Deniel, Archbishop of Toledo, and Primate of Spain, will arrive in this country in the near future to attend the Confraternity of Christian Doctrine to be held in Boston on October 25. Among those who will greet the primate are Francis Cardinal Spellman, Archbishop Richard J. Cushing of Boston and Archbishop Amleto Giovanni Cicognani, apostolic delegate to the United States.

In his book, Wind in the Olive Trees, Abel Plenn, ex-staff member of the United States Office of War Information in Franco's Spain, has this to say of Primate Pla y Deniel: "Some members of the hierarchy had jumped on Franco's bandwagon from the very beginning. Archbishop Pla y Deniel, for instance, had written a pastoral letter which, as the clergy's first endorsement of the uprising, had been circulated widely throughout Franco-held Spain and surreptitiously in many churches in Republican Spain. Franco's victory had been celebrated by Pla y Deniel, who had succeeded to the primacy by that time, with another pastoral letter entitled 'The Triumph of the City of God and the Resurrection of Spain.' . . . Throughout Spain, the lay priests had been quick to follow Pla y Deniel. Thousands of priests in cities, towns and villages had been foremost in the ranks of the 'denouncers' who pointed out to the Falange strong-arm squads not only the Communists and Socialists, but also the liberal Republicans, the doctors and school teachers — pet hate of the Spanish clergy — and members of other professional groups; not only the few Protestants and Masons, but also the less regular among the Catholic churchgoer. Thanks to the diligence of these priests, in Malaga alone, according to an American vice-consul who had been stationed there at that time and with whom I later spoke in Barcelona, more than 18,000 people had been put to death. In Oviedo, an equal number had been slaughtered. There were instances, such as that cited by the deeply religious Spanish Catholic writer, Jose Bergamin, where priests had even taken an active part in the raping of the wives and daughters of local Republican leaders." Now this finger-man for Francisco Franco is coming to this country as a visitor. To do so he has had to get a visa from the state department. In the light of the government's demand that eleven visitors from the Soviet Union register as alien agents (see page three), we wonder if the Primate of Spain will also be requested to register. Or are "alien agents" only those persons who disliked fascism in Spain when it reared its head in 1936 and continue to dislike it when they see it rising in China, Greece or the western democracies?

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

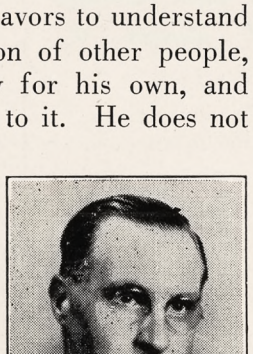
Hollywood Triumphant

IT IS often interesting to analyze a movie that you have seen. A perfectly harmless bit of entertainment will frequently appear, after consideration, to have been filled with many subtle amoral and immoral implications. The Department of Promotion of the National Council has had produced for the purposes of the Every Member Canvass a film entitled Go Forth. They have used the movie to point a moral, and done a much better job artistically than they did last year with Thy Kingdom Come. But in their latest, a trite bit of Hollywood technique has entered, and it is one of the most insidious immoral procedures of the film industry. In picture after picture out of the screen capital, certain racial groups are shown invariably as having ability and capacity for only one role. It happens in Go Forth. For no discernible reason of plot, but probably with the intention of giving a light touch, there is a Negro cook and her son portrayed. Many people seeing the movie glibly accept the customary Hollywood relegation of the Negro to an inferior place with comical overtones, but assuredly those of the Church sensitive to racial matters, particularly our Negro friends will not accept this quite so calmly. The producers of the film should make apology by cutting out the whole of this part from the movie. It will not damage the continuity, and might repair some of the damage already done to brotherhood by such thoughtless following of the Hollywood line.



And by the way of action we would like to commend the field department of the diocese of Newark which last week voted unanimously to cut from the two copies of the film that they own this "lemon pie sequence". We hope that other dioceses will do the same thing, and will so inform the division of promotion of the National Council.

Discipline of the Liberal

by Frederick C. Grant

The Editor of THE WITNESS

THE liberal is one who endeavors to understand and appreciate the religion of other people, even while standing manfully for his own, and endeavoring to win other men to it. He does not like controversy — which usually throws dust in the air and obscures every issue under debate, and he is averse to partisanship, even though it spells defeat for his cause. He will not coerce — since faith that is under compulsion is not real faith but only conformity or submission. He is not greatly interested in ceremonial—though he will not forbid it, so long as it is not substituted for genuine worship, the love of God, and the service of man. He believes with Erasmus, in his famous letter to Luther, that "old institutions cannot be rooted up in an instant. Quiet argument may do more than wholesale condemnation." And he would take to himself Erasmus's advice to Luther: "Avoid all appearance of sedition. Keep cool. Do not get angry. Do not hate anybody. Do not be excited over the noise which you have made." If only Erasmus's counsels had prevailed! The history of the Church since those days, and its condition now, would have been and would be vastly different from what these intervening 400 years have produced. The Reformation has not yet succeeded; and we may, in fact, have to go back and do it all over again, by a better method and with a better spirit. Rome has gone one way, we another. And the Protestant Churches have gone many various ways—while the tiny sects have gone in every direction, by a hundred tangled paths, all at once. There are signs of a deepening religious zeal in Rome, and of a deepening theological concern in Protestantism. Let us hope that eventually the whole body of Christ on earth may be knit up and strengthened—not in some uniform, rigid, ecclesiastical system, as in the later Middle Ages, but in a genuinely liberal, Christ-like, devout and earnest fellowship of Christians everywhere, the world over.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

But we are trying to define liberalism. I have already quoted Erasmus; and I can think of no better example to sum up this description than we find in another of his letters. It was addressed to an anonymous correspondent; we do not know to whom he wrote it; and it bears no date; but it was obviously written in the midst of the throes of the opening years of the Reformation—some think it was really addressed, via his correspondent, to the young Emperor Charles V, faced with the enormous and growing problems of his reign: the Turks threatening him in the east; the French, the Pope, and the English threatening him south, west, and north; and his own Germany quivering with internal discord and confusion. Here is what Erasmus wrote:

"The two parties are dragging at opposite ends of a rope. When it breaks they will both fall on their backs. The reformers turn the images out of the churches, which originally were useful and ornamental. They might have been content to forbid the worship of images and to have removed only the superfluous. They will have no more priests. It would be better to have priests of learning and piety, and to provide that orders are not hastily entered into. There would be fewer of them, but better three good than three hundred bad. They do not like so much ritual. True, but it would be enough to abolish the absurd. Debauched priests who do nothing but mumble masses are generally hated. Do away with these hirelings, and allow but one celebration a day in the churches. Indulgences, with which the monks so long fooled the world with the connivance of the theologians, are now exploded. Well, then, let those who have no faith in saints' merits pray to Father, Son and Holy Ghost, imitate Christ in their lives, and leave those alone who do believe in saints. If the saints do not hear them, Christ may hear them. Confession is an ancient custom. Let those who deny that it is a sacrament observe it till the Church decides otherwise. No great harm can come of confession so long as men confess only their own mortal sins. Let men think as they please of purgatory, without quarreling with others who do not think as they do. Theologians may argue about free will in the Sorbonne. Laymen need not puzzle themselves with conundrums. Whether works justify or faith justifies matters little, since all allow that faith will not save without works. In baptism let the old rule be kept. Parents may perhaps be left to decide whether it shall be administered in infancy or delayed to maturity. Anabaptists must not be tolerated. The Apostles bade their people obey the magistrates, though the magistrates were heathens. Anabaptists will not obey even Christian princes. Community of goods is a chimera. Charity is a duty, but property must be upheld. As to the eucharist, let the old opinion stand till a council has provided a new revelation. The eucharist is only adored so far as Christ is supposed to be present there as God. The human nature is not adored, but the divine nature, which is omnipresent. The thing to be corrected is the abuse of the administration. In primitive times the eucharist was not carried about by priests on horseback, or exhibited to be made a jest of. In England at this present time there is neither house nor tavern, (I had almost said brothel,) where the sacrifice is not offered and money paid for it. For the rest, let there be moderation in all things, and then we may hope for peace. The experiment has been tried with good success in the Duchy of Cleves. It will succeed everywhere if the clergy will only consent. . . ."

OF COURSE the experiment did not succeed—it was not even tried, outside the Duchy of Cleves! But to this day, it seems, at least to some of us, that this was the only way the Reformation could have succeeded, i.e., a real reform of the Church, not a revolution, not a sundering of the Church into fragments, with all its consequent impotence and ineffectiveness in modern society. Erasmus's proposed way was the way of liberalism, i.e., the way we ourselves advocate today. Perhaps we would not have phrased his proposals quite as he did. But his fundamental principle was sound, and we believe it is still sound. Moreover, no Church in Christendom came nearer to following Erasmus's principle than did the Anglican—though we admit it veered off some points from the true course of reform. And, speaking for ourselves, we might even say that we are either Anglicans because we are liberals, or liberals because we are Anglicans. Liberalism belongs to the very genius and ethos of our Church. They call us Pelagians because we believe in free will; or half-Catholics, because we observe and love the sacraments; or Lutherans, because we rejected the decrees of Trent; or Calvinists, because we accept a measure of the doctrine of foreordination and of divine foresight and insist on the full sovereignty of God. But no matter. We know what we are—loyal members of Christ's Holy Catholic Church, who love God with the mind as well as the heart, and are not eager to break with any of our fellow-Christians, or to indulge in the petty and superficial consistency of "separating for opinion's sake." We are not proud, let us hope; but we are loyal, and the "truth of the Gospel" is something greater than any man's conceiving or defining—our own included. In brief, a genuine Anglican liberal is humble, friendly, and loyal; bound by ties of genuine affection to the whole body of Christ's faithful servants, from the Pope (with all his pomp!) to the noisiest, narrowest, stubbornest of Jehovah's Witnesses; but he is loyal to his own Church, his own standards, to the very core of his being.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Now if this is what liberalism is, and what liberals are—or aspire to be—what is "the discipline of the liberal"?

His own religious life must be clear, transparent, selfless. No one can advance this cause who undertakes to do so with ulterior motives: to do that is to betray the cause he would advance, since it is no partisan cause, nor does it promise party advantages, if it remains pure.

He must be devoted to learning, especially sacred learning, biblical, theological, pastoral. Much more time than is now devoted to study is needed, if the clergy are to be real leaders in thought. It is to be feared that we have slumped considerably, in this ultra-activist, motor-minded generation. This does not mean merely taking courses, in university or seminary, but following courses of study, either alone or in association with others. The ancient Church, as Glover said, out-thought the pagan world, as well as out-lived and out-died it. Will the victory be repeated? I hope so—but it is a question.

In ecclesiastical matters, his discipline includes regularity in worship—daily prayers, daily services (alone, if necessary), devoted pastoral ministration, care for the sick and needy, and religious education. A lazy liberal is no more a true liberal than a hazy one is. We deplore the efforts being made in our Church to bring back the Middle Ages, and to effect our eventual submission to the Council of Trent. But are we working as hard at our task as the reactionaries are doing? I don't know. For one thing, we do not talk about it all the time, and make propaganda of our methods. But one thing is clear: we shall have to study, pray, teach, preach, persuade, yes, propagandize a lot harder than we are doing, or we may never succeed. For, finally, an indifferent liberal is no liberal at all. Does this cause—true, historical Anglican Christianity—mean everything to you, or not? There is the test. Pray God every reader can answer, "Yes, it does."

IT IS frequently alleged that the main source of spiritual strength for the priest is a careful and strict observance of a semi-monastic rule of life: daily mass, the breviary hours, weekly or at least monthly confession, regular fasting, daily spiritual reading, meditation, regular hours of study, and so on. Some of our bishops have undertaken to establish such a regimen among their clergy, requiring them first to submit their rule for the bishop's approval and then to send the bishop monthly reports upon its observance. Such a program is impossible among liberals, both bishops and other clergy. But there is a decided value in a rule of life, and the discipline of the liberal ought to include one: regular attention to worship, whether attendance at public worship or the conduct of services or the observance of private worship and prayer; regular periods of self-examination (such as the old evangelicals observed) and regular times for prayer and meditation; and certainly regular time for serious study. Whether the clergyman observes such a rule privately or in association with others, it ought to be a normal feature of the clerical life. Our great weakness is lack of regularity and concentration—like Leacock's horseman, we "ride off rapidly in all directions," and get nowhere fast.

But the chief value of such a rule is that it is self-imposed and self-administered. To impose it upon others, or to accept it as imposed by someone else, means that it is a burden, not a delight, a nuisance rather than a means of spiritual strength. But the misuse of the method is no excuse for its disuse. Many priests and laymen have found it of great value. I know of three boys in college who used to read a chapter in the Bible every night, and follow it with the comment in the Abingdon Bible Commentary. They kept this up for the four years of college: and they are Episcopalian laymen. The students at Duke University school of theology have recently worked out a calendar for the year, with one chapter in the Greek Testament for each day, to be read and studied devotionally. They are liberals, too—like their spiritual forebears, the Wesleys at Oxford. May great good come of their 'methodism' in study and devotion—for that is what it is, once more. These are examples of good beginnings—and may the movement spread, throughout the Churches!

I could wish that we liberal Anglican clergy had a similar rule of life, with strong emphasis upon study and devotion. There used to be a rubric in the English Prayer Book, requiring every clergyman to read daily Matins and Evensong, "unless hindered by study"! What a provision! As if the two were incompatible! No wonder that both daily offices and daily study fell into disuse, among great numbers of busy clergymen! I wish we had—not a rubric, but something better, a self-imposed rule—requiring us all, parochial clergy and academic, to engage in both daily prayers and daily study. The discipline of the liberal must be, first of all, self-discipline. Then we could begin to think of moving and strengthening the whole Church, of holding it firm, and even of advancing it in the liberal direction, which for us means the authentic, historic, sane and wholesome way of genuine Anglicanism—the saving Gospel of Christ "as this Church hath received the same."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

This concludes an article the first section of which appeared in THE WITNESS for October 17th, and which was originally read at a meeting of the New York group of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship.

A Church Rite for Marilyn

by Thurston Greene

Layman of New York City

MARILYN came to us last February, aged six months. Soon she will become our daughter by adoption. Although the legal and social aspects of adoption have been acknowledged since Roman times, the Church has not yet recognized the religious significance of the act. My wife and I propose that after all present legal requirements have been met, adoptions should be completed under the spiritual auspices of the Church whenever the parents so desire.

Marilyn has proved how the reality of parenthood can make the brightest dreams seem dull. Among the pinnacles of our joint lives, her adoption will be second only to our marriage. But in one vital respect the adoption law fails to parallel the law governing matrimony and the second pinnacle will therefore be less lofty than it should be. Both marriage and adoption create a new status in which society has an interest. Thus the state becomes a party to every marriage and to every adoption. Neither can be altered without the state's consent. Before the state will establish the new status of parents and child, a trial period of six months of family relationship is required. Thus the day we received Marilyn at the adoption agency was no time for formality. That comes later—in court. An investigator will first examine into our fitness to become Marilyn's adoptive parents. Legal papers will later be presented to the court with the investigator's report. When all statutory requirements have been met we will be notified to assemble in court with the other adopting couples, their children, and their lawyers. When our turn comes, we will be called into the judge's office for the pronouncement we have so long awaited. Fortunately, the proceeding will take place in New York County, where both probate judges are as well known for their religious and humanitarian qualities as for their outstanding judicial abilities. With the maximum human interest possible under the circumstances, but necessarily without religious emphasis, one of the judges will sign the order that makes us parents and child. Thus legally does our daughter become truly ours forever. The propriety of having our relationship created by act of the state alone seems never to have been questioned.

My wife and I believe that in so intimate a family concern we should be allowed to have a minister of the Church, rather than a judge of the court, say the final word that makes us parents. As a lawyer I appreciate the responsibility of the court in fulfilling the public policy of the state. Yet as a churchman I feel the inadequacy of a legal system that robs the adoptive parents of the spiritual preparation and triumph accorded to natural parents through gestation and birth. We chose to be married in Church. We want Marilyn to be adopted in Church in a private ceremony at which only close friends and relatives will be present. Her entry into our family should, of course, be recognized by a court order, but it should also be solemnized by a Church rite. The precise form of rite should be determined by the clergy, and would vary as widely as the Churches themselves. Certainly the step should be taken in an atmosphere of reverence. Obligations should be assumed beyond those imposed by the state, which merely requires that parents educate and support their children. We might pledge ourselves to show Marilyn love and understanding, to give her comradeship and guidance, to treat her with patience and forebearance. We should undertake to place her needs above our own, whatever her trials and whatever tribulations we as parents may be put to in the course of her maturing. In token of our resolution, I should like to present our daughter with some appropriate symbol of the occasion. This would be received and kept by her mother until Marilyn has reached years of discretion. It would finally be given to her when she arrives at another important pinnacle in her own life, such as the birth or adoption of her first child.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

LAST year over 2,500 children were adopted in New York State alone. This was more than double the number adopted ten years earlier and indicates a rate for the nation of over 25,000 a year. If this continues—even without further increase—it means over half a million adoptions a generation in the United States alone! In writing about our Marilyn, therefore, I feel that I am but one in a large and world-wide company. Though I cannot speak for others, do not many of them feel that the legal masonry requires some spiritual mortar to cement forever the foundations of family unity? Since the twelfth century such necessity has been recognized in matrimonial matters. The vows exchanged at the altar go far beyond the legal duties between husband and wife. An amendment to the law of adoption could conform it to the law of matrimony. Ministers of religion can now pronounce a man and woman to be husband and wife. They should also be authorized to pronounce that adopting parents and the one they adopt have become parents and child. The mechanics would vary in different states just as they do in marriage. The results would be the same. In New York, the law could be amended to provide that if the adopting parents so request the judge may direct that his adoption order shall not become final until a minister solemnizes the adoption. All the state's present requirements would still have to be met — one of them more fully. For the law now requires that before signing an order of adoption, the judge must be satisfied that it is for the moral as well as temporal interest of the child. Surely the adopting parents' desire for a Church rite would tend to reassure rather than alarm the court, and would promote the established policy of the state to protect the child's religious affiliation.

The Church's delay in recognizing the spiritual import of adoption can be explained on three grounds. First, it used to be customary for parents to conceal from their adopted children the fact that they were not their own flesh and blood. Second, until recently there were too few adoptions to cause serious thinking about the Church's responsibility in connection with them. Third, the institution is the creation of state legislatures—the practice of informal adoption was never recognized by the courts. Massachusetts was the first to provide for adoption in 1851. New York followed in 1873. In the history of institutions as ancient as the Church, it is thus a new phenomenon —Church weddings did not become the rule until the twelfth century!

The practice of legal adoption is now ninety-five years old. It is growing rapidly. The former custom of secrecy has largely been abandoned. It is now time for churchmen to call upon the legislatures of the several states to put adoption on an equal footing with matrimony. It will then be up to the Churches to formulate the liturgy and make the rite available. Too frequently, the Churches are regarded as the archaic symbols of a declining faith, rather than as the living instrument of God's will. If they are to fulfill their primary mission of bringing man closer to God, they must reassert their traditional leadership in spiritual affairs. There are great moments in the life of everyone when his soul is receptive to what the Church has to say. Baptism, confirmation, marriage, and bereavement have long been recognized as such moments. Many otherwise unchurched persons insist upon being married in Church, upon having their children baptized there, and upon solacing their bereavement there. For at all these points the Church, representing God the Father, has something to say—something that may disclose the meaning of life and give them an insight into religious mysteries that will make them feel the presence of God in all they do and see. Would not adoption have been considered such a moment by him who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of God?"

The recent General Convention referred the subject matter of this article to the Standing Liturgical Commission with instructions to prepare a service and send it to the bishops for whatever use they care to make of it during the coming triennium. Also the commission on marriage and the home of the Federal Council of Churches has recommended to its executive committee a resolution calling upon the legislatures of the several states to enact the type of law advocated in Mr. Greene's article.—Ed.

Copyright by the Author

SANCTUARY

conducted by W. M. Weber

For Minority Groups in Danger of the Ku Klux Klan

Against the demon snares of sin,
The vice that gives temptation force,
The natural lusts that war within,
The hostile men that mar my course;
Or few or many, far or nigh,
In every place, and in all hours,
Against their fierce hostility,
I bind to me these holy powers.

Against all Satan's spells and wiles,
Against false words of heresy,
Against the knowledge that defiles,
Against the heart's idolatry,
Against the wizard's evil craft,
Against the death-wound and the burning,
The choking wave, the poisoned shaft,
Protect me, Christ, till thy returning.

—St. Patrick's Breastplate. The English Hymnal, No. 212, stanzas 6 and 7. Oxford University Press.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Superior of Cowley Fathers Backs Church Unity

R. F. Palmer Declares That It Does Not Lead To Pan-Protestantism As The Critics Claim

Edited by Philip L. Shutt

Toronto (RNS): — From an unexpected source in the Church of England in Canada comes strong support for the movement toward unity of the Anglicans with the United Church in Canada. This source is the Rev. R. F. Palmer, Superior of the Society of St. John the Evangelist (Cowley Fathers), with headquarters at the little town of Bracebridge, in Muskoka, Ontario.

"The greatest obstacle to unity is not faith and order," said Father Palmer, "it is social and ecclesiastical snobbishness. Some of us would like to be united with the socially acceptable Presbyterians, but not with some body largely made up of people of foreign extraction. Others would like to be united with people who wear fine vestments, but not with people we label 'nothing but a bunch of Methodists'.

"Our ignorance of the United Church of Canada is simply staggering when we remember that we live in the midst of United Church people who bake our bread, bank our money and marry our daughters. We do not know what they believe and teach. And their ideas about us are also vague.

"The Church of England is in a very good position to be the rallying point for the forces of Christianity in Canada. Because of her ancient heritage she has much in common with the ancient Catholic Churches of Rome and the East. Because she is reformed and evangelical she has much in common with the Protestant bodies.

"She has already made some progress in the friendly relationships established with the ancient Churches of the East and with the old Catholics. Rome presents at present a blank wall. We can only hope and pray for the day when we can have conversations with them.

"The proper place to begin would seem to be with those bodies of Anglo-Saxon origin who became separated from us in the past few hundred years. It is to them that we have a special duty, since it was partly our fault that the divisions took place.

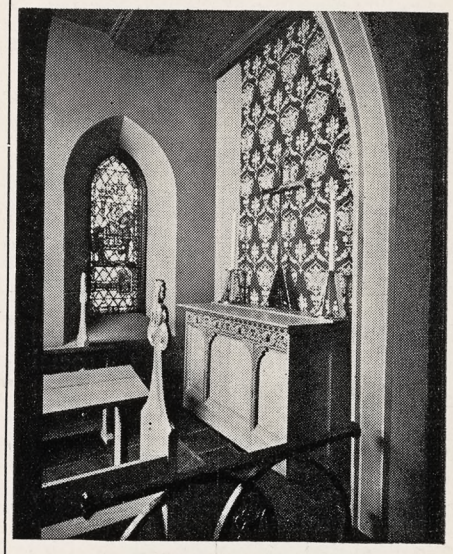
"If you leave unity in the hands of Protestants only, you will get Pan-Protestantism. If the Church of England stands aside from efforts at unity, and from such things as the Council of Churches, then the Catholic note will not be sounded. We are a large enough body in Canada to make our presence felt. We are in a position to give a lead. It is our duty to join in these efforts, and to bear our witness.

"We aim at nothing less than the unity of all Christians from the Pentacostals to the Romanists."

Father Palmer is a member of the joint commission of Anglicans and United Churchmen which drew up the plan of a mutually acceptable ministry as a first step towards unity, and his voice is expected to have a large influence not only in his own Church but outside of it.

To Report From England

Cambridge, Mass.: — The Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher, professor of Christian social ethics at the Episcopal Theological School, sailed on October 21st for three months in England. He is to speak before various Christian social groups and make a study of the role of the Church in post-war community organization. He is also to represent THE WITNESS and will write a number of articles during his stay abroad on English Church life and affairs generally. He plans to be back in the United States about the middle of January.



Large Budget

Milwaukee:—For the first time in many years delegates of the diocese of Milwaukee had a chance to review their missionary budget before it went into operation, due to an adjourned meeting, and as a result there was an increase of nearly $10,000 over the 1946 budget. The local diocesan missionary program was increased nearly 30 per cent resulting in the placing of resident priests in several locations where there have been none for a number of years.

A committee was appointed to prepare for the centennial of the diocese to be held in 1947.

Bishop Chen Speaks

Louisville: — Protestant religions in China are trying to remain neutral in the current Communist-Nationalist civil war, Bishop Robin T. S. Chen, assistant bishop of Anking, China, told the press of this city recently prior to addressing an Every Member Canvass diocesan-wide meeting. He observed optimistically that Communist and Nationalist leaders have at least reached the point where they can argue across arbitration tables as well as trenches, and expressed the

Children's Chapel
ST. JOHN'S CHURCH, SHARON, PA.
Warner & Mitchell, Architects

Just a corner of the charming Children's Chapel upon whose walls are painted the story of the Children's Crusade. If you are planning a Children's Chapel or Baptistry, it would be well for you to see the other interior photographs which show the interesting work of renovation executed by Rambusch.

RAMBUSCH
Designers Decorators and Craftsmen
2 West 45th St. ~ New York 19, N.Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

hope that China may be nearing the end of its long civil war.

"The Chinese people are—what is the term?—fed up with war," he stated.

Bishop Charles Clingman presented the budget for 1947 which is the largest in the history of the diocese of Kentucky, and a 25% increase over 1946.

Lecturer Named

Gambier, Ohio: — Canon Residentiary V. Auguste Demant of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, and chancellor of the Cathedral will give the 1946 Bedell lectures at Kenyon College here Oct. 28 and 29 on the subject, "A Philosophy of Christian Spirituality." At present he is lecturer at Berkeley Divinity School, New Haven, Conn. He is noted for his work in Christian sociology.

Iowa Meeting

Des Moines:—A significant conference for welfare workers of the Episcopal Church was held here Oct. 17 in connection with the annual state meeting of the Iowa Welfare Association when the Rev. Almon Pepper, chairman of the department of Christian social relations of the National Council, addressed the meeting on parish counselling. Others participating were the Rev. Fred Putnam, rector of Trinity Church, Iowa City, and Miss Elizabeth MacGoey, social worker and child welfare consultant for Iowa.

Helps Students

Sewanee, Tenn.:—Two emergency housing projects built by the government at the instigation of the University of the South here for veterans and their families who are students at the school are nearing completion. One of them for 30 families of married veterans will be ready in November and the second unit housing 90 unmarried vets will soon be finished. As in all colleges the great majority of the students are world war GI's.

Postpone Convocation

Sioux Falls, S. D.: — The 62nd Convocation of the missionary district of South Dakota which was to have been held at Calvary Cathedral here the first week in October has been postponed until Nov. 6-7 due to a delay in renovating the Cathedral. The renovation will cost $30,000 and will see the church completely redecorated and new furniture in the sanctuary, chancel, and nave. The Very Rev. L. W. F. Stark is dean.

Church Congress

Asheville, N. C.: — A regional meeting of the Church Congress was held here Oct. 9. At the night session the subject, "How Should the Church Present Her Message to the Men of Today?" was presented by the Rev. Wm. C. Cravner of York, S. C., and retiring secretary Dudley J. Stroup, who leaves soon for the diocese of Albany. The Rev. Charles G. Leavell of Morganton, N. C., was elected secretary, to succeed Mr. Stroup.

Protest Sale

London (by wireless to RNS):— Plans of the Church of England to sell Fountains Abbey, Yorkshire, for restoration as a Roman Catholic monastery were protested here by the Protestant Alliance which presented a petition of 10,000 signatures to the government.

First Ordination

Texarkana, Tex.: — One of the first acts of Bishop C. Avery Mason who became bishop of Dallas upon the retirement of Bishop Harry Moore this year at General Convention, was to ordain the Rev. Charles R. Leech, a Baptist minister, as deacon on Oct. 10. Added interest was given to the ceremony because the Rev. Thomas H. Carson, rector of St. James' Church here who presented Mr. Leech had been a neighboring pastor of the former Baptist minister in Harrisburg, Pa. Mr. Leech, a graduate of Harvard and Crozier Theological Seminary, and a graduate student of Seabury-Western has been placed in charge of a mission circuit in the northeastern corner of the diocese.

Philbrook Dies

Davenport, Iowa:—The Very Rev. Rowland F. Philbrook, dean of Trinity Cathedral here, four times deputy to General Convention, and active in civic affairs of this city died Sept. 28 at St. Luke's hospital after an extended illness. Services were held in the Cathedral Oct. 2 with Bishop Elwood Haines of Iowa reading the office, and Bishop Howard Brinker of Nebraska acting as celebrant at the Holy Communion. The Rev. Harold Bowen, rector of St. Mark's Church, Evanston, Ill., was the preacher.

Rural Work

Burlington, Vt.:—A new project in rural work was started here recently when a group of young men were elected to serve as the vestry of a rural mission field nearby. Its first successful meeting was a vacation Bible school. The new ves-

Send For This BIG · NEW · 1947 HANDBOOK For Sunday School Workers

112 Pages 1000 Illus.

Lists over 5000 Tested Helps and Ideas. A ready reference with complete descriptions of Lesson Helps, Story Papers, handwork, visual aids, gifts, books, etc. Everything you need to lead, teach or manage a Sunday School. Mail Coupon for Your FREE Copy NOW.

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

I am ☐ Pastor, ☐ Supt., ☐ Teacher, ☐ Worker in ☐ Begin., ☐ Pri., ☐ Jr., ☐ Inter-Sr., ☐ Y. P., ☐ Adult Dept(s). of_____Church

813-CJ North Grove Avenue, Elgin, Illinois

DAVID C. COOK PUBLISHING COMPANY

Creative Thinking On the Creed

WITH A CONFIRMATION CLASS

By the Rev. William Grime, M.A.
St. Paul's Church, Great Neck, N.Y.

Foreword by Dr. Adelaide Teague Case

"A grand job of teaching coming alive! This pamphlet deserves a very wide distribution."
—Theodore O. Wedel

The Department of Christian Education of the Diocese of Long Island
170 Remsen Street
Brooklyn, N. Y.

(THIRD PRINTING)
Ten cents per copy.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

trymen also succeeded in reopening Calvary Church, Underhill, which had been closed during the war years. Congregations range from a low of 25 to about 60 which indicates vitality in an unchurched rural community, say its sponsors.

Aid to Refugees

Green Bay, Wis. (RNS):—America's postwar immigration policy should have as a prime objective the resettlement of homeless Europeans on the land it was recommended by the 24th annual convention of the national Catholic rural life conference here. It also endorsed the family-type farm. It expressed approval of the principle of a world trade organization committed to the progressive outlawing of restrictive bilateral trade agreements. Living family wages, decent housing and at least the minimum requirements for health and sanitation were also recommended.

Issue Statement

New York: — Organized cooperation of economic groups for the common good and subordination of the profit motive to the dictates of social justice were urged in a joint statement issued here by 122 Protestant, Roman Catholic, and Jewish leaders. Among Episcopalians signing the statement were Mrs. Harper Sibley, Rochester, N. Y., president of the United Council of Church Women, and retiring President Bishop Henry St. George Tucker.

Peace Body

Geneva (By wireless to RNS*)*:— Plans for a new international peace organization were announced here at a meeting of religious leaders representing sixteen national peace groups embracing an estimated 70 million members to be known as the World Peace Conference. It will be formally organized in September, 1947. It is expected to represent an amalgamation of these groups with the International Peace Bureau in Geneva.

Bishops Speak

Lawrence, Mass.: — When Grace Church here celebrates its 100th anniversary Oct. 13-20 four bishops, formerly connected with the parish, will appear on the speaking program. All served either as curate or rector. Present will be Bishops Arthur Moulton, retired, of Utah; W. Appleton Lawrence of Western Mass.; Malcolm E. Peabody, Central New York, and Raymond A. Heron, suffragan of Massachusetts.

General Seminary

New York: — The General Seminary opened its Michaelman term on September 25th with sixty-two new men, thirty-five of whom are veterans, and seven of whom are already ordained priests. The new men represent forty-three colleges and come from twenty-eight states. There are three members of the Greek Orthodox Church, graduates of the University of Athens, and two men are from the Armenian Seminary in Jerusalem.

Back UN

Cleveland (RNS):—Support of the United Nations as an important means for achieving world order was expressed in a resolution adopted here by the biennial convention of the United Lutheran Church. The Rev. O. F. Nolde, dean of the Lutheran Theological seminary, Philadelphia emphasized this, saying, "World order must be placed on the continuing agenda of the church program and must also find a permanent place in the curriculum of church schools."

He recently attended the Cambridge conference on world order sponsored by the World Council of Churches.

Ask Amnesty

New York (RNS): — The United Lutheran Church and the Evangelical and Reformed Church through their agencies on Christian social action have recently petitioned President Truman to release conscientious objectors from CPS camps and those still held in federal prisons.

J. WIPPELL & Co LTD
Established 18th Century
Clerical Tailors & Robe Makers

SPECIAL OFFER: CLERGY CASSOCKS

Wippell Cassocks, individually cut and tailored, incorporate all the little refinements of detail which make for so much extra comfort and convenience in wear

Single or Double Breasted, of Fine All Wool Serge $39.50

Quotation does not include Cincture, Belt or Girdle

Clergy Surplice, Slightly Gathered
Pure Irish Linen $13.50

Clerical Cloaks to cover cassock, Waterproof Melton $39.00

Patterns sent on application

55 & 56, High Street, EXETER, England
(also 11, Tufton Street, Westminster, S.W.1, London, Eng.)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

WORLD YOUTH—

By William Keys

New York:—Sixty youth leaders from 20 countries including sixteen from the United States gathered in July at the Chateau de Bossey, Geneva, Switzerland, to plan the second world conference of Christian youth, to be held at Oslo, Norway, during July and early August of 1947. At that time some 1300 youth leaders will meet to discuss the theme, "Jesus Christ is Lord."

This was the first meeting of the group for seven years due to the interruption of the war. Many who attended were familiar with the life of prison and concentration camps. Differences in theological belief did not keep the sessions from agreeing on the responsibility of the Christian giving witness to his faith.

Alex Johnson, 35 year old Oslo pastor and former General Secretary of the Norwegian Student Christian Movement, was appointed general chairman of the Oslo conference, and Anglican Francis House, formerly on the staff of the World's Student Christian Federation and also with the UNRRA in Greece, will serve as executive secretary.

Pamphlets for advance study are being prepared for distribution throughout the world which will be discussed and the findings reported to Oslo.

During the war years the youth movement saw few meetings but much activity by individuals, especially in the international Christian press and information service which was maintained by the daring efforts of young couriers who kept the lines of communication open in Europe between the Churches on both sides of the conflict.

Now that the war has ended the World Council of Churches has called together for the first time in its history youth leaders from many countries to form the committee of the youth department. It has been a center of ecumenical contact and inspiration for the youth movement internationally.

"Our task," said its leaders, "now is to develop not only in great international meetings, but in the youth groups of our local churches —a truly ecumenical mind, the consciousness of belonging to a fellowship which binds men to God in common dependence and which overlaps all barriers of social status, race, or nationality."

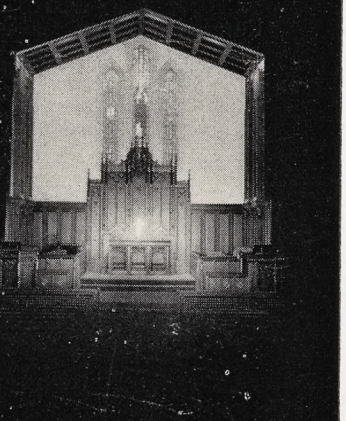
Pick Beans

Great Barrington, Mass.:—Twenty students from Lenox (Episcopal) School in Lenox, Mass., under the direction of the Rev. Edward Day, believing that practical work offers a good field for experience and service, journeyed to Gould Farm here recently to aid in the harvesting of a field of beans which had been turned over to an agency which aids in feeding the starving children of Europe. Eleven teams participated in the bean shelling contest with "Greece" winning the contest. Fifteen or more men and women of the Society of Friends from Albany, N. Y. also helped in the enterprise.

Cathedral Expanded

Fargo, N. D.: — Gethsemane Cathedral here is expending over $20,000 in reconstructing the crypt to make it adequate for the enlarged needs of the congregation. It is the first unit in a large scheme for the erection of an added building, for the use of a chapel and for cathedral offices, and for more parish house arrangements.

St. James Lessons



A nine course series of instruction for Episcopal Church Schools including illustrated work books (60c each) and teacher's manuals (I II III 40c each, IV through IX 60c each) 150-250 pages.

No Samples Payment with orders

St. James Lessons, Inc.

865 Madison Ave. New York 21, N.Y.

CHANCEL ALTERATIONS

Pews - Church Woodwork

Ossit Church Furniture Co.

Janesville, Wisconsin

SINCE 1867

WHAT DOES THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH STAND FOR?

This year, when people are seeking some faith which will make sense of their lives, and help them to face the future bravely, a learned Priest of the Episcopal Church comes forth with a crystal clear explanation of the Episcopal Church and what it stands for.

What Does the Episcopal Church Stand For? by W. Norman Pittenger, 15 cents a copy, is a pamphlet tract that ought to be read by every communicant of the Episcopal Church, in spite of the fact that it is primarily written for Visitors and Inquirers.

In addressing the readers of this pamphlet, Dr. Pittenger says: "Perhaps you are desperately in need of a religion which makes sense today because it lives in the present, is rooted in the past, and looks to the future confidently."

Most of us have had, at one time or another, questions peculiar to the Episcopal Church. Some people do not completely understand the Creeds—the term Catholic — the term Protestant — the term Romanist. In a pamphlet of this size 25 pages there is, naturally, little opportunity to elaborate on any topic. Consequently the answers—the explanations—are short, concise, and right to the point. Since the pamphlet has been written with the thought of Visitors and Inquirers the language is simple.

The Book of Common Prayer, The Holy Communion, Liturgical Worship, Marriage and other topics are dealt with in their proper perspective. At the conclusion of this excellent pamphlet we find under the heading "Some Practical Suggestions"—

1. Begin attending services in the Episcopal Church near you. Try especially to be present at the Holy Communion, etc.
2. Say your prayers.
3. Read some books, such as those here listed.
4. Arrange an interview with the local parish priest, to discuss with him the Church, its beliefs and its ways.

We consider this one of the finest pamphlets ever published and we recommend to the Clergy the purchasing of a supply for reading by parishioners and for giving to others. All churchmen should have copies available to give away to non-churchmen.

What Does the Episcopal Church Stand For? by W. Norman Pittenger. Price 15 cts. each.

Postage Additional

Morehouse-Gorham Co.

14 East 41st Street

New York 17, N. Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Kimber Den Expands Work

A group of Chinese orphans sing hymns and patriotic songs at one of the centers directed by Kimber Den.

The latest account of the expanded work of the Rev. Kimber Den will be found on page five of this issue. In spite of the great inflation in China, $15 will clothe and feed a child for a month. Will you be one of many to make it possible for us to send him $1,000 in American currency for Thanksgiving? We call upon individuals, Church Schools, Young People's Societies, Auxiliaries.

Help the Orphans of China! Give Today!

Make checks payable, "Treasurer, CLID"

CHURCH LEAGUE FOR INDUSTRIAL DEMOCRACY

135 Liberty Street New York 6, N. Y.

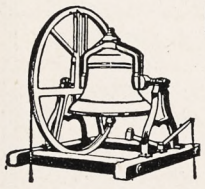
Bishop Edward L. Parsons, President



Mr. William F. Cochran, Treasurer

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Write us for
Organ Information
AUSTIN ORGANS, Inc.
Hartford, Conn.

Memorial Windows
In accordance with the best traditions of the craft. Notable installations in forty states and five foreign countries.
Illustrated material on request
The D'Ascenzo Studios
founded 1896
1604 Summer Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

ALTAR BREADS ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED
SAINT MARY'S CONVENT
KENOSHA • WISCONSIN

MENEELY BELL CO.
22 RIVER ST., TROY, N. Y.
BELLS

R. GEISSLER, INC.
71-79 W. 45th St., New York 19, N. Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS
EST. 1877

VESTMENTS
Cassocks - Surplices - Stoles - Scarves
Silks - Altar Cloths - Embroideries
Priest Cloaks - Rabats - Collars
Custom Tailoring for Clergymen
1837 Church Vestment Makers Over One Hundred Years 1946

COX SONS & VINING, Inc.
131 East 23rd Street, New York 10, N.Y.

Need a LAXATIVE?
Black-Draught is
1-Usually prompt
2-Usually thorough
3-Always economical

25 to 40 doses only 25¢
Get BLACK-DRAUGHT
CAUTION: USE ONLY AS DIRECTED

Shows Growth

Fargo, N. D.:—Bishop Douglass Atwill, welcomed back to the 62nd annual convocation of the missionary district of North Dakota after an extended illness, presented a fine report indicating growth in his area, and pointing towards an expanded program. The convocation, held on Oct. 7-8 here at Gethsemane Cathedral heard that two new church buildings were to be erected, Holiday House renovated and improved for summer conferences and that the district had given over $11,000 to the Reconstruction and Advance Fund. Bishop Atwill also plead for a personal evangelism as something much needed to assist in diocesan growth. Bishop Stephen Keeler of Minnesota preached at the opening service pointing out that the Church, as the Body of Christ, should possess some of our Lord's characteristics, and that it should be a worshipping, teaching, serving body.

Delegates to the Provincial synod are: Dean A. C. Barnhart and the Rev. H. R. Harrington, and Messrs. T. F. Alderson, C. J. Vogel, and J. G. McCutcheon.

A delegation of Indians appeared at a joint session on behalf of the Ft. Berthold people asking support to their objection to placing the garrison dam at the currently established location. The matter was referred to the Bishop and Council for study.

Sawyer Consecration

New York:—The Rev. Harold E. Sawyer, rector of Grace Church, Utica, N. Y., will be consecrated as fourth bishop of Erie in his home parish Nov. 6. Bishop Henry St. George Tucker will be the consecrator with Bishops Malcolm Peabody of Central New York and John C. Ward, retired bishop of Erie, as co-consecrators. Bishop Wallace J. Gardner of New Jersey will preach.

POSITION OFFERED

Bishop of Northeasten Diocese invites correspondence with clergymen interested in fields involving parish and mission. $2400 and rectory. Box C, care of THE WITNESS. 135 Liberty St., New York 6, N. Y.

POSITION OFFERED

Wanted: Locum tenens for one year; January or thereafter; New York Parish; must be liberal churchman; retired clergyman also considered; Reply to Box T. THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N.Y.

ORGANIST WANTED

Organist-Choirmaster. Mixed Choir. Give age, experience and references. Rev. Louis F. Martin, St. Andrew's Church, 10th and Lamar Sts., Fort Worth, Texas.

ROOM WANTED

Teacher wants comfortable room in exchange for evening care of children New York City. Write Box DA, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty St., New York, 6, N. Y.

Everything for the Episcopal Church
but vestments
A broad statement but we'd like to prove it.
Ammidon and Company
Horace L. Varian
Horace L. Varian, Jr.
31 South Frederick Street
Baltimore 2, Maryland

PURE IRISH LINENS NOW IN STOCK
for all Church needs, supplies constantly arriving, good qualities, also fine cottons. Samples free.
Marv Fawcett Company
Plainfield, N. J. Box 146

CATHEDRAL STUDIOS
Washington & London, England. Linens and materials by the yard, surplices, albs, Altar Linens, stoles, burses & veils. Materials by the yard. See my NEW BOOK "CHURCH EMBROIDERY" & CHURCH VESTMENTS a complete instruction. 128 pages, 95 illus. Price $5.67. And my HANDBOOK for ALTAR GUILDS, price 50c. Miss L. V. Mackrille, 11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington 15, D.C. 30 minutes from U. S. Treasury. Tel Wisconsin 2752.

SURPLICES — STOLES
VESTMENTS
CHURCH HANGINGS
ALTAR LINENS
CASSOCKS
CLERICAL SUITS — CLOAKS
RABATS—RABAT VESTS—COLLARS—SHIRTS
Choir Vestments in All Styles
Inquiries Invited
C. M. ALMY & SON, INC.
562 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.

The Payne-Spiers Studios Inc.
Studios at Paterson, New Jersey
Carved Wood
Chancel Renovations Church Furnishings
Murals Memorials Tablets
Stained Glass
Inquiries Solicited

A SERVICE OF HOLY BAPTISM
Prepared from various sources by
The Rev. Joseph H. Titus
Submitted for consideration of the Church as a substitute for the Prayer Book Service.
$4 for 100 copies
10c for single copy
The WITNESS
135 Liberty Street New York 6, N.Y.

Church Bulletins
Scriptural—Artistically Designed
Large Assortment—Self Selection
Lithographed—Special Days—General use
Be Sure to Get Our Free Catalog and amples
Ecclesiastical Art Press Dept. W
Louisville, 12, Ky.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

REV. APPLETON PACKARD O.H.C.
Kailahun, Sierra Leone, Africa

Hurrah for the diocese of Southern Virginia! That goes on two counts. First. In your issue of June sixth—the latest one reaching us away off in the Liberian hinterland—you record a couple of the present and possible future decisions of the recent Convention down that way. The diocesan vote to allow Negro parishes hereafter to elect delegates to its representative body is naturally of deep interest to, and utmost commendation by, most Christians in general, and in particular those of us, Whites as well as Colored, working among black people out here in their own independent Republic. This splendid move is also, I am very happy to see, being repeated or re-echoed in one or two other dioceses where the arrangement previously in force prevailed until now. Elementary Christianity, and that "witness for Christ and his Church" which you, sir, endeavor to represent, provide both the reasons for and the logical actions resulting from, this equality between brethren in our divine Lord for which missionaries at home and abroad stand shoulder to shoulder.

Second. Your local correspondent writes from Williamsburg, Va., that "the convention also took under consideration a proposal to change the name of the diocese to Jamestown." Speed the day! Not only does that word denote the real permanent beginnings of American Church history and so deserves wide perpetuation, but the awkward names of many of our dioceses and districts are to be deprecated in the extreme. Why is it that—from the ponderous title "The PECUSA" down—we USA Episcopalians must insist on standing out like a sore thumb from the rest of the whole Anglican Communion. not to say the historic Catholic Church of the ages, in our misguided genius for inaccurate and inept names? Ancient and universal practice named a diocese after its see or central city. Instead, we sport "North, South, and Western North Carolina"; and Charles Fiske, the Bishop who ordained me, used to say his English friends occasionally slipped up and dubbed him "The Bishop of (the) New York Central!" So—Jamestown it should be. Let's have shorter, city or town names, in place of the outmoded states' rights titles of a pioneer but now long-since-outgrown era in this great Church of ours.

* * *

REV. CHARLES L. BIGGS
Clearwater, Florida

I have been reading with care the Revised Standard Version of the New Testament. It is a beautiful bit of translation and transvaluation. It deserves to take the place at once of the King James Version of the New Testament now on the lecterns of our churches. I say this after reading the King James Version from the lectern for more than fifty years.

* * *

DR. LEWIS T. GREGORY
Layman of Urbana, Illinois

I have been a subscriber and backer of THE WITNESS since its very beginning. While I tend to lean a bit more to the Anglo-Catholic side than the Evangelical, I have regularly read THE WITNESS to help balance my reading of The Living Church. I have always admired the virile way that you have defended your beliefs and have always respected your right to say what you thought, although in many cases I have had to disagree with you. My one criticism of THE WITNESS has been the many times that I have felt that very poor taste was displayed: where by no stretch of the imagination could Christian kindliness be evidenced—little cutting jibes and sarcasms, etc. But the most outstanding bit of poor taste appeared in the October 10th number when a picture of the Archbishop of Canterbury was shown while he was in the process of vesting. What a pity the photographer did not arrive a bit sooner and catch him while he was shaving or putting on his shirt. The Archbishop was too distinguished a visitor to be subject to such mistreatment. No crime was committed, but whoever permitted the picture to be printed either had a diabolical sense of humor or a skin far thicker than an hippopotamus to believe that the tenets of the Golden Rule were displayed. For too long, the American press, under the guise of free speech, has intruded into the privacy of private citizens, who in turn are entitled to a certain freedom. When this intrusion fails to advance any fundamental issue, it becomes license. I firmly believe that the Archbishop is entitled to a public apology, even though I believe he is enough of a true English sport to laugh it off if he saw it.

ANSWER: When the photographer started to take the picture mentioned a representative of the promotion department of the National Council started to stop the shot being taken. The Archbishop however said: "Oh, no, let him go ahead. I had a picture just like it taken at my enthronement and everyone was very pleased with it." We did not talk with the Archbishop personally about the picture but we are assured on the highest authority that he was quite pleased with it. and not in any laughing-it-off spirit either.

* * *

MR. RUSSELL CARTER
Lay Deputy to Convention from Albany

In comment upon your quip (October 3) that a Roman priest was at hand in Philadelphia to receive those who were to secede from the Episcopal Church in case the majority report on unity was accepted, I wish to remind you that Dr. Coffin of the Presbyterian Church was on hand in Cleveland in 1943. Not only was he there but he addressed the Convention. Was he there to welcome anyone into anything?

Virginia Episcopal School
Lynchburg, Virginia
Prepares boys for colleges and university. Splendid environment and excellent corps of teachers. High standard in scholarship and athletics. Healthy and beautiful location in the mountains of Virginia.
For catalogue apply to
George L. Barton, Jr., Ph.D. Headmaster.
Box 408

SCHOOLS

The Hospital of Saint Barnabas and the University of Newark offer a full course in NURSING
to qualified High School graduates. Scholarships available. Classes enter in February and September
Apply to
Director of Nursing
HOSPITAL OF SAINT BARNABAS
685 High Street Newark, N. J.

DE VEAUX SCHOOL
FOUNDED 1852
A Church school for boys. Thorough preparation for college. Military system of student government, developing sense of responsibility. Charges for grades seven and eight $1000; grades nine through twelve $1050. For catalog, address THE HEADMASTER, DeVeaux School, Niagara Falls, New York.

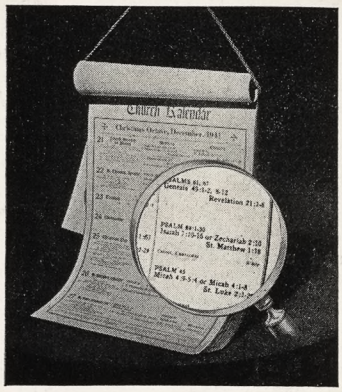
HOLDERNESS
In the White Mountains. College Preparatory and General Courses. Music and Crafts. For boys 12-19. All sports including riding. 200 acres of woods. New fireproof building. Individual attention. Home atmosphere.
Rev. Edric A. Weld, Rector
Box W. Plymouth, N. H.

MARGARET HALL
Under Sisters of St. Helena
(Episcopal)
Small country boarding and day school for girls, from primary through high school. Accredited college preparatory. Modern building recently thoroughly renovated includes gymnasium and swimming pool. Campus of six acres with ample playground space, hockey field and tennis court. Riding. Board and Tuition $800. For catalog, address: Sister Rachel, Prin. O.S.H., Box A. Versailles, Kentucky.

FORK UNION MILITARY ACADEMY
An Honor Christian School with the highest academic rating. Upper School prepares for university or business. ROTC. Every modern equipment. Junior School from six years. Housemother. Separate building. Catalogue. Dr. J. J. Wicker, Fork Union, Virginia.

CARLETON COLLEGE
Laurence M. Gould, D.Sc., President
Carleton is a co-educational liberal arts college of limited enrollment and is recognized as the Church College of Minnesota.
Address: Assistant to the President
CARLETON COLLEGE
Northfield Minnesota

KEMPER HALL
KENOSHA, WISCONSIN
Boarding and day school for girls offering thorough college preparation and training for purposeful living. Study of the Fine Arts encouraged. Complete sports program. Junior School department. Beautiful lake shore campus. Under direction of the Sisters of St Mary. For catalogue address: Box WT



LENOX SCHOOL
A Church School in the Berkshire Hills for boys 12-18 emphasizing Christian ideals and character through simplicity of plant and equipment, moderate tuition, the cooperative self-help system, and informal, personal relationships among boys and faculty.
Rev. Robert L. Curry, Headmaster
Lenox Massachusetts

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

A KALENDAR PLUS . . .

The Christian Year and Church Kalendar 1947

A Kalendar which contains 112 pages of vital information for all Church workers.

With the necessary revisions it has proven its value for 71 years.

This Kalendar as you will see in the illustration is arranged for hanging on the wall and is beautifully and tastefully printed.

It is worth noting that you have a Kalendar plus . . . the dates of the Christian Year and the days and festivals of the Church Year . . . plus the many uses listed below.

You will find . . .

Church Calendar
Church Colors
Morning and Evening Lectionary
Saint's Days
Altar Linen
Ember Days
Rules for Sacristans
Suggested Hymns
Church Holidays
Altar Society Notes
Vestments, their color, care, and use
Church Dictionary
Duties of Wardens and Vestrymen
Suggestions for Servers
The Rector, his election and call

Why not discover the value of this Kalendar this year, if you have not already used it, and have at your fingertips the Churchly information you need.

An excellent Christmas gift for a friend.

Published November 1st.

Price $1.25 ($1.35 postpaid)

Order from the publishers or your bookseller.

H. M. JACOBS COMPANY

Publishers

1907 Walnut Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The WITNESS

10¢ A COPY

LIBRARY COPY

OCTOBER 31, 1946

THE CHRIST OF UPPER ROOM BY JEAN TREADWELL

CHURCH OF THE FUTURE

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

THE CATHEDRAL OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE
NEW YORK CITY
Sundays: 8, 9, 11, Holy Communion; 10, Morning Prayer; 4, Evening Prayer; Sermons 11 and 4.
Weekdays: 7:30, 8 (also 9:15 Holy Days and 10, Wednesdays), Holy Communion; 9, Morning Prayer; 5, Evening Prayer. Open daily 7 A.M. to 6 P.M.

GRACE CHURCH, NEW YORK
Broadway at 10th St.
Rev. Louis W. Pitt, D.D., Rector
Daily: 12:30 except Mondays and Saturdays.
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M. and 4:30 P. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion 11:45 A. M.

THE HEAVENLY REST, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue at 90th Street
Rev. Henry Darlington, D.D.
Sundays: Holy Communion, 8 and 10 A. M.; Morning Service and Sermon, 11 A. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion, 11 A. M.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S CHURCH
NEW YORK
Park Avenue and 51st Street
Rev. Geo. Paull T. Sargent, D.D., Rector
8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evensong. Special Music.
Weekdays: Holy Communion Wednesday at 8:00 A. M.
Thursdays and Saints' Days at 10:30 A. M.
The Church is open daily for prayer.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH
Madison Ave. at 71st St., New York
The Rev. H. W. B. Donegan, D.D., Rector
8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
9:30 A. M. Church School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evening Prayer and Sermon.
Wed., 7:45 A. M., Thurs., 12 Noon Holy Communion.

THE CHURCH OF THE EPIPHANY
1317 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Charles W. Sheerin, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 A. M.; 8 P. M.
Daily: 12:05.
Thursdays: 11:00 and 12:05.

ST. THOMAS' CHURCH, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue and 53rd Street
Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, S.T.D., Rector
Sun 8, 11, 4. Daily 8:30 HC; Thurs. 11 HC., Daily except Sat. 12:10.

THE CHURCH OF THE ASCENSION
Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street, New York
The Rev. Roscoe Thornton Foust, Rector
Sundays: 8 a.m. Holy Communion.
11 a.m. Morning Prayer, Sermon.
8 p.m. Evening Song and Sermon; Service of Music (1st Sun. in month).
Daily: Holy Communion, 8 a.m. Tues., Thurs., Sat.; 11 a.m. Mon., Wed., Fri.
5:30 Vespers, Tues. through Friday.
This Church is open all day and all night.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL
Buffalo, New York
Shelton Square
The Very Rev. Edward R. Welles, M.A., Dean
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30 and 11.
Daily: 12:05 noon—Holy Communion.
Tuesday: 7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
Wednesday: 11:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH
Atlanta, Georgia
435 Peachtree Street
The Rev. J. Milton Richardson, Rector
9:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
10:45 A. M. Sunday School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Prayer and Sermon.
6:00 P. M. Young People's Meetings.

The WITNESS
For Christ and His Church

EDITORIAL BOARD: Frederick C. Grant, Editor; Arthur Lichtenberger, Chairman; William B. Spofford, Managing Editor; Philip L. Shutt, News Editor; Lane W. Barton, Beverly M. Boyd, Dillard H. Brown, Roscoe T. Foust, Charles K. Gilbert, Hugh D. McCandless, Howard Chandler Robbins, William K. Russell, Sydney A. Temple Jr., Joseph H. Titus, William M. Weber.

★

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS: D. B. Aldrich, J. A. Bell, T. S. Carruthers, Adelaide Case, G. K. Chalmers, E. M. Cross, G. M. Day, Angus Dun, A. W. Farlander, T. P. Ferris, J. F. Fletcher, John Gass, C. H. Gesner, C. L. Glenn, G. C. Graham, J. M. Groton, G. I. Hiller, I. P. Johnson, T. R. Ludlow, C. S. Martin, R. C. Miller, Walter Mitchell, A. T. Mollegen, E. L. Parsons, E. L. Pennington, Rose Phelps, L. W. Pitt, Otis Rice, Cyril Richardson, Paul Roberts, V. D. Scudder, W. M. Sharp, W. B. Sperry, C. W. Sprouse, D. S. Stark, W. B. Stevens, J. W. Suter, S. E. Sweet, Alexander Zabriskie.

★

THE WITNESS is published weekly from September 15th to June 15th inclusive, with the exception of the first week in January and semi-monthly from June 15th to September 15th by the Episcopal Church Publishing Co. on behalf of the Church Publishing Association, Inc. Samuel Thorne, President; Charles A. Houston, Vice-President; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, Treasurer; Frederic D. H. Gilbert, Secretary.

★

The subscription price is $3.00 a year; in bundles for sale in parishes the magazine sells for 10c a copy, we will bill quarterly at 5c a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter, March 6, 1939, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879.

OCTOBER 31, 1946
Vol. XXIX No. 48

CLERGY NOTES

AIKEN, WARWICK, formerly of Trinity, Pass Christian, Miss., is now rector of Christ Church, Vicksburg, Miss.

BESSETTE, THEODORE A., formerly in charge of St. James', Kemmerer, Wyoming, has accepted the rectorship of the Ascension, Salida, Colo.

BURT, JOHN H., former navy chaplain, is now chaplain of Episcopal students at the University of Michigan.

DeCAMP, B. C., JR., formerly vicar of Christ Church, Harlan, Ky., is now curate at St. Paul's, Oakland, Calif.

EMERSON, JAMES, formerly of the Epiphany, Tunica, Miss., is now rector of the Resurrection, Starkville, Miss.

HARGATE, ARTHUR W., formerly rector at Coshocton, Ohio, is now the rector of St. Timothy's, Massillon, Ohio.

KANAGA, MILTON S., archdeacon of the district of San Joaquin, is now rector of Trinity, Coshocton, Ohio.

LANDOLT, FRANK J., was ordained deacon on October 26 at St. Andrew's, Plainfield, N. J., by Bishop Gardner.

MILLER, EDWARD O., assistant at Christ Church, Cincinnati, O., has accepted the rectorship of St. George's, New York, effective December 1.

MURRAY, FREDERIC R., formerly rector at Branford, Conn., became the rector of St. Paul's, Elkins Park, Pa., on October 28th.

PARKE, JOHN H., formerly assistant at St. James', Greenfield, Mass., is now rector of St. John's, Worcester, Mass.

PARSONS, DONALD J., curate at Immanuel, Wilmington, Del., was ordained priest there on October 6th by Bishop McKinstry.

VEAZIE, H. P., formerly rector of St. Francis' Church, San Francisco, has retired from the active ministry because of illness.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

CHRIST CHURCH CATHEDRAL
Main and Church Sts., Hartford, Conn.
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30, 10:05, 11 A. M., 8 P. M.
Weekdays: Holy Communion—Monday and Thursday, 9 A. M.; Tuesday, Friday and Saturday, 8 A. M.; Wednesday, 7:00 and 11:00 A. M. Noonday Service, daily 12:15 P. M.

CHRIST CHURCH
Cambridge
REV. GARDINER M. DAY, RECTOR
REV. FREDERIC B. KELLOGG, CHAPLAIN
Sunday Services, 8:00, 9:00, 10:00 and 11:15 A. M.
Weekdays: Wed. 8 and 11 A. M. Thurs., 7:30 A. M.

TRINITY CHURCH
Miami
Rev. G. Irvine Hiller, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services 8, 9:30, 11 A. M.

TRINITY CATHEDRAL
Military Park, Newark, N. J.
The Very Rev. Arthur C. Lichtenberger, Dean
Sunday Services: 8:30, 9:30 (All Saints' Chapel, 24 Rector St.), 11 and 4:30 p.m.
Week Days: Holy Communion Wednesday and Holy Days, 12:00 noon, Friday, 8 a.m. Intercessions Thursday, Friday, 12:10; Organ Recital Tuesday, 12:10.
The Cathedral is open daily for prayer.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
Montecito and Bay Place
OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA
Rev. Calvin Barkow, D.D., Rector
Sundays: 8 A. M., Holy Communion; 11 A. M., Church School; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer and Sermon.
Wednesdays: 10 A. M., Holy Communion; 10:45, Rector's Study Class.

GRACE CHURCH
Corner Church and Davis Streets
ELMIRA, N. Y.
Rev. Frederick T. Henstridge, Rector
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M.; 4:30 P. M.
Daily: Tuesday and Thursday, 7:30 A. M.
Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Holy Days, 9:30 A. M.
Other Services Announced

ST. MARK'S CHURCH
Texas Avenue and Cotton Street
SHREVEPORT, LA.
Rev. Frank E. Walters, Rector
Rev. Harry Wintermeyer, Curate
Sundays: Holy Communion, 7:30; 9:25 A. M., Family Service; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer.
Holy Communion, first Sunday. 6 P. M., Young Churchmen.

CHRIST CHURCH
Nashville, Tennessee
Rev. Peyton Randolph Williams
7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
9:30 and 11 A. M.—Church School.
11 A. M.—Morning Service and Sermon.
6 P. M.—Young People's Meetings.
Thursdays and Saints' Days—Holy Communion, 10 A. M.

GRACE CHURCH
105 Main Street, Orange, N. J.
Lane Wickham Barton, Rector
SUNDAYS
8:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M.—Church School.
11:00 A. M.—Morning Prayer and Sermon. (Holy Communion first Sunday each month)
7:00 P. M.—Young People's Fellowship.

CHRIST CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA
Second Street above Market
Cathedral of Democracy
Founded 1695
Rev. E. Felix Kloman, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services: 10 and 11 A. M.
Weekdays: Wed., 12 noon and 12:30.
Saints' Days: 12 noon.
This Church Is Open Every Day

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

VOL. XXIX. No. 48

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

OCTOBER 31, 1947

Publication Office, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago 37, Ill. Editorial Office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

New Architectural Ideas Are Adopted By Churches

Trends in New Church Construction Show Need for Buildings That Are Worshipful

By W. B. Spofford

New York:—Among churches in America there is a growing realization of the need for a building that is churchly without and worshipful within if information compiled by the interdenominational bureau of architecture of the Federal Council of Churches is any criteria. Every church building project or improvement should in some way, according to the bureau, show a distinct advance in the religious life of churchmen so they can render more effective service to a community. At the same time the experts in new trends of church architecture warn of over-expansion in planning new projects.

Several denominations, it has been pointed out, are spending many millions of dollars in building plans, but these are said to be modest in comparison with the need. Of the 252,000 churches in America, more than 40,000 are one-room structures. The physical equipment for religious education has been pronounced less than 10 per cent as efficient as that provided by the public schools.

The growing realization of the worship needs of a congregation has produced the conclusion that a church is more than a building. It should be a convincing symbol of the truth and the vital faith at its foundation. Good acoustics, comfortable seats, adequate ventilation and heating are some requirements.

These are to the good, but, says the bureau, the church must help people in their prayer life, in the use of the sacraments of the church so that there will be created a place for reverence, a place where the groping, insecure, unchurched person can find peace and rest.

Church design outside and inside should have proper proportions, color, and decoration, just as if it was preaching a sermon about these ideals. If this is done, based upon past testimony where Christianity has grown, it is entirely probable that a religious revival can be considered approaching.

Those who are inexperienced in building should, of course, consult the students of church architecture if money and time are to be saved. A church need not be large to be beautiful, and a small church can by its purity of line and proportion equal the taste of a larger building.

A note of caution is sounded by the bureau which reveals that it is Christ Church, Middletown, New Jersey, founded in 1702, attracts many visitors because of its attractive simplicity and historic interest. Legend has it that Captain Kidd buried part of his booty in the walls of this little church. Certain it is that associates of the noted pirate were benefactors of the church inadvisable for churches to engage in the construction and management of commercial and income-producing buildings of any kind. With sensible planning it is never necessary for a church to become debt-involved so that its message will be compromised. Then, too, the art of church design has fallen low, and such a design presents therefore a complicated and difficult problem to the architect. He must provide a place for worship, a school, rooms for fellowship, service and often recreation.

There is little evidence that extreme, modernistic designs will be widely accepted for churchmen want stability and permanence. Without departing, therefore, from excellent designs that call out human responses of reverence, worship and devotion, the competent architect can create designs that are not alien to our time and place.

The bureau would also caution congregations in the use of new materials. They suggest that other agencies should be allowed to experiment, and point out that most of them employ only fireproof materials in their exterior construction.

In recent years there has been a decided trend towards what may be called a liturgically correct church. The pulpit on a platform with a choir facing the congregation are less in favor than formerly, according to the bureau's survey. The newer churches have the divided chancel with the altar table as the central focus for the congregation. Even the terms altar, reredos, dossal, nave, and chancel are becoming familiar among American Protestant denominations. Increased appreciation and utilization of religious art has accompanied the movement.

Religious education is now viewed as an experience of growth in Christian living as contrasted with the former idea of purely imparting knowledge. The work now calls for rooms to be used both Sundays and weekdays for all age groups. One of the favored additions, it is pointed out, is a worship center which may well be a chapel since training in worship is now considered important by most denominations. This chapel may be kept open during the day for use.

The small church needs a fellowship hall. Whether it needs a gymnasium presents a debatable issue. The bureau points out that the tendency in most communities seems to be toward less institutional equipment in churches and the bringing together of all service activities on a community-wide basis. The church can and must scrutinize such activities and lend its support where the project seems good for the welfare of the whole.

The heavy debts that have hampered the churches in America are a warning to all congregations. Modern methods of planning make possible the erection of a building by units or by sections attractive in themselves, as financial resources permit. Financial campaigns are now being conducted on a short-term basis, but since several months are required in the development of architectural plans, some churches plan to raise funds over a two-year period at the minimum with the expectation that at the end of the drive estimates of cost will be ready and progress can be made in construction. But since building costs at present are too high for wise investment, the bureau suggests that churches should give attention to preparing plans and be ready to build if the cost becomes reasonable.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

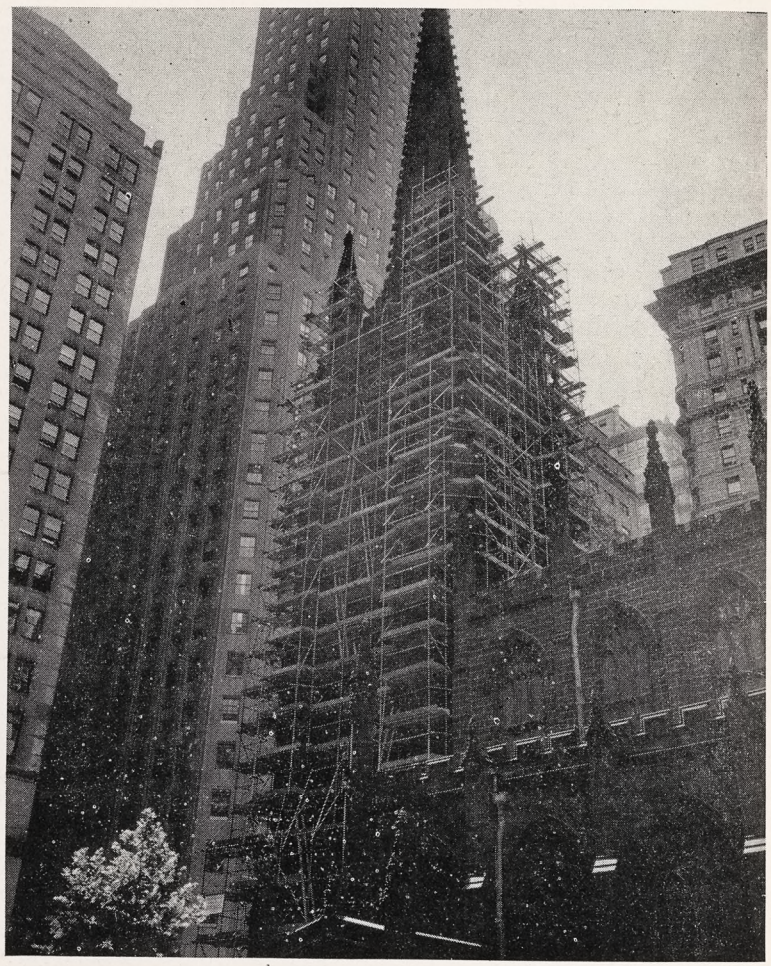
The question is poised as to whether such plans should go forward when there is so much rehabilitation needed in foreign mission fields which is providing active projects in money raising on the part of several denominations. The answer, thinks the bureau, will be found in much heart searching and as a result a proper balance may be found.

ROMANISTS JOIN OUR CHURCH

By Francis S. North
Priest of the Diocese of Long Island

Brooklyn, N. Y.:—On October 13th, at Christ Church, Brooklyn, the Venerable A. Edward Saunders presented to Bishop James DeWolfe twenty-six Spanish-speaking Americans. Some were to be confirmed but the majority were received into the Episcopal Church, since they had already been baptized and confirmed in the Roman Catholic Church. Essential parts of the rite were read in Spanish by the Rev. Guy H. Frazer and the Bishop's address was translated sentence by sentence by Mr. Angel Fernandez.

The reception of this congregation of former Roman Catholics into the Episcopal Church may prove to be a historic occasion. Behind it lies an interesting story. Most Spanish-speaking Americans and Puerto Ricans are now in a religious dilemma. On the one hand they want the Church and the only Church that most of them know is the Roman. So they feel that they must go there for baptisms, communions and the other Church ministrations.



On the other hand they are bitterly opposed to the clerical fascism of the Romanists. In the words of Mr. Fernandez, the pastor of this congregation, they object "because of the high authority the clergy of the Roman Church claim to have over the Romanists; because of the pretense of the Roman Church that she is the only one having authority from God to grant salvation to the people; and because they have found that the Roman Church has put Jesus in the last place rather than first in the worship of the Church—but especially because of the autocracy of the Romanist clergy. There is no proper sacramental teaching in the Roman Church. Teaching about our Lord is largely limited to Holy Week. The Romanists are Mariolatrists rather than Christians. Most of the year they do not worship God but men and women, the saints."

Mr. Fernandez recalls his early school days as a young child in a Roman school of Puerto Rico. The road to the cemetery passed the school. Whenever a funeral went by, they would all kneel and pray for the soul of the departed. After every such prayer the sister would say, "That is for him if he is a Catholic—but if not, let him go to hell."

According to Mr. Fernandez ninety-five per cent of the Puerto Ricans and the Spanish-Americans are opposed to the way in which the Roman Church is dealing with Franco, the dictator of Spain. He points out that the Mexican government has never had diplomatic relations with the Franco regime.

In the last general election in Puerto Rico, the Protestants, Communists, Masons, Odd Fellows and others opposed the Romanist religious teaching in the public schools. The Roman Church promulgated a bishops' pastoral letter to the leaders of the political parties, saying that the Roman Church would not give its backing to any candidate who did not publicly declare himself in favor of this Romanist teaching in the state schools. The Popular Party alone took up this challenge, with the result that it defeated the Independent, Republican and Liberal Parties throughout the island. It was the first time that any one party had carried all seven electoral districts. Thus did the Puerto Ricans

(Continued on page 17)

Trinity Church, one of the landmarks of New York, with one of the towering office buildings of the world's greatest financial district for a background. Captain Kidd, who figures in the history of Christ Church, Middletown, pictured on page three, was a pew holder at Trinity, sharing the pew with the sheriff of Manhattan Island

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

London's Churches Rise Again With Careful Planning

Population Shifts Carefully Considered In Plan of Rebuilding Blitzed Churches

By George Gretton
British Writer and Broadcaster

London:—The Bishop of London has recently announced a comprehensive plan to rebuild or restore hundreds of blitzed churches in his diocese. Of 701 churches in the London area, 91 were totally destroyed by enemy action during the war. A further 533 were more or less heavily damaged. Thus, only about one London church in ten escaped the fury of the air bombardment.

Some of these have been repaired, but the reconstruction plan which has been worked out involves the huge task of completely rebuilding fifty bombed churches and repairing or restoring about 500 more. This is a costly undertaking: the repairs to St. Paul's Cathedral alone, which was hit by one relatively small bomb, will cost $400,000.

The damaged churches include some of the finest architectural monuments of London. The loveliest of all, to my mind, was St. Clement Danes, at the entrance to Fleet Street. It was originally built from designs by Wren a few years after the great fire of London, and in 1719 the great English baroque architect, Gibbs, added the tall, slender tower which gave it its graceful proportions.

Dr. Johnson was one of many famous and devout Englishmen who worshipped there, and the site is compact of British history. The name Clement Danes preserves the tradition of the burial place of Canute's son, Harold Hare-foot, and other Danes. Next to it stands St. Mary-le-Strand, completely designed by Gibbs. St. Thomas á Becket was once the rector of the parish. Today both churches are gutted shells.

The historical associations of these and a dozen other blitzed churches in London must appeal deeply to all the British peoples throughout the world, but they are not the primary purpose of the reconstruction plan. The function of the churches is to focus and minister to the religious life of the community, and it is with this in mind that the churches are to be rebuilt. Indeed the plan goes beyond the scope of architectural reconstruction. It provides for the training of clergymen and for the modernization of Church schools, together with a general reorganization of sites to bring the parishes into line with the changed needs of the London of today.

Even before the war big changes in the distribution of population were going on. The total population of the London diocese increased between the two wars by not far short of one million, but the population of the central districts—more and more given over to offices and business premises—was falling. There was a movement into London from the provinces and simultaneously a movement out of central London towards the suburbs. Thus, great new communities grew up in outer London round what had been villages with one or two churches.

An attempt was made to deal with this problem by creating a new diocese in northwest London and by a plan to build 45 new churches. Before the project was half completed the war came and the German Luftwaffe began to play havoc with the church buildings in the whole area.

The new plan aims to build 40 new churches, as well as restoring a big proportion of the blitzed ones. The new churches will be distributed according to the present-day needs of London's people, and a number of destroyed churches will not be rebuilt, so that the total result will be a pattern which will give every 10,000 people access to a church and to the religious life it provides.

At the same time the schools in the London area controlled by the Church of England will be reorganized. Between 30 and 40 will be handed over to the state, in order that the remaining 170 can be effectively modernized and maintained. Under the new education act the state meets half the cost of building for the schools run by the various religious communities, of which the Church of England is the biggest, and the rest is borne by the religious body, which has discretion in the selection of teachers and in the curriculum. The latter can thus be linked directly with the life and functions of the parish church.

The East Window at Trinity Church, Branford, Connecticut, illustrates the three Persons of the Trinity. It is the work of Len R. Howard of Kent, Connecticut

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

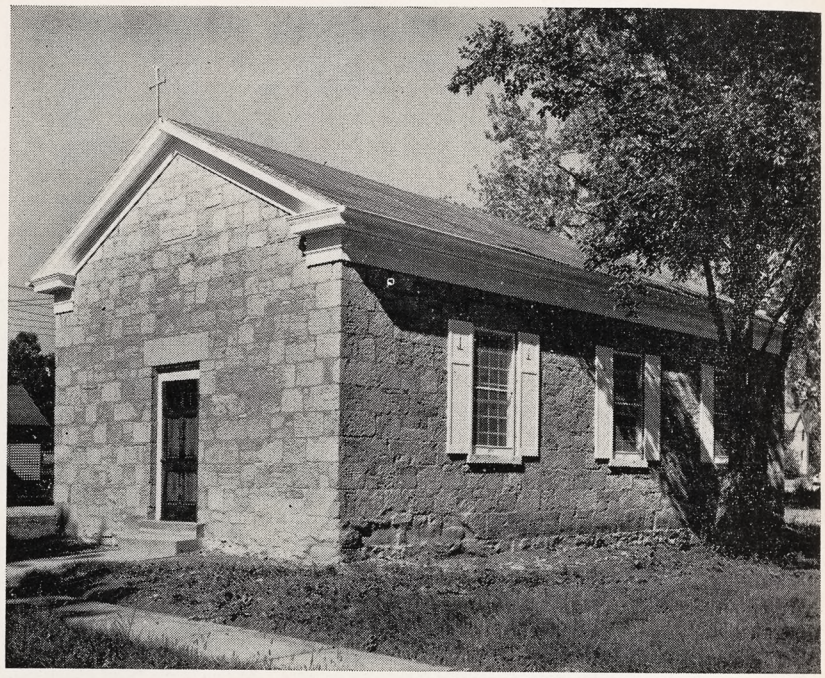
During the war, the number of clergymen becoming ordained was very small, so that there is also a shortage of personnel in the churches. This will be remedied, since no fewer than 4,000 ex-servicemen have offered themselves for the ministry. The training of those who are selected will necessitate considerable funds.

The comprehensive London church plan will, of course, be mainly financed by payments due from the war damage commission and by the sale of sites of blitzed churches which are not being rebuilt, but additional sums will be required. The Bishop of London hopes to raise these by an appeal for 750,000 pounds ($3,000,000) by voluntary contribution.

Perhaps the most dangerous aftermath of war is the possible disintegration of moral values. Families are broken up—particularly was this the case in the United Kingdom, where, apart from the mobilization of between five and six million in the forces, millions were evacuated, factories were dispersed, and two million additional women were brought into industry. Normal life is thus interrupted, men are set to work on destruction instead of creating, and the faith and values of simple people are undermined by the suffering and gratuitous devastation they see. At such a time, the Christian ideas and standards for which the British peoples went to war might well be sacrificed, and the evil powers of Naziism might achieve a posthumous triumph. Victory at such a price would be defeat, for "what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his soul."

It is to prevent such a catastrophe that the Church in London is preparing for a physical and spiritual renewal. Side by side with the important minority religious communities of non-Conformists and Catholics, it is putting its house in order. By so doing it can fortify the moral leadership which is being demanded of the British peoples more urgently today than ever in history.



ST. GEORGE'S HAS NEW RECTOR

New York:—The Rev. Edward O. Miller, assistant at Christ Church, Cincinnati, is the new rector of St. George's, New York, succeeding the Rev. Elmore McKee who is now doing relief work for the Quakers in Germany. Mr. Miller was graduated from Harvard in 1937 and from the General Seminary in 1941. Mr. Charles C. Burlingham, senior warden of St. George's, had this comment to make:

"It was a sort of poetical justice that the new rector should come from Christ Church, Cincinnati, for forty-seven years ago St. George's gave Christ Church two young men who were assistants at St. George's under Dr. Rainsford, Alexis W. Stein and Frank H. Nelson. Stein became rector of Christ Church in 1899 and Nelson his assistant. Ill health compelled Stein to resign within a year or two and Nelson became rector and built up Christ Church to what it is now under the Rev. Nelson Burroughs, present Rector, and Mr. Miller. The two churches are alike; both are liberal and independent; both are downtown churches which have refused to move as their neighborhoods changed; both are what are known as institutional churches, with many forms of social and community activity, all motivated by religion.

"We of St. George's count ourselves fortunate to have found a young minister of unusual ability, of the greatest promise, whose training and experience seem to have fitted him to lead St. George's.

"Our old church has been here on Stuyvesant Square one hundred years and means to stay here. With the building of Stuyvesant Town, Peter Cooper Village and other housing projects, 50,000 new people will move into this neighborhood—many of them Protestants. The Catholics have a new chapel on 14th Street and here we are at 16th Street. It is no flowery bed of ease to which we have invited Mr. Miller, but he is young and strong, with courage and sympathy. We pledge him loyal and continuing support and that means more than attending church on Sunday and contributing to its support. We must not ask him to carry the whole load."

Zion Church at Brimfield, Illinois, has been restored as a simple but beautiful rural church after being out of use for fifty years. Most of the work was done by members of the congregation and the total cost was extremely low

CONFERENCE IN ARKANSAS

Pine Bluff, Ark.:—The fall conference of the clergy of the diocese of Arkansas was held at Trinity Church here October 23-25. Matters coming out of General Convention, together with diocesan programs, were discussed.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

EDITORIALS

Church of the Future

THE central purpose of the Church does not change from age to age. It always assembles in definite places to worship God and goes out from those places to preach the good news that it may bring more and more people into the unity of the Body of Christ. The purpose of the Church does not change but the methods and the emphases which it uses to convert the world do change. These changes largely reflect the situation the Church faces as the world about it changes.

The Church has always had to use the art of building because like everything else the Church needs shelter, and at least from the time it ceased to be considered a subversive organization it has built public buildings that have met its practical requirements and have reflected very subtly its attitudes and emphases. It has used architecture for shelter but also for indirect teaching.

The early Christian basilica with its sumptuous decoration reflected the then new public nature of the Church and the development of a public worship, but in the central position given to the altar it retained the old sense of family worship in which all gathered around one table, which was found in the old house of God.

Gothic architecture was a development out of the old basilican form that came about through an attempt to solve two practical problems, to have a well-lighted building and to have a fireproof roof. Using stone and the arch principle of construction, the architects of the middle ages developed a style of building which in the superb logic of its revealed structure, and in its dramatization of the exquisite stability, achieved by a balance of thrust and counter thrust, satisfies and excites us in exactly the same way that we are moved by George Washington Bridge or the Pulaski Skyway.

When we compare a mediaeval church to a modern building why do we refer to a bridge instead of an American Gothic church? It is because we know unconsciously that modern Gothic is not logical or exciting. Steel, reinforced concrete, the cantilever principle of construction, to name only a few of our advances, have made the traditional methods of building anachronistic. We do not respond to modern Gothic as beautiful in itself. To quote Thomas Aquinas, we do not see in it "the glory of form shining through matter." We respond to it sentimentally. We escape from the modern world into a church building that recalls the middle ages where we are not faced by the atomic bomb. Esoteric symbolism keeps our minds off the problems of our day. Pretty little side altars, the result of the cult of relics and of traffic in requiem and votive masses, takes part of our attention away from the urgent demand made on us by one altar that reminds us that we human beings are all one family and that all of us must be gathered around one table at one feast. Screens and choirstalls help relieve us of the message of the altar which in its remoteness reflects the days when the clergy claimed to be the Church and the people were relieved by the clergy of their obligation to carry on the work of the Church.

Can't we face the demands made on us by the presence of the altar to solve the problems of our age? Some of those problems came from the science and techniques that make modern architecture possible. Modern architecture reminds us of our age and our problems. Can't we face them when we come into our church buildings? Must we always be just a "congregation here present" to have something done for us? Can't we be "servants, whose faith and devotion are known unto thee and who here stand around" (the altar)?

Let's make it clear in our buildings that we are servants and let's face the modern world.

"QUOTES"

WHILE it would be too much to say that a wave of church building would cause a religious revival, it is a fact that great eras of growth in Christianity have been characterized by extensive church building. It may well be that the next great religious revival will be stimulated through the eye rather than the ear. A traveling loan library of religious art might do much to deepen religious feeling and to cultivate esthetic appreciation.

—Information Service of the Federal Council of Churches

Discriminate November 5

WE IN these United States have been most profuse of late in our zeal to have free elections held in certain countries in Europe, but without asking how free an election can be, anywhere, even here at home on Tuesday, November 5th, 1946. The question certainly arises for all progressively minded Americans this coming Election Day. True, we have a choice, but only a very limited one, because it is made between two political parties that really are of the same fundamental nature, between which there is nothing much deeper than which gang of lawyers will run what way, for whom, at how much.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Political candidates, however, are people and some are more honest and more consecrated than others. These progressives, of whatever parties, deserve our votes as Christians in order that as sound and progressive a Congress as possible may be elected to fight the unholy coalition of big business Republicans and race-minded Democrats and to put spinal fortitude into a very weak President. Progressivism, even as reaction, does cross party lines and we must vote accordingly.

The recent Conference of Progressives in Chicago made this non-partisan approach to politics a fundamental plank in its platform. We are glad to see that this conference is now being set up on a permanent basis with plans to make it, in the words of Philip Murray, "the most powerful liberal agency ever brought together in the history of this country."

In calling for a return to the foreign and domestic policies laid down by men like President Roosevelt, Wendell Willkie and Henry A. Wallace, the Conference said "The real danger to America today rests in the power of our native fascists, reactionaries, isolationists, cartellists" and stated that a country like ours need never be afraid of any other nation or group if we make our economy work and act internationally according to our public commitments.

The findings maintained that the real issues before the country were being hidden behind a concerted drive in the American press on false issues to disconcert and frighten the people. It is the meat shortage, it is the rising dairy costs, and the policies of the huge milk industry; it is the N.A.M.'s constant and concerted attacks upon the O.P.A., labor and the legal right of collective bargaining. The conference pointed out that the "Red scare" and the "Russian imperialist bogie" are fine things to occupy people's minds lest they question huge military expenditures, the support of fascist-minded governments in Greece, China and Spain and the lack of national action on the many lynchings that have occurred during the past year.

We wish it well and hope that through its activity it will soon give the United States really free elections in which voters can make a choice between progressives and reactionaries and not have to shop around for good men and women for whom to vote.

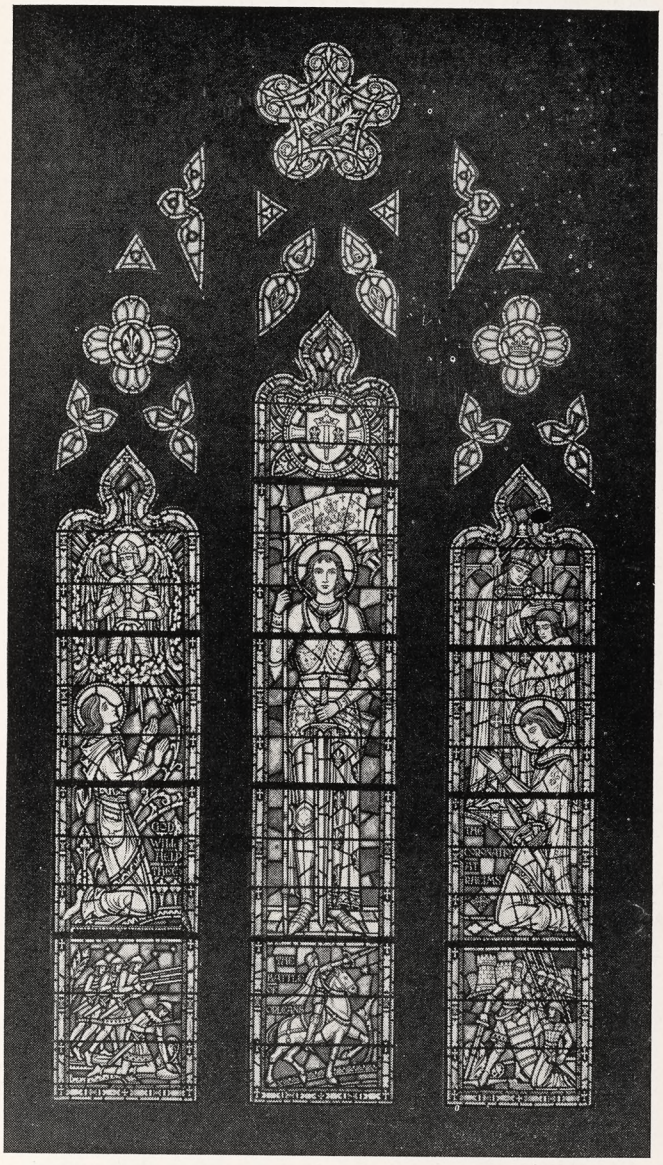
But until that happy day arrives, we urge all Church people to vote for those sincere candidates who honestly believe that all persons should have a full life and have it more abundantly. In finding out who these persons are, we ask that you ignore the campaign speeches and promises and look at the past voting records and past histories of the candidates, paying especial attention to whom their friends are and with which social strata they associate in the off-years.

Art and the Modern Church

by Grace Treadwell

Vice Chairman of National Association of Women Artists

"Art should go deeper than the expression of self, or the objectivity of surface. God-centered art has ever been a powerful force in the Christian community. We need it today to deepen the quality of our worship."



THIS is a reprint from a folder which advertised the Christmas festival at St. George's Church, New York, 1945. The decorative scheme of the bazaar was a community exhibition in which the work of gifted children, amateurs, and well known professionals made a colorful background for sales booths. It was fun. Lots of new people came because of it. Several races participated. At the same festival, an excellent exhibition of the best women artists in New York was hung in another part of the building. This, too, was a great attraction.

Since this affair a series of excellent exhibitions have been hung. One entirely by members of the National Academy was particularly successful. Several other churches have undertaken exhibitions and more are inquiring how they may be obtained. St. John's in Greenwich Village is allowing the Village Art Center to use its parish house for regular exhibitions.

To the St. George's gallery many art groups have come and many hundred people have seen the paintings. The parish life goes on about them. The children notice and are delighted. These exhibitions will be changed once a month and the idea is to invite a varied list of artists, not only those whose reputations are established, but gifted amateurs whose work is sensitive. The selection is made regardless of race or reputation, but no work which is motivated by unworthy conceptions of art is included. Some fields of art which are incomprehensible to the uninitiate are also excluded because it is felt that the exhibitions should be understood and should uplift and help if they

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Joan-of-Arc Window in Washington Cathedral which was designed and made by Wilbur Herbert Burnham, designer and craftsman of stained and leaded glass. Mr. Burnham is a member of the Church's commission on Church architecture and the allied arts are to be part of a church program. The church school is planning visual aids for 1946-1947 with slides of famous paintings; and photographs of the best church art will be used in their studies.

The idea behind this experiment has been studied and worked out over a period of years, and the progress recently is very gratifying. It has been apparent to artists for some time that art has ceased to hold an honored, or even a dignified position in the ordinary life of a parish. It is thought of as something remote from parish activities, something expensive, to be purchased by well endowed churches for memorials and is looked for only in studios selling "church art" and where the artist remains anonymous, so that the work of art is not an expression of the religious thought of the parish it is painted for; it is not a shared experience between artist and congregation.

In the Anglo-Catholic churches the visual still holds an honored place, and the fact that they lay less stress on social service creates a more favorable atmosphere for art production. But even in the Anglo-Catholic churches, a good deal of the art is inferior and looks backwards in nostalgic imitation of fine early Gothic work. The virility of modern art is not lending its life-blood to vigorous religious painting. The easel paintings "about" religion frequently exhibited in galleries are seldom motivated by a serious church background based on prayer and humility.

In the low churches, activity of a social order has overlaid the state of mind conducive to art production. No one can paint and also do a proper social service job. Painting is a quiet, meditative and wholly absorbing work. It is intended to be used for the visual revelation of God in people or God in nature. It is intended to help people to feel more devout. Or it can be used for social reform, as Diego de Rivera uses it, or for propaganda as cartoonists use it. But its service is indirect and not objective in the same sense as a good deed involving direct contact with an individual.

The experience of artists wishing to be really included in parish life is revealing. To hold an honored place, they are, as things are now, required to live up to the high standards of active service and somehow be successful painters in their odd time! This is an impossible assignment and one to frustrate and bewilder any artist taking either art or religion seriously.

Music is accorded its full place as a serious contribution because it is part of the service and important in that way, but it is doubtful whether there is much comprehension of the temperament which produces creative religious music to be used by our choirs. Such comprehension would include other arts and then there would be no situation to improve.

There has been so much emphasis on humility as the basis for parish service, modest contribution based on self-oblivion, that it is difficult for church people not to condemn a profession which has to have an audience to complete itself. For this reason, artists appear arrogant to those accustomed to unobtrusive group contribution.

In the 14th to 16th Centuries of Renaissance splendor in Italy, artists were very much accepted in the churches. They expressed their thinking in sculpture, holy vessels and murals intended for church decoration. The artists were valued in their church and were at the center of the thinking of the parish as the historians of its sermons and the narrators of Bible stories. Their work stimulated and intensified the degree of worship.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

When the quality of decoration in the churches became over-ornate and decadent in spirit, it was distracting to holy thoughts, not because it was art, but because it was the wrong sort of art. The Reformation cut off the arts without a shilling of further patronage, whitewashed the glowing colors, and left music and architecture, the indispensables, to carry on alone. The best artists turned to other means of expression.

FOR several hundred years a revolution in painting has been taking place: the introduction of light, impressionism in new techniques, but most of all the introduction of self, self-expression, the importance of one's own impressions and emotions. If God enters into things at all, it is because the artist, like the pure in heart, has a certain capacity to visualize God, not as a person, but in the perception of his glory all about. Thus art always has an important contribution to make. It is always derivative of God, but seldom fully aware of the Christian implication. Christian art must have a human application, possibly through sensitive portraiture, or characterization in subject pictures, or in religious painting which understands the Gospels. The art for art's sake compulsion changes to an art for Christ's sake compulsion. There is nothing new in this idea except in what it does to the output of the artist. Since the reception of modern art is controlled by a complex system of galleries or groups who exhibit, it is important that the Church be ready to receive a type of art which would not fit into the mundane requirements of art galleries. Art designed especially for the churches should be the product of prayer, and it should have passed beyond a mere consciousness of self to a consciousness that the self is devoted to a religious purpose. It should not be produced for publicity or fame.

We could teach our children such a devotional attitude if our Sunday schools included a well thought out art program bearing this in mind. Such art instruction would bring out a child's spontaneous expression of what he was learning of religion. Instead, we show our Sunday school children third rate drawings, illustrations poorly characterizing the Bible stories, and effeminate versions of Christ which any boy would reject. Children are conditioned by such art and should only be shown the very best and instructed by professionals.

Modern instruction in art classes in day schools develops only self-expression or the imitation of objects. It has not occurred to anyone that a religious art can never be produced unless the mood of self-expression has been disciplined to a religious motivation. When the tryptichs were being done for the army and navy during the war, it was evident that good craftsmanship was more available than religious thought. Though many were works of art, patriotism was the motivation. The conception was seldom a proper background for services. To do a religious painting, the artist needs to be in a condition of deep spiritual concentration. Prayer and meditation are necessary as well as a full understanding of the episode to be portrayed.

The detail from The Upper Room illustrated on the cover was done for St. Luke's English Gothic Church in Smethport, Pa., for the Reverend Rodney Cobb. When the wood panels of the altar-piece were set in place and joined, some plastering and some adjustments had to be made. The artist from New York spent a week in the life of the parish and was invited to join in the church supper and other activities of the moment. One evening, a little time was devoted to a detailed explanation of the altar-piece, by that time fully in place. We spoke of the Upper Room, of Peter and John and Andrew, and of Christ, of the symbols of each painted underneath in a band of Gothic tracery. When the talk was over, everyone voiced the same question: "Where is the original?" It was not possible to convince them that they had the original, that it was not a copy from some famous painting.

Here was the proof of the estrangement between the life of the Church and the creation of a work of art. To them the connection was simply impossible. Somebody who seemed quite normal in parish behavior would not produce a new visualization of Christ.

Having art exhibitions in our churches means that the Church takes the initiative in establishing the necessary relation between art and artists on the one hand and the congregation in general on the other. But this is only the beginning of what must be done. The next step is for the people to make an effort to comprehend the calibre of mind and spirit which creates good art.

It is time that our churches learned to accept artists with the full implication of their contribution, as they are including many other minorities, and all artists are minorities. There should be no effort to cure them of their basic function, which has to be service through art. With the desperate tension and the lack of time now to prepare the Church to meet increased demands, we need more and more vital Christians, not just nominal ones.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

More imaginative ones would perhaps have some new solutions to offer. Certainly the creative minds can no longer be allowed to do no work in connection with church people. Church people should be versatile enough to find jobs for all. Separate goodness, kindness, sportsmanship are admirable, and artists work wonders among themselves in charitable connections. But the intellectuals need, somehow, to be re-integrated into the common cause. St. Exupery says the cathedral is composed of a proper relationship between the ornamentation and the bricks. Our artists tend at present to be more than a little remote. Many are afraid to be comprehensible lest they be considered old-fashioned. Psychology has taken the place of religious inspiration. Destructive analysis replaces beautiful constructive effort. It is smart to be hard and brittle and vulgar. The Church has a job to do and a new sort of conversion to help the good and discourage the bad, to accept what is offered in purity of spirit, and to try seriously to reclaim what is unregenerate.

If accepting good art to be shown in our churches can give confidence to artists, let us do what we can to make the first steps easier. Artists are the most generous people in the world: they give of themselves and need to be accepted. Refusal of this gift on the part of the Church is inconceivable and unforgivable, like a refusal by God. Therefore, we must remember that Christ knew when the gift was sincere. He accepted at once, without waiting for the giver to prove himself. Faith carried him strange gifts, like the precious ointment of Magdalene, seemingly useless. But he knew that with the security of accepted giving many people would stay and finally be able to measure the value of their original gift. The sensitive need no reminder if they find that any adjustment has to be made.

A Factory For Souls

by

MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.

WHILE spending a pleasant and profitable week this summer at the Champlain conference of the diocese of Vermont, I made a wish of several years come true by visiting St. Mark's Roman Catholic Church in Burlington. In the August 1943 issue of Liturgical Arts I had read an account of this parish church and had taken a fancy to it from the pictures of its design and furnishing. Through the kindness of our rector of St. Paul's in Burlington, the Rev. Charles Martin, several of us at the conference were privileged in meeting the pastor of St. Mark's, Fr. William A. Tennien, who talked to us most engagingly of the germinal ideas which lay behind the planning of his church. His architects were the local firm of Freeman, French, Freeman. They were not Roman Catholics, and, what is more, they had never designed a church before!

A few in our group thought the architects should never design a church again. They said St. Mark's looked like a factory. Maybe so. But somehow I have always thought that the Church was a kind of factory—for the repair of damaged souls no less than for the formation of bright, new, shiny ones. The verse of the psalmist came to mind:

> Make me a clean heart, O God,
> And renew a right spirit within me.

Now St. Mark's was clean and new, and there was about it, so it seemed to me, something decidedly

St. Mark's Roman Catholic Church at Burlington, Vermont, which is described by Professor Shepherd right. With simple, unadorned dignity and directness it expresses what is essential in the Catholic faith of Christ, no more and no less, in terms of our own day and age.

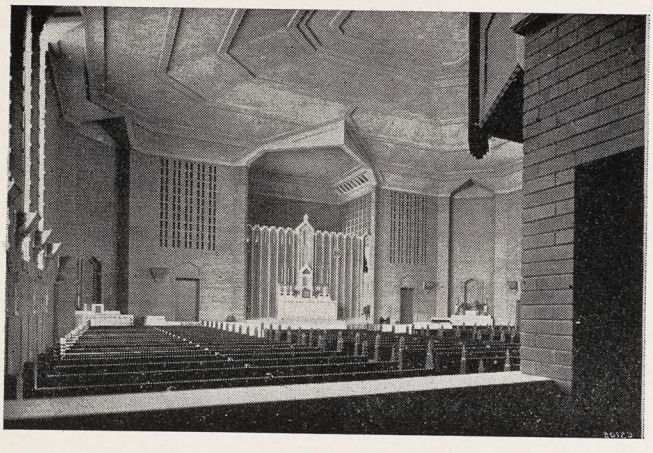
The church is literally built up around the altar, a massive slab of green Vermont marble with a V-shaped base. It is a true table, and mass can be celebrated from either side. The candles and tabernacle required by Roman ceremonial law for the altar are deliberately low in scale so as not to obstruct the view of the priest when he celebrates mass facing the people—a custom which Fr. Tennien said was becoming increasingly favored by his people. From the tester in the ceiling inscribed with a Chi-Rho monogram is suspended a crucifix of lovely proportion and design, executed by Frank Feigeler. Whatever vantage point one takes in the interior the altar and pendent crucifix dominate the attention. Even the passer-by on the outside is attracted and invited by them, for they are all one sees through the doors. There is no mistaking what kind of a "factory" this building is.

It so happens that the floor plan of the church is cruciform, a feature not due to any studied sym-

(Continued on page 18)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.



The Church of the Future

by Alfonso Iannelli

Chicago Architect and Artist

THE church of the future will be more adequate and more convenient for the people who use it. Plans based upon precedent which were a natural solution for a mediæval town do not fit the town or city of 1946. Openings for light were restricted by masonry sizes, and the span of the roof was also limited by the size and length of the rafters. Today, steel and reinforced concrete make possible wider spans so that the interior of the church can be kept free of columns and piers. A source of light adequate for the illumination of the building, seating arrangement planned for good visibility, proper acoustics, all combine to make the services held in the church more satisfying.

The nature of the materials, honestly recognized, is another factor that contributes to the character of the church. If steel structure is used it should reveal itself as such. Also great volumes of glass can be employed, and recognized as such, with or without metal frames. The creative artist's handling of these basic facts shapes the forms that result, and the harmonious relation of the different parts with the use of color, tend to produce something fresh and new.

St. Patrick's, Racine, Wisconsin, is an example of modern church architecture. Barry Byrne was the architect and Alphonso Iannelli the associate designer and sculptor

An example which has followed this premise is the Church of St. Patrick, Racine, Wisconsin, Barry Byrne, architect. In this structure, built in 1925, we find a good auditorium plan and an honest use of brick. The terra cotta coping and finials are treated sympathetically within the nature of terra cotta, and are harmonized with the brick walls. The terra cotta is kept in the natural clay which is similar in color to the brick. The coping is modeled with motifs suggesting illumination. The whole design achieves an aspiring quality. On the interior the walls are of the same buff brick. The reredos is also in brick with a light terra cotta capping—giving additional rising accent to the upper part, and the altar is of the same terra cotta. The ceiling is of plaster. From projecting reflectors at the walls about seven feet from the ground, light floods the ceiling, illuminating the whole interior. The stained glass windows comprise the prophets of the Old Testament and the New. The St. Patrick window is placed over the main entrance. The windows furnish the brilliance of color—reds, blues, and gold—in the church. Thus is achieved a simple housing with sufficient symbolic significance to make it a fitting house of worship in the best tradition.

THE chapel at Camp Parks, California, completed last year, Bruce Goff, C.C.M. architect, is another example of the frank recognition of the materials of which the chapel is built. It is a laminated wood truss structure with brick and glass. The glass areas are at the front and the rear. The light from the rear is sufficient to flood the interior, the vestibule is held low. The two brick pylons containing service equipment, are handled in a masterly manner in conjunction with the arc form of the chapel, to rest it and furnish a suitable place for the symbol of the cross. The interior has a rose-colored plaster wall. The reredos is of a golden-colored brick in a stratified horizontal motif, and the glass of the great area of the end of the chapel is of a blue color, giving an ethereal quality of light to the church. The lighting is obtained by a trough projecting from the wall flooding the whole area of the arc walls, creating an atmosphere of a majestic tunnel, quiet, meditative and conducive to worship.

Across the whole front of the chapel there is a pool of water with floating flower boxes. As you approach it you see the chapel reflected in the water—a very appropriate and delightful use of water—adding much to the symbolic character of this special building.

Out of consideration of a sensible plan that solves the seating problem with comfort, and a sympathetic use of materials of which the structure is built, with proper illumination and use of color dramatizing the structural forms, combined with a proper use of symbols, a living church will emerge that is fitting to our times.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Soviet-American Friendship Essential Says Council

A New Formula for Tolerance is Presented By Council for Consideration of Churches

Edited by W. B. Spofford

New York:—The Federal Council of Churches declared here in a statement on Soviet-American relations that a "formula of tolerance" could prevent war with Russia, without compromise of basic convictions. The statement, submitted by the commission on a just and durable peace and adopted by the Council's executive committee, called for a "new way of international accommodation which will reckon with fundamental differences in outlook and practices."

"We are convinced," said the Council, "that a dynamic and fruitful peace can prevail in a world society where conflicts of faith are unavoidable."

The Council proposed a three-point platform in its "formula of tolerance" which, it said, is necessary to make the program workable:

(1) "The existence of conflicting beliefs must be considered as normal. People everywhere must recognize that differing beliefs and practices are normal in world society, now and in the future. Also, they must see that those who hold beliefs firmly will seek to propagate them without dilution or compromise.

(2) "All men must renounce the effort to spread abroad their way of life by methods of intolerance. The method of tolerance begins with recognition of the sacredness of the individual human personality. From that it follows that men should not be subjected to compulsion in matters of faith and reason.

"Individuals must be free to believe as their reason and conscience dictate. They must be permitted to propagate their faith by reason or emotional appeal and by the persuasion of good example.

"Governments, parties, and other organizations must refrain from imposing or promoting their own particular faith by means which involve violence or intimidation, legal privilege or legal disability, or fraud founded on concealment. It is that formula of tolerance which makes it possible to combine peace and diversity.

(3) "The United States must accept primary responsibility to secure international acceptance of the method of tolerance. The American nation knows the method of tolerance. Our people have used that method—even though imperfectly—for 160 years. They know that it can work both for peace and progress. They have learned that they cannot disregard it with impunity. They are equipped by experience to explain, and by faith to persuade. The American people and their government ought to dedicate themselves to do that with all the urgency appropriate to the greatness of the cause."

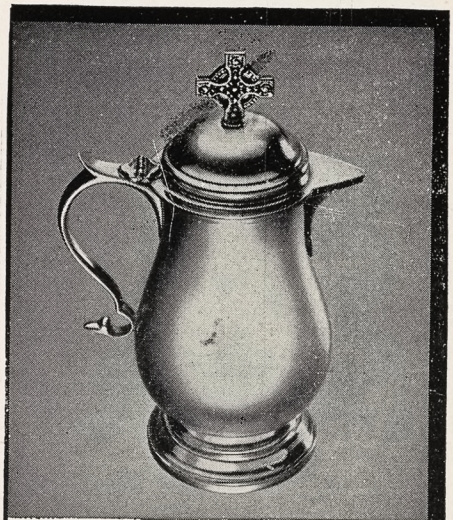
The Church body urged the United States to renounce for itself the use internationally of the method of intolerance.

"Our people generally consider the faith and institutions of Soviet Communism to contain grave evils," the Council said. "But they must recognize the right of others to believe what their reason and conscience may dictate, to reflect their belief in human institutions, and by fair means to propagate them. The American people must be resolved never to advance their own faith by forcibly crushing out such another faith."

At the same time, the Council called upon Communists to abandon their own methods of intolerance.

"It must equally be made clear," said the statement, "that persistence internationally by the Soviet government or the Soviet Communist Party in methods of intolerance, such as purge, coercion, deceitful infiltration, and false propaganda shielded by secrecy, will not in fact make their faith prevail and will jeopardize the peace."

The Council advocated that the United States eliminate from its national policy "certain prejudices and practices that unnecessarily create tension."



On the positive side, the Church group called for cooperation of the American and Russian peoples at the scientific, economic, cultural and religious levels, and cooperation of both governments in the "curative and creative tasks envisaged by the United Nations."

The Church body demanded an end to the armaments race, warning that if this race is continued "it probably will lead to the destruction of both countries."

A section of the Council's statement was devoted to an analysis of the points of difference and contact between Christianity and Communism. This section declared:

"Within the Soviet Union there are many people who share . . . Christian beliefs. Moreover, Communism as an economic program for social reconstruction has points of contact with the social message of Christianity as in its avowed concern for the underprivileged and its insistence on racial equality.

"However, Marxist Communism in its orthodox philosophy stands clearly opposed to Christianity. It is atheistic in its conception of ultimate reality and materialistic in its view of man and his destiny. Its utopian philosophy of history lacks the essential Christian notes of divine judgment, divine governance, and eternal victory. Its revolutionary strategy involves the disregard of the sacredness of personality

Sterling Cruet

A beautiful silver cruet, ornamented with a Celtic cross, and carefully designed with a wide neck so that it may be easily cleaned. One-half pint capacity, 6½ inches high, $50.

ECCLESIASTICAL STUDIO
BLACK, STARR & GORHAM
FIFTH AVENUE AT 48TH STREET
NEW YORK 19, N. Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

which is fundamental in Christianity.

"Such differences will never be removed by the compromise or surrender of faith by Christians. Also, Christians will not renounce, as to any part of the world, the right to go and preach the Gospel, teaching men to observe what Christ commanded. They will seek, everywhere, institutions and practices which reflect what they believe to be God's will for man.

"On the other hand, we cannot realistically anticipate that Soviet leadership will, at an early date, compromise its beliefs or institutions in such a way as to make them compatible with the Christian faith. Neither can we expect it to give up the right to propagate Communist beliefs in the world. Therefore, continuing tensions are unavoidable."

But, the Council added, despite these and other differences, peace is possible.

As to economic tensions, the Council asserted, "Neither state socialism nor free enterprise provides a perfect economic system; each can learn from the experience of the other.

"We cannot expect the proponents of either state socialism or free enterprise to abandon their beliefs. But they need not, on account of their beliefs, hate or despise each other. Only blind fanaticism looks upon either system as perfect."

The occasion for tension will largely be removed, said the Council, if the democratic peoples will make their democratic institutions "so vigorous and life-giving that men everywhere will want them.

"A democratic people can, and should, retain antipathy to dictatorship," it added. "Their opposition, however, should not be sterile denunciation. The American people must make their democracy work. Racial intolerance, discrimination, and oppression are a standing negation of democrcy and Christian morality. Only as we establish a good society at home can we expect that our society will have a spiritual appeal to the masses of mankind."

Asking Protestants to support its program on Soviet-American relations, the Council also urged a "united effort by all Americans of every faith."

Clear of Debt

Sunbury, Pa.:—For the first time in 122 years of history, St. Matthew's, here, is out of debt, the last of its obligations having been paid recently. The final payment on a debt of $5,500 was paid during the W.H.S. Lloyd Co., Inc.

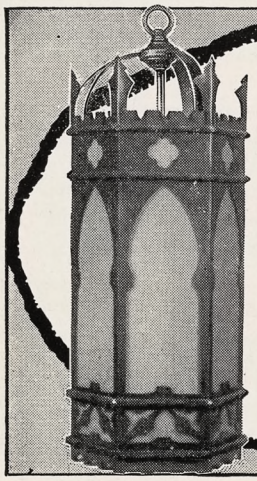
PERSONALIZED WALL PAPERS
AT MODERATE COST
48 W 48TH ST.
NEW YORK
CHICAGO BOSTON NEWARK



For a time of world upheaval—

THE BIBLE IS HUMAN

By Louis Wallis

From Professor James Moffatt, Union Theological Seminary: "I am sure, even in these distracting days, that it will find the audience it deserves, and appeal to readers who still have an open mind." $2.50

Columbia University Press
New York 27, N. Y.

Tudor Heritage

is perpetuated in the hand craftsmanship of this Gothic church lantern. In addition to executing designs of outstanding church architects, Plainville produces a distinguished group of handmade church lighting fixtures. To help your building committee make its selection send for our condensed brochure.

PLAINVILLE METAL WORKS
Home of "WASLEY FIXTURES"
FARMINGTON, CONN.

The Uncommon Man

There's been too much talk about the Common Man, so much that the Uncommon Man has been forgotten. Destiny-determining issues are being muddled by Common Men who lack necessary, uncommon judgment, and courage.

Stalin has rightly said, "Communism and democracy cannot live permanently in the same world! Today Communism spreads confusion and threatens the stability of civilization. Moreover Pagan, "mortal God stateism" (to borrow Paul Hutchinson's term) threatens spiritual ideals and Freedom in America. Too many people already address their prayers to Washington and have lost their sense of personal or community responsibility.

One of Spiritual Mobilization's representatives recently received an admission from a communist organizer, who had spent time with Victor Kravenchko (author of I Chose Freedom), that "One preacher is worth more to us than a dozen labor leaders." They have many preachers who knowingly or unknowingly are advancing Marxism under the banner of a so-called social gospel. Communist leaders realize that ultimately this issue will turn on spiritual considerations. What a challenge to us clergy to sound the alarm, to champion Freedom, spiritual Freedom, root Freedom, the democratic process, constitutional government—the citizen as master not servant of the state.

More than 5,000 Uncommon Men, preachers of various denominations, are already making common cause with us and others are enlisting at the rate of 125 weekly. We need 10,000 by Easter, 1947! It will require courageous, vigorous action to save Freedom. Would YOU like to know what other pastors are doing about it? Like to receive our monthly bulletin, special tracts, and calls from representatives in your area? How many boiled-down reprints of Paul Hutchinson's The New Leviathan can we send you free for distribution in your parish?

SPIRITUAL MOBILIZATION
(Since 1934)
Los Angeles Chicago New York

Advisory Committee

Chairman, DONALD J. COWLING, President Carleton College 1909-1945; ROGER W. BABSON, Statistician; UPTON CLOSE, Author, Commentator; ELY CULBERTSON, Author, Lecturer; CARY EGGLESTON, Physician; DE WITT EMERY, Founder National Small Business Men's Association; EDGAR J. GOODSPEED, Bible Scholar, Author; THEODORE GRAEBNER, Professor Theology, Author; ALFRED P. HAAKE, Economist, Lecturer; ALBERT W. HAWKES, United States Senator; SAM HIGGINBOTTOM, Missionary; RUPERT HUGHES, Author; RUFUS B. VON KLEINSMID, Chancellor University of Southern California; ROBERT A. MILLIKAN, President California Institute of Technology; FELIX MORLEY, Author, Editor; ALFRED NOYES, Author; NORMAN VINCENT PEALE, Clergyman; LEONARD E. READ, President Foundation for Economic Education, Inc.; ROBERT GORDON SPROUL, President University of California; JOHN J. TIGERT, President University of Florida; RAY LYMAN WILBUR, Chancellor Leland Stanford University.

James W. Fifield, Jr. ..... Director

Spiritual Mobilization Dept. W11
Title Guarantee Bldg., Los Angeles 13, Calif.
I am a minister of a church and in sympathy with your Crusade for Freedom. Place me on your representative list and send me your publications.

Name .....
Church .....
Street .....
City ..... State .....

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

eighteen months' rectorship of the Rev. George B. Armstrong.

Recent action of the vestry of St. Matthew's resulted in the sale of various parcels of real estate given in trust by the estate of the late Mary Greenough. Through legal action the trusts were abolished last year, and the properties became the absolute possession of the parish. The funds derived from the sale of the properties will be put in trust, to be known as the Mary Greenough Trust Fund, and the interest used for general church upkeep.

The proceeds of the sale of other properties will be used to reinforce the walls of the nave of the church, which have been sagging due to floods. It is also planned to redecorate the interior of the church, last painted more than forty years ago.

Money for Music

Harrisburg, Pa. (RNS):—Churches which do not appropriate sufficient funds for music were scored here by clergymen, choir directors, organists and other laymen attending a forum sponsored by the Harrisburg chapter of the American Guild of Organists. The forum also discussed the lack of qualified persons on church music committees. It was stated that frequently church music is out of harmony with theological beliefs because the music is not properly selected.

Use of the electrical organ was viewed by many as "the salvation of the smaller church which cannot afford a pipe organ." At the same time the organists declared the two types of instruments cannot be compared as the small unit, though better than a piano, "is not a pipe organ." Use of a piano in church services was generally labeled as "undignified."

Attend Synagogue

Flint, Mich.:—Sunday school students from Methodist, Protestant Episcopal, and Congregational churches here filled the chapel of Temple Beth El to participate in the synagogue's Feast of the Tabernacles. Temple Beth El, one of this city's two Jewish congregations, developed the inter-faith program in 1945, and the repetition this year is being publicized nationally by the Union of American Hebrew Congregations.

The observance, which is in the nature of a harvest festival, was presided over by the rabbi, who explained the Old Testament ritual. At the close, the children filed to a booth where each received a sample of the harvest fruit.

Polish Church

Scranton, Pa.: — A resolution authorizing inter-communion with the Episcopal Church was adopted here by the Polish National Church of America at their synod. Copies of the document were ordered sent to the Presiding Bishop and to the Archbishop of Canterbury. Inter-

Len R. Howard

Stained Glass Windows, Decorations,

Studios: KENT, CONN.

The creations of an Artist, not the productions of a factory. This is the reason our work is so fitting as to conditions and surroundings. Let us submit our estimates based upon your individual need and special problem.

Write Kent, Connecticut

"I'll write those names . . . Golden forever . . . To dare the generations, . . . out on the winds of time, shining and streaming."

Let

CARILLONIC BELLS

illuminate honored service names on a manuscript of music for all to hear

In every city, town and village, there are names newly wreathed with honor and heroism.

Let those names be heard in your community, let them be remembered as days turn into years, through the noble, glowing tones of Carillonic Bells. Ringing in remembrance, Carillonic Bells speak, as no other tribute can—lift in cresting waves of music an abiding message of faith and commemoration.

Schulmerich Carillonic Bells are the proudest and finest choice for a purpose so dedicated. Their richness of tone, their clear modulations are unequalled—the supreme results of more than two decades of electronic engineering and research. Their construction is compact, they are convenient to install, requiring no additional structure—moderate in cost.

If you would like to commemorate with Carillonic Bells, those beloved in your community, we shall be glad to send a brochure giving complete details. Please address Dept. W-17.

Schulmerich ELECTRONICS, INC.

CARILLONIC BELLS · TOWER MUSIC SYSTEMS · ACOUSTIC CORRECTION UNITS · SOUND DISTRIBUTION SYSTEMS · CHURCH HEARING AIDS

SELLERSVILLE, PA.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

communion between the Old Catholic Church of Europe, in which Bishop Francis Hodur, head of the Polish Church, was consecrated, and the Church of England was approved by a congress of the Old Catholics in 1931. Subsequently this inter-communion was approved by the Episcopal Church at the 1937 General Convention.

Praise for Russia

Atlantic City, N. J. (RNS) :—A big stumbling block in the current peace negotiations is the "Anglo-Saxon sense of the white man's superiority," Mrs. Harper Sibley, of Rochester, N. Y., president of the United Council of Churchwomen and a leading Episcopalian said here.

Addressing educators representing 175 of the country's private schools at the national conference on religion in secondary education, Mrs. Sibley declared that this "superiority complex" was much the same as any Aryan superiority claimed by the Nazis. She said the United States was wrong when it placed hemispheric solidarity over an ideal and voted to admit Argentina to the United Nations.

"Subsequent events proved Russia was right in voting against the move," she said. "I covet my country that she'll be so great that she shall be the first country to admit that she's wrong."

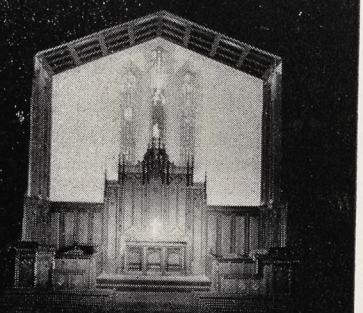
She declared that the United States had been given an opportunity for world leadership and should frankly admit when mistakes are made.

The older generation was advised by another speaker, William Hubben, of George School, Pa., to consider the younger generation as adults and explain things so that youth might judge for itself.

A general indifference to, and lack of knowledge of, religion among soldiers was reported by Robert L. Curry, headmaster of Lenox School, Lenox, Mass., a former army chaplain.

Secular Education

Atlantic City, N. J.: — Stressing the vital need for a program of religious education in the schools, George A. Buttrick, pastor of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian church, New York, told the national conference on religion in secondary education meeting here that the "final issue of secular education was the bombing of Hiroshima."



"Secular education, in avoiding religious indoctrination, is guilty of the most diabolical indoctrination of all, that of giving no religious faith at all," Buttrick told secondary school heads from all parts of the country.

"The faith of secular education will not bear scrutiny," he said. "State schools claim that they advocate living by facts and the objective mind, but the human mind is unable to disentangle the mind from the emotions.

"Man cannot know himself or the world that he lives in; he can only live by faith.

"The state schools chose to teach that Christ was an unworldly figure who died a tragic death, but is remote from the problems of the day. The secular theory of man is that he can live by facts and reason, but there is no magic in man that can transform facts into knowledge. The

CHANCEL ALTERATIONS

Pews - Church Woodwork

Ossit Church Furniture Co.

Janesville, Wisconsin

SINCE 1867

J. WIPPELL & Co LTD

Established 18th Century

Clerical Tailors & Robe Makers

SPECIAL OFFER: CLERGY CASSOCKS

Wippell Cassocks, individually cut and tailored, incorporate all the little refinements of detail which make for so much extra comfort and convenience in wear

Single or Double Breasted, of Fine All Wool Serge $39.50

Quotation does not include Cincture, Belt or Girdle

Clergy Surplice, Slightly Gathered
Pure Irish Linen $13.50

Clerical Cloaks to cover cassock, Waterproof Melton $39.00

Patterns sent on application

55 & 56, High Street, EXETER, England

(also 11, Tufton Street, Westminster, S.W.1, London, Eng.)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

final issue of secular education was the bombing of Hiroshima."

Director of Education

Little Rock, Ark.:—Mr. Maurice E. Hunt of Denver, Colo., has accepted the position of director of religious education at Christ Church here, it was announced last week by the Rev. W. P. Witsell, rector. He is well known in the parish since he was stationed at a nearby army camp for two years, where he served as a lay assistant to chaplains.

Mortgage Burning

Shamokin, Pa.:—A debt which reached $34,000 in 1942 has been cleared at Trinity Church here and plans are now being made for a service of thanksgiving and mortgage burning. The present rector of the parish is the Rev. George B. Armstrong.

Freeman Memorial

Washington: — A memorial to Bishop James E. Freeman is to be dedicated at Washington Cathedral on this coming Sunday at a service at three in the afternoon.

Romanists Join Our Church

(Continued from page 4)

declare themselves against the political fascism of the Romanist hierarchy.

Mr. Fernandez' congregation comprises some of those who could no longer have dealings with the Roman Church. For several years they had religious services outside the Church, meeting in a store in the navy yard district of Brooklyn. After a fire they found themselves with no place to meet. The large denomination, with which they were affiliated, offered them $34 in this emergency. A neighboring congregation of this denomination let them have one service in its building but absolutely forbade a second "because of the condition of the building." Some of the members of the Spanish congregation are quite dark-skinned and this was a "white church."

Mr. Fernandez next approached Archdeacon Saunders of Brooklyn. He told him that the doors of Christ Church were wide open to him and his congregation. Remembering his past experiences, Mr. Fernandez pointed out that there were a few Negroes among his people. Mr. Saunders declared that his Church was open for all Christians regardless of color and creed.

The first Spanish service was held in Christ Church on the feast of the Epiphany last. Mr. Fernandez is now a candidate for holy orders in the diocese of Long Island. His

"World Brotherhood"
address by
Archbishop of Canterbury
Now available on four records in attractive album.
Price: $8.00 (plus postage)
Recorded through courtesy Brotherhood of St. Andrew
Mail orders to:
C.E.S. ASSOCIATES
1700 Walnut St.
Phila. 3, Pa.

WILBUR HERBERT BURNHAM
Designer and Master Craftsman in Stained Glass
Studios: 1126 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.

Notable examples of windows created by Mr. Burnham and his associates may be seen in:

Washington Cathedral, Washington. D. C.
The Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York, New York
Princeton University Chapel, Princeton, New Jersey
St. Mary's Cathedral, Peoria, Illinois (also murals)
East Liberty Presbyterian Church, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania
Church of St. Vincent de Paul, Los Angeles, California
All Saints' Church, Worcester, Massachusetts
Grace Church, Colorado Springs, Colorado
Knowles Memorial Chapel, Rollins College, Florida
Our Lady of Victory Chapel) Both at U. S. Naval Operating David Adams Memorial Chapel) Base, Norfolk, Virginia
Riverside Church, New York, New York
Calvary Church, New York, New York

Church Seating
Sanctuary
Woodwork
and Carving

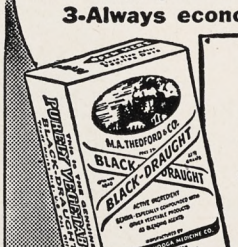
MANITOWOC CHURCH FURNITURE COMPANY
Dept. U, Waukesha, Wis.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Write us for
Organ Information
AUSTIN ORGANS, Inc.
Hartford, Conn.



Memorial Windows
In accordance with the best traditions of the craft. Notable installations in forty states and five foreign countries.
Illustrated material on request
The D'Ascenzo Studios
founded 1896
1604 Summer Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

ALTAR BREADS ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED
SAINT MARY'S CONVENT
KENOSHA • WISCONSIN

MENEELY BELL CO.
22 RIVER ST., TROY, N. Y.
BELLS

R. GEISSLER, INC.
71-79 W. 45th St., New York 19, N. Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER
FABRICS + WINDOWS
EST 1877

ERNEST W. LAKEMAN
Designer and Worker in
STAINED GLASS
2 CRESCENT PLACE
YONKERS, NEW YORK

Need a LAXATIVE?
Black-Draught is
1-Usually prompt
2-Usually thorough
3-Always economical

25 to 40 doses only 25¢
Get BLACK-DRAUGHT
CAUTION: USE ONLY AS DIRECTED

people are happy to be in the American and democratic branch of the Catholic Church.

A Factory for Souls

(Continued from page 11)

bolism but rather to a very practical purpose of getting the people as near to the sanctuary as possible. For the sanctuary is set in the square of the crossing, and the congregation is grouped in three wings of equal size (each wing seats 160 people). The fourth wing of the cross is reserved for the choir, side shrines and sacristy. Thus everyone can see and hear the mass without strain or discomfort. Fr. Tennien spoke of this arrangement rather winsomely when he said that his flock were disposed about him on three sides of the altar very much as he imagined the Indians grouped themselves about Champlain when he set up an altar in the woods of that region. I could not help recalling to mind the antique phrase in the Canon of the Mass which describes the people as "those who stand about" (circumstantium).

The only ornaments in the church outside the sanctuary are the "modernistic" stations of the cross, done in turquoise ceramic by Raymond Barger. This sculptor also did the terra cotta statues of Christ and the Virgin on the exterior. A worshipper in St. Mark's is not distracted or confused by extraneous symbols and decorations. His mind is fixed upon that pendent crucifix and the drama of its subject which unfolds in the liturgy celebrated upon the table beneath. "Jesus Christ and him crucified" is the one and only theme of this building—a theme very much at the heart and center of the apostolic gospel. And St. Mark's gets the theme across.

POSITION OFFERED

Wanted: Young, liberal Associate Rector to specialize in calling and young people's work. $3200 per year. Rev. David H. Weeks, Lockport and 10th Streets, Niagara Falls, N. Y.

POSITION OFFERED

Bishop of Northeasten Diocese invites correspondence with clergymen interested in fields involving parish and mission. $2400 and rectory. Box C, care of THE WITNESS. 135 Liberty St., New York 6, N. Y.

POSITION OFFERED

Wanted: Locum tenens for one year; January or thereafter; New York Parish; must be liberal churchman; retired clergyman also considered; Reply to Box T. THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N.Y.

ORGANIST WANTED

Organist-Choirmaster. Mixed Choir. Give age, experience and references. Rev. Louis F. Martin, St. Andrew's Church, 10th and Lamar Sts., Fort Worth, Texas.

ROOM WANTED

Teacher wants comfortable room in exchange for evening care of children New York City. Write Box DA, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty St., New York, 6, N. Y.

Everything for the Episcopal Church
but vestments
A broad statement but we'd like to prove it.
Ammidon and Company
Horace L. Varian
Horace L. Varian, Jr.
31 South Frederick Street
Baltimore 2, Maryland

PURE IRISH LINENS NOW IN STOCK
for all Church needs, supplies constantly arriving, good qualities, also fine cottons. Samples free.
Marv Fawcett Company
Plainfield, N. J. Box 146

CATHEDRAL STUDIOS
Washington & London, England. Linens and materials by the yard, surplices, albs, Altar Linens, stoles, burses & veils. Materials by the yard. See my NEW BOOK "CHURCH EMBROIDERY" & CHURCH VESTMENTS a complete instruction. 128 pages, 95 illus. Price $5.67. And my HANDBOOK for ALTAR GUILDS, price 50c. Miss L. V. Mackrille, 11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington 15, D.C. 30 minutes from U. S. Treasury. Tel Wisconsin 2752.

SURPLICES — STOLES
VESTMENTS
CHURCH HANGINGS
ALTAR LINENS
CASSOCKS
CLERICAL SUITS — CLOAKS
RABATS—RABAT VESTS—COLLARS—SHIRTS
Choir Vestments in All Styles
Inquiries Invited
C. M. ALMY & SON, INC.
562 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.

The Payne-Spiers Studios Inc.
Studios at Paterson, New Jersey
Carved Wood
Chancel Renovations Church Furnishings
Murals Memorials Tablets
Stained Glass
-- Inquiries Solicited --

A SERVICE OF HOLY BAPTISM
Prepared from various sources by
The Rev. Joseph H. Titus
Submitted for consideration of the Church as a substitute for the Prayer Book Service.
$4 for 100 copies
10c for single copy
The WITNESS
135 Liberty Street New York 6, N.Y.

VESTMENTS for CLERGY and CHOIR
Altar Linens . . . Embroideries . . .
Tailoring . . . Episcopal Flags. Send for Catalog
J. M. HALL, INC.
14 W. 40th St., New York - Tel. CH 4-3306
Office & Salesroom
"Orders taken for serge cassocks for J. Wippell & Co., Ltd."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

REV. LLOYD B. THOMAS
Rector at Hood River, Oregon

I believe a majority of the members of the Episcopal Church deplore the action on unity of General Convention, but whether with intelligent understanding of the report of the commission is an open question. For this, no doubt, we of the clergy are responsible. We have taken too much for granted that the rank and file of our membership are somewhat informed upon the process of negotiations and of the several statements which have been issued by the commission during these nine years. I have been remiss in presenting this important subject. This was brought home this past month, in presenting the issues before General Convention, by the interest and the inquiries aroused on this subject. Certainly, in my opinion, the subject is not going to be dropped now. The basic principles are going to be presented to the laity, and the plan for organic unity will be studied, even without the recommendation of General Convention. I dare say also that the Lambeth Conference will, of necessity, face this issue squarely. Let us hope that we can come to understand each other.

* * *

MRS. GEORGE TROWBRIDGE
Triennial Delegate of Pennsylvania

Many resolutions were passed during the Triennial. So many of these were passed unanimously and the nature of them was so liberal that I wondered whether the delegates were deaf to their implications or suffering from a siege that had brought a tic doloreaux to their vocal chords. A resolution barring the Auxiliary or any group thereof to endorse specific legislation or political candidate was presented. Twenty-three delegates spoke against this resolution:

QUOTE: 1. If this resolution goes through, my resignation as Christian social relations chairman of my Diocese (Mass.) goes through with it. If my women cannot put into action what we believe, I will have to find another group that can.

QUOTE: 2. In Georgia the backing of the Church of a specific political candidate becomes a necessity if we are to make democracy and Christianity survive.

The delegates rekindled my faith. They were not dozing. The resolution did not pass.

* * *

MR. F. E. JONES
Layman of New York City

There is no area on this earth where such a momentous conflict is going on as in China. It might very easily be the powder keg that will set off world war three. There will be those I presume who will be critical of your editorial "The Christian Gentleman" (WITNESS, Oct. 10), which is all the more reason why I should express my appreciation of it. Shouting "Reds" is a very simple and apparently a very effective propaganda device that we have seen a good deal of in recent years. But any who have read the excellent books by people, such as Agnes Smedley, who have first hand information about the so-called communists in China, are fully aware that they come far closer to the ideals of democracy held by the vast majority of the American people than is the crowd in China headed by Chiang Kai-shek. As a matter of fact the word "Christian" today is being used by all sorts of individuals and forces today as a screen to cover up their fascist aims. THE WITNESS seems to be fully aware of this and some of us are grateful for your fine leadership.

* * *

MRS. ROGER W. SHAPLEIGH
Churchwoman of St. Louis

I feel constrained to write and say how much I regret the publication of the Spiritual Mobilization advertisements in THE WITNESS which has always stood for progress in Christian teaching. I have read a good deal of what Dr. Fifield has to say on this favorite subject of his and realize how reactionary he is, appealing as he does to that which is most unprogressive in the economic and social teaching of his time. Living as I do in California I know also how many of our people are also opposed to Dr. Fifield's point of view and influence.

ANSWER: It is the policy of THE WITNESS, as it is of most other religious publications, to keep our pages open to the expression of opinion. We stress, however, that such opinions do not necessarily express the point of view of our editors, as these advertisements of Spiritual Mobilization certainly do not. We have had a number of articles exposing the reactionary program of this organization and doubtless will present others.

* * *

REV. L. C. REED
Rector at Charlestown, N. H.

I wish to express my agreement with and approval of the most timely article by the Rev. David E. Holt on Sunday School Material. (WITNESS, October 17). It my opinion Mr. Holt had put his finger on a crying need in our Church. The most common criticism I receive from my teachers is that the material put out by our Church does not teach the Bible lessons enough. May this article be brought to those in position to remedy the condition as soon as possible.

* * *

REV. ELIOT WHITE
Clergyman of New York

Accept thanks and appreciation, in degree, for your editorial in the October 10th number on "The Christian Gentleman." This is a true witness for honor and righteousness and hits hard and in the right place as it should.

Virginia Episcopal School
Lynchburg, Virginia
Prepares boys for colleges and university. Splendid environment and excellent corps of teachers. High standard in scholarship and athletics. Healthy and beautiful location in the mountains of Virginia.
For catalogue apply to
George L. Barton, Jr., Ph.D. Headmaster,
Box 408

SCHOOLS

The Hospital of Saint Barnabas and the University of Newark offer a full course in NURSING
to qualified High School graduates. Scholarships available. Classes enter in February and September
Apply to
Director of Nursing
HOSPITAL OF SAINT BARNABAS
685 High Street Newark, N. J.

DE VEAUX SCHOOL
FOUNDED 1852
A Church school for boys. Thorough preparation for college. Military system of student government, developing sense of responsibility. Charges for grades seven and eight $1000; grades nine through twelve $1050. For catalog, address THE HEADMASTER, DeVeaux School, Niagara Falls, New York.

HOLDERNESS
In the White Mountains. College Preparatory and General Courses. Music and Crafts. For boys 12-19. All sports including riding. 200 acres of woods. New fireproof building. Individual attention. Home atmosphere.
Rev. Edric A. Weld, Rector
Box W. Plymouth, N. H.

MARGARET HALL
Under Sisters of St. Helena
(Episcopal)
Small country boarding and day school for girls, from primary through high school. Accredited college preparatory. Modern building recently thoroughly renovated includes gymnasium and swimming pool. Campus of six acres with ample playground space, hockey field and tennis court. Riding. Board and Tuition $800. For catalog, address: Sister Rachel, Prin. O.S.H., Box A. Versailles, Kentucky.

FORK UNION MILITARY ACADEMY
An Honor Christian School with the highest academic rating. Upper School prepares for university or business. ROTC. Every modern equipment. Junior School from six years. Housemother. Separate building. Catalogue. Dr. J. J. Wicker, Fork Union, Virginia.

CARLETON COLLEGE
Laurence M. Gould, D.Sc., President
Carleton is a co-educational liberal arts college of limited enrollment and is recognized as the Church College of Minnesota.
Address: Assistant to the President
CARLETON COLLEGE
Northfield Minnesota

KEMPER HALL
KENOSHA, WISCONSIN
Boarding and day school for girls offering thorough college preparation and training for purposeful living. Study of the Fine Arts encouraged. Complete sports program. Junior School department. Beautiful lake shore campus. Under direction of the Sisters of St Mary. For catalogue address: Box WT

LENOX SCHOOL
A Church School in the Berkshire Hills for boys 12-18 emphasizing Christian ideals and character through simplicity of plant and equipment, moderate tuition, the cooperative self-help system, and informal, personal relationships among boys and faculty.
Rev. Robert L. Curry, Headmaster
Lenox Massachusetts

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SINCE time immemorial bronze has been the medium used to mark everlastingly. There is no more fitting tribute to the living or the deceased than a beautiful bronze marker or tablet. There is no changing through the years, bronze can only become more beautiful with the passing of time.

If you are considering a small marker or a large tablet in bronze we will be most happy to send you a sketch and quotations upon receipt of the approximate size and reading matter you desire, without obligation on your part, of course. We are entirely at your service in matters pertaining to bronze.

DIMOND UNION STAMP WORKS

Bronze Department

81 Washington Street Boston, Mass.

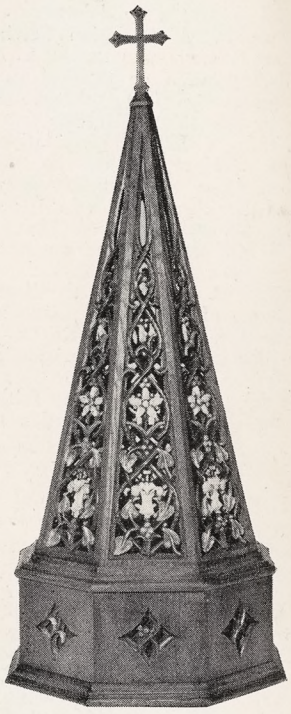
Church Furniture



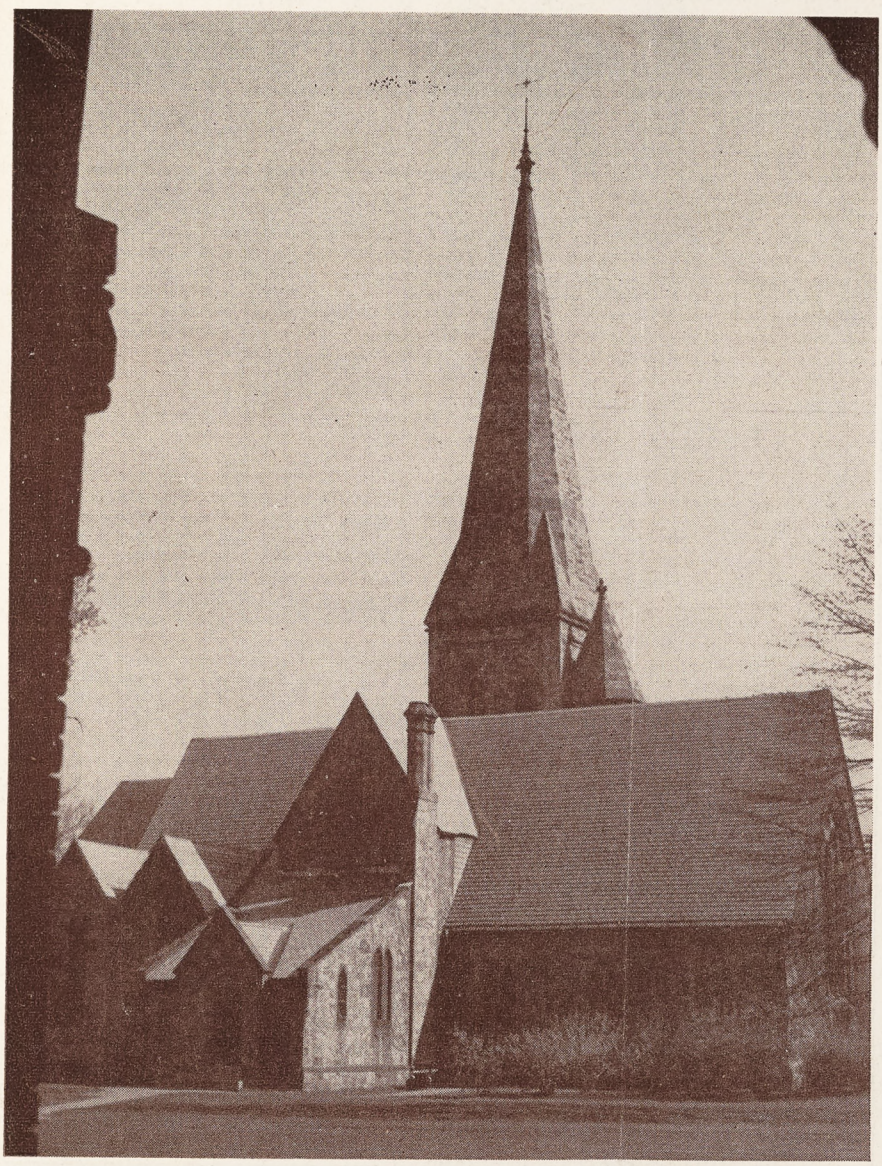
Stained Glass

We have just recently issued two attractive booklets. One on church furniture, the other on the making of stained glass windows. We will be very happy to send them to you without charge upon request.

Whittemore Associates, Inc.

16 ASHBURTON PLACE

BOSTON 8, MASSACHUSETTS



Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The WITNESS

10¢ A COPY

LIBRARY COPY

NOVEMBER 7, 1946

ST. JOHN'S CHAPEL
AT THE EPISCOPAL
THEOLOGICAL SCHOOL

THE MARRIAGE SERVICE

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

THE CATHEDRAL OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE
NEW YORK CITY
Sundays: 8, 9, 11, Holy Communion; 10, Morning Prayer; 4, Evening Prayer; Sermons 11 and 4.
Weekdays: 7:30, 8 (also 9:15 Holy Days and 10, Wednesdays), Holy Communion; 9, Morning Prayer; 5, Evening Prayer. Open daily 7 A.M. to 6 P.M.

GRACE CHURCH, NEW YORK
Broadway at 10th St.
Rev. Louis W. Pitt, D.D., Rector
Daily: 12:30 except Mondays and Saturdays.
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M. and 4:30 P. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion 11:45 A. M.

THE HEAVENLY REST, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue at 90th Street
Rev. Henry Darlington, D.D.
Sundays: Holy Communion, 8 and 10 A. M.; Morning Service and Sermon, 11 A. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion, 11 A. M.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S CHURCH
NEW YORK
Park Avenue and 51st Street
Rev. Geo. Paull T. Sargent, D.D., Rector
8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evensong. Special Music.
Weekdays: Holy Communion Wednesday at 8:00 A. M.
Thursdays and Saints' Days at 10:30 A. M.
The Church is open daily for prayer.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH
Madison Ave. at 71st St., New York
The Rev. H. W. B. Donegan, D.D., Rector
8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
9:30 A. M. Church School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evening Prayer and Sermon.
Wed., 7:45 A. M., Thurs., 12 Noon Holy Communion.

THE CHURCH OF THE EPIPHANY
1317 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Charles W. Sheerin, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 A. M.; 8 P. M.
Daily: 12:05.
Thursdays: 11:00 and 12:05.

ST. THOMAS' CHURCH, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue and 53rd Street
Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, S.T.D., Rector
Sun 8, 11, 4. Daily 8:30 HC; Thurs. 11 HC., Daily except Sat. 12:10.

THE CHURCH OF THE ASCENSION
Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street, New York
The Rev. Roscoe Thornton Foust, Rector
Sundays: 8 a.m. Holy Communion.
11 a.m. Morning Prayer, Sermon.
8 p.m. Evening Song and Sermon; Service of Music (1st Sun. in month).
Daily: Holy Communion, 8 a.m. Tues., Thurs., Sat.; 11 a.m. Mon., Wed., Fri.
5:30 Vespers, Tues. through Friday.
This Church is open all day and all night.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL
Buffalo, New York
Shelton Square
The Very Rev. Edward R. Welles, M.A., Dean
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30 and 11.
Daily: 12:05 noon—Holy Communion.
Tuesday: 7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
Wednesday: 11:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH
Atlanta, Georgia
435 Peachtree Street
The Rev. J. Milton Richardson, Rector
9:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
10:45 A. M. Sunday School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Prayer and Sermon.
6:00 P. M. Young People's Meetings.

The WITNESS
For Christ and His Church

EDITORIAL BOARD: Frederick C. Grant, Editor; Arthur Lichtenberger, Chairman; William B. Spofford, Managing Editor; Lane W. Barton, Beverly M. Boyd, Dillard H. Brown, Roscoe T. Foust, Charles K. Gilbert, Hugh D. McCandless, Howard Chandler Robbins, William K. Russell, Sydney A. Temple Jr., Joseph H. Titus, William M. Weber.

★

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS: D. B. Aldrich, J. A. Bell, T. S. Carruthers, Adelaide Case, G. K. Chalmers, E. M. Cross, G. M. Day, Angus Dun, A. W. Farlander, T. P. Ferris, J. F. Fletcher, John Gass, C. H. Gesner, C. L. Glenn, G. C. Graham, J. M. Groton, G. I. Hiller, I. P. Johnson, T. R. Ludlow, C. S. Martin, R. C. Miller, Walter Mitchell, A. T. Mollegen, E. L. Parsons, E. L. Pennington, Rose Phelps, L. W. Pitt, Otis Rice, Cyril Richardson, Paul Roberts, V. D. Scudder, W. M. Sharp, W. B. Sperry, C. W. Sprouse, D. S. Stark, W. B. Stevens, J. W. Suter, S. E. Sweet, Alexander Zabriskie.

★

THE WITNESS is published weekly from September 15th to June 15th inclusive, with the exception of the first week in January and semi-monthly from June 15th to September 15th by the Episcopal Church Publishing Co. on behalf of the Church Publishing Association, Inc. Samuel Thorne, President; Charles A. Houston, Vice-President; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, Treasurer; Frederic D. H. Gilbert, Secretary.

★

The subscription price is $3.00 a year; in bundles for sale in parishes the magazine sells for 10c a copy, we will bill quarterly at 5c a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter, March 6, 1939, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879.

NOVEMBER 7, 1946
Vol. XXIX. No. 49

CLERGY NOTES

BUDD, OSBORNE, New York City Mission Chaplain at Wallkill State Prison, became rector of Saint John's Church, Tuckahoe, New York, on November 1st.

DAVIS, SHELDON, is now general missionary in the diocese of Arkansas and temporarily in charge of parishes at Marianna and Forrest City.

HANN, GEORGE H., became chaplain of Wallkill State Prison, Wallkill, N. Y., on November 1st. Mr. Hann has been chaplain of the New York State Training School for Boys, Warwick, N. Y.

KOEPP-BAKER, HERBERT, formerly on the faculty of Pennsylvania State College, has joined the faculty of the school of medicine of the University of Illinois.

LOCKE, GEORGE W., a retired priest of the diocese of Michigan, died September 30th, at the age of 85. Before his retirement in 1929, Mr. Locke served as rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Detroit, for 22 years.

MACE, WARREN E., formerly rector of Christ Church, Sherburne, N. Y., is now rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter, St. Andrew's Parish, Washington, D. C.

McDONALD, PEERCE N., rector of the Church of the Ascension, Montgomery, Ala., for 27 years, died on October 23rd at the age of 67. The funeral service was conducted by Bishop Clingman and the Rev. J. W. Brettman, rector of St. John's Church, Montgomery.

MONTGOMERY, DAVID K., formerly rector at Morristown, N. J., is now in charge of St. Luke's, Fort Worth, Texas.

REASNER, JAMES DAVID, was ordained deacon by Bishop Beverley Tucker in Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland, on October 18. Mr. Reasner is now assistant at St. Mark's Church, Toledo, Ohio.

SHELMANDINE, DeVERE L., formerly in charge of churches at Mount Carmel, Kulpmont and Centralia, Pa., is now vicar of Christ Church, Berwick, Pa.

STROHSAHL, VINCENT H., on the staff of Grace Church, Newark, N. J., has accepted appointment as a missionary in the Philippine Islands.

TALBOT, DAVID MERRIMAN, was ordained deacon by Bishop Beverley Tucker in Grace Church, Mansfield, Ohio, on October 19. Mr. Talbot is now assistant at the Church of Our Saviour, Akron.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

CHRIST CHURCH CATHEDRAL
Main and Church Sts., Hartford, Conn.
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30, 10:05, 11 A. M., 8 P. M.
Weekdays: Holy Communion—Monday and Thursday, 9 A. M.; Tuesday, Friday and Saturday, 8 A. M.; Wednesday, 7:00 and 11:00 A. M. Noonday Service, daily 12:15 P. M.

CHRIST CHURCH
Cambridge
REV. GARDINER M. DAY, RECTOR
REV. FREDERIC B. KELLOGG, CHAPLAIN
Sunday Services, 8:00, 9:00, 10:00 and 11:15 A. M.
Weekdays: Wed. 8 and 11 A. M. Thurs., 7:30 A. M.

TRINITY CHURCH
Miami
Rev. G. Irvine Hiller, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services 8, 9:30, 11 A. M.

TRINITY CATHEDRAL
Military Park, Newark, N. J.
The Very Rev. Arthur C. Lichtenberger, Dean
Sunday Services: 8:30, 9:30 (All Saints' Chapel, 24 Rector St.), 11 and 4:30 p.m.
Week Days: Holy Communion Wednesday and Holy Days, 12:00 noon, Friday, 8 a.m. Intercessions Thursday, Friday, 12:10; Organ Recital Tuesday, 12:10.
The Cathedral is open daily for prayer.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
Montecito and Bay Place
OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA
Rev. Calvin Barkow, D.D., Rector
Sundays: 8 A. M., Holy Communion; 11 A. M., Church School; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer and Sermon.
Wednesdays: 10 A. M., Holy Communion; 10:45, Rector's Study Class.

GRACE CHURCH
Corner Church and Davis Streets
ELMIRA, N. Y.
Rev. Frederick T. Henstridge, Rector
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M.; 4:30 P. M.
Daily: Tuesday and Thursday, 7:30 A. M.
Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Holy Days, 9:30 A. M.
Other Services Announced

ST. MARK'S CHURCH
Texas Avenue and Cotton Street
SHREVEPORT, LA.
Rev. Frank E. Walters, Rector
Rev. Harry Wintermeyer, Curate
Sundays: Holy Communion, 7:30; 9:25 A. M., Family Service; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer.
Holy Communion, first Sunday. 6 P. M., Young Churchmen.

CHRIST CHURCH
Nashville, Tennessee
Rev. Peyton Randolph Williams
7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
9:30 and 11 A. M.—Church School.
11 A. M.—Morning Service and Sermon.
6 P. M.—Young People's Meetings.
Thursdays and Saints' Days—Holy Communion, 10 A. M.

GRACE CHURCH
105 Main Street, Orange, N. J.
Lane Wickham Barton, Rector
SUNDAYS
8:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M.—Church School.
11:00 A. M.—Morning Prayer and Sermon. (Holy Communion first Sunday each month)
7:00 P. M.—Young People's Fellowship.

CHRIST CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA
Second Street above Market
Cathedral of Democracy
Founded 1695
Rev. E. Felix Kloman, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services: 10 and 11 A. M.
Weekdays: Wed., 12 noon and 12:30.
Saints' Days: 12 noon.
This Church Is Open Every Day

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

VOL. XXIX. No. 49.

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

NOVEMBER 7, 1946

Publication Office, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago 37, Ill. Editorial Office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

Eric Mann in Interview Says We Fail in Germany

He Finds No Democratic Group in Country and Says Allies Should Stay Twenty Years

By W. B. Spofford Jr.

New York: — "The problem of Germany today is primarily a religious one," said Dr. Eric Mann, noted German scholar in an interview on his return from Europe. "But, though it is a religious problem, I do not see much hope that the present leadership of the religious institutions in that country will help to develop a spiritual revival. Today, the German Church is still a nationalist Church and it is presenting no new ideals before the people of that country. We must remember that the Germans have lost an ideal, albeit a false one, in the defeat of Hitlerism but there seems to be no real or sound plan to present them with a new one. The educational and religious institutions are in the hands of the same leaders who controlled them under the Weimar Republic and, in many cases, under the direction of men who held those positions throughout the Nazi regime."

Dr. Mann, who is a member of the American Academy of Social and Political Science and has lectured in universities throughout this country, in discussing our occupation in Germany said that "I doubt whether any soldiers of ours now in Germany will leave one democratized German when they depart. Rather, it would seem that many of our troops will come back Germanized. The reasons for this are, first, that our occupation troops are young men who did not go through the fighting; secondly, they receive no adequate indoctrination from the army on why the war was fought and, thirdly, they fraternize with German frauleins who have been taught foreign languages and the art of love-making in special schools set up by the Nazi regime."

Stating that there seems to be no serious attempt on the part of the A.M.G. to build up the intellectual life of the Germans, Dr. Mann said that to become an artist or teacher today all one needed to do was to fill out a questionnaire. It is only after appointment to a position that the applicant receives a personal interview with a represenative of the military government. What screening is done, he said, is rather specious since it depends entirely on whether the applicant was a member of the Nazi party prior to 1935. If the applicant only joined the party after that year, they are usually considered to be safe risks, he said.

He expressed great concern over the rebuilding of Germany's industry and said that American, British, French and German experts had told him that German's industrial war potential had only been lessened by 25% as a result of the war and that, even this deficiency, was rapidly being built up in all zones. "As soon as Germany becomes strong enough to be a good war partner for either the Right or the Left," he stated, "we will be in imminent danger of the third world war."

"Peace, as we know, is not an absence of war," he said, "but a way of life; a state of the soul. And yet, we have no plan to get at the German soul. We rebuild the schools physically but their curriculum is exactly the same curriculum employed in the Weimar Republic and, too often, in the Nazi regime. There is no attempt to root out the ideas of pan-Prussianism or the master race which have been inculcated in the German people, not only since the Nazis came to power, but since the days of Bismarck. And yet, we have let the German general staff off scot-free to allow it to use its freedom to plan once again."

All authorities told him, he said, that there is no positive democratic group in Germany today and that, for safety, an occupation, with complete control, should continue for at least twenty more years. "However," he said, "unless we get a policy — or change our present policy—such a long occupation will not be effective."

When questioned, Dr. Mann said that it was true that there had been a few Churchmen of all denominations who had been extremely vocal and active in denouncing the Nazi movement but that, in almost all cases, these dissidents had been individualistic and did not represent either the desires or wishes of the leaders of the German Churches. It is safe to say, he said, that these are not the Church leaders who now represent the post-war German Church.

BISHOP SHERRILL CALLS ELECTION CONVENTION

Boston: — Presiding Bishop-elect, Henry K. Sherrill, has called a special diocesan convention here on December 11 for the purpose of electing a Bishop Coadjutor, who will become Diocesan Bishop on June 1st, 1947. In his notifying letter, Bishop Sherrill said, "So far as I am concerned I shall express no preference in regard to individuals who may be suggested for this office. No one has any right to speak for me in any way, directly or indirectly, in this matter. I hardly need to remind you of the importance of this choice. We have had in this Diocese a notable spirit of brotherhood. Here is a sacred responsibility to be met in the presence of God and under the guidance of His Holy Spirit. I ask you, therefore, to pray that your action will bring to this Diocese a Bishop 'of holiness, wisdom, courage and faith'."

HISTORIC CHURCH RECEIVES U.N.

Flushing Meadows, L. I.: — Historic St. George's Church, one-half mile from the meeting place of the United Nations' General Assembly, has been appointed a special place of worship for the delegates to the assembly according to Wallace M. Speers, chairman of the Laymen's Movement for a Christian World. One of the first wardens of the

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Church was Francis Lewis, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and Bishop Samuel Seabury, first bishop of the American Church, was rector of the parish from 1757 to 1765. In designating St. George's as the convention's spiritual center, Mr. Speers said, "It is particularly fitting that a church which was providing spiritual inspiration at a time when our nation was going through the birth-pangs of freedom and the interdependence of man should be used by the United Nations' delegates who are trying to construct a peaceful world society for the benefit of all mankind." The rector of St. George's Church is the Rev. D. L. MacLean.

CHURCH ARMY OPENS SCHOOL

Cincinnati: — The Church Army opened its training center at 634 Oak St., Cincinnati, on Oct. 7th. The first post-war class consists of five men from the dioceses of Maine, Northern Michigan, Albany, Oklahoma and Los Angeles. It was announced that a faculty of ten will serve the school.

PERCY HALL HEADS ARMY-NAVY WORK

New York:—The Rev. Percy G. Hall, who was an active Army chaplain from 1941 to 1946 and was released from the service with the rank of colonel, has been appointed executive secretary of the Army and Navy Division of the Church. Before he went into the service, Mr. Hall was rector of St. Martin's Church, Oak Lane, Philadelphia.

ALMON PEPPER ADDRESSES IOWA WELFARE WORKERS

Des Moines, Ia.: — Stating that pastoral counseling is and always has been an important part of the ministry of the Church, the Rev. Almon R. Pepper, executive secretary of the Church's Division of Christian Social Relations, cited need for more sociological training for parish priests at the 46th Conference and Institute of the Iowa Welfare Association on October 22nd. Mr. Pepper said that the parish needs to know more about what social workers and psychiatrists know, and they need to know more about religion and the profession of the ministry and, went on to prophesy, that as ministers of religion and social workers and psychiatrists get to know each other, and as there is more common ground of understanding, they will learn better how to work together on a cooperative and complementary basis. In conclusion, he said that he "believed that many of man's ills are complicated by the neurotic world society in which we live and that all of us must work together to make this world more like the Kindom of God—a society in which all men can grow in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and man."

CHURCH WORLD SERVICE APPOINTS MAXWELL

St. Louis:—The Rev. Raymond E. Maxwell, rector of St. Mark's Church, St. Louis, has been appointed a Church World Service represenative serving in the French zone of Germany on the Council of Relief Agencies Licensed for Operation in Germany. Writing after being in the French zone four weeks, Mr. Maxwell's initial observations are: "The spirit of French revenge and understandable fear, plus the absurdities of Potsdam, plus the fact that the French in great numbers are living off the land are working havoc in this smallest of the zones at an even greater rate than in other parts of Germany."

The Rev. E. C. Tuthill of Sonora, California and the Rev. Harry B. Lee of Modesto, California enjoying life at Camp Sierra

DEDICATE PHILADELPHIA GOOD-WILL BUILDING

Philadelphia:—The Rev. George A. Trowbridge, rector of St. Paul's Church, Chestnut Hill, and chairman of the Philadelphia Fellowship Commission, presided at the dedication ceremonies for the Fellowship's new seven-story office building. The building, which houses eight city-wide agencies working to build a better understanding and unity among people of every race, religion and national background, features a complete library on inter-racial and inter-religious subjects and possesses a projection room with a complete film library dealing with similar themes. In speaking at the ceremony, which also marked the fifth anniversary of the commission, Judge Curtis Bok of Philadelphia said "I do not want to dedicate this building to the people of this city. I would rather dedicate the people of Philadelphia to this building."

C.L.I.D. CONSIDERS NAME CHANGE

New York: — Acting on a resolution presented by the Washington Chapter, the executive committee of the Church League for Industrial Democracy, meeting at the Church of the Ascension on October 21st, moved that a committee be formed to draw up a new statement of purpose and suggest a new name for the organization. In presenting the motion, the representative of the Washington Chapter stated that the activities of the C.L.I.D. were no longer confined to the establishment and expansion of democracy in the industrial sphere and that, in an interdependent culture, it was impossible for an organization to localize its action for democracy. Likewise, it was felt that the denominational label, Episcopal Church, should be added to the name. The report of the new committee will be presented to the annual meeting of the C.L.I.D. in New York on Lincoln's Birthday.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

New Weapon Demands the Church Denounce Use By America

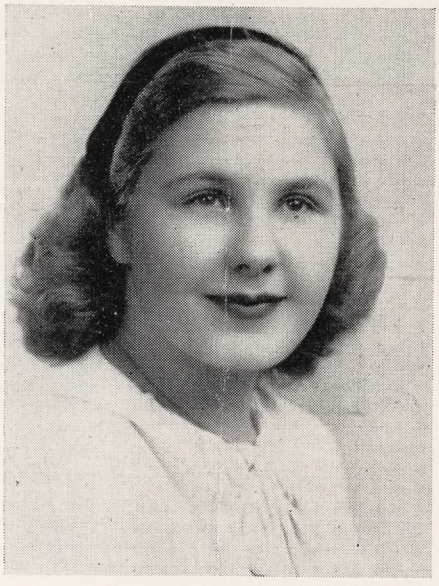
The Country Is Waiting to Hear the Voice Of Christian Leaders Speaking in Protest

By Marjorie Hoagland

Americans awoke on the morning of May 24 to read headlines saying, "U. S. Has Weapon Far More Deadly Than Atomic Bomb House Is Told." This was followed the next day by the terse statement: "Congressmen Reveal Germ Weapon Can Wipe Out City At Single Blow."

According to the new stories the Navy was known to be conducting germ warfare research at the University of California. The principal disease under study was not identified but it was said to be one of the greatest of killers. The sensational element of the press hinted it might be infantile paralysis. Congressman Albert Thomas of Texas indicated that the Navy's bureau of medicine and surgery had it in "usable shape."

So far no denial has come from Government sources, and the public has waited vainly for the thunderous protest that might be expected from the churches of America.



The only ethical condemnation came by indirection from the secular Glasgow (Scotland) Herald which headed the germ bomb report in understandable sarcasm, "Progress, By Gosh" and concluded, "popular phrases such as 'brotherhood of man' and 'advance of civilization' have a slightly hollow sound."

The headlines brought shocked unbelief, it is true, which might be a reason for the prevailing silence of church leaders. It is so against nature, so contrary to all good and upward trends among peoples, so suicidally short-sighted it benumbs the mind. Surely adequate Church action will yet come.

Warfare of this kind if attempted obviously will be not against armies and military installations but rather against whole populations of people, against nations and (since germs cannot be "briefed" on boundary lines) against continents.

This projected new weapon is worse than the atomic bomb. If mankind is not to be destroyed warfare must be restricted rather than following the discredited Nazi doctrine of utmost destruction. The best military minds fully realize this. Because universal Utopia has not been created doesn't mean the attitude "All right, anything goes" is a solution. It is a negative attitude surely taken by the idealistic extremist who has no belief in God and who tends to collapse when confronted by terrifying evil. The Christian should have more courage.

Historically Church and State are separate in America. But the Church must remain the conscience of government and of the people reminding them of ethical standards based on Christ's teachings. It represents God in the world. The assignment is not easy.

Blond, rosy-cheeked Ruth Hines, communicant of St. John's Cathedral, Wilmington, Delaware, is an accomplished organist who is now studying at Curtis Institute, Philadelphia, having won a competitive scholarship

Yet the Church must answer for the discharge of it. Christian leaders must tell the world that they disapprove the weapon. They must exert pressure for fuller information for the public on matters vital to its welfare and for greater democratic control over all agencies of government. America should be reminded that if it is the world's most powerful nation with power comes responsibility. There must be a new statesmanship based on "right" which must not be confused with "might." In brief, America must be strong in the Lord.

What is needed is a new breed of men who speak with mighty authority, with passion and power because they declare "Thus saith the Lord . . ." A militant fellowship of Christian minds capable of bringing Christ's ethics to a new world society is also necessary. Then there must be spiritual insight and power matching scientific development. Above all leaders are needed who will weld peoples into a discipleship, who want nothing except the new life in Christ universally applied, and who will settle for nothing else.

UNITARIANS DEFEND RELIEF POLICY

Boston (RNS):—Charges that the Unitarian Service Committee has Communistic affiliations and favors Communists in extending relief aid were denied here in a statement of policy by the committee. The committee's statement was prepared on the basis of an investigation made by William Emerson, chairman of the group. It is worthy of note that Mrs. Martha Sharp, who was an overseas representative of the Unitarian Service Committee, is the election opponent of Rep. Joseph Martin and the attacks on the Committee were perfectly timed from an election propaganda point-of-view. In its statement, the Unitarian Service Committee pointed out that its policy has been "to help the victims of Nazi or Fascist tyranny regardless of political affiliations, religious convictions, or racial or national origin." Work of this kind, the committee continued, "will inevitably expose the agency doing it to criticism. Those who receive its aid are victims of Nazi persecution, but they are often bitterly divided among themselves in policies and ideology, and quick to suspect discriminaton, when scarce amounts of aid have to be distributed among many sufferers. "In some regions those who suffered the most persecution may be predominantly Jews, and help will go to them in accordance with their need, numbers, and alternative sources of help. In other regions the main victims may be Socialists, in still others the greatest sufferings and hardships may have been borne by Communists. In each case our aid must go to the main sufferers, not because of any preference on our part but because our help must follow the preference of the Gestapo as determined by the list of its victims. We believe that, in extending this help according to need rather than discrimination, we are rendering a constructive service to the community at large. We believe that, by seeking the basis of common human decency and individual worth behind different creeds and institutions, we can make our contribution in helping the peoples and nations of the world to learn to live together."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

CARDINAL HLOND ASKS CATHOLIC VOTE

Warsaw (wireless to RNS):— August Cardinal Hlond, primate of Poland, has urged all Poles to vote against political parties hostile to "Christian morality and the Catholic viewpoint" at the forthcoming national elections. He declared in a pastoral letter read in all churches that Catholics "have a right by their vote to decide about the basic laws of Polish Catholic life" and that they should vote "only for such persons, lists, and an electoral program that do not oppose Catholic teachings and morality." The letter declared that "the greater the authority of the state with respect to the life and the rights of the citizen, the more important it is that those who control that authority should be good, worthy and deserving Christian people."

DEAN GIVES Y.W.C.A. TALKS

Atlanta, Ga.: — Dean Raimundo de Ovies of the Cathedral of St. Philip, Atlanta, is giving a series of lectures in November for the Y.W.C.A. on the relationships between children and their parents. The four lectures in the series deal with the infant, the child, the adolescent and the parent.

IOWA HOLDS MEETINGS

Des Moines, Ia.:—During October and November separate meetings of youth, women, clergy and laymen have been held in the six districts of the diocese of Iowa, with outstanding speakers on the programs. Among the speakers have been Mrs. Helen Hogue, executive secretary of the National Girls' Friendly Society; the Rev. William J. Gordon of Point Hope, Alaska; Bishop Bravid Harris of Liberia and the Rev. F. T. Osborn of So. Brazil. A clergy conference on the techniques of the Every Member Canvass was led by the Rev. David R. Covell, chaplain at Hobart and William Smith Colleges, on Oct. 9th and 10th.

BISHOP SHERRILL ADDRESSES CHAPLAINS

Washington: — "Peace organizations will prove ineffectual unless there is a change in the hearts of men," said Presiding Bishop-elect Henry K. Sherrill in an address before the 16th annual convention of the Chaplains' Association of the Army and Navy on October 23rd. Saying that the chaplains must bring about the needed change in the thinking of all men, Bishop Sherrill pointed out that in civilian life men are hemmed in by the healthy restrictions of civilization whereas the chaplains see men as they really are and, therefore, must be realistic in facing problems. He said that the chaplain can help spread the idea of brotherhood of man through being in the service with men of all faiths.

DISCRIMINATION LOST US GANDHI

Amesbury, Mass. (RNS):—Racial discrimination in a South African church may have been the deciding factor in preventing Mahatma Gandhi from becoming a Christian states Professor Eddy Asirvatham of Boston University. Dr. Asirvatham, who is in this country on leave as head of the department of political science of the University of Madras, said that Gandhi, while a young man in Africa, tried to enter a church there to hear a famous English preacher. He was refused admission, however, and was told that the church was for white people only. Because of that treatment, he said, the Mahatma never again entered a Christian church.

TWO MORE SPANISH PRELATES IN U. S.

New York (RNS): — Bishop Urivarri of Ciudad Rodrigo, Salamanca province, and Bishop Gregorio Modrego y Casaus of Barcelona in Franco's Spain have joined Enrique Cardinal Pla y Deniel (see WITNESS, Oct. 24) in this country. These members of the Spanish hierarchy attended the eighth annual congress of the Confraternity of Christian Doctrine in Boston on October 25 and are now touring portions of the country as guests of the United States Roman Catholic Church.

Clergy of the diocese of Louisiana go into a huddle to discuss Church affairs: kneeling: Corwin C. Von Miller and Girault Jones. Standing: Bishop Jackson, J. Hodge Alves, John L. Womack, J. Dean Maurer, Philip P. Werlein

SERVES ON CIVIC COUNCIL

Lodi, Calif.:—The Rev. Norman Young, rector of St. John's Church, Lodi, is now serving as a member of the board of directors of the Lodi Coordinating Council, the body which serves as a clearing house for ideas for civic betterment. During its six years of existence, the council has established a child care center for working mothers, a comprehensive safety program and worked on improving home and school relationships.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

EDITORIALS

The Continent of Shame

BACK in the days of "normalcy" it was customary to label Africa as the dark continent. Africa is still the dark continent. It is dark with our shame as Christians, Americans and citizens of a very small world.

If even a small part of what we recently heard at a conference on Africa is true, the United Nations and its Commissions on Human Rights and Trusteeships had better get busy. In Portuguese Angola, for example, there is real slavery carried on by the Roman Catholic Church with the full cooperation of the government. When workers are needed for the fisheries operated by the Church, the government requisitions them from the tribal chiefs. They are then moved away from their homes for at least two years, and more often six, while their wives and children manage to exist by working at road building. The workers are paid one dollar a month—that is correct, one dollar a month! The government, however, takes $9 of this annual income in taxes and various fees. Living conditions in the work camps are so bad that fully one quarter of the men never do return to their homes.

In the Union of South Africa, where striking African miners were recently forced back to the pits by government bayonets at the prevailing wage rate of 50 cents per day or less, we find similar conditions. Of this situation, the Rt. Rev. S. W. Lavis, Bishop Coadjutor of the Anglican Synod, Cape Town, said: "Here we find rooted tyrannies which deny human freedom. . . . In no other country in the world is it possible for a group to have its own prejudices legalized and turned into a powerful weapon for serving its own interest at the costly harm to some other group." It is here that we find eighty percent of the people confined by law to twelve percent of the territory and, also, required to carry passes which they must show if they desire to go from their zone to the other. Right now, General Smuts of the Union of South Africa is appealing to the United Nations that his government be allowed to annex the mandated territory of South-West Africa with its 350,000 people.

The educational system throughout Africa, and particularly in the Congo region, is largely controlled by the Roman Church and does not extend beyond the sixth grade. Protestant missionaries have a difficult time working at all, with every effort made to keep them out of Africa. Some have been known to wait in Portugal as long as six years before being admitted.

Naturally, it is not the Roman Church alone that is exploiting the resources and peoples of Africa. Fascist Portugal and Spain still possess African colonies for exploitation. American finance capital, operating under British colonial protection and on its own, is pouring in millions of dollars and thousands of technicians to operate under systems that approach slavery all for the greater glory and profit of General Electric, Firestone Tire, Goodyear Rubber and other corporations.

The United Nations, if it is to fulfil its promises, should take the following actions now:

1. Send an investigating committee over to study the facts. This committee should be made up of impartial observers like Eleanor Roosevelt.

2. Reject the South African Dominion's request for annexation of South-West Africa and place that territory under the direction of the Trusteeship Council of the U. N.

3. Use the powers of the Economic and Social Council to provide for the full protection of the rights of labor in all sections of Africa on the same basis as labor in free countries.

4. Place the colonies of fascist Portugal and Spain directly under U. N. supervision.

5. Provide for the representation of African colonial peoples in the U. N.

6. Provide guarantees to the subject peoples of Africa for the immediate exercise of full democratic rights, and the achievement of political autonomy and self-determination within a definitely stated time limit.

Such a minimum program can never, of course, wipe out our past shame. It might, however, help to make us honest democrats in the future. What are you, as a Christian citizen of the United States,

"QUOTES"

I BELIEVE that the reason of life is for each of us simply to grow in love. I believe that this growth in love will contribute more than any other force to establish the Kingdom of God on earth. To replace a social life in which division, falsehood and violence are all-powerful, with a new order in which humanity, truth and brotherhood will reign. I believe that the will of God has never been more clearly, more freely expressed than in the teachings of Jesus. I believe that this teaching will give welfare to all humanity. save men from destruction, and give this world the greatest happiness.

—LEO TOLSTOI

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

going to do about it? Letters to Secretary James Byrnes, the United States delegation to U. N. and Secretary-General Trygvie Lie would be positive and tangible evidence that you mean what you pray.

Niebuhr Goes Right

REINHOLD NIEBUHR came to Life, with John Foster Dulles, William Bullitt, Henry Pitney Van Dusen, Paul Hutchinson and others. In an article, "The Fight For Germany," he has given the haters of the Soviet Union, the Wallace denouncers, and the multitude of American reactionaries a great lift. Most of them will probably read no further than the subhead, which tells them all they want to know,—"A distinguished theologian declares America must prevent the conquest of Germany and Western Europe by unscrupulous Soviet tyranny." Some of us who desire friendship with the Soviet Union, who are admirers of Wallace and political progressives, reading the article, must admit that Prof. Niebuhr has answered nearly every point of debate arising in our minds. It is a masterful piece of rebuttal given before the presentation of the case. One feels the frustration that comes to any in a discussion when he cannot triumphantly say "but this is quite opposed to what you said in 1940 and '41." The Niebuhrian theology, admitting the sinfulness of man, makes it possible for him to have a contrite statement that where once we could make a moral distinction between the tyranny of Soviet Communism and Nazi Germany, we were wrong. There is no difference, he says, except that the "new tyranny" is even more unscrupulous.

Niebuhr has probably been as thorough in his investigations of the situation in Germany as he is in his writings. It would be difficult for anyone who has not been recently on the scene to argue that the picture he has drawn of the workings of the Soviets in Eastern and Middle Europe is mistaken. If it is granted that they are a menace to all the things that are considered good for children of God, then the only point that can come into discussion is how best the menace can be combatted.

In the article, the solution is to bring about the economic unity of Germany by opening the channels of trade between Germany and the West. Pump-priming to bring about the reconstruction of German industry will be necessary including shipments of food so that a vigorous man-power may be available. It insists that the United States will have to see that this is done. Right here is where one detects a slip into "sentimental illusions." He has already told of the refusal of our military government to sanction anything in the way of a planned economy to rebuild a small section of Germany on the grounds that such a thing would be "incompatible with democracy." Surely the political and economic thinking and bias of those directing the reconstruction of German industry will be of paramount importance. Under the Roosevelt administration there would have been a slight hope that the men working in Germany would have opposed the cartel system of monopolistic capitalism. But what hope is there under the Mr. Byrnes who separated himself from the Roosevelt policies after Yalta, and then appeared immediately to guide the Truman peregrinations as soon as Mr. Roosevelt had died. The steady onrush to the right in the American political scene means that that kind of a philosophy would determine the reconstruction of German industry. To depend on the Labor Government of Britain for a modifying influence toward left-of-center is illusory in view of their steadfastness in maintaining the imperialistic system.

The end result of the rebuilding of economic unity in Germany by our present government would be fascistic, with Schacht under a new name. As before, this tyranny could only survive under a war economy. No matter what other changes may be laid against the Soviet tyranny, it did not precipitate the world war. Possibly the organization of Germany under a joint agreement would lessen the continuous threat of war, and make for greater

SANCTUARY

conducted by W. M. Weber

WELDING CHURCHES

. . . Without hesitation we believe that the ultimate road to Reunion lies not in contemporaneous discussions of our differences in the hope of somehow welding our different traditions together. Some of us worked long enough in a shipbuilding district to know that welding is impossible except the materials to be joined are at white heat temperature; and none of our denominational convictions is at white heat. When you try to weld them they only fall apart. Reunion lies in all of us becoming responsive to the perennial Reformation that is the work of the Holy Spirit speaking to each succeeding age. And it is of His guidance that we are all being drawn back to see again the early expressions of our worship, and the early emphasis men laid upon the Incarnation. When, in obedience, we all get back there to find again the Gospel principles of Fellowship and Worship, that are never old, the temper of our respective zeals will rise again to white heat and union will become a possibility.

—George MacLeod, We Shall Re-Build, The Iona Community, Glasgow.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

economic security for the people of Germany. It is also in the realm of possibility that greater good might come from Soviet direction alone than from Western cartelism. This may be illusion, too, but it does seem to face some of the facts of politics, economics, and human frailty.

Under our tutelage, the recreation of a nationalistic Germany is a certainty. France, Poland and others in Europe fear that, and it will lead to constant instability in international affairs. Even Prof. Niebuhr grants that the Soviet Union does not develop nationalism. Under the tutelage of the Soviet Union, it is not certain that a nationalistic Germany will be recreated. It is, then, seemingly less illusory to accept Wallace's position than Niebuhr's.

The Marriage Service

by Hugh McCandless

Of THE WITNESS Editorial Board

SO YOU wish to get married. Well, all the world loves a lover, and you hie to your church, or at least some near-by church, with the happy news. The clergyman's reaction, especially if you are a stranger to him, is rather sober. He informs you that it is his duty to have a conference with you and your intended because the implications of a church wedding are so deep, and its contract so complete. If people simply went through the service for the first time at the actual wedding, their nervousness and self-consciousness would prevent their realizing much of what the clergyman was declaring and they were promising. It will be necessary to go over the service line by line.

The service starts with a declaration by the clergyman. His first sentence tells us that the ceremony is taking place "in the sight of God." It is a religious service, not a preliminary to a party, and is suitable only when one or both of the contracting parties is a baptized and believing Christian. Promises made in the name of a God in whom one doesn't believe are not very good promises.

"In the face of this company." The Church assumes that there will be some assemblage, and the hasty or clandestine appearance of weddings with only two witnesses is to be avoided. A reception is not indispensable. The couple may greet their friends at the church door or in the parish house. But the marriage of members of a community is of importance to the community and it should be represented at the wedding.

"Holy Matrimony . . . is an honorable estate . . . . and is not to be entered into unadvisedly or lightly." The Church—represented by the clergyman and the other witnesses—is going to pray for the couple, that God may give them his grace. It is more possible for him to confer grace when the couple is prepared to receive it.

They should come "reverently." They should not only have a healthy respect for the dangers that can threaten their marriage but also a strong faith in him who can carry them through all difficulties, and who will reward them, if they accept his help, with an ever deepening love and happiness.

They should come "discreetly." The Church recognizes the fact that great disparity between the ages, backgrounds, races, conditions, or finances —while in a perfect world these would be no bar— do present added difficulties in our present society.

They should come "advisedly." Parents and contemporaries should approve, if the prognosis of a marriage is to be good. Occasionally the possessiveness of parents wreaks havoc in forcing an unwise marriage or preventing a good one. But it is usually better if they approve.

They should come "soberly." This depends a good deal on their parents. If one has been shielded from the harsh practicalities of family cooperation and home economy, or if one's education has been sentimental or unrealistic, or if, on the other hand, marriage spells escape from an unhappy home—under any of these circumstances one may be led to feel that all one has to do to live happily ever after is to get married. This is not so. A happy marriage is an achievement. While married people are often rewarded with happiness beyond their deserts (at least one married person is, to my sure and certain knowledge), nevertheless it takes will power on the part of both.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Newlyweds hope they are "soul-mates." They can become perfectly mated after some years of living together, but they will find at first that not all their preferences, prejudices, and possibilities fit perfectly. It is adaptation to one another that makes married people grow.

They should come "in the fear of God." At least one of them should believe in and respect his maker. If the other qualifications are not indispensable for Holy Matrimony this one is. This qualification can make the most unpromising marriage a success, even if it be a hard-won victory.

The clergyman then says that if "any can show just cause why they may not lawfully be joined together, let him now speak, or else hereafter forever hold his peace." This challenge, formerly uttered on the church porch facing the village square, was necessary in the old days. The marriage license has rendered it more or less obsolete.

The clergyman then challenges the couple, "If you know any impediment, confess it." The responsibility is theirs, not his. They are the officiants of this sacrament, not he. He merely puts the vows to them and prays for them. If the ministers of the sacrament are not valid, the sacrament itself will soon prove to have been invalid.

In fact, the institution of a "church wedding" is less than a thousand years old in most parts of Christendom. (This is one reason the Eastern and Western marriage rites differ so. They were developed after the split between Rome and the East. It takes a mighty healthy couple to stand up to a Greek Orthodox wedding, which lasts for hours.) In the first thousand years of the Church, people were married by whatever the secular customs of their country might have been. Then they went to church for the Holy Communion. We shall see traces of these old secular customs, and of the way marriage entered the Church, a little later on in the service.

NEXT come the betrothal declarations. They parallel the nuptial promises pretty closely, but the difference is that they are made to the clergyman and the company, and are statements of intention, not promises made to one another.

The Church's idea of Holy Matrimony is made pretty clear here. It is a life lived together in full confidence and self-giving, terminated only by death. Separation is a tragedy, and divorce is rarely a solution. Divorce is hard on the children. Fortunately, divorced persons do not have children in over ninety per cent of the cases. Divorce is often merely an opportunity to make the same sort of mistake again, under less glamorous circumstances. People are frequently attracted only to one general type of person of the opposite sex, and psychologists can tell amazing tales of people who have picked a succession of consorts of certain identical characteristics, without realizing it. Divorce can be an escape from practically everything except oneself.

However, every one knows of marriages after divorce which have improved the characters of the people involved, which have lessened the tensions the children felt in their first unhappy homes, and which thus seem to the earnest observer to have been blessed by God as the first marriages were not. These are not many, perhaps, but they exist.

The mind of the Church is not clear about this. Life is very big, and people vary greatly. When I say that the mind of the Church is not clear, you may reply that the Church has spoken, in definite and unfaltering words, at such and such a time, through this priest or that saint or that council. But you and I are the Church, too. It is not limited to the clergy or to bachelor saints who lived centuries ago. Life has not changed very much in the intervening time; nor have people changed much; but our opinion of the worth of individuals has changed.

Next, the father hands over the bride. Possibly this is the main reason for bringing the service into the Church. In ancient Germanic nations, women were property, and had no status in court. Women whose fathers were dead, and whose brothers or sons were either dead or too young to appear for them were helpless in pressing any case against their husbands; if their husbands and kinsmen were dead, they had no one to plead for them in the courts. The case of orphans brought up in convents was different; the chaplain of their old convent could state that he stood in loco parentis—in the place of a parent—to the woman and could represent her cause.

So perhaps some thoughtful priest decided to hold the ceremony on the church steps, which often faced the village square. He had the father give the girl to him, and he then gave her to the bridegroom. The Church has maintained this custom. Women are no longer barred from law courts, but the Church has a right to expect that couples who are married in her precincts, and who later differ, owe it to her to consult a clergyman before they consult lawyers. They owe it to themselves, too. Many couples who differ seek out lawyers. They find that the best ones shun marital cases or urge reconciliation. Even the best lawyers will handle property settlements; but, if they can afford to, they will refuse to take the case itself, or will hire other lawyers to do the pleading.

The object of hiring a lawyer is to win one's case.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

People are often shocked at the exaggerated charges which some lawyers tell them are necessary to make a good case. Sometimes these people come together again. It is a miracle, when you realize that they now have to buckle down and pay two lawyers' fees of considerable size for the privilege of calling each other names—in public—that they will always bitterly resent or bitterly regret.

The custom of handing over the bride is not a mere antiquarian fancy. It points up the right of the Church to be consulted, and the right and duty of the couple to do so, if need should arise.

Next, the groom leads the bride to the altar. (This custom sometimes varies.) The marriage vows are made to one another. Or, at least, they should be; some brides and bridegrooms look at the clergyman when they make these promises! They should be repeated after the clergyman in tones loud enough for the witnesses to hear. Read them over. They are very complete and specific, and they mean exactly what they say. Only thus can complete trust be the basis of a marriage. There is no need to be frightened by these pledges. A firm and disciplined intention is the main thing. If the troth is pledged with sober, prayerful, sincerity, people can keep their word under the most trying circumstances, in the face of the most insidious temptations. People are weak, but God is strong, and marriage can be an opportunity for people to receive his grace—his strength—in a way we cannot call less than sacramental, even if the Church rite does not go back to the earliest centuries.

Next follows the giving of the ring. This is the relic of a secular wedding custom in Latin countries, where the man gave the woman a coin or jewel as a token gift of his property. Finally the ring—which might at first have been a coin beaten into a circle—became universal.

In countries where the bride brings a dowry, a double ring ceremony is often used. The two-ring idea has come into this country during the war, and was at first inspired by rather serious motives on the part of young men who wished constant reminders of their marriage. The use of two rings is not expected in the Prayer Book, but may be made permissive in the future, if this custom maintains itself.

Marriage does have a financial side. No woman should want to be merely "kept"; she should be her husband's partner in his personal business affairs. She should share his worries as well as his decisions in money matters. Men who have kept money worries or speculations secret from their wives have been known to commit suicide rather than break the news of reverses. That kind of widowhood is no compliment. Women are often as practical as men, and while the home is the woman's sphere and the job is the man's, each should cooperate with, and consult, the other in both fields. Marriage should be a complete partnership in which neither party shall deprive the other by being silently secretive or too unselfishly uncomplaining.

THE prayers follow. First the Lord's Prayer, because no better prayer could be made for the bride and groom.

Then comes a prayer that they may keep their vows. This prayer is required, and rightly so. Innocent people sometimes get into apparently compromising situations, or into social groups which seem all right until it is almost too late. Curiosity, greediness, boredom, misunderstandings, separations,—all these can be dangerous. Self-discipline is needed; God's help is needed more.

A choice may be made of either, both, or neither of the prayers which follow. It appears to me that the choice is up to the officiants.

Before the war, most brides-to-be (the grooms usually feel the brides should decide this) would says: "Of course we want children, but it seems a rather personal thing to pray for publicly." During the war, the answer was usually: "Of course we want children, and what better time or place to pray for them?"

Married clergy tend to be less dogmatic on this score than unmarried clergy. It is customary to regard procreation as God's primary purpose in instituting marriage. Sex (a characteristic we share with animals and plants) was instituted for procreation; marriage, and especially Holy Matrimony—for there can be a difference—was "for this purpose, that they twain should become one"; in other words, for the spiritual growth of all concerned.

A marriage in which people who can have children do not intend to have children seems to lack that element of complete allegiance that makes a perfect match, and the divorce statistics bear this out.

The happiest children are those who are wanted; and the happiest marriages are between people who want to have children, or who would have them if they possibly could.

As to the limitation of families, I can only say that the unrealistic attitude of the Roman Church has made more liars in confessional booths than any of the devil's inventions.

The final prayer is that the home of the couple may be a haven of blessing and peace.

The minister now joins the hands of the (now married) couple together, and says, "Those whom God hath joined together, let no man put asunder."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

But are they married yet? Has God joined them yet? Undoubtedly they are married in a sense, but God will continue to join them more and more until death parts them in this world.

Should a marriage appear not to have been the will of God—and I cannot feel reasonably sure that every marriage is the will of God—those who do not oppose its termination need not feel they are flouting their maker. But let every man beware when he does step between man and wife. Such a step should not be taken without fervent soul searching.

The priest then declares: "Forasmuch as John and Mary have consented together in holy wedlock (the proposal and acceptance) and have witnessed the same (the statement of intention) before God and this company, and thereto have given and pledged their troth, each to the other (the nuptial promises) and have declared the same by giving and receiving a ring, and by joining hands: (you will notice that the bride and gridegroom are the only officiants mentioned) I pronounce that they are man and wife, in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen." The clergyman solemnizes the marriage in the name of our holy faith; they perform it, and validate it by their future living. Surely it is not right, where neither of the two are believers in God, for them to perjure themselves by promising mutual love and fidelity in the name of an idea neither of them can consciously believe in. Such people should limit themselves to civil weddings.

The Church says one or both must be baptized persons. The clergyman must ask if they believe the faith into which they were baptized. Those who believe in God can be baptized, and should be: that is easy; but there are many who are baptized who are agnostics.

The minister then gives them the blessing of the Church. This is the only time anyone kneels in the service, and it is only they who kneel. The rest of us are there as witnesses.

The words are tender and touching, and the blessing asked of God is even more complete than the promises required of the couple. Here the purpose of marriage is clearly stated, and we can assume that the Church is trying to describe God's will and purpose for each marriage: "that ye may so live together in this life, that in the world to come ye may have life everlasting."

To which we can all say: Amen; So be it; and thus make the blessing of the priest truly that of the whole Church.

This article will be reprinted as a leaftlet if a sufficient number of orders are received. The price will be $3 for 100 copies. Kindly send orders to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

Strategy and Tactics

by

FRANCIS O. AYRES

Rector of St. John's, Waterbury, Connecticut

PRAYER GROUPS

IN THE recently published "Collected Papers of Evelyn Underhill" (Longmans $2.75), the editor has included an address delivered in 1936 and entitled "The life of prayer in the parish." I wish every layman and clergyman interested in parish life would read this address, for in it the author outlines an activity which is fundamental to any Christian community. Indeed, I would say that without it, there is no true Christian fellowship.

She speaks first of the priest's devotional life as a way of leading others to pray, then she goes on to discuss the church as a house of prayer, in fact as well as in name, and finally she discusses the formation of praying groups. "I do not mean by this a hot-housy association of pious ladies, whose extreme exhibition of fervor too often tends to put every one else off. This should be avoided at all costs. But there is surely no parish where it is quite impossible to find a few people, preferably quite simple and ordinary people, who care for their religion, and, if asked to do a bit of real spiritual work for it, will respond. These are the people who can form, as it were, the growing-point of the parochial life of prayer. They will probably be found among the more frequent communicants; among those who are already doing some kind of parish work; and very often, among the quiet, diffident, rather unnoticed members of the congregation. They should be asked personally and individually—there will probably be only two or three to begin with—to undertake to meet in church once a week at a suitable time, and pray together for half an hour; or perhaps less than this at the beginning. At first, of course, the priest must take a leading part, help, suggest and perhaps instruct; and the fact that, as the group develops, he will naturally ask it to pray for particular things and persons, will always keep him in close touch with it. But the sooner these meetings pass into lay control, the better."

I first read this address in pamphlet form about four years ago. To date, there are no prayer groups meeting in this church or, as far as I know, elsewhere in the parish. Such an activity would

(Continued on page 18)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Growth of Democracy Is Best Defense Says Oxnam

Head of Federal Council Decries Vatican Intrigue in Speech Before 12,000 at Rally

Edited by William B. Spofford

Cleveland (RNS): — "A church must practice democracy to witness for democracy," said Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, president of the Federal Council of Churches, speaking before 12,000 persons at Cleveland's first city-wide Protestant Festival of Faith on October 28. Bishop Oxnam, speaking on "The Protestant Contribution to a Christian Peace," was the principal speaker at the rally which was paying homage in Reformation Day services to the founders of Protestantism. People of the world yearn for peace, he said, but world governments drift toward war. Blaming conflicting ideologies for the fear growing along international fronts, he said the massing of force along lines of tension may postpone war but will not create peace.

"Communism can't be conquered by force," the bishop said. "Communism makes no headway where plenty exists although poverty is the open door through which it enters. Communism does not reach the heart of a man who knows he is treated justly whether white, black, red or brown. It has no message to a society that has abolished the exploitation of man by man." Bishop Oxnam said that Communism moves forward with power "because its leaders know what they want and believe they know how to get it. They have kindled fires of enthusiasm in the hearts of their youth and these young people, united in a common cause, become a conflagration sweeping through the forests of exploitation. I am one who rejects Communism, believing its philosophy of materialism, its use of dictatorship, its theory of social development, and its economics will never bring freedom to man nor abolish the exploitation of one man by another. I am convinced that within the freedom of democracy we can build a society at once just and brotherly."

Stating that Protestantism does not seek to be both a church and a state, Bishop Oxnam said that American Protestants, often unread in Church history and unacquainted with those aspects of Roman Catholicism that are a part of its insistence upon being both a state and a church, discount the danger to freedom that lies therein. "They are unaware of the fact that the Roman Catholic Church as a state has been involved in unfortunate intrigue that matches the sordid bargains of so-called secular states. Not a few were shocked to learn that canon law forbids the Roman Catholic to bring a bishop, on account of anything connected with the duties of his office, to trial in a civil court on pain of excommunication. Does this canon law mean that if an American bishop of the Roman Catholic Church were brought to trial and we at the time had a Roman Catholic president that such a president would be automatically excommunicated? Should we by the same token have Methodist courts for Methodist bishops and Episcopalian courts for Episcopalians?"

Maintaining that the Roman Catholic Church is spiritually stronger where it holds less political power and owns less property, Bishop Oxnam said that "a careful study of such questions as religious freedom and civil liberties, public education, public health, or any one of the issues relating to the freedom of the individual in lands predominantly Protestant will indicate contributions to enduring peace of significant nature. They will reveal, too, that the Roman Catholic Church is more spiritual, more nearly a Church, in those lands where other Christian bodies live side by side in freedom than in lands where she is all powerful. Thus the real contribution of the Roman Catholic Church is greater in the very lands we call Protestant."

Dealing with the international situation, Bishop Oxnam said, "It would appear that the Roman Catholic Church has declared war on Russia by announcing a world-wide war on Communism. Protestants are as fundamentally opposed to the philosophy of materialism upon which Communism is based and to its methods, particularly as seen in dictatorship and repression, as is the Roman Catholic Church. But we believe there is a way to face and solve this difficult question without recourse to war."

BISHOP BACKS FEPC

Portland, Ore.:—Bishop Benjamin D. Dagwell of Oregon has been named honorary chairman of a new Oregon committee to establish a Fair Employment Practices Commission in that state. According to the acting chairman, William M. Wood, administrative assistant of the Bonneville power administration, the committee will be composed of religious, labor and women's groups and will conduct an educational campaign and sponsor legislation aimed to protect the rights of minority groups. Other clergymen on the organizing committee are the Rev. Mark Chamberlin, the Rev. William S. Van Meter and the Rev. Thomas McCamant.

"The Nativity", one of three interesting and beautiful grisaille windows recently designed, executed and installed by RAMBUSCH in a small Brooklyn Chapel

RAMBUSCH

Designers Decorators and Craftsmen

2 West 45th St ~ New York 19, N Y

Rambusch for Decoration, Murals, Altars, Altar Rails, Pulpits, Stained Glass Windows, Candlesticks and Lighting Fixtures

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Five New and Outstanding Publications

He Lives

By AUSTIN PARDUE
Bishop of Pittsburgh

In the introduction to He Lives, the author cites this incident. Two boys—each young, vigorous, promising—went forth to war. One returned triumphantly, the other was killed in action. Why? The Church has the answer, and it is one full of comfort to all bereaved persons. The answer is found in the religion of the Prayer Book and in the understanding of the doctrine of the Communion of Saints. It is this doctrine that Bishop Pardue sets forth in contemporary language for modern lay men and women. Price, $1.50

Top of the Mount

By VINCENT C. FRANKS
Rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Richmond, Va.

This book is a collection of twenty sermons written and preached from one of the foremost pulpits of the South. Dealing with the contemporary post-war world, these sermons were written for special Sundays in the Church year. Some are prophetic, some missionary, some mystical. All of them are forthright, informative. Each carries a special message and all are full of great teachings of Christianity and overflowing with the love of God and the assurance of His wisdom.

Price, $2.00

What Does the Episcopal Church Stand For?

By W. NORMAN PITTENGER
Faculty, General Theological Seminary, N.Y.C.

Some answers for Visitors and Inquirers. Here the author discusses the Episcopal faith in a way that will benefit all who are searching for the truth in their Church. It is a concise study of those Christian beliefs and practices which form an integral part of the Episcopal Church which is deeply rooted in the past, yet living in the present and looking to the future with confidence. Price, 15c each.

The Faith of the Episcopal Church

By FRANK DAMROSCH, JR.
Rector of St. Paul's Church, Doylestown, Pa.

This book is for all who are interested in religion and wish to learn much more than they already know. It starts with a general approach to Christianity, then develops the teaching of the Catholic faith as a whole, and finally shows the place of the Episcopal Church in relation to Christendom today. Price, $1.50

Tips To Teachers

By VERNON McMASTER
Dept. of Christian Education, National Council

Here is an excellent book for the pastor who has difficulty in convincing his reluctant parishioners that they will make good Church School teachers. In nine lively discussions between a minister and five prospective teachers, the author gives a number of easily remembered and practical "tips" for the inexperienced teacher-candidates who sorely need a guide to some general teaching techniques and principles. Price, $1.25

Postage Additional

MOREHOUSE - GORHAM CO.

14 E. 41st Street New York 17

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

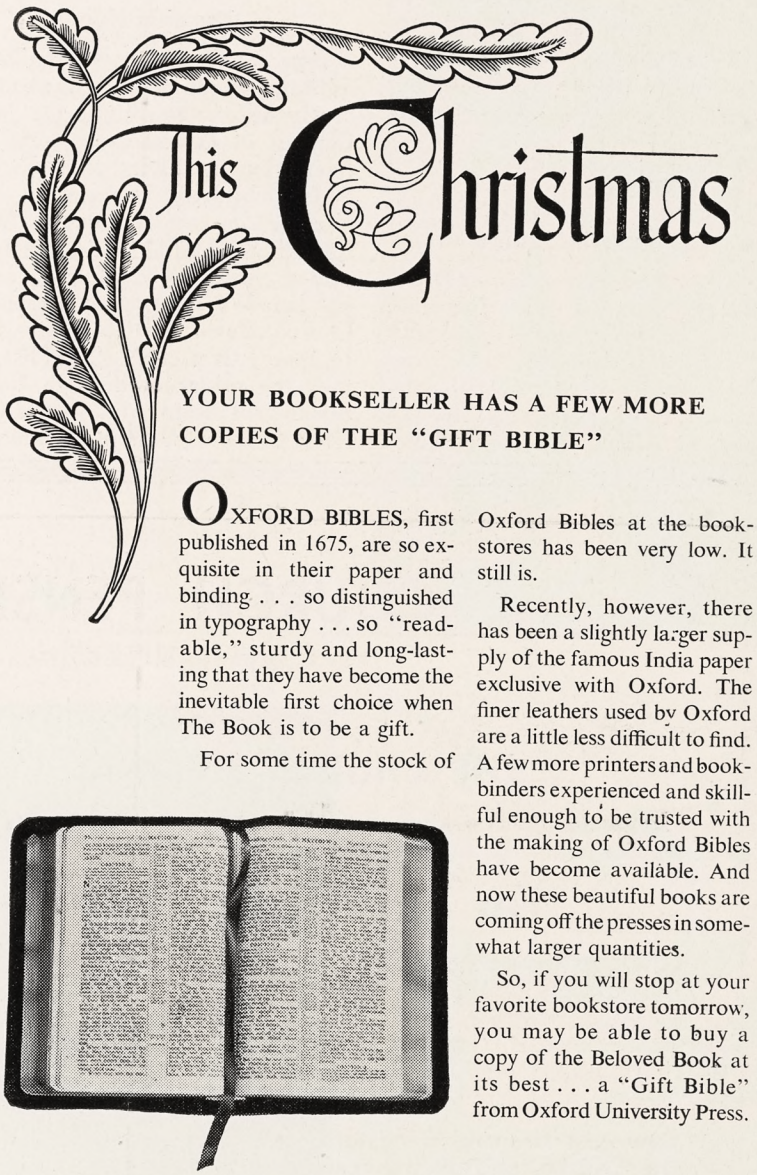
C.L.I.D. Lauds Lilienthal

New York:—In a letter to President Truman on October 29th, the Church League for Industrial Democracy praised the appointment of an all-civilian Atomic Energy Commission and said that it was especially gratified with the appointment of David Lilienthal as chairman of the important group which will be entrusted with the task of finding ways and means to control and develop atomic power. In its statement, the C.L.I.D. said that "Mr. Lilienthal, through the years of consecrated work that he has put into the Tennessee Valley Authority, has proved himself to be a true servant of the people and, as such, will continue to protect the interests of all the people of the country in this most vital matter of atomic development and not allow this tremendous discovery to fall into the hands of either monopolistic corporations or military representatives."

Maritain in U. S.

New York (RNS):—Dr. Jacques Maritain, French Ambassador to the Vatican and internationally famed Catholic philosopher, is now in the United States on a diplomatic mission.

Lectures at Chicago



Chicago:—Bishop Angus Dun of Washington is to give the first of a series of lectures on Christian Unity on November 12 at the University of Chicago. There will be five in all, given each evening, Tuesday through Friday, at eight o'clock in Mandel Hall. Bishop Dun was chosen as the first lecturer under a new foundation because he combines both the talents of the scholar and the statesmanship of a significant ecclesiastical administrator. Formerly dean of the Episcopal Theological School of Cambridge, Mass., he became Bishop of Washington, D. C. in 1942. He is widely known among clergy and laymen who have been active in the work of Christian unity because of his studies on the meaning of unity carried out for the ecumenical conference held in Oxford, England, in 1937, and his participation in discussion and committees in this country since that time.

Barton Pleases

Pendleton, Ore.:—The acceptance by the Rev. Lane W. Barton, rector of Grace Church, Orange, N. J., of his election as bishop of the missionary district of Eastern Oregon has been received with much pleasure by the people in the district. He and Mrs. Barton will be visiting Eastern Oregon in early December and an itinerary has been planned which will enable them to visit nearly all parishes and missions during their fortnight's stay. His consecration is to take place in November at Norwalk, Ohio, his boyhood parish, and he will take over the jurisdiction of the district about mid-January or early February. Barton will be the third Bishop of Eastern Oregon, his predecessors being the late Bishop Paddock (1907-1922) and Bishop Remington (1922-1945) now suffragan of Pennsylvania.

Bexley Opens

Gambier, Ohio:—The 123rd year of Bexley Hall, divinity school of Kenyon College, opened on October 14, with an enrollment that surpasses the pre-war level, and with twelve dioceses represented. Bexley has returned to the semester schedule and the summers will now be available for clinical training and work in the mission field. The seminary is initiating a new program giving its students the requisite experience in the practical work of the ministry, especially in connection with the town and country area. The program is under the direction of the

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Rev. John R. Stalker who comes to the seminary as the first incumbent of the newly created chair of practical theology and rural work. With the fall semester, class instruction will be given in the work of the rural ministry to be supplemented by visiting lecturers and by actual field experience under rector-tutors. Bexley is making its special contribution in a strategic area of the Church's work, especially in the mid-west.

The new rural program is only one aspect of the post-war development planned for the seminary. Bexley is participating in the general Kenyon development program and will benefit by increased endowments for faculty salaries and student scholarships. There are now seven resident members on the Bexley faculty including six professors and one part-time lecturer. The seminary is stronger than ever before in its history.

Euthanasia Scored

Yonkers (RNS): — Voluntary euthanasia, or painless death for those suffering from incurable, painful, and lingering illnesses was condemned here by Msgr. Robert E. McCormick, presiding judge of the ecclesiastical tribunal of the archdiocese of New York before a group of Roman Catholic lawyers. He described as "false prophets" the Protestant churchmen who recently approved painless death in certain cases among whom were some clergy of the Episcopal Church. "It is against the innate moral code and the Bible," he stated.

Support Negro Clerks

Newark (RNS): — Department stores here will be asked to open their clerical positions to Negroes under plans formulated by the Presbytery of Newark in cooperation with the interracial committee of the Essex County council of churches.

Russian Zone

New York (RNS):—The Russian military government in Germany recently asked the aid of the World Council of Churches to avert a relief crisis involving the lives of 60,000 children, Sylvester C. Michelfelder, chairman of the World Council's material aid division revealed here. Michelfelder, speaking before a national conference of Church World Service directors and representatives, said "the Russians took the initiative, through General Zhukov, of asking the World Council at Geneva for help, and accepted

LEARN AT HOME Simple as A-B-C—lessons consist of real selections, instead of tiresome exercises. Each easy lesson adds a new "piece" to your list. You read real notes, too—no "numbers" or trick music. Method is so thorough that some of our 850,000 students are band and orchestra LEADERS. Everything is in print and pictures. First you are told what to do. Then a picture shows you how. In a short time you may become a good musician!

Mail coupon for Free Book and Print and Picture Sample. Mention favorite instrument.

U. S. School of Music
6211 Brunswick Bldg.
New York 10, N.Y.

FREE! Print and Picture Sample

U. S. School of Music, 6211 Brunswick Bldg., New York 10, N. Y.
Please send me Free Booklet and Print-and-Picture Sample. I would like to play (Name Instrument)

Instrument..... Have you Instrument?.....

Name.....
(Please Print)

Address.....

THE CHURCH PENSION FUND

and its subsidiaries

administered for the benefit of the Church

THE CHURCH HYMNAL CORPORATION

Publishers of The Hymnal; Book of Common Prayer; A Prayer Book for Soldiers and Sailors; Book of Offices for Certain Occasions; Stowe's Clerical Directory.

THE CHURCH LIFE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost insurance and annuity contracts available to the clergy, lay officials and active lay workers of the Church, either voluntary or paid, and their immediate families.

THE CHURCH PROPERTIES FIRE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost fire and windstorm insurance on property owned by or closely affiliated with the Church, and on the residences and personal property of the clergy.

Further information available by addressing any of the above at

20 Exchange Place New York

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

our stipulation that an agency of our choosing be given the responsibility of distribution."

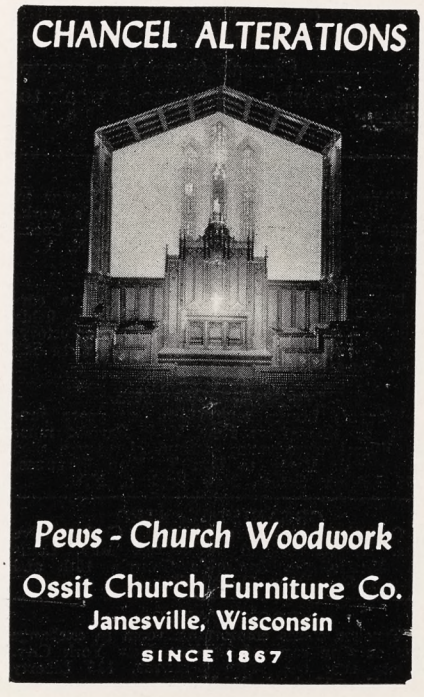
The shipment was authorized "on the basis that it must be distributed in the name of the donor, as well as by a kindred agency," Dr. Michelfelder reported. "I have proof that it was. The story was headlined in the Russian zone press. We expect to continue in this manner in that zone."

Helps Veterans

New Haven:—When the rector of St. John's Church here, the Rev. John W. Gummere, learned that seventy-two returned veterans studying at Yale were to be housed with their families in Quonset huts erected nearby he began to enlist the interest of his parish in them. They were called upon soon after their arrival, a tea was given for the wives, a list of reliable doctors was presented, parking space was found and a class for expectant mothers organized. As a result of this special program a confirmation class has been started and some of the wives are teaching in the Church school.

Books for Europe

Geneva (RNS):—Plans to supply war-affected European churches with important religious books published in other countries during the past few years are being promoted here by the literature section of the department of reconstruction and inter-church aid of the World Council of Churches, in cooperation with American, British, and Swiss church reconstruction committees. British and American committees are expected to create standard libraries of from 50 to 100 volumes, selected from the best works printed in the last six years, to be sent to addresses supplied by the World Council department. Twenty-five libraries have already left England and five more are being prepared. In addition, British and American committees intend to translate into several European languages the most striking works which have appeared in their countries.



British Manifesto

London: — Sir Richard Acland, a leader at the Malvern Conference of 1940 and a leader in the Church of England, is now the head of the British Commonwealth Party, generally considered a left wing group. Recently, according to a wireless to RNS, the party issued a manifesto calling for the abolition of denominational schools as "incompatible with the socialist educational system" and also for the abolition of religious education in state schools. It declared that clergymen "should have no access to children during school hours, nor should children be withdrawn from school during school hours to receive religious instruction." In addition, the manifesto objected to communal worship in schools, and said applicants for school posts should not be asked questions "relating to personal religious views."

Mixed Marriages

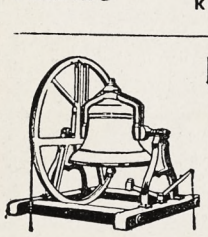
London (wireless to RNS):—Anglicans contemplating marriage with Roman Catholics were warned by the Archbishop of York, Cyril F. Garbett, against signing any pledge that the children of such unions would be raised as Roman Catholics. The Archbishop, speaking before the full synod of the Convocation of York, described the conditions imposed on the non-Catholic marriage partner by the Roman Catholic as "humiliating." He particularly scored a statement printed in Latin on the reverse of the marriage document, and signable by both parties, which, he said, pledged the Roman Catholic to do everything in his power to induce the other party to embrace "the true faith."

Signing such documents, the Archbishop said, "means that Anglican parents married to Roman Catholics

GORHAM
ECCLESIASTICAL WARES
Beauty · Quality · Correctness
ALTAR APPOINTMENTS

ILLUSTRATIVE of the Gorham selection of Ecclesiastical Appointments, is the above Vase No. V4444 made of brass with thread decoration. Price $22.50 each (subject to change without notice). Highest quality, lasting beauty and liturgical correctness characterize all Gorham wares.

Converting rapidly from War goods, we are already currently producing:
ALMS BASONS HONOR ROLLS, BRONZE
ALTAR CROSSES CANDLESTICKS, BRASS
CHALICES MEMORIAL TABLETS, BRONZE
ALTAR DESKS PATENS VASES CIBORIA
COMMUNION SETS BAPTISMAL BOWLS
Everything for the Church in Bronze
Other items soon will be available. Center your choice upon GORHAM, for the traditional dignity of design and mastercraftsmanship in execution which have distinguished our wares for 115 years.



Gorham
70 Adelaide Ave
Providence, 7, R. I.
America's Leading Silversmiths since 1831

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Write us for
Organ Information
AUSTIN ORGANS, Inc.
Hartford, Conn.

Memorial Windows
In accordance with the best traditions of the craft. Notable installations in forty states and five foreign countries.
Illustrated material on request
The D'Ascenzo Studios
founded 1896
1604 Summer Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

ALTAR BREADS ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED
SAINT MARY'S CONVENT
KENOSHA • WISCONSIN

MENEELY BELL CO.
22 RIVER ST., TROY, N. Y.
BELLS

R. GEISSLER, INC.
71-79 W. 45th St., New York 19, N. Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS
EST. 1837

VESTMENTS
Cassocks - Surplices - Stoles - Scarves
Silks - Altar Cloths - Embroideries
Priest Cloaks - Rabats - Collars
Custom Tailoring for Clergymen
1837 Church Vestment Makers Over One Hundred Years 1946

COX SONS & VINING, Inc.
131 East 23rd Street, New York 10, N.Y.

Need a LAXATIVE?
Black-Draught is,
1-Usually prompt
2-Usually thorough
3-Always economical

25 to 40 doses only 25¢
Get BLACK-DRAUGHT
CAUTION: USE ONLY AS DIRECTED

are deprived of their right to influence the spiritual and religious upbringing of their children. It means disloyalty to the Church of their baptism. Neither Anglican nor Roman Catholic should be intimidated by any warnings or threats that a mixed marriage in one of our churches would be invalid. It would not, indeed, be recognized by the Roman Catholic Church, but it would be a marriage in the sight of God and in accordance with laws of both the Church and the state."

Strategy and Tactics

(Continued from page 12)

be in most people's mind not only esoteric but also neurotic, to say nothing of its being an admission of weakness. The obstacles to overcome in establishing strong, healthy prayer groups are great. Nevertheless, I am sure that no parish can give a Christian witness to a community without one or more such groups.

Here is a need which can be met by the leadership and activity of laypeople. The cooperation of the clergy will, of course, be a tremendous help and, as Evelyn Underhill points out, the leadership of the parish priest is important in the beginning. It is not essential, however, for prayer groups can meet in homes, factories or offices as well as in the church. A layman or laywoman who undertakes such work will, as I have said, be looked at askance by many people, may even be openly ridiculed, but Christians are supposed to be a "peculiar" people and God alone knows what the effect on your home town would be if it were noised about. "Why in St. ——— Church there is a group of people who meet once a week to pray!"

POSITION OFFERED
Wanted: Young, liberal Associate Rector to specialize in calling and young people's work. $3200 per year. Rev. David H. Weeks, Lockport and 10th Streets, Niagara Falls, N. Y.

POSITION OFFERED
Bishop of Northeasten Diocese invites correspondence with clergymen interested in fields involving parish and mission. $2400 and rectory. Box C, care of THE WITNESS. 135 Liberty St., New York 6, N. Y.

POSITION OFFERED
Wanted: Locum tenens for one year; January or thereafter; New York Parish; must be liberal churchman; retired clergyman also considered; Reply to Box T. THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N.Y.

ORGANIST WANTED
Organist-Choirmaster. Mixed Choir. Give age, experience and references. Rev. Louis F. Martin, St. Andrew's Church, 10th and Lamar Sts., Fort Worth, Texas.

ROOM WANTED
Teacher wants comfortable room in exchange for evening care of children New York City. Write Box DA, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty St., New York, 6, N. Y.

Everything for the Episcopal Church
but vestments
A broad statement but we'd like to prove it.
Ammidon and Company
Horace L. Varian
Horace L. Varian, Jr.
31 South Frederick Street
Baltimore 2, Maryland

PURE IRISH LINENS NOW IN STOCK
for all Church needs, supplies constantly arriving, good qualities, also fine cottons. Samples free.
Mary Fawcett Company
Plainfield, N. J. Box 146

CATHEDRAL STUDIOS
Washington & London, England. Linens and materials by the yard, surplices, albs, Altar Linens, stoles, burses & veils. Materials by the yard. See my NEW BOOK "CHURCH EMBROIDERY" & CHURCH VESTMENTS a complete instruction. 128 pages, 95 illus. Price $5.67. And my HANDBOOK for ALTAR GUILDS, price 50c. Miss L. V. Mackrille, 11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington 15, D.C. 30 minutes from U. S. Treasury. Tel Wisconsin 2752.

SURPLICES — STOLES
VESTMENTS
CHURCH HANGINGS
ALTAR LINENS
CASSOCKS
CLERICAL SUITS — CLOAKS
RABATS—RABAT VESTS—COLLARS—SHIRTS
Choir Vestments in All Styles
Inquiries Invited
C. M. ALMY & SON, INC.
562 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.

The Payne-Spiers Studios Inc.
Studios at Paterson, New Jersey
Carved Wood
Chancel Renovations Church Furnishings
Murals Memorials Tablets
Stained Glass
-- Inquiries Solicited --

A SERVICE OF HOLY BAPTISM
Prepared from various sources by
The Rev. Joseph H. Titus
Submitted for consideration of the Church as a substitute for the Prayer Book Service.
$4 for 100 copies
10c for single copy
The WITNESS
135 Liberty Street New York 6, N.Y.

Church Bulletins
Scriptural – Artistically Designed
Large Assortment-- Self Selection
Lithographed—Special Days General use
Be Sure to Get Our Free Catalog and amples
Ecclesiastical Art Press Dept. W
Louisville, 12, Ky.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

REV. WILLIAM F. CORKER
Scranton, Pennsylvania

The remarks of William B. Spofford, Jr., (WITNESS, Oct. 17) on unity are completely irrelevant, for they can produce neither understanding of the problems nor any new approaches. It is my opinion that "the head of the most dynamic of the veterans' organizations" shows only dynamic stupidity in describing the problem of unity as "stuff like that." He should know enough of disunity, the struggle for power, and of self-interest to keep his mouth shut if he has nothing better to say. Mr. Spofford's claim that P.A.C., for example, shows more of the work of the Holy Spirit than the Church arises from a superficial knowledge both of P.A.C. and of the Church. P.A.C. is a pressure group; can we not assume that it has within its ranks some of the company of the faithful? Is not this then the work of the Church or do you, Mr. Spofford, think of the Church as a building? P.A.C., of course, only partially embodies what the Church knows ought to be, and the Church cannot supplant P.A.C. nor can it endorse it without reservation. As to housing, jobs, health facilities, decent food and clothing which seem to be the root of Mr. Spofford's basically purely materialistic concern, we might remind him there are enough at the task of the indoctrination of materialism. Recall, if you will, "though I could remove mountains . . . though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity it profiteth me nothing." (1 Cor. 13:2-3.)

* * *

REV. SAMUEL J. MARTIN
Chicago, Illinois

Your editorial in the last issue entitled "Hollywood Triumphant" is very significant. It is high time for the Church to lead and not to follow. Negroes are accustomed to Hollywood relegating Negroes to inferior and comical parts but when it is done by the Church it is too much to stomach; we look to the Church for leadership. The Diocese of Newark has taken a bold, courageous and Christian stand. I trust that the Church at large will take notice of this and will do likewise. At a time when we are making progress in race relations it is too bad to have this material presented for the Every Member Canvass when in part it is insulting and will certainly not be taken lightly by Negro Churchmen. Are we following Hollywood or Christ?

* * *

MR. JOHN E. BAKER
Mill Valley, California

With reference to your editorial "The Christian Gentleman," an intimate knowledge of affairs in China after thirty years of residence in several provinces, leads me to retort that the murders you cite can no more be charged to Chiang Kai-shek than can those by guerrillas during the American War Between the States be charged against Abraham Lincoln. Furthermore, they are infinitesimal compared with those committed by Communists in the process of spreading their terroristic control. The mines which they plant in the fields around Paotingfu are merely another and current manifestation. Further on, you speak of a "feudal, dictatorial system by which peasants and workers are victimized by money lenders and landlords, protected by the most powerful politicians in the Kuomintang." High interest rates and rents existed long before the Kuomintang, and the national government is doing infinitely more to correct them than are the Communists. If you want to find a "dictatorial" regime, where the common people have nothing whatever to say—if it differs from the views of the dictator—go into the Communist dominated areas of China. There you will find no one protesting—all the protestants have been liquidated. Instead of protesting as you do, against violence against three persons who were probably plotting something very much like treason against the authorities which were protecting them, you would be in better company if you protested against the mass murders which always accompany any advance of Communist forces into any new area, be it Europe or Asia. We have editors, college professors and other public figures in this country who at present are plotting the advance of Communism here. It will be some time before they will be numerous enough to attempt to seize physical control of some political unit. But when they do, if they follow the course of Communists in every other portion of the world, they will use terrorism—murder—as an instrument; and at such a time our police will use third degree methods on suspects under arrest.

* * *

C. T. RANSOME
San Francisco, N. Y.

I wish to commend Mr. Thurston Greene for his article, A Church Rite for Marilyn. Certainly we should have a service whereby adopted children may truly be made members of Christian families in the eyes of the Lord. However, in his article, Mr. Greene says "we want Marilyn to be adopted in Church in a private ceremony at which only close friends and relatives will be present." This note of privacy disturbs me. The adoption of a child, like the birth of a child or a baptism, is a time for rejoicing by the whole community of faithful. Certainly, since we are all members of one body, all the elements of that body should be welcome so that they might sing praises for the new, strengthening addition to the community. We have enough "private" baptisms and people who make "my" communion without having another exclusive rite in the Church.

* * *

MRS. THOMAS FLEMING JR.
Churchwoman of Pasadena

I do want to tell you that your job of reporting the General Convention was wonderful; really grand; explicit, interesting and graphic.

Virginia Episcopal School
Lynchburg, Virginia
Prepares boys for colleges and university. Splendid environment and excellent corps of teachers. High standard in scholarship and athletics. Healthy and beautiful location in the mountains of Virginia.
For catalogue apply to
George L. Barton, Jr., Ph.D. Headmaster,
Box 408

SCHOOLS

The Hospital of Saint Barnabas and the University of Newark offer a full course in NURSING
to qualified High School graduates. Scholarships available. Classes enter in February and September
Apply to
Director of Nursing
HOSPITAL OF SAINT BARNABAS
685 High Street Newark, N. J.

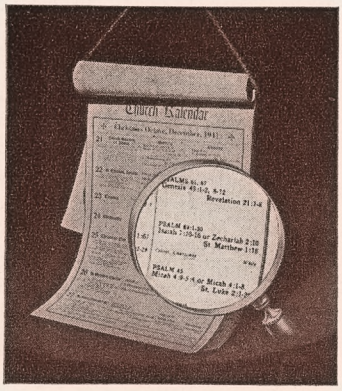
DE VEAUX SCHOOL
FOUNDED 1852
A Church school for boys. Thorough preparation for college. Military system of student government, developing sense of responsibility. Charges for grades seven and eight $1000; grades nine through twelve $1050. For catalog, address THE HEADMASTER, DeVeaux School, Niagara Falls, New York.

HOLDERNESS
In the White Mountains. College Preparatory and General Courses. Music and Crafts. For boys 12-19. All sports including riding. 200 acres of woods. New fireproof building. Individual attention. Home atmosphere.
Rev. Edric A. Weld, Rector
Box W. Plymouth, N. H.

MARGARET HALL
Under Sisters of St. Helena
(Episcopal)
Small country boarding and day school for girls, from primary through high school. Accredited college preparatory. Modern building recently thoroughly renovated includes gymnasium and swimming pool. Campus of six acres with ample playground space, hockey field and tennis court. Riding. Board and Tuition $800. For catalog, address: Sister Rachel, Prin. O.S.H., Box A. Versailles, Kentucky.

FORK UNION MILITARY ACADEMY
An Honor Christian School with the highest academic rating. Upper School prepares for university or business. ROTC. Every modern equipment. Junior School from six years. Housemother. Separate building. Catalogue. Dr. J. J. Wicker, Fork Union, Virginia.

CARLETON COLLEGE
Laurence M. Gould, D.Sc., President
Carleton is a co-educational liberal arts college of limited enrollment and is recognized as the Church College of Minnesota.
Address: Assistant to the President
CARLETON COLLEGE
Northfield Minnesota



KEMPER HALL
KENOSHA, WISCONSIN
Boarding and day school for girls offering thorough college preparation and training for purposeful living. Study of the Fine Arts encouraged. Complete sports program. Junior School department. Beautiful lake shore campus. Under direction of the Sisters of St Mary. For catalogue address: Box WT

LENOX SCHOOL
A Church School in the Berkshire Hills for boys 12-18 emphasizing Christian ideals and character through simplicity of plant and equipment, moderate tuition, the cooperative self-help system, and informal, personal relationships among boys and faculty.
Rev. Robert L. Curry, Headmaster
Lenox Massachusetts

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

1947

A Christmas Gift
Appreciated All Year

THE CHRISTIAN YEAR
and
CHURCH KALENDAR

This Kalendar makes a really unusual Christmas gift. First of all it is made so that it may be hung on the wall and the red and gold cover gives it an attractive appearance.

The text of 112 pages contains the necessary information every clergyman and lay person should have at their fingertips, such as

Church Calendar
Church Colors
Morning and Evening Lectionary
Saints Days
Altar Linen
Ember Days
Rules for Sacristans
Suggested Hymns
Church Holidays
Altar Society Notes
Vestments, their color, care and use
Church Dictionary
Duties of Wardens and Vestrymen
Suggestions for Servers
The Rector, his election and call

Order from the Publisher or your Bookseller
Price $1.25 ($1.35 postpaid)

H. M. JACOBS COMPANY

1907 Walnut Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

H. M. JACOBS COMPANY
1907 WALNUT STREET
PHILADELPHIA 3, PA.

Gentlemen:

Kindly send to addresses below:

_____ _____

_____ _____

_____ _____

☐ charge ☐ check with order

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The WITNESS

10¢ A COPY

NOVEMBER 14, 1946

LIBRARY COPY

THE LORD IS IN HIS HOLY TEMPLE . . . .

ARTICLE BY VIDA D. SCUDDER

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

THE CATHEDRAL OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE
NEW YORK CITY
Sundays: 8, 9, 11, Holy Communion; 10, Morning Prayer; 4, Evening Prayer; Sermons 11 and 4.
Weekdays: 7:30, 8 (also 9:15 Holy Days and 10, Wednesdays), Holy Communion; 9, Morning Prayer; 5, Evening Prayer. Open daily 7 A.M. to 6 P.M.

GRACE CHURCH, NEW YORK
Broadway at 10th St.
Rev. Louis W. Pitt, D.D., Rector
Daily: 12:30 except Mondays and Saturdays.
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M. and 4:30 P. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion 11:45 A. M.

THE HEAVENLY REST, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue at 90th Street
Rev. Henry Darlington, D.D.
Sundays: Holy Communion, 8 and 10 A. M.; Morning Service and Sermon, 11 A. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion, 11 A. M.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S CHURCH
NEW YORK
Park Avenue and 51st Street
Rev. Geo. Paull T. Sargent, D.D., Rector
8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evensong. Special Music.
Weekdays: Holy Communion Wednesday at 8:00 A. M.
Thursdays and Saints' Days at 10:30 A. M.
The Church is open daily for prayer.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH
Madison Ave. at 71st St., New York
The Rev. H. W. B. Donegan, D.D., Rector
8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
9:30 A. M. Church School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evening Prayer and Sermon.
Wed., 7:45 A. M., Thurs., 12 Noon Holy Communion.

THE CHURCH OF THE EPIPHANY
1317 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Charles W. Sheerin, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 A. M.; 8 P. M.
Daily: 12:05.
Thursdays: 11:00 and 12:05.

ST. THOMAS' CHURCH, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue and 53rd Street
Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, S.T.D., Rector
Sun 8, 11, 4. Daily 8:30 HC; Thurs. 11 HC., Daily except Sat. 12:10.

THE CHURCH OF THE ASCENSION
Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street, New York
The Rev. Roscoe Thornton Foust, Rector
Sundays: 8 a.m. Holy Communion.
11 a.m. Morning Prayer, Sermon.
8 p.m. Evening Song and Sermon; Service of Music (1st Sun. in month).
Daily: Holy Communion, 8 a.m. Tues., Thurs., Sat.; 11 a.m. Mon., Wed., Fri.
5:30 Vespers, Tues. through Friday.
This Church is open all day and all night.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL
Buffalo, New York
Shelton Square
The Very Rev. Edward R. Welles, M.A., Dean
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30 and 11.
Daily: 12:05 noon—Holy Communion.
Tuesday: 7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
Wednesday: 11:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH
Atlanta, Georgia
435 Peachtree Street
The Rev. J. Milton Richardson, Rector
9:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
10:45 A. M. Sunday School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Prayer and Sermon.
6:00 P. M. Young People's Meetings.

The WITNESS
For Christ and His Church

EDITORIAL BOARD: Frederick C. Grant, Editor; Arthur Lichtenberger, Chairman; William B. Spofford, Managing Editor; Lane W. Barton, Beverly M. Boyd, Dillard H. Brown, Roscoe T. Foust, Charles K. Gilbert, Hugh D. McCandless, Howard Chandler Robbins, William K. Russell, Sydney A. Temple Jr., Joseph H. Titus, William M. Weber.

★

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS: D. B. Aldrich, J. A. Bell, T. S. Carruthers, Adelaide Case, G. K. Chalmers, E. M. Cross, G. M. Day, Angus Dun, A. W. Farlander, T. P. Ferris, J. F. Fletcher, John Gass, C. H. Gesner, C. L. Glenn, G. C. Graham, J. M. Groton, G. I. Hiller, I. P. Johnson, T. R. Ludlow, C. S. Martin, R. C. Miller, Walter Mitchell, A. T. Mollegen, E. L. Parsons, E. L. Pennington, Rose Phelps, L. W. Pitt, Otis Rice, Cyril Richardson, Paul Roberts, V. D. Scudder, W. M. Sharp, W. B. Sperry, C. W. Sprouse, D. S. Stark, W. B. Stevens, J. W. Suter, S. E. Sweet, Alexander Zabriskie.

★

THE WITNESS is published weekly from September 15th to June 15th inclusive, with the exception of the first week in January and semi-monthly from June 15th to September 15th by the Episcopal Church Publishing Co. on behalf of the Church Publishing Association, Inc. Samuel Thorne, President; Charles A. Houston, Vice-President; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, Treasurer; Frederic D. H. Gilbert, Secretary.

★

The subscription price is $3.00 a year; in bundles for sale in parishes the magazine sells for 10c a copy, we will bill quarterly at 5c a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter, March 6, 1939, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879.

NOVEMBER 14, 1946
Vol XXIX. No. 50

CLERGY NOTES

ANTHONY, KENNETH, was installed as rector of St. John's, Waynesboro, Va., by Bishop Phillips on October 24.

BELL, LLOYD W. W., was ordained deacon by Bishop Goodwin on Oct. 18 at St. Timothy's, Herndon, Va., where he is in charge.

BUDD, OSBORNE, formerly chaplain at Wallkill State Prison, New York, is now rector of St. John's, Tuckahoe, N. Y.

CRAWFORD, M. K., who retired as rector of the Advent, Los Angeles, in February, died in Monterey Park, Calif., on October 22 at the age of 66.

HASTINGS, W. B., rector of St. Paul's, Overland, Mo., becomes rector of Trinity, Concord, Mass., on December 15.

McGEE, HAROLD F., was ordained deacon on October 13 at St. Paul's, Hanover, Va., by Bishop Goodwin. He is in charge of the parish.

SHANK, ROSCOE W., curate at St. John's, York, Pa., was ordained priest on October 28 by Bishop Heistand.

STEINMETZ, FRANCIS C., retired priest of Penna., died on October 17th at the age of 80. His last parish was St. Mary's, West Philadelphia, from which he resigned in 1933.

SMYTHE, THOMAS B., rector of St. John's, Aberdeen, Miss., takes charge of All Saints', Tupelo, and Grace Church, Okolona, Miss., effective November 15.

STITT, WILSON M., was ordained deacon by Bishop Mason on Oct. 17 at Whittle Memorial Church, Mission Home, Va., where he is in charge.

TIFFANY, EDGAR L., rector of the Transfiguration, Buffalo, N. Y., represented Kenyon College on November 1 at the inauguration of Richard L. Greene as president of Wells College, Aurora, N. Y.

WHITE, HUGH C., JR., was ordained deacon by Bishop R. S. M. Emrich on October 13th at Christ Church Cranbrook, Bloomfield Hills, Mich. Mr. White will graduate from the Virginia Theological Seminary in February, 1947.

WISEGARVER, HAROLD I., will serve as lay assistant to Dean John W. Day of Grace Cathedral, Topeka, Kansas, while he receives G. I. In-Service training looking forward to ordination in the ministry.

ZIMMERMAN, H. LYTTLETON, formerly assistant at Emmanuel, Baltimore, Md., is now rector of St. John's, Huntingdon, Pa.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

CHRIST CHURCH CATHEDRAL
Main and Church Sts., Hartford, Conn.
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30, 10:05, 11 A. M., 8 P. M.
Weekdays: Holy Communion—Monday and Thursday, 9 A. M.; Tuesday, Friday and Saturday, 8 A. M.; Wednesday, 7:00 and 11:00 A. M. Noonday Service, daily 12:15 P. M.

CHRIST CHURCH
Cambridge
REV. GARDINER M. DAY, RECTOR
REV. FREDERIC B. KELLOGG, CHAPLAIN
Sunday Services, 8:00, 9:00, 10:00 and 11:15 A. M.
Weekdays: Wed. 8 and 11 A. M. Thurs., 7:30 A. M.

TRINITY CHURCH
Miami
Rev. G. Irvine Hiller, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services 8, 9:30, 11 A. M.

TRINITY CATHEDRAL
Military Park, Newark, N. J.
The Very Rev. Arthur C. Lichtenberger, Dean
Sunday Services: 8:30, 9:30 (All Saints' Chapel, 24 Rector St.), 11 and 4:30 p.m.
Week Days: Holy Communion Wednesday and Holy Days, 12:00 noon, Friday, 8 a.m. Intercessions Thursday, Friday, 12:10; Organ Recital Tuesday, 12:10.
The Cathedral is open daily for prayer.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
Montecito and Bay Place
OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA
Rev. Calvin Barkow, D.D., Rector
Sundays: 8 A. M., Holy Communion; 11 A. M., Church School; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer and Sermon.
Wednesdays: 10 A. M., Holy Communion; 10:45, Rector's Study Class.

GRACE CHURCH
Corner Church and Davis Streets
ELMIRA, N. Y.
Rev. Frederick T. Henstridge, Rector
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M.; 4:30 P. M.
Daily: Tuesday and Thursday, 7:30 A. M.
Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Holy Days, 9:30 A. M.
Other Services Announced

ST. MARK'S CHURCH
Texas Avenue and Cotton Street
SHREVEPORT, LA.
Rev. Frank E. Walters, Rector
Rev. Harry Wintermeyer, Curate
Sundays: Holy Communion, 7:30; 9:25 A. M., Family Service; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer.
Holy Communion, first Sunday. 6 P. M., Young Churchmen.

CHRIST CHURCH
Nashville, Tennessee
Rev. Peyton Randolph Williams
7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
9:30 and 11 A. M.—Church School.
11 A. M.—Morning Service and Sermon.
6 P. M.—Young People's Meetings.
Thursdays and Saints' Days—Holy Communion, 10 A. M.

GRACE CHURCH
105 Main Street, Orange, N. J.
Lane Wickham Barton, Rector
SUNDAYS
8:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M.—Church School.
11:00 A. M.—Morning Prayer and Sermon. (Holy Communion first Sunday each month)
7:00 P. M.—Young People's Fellowship.

CHRIST CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA
Second Street above Market
Cathedral of Democracy
Founded 1695
Rev. E. Felix Kloman, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services: 10 and 11 A. M.
Weekdays: Wed., 12 noon and 12:30.
Saints' Days: 12 noon.
This Church Is Open Every Day

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

VOL. XXIX. No. 50.

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

NOVEMBER 14, 1946

Publication Office, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago 37, Ill. Editorial Office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

Pot-Pourri of Problems Shown By a Simple Question

Asking People of Various Groups Their Chief Dilemma Gets Interesting and Varied Answers

By Vida D. Scudder
Contributing Editor of THE WITNESS

Wellesley, Mass.: — What chief problem confronts you as you face this bewildered world? Many leaders are talking: statesmen, religious authorities, journalists, sociologists, what you will. But what is astir under the surface, in the tossing ocean of the general mind? I wanted to find out. So, asking for written answers, I have been putting the question to sundry groups. Sometimes I said, "What is your chief dilemma?", for pretty much every problem, once faced, involves a dilemma. To religious groups, I added a word: "Your chief problem as a Christian?" I might have said, "as an American," "as an employer," "as a housewife," for this casual pedagogical method could be applied indefinitely. It is fun; I found the results interesting. The first group challenged consisted of college alumnae, assembled last spring in the class reunions which have happily begun to recur; the second was at a Church conference. Having formed the habit, I continued to indulge it; here is a selection of answers, loosely shuffled, but suggestive, I think, of what is going on in that mind of the common man on which in the long run solutions must depend.

Many people have treated me to platitudes,—from which may the Lord deliver us. For instance, "The unity and fellowship of all men." Other replies present special or minor issues. "The marriage question." "Which group of Christians is going to rise to the defense of the white collar worker?" "What is the right attitude toward the Roman Catholic Church?" (This last can hardly be described as minor.)

Many honest and thoughtful replies dealt with the racial issue. "Equal rights for colored,—yellow, black, all the minorities? I believe Negroes should have equal educational, living, and business opportunities; I am confused about the social side." Such confusion is evidently widely diffused. "How shall we eliminate racial and religious prejudice among so-called Christians?" Poignant distress is often evident: "How explain the past war to young people who question whether the sacrifice of those they loved was not in vain?" "How to answer those who say that a third world war is invitable?"

As queries and replies multiplied, I came slowly to think that our confusion, however tragic, has compensations. Never was a world crisis when the imagination on which Blake relied as a chief redemptive force so literally "global" in quality . . . and suffering. The time has passed when the common mind could be called provincial.

"Will there not be trouble so long as nations are grasping for more territory? How shall we interpret our own country's possession of Pacific bases?" "Paganism. Mammon (counting financial power as final). Greed for territory. Putting state above God, and . . . (surprising climax to this reply), Sabbath disregard." Some answers touch the quick: "How can abstract loyalty be converted into concrete action?" A large proportion deal with the most menacing problem of UN —"Is sympathy with Russia mere wishful thinking?" "Shall democracy be built up from the bottom (Magna Carta; British Labor Party), or imposed from the top (Soviet system)?" One slip carries a pertinent formula: "The problem of getting brethren to dwell together at once in unity and in freedom." No social order has solved that dilemma yet, clearly to envisage it is something. . . .

"How can you build a Christian society in our industrial world?" "Conflict between Christian ethics and modern business principles." A number of replies were still more explicit: "What role should I play as a Christian in the transition to international socialism?" "How to find an equitable division of this world's goods?" The perpetual problem of property! It is good that so many face it, whether from the angle of the modern capitalist, of the economic liberal, of St. Thomas Aquinas, of Stalin. Whatever one's answer, whether free enterprise, British socialism, Russian communism, another question instantly ploughs into the mind, especially the Christian mind, with sharp urgency; many of my replies, to my sad satisfaction, were cognizant of it. "Can nations behave with the same ethical code as individuals?" "How can we gain the benefits of corporate action without being overcome by the temptations of power?"

The relation of corporate to individual morality! There is my own deepest concern. It has been central to my mind, to many minds, long before the vast expanse of Russia forced it on every one looking at a map. It opens vistas to an area, never yet thoroughly explored by thought sacred or profane, wherein the pilgrim seeking the road to the Kingdom of God must press through thorny tangles of dilemmas and problems. I think I know that road, but I'm not talking about it just now. Some people may find this pot-pourri of puzzles discouraging; to me it brings invigorating cheer. In my dim distant life as a college senior, a classmate wrote an operetta. Its hero was named Gernutus, he was prophetic of Rodin's Thinker. He never did anything. He sat, still and solemn, with beetled brows, while we actors circled around him singing. Our song had a constant refrain: "Surely Gernutus is thinking." That absurd refrain has run through my mind as answers to my query have poured in:

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

"Surely America is thinking."

FEDERATION URGES UNDERSTANDING

St. Louis (RNS):—Greater cooperation between the people of the United States and the Soviet Union and the elimination of international intolerance and prejudices were called for in a resolution adopted last week by the commission on justice and good will of the local federation of churches.

INTERCOMMUNION PROPOSED

London (Wireless to RNS):—Full communion between the Church of England and non-Episcopal Churches throughout the United Kingdom was proposed by the Archbishop of Canterbury in a sermon last Sunday at Cambridge University.

Declaring the time has come for free exchange of both ministers and ministries, Dr. Fisher said he presupposed that those agreeing to full communion would agree on the essential principles contained in the Scriptures and creeds, as well as on the sacraments and the ministry itself.

The archbishop's announcement, although a surprise to Free Church circles, was cordially received as a basis for further discussion.

Dr. Fisher stressed that non-Episcopal Churches had accepted the principle that the episcopacy must exist with other elements in the re-united Church.

"If the non-Episcopal churches agree to such a communion, let them try it on their own grounds first," he said. "I should hope that preparation for it be along the lines of the recent Canadian proposals which saw both episcopal and non-episcopal ministries willing to interchange. By that means assimilation would be at work from the start at the presbyterial level.

"I love the Church of England as Presbyterians and Methodists love their churches. It is not possible nor desirable that any Church merge its identity in a newly-constituted union.

"What I desire is that I should be able to enter their churches freely, and they mine, in the sacrament of the Lord, that His life may freely circulate between us."

GREAT SERVICE IN ST. LOUIS

St. Louis (RNS): — There were 14,000 persons present at the interdenominational rally held here last Sunday at Kiel Auditorium to celebrate the Protestant Reformation. The speaker was the Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, Methodist of New York, who visited the Soviet Union this past summer. He told the vast audience that cooperation can be effective only in an atmosphere of mutual respect and trust and warned of a "third global war which would dissolve civilization unless the Churches of all faiths unite in a common goal of world peace."

The meeting was under the auspices of the Church Federation of the city.

HEADQUARTERS IN GENEVA

New York:—Bishop J. I. Blair Larned, former suffragan bishop of Long Island, who takes charge of the American Churches in Europe on January 1st, will make his official residence in Geneva, making the eighth large American Church to be represented there, all closely affiliated with the World Council of Churches. "These Churches comprise more than 35 million communicants," according to a statement issued by the Council, "and they are all undoubtedly prompted by the desire to render special assistance at this time of need through the department of reconstruction and inter-Church aid of the World Council to the stricken people of Europe."

ASKS UNDERSTANDING OF USSR

Boston:—The only American who fought, was wounded and given rank and decorations by both the American and Russian armies was the speaker at a recently meeting at St. Paul's Cathedral. He urged understanding between the USA and the USSR. Sgt. Leonard Bernhardt is the name of the young soldier. Others to speak in the series of lectures, held Thursday evenings under the direction of the department of education of the diocese, are Edwin B. Goodell Jr. of the United Nations Association; Dr. Edward L. Young, chief surgeon in a local hospital who visited Russia this summer, and Raymond Dennett of the World Peace Foundation.

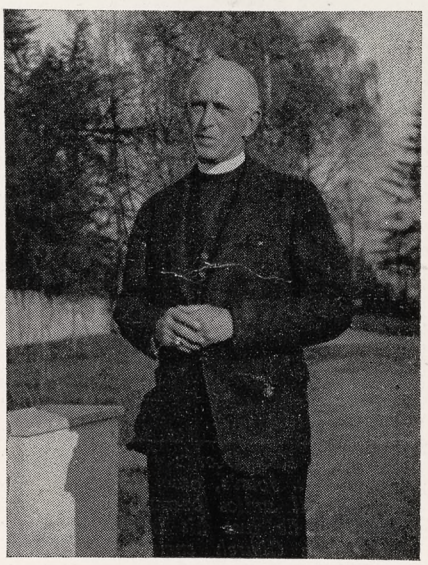
The Rev. John S. Higgins of Minneapolis, left, a recent preacher on the Church of the Air, greets Bishop Irving P. Johnson, retired Bishop of Colorado and founder of THE WITNESS, who was the preacher on the first of these programs fifteen years ago. With them are Norman Johnson, the Bishop's son who directed the musical part of the program and Organist Jean McIntyre

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

A Bishop from Franco's Spain Speaks on Freedom

However His Statements Are Challenged By Pronouncement of the World Council

By W. B. Spofford Jr.



New York:—Freedom of worship is still considered one of the four fundamental freedoms of man even in a highly secularized civilization. The Roman Catholic Church, for instance, invokes this freedom in all of its arguments for its political activity at the present time. The definition of freedom that that Church uses, however, disturbs many people.

In a recent interview, Bishop Gregorio Modrego y Casaus of Barcelona, who is visiting this country, said that Protestants in Spain are given full liberty in the practice of their religion. "The Franco government," he said, "permits full freedom of religion to Protestants, except in one respect. They are not permitted to intrude in Catholic homes or to disseminate literature attacking the Catholic Church or the Catholic religion, which is the religion of the state. Furthermore, although the law prohibits Protestants from advertising, in practice this is being permitted."

Bishop Modrego declared that Catholics in Spain number more than 99 percent of the population and he claimed that any attempts by the small group of Protestants in the country to proselytize would be resisted by the people themselves. "Hence the government is merely following the wishes of the people in forbidding any attempt to undermine the Catholic faith," he said. "In some instances, Protestant groups have carried on propaganda sharply opposed to the Catholic sentiments of the people and have attacked leaders of the Church, especially the Pope, and this has compelled authorities to intervene."

To exemplify Spanish religious freedom, the bishop said that three Protestant students in the University of Barcelona who had to pass examinations in religion as a requirement for graduation were examined by Catholic priest-professors in the tenets of their respective faiths. He said, "These students had, of course, to teach themselves, since only the Catholic religion may be taught in any educational institution, but nevertheless they were not discriminated against, but rather helped in meeting graduation requirements."

On the same issue, the International Christian Press and Information Service, news organ of the World Council of Churches, has sent a statement from Geneva which says, "The situation of Protestantism in Spain is still extremely precarious. At the time of the promulgation of the religious laws of Spain in 1945, it had been hoped that true religious liberty would gradually be granted. But subsequent developments have shown that Spain still maintains in many essential respects a regime of religious oppression."

Bishop Blair Larned will make his headquarters in Geneva as the Bishop of the American Churches in Europe. Picture was taken in the garden of the headquarters of the World Council of Churches Stating that the laws acknowledge in fact only the right to hold private services of worship, the statement says that "wherever public services are held they are merely tolerated, but not officially allowed. Moreover, the Protestant Churches suffer from the following further restrictions:

"Protestants still have to send their children to schools where the 'official' Roman Catholic religion is taught to all pupils and have no right to open their own schools.

"Protestants have no right to publish their own literature, since all such literature needs the Roman Catholic imprimatur.

"Protestants have no right to be married according to civil law. Those who are baptized as Roman Catholics are considered as Roman Catholics for the whole of their life.

"Protestants are not being accepted for public offices even if they are perfectly able to fulfil such positions. The argument used in such cases is that the state is Catholic.

"Protestants are not allowed to proclaim the Gospel freely."

Was it not Humpty-Dumpty who answered Alice, when she challenged him on his use of a word, that "words mean exactly what I say and intend them to mean"? And so, Bishop Modrego says that Protestants in Spain are given full liberty in the practice of their religion.

NAVY CHAPLAINS NEEDED

New York: — The procurement program for regular navy chaplains is now open, according to an announcement by Chaplain Percy G. Hall, secretary of the army and navy division of the National Council. Candidates should submit applications through the office of naval officer procurement, addresses of which can be supplied by the division.

CHURCH ARMY CENTER

Cincinnati:—Church Army opened its training center here in October for its first post-war class, with five men enrolled. There are Albert Huntley of Maine; Ernest St. Andrew of Northern Michigan; Earnest Swanker of Albany; Fred Nussbaum of Oklahoma; William Johnson of Los Angeles. Captain Earl Estabrook, national director, is in charge with lectures given by a number of the clergy in the diocese of Southern Ohio.

PASTOR NIEMOELLER IN ENGLAND

London (wireless to RNS):—Pastor Martin Niemoeller of Germany is in England as the guest of Bishop George K. A. Bell of Chichester. He is not scheduled to address meetings or conduct services.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

ARCHBISHOP MAY MOVE

London (wireless to RNS):—Lambeth Palace will cease to be the official residence of the Archbishop of Canterbury if the Church Assembly approves a report to be submitted by its ecclesiastical committee. The report states that the Archbishop should reside in the cathedral city of Canterbury and also stresses the financial burden imposed by the upkeep of Lambeth.

UNITED NATIONS INSTITUTE

New York (RNS):—An institute on the United Nations for secretaries of city and state councils of churches, religious press editors, foreign missionary executives, church social action secretaries and affiliated organizational leaders has been scheduled here for November 25-26 by the department of international justice and good will of the Federal Council of Churches.

In announcing the institute, Walter W. Van Kirk, secretary of the department, said it would be limited to 50 members. They will discuss methods by which the Churches can support "those activities of the United Nations that are designed to promote ends consonant with the Christian conception of world order."

Van Kirk also stated that the group will investigate the possibility of holding similar meetings throughout the country.

It is hoped, Van Kirk said, that institute members will be able to interview members of the American UN delegation as well as delegates from other nations.

MATRICULATION AT GENERAL

New York:—Fifty-seven new students matriculated at General Seminary on All Saints' Day. The matriculation sermon was preached the evening before by Bishop Austin Pardue of Pittsburgh before a congregation that filled the chapel. There are 92 students in the seminary, twenty of whom are graduate students.

Bishop Pardue had this to say about labor in his address: "When I became bishop of Pittsburgh, they gave a civic dinner for me. It is their custom. Everyone in every walk of life was represented, except labor. I asked the chairman to include representatives of the C.I.O., the A. F. of L., and another labor organization, active in Pittsburgh. He did, and the three representatives came. After the dinner, they said: 'This is the first time we have ever been invited to anything like this.' The very next week, when they gave a dinner to the chairman of the steel workers organization, assistant to Philip Murray, they invited me to be the speaker. When I stood up to speak, they cheered. It was not personal. I was a stranger, new to everybody and everything. They cheered because they had an Episcopal bishop there. I am no labor expert; but three of my clergy are. They are friends with labor. But I see no reason why any man cannot be friends with labor, if he is the right sort. Priests who will go and who will love these people, who will push door-bells and care about getting inside their houses will get to be friends with them. He need not be a labor expert."

The Rev. George F. Pratt, rector at St. John's, Stockton, California, is all smiles because of a home run he just hit in a ball game at a Church summer conference

LARGE ENROLLMENT AT VIRGINIA

Alexandria, Va.: — A matriculation service for the 100 students of the Theological Seminary here featured the observance of All Saints' Day. A quiet day followed, conducted by the Rev. Kenneth E. Heim, new assistant professor of Church history. The school has the largest enrollment in its history. There are also other additions to the faculty, with the Rev. Clifford L. Stanley now professor of systematic theology, and the Rev. Jesse M. Trotter the associate professor of apologetics. Still another addition to the seminary staff is Mr. Harrison Fiddesof as bursar and business manager. Seventy-one members of the student body are former service men. Fully half of the men are married and are living in a nearby housing development.

STEPHEN CLARK CONSECRATION

New York:—The Rev. Stephen C. Clark will be consecrated Bishop of Utah at St. Paul's Cathedral, Los Angeles, on December 6th with Presiding Bishop Tucker as consecrator and Bishop Stevens of Los Angeles and Bishop Moulton, retired Bishop of Utah, as co-consecrators. He will be presented by Bishop William F. Lewis of Nevada and Bishop Robert B. Gooden, the retired suffragan bishop of Los Angeles. The sermon will be preached by Bishop Edward L. Parsons, the retired bishop of California.

OVATION GIVEN DEAN BODE

Los Angeles:—An ovation was given Dean Arnold G. H. Bode at the recital of his sacred music given on October 20th at St. Athanasius' Church here. Now rector emeritus at Sierra Madre, Calif., Dean Bode continues to preach through music the message of these times: the end of war; the coming of peace; the establishment of justice; the ending of fear; the dwelling in safety of the common people throughout the world. One of his hymns, The Kings' Highway (432), is in the new hymnal. Before coming to this country he was organist and choirmaster at Cuddesdon College, Oxford, University.

USE OF VISUAL AIDS

Atlanta, Ga.:—Miss Irene M. Scudds, adviser to the department of education in the diocese of Southern Ohio, led a conference, October 28-30, on the use of visual aids in the Church. The conference was sponsored by the association of diocesan leaders in Christian education in the province of Sewanee, with 25 attending. Others to take part in the conference were the Rev. R. G. Urban of Jacksonville, Fla.; Mrs. John W. Crump of Alabama; the Rev. Henry Johnston of Oxford, N. C.; Dean N. E. Wicker of Christ Church Cathedral, Louisville.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

EDITORIALS

Failure of Nerve

THE late Prof. Gilbert Murray coined the phrase "failure of nerve" to characterize that period in a culture's development when the persons who possess the political, educational and economic power no longer have a living faith in the ideals of their civilization. Therefore, believing that the ideals are no longer dynamic and growing, they stop using them as springboards for action and as criteria for judgment, even though they continue to pay expedient lip-service to something they call the "great spiritual heritage of our culture." Such a failure of nerve sets in when those who possess the power are really challenged to live up to the ideals. Historically speaking, they have never been able to accept that challenge and, to defeat it, they are forced to sink deeper into their moral slough and indulge in even more gross betrayals of their spiritual foundations. Such a state of moral cowardice on the part of a culture, as Arnold Toynbee has pointed out time and again in his monumental history, leads but to the grave.

The recent election campaign, in which the candidates of both major parties steadfastly refused to tackle concrete issues, and the results at the polls on November 5th, were symptomatic of our failure of nerve. The real issues of the election were not whether the so-called Communists were going to take over our country (although the vast majority of the forces which mold our opinion would have us think so) but whether we were going to try conscientiously to live up to our ideals and attempt to expand democracy into every area of life, political, economic and social. Put into operational terms, this meant whether or not we really believed that all men, regardless of race, creed, color or national origin, were entitled to the life more abundant. That was the challenge of the election. It is ominous that we refused to accept it.

The challenge, however, still exists. It confronts the whole world. It is a spiritual and moral problem. It lies behind the hurly-burly over Yugoslavia, Palestine, Greece, India, China, Germany and Japan. It stands nakedly posed in our bleak city slums and their rural equivalents. It is summed up in the challenge of redemption and the vision of the Kingdom of God. To those who despair deeply, we would point out that there is nothing wrong with our ideals, based on the ultimate worth of the human personality made in the image of God, that a little practice of them would not cure. True Christianity is not a panacea but it is a good medicine for strengthening weak backbones and revitalizing nerves that have failed.

Eleven men once came forth from an upper room, beheld their Leader lynched and lost their nerve. They got it back through faith in that Leader and his ideals and went on to challenge the world. These eleven were our ancestors.

"QUOTES"

This is the way Prof. Bennett, of Wesleyan College, Macon, Ga., reads a famous story to the "Bible Christians" who often are also Ku Kluxers, and Bilbo-ites:

A certain man went down from Atlanta to Macon, and fell among thieves, who stripped him of his clothing and wounded him and departed, leaving him half dead.

And by chance there came down a certain Methodist bishop that way; and when he saw him, he passed by on the other side.

And likewise a Baptist deacon, when he was at the place, came and looked on him, and passed by on the other side.

But a certain mulatto, as he journeyed, came where he was: and when he saw him he had compassion on him,

And went to him, and bound up his wounds, giving him first aid, and laid him in his flivver and brought him to the De Luxe Hotel (where the mulatto could not of course be received as a guest)

And he said to the owner of the hotel: Take care of him, and whatever you spend, when I come again, I will repay you.

—submitted by Wilbur L. Caswell, rector of St. Paul's, Yonkers, N.Y.

A Modern Menace

NEW occasions teach new duties and what our country needs right now is a scientific study of a practical way of eliminating agencies. They are becoming a menace and a burden in both Church and state, and what we say here in print is mild compared to what is often said privately.

Take "281" for instance. It is staffed, at least in its senior and junior executive posts, with men who have been rather outstandingly successful in parish or business administration. They are promoted from effective contact with a few hundred souls to an ineffective contact with eight thousand waste paper baskets. From saving souls one by one they move up to composing mimeograph manifestoes. It is a dubious promotion but it often carries with it a salary which makes it difficult for a man to jump back into parish life. If things are going well he feels he is evading a challenge in leaving his agency post; if things are mediocre or worse, no one wants him.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

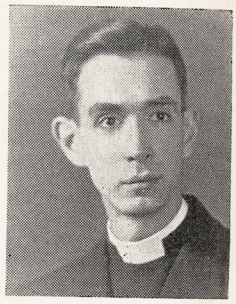
Such a situation is faced by other Churches. Those of us who really believe in corporate action by the various Churches (you know of course that lots of people who talk about corporate action don't really believe in it. It's just a red herring to avoid definite action on unity) have good reason to think that the same floundering and overlapping is found in the extensive offices of "297"—the headquarters of the Federal Council of Churches.

Nor are our dioceses free from this. Some years ago one of the larger ones had a board of religious education functioning with one stenographer and the rest of the help volunteer. Someone got up in a meeting and after some sure-fire cliches on the importance of training the youth and so forth he said, "Wouldn't it be wonderful if we had a full time director." (Any survey will probably show that people who initiate motions with the phrase "wouldn't it be wonderful" should be ruled out of order immediately.) They got the director so things had to hum to make it worth their money and his time and talents. They changed a modest but useful mimeographed news letter into a slick paper monthly. At one time this cost $1,500 a year and its income from subscriptions totalled $26. This is not bad as official publications go. But how would you like to run a parish or a business that way?

Of course all this reminds you of the government, especially the national government. But the movement for putting ten desks where one was before it quite bi-partisan. It is found in other countries also. In England the long-established "Rodent Control Board" (rat-catching) is said to employ 100 clerks and fifty actual rat catchers.

And the Church and state are not alone in spawning offices where people spend most of their time sending inter-office memos to each other and questionnaires to the outside world. Private agencies abound which to the naked eye seem to have no reason for their existence other than to supply their executive secretaries with a living and an audience. Other matters are taken for "referral" (agency front-office language for passing the buck) unless they have enough publicity value.

For our own protection, as well as for the record, we want to say that among the thousands of private agencies, there are dozens of splendid, efficient ones. Since the source of their support can be disaffected, at least all of them have to be tactful. These agencies are hard to kill but they are not entirely immortal, as state and Church agencies are. The worthwhile agencies are hampered rather than helped by the existence of the others.



Some day, we hope, boards and commissions will be set up for closely defined purposes—and for definite periods of time; a few years at most. This would waste a lot less money and valuable manpower. Young men would not be accused of using such jobs as mere springboards nor old men of hanging on. But outside of this suggestion we have no others, save that the problem is widespread enough to warrant study, preferable by a non-permanent board.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

Name This Child?

THE national headquarters of our Church—commonly called "281"—is the butt of all too much unfavorable criticism on the part of the clergy. It is painful for us in this column to join the unhappy chorus. I only hope that in this case my remarks are not ill-considered or trivial. But some one must speak out against the unholy portrayal of Holy Baptism which is being sent out this fall as publicity for the Every Member Canvass. The October issue of Forth, which spreads the picture on its cover, says, "the poster itself . . . will be shown in every parish and mission during the coming weeks." We sincerely hope it will not be exhibited; and that if it has already found a place on parish bulletin boards it will be taken down at once. It is an utter travesty of one of the Church's most sacred and solemn rites.

Inasmuch as the officiant has the child in his arms it may be supposed that the picture illustrates that point in the service either just before the pouring of water in the Name of the Trinity or before the signing with the cross of the new member as a soldier and servant of Christ. Probably the former is meant, as there are no signs of any water as yet on the baby. The minister's gesture, however, is of neither action. Instead he seems to be pointing mournfully to the Prayer Book lying on the font (filled, it seems, with some liquid other than water) in a vain endeavor to direct the attention of the family and sponsors away from their utter absorption in what little Johnnie or Harry may be about to do—presumably he is about to coo. The expressions on their faces are, to say the least, one of mirthful affectation.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

It is perfectly natural and proper that both the minister and people look cheerful at Holy Baptism. It is a happy occasion. The sacraments are joyous mysteries. But there is a sacred expression of hilarity which this picture utterly misses. Were it not for the presence of the font—whatever the seven-branched candlestick in the background may mean is not clear—one would take this to be a tea-party ceremony. And with all due regard for the imitations of a close-up photograph the picture does not suggest that this service is public in the presence of the congregation. But that is the Prayer Book norm.

Where in this picture, except perhaps on the face of baby himself, is there a sense of the enfolding presence and wonderful, life-giving mystery of grace of Almighty God? The romanticized, sentimental version of the Christian religion which this picture reveals will be of small help, I fear, to that little fellow when he comes manfully to fight under Christ's banner against sin, the world, and the devil. And he has a pretty tough fight ahead of him, you may be sure.

The purpose of this piece of publicity is doubtless to enlist all of us fully and entirely in that total warfare of the Spirit against the rulers of the darkness of this world. But this picture hardly suggests our initiation into so hardy and adventurous an enterprise. It is too soft, too pretty. It will not bring much missionary offering to 281. Rather 281 should offer a prize to the Sunday School class that sends in the best name for the baby.

The Veteran Plus God

by

C. H. ELLIOTT

Former Navy Chaplain and now on Staff of Church Society for College Work

ACROSS the Church's threshold yet linger the shadows of war two veterans. They wait willing for guidance and the Church waits while talking about the veteran. During the war advertisements, politics, club addresses, Churches, and military training gave to the serviceman a composite picture of himself, ennobled, full of virtues, potentialities, and heroism. The firebrands of establishing truth, justice, and liberty were fanned white-hot around him. Over his own reticence was fitted the concept of titanic endurance and aggressiveness. Upon his natural fear was powdered the idea of undaunted courage. From all appearances this ordinary youth really must be something; everybody said so and showered him with praise and promise. Aye, promise for a peaceful world, a chance to live and let live, an opportunity to pursue his vocation, and help to raise a family. No doubting it, the serviceman felt good about America, the land of the brave and the free, of liberty and justice for all!

But today the danger is gone. The land of liberty is centripetally rushing to exert its individual rights and fill its individual needs first. The veteran has returned from his Armageddon with pulse high and expectancy keen for American and normal living.

Foresworn veteran-houses aren't in sight. Veteran priorities of surplus goods vanish in red-tape and graft. The land of equality places racial prejudice in local seats of government. Collusion in war-contracts, politics in veterans' administrations, lushness of blackmarkets are shocking the veteran who had found the hope of unselfishness to be worthwhile.

And now General Convention—what of its action? With mixed emotion one sees our "heroes'" disillusioned eyes upon us of the Church. More and more they become frustrated spirits grasping ever feebly at their longed-for picture of the American type of freedom. Occasionally these disillusioned men strike out in anger as in Tennessee at election time, or in isolated anti-social acts of murder, or in mass organizations of using their priorities to get what they can.

Much of this unrest can be traced to a condition in our society, because shattering before the veterans' eyes are the virtues they were led to believe in through our own efforts and commitments to him. Maybe he can't enumerate a neat logical bundle of virtues he feels to be solid. But they are the very qualities which our Lord taught to be daily values and the majority of veterans began to hope in them, although perhaps not from a direct Christian conviction. A shell-burst perchance cauterized these realities to a man. The long tedious months of waiting driving a man near to insanity perhaps led him to cut the periphery of cares down to the fundamental goods in life. Even the youngest serviceman matured along these lines far beyond his years.

NEVER before in American history has its human ground been so ready for the seed-planting of God's word. A potential crop whose fibers have shown themselves to contain strength vigor, hope, charity, compassion, and faith are component elements of war two veterans. The imminent action calls to place the key into the lock: the lock being the veterans who unwittingly long for Christ's way, and the only workable key being our Lord Christ.

Whether we as a Church will act rests upon our recognition of the situation and our willingness to move now. We must believe our Christian avenue of Jesus's teaching to be the best road we know, otherwise we couldn't be Protestant Episcopalians. We dare not hide from our view the signs of frustrated human souls in our midst searching for the drink of cool water which we are commissioned to give.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

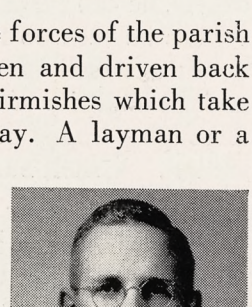
The immediate course of action is humbly and corporately to offer that draught of cool water which is Christ to the veteran, even though we fear spilling some. Time is of essence to buckle down before the veteran "faints" becoming entirely embittered against life, bowing and breaking under the force of evil which lashes out against his veiled hope in the virtues of Christian living.

It means checking our own personal lives, our own parish lives, our own national Church life. Colleges and schools must be invaded immediately as the Church Society for College Work is striving to assist in, since there we have a ready-prepared segment of these potential veterans. Individually rectors must reach out into their parish families and communities for the veteran. It can be that from these veterans we tap onto a great resurgence of life for all Christianity.



Strategy and Tactics

by

FRANCIS O. AYRES

Rector of St. John's, Waterbury, Connecticut

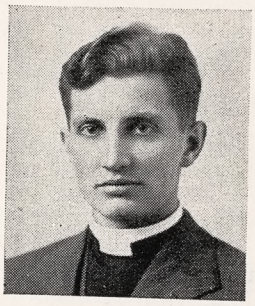
ONE of the ways in which the forces of the parish are most consistently beaten and driven back is in the thousands of little skirmishes which take place with the enemy every day. A layman or a clergyman has a chance to reveal the truth, or rather a part of the truth, about God and fails, whereupon the cause of Christ loses ground in the mind and heart of one or more individual. Sometimes this is due to lack of courage — more often it comes as a lack of preparation or training.

Take for instance the familiar encounter with someone on the fringes of the parish or outside of it altogether. "I suppose you think I'm bad because I don't get to church," a man will say to his rector. "I don't go to church but I lead a good Christian life," another will say to a layman, usually with chip on shoulder. There are countless variations on this same theme but they all boil down to the same point of view—a Christian is a man who refrains from beating his wife or stray dogs and who has good manners. In the same way, people speak to laymen or clergymen every day about Christianity, sometimes directly, sometimes indirectly, sometimes seeking the truth, sometimes trying to quiet an uneasy conscience.

The tragedy is that seldom do they receive a straight and honest answer. Clergymen as well as laymen tend to turn such questions away with a laugh, with a few embarrassed words, or, worse still, by nodding approval. As a result the questioner is confirmed in his error or left with the feeling that Christianity has no standards nor doctrine; the Christian forces receive a set-back which may be a minor loss in itself but which is in the aggregate a staggering defeat; most important of all, the souls of two human beings are endangered—that of the man who failed to answer the question as well as that of the man who asked it.

It is obvious to point out that this situation arises through lack of courage. Certainly all of us are ashamed to think of the number of times we have "begged pardon for God: in drawing rooms," to use words of Charles Peguy. Certainly we will agree that "he who does not bellow the truth when he knows the truth makes himself the accomplice of liars and forgers," but failure to speak the truth comes not only from lack of courage, not only from lack of knowing the truth, but also from lack of knowing how to speak it.

When a man says, "I suppose you think I am bad for not coming to church," the task is to convey to him that (1) the only opinion worth considering in the matter is God's and (2) Christian faith and worship are inseparable. The difficulty lies not so much in answering briefly and concisely as in keeping yourself from blocking his way to the truth. I am frank to say that I have never worked out an answer which would not permit the other person to go away feeling resentful, and to a certain extent justifiably resentful, at me. I realize that this may be just a way of excusing myself for begging pardon for God. Nevertheless I believe there is a real and vastly important problem here on which very little has been done.



What I would like to see is a little manual of answers to the stock questions, a booklet which could be used by laymen as well as clergymen. There are men in the Church who could, preferably working together, write such a manual. In so doing they would point up the situation, help to meet it, and enable the laymen and clergymen to win some of these skirmishes instead of being constantly beaten.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Dramatic Arts and Religion

By
WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD, JR.

AS I entered the theater union seamen were picketing the Times office building across the street. They were protesting an article that the newspaper had printed by Hanson Baldwin in which he had said, among other things, that "we produced ships in fantastic numbers and men to man them, but not seamen and not efficient ships" and "when unionism took to blue water, the death knell of an efficient maritime carrying trade was sounded."

Inside the theater, I sat enthralled by a technicolor motion picture of the sea, dealing with the war-time life and trials of merchant seamen. The film, The Raider, was produced in England and acted, not by professionals, but by members of the allied merchant marines, navy and air forces. As written and directed by Pat Jackson, the picture is almost documentary in its approach to shipboard life and, better than any other sea film I can recall, truly portrays the ambiguous nature of the sea—its placid, almost maternal qualities and its awesome, destructive power. The frequent shots of mountainous waves, threatening to engulf and swallow twenty-four men adrift in a lifeboat, are as hypnotic and horrifying bits of camera work as I hope to see in a long, long time.

The story, cut down to bare essentials, deals with the survivors of H.M.S. Jason who, following the blasting of their craft by German torpedoes, live in a small lifeboat for eighteen days amidst the storms of the war-time western approaches to England. To their rescue steams the freighter, Leander, cut off from its convoy and loaded with planes, locomotives and tanks. The villain of the piece, the German U-boat 157, has not been content with sinking the Jason, however, but trails the lifeboat day after day hoping to be led to further prizes. At the end, of course, the Jason's survivors are saved by the Leander after the freighter's lone gun has sent the U-boat to the bottom with all hands lost.

The power of the picture lies not in an original story, however, but in its honesty. The non-professional actors, time and again, present characters that know what it is to fear death, to know and love comrades, to be required to fire a deadly torpedo efficiently and without concern for the consequences. The U-boat crew in this film are not the Hollywood Nazis. Instead they are business-like workers who, without quite understanding why, are caught up in a vicious mode of life which says that they must sink the Leander . . . period. Presented thus, their action is, somehow, more horrible than the usual black-and-white heroics of the typical war film.

A preface to the film states that the actors are, in reality, replaying roles that most of them enacted for keeps during the war. As such, The Raider serves as a fitting tribute to the merchant seamen of the world.

When I came out of the theater 4,000 members of the maritime unions were still marching earnestly around the Times building carrying signs which said: "Does Hanson Baldwin know that 6,006 seamen drowned on the Murmansk run or shuttling in the South Pacific?" The Raider effectively proves their point.

SANCTUARY

The Common Chord of Worship

★ Three Gospel words must keep striking together like a common chord in the movement of a true Christian congregation. They are—Come: Abide: Go. We are to come out of the world into the New Life and Fellowship that is membership in the Body of Christ. We are to abide in Him as branches abide in a vine—nor is that a repose but rather a constancy of being pruned, trained, cultured. We are to go out into all the world as ambassadors go out—our real lives already hid with Christ in God, our citizenship already in heaven—into all the courts of this alien world, to apprehend men and share with them the secrets of our citizenship, for the further employment by them of those same secrets in the places where they live and work. For the sake of clarity, it is right sometimes to distinguish between these aspects of activity; but a true congregation can never segregate them, one from another, in its life. Let a congregation stop short at the first, glorying only that it has been taken out of the world, and it will soon come under the condemnation of the man who, being given a talent, buried it in the earth. Let a congregation luxuriate only in the second activity, in the elaboration of its services and the rigour of its discipline, and it will soon come under the condemnation of those who store up the manna lest no manna should fall the next day: the very materials of its nourishment will go bad on them. Or let a congregation be for ever running missions, concentrating only on the outsider, counting as indifferent both the state of their own redemption and the methods of its constant nourishment, and it, in its turn, will find soon enough that it has hewn out broken cisterns that hold no water.

—George MacLeod, We Shall Re-Build. The Iona Community.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

World Council Raises Millions Of Dollars For Relief

The Gifts Largely Made Up of Goods Sent Individuals and Churches for Distribution

Edited by W. B. Spofford

New York (RNS): — Protestant churches in America shipped more than 10,600,000 pounds of relief goods to Europe and Asia during the one-year period ending in September, it was announced here by Vinton E. Ziegler, executive secretary for the material aid program of Church World Service. Estimating the value of the shipments at $4,768,108, Mr. Ziegler said that 29 countries in Europe and Asia received supplies. Since February, shipments have averaged more than one-a-day, and totaled almost 1,200,000 pounds a month compared to the first month's 40,400 pounds.

A preponderance of the goods were gifts-in-kind from individuals and churches sent through Church World Service centers in nine cities. Shipments included dried milk, flour, cereals, hospital dressings, medicines, clothing, blankets, shoes, soap, needles and thread, seed grain, and some 15,000,000 vitamin tablets for the Orient. About 1,500 CARE (Cooperative for American Remittances to Europe) food packages were distributed in Germany and Austria.

Although these supplies were intended principally for emergency use, Mr. Ziegler stressed that many items were of a more permanent nature. Among the latter he listed kits of household linens for pastors whose homes were looted during the war; 1,000 cases of German language Bibles; hospital and surgical equipment; children's toys; bicycles for European pastors without means of transportation; periodicals and theological textbooks for seminaries, schools and church leaders; sewing machines for overseas relief clothing centers, and farming tools and kitchen utensils.

Countries which have received more than 1,000,000 pounds of aid in the last year are Germany, Greece, Holland, Italy, and Poland. Largest shipments to Asia went to China, India, Korea, and the Philippines.

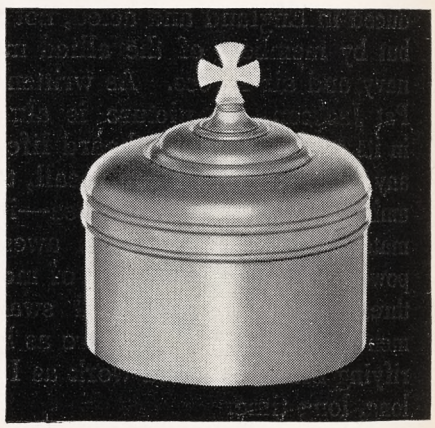
New Church

Myersburg, Pa.: — Consecrated work by the Rev. Henry Russell, rector of Christ Church, Towanda, plus money from St. Mark's Mauch Chunk, where the Rev. G. Clayton Melling is rector, has made possible the opening of a new mission here. The building is an abandoned Methodist Church which has been renovated. It is said to be the first new work to be opened in the diocese of Bethlehem during the past twenty years.

Addison Is Better

New York:—Writing from Guam, the Rev. James T. Addison, vice-president of the National Council, who recently suffered a heart attack while on the way to the Orient to study the mission fields, has announced to the National Council that he is making a good recovery. He hopes to return to the United States by hospital plane, arriving in New York around December 1st.

Laymen Honored



Fargo, N. D.:—The Hon. Daniel B. Holt and Mr. Percy L. E. Godwin were honored at a dinner held here on October 24 for their contributions of the life of the Church in North Dakota. When Gethsemane was established as the cathedral Judge Holt was a member of the vestry and has since served on the chapter. He has also served for forty years as the chancellor of the district. Judge and Mrs. Holt are now making their home in Delaware. Mr. Godwin, a member of the cathedral chapter since 1916 and treasurer of the district since 1919, was also honored on the completion of his long service. The new chancellor is the Hon. Charles J. Vogel, district federal judge, and Mr. G. A. Willming succeeds Mr. Goodwin as treasurer.

School on Education

Philadelphia:—A school on Christian education is being held on six successive Tuesday evenings at Church House here under the auspices of the diocesan department of education. Lecturers are the Rev. J. Clemens Kolb; the Rev. William H. Dunphy; the Rev. Louis A. Haselmayer; the Rev. E. Frank Salmon; Dr. Selinda McCaulley, school psychologist, and the Rev. E. Felix Kloman.

GET-TOGETHER

A large and progressive Southern parish seeks an assistant to the rector. All aspects of the work, including preaching, will be shared but the rector expects him to concentrate on young people's work and calling. The salary is $3600 plus $25 a month car allowance. He will have to pay his own rent. A young man is desired—two or three years out of seminary. . . . A parish in the Pacific Northwest is looking for a rector. Salary about $2,500 and very fine rectory. Churchmanship is moderate. Any clergymen interested in either of these positions write Get-Together, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y., with self addressed envelope enclosed. This is a service given without charge. Parishes seeking rectors or clergy seeking positions are invited to use the service. But to save our time we ask that no personal calls be made at the office. Neither should extensive correspondence be expected. All we can agree to do is to do the best we can to get-together men seeking positions and parishes seeking rectors or assistants. Incidentally we have been successful in fifteen instances since the service started a few months ago.

Sterling Silver
WAFER BOX

Beautifully proportioned, simple and graceful. This sterling box is gold plated inside, is 4" in diameter. $33

ECCLESIASTICAL STUDIO

BLACK, STARR & GORHAM

FIFTH AVE. at 48th ST., NEW YORK 19, N.Y.
WHITE PLAINS EAST ORANGE

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Father and Sons

Liberty, Mo. (RNS):—The names of Frank and Jesse James have a peculiar niche in the records of America but it took the centennial celebration for a rural Baptist church to recall that their father was one of the foremost pioneer pastors of his day in this part of Missouri. A century ago, the Rev. Robert James, father of the outlaw brothers of the post-Civil War era, believed there was need for a church northwest of this Clay County town. He was the moving spirit behind the erection of the Providence Baptist church. Continuous services have been held by the congregation since that time.

Preaching the centennial service, Homer S. Huff, Kansas City, Kan., pastor, said: "The sainted father of Frank and Jesse had the conviction that a church was needed on this spot 100 years ago. His life and teachings through the years have been an inspiration to the long line of consecrated men who followed him. I wonder what he would say about the exploiters if he were alive today."

Georgia Lynching

New York (RNS):—The Federal Council of Churches is concerned over the fact that no arrests have been made in the three-month-old "mob murder" of four Georgia Negroes. A resolution adopted here by the Council's executive committee stressed that perpetrators of the crime have not been brought to justice despite the fact that Georgia's governor promised unrelenting action against the criminals.

The committee commended several Church groups in Georgia for demanding legal action in the case, specifically mentioning the Georgia Council of Church Women, the Atlanta Methodist Ministers Association, the First Methodist Church in Monroe, Ga., the Episcopal ministers in Atlanta, and the Georgia Synod of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. (Southern).

"We join," said the resolution, "with the Presbyterian Synod of Georgia in recognizing with penitence our own share of responsibility for the conditions of society which have made such acts possible in the past, and dedicate ourselves to combat the spirit of hatred out of which such deeds arise. We call upon our churches to rally to the support of the people of Georgia who through their churches are insisting upon action by the chief executive of the state."

Michigan Chaplain

Ann Arbor, Mich.:—The Rev. John H. Burt, former navy chaplain, is the first chaplain on the newly organized Episcopal Student Foundation at the University of Michigan, it was announced last week by Bishop Whittemore of Western Michigan, the president. Mr. Burt is a graduate of Amherst and of the Virginia Seminary, and was canon at Christ Church Cathedral, St. Louis, before going into the service. He has already taken up his new work at the university.

The Foundation marks a new step in the work of the Church on the university campus. It represents bishops, clergy and laymen from all parts of Michigan and plans are now being worked out to erect a student center building as soon as materials are available. Meanwhile Mr. Burt and his associate, Miss Maxine Westphal, who is counsellor for women students, will have their headquarters in St. Andrew's parish house.

"World Brotherhood"
address by
Archbishop of Canterbury
Now available on four records in attractive album.
Price: $8.00 (plus postage)
Recorded through courtesy Brotherhood of St. Andrew
Mail orders to:
C.E.S. ASSOCIATES
1700 Walnut St.
Phila. 3, Pa.

J. WIPPELL & Co LTD
Established 18th Century
Clerical Tailors & Robe Makers

SPECIAL OFFER: CLERGY CASSOCKS

Wippell Cassocks, individually cut and tailored, incorporate all the little refinements of detail which make for so much extra comfort and convenience in wear

Single or Double Breasted, of Fine All Wool Serge $39.50
Quotation does not include Cincture, Belt or Girdle

Clergy Surplice, Slightly Gathered
Pure Irish Linen $13.50

Clerical Cloaks to cover cassock, Waterproof Melton $39.00

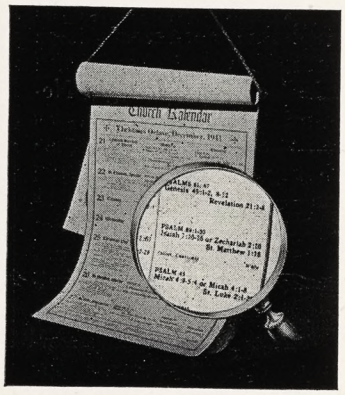
Patterns sent on application

55 & 56, High Street, EXETER, England
(also 11, Tufton Street, Westminster, S.W.1, London, Eng.)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

THE CHRISTIAN YEAR
and
CHURCH KALENDAR
1947

A Kalendar which contains 112 pages of vital information for all Church workers.



With the necessary revisions it has proven its value for 71 years.

This Kalendar as you will see in the illustration is arranged for hanging on the wall and is beautifully and tastefully printed.

It is worth noting that you have a Kalendar plus . . . the dates of the Christian Year and the days and festivals of the Church Year . . . plus the many uses listed below.

You will find . . . .

Church Calendar
Church Colors
Morning and Evening Lectionary
Saint's Days
Altar Linen
Ember Days
Rules for Sacristans
Suggested Hymns
Church Holidays
Altar Society Notes
Vestments, their color, care and use
Church Dictionary
Duties of Wardens and Vestrymen
Suggestions for Servers
The Rector, his election and call

Why not discover the value of this Kalendar this year, if you have not already used it, and have at your fingertips the Churchly information you need.

An excellent Christmas gift for a friend.

Published November 1st.

Price $1.25 ($1.35 postpaid)

Order from the Publisher or your Bookseller

H. M. JACOBS COMPANY

1907 Walnut Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Labor Conferences

Laconia, N. H.:—The Rev. Bradford Young, rector of Grace Church, Manchester, proposed joint Church-labor-management conferences as a means of reducing industrial strife. Chairman of a seminar at the meeting of the state council of churches, which passed a resolution he introduced, Mr. Young said it was the consensus of the group that such meetings should be held during periods of minor industrial conflicts in order to develop a spirit of conciliation which would lessen the danger of major disputes.

Institute Dean

Phoenix, Ariz.: — James W. F. Carman was instituted as dean of Trinity Cathedral here on Oct. 13th by Bishop Kinsolving. At an earlier service the bishop instituted the Rev. M. T. Kelsey as assistant to the dean.

Arizona Conference

Phoenix, Ariz.:—The clergy of Arizona met October 23 to consider the decisions, ideals and aspirations of General Convention.

Consecrate Church

Auburndale, Mass.: — Bishop H. K. Sherrill consecrated the completed and debt-free Church of the Messiah here on November 3rd. The service was the opening event of a week marking the 75th birthday of the parish. The present rector is the Rev. Richard P. McClintock.

College for Japan

New York:—Proposed establishment of the first co-educational, interdenominational university in Japan offers the Christian Church one of its greatest educational opportunities, Thoburn T. Brumbaugh, representing the Foreign Missions Conference and the Federal Council of Churches, declared here at a press conference a few hours prior to his departure by plane for Tokyo where he will assume direction of the project. According to Mr. Brumbaugh, the proposed educational institution will be operated on an international, interracial, and intercultural basis with various faculties of learning and with buildings, equipment, and staff comparable to the large secular institutions in many Japanese cities.

Brumbaugh, a missionary in Japan for 17 years and former head of the Detroit Council of Churches, was recently named director of the committee to establish a Christian University in Japan under the sponsorship of the foreign missions body and the Federal Council.

Luman J. Shafer, chairman of the Japan committee of the Foreign Missions Conference, who is now in China, will join Brumbaugh in Tokyo to assist in laying plans for the foundation of the university.

Patton Bell

Beverly Farms, Mass.: — Impressive and deeply moving was the dedication recently of the 1500 pound bell given to St. John's Church here in memory of the late Gen. George S. Patton Jr., former vestryman, by his widow. The Pattons were also married in St. John's Church. Ceremonies were under the direction of the Rev. Messrs. Abbott Hastings, rector, and Cornelius A. Wood Jr., a nephew of Mrs. Patton.

Medical Examinations

Atlanta, Ga.:—Clergy of the diocese of Atlanta passed a resolution at a recent meeting urging a state law which would require medical examinations as a prerequisite for marriage. This matter has been before the General Assembly of the state on three occasions but so far has failed to become law. Bishop John M. Walker said the ministers took their stand in order to bring the matter before the public and indicated that they might later broach the matter to legislators with the hope of having a bill introduced.

Consultation Service

New York:—Youth Consultation Service of the diocese of New York held a luncheon meeting on October 28th at the Hotel Concourse Plaza, Bronx, N. Y., to celebrate the close of the first year of service given in its new center in uptown New York. The subject of the meeting was "Adolescents are People." The principal speaker was Miss Dorothy Hutchinson, associate professor of social case work at the New York School of Social Work. A discussion followed her talk in which representatives of the community, including the church, schools, social agencies and parents took part.

Youth Consultation Service has a long record of effective service and reflects credit upon the Church it represents. As Bishop Gilbert has said, "We need to remind ourselves that this organization is our agent and representative in a field of service that is the responsibility of all of us."

• A new set of color slides for your Christmas program—just released. Made by a world famous producer in beautiful natural colors, this "packaged" program entitled "Christmas Blessings", solves your problem for successful Christmas services this year in Church and School.

Write your dealer for a FREE sample copy of the program guide for "Christmas Blessings."

Complete, inspirational—a grand total of 40 slides in natural color, 2x2 inches in size, produced especially for worship program use. "Christmas Blessings" comes with complete program guide—seventy recitations covering Old Testament prophecies, the Birth of Jesus, the Visit of the Wise Men, the Meaning of Christmas Today. Carefully prepared, strictly Biblical in content, non-denominational in character—a Christmas worship service that will not be forgotten.

Christmas Service Bulletin—a beautiful four-color reproduction of a scene from "Christmas Blessings" printed on a good quality white paper with a special finish on picture side and soft finish for mimeograph on inside. Write your dealer for your supply. Also ask for Christmas cards, beautiful four-color scenes from the Christmas Story.

CHURCH-CRAFT
FORMERLY CATHEDRAL PICTURES
Pictures
BIBLE STORIES PHOTOGRAPHED IN COLOR

See Your Dealer—Order EARLY!

Expected demand for "Christmas Blessings" urges prompt action. When writing for sample copy of program guide, also ask for complete information on new series of hymn-slides for Christmas, all in natural colors and 2x2 inches in size. Project your favorite Christmas hymn in color.

Color circular giving full list of CHURCH-CRAFT Bible Story Slide Sets FREE from your dealer on request

CHURCH-CRAFT PICTURES, St. Louis 3, Mo.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Youth Service

Detroit:—There were 853 young people representing 33 parishes of this metropolitan area present at the annual youth service held at St. Paul's Cathedral. Bishop Richard Emrich in his sermon asked for ten young men to do volunteer work in the missions during next July and August and also asked the young people to combine their resources in order to build a summer chapel in one of the vacation areas.

Consecrate Church

Detroit:—St. Joseph's here was consecrated on October 27th by Bishop Creighton, marking the completion of the payment of a large mortgage. He was assisted in the service by the present rector, the Rev. William C. Hamm, and by the Rev. William R. Kinder, for twenty years rector of the parish, now of Youngstown, Ohio.

New Mission Workers

New York:—Three new missionaries have been assigned to important posts recently by the overseas department of the National Council. Construction engineer John Stokes of Walnut Creek, Calif., will go to Shanghai soon to assist J. Van Wie Bergamini, the Church's Far Eastern architect there. The Rev. Peter H. Paulson will go to the Panama Canal Zone after a successful ministry in Los Angeles, and Sister Virginia Cecilia of the Community of the Transfiguration who has been in Honolulu will go to Anking, China, where she will carry on the work of that religious order.

Union Service

Waterville, Me.:—An ecumenical service in which clergymen of ten Protestant denominations participated—the largest number in the history of the state—marked the annual convention here of the Maine Council of Churches. The Rev. Frederick D. Hayes, president of the Council, presided at the two day sessions, and denominational executives who participated represented the Congregationalists, Baptists, Methodists, Advent Christians, Presbyterians, Quakers, Universalists, Unitarians, the Salvation Army and Swedenborgians.

Joint Worship

Toronto (RNS): — Following discussions by the pastors of the Anglican Church of the Transfiguration and the Glebe Road United church a joint service will be held in the near future at the Transfiguration. The service will follow the ritual of both churches and it is hoped will be the first of many services looking to a more complete understanding of each other's religious problems.

St. James Lessons

A nine course series of instruction for Episcopal Church Schools including illustrated work books (60c each) and teacher's manuals (I II III 40c each, IV through IX 60c each) 150-250 pages.

No Samples Payment with orders

St. James Lessons, Inc.
865 Madison Ave. New York 21, N.Y.

For a time of world upheaval—

THE BIBLE IS HUMAN

By Louis Wallis

From Professor James Moffatt, Union Theological Seminary: "I am sure, even in these distracting days, that it will find the audience it deserves, and appeal to readers who still have an open mind." $2.50

Columbia University Press
New York 27, N. Y.

THE CHURCH PENSION FUND

and its subsidiaries

administered for the benefit of the Church

THE CHURCH HYMNAL CORPORATION

Publishers of The Hymnal; Book of Common Prayer; A Prayer Book for Soldiers and Sailors; Book of Offices for Certain Occasions; Stowe's Clerical Directory.

THE CHURCH LIFE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost insurance and annuity contracts available to the clergy, lay officials and active lay workers of the Church, either voluntary or paid, and their immediate families

THE CHURCH PROPERTIES FIRE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost fire and windstorm insurance on property owned by or closely affiliated with the Church, and on the residences and personal property of the clergy.

Further information available by addressing any of the above at

20 Exchange Place New York

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Gambling Curb

London (wireless to RNS):—Archbishop Geoffrey F. Fisher of Canterbury was named here by the British Council of Churches to lead a deputation which will present to the home secretary the need for increased government curbs on gambling which pointed out that the removal of many war-time restrictions had been marked by a great increase in gambling during the last six months.

Good Will Meetings

Benton Harbor, Mich. (RNS):—Discussion conferences to promote good will and understanding among labor, management, farmers, teachers, and minority groups will be conducted here and in St. Joseph during the winter. First meeting will be held at the St. Joseph Methodist church November 24. Good will conferences have been held in Berrien County in past years under the sponsorship of the Berrien County Council of Churches. This year's sessions, however, have the backing of numerous other groups, including the CIO Council of Berrien County, the PTA, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the YMCA, ministerial associations, and the adult education department of the public school system.

World Order

Philadelphia: — Suffragan Bishop Remington of Pennsylvania has appointed a committee on Christian world order to promote parish discussion groups. The committee, headed by the Rev. Lars R. Barche-Wiig, is providing a series of regional meetings to which parish leaders may be sent for instruction and inspiration to be carried back to their parishes.

Period of Penance

London (wireless to RNS): — A resolution urging that a period of penance be set aside in the Church of England "for the inhumanity of man against man" was endorsed here by the Lower House of the Convocation of Canterbury. The resolution called upon the Archbishop of Canterbury to consult with the Archbishop of York on the plan.

The House approved a motion to appoint a committee of both Houses of the Convocation to investigate "the widespread moral and social evil consequent upon irregular domestic arrangements between men and women, unmarried and living together" from the point of view of English law and Church doctrine and discipline.

The Rev. F. F. Guy Warman, of Birmingham, charged that a "tacitly permitted" polygamy exists in Britain because the government food offices are at present providing means of livelihood for more than one wife.

"It has been reported from urban and rural parishes," he said, "that when men get tired of their wives they live with another woman, who changes her name at the food office without producing a marriage certificate. From that moment there are two Mrs. Robinsons, and if there are families on both sides, allowances are obtainable for both."

Warman asserted that "such things are now winked at to such an extent that there are Orders in Council admitting the legitimacy of these women to be regarded as the wives to all intents and purposes of these men."

Parish Administration

Philadelphia:—A new feature of the graduate department of the Philadelphia Divinity School is a course on parish administration, taught by Dean Gifford. Various church problems are discussed by the clergy who are enrolled and actual situations are taken as a basis. Another feature of school life is a book hour which is held once a month, in charge of the Rev. John M. Groton, when new books are reviewed and discussed.

CHANCEL ALTERATIONS

Pews - Church Woodwork

Ossit Church Furniture Co.

Janesville, Wisconsin

SINCE 1867

GORHAM

ECCLESIASTICAL WARES

Beauty • Quality • Correctness

ALTAR APPOINTMENTS

ILLUSTRATIVE of the Gorham selection of Ecclesiastical Appointments, is the above Vase No. V4444 made of brass with thread decoration. Price $22.50 each (subject to change without notice). Highest quality, lasting beauty and liturgical correctness characterize all Gorham wares.

Converting rapidly from War goods, we are already currently producing:

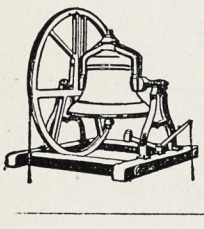
ALMS BASONS HONOR ROLLS, BRONZE
ALTAR CROSSES CANDLESTICKS, BRASS
CHALICES MEMORIAL TABLETS, BRONZE
ALTAR DESKS PATENS VASES CIBORIA
COMMUNION SETS BAPTISMAL BOWLS

Everything for the Church in Bronze

Other items soon will be available. Center your choice upon GORHAM, for the traditional dignity of design and mastercraftsmanship in execution which have distinguished our wares for 115 years.

Gorham

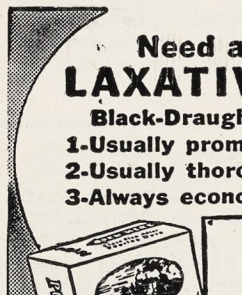
70 Adelaide Ave
Providence, 7, R. I.



America's Leading Silversmiths since 1831

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Write us for
Organ Information
AUSTIN ORGANS, Inc.
Hartford, Conn.



Memorial Windows
In accordance with the best traditions of the craft. Notable installations in forty states and five foreign countries.
Illustrated material on request
The D'Ascenzo Studios
founded 1896
1604 Summer Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

ALTAR BREADS ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED
SAINT MARY'S CONVENT
KENOSHA • WISCONSIN

MENEELY BELL CO.
22 RIVER ST., TROY, N. Y.
BELLS

R. GEISSLER, INC.
71-79 W. 45th St., New York 19, N. Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE·BRASS·SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS
EST 1837

ERNEST W. LAKEMAN
Designer and Worker in
STAINED GLASS
2 CRESCENT PLACE
YONKERS, NEW YORK

Need a LAXATIVE?
Black-Draught is,
1-Usually prompt
2-Usually thorough
3-Always economical

25 to 40 doses only 25¢
Get BLACK-DRAUGHT
CAUTION: USE ONLY AS DIRECTED

Church to be Restored

London (wireless to RNS): — St. Clement Danes Church in the Strand, made famous in the nursery rhyme, "Oranges and lemons, the bells of St. Clement's," is to be restored and used as a Royal Air Force chapel. St. Clement's, one of the Christopher Wren churches, was burnt to a shell in two successive air attacks during the war. Only its walls are standing now.

Visit Seminary

Philadelphia:—The Rev. J. A. Winterstein, rector of Holy Trinity, West Chester, Pa., thought it would be a good idea for his vestrymen to learn something about how men are prepared for the ministry. So he led a delegation of seven to the Philadelphia Divinity School on October 29 where they were entertained at dinner, inspected the buildings, met with Dean Gifford and the faculty to discuss training ministers and wound up by listening to addresses by two of the students.

Changes Name

New York:—The National Association of Directors of Christian Education has changed its name to Episcopal Educational Association and has elected Mrs. Harold C. Kelleran, consultant on education in the diocese of Washington, as president. The purpose of the organization is to provide fellowship for the personal, spiritual and professional development of a competent educational leadership in the Church.

POSITION OFFERED

Wanted: Young, liberal Associate Rector to specialize in calling and young people's work. $3200 per year. Rev. David H. Weeks, Lockport and 10th Streets, Niagara Falls, N. Y.

A REAL OPPORTUNITY

The rector of a large and aggressive middle-western parish desires to engage a well qualified associate. Parish offers comfortable home, car allowance and good salary. Is a Prayer Book Parish and seeks one who will fit into that picture. Box A, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATOR

Trained Religious Educator desires to make a change. Box G, THE WILNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

POSITION WANTED

Trained young Churchwoman desires position as assistant to rector. Box B, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

STAMMER?
This new 128-page book, "Stammering, Its Cause and Correction," describes the Bogue Unit Method for scientific correction of stammering and stuttering — successful for 45 years. Free — no obligation.
Benjamin N. Bogue, Dept. 5802, Circle Tower, Indianapolis 4, Ind.
GET THIS FREE BOOK!

Everything for the Episcopal Church
but vestments
A broad statement but we'd like to prove it.
Ammidon and Company
Horace L. Varian
Horace L. Varian, Jr.
31 South Frederick Street
Baltimore 2, Maryland

PURE IRISH LINENS NOW IN STOCK
for all Church needs, supplies constantly arriving, good qualities, also fine cottons. Samples free.
Mary Fawcett Company
Plainfield, N. J. Box 146

CATHEDRAL STUDIOS
Washington & London, England. Linens and materials by the yard, surplices, albs, Altar Linens, stoles, burses & veils. Materials by the yard. See my NEW BOOK "CHURCH EMBROIDERY" & CHURCH VESTMENTS a complete instruction. 128 pages, 95 illus. Price $5.67. And my HANDBOOK for ALTAR GUILDS, price 50c. Miss L. V. Mackrille, 11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington 15, D.C. 30 minutes from U. S. Treasury. Tel Wisconsin 2752.

SURPLICES — STOLES
VESTMENTS
CHURCH HANGINGS
ALTAR LINENS
CASSOCKS
CLERICAL SUITS — CLOAKS
RABATS—RABAT VESTS—COLLARS—SHIRTS
Choir Vestments in All Styles
Inquiries Invited
C. M. ALMY & SON, INC.
562 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.

The Payne-Spiers Studios Inc.
Studios at Paterson, New Jersey
Carved Wood
Chancel Renovations Church Furnishings
Murals Memorials Tablets
Stained Glass
·· Inquiries Solicited ··

VESTMENTS for CLERGY and CHOIR
Altar Linens . . . Embroideries . . .
Tailoring . . . Episcopal Flags. Send for Catalog
J. M. HALL, INC.
14 W. 40th St., New York - Tel. CH 4-3306
Office & Salesroom
"Orders taken for serge cassocks for J. Wippell & Co., Ltd."

Church Bulletins
Scriptural – Artistically Designed
Large Assortment—Self Selection
Lithographed—Special Days—General use
Be Sure to Get Our Free Catalog and amples
Ecclesiastical Art Press Dept. W
Louisville, 12, Ky.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

REV. KENNETH HUGHES
Cambridge, Massachusetts

I would like to commend you for your editorial, "Hollywood Triumphant" relative to the Every-Member-Canvass film, GO FORTH. It might interest you to know that Massachusetts has followed the commendable example of Newark in deleting from the film the ostensibly minor but tragically important strip depicting the Negro in the traditional, stereotyped role in which Hollywood maliciously and designedly casts him. This is a moral issue in which the Church should lead. It is high time that the Church stop taking its cue from the secular world. In this regard some of the promotional material issuing from 281 is no less culpable. On more than one occasion the Every-Member canvassers of this parish of Negro communicants has refused to distribute the posters from the National Council affirming that they believe in the Holy Catholic Church, not the Holy Caucasian Church which the posters would lead them to believe were the case. The measure of protest against this inquiry is the measure of our catholicity.

* * *

ADELAIDE CASE
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

In the issue of October 20th you quite rightly called the attention of your readers to the altogether objectionable feature of the new National Council film in which Negroes appear as white men's servants and in no other role. But your own editorial comment is also objectionable in that it is written as if the Church were a white Church interested in Negro outsiders. You speak of "our Negro friends" as if the readers of THE WITNESS were all white people. Perhaps the "our" was an editorial "our." I hope so. But this practice of talking about how "we" in the Church should treat the Negro and the Indian and the Nisei ought to be stopped. The Church is made up of all of us and the question is how can we get along with others, and, what is more important, how can we unite to save the world!

ANSWER: We thoroughly agree and if the editorial in question gave others the impression that Dr. Chase received we take this means of correcting it. The Church is made up of all of us and we have tried consistently, in news and articles, to stress this fact.

* * *

REV. JOHN D. F. PETTUS
Rector of All Saints, Santa Barbara, Calif.

Frederick Grant makes the astonishing statement (WITNESS, Oct. 17) that "for a generation 'missions' has carried all before it." It is entirely possible that other things have been neglected but our giving for missions hardly justifies such a gross exaggeration. As Prof. Latourette says, "Missions are a minority interest."

* * *

DEAN CECIL SWANSON
Christ Church Cathedral, Vancouver, B.C.

A friend of mine from Texas sends me THE WITNESS which I have enjoyed reading, and regarded as a good Church paper of dignity and worth. But will you tell me just what gremlin got into you to persuade you to publish that picture of the Archbishop of Canterbury pulling his robes on? One would expect such a snap in unsympathetic papers who wished to ridicule the Archbishop and our common Church, but for you to print it, after having honored him as a guest and as the senior prelate of the whole Anglican Communion is simply inexplicable!

ANSWER: As previously stated in this department, the picture was taken at the request of the Archbishop who was much pleased with it.

* * *

VICTOR D. CRONK
Layman of LaGrange, Illinois

May I remind Dr. Lewis T. Gregory (WITNESS, Oct. 24) that all good Catholics, whatever prefix they use, are Evangelicals?

* * *

REV. RICHARD MORGAN
Rector at Bonham, Texas

Would it be unkind to state that we are glad to read your statement that you intend "to do it better"? Anyhow the one piece of Backfire we send in is the objection to the shine of the paper as we read by electric light. Let the printed matter have all the brilliance possible but please give a dull finish to the paper on which the shining rests. This no doubt is a general comment of the readers of all papers.

ANSWER: Anyone publishing anything these days is lucky to get any paper at all—shiney or dull. We have used a glossy paper in order to bring up the cuts better but the combination of scarcity and price may force us to use newsprint before we are through.

* * *

WILLIAM E. LEIDT
The Editor of Forth

THE WITNESS in its editorial, Hollywood Triumphant, makes a suggestion which the officers of the department of promotion heartily endorse and commend to any diocese which is sensitive to the Negro sequence in "GO FORTH." The procedure followed by Newark in cutting the sequence involving the Negro cook has been done successfully in Washington and elsewhere. This sequence, of course, is not essential to the main plot. It was included to give greater naturalness to the story. And incidentally, a Negro was cast as the cook simply because she was the best actress available for the part; the casting was on a basis of ability, not color.

The department of promotion itself would have cut this sequence had the problem been brought to its attention before the film was distributed throughout the length and breadth of the Church. The canvass time schedule made impossible recalling the film for cutting.

Virginia Episcopal School
Lynchburg, Virginia
Prepares boys for colleges and university. Splendid environment and excellent corps of teachers. High standard in scholarship and athletics. Healthy and beautiful location in the mountains of Virginia.
For catalogue apply to
George L. Barton, Jr., Ph.D. Headmaster,
Box 408

SCHOOLS

The Hospital of Saint Barnabas and the University of Newark offer a full course in NURSING to qualified High School graduates. Scholarships available. Classes enter in February and September
Apply to
Director of Nursing
HOSPITAL OF SAINT BARNABAS
685 High Street Newark, N. J

DE VEAUX SCHOOL
FOUNDED 1852
A Church school for boys. Thorough preparation for college. Military system of student government, developing sense of responsibility. Charges for grades seven and eight $1000; grades nine through twelve $1050. For catalog, address THE HEADMASTER, DeVeaux School, Niagara Falls, New York.

HOLDERNESS
In the White Mountains. College Preparatory and General Courses. Music and Crafts. For boys 12-19. All sports including riding. 200 acres of woods. New fireproof building. Individual attention. Home atmosphere.
Rev. Edric A. Weld, Rector
Box W. Plymouth, N. H.

MARGARET HALL
Under Sisters of St. Helena
(Episcopal)
Small country boarding and day school for girls, from primary through high school. Accredited college preparatory. Modern building recently thoroughly renovated includes gymnasium and swimming pool. Campus of six acres with ample playground space, hockey field and tennis court. Riding. Board and Tuition $800. For catalog, address: Sister Rachel, Prin. O.S.H., Box A. Versailles, Kentucky.

FORK UNION
MILITARY ACADEMY
An Honor Christian School with the highest academic rating. Upper School prepares for university or business. ROTC. Every modern equipment. Junior School from six years. Housemother. Separate building. Catalogue Dr. J. J. Wicker, Fork Union, Virginia.

CARLETON COLLEGE
Laurence M. Gould, D.Sc., President
Carleton is a co-educational liberal arts college of limited enrollment and is recognized as the Church College of Minnesota.
Address: Assistant to the President
CARLETON COLLEGE
Northfield Minnesota

KEMPER HALL
KENOSHA, WISCONSIN
Boarding and day school for girls offering thorough college preparation and training for purposeful living. Study of the Fine Arts encouraged. Complete sports program. Junior School department. Beautiful lake shore campus. Under direction of the Sisters of St Mary. For catalogue address: Box WT

LENOX SCHOOL
A Church School in the Berkshire Hills for boys 12-18 emphasizing Christian ideals and character through simplicity of plant and equipment, moderate tuition, the cooperative self-help system, and informal, personal relationships among boys and faculty.
Rev. Robert L. Curry, Headmaster
Lenox Massachusetts

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

THE ETERNAL WORD OF GOD IN THE ENGLISH OF TODAY!

The Word of God is, of course, unchanging; but the form and language in which it was written has changed according to the customs and needs of time and place.

From stone tablets to papyrus scrolls, from hand-written volumes to compact printed books, its language has been Hebrew, Greek, Aramaic, Latin and now practically all the tongues of the world.

Even its English translation has to be revised from time to time as English itself keeps changing with the generations.

The REVISED STANDARD VERSION OF THE NEW TESTAMENT is the latest, authorized English revision of the New Testament prepared by noted Biblical scholars of our day. Archaic words and phrases and ancient styles of printing have yielded to the best English of our time and to the printing styles of present-day books.

Blue Cloth Binding, price protected, $2.00

Also available, a descriptive booklet:
"An Introduction to the Revised Standard Version of the New Testament" — paper cover . . . 25c

Actual Size 5x7½

JOHN 8

Jesus the Light of the World

8 12 Again Jesus spoke to them, saying, "I am the light of the world; he who follows me will not walk in darkness, but will have the light of life." 13 The Pharisees then said to him, "You are bearing witness to yourself; your testimony is not true." 14 Jesus answered, "Even if I do bear witness to myself, my testimony is true, for I know
I have come and whither I am going, but you do going. 15 You judge

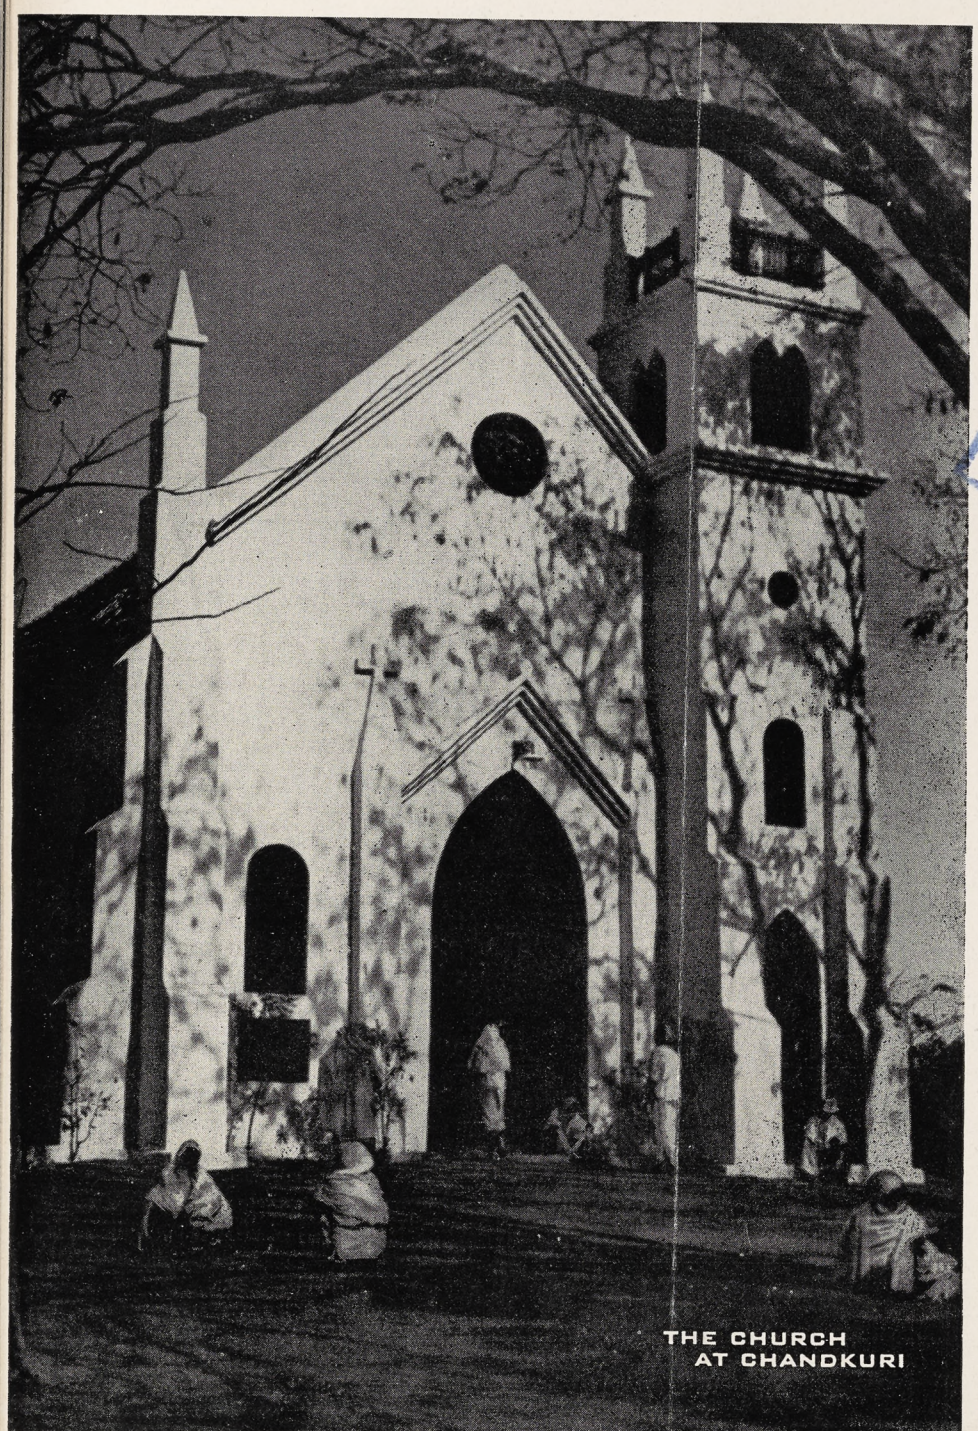
- Large type—running from margin to margin
- Logical paragraphing and punctuation
- Poetry in verse form
- Pronunciation indicated
- Cross references at the bottom of the page



For Sale at all Bookstores

THOMAS NELSON & SONS, NEW YORK CITY

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The WITNESS

10¢ A COPY

THE CHURCH AT CHANDKURI

NOVEMBER 21, 1946

LIBRARY COPY

The Church at Chandkuri, India, was built with their own hands by leprosy patients in one of largest and best colonies financed by the American Mission to Lepers, Inc.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

THE CATHEDRAL OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE
NEW YORK CITY
Sundays: 8, 9, 11, Holy Communion; 10, Morning Prayer; 4, Evening Prayer; Sermons 11 and 4.
Weekdays: 7:30, 8 (also 9:15 Holy Days and 10, Wednesdays), Holy Communion; 9, Morning Prayer; 5, Evening Prayer. Open daily 7 A.M. to 6 P.M.

GRACE CHURCH, NEW YORK
Broadway at 10th St.
Rev. Louis W. Pitt, D.D., Rector
Daily: 12:30 except Mondays and Saturdays.
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M. and 4:30 P. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion 11:45 A. M.

THE HEAVENLY REST, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue at 90th Street
Rev. Henry Darlington, D.D.
Sundays: Holy Communion, 8 and 10 A. M.; Morning Service and Sermon, 11 A. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion, 11 A. M.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S CHURCH
NEW YORK
Park Avenue and 51st Street
Rev. Geo. Paull T. Sargent, D.D., Rector
8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evensong. Special Music.
Weekdays: Holy Communion Wednesday at 8:00 A. M.
Thursdays and Saints' Days at 10:30 A. M.
The Church is open daily for prayer.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH
Madison Ave. at 71st St., New York
The Rev. H. W. B. Donegan, D.D., Rector
8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
9:30 A. M. Church School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evening Prayer and Sermon.
Wed., 7:45 A. M., Thurs., 12 Noon Holy Communion.

THE CHURCH OF THE EPIPHANY
1317 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Charles W. Sheerin, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 A. M.; 8 P. M.
Daily: 12:05.
Thursdays: 11:00 and 12:05.

ST. THOMAS' CHURCH, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue and 53rd Street
Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, S.T.D., Rector
Sun 8, 11, 4. Daily 8:30 HC; Thurs. 11 HC., Daily except Sat. 12:10.

THE CHURCH OF THE ASCENSION
Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street, New York
The Rev. Roscoe Thornton Foust, Rector
Sundays: 8 a.m. Holy Communion.
11 a.m. Morning Prayer, Sermon.
8 p.m. Evening Song and Sermon; Service of Music (1st Sun. in month).
Daily: Holy Communion, 8 a.m. Tues., Thurs., Sat.; 11 a.m. Mon., Wed., Fri.
5:30 Vespers, Tues. through Friday.
This Church is open all day and all night.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL
Buffalo, New York
Shelton Square
The Very Rev. Edward R. Welles, M.A., Dean
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30 and 11.
Daily: 12:05 noon—Holy Communion.
Tuesday: 7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
Wednesday: 11:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH
Atlanta, Georgia
435 Peachtree Street
The Rev. J. Milton Richardson, Rector
9:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
10:45 A. M. Sunday School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Prayer and Sermon.
6:00 P. M. Young People's Meetings.

The WITNESS
For Christ and His Church

EDITORIAL BOARD: Frederick C. Grant, Editor; Arthur Lichtenberger, Chairman; William B. Spofford, Managing Editor; Lane W. Barton, Beverly M. Boyd, Dillard H. Brown, Roscoe T. Foust, Charles K. Gilbert, Hugh D. McCandless, Howard Chandler Robbins, William K. Russell, Sydney A. Temple Jr., Joseph H. Titus, William M. Weber.

★

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS: D. B. Aldrich, J. A. Bell, T. S. Carruthers, Adelaide Case, G. K. Chalmers, E. M. Cross, G. M. Day, Angus Dun, A. W. Farlander, T. P. Ferris, J. F. Fletcher, John Gass, C. H. Gesner, C. L. Glenn, G. C. Graham, J. M. Groton, G. I. Hiller, I. P. Johnson, T. R. Ludlow, C. S. Martin, R. C. Miller, Walter Mitchell, A. T. Mollegen, E. L. Parsons, E. L. Pennington, Rose Phelps, L. W. Pitt, Otis Rice, Cyril Richardson, Paul Roberts, V. D. Scudder, W. M. Sharp, W. B. Sperry, C. W. Sprouse, D. S. Stark, W. B. Stevens, J. W. Suter, S. E. Sweet, Alexander Zabriskie.

★

THE WITNESS is published weekly from September 15th to June 15th inclusive, with the exception of the first week in January and semi-monthly from June 15th to September 15th by the Episcopal Church Publishing Co. on behalf of the Church Publishing Association, Inc. Samuel Thorne, President; Charles A. Houston, Vice-President; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, Treasurer; Frederic D. H. Gilbert, Secretary.

★

The subscription price is $3.00 a year; in bundles for sale in parishes the magazine sells for 10c a copy, we will bill quarterly at 5c a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter, March 6, 1939, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois. under the act of March 3, 1879.

NOVEMBER 21, 1946
Vol. XXIX. No. 51

CLERGY NOTES

BURGREEN, Charles L., was ordained deacon by Bishop Wing on Nov. 1 at St. Thomas Church, Eustis, Fla. He is curate at Holy Trinity, West Palm Beach and in charge of St. George's, Riviera Beach, Fla.

DEPPEN, J. RALPH, formerly of Trinity, Jersey Shore, Pa., is now vicar of St. Andrew's, Lewisburg, and Christ Church, Milton, Pa., and Episcopal chaplain at Bucknell Universtiy.

DIXON, H. CAMPBELL, is no longer assistant at St. John's, Detroit, and is for the time being on a non-parochial basis.

GIBSON, REV. ARTHUR F., formerly missionary of St. George's Mission, Richmond, Philadelphia, Pa., to be Rector of Ch. of St. Judge & Nativity, Philadelphia.

HORNBY, REV. FREDERICK B., formerly Vicar of St. Luke's Mission, Eddystone, Pa., to be vicar of St. Peter's Mission, Broomall, Pa., and St. Alban's Mission, Newtown Square, Pa.

KNOX, ORRIN M., was recently ordained deacon by Bishop Stevens at St. Mark's, Glendale, Calif., where he is assistant.

MARKGRAF, GUSTAV K., formerly rector of Trinity, Oakland, Calif., becomes rector of Holy Trinity, Richmond, Calif., on Dec. 1.

MATLOCK, CHARLES R. JR., has been transferred from the missionary district of Libera to the Philippine Islands.

McDONALD, PEERCE N., rector of the Ascension, Montgomery, Ala., died suddenly on October 23. He was a deputy to the 1946 General Convention.

SPINNER, RALPH J., formerly in charge of churches at Chicago Heights and Flossmoor, diocese of Chicago, has been appointed director of Lawrence Hall, diocesan institution for boys.

CALVARY CHURCH
Shady & Walnut Aves.
Pittsburgh
The Rev. Lauriston L. Scaife, S.T.D., Rector
Sundays 8, 9:30, 11:00 and 8:00.
Holy Communion—Mondays, Wednesdays, Fridays 7:30 A.M.
Holy Communion—Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays 8:00 A.M.
Holy Days and Fridays 10:00 A.M.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

CHRIST CHURCH CATHEDRAL
Main and Church Sts., Hartford, Conn.
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30, 10:05, 11 A. M., 8 P. M.
Weekdays: Holy Communion—Monday and Thursday, 9 A. M.; Tuesday, Friday and Saturday, 8 A. M.; Wednesday, 7:00 and 11:00 A. M. Noonday Service, daily 12:15 P. M.

CHRIST CHURCH
Cambridge
REV. GARDINER M. DAY, RECTOR
REV. FREDERIC B. KELLOGG, CHAPLAIN
Sunday Services, 8:00, 9:00, 10:00 and 11:15 A. M.
Weekdays: Wed. 8 and 11 A. M. Thurs., 7:30 A. M.

TRINITY CHURCH
Miami
Rev. G. Irvine Hiller, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services 8, 9:30, 11 A. M.

TRINITY CATHEDRAL
Military Park, Newark, N. J.
The Very Rev. Arthur C. Lichtenberger, Dean
Sunday Services: 8:30, 9:30 (All Saints' Chapel, 24 Rector St.), 11 and 4:30 p.m.
Week Days: Holy Communion Wednesday and Holy Days, 12:00 noon, Friday, 8 a.m. Intercessions Thursday, Friday, 12:10; Organ Recital Tuesday, 12:10.
The Cathedral is open daily for prayer.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
Montecito and Bay Place
OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA
Rev. Calvin Barkow, D.D., Rector
Sundays: 8 A. M., Holy Communion; 11 A. M., Church School; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer and Sermon.
Wednesdays: 10 A. M., Holy Communion; 10:45, Rector's Study Class.

GRACE CHURCH
Corner Church and Davis Streets
ELMIRA, N. Y.
Rev. Frederick T. Henstridge, Rector
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M.; 4:30 P. M.
Daily: Tuesday and Thursday, 7:30 A. M.
Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Holy Days, 9:30 A. M.
Other Services Announced

ST. MARK'S CHURCH
Texas Avenue and Cotton Street
SHREVEPORT, LA.
Rev. Frank E. Walters, Rector
Rev. Harry Wintermeyer, Curate
Sundays: Holy Communion, 7:30; 9:25 A. M., Family Service; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer.
Holy Communion, first Sunday. 6 P. M., Young Churchmen.

CHRIST CHURCH
Nashville, Tennessee
Rev. Peyton Randolph Williams
7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
9:30 and 11 A. M.—Church School.
11 A. M.—Morning Service and Sermon.
6 P. M.—Young People's Meetings.
Thursdays and Saints' Days—Holy Communion. 10 A. M.

GRACE CHURCH
105 Main Street, Orange, N. J.
Lane Wickham Barton, Rector
SUNDAYS
8:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M.—Church School.
11:00 A. M.—Morning Prayer and Sermon. (Holy Communion first Sunday each month)
7:00 P. M.—Young People's Fellowship.

CHRIST CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA
Second Street above Market
Cathedral of Democracy
Founded 1695
Rev. E. Felix Kloman, S.T.D., Rector
Rev. Peter M. Sturtevant, Associate Rector
Sunday Services: 9:30 and 11 A.M.
Church School: 10:00 A.M.
Weekdays: Wed. noon and 12:30.
Saints' Days: 12 noon.
This Church is Open Every Day

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

VOL. XXIX. No. 51.

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

NOVEMBER 21, 1946

Publication Office, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago 37, Ill. Editorial Office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

Work Among Lepers Described By General Secretary

American Mission to Lepers Supports Work Among Sufferers in Many Parts of the World

By Raymond P. Currier

Los Angeles:—"The inefficiency of care or total neglect that is accorded to the victims of leprosy all over the world is a disgrace both to governments and to Christian churches," said Dr. Eugene R. Kellersberger, M.D., D.T.M. and H., general secretary of the American Mission to Lepers in address to the annual national convention of that organization held in this city.

Dr. Kellersberger spoke out of his observations during a six-months' trip through eighteen countries of Latin America and Africa. He found some governments doing a reasonably good job, perhaps the best possible under the financial and political conditions they had to cope with. Brazil was one of these, with 37 settlements — virtually small towns inhabited, governed and operated by persons with leprosy and their families—and with 27 "preventoria" where the uninfected children of patients are kept safe for life. The British government of Nigeria is another that has shown a high sense of responsibility, having subsidized several missionary settlements and appropriated large sums to meet the problem outside the areas reached by missions.

On the other hand, Dr. Kellersberger frankly said, most African colonial governments are indifferent or openly negligent, or are willing to let leprosy go untreated rather than give what they regard as too much leeway to Protestant missions in their countries.

In South America, Paraguay has an extremely black record in the treatment of its leprosy patients. Though a colony exists, founded some years ago by an enlightened President, the present conditions in it are bad beyond imagination, owing to sinister political influences. Protestant social services—even by the Paraguayan Protestant community—are subtly hindered or openly blocked, patients are ill-fed, ill-housed, medically neglected, and brutally abused. Even the United States health commission, which has built a hospital and other buildings and spent many thousands of dollars, is obstructed in many petty ways.

Ethiopia is a country in which leprosy treatment is almost paralyzed at present owing to the transition from Italian conquest through British protection to independence, but in which there is great interest and sense of responsibility. Dr. Kellersberger, during his visit there, submitted to the government a plan of agreement by which the American Mission to Lepers might get a comprehensive anti-leprosy program going in cooperation with the several Protestant missions already at work in the country.

Dr. and Mrs. Eugene R. Kellersberger, are the general and promotional secretaries of the American Mission to Lepers. The plaque was placed on the girlhood church of Mary Reed, storied missionary and leprosy victim of India

In all these countries, Dr. Kellersberger found Christian missions doing what they could, usually with funds provided by his organization, to care for victims of leprosy within their geographical reach, but usually hampered and often bogged down by the gravest shortage of missionaries.

Dr. Kellersberger was due to visit Maasateen Colony in Liberia—a colony belonging technically to the government but entirely serviced from St. Timothy's Hospital at Cape Mount—but had to miss his whole Liberia itinerary on account of a bad plane connection. Dr. Mears of St. Timothy's has reported the very unsatisfactory location and conditions of the Maasateen Colony and is in the process of getting it moved to a new site. Like all traditional colonies, Maasateen was placed on an island owing to the false supposition that leprosy is a highly contagious disease that requires extreme isolation. Now that it is established that leprosy is one of the least contagious of all diseases and in certain types and stages not communicable at all, such "prisons" are one by one being changed into hospitals, or more modernly still, into farm settlements, happy, self-respecting and self-supporting. Such, Dr. Mears hopes, will be the character of the new "Maasateen."

One of Dr. Kellersberger's most pleasant visits, in his estimation, was that in the Canal Zone, where he was the guest of Bishop and Mrs. R. H. Gooden. He spoke on leprosy to an interdenominational meeting in the cathedral and made two extended visits to the United States Leprosarium at Palo Seco. There he saw at work Archdeacon A. F. Nightingale, whose travel expenses to and from the colony, as chaplain, are paid by the American Mission to Lepers. Dr. Kellersberger spoke most highly of Archdeacon Nightengale's ministry in this government leprosy colony, and also of the colony itself, which he regards as the best of all he saw during his trip.

He praised its administration by Dr. Ezra Hurwitz, a devoted Jewish doctor, for nine points of exceptional merit: 1. Its ideal location by the ocean and yet convenient to a city. 2. The absence of any name or sign stigmatizing it as a "Leper asylum." 3. The absence of a fence. 4. Ample cultivatable land, much of it already being worked by the patients with pleasure, health and profit. 5. A total impression of cleanliness, order and contentment. 6. Residences in modern two-story buildings for both unmarried and married people — marriage being, very sensibly, allowed. 7. A small enough number of cases for personal supervision. 8. Adequate meals, adequately served in cafeteria style. 9. Discontinuation of the use of chaulmoogra oil as a treatment and the substitution of a sulfone called promin. This list is almost a check-list of modernity in the treatment of leprosy.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Many other facts concerning the modern and Christian care of leprosy patients were also covered at the Los Angeles meeting. Some of these are found elsewhere in this issue in the quotations from Dr. and Mrs. Kellersberger and the address of Chaplain Rash.

- there are possibly as many as ten million people in the world who have leprosy, and that probably not more than 200,000 of them are under any kind of care, even when Roman Catholic, Protestant and government colonies and clinics are all counted.
- approximately a hundred American missions, two of which are Episcopalian, are regularly carrying on physical or spiritual work for people with leprosy.
- the American Mission to Lepers, Incorporated, is the recognized auxiliary of all American Churches to raise the funds and take financial responsibility for all leprosy work they undertake.
- the word "Leper" is becoming taboo, mainly through the impassioned efforts of the American patients in our National Leprosarium at Carville, La., who have been protesting through their magazine The Star and other channels for several years, that the word is an epithet of fear and revulsion, ridiculous and cruel in view of what is now known about leprosy. In response to the reasonableness of this protest, the American Mission to Lepers (ironically unable at present to change its own name) and several other national organizations now carefully edit the word out of all manuscripts and publicity. The American patients wish also to substitute the word "Hansen's Disease" (Dr. G. Armauer Hansen, of Norway, first isolated the bacterium in 1874) for "leprosy," but this change has gained less support.
- leprosy has been potentially curable, or better, arrestable, for about thirty years, the accepted treatment during that time having been the oil of a tropical fruit called chaulmoogra, and about 10% of all cases under treatment being arrested; but constant attempts to find something better, or to find the specific cure, have been made. A recently effective one is promin, referred to above, and others now coming over the horizon are mentioned in Mr. Rash's address.

Mr. W. Espey Albig, treasurer of the Mission, reported a contribution income of $572,123 during the last fiscal year.

Dr. Wm. Jay Schieffelin, chairman of the board of directors, reported steady progress in the development of the Mission's post war prevention plan, begun in 1944. This plan called for a special fund of $500,000, of which $200,000 has now been raised, to enable twenty mission hospitals in eight countries to add to their present activities a project in lay training. By this plan, local Christian leaders in the endemic countries — teachers, clergymen, social visitors, agricultural experts, nurses—will be trained to recognize and deal with leprosy in the villages where it originates, particular among children. This procedure is based on the now accepted view that leprosy is usually contracted in childhood, in the repeated daily contacts of home, street and bazaar. Trainees will learn how to know when a child has leprosy, how to find his source of infection, how tactfully to have him sent to a leprosarium for treatment or, if this is impossible, to have him soundly treated at home. Such a plan, if widely accepted, could eliminate leprosy in a generation. Union institutions in which the Episcopal Church shares and which have already accepted the Mission's offer of funds are The Vellore Medical College, India, Cheeloo University and West China Union University, China.

Dr. Kellersberger with Bishop Gooden of the Panama Canal Zone and the Rev. Arthur F. Nightengale, chaplain of the U. S. Leprosarium at Palo Seco, Canal Zone

CHURCH CLUB HEARS MISSIONARY

New York:—Brinkley S. Snowden, agricultural missionary in South India, was the speaker at the meeting of the Church Periodical Club of the diocese of New York, which met November 20 at St. James' parish house. Mr. Snowden is in this country studying medicine so as to be better able to minister to the "untouchables" in India.

SCHULMERICH BELLS AT SARATOGA

Saratoga Springs, N. Y.:—Under the will of the late Mrs. Ella Wood Mann of Ballston Spa, New York, a legacy was provided to install carillon bells in Bethesda Church, Saratoga Springs, Rev. Irving G. Rouillard, rector. The bells are of the Schulmerich Electronics, Inc. of Sellersville, Pa., similar to those used at the recent General Convention in Philadelphia. Engineers and electricians are now making the installation, and the dedication is expected to be made on Sunday, Nov. 17th, and bells also used for the union Thanksgiving Day services at Bethesda Church.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Anglican Church Reforms Urged By Archbishop of York

Says Country Parishes Should Be Grouped And Directed from Center Under One Man

By Religious News Service

London (Wireless): — Far-reaching changes that would include greater freedom for the Church of England from state control than at any time since the Reformation were urged by Cyril Forster Garbett, Archbishop of York, in an address to the Liverpool diocesan conference. Major recommendation by the Archbishop, who is the second ranking leader of the Anglican Church, was that the King remain as nominal head of the Church, but that the Church be given "some voice in the appointment of its chief officers," who are now named by the prime minister.

He noted that prime ministers have taken "the greatest care" in nominating bishops and deans, but warned "there might be a prime minister who cared nothing for the Church, only for his party." He said that with the growth of the totalitarian state "it is possible in the future that only those who supported the government of the day would be chosen for ecclesiastical posts."

Asserting that the Church's freedom is "precarious" and that changes in Church machinery and administration are "matters of great importance," Garbett said the House of Commons has neither the time nor the desire to deal with forms of worship, but some method must be found to enable organizational changes to receive royal assent without debates in Parliament.

Among organizational reforms suggested by the Archbishop was the "strengthening of diocesan boards of patronage," which, he said, "would help to secure that the good are not overlooked for promotion in the Church." He declared that at present some appointments are unjustifiable and men with no obvious claims are occasionally promoted.

He proposed that many more country parishes be grouped together and worked from common centers by clergymen under an experienced vicar. He also favored fewer town parishes and many more larger parishes worked from a central clergy house.

He recommended that each diocese have at its center a group of men who were specialists in various departments of work which would not be undertaken by ordinary parish priests, and that groups of missionaries living together undertake evangelistic work wherever they are assigned by their bishop.

Declaring that parochial organization of the Church remains in structure the same as it was centuries ago, Archbishop Garbett asserted that the old parochial boundaries no longer mean anything to the majority of the people. He said that distribution of the clergy has had no relation to modern conditions and that evangelistic rather than pastoral methods are urgently needed in England at present.

These happy children of Korea are enjoying Christmas, untouched by leprosy in a mission home. The American military government has now taken charge of all leprosy victims in Korea

WORK AMONG LEPERS IN JAPAN

Tokyo, Japan: — Two historic pieces of leprosy work in Japan in which many American Episcopalians were interested have recently been heard from. At Kusatsu Miss Irene Nettleton was allowed to stay at the children's home as an internee throughout the war years. The adult patients had already been transferred before the war to a government colony built near Miss Mary Cornwall-Leigh's famous Church colony.

The Leper Hospital of the Resurrection of Hope of Kumomoto, founded by Miss Hannah Riddell, was taken over by the Japanese government in 1941 and the patients removed to a government institution. Miss Ada H. Wright, Miss Riddell's understudy and successor, had to leave and went to Australia. This year she received a letter from the Japanese chaplain, Rev. Namio Toyofuku, stating that he had been able to carry on his work with the patients, though under great difficulty, and that at Christmas, 1945, five patients had been baptized and 68 had received Holy Communion.

BISHOP TUCKER PREACHES ON WORLD ORDER

New York: — All the problems which are now troubling the world "must be stated and solved in world terms, and they can be solved only with the aid of God," declared Presiding Bishop Tucker, preaching last Sunday at Calvary Church. It was his first sermon in this city since General Convention. His text, "Owe no man anything but to love one another," he said sums up our Christian obligation. "It might be called the Christian extension of justice, for it applies to people beyond their deserts."

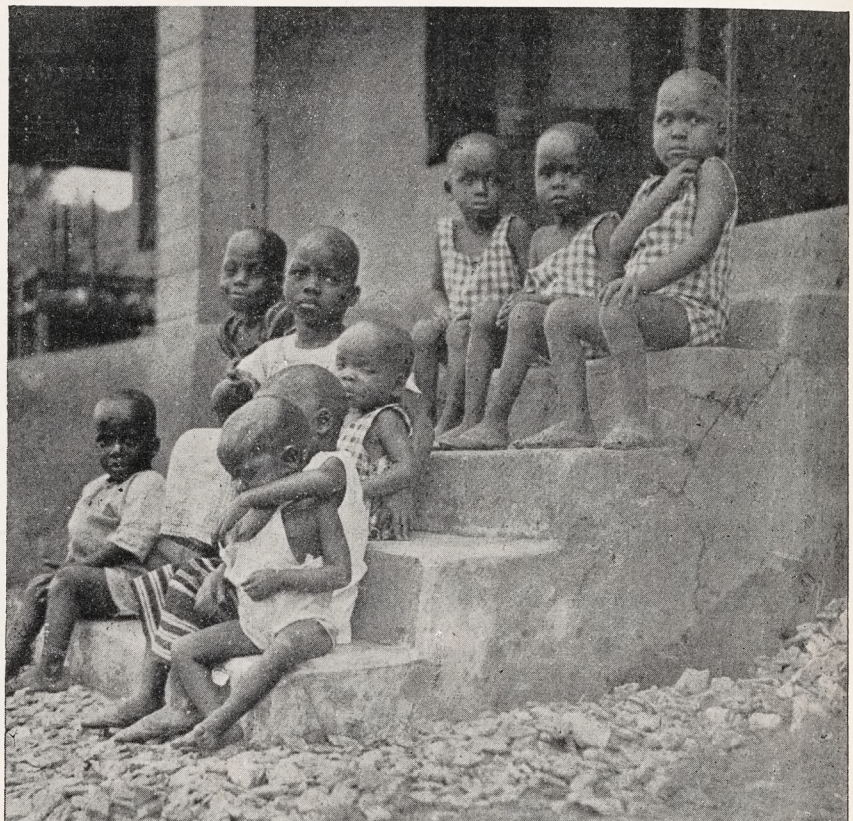
"This principle is important in the present state of the world," he explained, "because if we're going to have permanent peace and world unity, we must remember that all men are created in the image of God, and we must give opportunities for freedom, and develop the latent capacities of all the backward peoples, to make them able to become partners in the great family of nations."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Bishop Tucker warned that before Americans can convince the rest of the world of the sincerity of their belief in Christianity, Americans must "make more effective witness of the Christian Gospel here at home, and must make their communities and their country more truly Christian."

NEW YORK PARISH CELEBRATES

New York:—St. John's Church in Greenwich Village observed the 100th anniversary of the erection of its building this week, starting with a service the evening of the 17th at which Bishop Gardner of New Jersey was the preached, with the service conducted by the rector, the Rev. Charles Howard Graf. St. John's, which is of classic architecture, was erected in 1846, on what was then called Hammond Street, and was known as the Hammond Street Presbyterian Church, which occupied the building for only a few years. Later it was occupied by a Congregational Church, and Henry Ward Beecher preached some of his first sermons in this building. Then it became the South Baptist Church. In 1856 the congregation of the Bishop Jonathan Mayhew Wainwright Society purchased the building, which then became known as the Church of St. John the Evangelist.



During the 20's the Church acquired considerable property in its vicinity and through renovation created what is now known as St. John's Colony, a very attractive group of residence buildings surrounding its own community garden. Under its then rector, the Rev. John Armstrong Wade, a handsome outdoor altar—one of the few in the entire United States—was erected in the garden. Its reredos is a fine mosaic of Christ at the wedding feast of Cana of Gallilee, and depicts Christ blessing a newly married couple. Underneath, in Greek, is inscribed "Nevermore to be two." In 1942 a handsome Caen stone altar and memorial to Father Sill, of St. Chrysostom Church, which once stood at 39th Street and 7th Avenue, was erected at St. John's.

In preparation for its centennial celebration, the church interior has been entirely redecorated.

VISION IS NOT LACKING

Brattleboro, N. C.: — Comes the story of a group of consecrated town and rural laity of this small farming community who were able to provide a local ministry after a Christmas eve tragedy. A sick baby of a family living on the outskirts of the village died. Early Christmas Day the father, without anyone to help or comfort him, took the body of his child to the local cemetery and there buried his baby. There were three clergy living in neighboring towns, any one of whom would have been most glad to come, but they did not know of the man and his trouble, and the father did not know any one of them well enough to ask him to come.

There had been a small Episcopal mission established fifty years previously but work lagged because clergy were not available. The community had been contented to drift through the years without the ministrations of any church, so it was this Christmas incident that caused the few loyal Churchmen living in the town to take immediate action. They were determined to have a resident minister to reach the unchurched. They went to the parish of the Good Shepherd in nearby Rocky Mount, which had been instrumental in establishing St. John's mission originally, again seeking its aid. With financial help here the Brattleboro laymen were able to perfect their plans for a rectory, a church, and a clergyman. A grant was made by the diocese to secure the right man for the job. As yet he has not been found, for they are seeking someone who has a vocation for rural work, who can love and work with all types and classes of people whether Episcopalians or not, and who can lead religious activities in the village.

These uninfected children at Nigeria, Africa, are cared for in a progressive, experimental government settlement at Uzuakoli

BISHOP ANGUS DUN TO PREACH

Norwalk, O.:—Bishop Angus Dun of Washington is to be the preacher at the consecration of the Rev. Lane W. Barton as Bishop of Eastern Oregon, to be held here November 26. The Presiding Bishop will be consecrator and Bishop Keeler of Minnesota and Bishop Hobson of Southern Ohio the con-consecrators. Mr. Barton will be presented by Bishop Tucker of Ohio and Bishop Washburn of Newark and the attending Presbyters will be the Rev. John F. Sant of St. Louis and the Rev. Charles W. Shearin of Washington.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

EDITORIALS

Thanksgiving Day

THE phrase "Thank God" has not entirely disappeared from our language. Grace before meat, indeed, has almost entirely disappeared; its place being taken perhaps by the Martini, or a dead fish on a toothpick, as a better way to put one in the proper mood for eating. City folk are not as apt to see the hand of God in the sun and rain behind the fields of ripening grain when the Wondercrust Baking Co. also intrudes itself into the picture, and we are an increasingly urbanized population. Scarcity to us means the nuisance of rationing, substitutes, and appeals from abroad on glossy paper; our thankfulness at escaping from such a vaguely imagined fate seems hardly enough to bother God with. Thanksgiving Day means turkey and Tums; maybe a football game, too. Church services on that day are no better attended than any other weekday services; some churches feel they must accommodate themselves to indifference and preoccupation of their members by having union services the night before. (The union in this case is a union of weakness, not strength.)

Yet the phrase, thank God is still with us. The way we commonly use it indicates to what dull depths our gratitude has sagged. For it usually is a convenient, accepted way of indicating that things are not quite as bad as they might have been. "I must spend the week end at Aunt Penelope's, but her friend Miss Bedfeather will not be there, thank God." In writing, this use of the phrase can be distinguished by the fact that it is not followed by an exclamation point. In speech, it is identified by a grudging, flippant, or even sarcastic tone of voice. It hardly needs these marks, as it is almost the only modern use. The serious use survives only in the Church, and in the Bible and Prayer Book; although of late it has become an archaism much fancied by politicians.

The Prayer Book still takes thanksgiving seriously, as one of the basic gates to religion, especially useful to those whose feeling of need or sinfulness is not developed. You will find suggestive and specific forms of thanks on the following pages: 19, 36, 38, 42, 48, 50-53, 76-81, 83, 152, 171, 259, 261, 306, 334, 336, 466, 472, 520, 522; and at the second prayer in Family Morning Prayer, the fifth prayer in Family Evening Prayer, and at the Grace Before Meat at the end of Family Prayer.

When we say "Thank God!" we should put an exclamation point after it. The best exclamation point is to want to help someone else say it, too.

"QUOTES"

At this season when the year is drawing to a close, traditions suggest and our hearts require that we render humble devotion to Almighty God for the mercies bestowed upon us by his goodness. Devoutly grateful to divine Providence for the richness of our endowment and the many blessings received, may we continue to give a good account of our stewardship by utilizing our resources in the service of mankind. May we have the vision and courage to accept and discharge honorably the responsibilities inherent in our strength by consecrating ourselves to the attainment of a better world.

Now, therefore, I, Harry S. Truman, President of the United States of America, in consonance with the joint resolution of Congress approved December 26, 1941, do hereby proclaim Thursday, November 28, 1946, as a day of national Thanksgiving; and I call upon the people of this nation to observe that day by offering thanks to God for the bounties vouchsafed us and by re-dedicating ourselves to the preservation of the blessings of liberty envisaged by our forefathers in the preamble to our Constitution.

—The Thanksgiving Proclamation
By President Truman

Source of Redemption

THE community chest with its ministry to human need merits the eager support of Christians. It is practical Christianity. Indeed, there are some, so impressed with the practical nature of this work, that they question the worth of organized religion because it seems so impractical! What is the answer to this?

The Rev. F. C. Bryan reminds us that the policy of good works as an end in itself is self-defeating for the same reason that a field planted year after year to corn yields decreasing crops. The farmer to grow abundant crops has to build up his soil. By the same token the community which would care for its needy people has to build up its morale. More is needed for this than a noble desire to have a better community. If any man doubts this, let him delve into history. A sense of community responsibility existed long before the Christian era, but it took the Christian gospel to make that responsibility effective. The gospel, working through the Christian Church caused medicine to be something more than an academic interest, it built hospitals for the sick, homes for the orphans and aged, schools and libraries. Democracy has its roots in the Hebrew-Christian tradition, and our religion emancipated woman. None of these tasks are complete, and many have been taken over by the community, but the origin of their life-giving impetus was and is the gospel.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

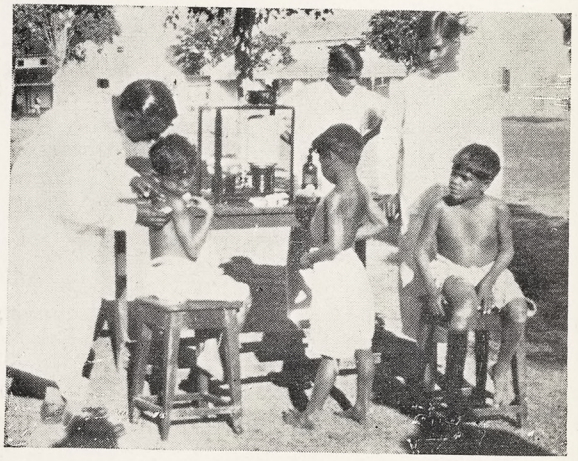
Does this mean that we worship God and maintain the Church that our communities may be Christian? Heaven forbid. We worship God and proclaim the gospel because the chief end of man is to glorify him and enjoy him forever. Good works are not the goal but the by-product of the gospel. No man can catch even the tiniest glimpse of God in Christ without being revolted at the evil and sin and suffering which afflict his fellowman. Therefore, our task in Every Member Canvass, is not to raise a budget to keep the Church alive that the community may be made better but to win men to an allegiance to God, to win them to our weekly worship of God that God may be glorified. Once we win men to God's allegiance, we can leave it to him to send them into the community to redeem the community for Christ's sake.

Shall They Remain Forgotten?

by Dr. E. R. Kellersberger



General Secretary of the American Mission to Lepers

I SUPPOSE that one of the most terrible things in the world is to be forgotten and not have anybody care for you or love you. I think that most of the people in the United States don't know that there is such a person as a leprosy patient in this country. Some people do, now, as a result of recent newspaper publicity and since there are thirty-five service men who have come back with leprosy since the war is over; but most people don't know anything about the leprosy patient and he is a forgotten person.

I shall never forget a song that Mrs. Kellersberger and I heard in the month of May down in Paraguay, a very much neglected area. The only government colony, about a hundred miles north of Asuncion contains about 500 people about as badly taken care of as any people I have ever seen. But I shall never forget when six of them came inside Miss Bateman's simple little fence and said, "We want to sing for Dr. and Mrs. Kellersberger." Some of them were grown-up men, some of them boys, some very badly disfigured. When those people sang and played for us with all the pathos they put in it, it broke your heart. You can not forget those people!

The large majority of people with leprosy are not infectious if you use a little common sense. I have had some at my table in New York City. I am not afraid of them. You have to make some distinction, of course. There are some cases of syphilis or tuberculosis you wouldn't have at your table, either, but you have to make a distinction about it. There is no use herding people into a place and putting them behind a fence because they have leprosy.

I want to tell you about a beautiful young woman in Brazil (Many leprosy patients are beautiful. You can't tell they have it.) This young woman had leprosy and was going to a dispensary. At a dance she met a fine man from a fine Brazilian family and he fell in love with her. One day there came a knock at the door when the husband was there and she wasn't. It was somebody from the dispenary. He said, "Does Mrs. - - - live here; if so, why hasn't she come to the dispensary?" The young man said, "What do you mean? That is my wife! What do you mean insulting me by saying she has leprosy?" And he knocked him down. Later on when the wife came home, her husband said, "What is this I hear? Someone came here and insulted me and insulted

Finding the children early and treating them immediately is one of the ways to eradicate leprosy from the world. This is injection hour at CHANDKHURI, India you. He said you hadn't appeared at the dispensary where you have been getting treatments for leprosy." Then she hung her head and said, "Yes, I have leprosy. I married you so that I could live; so that at least I would get alimony and not starve to death."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

A young boy had leprosy, a boy about 12 or 14 years old, and he knew what trouble he was to people and how they looked at him, and how they felt toward him. One day he just left a message. He said, "You don't have to trouble about me any more." He cut his wrists and killed himself because he knew that nobody wanted him.

WE WENT to one place in Central America where we saw an arch bearing the words "Asylum of Pity." Inside the walls we saw sentries. Then the doctor who was with us very carefully put a gown on us and gloves and a hood over our heads, and there we were, all in white with our eyes sticking out like Ku Kluxers who were going to execute the poor patients hidden behind the walls of that fearful place. That is the way people in the world treat people with leprosy and that is the way some Americans treat them.

In Brazil we saw 30,000 cases of leprosy. The Brazilian government is the most advanced in treating leprosy. Many cases are treated in dispensaries and they can live a normal life. They aren't treated like outcasts and prisoners nor put away where they live all their lives alone.

I fell in love with Brazil. It is the most democratic country of South America. They don't have any race problems there. They all work together and they are going forward toward their goal together, especially in their work against leprosy. A distinguished Protestant Christian woman has banded all the women of Brazil together to fight leprosy. They are taking care of 35,000 children, putting them in homes and private sanitoriums.

We saw a deluxe leprosarium in Panama where about a hundred people get everything in the world. A Jewish doctor is taking care of them and we saw their Catholic sisters and their Protestant chaplain—a fine piece of work, but it reaches only a hundred people.

In the beautiful Caribbean, we were taken fifty miles out from the Port-of-Spain on a launch to an island and were told, "Here is where the lepers are." Truck them off on an island—get rid of them! There were 400 of them sitting on the edge of bald mountains next to the seaside. Just sitting there with nothing to do, just because they happened to be unfortunate enough to have leprosy. I don't believe in putting lepers on an island.

Our Patients Are Human Beings

by Clifton Rash

Protestant Chaplain, United States Leprosarium, Carville, La.

IT IS strange that one should have to say it in America but one does have to say it here more than in some so-called backward countries: patients with leprosy are human beings! They have lived just as you live! These human beings have all the emotions that other people have. They have ambitions and desires, they have looks and yearnings; they have sources of great joy and happiness, laughter and joking; they have sorrow and tears; they have disappointments beyond imagination and they have a burden and separation greater than any other people.

We have some patients from poor families and poor homes who can read and write no language of any kind and who speak a foreign language. Then we have patients who are educated, cultured. We have nurses, one medical doctor, teachers. We have one woman with a degree from Boston University. We have an electrical inventor. A man who died there some years ago who was a well-known travel lecturer, and another a prominent railroad construction engineer. We have there now a business man from Texas who wrote a little article called "Why We Smile." He is a very human person of Irish descent with a quick wit and an equally quick temper. I once saw on a newspaper wall the motto, "I complained when I had no shoes until I met a man who had no feet." This man has no feet! He has also no eyes, and his hands are paralyzed, and yet he is able to smile and write an article with a message of appreciation and gratitude and salvation, though he cannot see and cannot walk, and his hands are insensitive, and he cannot feel. But he has a mind and a heart. He is a great person and courageous.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

We have another man I wish you could meet. We are great friends. It isn't quite correct to say that we do not see eye to eye because his eyes cannot see, but we are friends and have agreement in many things. He is the very courageous and successful editor of the Star. That is the magazine published and printed and mailed by the patients and it goes out all over the world. It is for the purpose of shedding the light of truth on what the patients like to call not leprosy, but Hansen's disease. They feel the stigma of the word leprosy and even more of the word "leper." My friend, Mr. Stein, has a bright mind, very accurate, and he is interested in all things relating to the welfare of the patients. He carries on his work and fights his fight with courageous vigor, and I admire him very much. Now if you go in to see Mr. Stein and take a few minutes with him, you won't detect that he is blind. He will look right at the visitor who will call his attention to a paper or a picture or some particular line, and Mr. Stein will catch on from the sound that he is being shown something and he will say, "Well, I suppose that looks very nice but I can't see it." Then the visitor is very much surprised.

I would also like you to meet the patients' baseball team. Some have full sized feet and hands and some less, but they love to play baseball and outside teams have come in to play with them. When our patients' team beat them they were chagrined to be beaten by a team of sick men! But it was a great advance that they were not afraid to come in and visit our people and play with them.

We have people of all races, and our church is one place in Louisiana where the colored and white are together in the same service, though not completely together. Our colored people sit on one side of the aisle and everybody who is theoretically white, sits on the "white" side: Mexicans, Chinese, Filipinos, Germans, English, Colombian and so forth. Among these "and so forth" there are Greek Orthodox communicants. They belong to me. I am glad I know them and their great archbishop in New York City. There are Episcopalians, Methodists, Baptists (four kinds of Baptists!) three or four kinds of Presbyterians, the Church of Christ, Jehovah's Witnesses, Jews, Hindus and Confucians. And I am the pastor! "Go ye and preach the gospel to every creature." That includes those with leprosy.

I LOVE these human beings. I hear their misunderstandings, sometimes their contentions. I hear their laughter and song, see their games and their jokes. I see their courage and I hear their prayers and I pray for them and with them, and often I pray for their bodies, peace be with them.

"See that finger?"

"What is the matter with it?"

"It gave me fits today. Will you pray for my finger?"

Two doctors came to me in one day and said, "Chaplain Rash, so and so is going to die a terrible death unless something is done for him. You have something. See what you can do." Two doctors, neither knowing that the other would speak to me, did that in one day. And I went in and spoke to this man and said,

"Are you a good soldier?"

"Sure, I am a good one."

"You have got a hard fight to make with this drug."

"Why, what drug?" (I have had a lot of people think the preacher doesn't know what is going on, but I knew and my heart ached.)

I said, "Do you think that the God who made the heaven and the earth can't take away that craving?"

And he said, "Maybe he can." And we prayed, and his wife cried out loud. He never asked for the drug again. God does answer prayers.

I will say a word about hope. Great hope is occasioned now by the new treatments with drugs of the sulfa family. There has been a greater improvement than ever before in our hospital and there is constantly greater hopefulness. We have more people come to the time of dismissal because their case is arrested than we have had before and the percentage has risen from about seven to ten under the new treatments, which is very good. Many of our patients, therefore, have the expectation that after a while they will pass their twelve tests and so be dismissed and go home, or go to work.

I wish I had the power to say something about the treatment that some of these former patients have received when they were dismissed. There have been churches and pastors that have notified patients who went out from our hospital that they could not go to church. Now, these dismissed patients have a certificate from the United States public health service saying the disease is suspended and that they are not a danger to public health, that they are not in a position to communicate that disease to others. Yet the nameless dread and fear that is so common causes people to draw away from them until, very often and in many localities, a former patient has a more difficult time than a former criminal would have! This ought not to be in "educated" America.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

FRANCIS CARDINAL SPELLMAN has written a piece for Mr. Hearst's Cosmopolitan. It is liked so well by the magazine that advance reprints were sent to many clergy for comment. The Cardinal writes, he says, "not in defense of my faith—but as an American in defense of my country." And it must be said that he uses all the time-honored drum-thumping of Fourth of July orators.

"As the sands of this old year run out, every loyal American, to keep faith with his country and himself, must resolve actively to love and live our American way of life."

"Can we be less than true patriots and not fight lies with truths, slavery with liberty, atheism with faith, in bloodless defense of our republic?"

"We cannot fight Communistic propagandists with their own weapons of deceit, lawlessness, violence and 'liquidation' because we believe in justice, law and liberty."

"Men have a right freely to worship God and they have the duty to defend that sacred right."

He starts with a tribute to the Constitution and the Bill of Rights; quotes time-honored Americans, Benjamin Franklin and Henry Clay, to bolster his arguments; ends with a sentimental prayer about an "eagle poised on wing are we, above the great divide" and "a thousand tiny lights break through the great grey darkness of a city night and are as candles lit before Thy Throne."

It is a neat job, even if a federal judge did let the Cardinal down rather badly. The judge rips into Russia in a letter, quoted at length, basing his condemnation on statements by followers of Trotsky, not knowing apparently that nobody hates the present regime in Russia more than the Trotskites, unless perhaps the followers of Cardinal Spellman. Mr. Hearst, even in his dotage, I am sure, would know that.

However, since the Cardinal has based his arguments on such lofty and patriotic principles, would it be fair I wonder, to ask him to apply them elsewhere—to Spain for example. The story of that country under Franco has just been written by Abel Plenn, who until recently served in Madrid as an official of the United States government. Wind in the Olive Trees is the name of the book and it is worth attention. He tells of an ecclesiastical society, "The Exterminating Angel," founded by the Bishop of Osma, that carried on "a bloody campaign of despotism, terror and persecution against the forces that were trying to liberalize and strengthen Spain. Scores of thousands of Spanish men and women had been condemned to exile, imprisonment and death, only because they believed in some form of representative government."

He quotes the then Primate of Spain, Cardinal Goma, who in a fascist journal "admitted that the Church hierarchy had secretly encouraged the use of conspiracy and violence as a means of overthrowing the Spanish Republic." In this article the Primate stated that "since democracy and universal suffrage were embryonic forms of communism and anarchy, we declared that these must be fought licitly—'even by legal means', we said, in order to make it clear, in spite of the censorship, that by utilizing legal means — we were actually paving the way for those who, dropping all scruples of legality, would some day march toward honor and glory."

Mr. Plenn also relates how the pastoral letter of Archbishop Pla y Deniel, the present Primate of Spain, made fingermen of thousands of priests "who pointed out to the Falange strong-arm squads not only the Communists and Socialists, but also the liberal Republicans, the doctors and the school teachers—pet hate of the Spanish clergy—and members of other professional groups; not only the few Protestants and Masons; but also the less regular among the Catholic churchgoers."

And so it came about that the custom was established in Spain "to shoot a certain number of 'Reds' —nearly all political prisoners were 'Reds'—on every anniversary of the Uprising. This particular custom, I soon discovered, was more honored in the observance than the breach, and to such a degree, that it had been extended, in every city and town throughout Spain where political prisoners were being held, to include not only all the Nationalist anniversaries such as the Birth of Franco and the Elevation of Franco as Chief of State, but also the many official religious holidays of which Christmas, the Feast of the Conception, Corpus Christi and Easter were only a few."

The American Cardinal writes truly that "War is an evil thing, so accursed that Satan himself must be its sire, and I, with the full strength of my soul, with all the vehemence of words and works at my command, oppose and condemn it."

Since this is so, and since he feels so strongly about it, we hope that this churchman, with such influence with the Vatican, will insist upon that "justice, law and liberty" in Spain for which he pleads so eloquently in this article written in a Hearst magazine for American consumption.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

PROBABLY no collect of the Prayer Book is so widely known and beloved as the Collect for Purity which opens the Communion service. The sum and substance of all true worship is in it. If by some tragic mischance all the Prayer Book were lost save this collect we should have both the seed and flower of it still. In less than fifty words and in little over five lines of printed text it plumbs the depths and scales the heights of the soul's encounter and communion with its God. The artistry of this collect is unexcelled; in disciplined but unlabored phrase it expresses objectively yet tenderly life's ultimate experience.

The whole Triune God is brought into relation to our worship by this opening invocation. First, there is the almighty, transcendent Father, invisible yet omnipresent, Who "seeth in secret" all the inmost imaginings of His creatures—not solely to judge them, but also because He loves and cares for them. The writer of Psalm 139 would have understood the address of our collect.

> O Lord, thou hast searched me out, and known me.
> Thou knowest my down-sitting, and mine uprising; thou understandest my thoughts long before.
> Thou art about my path, and about my bed; and art acquainted with all my ways.
> For lo, there is not a word in my tongue, but thou, O Lord, knowest it altogether.
>
> . . . . .
>
> Whither shall I go then from thy Spirit? or whither shall I go then from thy presence?

So, too, our Lord, like the psalmist, in all His teaching about our approach to the Father, laid primary stress upon sincerity. We cannot "dissemble nor cloak" anything "before the face of Almighty God."

Secondly, our collect teaches us that true and acceptable worship is made possible only by the cleansing and enabling power of the Holy Spirit. He is the Spirit of truth, who reproves "of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment," and guides us into all truth. He is our helper and strengthener; as St. Paul says, "Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought; . . . and he that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because he maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God." (Rom. 8:26-7.) "According to the will of God"—this is worship "through Christ our God," whose constant prayer was "not as I will, but as thou wilt." Only in His entire self-offering can we see what it means to love perfectly and magnify worthily the holy Name of God. As members of His Body, knit together in His life by His life-giving Spirit, we endeavor in the holy Eucharist to consummate through Him our heavenly Father's purpose for us —entire devotion and unfeigned praise.

Who wrote this gem of prayer? God alone knows. Like so many of our Prayer Book collects it is best attributed to the Holy Spirit. The oldest record of it is in a brief sacramentary of votive masses commonly ascribed to Alcuin, that "robust, studious, and convivial Englishman" (to quote Professor H. A. L. Fisher), who served as Charlemagne's prime minister of education. Where Alcuin found it is unknown. But it is likely that he rescued it from oblivion in one of the Roman service books which had found its way into Gaul during the chaotic period of the barbarian settlements. Or he may have known it in England, during his student days at York, from one of the Roman sacramentaries which the Benedictine missionaries brought with them. For the collect in its Latin form is unmistakably, both in structure and in rhythm, of Roman provenance.

Alcuin set this prayer as the collect of a mass "For the Grace of the Holy Spirit." This mass, with other votive masses, had a wide popularity in the Middle Ages; and nearly all of them ultimately found an acceptance in the Roman Missal. In medieval England it was adopted by the Sarum Missal; and what is more significant, in the Sarum use the collect was placed after the Veni, Creator Spiritus in the priest's preparation before mass. Here Cranmer found it and in his majestic English rendering made it a preparation of all the worshippers for the Holy Communion service. But for these two Englishmen, Alcuin and Cranmer, both of them scholars and reformers, the Collect for Purity might well have been forgotten, if not lost.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Churchmen and Scientists Plan Atomic Education

Educational Program Regarding the Social Implications of Scientific Discoveries

Edited by W. B. Spofford

Philadelphia (RNS) : — Belief that atomic energy and other destructive new agencies of warfare can only be controlled through moral and spiritual education has led to the organization of a society, composed of churchmen and scientists here. The case for the scientists was put succinctly at the initial meeting by Prof. Louis Ridenour, head of the department of physics at the University of Pennsylvania, who said that "Religious leaders can do more for control of atomic energy than any other agency. . . . The ultimate solution of this problem is one in which science is powerless. . . . We must look to our stewards of ethics and morality."

Aims of the new organization were set forth in a resolution which was adopted unanimously as follows:

(1) "The renunciation by the United States and by all other nations of the right to use the atomic bomb or any other instrument of mass destruction to enforce national policy. This implies that the manufacture and storage of atomic weapons should stop immediately, and that the United States should continue to exert its strongest efforts in behalf of the establishment of international control of nuclear energy.

(2) "The abolition of war by the continued growth of effective international mechanisms for the peaceful adjustment of the mutual problems of nations. We fully recognize that this will require each nation of the world to sacrifice some of its sovereignty and some of its temporary selfish interests to the common good, but we count this a small price to pay for world peace.

(3) "The encouragement of tolerance and understanding of other peoples of the world and the combatting of hate and bigotry against races, creeds and nations.

(4) "The establishment and continuance of a domestic policy that will insure the use of scientific discoveries for the achievement of a better life for all, and that will prevent their exploitation for exclusively selfish needs.

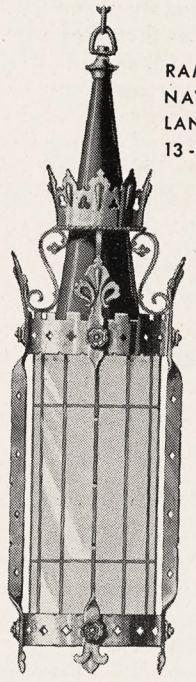
(5) "The assurance, both within the United States and throughout the world, of freedom of speech, freedom of religion, freedom of research and freedom of communication.

(6) "The recognition, by all citizens, of personal responsibility for the wise and moral use of the knowledge which science has found."

The resolutions commended the U. S. state department "for the excellent start toward the international control of atomic energy which was offered by the Acheson-Lilienthal Report; the President and Mr. Bernard Baruch "for the further efforts which are being made in this direction within the United Nations atomic energy commission; and the Congress "for the passage of an atomic energy control bill which is generally consistent with the beliefs and aims that guide us."

It was further set forth that "we recognize that none of these actions is perfect, that modification of the various plans and laws will probably be required in the near future, but we firmly believe that they represent movements toward objectives shaped by the best desires of mankind."

A proposed plan of action to get the new organization's objectives speedily under way, which also was unanimously adopted, contained these three cardinal points:



(1) "To hold conferences at which religious leaders and scientists may exchange views on the moral and social implications of atomic energy developments and join in common action in accordance with decisions at those conferences.

(2) "To lend our efforts to an educational program on atomic energy and its use, to be conducted through the churches, synagogues, schools, colleges, and civic organizations of the Philadelphia area, as well as through the public press and radio.

(3) "To sponsor a permanent Philadelphia organization through which all who agree with our beliefs and aims may contribute to and participate in a continued educational program regarding the social and moral implications of scientific discoveries."

Unqualified support of the principles enunciated by the new conference has been expressed by Dr. Albert Einstein, world-renowned physicist and promulgator of the theory of relativity. Revealing that he has aligned himself with other members of the American Association of Scientists in an appeal for cooperation with churchmen against the threat of the atom bomb, Dr. Einstein declared himself wholeheartedly in favor of a world organization to support and maintain peace.

"I feel grateful to our fellow

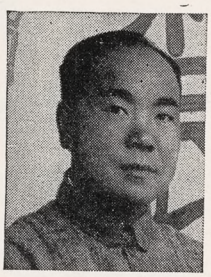
Craftsmanship and Correct Lighting

Graceful form and fine craftsmanship, coupled with the latest features of correct lighting make this lantern a favorite among clergy and church architects alike. If you have a problem in church lighting, and are interested in reading a searching analysis of fundamental principles and latest practice in Church Lighting, write for a copy of our new free illustrated booklet.

RAMBUSCH
Designers Decorators and Craftsmen
2 West 45th St. ~ New York 19, N.Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

scientists in Philadelphia, and to the religious groups," Dr. Einstein said, "for having united to bring to public attention the influence of the atomic bomb and other recently developed means of mass-destruction on world security and the fate of humanity."



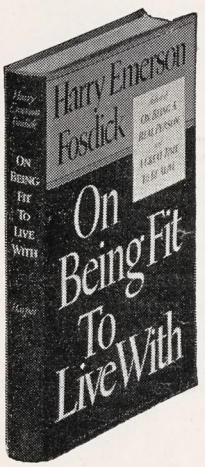
The Nobel Prize winner declared that "the policy of a democracy like ours is and must be responsive to public opinion, and public opinion can be strong and right only if the people are fully informed on the situation in which we find ourselves.

"What is the essence of the present situation? Hitherto the controversies between nations have been solved by war or the threat of war. This was morally bad, for questions of right and wrong can never be solved by appeal to force. It always has been an injust and impractical way.

"Now, with the new inventions in military technology, this method becomes disastrous physically as well as morally. A new war would mean the killing of a great part of the population of all nations involved. To prevent this, we have to build up an international structure to create security against war and to decide international controversies in a peaceful way."

Worked Among Lepers

Nanchang, China: — Readers of THE WITNESS are familiar with the work done with orphans and refugees under the direction of the Rev. Kimber Den. Not all may be aware that he is an authority on leprosy and was founder and for many years the superintendent of a leprosy colony here, financed by the American and Chinese Mission to Lepers. This noted clergyman is still actively interested in the work of these societies and gave up his work with lepers to carry on his war and post-war relief activities only after being satisfied that the colony was in competent hands.



Book of Remembrance

New York:—The Golden Book of Remembrance, in which are inscribed the names of individuals and organizations that contributed to the nave building campaign, was dedicated by Bishop Manning on November 17 at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. Several hundred thousand donors are represented by the 60,000 separate listings. The book is displayed within the Golden Shrine, especially designed for the purpose.

Students Unchurched

Berkeley, Calif.: — A community of 40,000 young people, 15,000 of whom were admittedly unchurched, would challenge anyone seriously concerned about the missionary program of the Church. This was the problem reported to the meeting October 30 of the college commission of the diocese of California, convened at St. Margaret's House under the chairmanship of Mrs. Alfred Tyson. 3,600 students in the diocese claim membership in the Episcopal Church. Of these it is estimated that nearly 1,500 are at the University of California at Berkeley and that another 1,000 or more are at Stanford. The others are enrolled at Mills, San Jose State, San Francisco State, San Mateo Junior College, Salinas Junior College, and the University of San Francisco. The annual student vesper service was held November 10th at Grace Cathedral. The preacher was the Rev. George Hall, acting chaplain at Stanford University. Reports from the several campuses indicated active programs underway, and on the basis of these reports a budget of $2,500 was drawn up for submission to the executive council of the diocese.

A Recommended Book for Christmas

This Book Has Received a Three Star Rating by THE WITNESS

ON BEING FIT TO LIVE WITH

By HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK

The Minister Emeritus of Riverside Church and the NBC National Vespers hour gives some of the finest and most helpful sermons of his long career, illustrating a mature, practical and triumphant religion. $2.00

HARPER & BROTHERS

49 East 33rd Street, New York 16, N.Y.

Keep YOUR Organization ON TOP Financially

This is easy the GILL-BURN WAY - America's Largest Merchandising Club House offers TEN NATIONALLY KNOWN ITEMS - Electrical Appliances - Sheets - Towels - Bed Spreads - Nylon Hose - Blankets - Umbrellas - Pressure Cookers - Raincoats.

Women's organizations all over the country are using our Merchandising Club Plans to raise money this quick, easy, fascinating way. Write at once for our FREE Merchandising Club Plan Catalog. No Obligation - Send Name - Organization - Address - Number of Members. Write to Dept. L5.

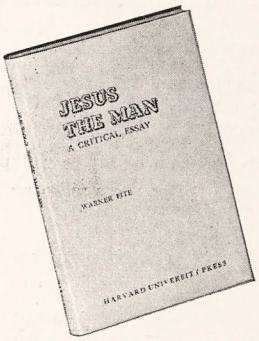
CHARLES S. BURNS ASSOCIATES

308 N. FIFTH STREET, READING PENNA.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BOOKS RECOMMENDED FOR CHRISTMAS

The Books Announced Here All Received Either Three or Two Star Rating by THE WITNESS



HOW TO READ THE BIBLE

By EDGAR J. GOODSPEED

A renowned scholar of Biblical literature reveals the Bible as a library of eighty volumes full of profoundly exciting drama, history, poetry. Dr. Goodspeed makes everyone want to read the Bible for the sheer joy of good reading.

$2.50

THE JOHN C. WINSTON COMPANY
Winston Building Philadelphia

JESUS THE MAN

A Critical Essay

By WARNER FITE

A discriminating study which views Jesus in the setting to which he belonged, and as one among other geniuses of human history. It is notable for its independent and illuminating evaluation of the character and personality of Jesus. $2.50

HARVARD UNIVERSITY PRESS
Cambridge 38, Massachusetts

THE GOD WE WORSHIP

By ROGER HAZELTON

"Within the churches there are a host of people for whom worship is a dull and listless routine. Outside of the churches many wistful folk wonder whether there is something in worship which might bring them power and poise for living. For the sake of both groups a fundamental rethinking of the nature and reality of worship is called for—and given in this very thoughtful, persuasive and beautifully written book by a writer of great spiritual acumen."—Religious Book Club Bulletin. $2.00

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY
60 Fifth Avenue New York 11

TO THEE WE SING

By CATHERINE AND FRANK HERZEL

Unique and spritely narrative distinguish this book from other hymn histories. Describes favorite hymns and famous hymnists in intimate detail. Hymn writers from John of Damascus, through Wesley, Luther, Havergal to Fosdick, Masefield and other modern writers are featured. Written for all ages—all denominations. "An important book for young people"—THE BANNER. "An inspiring, workmanlike job"—CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Cloth bound. 254 pages. Price, $2.00

At Your Religious Bookstore or

MUHLENBERG PRESS
1228 Spruce Street Philadelphia 7, Pa.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN BASIC ENGLISH

No better Christmas gift for any Christian home. "Simplicity is the essence of genius, and you not only put the New Testament within reach of a larger reading public, but have clarified many passages for the critical."—Dr. Ralph W. Sockman.

At All Bookstores $3.00

Basic English is a simplified form of English, relying on a vocabulary of 850 words. For this translation, 50 special Bible words and 100 words for the reading of verse have been added.

E. P. DUTTON & CO.
New York

THE ILLUSTRATED EDITION OF THE NEW TESTAMENT

in Ronald Knox's translation with
30 FULL COLOR PLATES

reproducing the finest pictures in the Art galleries of America and England. Chapter heads, initials and endpapers from woodcuts in 14th and 15th century manuscripts.

506 pages — $5.00

SHEED & WARD
63 Fifth Avenue, New York 3

TOWARD A BETTER WORLD

Edited by
BISHOP WILLIAM SCARLETT

Everyone who wants to do his part should read this enlightening explanation of present-day problems, and suggestions on how to solve them, written by Arthur Holly Compton, Eleanor Roosevelt, Sumner Welles, Reinhold Niebuhr, and ten other equally prominent Christian laymen and clergymen. $2.00

THE JOHN C. WINSTON COMPANY
Winston Building Philadelphia

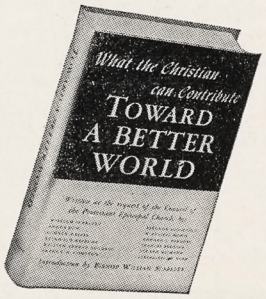
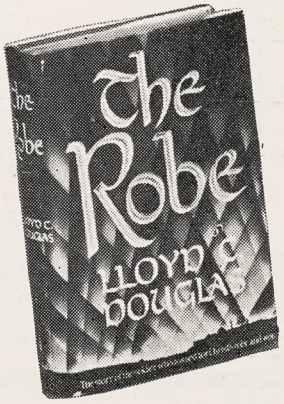
THE ROBE

By LLOYD C. DOUGLAS



Americans all over the world are reading this story of the soldier who gambled for Christ's robe and won.



"Mr. Douglas's inspiring word-picture of the rising tide of Christian faith in the months following the crucifixion is one never to be forgotten. . . . One of the most thought-provoking and outstanding novels of this or any other time."—Philadelphia Inquirer. Price $2.75

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY
2 Park Street, Boston 7, Mass.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

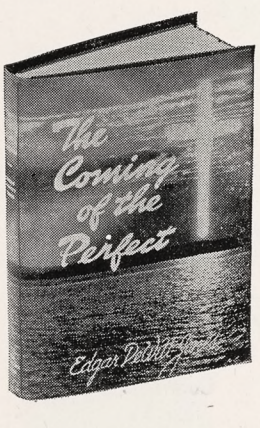
Book for Lent

Berkeley, Calif.: — Prof. Charles F. Whiston is the editor of the Presiding Bishop's book for Lent, 1947, Christian Perfection to be published as usual by Harpers. It is a translation of some of the works of Archbishop Fenelon made by Mrs. M. W. Stillman of New York, from which Mr. Whiston has made selections and written an extensive introduction.

Acolytes Festival

Geneva, N. Y.:—An acolytes' festival was held here at St. Peter's the afternoon of October 27, with 135 acolytes and priests of the diocese of Rochester in the procession. The service was conducted by the Rev. Norman A. Remmel, rector of the parish, assisted by the Rev. Frederick Dorst, rector at Newark, and the Ven. Charles B. Persell Jr., archdeacon of the diocese. The sermon was by the Rev. Chauncey F. Minnick of Hobart College.

Christian Council



Shanghai (RNS):—Representatives of 25 Protestant church bodies and organizations will meet here December 3-11 for the biennial convention of the National Christian Council of China. Majority of the delegates will be Chinese. General Secretary is Methodist Bishop W. Y. Chen, while the chairman is a woman, Dr. Nu Yi-fang, president of Ginling College for Women. A member of the People's Political Council, Dr. Wu has held the chairmanship since 1937.

Main theme of the December meeting will be the relationship of the Church to the nation. Five topics selected for major emphasis are: (1) the Church and its environment in national life; (2) the evangelistic task of the Church; (3) the inner life of the Church; (4) leadership of the Church; (5) organization of cooperative work.

Bishop Chen Speaks

Newark:—"Never have there been more tremendous problems or greater opportunities for the Church in China than there are today," declared Bishop Robin Chen of Anking at the monthly meeting of the Auxiliary of the diocese of Newark, held at the diocesan house on November 6. He was introduced by Bishop Ludlow who had been his teacher of history at Boone University some years ago.

Bishop Chen spent the war years in Free China and crossed the Japanese lines many times to bring

A Recommended Book for Christmas

This Book Has Received a Three Star Rating by THE WITNESS

THE COMING OF THE PERFECT

By Edgar DeWitt Jones

A new volume of stimulating sermons, representing the most mature thinking of a famous author and preacher, permeated with an inspiring philosophy to help Christians through our troublesome times. $2.00

At Your Religious Store

THE BETHANY PRESS

2700 Pine Blvd., St. Louis 3, Mo.

THE CHURCH PENSION FUND

and its subsidiaries

administered for the benefit of the Church

THE CHURCH HYMNAL CORPORATION

Publishers of The Hymnal; Book of Common Prayer; A Prayer Book for Soldiers and Sailors; Book of Offices for Certain Occasions; Stowe's Clerical Directory.

THE CHURCH LIFE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost insurance and annuity contracts available to the clergy, lay officials and active lay workers of the Church, either voluntary or paid, and their immediate families.

THE CHURCH PROPERTIES FIRE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost fire and windstorm insurance on property owned by or closely affiliated with the Church, and on the residences and personal property of the clergy.

Further information available by addressing any of the above at

20 Exchange Place New York

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

relief to sufferers. He told the meeting that many in China are praying for a world peace that has underlying it the faith and brotherhood of Christ.

French Election

Paris (wireless to RNS): — Since the Popular Republicans, composed mostly of Roman Catholics, lost their place as the leading party to the Communists, it is considered likely that the Communists will start a campaign against Church schools and adopt other anti-religious measures. The Popular Republicans lost first place in the election for the National Assembly in spite of last-minute appeals by Roman Catholic leaders throughout the country.

Legislation

Newark, N. J.:—An interdenominational conference on legislation will be held here November 24-25 "to help Christian leaders keep abreast of current political, legislative and social questions." American foreign policy will be featured at a mass meeting on the 24th. The meeting is sponsored by the state council of churches.

Gift to Church

Decatur, Ala.:—Mrs. W. B. Edmundson of this city recently gave $7,000 to St. John's Church to aid in enlarging the church plant. This is about half the sum needed to carry out the plans made necessary by the growth of this TVA city.

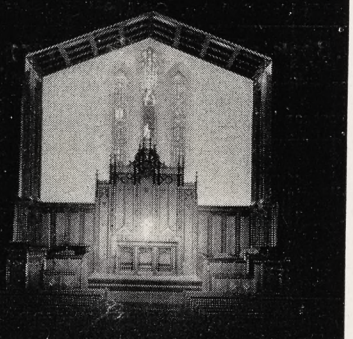
Girls Friendly

New York:—Miss Doris Wilson of Pittsburgh has been appointed a field worker for the Girls' Friendly Society. She is an M. A. in Christian education from Columbia and has a B. S. degree from Tuskegee. While at Columbia she lived at Windham House and did her field work by organizing GFS chapters in Harlem parishes. Part of her work now will be to interpret the organization and to assist in organizing branches in churches that are predominantly attended by Negroes. She is at the moment on a field trip in Virginia and South Carolina.

Adult Education

Birmingham, Ala.: — Adult education is the emphasis of a joint program of the Auxiliary and the department of education in Alabama. Leadership institutes were recently held in Mobile and this city of a week each; others of two days each were held at Montgomery and Florence. Meanwhile the young people are devoting their fall meetings to the same subject under the direction of Mrs. John Crump, secretary of education of the diocese.

Meets Freshmen



Tuscaloosa, Ala.: — Bishop Carpenter was the guest of honor at the University of Alabama on October 22 at a dinner for freshmen who are Episcopalians. There were eighty present. The Rev. John Turner of the Advent, Birmingham, diocesan chairman of the college work committee, was one of the speakers.

Wedding Declaration

Napa, Calif.:—At a recent meeting of the convocations of the diocese of Sacramento it was voted to ask all publishers to include the wedding declaration, approved by General Convention, in all future wedding booklets and parish registers. The declaration is as follows:

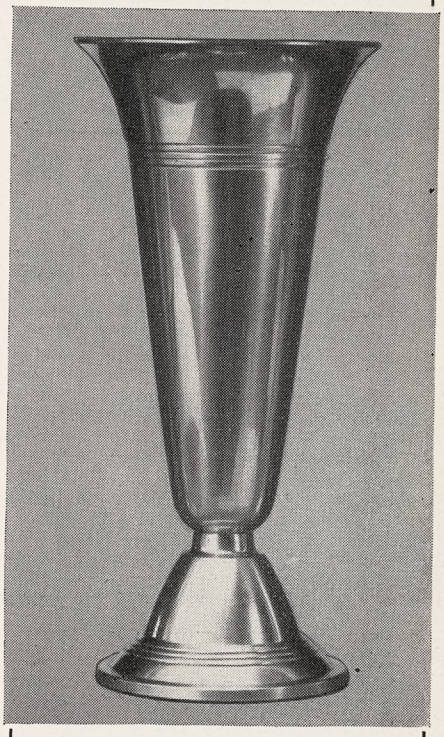
"We A. B. and C. D. desiring to receive the blessing of holy matrimony in the Church, do solemnly declare that we hold marriage to be a lifelong union of husband and wife as it is set forth in the form of solemnization of matrimony in the Book of Common Prayer. We believe it is for the purpose of mutual fellowship, encouragement, and understanding, for the procreation (if it may be) of children, and the safeguarding and benefit of society. And we do engage ourselves, so far as in us lies, to make our utmost effort to establish this relationship and to seek God's help thereto."

CHANCEL ALTERATIONS

Pews - Church Woodwork

Ossit Church Furniture Co.

Janesville, Wisconsin



SINCE 1867

GORHAM

ECCLESIASTICAL WARES

Beauty • Quality • Correctness

ALTAR APPOINTMENTS

ILLUSTRATIVE of the Gorham selection of Ecclesiastical Appointments, is the above Vase No. V4444 made of brass with thread decoration. Price $22.50 each (subject to change without notice). Highest quality, lasting beauty and liturgical correctness characterize all Gorham wares.

Converting rapidly from War goods, we are already currently producing:

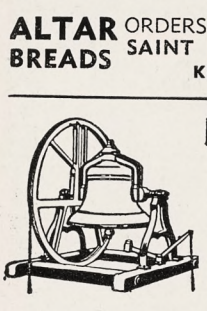
ALMS BASONS HONOR ROLLS, BRONZE
ALTAR CROSSES CANDLESTICKS, BRASS
CHALICES MEMORIAL TABLETS, BRONZE
ALTAR DESKS PATENS VASES CIBORIA
COMMUNION SETS BAPTISMAL BOWLS

Everything for the Church in Bronze

Other items soon will be available. Center your choice upon GORHAM, for the traditional dignity of design and mastercraftsmanship in execution which have distinguished our wares for 115 years.

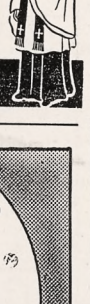
Gorham

70 Adelaide Ave. Providence, 7, R. I.



America's Leading Silversmiths since 1831

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.



Write us for
Organ Information
AUSTIN ORGANS, Inc.
Hartford, Conn.

Memorial Windows
In accordance with the best traditions of the craft. Notable installations in forty states and five foreign countries.
Illustrated material on request
The D'Ascenzo Studios
founded 1896
1604 Summer Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

ALTAR BREADS ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED
SAINT MARY'S CONVENT
KENOSHA • WISCONSIN

MENEELY BELL CO.
22 RIVER ST., TROY, N. Y.
BELLS

R. GEISSLER, INC.
71-79 W. 45th St., New York 19, N. Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE·BRASS·SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS
EST. 1877

VESTMENTS
Cassocks - Surplices - Stoles - Scarves
Silks - Altar Cloths - Embroideries
Priest Cloaks - Rabats - Collars
Custom Tailoring for Clergymen
1837 Church Vestment Makers Over One Hundred Years 1946

COX SONS & VINING, Inc.
131 East 23rd Street, New York 10, N.Y.

Need a LAXATIVE?
Black-Draught is,
1-Usually prompt
2-Usually thorough
3-Always economical

25 to 40 doses only 25¢
Get BLACK-DRAUGHT
CAUTION: USE ONLY AS DIRECTED

Chinese Confirmed

Columbus, Ga.:—Eight officers of the Chinese army were confirmed by Bishop Walker at Fort Benning, Ga., presented by Chaplain Stanley P. Gasek. There are thirty Chinese officers at the Fort who are here to learn our methods and will establish a new military school in China on their return. On October 27 they visited Alabama Tech at Auburn, attending service at the Church of the Holy Innocents in the morning and later visiting fraternity houses, guided by members of the Canterbury Club.

Clergy Notes

(Continued from page 2)

HOLMES, ROBERT C., of Bayfield, Ontario, became minister in charge of St. James', Detroit, on November 1st.

McMILLEN, W. E. V., recently retired as rector of St. Matthew's, Cleveland, O., died on Nov. 5.

McLAUGHLAN, JOHN D., retired dean of St. Mark's Cathedral, Seattle, Wash., died after a long illness. Funeral was held at the cathedral October 26.

MURPHY, GEORGE H., was ordained priest by Bishop McKinstry on October 26 at St. Andrew's, Wilmington, Del. where he is curate.

MURRAY, REV. FREDERICK R., formerly rector of Trinity Church, Brandford, Conn., to be Rector of St. Paul's Church, Elkins Park, Pa.

OTT, REV. T. GORDON, formerly of Nova Scotia, to be assistant at Holy Trinity Church, Philadelphia, Pa.

PAULSON, RAYMOND H., formerly rector of St. Paul's, Saginaw, Mich., is now rector at Muscatine, Iowa.

PAYNTER, REV. HENRY S., formerly assistant at St. George's Church, Ardmore, Pa., to be assistant at Church of St. John the Evangelist, Lansdowne, Pa.

STIMSON, REV. WILLIAM B., formerly chaplain, U. S. army, to be rector of St. Andrew's Church, Yardley, Pa.

VAN DER HIEL, REV. PETER C., JR., formerly rector of St. James' Church, Downington, Pa., to be rector of St. Paul's Church, Chester, Pa.

WICKERSHAM, GEORGE H., 2nd, formerly chaplain, U. S. navy, to be rector of All Saints' Church, Norristown, Pa.

WILCOX, ALBERT F., formerly rector Church of Holy Comforter, Aronimink, Pa., to be rector St. Mark's Church, Honeybrook.

WILCOX, STANLEY V., formerly rector of St. Paul's, Chester, Pa., to be vicar of St. George's, Ardmore, Pa.

WILLIAMS, FREDERIC P., was ordained priest on Oct. 19 by Bishop Block at St. Mark's, Berkeley, Calif., where he is curate.

POSITION OFFERED

Wanted: Young, liberal Associate Rector to specialize in calling and young people's work. $3200 per year. Rev. David H. Weeks, Lockport and 10th Streets, Niagara Falls, N. Y.

A REAL OPPORTUNITY

The rector of a large and aggressive middle-western parish desires to engage a well qualified associate. Parish offers comfortable home, car allowance and good salary. Is a Prayer Book Parish and seeks one who will fit into that picture. Box A, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATOR

Trained Religious Educator desires to make a change. Box G, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

POSITION WANTED

Trained young Churchwoman desires position as assistant to rector. Box B, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

POSITION WANTED

Clergyman, 39, married but without children, seeks position as assistant in New York or within commuting distance. Will also be glad to do supply work until located. Box H, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

Everything for the Episcopal Church
but vestments
A broad statement but we'd like to prove it.
Ammidon and Company
Horace L. Varian
Horace L. Varian, Jr.
31 South Frederick Street
Baltimore 2, Maryland

PURE IRISH LINENS NOW IN STOCK
for all Church needs, supplies constantly arriving, good qualities, also fine cottons. Samples free.
Marv Fawcett Company
Plainfield, N. J. Box 146

CATHEDRAL STUDIOS
Washington & London, England. Linens and materials by the yard, surplices, albs, Altar Linens, stoles, burses & veils. Materials by the yard. See my NEW BOOK "CHURCH EMBROIDERY" & CHURCH VESTMENTS a complete instruction. 128 pages, 95 illus. Price $5.67. And my HANDBOOK for ALTAR GUILDS, price 50c. Miss L. V. Mackrille, 11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington 15, D.C. 30 minutes from U. S. Treasury. Tel. Wisconsin 2752.

SURPLICES — STOLES
VESTMENTS
CHURCH HANGINGS
ALTAR LINENS
CASSOCKS
CLERICAL SUITS — CLOAKS
RABATS—RABAT VESTS—COLLARS—SHIRTS
Choir Vestments in All Styles
Inquiries Invited
C. M. ALMY & SON, INC.
562 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.

The Payne-Spiers Studios Inc.
Studios at Paterson, New Jersey
Carved Wood
Chancel Renovations Church Furnishings
Murals Memorials Tablets
Stained Glass
·· Inquiries Solicited ··

VESTMENTS for CLERGY and CHOIR
Altar Linens . . . Embroideries . . .
Tailoring . . . Episcopal Flags. Send for Catalog
J. M. HALL, INC.
14 W. 40th St., New York - Tel. CH 4-3306
Office & Salesroom
"Orders taken for serge cassocks for J. Wippell & Co., Ltd."

Church Bulletins
Scriptural—Artistically Designed
Large Assortment—Self Selection
Lithographed—Special Days—General use
Be Sure to Get Our Free Catalog and samples
Ecclesiastical Art Press Dept. W
Louisville, 12, Ky.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

WALTER H. GRAY
Bishop Coadjutor of Connecticut

In the coming triennium, when, following the action of the 1946 General Convention, our Church is to study the fundamental questions of our faith and order, the Church Congress in the United States will seek to carry out its traditional function of providing a common meeting ground for clergy and laity of all schools of thought and churchmanship. It is our hope that through such gatherings there may be developed common agreements and generous understandings of differences, looking towards the General Convention of 1949.

Regional meetings will be held throughout the Church under the leadership of the regional chairmen, and a national meeting (the first since the ending of the war) will be held in Toledo, Ohio, April 22-24, 1947. To this meeting, all who are interested are invited to discuss "Authority and Freedom in Doctrine, Discipline, and Worship."

I am taking the liberty of calling this matter to the attention of the readers of THE WITNESS because these Church Congress meetings will offer opportunities for clergy and laity of widely-differing points of view to have the chance for joint discussion on basic questions. In this way, we can prepare to comply with the hope of the 1946 General Convention and adopt in 1949 "a statement of faith and order, in harmony with the Lambeth Quadrilateral, upon which the Protestant Episcopal Church in the U.S.A. is prepared to enter into intercommunion and to proceed toward organic federation with the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. or with any other interested Christian body."

* * *

REV. WILLIAM S. ANTHONY
St. John's Cathedral, Puerto Rico

It might prove helpful to your readers if you found it possible to print this brief letter. I have had dealings with a couple named Leslie and Mary Stollenwerck. On excellent medical authority I can state that they are both psychopathic. Financial assistance may not be any real assistance to them at all and the person who gives the assistance will certainly not get his money back. I believe they have now left Puerto Rico, perhaps for the States.

* * *

LEON C. W. KETTRING
Layman of Toledo, Ohio

The picture, The Christ of the Upper Room, on the cover of October 31 is very appealing. Most pictures of Jesus are not at all attractive. It stands to reason that he must have had a most powerful and appealing personality and striking appearance in order to have impressed people as he did. There is nothing effeminate about the Treadwell picture and yet there is a warmth and strength to it that is most appealing. I believe that if the picture could be reproduced in color so that the print could be framed it would become most popular. I believe that such a project would be most worthwhile no matter who would undertake it.

For my part I believe that Grace Treadwell has done a most worthy and beautiful piece of work. Since the work is not ancient but very modern in date it can very well encourage the work of more art in churches such as she writes about in her article in the same number.

ANSWER: We would like to take the occasion to say that the picture and the article were by the same person, Grace Treadwell. Our caption on the cover which gave the name "Jean" to the artist was an error on our part. Sorry.

* * *

MISS JANET KEMP
Churchwoman of Merrimac, Mass.

From William F. Corker's letter in THE WITNESS of November 6 I find that the October 17 issue contained one of Bill Spofford's intemporate and misleading articles. Please send me a copy. I want to cuss and gnash my teeth over this latest gem of Bill's bigotry. Bill is emotionally incapable of seeing certain subjects honestly and objectively.

ANSWER: Thanks for the unemotional letter condemning an article which the writer of the letter, on her own admission, has not yet read. The author of the article was W. B. Spofford Jr., for whose opinions W.B.S. Sr. is in no way responsible. Any similarity is purely coincidental, etc. etc.

* * *

CHARLES LEWIS BIGGS
Priest of Clearwater, Fla.

May I express my strong appreciation of The Christ of the Upper Room by Grace Treadwell on the cover of October 31. It is the picture of a human being possessed of the grace of humor, a sympathetic understanding, a power of insight and far-sight—and unafraid of impending death—all qualities which I for one conceive to bulk large in the synoptic gospels. The picture impresses me as infinitely truer to the life than the ascetic sufferer of the crucifix or the amiable vacuity of the sacred heart.

* * *

MR. E. L. JONES
Layman of New York

I am grateful to Prof. Shepherd for his comments on the poster sent out by national headquarters picturing the group at a baptism. I do think that the picture presents the service as it is too often conducted in our churches, with parents and sponsors unaware of the significance of the service. But as Prof. Shepherd points out there is no excuse for our national officers to perpetuate this sentimental version of the service.

Saint Mary's-in-the-Mountains
An Episcopal college preparatory boarding school for fifty girls. Piano and Choral instruction. Art. Domestic Science. Mountain hikes and winter sports afforded by location in White Mountains. Horseback and Skiing lessons. New gymnasium. For catalogue address
Miss Mary Harley Jenks, Principal
Littleton, New Hampshire

Virginia Episcopal School
Lynchburg, Virginia
Prepares boys for colleges and university. Splendid environment and excellent corps of teachers. High standard in scholarship and athletics. Healthy and beautiful location in the mountains of Virginia.
For catalogue apply to
George L. Barton, Jr., Ph.D. Headmaster.
Box 408

SCHOOLS

The Hospital of Saint Barnabas and the University of Newark offer a full course in NURSING
to qualified High School graduates. Scholarships available. Classes enter in February and September
Apply to
Director of Nursing
HOSPITAL OF SAINT BARNABAS
685 High Street Newark, N. J.

DE VEAUX SCHOOL
FOUNDED 1852
A Church school for boys. Thorough preparation for college. Military system of student government, developing sense of responsibility. Charges for grades seven and eight $1000; grades nine through twelve $1050. For catalog, address THE HEADMASTER, DeVeaux School, Niagara Falls, New York.

HOLDERNESS
In the White Mountains. College Preparatory and General Courses. Music and Crafts. For boys 12-19. All sports including riding. 200 acres of woods. New fireproof building. Individual attention. Home atmosphere.
Rev. Edric A. Weld, Rector
Box W. Plymouth, N. H.

MARGARET HALL
Under Sisters of St. Helena
(Episcopal)
Small country boarding and day school for girls, from primary through high school. Accredited college preparatory. Modern building recently thoroughly renovated includes gymnasium and swimming pool. Campus of six acres with ample playground space, hockey field and tennis court. Riding. Board and Tuition $800. For catalog, address: Sister Rachel, Prin. O.S.H., Box A. Versailles, Kentucky.

FORK UNION
MILITARY ACADEMY
An Honor Christian School with the highest academic rating. Upper School prepares for university or business. ROTC. Every modern equipment. Junior School from six years. Housemother. Separate building. Catalogue. Dr. J. J. Wicker, Fork Union, Virginia.

CARLETON COLLEGE
Laurence M. Gould, D.Sc., President
Carleton is a co-educational liberal arts college of limited enrollment and is recognized as the Church College of Minnesota.
Address: Director of Admissions
CARLETON COLLEGE
Northfield Minnesota

KEMPER HALL
KENOSHA, WISCONSIN
Boarding and day school for girls offering thorough college preparation and training for purposeful living. Study of the Fine Arts encouraged. Complete sports program. Junior School department. Beautiful lake shore campus. Under direction of the Sisters of St. Mary. For catalogue address: Box WT

LENOX SCHOOL
A Church School in the Berkshire Hills for boys 12-18 emphasizing Christian ideals and character through simplicity of plant and equipment, moderate tuition, the cooperative self-help system, and informal, personal relationships among boys and faculty.
Rev. Robert L. Curry, Headmaster
Lenox Massachusetts

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

THE GRATITUDE of a LITTLE CHILD

Is anything in the world more touching?

No thanks we can ever give will have the simple and utter sincerity of this child's. For he has been healed of leprosy! His fear assuaged . . . his loneliness banished . . . his emptiness filled . . . his rejection countermanded. He is safe and loved in the missionary leprosy colony at Chandkhuri, India.

Will you make thankful another child like him, whom Christ loves, at this season of your own Thanksgiving?

Send your gift today through the American Mission to Lepers which aids 100 pieces of work of many denominations and no denomination including the Episcopal ones at Cape Mount, Liberia and Palo Seco, Canal Zone.

American Mission to Lepers, Incorporated
File 1-N, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York 10, N.Y.

Gentlemen: I enclose my Thanksgiving gift of $_____ wishing it to merit the gratitude of a child with leprosy.

Name_____

Address (Street or box) _____

(Town and Zone) _____ (State) _____

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The WITNESS

10¢ A COPY

LIBRARY COPY

NOVEMBER 28, 1946

O YE WATERS BLESS YE THE LORD . . . . .

ARTICLE BY FRANCIS O. AYRES

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

THE CATHEDRAL OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE
NEW YORK CITY
Sundays: 8, 9, 11, Holy Communion; 10, Morning Prayer; 4, Evening Prayer; Sermons 11 and 4.
Weekdays: 7:30, 8 (also 9:15 Holy Days and 10, Wednesdays), Holy Communion; 9, Morning Prayer; 5, Evening Prayer. Open daily 7 A.M. to 6 P.M.

GRACE CHURCH, NEW YORK
Broadway at 10th St.
Rev. Louis W. Pitt, D.D., Rector
Daily: 12:30 except Mondays and Saturdays.
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M. and 4:30 P. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion 11:45 A. M.

THE HEAVENLY REST, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue at 90th Street
Rev. Henry Darlington, D.D.
Sundays: Holy Communion, 8 and 10 A. M.; Morning Service and Sermon, 11 A. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion, 11 A. M.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S CHURCH
NEW YORK
Park Avenue and 51st Street
Rev. Geo. Paull T. Sargent, D.D., Rector
8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evensong. Special Music.
Weekdays: Holy Communion Wednesday at 8:00 A. M.
Thursdays and Saints' Days at 10:30 A. M.
The Cnurch is open daily for prayer.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH
Madison Ave. at 71st St., New York
The Rev. H. W. B. Donegan, D.D., Rector
8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
9:30 A. M. Church School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evening Prayer and Sermon.
Wed., 7:45 A. M., Thurs., 12 Noon Holy Communion.

THE CHURCH OF THE EPIPHANY
1317 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Charles W. Sheerin, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 A. M.; 8 P. M.
Daily: 12:05.
Thursdays: 11:00 and 12:05.

ST. THOMAS' CHURCH, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue and 53rd Street
Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, S.T.D., Rector
Sun 8, 11, 4. Daily 8:30 HC; Thurs. 11 HC., Daily except Sat. 12:10.

THE CHURCH OF THE ASCENSION
Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street, New York
The Rev. Roscoe Thornton Foust, Rector
Sundays: 8 a.m. Holy Communion.
11 a.m. Morning Prayer, Sermon.
8 p.m. Evening Song and Sermon; Service of Music (1st Sun. in month).
Daily: Holy Communion, 8 a.m. Tues., Thurs., Sat.; 11 a.m. Mon., Wed., Fri.
5:30 Vespers, Tues. through Friday.
This Church is open all day and all night.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL
Buffalo, New York
Shelton Square
The Very Rev. Edward R. Welles, M.A., Dean
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30 and 11.
Daily: 12:05 noon—Holy Communion.
Tuesday: 7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
Wednesday: 11:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH
Atlanta, Georgia
435 Peachtree Street
The Rev. J. Milton Richardson, Rector
9:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
10:45 A. M. Sunday School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Prayer and Sermon.
6:00 P. M. Young People's Meetings.

The WITNESS
For Christ and His Church

EDITORIAL BOARD: Frederick C. Grant, Editor; Arthur Lichtenberger, Chairman; William B. Spofford, Managing Editor; Lane W. Barton, Beverly M. Boyd, Dillard H. Brown, Roscoe T. Foust, Charles K. Gilbert, Hugh D. McCandless, Howard Chandler Robbins, William K. Russell, Sydney A. Temple Jr., Joseph H. Titus, William M. Weber.

★

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS: D. B. Aldrich, J. A. Bell, T. S. Carruthers, Adelaide Case, G. K. Chalmers, E. M. Cross, G. M. Day, Angus Dun, A. W. Farlander, T. P. Ferris, J. F. Fletcher, John Gass, C. H. Gesner, C. L. Glenn, G. C. Graham, J. M. Groton, G. I. Hiller, I. P. Johnson, T. R. Ludlow, C. S. Martin, R. C. Miller, Walter Mitchell, A. T. Mollegen, E. L. Parsons, E. L. Pennington, Rose Phelps, L. W. Pitt, Otis Rice, Cyril Richardson, Paul Roberts, V. D. Scudder, W. M. Sharp, W. B. Sperry, C. W. Sprouse, D. S. Stark, W. B. Stevens, J. W. Suter, S. E. Sweet, Alexander Zabriskie.

★

THE WITNESS is published weekly from September 15th to June 15th inclusive, with the exception of the first week in January and semi-monthly from June 15th to September. 15th by the Episcopal Church Publishing Co. on behalf of the Church Publishing Association, Inc. Samuel Thorne, President; Charles A. Houston, Vice-President; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, Treasurer; Frederic D. H. Gilbert, Secretary.

★

The subscription price is $3.00 a year; in bundles for sale in parishes the magazine sells for 10c a copy, we will bill quarterly at 5c a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter, March 6, 1939, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879.

NOVEMBER 28, 1946
Vol. XXIX. No. 52

CLERGY NOTES

BELLISS, F. C. BENSON, rector of Christ Church, Puyallup, Wash., becomes the associate rector of All Saints', Pasadena, on December 1.

BROWN, CLYDE, missioner of the diocese of Washington, becomes rector of St. Andrew's, Barberton, Ohio, December 1.

GASEK, STANLEY P., former army chaplain, is now locum tenens at Grace Church, Utica, N. Y.

MARKGRAF, GUSTAV K., rector of Trinity, Oakland, Calif., becomes rector of Holy Trinity, Richmond, Calif., December 1.

MILSTEAD, ANDREW D., former navy chaplain, is now rector of the Nativity, Maysville, Ky.

TINSLEY, BEN W., rector of St. Matthew's, Charlestown, W. Va., has accepted the rectorship of Trinity, Owensboro, Kentucky.

TWINEM, L. L., Sharon, Conn., is now assistant at St. Stephen's, Pittsfield, Mass.

WALTHALL, W. SHELBY, formerly vicar of St. Paul's, New Smyrna Beach, Fla., is now vicar of St. Luke's, La Union, and St. John's, La Mesa, N. M.

WHITMAN, ROBERT S. S., former army chaplain, is now chaplain at Williams and Mary College, Williamsburg, Va.

WIESBAUER, HENRY H. F., canon of St. Paul's Cathedral, Buffalo, N. Y., will become director of pastoral counseling of the institute of pastoral care, St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston, on January 1.

WILLIAMS, BENEDICT, rector of Trinity, Toledo, Ohio, becomes rector of St. Stephen's, Sewickley, Pa., on January 1st.

CALVARY CHURCH
Shady & Walnut Aves.
Pittsburgh
The Rev. Lauriston L. Scaife, S.T.D., Rector
Sundays 8, 9:30, 11:00 and 8:00.
Holy Communion—Mondays, Wednesdays, Fridays 7:30 A.M.
Holy Communion—Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays 8:00 A.M.
Holy Days and Fridays 10:00 A.M

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

CHRIST CHURCH CATHEDRAL
Main and Church Sts., Hartford, Conn.
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30, 10:05, 11 A. M., 8 P. M.
Weekdays: Holy Communion—Monday and Thursday, 9 A. M.; Tuesday, Friday and Saturday, 8 A. M.; Wednesday, 7:00 and 11:00 A. M. Noonday Service, daily 12:15 P. M.

CHRIST CHURCH
Cambridge
REV. GARDINER M. DAY, RECTOR
REV. FREDERIC B. KELLOGG, CHAPLAIN
Sunday Services, 8:00, 9:00, 10:00 and 11:15 A. M.
Weekdays: Wed. 8 and 11 A. M. Thurs., 7:30 A. M.

TRINITY CHURCH
Miami
Rev. G. Irvine Hiller, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services 8, 9:30, 11 A. M.

TRINITY CATHEDRAL
Military Park, Newark, N. J.
The Very Rev. Arthur C. Lichtenberger, Dean
Sunday Services: 8:30, 9:30 (All Saints' Chapel, 24 Rector St.), 11 and 4:30 p.m.
Week Days: Holy Communion Wednesday and Holy Days, 12:00 noon, Friday, 8 a.m. Intercessions Thursday, Friday, 12:10; Organ Recital Tuesday, 12:10.
The Cathedral is open daily for prayer.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
Montecito and Bay Place
OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA
Rev. Calvin Barkow, D.D., Rector
Sundays: 8 A. M., Holy Communion; 11 A. M., Church School; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer and Sermon.
Wednesdays: 10 A. M., Holy Communion; 10:45, Rector's Study Class.

GRACE CHURCH
Corner Church and Davis Streets
ELMIRA, N. Y.
Rev. Frederick T. Henstridge, Rector
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M.; 4:30 P. M.
Daily: Tuesday and Thursday, 7:30 A. M.
Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Holy Days, 9:30 A. M.
Other Services Announced

ST. MARK'S CHURCH
Texas Avenue and Cotton Street
SHREVEPORT, LA.
Rev. Frank E. Walters, Rector
Rev. Harry Wintermeyer, Curate
Sundays: Holy Communion, 7:30; 9:25 A. M., Family Service; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer.
Holy Communion, first Sunday. 6 P. M., Young Churchmen.

CHRIST CHURCH
Nashville, Tennessee
Rev. Peyton Randolph Williams
7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
9:30 and 11 A. M.—Church School.
11 A. M.—Morning Service and Sermon.
6 P. M.—Young People's Meetings.
Thursdays and Saints' Days—Holy Communion, 10 A. M.

GRACE CHURCH
105 Main Street, Orange, N. J.
Lane Wickham Barton, Rector
SUNDAYS
8:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M.—Church School.
11:00 A. M.—Morning Prayer and Sermon. (Holy Communion first Sunday each month)
7:00 P. M.—Young People's Fellowship.

CHRIST CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA
Second Street above Market
Cathedral of Democracy
Founded 1695
Rev. E. Felix Kloman, S.T.D., Rector
Rev. Peter M. Sturtevant, Associate Rector
Sunday Services: 9:30 and 11 A.M.
Church School: 10:00 A.M.
Weekdays: Wed. noon and 12:30.
Saints' Days: 12 noon.
This Church is Open Every Day

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

VOL. XXIX. No. 52. The WITNESS NOVEMBER 28, 1946

For Christ and His Church

Publication Office, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago 37, Ill. Editorial Office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

United Church Women Denounce Racial Segregation

Meeting Also Takes Progressive Position On International and Domestic Questions

By Religious News Service

Grand Rapids, Mich.: — The United Council of Church Women, meeting here in biennial convention under the chairmanship of Mrs. Harper Sibley, Episcopalians of Rochester, N. Y., called for "breaking of the pattern of segregation in the nation's capital" and voted its opposition to compulsory peacetime military training in resolutions adopted here.

In a recommendation designed "to make a national impact on all segregation practices in the nation's community life," the council also called for "enforcement of civil rights laws in states having such laws," and "interpretation and enforcement of the Supreme Court rulings on transportation, education, and the right to vote in all states having separation laws and voting restrictions."

The delegates also endorsed international ownership and world control of atomic energy, freedom of exchange of scientific information, "real trusteeship" by the United Nations of all ex-enemy territory, including Pacific bases, and support of the international refugee organization to take the place of UNRRA. Support and provision of funds was urged to implement United States' participation in sections of the United Nations such as UNESCO, WHO and OFA.

The council went on record as being "unalterably opposed to mob violence under whatever pretext it may occur" and also urged President Truman to grant amnesty for conscientious objectors still in prison.

In resolutions adopted on recommendation of the committee on Christian and social relations, the council was called on "to evaluate legislation affecting labor and management in terms of Christian principles rather than on selfish motives."

Establishment of pre-marital counseling centers, remedial care for broken families, and housing and economic opportunity programs on the community level were urged as a method of strengthening the Christian home.

The council's national board was instructed to increase and extend agencies in the field of family life and child welfare, while state and local councils were urged to take the lead in making services of established church and community child care agencies available to all families.

Will Alexander told the convention of Church Women that Protestantism is especially guilty of discrimination

Another resolution recognized the concern of the church in aiding alcoholics and their families and said "alcoholism is a disease which needs treatment and its victims need the full ministry of the church and the sympathetic concern of church people."

Another highlight of the convention was an address by Will W. Alexander, officer of the Julius Rosenwald Fund, who called upon America to "take positive steps" against segregation in the postwar world. Segregation and discrimination against Negroes must be broken down in church, education, labor, politics, hotels and housing areas, he declared.

Several women's organizations are leading the way in the anti-segregation move, Dr. Alexander said. He cited the "completely interracial" United Council of Church Women, largest organization of its kind in America; the Young Women's Christian Association, "outstanding among religious organizations in an effort to eliminate segregation in its personnel, membership and services," and southern women who are on the whole "more courageous and liberal" than southern men.

Among the strongholds of segregation, he charged, are the Protestant Church, organized medicine and organized law.

Calling for Christian leadership toward changing the segregation pattern, Dr. Alexander said "men who pray together are not likely to hold each other in contempt."

Since the end of the war the employment situation of minority workers is better than ever before, Dr. Alexander said. However, he deplored the position of Negroes in government employ who find it difficult to advance regardless of merit.

Older and more conservative unions cannot ignore the fresh challenge of the CIO and its non-segregation policy and general practice, he said, adding that in the south the new labor movement can practice racial democracy much more easily than southern Protestant churches, where segregation has been taken as a matter of course.

He described the federal government as "perhaps the most strategic spot in which to change racial patterns."

In Dr. Alexander's opinion, Negroes will vote with increasing freedom and in growing numbers throughout the whole south and as the south moves toward a more realistic approach to economic problems both politics and racial patterns will improve.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Housing segregation, "about as rigid in the North as in the South," offers the "greatest single challenge to American democracy," he said.

Walter Van Kirk, secretary of the commission on a just and durable peace of the Federal Council, urged the Church women to call for "quick agreement among the big powers for the reduction of armaments," and spoke favorably of the Soviet proposals to that end.

"Right now the Republicans are talking glibly about reducing the budget. But how can the budget of this or any other nation be substantially reduced without disarmament?" he asked. "No nation can disarm alone, but through the United Nations an opportunity is given to achieve this end by international action."

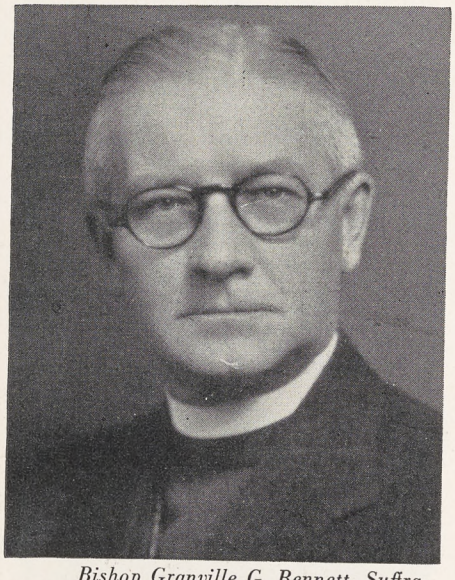
Branding the United States' move to establish and maintain bases around the world as "advance notice that we do not trust the United Nations to give us the peace for which we and other nations pray," Van Kirk said "we must work toward the day when military bases of all nations are brought under a genuine trusteeship system."

"The best way to avoid war with Russia is to make the United Nations work," he said. "The current war talk is positively criminal."

Mrs. Sibley, who was reelected for another term as president, appealed to Church women to "make morality gay." "We think of grim morality and gay immorality but we know that it is immorality that is grim when we meet it in alcoholic wards and social disease clinics."

The convention here was attended by about 2,000 delegates representing 72 Protestant denominations of the United States and 17 foreign countries. A budget of $289,775 was adopted for 1947, an increase of $30,000 over this year's budget.

CONFERENCE ON RELIGION



New York:—The Rev. J. Clemens Kolb, chaplain at the University of Pennsylvania and a contributing editor of THE WITNESS, told the conference on religion at Columbia University on November 19, that religion is granted only a "courtesy place" in the program of American high schools. He pleaded for a real place for religious instruction in public schools, stating that as things are educators are "placing muscles before morals."

BISHOP SAWYER OF ERIE

Utica, N. Y.:—There were fourteen bishops taking part in the service at which the Rev. Harold E. Sawyer was consecrated bishop of Erie. It was held at Grace Church, where he served as rector for 24 years. The service was attended by about 1,500 people, including fully 150 clergymen. Bishop Gardner of New Jersey was the preacher. The service was followed by a luncheon in honor of Bishop Sawyer.

BISHOP SHERRILL LISTS TASKS

Boston:—Bishop Sherrill, speaking at the anniversary at the Auxiliary of the Diocese of Massachusetts on November 13 listed some of the tasks before the Church. The challenge of youth; people in institutions; our loss of contact with labor; the Church's failure in rural areas; the opportunity of radio; the need of workers in mission fields, he named as tasks "we must approach with the utmost sacrifice if we are to make any impression on these frontiers."

Bishop Granville G. Bennett, Suffragan of Rhode Island, was elected bishop of the diocese to succeed Bishop Perry, retired, on November 19. He was elected on the first ballot, receiving 198 votes to 109 votes for the Rev. E. Victor Kennan, rector of Emmanuel, Baltimore

PARENTHOOD SERVICES IS URGED

New York: — Establishment of planned parenthood (birth control) services in every community in the country is urged in a resolution signed by 3,200 clergymen, released by the Planned Parenthood Federation.

Asserting that "minority religious opposition" frequently prevents the use of adequate birth control methods by public and private institutions, the clergymen declared that planned parenthood services are essential factors "in the right of each child to be born well and wanted by its parents."

They asked also that other health and welfare agencies interested in family security adopt policies which permit their professional staffs to make maximum use of planned parenthood services "as a community health measure."

There are a large number of Episcopal clergymen among the signers, including the following bishops: Bishop-elect Stephen Clark of Utah; Edward L. Parsons, retired of California; Noel Porter of Sacramento; Angus Dun of Washington; Richard Emrich of Michigan; Appleton Lawrence of Western Mass.; Henry Hobson of Southern Ohio; E. P. Dandridge of Tennessee; S. Arthur Huston of Olympia.

BISHOP WARNS BUSINESS

Des Moines, Iowa (RNS):—If business leadership as a result of the elections, approaches economic problems in terms of "breaking labor," an era of economic conflict will follow, Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, of New York, president of the Federal Council of Churches, said in an interview here.

"If business leadership," he said. "takes seriously the ethical ideas of religion and cooperates with labor, seeking honest solutions in terms of the common good, the future may be bright. If not, it is a dismal prospect that we face. The common people are not going to be crossed or coerced any more by privilege."

CANADIAN PRIMATE ON UNION

Quebec (RNS):—Current attempts by the Church of England in Canada and the United Church of Canada to achieve closer relationships are but one aspect of a "quest for that one Holy Catholic Church to which we all in our different ways profess allegiance," Archbishop Derwyn T. Owen, primate of the Church in Canada, told the annual meeting of the Canadian Council of Churches. He warned against the use of strong words and temper in unity discussions.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

New Books Set Forth Wealth Of Christian Religion

The One Issued by Commission of the Church Should Be the Textbook for Parish Groups

By W. B. Spofford

New York:—Due to the amount of material we ran on General Convention, both before and during that meeting we neglected New Books which is one of our regular departments. This is a partial catch-up on books.

We have of course waited eagerly for The Living Liturgy by Massey H. Shepherd Jr. (Oxford, $2.25). We can say to our columnist that his book is a most worthy successor to its predecessor, Prayer Book Interleaves by William P. Ladd, who was the first to write regularly in our pages on the liturgical movement. This work by Prof. Shepherd is not as fat as the one by Dean Ladd but it is more carefully planned with therefore greater unity. His columns in THE WITNESS and added material, are arranged in chapters, with fifty-three essays in all, dealing with Principles, the Daily Office, the Holy Communion, the Christian Year, Baptism and Confirmation, Music and Architecture. There is a service of Holy Baptism as an appendix, which, as a proposed revision, will doubtless be authorized by most bishops and used in many parishes. Certainly no clergyman will be without this book, and all lay people interested in intelligent and meaningful services, will read it with profit.

Harry Emerson Fosdick has that rare gift of being able to say profound things simply and interestingly. On Being Fit to Live With is the latest collection of selected sermons by this leading American preacher (Harpers, $2), all so good that we guess that they will be widely quoted on many a Sunday morning by parsons who find themselves in the middle of Saturday without much idea what to say the next day. If you are looking for something to give your rector for Christmas, here it is.

Toward a Christian World, edited by Bishop Scarlett of Missouri (Winston, $2), is a symposium on the problems facing our world and our country, which we will deal with later, probably in a series of articles. In addition to this edition you will also find these essays in the rack of Penguin Books at the drug store under the title Christianity Takes a Stand (25 cents). I do not recall the exact number of copies distributed in this first edition but it was in six figures. The fact that contributors include Eleanor Roosevelt, Frances Perkins, Russell Bowie, Bishop Parsons, Eduard Heimann, Stringfellow Barr, Sumner Welles, William Hocking, Reinhold Niebuhr, is one of the reasons the publishers felt justified in printing so many. If the Church is to make the contribution to the solution of problems before us that we boast it will make, there is no way to start better than by painstaking examination of the problems, and consideration of solutions proposed. One way to get a group in your parish started at this task is by discussions based upon the chapters in this book. We hope to do our part in furthering this Churchwide discussion through publication of articles based upon this book for which we are all indebted to Bishop Scarlett and the commission on social reconstruction of our Church.

An excellent book to be used with this one by the commission is The Church and Organized Movements, edited by Randolph Crump Miller of the faculty of our Church Divinity School of the Pacific and a contributing editor of THE WITNESS. It is published by Harper & Brothers and is $1.50. One wishes that it might too have been published in a paper cover and at a much lower cost, thus stimulating wider use. It is an appraisal of communism, fascism, the labor movement, welfare and social service agencies, fraternities, by various writers connected with theological seminaries, and is the second of a series of five volumes on current world problems. It has an excellent contribution by Bishop Parsons on Resources in a Genuinely Christian Church. Each chapter closes with a list of books and magazines for the guidance of those who wish to follow up further the frankly sketchy treatment that a book of this size affords. The book lacks an index which is a pity. But it is a $1.50 worth.

Those who want a more penetrating expose of forces at work in this country can get a real haircurler for winter nights before the open fire in The Plotters by John Roy Carlson (Dutton, $3.50). Here is a fantastic and unbelievable story of men and women plotting to establish fascism in the United States. Unbelievable, but here it is, sober, factual and carefully documented. We better pay attention to it. Evidence is here to back up everything said by O. John Rogge, who was recently fired as special prosecutor for the department of justice, because he found out too much this summer in Germany about the tie-up between Nazis and their allies in the United States.

Among the contributors to the book on world problems edited by Bishop Scarlett of Missouri are Stringfellow Barr, Bishop Parsons and Walter Russell Bowie Power for Peace by O. Frederick Nolde (Muhlenberg Press, $1) is a brief and scholarly account of the United Nations by an advisor to the U. S. delegation at San Francisco. In spite of weaknesses Prof. Nolde is convinced that it can be made to work, if the will to make it work is found. This theologian here does an effective job in stirring wills to that end.

The Story of Jesus in the World's Literature would be a fine gift. Chesterton, Colum, Dreiser, Van Dyke, T. S. Eliot, Charles Rann Kennedy, Studdert-Kennedy, Lindsay, Masefield, Wilder, Whitman, Sandburg—that gives you the idea, and there are a hundred or more writers in this volume of nearly 500 pages. It is edited by Edward Wagenknecht, illustrated by Fritz Kredel, published for $5 by Creative Age Press.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Another excellent gift would be The Illustrated Edition which is Msgr. Roland Knox's translation of the New Testament now available with thirty full page color plates (Sheed and Ward, $5). The pictures were chosen from the finest pictures in the galleries here and in England, while the translation has been universally praised by the press, both religious and secular.

Spencer Logan, young Negro veteran, is the author of A Negro's Faith in America (Macmillan, $2.50). The book will be a great comfort to conservatives since this ex-soldier contends that politeness rather than legislation like a permanent fair employment practices committee will take care of everything. The other side of the picture is excellently stated in Color and Conscience by Buell Gallagher (Harpers, $2.50) whose book ought to stir the consciences of Christians. Basing his case on the Christian teaching of brotherhood, this white president of a southern Negro college, deals with the absurdities of the assumptions of white superiority and points out that it is not a Christian nation but a socialist one that recognizes racial equality. He gives a warning too—a large part of the world is composed of colored peoples and they look to Russia in consequence.

That is all we have room for this week but we will present more books next week, with an eye particularly for books that would make good Christmas gifts.

FIELD OFFICER RESIGNS

Stamford, Conn.:—The Rev. Clarence W. Jones, field officer of the National Council whose home is here, announced on November 15th that he had resigned that office as of December 1 to become the rector of Trinity Church, Roslyn, Long Island.

SOUTH INDIA SCHEME APPROVED

London (wireless to RNS):—The South India Church union scheme, which involves the merger of a group of denominations, has been approved by the Primate's committee of theologians of the Church of England, it was announced here by Bishop A. E. Rawlinson of Derby, chairman of the committee. In order to make the Church more Indian, Bishop Rawlinson told a press conference, native bishops will have to be appointed as quickly as possible and dependence on white missionaries will have to disappear.

"The most desirable condition," the Bishop declared, "is an Indian Church characterized by an Indian outlook—a Church which would have its theology in Indian dress, thought out by Indian theologians."

The South India merger will bring into a single Church American and English Congregationalists, Scottish Presbyterians, Australian Presbyterians, Methodists (British Wesleyans), and members of the Reformed Church of America, the Church of England, and the Basel Mission of Germany.

These young Chinese scientists, all non-Christians, recently attended a communion service at St. John's Cathedral, Wilmington. Following the service they were given the keys of the city by Mayor Thomas Herlihy Jr. Behind Mr. Herlihy is A. E. Lindley, YMCA secretary who entertained the young scientists while in the city

BISHOP PORTER'S SON DIES

Palo Alto, Calif.:—Richard Grenville Porter, youngest son of Bishop and Mrs. Noel Porter of Sacramento, died on November 10 in the veterans' hospital here. He was a student in the University of California before entering the army air corps in which he served for eight months. He was 25 years of age.

COUNSELING SERVICE ON MARRIAGE

Richmond, Va.: — One hundred Richmond ministers, representing every Protestant denomination of any size in the city, attended an all-day conference here to hear discussions of the problems of marriage and to formulate a program to combat the growing divorce rate by wise premarital and postmarital counseling. Findings of the conference will be carried back to the Richmond Ministerial Union, which sponsored the project, for further discussion and consideration.

Judge J. Hoge Ricks, of the juvenile and domestic relations court, urged that the union establish a counseling service to which he could refer young persons with no religious affiliation who come into his court. He said in his opinion the real causes of divorce are drinking, gambling, selfishness, pride, the lack of moral and religious influence in the lives of people, and hasty and ill-advised marriages.

BISHOP ADDRESSES LAYMEN

Boston: — Bishop Sherrill addressed about 600 laymen of the diocese of Massachusetts on November 19, the meeting being sponsored by the men's division of the Church Service League.

FATHER-SON CHAPEL

Bristol, Va.:—When the Rev. Maurice H. Hopson became rector here a year ago he realized the need for a small chapel for mid-week and other services. He designed one, had his father, John A. Hopson, make the furniture. On October 27th the old choir room of the church was dedicated as a very beautiful chapel of Christ the King.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

EDITORIALS

Warfare and Victory

THERE is nothing in our Prayer Book to give any of us a sense of false security. We find no hint or promise of earthly ease to be won by the pious and Godly. There is set forth no scheme of indulgence whereby we may exchange a minor discomfort here for a major torment hereafter.

Instead we are taught to pray, day by day and night by night, for strength to withstand the assaults of our enemies, for God's defense against the unknown dangers that constantly threaten, and especially the perils of night. For generations Christians have been using these collects of Morning and Evening Prayer with a sense of urgency and timeliness as if they were written especially for their use in their ever present distress. And as Advent comes they add their prayer that God will give them grace to put away the works of darkness now, in the time of this mortal life, for the warfare of the soul knows neither time nor season; we know only that the time for battle is always with us. The warfare is eternal, and is as perennial and persistent as sin.

But it is a warfare—not a series of disengaging encounters to mark a final defeat. We are face to face with the enemy, and we have an ally who knows the vulnerability of the enemy—and that he cannot win. He has a secret weapon which makes us proof and safe against the fiery darts of wickedness. It is called the armor of light. If a man puts it on he walks honestly, shuns strife, and envies no one. You wouldn't think to observe him that he is a warrior at all yet he is able to turn aside all the shafts and assaults of the devil. He seems, indeed, to be following in the steps of some one unseen yet ever near who kindles his heart and lightens his eye with the assurance that nothing in life or death can harm him. He knows a master of life who has gone that way before, and in that light he sees a light which scatters the darkness and puts the enemy to flight. The perennial warfare may be waged with confidence because the victory is assured. But the battle must be fought, today, and tomorrow and tomorrow.

"QUOTES"

ALL OF US wish we could do something startling and significant to win and maintain peace in this world. I think we would be willing to make almost any sacrifice required. At the same time many of us are failing to do the one thing we all can do, and which, multiplied many, many times, is the only thing that can save this world. It is only as we 'quicken the spirit' in ourselves and in others that we come fully to appreciate that God is the father of all mankind, the father of people of all colors in all nations; and that we must act on the basis of this truth. It is only so that we come to a humble and penitent recognition that man can not save the world or civilization by himself.

—W. Appleton Lawrence,
Bishop of Western Massachusetts

My Life Is His

SOME of us have been restless in years past as we have anxiously awaited the development of national leadership in the youth work of our Church. Many persons have realized that other Churches have given better guidance to their organized young people than we have been able to offer and have clamored for more and better planning at the top level. In the last few years a change for the better has come and it may truly be said that in this year the United Movement of the Church's Youth has come of age.

There are two easy ways to handle work with young people. The director can do all the work and make all the plans or the youth can be left entirely alone to lead themselves, for better or for worse. Both easy ways are wrong and doomed to failure for the first makes for lack of responsibility, the other often results in lack of vision. Our directors of the youth department in the National Council of the last few years have realized this and have been willing to develop the work in the third and more difficult way. They have led the young people and helped them to build within themselves a vision of their task which has resulted in a fuller and finer type of program. In this instance we have definitely been fortunate in our type of national leadership and the whole Church will benefit as this spirit is caught up in diocesan and parochial programs for youth.

The coming of age in the national program has been marked by the issuance this fall of the outstanding publications of the UMCY, The Manual for Youth Groups and Plan! The former gives a really comprehensive guide for all general youth groups and the latter presents every parish in the land with a practical, elastic and inspiring guide for the month by month and week by week program. On opposite pages there is given the general program for all youth groups and a blank calendar on which is to be entered the particular application of this program for each local chapter. Any parish which is not using this book Plan!, with a copy in the hand of each member or each officer, is cheating itself of a valuable guide.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

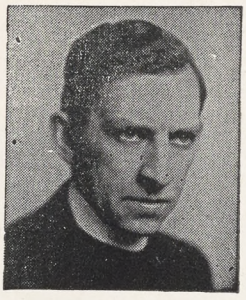
The program for October and November is built around another UMCY guide, My Life is His. Here the Christian vocation of all life is well and interestingly presented. It leads naturally into the use of the new department of promotion motion picture, Go Forth, which is concerned with the decision of one young man to make his vocation in the mission field. This program developed by the young people themselves shows that they are convinced that their lives are his. Should we wonder that the young people's meeting at General Convention was an inspiration to the adults there assembled?

It's human nature, we suppose, to cry about what we don't have and fail to use what we are given that has value. In all the agitation in the Church for a full program and guide for religious education we should recognize that at the youth level our national Church is doing a good job.

Dear Reverend



ALTHOUGH we are undoubtedly engaging in a vain crusade, we would like again to point out to the world at large that men wearing the ecclesiastical habit should be addressed simply as "Mr. So-and-So" and not "Rev. So-and-So." This crusade has been under way for a long time but, from the letters we have been receiving, seems to have borne little fruit. During recent weeks, the following persons and institutions have sent us letters with the greeting "Dear Rev.": The United States Delegation to the U.N.; the Department of Agriculture; Henry A. Wallace; Frank Kingdon; U.N.R.R.A.; Mary McLoed Bethune; Wendell Berge; the Department of Justice; the House Committee on Campaign Expenditures; Tom C. Clark; Thomas Dewey; The Nation; The New Yorker; John Foster Dulles. There have been many others from lesser fry. The difference between the two salutations is exactly one letter and, if the correct one were used, the various letter-writers, whether of the Left or the Right, could probably save one-man-hour per year to be dedicated to the causes that they hold dear. Besides, they would put us in a much better temper generally since, in these hectic times, we don't feel so "reverend" much of the time.

Private secretaries, please note.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

THE FACT that leading Roman Catholics throughout the world are denouncing Yugoslavia for sentencing Archbishop Stepinac to prison for treason has prompted my friend, the Rev. Louis L. Perkins of Auburn, N. Y., to raise an interesting question. He enclosed a clipping from the New York Times which quoted "a reliable Vatican authority on Church law" as follows:

"By dragging Archbishop Stepinac before a civilian tribunal without the Vatican's authorization, Tito has incurred a minor excommunication. According to Church law, members of the clergy, and especially bishops, are exonerated from judgment of any kind in civilian tribunals unless the Vatican grants permission that they be placed on trial."

"Apparently this means," writes Perkins, "that no Roman clergyman can be tried in a civil court. If this is correct, then I am sure that few people realize that this is Roman Church law. Does it mean, like the ancient English principle of law about the king ('the King can do no wrong'), that the clergy and bishops of Rome can do no wrong? Does it mean that they are exempt from all civil law? If they can't be tried in a civil court, apparently civil law does not apply to Roman clerics. And so I guess it means that they either have a sort of 'diplomatic immunity' or else they are un-American to the extent that American laws (and Yugoslav laws) may be obeyed or not as they please.

"I now see the meaning of the 37th of the Thirty-Nine Articles at the end of our Prayer Book which reads:

'The power of the civil magistrate extendeth to all men, as well clergy as laity, in all things temporal; but hath no authority in things purely spiritual. And we hold it to be the duty of all men who are professors of the Gospel, to pay respectful obedience to the civil authority, regularly and legitimately constituted.'

"I see now clearer what Justice Roberts and his group are after in the field of world government; namely, world laws that will apply to all individuals. But if such a world government were established, apparently Roman clerics would claim exemption from that, too.

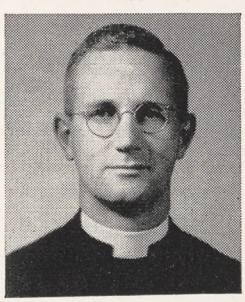
Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

"The Roman position is then, not just the infallibility of the Pope, but the infallibility of every one of the Pope's clergy. Is this not so?"

Not being an authority on Roman Church law I cannot answer the question. But it would appear so to be. Certainly for the vast majority of Americans, the claim that no priest should be tried for his alleged crimes "unless the Vatican grants permission that he be placed on trial" is fantastic.

In the case of Stepinac, Americans are interested—or should be—only in whether or not he is guilty of the crimes charged against him. But of the scores of opinions on this case expressed by Roman Catholic authorities I have yet to see one dealing with that issue. The reason apparently is that, according to their Church law, Archbishop Stepinac should not be tried at all, regardless, since the Pope had not granted the government of Yugoslavia permission to place him on trial.

We play little attention to the Thirty-Nine Articles. I do not recall hearing them even mentioned when I was in seminary, and recent graduates tell me the same holds today. But our Church fathers, who apparently were up against the same forces we are today, didn't formulate them just for the fun of it. Maybe we'd better give them some attention.



Strategy and Tactics

by

FRANCIS O. AYRES

Rector of St. John's, Waterbury, Connecticut

AS MOST of the clergy know the National Council has been holding a series of meetings throughout the country in order to present its unified plans and services, entitled Parish Helps, 1946-47 and to solicit criticisms and suggestions. Since attending the meeting I have been thinking a good deal about the National Council and its relationship to parish work, and I would like to attempt to collect my thoughts in this column for what they are worth.

As you have, no doubt, already guessed, I am critical of the National Council or "281" whichever you want to call it. I would like to state as emphatically as possible, however, that I recognize—some of the time at least—that the Devil likes to use the National Council as a disguise when tempting members, especially clerical, of the P.E.C. "I am the National Council and reside at 281 4th Ave.", he says. "Kick the National Council, belabor '281' and you will hurt only me." With these and similar wiles, the Great Deceiver hides from us that he is in each one of us, in our parishes, in the visible Church as a whole. Any criticism which is leveled at the National Council can be brought to bear, often with a great deal more force, on the individual parishes, on the Church, or on the members of the Church. I make no criticism of the National Council, therefore, which could not be made with more justification of my own work. Fortunately for the Church it is easier to change the former.

Parish Helps 1946-47 represents a masterly and highly successful effort to bring order out of what was largely chaos, and the executives of the National Council deserve great praise for the work they have done. It is now possible to tell at a glance what the National Council has to offer and what it plans to offer in the various fields of parish work. Furthermore, it promises to give no aid nor advice until they are requested which is, after all, the only way of having them fully accepted.

Parish Helps only serves to underline, however, what was already evident—that the National Council has no overall strategy and policy for the Church at home. The Reconstruction and Advance Fund, for instance, was hailed as the "Christian challenge of our time" and the post-war plan of our Church, and yet there was nothing, as far as I know, absolutely nothing, said about reconstruction and advance in the parishes of the United States. Obviously, the foreign field came first in time, it may even come first in eternity, but the home field cannot be taken for granted any more than an industrial concern can concentrate on sales and ignore production. It seems to me that a leadership which confines its plans to the obvious can be called "uninspired" and risks being called "powerless."

Again it seems to me that the National Council has never recognized that we fight not against shortage of funds and lack of manpower but against principalities, against powers. Its attitude seems to be that of the 19th century, "We're still on 4th Avenue, all's right with the Church." Forth is a pretty fair barometer of the outlook of the National Council, and I have never seen in its pages more than a passing intimation of the struggle that is going on in the world. Article after article dealing with parishes in this country and bearing such titles as "Old Parish Carries On in New Ways" or "Downtown Parish Meets Needs of War-time Community" give the impression that our Church is rolling majestically onwards and upwards forever, meeting every problem, surmounting every barrier. If a man believes what he reads in the publications of the National Council, it is impossible to convince him that the Church is locked in a life and death struggle let alone make him understand what William James called the "atrocious helplessness" of the Church or what Kirkegaard meant when he said Christendom no longer existed.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

What is needed is an analysis of the situation, at least as it pertains at home. The National Council should pick certain parishes and communities and make a detailed analysis on the basis of which an overall strategy and policy could be formed and which could be published for the edification of the Church. A committee of experts in different fields should be chosen; the members could visit the parish or parishes singly or together; and then the committee meet to draw up its report. I am sure that the picture would be somewhat different than Forth and Churchways seem to indicate. I sometimes wonder whether we ever make contact with the enemy let alone fight a victorious battle. At any rate, the facts are essential before any really effective planning can be done.

(My alloted space is gone so I will continue with this in my next column.)

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

An Office for Missions

WE NEED very much in our Prayer Book a special office for the missionary work of the Church. The Canadian Church had the courage and vision to include one in their 1922 Book, and thus give a lead to the entire Anglican communion. Their service follows the pattern of Morning Prayer, but with special psalms, lessons, canticles, versicles and prayers. A proper collect, epistle (Rom. 10:11ff.) and gospel (Matt. 28:18ff.) are also provided. Of especial interest to us in the United States is their inclusion of "Mid-day Prayers for Missions," the very form which has been used for over a generation in our Church Missions House in New York. It contains the "Our Father" and three collects, one by Bishop Coxe of Western New York and the other two by Dr. Langford, longtime secretary of our missions board.

During the process of revision which culminated in our 1928 Book, the Joint Commission presented for consideration a brief office for missions to be included with various other special services in an appendix to the Prayer Book. None of this appendix was finally approved. However, new prayers for missions and Christian service were added elsewhere in the Prayer Book; and it is possible by a judicious selection of material to make up a fairly effective service for missions, in the framework of the Daily Office, without—may the Right Reverend Fathers in God take comfort!—any lawless breaking of rubrics. The new lectionary suggests a goodly variety of appropriate psalms and lessons. The opening sentences would be those for Epiphany; and the canticles would be Te Deum and Benedictus, of course, at Morning Prayer, or Cantate Domino and Deus misereatur at Evening Prayer. In lieu of a special litany for missions—something we ought to have in the Prayer Book—the Litany for Ordinations might be used after the third collect. Or if the minister so desires he may select prayers from the numerous ones scattered through the Prayer Book for the Church, missions and service, and the increase of the ministry. I might mention particularly the first part of the Prayer for all Conditions of Men (down to "Finally, we commend") as an effective piece by itself.

I cannot forbear from calling attention, in this connection, to one of the fine canticles in the Canadian office mentioned above. It is a selection of verses from Isaiah 60 (verses 1-3, 11a, 14, 18-19, to be exact). Here at the Episcopal Theological School we have often used on special occasions a variant form of this canticle (verses 1-3, 11a, 14b, 18-20), with good effect. We sing it to the chant arrangement of Luther's Ein' feste Burg (No. 695 in The Hymnal 1940); and it is really quite marvellous. There are many passages in the Old Testament prophets, such as this one, which are as poetic and singable as anything in the Psalter. Someday I hope to see this canticle in the Prayer Book. How fitting it would be in the seasons of Advent and Epiphany!

A service such as we have outlined would be a fitting conclusion to the parish campaign for Reconstruction and Advance—not, of course, as a thanksgiving for the amount raised, but for the privilege of giving to the cause. Many clergy might prefer, and quite properly, a Eucharist. I have said before in this column that the Holy Communion is the great missionary service of the Prayer Book. The only difficulty is that too many of our people approach the service with a view to consolation or to cultivating their interior life. Such graces are by-products. The main purpose of the Eucharist is dedication to Christ and His saving mission by an act of offering in thanksgiving for, remembrance of, and union with, our Lord's entire and perfect oblation of Himself for the sins of the whole world. Good propers for a missionary Eucharist would be the collect and gospel for Ember Days, and the epistle for St. Andrew's Day, the two offertory sentences from Rom. 10:14-15 and Luke 10:2, and the proper preface for Whitsunday.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Lastly, there are the hymns. On this subject I shall confine my remarks to an expression of jubilant thanksgiving that we have a hymnal at last with some 20th century hymns for missions, plus some fine 20th century reworkings of 19th century hymns. To give but one example, who is not thankful that instead of

Pour out thy soul for them in prayer victorious;
And all thou spendest Jesus will repay

(a horrid bourgeois calculation), we can now sing:

Pour out thy soul for them in prayer victorious
Till God shall bring his kingdom's joyful day.

COAL CRISIS

By BRADFORD YOUNG

Rector of Grace Church, Manchester, N. H.

The government says:
The miners have broken their contract with the government
because they are striking for better wages to meet higher prices.

But the miners say:
The government has broken its contract with the union
because it let prices sky-rocket after it had promised to hold them down.

Meanwhile the public,
which accepted the successful strike of ranchers, meat-packers, soap-flake kings,
and butter magnates
against the government's price ceilings and the public's market basket
is angry with the miners,

Because the newspapers and the radio have inflamed the public against the miners
but not against the ranchers, meat packers, soap-flake kings
and butter magnates.

But the church says:
Both the miners
and the soap-flake kings are wrong
because both are greedy
and have held up the public at the point of a gun.

And the public is wrong, too, because it believes and teaches all men to believe that a man's life consists in the abundance of things he possesses.

And it allows our economic life to be organized
as a competition for wealth instead of a cooperation for well-being.

New Books

Excellent Good *Fair

THE COMMON SENSE THEOLOGY OF BISHOP WHITE by Sydney A. Temple, Jr. The King's Crown Press.

William White, first Bishop of Pennsylvania, has long been recognized as the greatest ecclesiastical statesman produced by the Episcopal Church; but it has not usually been realized that he was also a first-rate philosophical theologian. Though I cannot agree with Dr. Temple that White is as great in this field as William Porcher DuBose, yet it is very important that we should understand how good a thinker he was.

Dr. Temple presents White's views on several key questions—revelation and reason, the state of man, the Church and ministry, and the sacraments. The sketches of the Bishop's positions are clear, very well done, and thoroughly documented. In addition, Temple has published some of White's more important essays which had never been assembled before. By studying these—and they require hard study because the Bishop had a very difficult style—one can check up on the earlier summary of his views and find interesting insights on other points.

White is revealed as in the main Anglican line of philosophical theology from Hooker onward, but quite independent in his thinking. I venture the opinion that the aspects of his total position most significant for us are his vindication of the place of reason in religion, and the limitations of that place, his able defense of human free will, and his doctrines of the Church and the eucharist.

His proposal in "The Case of the Episcopal Church Considered" that the Episcopal Church should have recourse to presbyterial ordination if episcopal could not be had, was not simply the suggestion of a man desperately eager to continue Anglicanism in this country after the Revolution regardless of any theological considerations, but the natural deduction of a clearly thought-out and strongly held doctrine of the Church which, in a good many respects, is similar to Hooker's. Incidentally, we are all in Temple's debt for calling to our attention the theological part of this famous essay, as well as its organizational suggestions.

A short book notice leaves no time for an appraisal of the Bishop's views, nor of Temple's summary of them. It can be confidently affirmed, however, that this is an important book for all those interested in the Episcopal Church, in philosophical-theology or in the history of American thought. —ALEXANDER C. ZABRISKIE.

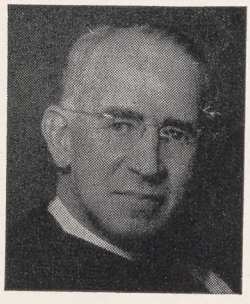
Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The South India Union Scheme Shows Great Progress

United Church Gives Approval by Passing Three Resolutions by an Overwhelming Vote

Edited by Sara Dill

Tambaram, India (airmail to RNS):—Organic union with the South India province of the Methodist Church and the dioceses of the Church of India, Burma and Ceylon, has been approved by the South India United Church at its 20th general assembly. The matter came up in the form of three resolutions all of which passed by an overwhelming vote. Following the action the South India bishops of the Anglican Church issued a statement as follows:



"With regard to the ministry of the United Church we, now bishops of the Church of India, Burma and Ceylon, who hope with our dioceses soon to enter into union with the South India Provincial Synod of the Methodist Church, desire to make clear what we understand to be the principles upon which we shall act as bishops in the Church of South India. We agree that all who have the status of presbyters in the United Church are capable of performing all the functions assigned to presbyters in the United Church in every congregation of the United Church. We agree that no presbyters of the United Church will exercise his ministry in a congregation where members conscientiously object to his ministrations.

In cases where no such conscientious objection arises within the congregation concerned, we shall act in accordance with the resolution of the continuation committee (1945), viz., 'It is understood that during the period of unification congregations will ordinarily continue to be served by the ministries to which they are accustomed, except where pastoral needs obviously demand other arrangements.' The duly constituted authority within the United Church shall be sole judge of the urgency of such pastoral needs.

No member of the United Church can 'conscientiously object' (in the same sense in which these words are used in the Constitution of the United Church) to the ministrations of any presbyter ordained within the United Church. The suitability of a presbyter for a particular congregation is another question, and will have to be considered in all cases by the appointing authority." Consummation of the proposed merger will mean that Christians will be united in one group rather than belonging to separate British, Australian, American and German controlled Churches. These comprise English Congregationalists, Reformed Church of America, Scotch Presbyterians, Australian Presbyterians, American Congregationists, Basel Mission of Germany, British Wesleyans, the Church of England.

Higher Pay Urged

New York: — A resolution urging state officials, including Governor Dewey, to reconvene state wage boards to raise substandard wage minimum wage levels for workers not yet covered by state law was passed last week by the human relations commission of the Protestant Council. Bishop Charles K. Gilbert, suffragan of New York, is the chairman of the commission.

Bishop Gilbert

The commission also passed a resolution expressing its opposition to a proposed city-sponsored lottery to meet rising municipal costs, because such a lottery would "in reality be one of the cruelest forms of taxation." A resolution urging restoration of a provision to build a public market in Harlem in the 1947 capital budget was passed, as was a fourth resolution commending the work of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America.

Town and Country

Des Moines, Iowa (RNS):—The new secretary of industrial relations of the Federal Council of Churches, Cameron Hall, told the 900 delegates to the conference here on the Church in town and country that there is a growing anti-labor movement in rural areas. He pointed out that constitutional amendments outlawing

"I'll write those names . . . Golden forever . . . To dare the generations, . . . out on the winds of time, shining and streaming."

Let

CARILLONIC BELLS

illuminate honored service names on a manuscript of music for all to hear

In every city, town and village, there are names newly wreathed with honor and heroism.

Let those names be heard in your community, let them be remembered as days turn into years, through the noble, glowing tones of Carillonic Bells. Ringing in remembrance, Carillonic Bells speak, as no other tribute can—lift in cresting waves of music an abiding message of faith and commemoration.

Schulmerich Carillonic Bells are the proudest and finest choice for a purpose so dedicated. Their richness of tone, their clear modulations are unequalled—the supreme results of more than two decades of electronic engineering and research. Their construction is compact, they are convenient to install, requiring no additional structure—moderate in cost.

If you would like to commemorate with Carillonic Bells, those beloved in your community, we shall be glad to send a brochure giving complete details. Please address Dept. W-17.

Schulmerich ELECTRONICS, INC.

CARILLONIC BELLS · TOWER MUSIC SYSTEMS · ACOUSTIC CORRECTION UNITS · SOUND DISTRIBUTION SYSTEMS · CHURCH HEARING AIDS

SELLERSVILLE, PA.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

the closed shop were approved by voters in three large rural states. He stated that the movements from farms to cities was one reason for wildcat strikes and other tendencies which embarrass labor; due, he said, to the fact that the labor unions must absorb thousands of workers with no organizational background. A vigorous eductional program on the part of the unions is the remedy he declared.

At the same conference Carl C. Taylor of the federal department of agriculture said that the growing trend away from farms must be recognized by religious and rural leaders if the "fundamental values" of agricultural life are to be maintained. He stated that farming was becoming big business with "only a relatively small percentage of those who start as farm laborers ultimately gaining ownership of farm." Increasing numbers are therefore leaving farms to become industrial workers, and are "coming to be a proletarian group rather than prospective owners or even tenants." He suggested that Church and farm leaders encourage continuity of farm ownership within families and study the techniques and practices of "organized cooperation." Farmers should also be enlisted to support social security measures.

Mark Anniversary

Asheville, N. C.:—All Souls in the Biltmore section of this city celebrated its 50th anniversary on November 10-11. The Rev. William C. Cravner of York, S. C., former rector, was the preacher at a special service and on Monday evening the speakers at the dinner were Senior Warden C. D. Beadle, Mr. Kingsland Van Winkle, former warden and now chancellor of the diocese and Mr. Charles P. Taft of Cincinnati.

Miss Pardee Dies

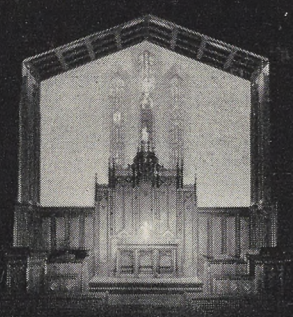
New Haven, Conn.:—Mary Louise Pardee, long active in the affairs of the Auxiliary, died last week in a hospital here, following an operation. She was president of the Connecticut Auxiliary from 1938 to 1944 and was a delegate to triennial meetings in 1928, '31 and '34.

Books to Russia

New Haven, Conn.:—The Patriarch of Moscow has written to acknowledge a collection of books sent to the Moscow Theological Academy by the Rev. E. R. Hardy on behalf of the members of the joint commission on the Russian Orthodox Church. The forty volumes included books on Anglican theology and liturgics and patristic works in Greek and English.

Play for Missions

Detroit:—The Vesper Players of the diocese of Michigan is sponsoring "Cinderella" for the benefit of the missionary program of the diocese. Tickets are being sold by the youth organization, and the project is under the general direction of the department of education. The performance, largely for children of the Church schools, is December 7th and if it is successful the Players will give other plays at least twice a year to provide entertainment for children.



Men Have Meetings

Wausau, Wis.:—The interest of the men of the diocese was made manifest by the large attendance at meetings held at St. John's, here, and at St. Thomas', Neenah-Menasha. The leader was the Rev. Arnold Lewis, executive secretary of the national Laymen's League. The men of the diocese are now promoting a building program at the Holy Apostles, Indian mission at Oneida, Wisconsin.

New Broadcast

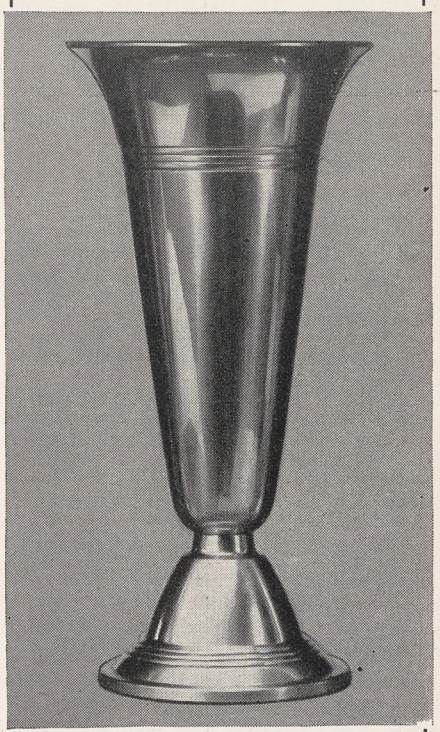
San Francisco (RNS):—The first purely atheistic program ever broadcast took place on November 17 over KQW. The speaker was Robert Scott who, single handed, compelled the Federal Communications Commission to hand down a decision

CHANCEL ALTERATIONS

Pews - Church Woodwork

Ossit Church Furniture Co.

Janesville, Wisconsin



SINCE 1867

GORHAM

ECCLESIASTICAL WARES

Beauty • Quality • Correctness

ALTAR APPOINTMENTS

ILLUSTRATIVE of the Gorham selection of Ecclesiastical Appointments, is the above Vase No. V4444 made of brass with thread decoration. Price $22.50 each (subject to change without notice). Highest quality, lasting beauty and liturgical correctness characterize all Gorham wares.

Converting rapidly from War goods, we are already currently producing:

ALMS BASONS HONOR ROLLS, BRONZE
ALTAR CROSSES CANDLESTICKS, BRASS
CHALICES MEMORIAL TABLETS, BRONZE
ALTAR DESKS PATENS VASES CIBORIA
COMMUNION SETS BAPTISMAL BOWLS

Everything for the Church in Bronze

Other items soon will be available. Center your choice upon GORHAM, for the traditional dignity of design and mastercraftsmanship in execution which have distinguished our wares for 115 years.

Gorham

70 Adelaide Ave. Providence, 7, R. I.

America's Leading Silversmiths since 1831

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

after being accused of "taking jurisdiction over God." In effect the FCC held that inasmuch as Churches and established religions are accorded radio time, atheists ought to be given equal opportunity. Although unwilling to concede that the decision was a clear-cut order to let Scott talk atheism, the management of KQW accorded him a half hour of free time for a trial broadcast. He told the radio audience that there is no God and his reasons for so believing. The audience was then invited by an announcer to give their reactions. The station's program director later announced that 20% of the phone calls and the first 300 letters opened supported Mr. Scott's right to deny the existence of God over the radio.

Gifts or Relief

New York:—Over $100,000 was allocated during the past two months for world relief from gifts received by the Presiding Bishop's relief fund. Of this $82,000 went to various agencies through the Church World Service, with an additional $20,000 in special gifts. The largest gift was for outfitting orphaned children in the Soviet Union.

South Dakota

Sioux Falls, S. D.:—Dean Paul Roberts of Denver, Dean-emeritus E. B. Woodruff, formerly of the cathedral here, and the Rev. Donald Henning, rector of Shattuck School, were the speakers at the banquet held in connection with the convention of the district of South Dakota, held here November 6-7. The business of the convention was largely routine.

Bishop Honored

New York:—Congregations of St. Martin's and also of St. Luke's, part of the same parish, held a service at the Cathedral here on the evening of November 17 in honor of Bishop Manning whose resignation becomes effective December 31. The address was by the Rev. John H. Johnson, rector of St. Martin's, while the tribute to the Bishop was read by the Rev. George W. Plaskett, rector of the Epiphany, Orange, N. J. The offering went toward the establishment of a children's center at St. Martin's.

Maintain Autonomy

Montreal (RNS):—The Russian Orthodox Church in North America has a need to recognize the authority of the Moscow Patriarchate in matters of ritual and dogma, but intends to maintain its right to self-government, it was declared here by Metropolitan Theophilus of San Francisco, leader of the American Church. He said a decision to this effect will be announced at an All-American sobor, or general council, which will be held in Cleveland November 26 to 29. The sobor will be the first since 1937, and will be attended by eight bishops, 300 priests and 300 laymen, representing 350 Orthodox parishes in the United States and Canada.

Metropolitan Theophilus declared there is a strong sentiment among North American members of the Church for maintaining an autonomous separation of control and function, similar to that of the Anglican Church of Canada and of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States in regard to the Church of England.

"In these instances," he declared, "the autonomy of the church bodies does not prevent them from retaining their sentimental attachment and respect toward the Church of England, nor from recognizing it as the spiritual, ritualistic and doctrinal fountainhead of their denominations."

For a time of world upheaval—

THE BIBLE IS HUMAN

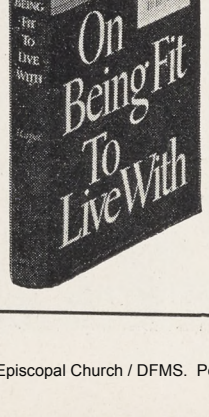
By Louis Wallis

From Professor James Moffatt, Union Theological Seminary: "I am sure, even in these distracting days, that it will find the audience it deserves, and appeal to readers who still have an open mind." $2.50

Columbia University Press
New York 27, N. Y.

A Recommend Book for Christmas

This Book Has Received a Two Star Rating by THE WITNESS



CHRISTMAS IN THE HOME

An appealing book that will add to everyone's enjoyment of Christmas. It is packed with sparkling ideas for decorating the home, family worship services, and Christmas gifts. Also short stories, prayers, poems, and carols to add to the reverent observance of the occasion.

50 cents

At Your Religious Store or

THE BETHANY PRESS
2700 Pine Blvd. St. Louis 3, Mo.

A Recommended Book for Christmas

This Book Has Received a Three Star Rating by THE WITNESS

ON BEING FIT TO LIVE WITH

By HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK

The Minister Emeritus of Riverside Church and the NBC National Vespers hour gives some of the finest and most helpful sermons of his long career, illustrating a mature, practical and triumphant religion. $2.00

HARPER & BROTHERS
49 East 33rd Street, New York 16, N.Y.

ST. JAMES LESSONS

A nine course series of instruction for Episcopal Church Schools including illustrated work books—150-250 pages (60c each) and teachers' manuals (I, II, III 40c each, IV through IX 60c each).

No Samples Payment with orders

St. James Lessons, Inc.
865 Madison Ave. New York 21, N.Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Economic Justice and the Churches

Flaming headlines told readers of the New York Times the other day that six thousand acres lying directly across the path of a certain city's growth could be purchased on speculation. That wealthy men, such as the Rockefellers and Vincent Astor, have been buying enormous quantities of unused land, is revealed in a report by an alert member of the New York Stock Exchange, Mr. S. C. Davis, in the Coronet Magazine.

Economic Paradox. We need production of new houses for veterans and for the rising generation of young married people as never before. But production of homes is HEAVILY TAXED; while at the same time, the taxes on unused land are so much LIGHTER in proportion that money flows into speculative landholding. Evil results come from the current fiscal practice of lop-sided taxation by which improvements and manufactured goods are taxed more heavily than land. Not only does lop-sided taxation lead to speculative increase in the cost-price of home sites; but it makes necessary the over-taxation of homes when actually built. This fact has moral and religious implications.

Lop-sided taxation began long ago in Europe, enabling the aristocracy to accumulate vast agricultural estates, huge untaxed private game preserves, enormous private parks, and great cattle ranges. Parts of the country people became rent-paying peasants; while the remainder were evicted from the soil and forced into the slums of towns and cities.

British economic history took a slightly different form, owing to the invention of labor saving machines. Machine owners had to pay HIGH RENT for untaxed land belonging to the British aristocracy; while machines and manufactured goods were HEAVILY TAXED by a landlord-ruled Parliament. Machine owners were able to make profits only by employing at very low wages the over-crowded slum dwellers already evicted from the soil by lop-sided taxation and land monopoly.

A German theorist presently published a book, Das Kapital, denouncing "capitalists," or machine owners, as "exploiters of labor." This theorist knew nothing about industry as conditioned by taxes and speculation in land. But he started a movement which froze into a dogma about machines.

European economic upheaval today revolves chiefly around the relation between people and the earth. It is not primarily a revolt against "capitalists." The great landholdings of Japan's war-breeding aristocracy are being dissolved by General MacArthur for the benefit of small farmers. The communist movement in China is a revolt against land monopoly and not against "capital."

The "one world": What for?—Shall we continue to use the world beneath our feet primarily as an object of speculation "lying directly across the path of development?" Or shall we treat it as a God-given opportunity for producing homes and other things the people need? These questions have moral and religious bearings. The prophet Isaiah, speaking in the name of God, condemns the adding of field to field. The common people of Judah declare that their families are falling into slavery "because other men have our fields." And one inspired writer ascribes to God the solemn injunction that the soil shall remain in family holdings, "For the land is Mine!"

What the Church can do. A church cannot, of course, advocate any special measure of economic reform. But local church congregations can pass resolutions emphasizing the HOME as one of the moral pillars of society, and condemning land speculation as hindering the establishment of homes, and as being against the interests of morality. The general problem of the relation between people and the world in which they live can be stressed as a MORAL ISSUE. Social and personal salvation must go along together. If we wish to build a brick house, we need not only good individual bricks; but the bricks themselves must be joined in a good architectural pattern.

Double emphasis by new Riverside pastor. Succeeding Dr. Harry Fosdick in the Riverside Church, New York, Dr. Robert J. McCracken, in his opening sermon, declared that "the church has a witness to provide and leadership to offer in the social sphere. It must never be content to render individual service only. . . . The political and economic spheres of life cannot be left to take care of themselves."

Resolutions and sermons. Your community is increasingly concerned about social and economic problems which demand something more than personal salvation. The social implications of religion are just as important as those relating to individual redemption. The new social emphasis in religion must not be allowed to die. The church "has a witness to provide and leadership to offer," as Dr. McCracken well says. The church must therefore take a positive stand, which can be most easily accomplished by means of resolutions preceded by explanatory sermons. Such resolutions can be passed by individual congregations or by union meetings of several neighborhood churches.

Free material sent. Suggestive material for the wording of resolutions will be sent to you without financial or other obligations. Send your name, clearly written or printed on a postcard or in envelope, to Louis Wallis, Box 73, Forest Hills, Long Island, New York.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Niemoeller Here

London (wireless to RNS):—Pastor Martin Niemoeller, accompanied by his wife was scheduled to arrive in New York yesterday, November 27. During his stay in the United States he will speak at the biennial convention of the Federal Council of Churches which opens in Seattle on December 3 and at other Church meetings throughout the country.

He was recently the guest of Bishop George K. A. Bell of Chichester, England, but according to reports was not allowed to address any meetings in that country.

New Secretary

New York:—The Rev. J. Arnold Purdie, director of the home for children at Valhalla, N. Y., will become assistant secretary of social relations of the National Council on December 1. His main task will be with child care and other social service agencies.

Ludlow on Air

Newark, N. J.:—Bishop Ludlow, suffragan of Newark and a member of the editorial board of THE WITNESS, is to broadcast each Sunday during December. The one on the 1st is from 9:15 to 9:30 a.m., eastern time. On the other Sundays the time is 9:30 to 10 a.m. The station is WOR.

Texas Consecration

New York:—The consecration of the Rev. George H. Quartermaster as bishop of North Texas will take place December 3 at St. Andrew's, Amarillo, Texas. Presiding Bishop Tucker will be the consecrator with Bishop Casady of Oklahoma and Bishop Fenner of Kansas as the co-consecrators. He will be presented by Bishop Everett H. Jones of West Texas and Bishop Hines, coadjutor of Texas. Bishop Quin of Texas will preach.

Ministry for Women

London (wireless to RNS): The society for the equal ministry of men and women in the Anglican Church is receiving increasing support from influential churchmen, it was disclosed here at a conference sponsored by the society. Among those now backing the society's aims are the Dean of Lichfield, the Dean of St. Paul's, Canon Guy Rogers, Dr. Hugh Martin, the Bishop of Southwell, Dr. Herbert Gray, and Dame Sybil Thorndike.

The conference was held to gather material for a reply to a questionnaire on women's work in the Church issued by the World Council of Churches in Geneva.

Dr. W. R. Matthews, Dean of St. Paul's, told the meeting: "the danger that customs and ordinances which are of temporary value should be regarded as having universal validity is constantly with us, and I cannot help feeling this is happening in the minds of those who oppose the extension of authorized ministry to women."

Plane Accident

Miami, Fla.: — Ensign Paul R. Rouillard, son of the Rev. and Mrs. Irving G. Rouillard of Saratoga Springs, N. Y., navy pilot, had a narrow escape from death at Miami naval air station when two planes collided in mid-air, at 11,000 foot level. Although his right eye was badly bruised and cut and his face lacerated, Ensign Rouillard was able to parachute to safety. He has been transferred to the U. S. naval hospital at Jacksonville, Fla. for treatments by an eye specialist.

A few days later Mr. Rouillard received the following communication from an officer at the Miami

Read about Pulpits and People in Russia Today in the new illustrated booklet
"An American Churchman in the Soviet Union"
— By The Rev. Louie D. Newton,
Pres. Southern Baptist Convention
Introduction by
Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam
Send 10c for One Copy
(50 copies or more, 8c each)
AMERICAN RUSSIAN INSTITUTE
58 Park Ave., New York 16, N. Y.

J. WIPPELL & Co LTD
Established 18th Century Clerical Tailors & Robe Makers

SPECIAL OFFER: CLERGY CASSOCKS

Wippell Cassocks, individually cut and tailored, incorporate all the little refinements of detail which make for so much extra comfort and convenience in wear

Single or Double Breasted, of Fine All Wool Serge $39.50

Quotation does not include Cincture, Belt or Girdle

Clergy Surplice, Slightly Gathered
Pure Irish Linen $13.50

Clerical Cloaks to cover cassock, Waterproof Melton $39.00

Patterns sent on application

55 & 56, High Street, EXETER, England
(also 11, Tufton Street, Westminster, S.W.1, London, Eng.)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

field: "All the evidence is to fact that the error for the accident was from the other plane and its pilot. Your son was going about his job properly when the accident happened. He was neither foolhardy nor careless."

Canterbury Cathedral

London (wireless to RNS):—The Friends of Canterbury Cathedral announced at their annual council meeting here that 3,000 pounds ($12,000) will be spent during the next three years by the organization to modernize and repair the cathedral. One-third of the sum will be used to install hidden lighting in the crypt and cloisters of the cathedral and in Howley Library. The remainder will be spent on rebuilding the cathedral organ.

The council expressed gratification over a letter from the Rt. Rev. G. Ashton Oldham, Bishop of Albany, in which he revealed that 90 members of the House of Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church, one priest, and two laymen had become members of the organization.

Install Leader

Syracuse, N. Y. (RNS):—For the first time in Syracuse history, pastors of virtually all Protestant churches, wearing traditional vestments of their particular denominations, marched in a dramatic processional at a solemn ceremony in Plymouth Congregational church here marking the installation of the Rev. Laurence T. Hosie as executive secretary of the Council of Churches of Syracuse and Onondaga County. Main speaker at the service, the Rev. Robert W. Searles, director of community relations for the Protestant Council of New York City, declared: "The church's main problem in this atomic age is essentially a problem of human relations—between nations, between races, between the human elements in the house of industry, with the family—and in each single life where the struggle between selfishness and brotherhood takes on a cosmic significance. It must dawn upon us that there is as real a science of human relations as there is of living cells. Life depends upon discovery of and obedience to those laws.

Installation Service

Washington:—Bishop Henry K. Sherrill of Massachusetts will be installed as Presiding Bishop at the Cathedral here the afternoon of January 13. It is expected that a specially-written form of service will be used, based somewhat upon the service for the installation of an

Send For This BIG · NEW · 1947 HANDBOOK For Sunday School Workers

112 Pages 1000 Illus.

Lists over 5000 Tested Helps and Ideas. A ready reference with complete descriptions of Lesson Helps, Story Papers, handwork, visual aids, gifts, books, etc. Everything you need to lead, teach or manage a Sunday School. Mail Coupon for Your FREE Copy NOW.

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

I am ☐ Pastor, ☐ Supt., ☐ Teacher, ☐ Worker in ☐ Begin., ☐ Pri., ☐ Jr., ☐ Inter-Sr., ☐ Y. P., ☐ Adult Dept(s). of_____Church

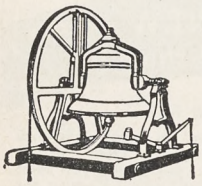
813-CR North Grove Avenue, Elgin, Illinois

DAVID C. COOK PUBLISHING COMPANY

Church People Should Know —

Their Rector's theological training cost his Seminary roughly three times what he paid for it.

Other professional schools are raising tuition and other charges to meet increased costs. Our seminaries hope to continue to offer their facilities to men of limited means who are under vocation to the Sacred Ministry. Whether they will be able to or not depends upon the support they receive from Church people. The need is urgent.



Berkeley Divinity School, New Haven, Conn.; Bexley Hall, Gambier, Ohio; Bishop Payne Divinity School, Petersburg, Va.; Church Divinity School of the Pacific, Berkeley, Calif.; Divinity School of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Philadelphia; Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Mass.; The General Theological Seminary, New York City; Nashotah House, Nashotah, Wis.; School of Theology of the University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn.; Seabury-Western Theological Seminary, Evanston, Ill.; Virginia Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Va.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Write us for
Organ Information
AUSTIN ORGANS, Inc.
Hartford, Conn.

Memorial Windows
In accordance with the best traditions of the craft. Notable installations in forty states and five foreign countries.
Illustrated material on request
The D'Ascenzo Studios
founded 1896
1604 Summer Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

ALTAR BREADS ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED
SAINT MARY'S CONVENT
KENOSHA • WISCONSIN

MENEELY BELL CO.
22 RIVER ST., TROY, N. Y.
BELLS

R. GEISSLER, INC.
71-79 W. 45th St., New York 19, N. Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE·BRASS·SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS
EST 1871

ERNEST W. LAKEMAN
Designer and Worker in
STAINED GLASS
2 CRESCENT PLACE
YONKERS, NEW YORK

Need a LAXATIVE?
Black-Draught is,
1-Usually prompt
2-Usually thorough
3-Always economical

25 to 40 doses only 25¢
Get BLACK-DRAUGHT
CAUTION: USE ONLY AS DIRECTED

archbishop used by the Church of England. The present Presiding Bishop, Henry St. George Tucker, will have charge of the service, with Bishop Perry of Rhode Island, who also held the office, taking part. Owen D. Roberts, president of the House of Deputies, is expected to present Bishop Sherrill for installation and an address by the new Presiding Bishop will be a feature of the service.

National Temple

Columbus, Ohio (RNS): — Plans for a huge national Protestant church temple, to cost in excess of 12 million dollars, have been formulated by the Ohio Council of Churches. The structure, designed to house national offices of all Protestant churches, would be known as the "Temple of Good Will," and will be located in the civic center of Columbus.

Originally planned as headquarters for Ohio Protestantism, the idea has grown to national scope and the Ohio Council of Churches, of which B. F. Lamb is executive secretary, is endeavoring to receive approval and support from all Protestant organizations in the country.

The preliminary architect's drawings were worked out on the basis of 370,000 square feet of office space plus an auditorium to seat 3,000 persons for conventions, a banquet room seating 1,200, several small conference rooms accommodating 100 to 200 each, a small chapel and a large chapel for 700 or 800 persons, and broadcasting studios.

Dr. Lamb pointed out in the first public announcement of plans for the "Temple of Good Will" that various headquarters of national Protestant church organizations now utilize 670,000 square feet of office space and that plans will have to be enlarged to provide plenty of space for everyone.

A REAL OPPORTUNITY

The rector of a large and aggressive middle-western parish desires to engage a well qualified associate. Parish offers comfortable home, car allowance and good salary. Is a Prayer Book Parish and seeks one who will fit into that picture. Box A, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATOR

Trained Religious Educator desires to make a change. Box G, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

POSITION WANTED

Trained young Churchwoman desires position as assistant to rector. Box B, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

POSITION WANTED

Clergyman, 39, married but without children, seeks position as assistant in New York or within commuting distance. Will also be glad to do supply work until located. Box H, THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

Everything for the Episcopal Church
but vestments
A broad statement but we'd like to prove it.
Ammidon and Company
Horace L. Varian
Horace L. Varian, Jr.
31 South Frederick Street
Baltimore 2, Maryland

PURE IRISH LINENS NOW IN STOCK
for all Church needs, supplies constantly arriving, good qualities, also fine cottons. Samples free.
Mary Fawcett Company
Plainfield, N. J. Box 146

CATHEDRAL STUDIOS
Washington & London, England. Linens and materials by the yard, surplices, albs, Altar Linens, stoles, burses & veils. Materials by the yard. See my NEW BOOK "CHURCH EMBROIDERY" & CHURCH VESTMENTS a complete instruction. 128 pages, 95 illus. Price $5.67. And my HANDBOOK for ALTAR GUILDS, price 50c. Miss L. V. Mackrille, 11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington 15, D.C. 30 minutes from U. S. Treasury. Tel. Wisconsin 2752.

SURPLICES — STOLES
VESTMENTS
CHURCH HANGINGS
ALTAR LINENS
CASSOCKS
CLERICAL SUITS — CLOAKS
RABATS—RABAT VESTS—COLLARS—SHIRTS
Choir Vestments in All Styles
Inquiries Invited
C. M. ALMY & SON, INC.
562 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.

The Payne-Spiers Studios Inc.
Studios at Paterson, New Jersey
Carved Wood
Chancel Renovations Church Furnishings
Murals Memorials Tablets
Stained Glass
-- Inquiries Solicited --

A SERVICE OF HOLY BAPTISM
Prepared from various sources by
The Rev. Joseph H. Titus
Submitted for consideration of the Church as a substitute for the Prayer Book Service.
$4 for 100 copies
10c for single copy
The WITNESS
135 Liberty Street New York 6, N.Y.

Church Bulletins
Scriptural — Artistically Designed
Large Assortment — Self Selection
Lithographed — Special Days — General use
Be Sure to Get Our Free Catalog and amples
Ecclesiastical Art Press Dept. W
Louisville, 12, Ky.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

MISS GRACE WHITTALL
Churchwoman of Philadelphia

It is good to find Vida Scudder back in the pages of THE WITNESS. The response to her question (Nov. 7) I found extremely interesting and all the more so since I assume that most of those answering were young people. We hear a good deal these days about the grasp that youth has on the many problems that confront us but I must say that the answers here presented hardly bears this out.

Incidentially is THE WITNESS to continue with the autobiographies that did appear from time to time by this same author? To me these were an outstanding feature; one in my judgment which by itself, more than justified the existence of THE WITNESS.

* * *

STEPHEN MARTIN
Layman of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Major Kettring's (WITNESS, Oct. 17) letter in its failure to be specific about the implications of Christ's teachings just about points up the article by Young Spofford on the silence of General Convention on the factors that harass and make insecure man's living. Is it not altogether too clear that with all the chant of "freedom of speech," there has grown up an atmosphere—the result of the "sinister, subversive, insidious propaganda of the Reds" so ceaselessly being peddled about—in which men cannot think nor give free expression to their opinions. Thus one may not even venture to discuss the profit motive, as if it transcended the Bill of Rights in our scheme of government. Such discussion, one is constantly told, only aims to undermine our institutions. Yet the public school system, as has been so often pointed out, as well as the army and navy, our churches and hospitals, have always functioned outside the profit system and all will agree have served our country rather well. Why then may not industry serve the nation equally well if we but allow the profit element to function according to orthodox economic law. Let profit be returned to capital. But let us not confuse capital with society folks. Machinery and plants are capital, not the so-called four hundred.

Does one doubt that were profit not diverted to luxuries for idle people, but were returned to expand further the industrial machine, that slum areas would disappear and the fear of insecurity would be eliminated from men's minds, thus giving all a closer vision of the Christian way of life.

I would be curious to know what people like Major Kettring think of so radical a proposal. Clearly it is a choice between profits and Christianity.

May I also thank Young Spofford for his nice article on General Convention. He seems to be a chip off the old block. I knew a young clergyman, brilliant, who had been through the mill, who knew handicaps from personal experience. He understood the social gospel thoroughly but preferred to take the conservative course, for which I do not wish to blame him. But one day I asked him—he was an ambitious man—if he would rather be a Spofford or a bishop. Without hesitation he replied, "A Spofford." That, it seems to me, is enough credit for anyone, and it is nice to know that we now have another Spofford working for the Good Cause.

* * *

B. Z. STAMBAUGH
Rector at Lorain, Ohio

I write to express my appreciation of Professor Shepherd's comment on the holy baptism poster (WITNESS, Nov. 14). What utterly inept and futile publicity material has been coming from "281" in recent years! Think of the tons of posters,—big, wall posters, mind you,—that we have been asked to mail out to our parish families every fall! Can any sane person really believe that people in civilized communities would put them up on living room walls,—or even in rumpus rooms? They are the sort of thing that might properly appear in the salesroom of a tire dealer or a gas station.

* * *

MR. SCHUYLER LAWRENCE
Layman of Towanda, Penna.

This year has been one of considerable interest in the operation and resources of the Church Pension Fund. One blind spot which has not been discussed is the cost of cashing a check on the part of a beneficiary. In this parish it costs ten cents to cash a Pension Fund Check. In other words the local banks will not cash Fund checks at par. On the basis of a monthly pension check the beneficiary has to pay $1.20 each year just to get cash for the Fund's check. The pensions granted are not so large that this is not felt by the ordinary beneficiary. The suggestion was made to me while investigating this matter on behalf of local pensioners, that they should cash their Fund checks at the stores they trade at. This at first glance seems reasonable. I found however that there were two serious objections: one, that the stores are charged ten cents for the check when they in turn deposit it, so that they, too, make a charge for cashing out-of-town checks; and secondly, that most pensioners do not like to expose the meagre amount of their resources to gossip on the part of the store clerks. It seems to me that this is likely to be a widespread situation among the Fund's payees and that something should be done to encourage the banks everywhere to class the Fund's checks with the group to be cashed at par—e.g. as relief checks usually are. I believe that most banks will find it is good business to do so, especially if the matter is called to their attention by important depositors.

Virginia Episcopal School
Lynchburg, Virginia
Prepares boys for colleges and university. Splendid environment and excellent corps of teachers. High standard in scholarship and athletics. Healthy and beautiful location in the mountains of Virginia.
For catalogue apply to
George L. Barton, Jr., Ph.D. Headmaster.
Box 408

SCHOOLS

The Hospital of Saint Barnabas and the University of Newark offer a full course in NURSING
to qualified High School graduates. Scholarships available. Classes enter in February and September
Apply to
Director of Nursing
HOSPITAL OF SAINT BARNABAS
685 High Street Newark, N. J.

DE VEAUX SCHOOL
FOUNDED 1852
A Church school for boys. Thorough preparation for college. Military system of student government, developing sense of responsibility. Charges for grades seven and eight $1000; grades nine through twelve $1050. For catalog, address THE HEADMASTER, DeVeaux School, Niagara Falls, New York.

HOLDERNESS
In the White Mountains. College Preparatory and General Courses. Music and Crafts. For boys 12-19. All sports including riding. 200 acres of woods. New fireproof building. Individual attention. Home atmosphere.
Rev. Edric A. Weld, Rector
Box W. Plymouth, N. H.

Saint Mary's-in-the-Mountains
An Episcopal college preparatory boarding school for fifty girls. Piano and Choral instruction. Art. Domestic Science. Mountain hikes and winter sports afforded by location in White Mountains. Horseback and Skiing lessons. New gymnasium. For catalogue address
Miss Mary Harley Jenks, Principal
Littleton, New Hampshire

FORK UNION MILITARY ACADEMY
An Honor Christian School with the highest academic rating. Upper School prepares for university or business. ROTC. Every modern equipment. Junior School from six years. Housemother. Separate building. Catalogue. Dr. J. J. Wicker, Fork Union, Virginia.

CARLETON COLLEGE
Laurence M. Gould, D.Sc., President
Carleton is a co-educational liberal arts college of limited enrollment and is recognized as the Church College of Minnesota.
Address: Director of Admissions
CARLETON COLLEGE
Northfield Minnesota

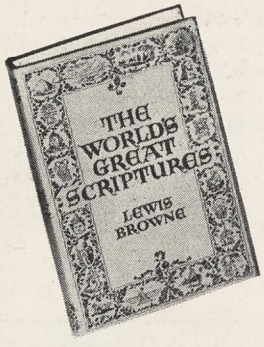
KEMPER HALL
KENOSHA, WISCONSIN
Boarding and day school for girls offering thorough college preparation and training for purposeful living. Study of the Fine Arts encouraged. Complete sports program. Junior School department. Beautiful lake shore campus. Under direction of the Sisters of St Mary. For catalogue, address: Box WT.

LENOX SCHOOL
A Church School in the Berkshire Hills for boys 12-18 emphasizing Christian ideals and character through simplicity of plant and equipment, moderate tuition, the cooperative self-help system, and informal, personal relationships among boys and faculty.
Rev. Robert L. Curry, Headmaster
Lenox Massachusetts

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BOOKS RECOMMENDED FOR CHRISTMAS

The Books Announced Here All Received Either Three or Two Star Rating by THE WITNESS



HOW TO READ THE BIBLE

By EDGAR J. GOODSPEED

A renowned scholar of Biblical literature reveals the Bible as a library of eighty volumes full of profoundly exciting drama, history, poetry. Dr. Goodspeed makes everyone want to read the Bible for the sheer joy of good reading.

$2.50

THE JOHN C. WINSTON COMPANY
Winston Building Philadelphia

THE WORLD'S GREAT SCRIPTURES

By LEWIS BROWNE

An anthology of the world's holy literature by one of the most widely-read authorities in the field of comparative religion. It contains excerpts from more than ninety of the noblest texts in the sacred canons of mankind. Each is provided with a preface, giving historical background, spiritual import, and its broad cultural significance. Appropriately illustrated. $5.00

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY
60 Fifth Avenue New York 11

THE MISSION AND MESSAGE OF JESUS

By H.D.A. MAJOR, D.D., F.S.A., T. W. MANSON, D. Litt. and C. J. WRIGHT, B.D., Ph.D.

"In my judgment this work is the best commentary in English on the Gospels, particularly on the teaching elements in the Synoptics. I have used it almost since its first appearance a few years ago in my classes. It is reverential, constructive and on the whole illuminating."—John Wick Bowman, San Francisco Theological Seminary.

At all bookstores — $5.00

E. P. DUTTON & CO.
New York

TO THEE WE SING

By CATHERINE AND FRANK HERZEL

Unique and spritely narrative distinguish this book from other hymn histories. Describes favorite hymns and famous hymnists in intimate detail. Hymn writers from John of Damascus, through Wesley, Luther, Havergal to Fosdick, Masefield and other modern writers are featured. Written for all ages—all denominations. "An important book for young people"—THE BANNER. "An inspiring, workmanlike job"—CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Cloth bound. 254 pages. Price, $2.00

At Your Religious Bookstore or

MUHLENBERG PRESS
1228 Spruce Street Philadelphia 7, Pa.

THE RUSSIAN RELIGIOUS MIND

Kievan Christianity
By GEORGE P. FEDOTOV

A noted authority presents the first historical synthesis of the ideas and sentiments which together make up the Russian religious mind. Important not only to specialists but to all who are interested in Russian culture. $6.00

HARVARD UNIVERSITY PRESS
Cambridge 38, Massachusetts

THE ILLUSTRATED EDITION OF THE NEW TESTAMENT

in Ronald Knox's translation with
30 FULL COLOR PLATES

reproducing the finest pictures in the Art galleries of America and England. Chapter heads, initials and endpapers from woodcuts in 14th and 15th century manuscripts.

506 pages — $5.00

SHEED & WARD
63 Fifth Avenue, New York 3

TOWARD A BETTER WORLD

Edited by
BISHOP WILLIAM SCARLETT

Everyone who wants to do his part should read this enlightening explanation of present-day problems, and suggestions on how to solve them, written by Arthur Holly Compton, Eleanor Roosevelt, Sumner Welles, Reinhold Niebuhr, and ten other equally prominent Christian laymen and clergymen. $2.00

THE JOHN C. WINSTON COMPANY
Winston Building Philadelphia

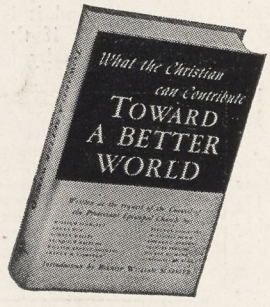
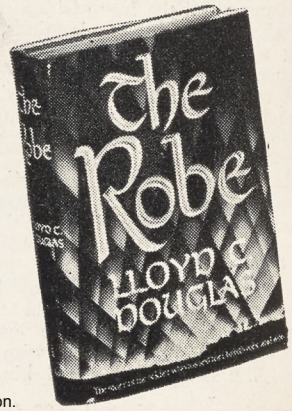
THE ROBE

By LLOYD C. DOUGLAS

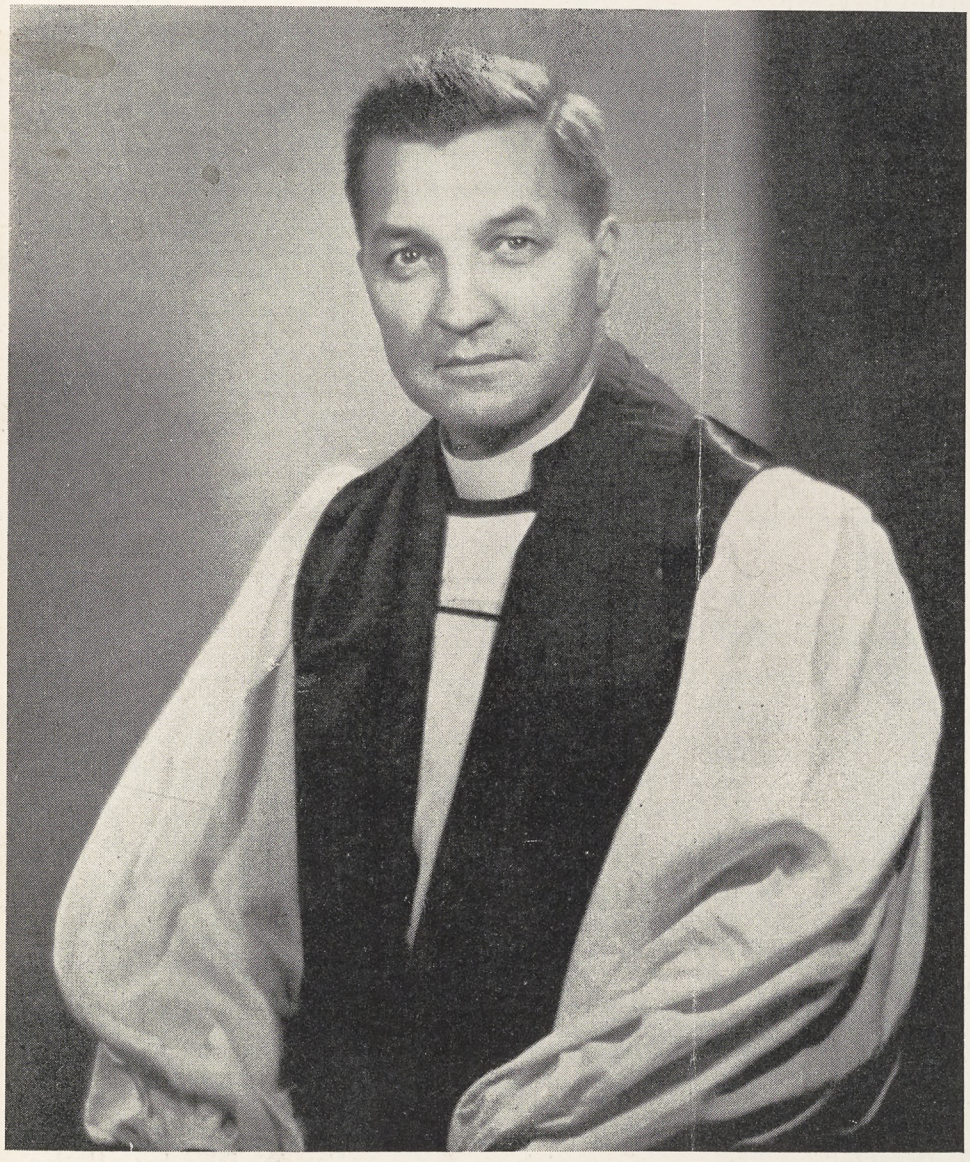


Americans all over the world are reading this story of the soldier who gambled for Christ's robe and won.



"Mr. Douglas's inspiring word-picture of the rising tide of Christian faith in the months following the crucifixion is one never to be forgotten. . . . One of the most thought-provoking and outstanding novels of this or any other time."—Philadelphia Inquirer. Price $2.75

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY
2 Park Street, Boston 7, Mass.



Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The WITNESS

10¢ A COPY

LIBRARY COPY

DECEMBER 5, 1946

LANE W. BARTON
THE NEW BISHOP OF EASTERN OREGON

NEGLECTED FACTOR IN EDUCATION

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

DEFENSE AGAINST AGGRESSIVE CATHOLIC HIERARCHY

The Roman Catholic hierarchy cannot be effectively challenged by viewing it with alarm and by denouncing aggressive its campaign to get a wider footing in America. One of the most effective ways of defense is to make use of the technical apparatus now available, both to scholars and laymen, for proving that infallible knowledge of Scripture is not enthroned on the Tiber.

Priestly power, according to Rome, strikes directly down through the Bible onto a supposed priestly structure in the Arabian desert, which is declared by Catholic orthodoxy to have been a real, solid, matter of fact, like our Capitol at Washington. That the alleged building is only a figment of the imagination, based upon a tenuous growth of Hebrew legend, is now made clear by a new critical analysis of the "Priestly narrative".

Hebrew legends primarily Ephraimite. The main stock and core of the Hebrew nation was located in central Palestine, and was called "Ephraim" or "The House of Joseph". The legend-building power of Israel resided here in three tribes, MANASSEH, EPHRAIM, BENJAMIN, descended by legend from Jacob's beloved wife Rachel. But these tribes are discredited in every possible way by the Priestly narrative, which was prepared by Judaic writers in the Babylonian exile.

The three Rachel-tribes are placed at the back side of the ecclesiastical structure. But the other tribes, descended by legend from Jacob's hated wife Leah or from slave-women, are placed more honorably on the other three sides of the building. Thus, the Leah-tribes LEVI and SIMEON, whose ancestors caused the name of Jacob "to be in bad odor among the inhabitants of Canaan", are given positions of more dignity. The Leah-tribe of REUBEN, whose legendary father seduced a concubine of Jacob, is exalted above the Rachel-tribes. The Leah-tribe of JUDAH, whose legendary forefather of that name took a Gentile woman to wife, and who also had children by another Gentile woman whom he supposed to be a prostitute, is placed on the very front of the "Tabernacle", facing the sunrise. And along with Judah is the Leah-tribe of ISSACHAR, descended by legend from an ancestor whom Jacob was "hired" to beget. All the non-Rachel tribes are given higher consideration than the tribes descended from the legendary JOSEPH, who in Potiphar's house, declared "I cannot do this great wickedness, and sin against God".

The Priestly narrative is full of meticulous vindictiveness and animosity, operating subtly in the background against the Josephite, or Ephraimite, elements at the basis of Hebrew history. And it is "infallibly" endorsed by the Roman hierarchy. But the technique is now available by which ecclesiastical aggression can be successfully challenged; and it therefore becomes the duty of Protestant scholars and laymen to publicize the facts in a widespread counter-campaign. The force of the evidence cannot be broken by all the resources of Roman Catholic scholarship!

—Louis Wallis

Advertisement

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

VOL. XXX. No. 1.

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

DECEMBER 5, 1946

Publication Office, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago 37, Ill. Editorial Office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

Charles P. Taft Slated to Head The Federal Council

The Federal Council of Churches Deals With Issues of Peace at Large Biennial Meeting

By W. B. Spofford

Seattle, Wash.:—Mr. Charles P. Taft, Episcopalian of Cincinnati, Ohio, is slated to be the next president of the Federal Council of Churches, according to well informed delegates who are here attending the biennial meeting of the Council. Mr. Taft, who played an important role in the Philadelphia General Convention, is also a member of the provisional committee of the World Council of Churches.

Among the important matters being discussed at the meeting, in session from December 4th through the 6th, are the future role of the Churches in overseas relief and reconstruction; the merger of national interdenominational bodies; race relations and, of course, international affairs. There are many distinguished Churchmen addressing the meeting, with the one most likely to take the center of the stage being Pastor Martin Niemoeller of Germany. He arrived in New York on December 2 by plane from London having missed sailing on the Queen Elizabeth because of delay in securing his visa from U. S. government authorities. The duration of his stay in this country has not yet been determined but it is announced that he is to give addresses in about fifty American cities where he will speak under the auspices of the Federal Council. On his recent visit to England, where he was the guest of Bishop Bell of Chichester, he made no speeches at all, presumably forbidden to do so by British authorities. There have been a number of protests against his speaking in the United States, on the grounds that he was, before his imprisonment, closely identified with top-ranking Nazis, but the leaders of the Federal Council have turned a deaf ear to the protests. He is accompanied by his wife who is to address gatherings in this country under the sponsorship of the United Council of Church Women.

Also addressing the meetings here are V. K. Wellington Koo, Chinese ambassador to the U. S.; John Foster Dulles, American delegate to the UN assembly and the chairman of the Council's commission on a just and durable peace, and Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, the outgoing President of the Council.

Six applications for membership will be acted upon at the meeting. One of these, the Universalist Church, sought membership in 1944 but was turned down on the ground that the Church did not hold theological beliefs that qualified it for membership. Other applications have been received from the Evangelical Unity of Czech-Moravian Brethren; the Swedenborgian Church; the Church of the East and of the Assyrians; the Liberal Catholic Church and the Old Catholic Church.

Among the more important reports to come before the delegates is the one dealing with progress toward the establishment of a National Council of the Churches of Christ in America, on which the General Convention of the Episcopal Church acted favorably this year. The proposed Council would unite the eight major Protestant interdenominational agencies, including the Federal Council.

Action will also be taken on proposals that the Council call a meeting of Protestant groups to discuss general Church unity. A Council spokesman here declared however that while the Council might convene such a meeting it would have to be held under the auspices of the participating denominations.

The Episcopal Church is officially represented here by a delegation of nineteen, headed by six bishops. The members are Bishop Sterrett of Bethlehem, the chairman; Bishop Sturtevant of Fond du Lac; Bishop Scarlett of Missouri; Bishop Huston of Olympia; Bishop Cross of Spokane; Bishop Dagwell of Oregon. The priests are Dean Sprouse of Kansas City; Harold Holt of Oak Park, Ill.; Ronald Merrix of San Francisco; Lee Owen Stone of Portland; Anthony R. Parshley of Episcopalian Charles P. Taft is slated to be the next president of the Federal Council of Churches

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Bristol, R. I.; Frederick A. Schilling of Olympia, Wash. The laymen are Mr. Clifford Morehouse of New York and Mr. Harper Sibley of Rochester, N. Y. The women delegates are Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce of New York, the treasurer of the Church Publishing Association for whom THE WITNESS is published; Mrs. C. V. Bowman of Portland; Mrs. E. F. Colcock of Seattle; Miss Rebekah Hibbard of Pasadena and Mrs. Harper Sibley of Rochester, who is also the president of the United Council of Church Women.

CONGRESSMAN SPEAKS AT CATHEDRAL

Washington: — Racial discrimination must be struck down, declared Congressman Charles M. LaFollette, Episcopalian from Indiana, speaking from the pulpit of Washington Cathedral. He said there could be no such thing as brotherhood in which "white Anglo-Saxon gentile Protestants are ranked as first sons of God, Jews appearing somewhere further down the list, and even lower, peoples whose skins are black. Men merely profess their good intentions, then do nothing. It is easy and self-satisfying to pass a good resolution, then go home and forget about it."

IT MAY ARRIVE LATE

Chicago:—The mailing department of THE WITNESS is doing its best to get your copy to you at the usual time. However because of the coal crisis a number of trains formerly used have been discontinued so that your copy may be a bit late in arriving. May we take this occasion also to request that all address changes be sent to us personally. A postal card is sufficient. Be sure to give both the old and new address and allow us three weeks to make the change. Notices may be sent either to 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago 37, or to 135 Liberty Street, New York 6.

ORTHODOX CHURCHMEN IN JERUSALEM

Jerusalem (wireless to RNS):—The arrival here of Metropolitan Gregorii of Leningrad has stimulated rumors that the Moscow Patriarchate has opened negotiations with British authorities for transfer of church property now in the hands of Russian Orthodox dissidents. Metropolitan Gregorii is the first high-ranking Russian churchman to visit Jerusalem since the tour of Moscow Patriarch Alexei in 1945. Russian Orthodox property in the Holy Land, valued at about $4,000,000, was controlled by the Czarist government prior to the Revolution of 1917, but subsequently remained in possession of local Orthodox leaders, who have consistently refused to recognize the jurisdiction of the Moscow Patriarchate outside Russia.

IRISH CATHOLICS PROTEST

Dublin (wireless to RNS):—An uproar in which three persons were arrested and several others were injured marked a meeting of the Irish-Soviet Friendship Society in the Mansion House here at which Dean Hewlett Johnson of Canterbury was the featured speaker. Dean Johnson was met with a barrage of interruptions during his address and the furore continued for more than half an hour as firecrackers were exploded and swastika flags were thrown from the balconies. Those interrupting Johnson shouted that they protested the talk "as Catholics and Irishmen." They were ejected by stewards. A detachment of police arrived to restore order and made three arrests. Several people were injured and required hospital treatment.

Bishop Avery Mason was recently inducted as diocesan of Dallas at a service at St. Matthew's Cathedral

Dean Johnson, whose speech was entitled "What I Saw in Russia," asserted that there was "not one iota of government interference" with the religious activities of Churches in Russia. He said that family life in Russia today "was more respected and valued" than in any other country. He declared that Russia was anxious for peace, and in a reference to the atomic bomb he told his audience that "it's no good banking on something that may not be a unique possession for very long."

LANE W. BARTON A BISHOP

Norwalk, O.:—Lane W. Barton, rector of Grace Church, Orange, N. J. and an editor of THE WITNESS was consecrated Bishop of Eastern Oregon at St. Paul's here on November 26. The Presiding Bishop was the consecrator, with Bishop Keeler of Minnesota and Bishop Hobson of Southern Ohio the co-consecrators. The new bishop is a native of Ohio and the church was jammed with his many friends from all parts of the country. The sermon was preached by Bishop Angus Dean of Washington, while the presentors were Bishop Beverly D. Tucker of Ohio and Bishop Washburn of Newark.

Bishop and Mrs. Barton left here for Pendleton, Oregon, following the service. They are to remain there for several weeks, returning to Orange for Christmas services. They will then leave about the middle of January to take up permanent residence at Pendleton.

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

EDITORIAL BOARD: Frederick C. Grant, Editor; Arthur Lichtenberger, Chairman; William B. Spofford, Managing Editor; Lane W. Barton, Beverly M. Boyd, Dillard H. Brown, Roscoe T. Foust, Charles K. Gilbert, Hugh D. McCandless, Howard Chandler Robbins, William K. Russell, Sydney A. Temple Jr., Joseph H. Titus, William M. Weber.

★

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS: D. B. Aldrich, J. A. Bell, T. S. Carruthers, Adelaide Case, G. K. Chalmers, E. M. Cross, G. M. Day, Angus Dun, A. W. Farlander, T. P. Ferris, J. F. Fletcher, John Gass, C. H. Gesner, C. L. Glenn, G. C. Graham, J. M. Groton, G. I. Hiller, I. P. Johnson, T. R. Ludlow, C. S. Martin, R. C. Miller, Walter Mitchell, A. T. Mollegen, E. L. Parsons, E. L. Pennington, Rose Phelps, L. W. Pitt, Otis Rice, Cyril Richardson, Paul Roberts, V. D. Scudder, W. M. Sharp, W. B. Sperry, C. W. Sprouse, D. S. Stark, W. B. Stevens, J. W. Suter, S. E. Sweet, Alexander Zabriskie.

★

THE WITNESS is published weekly from September 15th to June 15th inclusive, with the exception of the first week in January and semi-monthly from June 15th to September 15th by the Episcopal Church Publishing Co. on behalf of the Church Publishing Association, Inc. Samuel Thorne, President; Charles A. Houston, Vice-President; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, Treasurer; Frederic D. H. Gilbert, Secretary.

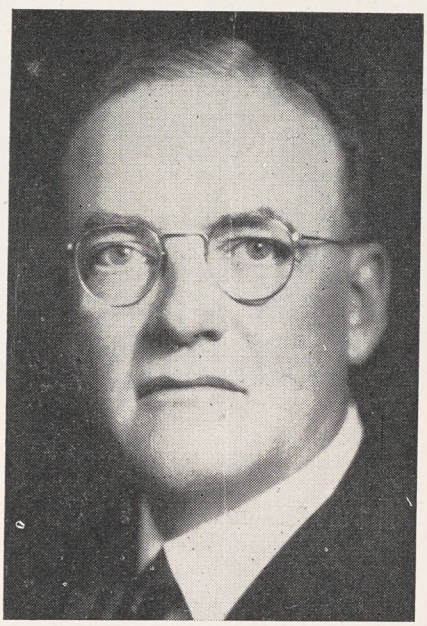
★

The subscription price is $3.00 a year; in bundles for sale in parishes the magazine sells for 10c a copy, we will bill quarterly at 5c a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter, March 6, 1939, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Church Representatives Meet United Nations Leaders

Many Churchmen Get Very Different Slant On United Nations by Attending Sessions



By W. B. Spofford Jr.

New York:—"The citizens of the world must not become so impatient with the apparent poverty of results in the United Nations that they come to the conclusion that nothing can be done towards establishing world peace," said Mr. Andrew Cordier, executive assistant to Secretary General Trygvie Lie, in his address to the first interdenominational institute on the United Nations held at Lake Success and New York on November 25 and 26. The institute, attended by fifty representatives of state and local councils of churches, denominational social relations departments, unofficial social action groups and religious periodicals, was sponsored by the Federal Council of Churches and the United Council of Church Women and featured attendance at meetings of the UN General Assembly and sessions with members of the United States UN delegation.

In urging patience, Mr. Cordier said that "the work of the United Nations is not the experience of just this week nor of the next five weeks. It is important to remember that the recent war was set in a historical framework reaching back many years and that the crowded agenda can not be cleared up overnight. The General Assembly is the central organ of the United Nations," he said, "and as the policy-making organ, it must be given a considerable portion of time to resolve fundamental differences. As the issues flow in and out of the Assembly—down to subcommittees and back again—we get the understanding and the means for resolving our difficulties. After following the work of the United Nations from the very beginning, I have come to the conclusion that the catastrophe of a third world war may be born of impatience more than anything else."

Mr. Benjamin V. Cohen, assistant secretary-general of the United Nations who is in charge of the department of public information, said that "the League of Nations failed, not because of any internal or structural weakness as such, but due to the fact that it had no real and vital contact with the general public. The League operated more or less in a vacuum in Geneva and our job—and the responsibility of Church leaders—is to keep all the peoples, who make up the grass-roots of the UN, informed."

During the two-day session, delegates to the Institute sat in on the discussions of the Trusteeship Committee and followed the close and cautious debate on New Zealand's proposed trusteeship charter for West Samoa which may establish some fundamental principles for the establishment of the UN's Trusteeship Council, the only UN body not yet functioning. Members of the Institute said that they believed such observance was a valuable educational technique since, through listening to the serious debate, they could counteract the false impression they had received of the UN from the scare headlines of the daily press. Many Institute members expressed the hope that many such programs would be planned for Church workers and members.

John Foster Dulles is queried by Churchmen on the affairs of the United Nations

At a special evening meeting, the Institute held an "off-the-record" session with John Foster Dulles, American delegate on the Trusteeship Committee; Mr. Charles Fahy, delegate on the Legal Committee, and Mr. Chester Williams, public liaison officer for the Department of State. Conducted in the nature of press conference, members of the Institute both queried and challenged these men on American policy in respect to the Japanese mandated bases, world famine relief and UNRRA, disarmament and trusteeships. Mr. Dulles expressed a certain disappointment at the slow pace of General Assembly discussions and said, in reference to the establishment of the Trusteeship Council, that the expressed policy of the United States on trusteeships and the Japanese mandated islands was dictated by the lack of ability or machinery on the part of the Assembly to discharge the administrative authority at present.

At the final session of the Institute, the members discussed ways and means of implementing the Churches' educational program in respect to world peace and order, with special reference being paid to the possibility of setting up fifty or more regional conferences on interdenominational lines to discuss the Christian approach to world issues and to develop techniques whereby that approach might be more effectively heard and understood in international and national political circles.

Speaking at this final session were the Rev. Walter W. Van Kirk, executive secretary of the Federal Council's Commission on a Just and Durable Peace; the Rev. Richard M. Fagley, secretary of the same Commission; Dr. O. F. Nolde, co-director of the newly organized Commission of the Churches on International Affairs; the Rev. Vernon H. Holloway, international relations secretary of the Council for Social Action, and Miss Mabel Head, official observer of the United Nations for the United Council of Church Women.

DELINQUENCY DISCUSSED

Washington:—Cooperation among religious groups in a nationwide effort to stem the tide of juvenile delinquency was urged here by the Rev. Beverly Boyd, head of the social relations department of the Federal Council of Churches and a member of the editorial board of THE WITNESS. "In large measure," he said, "juvenile delinquents are among those who have not enjoyed proper religious care and upbringing."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Steps proposed for action included collaboration with agencies dealing with delinquency; church programs in federal, state and local institutions; better housing; counseling service on the part of churches; the development of youth participation in church and community programs.

Other Episcopalians attending the conference, which was called by the Attorney General, were the Rev. Almon Pepper, national social service secretary; the Rev. Howard Kellett, social service secretary of Massachusetts; Miss Edith Balmford, secretary of the Episcopal Service for Youth; the Rev. John E. Culmer of Miami and the Rev. Albert J. Dubois of Washington.

MEN SPONSOR SCHOOL

Burlington, Vt.:—The men's club of St. Paul's Church again this fall sponsored a school of religion on five Tuesday evenings, under the chairmanship of Prof. E. M. Dole of the University of Vermont, a member of the club. There were three periods of classroom lectures, and then an address to the entire school. These addresses were given by Bishop Van Dyck; the Rev. W. A. Tennien, Roman Catholic pastor of St. Mark's, here, whose functional church was described in THE WITNESS of October 31 by Prof. Shpeherd; the Rev. Charles S. Jones, local Congregational minister; Mr. A. P. Fenn, a local Jewish lawyer, and Prof. J. E. Pooley of the University of Vermont.

LARGE GIFT TO SEWANEE

Sewanee, Tenn.:—Mrs. Alfred I. duPont has given $60,000 to the University of the South with a stipulation that it is to be used for higher faculty salaries. The gift has been earmarked for permanent endowment and as such will be eligible for a grant of $15,000 from the general education board which is matching at the rate of $1 for $4 all donations of the forthcoming campaign for five million dollars which starts in February.

LEAVES ESTATE TO PARISH

New Haven:—Miss Mary Louise Pardee, former leader of the Auxiliary in Connecticut, named St. Paul's Church here as the chief beneficiary of her estate. The value will not be known until an inventory is completed but it will be over $25,000. The sum will be added to the endowment, with the income used as long as St. Paul's is an independent parish. Should it ever cease to exist as such the principal reverts to the National Council. One quarter of the estate goes to the Rev. Charles L. Pardee, an uncle, who for a number of years was the secretary of the House of Bishops.

CONFERENCES IN VERMONT

Montpelier, Vt.: — Four district conferences on the Every Member Canvass were recently held in Vermont, with Bishop Van Dyck and the Rev. Clarence Jones, field worker of the National Council, speaking at all of them. They were attended by clergy, vestrymen and canvass chairmen, with the most complete canvass in the history of the diocese the result, according to the Rev. John Norris of Poultney, chairman of the diocesan department of promotion.

The children of the kindergarten of Trinity, Redlands, California, say prayers before their own altar

PROFESSOR GRANT IS BUSY

Pasadena, Calif.:—The Rev. Frederick C. Grant, professor at Union Seminary and editor of THE WITNESS, is having a busy time even though he is supposed to be on a six months vacation. He recently preached at Epiphany, Seattle, and addressed the clergy of the diocese of Olympia on the new Revised Standard Version of the New Testament, of which he was one of the editors. He also preached at All Saints', here, and has a Bible class there each Sunday, also on the new translation. Next week he is to spend in San Francisco leading a conference with the clergy, and also preaching at Santa Rosa. Then he is to take charge of St. Mark's, here, until a new rector is called to succeed the Rev. Stephen Clark, who is to leave shortly to be the Bishop of Utah.

In addition he is writing two articles for encyclopedias and is working on a new commentary on St. Mark's Gospel.

He and Mrs. Grant, who is also writing a book while on the Pacific coast, expect to be back in New York on February 1st.

THAYER ADDISON RETURNS

San Francisco:—The Rev. James Thayer Addison, vice-president of the National Council, is resting in a hospital here, prior to his return to New York. He suffered a heart attack in Guam in October while on his way to the Orient with a commission of the Church which is surveying the work there.

MISSION CHURCH CONSECRATED

Stamford, Conn.: — St. Francis's Mission at Long Ridge was consecrated on November 17 by Bishop Budlong. The land on which it stands and the fully equipped church, which is considered a gem, was presented to the diocese by Mrs. Howard C. Gilmour of this city and New York. The rector of St. John's, Stamford, is in charge of the mission and preached at the consecration service.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

EDITORIALS

The Annual Bible Dusting

THERE used to be, in many homes, a front parlor which was little used. On the center table there was the large family Bible which was carefully dusted periodically and always kept out in full view in case the parson should call. In those days the parlor was opened for weddings, funerals, holiday gatherings and the call of the parson. It was never lived in. The front parlor has disappeared from the American scene but the old custom of Bible dusting remains. There is a danger that on the Second Sunday in Advent the Church bring out the Bible, dust it before her people, remind them how wonderful the sacred book is, then return it to its place on the lectern and the pulpit. This is not true to so great an extent with the New Testament but for most of our people the Old Testament has long since ceased to be something to "live in."

It is easy to understand why this is true. There was a time when people took the Old Testament to be an encyclopedia of the world, explaining geology, biology and astronomy. When they discovered that it wasn't factually reliable in all those fields, a great wave of doubt spread across the country. Then, tired of arguing about that, they simply forgot the Bible. Its place in life had been lost. When they lost it as an encyclopedia of science the Church was not ready to teach it as true, undeniably true, consistently and always true in its own field, the field of religion.

Many lay people still doggedly hold to the old "fundamentalist" point of view and read avidly the Sunday supplement stories on the location of the Garden of Eden. The younger ones pass it off as irrevelant mythology when they learn in the sixth grade of the modern astronomical theories of world creation. There was a time when the Church herself was bewildered with so many developments in Bible criticism that she could answer with no steady voice. But we can use that excuse no longer. We have passed through the period of fumbling and flights in Old Testament criticism. We know that "fundamentalism" is not fundamental at all but a late interpretation which would have been as amazing to the later Bible editors as to the original tale-spinners whose stories were included. We can get back to the situation in which the stories were told and the purpose for the telling. They come to us now not as a collection of little stories about a backwood garden, but as the record of God writing in history. Nowhere else can one find so well told the movement of God in history and his inspiration of men's hearts in the continuing process of creation.

Men may be shocked to learn that Cain represents the Canaanites and Abel is a symbol of the Hebrews (with the linguistic change from "l" to "r") in a tale which is as true as the symbolic story that could be told of the relationship to Uncle Sam and John Bull in the last few years. But when we realize that the question "Am I my brother's keeper" can no longer be answered in our relationship with individuals, we are required to enlarge their religious sense in order to approach the Bible truth. It makes us search our hearts to discover our social relationship to other people, to those in India, in Indonesia, in Africa. Nathan before David and Elijah at the court of Ahab speak no longer to oriental potentates but to us and to our times. The prophets rise again with their words of dire truth to which we must listen and Isaiah II leads to Christ, and away from the pitfalls of a legalistic religion.

That truth is not easy to teach when men have become comfortable in their departure from it is a maxim which holds as true in Old Testament study as in any other realm. Against this we must remind ourselves of Augustine's rule, "Custom without truth is but antiquity in error." There are some books and even religious education manuals which present the realistic approach to the Old

"QUOTES"

THOSE who have been taught of Christ know in their hearts that the first law of life is to love God, and next to God one's neighbor; that they are great who serve many, not those whom many serve; that we need to be forgiven much and to forgive generously; that ill-will blocks the channels of life and blinds us to God; that the body and all the things of nature are not to be despised, but mastered for spiritual ends; that the life which is self-saving and self-serving is starved; that the accumulation of possessions and the care they become is not the great good, but a great hazard to the life of the spirit; that he is a fool who invests his life's interests in undependable securities, in values that do not last; that God is trustworthy and to be trusted, and in that trust we may escape our great enemy, fear; that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son."

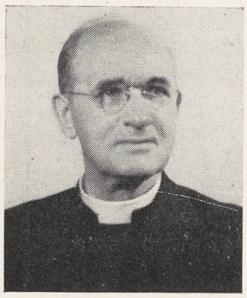
—Angus Dunn,
Bishop of Washington

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Testament. But these will not use themselves. Teachers must be trained and schools for lay people in Lent or at other seasons are required. A whole generation must be re-educated in the religious truth of the Old Testament if the whole Bible is again to be open in the lives of the people.

Maintain the Price

WE ARE anxious to maintain the present price of THE WITNESS — three dollars a year. Whether or not we can do so must depend to a great extent on our present subscribers. That costs for producing the magazine have gone up hardly need be argued. Everything has, including your daily newspaper for which most people now pay 5 cents instead of 2 cents, or your secular magazines that now cost you from fifty to one hundred percent more than a few months ago. One of our Church papers, which offers you very little more material during the course of a year than THE WITNESS, is now $5.85 to our $3.



With our present number of subscribers it is doubtful if we can hold the present price. On the other hand if we can increase our circulation fifty percent, thus lowering costs by increasing production, we are confident that we can continue at $3 a year — unless of course prices skyrocket further.

So we have put it up to you in a letter that is now being mailed to all subscribers. If each one will send us one or more Christmas Gift Subscriptions at the present price of $3 a year the problem is solved. With the letter is a form for the listing of those you wish to send THE WITNESS. Christmas week we will send to each of these friends a Christmas card announcing the gift as from you. THE WITNESS we believe will make an acceptable gift to your Church friends; it is a convenient way to make gifts; if a sufficient number act upon the suggestion we will maintain the magazine at three dollars. Your help, please. Thanks.

Neglected Factor in Education

by Maurice Clarke
Rector at Camden, South Carolina

IT OUGHT to be a cause for rejoicing to all who have been engaged in the religious education of the Church's children and youth, that at long last, the higher levels of authority in the Church are beginning to express some concern about it. It has been the subject of debate in the House of Bishops and out of that debate came the appointment of a committee to prepare a Syllabus of material that ought to be covered from year to year by our Church Schools. We understand the committee was also asked to explore the practicability of the preparation and publication of a new and official series of courses for use in Church Schools. Part of the work of this committee has been completed.

With some aspects of the work of this committee we do not wish to concern ourselves beyond expressing serious doubt as to the advisability of the Church entering into the publishing business. The experience of other Churches in this field has not been universally satisfactory and there is serious question whether our people would take kindly to the idea of having their contributions to the Church's work diverted to subsidizing questionable business adventures.

We wish to confine ourselves to a much more serious matter which might be stated as follows: Has the trouble of our religious education program been correctly diagnosed? We think not and inasmuch as correct diagnosis is the first step in the curative process more time should be spent in completing the diagnosis before conferences are called to discuss the prescription for treatment.

It seems to be assumed that our basic sickness consists of defective curriculum material and that the only thing that is needed to cure it is the preparation and publication of a new series embodying the right kind of content. Underlying this is the philosophy that we are saved by knowledge. Only teach our children the right kinds of things and all our problems will be solved. The answer to which is, it certainly is not so. This writer wrote an article a few years ago which had a wide circulation from which he would like to quote the following paragraph. "It is the same theory as has dominated our secular education, and which has brought the world to the verge of catastrophe. We have been working on the old, old theory that knowledge is the royal road to virtue in religion: that to know the ten commandments would almost automatically issue in the doing of them: that to know the beatitudes would insure the living of them: that to know the catechism was the sure way to producing Christian character: that to know the facts of the life of Jesus would guarantee following in the blessed steps of his most holy life. But it has not worked, and it does not work, and it never will work. Ovid was not the only one who expressed the tragedy of life in the words, "I see and approve the good but follow the bad." St. Paul cried, "For the good that I would I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I do." It has been the cry of every earnest soul in every age. We know better than we do. The reason has very often been that the connection between knowledge and conduct has not been made clear: that ways of converting the one into the other have not been pointed out: that opportunities for practise have not been provided. We have appealed to the mind and neglected the emotions and the will. We have emphasized knowledge and neglected living. We have been producing informed Christians who have not learned to live and act as Christians.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

In the Spring Number, 1946, of Religion in Life, this same point of view has been expressed by Dr. E. E. Aubrey, president of the Crozer Theological Seminary in a strong and stimulating article entitled, The Contemporary Meaning of Christian Education. We would like to quote a few sentences from that article. "The spiritual disease of our generation is not mere intellectual ignorance of Christian beliefs and values, though God knows, this is apallingly widespread. Our sickness unto death is rather that we have not grasped by actual, personal experience, in first hand adventure the inner quality of Christian faith, its dynamics. Knowledge of the Christian verities is too often knowledge-about." "The nub of the matter, and the perennial scandal of Christianity is the awful gulf between profession and consistent practice. There is the central job of Christian education."

If this diagnosis is correct, and we believe it is, the cure is not going to be found in the preparation and publication of a new and official series of courses by the department of religious education of the National Council. That department has been giving valuable leads along these lines for years to all who are willing to use them. Two of the very best of them are the parish educational chart listing age characteristics and interests, educational objectives and available materials for every age group in the Church School, and the pamphlet on christian education. If these two tools had been taken seriously, and used conscientiously, by diocesan and parish leaders many of our present difficulties might have been avoided. The emphasis in both of them is on living and doing as the way to knowing. That, we believe, is the right emphasis, and that emphasis can be used with most of the courses of the many series that are now available.

If our basic sickness consists then in an over emphasis of the intellectual aspect of religious education and a neglect or under emphasis of its experiential aspect the cure would seem to lie along three lines.

FIRST we have got to think of our Church Schools more as schools of Christian living rather than as places for the communication and assimilation of Christian information. The Study of Christian Education for 1946 published by the International Council of Religious Education expresses it as follows: "Christian education involves practice in the act and instruction in the meaning of that act as inextricably interwoven." First the experience, then the interpretation and enrichment of the experience by sound knowledge. As my friend Professor Randolph Miller in a recent article has put it—"The Syllabus, whether it be the Bible or missions or Church history must be for the child an interpretation of a great experience which he has just undergone." This is not anything that is new. It is as old as the race. Experience has preceded knowledge and led up to it and been deepened by it in every field of human interest and activity: and knowledge which finds no echo in experience is sounding brass and tinkling cymbal. It is the method of the scientist today. But it was the method of God in his dealings with the prophets thousands of years ago. First the experience, sometimes terrible and terrifying, always awe-inspiring and transforming, then the deepening of insight, the widening of knowledge into the mystery of God and his ways with man. It was also the method of Jesus. Nowhere is there clearer illustration of it than in his dealings with his disciples. "He ordained twelve that they might be with him and that he might send them forth to preach." Nowhere is there a clearer statement of it than in his own words, "He that doeth his will shall know of the teaching whether it be of God." Or as the Samaritan villagers expressed it, "Now we believe, not because of thy saying but we have heard him ourselves and know."

This is where the emphasis of the Church School session must be placed; in the creation of a climate in the worship service and in the class room session and in the inter-relations of clergy, teachers and children, which will be not merely friendly to, but creative of religious experience; of the sense of the presence of the loving Father-God and of his forgiving and strengthening grace in the fellowship of the group; and of his demands upon each for humble and joyful and obedient service. The curriculum material must be collateral to that primary emphasis, to reinforce and enrich it but never to be a substitute for it. The real spiritual illiteracy of the present day is not ignorance of the facts of our religion although that is bad enough, but ignorance of its principles and practices of how to approach God in worship and prayer and penitence and how to live with other people as fellow members of God's universal family. We have plenty of curriculum material that can be used for that purpose, some of it of the highest educational quality.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Second we must have a deeper sense of responsibility among the clergy for the religious welfare of our children and young people. When one has given forty years of his life to the service of God in the priesthood of his Church, in small and medium and large parishes and in diocesan executive positions he does not need any one to tell him how many and how exacting are the demands upon the time and strength of the clergy. Some of them are inevitable; many of them are unnecessary. In too many cases we are the easy victims of selfish people who will give neither time nor strength in service. In some cases we fall for the flattery that we are indispensable, that without us the cause will fail. (The community chest, the T.B. and Red Cross drives, the social service agencies, etc., ad infinitum). But nothing can relieve us of responsibility for the duties that are prescribed by canon. They are our priorities. And one of those duties is the religious education of the children of the parish. Granted that no clergyman can carry out those duties as at present defined, the fact remains that he is responsible for its intelligent and constant supervision. He may delegate some of the details of it to assistants, superintendents and teachers, but the responsibility is always his in the last analysis and nothing can relieve him of it. He must know the kind of people who are being asked to share in it and take steps to train them to do it well. He must define objectives and suggest methods for their realization. Most important of all he must see to it that the Christian education program of his parish is really Christian in its aims, its methods and its personnel. Many of our clergy are doing all of these things with courage, patience and consecration. But not until all of them are doing it can there be much hope for the future. And not until our theoretical seminaries give religious education a place in their curriculum that corresponds with its place in parish life and work will all of them tackle the job with the confidence that they have a right to feel.

FINALLY without the intelligent and continuous cooperation of the homes from which our children come no program has the faintest chance of success. What forms ought this cooperation to take?

The home itself should be a school of Christian living. The parents should be living examples to their children of what it means to be a follower of Jesus Christ. Their mutual relations and their relations to their children should be demonstrations of the practicability of the Christian principles of love, patience, forgiveness, helpfulness. Religion should be dramatized in such Christian practices as prayers, grace at meals, story reading or telling, informal religious conversation. It is in the fellowship of the family that children can be given their best closeup experience of what Christianity and Christian living mean. As Regina Westcott Wieman says, in her book, The Modern Family and the Church, (Harpers) it is in the family life that the child can be most effectively introduced to God and that God can become an effective power in the life of the Child. There again we have an illustration of our main contention that religion is a matter of experience before it becomes a matter of instruction. Children brought up in an atmosphere of this kind bring to the Church School kindergarten the most precious kind of religious capital in the form of Christian experience and in ability to live happily and helpfully with other children.

Parents should be informed from time to time of the plans of the Church School and what they can, and are expected to do to carry them out. One of the best superintendents we have ever known, a woman, made the assertion "we don't ask enough of our parents." We must remedy that cardinal error. We must ask more, and we must do it without apology. We must remind parents that the primary responsibility is still theirs, but that now that the children have entered the Church School their religious education is placed in the wider setting of a larger group and under the guidance of the Church. It does not mean relief from responsibility for them but a new partnership and the possibility of a wider and deeper experience for their children.

There should be special days and meetings when parents will be given opportunity to see and hear about the work of the Church School, such as visiting days in classes and departments while school is in session, and occasional parent-teachers meetings to discuss mutual problems and objectives. Parents and teachers should also get to know each other better personally for the development of mutual respect and trust and confidence. Parents should invite the teachers to their homes and the teachers should sometimes visit those homes without invitation for "pastoral" purposes.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

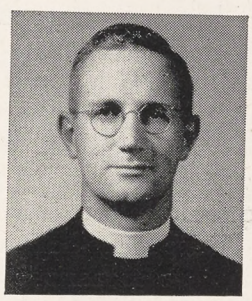
We believe it is along these lines that we must work for the raising of the level of efficiency of our Church Schools. The solution is not to be found in new courses, but in putting the accent where it belongs, on experience plus knowledge, not on knowledge in the hope of inducing experience: in making more room for the practice of religion in the program of the school remembering that here as elsewhere we learn by doing; in the development of a deeper sense of responsibility among the clergy for the Christian training of their children: and in closer and more intelligent cooperation between parents and teachers. Christianity is a way of living and our first and most important task is to lead our children into that way in the companionship of God our Father, and of his Son, Jesus Christ our Lord.



Strategy and Tactics for the Parish

by

FRANCIS O. AYRES

Rector of St. John's, Waterbury, Connecticut

THERE are two things which must be done before the National Council can recognize the sin in the Church and the conflict in which we are engaged, effectively analyze the situation, and develop a strategy. The first is to rid itself of the selling approach to the parishes. I am a drowning man. I clutch at straws. No one needs to sell me on the value of a helping hand. As I look through Parish Helps I find that I, like many others, have had almost all the publications of the National Council, some of which are excellent, some fair, and some terrible. I trust that the Parish Helps marks the end, forever, of the high-pressure methods by mail and by personal contact, but it is still true that the material is presented very much as a publisher announces his books. I for one would appreciate frank statements in all cases. Even one, "This pamphlet is so bad that it may stimulate you to do a little creative thinking," would make me feel a lot happier about the whole job. I suppose that the National Council adopted the selling approach on the theory that it was employing new and modern methods. Here is one case where we should return to emphasis on production and let the product sell itself.

The second change is to destroy the vacuum which had been created by a number of factors. The recent series of meetings provided, as far as I know, the first opportunity for the rank-and-file to offer suggestions and criticism directly to the National Council and at its request. This was indeed a great step forward and one on which the National Council is to be congratulated, yet not only should permanent channels be opened up but I think an even more drastic step is needed. I used to live in New York and, believe it or not, love the place. It is one of the most world-minded cities in the country, and so an excellent place for the department of missions. On the other hand, it is one of the most provincial of cities as far as our own country is concerned, and so one of the worst if not the worst city for the rest of the departments. I have never seen the man who could live in the city or in a suburb and work in New York, even though he travels continually and widely, and still keep a proper perspective on national problems. (It may be that traveling makes the perspective still worse.) I think that the tendency of the National Council to live in a vacuum will continue as long as it is in New York.

As a conclusion to and a summary of these rather random remarks, I would like to make the following suggestions in the hope that they may be of some use in making Parish Helps, 1947-48 and subsequent years more relevant to actual conditions in the parish. Needless to say, they have in one form or other been made before.

1. General Convention should recreate the commission on strategy and policy and extend its work to the whole Church or charge the National Council with the development of strategy and policy.

2. The National Council should put the text "We wrestle not against flesh and blood but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in heavenly places" on its letterheads and all its publications. The temptation to spiritual pride thus afforded would be more than offset if the text were taken seriously.

3. Begin an analysis of what is really happening in the Church. The vestry of St. John's offers this parish as a starting point provided the investigators are trained in practice as well as theory and provided the truth be told. The vestries of other parishes better suited for the purpose than ours would also, I feel sure, welcome such an analysis.

4. Concentrate on the product. For instance, a good textbook is needed in the field of Christian ethics. Pick the best man available (no man's present duties could be more important than this one), free him from all duties for a year, and let him write the book.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

5. Leave the department of missions, domestic as well as foreign, in New York and move the rest of the council to St. Louis or some other mid-western city. If the Church took a loss in real estate of 2 million dollars, it would be well worth it.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

Hymns Pro and Con

THE selection of hymns for divine service is a perennial battlefield of the Church Militant. Both clergy and laity enjoy the fray, nearly everybody gets wounded at least once, seldom does anyone give in and surrender.

The line-up of sides is constantly shifting and the overall picture is one of considerable confusion. But behind the struggle is a basic conflict of ideologies.

According to one theory hymns are primarily to be used as instruments of teaching. The other side contends that they are primarily media of emotional expression. What lends confusion to the issue is the fact that each side is divided within itself according to whether the text or the tune of a hymn receives the major interest. Some people who want only "good music" are not always concerned with what words go with it. Some who are very solicitous about the words care very little what tune they are sung to. There are also some extremists in both camps — those who would sing nothing but the noblest poetry to the noblest airs, and those who would accept anything that makes a noise.

My own sympathies, as you have probably guessed from reading this column, are with the snobs — only the best texts to the best music. Of course, great poetry does not necessarily make the best hymn. Great poetry does not need to be sung; the music is in the words themselves. Checking through the index of The Oxford Book of Christian Verse, which might be taken as a reliable standard, I discover only 17 out of its 352 selections are also in The Hymnal 1940. Two or three others I have seen in other hymnals. A good hymn, however, is something more than a rhymed piece of prose; it is certainly never a jingle. You know the kind I mean — the "pleasure, measure, treasure" sort, or, as I like to call them, the "gladness, sadness, madness" type, or the "glory, story, gory" type. As a matter of fact, one should be cautious about stanzas that rhyme trochaic measures (-ing, -tion, -ness) for they can easily become wearisome or ridiculous. It can be done effectively, to be sure, as in Robert Bridges' version of "Ah, holy Jesus," where these feminine endings are given added poignancy by the gentle fall and cadence of the melodic phrasing in the tune.

A good hymn is direct in what it has to say and does not repeat itself simply to work up steam. "Crown him with many crowns" would be a fine hymn if it were half as long. The offense of padding is especially conspicuous in most of the hymns about the saints or the heavenly Jerusalem. They certainly try to make eternal life seem endless. A notable exception is Bishop Whittingham's "Jerusalem! high tower." And it contains some first-rate poetry; for example, the skillful alliteration in,

> Wide from the world outleaping,
> O'er hill and vale and plain,
> My soul's strong wing is sweeping
> Thy portals to attain.

Note, too, the up-sweeping phrase in the tune just at the right place.

It is often maintained that people do not pay very close attention to the words they sing. In some cases it is just as well that they do not. But the fact remains that hymns are a subtle, even if at times an unconscious, means of teaching the truths of religion. Also one can more readily recall words of hymns because they are associated with tunes. It would seem therefore that the first duty of one who selects hymns for common worship is to examine carefully the teaching of the words, and ask the question, Is this the kind of religion we want people to sing about? For instance, the well-known cento from Newman's Dream of Gerontius, "Praise to the holiest in the height," has some very dubious eucharistic theology in the fourth stanza. Also I have asked several competent theologians what "the double agony in Man" (stanza 5) means, but they have been unable to interpret it. The problem of hymn texts in general, however, is not one of obscurities — though the wealth of Scriptural allusions in many hymns must be largely missed by the present generation of Biblically illiterate people — but the ineptitudes and unreal sentiments of so many of them. Our new hymnal did some good spade work in weeding out many shoddy passages. Its substitution of Bridges' translation for Caswall's of "When morning gilds the skies" is a good example of the kind of revising we cannot have too much of.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Careful Planning in Colorado For Election of Bishop

Two Committees Named that Will Carefully Investigate Every Nominee that Is Received

Edited by Sara Dill

Denver :—The diocese of Colorado, whose Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Fred Ingley, requested a Bishop Coadjutor at a special convention on December 3, is going at the task of finding the right man with great care. Two investigating committees, one of laymen and one of clergymen, have been set up and each is to go ahead with an independent investigation. It is thought that laymen will ask one set of questions about a nominee; the clergy doubtless will ask different questions, equally important.

These committees are to receive names from anyone, clergy, laymen, laywomen, children. They are not nominating committees and are not to make any selections or even recommendations. But in the Spring the two committees will meet jointly and pool their investigations. It is anticipated that the result of such investigations will bring out clearly and inescapably those best qualified for the office.

This joint committee will then report all its findings to a committee-of-the-whole consisting of all the clergy, a layman from each parish and mission, and representatives of the Auxiliary. This committee will be expected to cut down the large list of nominees by eliminating those who, on the basis of the investigations, seem to be less qualified than others. This will leave a residue of qualified nominees from which group nominations would be made at the electing convention to be held sometime after Easter.

"It is hoped," declares the Colorado Episcopalian, official organ of the diocese, "that there may come to be such general agreement among all, clergy and lay people, that we may accomplish an election in a minimum of ballots and with total agreement."

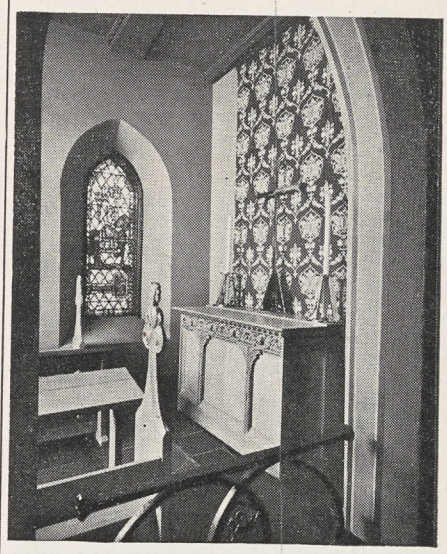
The magazine points out that it has often happened in the election of a bishop that when agreement on one of two good nominees could not be reached, that a dark horse has won the election, largely because of the weariness of the delegates. Therefore Colorado has provided that nobody shall be nominated for the office, regardless of his reputation, who has not been investigated by the committees.

"For some three or four months," the statement reads, "anyone can send in nominations to the investigating committees, which seemed by far the more democratic and open method. It should be emphasized and re-emphasized that the intent and purpose of all these resolutions is to obtain the fullest participation, democratic action, knowledge and prayer on the part of the clergy and laity alike in order that by this election, under the Holy Spirit, we may unify the whole diocese and set forth God's work in the place he has put us to work for him."

Joins Byrd

New Orleans:—Lt. Cmdr. Walter Sessums has been named officer in charge of the navy's helicopter squadron attached to Rear Admiral Richard Byrd's forthcoming expedition to the South Pole. He is a grandson of the late Bishop Davis Sessums of Louisiana. He stated that the expedition, comprising six ships and 4,000 men, was "largely scientific" though the navy has revealed no details.

Thanksgiving Gifts



Wilmington, Del. (RNS) :—Live animals were brought to the church grounds of Christ Church in suburban Christiana Hundred on Thanksgiving Day as an offering for the poor. This revived a custom practiced by Biblical ancients who sent tithes—a tenth of their farm products—to places of worship on festival days.

Christiana church is the edifice where most members of the wealthy DuPont family worship. It is also their favorite place for weddings. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., and the former Ethel DuPont were married there. Parishioners include R. R. M. Carpenter, president of the E. I. DuPont De Nemours & Co.; H. F. DuPont, Eugene DuPont, Mrs. Chichester DuPont, and many others of the DuPont clan.

The Rev. William C. Munds, rector, said the revival of the ancient custom afforded the congregation a means of showing appreciation to God for his gifts. In early days of the church, it was recalled, children used to bring toys, oats and milk, and place them in the chancel as a Thanksgiving Day offering.

"The church is in a farming district and the past year has been a very good one," said Munds. "It will be a non-sectarian proposition since Thanksgiving Day is not alone a Protestant day, a Jewish day, or a Catholic day."

Troughs were installed on the church parking lot. Parishioners contributed steers, sheep, pigs, turkeys and chickens. Others brought canned fruits and vegetables, clothes and layettes, all the gifts to be distributed on a non-sectarian basis to needy poor in the area.

Children's Chapel
ST. JOHN'S CHURCH, SHARON, PA.
Warner & Mitchell, Architects

Just a corner of the charming Children's Chapel upon whose walls are painted the story of the Children's Crusade. If you are planning a Children's Chapel or Baptistry, it would be well for you to see the other interior photographs which show the interesting work of renovation executed by Rambusch.

RAMBUSCH
Designers Decorators and Craftsmen
2 West 45th St. ~ New York 19, N.Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Quiet Day

Newark:—The Auxiliary of the diocese of Newark held a quiet day at Trinity Cathedral on December 4, led by Bishop Ludlow.

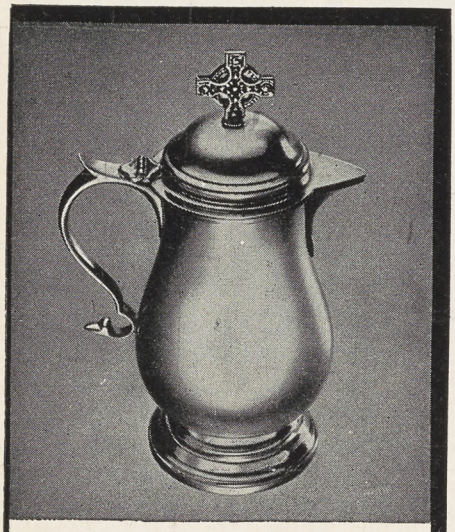
Planned Parenthood

New York:—Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, president of the Federal Council of Churches, is the chairman of the committee sponsoring a campaign for $2,000,000 by the Planned Parenthood Federation. The money is to be used to extend parenthood services and for research.

Unique Heating

A cold snap hit Atlanta the night a parish supper was planned to start the Every Member Canvass at the Cathedral of St. Philip. Arrangements had been made to hold this dinner in the new assembly hall completed this spring. However, the Chapter had been unable to purchase heaters for the building due to the shortage. One of the Chapter members, E. V. Dunbar, made arrangements with the Delta Air Lines to have their mobile heating unit truck come to the Cathedral to heat the room by placing the pipeline in a window. The room was as comfortable as though it had been heated by ordinary means. The meeting proceeded comfortably and now the Chapter continues to seek heaters in order that the room may be used during the winter months.

Fulfillment

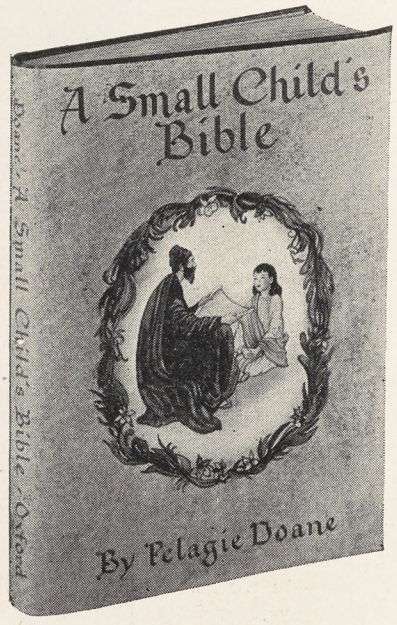


Atlanta, Ga.:—Bishop Walker received notice of the death of Grace Nettleton Richards, wife of the Rev. A. G. Richards, for many years rector of Emmanuel Church, Athens, and at one time head of the DuBose Memorial Training School, at Monteagle, Tenn. In recent years, the Richards had been residents of Griffin, Ga., and Mr. Richards, though retired, had served as a supply minister in several of the diocesan missions. He gave notice to his friends of his bereavement in the following manner:

"The Reverend Albert Glenn Richards announces, with profound sorrow, that Grace Nettleton Richards, his beloved wife, entered Paradise on October 10th, 1946, after fifty years of sweet and holy fellowship. But fifty years is all too short a time for such a blessed companionship. We hope soon to be reunited for the timeless ages of eternity, in the presence, and in the service, of Jesus Christ our blessed Lord and Saviour."

Within a day or two after Bishop Walker received this came news that Mr. Richards himself had entered Paradise and the "reunion for timeless ages of eternity" had taken place "in the presence, and in the service of Jesus Christ, our blessed Lord and Saviour."

Dean Lectures



Milton, Mass.:—Dean Frank Gifford of the Philadelphia Divinity School lectured on practical Christian living at the Church of Our Saviour on November 22. He declared that the creed is implicit in all Christian living, whether or not it is openly professed. Many people think of a religion of good works as sufficient but such a religion is intellectually impossible since works of any sort obviously must have reasons. Only the Church, he said, gives valid reasons for the right life. Dean Gifford, introduced by Rector Marion Matics,

Sterling Cruet

A beautiful silver cruet, ornamented with a Celtic cross, and carefully designed with a wide neck so that it may be easily cleaned. One-half pint capacity, 6½ inches high, $50.

ECCLESIASTICAL STUDIO
BLACK, STARR & GORHAM
FIFTH AVENUE AT 48TH STREET
NEW YORK 19, N. Y.

A Small Child's Bible

By PELAGIE DOANE

Seventy of the best known stories of the Old and New Testament, each illustrated with a full color picture, have been retold for very young children. The text has kept the spirit and dignity of the King James version while translating it into simple language appropriate for four to eight-year-old readers. Parents will welcome this beautiful book and children will treasure it always, long after they have outgrown a "small child's" Bible. $3.00

Oxford University Press
114 Fifth Avenue, New York 11

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

spoke to a capacity audience including representatives of neighboring parishes and many non-Episcopalians.

Vocational Conference

London, O.:—A vocational conference for college women is being held December 6-8 at Orleton Farms, here, sponsored by the college work division of the National Council, the Church Society for College Work, the national and provincial Auxiliaries. Among the leaders are the Rev. Thomas V. Barrett and Ellen Gammack of 281; Helen Turnbull, director of Windam House, New York; and various leaders of the Church in Ohio. The hostess is Miss Mary E. Johnston who frequently entertains Church conferences here.

Feeding Programs

Geneva (wireless to RNS):—Almost a quarter of a million dollars' worth of foodstuffs has been purchased by the material aid division of the World Council of Churches for projected child-feeding programs in Germany, Finland, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Austria, and Hungary, according to the agency's monthly report. Supplies include canned meat, vegetable soup, oleomargarine, and milk powder.

The report disclosed that eighty tons of glass have been bought in Czechoslovakia for windows of churches in Hungary, and that eighty collapsible bicycles used by paratroopers have been purchased from army surplus supplies for use by pastors in Germany.

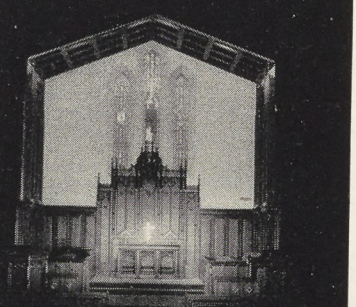
Other interesting items in the report are: Two wheelbarrows were sent to Austria to aid church groups in handling relief goods; a portable organ was sent to a theological school in Berlin; and 1,500 yards of black cloth were purchased to help provide pastors' robes.

In addition, 1,200 yards of artificial leather were bought in Italy for Bible bindings, and five tons of paper and string were sent to Germany to help Protestant relief workers convert old gunny sacks into mattresses.

Unity Threatened

Frankfurt (wireless to RNS):—German Lutherans were urged by the chief assembly of the Reformed League in Germany at a meeting in Detmold to avoid moves that tend to destroy "the unity previously achieved in the Evangelical Church in Germany." The League, which is the highest body of Germany's Reformed churches, obviously was referring to recent attempts by Bavarian Lutherans to create a united Lutheran Church.

The Reformed group asked Lutherans "to cooperate with us in doing everything to promote this unity even at the Lord's Table." The League said churches have neither the time nor the strength for strife when God commands them to preach repentance and forgiveness.



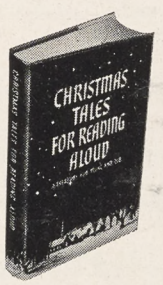
Warning against "Confessionalism which tries to secure or save its own cause," the Reformed League urged that conversations toward union of all Confessional elements be continued. The present plight of Germany must not lead to greater division, but rather to more unity, the League added.

Hit Newspapers

Tulsa, Okla.:—The Tulsa Council of Church Women in a letter to the Tulsa World called upon the paper to place more emphasis on "the inspiring things which occur in daily life" and deplored the "present-day tendency of nearly all newspapers to feature the sensational, the cheap, the sordid in life."

Asserting that the council represents more than 50,000 Protestants, the message declared "today's insistent challenge from the non-religious elements of the world demands increased devotion from those who would argue for good."

CHANCEL ALTERATIONS



Pews - Church Woodwork

Ossit Church Furniture Co.

Janesville, Wisconsin

SINCE 1867

A Recommended Book for Christmas

This Book Has Received a Two Star Rating by THE WITNESS

AN IDEAL CHRISTMAS GIFT!

★ Assure The Success Of Your Christmas Party! ★

CHRISTMAS TALES FOR READING ALOUD

Compiled by Robert Lohan

Stories and poems from all over the world, condensed in the author's own words. Average reading time 5 minutes. Adventure and romance, sentiment and fun, fantasy and realism. Something for every age, something for every mood. $3.75

STEPHEN DAYE PRESS

105 East 24th Street, New York 10, N. Y.

A Recommended Book for Christmas

This Book Has Received a Three Star Rating by THE WITNESS

ON BEING FIT TO LIVE WITH

By Harry Emerson Fosdick

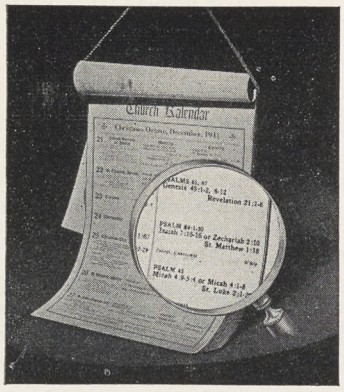
The Minister Emeritus of Riverside Church and the NBC National Vespers hour gives some of the finest and most helpful sermons of his long career, illustrating a mature, practical and triumphant religion. $2.00

HARPER & BROTHERS

49 East 33rd Street, New York 16, N.Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

A Christmas Gift



Appreciated All Year

THE CHRISTIAN YEAR

and

CHURCH KALENDAR

This Kalendar makes a really unusual Christmas gift. First of all it is made so that it may be hung on the wall and the red and gold cover gives it an attractive appearance.

The text of 112 pages contains the necessary information every clergyman and lay person should have at their fingertips, such as

Church Calendar
Church Colors
Morning and Evening Lectionary
Saints' Days
Altar Linen
Ember Days
Rules for Sacristans
Suggested Hymns
Church Holidays
Altar Society Notes
Vestments, their color, care and use
Church Dictionary
Duties of Wardens and Vestrymen
Suggestions for Servers
The Rector, his election and call

Order from the Publisher or your Bookseller

Price $1.25 ($1.35 postpaid)

H. M. JACOBS COMPANY

1907 Walnut Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

H. M. JACOBS COMPANY
1907 WALNUT STREET
PHILADELPHIA 3, PA.

Gentlemen:

Kindly send to addresses below:

_____ _____

_____ _____

_____ _____

☐ charge ☐ check with order

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Released Time Program

Phoenix, Ariz. (RNS): — Plans whereby public school children will be released one hour a week for religious instruction at local churches were discussed at a recent meeting of the council of churches of the state. Methodist Bishop James C. Baker of San Francisco said that a strong spiritual program is necessary to remedy the demoralization that has followed the war. The necessity of spiritual fellowship among the churches was stressed by Bishop Kinsolving.

OK for Children

Prague (wireless to RNS):—Most professional workers in Czechoslovakia believe in God and favor religious instruction in schools, but do not attend church regularly, according to the results of a questionnaire sent to 1,000 selected persons by the ministry of information. Replies made public here show that 60 per cent of those surveyed believe in God. However, only 20 per cent attend religious services regularly, while 24 per cent attend only on the principal holidays or special occasion. Thirty-five per cent possess a Bible, but only five per cent read it regularly.

The questionnaire also disclosed that 77 per cent acknowledge the necessity of religious education for children and 72 per cent favor teaching religion in schools.

Women in YMCA

New York (RNS): — Another domain of the American male has been added to the list of those invaded by American womanhood, according to the latest membership roster of the YMCA in this country. There are now 151,933 women and girls who are members of the once all-male organization.

The statistics, released here by the national council of YMCAs, show that 77,766 girls between the ages of 15 and 17 were registered YMCA members, 209 per cent more than the last pre-war figure. Girls between 12 and 14 numbered 37,665 while those below 12 were listed as 21,467.

Total Y memberships now stands at 1,411,341, or 8.9 per cent over the last recorded figure. Of this full membership, 72.7 per cent are less than 30 years of age while 9.8 are between 30 and 34. Only 17.4 per cent are 35 or over, and more than 48 per cent are below the 17-year-old mark.

Quaker Relief

Philadelphia (RNS):—Largest yearly budget in the 30-year history of the American Friends Service Committee, $8,365,326, has been approved by the group's executive board for the year ending September 30, 1947, it was announced here. Bulk of the amount, $7,238,840, will go to overseas activity with the remainder earmarked for peace education, social and industrial work and other similar activity in this country.

The budget figure does not include the value of gifts in kind which it is estimated will reach more than $1,250,000. Donations of food, clothing, and vitamins are expected to exceed 500 tons.

Education Bill

Belfast (wireless to RNS): — Demands for the resignation of Premier Sir Basil Brooke and Education Minister S. H. Hall-Thompson were made at a meeting of Protestants here called to protest the government-sponsored education bill. The meeting was sponsored jointly by the Presbyterian Church, the Church of Ireland and the Methodist Church, the three largest Protestant denominations in Northern Ireland.

Presided over by Dean R. C. H. G.

THE CHURCH PENSION FUND

and its subsidiaries

administered for the benefit of the Church

THE CHURCH HYMNAL CORPORATION

Publishers of The Hymnal; Book of Common Prayer; A Prayer Book for Soldiers and Sailors; Book of Offices for Certain Occasions; Stowe's Clerical Directory.

THE CHURCH LIFE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost insurance and annuity contracts available to the clergy, lay officials and active lay workers of the Church, either voluntary or paid, and their immediate families.

THE CHURCH PROPERTIES FIRE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost fire and windstorm insurance on property owned by or closely affiliated with the Church, and on the residences and personal property of the clergy.

Further information available by addressing any of the above at

20 Exchange Place New York

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Write us for
Organ Information
AUSTIN ORGANS, Inc.
Hartford, Conn.

Memorial Windows
In accordance with the best traditions of the craft. Notable installations in forty states and five foreign countries.
Illustrated material on request
The D'Ascenzo Studios
founded 1896
1604 Summer Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

ALTAR BREADS ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED
SAINT MARY'S CONVENT
KENOSHA • WISCONSIN

MENEELY BELL CO.
22 RIVER ST., TROY, N. Y.
BELLS

R. GEISSLER, INC.
71-79 W. 45th St., New York 19, N. Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS
EST 1877

VESTMENTS
Cassocks - Surplices - Stoles - Scarves
Silks - Altar Cloths - Embroideries
Priest Cloaks - Rabats - Collars
Custom Tailoring for Clergymen
1837 Church Vestment Makers Over One Hundred Years 1946

COX SONS & VINING, Inc.
131 East 23rd Street, New York 10, N.Y.

Need a LAXATIVE?
Black-Draught is,
1-Usually prompt
2-Usually thorough
3-Always economical

25 to 40 doses only 25¢
Get BLACK-DRAUGHT
CAUTION: USE ONLY AS DIRECTED

Elliott of Down Cathedral, the meeting voted a fund to fight passage of the measure and appointed a committee to inform the Protestant community of "the danger to which they are exposed and to take such further action as may be necessary to protect the rights they enjoy under existing acts."

One of the principal objections to the bill it was brought out at the meeting, is that it makes it possible for "non-Christians, anti-Christian or agnostic" teachers to gain a footing on the teaching staffs of primary and higher schools.

Surveys Made

New York (RNS):—Surveys of the status of Protestantism in five U.S. cities are currently being conducted under the direction of the committee for cooperative field research of the Federal Council of Churches and the Home Missions Council. In various stages of completion, the surveys are being undertaken in Indianapolis, Ind.; San Francisco, Calif.; St. Louis, Mo.; and Hartford and Bridgeport, Conn. All of the surveys were initiated at the request of local church bodies. A special state-wide survey of rural churches is being made in Iowa under committee sponsorship. Thirty-five selected communities under 5,000 in population are being used for study purposes.

CLERGY NOTES

BESSETTE, THEODORE A., formerly in charge of St. James', Kemmerer, Wyo., is now rector of the Ascension, Salida, Colo.

BRANT, GORDON E., formerly rector of the Advent, Chicago, became dean of Christ Church Cathedral, Eau Claire, Wis., on December 1.

GOLDER, JAMES T., formerly dean at Salina, Kansas, was instituted as rector of St. Elizabeth's, Glencoe, Illinois, on November 20.

HAILWOOD, EDWARD E., rector of Trinity Church, Orange, Calif., has resigned to accept the rectorship of St. Mark's, Pasadena, Calif., January 1.

HAMBLIN, JOHN F. JR., has been separated from the navy where he served as chaplain. His present address is 28 Carteret Street, Newark 4, N. J.

HASKIN, FREDERIC J., former army chaplain, is now assistant at the Holy Comforter, Kenilworth, Illinois.

JONES, W. NORTHEY, retired clergyman of Connecticut, is supplying until May 1 at St. Mark's, Hope, Ark.

MITCHELL, J. N., in charge of St. John's, Camden, Ark., is to be ordained priest on December 7 by Bishop Bland Mitchell.

MOFFAT, WALTER G., of the diocese of Los Angeles, died at the age of 63 on November 16.

PIKE, JOSEPH E. C., assistant at All Saints', Worcester, Mass., has accepted the rectorship of Trinity, Branford, Conn., effective December 24.

PRESSEY, HERBERT, former army chaplain, is now the rector of St. John's, Far Rockaway, Long Island, N. Y.

STAMMER?
This new 128-page book, "Stammering, Its Cause and Correction," describes the Bogue Unit Method for scientific correction of stammering and stuttering — successful for 45 years. Free — no obligation.
GET THIS FREE BOOK!
Benjamin N. Bogue, Dept. 5802, Circle Tower, Indianapolis 4, Ind.

Everything for the Episcopal Church
but vestments
A broad statement but we'd like to prove it.
Ammidon and Company
Horace L. Varian
Horace L. Varian, Jr.
31 South Frederick Street
Baltimore 2, Maryland

PURE IRISH LINENS NOW IN STOCK
for all Church needs, supplies constantly arriving, good qualities, also fine cottons. Samples free.
Mary Fawcett Company
Plainfield, N. J. Box 146

CATHEDRAL STUDIOS
Washington & London, England. Linens and materials by the yard, surplices, albs, Altar Linens, stoles, burses & veils. Materials by the yard. See my NEW BOOK "CHURCH EMBROIDERY" & CHURCH VESTMENTS a complete instruction. 128 pages, 95 illus. Price $5.67. And my HANDBOOK for ALTAR GUILDS, price 50c. Miss L. V. Mackrille, 11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington 15, D.C. 30 minutes from U. S. Treasury. Tel. Wisconsin 2752.

SURPLICES — STOLES
VESTMENTS
CHURCH HANGINGS
ALTAR LINENS
CASSOCKS
CLERICAL SUITS — CLOAKS
RABATS—RABAT VESTS—COLLARS—SHIRTS
Choir Vestments in All Styles
Inquiries Invited
C. M. ALMY & SON, INC.
562 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.

The Payne-Spiers Studios Inc.
Studios at Paterson, New Jersey
Carved Wood
Chancel Renovations Church Furnishings
Murals Memorials Tablets
Stained Glass
Inquiries Solicited

VESTMENTS for CLERGY and CHOIR
Altar Linens . . . Embroideries . . . Tailoring . . . Episcopal Flags. Send for Catalog
J. M. HALL, INC.
14 W. 40th St., New York - Tel. CH 4-3306
Office & Salesroom
American Distributor of Stained Glass Windows for James Powell & Sons (Whitefriars) Limited, London, England.

HEADQUARTERS for RELIGIOUS SUPPLIES
CHOIR GOWNS • VESTMENTS
PULPIT ROBES • HANGINGS
STOLES • EMBROIDERIES • Etc.
CATALOG ON REQUEST

National CHURCH GOODS SUPPLY COMPANY
821-23 Arch St., Phila. 7, Pa.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

CLIFFORD W. FRENCH
WITNESS Correspondent for Harrisburg

In the news story headed "Mortgage Burning" (Oct. 31), date lined Shamokin, Pa., it is stated that the present rector of Trinity is the Rev. George B. Armstrong. This is an error. My story stated: "During the rectorship of the Rev. George B. Armstrong and that of the present rector, the Rev. William Hosking, etc." Evidently in the hurry of condensation the name of the former rector was inadvertently given instead of that of the present rector, the Rev. William Hosking.

ANSWER: The mistake was made in the office of THE WITNESS, for which we are sorry.

* * *

REV. KIMBER H. K. DEN
Nanchang, Kiangsi, China

Not long ago Bishop Craighill sent me a copy of THE WITNESS of June 13. From "Talking It Over" I learned with great interest of all the noble works accomplished by Bill Spofford's daughter, Marcia, in Greenmont Village, Dayton. It was a great inspiration to me as well as to all our young people here in reading over the whole story of her most sacrificial and triumphant life in that village. It was, indeed, a great pity that she was called away from this world so early, only in her 27th year. However, "God loveth those who die young." Her father has rightfully said: "the answer to death is life. One mourns a wasted life. One rejoices for a useful life." It seems to me that all the noble accomplishments of her good works will ever remain as a living memory of her immortal life.

In view of your close tie wth my work, and as a means of perpetuating our loving memory of Marcia, I am taking the liberty of naming our village school at Lotus Pond, one of our field service centers near Nanchang, as the "Marcia Spofford Russell Memorial School." I am urging all the Chinese girls in that village school to follow her footsteps and try to live a useful life with much accomplishments for noble ends.

* * *

REV. CHARLES E. CRAIK JR.
Rector of Emmanuel, Louisville

Having just taken time to peruse several back numbers of THE WITNESS, impulse is to comment on several items, mostly in agreement. Miss Jane Kemp's letter took me back to the Oct. 17 article by Bill Spofford Jr., son of my old Trinity College classmate. I find that the younger Spofford's comment on the achievements of General Convention express some questions in the minds of many of us.

David Holt in this same number describes the Sunday school material that my own school has been looking for. In the same issue Walter Welsh takes exception to an otherwise fine medical missionary picture, Go Forth. Although I was greatly impressed by the picture I did not fail to take notice of the unfortunate semi-comic and wholly menial parts played by Negro characters, and I am a born and bred Southerner, having had a fine old "Mammy" in my childhood. I thought what a great missionary picture hero could be found in a Solomon Islands character described near the beginning of the recent book, "They Found the Church There."

* * *

MR. GEORGE T. BALLACHEY
Sec'y, Buffalo & Erie County Bible Society

Your issue of November 21 devoted to the work of the American Mission to Lepers is appreciated. It does us all good to be shaken up, and perhaps shaken down financially, by the knowledge of what is not being done for the unfortunates, even though there is so much of good intentions amongst our Church folk. May I suggest that some time soon a number may be devoted to the care of the insane. I know of hospitals where decent, kind, intelligent attention is given, but some of the literature I receive indicates that in many places the management of such institutions is shocking and disgraceful in the unnecessary cruelties inflicted on these helpless people.

* * *

THE REV. WILFORD O. CROSS
Rector at Kittanning, Penna.

In all of Spofford's long and useful career as a journalist I think he has never done better than in his reply to Cardinal Spellman (WITNESS, Nov. 21). For point, fire, restraint, logic, truth, it is a grand bit of swordsmanship. Do it again.

* * *

JAMES B. BROOKS
Layman of New York

The editorial on Thanksgiving (WITNESS, Nov. 21) was an excellent piece of writing, dealing with us where we live. In many ways it is the best I have seen in your paper or any other for a long time. It has been my custom for a time to study the various styles of writing on your editorial page and try to identify the man on your editorial board who probably wrote a given editorial. But of course there is no way for me to tell whether I have guessed correctly. I can say, however, that I do believe I now am familiar with three or four distinct styles. It adds a great deal to the pleasure and profit of reading the interesting paper to play this little game of solitaire.

* * *

MRS. ARTHUR JONES
Churchwoman of Washington, D. C.

THE WITNESS is to be congratulated for the excellent number devoted to the work of the American Mission to Lepers (Nov. 21). Contributors to that issue did two things: first, they removed the fear verging on horror that comes to most people even in hearing the word "leper"; secondly, the writers presented such a challenge that it is hoped that many will respond to the appeal for financial help in carrying on the work of this noble organization.

Virginia Episcopal School
Lynchburg, Virginia
Prepares boys for colleges and university. Splendid environment and excellent corps of teachers. High standard in scholarship and athletics. Healthy and beautiful location in the mountains of Virginia.
For catalogue apply to
George L. Barton, Jr., Ph.D. Headmaster,
Box 408

SCHOOLS

The Hospital of Saint Barnabas and the University of Newark offer a full course in NURSING
to qualified High School graduates. Scholarships available. Classes enter in February and September
Apply to
Director of Nursing
HOSPITAL OF SAINT BARNABAS
685 High Street Newark, N. J.

DE VEAUX SCHOOL
FOUNDED 1852
A Church school for boys. Thorough preparation for college. Military system of student government, developing sense of responsibility. Charges for grades seven and eight $1000; grades nine through twelve $1050. For catalog, address THE HEADMASTER, DeVeaux School, Niagara Falls, New York.

HOLDERNESS
In the White Mountains. College Preparatory and General Courses. Music and Crafts. For boys 12-19. All sports including riding. 200 acres of woods. New fireproof building. Individual attention. Home atmosphere.
Rev. Edric A. Weld, Rector
Box W. Plymouth, N. H.

Saint Mary's-in-the-Mountains
An Episcopal college preparatory boarding school for fifty girls. Piano and Choral instruction. Art. Domestic Science. Mountain hikes and winter sports afforded by location in White Mountains. Horseback and Skiing lessons. New gymnasium. For catalogue address
Miss Mary Harley Jenks, Principal
Littleton, New Hampshire

FORK UNION MILITARY ACADEMY
An Honor Christian School with the highest academic rating. Upper School prepares for university or business. ROTC. Every modern equipment. Junior School from six years. Housemother. Separate building. Catalogue. Dr. J. J. Wicker, Fork Union, Virginia.

CARLETON COLLEGE
Laurence M. Gould, D.Sc., President
Carleton is a co-educational liberal arts college of limited enrollment and is recognized as the Church College of Minnesota
Address: Director of Admissions
CARLETON COLLEGE
Northfield Minnesota

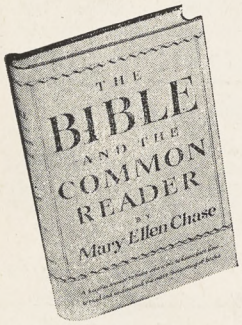
KEMPER HALL
KENOSHA, WISCONSIN
Boarding and day school for girls offering thorough college preparation and training for purposeful living. Study of the Fine Arts encouraged. Complete sports program. Junior School department. Beautiful lake shore campus. Under direction of the Sisters of St Mary. For catalogue, address: Box WT.

LENOX SCHOOL
A Church School in the Berkshire Hills for boys 12-18 emphasizing Christian ideals and character through simplicity of plant and equipment, moderate tuition, the cooperative self-help system, and informal, personal relationships among boys and faculty.
Rev. Robert L. Curry, Headmaster
Lenox Massachusetts

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BOOKS RECOMMENDED FOR CHRISTMAS

The Books Announced Here All Received Either Three or Two Star Rating by THE WITNESS



HOW TO READ THE BIBLE

By EDGAR J. GOODSPEED

A renowned scholar of Biblical literature reveals the Bible as a library of eighty volumes full of profoundly exciting drama, history, poetry. Dr. Goodspeed makes everyone want to read the Bible for the sheer joy of good reading.

$2.50

THE JOHN C. WINSTON COMPANY
Winston Building Philadelphia

The Bible and the Common Reader

By MARY ELLEN CHASE

A profound book by a distinguished author which explains the evolution of the King James translation of the Bible and presents the various types of literature in the Book in relation to their times and the incidents which produced them. "No one can read this book without a mounting enthusiasm. It is doubtful whether there is any other which can do as much to make the average person rejoice in the beauty and majesty of the Bible."—Religious Book Club Bulletin. $2.50

THE MACMILLAN CO.
60 Fifth Avenue New York 11

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN BASIC ENGLISH

No better Christmas gift for any Christian home. "Simplicity is the essence of genius, and you not only put the New Testament within reach of a larger reading public, but have clarified many passages for the critical."—Dr. Ralph W. Sockman.

At All Bookstores $3.00

Basic English is a simplified form of English, relying on a vocabulary of 850 words. For this translation, 50 special Bible words and 100 words for the reading of verse have been added.

E. P. DUTTON & CO.
New York

Road to Reformation

By HEINRICH BOEHMER

(Translated by J. W. Doberstein and T. G. Tappert)

A scholarly, fascinating and factual translation of Boehmer's great biography "Der Junge Luther." Shatters choice old legends about Luther. The answer for pastors and others who have responded to recent revival of research on Luther. "As graphic and colorful as a historical moving picture. The scenes are absolutely authentic"—CHRISTIAN CENTURY. An ideal religious gift book for pastors or laymen interested in extending their understanding of Protestantism and its founder. Cloth bound. 448 pages. Price, $4.00

At Your Religious Bookstore or

MUHLENBERG PRESS
1228 Spruce Street Philadelphia 7, Pa.

JESUS THE MAN

A Critical Essay

By WARNER FITE

A discriminating study which views Jesus in the setting to which he belonged, and as one among other geniuses of human history. It is notable for its independent and illuminating evaluation of the character and personality of Jesus. $2.50

HARVARD UNIVERSITY PRESS
Cambridge 38, Massachusetts

THE ILLUSTRATED EDITION OF THE NEW TESTAMENT

in Ronald Knox's translation with

30 FULL COLOR PLATES

reproducing the finest pictures in the Art galleries of America and England. Chapter heads, initials and endpapers from woodcuts in 14th and 15th century manuscripts.

506 pages — $5.00

SHEED & WARD
63 Fifth Avenue, New York 3

TOWARD A BETTER WORLD

Edited by

BISHOP WILLIAM SCARLETT

Everyone who wants to do his part should read this enlightening explanation of present-day problems, and suggestions on how to solve them, written by Arthur Holly Compton, Eleanor Roosevelt, Sumner Welles, Reinhold Niebuhr, and ten other equally prominent Christian laymen and clergymen. $2.00

THE JOHN C. WINSTON COMPANY
Winston Building Philadelphia

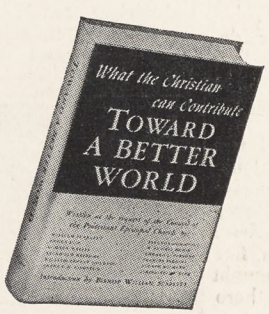
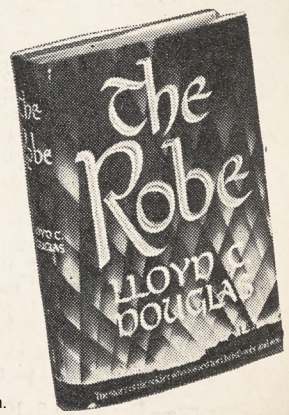
THE ROBE

By LLOYD C. DOUGLAS



Americans all over the world are reading this story of the soldier who gambled for Christ's robe and won.



"Mr. Douglas's inspiring word-picture of the rising tide of Christian faith in the months following the crucifixion is one never to be forgotten. . . . One of the most thought-provoking and outstanding novels of this or any other time."—Philadelphia Inquirer. Price $2.75

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY
2 Park Street, Boston 7, Mass.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The WITNESS

10¢ A COPY

LIBRARY COPY

DECEMBER 12, 1946

STUDYING OUTDOORS
AT ST. MARY'S HALL
SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS

THE CLERGY AS TEACHERS

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

THE CATHEDRAL OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE
NEW YORK CITY
Sundays: 8, 9, 11, Holy Communion; 10, Morning Prayer; 4, Evening Prayer; Sermons 11 and 4.
Weekdays: 7:30, 8 (also 9:15 Holy Days and 10, Wednesdays), Holy Communion; 9, Morning Prayer; 5, Evening Prayer. Open daily 7 A.M. to 6 P.M.

GRACE CHURCH, NEW YORK
Broadway at 10th St.
Rev. Louis W. Pitt, D.D., Rector
Daily: 12:30 except Mondays and Saturdays.
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M. and 4:30 P. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion 11:45 A. M.

THE HEAVENLY REST, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue at 90th Street
Rev. Henry Darlington, D.D.
Sundays: Holy Communion, 8 and 10 A. M.; Morning Service and Sermon, 11 A. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion, 11 A. M.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S CHURCH
NEW YORK
Park Avenue and 51st Street
Rev. Geo. Paull T. Sargent, D.D., Rector
8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evensong. Special Music.
Weekdays: Holy Communion Wednesday at 8:00 A. M.
Thursdays and Saints' Days at 10:30 A. M.
The Church is open daily for prayer.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH
Madison Ave. at 71st St., New York
The Rev. H. W. B. Donegan, D.D., Rector
8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
9:30 A. M. Church School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evening Prayer and Sermon.
Wed., 7:45 A. M., Thurs., 12 Noon Holy Communion.

THE CHURCH OF THE EPIPHANY
1317 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Charles W. Sheerin, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 A. M.; 8 P. M.
Daily: 12:05.
Thursdays: 11:00 and 12:05.

ST. THOMAS' CHURCH, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue and 53rd Street
Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, S.T.D., Rector
Sun 8, 11, 4. Daily 8:30 HC; Thurs. 11 HC., Daily except Sat. 12:10.

THE CHURCH OF THE ASCENSION
Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street, New York
The Rev. Roscoe Thornton Foust, Rector
Sundays: 8 a.m. Holy Communion.
11 a.m. Morning Prayer, Sermon.
8 p.m. Evening Song and Sermon; Service of Music (1st Sun. in month).
Daily: Holy Communion, 8 a.m. Tues., Thurs., Sat.; 11 a.m. Mon., Wed., Fri.
5:30 Vespers, Tues. through Friday.
This Church is open all day and all night.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL
Buffalo, New York
Shelton Square
The Very Rev. Edward R. Welles, M.A., Dean
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30 and 11.
Daily: 12:05 noon—Holy Communion.
Tuesday: 7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
Wednesday: 11:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH
Atlanta, Georgia
435 Peachtree Street
The Rev. J. Milton Richardson, Rector
9:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
10:45 A. M. Sunday School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Prayer and Sermon.
6:00 P. M. Young People's Meetings.

The WITNESS
For Christ and His Church

EDITORIAL BOARD: Frederick C. Grant, Editor; Arthur Lichtenberger, Chairman; William B. Spofford, Managing Editor; Lane W. Barton, Beverly M. Boyd, Dillard H. Brown, Roscoe T. Foust, Charles K. Gilbert, Hugh D. McCandless, Howard Chandler Robbins, William K. Russell, Sydney A. Temple Jr., Joseph H. Titus, William M. Weber.

★

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS: D. B. Aldrich, J. A. Bell, T. S. Carruthers. Adelaide Case, G. K. Chalmers, E. M. Cross, G. M. Day, Angus Dun, A. W. Farlander, T. P. Ferris, J. F. Fletcher, John Gass, C. H. Gesner, C. L. Glenn, G. C. Graham, J. M. Groton, G. I. Hiller, I. P. Johnson, T. R. Ludlow, C. S. Martin, R. C. Miller, Walter Mitchell, A. T. Mollegen, E. L. Parsons, E. L. Pennington, Rose Phelps, L. W. Pitt, Otis Rice, Cyril Richardson, Paul Roberts, V. D. Scudder, W. M. Sharp, W. B. Sperry, C. W. Sprouse, D. S. Stark, W. B. Stevens, J. W. Suter, S. E. Sweet, Alexander Zabriskie.

★

THE WITNESS is published weekly from September 15th to June 15th inclusive, with the exception of the first week in January and semi-monthly from June 15th to September 15th by the Episcopal Church Publishing Co. on behalf of the Church Publishing Association, Inc. Samuel Thorne, President; Charles A. Houston, Vice-President; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, Treasurer; Frederic D. H. Gilbert, Secretary.

★

The subscription price is $3.00 a year; in bundles for sale in parishes the magazine sells for 10c a copy, we will bill quarterly at 5c a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter, March 6, 1939, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879.

DECEMBER 12, 1946
Vol. XXX. No. 2

Clergy Notes

CLAYTON, ROBERT L., was instituted rector of St. Bernard's School, Gladstone, N. J. by Bishop Gardner on December 4th.

CONLON, NOEL P., Roman Catholic priest, was received as a priest of the Episcopal Church at a service at the cathedral in Albany on Nov. 26. While preparing he has been assistant at St. James', Lake Delaware, N. Y., and will continue there for the present.

EASTBURN, F. E., formerly rector of St. James', Del Rio, Texas, is now associate rector of St. Peter's, Redwood City, Calif.

GROVES, EDWARD A. JR., formerly vicar of St. James', Centerville, Calif., is now assistant at Trinity, San Jose, Calif.

LAWRENCE, A. S. JR., former army chaplain, is now assistant rector of Trinity, New Orleans.

MORRELL, R. L., is now in charge of a number of missions in North Dakota, with residence at Grafton.

MUSSELMAN, G. PAUL, formerly rector of St. Alban's, Highland Park, Mich., became the head of the Detroit Episcopal City Mission on Dec. 1st.

PENNELL, EDWARD M. JR., former army chaplain, is now rector of St. Francis' Church, San Francisco.

SECCOMBE, ALFRED, former navy chaplain, is now rector of All Saints', Carmel, Calif.

TABOR, EDWARD S., retired priest of the diocese of Albany, died on Nov. 23rd after a long illness. His last parish was Holy Innocents, Albany, where he was rector from 1938 to 1942.

VANDERBURGH, E. D., was ordained deacon on Nov. 26 by Bishop Oldham at the cathedral, Albany, N. Y. He was formerly a Presbyterian minister, and is assistant at St. Mark's, Philmont.

WILLIAMS, F. RANDALL, rector of St. Andrew's, South Orange, N. J., has accepted the rectorship of Grace Church, Cuero, Texas.

CALVARY CHURCH
Shady & Walnut Aves.
Pittsburgh
The Rev. Lauriston L. Scaife, S.T.D., Rector
Sundays 8, 9:30, 11:00 and 8:00.
Holy Communion—Mondays, Wednesdays, Fridays 7:30 A.M.
Holy Communion—Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays 8:00 A.M.
Holy Days and Fridays 10:00 A.M

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

CHRIST CHURCH CATHEDRAL
Main and Church Sts., Hartford, Conn.
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30, 10:05, 11 A. M., 8 P. M.
Weekdays: Holy Communion—Monday and Thursday, 9 A. M.; Tuesday, Friday and Saturday, 8 A. M.; Wednesday, 7:00 and 11:00 A. M. Noonday Service, daily 12:15 P. M.

CHRIST CHURCH
Cambridge
REV. GARDINER M. DAY, RECTOR
REV. FREDERIC B. KELLOGG, CHAPLAIN
Sunday Services, 8:00, 9:00, 10:00 and 11:15 A. M.
Weekdays: Wed. 8 and 11 A. M. Thurs., 7:30 A. M.

TRINITY CHURCH
Miami
Rev. G. Irvine Hiller, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services 8, 9:30, 11 A. M.

TRINITY CATHEDRAL
Military Park, Newark, N. J.
The Very Rev. Arthur C. Lichtenberger, Dean
Sunday Services: 8:30, 9:30 (All Saints' Chapel, 24 Rector St.), 11 and 4:30 p.m.
Week Days: Holy Communion Wednesday and Holy Days, 12:00 noon, Friday, 8 a.m. Intercessions Thursday, Friday, 12:10; Organ Recital Tuesday, 12:10.
The Cathedral is open daily for prayer.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
Montecito and Bay Place
OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA
Rev. Calvin Barkow, D.D., Rector
Sundays: 8 A. M., Holy Communion; 11 A. M., Church School; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer and Sermon.
Wednesdays: 10 A. M., Holy Communion; 10:45, Rector's Study Class.

GRACE CHURCH
Corner Church and Davis Streets
ELMIRA, N. Y.
Rev. Frederick T. Henstridge, Rector
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M.; 4:30 P. M.
Daily: Tuesday and Thursday, 7:30 A. M.
Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Holy Days, 9:30 A. M.
Other Services Announced

ST. MARK'S CHURCH
Texas Avenue and Cotton Street
SHREVEPORT, LA.
Rev. Frank E. Walters, Rector
Rev. Harry Wintermeyer, Curate
Sundays: Holy Communion, 7:30; 9:25 A. M., Family Service; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer.
Holy Communion, first Sunday. 6 P. M., Young Churchmen.

CHRIST CHURCH
Nashville, Tennessee
Rev. Peyton Randolph Williams
7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
9:30 and 11 A. M.—Church School.
11 A. M.—Morning Service and Sermon.
6 P. M.—Young People's Meetings.
Thursdays and Saints' Days—Holy Communion, 10 A. M.

GRACE CHURCH
105 Main Street, Orange, N. J.
Lane Wickham Barton, Rector
SUNDAYS
8:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M.—Church School.
11:00 A. M.—Morning Prayer and Sermon. (Holy Communion first Sunday each month)
7:00 P. M.—Young People's Fellowship.

CHRIST CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA
Second Street above Market
Cathedral of Democracy
Founded 1695
Rev. E. Felix Kloman, S.T.D., Rector
Rev. Peter M. Sturtevant, Associate Rector
Sunday Services: 9:30 and 11 A.M.
Church School: 10:00 A.M.
Weekdays: Wed. noon and 12:30.
Saints' Days: 12 noon.
This Church is Open Every Day

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

VOL. XXX. No. 2.

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

DECEMBER 12, 1946

Publication Office, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago 37, Ill. Editorial Office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

Announce Plan for Installation Of New Presiding Bishop

Will Have a Seat in Washington Cathedral Commensurate With Dignity of His Office

By E. L. Scheffey

Washington: — Plans for the installation of Bishop Henry Knox Sherrill in the Presiding Bishop's stall in Washington Cathedral were announced here December 7th by the committee in charge. The service will be held Tuesday, January 14, and will begin at 3 p.m. with the entrance of Bishop Sherrill into the Cathedral, following the entrance of processions of clerical and lay dignitaries.

Highlights of the service will be the reading of the notices of Bishop Sherrill's election by his predecessor, Bishop Henry St. George Tucker, chairman of the House of Bishops at the time of the election, and by former Supreme Court Justice Owen D. Roberts, president of the House of Deputies; seating of Bishop Sherrill in the stall; his presentation to the congregation; and a sermon by the new Presiding Bishop.

Members of the General Convention committee planning the installation service include Bishop Tucker, Bishop Angus Dun of Washington, Bishop Arthur D. McKinstry of Delaware, and Mr. Roberts. The order of service will be a modification of services used in English cathedrals on occasions of the installation of a new bishop or the enthronement of an archbishop.

Bishop Sherrill is the first Presiding Bishop to be elected under the new canon which requires the Presiding Bishop-elect to resign his previous jurisdiction, and has tendered his resignation as Bishop of the Diocese of Massachusetts. He is also the first to be elected under the new tenure law which continues a Presiding Bishop in office until the January 1 succeeding the General Convention which follows his attainment of the age of 68. This means Bishop Sherrill will hold office until 1962.

Although he will be the twentieth Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church, Bishop Sherrill will be only the second to be installed in the Cathedral at Washington. The office of Presiding Bishop does not carry with it a see, or official territory subject to his jurisdiction. Thus a man elected to this office, obliged by canon law to resign his diocesan see, has his headquarters at the National Council offices in New York City, but has no ecclesiastical home. A commission was appointed in 1937 to study this problem and the 1940 General Convention adopted a resolution designating the Cathedral Church, of St. Peter and St. Paul, known as Washington Cathedral, as the seat of the Presiding Bishop for his use on occasions incident to the exercise of his office."

By the canons of the Episcopal Church the Presiding Bishop takes charge of the consecration of all bishops of the Church; has charge of congregations in foreign lands; has general oversight of missionary districts and is executive head of the National Council, which has charge of the unification, development, and prosecution of the missionary, educational, and social work of the Church. The office of Presiding Bishop differs definitely from that of the traditional archbishop, in that he has no jurisdiction over other bishops in matters of faith and order. His duties are often more arduous, but his powers are less hierarchal, than those of an archbishop in the Church of England. Another great difference is the close state-Church tie between the British throne and Canterbury and the non-existence of any such relationship here.

When the Convention requested the Bishop of the diocese of Washington, the Cathedral dean and chapter, to provide the Presiding Bishop with a seat in the Cathedral commensurate with the dignity of his office, and to make suitable provision for his use of the Cathedral, they gladly acceded. At the same time they took occasion to reaffirm the devout hope that Washington Cathedral may bear nation-wide and even world-wide witness to Christ, but stated that it is their policy not to use the term 'national' in connection with the Cathedral in any sense other than this, as being in their judgment inconsistent with the traditional principle of a Free Church in a free state.

The gothic stall of carved oak which is the Presiding Bishop's official seat was made possible by a gift of the Rt. Rev. Paul Matthews, retired Bishop of the diocese of New Jersey. It is twenty-two feet tall and forms the eastern termination of the choir stalls on the north side of the chancel, corresponding to the Bishop of Washington's stall on the south side. It is to this seat that Bishop Sherrill will be led when the climax of the installation service is reached.

THE PICTURE ON THE COVER

San Antonio, Texas:—At this time of the year we like to run a picture on the cover that will warm up our

NOMINATIONS, PLEASE

 At the close of each year THE WITNESS presents an Honor Roll—men and women of the Episcopal Church who distinguished themselves this year, or in the years gone by, in the service of Christ and his Church. In inviting our readers to make nominations we again point out that we are particularly desirous of having the names of those who have served well but inconspicuously. All those nominated will be carefully considered by the editorial board and those selected who, in the judgment of the editors, are most worthy. Please send your nominations to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

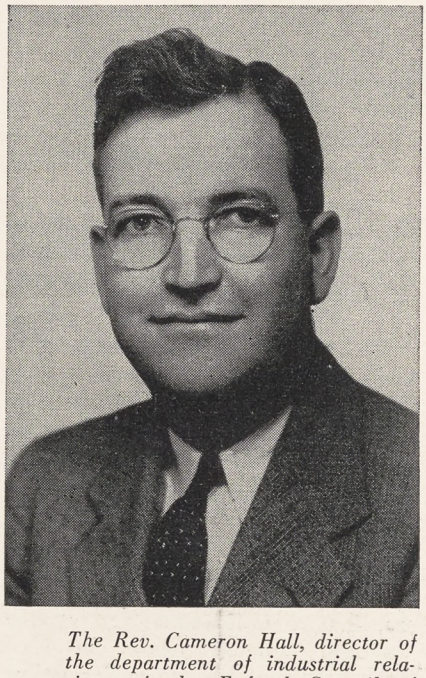
Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

northern friends. Seniors at St. Mary's Hall, Church school here, are granted the privilege of studying out of doors. Nice, what?

The new head mistress of St. Mary's, Miss Gretchen Tonks, has recently announced that religious studies in the high school division is now taught by clergy of the diocese. Bishop Everett Jones teaches the seniors; the Rev. Joe Brown has the junior class; the Rev. Samuel Capers, the sophomores; the Rev. Herbert Morris the freshmen and the Rev. J. Wilson Hunter the girls in the 8th grade.

The aims of St. Mary's Hall, which is an official school of the diocese of West Texas, is to enable girls, through their academic training to have a genuine appreciation of whatever is of real value in literature, arts and sciences, as well as an intelligent approach to current problems; to give them a sound preparation for higher education and the desire for further learning as well as s a t i s f a c t i o n in intellectual achievement.

The School further aims that girls going there may develop qualities of leadership, consideration of others, refinement of thought and of action, dependability, self-control, good sportsmanship and the readiness to meet with courage and initiative any emergency which may arise.



The School aims particularly that girls may grow in a deepening consciousness of God and of the will to serve him. That they may be aware of the needs of the community in which they live and as responsible citizens take their part with sympathy and understanding, using their abilities for the common good.

PITTSBURGH CHANCELLOR DIES IN SLEEP

Pittsburgh:—Hill Burgwin, chancellor of the diocese of Pittsburgh, died in his sleep the night of December 1st. He was the third generation of the Burgwin family to serve in that capacity. Mr. Burgwin was also senior warden of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Pittsburgh.

CHURCH LEADERS PRAISE CO-OPS

Denver, Colo. (RNS):—An international consumer co-operative girded by religion, agriculture and labor was urged here as a cure of the world's ills by two Church leaders. Speaking at the two day conference of the state's co-operative movement, the Rev. Cameron Hall, head of the industrial relations division of the Federal Council of Church, stated that "Religion is vitally interested in the manner in which men live together and how they distribute among themselves the resources of life. The spirit of the co-operative movement is the principle of brotherhood and as such Churches are concerned that that principle be applied wherever there

The Rev. Cameron Hall, director of the department of industrial relations of the Federal Council of Churches, praises the co-operative movement at big Denver meeting is a crying need for essentials such as food and clothing."

The Rev. J. Henry Carpenter, head of the Church Federation of Brooklyn, declared that "the way to justice and peace must be based on economic justice and economic brotherhood" and stated that the ideals were being put into practice through the co-operative movement.

URGES CHRISTIANS TO ACT

Montclair, N. J. (RNS):—Christians must help assure the development of a responsible American foreign policy, the Rev. Vernon H. Holloway, director of international relations, the Council for Social Action of the Congregational Christian Churches, declared here. Speaking at a seminar on legislation sponsored by the New Jersey Council of Churches, Mr. Holloway asserted that the Churches must take up the same day-to-day and month-to-mouth problems that are faced by the government.

"We must avoid the irresponsible extremes of cynicism and the pursuit of panaceas, such as 'World Government Now'," he said. "We must deal now and in the months ahead with specific issues within which real possibilities exist, such as displaced persons and the need for a liberal U.S. immigration policy, the fate of international food relief, and American policies for trusteeship of Pacific islands."

Mr. Holloway stated that although the Churches profess to provide leadership in determining the moral standards of the community, "we often find it easier to be neutral when moral values are at stake in the decisions that voters, legislative and administrative bodies must make."

The Churches, he said, must provide specialized agencies to deal with the specific issues that arise in public life. And these agencies, he continued, must be given freedom to support or oppose legislative proposals as well as to act with other groups on issues.

Mr. Holloway stressed that "we dare not place religious 'haloes' around any legislative bills or political groups, but must keep them all under scrutiny or criticism. Yet our religious reservations must not inhibit us so that we are unable to s u p p o r t the better alternatives against the worst."

OLYMPIA COMMITTEE NOMINATES

Seattle: — Five clergymen have been recommended to the special convention of the diocese of Olympia as a possible successor to Bishop Huston who has resigned as diocesan. The election was on December 9th, too late to report in this issue. They are the Rev. Samuel M. Shoemaker of New York; the Rev. Robert A. Magill of Lynchburg, Va.; the Rev. Elmer B. Christie of Seattle; Dean Charles E. McAllister of Spokane and the Rev. Frederick Shilling of Olympia. The nominations were made by a special committee appointed to consider the many men recommended.

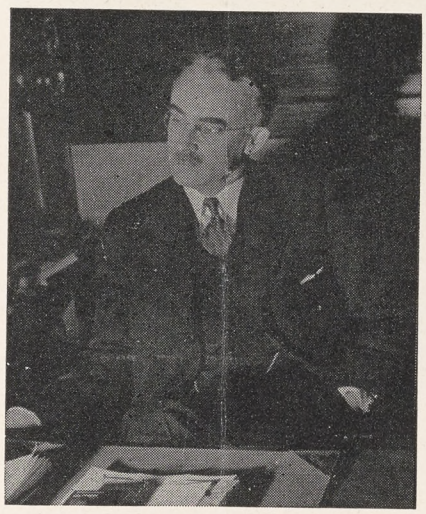
BUILDING FUND SECRETARY

New York:—Mr. Richard P. Kent, Jr., has been elected secretary of the American Church Building Fund Commission, succeeding the Rev. Charles L. Pardee, retired. Mr. Kent has been the assistant secretary of the commission since 1938.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Niemoeller Required To Avoid All Political Questions

German Pastor Limited in Subjects He May Discuss on His Tour of the United States



By W. B. Spofford

New York:—It was stated at the New York office of the World Council of Churches on December 4 that, in the extended tour of the United States by Pastor Martin Niemoeller, he would be limited to the single topic "The Faith that Sustained Me." At none of the meetings in about fifty American cities over a three months' period, would questions be permitted. The spokesman for the World Council, in the absence of Henry Smith Leiper, in Seattle attending the biennial meeting of the Federal Council of Churches, said that the reason for this was to limit his addresses solely to "religion and spiritual subjects" and to "prevent him from touching upon political and international topics in any way." When asked if the German pastor was not violently anti-Soviet and, if so, might he not widen the misunderstanding between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. through his addresses, the World Council spokesman stated that he was anti-Soviet which was an added reason for limiting him in his talks, since the Council is committed to U.S.-U.S.S.R. friendship.

It was further revealed that the state department questioned very seriously whether or not Niemoeller should be allowed to enter this country and did not give him a visa until some hours after he landed by plane in New York on December 3. It was then granted, with an understanding between officers of the Council and the U. S. government that the Council would be responsible for his utterances. Both the office of Religious News Service and the World Council confirmed the report that the German pastor would be closely watched and guarded by representatives of the government while in this country.

The first public address of the noted visitor was delivered at a mass meeting on December 4 at the Federal Council's convention, meeting in Seattle. His topic was "The Faith that Sustains Me" and was a recital of his personal experience of faith as the result of eight years spent in Nazi concentrantion camps.

Meanwhile from Seattle we receive, through Religious News Service, the reports of the Federal Council's biennial meeting, held there last week. An optimistic report was presented to the delegates by F. Ernest Johnson, head of the Council's department of research and education, in which he declared that, although faced with an increasing secularization in daily life and moral problems connected with new scientific discoveries, Protestantism during the last two years has shown a marked "spiritual and institutional vitality." From the standpoint of statistics the Churches have shown a marked increase in membership, he stated.

The Rev. Samuel McCrea Cavert in addressing the meeting of the Federal Council of Churches in Seattle calls for a re-dedication to the will of God

He pointed out that in general, the "unconventional sects" have gained more rapidly in membership than the older, established bodies, but stressed that this growth has not greatly reduced the relative strength of the latter groups. "We need to ponder the fact that the most rapid growth of Protestantism is at its sectarian edge rather than in the citadel of its numerical strength—the well-established and more conventional Churches."

He termed the increase in financial support given the Churches, "exciting." Referring to statistics released by the United Stewardship Council which showed gifts to local church expenses and benevolences at a new high, Johnson noted that budget problems have eased, debts have been paid off, and a boom in church building is in the offing.

Dealing with the spiritual life of the Churches, the Federal Council official said one of the most significant aspects is "the revival of interest in corporate worship." "The worship movement is no fad, it has struck deep into the heart of Protestantism," Johnson stressed.

He reported that the Churches are capitalizing on the new knowledge of personal counselling and have also shown a deeper and more intelligent concern with family religion.

He described the efforts of Protestant Churches to achieve world order as "one of the most outstanding performances in modern Church history. It would be difficult to find a parallel to what has been achieved in the linking together of Christian testimony and practical statesmanship in an effort to build a new concept of world order and a new kind of political cooperation at the international level."

Also addressing the meeting was the Rev. Samuel McCrea Cavert, general secretary of the Council, who states that man and not the control of atomic energy is the vital problem facing the world today. The power released by atomic energy could make "our life an earthly paradise," he declared, but added that "man is not good enough or wise enough to be entrusted with such knowledge and power as have been put into his hands."

He then called for a "true spiritual renewal, a moral conversion, a turning to God and a dedication of his will for mankind as Jesus Christ has made it known."

DIVORCES MOUNT IN ENGLAND

London (wireless to RNS):—Concern over the large number of divorce cases, especially of former service men and women, awaiting trial was expressed by Lord Jowitt, Lord Chancellor, of England, during a debate in the House of Lords. He estimated that this year's cases will number 38,000 and said the total may increase to 50,000 in 1947.

The Archbishop of Canterbury told the House that one reason why

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

divorces are increasing is because civil marriage ceremonies lack appropriate atmosphere and surroundings and fail to make clear that "marriage is a life-long contract." He said the service is "startingly brief, taking only three minutes and concluded in two sentences."

RICHARD ACLAND A SPEAKER

London (wireless to RNS):—Sir Richard Acland, one of the foremost leaders of the Malvern Movement, was one of the speakers at a meeting held at Oxford on December 5 to launch a movement to bring more Christian young people into public life and to have religious principles applied to everyday problems. He is also the leader of the Commonwealth Party which is considered considerably to the left of the Labor Party. Another leader of the movement is the Rev. L. John Collins, dean of Oriel College who declared that "Ex-service men and women are fed to the teeth because they think the Church, as a Church, is doing nothing in public life so far as Christian action is concerned."

FAREWELL SERVICE FOR BISHOP MANNING

New York: — James Forrestal, secretary of the navy, speaking for President Truman, is to be one of the speakers at a farewell service to Bishop Manning, to be held the afternoon of December 16 at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. Other speakers are to be Lieut. Governor Hamley of New York, representing Governor Dewey; Mayor O'Dwyer of New York; Bishop Charles K. Gilbert, the Suffragan Bishop, and Bishop Manning. The sermon will be by the outgoing Presiding Bishop, Henry St. George Tucker.

A feature of the service will be the token presentation to Bishop Manning of a statue of St. John the Divine which is being carved by John Angel, well known sculptor.

MOSCOW LEADERSHIP RECOGNIZED

Cleveland (RNS):—By a three to one vote, the sobor or general council of the Russian Orthodox Church in America resolved to recognize Moscow leadership of the Church on condition that the American body is granted complete autonomy and the privilege of electing its own ruling head. The four-day sessions here were attended by more than 300 lay and clerical delegates from 275 Russian Orthodox parishes in the country gathered for the Church's first general council since 1937.

In resolutions adopted by a vote of 187 to 61, the council requested Patriarch Alexei of Moscow "to continue the Russian Orthodox Church in America in his fold as its spiritual head," provided that it retain "full administrative autonomy." It reaffirmed its allegiance to Metropolitan Theophilus, as head of the American Church, and asserted that the highest authority in the Church is the sobor, which elects the metropolitan.

The Rev. Grover Alison, Grace Church, San Jose, Florida, gets a bit of exercise doing useful work

The council said the terms of the agreement will be submitted to Patriarch Alexei of Moscow in the next two or three months, and that as soon as they are accepted the American Church will sever relations with the synod of the Russian Church Abroad. This body is the so-called dissident Karlovtsky synod, headed by Metropolitan Anastasius, which was formerly established in Belgrade and now has headquarters in Munich.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN GETS A LETTER

Portland, Ore. (RNS):—Frank C. Laubach, missionary and literary expert, has called upon President Truman to make $1,000,000,000 of military appropriations available for world service through the foreign missionary boards and relief agencies of the three major faiths. In his communication to the President, which was made through the state department, Laubach said he was making his proposal to offset demands that relief be distributed "only where it will be appreciated."

"UNRRA sometimes lost more than 50 per cent of its funds, while the Church wastes or loses no more than two per cent. A dollar would go ten times as far used in this manner," Laubach stated. He added that the funds should be used by religious groups only for "world reconstruction through a broad program of social action."

Laubach was on a tour of western cities to organize prayer groups for the success of the United Nations.

WORKERS NEEDED FOR ALASKA

New York:—Bishop John B. Bentley of Alaska has sent an urgent appeal for workers to headquarters here. He states that the district has not had a new man appointed for more than a year though there are now five vacancies. He wrote particularly of Ketchikan and Wrangell where "the communities are growing, new people are coming in and our churches are not ready to minister to them because we do not have the men."

CONSECRATED BISHOP OF NORTH TEXAS

Amarillo, Texas:—George Henry Quarterman was consecrated Bishop of North Texas on December 3 at St. Andrew's Church here where he has served as rector since February of this year. Previously he was the rector of St. Philip's, Ardmore, Okla. The consecrator was Presiding Bishop Tucker, with Bishop Fenner of Kansas and Bishop Casady of Oklahoma the co-consecrators. Mr. Quarterman was presented by Bishop Jones of West Texas and Bishop Hines, Coadjutor of Texas. The sermon was by Bishop Quin of Texas.

WESTERN NEW YORK COMMITTEE

Buffalo:—Bishop Davis of Western New York has appointed a committee to receive names to be considered for the election of a Bishop, soon to be held at a diocesan convention. The committee is made up of four clergymen, four laymen and the president of the diocesan Auxiliary.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

EDITORIALS

International Policy

ONE sentence is needed to state the policy of THE WITNESS on world affairs: we emphatically support the United Nations and at the same time believe that we should work unceasingly for the eventual establishment of a world government. This is the position taken by the 1946 General Convention.

We see no reason why these should be mutually exclusive. On the one hand we distrust those who are so unrealistic as to imagine that the world can be promptly united by merely political means. On the other hand it is equally true that "our aim is to focus the consciousness of mankind through institutions" —witness the Christian Church. We have to recognize that permanent peace is not assured if it is to rest on the tenuous balance of power that has so far animated the doings of the U.N. While the U.N. has gone a gratifying distance in abolishing world anarchy, that anarchy will continue to exist until there is a strong central authority with a police force to back it up.

Christianity demands a relinquishment of sovereignty—between individuals, within the Church, among nations. The war has demonstrated that this was possible in a time of great crisis; in season and out of season we must insist that the crisis is still with us. The war could not have been fought and won without the stimulus of the promise of a world community. With most people the hope is still there; it would be a betrayal of Christianity to let it languish because of fears encouraged by the hate-mongers or by the overly-cautious.

Russia was at one time a strong advocate of world cooperation. If her ardor has cooled it is not entirely her fault. The exclusive possession of the "secret" of the atomic bomb by the United States has understandably engendered fear and suspicion. Cooperation with the USSR is the necessary prelude to the establishment of an international government.

"QUOTES"

IT IS MUCH easier to convert people to an option on the Kingdom of Heaven than it is to get them to invest in the fellowship of the humble. Not that this high mightiness manifests itself in the crude and rather stupid way that one sees depicted in the movies, but in a far more subtle and genteel way so that it can deceive even the very elect. One doesn't find Christians with that haughty arrogance which is so offensive to God and man, but rather with a cultured aloofness which charms you with its gracious manner while it freezes you with its distant frigidity. . . . It is not strange that prosperous people think of eternal life as merely a continuation of their present prosperity but God forbid that heaven should be a confirmation of the cultural smugness which characterizes earthly prosperity and the tragic inequalities which is characteristic of our industrial system.

—Bishop Irving P. Johnson

Meanwhile, as we see it, the earth ball will be divided between two spheres of influence: the Western block and the Soviet Union. We believe that through all tension and conflict these two powers can work and live together in the same world if the will-to-peace, manifest in all peoples, can force those in authority to forbearance and understanding. Destiny has placed upon the United States the leadership in creating and maintaining trust between the two great centers of power. Therefore the Christian imperative impels the Church to foster friendship with the Soviet Union throughout our nation. We have no patience with those who seem to hope that the Soviet Republics may be forced to their knees if the world is united against them. We will oppose, with every resource at our command, those who loosely talk about war with Russia and who would increase our military establishment for such a contingency. Many who have hitherto held power in Europe and America have had an hysterical fear of Bolshevism since the last war. This group has kept up a continuous barrage of publicity against the Soviets and has set the foreign policy of the major nations against them. We recognize that reports of the Russian treatment of populations in territories under her control gives justifiable rise to such fears. Nevertheless much of the onus for the present situation must rest upon those who are behind international finance and cartels. These have dominated world trade and will brook no limitation to their power. The whole cluster of international anti-Soviet interest is, in the opinion of THE WITNESS, one of the greatest threats to world peace. Their power must be limited by the force of aroused public opinion.

In the last analysis the issue is democracy; economic and political. We are convinced that a ground of common interests can be found as we in the Western world move towards the former and as Russia moves toward the latter. Both of us have considerable distance to go. Since there are many things to be condemned and many things to be commended in both systems it would seem not only futile but downright wicked to waste our energies in berating one another; "Blame is the expedient of impotence." Obvious as it is, it cannot be stated too often: the best and only answer to what we do not approve of in the Soviet system is to make our own democracy a reality.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

It will be our constant endeavor to make our readers deeply conscious of the fact that we face times of great international change and readjustment and to endeavor to guide that change by reference to the one form of world policy that offers the only hope—the Christian gospel of brotherhood.

The Clergy as Teachers

by Kenneth R. Forbes
Recently on staff of Calvary Church, Philadelphia

NOT long ago I presumed to suggest that the parish clergy should give serious attention to what the canons and rubrics of the Church require of them,—namely, that they teach the children of their parishes the Christian religion and that they do so in their own proper persons, instead of largely delegating the privilege to miscellaneous lay teachers, trained and untrained. I have had various letters of approval and of inquiry from clergy and lay folk. The gist of all the inquiries is in this question: "Just how do you propose that the clergy should go about this novel undertaking?" I should like to indicate the lines of a practical answer to this question.

The first problem that an answer must solve is the fact of the diversity of age in our young people who are to be taught, ranging from four years up to the late teens. It is obvious that neither a priest nor any other person can teach religion to all these young people in one group or with the same material. Consequently where there is but one priest in a parish, I suggest that he should take the ablest and best trained lay people who are available and commit to them the task, under his supervision, of teaching the youngest age-groups, —from four years up to nine years. This being done, it will be found perfectly practicable for the priest himself to take in hand all children from nine to fifteen.

The second problem which any satisfying answer must solve is the matter of the basic material for the teaching of the nine to fifteen age group. I am convinced from long experience in teaching children of this age that the basic material should invariably be the Prayer Book catechism and that the teaching of it must extend over a full three seasons of Sunday teaching. The catechism is a highly concentrated document and must needs be amplified, modernized in most of its language and simply and vividly illustrated in its practical applications. We suffer, of course, from a dearth of textbooks of this character and the teaching parson must exercise his own creative imagination here. But we are by no means without something in the way of good printed material. Bishop Oldham's The Catechism Today and Newland Smythe's Church Teaching For Church Children ought to be the teaching priest's constant companions as he tries to get to the heart of the Prayer Book catechism, to make it live in the minds and wills of his young people. As more and more of our clergy join the pioneers in recognizing that our catechism (or the version of it called The Offices Of Instruction) is something in the way of spiritual dynamics which can move and empower souls young and old, it is probable that more and more really fruitful books of interpretation and illustration will be published for the edification and encouragement of a growing corps of teaching priests. Meanwhile each of us must make his own contribution with the aids already available towards the objective of a worthy body of practical and vital teaching material for bringing up our children in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord,"—which means in the absolutely basic realities of Christian faith and life.

The third problem posed by the question: "How do you propose that the clergy should go about this novel undertaking?" is a problem of method. Just how can the average parish priest successfully impart to all the children, nine to fifteen years old, the heart of the Christian religion in three seasons of Sunday morning teaching? We have become so used to small classes of youngsters, each of them being taught some special aspect of Christianity assumed to be most suitable to their particular age, that the notion of the rector of the parish putting them all together and teaching them, all alike, the fundamentals of Christian faith and practice is quite foreign to most of us. We have been so obsessed by the idea that the secular public-school method of graded classes is the only efficient way to teach anything to children, that we have assumed that it was impossible for one priest, in his own person, to instruct the children of his parish in the Christian religion as a whole. I believe that the assumption is a false one and that there is a definite and precise method by which this can be effectively done.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Centuries before the modern Sunday school was thought of, the Church had developed a method of religious instruction and training for children which made it entirely practicable for one parish priest to instruct large numbers of children together, and to do it successfully, so that every child might know what the Christian faith was and how it was actually practiced by human beings. This system of religious education has been commonly—and I think rather misleadingly—known as the "catechetical method" and our own Prayer Book catechism was based upon a knowledge of its nature and workings. The term "catechetical" is somewhat of a misnomer because it is associated in the minds of most of our Church people today with a dreary learning by rote of questions and answers and a repeating of them, parrot-like, by children to a catechist. Nothing could be further from the truth, so far as the method I am suggesting is concerned. Learning anything at all by rote plays a very small part indeed in this historic system. Included in it are instruction, spontaneous and very informal types of common worship, recreation and practical service under youthful lay leadership. The entire content of the method revolves around the family idea for the children of the parish.

THIS method, very old in its essential principles, was modernized and brought close to a state of perfection under the inspiration and labors of the clergy of the famous Church of St. Sulpice in France. Here was developed systematically during the second quarter of the nineteenth century a method of religious instruction which showed a profound knowledge of the principles of pedagogy and of what we have come to think of as modern practical psychology, as well as a knowledge of, and faithful adherence to, the Church's fundamental principles and practices. This method and the content of its teaching was later amplified, extended in its appeal and greatly popularized by the French Bishop Dupanloup. It is, in fact, to Bishop Dupanloup that the Christian world in general owes a practical knowledge of the so-called "Sulpician method" in the teaching of religion to children. Dupanloup is one of the great religious geniuses of all time in the sphere of the religious training of youth. His two principal books, The Ministry of Catechising and The Method of St. Sulpice have both been translated into English and have been the inspiration of everything along this line in England and in America.

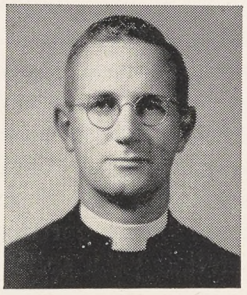
I am concerned that the clergy of the Church in general should be convinced that this "Sulpician method," freely and intelligently adapted to the standards, traditions and formularies of our Church, is no exotic plant, but is, on the other hand, a method that makes it possible and completely practicable for the vital realities of the Christian faith—as set forth in bare outline in our Prayer Book catechism — to become an integral part of the characters of all our young people. The Sunday School as we have known it for a century has never succeeded in accomplishing this, —as the chaplains of two successive world wars and all experienced parish clergy and educators well know. What we need is not better textbooks, better grading or even better teachers. We need to forget the whole notion of schools and grades and to grasp the opportunity of gathering our children into a family relationship in which they will learn the Christian life much as they have learned the physical and social life in the families into which they were born. This opportunity is open to any parish priest who cares enough about vitalizing the spiritual life of his children to understand the method of St. Sulpice and to put it into action in his parish, with the Prayer Book catechism as his vade mecum.

I know that it is hard for any parish priest to make so radical a break with modern tradition and practice, especially when the Church's central authorities in the field of religious education are doing nothing whatever along this line. I suspect there would be many more daring innovators of this kind if the clergy in general realized how greatly this suggested system simplifies the whole vexing problem of getting, training and keeping (or changing) Sunday school teachers. Any method that enables the parson to teach all his older children personally, and thus permits him to take the cream of his teacher material for dealing with the youngest group, is at least worth trying to get a line on and, if possible, to understand. A very large proportion of our parish clergy have not the least idea of what this "Sulpician method" really is, of how it works in the Episcopal Church or of what chance the average parish priest would have to operate it successfully in his own domain.

(A second article on The Parish Teaching Family will follow.)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

To describe the method in satisfactory detail would require a good-sized booklet. I shall, however, attempt to give in another article a very bare outline of the working of a Sunday morning session of this method, which is sometimes called in the Episcopal Church "the parish teaching family," in the hope that it may incite some of our parish clergy to make a careful study of its possibilities for themselves,—which means, first of all, reading Dupanloup's two books.



Strategy and Tactics

by

FRANCIS O. AYRES

Rector of St. John's, Waterbury, Connecticut

CALLS to Evangelism are becoming increasingly popular. The National Council, the Presiding Bishop's Committee on Laymen's Work and the United Movement of the Church's Youth are three of the groups within our own Church who have issued such appeals. They have seen what William Temple emphasized again and again during the last few years of his life that the great need of the Church in our day is the winning of converts.

For their purpose we have nothing but praise. The trouble lies in the fact that the whole problem has been over-simplified. The unwary are led to believe that here is the Church with the gospel while over there are the unconverted and it is only a matter of bringing the two together. The truth of the matter is that when the Church does reach the modern unbeliever with the gospel the unbeliever simply does not understand what is being said. The words, and, more important still, the ideas which they express, mean nothing to him. The real problem is one of communication.

Kathleen Bliss, in reporting a conference on evangelism held at the beginning of this year in Cambridge, and presided over by the Archbishop of Canterbury, said on this point, "Here the sharpest division was visible in the conference. On the one hand, there were those who said that experience showed that when the gospel is faithfully preached in traditional terms, men and women can apprehend it and will respond, and instances of successful evangelistic campaigns were quoted in support of this. On the other hand, there were those who said that an exposition of the faith which seems to Christians crystal clear and compelling is greeted by a predominantly non-Christian audience with blank incomprehension. "It is not that they do not want to listen," said Mr. Edwin Barker of the average audience from the forces, "they are concentrating, they are trying to grasp the substance of what is said, but it just goes past them." And on the same point Dr. George MacLeod said that when he spoke in universities, camps, factories and schools, he met "with eager attention when stating the problem and hinting at a Christian cure, and a deep perplexity fading into blank incomprehension when attempting in classical terms to state the message of salvation." The gospel currently preached does not waken an answering chord in their experience. It looks to them much as some mediaeval treatise in demonology looks to us—it hangs together logically within its own premises, but the whole of it is outside our frame of discourse because we think and live by different premises. The difficulty is not solely, or even mainly, one of language. Vocabularies can be changed, theological terms paraphrased and the message still fails to get across."

It seems to me that the latter point of view is much nearer the truth. This is not to advocate a suspension of preaching the gospel in traditional terms and with old methods, but merely to recognize that even though we are still winning new converts, we are on the whole rapidly losing ground. William Temple has this to say on the subject: "The essential task of the evangelist does not vary; it is to proclaim the unchanging gospel. But there may be need to win for this a hearing from those who are ill disposed to listen, because they start with the conviction that it has nothing which concerns them. Their minds move, as we saw, in a circle of ideas alien from the whole Biblical view of the world, and if we offer the great Biblical truths, especially if we do this in Biblical phrases, they will have no notion what we are talking about. It is not only a matter of language, though that is very important. The serious difficulty is the absence from the minds of those whom we would address of the ideas we wish to utilize, and the presence there of other ideas which are incompatible with these. The words 'sin' and 'redemption' both stand for ideas which the modern mind finds it very hard to assimilate."

To me the best evidence that few people understand what we are talking about is the fact that the great majority of people remain indifferent to Christianity. "Blessed are you when men shall revile you and persecute you and shall utter all kinds of evil against you falsely on my account." If we were really preaching the gospel so that men understood what we were saying we would begin to learn the meaning of Jesus' words. How many men or women in our Church have been reviled, persecuted or falsely accused for being Christians? On the contrary, until recently men and women honored and expected honor for professing themselves Christians and even now Christians are by and large treated with the amused tolerance which might be bestowed upon a group such as "The Ancient Order of Hibernators." Kirkegaard has shown beyond the shadow of a doubt that the gospel is still the "great offense." At a time when Christianity is being widely ignored we are failing to preach the gospel or preaching it in a way that few can comprehend.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

AT THE meeting of the Federal Council of Churches in Seattle on December 5 the delegates voted unanimously to instruct Bishop Oxnam to wire Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt protesting a statement that appeared in her newspaper column about Pastor Niemoeller. Mrs. Roosevelt declared that she understood that the German pastor has stated in the past that he was against the Nazis because of their persecution of the Church but that he had no quarrel with them politically. She likewise recalled the report that Niemoeller had declared that he would offer his services to his country in the event of another war.

The telegram which Bishop Oxnam sent to Mrs. Roosevelt stated: Deeply regret the misinformation on which your remarks about Pastor Niemoeller in your column of December 5 are based. The record clearly shows that he repeatedly spoke against political aims of the Nazis as early as 1933. He was forbidden to preach as result of his speaking against Hitler's racialistic program."

Pastor Niemoeller did state, on the Monday of the week he was arrested in 1937, that his quarrel with Hitler and the Nazis was solely over their hostility to the Church. The issue was "freedom of conscience"; his right to preach the gospel as he saw fit, and he stated firmly and emphatically that he was not concerned in any way with political matters. He also stated at the same time that in the event of war he would volunteer his services to his country as a submarine commander. And he stated that he would do this regardless of who controlled the government. He would do it because he was a loyal German.

He made these statements in the home of Dr. Julius Richter, then a professor of missions in Berlin, who has since died. Present at the meeting were a number of other distinguished leaders of the Church in Germany and a group of Americans who were studying conditions in various European countries that summer under the direction of Dr.

SANCTUARY

Conducted by W. M. WEBER

The Eucharist:
Something DONE, not said.

"The typical Anglican priest or layman . . . thinks of (the Eucharist) primarily as something which is said, to which is attached an action, the act of communion. . . . The conception before the fourth century and in the New Testament is almost the reverse of this. It regards the rite as primarily something done, of which what is said is only one incidental part." And this thesis is perfectly true; until well into the third century the eucharistic prayer was left entirely to the discretion of the celebrant, who was free to extemporize as he saw fit. Consequently all attempts to recover "the primitive liturgy" or even any "essential" part of it are doomed to failure in advance, for no such liturgy ever existed. The prayer—contrary to the repeated assertion of liturgiologists from time immemorial — was not even regularly addressed to God the Father, for the East Syrian rite of Addai and Mari presupposes an original practice of offering this prayer to Christ. It is not true that this prayer regularly included a memorial of the Last Supper or (still less) the Words of Institution. And it certainly is not true that this prayer included an invocation of the Holy Spirit in order to effect (or perfect) the consecration; Dom Dix argues, in fact, that this theory first begins with Cyril of Jerusalem.

In contrast to this infinite diversity in what was said we have an apparently unvarying uniformity in what was done. The collection of the oblations brought by the people, the offering of these (an act, not a prayer) to God, the thanksgiving of the celebrant, the communion of the people, the dismissal; all externally a brief and bare rite, differing in every possible aspect from the recondite and elaborate ceremonies of the mystery religions with which it has been the fashion to connect the Christian service.

—Burton Scott Easton, The General Seminary Bulletin, review of Dom Gregory Dix, The Shape of the Liturgy.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Sherwood Eddy, well-known lecturer and author. I was one of the group and was present to hear Pastor Niemoeller make these statements, and they are in a notebook where I wrote down his words at the time he made them. Whether or not Niemoeller has changed his mind since that time I do not know. But I do affirm that up to the very week Niemoeller was arrested he held the views Mrs. Roosevelt attributes to him in her column.

Neither is it correct that Niemoeller was forbidden by the Nazis to preach, as the Federal Council's telegram to Mrs. Roosevelt states. He preached in his church in a fashionable suburb of Berlin, the Sunday of the very week he was arrested. I was not present to hear him, but others in the party were, including Dr. Eddy. The Nazis had forbidden all collections at the church, apparently with an idea of starving him out. It was for this reason that members of our party took up a collection for him. This money was handed to Dr. Richter by Sherwood Eddy. But when Richter went to Niemoeller's home that week to deliver the money the Nazis were there. Both men were arrested. Dr. Richter spent a night in jail and was released. Niemoeller never was released but was placed in a concentration camp.

Dramatic Arts and Religion

By
WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD, JR.

DURING the summer several note-worthy pictures have appeared on the American screens and, once again, they are of the English vintage. Noel Coward's study of middle-age love, Brief Encounter, is both tastefully done, competently acted and psychologically sound. Bernard Shaw's Caesar and Cleopatra, starring Vivien Leigh and Claude Raines, is primarily a technicolor pageant, but when G.B.S.'s tart lines slip through the panoply it has all the rich values of his other studies of human nature.

Shaw has said that he is a greater writer and student of humanity than was Shakespeare. Comparing the adaption of his work, however, with Laurence Olivier's masterful production of Henry the Vth, one must give the laurel to the Bard of Avon. This historical drama of the 100 Years' War, being shown in exclusive engagements in the major cities under the guidance of the Theater Guild, represents a new departure in that it freely takes a stage production and, without radical adaption, transfers it to the movie medium.

The first half of the film is treated exactly as an ancient play on the boards of the Old Globe Theater, complete with scene changes and directive remarks by the Prologue, admirably played by Leslie Banks. Midway, however, the setting is shifted to the battle-fields of France, represented by an unusual and effective mixture of painted backdrops and mother nature. Such a combination of studio and natural art seems admirably suited to set forth Shakespeare's prose and poetry in the best possible light. In no other picture has the mouthing of words been so important and, by sticking closely to the original script, Mr. Olivier has turned out a production that proves that there is much room for experimentation in the motion picture field.

The battle scenes in the film, which pit English archers and a handful of armored knights against the overwhelming force of the French cavalry, represent an exciting crescendo of action and violence without the typical Hollywood froth and bubbles. The sequence in which the French horsemen advance to the attack with ever-increasing speed is one of the most awesome and fearful sights ever shown on the screen, even in this day when we are used to the sight of tanks and bombers in our movies. Wedded to the drama, also, is a musical score, played by Elizabethan instruments, which serves both to advance and highlight the action.

A perfect cast is headed by Felix Aylmer as the Archbishop of Canterbury, Robert Newton as the clown Pistol and, above all, director Olivier as King Henry. The latter, whether soliloquizing by a camp-fire or stirring up his men to a fighting pitch, gives one the impression that he is starring in an opening night performance under the direction of old Will Shakespeare himself. One can't ask for more than that.

The technique used in this film, most assuredly, is limited and won't be employed again in a hurry. However, it is hoped that the same company will try to use their skill upon one of Shakespeare's tragedies. Such an interpretation of, say, Macbeth could conceivably be the outstanding motion picture since the movies were invented.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Seminary Head Finds Conflict In South America

Peruvian and Argentine Concepts on Verge Of Great Conflict Declares John A. Mackey

New York:—Two political concepts, both of "revolutionary significance," are on the verge of conflict in South America today, John A. Mackay, president of Princeton Theological Seminary, declared here at a dinner celebrating the 30th anniversary of the founding of the committee on cooperation in Latin America. The committee is an interdenominational organization representing 32 Protestant mission agencies in North America.

The Peruvian concept, as embodied in the person of Victor Raul Haya de la Torre, president of Peru's Aprista party, represents continental solidarity "in the spirit of Bolivar—the dream of unity in freedom," said Mackay who recently returned from a lecture tour of Latin America. Quoting Haya de la Torre's slogan: "No liberty without bread; no bread without liberty," he pointed out that the Peruvian leader is a hero in many Latin American countries because "he is a significant political thinker, standing for spiritual sensitivity and political liberty."

The Argentine concept, according to Mackay, is represented by Juan Domingo Peron, president of Argentina, "who shares with Franco the philosophy of a medieval Spain and maintains that the future of all Latin America depends on a revival of the glory of the Spanish empire: a great Church and a great state united in the task of imposing their own conception of order on former colonial lands."

Cautioning against a too hasty criticism of the Pentecostal movement, the educator warned that the Latin American temperament is not going to be reached by a "merely social gospel that is not a thrilling evangel."

"The first," he said, "is needed but must be accompanied with a great gospel that gets peoples' hearts. The Spaniard is the most mediocre person in the world except when in the grip of emotion. The great things done by Spain have been done in the grip of a tremendous passion. God help us if passion is not found in the Evangelical movement."

Edited by Sara Dill

Charles S. Detweiler, vice chairman of the committee on cooperation, reviewed the history of the committee during the past thirty years.

"While we champion the cause of religious freedom," he said, "we do not carry on a propaganda against any Church. We would have you remember that this committee is the only medium for interdenominational action in Latin America. Through it all the principal denominations are working harmoniously in fields where united action is possible. Relations between the many missions were never more happy than they are now. We are demonstrating to the world that there is no authority that can dominate men without winning the loyalty of their hearts; that freedom of conscience is the only sure method of reaching an accord."

Aid World Council

Geneva (wireless to RNS):—Brazil Methodists are sending a gift to the reconstruction and interchurch aid committee of the World Council this month, thus being the first time that aid has been received from any Church in South America.

Church Reopened

Detroit:—The Rev. G. Paul Musselman began his work as head of the City Mission on December 1. He will direct a staff of chaplains and social workers working in various institutions and will also supervise the work of the Big Brother and Big Sister movements. The society also operates Mariners Inn as a home for older men. Mr. Musselman has also become rector of Mariners' Church, the oldest church building in the city, which has again been opened for noonday and other services for downtown congregations. The church already has under way a project for personal counselling which includes a full time worker for Alcoholics Anonymous. Consideration is also being given to a restoration project for the church, with the hope of providing offices and reading rooms.

Recognizing that many in industry are no longer actively affiliated with the Church, a new position has been created as a part of the plan, that of director of social relations. Cooperation of leaders in labor and management will be enlisted to work out programs for industrial team work. Also psychologists and sociologists will be asked to serve as consultants in a wide program of personal counselling.

Organize Youth

Brandon, Vt.:—The Rev. Herschel Miller, rector of St. Thomas' here, who is director of youth work in the diocese of Vermont, has announced plans for a diocesan youth organization. Six districts have been set up with two members from each serving as the youth cabinet. Objectives of the organization are to reach every isolated Episcopalian in the state between the ages of 14 and 25 and to form a youth group

"The Nativity", one of three interesting and beautiful grisaille windows recently designed, executed and installed by RAMBUSCH in a small Brooklyn Chapel

RAMBUSCH

Designers Decorators and Craftsmen

2 West 45th St ~ New York 19, N Y

Rambusch for Decoration, Murals, Altars, Altar Rails, Pulpits, Stained Glass Windows, Candlesticks and Lighting Fixtures

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

in every parish and mission. It will also cooperate with the department of religious education in sponsoring the annual summer youth conference.

Come Sober

London (wireless to RNS):—The Archbishop of Canterbury has issued a warning against "abuses" in midnight communion services. He said that while the service "has emotional appeal for some, for many it is used chiefly as an easy attractive way of freeing Christmas day itself of obligations."

The Archbishop asserted that "there have been very undesirable incidents in connection with this service," and requested parish priests to "require notice beforehand of those who intend to communicate and to take every possible step to avoid abuses."

Hunting Season

Swanton, Vt.:—The Rev. Raymond Finehout, rector of Holy Trinity, here, looked over his practically manless congregation last Sunday and said: "I sometimes feel like praying for the failure of the deer hunters when I realize how many men are taken away from services." Going home from church he was greeted by his teen-age son with a good sized buck. "Meat for winter, Pop," grinned the boy. "Yes, meat and a few words," replied the father. Son attended the evening service.

Bishops Crusade

Richmond, Va.:—The diocese of Virginia, through a special committee appointed at the last Council, has announced plans for a movement to be known as The Bishop's Crusade. Beginning December 29th and continuing through January, the clergy will be asked to preach on subjects relating to the spiritual needs of the world today and the challenge and opportunity facing the Church.

On Sunday evening, January 26th, half of the clergy of the diocese will be sent to the parishes of the other half of the clergy for a three-day conference. The following week this process will be reversed with the clergy who did not conduct conferences going to the parishes of the clergy who did during the first week. The conferences will be held in parish houses wherever possible. They will be especially for the men and women who have been selected as crusaders and others who wish to attend. The purpose of the conferences will be to discuss the need of evangelism and to work out plans for the crusaders in cooperation with the clergy to conduct a campaign of lay evangelism. This plan will begin immediately and continue with varying emphases through Lent and continuing to Whitsunday when there is to be a service of rededication.

This movement is a part of a plan of action adopted by the Council last May. Its purpose is to be a crusade for Christ in strengthening the Church through a revitalization of its members and increased membership to be a more vital force in meeting the needs of our world today.

Hundred Million

Atlantic City (RNS):—Announcing that the United Jewish Appeal has raised $102,000,000 for refugees, overseas needs, and Palestine this year, William Rosenwald, chairman, paid tribute to Christian leaders for their support of the drive. His report to the U.J.A. national conference here pointed out that several million dollars were contributed to the fund by Christian committees in various parts of the country. Rosenwald, revealed that 3,000,000 Jews in the U. S. contributed to the fund, and helped assure the survival of 1,500,000 Jews in Europe.

Study Meetings

Rutland, Vt.:—The men's club of Trinity Church here will devote its next six meetings to learning about Christianity in general and the Episcopal Church in particular, with a lecture at each meeting, followed by discussion. Action also is being

J. WIPPELL & Co LTD
Established 18th Century
Clerical Tailors & Robe Makers

SPECIAL OFFER: CLERGY CASSOCKS

Wippell Cassocks, individually cut and tailored, incorporate all the little refinements of detail which make for so much extra comfort and convenience in wear

Single or Double Breasted, of Fine All Wool Serge $39.50

Quotation does not include Cincture, Belt or Girdle

Clergy Surplice, Slightly Gathered
Pure Irish Linen $13.50

Clerical Cloaks to cover cassock, Waterproof Melton $39.00

Patterns sent on application

55 & 56, High Street, EXETER, England
(also 11, Tufton Street, Westminster, S.W.1, London, Eng.)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

planned, with committees charged with definite responsibilities. One will be a committee to visit new families coming to the city; another to visit inactive members of the parish; still another to look after the church property. A number of men will also be instructed as lay-readers and will offer their services to churches without clergymen. The program was launched with a corporate communion on December 1.

Building Program

Hartford, Conn.:—Trinity College is seeking $1,500,000, with a field house, two additional dormitories and an extension of the library the top requirements. Mr. A. Northey Jones, New York, an alumnus and trustee, is the chairman of the committee, with Mr. William G. Mather of Cleveland the honorary chairman.

Church Women Meet

Proctor, Vt.:—Dean Mary Simpson of the University of Vermont, who is president of the Vermont Council of Church Women, was a headline speaker at the annual assembly of the organization, held here on December 3rd. Another feature of the meeting was a report on the United Nations by Miss Mabel Head, who is the official observer for the National Council of Church Women at U.N.

Unusual Service

Albany, N. Y.:—A former Roman Catholic priest and a former Presbyterian minister were admitted to the ministry of the Episcopal Church at a service held November 26 at the cathedral here. The Rev. Noel Patrick Conlon, formerly a member of the Order of Friars Minor, was received as a priest of the Episcopal Church by Bishop Oldham. He had served several years on the faculty of St. Bonaventure College, and more recently has been an assistant to the Rev. William J. Shane, Episcopal rector at Lake Delaware.

At the same service a former Presbyterian, the Rev. Ernest D. Venderburgh, was ordained a deacon by Bishop Oldham. He has been serving as a lay reader at St. Mark's, Philmont, and will continue there as a deacon.

Hate Group

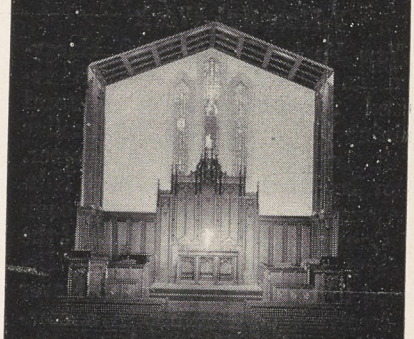
Atlanta, Ga.:—The Rev. Minton Richardson, rector of St. Luke's here, was among a number of clergymen to blast The Columbians, Inc., organization that is reputedly fostering the same aims as the Ku Klux Klan. Meanwhile Governor Ellis Arnall has taken steps to have the charter of the organization revoked, charging that it was "peddling hate and intolerance."

The Columbians first attracted the attention of religious leaders when two of the group picketed the municipal auditorium here last August while Rev. Louie D. Newton, president of the Southern Baptist Convention, was delivering a report on his trip to Russia. The pickets carried a sign reading, "Is Louie D. Newton selling Communism to the U.S.A.?" The sign bore the signature of the Columbians and said, "We are against Communism. We stand for 100 per cent white democracy."

Hits 52-20 Clubs

Chicago (RNS):—Jobless pay for veterans is "rapidly making bums out of splendid ex-service men," the Rev. Hugh Calkins, of the Our Sorrowful Mother novena charged here. His opinions were expressed in the weekly Novena Notes, publication of the movement conducted nationally by the Servite Fathers.

Referring to some of the jobless veterans as members of "52-20 clubs" ($20 a week unemployment compensation for 52 weeks) Father Calkins said he was asked to state his opinion by "womenfolk of many good families."



"The tragic pity of genuine heroes going to pot mentally and morally upsets any priest," he stated. "Maybe it's not too late to shake up the dole grabbers. There are now over a million and a half veterans receiving up to twenty dollars a week for up to 52 weeks from the Government. Must they all loaf?"

Father Calkins charged that good jobs go begging "while thousands of unemployed vets, fully able to work, haunt taverns, play the races, gamble freely, vegetate in homes whose families work hard daily."

"America is a bit fed up with 'they must get adjusted'," he added.

"The 52-20 clubs are ingraining a way of life that ruins men. Members will soon hit the skidrows of our big towns, drifting the aimless way of dopes, drunks, hoboes, while still protesting the world owes them

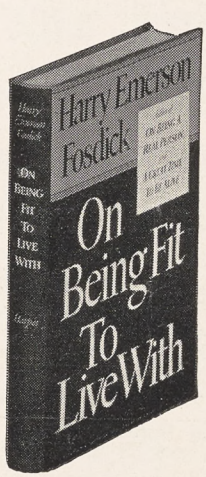
CHANCEL ALTERATIONS

Pews - Church Woodwork

Ossit Church Furniture Co.

Janesville, Wisconsin

SINCE 1867



ST. JAMES LESSONS

A nine course series of instruction for Episcopal Church Schools including illustrated work books—150-250 pages (60c each) and teachers' manuals (I, II, III 40c each, IV through IX 60c each).

No Samples Payment with orders

St. James Lessons, Inc.

865 Madison Ave. New York 21, N.Y.

A Recommended Book for Christmas

This Book Has Received a Three Star Rating by THE WITNESS

ON BEING FIT TO LIVE WITH

By Harry Emerson Fosdick

The Minister Emeritus of Riverside Church and the NBC National Vespers hour gives some of the finest and most helpful sermons of his long career, illustrating a mature, practical and triumphant religion. $2.00

HARPER & BROTHERS

49 East 33rd Street, New York 16, N.Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

a living. It should concern them right now; people end in hell for lazily ignoring their opportunities."

Love and Marriage

Milwaukee (RNS):—A resolution urging that ministers offer married persons advice to aid them in giving sex education to their children was adopted by 300 former servicemen attending a Methodist veterans' conference here. The resolution included recommendations that marriage ceremonies be performed in the church or home by ministers rather than by civil officials; that pastors be trained to give pre-marital counseling; and that ministers speak frankly from the pulpit on problems involving love, courtship, and marriage. It was also urged that parties to an interfaith marriage should be fully informed on all the problems involved. The conference opposed the formation of separate veterans' organizations within the Church.

Hospital Work

New York:—Nearly 200 clergymen and theological students received full-time clinical pastoral training in 20 hospitals and similar institutions during the past summer, according to the Rev. Seward Hiltner, executive secretary of the commission on religion and health of the Federal Council of Churches. Believed to be the largest number ever to receive such training in a comparable period, the students were taught the technique of pastoral counseling by actual clinical experience under expert supervision. The training centers were located in general hospitals, mental institutions, and correctional homes in ten different states. In every case the institution in which the students worked served as sponsoring agency. Pastoral leadership, however, was provided by theological schools, local church councils, and, in some cases, by groups of interested individuals.

Unity Threatened

Geneva (wireless to RNS):—Unity between German Lutheran, Reformed and United Churches achieved by the formation of the Evangelical Church in Germany more than a year ago is being threatened by moves to form a unified Lutheran Church, according to Pastor Wolfang Schweitzer, Confessional youth leader, who was in Geneva to visit headquarters of the World Council of Churches.

"Although the new constitution for the Evangelical Church has not been written," Pastor Schweitzer declared, "one Lutheran group already is seeking to establish a unified Lutheran Church in Germany, despite opposition of Lutherans in other provinces."

Pastor Schweitzer, a staff member of the foreign department of the Evangelical Church, said the problem of de-Nazification does not appear any longer to be an obstacle to the reconstruction and revival of the Church.

"While churchmen had feared that military authorities might dictate which pastors should be allowed to preach, I do not believe the de-Nazification situation will grow any worse," he declared.

He said the new de-Nazification policy in the American zone "works very well," and quoted Pastor Niemoeller as having recently asserted that de-Nazification is "not a serious problem and will not be a problem in the future, except in very special cases."

According to Pastor Schweitzer, the Protestant youth movement in Germany is "the strongest of any youth work being carried on at present in areas where the population is Protestant."

One of the few Germans of his age—he is only thirty—to hold a doctorate in theology, Pastor Schweitzer escaped from Germany in 1944 after Nazi officials had begun suppressing church youth work of which he was in charge. He managed to penetrate the Allied lines and began working with the American Army. Previously he had served in the German Army but was expelled in 1940 because he was half-Jewish.

Advice to Teachers

Berkeley, Calif.: — When the teachers of a local church school had their first teachers' meeting of the fall term, the following report appeared in the bulletin, giving assurance and hope to parents who sometime fear that errors may be

For a time of world upheaval—

THE BIBLE IS HUMAN

By Louis Wallis

From Professor James Moffatt, Union Theological Seminary: "I am sure, even in these distracting days, that it will find the audience it deserves, and appeal to readers who still have an open mind." $2.50

Columbia University Press
New York 27, N. Y.

The Story of Jesus

Q: What is The Story of JESUS?
A: A new 32-page booklet, 3⅛x5¼ inches, containing text matter from the Bible and full-color illustrations giving highlights in the life of Christ.

Q: What artists are represented in the booklet?
A: Murillo; Maratta; delle Notti, Botticelli; Barocci; Hofmann; Zimmerman; Vogel; Raphael; Rubens; Perugino; Fra Angelico; Giotto and Pupil.

Q: What age group would most likely appreciate this booklet?
A: All ages. Church School Pupils —Teachers—Parishioners—Friends.

Q: How much does it cost?
A: Single copy, 20 cents each; 50 copies, 16 cents each; 100 copies, 14 cents each; 300 or more, 12 cents each.

The Madonna Calendar
1947 Edition

A beautiful Madonna Calendar for every home—An inexpensive Christmas remembrance—14 Madonna Masterpieces printed in five colors. Prices: Single copy, 15 cents each; 50 copies, 12 cents each; 100 copies, 10 cents each; 300 copies, 9 cents each. Envelopes are provided.

The Liturgical Desk Calendar
1947 Edition

A calendar which meets all the requisites of a busy clergyman. Size of calendar: 10 inches high, 7 inches wide, when closed; Covers, fine quality leatherette; good binding; Printed in full Liturgical colors; Ample space next to each date to jot down daily appointments. Price, $1.75

The Episcopal Church Lesson Calendar

Order of Bible Lessons for daily Morning and Evening Prayer; proper Psalms for every day; Table of Lessons for Special Occasions, etc. Size, 5¼x8 inches. Price, 50 cents

Have You Read? "HE LIVES"

By Austin Pardue, $1.50.

Postage Additional

Morehouse-Gorham Co.
14 E. 41st St. New York 17, N.Y.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

taught to their children: "Our Church school staff had their first meeting of the year on Tuesday evening at the Vicar's. They discussed various plans for the coming year, were instructed in teaching methods, and accepted our slogan: Never teach a child anything he will need to unlearn. Too often children are taught stories and legends as if they are historical truths; and thus they become suspicious of the Church when they grow older. We teach them the story the Hebrews told about creation, we tell them the story of Jonah and the whale, and we tell them the facts about Jesus' brothers and sisters. But our main purpose is to lead them into the Christian understanding of life. Be sure your child never misses a Sunday in church school. We make it interesting as well as educational."

Hits Segregation

Johnstown, Pa.: — Racial segregation within the Protestant churches has become so completely accepted as a daily pattern of living that it is "almost impossible" for white and Negro Christians to mingle in "common fellowships," Mark A. Dawber, executive secretary of the Home Missions Council, charged here at the closing session of the triennial convention of the women's missionary society of the United Lutheran Church. Negro hospitals, schools, and other institutions have been established by the Churches on a rigid separatist policy directly repudiating New Testament teachings which hold that segregation is a "denial of the teachings of Jesus about the brotherhood of man," he declared.

While viewing the future with optimism since more and more Protestant Churches are "denouncing racial pride and race antagonism as sin," Dawber pointed out that the Roman Catholic Church "has been much more truly Christian in its attitude on race—and that is why it is getting the Negroes."

Scoffing at the fear of inter-marriage as a "justification for segregation," Dawber said: "This is not a valid argument—moreover I would like to say in this matter of sex relations between the races that the white man should be the last person to raise the question. The white man is the greatest sinner."

"It is a strange inconsistency," he added, "that wars which are fought ostensibly to achieve freedom end in a greater denial of freedom. Freedom is being denied on a geographical basis, on an economic basis, on a racial basis, on a political and class basis, and yes, sometimes on a religious basis."

A New Book

From

Morehouse-Gorham

Edited by

The Rev. Edward R. Hardy, Jr.

For the Advisory Council to the Presiding Bishop on Ecclesiastical Relations.

This is a collection of English translations of official documents of the various Eastern Orthodox Churches bearing on the question of Anglican Orders, together with reports of official Orthodox-Anglican theological conferences and theological discussions. In his Introduction Dr. Hardy reviews the whole subject, and a bibliography lists the most important works in English on this subject.

Orthodox Statements

on

Anglican Orders

Price, $1.00

Postage Additional

Morehouse-Gorham Co.

14 East 41st St. New York 17

THE CHURCH PENSION FUND

and its subsidiaries

administered for the benefit of the Church

THE CHURCH HYMNAL CORPORATION

Publishers of The Hymnal; Book of Common Prayer; A Prayer Book for Soldiers and Sailors; Book of Offices for Certain Occasions; Stowe's Clerical Directory.

THE CHURCH LIFE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost insurance and annuity contracts available to the clergy, lay officials and active lay workers of the Church, either voluntary or paid, and their immediate families.

THE CHURCH PROPERTIES FIRE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost fire and windstorm insurance on property owned by or closely affiliated with the Church, and on the residences and personal property of the clergy.

Further information available by addressing any of the above at

20 Exchange Place New York

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Write us for
Organ Information
AUSTIN ORGANS, Inc.
Hartford, Conn.

Memorial Windows
In accordance with the best traditions of the craft. Notable installations in forty states and five foreign countries.
Illustrated material on request
The D'Ascenzo Studios
founded 1896
1604 Summer Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

ALTAR BREADS ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED
SAINT MARY'S CONVENT
KENOSHA • WISCONSIN

MENEELY BELL CO.
22 RIVER ST., TROY, N. Y.
BELLS

R. GEISSLER, INC.
71-79 W. 45th St., New York 19, N. Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE·BRASS·SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS
EST 1877

ERNEST W. LAKEMAN
Designer and Worker in
STAINED GLASS
2 CRESCENT PLACE
YONKERS, NEW YORK

Need a LAXATIVE?
Black-Draught is
1-Usually prompt
2-Usually thorough
3-Always economical

25 to 40 doses only 25¢
Get BLACK-DRAUGHT
CAUTION: USE ONLY AS DIRECTED

Segregation Hit

Austin, Texas (RNS):—The Canterbury Club, Episcopal student group at the University of Texas, were among the nine religious groups on the campus who went on record last week as opposed to segregation in education. The delegates to the conference voted unanimously to support a drive for funds to back the case of Herman M. Sweatt, Negro, who is seeking to enter the university's law school.

Intercommunion Furthered

Milwaukee, Wis.:—To facilitate intercommunion between the Polish National Catholic Church in America and Poland and the Episcopal Church, a dinner was held here on November 21, with Bishop Ivins of Milwaukee the inviting host. Bishops present were Bishop Ivins and Bishop Sturtevant of Fond du Lac, and Bishop Francis Bonczak of this city and Bishop Leon Grochowski of Chicago representing the Polish Church. The latter declared: "It is true that we are separate Churches as organizations, but in spirit we represent one Church. If the clergy of the Episcopal Church who look favorably on the Roman Catholic Church could know what is going on inside that Church they would quickly change their opinions." Commenting on his recent visit to Poland and other European countries he stated that "The Roman Church has become bankrupt through the war except in the United States. It has little strength in Spain, Italy or France."

Bishop Sturtevant suggested that the Polish Church join the Federal Council of Churches since "such membership will represent another step toward establishment of the World Council of Churches and one Catholic Church under God."

Educating Wives

Berkeley, Calif.:—The wives of students for the ministry need various kinds of specialized instruction, and the Church Divinity School of the Pacific has initiated a seminar which meets once a week throughout the year to provide "what a clergyman's wife ought to know." There is a general orientation series on life in the Episcopal Church, followed by brief series of lectures on the Bible, Church history, parish administration, public speaking, doctrine, Christian education, devotional life, women's work, and other subjects including "the life of a clergyman's wife."

Everything for the Episcopal Church
but vestments
A broad statement but we'd like to prove it.
Ammidon and Company
Horace L. Varian
Horace L. Varian, Jr.
31 South Frederick Street
Baltimore 2, Maryland

PURE IRISH LINENS NOW IN STOCK
for all Church needs, supplies constantly arriving, good qualities, also fine cottons. Samples free.
Mary Fawcett Company
Plainfield, N. J. Box 146

CATHEDRAL STUDIOS
Washington & London, England. Linens and materials by the yard, surplices, albs, Altar Linens, stoles, burses & veils. Materials by the yard. See my NEW BOOK "CHURCH EMBROIDERY" & CHURCH VESTMENTS a complete instruction. 128 pages, 95 illus. Price $5.67. And my HANDBOOK for ALTAR GUILDS, price 50c. Miss L. V. Mackrille, 11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington 15, D.C. 30 minutes from U. S. Treasury. Tel. Wisconsin 2752.

SURPLICES — STOLES
VESTMENTS
CHURCH HANGINGS
ALTAR LINENS
CASSOCKS
CLERICAL SUITS — CLOAKS
RABATS—RABAT VESTS—COLLARS—SHIRTS
Choir Vestments in All Styles
Inquiries Invited
C. M. ALMY & SON, INC.
562 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.

The Payne-Spiers Studios Inc.
Studios at Paterson, New Jersey
Carved Wood
Chancel Renovations Church Furnishings
Murals Memorials Tablets
Stained Glass
Inquiries Solicited

VESTMENTS for CLERGY and CHOIR
Altar Linens . . . Embroideries . . .
Tailoring . . . Episcopal Flags. Send for Catalog
J. M. HALL, INC.
14 W. 40th St., New York - Tel. CH 4-3306
Office & Salesroom
American Distributor of Stained Glass Windows for James Powell & Sons (Whitefriars) Limited, London, England.

HEADQUARTERS for RELIGIOUS SUPPLIES
CHOIR GOWNS • VESTMENTS
PULPIT ROBES • HANGINGS
STOLES • EMBROIDERIES • Etc.
CATALOG ON REQUEST

National CHURCH GOODS SUPPLY COMPANY
821-23 Arch St., Phila. 7, Pa.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

REV. MASSEY H. SHEPHERD JR.
Author of The Living Liturgy

Thanks for your bouquet regarding my book in the November 28th WITNESS. But I confess that I was shocked by your statement regarding my proposed Baptism service that it "will doubtless be authorized by most bishops and used in many parishes." No bishop or parish priest has any right to substitute any concoction of mine or of anybody else for one of the regular services of the Prayer Book, however inadequate the Prayer Book rite may be. My sole purpose in compiling this "proposed" service was to present a basis for study, looking towards a much needed revision of the Prayer Book office. I should be very sorry if my effort contributes to the spread of lawlessness in the Church on the part of the bishops or anyone else. We all have a right and a duty to make proposals and counterproposals with a view to the improvement of our liturgy. But until such time as General Convention authorizes changes in the canonical way, it is incumbent upon every ordained clergyman to obey the liturgical law of the Church. Otherwise we will cease to be a Church ruled by sound democratic principles to become a society of individualistic anarchists.

ANSWER: The managing editor has sent the following letter to Dr. Shepherd: "Sorry. I really thought I was promoting the sale of the book by that statement about being authorized by Bishops. Experimental use I thought desirable but I was also of the opinion that this ought not to be done without authorization. Guess I'm dumb on such matters—maybe I ought to take a refresher course under you at Episcopal Theological School."

* * *

REV. FREDERICK K. JELLISON
Assistant at Trinity, Toledo, Ohio

I would like to question THE WITNESS' editorial (Nov. 7) called "Niebuhr Goes Right." Not that Professor Niebuhr needs a defense by me, but I do believe that someone should challenge you on your general stand of late which seems to defend Soviet Russia on all counts, while forgetting your call to be a witnessing and prophetic Church paper.

Specifically, you say in your editorial, "It is in the realm of possibility that greater good might come from the Soviet direction alone than from Western cartelism." Does that sound like a prophetic utterance to you? At the moment, does not Soviet Russia have a totalitarian form of government, does it not have an imperialistic program in foreign relations, has it not denied civil and political rights in countries now under its domination? And as for Western cartelism, is it any better, what with economic imperialisms, and its monopolistic practices that breed war?

It seems to me that THE WITNESS offers us a choice between two evils, rather than denounce, in the spirit of the Hebrew prophets, iniquities and injustices wherever they occur! Why make a choice between two evils? Why not stand on the shoulders of Amos, who shouted, "For three transgressions, yea for four" at all evils in all nations?

If you are against British imperialism, why not Russian imperialism or American imperialism? If you are against totalitarianism in Spain and Portugal, why not oppose it in Russia, Jersey City, or elsewhere, on the ground that what is wrong one place is wrong any place?

In short, sir, let's have your basic principles put into print so that we may know upon what standards of right and wrong you base your judgments.

As for Henry Wallace, and your belief that it is less illusory to adopt his position than it is to accept Niebuhr's; was it not Mr. Wallace who said recently, "For my part, I look on Communism as infinitely better than Fascism."? Nothing, it seems to me, is more dangerous than to have progressive liberals accept all sorts of violations of the liberal tradition under the pretext that Russia is somehow better than the rest of the world.

A course of action, based on prophetic principles, need not cause you and me to support the Roman Church's campaign against Russia. I plead not for a "holy war against communism," but a war against the evils of life everywhere. We need not be fooled by the Roman campaign. It is not based on the Jewish-Christian prophetic ideal, which burns into the hearts of men, but rather it is based on the Vatican's own authoritarian policy, and by which it is confusing the issues.

As one who holds the general aims of THE WITNESS in high esteem, I would appreciate knowing how you come to the position you do, when you deal with international problems.

ANSWER: An editorial this week deals with the policy of THE WITNESS on international affairs. There is further comment in "Talking It Over," for which the author is alone responsible.

* * *

RT. REV. WALTER MITCHELL
Retired Bishop of Arizona

I think I should write to say that THE WITNESS is "shore" slipping. Here we are in a world which is literally facing the abyss and you give us a number all about Church architecture (Oct. 31). I like to think that a very much larger number of the readers of THE WITNESS than you are apt to be aware of are counting on you to see that the paper continues to be wide-awake and hammering away as to the one world or none situation that confronts us. It is up to you to buck the others who want a safe and sane paper.

* * *

REV. WARWICK AIKEN
Rector at Pass Christian, Miss.

I want to thank THE WITNESS for the "Talking It Over" of November 21 on Cardinal Spellman's article in The Cosmopolitan. I am glad you keep alive the situation in Spain.

Virginia Episcopal School
Lynchburg, Virginia
Prepares boys for colleges and university. Splendid environment and excellent corps of teachers. High standard in scholarship and athletics. Healthy and beautiful location in the mountains of Virginia.
For catalogue apply to
George L. Barton, Jr., Ph.D. Headmaster,
Box 408

SCHOOLS

The Hospital of Saint Barnabas and the University of Newark offer a full course in NURSING
to qualified High School graduates. Scholarships available. Classes enter in February and September
Apply to
Director of Nursing
HOSPITAL OF SAINT BARNABAS
685 High Street Newark, N. J.

DE VEAUX SCHOOL
FOUNDED 1852
A Church school for boys. Thorough preparation for college. Military system of student government, developing sense of responsibility. Charges for grades seven and eight $1000; grades nine through twelve $1050. For catalog, address THE HEADMASTER, DeVeaux School, Niagara Falls, New York.

HOLDERNESS
In the White Mountains. College Preparatory and General Courses. Music and Crafts. For boys 12-19. All sports including riding. 200 acres of woods. New fireproof building. Individual attention. Home atmosphere.
Rev. Edric A. Weld, Rector
Box W. Plymouth, N. H.

Saint Mary's-in-the-Mountains
An Episcopal college preparatory boarding school for fifty girls. Piano and Choral instruction. Art. Domestic Science. Mountain hikes and winter sports afforded by location in White Mountains. Horseback and Skiing lessons. New gymnasium. For catalogue address
Miss Mary Harley Jenks, Principal
Littleton, New Hampshire

FORK UNION
MILITARY ACADEMY
An Honor Christian School with the highest academic rating. Upper School prepares for university or business. ROTC. Every modern equipment. Junior School from six years. Housemother. Separate building. Catalogue. Dr. J. J. Wicker, Fork Union, Virginia.

CARLETON COLLEGE
Laurence M. Gould, D.Sc., President
Carleton is a co-educational liberal arts college of limited enrollment and is recognized as the Church College of Minnesota
Address: Director of Admissions
CARLETON COLLEGE
Northfield Minnesota

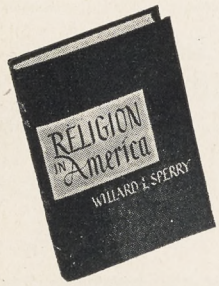
KEMPER HALL
KENOSHA, WISCONSIN
Boarding and day school for girls offering thorough college preparation and training for purposeful living. Study of the Fine Arts encouraged. Complete sports program. Junior School department. Beautiful lake shore campus. Under direction of the Sisters of St Mary. For catalogue, address: Box WT.

LENOX SCHOOL
A Church School in the Berkshire Hills for boys 12-18 emphasizing Christian ideals and character through simplicity of plant and equipment, moderate tuition, the cooperative self-help system, and informal, personal relationships among boys and faculty.
Rev. Robert L. Curry, Headmaster
Lenox Massachusetts

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BOOKS RECOMMENDED FOR CHRISTMAS

The Books Announced Here All Received Either Three or Two Star Rating by THE WITNESS



HOW TO READ THE BIBLE

By EDGAR J. GOODSPEED

A renowned scholar of Biblical literature reveals the Bible as a library of eighty volumes full of profoundly exciting drama, history, poetry. Dr. Goodspeed makes everyone want to read the Bible for the sheer joy of good reading.

$2.50

THE JOHN C. WINSTON COMPANY
Winston Building Philadelphia

RELIGION IN AMERICA

By WILLARD L. SPERRY

A vivid and readable account of the growth of American churches. Our 256 denominations—their nature and meaning—are discussed, followed by chapters on American theology, the Negro churches, American Catholicism, and the problems of unity and union within the modern church scene. $2.50

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY
60 Fifth Ave. New York 11

"A priceless storehouse enabling the reader to find out what these religions have to say on almost everything. The preacher must have it, the layman should."—The Christian Herald

$3.75

THE ELEVEN RELIGIONS

And Their Proverbial Lore

By SELWYN GURNEY CHAMPION, M.D.

Foreword by Rufus M. Jones, Litt.D., D.D., L.L.D.

E. P. DUTTON & CO.
New York

Road to Reformation

By HEINRICH BOEHMER

(Translated by J. W. Doberstein and T. G. Tappert)

A scholarly, fascinating and factual translation of Boehmer's great biography "Der Junge Luther." Shatters choice old legends about Luther. The answer for pastors and others who have responded to recent revival of research on Luther. "As graphic and colorful as a historical moving picture. The scenes are absolutely authentic"—CHRISTIAN CENTURY. An ideal religious gift book for pastors or laymen interested in extending their understanding of Protestantism and its founder. Cloth bound. 448 pages. Price, $4.00

At Your Religious Bookstore or

MUHLENBERG PRESS
1228 Spruce Street Philadelphia 7, Pa.

THE RUSSIAN RELIGIOUS MIND

Kievan Christianity

By GEORGE P. FEDOTOV

A noted authority presents the first historical synthesis of the ideas and sentiments which together make up the Russian religious mind. Important not only to specialists but to all who are interested in Russian culture. $6.00

HARVARD UNIVERSITY PRESS
Cambridge 38, Massachusetts

THE ILLUSTRATED EDITION OF THE NEW TESTAMENT

in Ronald Knox's translation with

30 FULL COLOR PLATES

reproducing the finest pictures in the Art galleries of America and England. Chapter heads, initials and endpapers from woodcuts in 14th and 15th century manuscripts.

506 pages — $5.00

SHEED & WARD
63 Fifth Avenue, New York 3

TOWARD A BETTER WORLD

Edited by

BISHOP WILLIAM SCARLETT

Everyone who wants to do his part should read this enlightening explanation of present-day problems, and suggestions on how to solve them, written by Arthur Holly Compton, Eleanor Roosevelt, Sumner Welles, Reinhold Niebuhr, and ten other equally prominent Christian laymen and clergymen. $2.00

THE JOHN C. WINSTON COMPANY
Winston Building Philadelphia

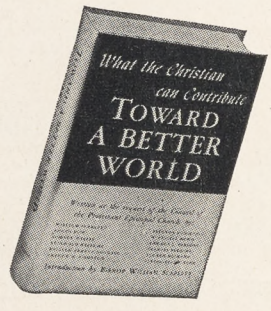
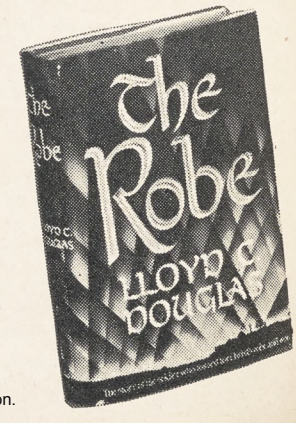
THE ROBE

By LLOYD C. DOUGLAS



Americans all over the world are reading this story of the soldier who gambled for Christ's robe and won.



"Mr. Douglas's inspiring word-picture of the rising tide of Christian faith in the months following the crucifixion is one never to be forgotten. . . . One of the most thought-provoking and outstanding novels of this or any other time."—Philadelphia Inquirer. Price $2.75

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY
2 Park Street, Boston 7, Mass.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The WITNESS

10¢ A COPY

LIBRARY COPY

Museum of Fine Arts, Boston

DECEMBER 19, 1946

MADONNA AND CHILD
BY ANDREA MANTEGNA
ITALY 15th CENTURY

THE CHRISTMAS NUMBER

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

THE CATHEDRAL OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE
NEW YORK CITY
Sundays: 8, 9, 11, Holy Communion; 10, Morning Prayer; 4, Evening Prayer; Sermons 11 and 4.
Weekdays: 7:30, 8 (also 9:15 Holy Days and 10, Wednesdays), Holy Communion; 9, Morning Prayer; 5, Evening Prayer. Open daily 7 A.M. to 6 P.M.

GRACE CHURCH, NEW YORK
Broadway at 10th St.
Rev. Louis W. Pitt, D.D., Rector
Daily: 12:30 except Mondays and Saturdays.
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M. and 4:30 P. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion 11:45 A. M.

THE HEAVENLY REST, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue at 90th Street
Rev. Henry Darlington, D.D.
Sundays: Holy Communion, 8 and 10 A. M.; Morning Service and Sermon, 11 A. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion, 11 A. M.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S CHURCH
NEW YORK
Park Avenue and 51st Street
Rev. Geo. Paull T. Sargent, D.D., Rector
8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evensong. Special Music.
Weekdays: Holy Communion Wednesday at 8:00 A. M.
Thursdays and Saints' Days at 10:30 A. M.
The Church is open daily for prayer.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH
Madison Ave. at 71st St., New York
The Rev. H. W. B. Donegan, D.D., Rector
8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
9:30 A. M. Church School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evening Prayer and Sermon.
Wed., 7:45 A. M., Thurs., 12 Noon Holy Communion.

THE CHURCH OF THE EPIPHANY
1317 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Charles W. Sheerin, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 A. M.; 8 P. M.
Daily: 12:05.
Thursdays: 11:00 and 12:05.

ST. THOMAS' CHURCH, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue and 53rd Street
Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, S.T.D., Rector
Sun 8, 11, 4. Daily 8:30 HC; Thurs. 11 HC., Daily except Sat. 12:10.

THE CHURCH OF THE ASCENSION
Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street, New York
The Rev. Roscoe Thornton Foust, Rector
Sundays: 8 a.m. Holy Communion.
11 a.m. Morning Prayer, Sermon.
8 p.m. Evening Song and Sermon; Service of Music (1st Sun. in month).
Daily: Holy Communion, 8 a.m. Tues., Thurs., Sat.; 11 a.m. Mon., Wed., Fri.
5:30 Vespers, Tues. through Friday.
This Church is open all day and all night.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL
Buffalo, New York
Shelton Square
The Very Rev. Edward R. Welles, M.A., Dean
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30 and 11.
Daily: 12:05 noon—Holy Communion.
Tuesday: 7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
Wednesday: 11:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH
Atlanta, Georgia
435 Peachtree Street
The Rev. J. Milton Richardson, Rector
9:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
10:45 A. M. Sunday School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Prayer and Sermon.
6:00 P. M. Young People's Meetings.

The WITNESS
For Christ and His Church

EDITORIAL BOARD: Frederick C. Grant, Editor; Arthur Lichtenberger, Chairman; William B. Spofford, Managing Editor; Lane W. Barton, Beverly M. Boyd, Dillard H. Brown, Roscoe T. Foust, Charles K. Gilbert, Hugh D. McCandless, Howard Chandler Robbins, William K. Russell, Sydney A. Temple Jr., Joseph H. Titus, William M. Weber.

★

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS: D. B. Aldrich, J. A. Bell, T. S. Carruthers, Adelaide Case, G. K. Chalmers, E. M. Cross, G. M. Day, Angus Dun, A. W. Farlander, T. P. Ferris, J. F. Fletcher, John Gass, C. H. Gesner, C. L. Glenn, G. C. Graham, J. M. Groton, G. I. Hiller, I. P. Johnson, T. R. Ludlow, C. S. Martin, R. C. Miller, Walter Mitchell, A. T. Mollegen, E. L. Parsons, E. L. Pennington, Rose Phelps, L. W. Pitt, Otis Rice, Cyril Richardson, Paul Roberts, V. D. Scudder, W. M. Sharp, W. B. Sperry, C. W. Sprouse, D. S. Stark, W. B. Stevens, J. W. Suter, S. E. Sweet, Alexander Zabriskie.

★

THE WITNESS is published weekly from September 15th to June 15th inclusive, with the exception of the first week in January and semi-monthly from June 15th to September 15th by the Episcopal Church Publishing Co. on behalf of the Church Publishing Association, Inc. Samuel Thorne, President; Charles A. Houston, Vice-President; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, Treasurer; Frederic D. H. Gilbert, Secretary.

★

The subscription price is $3.00 a year; in bundles for sale in parishes the magazine sells for 10c a copy, we will bill quarterly at 5c a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter, March 6, 1939, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879.

DECEMBER 19, 1946
Vol. XXX. No. 3

Clergy Notes

ATKINSON, C. J., formerly in charge of missions centering at New Milford, Pa., becomes rector of St. James', Downington, Pa., January 1st.

BAXTER, SAMUEL N. JR., rector of the Redeemer, Springfield, Pa., becomes assistant at Calvary, Pittsburgh, Pa., on January 1st.

EASTBURN, F. E., rector of St. James', Del Rio, Texas, becomes associate rector of St. Peter's, Redwood City, Calif., on January 1st.

FOX, JOHN B., Indian deacon of South Dakota, died on November 27 at Tine Ridge Agency. He was in charge of St. Mark's, Rockyford, S. D.

HARGATE, ARTHUR W., rector of St. Timothy's, Massillon, Ohio, becomes rector of Trinity, Toledo, Ohio, Jan. 1st.

KELLOGG, CHARLES F., was deposed by Bishop Manning on Nov. 16 for causes which do not affect his moral character.

LANGSTON, CLARENCE A., retired clergyman of Va., died in Baltimore Nov. 27 at the age of 79. He was rector at Lorton, Va., at the time of his retirement in 1939.

LEWIS, JOHN R., rector of St. Mark's, Charleston, S. C. died on Dec. 4th.

MYERS, CHARLES A., vicar of Christ Church, Redondo Beach, Calif., has accepted the rectorship of Christ Church, Puyallup, Wash., effective January 15th.

RUBEL, HENRY S., rector of Grace Church, Glendora, Calif., died on Dec. 4. He was well known as a writer for radio and movies.

YOUNG, GATES E. M., rector of St. Andrew's, Youngstown, Ohio, died suddenly on December 2nd.

CALVARY CHURCH
Shady & Walnut Aves.
Pittsburgh
The Rev. Lauriston L. Scaife, S.T.D., Rector
Sundays 8, 9:30, 11:00 and 8:00.
Holy Communion—Mondays, Wednesdays, Fridays 7:30 A.M.
Holy Communion—Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays 8:00 A.M.
Holy Days and Fridays 10:00 A.M.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

CHRIST CHURCH CATHEDRAL
Main and Church Sts., Hartford, Conn.
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30, 10:05, 11 A. M., 8 P. M.
Weekdays: Holy Communion—Monday and Thursday, 9 A. M.; Tuesday, Friday and Saturday, 8 A. M.; Wednesday, 7:00 and 11:00 A. M. Noonday Service, daily 12:15 P. M.

CHRIST CHURCH
Cambridge
REV. GARDINER M. DAY, RECTOR
REV. FREDERIC B. KELLOGG, CHAPLAIN
Sunday Services, 8:00, 9:00, 10:00 and 11:15 A. M.
Weekdays: Wed. 8 and 11 A. M. Thurs., 7:30 A. M.

TRINITY CHURCH
Miami
Rev. G. Irvine Hiller, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services 8, 9:30, 11 A. M.

TRINITY CATHEDRAL
Military Park, Newark, N. J.
The Very Rev. Arthur C. Lichtenberger, Dean
Sunday Services: 8:30, 9:30 (All Saints' Chapel, 24 Rector St.), 11 and 4:30 p.m.
Week Days: Holy Communion Wednesday and Holy Days, 12:00 noon, Friday, 8 a.m. Intercessions Thursday, Friday, 12:10; Organ Recital Tuesday, 12:10.
The Cathedral is open daily for prayer.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
Montecito and Bay Place
OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA
Rev. Calvin Barkow, D.D., Rector
Sundays: 8 A. M., Holy Communion; 11 A. M., Church School; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer and Sermon.
Wednesdays: 10 A. M., Holy Communion; 10:45, Rector's Study Class.

GRACE CHURCH
Corner Church and Davis Streets
ELMIRA, N. Y.
Rev. Frederick T. Henstridge, Rector
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M.; 4:30 P. M.
Daily: Tuesday and Thursday, 7:30 A. M.
Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Holy Days, 9:30 A. M.
Other Services Announced

ST. MARK'S CHURCH
Texas Avenue and Cotton Street
SHREVEPORT, LA.
Rev. Frank E. Walters, Rector
Rev. Harry Wintermeyer, Curate
Sundays: Holy Communion, 7:30; 9:25 A. M., Family Service; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer.
Holy Communion, first Sunday. 6 P. M., Young Churchmen.

CHRIST CHURCH
Nashville, Tennessee
Rev. Peyton Randolph Williams
7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
9:30 and 11 A. M.—Church School.
11 A. M.—Morning Service and Sermon.
6 P. M.—Young People's Meetings.
Thursdays and Saints' Days—Holy Communion, 10 A. M.

GRACE CHURCH
105 Main Street, Orange, N. J.
Lane Wickham Barton, Rector
SUNDAYS
8:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M.—Church School.
11:00 A. M.—Morning Prayer and Sermon. (Holy Communion first Sunday each month)
7:00 P. M.—Young People's Fellowship.

CHRIST CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA
Second Street above Market
Cathedral of Democracy
Founded 1695
Rev. E. Felix Kloman, S.T.D., Rector
Rev. Peter M. Sturtevant, Associate Rector
Sunday Services: 9:30 and 11 A.M.
Church School: 10:00 A.M.
Weekdays: Wed. noon and 12:30.
Saints' Days: 12 noon.
This Church is Open Every Day

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

VOL. XXX. No. 3.

The WITNESS

For Christ and His Church

DECEMBER 19, 1946

Publication Office, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago 37, Ill. Editorial Office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

Calls Church Most Segregated Institution in America

The Vice President of the Federal Council Says We Are Afraid to Practice Religion

By Religious News Service

New York:—The Christian Church is the most segregated institution in America today, Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, vice president of the Federal Council of Churches and president of Morehouse College, Atlanta, Ga., charged here in addressing a one-day institute of human relations sponsored by the American Missionary Association. The Association, which is celebrating its 100th anniversary this year, is affiliated with the board of home missions of the Congregational Christian Churches.

Deploring the tendency of Americans to classify individuals in separate "blocks," such as Protestant, Jew, labor, management, or "white Baptist and black Baptist," Dr. Mays told the institute that he would "tremble for the Christian cause if fifty Negroes were to enter an average local church in this country on a Sunday morning and ask to become members."

"Fundamentally," said Dr. Mays, "we are afraid of a democracy that actually functions and we are afraid to practice the Christian religion. We always ask what is wise, not what is Christian, when dealing with race in education, industry, labor, government, and religion. We must get to the point where we can see man as a human being. A Japanese is a man first just as much as a Jew or Mexican is a man first. All of us were born in the image of God. Our race or label is of secondary concern."

Margaret Halsey, author of the best-seller, "Color Blind," was a featured speaker with Dr. Mays at the closing service of the institute. She said no picture of Negro-white relations is complete which leaves out the "reservoir of fair-minded white people whose decency and sense of justice is as yet untapped, unorganized, and unchanneled."

"The bigots in our country," she said, "make so much noise that it's always assumed they are the principal stumbling blocks to a more mature democracy. It is always assumed that the chief thing needed to improve race relations is—by some sort of magical brain surgery—to make bigots tolerant. But that is doing it the hard way. From a practical point of view, the first people to work with are not the prejudiced ones, but the unprejudiced ones.

"The first point of attack is to supply people of good will with techniques whereby they can get to know Negroes with whom they have interests in common. What we need most right now in the field of race relations is not miracles, but new techniques—not surgery, but ingenuity."

CHARLES TAFT URGES CHRISTIAN IDEALS

Seattle:—Application of Christian ideals by the nation's top political and industrial leaders would aid in solving many of our foreign and domestic problems. So declared Episcopalian Charles P. Taft, following his installation as the first layman to be president of the Federal Council of Churches (WITNESS, Dec. 5). He asserted that a political system could be devised to conduct our foreign affairs so as to avoid war with the Soviet Union and build friendly relations with all countries of the world. He added that this would require "a number of qualities in our state department and federal administration which seem now absent." He also stated that labor relations problems could be settled "by study of how to deal with men and women in an organization. That is a technique by itself and a tough one to master but Christians can make it work at its best."

N. B. NASH ELECTED IN MASSACHUSETTS

Boston:—The Rev. Norman B. Nash, rector of St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H., was elected Bishop Coadjutor of Massachusetts on the first ballot at a special diocesan convention held here December 11th. He will succeed Bishop Henry K. Sherrill who becomes the Presiding Bishop on January 1st and is required by the canons of the Church to resign as diocesan bishop within six months. Mr. Nash, if he accepts, will therefore become the Bishop of Massachusetts not later than July 1st.

THE REV. NORMAN B. NASH

Mr. Nash received 114 clerical votes and 72 lay votes; the Rev. Theodore P. Ferris, rector of Trinity, Boston, received 65 clerical and 43 2/3 lay votes; Dean Arthur Lichtenberger of Trinity Cathedral, Newark, and chairman of THE WITNESS editorial board, received 15 clerical and 18 1/3 lay votes.

BISHOP SHERRILL ON NEW COMMITTEE

Washington:—Bishop Henry K. Sherrill, who becomes Presiding Bishop on January 1st, is a member of a fifteen-man committee appointed by President Truman to recommend legislation for more effective protection of civil rights. In announcing creation of the committee President Truman said he had found that the individual liberties of many Americans are "again under attack."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

He made an oblique reference to the witch-hunting that followed World War I, "when organized groups fanned hatred and intolerance until, at times, mob action struck fear into the hearts of men and women because of their racial origin and religious beliefs." The President implied this could happen here again.

"Today, freedom from fear, and the democratic institutions which sustain it, are again under attack," he asserted, pointing out that the federal government is hampered "by inadequate civil rights statutes."

Mr. Truman said he wants the new committee to prepare a written report containing recommendations with respect "to the adoption or establishment by legislation or otherwise of more adequate and effective means and procedures for the protection of the civil rights of the people of the United States."

EPISCOPALIANS SPEAK AT ORTHODOX SOBOR

Cleveland:—A number of Episcopalians addressed the sobor of the Russian Orthodox Church which met here November 26-29. On the opening day Bishop Tucker of Ohio welcomed the meeting to the city on behalf of the Episcopal Church and there was an address by the Rev. Lauriston L. Scaife, rector of Calvary, Pittsburgh. He spoke particularly of the work of Bishop Austin Pardue among the foreign born in the diocese of Pittsburgh, where there are forty parishes of the Russian Orthodox Church. Greetings of Presiding Bishop Tucker were presented by Bishop Kirchhofer of Indianapolis.

STEPHEN C. CLARK CONSECRATED

Los Angeles:—The Rev. Stephen C. Clark, rector of St. Mark's, Pasadena, was consecrated Bishop of Utah at St. Paul's Cathedral here on December 6th. There were more than 100 clergy present at the service, including about 40 bishops. The impressive service was witnessed by 1,300 people. Bishop Edward L. Parsons, retired Bishop of California, in his sermon stressed a bishop's responsibility "not only to his Church but to his community." He said that a bishop is looked to for opinions on great world problems, such as strikes, racial antagonisms, U. N. activities and other vital matters.

Presiding Bishop Henry St. G. Tucker was the consecrator, with Bishop Stevens of Los Angeles and Bishop Moulton, the retired Bishop of Utah, the co-consecrators.

UNION PROPOSALS IN ENGLAND

London (wireless to RNS):—The national federation of Free Church Council has appointed representatives to meet delegates of the Church of England to discuss union. A preliminary meeting of Methodists, Presbyterians and Anglicans has already taken place at the invitation of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

STEPHEN F. BAYNE ELECTED

Seattle:—The Rev. Stephen F. Bayne Jr., chaplain at Columbia University, New York, was elected Bishop of the diocese of Olympia on December 9th. He was nominated from the floor, after a nominating committee had presented the names of five clergymen, and was elected on the fourth ballot. Mr. Bayne has been chaplain at Columbia since 1942, serving as a navy chaplain from 1944 to the end of the war. He is a graduate of Amherst College and General Seminary and is thirty-eight.

Mr. Bayne, reached by THE WITNESS by phone, said that he was to visit the diocese of Olympia at once after which he would announce whether or not he would accept the election.

On the fourth ballot Mr. Bayne received 20 clerical votes and 154 lay votes, with Dean C. E. McAllister of Spokane receiving 17 clerical and 130 lay votes. On the first two ballots there were a considerable number of votes in both orders for the Rev. F. A. Shilling, rector at Olympia, and the Rev. Elmer B. Christie, rector of the Epiphany, Seattle.

YES, INDEED WE HAVE MANY

New York:—A number of subscribers, receiving our letter and form urging them to send THE WITNESS as a gift to a friend and thus help maintain the $3 subscription price, have asked if we do not have a list of people who would like the paper. The answer is that we have a long list of people—many of them clergymen and missionaries—who do not get THE WITNESS because they can't afford it. So if there are readers who want to make a Christmas gift to a person on this list, merely send us the $3 and say "for someone on THE WITNESS list."

May we take the occasion to stress the urgency of the matter about which we wrote you. There is but one way to maintain the $3 subscription price in view of increased costs for paper and printing. That is to increase the circulation. So we urge each subscriber to send us a subscription for a friend as a Christmas gift. We will then send a card this week announcing the gift as from you.

from the woodcut of Prentiss Taylor

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Canon T. O. Wedel Explains Unity Action to Presbyterians

Bishop A. R. McKinstry Calls Together Clergy Of Both Churches to Further Unity Movement

By Beatrice Dobie

Wilmington, Del.:—A distinguished group of Christian leaders of Delaware met here recently to hear Canon Theodore O. Wedel, warden of the College of Preachers in Washington, speak on Christian unity. Representative clergy and laity of the Episcopal and Presbyterian communions were in attendance, at the invitation of Bishop Arthur R. McKinstry of Delaware.

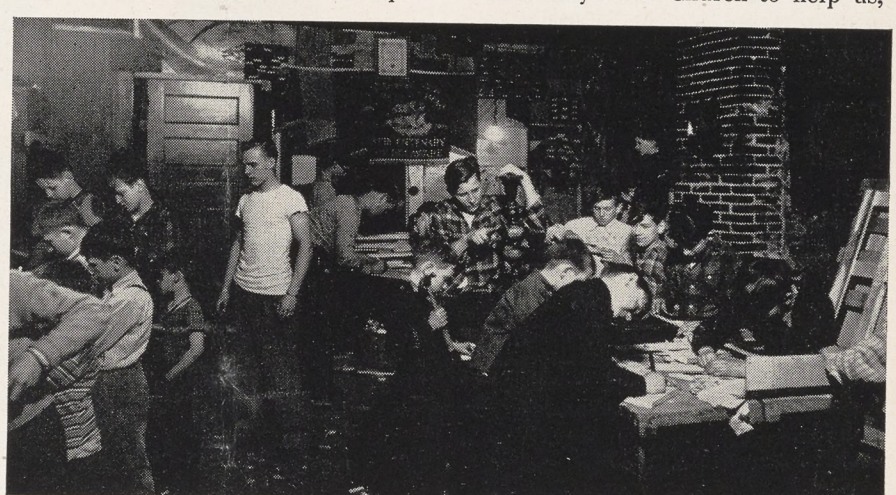
In introducing Canon Wedel Bishop McKinstry explained his reasons for calling the assembly: "At the meeting of the General Convention of the Episcopal Church in Philadelphia the House of Bishops ordered a committee of three Bishops, Bishop Sherrill of Massachusetts, Bishop Strider of West Virginia, and Bishop Sturtevant of Fond du Lac, to make a formal call on the stated clerk of the Presbyterian church, Dr. William B. Pugh, and explain to him what had really taken place at General Convention regarding the proposed plan for union between the two Churches. The House of Bishops, anxious that there be no misunderstanding based on false information, desired the Presbyterian Church to understand that nothing had transpired to close the door to further consideration of this important matter."

Following the precedent thus established by the House of Bishops, Bishop McKinstry had invited representatives of both Churches to hear the story from a member of the Church's commission on unity, Canon Wedel, so that within the state of Delaware there might be a correct interpretation of the present status of the proposed plan of union between these two great Churches.

Canon Wedel gave a masterly address on the subject, stressing the great need for patience and perseverance in the cause of unity. The Episcopal Church, he said, may owe the Presbyterians an apology for opening unity negotiations when Episcopalians themselves were not quite ready for it. "The Episcopal Church is tempted to become too enthusiastic when it comes to unity," he said. "We are likely to plunge into these dreams of Church unity without always following through."

"In 1937," said Canon Wedel, "the Episcopal Church invited the Presbyterian Church to enter upon negotiations looking toward unity. Nine years of negotiations produced a trial articular structure, the Basis of Union. This document, when presented to General Convention, was beset by many handicaps.

"In the first place, it was published very late, only about six to eight weeks before Convention met. It is a rather startling document, with a great many nomenclature experiments in it and many other theological experiments which took us weeks to digest.



"Unfortunately, we were divided in the commission on it, so that a minority report accompanied the majority report. Yet I am not sure the minority report had so much to do with the voted result as other handicaps.

"A great deal of the debate in Philadelphia was a discussion of the Basis of Union as though it were up for final action. It was almost as if we were going to sign immediately on the dotted line and have the plan go into effect three years from now. The commission tried to say that this was not true but the impression was too deep to erase.

"The most formidable handicap that this document met was the fact that the Episcopal Church itself is of divided mind, particularly on one of the major issues involved in this unity movement. We knew this all the time, and our Presbyterian brethren knew this, inasmuch as they saw the division in our own commission. But we were hopeful that if the Basis of Union could be studied for three years (or six years, if necessary) some of this divided mind could be clarified and we could become sufficiently united to go ahead.

"In our action at Philadelphia we have in effect gone back nine years and said that, since we are of divided mind on this business, we shall have to take three years out, asking the Presbyterian Church to help us, in order to settle among ourselves just where we can stand in unity negotiations.

"I, personally, am not at all hopeless about what can happen. This kind of action should have taken place in 1937, before we went wooing so boldly with love songs and apparent gifts in our hands. If the Presbyterian Church will be patient with us, understanding that there is not any malice in our position in these negotiations, if they will be willing to talk with our people and help us clarify our issues, I am inclined to think that we are going to have a profitable three years. Realistically speaking, we may be moving toward unity more soundly in the next triennium than we actually would have moved by perhaps plunging too rapidly.

Old Swedes Church, Wilmington, Delaware, has a community center to which was recently added an industrial arts shop where boys are taught how to construct useful and beautiful objects. Here they are busy making Christmas presents for their friends

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

"The Convention voted that the commission should study our own quadrilateral. This means studying the platform on which the whole Anglican Communion is ready to negotiate towards a united Church: the Holy Scripture, the two historic creeds, the two sacraments of baptism and the holy supper, and the historic episcopate, modified as historical conditions might demand. The quadrilateral does not ask that the historic Episcopate be enacted as it was in England. It could be constitutionally guarded.

"Our commission has been instructed now to go back to that quadrilateral and to define in more careful terms what it might mean in concrete detail as we negotiate with another Church body. It also asks the Presbyterian department to help us in such study.

"Things are not at all completely blocked. I suppose one of the first things our new commission will do is explain the situation to the Presbyterian department. We may, in effect, say to them: 'Please do not think that everything is over.'

"It is still a debatable question whether we should be attempting what we actually did attempt, namely, a picture of a Church organically unified from top to bottom. I, myself, have been for many years quite skeptical of moving as rapidly as that. I wonder whether we might not do well to think through a union of Churches which utilizes at least something of the 'federal' idea.

"We are familiar with the federal idea in our national government. Why might not this idea be applied to a union of churches? One could think of the major Protestant churches in America — Methodist, Lutheran, Presbyterian, Episcopalian — joining in a union of Churches which would leave much separate autonomy intact, but would, at the same time, involve surrender of sovereignty in certain areas to a superdenominational Assembly. Intercommunion and mutual recognition of ministries would be among the first benefits aimed for."

Addressing the Presbyterian clergy present, Dr. Wedel said, "Speaking for myself, I think we will have to recognize you Presbyterian ministers as fully ministers in Christ's Church. You are either 'Church' or you are not 'Church.' If Christ dwells in your Church you have a ministry acceptable to Christ. There is a functional difference between your ministry and ours. The linkage which we have with history, by way of the Episcopate, is, I truly believe, extremely important and valuable. On the other hand, the linkage which the Presbyterian ministry has with the Reformation is important also. The Presbytery has a place in your Church which is comparable to that which the Episcopate has in ours. Ordination comes to you by way of a corporate act of your brethren in the ministry. Such corporate act is, in our Church, personalized in the Bishop. The two systems are theologically not as far apart as the outsider might suppose. We think that we have something precious in Episcopal ordination — that succession of a laying on of hands from one bishop to another bishop down through the centuries. But you have something precious also—an anchorage of the ministry in the corporate present fellowship of the Church. We need a confluence of the two traditions which will create something which the world has never yet seen, namely, a Catholic Evangelical Church. Such a Church could become the nucleus of a united Christendom. Some day, under God's grace, that is going to happen."

Canon Wedel's address was greeted with enthusiasm by the assembled members of both Churches. During the discussion period which followed the Rev. Dr. John W. Christie, pastor of Westminster Presbyterian Church in Wilmington, was called upon for his reaction to Canon Wedel's words.

"In considering the question of unity," said Dr. Christie, "there are great pressures which we must bear in mind. First, we have the Lord's own prayer in the Garden of Gethsemane: "That they all may be one.' Can we as Christians overlook that? There is also the great pressure which comes to us from the world when we look at the divided Protestants in the face of a united Catholicism. It ought to bring some of us to our knees about some of the things that we have thought are so awfully essential. Sooner or later we will see that we have not only been remiss in our attitude towards the Lord, but we have been fools in a worldly way.

"Finally, in regard to the acceptance of bishops, if I can have the present Bishop of Delaware for my Bishop I will be glad to accept the Episcopate now."

Dr. Christie gave a formal ex-

(Continued on page 18)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

EDITORIALS

God Is With Us

THE Lord is at hand! That is the recurring and insistent note of our season of preparation for Christmas. And now as the Advent season draws to a close that sense of expectancy increases. The solemn warnings of God's judgment, of impending crisis issues in a song of reassurance, of exultation. The Lord is at hand! God is with us!

But we wonder how much feeling of this sort there is in reality among us, even among Church people. Department stores and shops bring out their Christmas decorations at Thanksgiving time and in the city one hears so many carols every day for a month that when Christmas finally comes one has little enthusiasm for singing Holy Night. It's difficult in the face of this to cultivate a sense of expectancy and easy to take the coming of Christmas for granted. There is little searching of heart, little repentant preparation, little cleansing of mind and spirit that our Lord when he comes may find a dwelling prepared for himself. The sense of awe, of the tremendousness of this which we are to celebrate is quite lacking. We might just as well be decorating the city for a distinguished visitor who neither expects nor requires any preparation within the hearts of the citizens who will turn out to welcome him.

We need to make much greater use of Advent than has been our custom. Advent illuminates the Christian meaning of Christmas and apart from its Christian meaning, Christmas is simply a season of gaiety and good will. It is a time to give gifts and be a little more friendly than usual, to read again Dickens' Christmas Carol and reflect how wonderful it would be if we could have this thing we call the Christmas spirit all the year 'round. But Christmas for us who call Christ Lord is something very different. He who was born in Bethlehem is God's son, our Saviour. We do not go to church on Christmas day to cheer ourselves with thoughts about the innocency of childhood or to nourish our hope that God's goodness may someday show itself in our world. We go to celebrate a fact. God is with us. God has taken human flesh and lived among us. And as he once came so he comes now. His power which can redeem our lives and our society is at hand. The Lord is here.

We dare not take that fact for granted. We must prepare ourselves and then be on the lookout for Christ's coming. That is the only way a Christian can ever be ready for Christmas.

"QUOTES"

THOU whose birth on earth
Angels sang to men,
While thy stars made mirth,
Saviour, at thy birth,
This day born again;

As this day was bright
With thy cradle ray,
Very light of light,
Turn the wild world's night
To thy perfect day.

Bid our peace increase,
Thou that madest morn;
Bid oppression cease;
Bid the night be peace;
Bid the day be born.

—SWINBURNE.

Glory to God and Peace

CHRIST came into a drab and desolate world with his personal message of "Glory to God and peace on earth," and wherever mankind has accepted his standards they have been transformed by his personality. His severity toward human error caused him to be crucified, but his love for human souls caused him to be adored by those who loved justice and hated iniquity.

It was the personal Jesus who touched the needs of men, so that in seeing him they saw the Father. Men who could not define him, loved him passionately. Now men who are incapable of loving him define him learnedly. We have substituted a definition of God for the love of the God-man seen in the primitive Church. The love of Christ constrained the early Christians to deeds of service, whereas the love of self prevents us from making much real sacrifice in his name.

This is at no time more evident than at Christmas. Our Christian festival is about as pagan an institution as one could devise. We certainly accommodate God to circumstances at this season which is supposed to commemorate a person who died for us, but which we use chiefly to stimulate trade.

How can a Christian pretend to keep Christmas and leave Christ out? And how else can we put Christ in unless we do the thing that he commanded us to do? Even if we put the Lord's Supper on the level of observance, it was the thing that he asked us to do in memory of him, and when should one do a memorial act for one whom he reveres unless we do it on the day that marks his birth? To pretend to observe Christmas and to ignore Christ is to be guilty of a personal insult to his memory.

What is Christmas in America today? Is it a memorial to Christ or is it merely an opportunity to enjoy ourselves? Or worst still, to use him for the loaves and fishes? There is no more room for him in the inn today than there was in Bethlehem. Christmas has become so secularized and diverted from its original purpose that people are too tired to meet him at the altar. Or we have so many social engagements and so many friends to entertain that we forget Christ in our multitudinous activities.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

It is not enough that we give him things, or that we give things to others. He wants us to give him ourselves. This does not mean merely that we think of him, or sing about him, or even listen to a sermon. It means that we lay ourselves on the altar of his sacrifice. It means that we join the offering of ourselves to his offering of himself. This we do when we present ourselves to him in the service which he commanded us to observe.

And what is involved in your Christmas eucharist? Is it not that you are in love and charity with your neighbors: that whatever they have done or failed to do for you, that you put on Christ's spirit of forgiveness? That you smash your complexes. That you try to find the good in those whom you do not like and an excuse for those who have injured you. That you put on the spirit of Christ, not for a holiday season, but for all the year. That you clothe yourself in his spirit of "peace on earth and good will to men."

You may find it hard to get rid of your bitterness, but you will never find it easier than it is now. The world needs Christ but clings to its bitterness. And so the world finds chaos.

We cannot do much, each one of us, but we can add to the world's peace by eliminating bitterness and fear from our own hearts. This we can best do at the shrine of Jesus Christ.

Had There Been No Christmas

by G. A. Studdert-Kennedy

IF JESUS had not lived what would the world be like today? "It could not be much worse than it is," I hear the cynic say with a sneer. I wonder. It is our human way to take good things for granted and cry out against the evil that maims and mars our lives. To some extent perhaps it is inevitable that we should do this. The roots of man's divinity are in his discontent. We must take the earth for granted that we may stand and turn our faces to the sky. What use for us to ask ourselves what might have been had earth been other than it is?

And yet I have often asked myself that very question. I am told, with sound evidence to back the statement, that the fourth glacial age reached its bitterest climax about fifty thousand years ago, and that it was midst the snows of that long universal winter of the world that the first manlike beings lived upon our planet, and looked with frightened eyes upon the huge ungainly mammoth whose monstrous bones are left to tell the tale. When I have been reading of those far-off times, and as I ponder over the record of the rocks trying to picture to myself what it must have been like to live in those days when the wintry death of the great ice age crept southward over the earth, when the Arctic musk and the reindeer herds roamed round Oxford

A drawing by Sister Jeannette of the Order of St. Helena. Sister Jeannette is now art instructor at Margaret Hall, Versailles, Kentucky, which is directed by the Order

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Street and Piccadilly, the years when there was no spring, I have often laid down my book and asked myself, with a kind of awe and wonder in my inmost soul, "What if there had been no spring? What if the ice had never broken, and the white snow never ceased to fall?"

"Absurd," you say. Maybe. Perhaps all questions as to what might have been are absurd. The past is past and our only concern with it is to use it as a foundation for the future. And yet to think upon what might have been may help us to appreciate what is. To picture ourselves that endless winter may help us to see with clearer eyes the splendor of God's spring. The connection between Christmas and the end of the great world winter is perhaps closer than anyone ignorant of history would suppose. Why is December 25th kept as Christmas Day? Why does it come in the very depth of winter? We do not really know the exact date of Christ's birth. December 25th was not fixed as the birthday festival of Christ until three hundred years after he died. It was then settled not because December 25th was known to be the true date of his birth but because it was the day of the heathen mid-winter festival. Traces of that heathen festival are still with us. The burning Yule log goes back to days long ago, long before Christ, and so do Christmas trees. Behind the ancient winter festival there lay the dread that in the depth of some bleak winter the sun might really die, bleeding out its life in the flames of one last awful sunset across the western sky. That primitive dread that made the ancients pile the Yule logs up to warm the sun lest it die in winter's grip was a racial memory of the long world winter their fathers had endured.

The more we know of the human mind the more reason we have for believing that the roots of our common customs strike down into the depths of an unconsciously remembered past. The instinct that made the early Christians keep the festival of Christ's birth upon mid-winter day was the result of a very vivid experience. They felt that the coming of Christ into the world had been like the return of the sun; the winter of the world's soul was over and the spring had come. The contrast between the darkness before him and the light which he brought was to them a glaring and startling contrast because the memory of the darkness was still fresh, and the remains of it were still with them. It is less glaring to us because Christ has been at work for many years, and the memory of the darkness has faded into the dim background of our minds. We cannot easily recall it. It is only by using the written and recorded memory of history that we can make the darkness real to ourselves. The only word which would serve to convey any idea of the darkness from which the early Christians felt that Christ had saved them would be "devilry."

If men cast Christ aside they come to believe that the world is a vast, soulless, unreasoning machine with nothing behind it but a mechanical fate which makes murderous wars inevitable and peace impossible. If they come to believe that there is nothing and no one in the universe greater and better than man and that man himself is nothing but an animal with a bigger brain, then the old fears may return, and darkness fall on the earth again. As I read some of our ultra modern teaching with its contempt of God and man, its cynical jeering at our highest hopes, its relentless analysis of our deepest feelings which reduces soul to sense, religion to sex, and all hope of heaven to a foolish dream, I feel the ancient fear return.

Men put their trust in science, but a soulless and unloving science is the most sinister superstition that has ever threatened to destroy the sanity of man. Science controlled by faith and love may lead us to the Kingdom of God, but science controlled by cynical and unbelieving intelligence will lead us back into the dark again. The ancient evil is not dead, the devils in the soul are subject to, but have not been slain, by Christ. The mystery of iniquity is still a reality. I have seen it in the days when I walked in the valley of destruction and often rubbed elbows with death. Out of the night we came, and back to the night we may return if we lose our vision of the light of the world. We may, we do continually, outgrow and leave behind the dogmatic expressions of the truth of Christ, but we cannot leave behind the truth itself unless we turn our faces from the light and move back to the darkness whence we came. If there had been no Christmas then this world would have been a different world, as different as it would have been if, in those distant days, the ice had never broken and the white snow never ceased to fall. If there had been no Christmas the night of evil superstition might still be on the earth and the ancient devils might be kings not captives bound with chains.

Christ that was born on Christmas Day,
Laid on the world his two small hands,
Lifting it worlds and worlds away
Up to the level of love's demands.

And those hands hold though pierced with nails;
They hold on still in power and pain,
And they shall hold till Satan fails
And love comes to his own to reign.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Piebald Kitten

by William B. Sperry

THE stables in Bethlehem, like most stables in all lands, provided very comfortable residences for very comfortable cats. The large stable behind the inn was no exception and it was there in the midst of all the excitement about travelers going up to Jerusalem that a gentle and inexperienced young Tabby mothered her first set of kittens. There were four of them, a white, a black, a yellow and a piebald mixture.

The first day she was kept very busy what with feeding them and giving them their first bath, and besides she had to move so much. First the coachman's room where she had spotted a nice blanket, and then the groom's quarters, and finally an ox stall including the manger itself were used for the overflow of guests that arrived at the inn. But everyone was so busy that people did not bother her and let her go about acquiring the first principles of motherhood without being distracted.

She finally found a place near the manger where someone had hung a large piece of canvas to keep out the wind and give greater privacy and although there were other people in the enclosure, she went about her work and they about theirs, and things began to get more comfortable. Toward morning a very kind man who had helped hang the canvas and who was in and out a great deal saw her there in the corner.

"Well, for goodness sake," he said to the young woman with him, "What do you think? You're not the only mother here. Our young friend, Tabby, has presented us with kittens." And he gave her a saucer of milk. The cat purred a very nice "thank you" and felt very pleased with herself and her kittens and everything else.

The next day things went very pleasantly for the mother cat and she had the kittens all to herself undisturbed. She washed them and fed them and began to teach them to meow and to purr. The other people near the manger were amiably busy but the kind man found time to bring more milk so that the cat with the kittens began to feel a part of the household.

That night just after everyone was comfortably settled there was a knock on the stable door and a dozen visitors came trooping in. They were quiet and considerate but it did disturb both the kittens and the baby that was in the manger. But the man and the young mother with the baby were courteous about the visitors and seemed to appreciate their call so the young cat mother followed their example. When one of the visitors, a young shepherd, exclaimed in delight on seeing her kittens she allowed them to be stroked and even picked up and held by the visitors. They looked at them all and admired them very much, the black, the white and the yellow and exclaimed over all of them. That is, all except the piebald one that seemed to be a mixture of all the others and no one cared much about.

But they particularly liked the yellow one. "What a wise and thoughtful face!" they said, "How lovely a shade is his coat!" And after that they praised them all, all except the piebald one, and went home.

The next day again went very pleasantly. Both little families were comfortable and the kind man fussed about the mother cat's bed to see that she and the kittens were all right. This night when the mother cat went to bed she was thinking that while the shepherds had been very kind she hoped there would be no visitors tonight to upset the kittens' schedule. But she was disappointed.

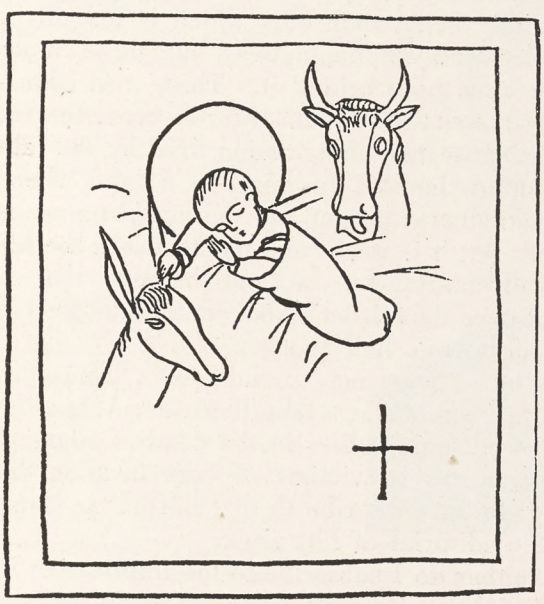
Hardly had she finished the ten o'clock feeding when there was a noise outside and voices and someone thrust aside the canvas curtain. The mother cat looked up and there standing almost inside the door was a camel. "My gracious," she thought, "can't we have any privacy at all?" But she did not say anything because again the kind man was being very courteous and the camel did not actually come into their quarters.

Three men in very gorgeous robes each carrying a handsome box came in and walked over to the manger. The cat heard them talking quietly with the man and the mother of the baby and saw them hand the mother the three handsome boxes. Presently the three men said goodnight and started out. One of them, a very tall dark man, saw the mother cat and the kittens.

He was delighted with them and called the other men to see. The cat submitted to their caresses and as she did the night before allowed them to hold the kittens. They admired them very much and praised them all extravagantly, that is all except the piebald one that seemed to be a mixture of all the others.

But it was the black one that pleased the tall dark man.

"What grace!" he said, "And hear that little purr, why he'll have a wonderful voice! And that sleek shining coat! That, my friends, is a very fine animal."



The mother cat was very pleased, but she gave the little piebald kitten a couple of extra licks with her tongue as she cleaned him because no one seemed to care about him.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The following day was not so pleasant as the others. During the morning the captain of the Roman guard of soldiers that was patrolling the village strode into the stable and wanted to know what was going on. He asked a lot of questions about who the kind man was and who the mother of the baby was and even who the baby was although anyone could see that it was just a baby.

But the man and the mother were respectful and the captain of the guard admired the baby so the mother cat felt that perhaps things were all right and she would not have to move again with her family. As the Roman soldier was going out he, too, saw her with her kittens. And he, too, admired them very much. He was a bit more rough than the others but he did think they were very wonderful kittens, all except the piebald one that seemed to be a mixture of all the others. But the white one he thought was best of all.

"See the dignity of that little animal, young as it is," he said. "There is beauty for you, and intelligence, too. The others no doubt will be good household cats but there is something really distinguished about this white one."

Of course the mother was pleased but she was not too happy about this visit and felt a little anxiety about this constant stream of visitors. After the soldier left the kind man said he better go into town and see what was going on.

Something apparently was going on because the man stayed away most of the day and when he came back he looked troubled.

"I've been asking people about things," he said, "and they tell me this is not a very healthy place to raise children. I'm thinking of going to Egypt."

The mother of the baby said that would be all right and for him to do whatever he thought best. So they got ready to leave.

THERE was a little donkey at the other end of the stable who was going with them though obviously he did not want to go. Finally things were about ready and as soon as it was dark they would begin their journey.

The mother cat was in a quandary. She had become much attached to this family and did not want to leave them. Neither did she want to leave her stable home, but to be left by herself with four little kittens was not very pleasant to think about. And the baby's mother was equally unhappy about it. She thought it a shame to leave behind such lovely kittens and remembered that shepherds, who usually know a good deal about kittens, had thought that the yellow one had very special characteristics. The man reminded her that the tall dark visitor in the gorgeous robes had said that the black one was unique among kittens and admired that one most of all. The mother agreed but also recalled that the Roman soldier had stated positively that the white one both in appearance and intelligence showed signs of noble lineage. And the mother cat was thinking that there was another one that seemed to be a mixture of all the others.

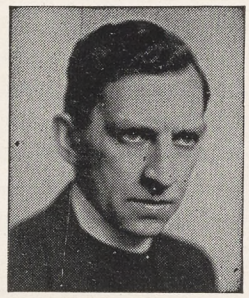
But it was agreed that to take the kittens on the journey would be impractical and the kind man gently reminded the mother of the baby that such things frequently happen to kittens and mother cats and that usually they get along somehow.

So that was that; and the mother cat heard all the conversation. No doubt they are right she thought, and after all with kittens that have made such an impression as young as they are no doubt they will make their way in the world. But she was unhappy about it and watched the preparations for departure while she turned matters over in her little cat mind.

No one paid much attention to what she was doing except the donkey who teased her about not broadening her mind with travel although he really envied her for being able to stay in the stable. When everyone was ready to go the donkey bid her a raucus goodbye and gave her a knowing wink, but the mother cat just stared with the careful mask of indifference that she had learned from her cat mother.

The little party journeyed out into the night and were well out of the village when the mother asked the kind man what time it was. He told her and wondered why she asked. She said it was because she did not think it was time to feed the baby but she thought she heard him cry.

So they stopped the donkey who was quite pleased to be halted but not much surprised, and they looked in the baby's crib.



Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Back in Bethlehem the mother cat was looking at her babies, too. And she was very proud of them, the yellow, the black and the white and she knew each one of them was a very special kitten. Then she closed her eyes and purred a little prayer for the piebald one that seemed to be a mixture of all the others and that no one cared about, and though he was not with her she felt especially comfortable about him and his future.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

EDITORS of THE WITNESS at several meetings have discussed International Policy, with the editorial found last week the final result. However, as the editorial was first presented this sentence was not in it: "We recognize that reports of the Russian treatment of populations in territories under their control gives justifiable rise to such fears." After considerable debate we voted on whether or not this sentence should be inserted. Since I alone voted "no" I want to state my reasons.

There has been a great deal of talk about Russian concentration camps, forced labor, their bad treatment of people generally. But until facts, as distinguished from stories, are offered to support the charge I refuse to be a party to such accusations. I have talked to a number of men, including churchmen, who have travelled recently in Europe who say that the Soviets have concentration camps and use slave labor. But when you get down to cases they all admit they have not seen them themselves—they have just been told they exist. It is second-hand information on what they call "good authority," which for this very reason may be the more biased.

Time and Tide is a conservative British publication. There recently appeared in its pages an article by Marguerite Peacocke, an English woman who has lived in the British zone of Germany since the occupation. She declares that up to a year ago "Germans in the western zones regarded the Russian occupied territory as a prison from which it was almost a miracle of good fortune to escape." But in the past six months, according to this eye-witness, the attitude of Germans in the western zones has undergone a revolution. Today there is a "growing German belief that in the Russian zone, if you are of use, you are treated as a full independent citizen with a freedom from 'occupation' and foreign domination which is unknown to Germans in the British zone." Because of this "engineers, the scientists, the skilled trained men of every trade and profession" are crossing the border into the Russian zone at the rate of an estimated 300 a night, even though if caught it means six months imprisonment and a fine of 2,000 marks. This exodus is not just talk. Miss Peacocke went out herself to see for herself and describes in detail how the line crossers got over—"worming their way caterpillar-fashion along the ground, pack on back." She concludes her article with this statement:

"Somehow the Russians have discovered the secret of industrial reconstruction. With it they have discovered the secret of attracting the best brains and most skilled hands from our zone to theirs. Their propaganda is vital and convincing, infinitely better than ours which is insipid, uninspiring and unimaginative, but there must be something more behind it. These men who come from the shattered, idle Ruhr to cross the line at night, have their imagination fired by the tales of a modern land of promise — a land where the furnaces never go out and the machines are never idle. But it is weeks and months since the first of the adventurers set out, and the word that comes back over the border is not such as to deter those who follow in their footsteps."

Which does not sound like "concentration camps" and "slave labor" to me. Men do not crawl on their bellies in the dead of night to become slaves or victims of concentration camps. So I do not subscribe to that particular statement in the editorial of last week.

Neither do I subscribe to the implication in the editorial that Russia's ardor for world cooperation has cooled. For good and sufficient and, if you like, selfish reasons, the Soviet Union desires peace above everything else. Russia knows also that agreement between the Big Five on major issues is essential to preserve peace. That is why she takes the position she does on the veto, as anyone can discover if he will read the speeches made at U.N., not just newspaper accounts of the speeches, and thus make a serious effort to understand what this veto business is about. And while on the subject it would be well, so it seems to me, to keep in mind that we are the nation possessing the veto-to-end-all-vetoes. Possession of the atom bomb may be a matter of pride that borders sometimes on arrogance to an American. But if you happen to be a Christian as well as an American I think it should make us both humble and penitent.

As for last week's editorial as a whole, I am of course wholeheartedly with its spirit and purpose, as are all the members of our editorial board.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

California Diocese Promotes Family Institutes

Contrast Made Between Homes Hundred Years Ago And Present with New Problems Resulting

Edited by Sara Dill

Berkeley, Calif.:—A new experiment of the department of Christian education is the family institute or parents' weekend. As carried out at St. Alban's Church, Albany, Calif., Canon Vesper Ottmer Ward, director of Christian education for the diocese of California, spoke at a dinner-meeting on Friday evening, November 29, and then conducted the seminar on Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, as well as addressing the church school and preaching at the men's Advent communion.

The opening seminar dealt with the family of the year 1815. The husband was the boss; children were seen and not heard, worked on the farm, had little schooling, belonged to father, and there were a lot of them; mother spent all her time in the home, had no legal or property rights, could not get a divorce, was the teacher, and found a restricted social outlet in the church. The community backed up this arrangement, and the family was a self-sustaining unit with little contact with the outside world. Practically no money changed hands, and farmers were 99% self-sufficient. There was a religious sanction for this social order, and community solidarity gave meaning to the rules and customs.

In 1946, the same social heritage within the family has continued without the same controlling factors behind it, and this is the chief contribution of the community to the breakdown of the family. The community has taken over most of the functions formerly performed in the home, including schooling, clothing and feeding, entertainment, police protection, economic life, health factors, and public utilities. In this tension between the old view of the family and the new functions of the community there have been produced rugged individualism, the struggle for life, insecurity, over specialization, greed, suicide, divorce, mental disease, sexual tensions, and various escape mechanisms.

The second seminar restated the problem by recalling to the participants the change from rural to urban-centered populations. Whereas in 1800 the population was 90% rural, today it is only 40% rural. Whereas labor was free, there were early marriages, and the death rate was high, the new day has brought such diversification that the family no longer is a controlling factor in our culture. On the debit side, there have accrued the tensions mentioned above, summarized by a Roman Catholic magazine as follows:

Randolph Crump Miller, professor at Church Divinity School of the Pacific, who promoted unique seminar in parish he serves

"Mr. Business went to mass
Each and every Sunday.
Mr. Business went to hell
For what he did on Monday."

At the same time, there have developed many important new factors on the credit side: better health, improved and widespread educational opportunities, respect for individual persons (not individualism), better food, improved functioning of the churches, and the concept of social redemption in family and church.

As the safeguards of the old-time family have been broken down, the patterns of family life have changed in a democratic direction. Thus, the more difficult formation of a democratic family has no sanctions but love, in which an unselfish and creative relationship between husband and wife is basic.

The final session made it clear that society as it now functions has for the first time made possible a truly Christian family. The equal rights of women provide a community basis for interdependent and mutual love, as symbolized by dropping the promise to "obey" from the marriage service. Because women can be self-supporting, they are now free to obtain divorce (and this is a gain in spite of its abuse!). The family is now dependent upon the community for food and utilities, and this can aid in providing family integrity against the intrusions of irritating community factors.

The maintaining of the Christian family permits of no magical solution. A series of lectures can only point to possible activities. A dynamic relationship between church and home will build mutual support for the only two institutions seeking Christian goals. Because marriage is a fundamental vocation, the church must provide more thorough training than the usual premarital counselling makes possible. There should be preliminary education on the proper age-levels in confirmation classes, in church school, and in young people's groups. The church also should provide more adequate help for counselling those with marital difficulties. A long range program for study of husband-wife relations, the nature and needs of children, family recreation, and family religion is necessary.

Religion in the home cannot be injected from without, nor maintained from within by the old patriarchal family prayers. When the foundation is provided in terms of Christian attitudes and cooperation with the church, the other expressions of devotion in the home will grow naturally and normally from the thankful hearts of those living a full and abundant Christian life.

Great Response

Wilmington, Del.:—People as far away as California heard about the Thanksgiving service at Christ Church, Christiana Hundred. People in Texas and Minnesota and North Carolina heard of it, too, largely because newspapers gave advance publicity to this unique service reported in THE WITNESS December 5. What gave the occasion news value was that people came to church bringing live pigs, turkeys, chickens, canned peaches, baby clothes and all sorts of things.

The idea originated with a returned war veteran, former Major Robert N. Downs, who was made head of the committee in charge of the project. In the past children of the church school had brought toys to church on Thanksgiving Day to be distributed to less-fortunate youngsters. This year Mr. Downs suggested the whole parish had a chance to thank God for many blessings, especially for sparing this country the ravages of war-torn Europe.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Tangible thanks could be expressed he pointed out by following the Biblical custom of bringing tithes. Mr. Downs' suggestion met with such enthusiasm that Christ Church members needed trucks and cars and limousines to bring their generous contributions. Before ten o'clock Thanksgiving morning the trucks began to arrive loaded with steers, sheep and other livestock. Before long the churchyard took on the look of a country fair. A huge tent was erected and tables were put up to hold the canned food, wearing apparel and other donations.

The bounty of food and clothing is to be distributed on a non-sectarian basis to needy families in the neighborhood of the church. Perishable items were given out immediately. Some of the canned food is being stored by the rector, the Rev. William C. Munds, to be distributed as it is needed. Likewise, some of the livestock was returned to the farms of the donors to be held until needed for distribution to the poor.

The many members of the parish and other interested persons who had deposited their gifts then made their way into the old church for the Thanksgiving service. A throng was on hand to hear the guest speaker, the Rev. Charles L. Candee, pastor emeritus of Westminster Presbyterian Church, Wilmington, who spoke on liberty and democracy in this country.

Mr. Munds, in expressing thanks to the congregation, lauded the tithers and asked that this revival of a traditional custom, which can be traced back to the Pilgrim Fathers, be continued from year to year at Christ Church. He also expressed his thanks to Bishop Arthur R. McKinstry for attending the service. The collection taken during the service was given to one of the Bishop's favorite projects, St. Michael's Day Nursery.

Since Thanksgiving Day both the Bishop and Mr. Munds have received letters from persons throughout the country who read of this unusual service and wished to learn more of the details. Many expressed the hope that their churches might follow the example of Christiana Hundred on future Thanksgiving Days.

Vatican Agents

Washington (RNS): — A spokesman for the federal department of justice said that the agency had "no comment" to make on the request by editors of a number of Protestant journals for a grand jury investigation of representatives of the Vatican in the U. S. to discover if they "are violating the foreign agents' registration act."

Referring specifically to the case of Archbishop Stepinac of Yugoslavia, the editors charged that Roman Catholic canon law which prohibits Catholic civil officials from bringing to public trial a priest or member of the hierarchy, "means in effect that members of the Roman Catholic hierarchy, priests and even lay Catholics who accept this claim are to that extent representatives of the Vatican as a foreign power." (See WITNESS, Nov. 28, Talking It Over.)

They alleged further that "if this reasoning be correct, it can only mean one thing: such members of the Roman Catholic Church in the United States of America must comply with the provisions of the foreign agents registration act."

Issue a Warning

London (wireless to RNS):—The Roman Catholic hierarchy of England and Wales has issued a joint statement warning that Romanists may not attend non-Catholic religious services held in conjunction with civic functions, like Remembrance Day when men who died in the war are remembered. Copies of the statement were sent to parishes throughout all dioceses. Criticizing attendance of Roman Catholic mayors and other officials at these non-Catholic services, the bishops declared "they should be encouraged to attend mass or services in their own church and only be present at the non-religious part of public functions."

Act in Strike

St. Paul, Minn. (RNS):—Protestant ministers played a prominent part here in seeking to end a strike of public school teachers. The executive committee of the ministers' association of the St. Paul Council of Churches met with both the teachers' union negotiating committee and with the St. Paul city council. In a public statement, the ministers called upon "all parties concerned to place human interests above material interests."

"We believe that the welfare of our children and adequate living

"THE FUTURE COURSE OF THE ANGLICAN COMMUNION"

by the

Rt. Rev. Walter H. Gray, D.D.

Bishop Coadjutor of Connecticut, President, Church Congress in U. S.

Reprints of this Church Congress syllabus are now available, 10c each, $1 doz. from

CHURCH CONGRESS

207 Farmington Avenue

Hartford 5, Connecticut

ANNOUNCING

Anniversary Series of

ORGAN RECITALS

Jan. 14—T. Frederick H. Candlyn, Mus. D.
St. Thomas Church, New York

Jan. 21—Paul S. Callaway, F.A.G.O.
Washington Cathedral

Jan. 28—Clarence Watters, Mus. M.
Trinity College, Hartford, Conn.

Feb. 4—Walter Baker, F.A.G.O.
First Baptist Church, Philadelphia

All Recitals at 8:30 P.M.

Saint Thomas Chapel

60th Street, East of Third Avenue

New York City

ANCIENT RECORDS AND THE BIBLE

What do scientific excavation and exploration reveal about the integrity of the Scriptures? This last book from a renowned scholar is the readable, reliable, answer—a one-volume expedition among the relics of ancient Israel and her neighbors. $3.75

BY J. MCKEE ADAMS

Author of

BIBLICAL BACKGROUNDS

$3.75

AT YOUR BOOKSELLER

BROADMAN PRESS

NASHVILLE TENNESSEE

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

standards for our teachers and proper equipment of our schools are more important than low taxes and huge profits," the ministers' committee declared. "We urge that both the city council and organized teachers reach an immediate agreement which will enable the schools to be reopened without further delay. We believe that a long-term plan for educational and municipal improvements will necessitate changes in the city charter per capita tax limitations and urge that such action be taken as will make this an actuality."

World Relief

New York: — Plans are developing rapidly for the Episcopal Church's participation in world relief as provided for by act of General Convention last September. Convention fixed a goal of $1,000,000 for 1947, and the first step is to train leaders in all parts of the country to present the needs to congregations all through the Church.

Robert D. Jordan, National Council's director of promotion, has returned from Europe with a documentary motion picture showing how the Churches are working to relieve human need. This picture is to be shown in all parishes early in 1947.

Bishops at present are appointing diocesan leaders who will be prepared to tell the story and exhibit the motion picture at special parish meetings, at which an offering will be received.

Rural Workers

New York:—The Rev. E. Dargan Butt has been appointed part-time executive secretary of the Rural Workers Fellowship and takes up his new work January 1. He was formerly director of the Franklin County Rural Parish, Tennessee, and lecturer on rural work at the School of Theology, Sewanee. More recently he has been doing research at Seabury-Western Seminary and teaching on rural Church methods as well as assisting the Rev. Joseph Moore in directing field work in the pastoral theology department.

Madonna of the Road

By that first Christmas what holiness was added to motherhood, what tender care for every child!

Every child? But this one, like Him, was born in a manger. This mother is a beggar with leprosy—feared, hated, exiled, lost, nursing her baby in summer sun and winter cold beside an endless road. She is "rejected of men," and so will be her child. Unless—

Unless they are taken into the intelligent and loving care of a Christian leprosy colony. Then the mother may be healed, the baby kept unscathed for life. The whole physical and spiritual disaster for these two reversed.

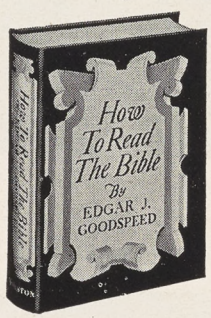
You can share in such a redemption, bring it as your gift to the Christ Child, like the gold of the Magi.

Will you send such a gift today to the American Mission to Lepers, auxiliary of all Churches, aiding 100 Leprosy Colonies of many denominations in 29 countries throughout the world?

American Mission to Lepers, Incorporated
File 1-D 156 Fifth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

I enclose $.....toward the $70 that will care for a mother and child for a year.

NAME .....



STREET OR BOX .....

TOWN, ZONE AND STATE .....

"Simple... Reasonable... Absorbing...!"

HOW TO READ THE BIBLE

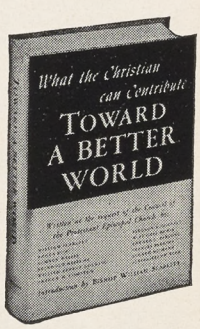
"is the best book I have ever read for introducing the Bible to people of this generation who wish to read the Bible but do not know how to go about it..." writes Paul Jordan of the Los Angeles Times. Here is a distinguished guide to the world's greatest book.

$2.50

by Edgar J. Goodspeed

Translator of the New Testament and world-famous scholar of Biblical literature

•



Some Eminent Citizens Discuss the Christian Way

TOWARD A BETTER WORLD

written by

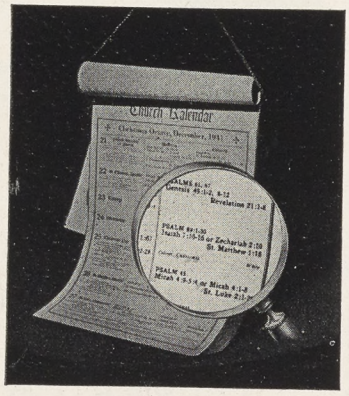
ANGUS DUN • SUMNER WELLES • REINHOLD NIEBUHR • ARTHUR HOLLY COMPTON • ELEANOR ROOSEVELT • WILLIAM ERNEST HOCKING • STRINGFELLOW BARR • WALTER RUSSELL BOWIE • EDWARD LAMBE PARSONS • EDUARD HEIMANN • FRANCES PERKINS

Edited by Bishop William Scarlett

An important new book about vital national and international issues and how Christian people can coöperate to solve them.

$2.00

The John C. Winston Co.
IN PHILADELPHIA



Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

A Christmas Gift
Appreciated All Year

THE CHRISTIAN YEAR
and
CHURCH KALENDAR

This Kalendar makes a really unusual Christmas gift. First of all it is made so that it may be hung on the wall and the red and gold cover gives it an attractive appearance.

The text of 112 pages contains the necessary information every clergyman and lay person should have at their fingertips, such as

Church Calendar
Church Colors
Morning and Evening Lectionary
Saints' Days
Altar Linen
Ember Days
Rules for Sacristans
Suggested Hymns
Church Holidays
Altar Society Notes
Vestments, their color, care and use
Church Dictionary
Duties of Wardens and Vestrymen
Suggestions for Servers
The Rector, his election and call

Order from the Publisher or your Bookseller
Price $1.25 ($1.35 postpaid)

H. M. JACOBS COMPANY

1907 Walnut Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

H. M. JACOBS COMPANY
1907 WALNUT STREET
PHILADELPHIA 3, PA.

Gentlemen:

Kindly send to addresses below:

_____ _____

_____ _____

_____ _____

☐ charge ☐ check with order

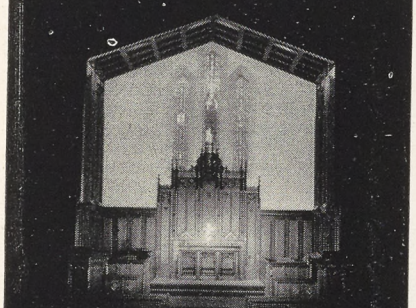
Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Fifteen Million

New York:—About 43,000 ministers and surviving widows and children are receiving pension and relief benefits aggregating $15,000,000 a year from the twenty-one ministerial pension funds holding membership in the Church Pensions Conference. The Conference, which held its 32nd annual meeting in New York in early December, is a deliberate body made up of the executives of the various pension funds. The two largest Churches represented are the Southern Baptist and the Methodist, each having about 24,000 ministers.

Of total funds aggregating $230,000,000, the actuarial reserve funds amounted to $142,000,000. The proportion of such funds is increasing each year.

A paper describing The Church Pension Fund was presented by Gilbert E. Ault, its actuary. Robert Worthington, executive vice-president of the Fund, is the president of the Conference.



New York to Elect

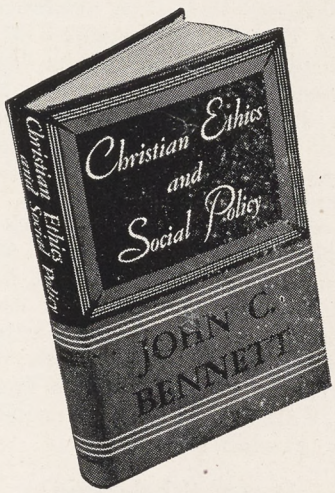
New York:—A special convention of the diocese of New York is to be held on January 28 to elect a successor to Bishop Manning who retires on January 1. This announcement was made on December 10 from Bishop Manning's office.

Student a Delegate

New York:—Virginia Markham, a student at Union Seminary and a resident of Windham House, Episcopal hostel, has been chosen to attend

CHANCEL ALTERATIONS

Pews - Church Woodwork



Ossit Church Furniture Co.

Janesville, Wisconsin

SINCE 1867

SCRIBNER'S BOOKS

CHRISTIAN ETHICS and SOCIAL POLICY

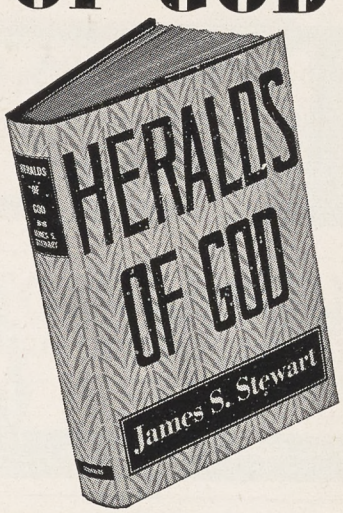
BY

JOHN C. BENNETT

Author of "Social Salvation" and "Christian Realism"

In a profound discussion of our contemporary social problems, Dr. Bennett throws a timely light on the signposts which Christianity has erected for our arriving at a just and appropriate social policy. $2.00

HERALDS OF GOD



A Practical Book on Preaching

BY

JAMES S. STEWART

Author of "The Strong Name," "The Gates of New Life"

Dr. Stewart, famous for the collections of his own sermons, here offers practical advice, simply and directly, to preachers; tells what results to aim for, and what to avoid if preaching is to be effective. $2.50

TOWARD A UNITED CHURCH

Three Decades of Ecumenical Christianity

by WILLIAM ADAMS BROWN

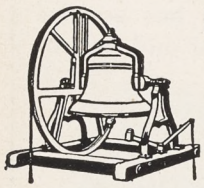
Recommended to all who want a complete and organized account of the movement toward a more united church. $2.50

MAN and SOCIETY IN THE NEW TESTAMENT

by ERNEST F. SCOTT, D. D.

"Affords firm foundations for one's thinking about the whole issue of individualism versus collectivism in the modern world." —Religious Book Club Bulletin. $2.75

AT ALL BOOKSTORES



CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, NEW YORK

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Write us for
Organ Information
AUSTIN ORGANS, Inc.
Hartford, Conn.

STAMMER?
This new 128-page book, "Stammering, Its Cause and Correction," describes the Bogue Unit Method for scientific correction of stammering and stuttering — successful for 45 years. Free — no obligation.
GET THIS FREE BOOK!
Benjamin N. Bogue, Dept. 5803, Circle Tower, Indianapolis 4, Ind.

ALTAR BREADS ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED
SAINT MARY'S CONVENT
KENOSHA • WISCONSIN

MENEELY BELL CO.
22 RIVER ST., TROY, N. Y.
BELLS

R. GEISSLER, INC.
71-79 W. 45th St., New York 19, N. Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS
EST. 1877

VESTMENTS
Cassocks - Surplices - Stoles - Scarves
Silks - Altar Cloths - Embroideries
Priest Cloaks - Rabats - Collars
Custom Tailoring for Clergymen
1837 Church Vestment Makers Over One Hundred Years 1946

COX SONS & VINING, Inc.
131 East 23rd Street, New York 10, N.Y.

Need a LAXATIVE?
Black-Draught is,
1-Usually prompt
2-Usually thorough
3-Always economical

25 to 40 doses only 25¢
Get BLACK-DRAUGHT
CAUTION: USE ONLY AS DIRECTED

the ecumenical institute to be held at Celigny, Switzerland. Miss Markham was a member of the faith study committee at the Auxiliary meeting in Philadelphia and was the youngest member of the group. She sails for Europe on January 2.

Labor Discussion

Elmhurst, N. Y.:—A conference on the Church and organized labor was held at St. James' Church, here, on December 15th, sponsored by the Long Island departments of education, social relations and youth. It was the seventh in a series on Understanding Our Nation. It opened with a panel in which a number of leaders of the CIO, AFL and the Railroad Brotherhoods, took part. The speaker at a supper meeting, at what Bishop Jenkins, retired of Nevada, presided, was Ellis Van Riper, who is a leader of the Transport Workers Union and a member of St. Simon's, Brooklyn.

Parish Scholarship

New Haven, Conn.:—Some months ago the Girls Friendly Society of St. Paul's Church here started to raise a fund as a memorial to Mrs. Elizabeth Merrill Cook, who was a devoted worker of the parish, particularly among girls. It is now announced that $1119 was raised. The sum of $1,000 will be used, both interest and principal, to aid young women to become leaders in the Church, the selections to be made by the rector, with the advice of a committee representing the society. The rest of the fund will be used for a silver alms basin, also a memorial to Mrs. Cook.

Church Consecrated

New York:—St. Ambrose Church was consecrated by Bishop Manning on December 7th. The rector is the Rev. E. Elliot Durant.

Canon T. O. Wedel Explains

(Continued from page 6)

pression of thanks on the part of the Presbyterians present for having been given the opportunity to discuss the great problem of unity with their Episcopal brethren of the Diocese of Delaware. Many others asked Bishop McKinstry to give them an opportunity in the near future to continue the discussion so profitably begun.

All present agreed that it had been an historic occasion and that the ecumenical movement in Delaware had been greatly strengthened thereby.

Everything for the Episcopal Church
but vestments
A broad statement but we'd like to prove it.
Ammidon and Company
Horace L. Varian
Horace L. Varian, Jr.
31 South Frederick Street
Baltimore 2, Maryland

PURE IRISH LINENS NOW IN STOCK
for all Church needs, supplies constantly arriving, good qualities, also fine cottons. Samples free.
Mary Fawcett Company
Plainfield, N. J. Box 146

CATHEDRAL STUDIOS
Washington & London, England. Linens and materials by the yard, surplices, albs, Altar Linens, stoles, burses & veils. Materials by the yard. See my NEW BOOK "CHURCH EMBROIDERY" & CHURCH VESTMENTS a complete instruction. 128 pages, 95 illus. Price $5.67. And my HANDBOOK for ALTAR GUILDS, price 50c. Miss L. V. Mackrille, 11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington 15, D.C. 30 minutes from U. S. Treasury. Tel. Wisconsin 2752.

SURPLICES — STOLES
VESTMENTS
CHURCH HANGINGS
ALTAR LINENS
CASSOCKS
CLERICAL SUITS — CLOAKS
RABATS—RABAT VESTS—COLLARS—SHIRTS
Choir Vestments in All Styles
Inquiries Invited
C. M. ALMY & SON, INC.
562 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.

The Payne-Spiers Studios Inc.
Studios at Paterson, New Jersey
Carved Wood
Chancel Renovations Church Furnishings
Murals Memorials Tablets
Stained Glass
-- Inquiries Solicited --

The Marriage Service
By Hugh McCandless
An explanation of the service, step by step. Several thousand copies were ordered before publication as a leaflet. Rectors will want copies to have on hand.
$3 for 100 copies
10c for single copies
THE WITNESS
135 Liberty Street New York 6

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

MR. EUGENE P. WHITTIER
Layman of Winthrop, Mass.

In response to your appeal for Christmas gift subscriptions I am sending along three and a check to pay for them. I want to tell you how much I appreciate the job THE WITNESS editors are doing. Our world, and in particular our western portion of it, is verily a wilderness. Your voice is always clearly articulate and the little I may do I feel very worthwhile. For one like myself, a life-long churchman, your message brings encouragement to remain in an institution where the bulk of its adherents are so apathetic and morally lazy. THE WITNESS is a leaven. May a deserved success attend your efforts.

* * *

RUTH M. MOODY
Churchwoman of Fullerton, California

I am writing to protest your running an ad (Oct. 31) for an organization called "Spiritual Mobilization." We need to beware of organizations masquerading under such titles as we have had plenty of experience this past few years to open our eyes to the dangers of "Christian Fronts." Some clergyman to whom it was directed might be misled by some of the names of those interested as they include some college presidents, though the names of some of the others are certainly familiar as reactionaries.

THE WITNESS has always followed the policy of being fair and progressive, promoting social benefit. I enjoy it very much and always send it to a friend. Please investigate all ads carefully before accepting them.

ANSWER: We have on various occasions, in news stories and articles, pointed out our disagreement with this organization. However, in common with other religious journals, it is at present our policy not to censor advertising of a political character. It is clear, we are sure, to our readers that advertisements do not carry editorial endorsement.

* * *

MR. GRANT W. SEIBERT
Layman of New York City

Here is some backfire I have been saving for you for a long time. The immediate occasion for it is the anti-catholicism expressed in "Talking It Over" of Nov. 21st and 28th. Your unwarranted attack on a great churchman, Francis Cardinal Spellman, a great Catholic, followed up by your comments on the trial of Archbishop Stepinac was just too much for an Irish churchman like myself. I am an Anglo-Catholic and intend to remain one but I greatly admire Cardinal Spellman. Shame on you, sir. Bad taste and un-Christian. Ditto for your article on the Stepinac trial. Most Protestants I know admit the trial was unfair. Demonstrations were permitted in open court, in itself certainly sufficient cause for mistrial. The point is that, guilty or innocent, the Archbishop was railroaded into jail: he never had a chance to defend himself.

Evidently you are one of those foolish Protestants who derive comfort from misfortunes to Roman Catholics, failing to see that this is the largest Christian Church in the world. Their fate is linked up with ours inextricably. Evidently Spofford is a very low churchman. This would be bad enough, but he even regards the Thirty-Nine Articles as binding. That is the pay-off. Most Anglicans I know regard them as archaic and of historical interest only. Ours is a positive faith, not one based on negations. Quite sensibly, of course, the Church no longer requires allegiance to the Articles. We are Catholics, not Protestants, when the chips are down.

ANSWER: The column did not say that the Thirty-Nine Articles were binding. It stated that the Stepinac trial gave relevance in our day to the 37th article, and stated that "maybe we'd better give them some attention."

* * *

MRS. FRED E. BIRTCH
Churchwoman of Detroit

It seems to me the whole splendid fabric that is our Church, through the best efforts of many of our Church papers, clergy and laymen, is becoming so punctured with public and private criticism and disruptive analysis as to cause many a person to wonder if it has the strength to sustain a world in distress or even to succor a single soul in search of salvation.

The pendulum has swung far from the time when we sought to smother censure and spoke more in praise, to the present when we hear little save where the Church has failed; its shortcomings and errors, its wrongdoings and mistakes. We are analyzing the Church to distraction.

Give us more of the majesty of our Church in the messages of our clergy. Let us call the upward and onward roll of its history in our Church papers that we may be inspired to faith in its future. With an upward and onward motion let us majestically re-weave the frayed fabric that is the Church today, so torn by its interminable critics—public and private, pulpit and press.

* * *

REV. JOSEPH H. HARVEY
Rector at Roswell, New Mexico

The editorial "Dear Reverend" (WITNESS, Nov. 28) recalls a poem written by Bishop Atwill of North Dakota when he was a rector:

Call me Brother, if you will.
Call me Parson, better still.
Or if, perchance, the Catholic frill
Doth your heart with longing fill—
Though plain Mister fills the bill,
If that title lacketh thrill,
Then even Father brings no chill
Of hurt, or rancor, or ill will.

To no DD do I pretend
Though Doctor doth some honor lend,
Preacher, Pastor, Rector, Friend,
Titles, almost without end,
Never grate and ne'er offend;
A loving ear to all I bend.
But how the man my heart doth rend
Who blithely calls me Reverend!

Virginia Episcopal School
Lynchburg, Virginia
Prepares boys for colleges and university. Splendid environment and excellent corps of teachers. High standard in scholarship and athletics. Healthy and beautiful location in the mountains of Virginia.
For catalogue apply to
George L. Barton, Jr., Ph.D. Headmaster,
Box 408

SCHOOLS

The Hospital of Saint Barnabas and the University of Newark offer a full course in NURSING
to qualified High School graduates. Scholarships available. Classes enter in February and September
Apply to
Director of Nursing
HOSPITAL OF SAINT BARNABAS
685 High Street Newark, N. J.

DE VEAUX SCHOOL
FOUNDED 1852
A Church school for boys. Thorough preparation for college. Military system of student government, developing sense of responsibility. Charges for grades seven and eight $1000; grades nine through twelve $1050. For catalog, address THE HEADMASTER, DeVeaux School, Niagara Falls, New York.

HOLDERNESS
In the White Mountains. College Preparatory and General Courses. Music and Crafts. For boys 12-19. All sports including riding. 200 acres of woods. New fireproof building. Individual attention. Home atmosphere.
Rev. Edric A. Weld, Rector
Box W. Plymouth, N. H.

Saint Mary's-in-the-Mountains
An Episcopal college preparatory boarding school for fifty girls. Piano and Choral instruction. Art. Domestic Science. Mountain hikes and winter sports afforded by location in White Mountains. Horseback and Skiing lessons. New gymnasium. For catalogue address
Miss Mary Harley Jenks, Principal
Littleton, New Hampshire

FORK UNION MILITARY ACADEMY
An Honor Christian School with the highest academic rating. Upper School prepares for university or business. ROTC. Every modern equipment. Junior School from six years. Housemother. Separate building. Catalogue. Dr. J. J. Wicker, Fork Union, Virginia.

CARLETON COLLEGE
Laurence M. Gould, D.Sc., President
Carleton is a co-educational liberal arts college of limited enrollment and is recognized as the Church College of Minnesota
Address: Director of Admissions
CARLETON COLLEGE
Northfield Minnesota

KEMPER HALL
KENOSHA, WISCONSIN
Boarding and day school for girls offering thorough college preparation and training for purposeful living. Study of the Fine Arts encouraged. Complete sports program. Junior School department. Beautiful lake shore campus. Under direction of the Sisters of St. Mary. For catalogue, address: Box WT.

LENOX SCHOOL
A Church School in the Berkshire Hills for boys 12-18 emphasizing Christian ideals and character through simplicity of plant and equipment, moderate tuition, the cooperative self-help system, and informal, personal relationships among boys and faculty.
Rev. Robert L. Curry, Headmaster
Lenox Massachusetts

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Will & Baumer Candle Co., Inc.

Established 1855 Syracuse, N. Y.

The Pioneer Church Candle Manufacturers of America

New York	Boston	Chicago	Los Angeles	Montreal
15 E. 32nd St.	71 Broad St.	162 N. Franklin St.	952-4 S. Flower St.	422 Notre Dame St., E.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The WITNESS

10¢ A COPY

DECEMBER 26, 1946

LIBRARY COPY

What tribute shall we pay
To him who came in weakness,
And in a manger lay
To teach his people meekness?
Let every house be bright;
Let praises never cease:
With mercies infinite
Our Christ hath brought us peace.

—H. C. Robbins.

THE ANNUAL HONOR ROLL

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

THE CATHEDRAL OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE
NEW YORK CITY
Sundays: 8, 9, 11, Holy Communion; 10, Morning Prayer; 4, Evening Prayer; Sermons 11 and 4.
Weekdays: 7:30, 8 (also 9:15 Holy Days and 10, Wednesdays), Holy Communion; 9, Morning Prayer; 5, Evening Prayer. Open daily 7 A.M. to 6 P.M.

GRACE CHURCH, NEW YORK
Broadway at 10th St.
Rev. Louis W. Pitt, D.D., Rector
Daily: 12:30 except Mondays and Saturdays.
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M. and 4:30 P. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion 11:45 A. M.

THE HEAVENLY REST, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue at 90th Street
Rev. Henry Darlington, D.D.
Sundays: Holy Communion, 8 and 10 A. M.; Morning Service and Sermon, 11 A. M.
Thursdays and Holy Days: Holy Communion, 11 A. M.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S CHURCH
NEW YORK
Park Avenue and 51st Street
Rev. Geo. Paull T. Sargent, D.D., Rector
8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evensong. Special Music.
Weekdays: Holy Communion Wednesday at 8:00 A. M.
Thursdays and Saints' Days at 10:30 A. M.
The Church is open daily for prayer.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH
Madison Ave. at 71st St., New York
The Rev. H. W. B. Donegan, D.D., Rector
8:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
9:30 A. M. Church School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Service and Sermon.
4:00 P. M. Evening Prayer and Sermon.
Wed., 7:45 A. M., Thurs., 12 Noon Holy Communion.

THE CHURCH OF THE EPIPHANY
1317 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Charles W. Sheerin, Rector
Sunday: 8 and 11 A. M.; 8 P. M.
Daily: 12:05.
Thursdays: 11:00 and 12:05.

ST. THOMAS' CHURCH, NEW YORK
Fifth Avenue and 53rd Street
Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, S.T.D., Rector
Sun 8, 11, 4. Daily 8:30 HC; Thurs. 11 HC., Daily except Sat. 12:10.

THE CHURCH OF THE ASCENSION
Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street, New York
The Rev. Roscoe Thornton Foust, Rector
Sundays: 8 a.m. Holy Communion.
11 a.m. Morning Prayer, Sermon.
8 p.m. Evening Song and Sermon; Service of Music (1st Sun. in month).
Daily: Holy Communion, 8 a.m. Tues., Thurs., Sat.; 11 a.m. Mon., Wed., Fri.
5:30 Vespers, Tues. through Friday.
This Church is open all day and all night.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL
Buffalo, New York
Shelton Square
The Very Rev. Edward R. Welles, M.A., Dean
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30 and 11.
Daily: 12:05 noon—Holy Communion.
Tuesday: 7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
Wednesday: 11:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH
Atlanta, Georgia
435 Peachtree Street
The Rev. J. Milton Richardson, Rector
9:00 A. M. Holy Communion.
10:45 A. M. Sunday School.
11:00 A. M. Morning Prayer and Sermon.
6:00 P. M. Young People's Meetings.

The WITNESS
For Christ and His Church

EDITORIAL BOARD: Frederick C. Grant, Editor; Arthur Lichtenberger, Chairman; William B. Spofford, Managing Editor; Lane W. Barton, Beverly M. Boyd, Dillard H. Brown, Roscoe T. Foust, Charles K. Gilbert, Hugh D. McCandless, Howard Chandler Robbins, William K. Russell, Sydney A. Temple Jr., Joseph H. Titus, William M. Weber.

★

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS: D. B. Aldrich, J. A. Bell, T. S. Carruthers, Adelaide Case, G. K. Chalmers, E. M. Cross, G. M. Day, Angus Dun, A. W. Farlander, T. P. Ferris, J. F. Fletcher, John Gass, C. H. Gesner, C. L. Glenn, G. C. Graham, J. M. Groton, G. I. Hiller, I. P. Johnson, T. R. Ludlow, C. S. Martin, R. C. Miller, Walter Mitchell, A. T. Mollegen, E. L. Parsons, E. L. Pennington, Rose Phelps, L. W. Pitt, Otis Rice, Cyril Richardson, Paul Roberts, V. D. Scudder, W. M. Sharp, W. B. Sperry, C. W. Sprouse, D. S. Stark, W. B. Stevens, J. W. Suter, S. E. Sweet, Alexander Zabriskie.

★

THE WITNESS is published weekly from September 15th to June 15th inclusive, with the exception of the first week in January and semi-monthly from June 15th to September 15th by the Episcopal Church Publishing Co. on behalf of the Church Publishing Association, Inc. Samuel Thorne, President; Charles A. Houston, Vice-President; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, Treasurer; Frederic D. H. Gilbert, Secretary.

★

The subscription price is $3.00 a year; in bundles for sale in parishes the magazine sells for 10c a copy, we will bill quarterly at 5c a copy. Entered as Second Class Matter, March 6, 1939, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879.

DECEMBER 26, 1946
Vol. XXX. No. 4

Clergy Notes

ALDERSON, FRANK C., assistant at St. Mark's, Evanston, Ill., was ordained priest by Bishop Conkling on December 15th.

ALFORD, CHARLES B., retired priest of the diocese of Albany, died on December 7th. He served a number of parishes in the diocese where he spent his entire ministry.

DAWSON, CORNELIUS R., formerly rector of Trinity, Charlottesville, Va., is now the rector of St. Paul's, Martinsville, Va.

DORON, JOSEPH, formerly rector of Trinity, Richmond, Calf., is now archdeacon of the missionary district of San Joaquin.

FOREMAN, H. WILLIAM JR., rector of Emmanuel, Adams, N. Y. becomes rector of Christ Church, Sherburne, N. Y. January 1st.

HASTINGS, W. BRADFORD, formerly rector of St. Paul's, Overland, Mo., is now rector of Trinity, Concord, Mass.

HOLT, JAMES C., will be ordained priest on December 29th by Bishop Conkling at St. Paul's, Kenwood, Illinois.

KIDDER, FREDERICK E., acting headmaster of St. Joseph's Agricultural School, Ponce, Puerto Rico, and layreader at Holy Cross Mission, Castaner, has resigned to study at Seabury-Western Seminary.

RICHARDSON, JOHN A., formerly assistant at St. Paul's, Rock Creek, Washington, D. C. is now rector of Trinity, St. Louis, Mo.

TILDESLEY, D. W., was ordained priest on December 22 at St. Matthew's, Evanston, Illinois, by Bishop Randall.

WILLIAMS, GOWAN H., was ordained priest on December 21 by Bishop Conkling at St. Mark's, Glen Ellyn, Illinois.

CALVARY CHURCH
Shady & Walnut Aves.
Pittsburgh
The Rev. Lauriston L. Scaife, S.T.D., Rector
Sundays 8, 9:30, 11:00 and 8:00.
Holy Communion—Mondays, Wednesdays, Fridays 7:30 A.M.
Holy Communion—Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays 8:00 A.M.
Holy Days and Fridays 10:00 A.M

SERVICES
In Leading Churches

CHRIST CHURCH CATHEDRAL
Main and Church Sts., Hartford, Conn.
Sunday Services: 8, 9:30, 10:05, 11 A. M., 8 P. M.
Weekdays: Holy Communion—Monday and Thursday, 9 A. M.; Tuesday, Friday and Saturday, 8 A. M.; Wednesday, 7:00 and 11:00 A. M. Noonday Service, daily 12:15 P. M.

CHRIST CHURCH
Cambridge
REV. GARDINER M. DAY, RECTOR
REV. FREDERIC B. KELLOGG, CHAPLAIN
Sunday Services, 8:00, 9:00, 10:00 and 11:15 A. M.
Weekdays: Wed. 8 and 11 A. M. Thurs., 7:30 A. M.

TRINITY CHURCH
Miami
Rev. G. Irvine Hiller, S.T.D., Rector
Sunday Services 8, 9:30, 11 A. M.

TRINITY CATHEDRAL
Military Park, Newark, N. J.
The Very Rev. Arthur C. Lichtenberger, Dean
Sunday Services: 8:30, 9:30 (All Saints' Chapel, 24 Rector St.), 11 and 4:30 p.m.
Week Days: Holy Communion Wednesday and Holy Days, 12:00 noon, Friday, 8 a.m. Intercessions Thursday, Friday, 12:10; Organ Recital Tuesday, 12:10.
The Cathedral is open daily for prayer.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH
Montecito and Bay Place
OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA
Rev. Calvin Barkow, D.D., Rector
Sundays: 8 A. M., Holy Communion; 11 A. M., Church School; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer and Sermon.
Wednesdays: 10 A. M., Holy Communion; 10:45, Rector's Study Class.

GRACE CHURCH
Corner Church and Davis Streets
ELMIRA, N. Y.
Rev. Frederick T. Henstridge, Rector
Sundays: 8 and 11 A. M.; 4:30 P. M.
Daily: Tuesday and Thursday, 7:30 A. M.
Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Holy Days, 9:30 A. M.
Other Services Announced

ST. MARK'S CHURCH
Texas Avenue and Cotton Street
SHREVEPORT, LA.
Rev. Frank E. Walters, Rector
Rev. Harry Wintermeyer, Curate
Sundays: Holy Communion, 7:30; 9:25 A. M., Family Service; 11 A. M., Morning Prayer.
Holy Communion, first Sunday. 6 P. M., Young Churchmen.

CHRIST CHURCH
Nashville, Tennessee
Rev. Peyton Randolph Williams
7:30 A. M.—Holy Communion.
9:30 and 11 A. M.—Church School.
11 A. M.—Morning Service and Sermon.
6 P. M.—Young People's Meetings.
Thursdays and Saints' Days—Holy Communion, 10 A. M.

GRACE CHURCH
105 Main Street, Orange, N. J.
Lane Wickham Barton, Rector
SUNDAYS
8:00 A. M.—Holy Communion.
11:00 A. M.—Church School.
11:00 A. M.—Morning Prayer and Sermon. (Holy Communion first Sunday each month)
7:00 P. M.—Young People's Fellowship.

CHRIST CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA
Second Street above Market
Cathedral of Democracy
Founded 1695
Rev. E. Felix Kloman, S.T.D., Rector
Rev. Peter M. Sturtevant, Associate Rector
Sunday Services: 9:30 and 11 A.M.
Church School: 10:00 A.M.
Weekdays: Wed. noon and 12:30.
Saints' Days: 12 noon.
This Church is Open Every Day

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

VOL. XXX. No. 4.

The WITNESS

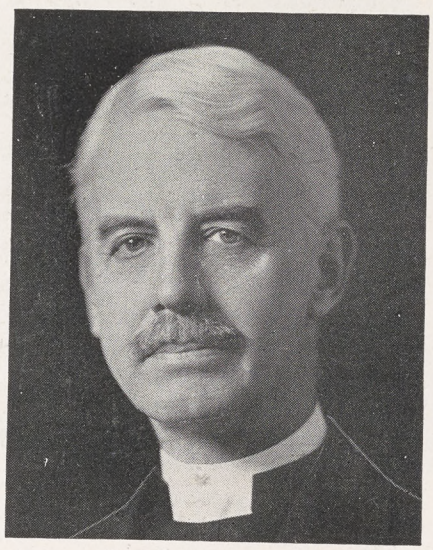
For Christ and His Church

DECEMBER 26, 1946

Publication Office, 6140 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago 37, Ill. Editorial Office, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

Two Department Heads Resign At Council Meeting

The Far Eastern Commission Reports With Appropriations Made From Advance Fund



By W. B. Spofford

New York:—The Rev. James Thayer Addison, vice-president of the National Council in charge of overseas work, and the Rev. Daniel A. McGregor, head of the division of religious education, resigned at the meeting of the National Council, held here December 17-19. Mr. Addison stated that his physicians were unanimous in insisting that he should be relieved of strain and responsibility, following a second heart attack which compelled him to abandon his visit to the Far East as a member of the Council's commission. He plans to return to Boston where he will devote himself to study and writing.

Mr. McGregor could not be reached for a statement for the underlying reasons for his resignation. However, it is generally known that the department has been under severe criticism for a number of years and it is fair to assume that this had a good deal to do with it. The resignation becomes effective December 31st.

Most of the time at the Council meeting was devoted to consideration of a fifty-two page report of the Far Eastern Commission, which consisted of Lewis B. Franklin, treasurer of the Council; the Rev. Robert A. Magill, rector at Lynchburg, Va., and Mrs. Arthur M. Sherman, executive secretary of the Auxiliary. The report, which was approved in principle, made recommendations for immediate rehabilitation and also recommendations for long range planning. The money is to be drawn from the Reconstruction and Advance Fund which now totals, paid and pledged, $7,161,951.

In the Philippines the commission itself authorized appropriations totalling $54,500 because of immediate emergencies which they found. They recommended for early construction —that is as soon as plans can be drawn, materials purchased, etc.— buildings that total $460,000. Construction which will cost $145,000 to be built later was approved, and land is to be purchased which will cost $360,000. The total therefore for the Philippines is $1,019,500.

The Rev. James Thayer Addison who resigned last week as the vice-president of the Council

In China appropriations were voted, some for projects needed at once, and some for projects which will go ahead when prices in the country are more normal. The priorities total $1,734,848, divided as follows: Anking, $280,848; Hankow, $701,000; Shanghai, $753,000. In addition $75,000 was voted for 1947 and a like sum for 1948 to supplement the present salaries and subsidies of full time Church workers due to inflation.

Summary: Appropriations to Philippines $1,019,500
Appropriations to China 1,889,848
Total $2,909,348
Advance Fund, paid or pledged 7,161,951
Balance on hand or pledged $4,252,603

Mr. Robert Jordon, promotion director who has just returned from a movie-making trip to Europe, reported on the great needs there. A movie is to be released in February called Not By Bread Alone which will be shown in as many parishes as ask for it. With the movie will go a speaker who will appeal for funds for relief which will be handled through the World Council of Churches, for whom Mr. Jordon had much praise. It is hoped that the Episcopal Church will raise a million dollars through voluntary offering in 1947 for European relief.

An appropriate resolution praising Bishop Tucker for his fine leadership as Presiding Bishop was passed, and in the closing minutes of the meeting a pledge of loyalty to the new Presiding Bishop, Henry K. Sherrill, who was present throughout the Council meetings, was given by a standing vote.

BOARD MEETING OF AUXILIARY

New York:—Appropriations from the 1943-46 United Thank Offering for new buildings occupied most of the time of the executive board of the Auxiliary, meeting December 13-16. The difficulty of the task may be judged by the fact that requests from bishops totalled $450,000 while the amount available was $150,000. There was the further fact that several grants made from the 1940-43 offering could not be used, due to war restrictions on building, with costs meanwhile greatly increased so that it was necessary to make additional appropriations from the new offering to cover at least a part of the increase.

JANUARY 9 IS NEXT

As has been our custom for a number of years the first issue of January is omitted. The next issue of THE WITNESS is therefore the number for January 9th. May we again urge readers in making changes of address to send both the old and the new addresses and to allow three weeks for the change to be made.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The appropriations, all for buildings, were: Bishop Payne Divinity School, $30,000 contingent upon similar action by R. & A. Fund; St. Paul's School, Walla Walla, Wash., $12,500; St. Peter's, La Boca, Panama, for a parish hall, $25,000; All Saint's, Charlotte Amalia, Virgin Islands, for a church school, $40,000; a congregation at Kahaluu, Hawaii, $8,000 toward a new building; Cangussu, Brazil, toward church, school room and rectory, $7,000; college center for St. Stephen's, Columbus, Ohio, $15,000; $30,000 for work near West Virginia University, Morgantown, W. Va.; Crestview, Fla., near a permanent air base, $5,000 toward a new building; district of New Mexico and Southwest Texas, $6,500 toward improving facilities for work in the Navajo area; Cartwright, N. D., $5,000 for a chapel; conference center in South Carolina, $3,500; chapel at Red Shirt Table, S.D., $2,500; Cherokee Indian Reservation, Western North Carolina, $20,000 for a building.

All of the twenty-one members of the board were present and included ten new members elected at the Triennial in October.

PROTEST INTERVENTION FOR STEPINAC

Philadelphia:—The United States government should not intervene in behalf of Archbishop Louis Stepinac of Yugoslavia, according to the ministers' union of Philadelphia and vicinity, a group of 150 clergymen representing 25 Protestant denominations here. Adopting a resolution addressed to President Truman, the state department, and the Federal Council of Churches, the clergy group said, "The Stepinac affair is exclusively the business of Yugoslavia and the Roman Catholic Church."

The resolution was immediately made available to the Philadelphia Council of Churches for distribution to all Protestant congregations of the city. It said in part: "We protest and condemn the persecution of any religious group anywhere in the world. We hold that all groups should enjoy freedom of worship without molestation from governments or other religious groups. If the United States, which is the government of all the people, should accede to the request of the Roman Catholic Church and interfere in the internal affairs of Yugoslavia, it will establish a precedent that would undermine the historical American position of separation of Church and state. It might further invite a series of such petitions from other religious groups. For instance, some Protestant group could well request our government to insist on the rescinding of the recent action of Franco's Catholic government in Spain which has passed restrictive legislation against Protestants, practically assuring their extermination."

The resolution charged that "Protestants are being ruthlessly persecuted in Spain, Mexico, Italy, and other countries of Europe and South America, and similarly Jews in many parts of the world."

It said the most any religious group can demand of its national government "is the unmolested right to worship as it pleases and to propagate its faith, insofar as the exercise of those rights does not tend to destroy or overthrow government or involve the government in difficulties with other nations."

BISHOP CONKLING PROTESTS

Chicago: — Bishop Wallace E. Conkling of the diocese of Chicago was among the large number of clergymen to sign a formal statement protesting demonstrations against the renting of apartments in a new development to Negroes. The project is one of the city's housing authority and had an interracial policy. However when two Negro veterans moved into the area there was a clash and the moving vans and police squad cars were halted. A minister volunteered to drive one of the vans and was himself stoned. The outbreak was condemned when 1,250 ministers preached sermons on the matter to an estimated 400,000 persons. This effort was sponsored by the local federation of churches. They also issued the formal statement praising Mayor Edward J. Kelly for standing behind the housing authority.

ELECTION HELD BY CLID

New York:—The Church League for Industrial Democracy, in sending out ballots for the election of new officers and a national committee today, announced that arrangements have been made with the Congregational Council of Social Action whereby CLID members will receive annual subscriptions to the magazine, Social Action. In announcing the plan, Dean Arthur Lichtenberger, chairman of the CLID's national committee, said, "It has long been felt that League members should receive some comprehensive Christian magazine dealing with contemporary social problems and we believe that Social Action, which devoted each issue to one specific problem, presents the most adequate material for CLID discussion and action. The move does not mean, however, that the regular League action bulletin, Social Facts for Church People, will be discontinued. Rather it is an attempt to more adequately fulfil CLID's educational responsibility."

We like to run pictures of children just so we won't forget these most important members of the Church. These youngsters are members of St. Andrew's at Taft, California

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The Dean of Buffalo Explains Sermon Writing System

Has Elaborate Card System Which Was Explained To Him by the Late Bishop Stewart of Chicago

By Rita Rubin

Buffalo, N. Y.:—Dean Edward R. Welles of St. Paul's Cathedral here is one parson who has no trouble in planning next Sunday's sermon. He gives credit for this largely to the late Bishop George Craig Stewart of Chicago who, in lectures at clergy conferences, the College of Preachers and elsewhere, explained to a great many clergymen his system of being "an expert picker of other men's brains."

When Dean Welles reads a book and comes to a passage that strikes him as helpful, say on page 19, on the subject of courage, he jots down on the inside of the back cover "Courage 19." Some books produce only half a dozen references while others provide 50 or more. References are entered on white cards in the Dean's file, where, for example, on a card headed Courage is inscribed, "Kennedy—The New Day—19," indicating author, title of book and page.

Pink cards filed along with the white refer to the Dean's earlier sermons, which are numbered and indexed to make accessible ideas on a given subject used in a former parish and also to help him avoid repeating himself in the same church. Sermons are filed in order in manila folders, 25 to a folder.

Next in importance to the card file is Dean Welles' file of newspaper and magazine clippings. These are in manila folders with topics printed in ink at the top, such as: Reformation, Resurrection, etc. When he reads anything in a newspaper or magazine that seems helpful he tears it out, writes on it the topic under which it is to be filed, and saves it for filing. Pamphlets too small to be noticed on a bookshelf are also filed here.

How does the system work? When a sermon topic has been selected (and running one's eye over the topic headings in the files is often helpful in suggesting a good sermon subject for which one thus has material avaialble) the Dean looks up the references in the books listed on that topic card (cross references to similar topics greatly widen the helpfulness of the file) and the clipping-pamphlet file.

The Dean has found further help in planning his sermons for a year at a time. Each May he thinks out and lists his sermon topics for the coming twelve months, draws up a skeleton sermon for a selected Sundays—jots down the thoughts that led to the selection of the topic, illustrations that occur—possibly an outline. Then with this list of sermons he carefully examines it for repetition, omissions and anything which makes it an unbalanced sermon program for the Christian year. Then he scraps some sermons that are better omitted and adds some that are needed to make the year's program cover the major aspects of Christian faith and life.

Dean Edward R. Welles of St. Paul's Cathedral, Buffalo, who describes his sermon planning

A further value of planning ahead is that with all these sermon topics in his mind the Dean finds that during his reading, conversation and day-by-day observations and experiences he is frequently saying to himself: That might be useful in that sermon I'm going to preach next January on "The Human Tongue."

Dean Welles is enthusiastically convinced that this system, while requiring considerable time to start and use, nevertheless has improved his preaching by making instantly accessible all his reading and study, and he feels that any clergyman who does not already have a satisfactory system would find it helped his preaching.

RUSSIAN ORTHODOX TO HAVE SOBOR

New York:—Leaders of the Patriarchal Russian Orthodox Church in America will hold a sobor, or general council, in New York February 12, on instructions from Patriarch Alexei of Moscow. This Church is distinct from the so-called dissident Russian Orthodox Church in this country which for many years has been under canonical suspension by the Mother Church. Announcement of the sobor was made here by Archbishop Adam Phillopovsky, of the patriarchal diocese of Philadelphia, who has just returned from a two-months' visit to Moscow where he discussed with Patriarch Alexei and other Church leaders matters affecting Russian Orthodox congregations in the United States.

"The forthcoming sobor," Archbishop Adam told Religious News Service in an interview, "will be the first ever held in this country by the Patriarchal Church. It will discuss the question of bringing about the reconciliation of the dissident Church headed by Metropolitan Theophilus, and will also deal with ecclesiastical and organizational matters affecting the Patriarchal Church."

The New York sobor, according to Archbishop Adam, will be presided over by Metropolitan Benjamin, Patriarchal Exarch of the Aleutian Islands and North America. Among those expected to attend are Archbishop Adam, Archbishop Makary of New York, Bishop Theodore of Chicago, and Bishop Anthony of San Francisco.

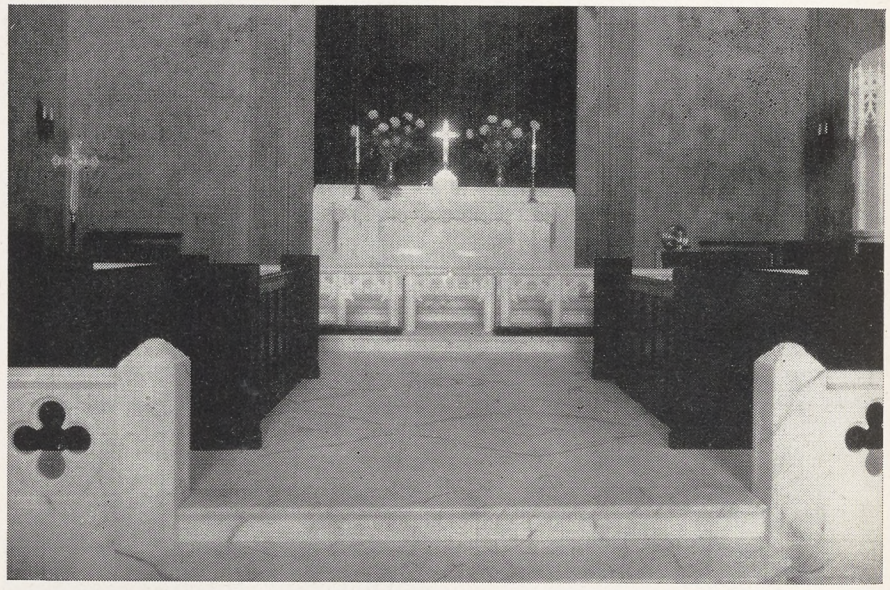
Referring to repeated rejections of reconciliation overtures by the Russian Orthodox Church in America, Archbishop Adam declared. "We are still trying to convince them there is no reasonable alternative but to become united with our Mother Church." He said he had not yet had an opportunity to study the minutes of the recent sobor of the majority

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Church in Cleveland which voted to accept reconciliation only on condition that the American Church be granted complete autonomy ond freedom to choose its own bishops.

AMERICANS NEED TO CHANGE

Washington:—Speaking at a conference on the United Nations, sponsored by the YWCA, Bishop Angus Dun said that the American people have a "very strong, rather adolescent sense of moral superiority" which is not likely to be appreciated by other peoples. He struck at racial discrimination in the U. S. and declared that "a people who tolerates gross injustice and deprivation to a minority race at home is very ill equipped to maintain justice in the world abroad."



"It is very easy to tell other people what they ought to do about minority races," Bishop Dun asserted. "If we Americans are to be makers of peace, we must learn to cross the barriers of race, class and nation with the spirit of understanding. The United Nations needs for its undergirding that kind of people. The greatest contribution most of us can make to the United Nations is to be in our relationships, attitudes, judgments, and influence, the makers of peace, the bearers of a spirit of strong, informed, intelligent, resolute will for justice."

POLITICAL ACTION SEMINAR

Harrisburg, Pa.:—The first Pennsylvania Churchmen's political action seminar was held in St. Michael's Lutheran Church, here, on December 9 and 10. Governor Edward Martin, who is an elder in the Presbyterian Church at Washington, Pa., addressed the group at the opening session. He emphasized the importance of Church people assuming their full responsibility in taking part in government affairs. Housing both for veterans and civilians and the state health program were discussed by outstanding speakers. Visits were made to these departments in the capitol buildings.

The Episcopalians who attended the seminar were: the Rev. Canon Paul S. Atkins, York, who is chairman of the central committee on social relations which is comprised of representatives of the five Pennsylvania dioceses; the Rev. Robert C. Batchelder, Lancaster, who is chairman of the department of social relations in the diocese of Harrisburg, as well as, secretary of the central committee on social relations; Mrs. James A. Haslan, Wynewood, who is a member of both the social relations and educational department of the Woman's Auxiliary in the diocese of Pennsylvania; Mrs. Robert K. Jones, Burnham, who is president of the Woman's Auxiliary in the diocese of Harrisburg and Miss Mary L. Rhoads, Harrisburg, who is a member of both the executive board and sponsoring committee of the Pennsylvania churchmen's seminar.

Another seminar is being planned to be held early in 1947 when the state legislature is in session.

The beautiful altar of St. James' Church, Los Angeles

BISHOP SAWYER INSTALLED

Erie, Pa.:—The Rt. Rev. Harold E. Sawyer, was installed as fourth Bishop of Erie at St. Paul's Cathedral, Erie, with an impressive service and a crowded church Thursday, December 5. The service had been arranged by Dean Blodgett of the Cathedral. Bishop Sawyer was the celebrant and preacher and charged the congregation which represented all sections of the diocese with the duties of bishop, priests and laity. Bishop Ward, retired Bishop of Erie, commended the diocese to Bishop Sawyer and Dean Blodgett welcomed him to his throne in the cathedral.

The Rev. Thomas Small, president of the standing committee assisted in the service with the Rev. S. C. V. Bowman and the Rev. Beecher Rutledge. All of the diocesan clergy with the exception of one were in procession and the full choir of the cathedral sang the service.

Following the service luncheon was served by the cathedral to nearly two hundred. Mr. Buckley Hubbard of the cathedral chapter was toastmaster. Addresses were made by Bishop Sawyer and the Rev. Albert Broadhurst, senior presbyter of the diocese.

CLOTHING SENT TO HOLLAND

New York:—Church World Service reports shipment of 1,596 items of clothing shipped to the Old Catholic Church in Holland. These goods were made possible by the Episcopal Church's contribution for Old Catholics, sent through Church World Service last August. The Service notes also a large consignment of clothing, shoes, food and medical supplies sent to Archbishop Nicholae Balan in Rumania.

VESTRYMEN MEET WITH STUDENTS

Philadelphia:—Vestrymen of the Epiphany, Philadelphia, visited the Philadelphia Divinity School on December 9 as a part of the seminary's plan of bringing students and vestrymen closer together. They had dinner together, with conferences with faculty members and students following. They ended their visit by having a regular vestry meeting in the office of Dean Frank D. Gifford.

On December 5 at the School seven students were matriculated at a service at which the Rev. Ralph E. Coonrad, rector of St. John Baptist, Philadelphia, preached.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

EDITORIALS

Honor Roll, 1946

AT THE close of each year we present the names of a number of Church men and women who have served Christ and his Church well during the year, or through the years. Nominations are made by readers; selections are made by the editorial board. The 1946 Honor Roll:

Angus Dun, the Bishop of Washington, whose five lectures on "The Struggle of the Church to be the Church" under the William Henry Hoover lectureship at the University of Chicago, was an outstanding event in American Christianity.

Virginia Gildersleeve, for her contribution to education and world peace.

Elwood Lindsay Haines, the Bishop of Iowa, for the fine leadership given in that diocese.

Daphne Hughes, who is doing an excellent job as the executive secretary of the Youth Consultation Service in the diocese of Newark.

Kenneth Hughes, rector of St. Bartholomew's, Cambridge, who conscientiously and courageously battles for social justice.

Lucy Mason, who, as public relations representative of the CIO in the South, has done much to bring about better understanding between the Church and organized labor.

Joseph G. Moore, for effectively organizing field work at Seabury - Western Seminary, and for going to Columbia, Tennessee, at the time of race riots to do what he could in that situation in the name of the Church.

Owen D. Roberts, the first layman to be President of the House of Deputies, who presided throughout General Convention with skill, fairness and humor.

William Scarlett, the Bishop of Missouri, for editing Christianity Takes a Stand and seeing that it was published inexpensively thus assuring a wide distribution.

Charles P. Taft, for his statesman-like address at the dinner of the evangelical societies at General Convention and for being the first laymen to be elected president of the Federal Council of Churches.

Charles F. Whiston, now on the faculty of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, who effectively laid the foundations for the teamwork now successfully carried on between the Congregational and Episcopal Churches in Ashfield, Massachusetts.

David McC. Williams, for his contributions to Church music as the organist and choir director at St. Bartholomew's, New York.

Donald M. Wright, for his notable work as the executive director of the Church Society for College Work.

It has been our policy from the inception of the Honor Roll not to cite those who have been on previous lists. We present their names without citations:

1941: William A. Eddy, Joseph F. Fletcher, Mrs. Joseph F. Fletcher, John Gass, Charles K. Gilbert, Paul Jones, Maury Maverick, William Fellows Morgan, William C. Munds, Robert W. Patton, Clinton S. Quin, Vida D. Scudder, Edwin S. Smith, Robert N. Spencer, Claude W. Sprouse, Frank W. Sterrett, Samuel Thorne, Gardner C. Tucker, Mary van Kleeck, Jerry Voorhis, Harold J. Weaver.

1942: Harry Beal, Stafford Cripps, Lewis B. Franklin, Mrs. John Henry Hammond, Charles A. Higgins, William Kirk, Felix Kloman, W. Appleton Lawrence, Herman Page, J. Lindsay Patton, Henry H. Shires, Mrs. Mary Simkhovitch, Henry St. George Tucker, Henry Wallace, Wendell Willkie.

1943: C. C. Burlingham, Wolcott Cutler, Genie Daly, Gardiner M. Day, Winfred Douglas, John Henry Edwards, David E. Gibson, Mrs. John E. Hill, Frederick B. Howden, Annie Parks, Edward L. Parsons, George Plaskett, Gilbert P. Symons, Beverley D. Tucker, Nettie Whitford.

1944: Edward F. Colcock, William V. Dennis, Elizabeth Frazier, Joseph C. Grew, Helen G. Hogue, Harry W. Horn, David R. Hunter, John H. Johnson, Sherman Johnson, Henry Kaiser, Ivey Lewis, Elmore McKee, Charles S. Mott, Mary Louis Pardee, Ellis Van Riper, Howard Chandler Robbins, Henry Knox Sherrill, Percy R. Stockman, William Temple, Edgar L. Tiffany, Henry B. Washburn, Theodore O. Wedel, Sumner Welles.

1945: All Chaplains, Chester Bowles, Stephen R. Davenport, Jr., C. G. Hamilton, Eric Johnston, C. D. B. King, Harry Kennedy, Daisuke Kitagawa, F. H. LaGuardia, Mrs. Stephen Mahon, Richard Morford, Walter P. Morse, Mrs. Arthur Sherman, Edward Stettinius, Helen Turnbull, Raymond Walsh, Francis Wei, Charles C. Wilson, Doris K. Wright.

"QUOTES"

THE few men whom I know who are cheerfully giving their lives to the service of their fellowmen owe their inspiration for such service to Jesus Christ and to some influence that the Church in some form has had upon their lives. The difficulty is not with the function of the Church. The difficulty is that so few men are willing to abandon their personal selfishness, and to put on worship as a garment, and to endure hardship as good soldiers, in order to create an atmosphere in which liberty, righteousness and justice is even a remote possibility.

—Irving P. Johnson.

Positive Steps

THE delegates left the closing session of the General Assembly of the United Nations with smiles on their faces and optimism in their hearts. They, along with the rest of us, believe that real and positive steps have been taken towards the establishment of world peace and justice. The General Assembly agreed in principle on world disarmament, created a trusteeship council, chose a permanent home, created economic commissions for world reconstruction, took definite steps against Franco's Spanish regime, clarified some of the misunderstanding on the veto issue and established the International Refugee Organization. Compared with any Christian's dreams, this may not seem like much. Compared with what most of us realistically expected, it's a wonderful gift for the new year, 1947. Although there still are many complex problems to be dealt with, nevertheless we feel that the engine is on the track, the boiler is stoked and the wheels are beginning to turn.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The important thing is still: patience. It would be well for us to bear in mind Norman Corwin's words from On A Note of Triumph, "It takes a second to break a peace but a long time to put it together again." In considering this most recent phase of that long reconstruction process, we would like to say to all concerned that, by and large, they have done a fine job and that we appreciate the "to be continued" sign which they have hung over the entrance to 1947.

Off the Recocrd

THE words "Off the record" are inviolate with reputable newspaper men. Two of the sessions of the international institute on the United Nations, reported here December 5, were off the record affairs and were so treated by our reporter who attended all the sessions. The fact that The Living Church violated the ruling, in reporting the institute in its number of December 15, concerns that publication and the officers of the commission for a just and durable peace of the Federal Council. We merely state that the institute would have been reported more fully in THE WITNESS had we been free to do so.

The Parish Teaching Family

by Kenneth R. Forbes
Recently of the staff of Calvary Church, Philadelphia

IN a one hour session of the "parish teaching family" there are four kinds of activity of about equal duration,—an instruction given by the priest, or by a thoroughly trained and specially gifted layman; the catechising, which is a short series of questions and answers on the subject of the instruction of the Sunday before; the homily, which is always given by the priest, and a very informal period of prayers and acts of devotion. Between these four activities hymns or canticles are sung.

The catechising serves as a brief, terse recalling of the subject of the previous Sunday. Every child is asked at least one question. Each Sunday has a definite subject of its own which is logically connected with that of the week before and of the week that will follow. The raw material of all the subjects is the Prayer Book catechism. For example, the first subject in the course is Covenants; the instruction and homily dealing with principle of agreements, keeping one's word, personal responsibility, etc. The second subject, growing naturally out of the first is, of course, the baptismal covenant. The instruction, taking up the special subject for the day, makes its appeal frankly to the children's intellects. It is information, pure and simple and precise, with a profusion of very concrete illustrations that are familiar to the child's everyday experience. During the instruction there is opportunity given for the children to ask questions. The homily takes the same subject as the instruction and makes it appeal definitely and exclusively to the youngsters' emotions and will. It is always given from the pulpit. (It might well be said, in passing, that it is essential in this method that all sessions should be held in the church.) The special period of the prayers is devoted to informal common prayer, partly led by the priest (who will be kneeling in the aisle in the midst of the children), partly by the children in unison, using special prayers and acts of devotion which they are learning gradually through the course of the season. Special occasions for intercession and for thanksgiving growing out of the children's personal lives are always a part of this period.

The very simple requirements of the children between Sundays are the memorizing of the answers for the catechising of the coming Sunday (for which each one is furnished a copy of questions and answers) and the writing of what is commonly called an analysis. This amounts to about one typewriter-size page in the average size child's handwriting. The content of the analysis is a summary of the teaching given in the instruction or the homily and a prayer in the child's own words. Sometimes the child's analysis takes the form of pertinent queries of his own about the subject of the instruction. This is especially valuable to the priest because it gives him a line on how well or ill his instructions have gotten into the children's minds. These analyses are collected at the beginning of each Sunday session and returned to the children the following Sunday with brief comments marked on them by the priest and with a definite mark indicating their quality.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

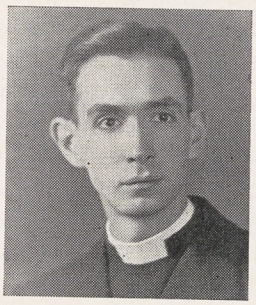
Each member of the parish teaching family has a credit card on file, on which a grade mark is given each week under the heads of attendance, behaviour, catechising and analysis. A perfect record is 10 points, of which attendance is given 1, behaviour 2, catechising 3 and analysis 4.

A very important feature of the parish teaching family is the system of proctors. The proctors are mature young people (such as we have been accustomed to consider good teaching material). Each one has three or four children assigned to him, with whom he sits during the Sunday session. He maintains order and attention in his little group and leads his children in their prayers. Outside the Sunday sessions he is given definite responsibility for keeping in touch with each of his children between Sundays, encouraging and helping with the writing of the analyses and cultivating a friendship with the family of each child, trying especially to give the parents some clear notion of just what the teaching family is aiming to do for and with their children. Having no personal responsibility for the actual instruction of the children, the young proctor is able to have his interest and enthusiasm enlisted in something that he can do well,—making friends with his special charges and their families. It is not too much to say that the work of these proctors, —once they understand the simpleness, but vital importance of their duties—can make or break any parish teaching family. Before anything is done to put this system to work in a parish, it is imperative that the rector should gather his prospective proctors together in a series of careful, explicit instructions about the general principles of the teaching family in their parish and very definitely explain to them what their special duties are and how very important they will become for the success of the undertaking.

Here is the very meagre outline, pretty much devoid of the breath of life which any true picture of a live parish teaching family would have. But it is the best I can do within the sharp limits of a short article. If it shall serve to arouse enough curiosity here and there among parish priests, perplexed and harried by the problems of the conventional Sunday school (which they had come to consider among the melancholy inevitables of life, like death and taxes), to send them to the sources, or at least to seek fuller and clearer light on this whole subject of a parish teaching family, I shall be content. And if I may be permitted to serve any such inquirers as a one-man Bureau of Information as to how and where to find such clearer and fuller light in tangible form, I shall be happy and grateful.



The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.

Professor at Episcopal Theological School

The Presbyterian Prayer Book

THE hue and cry raised about the imperiled security of The Book of Common Prayer should the proposed basis of union between our Church and the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. have been so much as studied by our people might have been a little more temperate, if some parties concerned had taken the trouble to examine the new prayer book, issued last May, by the Presbyterian Church. It is the third edition of The Book of Common Worship, approved by the General Assembly of 1944. Copies may be obtained in any Presbyterian Bookstore, or by writing the Westminster Press, Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia—leather edition, $3.50; fabrikoid, $2.00. During the coming triennium of continued negotiations we would do well to familiarize ourselves with its contents, not only to understand better the mind and heart of a great Christian communion, but also to make our acquaintance with one of the most noteworthy contributions to the liturgical revival of our time.

The two previous editions of The Book of Common Worship (1906; rev. 1931) were both prepared under the chairmanship of the late Rev. Dr. Henry Van Dyke, distinguished pastor, educator, author and diplomat. (Two of his hymns are in The Hymnal 1940, Nos. 281 and 511.) In 1941 it was designated "an official publication." The revised edition was adopted also for "optional and selective use" by the southern Presbyterian Church's General Assembly in 1932. It is true that these books are not obligatory. I have no statistics as to how many Presbyterian ministers use any or all of them. But I am certain that their use is growing and will continue to do so in the coming years.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

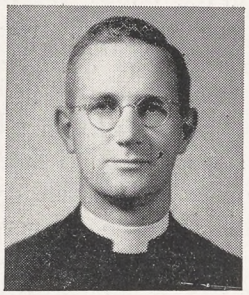
We would find ourselves readily at home in this Presbyterian book. One-fourth of its prayers are in our own Prayer Book. The only services we would miss—or would we?—are the Penitential Office, the Offices of Instruction, and the Churching of Women. Alas, there are no tables for finding the Golden Numbers! But the Christian Year is adequately recognized none the less, with collects and prayers and a two-year lectionary, including epistles and gospels, for all the Sundays and the principal holy days. Isaiah is begun in Advent and Genesis on Septuagesima, which is named quite sensibly the Third Sunday before Lent.

At the beginning of the book is a brief section of prayers of "Preparation for Worship" for the people, the minister, the session and the choir. They are superb. Then follow the orders for public worship, five each for morning and evening, a special order, and two each for children and for young people. These orders are patterned almost exactly on our Daily Office—as normally used on Sundays in our parishes: Hymn, Call to Worship (i.e., opening sentences), a collect of Adoration (an admirable feature), a confession and assurance of pardon, psalms with Gloria, two lessons with a hymn or anthem between, the Creed—Apostles' or Nicene, prayers ending with the Lord's Prayer, offertory, doxology or offertory prayers, hymn and Benediction. The sermon may come after the Creed, or the prayers, or the offertory. In the evening services the prayers are put in litany form. In the morning services the prayers always include the elements of thanksgiving, supplication, intercession, and a specific memorial of the communion of saints. A rich collection of material this is indeed—and all of it in language dignified and rhymical. There is also a fine collection of litanies, besides those in the evening services. One is based on our own, though shorter, and the others are litanies of the Holy Spirit, the Church, Our Country, and Labor.

The Ten Commandments are used as a separate service, and also as one of the three preparation services for Holy Communion, the other two being one built around the Beatitudes (shades of Dr. Huntington!) and the passion and resurrection of Christ. There are also services for the dedication of an organ and of other church furnishings. The Family Prayer section is in my opinion far superior to ours—there is more variety, the services are shorter, and the language is more modern.

(To be continued)



Strategy and Tactics

by

FRANCIS O. AYRES

Rector of St. John's, Waterbury, Connecticut

THIS week I would like to discuss some of the implications of the breakdown in communications of which I wrote last. The canon on marriage requires that the officiating clergyman "shall instruct the contracting parties as to the nature of holy matrimony, its responsibilities, and the means of grace which God has provided through his Church." My own experience and the experience of others with whom I have talked lead me to believe that when taken seriously this clause leads to almost complete frustration in four out of five cases. Couples will eagerly accept instruction or literature on "the sex factor in marriage." They welcome frank advice on the matter of finances. They quickly get the point that it is necessary for husband and wife to "talk things out" (though they usually lose the train of thought when the need, occasional at least, for spiritual counseling is stressed). They will listen politely, even attentively, while the clergyman talks in platitudes about the need for the Church in holy matrimony.

But when fundamentals, such as the Christian truth, "God is love," are discussed in detail and at length, a look of bewildered incomprehension comes over the faces of the prospective bride and groom. It is not so much that they do not want to understand; it is simply that they cannot grasp what is being said. How could it be otherwise when in the movies, over the radio, through books and magazines, in biology courses, and through the pagan world in which they live they are taught that love has nothing to do with God, let alone that "God is love?"

Love is what happens when "Mr. Right" walks into a restaurant and sees "the only girl in the world" sitting at the counter. There may be downs in the progress of true love followed by corresponding ups, but love never grows beyond the point reached in that first encounter. Love is an unendurable agony indefinitely prolonged as experienced by Mary Brown on the Joyful (?) Soap Program. Or love is something you have but may lose for some inconsequential reason entirely beyond your control—a fact which is corroborated weekly and monthly in scores of magazines. Multiply these assumptions by a few hundred and you know why the attempt to fulfill the instruction requirement in our marriage canon is up against an almost insurmountable barrier.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

I do not mean, of course, that we should toss in the sponge. I do believe however that unless we recognize the implications of the breakdown in communication, we are like a fighter who enters the ring blindfolded. The recent translation of the New Testament has been rightly hailed by men and women who are well grounded in the Christian faith. To others however it might almost as well be written in Greek. Wrest the Sermon on the Mount or the parable of the Good Samaritan from their context in the Gospel and anyone can understand them, but St. John and St. Paul remain a closed book to all but a few who have the time and the energy to study their writings. Look up a sermon of John Wesley's. As you may already know, you will find it heavy going for his sermons were theological treatises, full of biblical quotations, and yet the men and women of his day, the "common man", not only understood but were converted by the hundreds.

No matter which way you turn in a parish you come up against this barrier of communication. In preaching, in teaching, in worship, in evangelism, in pastoral counseling, in everything it is the same story. The Church is still winning recruits —some on good solid ground, others on promises of a "better world", "peace", the disappearance of delinquency in a community, promises on which the Church has absolutely no reason to believe it can deliver. The tragedy is that people are drifting away from the Church in much greater numbers than they are being converted and we have no way, at present, of making ourselves understood when we call them back.

SANCTUARY

Conducted by W. M. Weber

"I was hungry . . .

Hunger is something that many people in America will never understand. In 600 miles of marching through Germany, I learned something about hunger. In our column of American prisoners, hunger was more than a feeling; it was a haunting sensation. It never left us. This was a hunger we had never known before. It was the hunger of men who marched every day, who could never fill their stomachs or find in food the energy they needed. We felt the weakness in our bodies and knew that we were getting scrawny. It was a new feeling to get up after ten hours sleep and still feel tired — not sleepy, but tired. Night after night we dreamed that we were eating. Hour after hour on the march we talked of food. Food became an obsession. In our column were a former restaurant manager and a soda fountain owner, and for entire afternoons at a time they "led the discussion" of food. We thought with envy of the soup lines in America's depression. We dreamed of magnificently spending twenty-five cents a day on food. How much bread that would buy! . . .

I wonder if hunger is not a bigger thing in human history than most of us realise. Perhaps this is the reason that many Americans cannot understand the indolence and lethargy of some of our southern Negroes and "poor whites," or of vast Asiatic populations. I have no imagination of what hunger might mean when it lasts for year after year. It could have much to do with the hopelessness of millions in India and China. It makes more remarkable the vigorous energies of Chinese guerillas and of the Japanese nation.

—Roger Shinn, Recollections of War, Christianity and Society, Fall 1945.

. . . and you fed me not."

New Books

Excellent Good *Fair

_Nine O'Clock Talks_ by the Rev. Frederic B. Kellogg. Privately printed. 75c.

This is a booklet of thirteen short sermons—very short indeed, but they are not "sermonettes" —by the chaplain to Episcopalian students in Cambridge. The author has made an art of brevity, and has evidently taken to heart the College Work Society dictum that sermons must be very short or very good. These are both: written in a compact style in rather small paragraphs, so that each paragraph is like an epigram, only rather longer than usual.

The style makes a most readable book, but it is obvious that such sermons could be preached only to a group of people who were extremely alert intellectually. Indirectly, the book points up the critical necessity of having qualified clergy serve such groups.

The book would make a splendid remembrance for people who have sons or daughters in college.

—H. McC.

* * *

_Heralds of God_ by James S. Stewart. Scribners, $2.50.

This is a book to be read by every minister, young and old. For the young minister it will serve as a valuable guide to his preaching. To the older minister who feels that his sermons are lacking in vitality it comes as a refreshing inspiration. It is a book for today dealing as it does with a world living in a state of tension and struggling between disillusionment and hope, realism and escapism, scepticism and faith. The author stresses the dangers the preacher has to face in his ministry and urges him to never allow any fog of spiritual defeatism chill his message. The Christian faith needs no apology. It is the most dynamic power in the world, "tingling and vibrating with the wonder of its own evangel." Certainly a book to be read not only by the clergy but by the layman, too.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

—E. O. Robathan.

* * *

Christian Faith and My Job* by Alexander Miller. Association Press, $1.

There has been a good deal in our pages about the Iona Community in Scotland, which means I am sure that many of our readers will be particularly interested in this exciting book, since Lex Miller was a minister there for several years. It is an extremely challenging book on the conflicts that arise as a result of a man's convictions as a Christian and the way he makes his living. The book is written especially for young people and certainly a clergyman would be hard put to it to find a book better suited for a discussion group. It hits right where people live, day by day.

The book is published by the new department of Association Press, Haddam House, with an editorial committee of distinguished educators and religious leaders assigned the responsibility for bringing out books dealing with moral and religious questions and the needs of young men and women. If the standard set by this book by Mr. Miller is maintained then Haddam House has a bright and useful future.

—W. B. S.

* * *

Sing In Praise* by Opal Wheeler. E. P. Dutton & Co. $3.00.

Opal Wheeler has presented a group of twenty-five of the great Protestant hymns in a setting that will appeal to a child. The music of many of our best loved hymns which are familiar to today's children is difficult for them to learn. Opal Wheeler has made musical arrangements of these hymns which will not be too difficult for the average youthful musician to play and for his own vocal tone range to follow. For nineteen of the hymns she has told the origin of the hymn or given an interesting biographical sketch about the composer or the poet who wrote the lyric. This feature makes the book quite unique in value. In her illustrations for each hymn, Marjorie Torrey has combined rare beauty of color and design with a spirit both reverent and gaily childlike.

Sing In Praise is a book that will have appeal for all ages, for parents as well as the children, a perfect volume for homes which stress both music and religion.

—W. B. S.

Broad or Lazy?

By

G. I. HILLER

Rector of Trinity Church, Miami

"I WANT my children to grow up to enjoy the best in religion, and in everything else, but I do not think I should commit them to any Church in their childhood. When they come of age they may choose for themselves."

How often we hear that, or similar sentiment expressed.

Nothing could be more silly. If the idea were to be carried out literally, the child would grow up without any education, physical training, manners, patriotism or anything else.

Such a child would, unfortunately, have no standards by which to judge—no consciousness perhaps of what he needed—only a sense of longing for something undefined.

He would, of necessity, be like the heathen of some dark area or era, seeking expression for the instinctive longing placed in him by the creator to find his God. If he built a totem-pole or some other shrine, it would not be surprising.

The honest parent, no matter what his doubts or problems may be, will dedicate his child to the best religious instruction he can find. Do it deliberately, without prejudice, and by personal instruction and leadership because those attributes of parental responsibility are perhaps the most important. "Not what I say, but what I do," is the leadership the child gets first, and the thing that sticks out in all instruction.

It is not broad-minded to say, "I will let the child choose when he reaches years of discretion" —that is ignorance or laziness.

If you want to be broad-minded, and that seems to be the dominant aim of those who express themselves this way, then let me say to you—"give the child the best you can in both precept and example," and say to him, "that is the best I know, and with advancing years may you grow in grace." That is giving God a chance with the child, and better still, it is giving the child a chance to find God.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Christian Education Leaders Meet in Washington

Discuss the Main Features of Working Plan For Character Education in Church School

Edited by Sara Dill

Washington:—Christian education leaders of the third province found a new hope for the solution of some of the problems of their work at their third annual conference held at the College of Preachers. The conference speaker was Dr. Ernest Ligon, professor of psychology and director of the character research project at Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., who initiated representatives of ten of the province's thirteen dioceses into the main features of a working plan for character education through the church school. Those present were so convinced of the basic soundness and efficacy of the plan that they adopted a resolution asking the department of Christian education of the National Council to study Dr. Ligon's methods and the schools now in the research project with a view to orienting our Christian education work along the same lines.

Basic principles of the plan include ideas and concepts already stated in Dr. Ligon's two books, The Psychology of Christian Personality and Their Future is Now, both of which are familiar to most workers in this important area of the Church's work. Founded on the principles enunciated in the Beatitudes, a carefully chosen list of desired attitudes was prepared, and tests of children's knowledge and understanding of the words, interpretation and application of the attitude were made. The list of attitudes has been constantly revised on the basis of objectives testing of children in the schools enrolled in the project, and also on the evidence presented in weekly reports made by parents of these children and by the teachers in the church school. For several years curricular materials have been prepared for teaching the students, and forms for parent interviews at the beginning of each unit have also been devised. It is not expected that they will be available for consumer churches—those not participating in the research program—before another five years have passed.

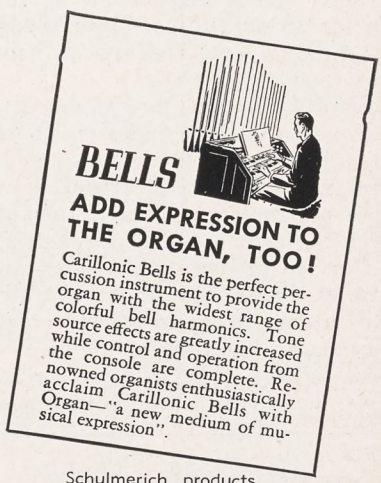
Those in attendance at the conference were particularly interested in the operation of church schools which have such unusual features as waiting lists of 150 persons who would like to teach in them, and enrollment in nursery departments which is closed a year in advance, as well as in schools where the greatest interest and growth comes in the junior high school level. These departures from usual church school situations appear to be rooted in a psychologically sound and educationally adequate curriculum based on evidence rather than opinion; on constant evaluation of practices and procedures and change when it is indicated; and on a closely integrated home-school relationship, in which parents as well as teachers prepare weekly reports of their children's activities and attitudes in specific terms of the subject being studied.

Three sessions of the conference were devoted to discussing the plan, questioning Dr. Ligon about special application, and working out means for further study and some experimentation along the lines suggested in the study. The application of this method to a liturgical Church was one of the major questions in the discussions, satisfactorily answered by Dr. Ligon. The first Episcopal Church to enter the research project is Christ Church, Lexington, of which the Rev. James W. Kennedy is rector. The plan will be put into partial operation early in 1947, and in full use in the fall term of the church school.

The conference at the College of preachers was under the chairmanship of Mrs. Stanley Rogers, chairman of the provincial commission on Christian education.

Church in India

Buck Hill Falls, Pa.:—Future Church activity in India must take into account the rapid change occurring there, James K. Mathews told delegates to the annual meeting here of the board of missions and church extension of the Methodist Church. Dr. Mathews, associate secretary for India, said independence, once a seemingly remote dream of the



WITH

Carillonic Bells

Let your church tower pour out the ever glorious songs of The Saviour's birth through the rich, golden voice of Schulmerich Carillonic Bells. Here is the instrument best fitted to translate the songs of the ages into songs in the air, with tones of purest beauty.

You may have the joyous voice of Carillonic Bells in your church at Christmas. No season could be more appropriate to plan for a memorial that proclaims joy and peace to every heart and home.

Schulmerich products are sold through direct factory representatives. For complete information, address dept. W-19.

Schulmerich ELECTRONICS, INC.

SELLERSVILLE, PA.

CARILLONIC BELLS · TOWER MUSIC SYSTEMS · ACOUSTIC CORRECTION UNITS · SOUND DISTRIBUTION SYSTEMS · CHURCH HEARING AIDS

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Nationalists, appears about to come true.

"It is striking to find that Englishmen in India at every level of life seem to favor it," Mathews said. "It is notable that the thousands of British soldiers in the country during the war years were almost unanimous in their expression of India's right of self-determination."

The missions leader predicted an increased movement of the people to cities, coupled with a great advance of industrialization.

"All the attendant circumstances —crowded housing, lack of sanitation, problems of hygiene and health, disease, and morality are arising and will continue to arise," he pointed out.

"It would be a mistake to regard Indian Christians as removed from these trends. They are not and cannot be mere onlookers but must be participants in the stream of events which lie ahead."

Dean Honored

Erie, Pa.:—With Bishops Sawyer of Erie and Bishop Kirchhoffer of Indianapolis present in the sanctuary St. Paul's Cathedral, Erie, observed the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Very Rev. Francis B. Blodgett as dean Sunday, December 22. The arrangements for the special recognition of Dean Blodgett's service at the Cathedral and in the city and diocese of Erie was arranged months ago by the chapter and the late Bishop Wroth. Both Bishops taking part in the service are former students of Dean Blodgett at the General Theological Seminary and old friends.

Sunday afternoon the chapter gave a reception to Dean and Mrs. Blodgett in the chapter house when representatives of all civic organizations were present as well as churchmen from the cathedral and the diocese.

During the twenty-five years the chapter house has been built, the church completely remodeled and a substantial increase in the endowment secured. The membership has also increased through unusually large classes confirmed each year. Dean Blodgett has been very active in all civic affairs as well as diocesan affairs having served on the standing committee for a number of years and was a deputy to the last General Convention.

International Service

Alexandria, Va.:—The world-wide extent of the Anglican Church was strikingly illustrated at a service here in the chapel of the Virginia Seminary on December 12, when a young student from Missouri was ordained by a Chinese bishop with a Spanish born archdeacon from Cuba taking part in the service. The young man was D. William McClurken; the bishop was the Rt. Rev. Robin T. S. Chen; the archdeacon was the Venerable Romualdo Gonzalez who has been taking a refresher course at the seminary since General Convention. Mr. McClurken graduates next month and is to work in the diocese of Missouri.

Bishop Thomson Dies

Miami, Fla.: — Bishop Arthur C. Thomson, retired bishop of Southern Virginia, died here on December 16th. He retired in 1937. He became suffragan of the diocese in 1917; was elected coadjutor in 1919 and became diocesan in 1930 upon the death of Bishop Beverley D. Tucker.

Klan Denounced

Chattanooga, Tenn. (RNS):—The Pastors Association here has denounced the Ku Klux Klan and any organization "which seeks to usurp the authority of the law and which foments racial, religious, and cultural animosities." The statement

ST. JAMES LESSONS

A nine course series of instruction for Episcopal Church Schools including illustrated work books—150-250 pages (60c each) and teachers' manuals (I, II, III 40c each, IV through IX 60c each).

No Samples Payment with orders

St. James Lessons, Inc.
865 Madison Ave. New York 21, N.Y.

ANNOUNCING
Anniversary Series of
ORGAN RECITALS

Jan. 14—T. Frederick H. Candlyn, Mus. D.
St. Thomas Church, New York

Jan. 21—Paul S. Callaway, F.A.G.O.
Washington Cathedral

Jan. 28—Clarence Watters, Mus. M.
Trinity College, Hartford, Conn.

Feb. 4—Walter Baker, F.A.G.O.
First Baptist Church, Philadelphia

All Recitals at 8:30 P.M.

Saint Thomas Chapel
60th Street, East of Third Avenue
New York City

FIRST-CAUSE CAPITAL "F" FREEDOM

"Aren't you interested in anything but Freedom?" inquired a critical pastor who feels we ought to be championing other social attitudes in our Crusade.

We are interested in ALL social and religious problems but we crusade for Freedom and Freedom only—spiritual, first-cause, capital "F" Freedom.

Our crusade doesn't try to deal with economic, social, or political problems except as they are involved directly in Freedom. We don't try to solve the problems of strikes, rising prices, lack of meat, minority groups, racial tensions, wars, social justice, drunkenness, or any other, except Freedom.

If Freedom is preserved categorical freedoms can survive and social, economic, and political problems can be worked out through the democratic process. But Freedom can't be taken for granted. Recent trends threaten it.

No small "f" freedom has ever inspired free men to crusade on its behalf. But for spiritual Freedom man has instituted renaissance, reformation, revolution and revival. He will do it again. For man as a child of God has certain spiritual rights and Freedoms which he must not yield and which the state must not be permitted to usurp.

All collectivisms are un-American and anti-Christian. The avowed enemies of Freedom. Only wishful thinkers feel Freedom is not in danger in America. A thousand new ministers a month are joining this Crusade. Many of them because Paul Hutchinson's recent book The New Leviathan has convinced them "it can happen here." Would you like boiled-down reprints of the book for distribution to your parish? May we send you our monthly bulletin, and a new booklet setting forth our philosophy, background, program and plans?

SPIRITUAL MOBILIZATION
(Since 1934)
Los Angeles Chicago New York

Advisory Committee

Chairman, DONALD J. COWLING, President Carleton College 1909-1945; ROGER W. BABSON, Statistician; WILLIAM F. BRAASCH, Board of Trustees, American Medical Association; UPTON CLOSE, Author, Commentator; ELY CULBERTSON, Author, Lecturer; CARY EGGLESTON, Physician; DE WITT EMERY, Founder National Small Business Men's Association; JAMES W. FIFIELD, JR., Founder and Director Spiritual Mobilization, Minister First Congregational Church of Los Angeles; EDGAR J. GOODSPEED, Bible Scholar, Author; THEODORE GRAEBNER, Professor Theology, Author; ALFRED P. HAAKE, Economist, Lecturer; ALBERT W. HAWKES, United States Senator; SAM HIGGINBOTTOM, Missionary; RUPERT HUGHES, Author; RUFUS B. VON KLEINSMID, Chancellor University of Southern California; ROBERT A. MILLIKAN, President California Institute of Technology; FELIX MORLEY, Author, Editor; ALFRED NOYES, Author; NORMAN VINCENT PEALE, Clergyman; LEONARD E. READ, President Foundation for Economic Education, Inc.; ROBERT GORDON SPROUL, President University of California; JOHN J. TIGERT, President University of Florida; RAY LYMAN WILBUR, Chancellor Leland Stanford University.

SPIRITUAL MOBILIZATION
Title Guarantee Bldg. Dept. W12
Los Angeles 13, Calif.

I am a minister and in sympathy with your Crusade for Spiritual Freedom. Place me on your representative list to receive your publications.

NAME .....
CHURCH .....
STREET .....
CITY ..... STATE .....

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

followed a demonstration in Rossville, Tenn., by 40 robed men who paraded in Ku Klux Klan garb and carried symbols of that organization. Ministers and the members of their congregations were urged to "disclaim any sympathy, membership, or responsibility with any such organization."

Presiding Bishop Home

New York:—A meeting of the committee on a residence for the Presiding Bishop was held December 9th, with Bishop Sherrill there to present his ideas. He explained the need for a residence within thirty miles of New York, with a house for the Presiding Bishop's residence and a larger house for a hostel. A chapel should be a part of the plan, and there should be accommodations for conferences of such groups as the Presiding Bishop might desire from time to time; also possible accommodations for returned missionaries and their families.

The Rev. Horace W. Donegan, rector of St. James'. New York, heads a committee to publicize the need for such a residence and Col Jackson A. Dykman of Brooklyn is the chairman of a committee to consider available properties.

Gifts to Kenyon

Gambier, O.:—Five gifts totalling $92,000 have recently been received by Kenyon College, bringing the total funds received by the college during this year to well over half a million dollars.

Nashotah Dean

New Orleans:—Dean William H. Nes of Christ Church Cathedral here announced to his congregation on December 15 that he has accepted the deanship of Nashotah House, effective September 1, 1947. He has been dean in New Orleans for nearly twenty years.

Gifts o Children

Erie, Pa.:—Nearly a thousand Christmas presents were sent to missions in Alaska and Arizona by the church schools of the diocese of Erie. The effort was directed by Miss Margaretha A. Stach, diocesan consultant in education.

Bishop is Honored

Brooklyn, N. Y.:—A special service in honor of Bishop Larned, who is to leave on January 18 for Switzerland to take charge of the Churches in Europe, was held December 8 at the Church of the Messiah-Incarnation. A large number of the clergy of the diocese were present. Bishop Larned in his sermon expressed his thanks to the people of the diocese for their support and friendship over the period of seventeen years that he served as suffragan and he urged them to realize the great need of unity and to work unselfishly toward that end. The offering at the service, about $500, was presented to Bishop Larned for his discretionary fund.

Raise Salary

Boston: — The special convention of the diocese of Massachusetts held December 11th by unanimous vote raised the salary of the bishop from $10,000 to $12,000; his expense account from $1,980 to $3,000, with an allowance of $2,500 to defray living expenses if he chooses not to reside at the bishop's house. The convention also voted to raise the salary of the suffragan bishop from $7,000 to $8,000 and his expense account from $1,800 to $2,300.

Money Comes In

New York:—Treasurer Lewis B. Franklin of the National Council reports that up to December 1, 87% of 1946 expectations had been paid, with expectations of nineteen dioceses and districts having been paid in full. There is approximately a quarter million dollars to be received before the books close for the year.

Rural Work

Gambier, O.:—The first piece of rural work of the department of rural work of Bexley Hall Theological Seminary was the opening of Bedell Chapel, a small country

J. WIPPELL & Co LTD
Established 18th Century
Clerical Tailors & Robe Makers

SPECIAL OFFER: CLERGY CASSOCKS

Wippell Cassocks, individually cut and tailored, incorporate all the little refinements of detail which make for so much extra comfort and convenience in wear

Single or Double Breasted, of Fine All Wool Serge $39.50

Quotation does not include Cincture, Belt or Girdle

Clergy Surplice, Slightly Gathered
Pure Irish Linen $13.50

Clerical Cloaks to cover cassock, Waterproof Melton $39.00

Patterns sent on application

55 & 56, High Street, EXETER, England
(also 11, Tufton Street, Westminster, S.W.1, London, Eng.)

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

church several miles from here on Sunday afternoon, December 8. The students of the seminary conducted a survey of the country around the chapel and found a good group of children for Sunday school and many adults who wished to have the church's services. Regular services and Sunday school will be held by Bexley students under the direction of the Rev. R. Emmet Gribbin, rector of Harcourt Parish, Gambier. Bedell Chapel was built by Bishop Bedell of Ohio in 1891 and for many years a flourishing rural work was done there. Several years ago the chapel was closed but now under the enthusiastic leadership of the Bexley students there is promise of new life and success for the Church in this rural field.

Nisei Memorial

Washington (RNS):—A serviceman's chapel at the Fresno, Calif. army air forces training center will become a memorial to American-born Japanese who fought and died for the nation in World War II, the War Assets Administration reported here in announcing allocation by the Army Chief of Chaplains of three more surplus chapels. The Fresno chapel was assigned to the Congregational church of Fresno, which has a membership of American-born Japanese. The Rev. George Aki, pastor of the church, was the only American-born Japanese chaplain in the army, serving with the famous 100th Battalion of Nisei Japanese which recently received a unit citation from the President.

Race Relations

Hartford, Conn.: — Encouraging progress toward harmony in race relations is evident in reports of the Connecticut inter-racial commission. This agency was established by the state's General Assembly in 1943. Bishop Walter H. Gray has been chairman from the beginning.

The effects of inter-group tensions, the commission states, "fall most heavily upon three groups: Negroes, Jews, and Orientals, though in some localities and at some economic and social levels, persons with certain foreign backgrounds and certain religious groups, are penalized also. These effects take various forms: discrimination in employment; segregated and inadequate dwellings; limitation in educational opportunities; exclusion from places of public accommodation; discrim-

Send For This BIG · NEW · 1947 HANDBOOK For Sunday School Workers

112 Pages 1000 Illus.

Lists over 5000 Tested Helps and Ideas. A ready reference with complete descriptions of Lesson Helps, Story Papers, handwork, visual aids, gifts, books, etc. Everything you need to lead, teach or manage a Sunday School. Mail Coupon for Your FREE Copy NOW.

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

I am ☐ Pastor, ☐ Supt., ☐ Teacher, ☐ Worker in ☐ Begin., ☐ Pri., ☐ Jr., ☐ Inter-Sr., ☐ Y. P., ☐ Adult Dept(s). of_____Church

813-CS North Grove Avenue, Elgin, Illinois

DAVID C. COOK PUBLISHING COMPANY

Will the Main Thing be Forgotten?

Signs point to a time of drives for material reconstruction and expansion of Churches and Church institutions.

A great Bishop of bygone days wrote: "If it is necessary the Church of Christ can live without parish houses, organs, or even church buildings. It cannot go forward without trained leaders."

And a layman of our own day: "The Seminaries hold the key to the Church's future."

BERKELEY DIVINITY SCHOOL, NEW HAVEN, CONN.; BEXLEY HALL, GAMBIER, O.; BISHOP PAYNE DIVINITY SCHOOL, PETERSBURG, VA.; CHURCH DIVINITY SCHOOL OF THE PACIFIC, BERKELEY, CAL.; DIVINITY SCHOOL OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA; EPISCOPAL THEOLOGICAL SCHOOL, CAMBRIDGE, MASS.; THE GENERAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, NEW YORK CITY; NASHOTAH HOUSE, NASHOTAH, WIS.; SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF THE SOUTH, SEWANEE, TENN.; SEABURY-WESTERN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, EVANSTON, ILL.; VIRGINIA THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, ALEXANDRIA, VA.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

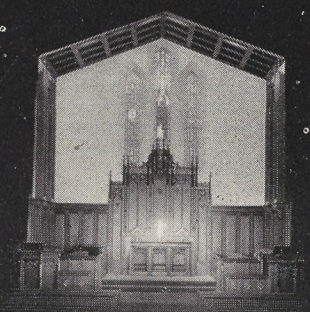
inatory advertising and unnecessary stress on race in crime reporting; prejudiced pamphlets, cartoons, and rumors."

The commission is "an agency of all the people of Connecticut, with obligations to majority and minority groups alike. Its objective is inter-group harmony and understanding." Such harmony, the commission states, "is best attained by the conciliatory adjustment of specific situations which, if left to develop, may result in tensions. Inter-group understanding requires a heavy emphasis on education for both school children and adults. The commission is able to improve inter-group relations only if each community actively cooperates by knowing its own problems and by seeking the solution."

"Splendid cooperation" is acknowledged from state, city, and town administrations, citizens' committees, school officials, newspaper editors, radio managers, all kinds of church groups, and civic and social clubs.

The November-December issue of the commission's four-page Inter-Racial Survey lists a number of suggestions for employers, based on experience in specific situations; lists also the free services and material available to the people of Connecticut, including movies, records, posters, books; and mentions some items of progress thus far, such as employment of Negroes in skilled work ("firms have reported Negroes serving as engineers, metallurgists, chemists, supervisors, machinists, instructors . . ."); increased opportunities for education and training ("in 1943 there were no Negroes in any Connecticut school of nursing except Yale University; now fourteen out of nineteen nursing schools have expressed willingness to accept qualified applicants without regard to race, religion, or national origin").

Acolyte Festival



Dallas, Tex.:—An acolyte festival, with 176 acolytes and clergy in procession, was held recently at the cathedral here. The sermon was by the Rev. Homer F. Rogers, college chaplain and rector at Denton, and there was an address by the Rev. Curtis W. V. Junker, director of education and youth.

Crusade Planned

Shanghai (wireless to RNS):—Plans for a three-year evangelistic crusade throughout China were discussed by Bishop W. Y. Chen, general secretary of the National Christian Council of China, at the organization's first postwar biennial conference here.

Bishop Chen said it was proposed to launch a forward movement in 1947 under the slogan "Christ for China," to be climaxed in 1950 when

CHANCEL ALTERATIONS

Pews - Church Woodwork

Ossit Church Furniture Co.

Janesville, Wisconsin

SINCE 1867

THE CHURCH PENSION FUND

and its subsidiaries

administered for the benefit of the Church

THE CHURCH HYMNAL CORPORATION

Publishers of The Hymnal; Book of Common Prayer; A Prayer Book for Soldiers and Sailors; Book of Offices for Certain Occasions; Stowe's Clerical Directory.

THE CHURCH LIFE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost insurance and annuity contracts available to the clergy, lay officials and active lay workers of the Church, either voluntary or paid, and their immediate families

THE CHURCH PROPERTIES FIRE INSURANCE CORPORATION

Low cost fire and windstorm insurance on property owned by or closely affiliated with the Church, and on the residences and personal property of the clergy.

Further information available by addressing any of the above at

20 Exchange Place New York

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Write us for
Organ Information
AUSTIN ORGANS, Inc.
Hartford, Conn.

VESTMENTS for CLERGY and CHOIR
Altar Linens . . . Embroideries . . .
Tailoring . . . Episcopal Flags. Send for Catalog
J. M. HALL, INC.
14 W. 40th St., New York - Tel. CH 4-3306
Office & Salesroom
American Distributor of Stained Glass Windows for James Powell & Sons (Whitefriars) Limited, London, England.

ALTAR BREADS ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED
SAINT MARY'S CONVENT
KENOSHA • WISCONSIN

MENEELY BELL CO.
22 RIVER ST., TROY, N. Y.
BELLS

ERNEST W. LAKEMAN
Designer and Worker in
STAINED GLASS
2 CRESCENT PLACE
YONKERS, NEW YORK

an invitation is expected to be extended to the World Christian Conference of the International Missionary Council to hold sessions in China.

Declaring that the crusade will "summon Christians throughout China to oppose civil war and contribute to peace and unity," he asserted that although China has enjoyed only 500 years of peace during its 4,000-year history, "the instinct for war can be transferred, sublimated, and Christianized."

Plenary sessions of the conference were devoted to three major topics: Christianizing of individuals, strengthening of the Christian churches, and promotion of evangelistic efforts. The sessions also stressed the importance of interdenominational cooperation in furthering evangelistic and social welfare plans.

Not Admitted

Seattle:—The biennial meeting of the Federal Council again turned down the application of the Universalist Church for admission. However, the door was left open by the appointment of a committee which is to report two years hence. Discussions with the Universalists will deal with the denomination's theological concepts, particularly those concerning the divinity of Christ, a point which was the issue in the refusal to admit the Church this year. The vote was by denominations with eight voting against admittance: the Reformed Church; the Methodist; Evangelical-United Brethren; Church of the Brethren; Evangelical and Reformed; United Presbyterian; Presbyterian USA; Episcopal. The Friends (Quakers); African Methodists; Congregational-Christian, and Disciples voted to admit the Universalists. Other Churches either did note vote or voted for further study.

Inter-Racial Meetings

Columbus, Ga.:—Protestant clergymen here and in Phenix City, Ala., have planned joint meetings of white and Negro pastors. The white pastors who are members of the ministerial alliance of the two cities named a committee to make arrangements for holding the meetings "not more than four times a year and not less than once a year."

Large Class

Warren, Pa.: — The largest class in the history of Trinity Church, here, was presented to Bishop Sawyer on a recent Sunday. Forty-six persons were presented by the rector, the Rev. B. H. M. Rutledge.

Everything for the Episcopal Church
but vestments
A broad statement but we'd like to prove it.
Ammidon and Company
Horace L. Varian
Horace L. Varian, Jr.
31 South Frederick Street
Baltimore 2, Maryland

PURE IRISH LINENS NOW IN STOCK
for all Church needs, supplies constantly arriving, good qualities, also fine cottons. Samples free.
Mary Fawcett Company
Plainfield, N. J. Box 146

CATHEDRAL STUDIOS
Washington & London, England. Linens and materials by the yard, surplices, albs, Altar Linens, stoles, burses & veils. Materials by the yard. See my NEW BOOK "CHURCH EMBROIDERY" & CHURCH VESTMENTS a complete instruction. 128 pages, 95 illus. Price $5.67. And my HANDBOOK for ALTAR GUILDS, price 50c. Miss L. V. Mackrille, 11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington 15, D.C. 30 minutes from U. S. Treasury. Tel Wisconsin 2752.

SURPLICES — STOLES
VESTMENTS
CHURCH HANGINGS
ALTAR LINENS
CASSOCKS
CLERICAL SUITS — CLOAKS
RABATS—RABAT VESTS—COLLARS—SHIRTS
Choir Vestments in All Styles
Inquiries Invited
C. M. ALMY & SON, INC.
562 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.

The Payne-Spiers Studios Inc.
Studios at Paterson, New Jersey
Carved Wood
Chancel Renovations Church Furnishings
Murals Memorials Tablets
Stained Glass
Inquiries Solicited

The Marriage Service
By Hugh McCandless
An explanation of the service, step by step. Several thousand copies were ordered before publication as a leaflet. Rectors will want copies to have on hand.
$3 for 100 copies
10c for single copies
THE WITNESS
135 Liberty Street New York 6

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

REV. RAYMOND E. MAXWELL
Of St. Louis, now in Germany

I left for Germany a couple of weeks before General Convention. Today I have been reading the first copy of THE WITNESS which I have seen since leaving the United States. This number is old stuff to most of your readers by now, but it is still news to me, although published September 5th.

Two things impressed me: 1) its timeliness, and 2) its timelessness. Its timeliness is exemplified in the excellent editorials on "Our New Presiding Bishop" and "Chance for Progress" referring to the opportunity then facing General Convention—an opportunity so happily realized—to recognize its first "laywoman" deputy and to elect a most able and devoted layman for the first time in history as Presiding Deputy. Its timeliness is equally apparent in the excellent pre-Convention reporting, in the wise article on "The Church and its Press" by Virginius Dabney, the thorough article by Bishop Davis on the Marriage Canon, and the prophetic article by Joseph F. Fletcher reminding us of some of the concrete issues before men of good will, in or out of a General Convention, who must decide soon whether to be "Quick or Dead?"

The timelessness of this issue is chiefly to be found in one remarkable article, which speaks most convincingly because it is a precious fruit of a rich life-time of Christian thinking and living. I refer, of course, to "The Plea of Love" which Bishop Parsons generously allowed himself to share with us. It speaks so clearly because there is a person behind the plea. As I read it—so appropriately placed right in the middle of highly controversial issues which soon would come before General Convention—its timelessness stood out, because every word in it is as relevant this moment as when General Convention met more than two months ago. It would have been just as relevant at Pentecost or Nicea or Augsburg four hundred years ago. It will be just as relevant at the next General Convention and the next and the next . . . if the plea which it makes takes hold upon the hearts of enough men and women in our atomic age to permit us to have these "nexts." It is timeless—this plea—because it is as relevant outside of Church councils as in them. It is timeless, more profoundly, because it is in the apostolic succession of the 13th chapter of I Corinthians, the apostolic succession of the Apostle who spoke much about Church unity and much about grace, but who always reminds us that grace comes from God and not from man-made orderings, however precious, and that the richest fruit of divine grace is to be found in the love which fills the hearts of men of faith, enabling them to bear what he calls "the fruits of the spirit."

I am sure that Bishop Parsons would claim no special merit for his article, but readers have a right to make their claims as well as writers, and here is one reader who hopes that every few years—especially before General Conventions perhaps—this article may be re-printed so that its timeless truth may again shed light on the timely questions which THE WITNESS, we may be sure, will still be discussing.

* * *

MRS. ADDIE N. PICKERING
Churchwoman of Pasadena, Calif.

I received the letter about the financial standing of THE WITNESS. I will give you mine. I am ninety-one years old. I am perfectly well but very lame from a fall two years ago. I live in a rest home where I have wonderful care. I have a pension of $55 a month and the church where I am a member pays $40. I am not making any Christmas gifts, not even cards. I like THE WITNESS the best of any Church paper I have ever seen and I look forward to its coming each week. I am alone and without a single living relative and all my friends take some Church paper. So I am sending you $5 and ask you to send the paper to some clergyman or missionary that is on your list as a gift from me. I am sending this air mail so that you will get it quickly.

ANSWER: We have entered a subscription for two missionaries as gifts from Mrs. Pickering. We have also returned the $5 to her. If there are others who would like to follow Mrs. Pickering's example and send gift subscriptions to those on our lists who otherwise would be without the magazine, we will be glad to receive them at THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6 N. Y.

* * *

MISS MARIE MICHAEL
Churchwoman of Syracuse, N. Y.

The enclosed check for $30 is for the work of Kimber Den and comes from group two of the Auxiliary at St. Paul's, Syracuse. Instead of our regular Christmas party we ate hash this year and include the proceeds of the supper in this check. We had a "Chinese auction" when we auctioned off "white elephants" brought by members. I recommend "Chinese auctions" for lots of fun and a good way of getting rid of junk and earning quite a little sum, I hope that a donation to Mr. Den will be going off soon and that this may be included in it. We discussed a number of worthy objects but I think the Chinese auction swayed us in favor of the Chinese orphans.

ANSWER: Many thanks. The donation will be included in a check that we plan to send to Kimber Den the last day of December. We still need more to bring the amount to $1,000. Any caring to help should make checks: "Treasurer, C.L.I.D." and send to the C.L.I.D., 155 Washington Street, New York 6, N. Y.

Virginia Episcopal School
Lynchburg, Virginia
Prepares boys for colleges and university. Splendid environment and excellent corps of teachers. High standard in scholarship and athletics. Healthy and beautiful location in the mountains of Virginia.
For catalogue apply to
George L. Barton, Jr., Ph.D. Headmaster.
Box 408

SCHOOLS

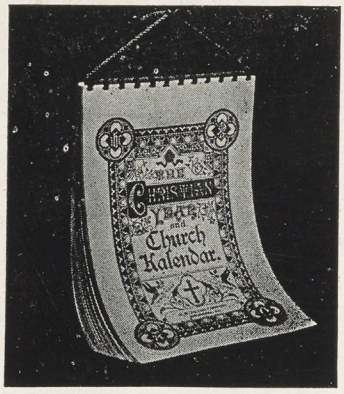
The Hospital of Saint Barnabas and the University of Newark offer a full course in NURSING
to qualified High School graduates. Scholarships available. Classes enter in February and September
Apply to
Director of Nursing
HOSPITAL OF SAINT BARNABAS
685 High Street Newark, N. J.

DE VEAUX SCHOOL
FOUNDED 1852
A Church school for boys. Thorough preparation for college. Military system of student government, developing sense of responsibility. Charges for grades seven and eight $1000; grades nine through twelve $1050. For catalog, address THE HEADMASTER, DeVeaux School, Niagara Falls, New York.

HOLDERNESS
In the White Mountains. College Preparatory and General Courses. Music and Crafts. For boys 12-19. All sports including riding. 200 acres of woods. New fireproof building. Individual attention. Home atmosphere.
Rev. Edric A. Weld, Rector
Box W. Plymouth, N. H

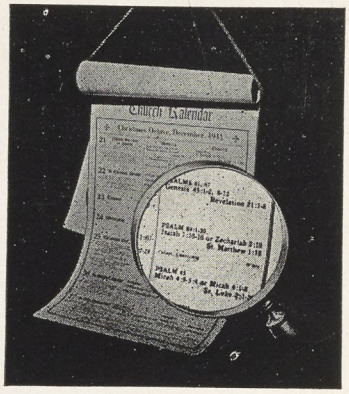
Saint Mary's-in-the-Mountains
An Episcopal college preparatory boarding school for fifty girls. Piano and Choral instruction. Art. Domestic Science. Mountain hikes and winter sports afforded by location in White Mountains. Horseback and Skiing lessons. New gymnasium. For catalogue address
Miss Mary Harley Jenks, Principal
Littleton, New Hampshire

FORK UNION MILITARY ACADEMY
An Honor Christian School with the highest academic rating. Upper School prepares for university or business. ROTC. Every modern equipment. Junior School from six years Housemother. Separate building. Catalogue Dr. J. J. Wicker, Fork Union, Virginia.



CARLETON COLLEGE
Laurence M. Gould, D.Sc., President
Carleton is a co-educational liberal arts college of limited enrollment and is recognized as the Church College of Minnesota
Address: Director of Admissions
CARLETON COLLEGE
Northfield Minnesota

KEMPER HALL
KENOSHA, WISCONSIN
Boarding and day school for girls offering thorough college preparation and training for purposeful living. Study of the Fine Arts encouraged. Complete sports program. Junior School department. Beautiful lake shore campus. Under direction of the Sisters of St Mary. For catalogue, address: Box WT.



LENOX SCHOOL
A Church School in the Berkshire Hills for boys 12-18 emphasizing Christian ideals and character through simplicity of plant and equipment, moderate tuition, the cooperative self-help system, and informal, personal relationships among boys and faculty.
Rev. Robert L. Curry, Headmaster
Lenox Massachusetts

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

A KALENDAR PLUS . . .

The Christian Year and Church Kalendar 1947

A Kalendar which contains 112 pages of vital information for all Church workers.

With the necessary revisions it has proven its value for 71 years.

This Kalendar as you will see in the illustration is arranged for hanging on the wall and is beautifully and tastefully printed.

It is worth noting that you have a Kalendar plus . . . the dates of the Christian Year and the days and festivals of the Church Year . . . plus the many uses listed below.

You will find . . .

Church Calendar
Church Colors
Morning and Evening Lectionary
Saint's Days
Altar Linen
Ember Days
Rules for Sacristans
Suggested Hymns
Church Holidays
Altar Society Notes
Vestments, their color, care, and use
Church Dictionary
Duties of Wardens and Vestrymen
Suggestions for Servers
The Rector, his election and call

Why not discover the value of this Kalendar this year, if you have not already used it, and have at your fingertips the Churchly information you need.

An excellent gift for a friend.

Published November 1st.

Price $1.25 ($1.35 postpaid)

Order from the publishers or your bookseller.

H. M. JACOBS COMPANY

Publishers

1907 Walnut Street Philadelphia 3, Pa.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.