Presbyterian Church Merger Reported Progressing

The Division Caused by Civil War Will End When the Present Proposals Are Completed

By Religious News Service

Atlanta, Ga.:—Plans for the merger of the Presbyterian Churches, North and South, have progressed "most satisfactorily" it was announced here by leaders of both denominations following a four day conference on the proposed union.

The denominational leaders comprised a joint drafting committee, and the sessions here were devoted to completion of plans for amalgamation of two church divisions which have existed since the Civil War.

Main points considered during the sessions involved general regional organization, method of representation, degree of authority and jurisdictional to be granted synods, arrangements for administrative headquarters in the regional areas, and qualifications required for Church membership.

Coincidental with the meeting of the joint committee, members of the executive boards of both denominations considered proposals for reconstruction and consolidation of the boards and agencies of the Churches.

Dunbar H. Ogden, of New Orleans, chairman of the joint committee, reported that details of the proposed merger would not be made public until they were presented to the department of Church cooperation of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. and the permanent committee on cooperation and union of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S. The committees in turn will report the findings to the General Assemblies of both denominations when they meet next May.

Meanwhile the Presbyterian Tribune, in an article by the Rev. George William Brown, former secretary of the American Bible Society and a Presbyterian pastor, blasts at the Episcopal Church for action on unity taken at the Philadelphia General Convention. The article follows:

The nine-year courtship by the Protestant Episcopal Church is over. As the editor of The Presbyterian Tribune neatly puts it: "Presbyterians . . . are left in the embarrassing position of an engaged maiden whose fiance has just informed her that he has decided to take a trip abroad to try to forget her."

It appears that the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly sent back the ring and if the Assembly's Department of Church Cooperation and Union would just burn the letters the rest of us won't spend any time dabbing our handkerchief to our eyes or in sniffing from the empty cologne bottle our fleeing suitor left behind.

As a matter of plain fact there were many of us who were skeptical about the romance from the beginning. We were flattered that the richest, best-dressed, most aristocratic suitor, driving a car with an enormous wheel-base winked at us and sent us flowers. But down in our hearts we felt that a definite proposal would never be forthcoming, and what is more, we felt that if a marriage should occur it would be a stormy affair. Being of a marriageable age, disposed to it, and open to offers (to say nothing of being able to make offers, for it is always leap year in this business) why should we Presbyterians continue to try to effect a union with a Church with which we have as little, if not less, in common as with any other evangelical Church.

If any reader takes issue with this statement let him ask any experienced pastor these questions: In any community what Church is always least ready to cooperate in any community enterprise? It might be put more strongly, What Church is never ready to cooperate in any community enterprise? Among the Protestant clergy in any community the ministers of what Church almost always (there are rare exceptions) can be counted on not to be counted on in joint religious services? What denomination keeps its pulpits closed to ministers of other evangelical Churches? What denomination refuses to grant letters of dismission to all other evangelical denominations? There is but one answer, and the answer is, the Protestant Episcopal Church.

On this matter of granting letters of dismission I have in my file a letter received from a prospective member, an Episcopalian, who, with naive expectation, sent to his former rector for a letter of dismission. He received a reply which began: "I have your letter asking for a letter of transfer to the . . . . . Presbyterian Church. It is not possible to be transferred from a Catholic to a Protestant Church, but you may show this letter to your minister. . . ." When the letter was shown to me my friend was considerably irked, and remarked, "That's the first time I knew I was a Catholic."

This brief article is no sour-grape jeremiad. It is an expression of feeling based on experience which can be duplicated by a great host of pastors whom no man can number. The writer recalls sitting on the porch of a summer hotel with a group of Presbyterian ministers back in the early days of the negotiations looking toward union with the Episcopalians. Every man in the group was an experienced pastor and several of them were men of prominence in the Presbyterian Church. Not one of them had the slightest enthusiasm for the proposed union. In fact, all of them were skeptical about it, and for the reasons just mentioned. It is the universal experience of pastors who eagerly try to promote union enterprises in their communities and support community efforts to advance unitedly religious and spiritual programs to receive neither encouragement nor cooperation from their Episcopalian brethren in the ministry. It is the conviction of the writer that organic union could be effected more easily and more happily with any other denomination than with the Episcopal Church. I am confident, moreover, that many Presbyterian pastors are in agreement with me.

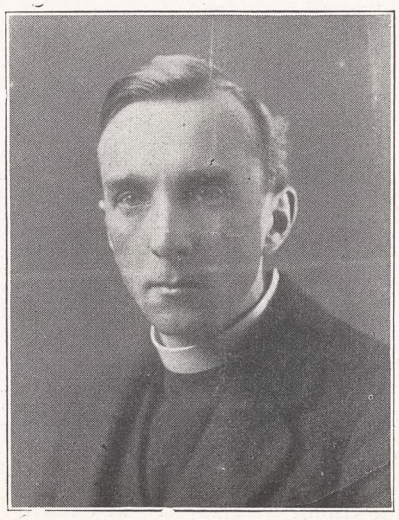
So, now that the Episcopalians have run true to form in the recent action of their General Convention in refusing to allow the proposed basis of action even to be studied by the local churches (and I am not unmindful of the earnest, sincere, and strenuous efforts made by their big-visioned leaders, nor of the truly notable proposal which resulted from the nine years of negotiation by the joint committee) let us Presbyterians get down to business. Let us tackle this matter of union at a point where there is likelihood of success, and where all parties are better fitted by polity, history, temperament, and doctrine, to enter into organic union.



A few years ago the Methodists set us a fine example when the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Methodist Episcopal Church South and the Methodist Protestant Church united in forming the great strong Methodist Church. Curiously enough, in the Presbyterian family of churches we have an almost identical situation in the existence of the Presbyterian Church, U.S.A., the Presbyterian Church, U.S. (Southern), and the United Presbyterian Church. Why cannot our Assembly's Department of Church Cooperation and Union initiate measures to bring about an organic union of these three great branches of the Presbyterian family of churches thus bringing into being a united, strong, like-minded body of Christians? There is no need for a getting-acquainted period, no high hurdles (I almost said no high-church hurdles) to jump, no problems of polity to argue about, and no doctrinal differences to adjust.

CANON DEMANT MEETS THE CLERGY

St. Louis, Mo.:—"Christianity does not offer answers to problems, so much as it gives men the faith to live with a great many unsolved problems," Canon V. A. Demant, of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, and visiting lecturer at the Berkeley Divinity School, told the clergy of the diocese of Missouri at a meeting at the Church of St. Michael and St. George, here.

"So much Christian thinking has been ethical concern with the aims and ideals for men and society," he declared. "The crisis of modern civilization, however, is so profound that a deeper level of insight is needed, where theology can come to our aid, even though the ethical insight is limited."

Canon Demant described the crisis as a conflict between the ideals and aims which men thought they ought to aim at, and the realities of the cultural background from which they acted. In this crisis, the Church needs to convert men to "the Christian faith that in any part of civilization he can hear the will of God" and also to present a Christian teaching about man as man in his collective aspect, which will do justice to his dignity "the image of God", to his sinfulness because "he always defiles that image", and his limited frailty "because he is not morally perfectable within history."

Canon V. Auguste Demant, chancellor of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, now lecturing at the Berkeley Divinity School and preaching and leading conferences in various parts of the United States

NORMAN B. NASH ACCEPTS

Boston:—The Rev. Norman B. Nash, rector of St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H., has accepted his election as Bishop Coadjutor of Massachusetts. Bishop Sherrill, who is now the Presiding Bishop, on receipt of the news, stated: "It is a cause of great personal thanksgiving that Dr. Nash has accepted the election as Bishop Coadjutor of the diocese of Massachusetts. For many years he has been a close personal friend to whom I am bound by many ties of association and affection. But more, he will bring to this diocese and to this commonwealth, a leadership of experience, intelligence, courage and consecration."

Since consents to the election must be received from a majority of the bishops and standing committees of the other 73 dioceses of the Church, the consecration service cannot take place until some time in February. Bishop Sherrill will divide his time between Church headquarters in New York and the diocesan office here until June 1, when Dr. Nash will automatically succeed him as Bishop of Massachusetts. His resignation as rector of St. Paul's School will take effect at the time of his consecration.

CENTRAL NEW YORK SCHOOL

Syracuse, N. Y.:—A school of religion is being sponsored by the diocese of Central New York this month and next. The sessions are at St. Paul's Church here, with the Rev. George C. Stierwald, a member of the staff, acting as dean. Economics, the home, the church in the community, personal religion are among the subjects taught. On the faculty are the Rev. L. T. Hosie, secretary of the local council of churches; the Rev. Condit N. Eddy, rector of Christ Church, Binghamton; the Rev. S. W. Plattenburg, rector of Trinity, Utica; Miss Deborah Vaill, consultant in religious education in the diocese; the Rev. Franklin P. Bennett, rector of St. Paul's, Syracuse. Bishop Malcolm Peabody is to open each session.

UNION MEMBERS GO TO SEMINARY

Bloomfield, N. J. (RNS):—Forty active labor union members from this industrial area have just concluded a seven-weeks' series of classes at Bloomfield College and Seminary, designed to help them combat communistic influences in their organizations. The course was the first of its kind ever offered in a Presbyterian institution. Courses were offered on labor's rights and responsibilities under the Wagner Act; methods of combating communism; public speaking; parliamentary practice.

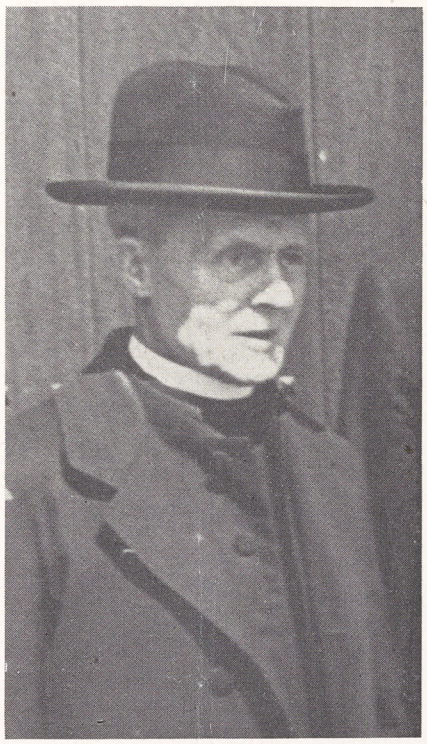
Farewell Sermons Are Preached By Retiring Bishops

Bishop Tucker Preaches at St. Bartholomew's And Bishop Manning Says Goodbye at Cathedral

By W. B. Spofford



New York: — Farewell sermons were preached on December 29 by two of the Church's leading Bishops. Bishop Tucker, whose last day as Presiding Bishop was December 31, preached at St. Bartholomew's, while at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine Bishop William Thomas Manning ended a quarter of a century of sermons from the famous pulpit as the Bishop of New York. He, too, retired on December 31 when he turned over the affairs of the diocese to Bishop Charles K. Gilbert, Suffragan, who is Bishop-in-Charge until a successor to Bishop Manning, to be elected January 28, takes office.

Bishop Tucker made no reference whatever to his retirement from the highest position in the Church, which he has held for nine years as the culmination of nearly a half century in the ministry. He spoke chiefly of the opportunities of the New Year.

"This particular New Year," he declared, "is comparable to the time when our Lord understood his Advent into human life. It marks the end of an old era and the beginning of a new. Christ came to change a religion of outward forms to one of inner stimulation and control, to substitute a religion of love for a religion of rewards and punishments and to change a national religion into a world-wide religion. Christianity brought new concepts of freedom to all men everywhere (based upon inner controls, without which freedom becomes license), and of justice, not limited to one's deserts, but extended to include one's fullest possibilities. . . . It is a Christian's duty to extend these potentials for freedom to those who do not even know the name of Christ.

"We are only true Christians when we make an effort to help others outside the limits of our own country. We are all foreign missionaries, whether we know it or not, for the life we live here in America today will help to determine the kind of life that men in Asia and Africa will be living twenty-five years from now. . . .

"The challenge to American Christians in 1947 is to extend the Christian conception of freedom throughout the world, to perfect those freedoms which we have already achieved and to break through the selfishness, greed and prejudices of national units, so that the witness to God's love may be world wide."

Bishop Manning likewise dealt with the present world situation and stated that "there is no other except Jesus Christ who offers this world the help and guidance that it needs. Every man and woman in the world who, with open mind, considers the gospel of Christ, must recognize that if this gospel were truly accepted and truly followed it would bring justice, brotherhood and peace to all mankind."

He hit at "the sinister power of communist materialism"; gave thanks for the United Nations; pleaded for "the sacramental religion of the Scriptures and the Holy Catholic Church" and ended with a strong plea that people "hold faithfully to the Prayer Book because it gives you the faith, the sacraments and the apostolic ministry as these have come down through all the continuous life of the Holy Catholic Church in this world from the Apostles' time. Hold faithfully to the Prayer Book because its truths and teachings, its holy worship, its divinely-given means of grace, bring you face to face with Christ and with God. Hold faithfully to the truths and teachings of the Prayer Book, for so you will find the grace and strength that you need, and so you will help to uphold and spread the power of the Lord Jesus Christ in this world."

Referring to his own retirement, Bishop Manning gave "thanks to God for his mercies and goodness during these years, and as I lay down my work as chief pastor I give thanks especially that among the various groups and schools of thought which rightly have place in our great diocesan family there is so truly the spirit of fellowship, and mutual confidence, and brotherliness in Christ. For the kind expressions which have come to me at this time, no words of appreciation could be adequate. My work as your Bishop is to end, but my fellowship with you will not end and it will be my most earnest desire to be of whatever service may be in my power to the Church, to the diocese, and to this great cosmopolitan city in which I have lived and worked for nearly half a century."

Bishop and Mrs. Manning, with their daughter, are to remain in the bishop's house at the cathedral through January, after which they hope to find an apartment in the city. The newly elected bishop, it is now planned, will live in the present cathedral deanery, while the large bishop's house will be converted into a number of apartments for those on the cathedral staff.

PENNSYLVANIA HAS SCHOOL

Philadelphia: — The department of Christian education of the diocese of Pennsylvania is sponsoring a winter conference on five successive Tuesday evenings, beginning January 14th, at the Church House here. The general theme is "The Church Takes a Stand" with courses given by a number of the clergy of the diocese. The leaders at the assembly periods are the Rev. Albert T. Mollegen of the Virginia Seminary on "The Social Responsibility of the Christian"; Miss Jane M. Welte of the William Penn Charter School on minority groups; the Rev. Allen F. Kramer, student pastor at University of Pennsylvania on economics and politics; Mr. Louis M. Washburn, chairman of the diocesan committee on world order, on "Christians and world order" and Dean Frank D. Gifford of the Philadelphia Divinity School on "The duty of a Christian in the modern world."

AMERICAN STUDENTS AT INSTITUTE

New York:—The first group of American students to attend the newly-founded ecumenical institute in Geneva left here on January 3 on the Queen Elizabeth. The institute trains lay leadership for Christian evangelism and gives special training to younger ministers and theological students. Those sailing last week were Pitt S. Willand, student at the General Seminary; Virginia Markham, student at Union Seminary; the Rev. William H. Clark, rector of St. Paul's, Flint, Michigan, accompanied by Mrs. Clark. Sailing previously was Miss Constance S. White, also an Episcopalian.

PHILLIPS BROOKS MEMORIAL

Boston:—Recreation rooms, bearing the name of Phillips Brooks, were opened at Trinity Church here on December 13. They are in the basement of the rectory built for him at 233 Clarendon Street which is now used for parish offices and activities. Four large rooms, newly decorated and furnished through the gift of a parishioner, are now at the disposal of those who lack normal home surroundings and relationships in a section of the city where there are many strangers, many aged people living alone, and innumerable students in cramped and sometimes desolate quarters. The rooms are open daily from 9 to 5, with hospitable facilities for cooking, chatting, sewing, playing games, and even napping. Sunday communal dinners will be instituted and evening sociables revived.

"The ministry of Trinity Church, like the ministry of all city churches, has changed radically in the last 50 years," wrote the Rev. Theodore Ferris in announcing the plan. "While the thing that is administered has not changed, namely the Gospel, the people to whom it is administered have changed greatly in character and circumstances." He then drew the contrast between the families of a past day, free from financial worries, who lived close at hand and attended Trinity, and the present varied ministry to the relatively few families still living in the neighborhood, the large attendance from the suburbs, and the great work at hand with the isolated, unrelated human beings who need, together with the teaching of the Gospel, the friendliness of fellow human beings trying to follow it.

One of the most popular institutions of the diocese of Florida is Camp Weed where numerous conferences are held

WOMEN START A MISSION

St. Louis:—The newest mission of the diocese of Missouri is the result of the loyalty of a group of women to the Woman's Auxiliary program even though there was no church in their city. Thus a group of Episcopalian women who had moved to Sikeston in southeast Missouri formed a Woman's Auxiliary under the chairmanship of Mrs. John Harty. The diocesan President, Mrs. Merle Prunty, visited them during the past year and aided their work.

Through her interest the Rev. J. Presley Pound, of Trinity Church, Macon, and the Rev. Bayard H. Clark, of Christ Church, Cape Girardeau, became interested, and steps were taken toward the formation of a new mission. The application for the organization of St. Paul's Mission, Sikeston, was approved at the recent meeting of the Diocesan Council on December 16. Mr. Clark will have supervision of its activities.

In connection with the formation of the Sikeston mission, renewed interest in the church's work in the smaller cities of Missouri is being aroused by a group of clergy in charge of parishes in cities of this kind. The diocese of Missouri has work in only half of the 50 counties within it. The out-state men recognizing the need, particularly focussed by the fact that churchmen moving to many towns cannot be transferred to any parish, and that newcomers from many cities have no acquaintance with the Episcopal Church, have taken steps to stimulate action.

MENTAL HEALTH SERVICES

Harrisburg, Pa.: (RNS):—Extension of both preventive and curative mental health services throughout the state was recommended in a resolution adopted by the executive council of the diocese of Harrisburg. The resolution also asked that child welfare services be extended with qualified personnel in charge.

JAPANESE BISHOP IS DEAD

New York:—The Presiding Bishop received a cable announcing the death on December 21 of Bishop Paul Shinji Sasaki, Presiding Bishop of the Church in Japan.

The People in the Barn

ON JANUARY 7 last, your case worker went to visit the Ben Jacob family. These people were reported as living in the Inn Barn by the Innkeeper's wife, where the woman had had a baby. Some of the neighbors suggested to the worker that these people were vagrants, and would not live that way unless they preferred to, but the worker thought she should visit, as most women do not prefer to have children in barns, and it was explained that they were victims of the housing shortage.

Mr. and Mrs. Ben Jacob seemed rather dazed, but they had fixed up their quarters quite nicely, although the barn was cold. He is a carpenter in Nazareth, and apparently quite handy. His wife is much younger, almost a child, but her baby seems healthy and well cared for.

They were uncommunicative about the story of a visit to them by some shepherds the night the child was born. Apparently the crowd of shepherds was friendly, as they had left some sheep for them.

Mr. Ben Jacob was apparently vague or secretive about his plans for the future. He seemed fearful of staying in Bethlehem too long, and mentioned seeking work in Egypt. The worker explained that there was some feeling in Egypt about refugee Jews: the saying was that the rich ones bid too high for houses, and the poor ones bid too low for wages. The worker also explained that it might be a bad environment for the child in important formative years of his life, to be despised and rejected. At this, Mrs. Ben Jacob alternately smiled and shuddered, so the worker changed the subject, lest she become hysterical.

When asked if they had enough money, they said they did, and trustingly showed the worker a considerable amount of gold as well as some curious foreign packages which they said were very valuable. They said they had been brought to the baby (this must be a remarkable baby!) by some important gentlemen from a long way away. It was really extremely valuable stuff, but the Ben Jacobs seem industrious and truthful, so your worker has no reason to believe they had stolen it.

Tactful inquiry about the "important foreign gentlemen" brought to light the fact that they had come into town and left almost immediately after. It seems that one of them was a Negro, and in spite of their wealth, and the fact that they had been entertained in Jerusalem by King Herod, no one in the village would accommodate him or his servants. Mr. Ben Jacob was quite worked up about this. The worker, to soothe him, suggested that the child might some day help do something about these things, and the mother brightened at this. Mr. Ben Jacob said he hoped he would, indeed, but it took a long time to change people.

Case closed.

"QUOTES"

WHAT is meanness? It would seem to have been derived etymologically from the word "me" and to describe the spiritual conviction of those who gave a selfish interpretation to the first commandment which might be paraphrased to read: "I will not have any other God but me," and in this sense they worship the Lord their God with all their heart and soul and mind. And because their God is a very little God, they come out of the game of life with a very little heart and a very little mind and a very little soul.

—Bishop Irving P. Johnson

Therefore, Let us . . . .

SINCE the end of the war, we seem to have run into an unusual number of "Therefore, let us. . . ." sermons. Pehaps this apparent increase is due to the fact that the problems that confront us appear to be so vast that we don't dare to talk about them except in such frustrating, moralizing terms.

These sermons are all of a type. They deal with some vital problem which presses in upon humanity and end with some exhortatory platitude which resolves nothing. You have heard them. "We have racial conflicts. Therefore, let us love one another." "Labor and management disagree. Therefore, let them get together." "If we are to have peace, the nations must understand one another. Therefore, let them come to respect one another." Probably, as we mouth such words from the pulpit, they seem to be infinitely wise to our own ears. Perhaps even some unfortunate persons in the pews are fooled. We sincerely hope, however, that not too many of them are.

There is an unusual hesitancy on our part today to take our sermons down into the stuff of life, find out what is really going wrong and, then, speak with the fire of the prophet. Rather, we flit about with the birds and exhort individuals to love one another if they want to get out of their present mess. To have representatives of various racial, economic and national groups love one another would, obviously, be a great and wonderful thing. But to tell them so to love one another in the midst of institutions that are perverted and morally unjustifiable is to invite them to become neurotics.

There is "institutional" or "structural" sin, as well as the Old Nick in every man. To ask a working man and an employer to love one another and, thereby, imply that they have found a solution to their problems is absurd when they are both living under an economic system that is kept running by their ability to make a "profit" out of each other. The same goes for our other dangerous conflicts. Telling the Negro and the Caucasian to love one another in the South—or in Detroit, or Cleveland, or New York—isn't going to help a bit as long as somebody, operating under the present system, can make more out of having them hate one another. We can't make love operative as a social principle until we establish such institutional and social systems that will make love a real, live option. Today, the environment is such that the only harvest possible is hate.

Churchmen have a special responsibility in this problem. Theoretically, we are community leaders. This means that we have to criticize our community—local, national and international—with both insight and knowledge. We are hypocrites if we tell people to love one another and, at the same time, do nothing fundamental about changing those systems which prevent them from doing so.

Less platitudinous pap and more of what Dorothy Sayers characterized as strong meat would be a welcome innovation in most pulpits.

Witness Study Plan for Lent

by William B. Spofford

THE Church is indebted to Bishop Scarlett and to the commission on social reconstruction for publishing the book, Christianity Takes a Stand, which is also published by Winston under the title, Toward a Better World. The chapters, each dealing with some major issue before us today, should be carefully studied by as large a number of Church people as possible, and Lent is a good time to do this.

BISHOP RICHARD EMRICH

The editors of THE WITNESS, to further this end, therefore present this Study Plan for Lent. We will send to rectors or other authorized persons in parishes, as many copies of this book as there are people in the Discussion Group. Then for ten weeks, starting with our issue of February 13, we will send a bundle of THE WITNESS, one copy for each member of the Group. Each of these numbers will feature a critical appraisal of one of the chapters in the book. The line-up is here presented with seven of the ten having accepted the assignment. We are confident the other three will. If they do not we promise equally good authorities. But we are not waiting for final word since a good deal of planning has to go into this effort, particularly in these days of paper shortages.

The opening chapter in the book on "Social Responsibility of the Church" by Bishop Angus Dun of Washington, will be discussed in the first article by Bishop Richard Emrich of Michigan. Sumner Welles is the author of the chapter on "The United Nations" and the Hon. Harold Stassen, a member of the U. S. delegation at San Francisco, has been asked to appraise this. "Relations With Russia" by Reinhold Niebuhr is to be presented in our article by Dr. Harry F. Ward, formerly of the Union Seminary faculty. The next chapter on the "Treatment of Ex-Enemy Nations" by Prof. W. E. Hocking will be discussed by Prof. John Bennett of Union Seminary who has just returned from Europe. Prof. Arthur H. Compton is the author of the chapter in the book on "The Moral Meaning of the Atomic Bomb." So we have asked an equally outstanding authority, Prof. Lewis Ridenour of the University of Pennsylvania, to lead THE WITNESS discussion of this. Prof. Ridenour will be remembered as one of the contributors to that stirring book, One World or None.

Mrs. Roosevelt and the Rev. W. Russell Bowie have chapters in the book on Minority Groups, dealing chiefly with the Negro. Dr. Max Yergen, president of the National Negro Congress, will deal with this subject. Japanese Americans are discussed in the book by Bishop Parsons. We have asked Carey McWilliams, an authority on minority groups and who has made a careful study of the Japanese, to write our article on this subject. "Full Employment" is presented in the book by Frances Perkins. THE WITNESS article will be by Philip Murray, president of the CIO. "Man and the State," in the book, is by Prof. Eduard Heinmann and THE WITNESS article will be by the Rev. Stephen F. Bayne, chaplain at Columbia and bishop-elect of Olympia. The final chapter in the book is by Stringfellow Barr on the "Duty of a Christian" and the final WITNESS article in the series will be on the same subject and will be by our editor, the Rev. Frederick C. Grant.

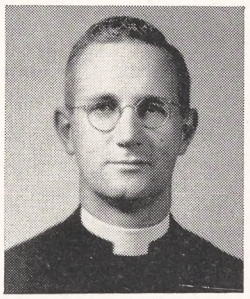
THE cost to you for this is one dollar for each person in your class, payable either with your order (preferred naturally) or at the end of the series if you had rather. To illustrate, if you organize a class of ten people, we will send you early next month ten copies of the book. Then for ten weeks, starting February 13, we will send you a Bundle of ten copies each week, each one carrying a critical appraisal of one of the chapters.

This final word: we are making this announcement before we have quite completed our plans for two important reasons. First, the publishers of Christianity Takes A Stand have informed us that the book has proved so popular that there is but a limited supply left. There are enough copies still available of this first edition probably to take care of our needs. But if the edition should be exhausted they have to know very soon in order to put through a second edition. Second, the paper situation is such these days that we cannot be sure at the moment how many copies of these ten issues of THE WITNESS we will be able to print.

These two reasons make it imperative that we receive all orders at the earliest possible time. We ask therefore that all of you who adopt the plan please place your orders at once. Drop a note to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y., stating "Enter order for . . . persons for the Lenten Study Plan" printing your name and address. If you can send payment with the order it will help. If you want to pay later you can make your order with a postal card.

The orders will be entered as they are received. If your order is received too late—and it won't be if you act now—we will so notify you at once so that you may make other plans for Lent.

These are top-ranking people, both in the book and THE WITNESS articles. The plan gives you, we believe, a great opportunity for serious study with your people this Lent. We urge that you place your order at once.



Strategy and Tactics

by

FRANCIS O. AYRES

Rector of St. John's, Waterbury, Connecticut

THE main cause of the breakdown in communication is, I believe, the lack of a distinct Christian witness. The restoration of such a witness by laymen and laywomen will go a long way to solving the problem, for it will provide a frame of reference which is, at present, almost wholly lacking and without which the Gospel cannot be understood. The Christian witness has, of course, innumerable aspects, but some attain added importance at particular times and places. I will mention three which are always essential but which are especially vital at the present time in this country.

We need to provide a witness to Christian faith. We have allowed the view that Christians are simply good people to become widespread with the result that evangelism has degenerated to the argument as to whether people who go to church are better than people who don't. Needless to say the results have been disastrous. Not only has the issue been completely misrepresented but Christians have found themselves in an untenable position. Christians are not necessarily better than non-believers. Indeed, non-believers often excel Christians even by Christian standards of goodness. This fact is more than a judgment on those of us who call ourselves Christians; it is an indication of the utter absurdity of two men standing on a square foot of earth and arguing which one is better with the implication that men can earn salvation by good deeds. What we need are individual witnesses who will show forth in their lives that Christians are a peculiar people, who have a peculiar faith (a slight understatement in the world today) and whose faith results, by the grace of God, in peculiar action—such as worshipping, praying, and slaving (to distinguish it from the over-used word, serving).

A second great need, today, is for a witness to Christian fellowship. A parish can be a bee-hive of activity and sociability and still have little or no real Christian fellowship. It would be more accurate to say, in some cases, that a parish can be such a bee-hive of activity and sociability that whatever Christian fellowship exists is completely hidden. The result is that a parish often appears to outsiders to be on the same level as a lodge, a service club, or a sewing circle, or a slightly higher level than a bowling league, an industrial recreational organization, or a bridge club, and a decidedly lower level than a union, a manufacturers association or the Red Cross. Christian fellowship is the natural outgrowth of sharing the peculiar faith and joining in the peculiar activities already mentioned. Although a little theatre group or a course of lectures on current events may be well worth encouraging, they cannot possibly provide a witness to Christian fellowship. Nor can fellowship be created directly. A parish cannot say, "We need Christian fellowship" and produce it full grown out of the baptismal font. But when men and women meet to worship at other times as well as on Sunday morning, when men and women meet to pray together and study their faith together, when men and women meet to discuss the Christian principles on which some area or the whole of their common life should be based and then proceed to take action, when men and women consult together before speaking on some problem in the name of the Lord, when in these and similar ways common action springs from common faith, Christian fellowship becomes a living reality.

A third great need, the most urgent of all, I believe, is a witness to the fact that God is concerned with the whole of life, what William Temple called social witness. The old tags, "The Church must not interfere in business," "The Church must not interfere in politics," are death to any real Christian witness. As a matter of fact, our Church gave a sort of witness in reverse when in the fiasco at Philadelphia over the book sponsored by the Joint Commission on Social Reconstruction (the book THE WITNESS is urging you to study in Lent) we clearly showed to anyone who cared to look beneath the surface that we were terrified at the social dynamite in the Gospel. The very thought that Christianity might take a stand on any matter except adultery set the "faithful soldiers and servants" to slobbering with fear. Until the situation changes, we had better not except any success in our campaigns of evangelism. For every convert we make we will lose fifty to the demonic forces at work in the world. Modern man knows, even if the Church does not care to recognize the fact, that our civilization is sick with a sickness unto death. A faith which has nothing concrete and effective to offer towards the solution of the political, economic and social problems of our time is not worth the attention of a five year old. When man feels his soul being destroyed by forces over which he, as an individual, has no control, he will not listen much less understand someone who shows no concern for his present condition. Until we provide a Christian social witness, such words as redemption, love, mercy, and healing (when used in the Gospel) can hold little meaning or promise for men today.

It is urged that the article in this number "WITNESS Study Plan for Lent" be carefully read and acted upon.—Editors.

Need for Evangelical Witness

by Charles D. Kean

Rector of Grace Church, Kirkwood, Missouri

OUR world is in desperate need of the Christian Gospel. Individuals everywhere need to find commanding purpose for their lives in an age of gigantic forces which threaten them with meaninglessness. Every Christian observation on world conditions recognizes this to be true. On the other hand, society needs the infusion of a spirit that will transform the tension between its groups into constructive co-operation. But if Christianity is to make a serious impact upon the modern world, it will be only by means of a vigorous evangelical witness which, through the vitality of its faith and the clarity of its understanding of the times, links together effectively the heritage of the Christian Gospel and the creative forces of this age.

An evangelical witness means nothing less than the living commitment of the individual soul to Jesus Christ the Redeemer, through personal conviction and genuine repentence. It is not a flight from the difficult pressures of a confused social situation, but rather the building of human lives upon the solid rock of Christian faith in order that they may be vitally relevant to the world around them. The evangelical witness is nothing less than the faith of the Reformation related to the practical needs of our day.

The Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship exists in order to promote this kind of understanding of the Christian urgency, both within the Episcopal Church in order to keep it true to its Reformation heritage, and in relation with other Protestant communions as part of a larger evangelical witness. The Fellowship is primarily concerned with Christianity as the sole means by which men and women today may know the joy of free brotherhood in a world which tends to deny it. The Fellowship does not exist to promote one of many variants in religious taste, but rather to bear witness to the fundamentals of the Christian Gospel.

In the eyes of Christian faith every age is in desperate need of the Christian Gospel, but it knows that need in terms of the kind of social, political and economic problems which perplex men. Our consciousness of spiritual distress in this fifth decade of the twentieth century is framed by the uncertainty of our industrial situation, the heightened tension of race relations, and the unsettled meaning of world peace.

It does not require the special insight of the anthropologist to recognize that the evolution of man's group life has not kept pace with his economic and technological development. While men have always worked out their problems of adjustment to changing conditions through groups which had meaning for them, today they are given a more and more meaningless choice. On the one hand, there are group loyalties—to nation, race or class—which can lead only to strife because the groups themselves in the forms now known are largely obsolete. On the other hand, there is a huge, vague, amorphous mass existence in which the individual is swallowed up as the price of political and economic security.

The need of the modern world is for a practical kind of free brotherhood to be the prevailing spirit in which men can solve the problems of family, community and national living in an age of high technology, international economic forces and mammoth agencies of political power. The difficulty is that this kind of brotherhood cannot be simply created just because it would be nice to have. At the same time, it is obvious that it cannot be supplied for men by institutional means, except insofar as those institutions embody and reflect the faith of their members.

In other words, the need of our day for a witness to redeeming power which can transform men, where they are, in a real world as it is, and make it possible for them to build bravely and creatively the fabric of the civilization which must be erected. And there is no short-cut by which they can be saved the effort of committing themselves in faith to working out daily, in the course of actual family, community, business and political decisions, what it means to be a Christian.

In the ordinary course of historical evolution, men solve their problems of adjustment to changing circumstances by revising the operation of the groups to which they belong. But there have been several periods in history, when because of the utter inadequacy of the available groups to serve the needs of the times, men and women have been driven back behind institutions, even the Church, to rebuild from the bottom up, on the foundation of personal faith, the kind of fellowship with other people which was needed to make life worth living. In one real sense, this was the meaning of the Reformation.

The torment of the modern world, evidenced by the anxiety of millions everywhere, demonstrates again today the need for a return to religious fundamentals. What is called for is not an escape from the problems, but a re-interpretation both of their meaning and of the nature of the men who must deal with them, so that the issues can be approached creatively. The evangelical faith can do precisely this because it has an understanding of the nature of man which is always true, regardless of the changing fabric of civilization.

THE Gospel itself is the answer to man's eternal question, which each age phrases in terms of its own problems. The request of the rich young man, "Good Master, what must I do to inherit eternal life?" is the question every man, woman and child asks about the meaning of his own experience. In the days of the Reformation, this question took the form of a need which the crystalized institutions of the Western Catholic Church could not meet. The question asked was the same, but with the pressure of a changing social situation, men and women needed a more profound answer in order to use their religious heritage.

The Gospel recognizes that all men ask this question and that, regardless of changing circumstances, it refers to the fact that the drive for autonomy in individuals and groups is the key to the human problem. Unless some higher loyalty secures the surrender of this drive, man will always find himself in meaningless situations, because he will always tend to use the national groupings of society—of the family, of language, of economic function, of geographical location—in order to further his own advantage and in order to defend himself. This cannot help but lead to tension, conflict and despair.

The evangelical faith is that the problem can only be answered when it is faced, and that it is only faced when men's lives are revolutionized by the conscious, deliberate acceptance of Jesus as their Christ. The brotherhood which the world needs but which man's own autonomy denies, can only be found when men have accepted a higher loyalty that bridges their divisions. In terms of the need of our modern world, this means that the only way in which Christianity may be a decisive force for peace and justice and economic security is to the extent that men and women find through faith a brotherhood in Christ that relates them across the barriers which otherwise would separate them. The evangelical answer to industrial strife is not an ethical exhortation for co-operation but a statement that men who have found brotherhood in Christ discover that their functional differences in the economic system are no longer obstacles to working things out with each other. The detailed problems remain to be solved, but there is a new, creative spirit. And the evangelical spirit has a parallel application to international relations and to race relations.

The key to the Christian answer is, consequently, Christian faith, and the Church, while important, is primarily the agency through which this faith is expressed in fellowship. We live in an age when, perhaps more than ever before, the Church itself must be understood as the fellowship created by the faith of its members—the fellowship of the Holy Spirit—rather than as the institution which imparts the faith. While practically the Church serves men in both ways, in an age of perplexity all institutions—even the best—tend to be used in order to escape reality instead of facing it. The need of the modern world is for a fellowship built on vital faith in the Christian meaning of life rather than for an organization of ancient lineage. The institution can only be relevant to the extent that it is inspired from within by the spirit of life.

The concern of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship is to bear witness in this modern world of uncertainty and insecurity to the faith by which men are set free to find brotherhood in action. The Fellowship exists to remind the Episcopal Church, the ecclesiastical home of its members, that they are Christians in the sense of commitment by faith to Christ before they are Episcopalians. The Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship treasures the rich heritage that has come down to us through the ages, not as antiquities to be safeguarded, nor as talismans that are good just because they are old, but as the witness to an evangelical tradition which has made men free—in different ways and in different words—in different ages.

The concern of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship with Church unity is twofold. On one hand, the nature of the political and economic world to which the Gospel must be brought in contact requires something more vital than the perpetuation of ancient exclusiveness, regardless of the real values thought to be safeguarded thereby. It is only through unity that the Churches will be able to say very much in the name of freedom of the spirit to a world which is being collectivized in the name of political and economic efficiency. On the other hand, the very movement toward unity itself is the most valuable opportunity for bearing witness within our own Church to what we believe to be the truth of the Christian Gospel. We are concerned that our own Episcopal Church may contribute its glorious heritage of stability and elasticity of order, of dignity and freedom in worship, its combination of reverence for the experience of the ages in liturgy with earnest acceptance of modern reality, so that all may be used by the world. It is a betrayal of our tradition to preserve its forms in sanctified irrelevance while its life decays in unreality.

The Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship is concerned with the liberalization of the marriage canon (and we regard the new canon as a liberalized canon, regardless of what others may interpret it to be) because we believe that the Church will only be true to itself as it is prepared to help men and women commit themselves to every venture in life in the spirit of redemptive faith. Our concern is with the salvation of the men and women before us, and we are only interested in their previous marital history to the extent that it may throw light upon their need today in order that we may better help them relate it to Christ.

The concern of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship with every problem facing our Protestant Episcopal Church is in order that it may serve as an agency through which men and women, coming as divided and torn individuals in a divided and struggling world, may find that faith through personal commitment which will make them brothers to other people in every practical situation they face.

Women Show Greater Interest Than Men in Religion

Buffalo Rector Gets Interesting Replies To Questionnaire Sent Members of Parish

Edited by Sara Dill

Buffalo, N. Y. (RNS):—Women show a greater interest than men in personal religion and in the life and affairs of the Church, according to the Rev. George F. O'Pray, rector of St. Clement's Church, who asked his congregation 89 questions in an effort to "evaluate the moral and spiritual life" of his parish.

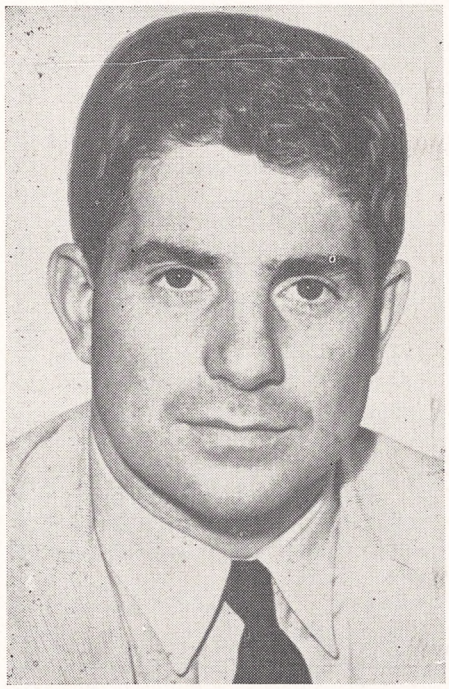
Mr. O'Pray sent questionnaires to 360 members and received 227 replies, most of them from women.

Asked if they believed in Bible miracles, 154 members said yes and 36 no. Mr. O'Pray said a definite need of Bible reading was indicated in answers to the question: "How often do you read the Bible?" Sixteen members said every day, 33 frequently, 57 sometimes, 66 rarely and 33 not at all.

Parishioners generally favored church services that are "not too long" and felt they should give at least 5% of their income to the church.

Sermons on the Christian way of life, faith and marriage, the home and family life were preferred by far more persons than sermons on current events, missionary work, sin and temptation.

"Do you really try to live a Christian life yourself?" Answering this, 199 said yes and nine no. Most frequent causes of failure to achieve this goal were listed as not enough will power, temper or anger, "getting discouraged at my own weakness" and temptation "which leads to wrong-doing."



Mr. O'Pray insisted that no one sign the questionnaires and believes they were answered truthfully.

Reporting that only three members out of 196 said they have family prayers, he said this showed "religious life in the home has broken down."

The question that drew the biggest response asked: "Do you believe it is essential for your religious life to attend church?" A total of 190 persons said yes and 27 no.

Chaplain Leads Fight

Richmond, Va. (RNS):—The Rev. Charles C. Webber, Methodist chaplain to organized labor, is leading the CIO in a fight against labor legislation proposed to the Virginia General Assembly by Governor William M. Tuck. The Assembly is meeting here in extraordinary session to deal with proposals for increasing teachers' pay and with a

The Rev. William H. Kirk last week announced his resignation as rector of St. John's Church, Buffalo. He came to the parish two years ago from Grace Church, St. Louis, where he did an outstanding work, particularly as director of the settlement, Grace Hill House, for which he was cited in the WITNESS Honor Roll of 1942 labor program which the Governor will present. In the latter category are bills which would prohibit strikes and lockouts in public utilities and outlaw the closed shop.

In a statement announcing the opposition of CIO to the Governor's program, Mr. Webber, who is chairman of the Political Action Committee in Virginia, said "our preliminary judgment is that these unconstitutional bills, if adopted and enforced, will prevent labor unions of Virginia from bargaining effectively for living wages and decent working conditions. They will also prevent organized labor from serving the common good through getting adequate purchasing power into the hands of the people with which to buy the goods and services industry and agricultural are capable of producing. In our opinion these bills give aid and comfort to those industrialists who are more concerned about getting excess profits and the right of the rich to rule than they are in averting another depression with all of its attending evils of unemployment, poverty, bitterness, and strife."

The day after Mr. Webber made his statement, the Virginia AFL came out with a similar attack on the Governor's proposals and said it, too, would fight them.

Scholars Meet

Geneva (wireless to RNS):—About thirty Biblical scholars from ten countries took part in a study conference at the Ecumenical Institute of the World Council of Churches here from January 5 to 9. Purpose of the meeting was to prepare a symposium on the Bible to be published in 1947, and used as a basis of study by the general assembly of the World Council at Amsterdam in 1948.

Among discussion leaders were Professor Karl Barth and Professor Franz Leenhardt, of Basel, Switzerland; Prof. A. Nygren, of Sweden; Prof. E. Schlink, of Heidelberg, Germany; Prof. N. Soe, of Denmark; Prof. K. L. Schmidt, former German professor, now in Basel; Prof. B. C. Niftrik, of Holland; and Prof. Barma Nagy, of Hungary.

Americans who took part in the discussion were Carl E. Schneider and Theodore Bachman, denominational representatives in World Council reconstruction work. Topic at the meeting was "The Authority and Relevance of the Social and Political Message of the Bible Today."

Negro Salesmen

Fort Wayne, Ind. (RNS):—Seventy-six per cent of Christmas shoppers interviewed by teams representing Fort Wayne's first workshop on human relations said they would have no objection to being served in department stores by Negro sales people. The workshop is sponsored by a number of religious and civic groups, including the Unitarian Society of Fort Wayne, the Union Baptist church, the Turner Chapel, African Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Jewish Federation of Fort Wayne.

Polling of 612 persons on Saturday, when many economic groups are represented in downtown stores, was a project in which workshop leaders sought to prove that a large majority of customers would not object to Negro clerks. Figures showed 388 voiced no objection, 196 were opposed, and 28 gave no opinion. Several employers expressed interest, some surprise, at the high percentage of shoppers favorable to Negro sales personnel. No colored sales people are employed at present in local department stores.

One department store executive said he had to forego appointing a Negro salesman when other sales people objected. Another said the percentage favorable would have to equal 95 per cent before he would employ Negroes.

Because most managers were fearful of "sticking their necks out," the workshop proposed that several employers each hire one or more Negro salesmen concurrently, so that no one concern would become "a martyr to public reaction," as one executive described it.

The Rev. Aron S. Gilmartin, a Unitarian minister, workshop chairman, said regular follow-ups throughout the year will be made to determine to what extent public opinion has veered against discrimination against Negroes.

Seminary Sunday

New Haven, Conn.:—As previously announced, Presiding Bishop Sherrill has designated January 26 as Theological Education Sunday. Dean Lawrence Rose, chairman of the national offering, shows that there has been a year-to-year increase of interest in this observance, and in the offering as well. Figures for 1946 are incomplete, taking in the months to November inclusive. When December results are tabulated, it is apparent that a gain will be made. For eleven months the year's total is $63,647. Said Dean Rose, "More widespread placing of the task and needs of theological education before the people of the Church in sermons and parish publicity will produce the interest and support needed to take Seminaries out of the poor-relation class."

Lectures at Union

New York:—Prof. Adelaide T. Case of the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, is to give two courses at Union Seminary, here, the second half of the summer semester. One will be on the experience of worship and the other will be on the use of the Bible in Church education. Miss Helen B. Turnbull, director of Windham House, announced that the courses will be open to both men and women who are registered at Union, Teachers College or Columbia University.

Circulation Increases

Rome (wireless to RNS):—Anti-clerical demonstrations in Italy reached a climax in Melilli, a town in the Siracusa province of Sicily, when a bomb explosion caused damages estimated at 6,000,000 lire to the Church of St. Sebastian and attackers opened fire on nuns who sounded an alarm. According to reports here, the high altar and two famous 15th century paintings were destroyed by the explosion. The bomb also demolished a statue of St. Sebastian and a shrine containing relics of several martyrs. In addition, gold and silver ornaments were wrecked. The explosion was witnessed by nuns who peered through the windows of an adjoining convent. They were fired upon by the attackers, but the shots went wide and none of the sisters was hurt.

Vatican circles continue to voice concern over mounting anti-clericalism all over Italy, but especially in Romagna, Liguria, and Sicily. Osservatore Romano, Vatican newspaper, disclosed that a recent threat of ex-communication against the staff of the anti-clerical Rome weekly, Don Basilio, has resulted in a steady increase in the number of its readers. It is estimated that the circulation of Don Basilio is now 100,000. Vatican officials announced that Msgr. Francis Borgongini Duca, Papal Nuncio to Italy, has called upon Foreign Minister Nenni to protest the continued publication of Don Basilio as a violation of the Vatican-Italy concordat.

Council Expands

Harrisburg, Pa.: — Creation of a new department of public relations and expansion of other departments in the Pennsylvania Council of Churches were approved here at the Council's annual meeting.

A proposal that the department of Christian social education and action "call to the attention of the voters of the state the principles, platforms and records of candidates for public office" was adopted by the Council.

Arrangements also were made to keep the Council's constituency informed on proposed state legislation which would affect the Church.

The Council endorsed a program of meditation and conciliation of "social tension," particularly labor relations and race relations, and plans were made for a study of needs for chaplaincy service in institutions.

Condemn Committee

Chicago (RNS): — The National Women's League of the United Synagogue of America, representing women of the Conservative branch of Judaism, adopted a resolution at its meeting here condemning the House committee on un-American activities and urged the 80th Congress to withhold further appropriations for the committee.

The 1,000 delegates, at their first convention of five years, unanimously approved the resolution which charged that the House Committee had failed consistently to investigate "flagrantly subversive groups," had shown "contempt for American constitutional liberties," and had not been impartial in investigations. The committee, the Jewish women said, had "branded with undeserved opprobrium organizations and citizens selected at random."

The women passed several resolutions on racial issues including a condemnation of racial and religious quotas in colleges and universities which asked that national and state legislatures abolish tax exemption for schools which use the quota system. Also urged was the creation of federal and state fair employment practice committees, abolition of poll taxes, federal educational grants to elevate educational standards in the South for Negroes, passage of anti-lynching bills, and outlawing of restrictive housing covenants. The convention asked continuation of governmental food relief for Europe and Asia, abolition of war through international control of all military weapons, including the atomic bomb, and civilian control of atomic energy.

Discussion Groups

Alexandria, Va.:—The Rev. B. B. Comer Lile, rector of Christ Church, here, has recently inaugurated a new kind of Sunday evening service. Following a simple service of Evening Prayer, a period known as Christ Church Sunday evening hour will be held in the parish house. Under the direction of the rector or assistant or some other leader, there will be a presentation of a subject for general discussion. The subjects dealt with have to do with the Christian faith and life in general and the Episcopal Church's approach to them.

For the first period of six evenings the subject is the background and meaning of the Apostles' Creed. In this presentation, Bishop Dun's book, "I Believe," is being used. In some of the discussions colored slides and moving pictures are being

Heifers to China

New Windsor, Md. (RNS):—One of the largest shipments of cattle to date will be made to China in December when 850 heifers are to be sent from New Orleans by Church World Service. It also was revealed that young Methodists in Wichita, Kansas, are planning to contribute 50 heifers for Europe before Christmas.

Large Class Confirmed

Baker, Ore.:—The Rev. Harold E. Parrott, rector of St. Stephen's here, presented a class of fourteen to Bishop Lane Barton on December 3 which was composed entirely of adults. The rector had previously baptized ten of the fourteen.

Urges Planes

Winona Lake, Ind.:—Success in pioneering mission work today depends upon the development of a special plane in the opinion of the Rev. Paul Hartford, who runs a flying school for preachers here. He just returned from a 15,000 mile trip through Central and South America where he visited 200 missionaries and 30 mission stations. He says that a two or three passenger twin motor plane is needed, that can be converted into a hydroplane at the touch of a button, and that makes an altitude of 20,000 to clear high mountains.

During his tour through Ecuador he was called upon to fly an isolated missionary family out of a remote jungle station. He flew them back to civilization in 30 minutes whereas by truck it would have taken five days.

No Longer a Dime

Alexandria, Va.:—The vestry of Christ Church here has voted to discontinue the ten cents admission charge which has been collected for the past forty years from tourists. The church is now open from 9 to 5 on weekdays, with a guide on hand to show the points of historic interest.

Miss LaMonte Dies

Bound Brook, N. J.:—Miss Caroline LaMonte, one of the leading Churchwomen in the diocese of New Jersey for many years, died just before Christmas after a long illness. She presented her family home to the diocese some years ago as a home for elderly women. She was also a leader in the Girls Friendly Society and in the social service department of the diocese. She was one of the founders of the Church League for Industrial Democracy and was a vice-president of the organization at the time of her death.

Rector's Son Dies

Washington: — Christopher Smith Sargent, son of the Rev. G. Paull Sargent, rector of St. Bartholomew's, New York, died suddenly the day before Christmas. He had gone from the living room of his home here to get wood for the fireplace. A maid heard the crash of wood falling to the floor and discovered that Mr. Sargent had died instantly of a heart attack. He was a lawyer with a large firm here; was thirty-five years of age, and is survived by his wife and four children, the youngest of whom is six months old.

Religious Liberty

Rome (wireless to RNS):—Religious liberty as well as civil liberties for all Italians are stressed in a six-point program drawn up by Pastor Ignazio Rivera, president of the Italian Baptist Mission, and sub-

The Ten Commandments for a Modern Child
By THE REV. IRWIN ST. JOHN TUCKER

A vivid pictorial course for pupils of the fourth or fifth grades in which the analogy is used that the Ten Commandments are like traffic lights—rules and regulations which guide us in our everyday living. Thus the author uses the experience of the modern child who knows that violating traffic rules regularly is bound to lead to serious trouble. There is a pupil's illustrated book and a Leader's Guide.

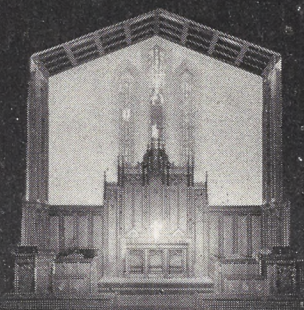
mitted to the president of the Italian constitutional assembly. Its chief point is that "all political, cultural and religious institutions are to have equal rights before the law" which means that Protestants should not be discriminated against as in the past.

Washington Cathedral

Washington:—In a year-end report, Dean John W. Suter reports that more than 171,000 persons, from every state in the union as well as from many foreign countries, visited Washington Cathedral in the year just ended. It is the highest number in six years. He also states that "Our pulpit was occupied by laymen as well as clergymen, non-Episcopalians as well as Episcopalians, and within the latter group by men who represented widely differing theological traditions."

Prospective Ministers

Orange, N. J.:—The diocese of Newark has a newly formed organization, the Alpha Club, one of whose purposes is "to preserve those principles and practices of the early Church which were re-won for Anglicanism at the reformation and need emphasis in our day." The club sponsored a dinner meeting recently at St. Andrew's, here, which was attended by forty clergymen and eighty-five young men who are possible candidates for the ministry. There were brief speeches by Bishop Washburn and Bishop Ludlow, and longer ones on the minister as "rector", "priest" and "pastor" by Dean Arthur Lichtenberger, the Rev. Edwin S. Carson and the Rev. Cornelius P. Trowbridge. The president of the club, who presided, is the Rev. James A. Mitchell, rector of St. Paul's, Englewood.



Christmas December 25

Pittsburgh: — Many Greek Catholics celebrated Christmas this year on December 25th. During the past four and a half years about half of the Greek congregations in this area voted to shift their celebration from January 7, the date of Christmas under the old Julian calendar.

The Plan Worked

Winthrop, Mass.:—The Rev. Ralph M. Harper of St. John's Church here sent return postals to the boys and girls of his parish. On it was a place to check whether or not they would attend a party and bring a gift for a European. There was also a place to check whether or not they would attend, with their parents, the morning service on Family Sunday. The card then stated that the first ten to return their cards would receive prizes, while the last ten would be expected to give him prizes. Within 24 hours after the cards had been mailed he

Moral Awakening

Quebec (RNS): — The Canadian people must be aroused to a sense of "moral obligation and mutual good will" so that a minimum standard of social welfare can be provided for the whole country, delegates to the annual meeting here of the Canadian Council of Churches were told in a report by the Council's department of evangelism.

"Men everywhere are conscious of the need for social justice," the report stated, "but they are trying to build a just social order without a sense of God, or a true conception of human value, or a real sense of community."

Pointing out that of the 6,200,000 professing Christians in Canada, 25 per cent are unreached by the Church, the report said "we are conscious of the needs of innumerable individuals for moral renewal and spiritual undergirding in this time of confusion."

Race Cooperation

Rock Island, Ill. (RNS):—Bonds of friendship between Negroes and whites were stronger in this industrial community of 55,000 after 500 white and colored Protestants joined in inaugurating a campaign to obtain funds for an enlarged church for the Wyman African Methodist congregation. Learning that the colored congregation's church building had been condemned by city building inspectors, the white Protestants launched a movement to purchase for the Wyman church the First United Presbyterian church building which will be vacated when that congregation builds its new church.

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

MISS FLORENCE E. DALE
Churchwoman of Whaleyville, Md.

These are indeed trying times. I thoroughly enjoy THE WITNESS and to assure you of my sympathy in your difficult situation I enclose a check to cover a year's subscription. Perhaps you know of a clergyman to whom you could send it and I hope he may enjoy our Church paper as much as I do. I hope that 1947 will bring you fewer headaches.

ANSWER: Many thanks. As we stated last week there are many clergymen and missionaries who will be glad to receive THE WITNESS. So if there are any who care to make gift subscriptions it will be a double gift—to them and to us. Merely send the $3 and a note "Gift subscription to someone on WITNESS list."

MR. ELLIOTT L. GUY
Layman of Savannah, Ga.

I enjoy reading THE WITNESS. What strikes me most is its bold manner of discussing the problems of the day. No sugar-coating: just stating the stark facts and in many instances recommending a solution to the problem. Accept best wishes for continued usefulness in the coming year.

G. ASHTON OLDHAM
The Bishop of Albany

What a pity statistics are so frequently ignored or regarded with lofty unconcern. They may at least serve as pointers indicating the direction in which we are going. Since somebody ought to do it, I am calling attention to a single item in the most recent figures of our Church which to me is somewhat appalling. I refer to our growth in communicants, of 15,186, which is less than one per cent. Dividing the total financial receipts by that figure gives us a cost of approximately $3500 per communicant, as compared with $1650 the previous year. Evidently the cost of communicants has risen more than the cost of living!

Surely these figures should disturb us. This dear Church of ours is crawling forward at so slow a pace that it appears almost to be standing still. In contrast, our Methodist brethren this past year made an intensive effort to reach outsiders, with the result that they report some 800,000 new converts. At this rate a child can see where our respective bodies will be in the next decade or century.

What is the matter with us? Why don't we make more converts? We seem to have lost our crusading or evangelistic zeal and to have settled on our lees. Has the possession of an Apostolic Ministry and valid Sacraments resulted in an easy complaisance? If so, let us remember our Lord's retort to those who claimed, "we be the children of Abraham," "I say unto you God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham." This truth still holds.

Our valid ministry and sacraments are given us not chiefly for our own spiritual benefit but as powerful instruments for the spreading of His kingdom. If we wrap our talent in a napkin, God will surely take it away and give it to another who will make full use of it. Moreover, if these elements of our Church's life are as valuable as we claim, the evidence should appear in greater zeal and more adequate results than with those who have them not.

I still believe with all my heart that we have a form of Christianity which the world and our country desperately need; but we are not giving it to them. With over half our population thoroughly pagan and a greater proportion only nominal Christians, the field would seem ripe unto the harvest. Why are we not reaping more and better? I cannot but think that God is more pleased that 800,000 have been brought to acknowledge His Son than with the possibly (?) better instructed and trained 15,000 Episcopalians. "By their fruits ye shall know them"; and the Episcopal Church, with all its blessings and endowments, should be bringing forth more fruit.

Some one said, "Watch out for the Episcopal Church if it ever wakes up." Surely now when Christianity is fighting a life and death struggle with materialistic philosophies and totalitarian faiths, when events are shrieking at us the alternative, "Christ or chaos and destruction," we should awake, if ever. Unless we can arouse ourselves and make more converts, we shall play an increasingly smaller part in the life of our country and the world.

What steps are to be taken I do not know. I am not advocating a campaign or crusade. It must be something much deeper than that and perhaps must begin with our own conversion. But I am sure that both God and man have a right to expect of the Episcopal Church vastly more than its present accomplishments. Like the Church of Laodicea we seem to be neither cold nor hot but respectably complacent. Or is it that, like Martha, we are too busy about many things and are neglecting "the one thing needful"?

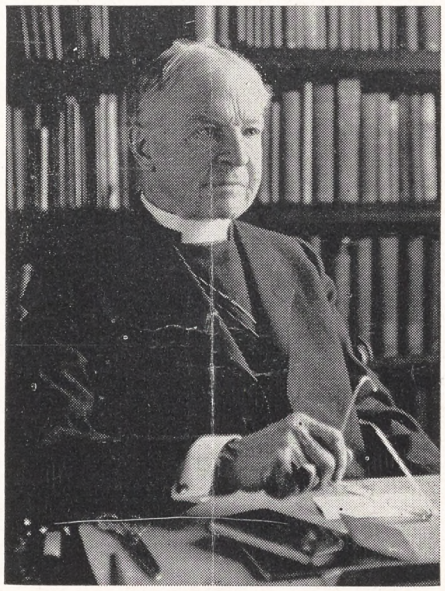
Henry Knox Sherrill Installed As Presiding Bishop

Swears to Observe and Fulfill the Duties Statutes and Customs of the High Office

By W. B. Spofford



Washington:—Declaring that "we live in a world not only of starvation and want, but more dangerous even, of suspicion and hatred," the newly installed Presiding Bishop, Henry Knox Sherrill, concluded a picturesque service at Washington Cathedral on January 14th by calling upon the people of the Church "to face again the overwhelming implications of the Christian faith with consecration, determination, loyalty."

The address, printed in full in this number of THE WITNESS, was delivered before a crowded congregation, including scores of bishops and several hundred clergymen, at the conclusion of the service at which he was installed as Presiding Bishop. Following the long procession which opened the service, certificates of election were read by the former Presiding Bishop, Henry St. George Tucker, and Owen J. Roberts, president of the House of Deputies. There was then an innovation, the singing of the First Lesson by the cathedral choir, directed by Paul Callaway. The Second Lesson was read by the former Governor of Massachusetts, Leverett Soltonstall, now a Senator. A hymn and the Creed followed, after which the congregation was led in the Litany by another former Presiding Bishop, James DeWolf Perry.

Bishop Tucker and Mr. Roberts next conducted Bishop Sherrill to the center of the chancel, opposite the Presiding Bishop's chair. The Standard Book of Common Prayer was brought from the altar by Dean John W. Suter, the Presiding Bishop placed his hands upon it, while the Dean said:

"Right Reverend Father in God, we are honored that you are inducted and installed into office in this place, and we desire that you take the oath believed by us to be lawful and seemly in this behalf."

The Presiding Bishop then said: "I, Henry Knox, by Divine Providence Presiding Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, duly elected, and now to be installed, do solemnly swear that I will observe and to the utmost of my power fulfill the duties, statutes and customs of the office of Presiding Bishop not contrary to Divine Law. So help me God and the contents of this Book."

Bishop James DeWolf Perry, a former Presiding Bishop, led the Litany at the service in Washington at which Bishop Sherrill was installed to the office

Bishop Tucker then placed Bishop Sherrill in the chair, saying: "In the name of God, Amen. I, Henry St. George, do induct and install you, Right Reverend Father in God, Henry Knox, into the office of Presiding Bishop, with all its rights, dignities, honors and privileges; in which may our Lord Jesus Christ preserve your going out and your coming in, from this time forth for evermore. Amen."

Dean Suter then declared: "So is this Right Reverend Father and Faithful Pastor, really and rightfully installed in the Episcopal Presidency of this Church. What then remains but to thank God upon the occasion and to petition the Divine Majesty: that he, together with the people committed to his charge, may at last attain eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

With this pronouncement a fanfare of trumpets was sounded, after which the Te Deum was sung. The Bishop of Washington, Angus Dun, then conducted the newly installed Presiding Bishop to the top of the chancel steps and presented him to the congregation. Bishop Sherrill's address followed, at the conclusion of which he led the congregation in prayer and pronounced the benediction. The colorful retiring procession brought the service to an end.

URGE CIVIL RIGHTS LAWS

Chicago:—Strengthening of existing federal civil rights laws and abolition of discrimination in Methodist hospitals, seminaries, and colleges was called for here in resolutions adopted at the national meeting of the Methodist Federation for Social Service. More than 200 members of the unofficial Methodist organization attended the three-day sessions.

The delegates also urged that the House Committee to Investigate un-American Activities (the Rankin committee) be disbanded because, they charged, it is "propagating a spirit of war and hate against the Soviet Union."

Support of the National Labor Relations Act (the Wagner Act) also was pledged by the delegates, who condemned any attempts by Congress to amend the act or in any way weaken it. The delegates voted to oppose any Wagner Act amendments which would abolish closed shop, union shop, or compulsory check-off of dues and they scored any repeal or alteration of the Norris-LaGuardia Act. The Norris-La-

Guardia Act is necessary to protect the workers "from involuntary servitude and injudicious use of injunction," the resolution stated.

A series of resolutions on American-Soviet relations contained an endorsement of Russian proposals for universal disarmament and called upon Methodist educational agencies to secure authentic, unbiased information concerning Russia for distribution in the denomination's 41,000 churches.

The race relations resolutions praised the CIO, the Federal Council of Churches, the YMCA, and the YWCA, and several other organizations for contributions made to breaking down segregation patterns and discriminatory practices.

Among the speakers at the conference were the Rev. William B. Spofford Jr., executive secretary of the Church League for Industrial Democracy; Mrs. Paul Robeson; the Rev. Jack McMichael, executive secretary of the Methodist organization; the Rev. Charles Webber, industrial chaplain of the Methodist Church; John Ramsay, Presbyterian layman who is a public relations officer of the CIO and the Rev. Harry F. Ward, former professor at Union Seminary who is to contribute an article to THE WITNESS series for Lent that further considers the chapters in the book issued by the commission on social reconstruction, "Christianity Takes a Stand."

KARL BARTH SPEAKS TO CHURCHMEN

Geneva (wireless to RNS):— Christians must turn to the Bible if they expect to solve the social and political problems of the day, Dr. Karl Barth, internationally-known Swiss Protestant theologian, declared here. He spoke at opening sessions of a five-day study conference sponsored in preparation for the general assembly of the World Council of Churches to be held at Amsterdam in 1948.

Asserting that "the authority and significance of the Bible must be recognized as a pre-condition for solving social and political questions," Dr. Barth declared that "whether ecumenical unity between churches is true or illusory depends upon whether their theology is grouded on the Bible."

Dr. Barth spoke to an advance of twenty-five theologians representing Lutheran, Calvinist, Anglican, and Eastern Orthodox communions in eleven countries, including the United States.

YOUNG SPOFFORD HAS AN INFIELD

Washington:—The Rev. and Mrs. William B. Spofford Jr. became the parents of triplets on January 9th. They were married in the fall of 1944, Mrs. Spofford being the former Pauline Fawcett, whose parents, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Fawcett, are prominent in the diocese of Washington. The young Spoffords now have four sons, Timothy now being a little over a year old.

"A whole infield in a couple of years isn't doing so badly," commented the proud father who is a baseball fan. However when it was suggested that he name the triplets, Tinker, Evers and Chance, after the famous double-play combination of a former day, he balked with the comment that they would stick to Biblical names.

COMPARES ITALY TO SPAIN

Rome (wireless to RNS):— Don Luigi Sturzo, priest-statesman of Italy, warns that the country is dividing itself between rightist and leftist blocs, each of which is arming against the other. He compares the situation in Italy today to that in Spain during the Franco revolt and predicts that if there is an armed conflict, the Soviet Union and Yugoslavia will support the leftists and Britain and the United States the rightists. Meanwhile Cardinal Schuster, Archbishop of Milan, charges that "the power of atheistic Communism plus the irreligiousness of Protestant nations" are the two greatest threats confronting the western world at present.

Class Distinctions in Church Must Be Eliminated

Impact of Secular Forces Upon the Church Is Destructive Says Home Missions Council

By George Dugan

Buck Hill Falls, Pa.:—The Christian Church can no longer afford to function on a basis of class distinction if it is to maintain its traditional championship of human rights in the years to come, according to a statement on the future of home missions made public here at the annual meeting of the Home Missions Council of North America. The Council represents 23 major Protestant denominations.

Described as "revolutionary in its implications," the 70-page mimeographed document was prepared by a special committee of churchmen representing various Protestant denominations.

Terming the problem of group relations "one of the great social and ethical issues of our day," the statement listed the following six "considerations" as imperatives for the development of the home missions enterprise in this country and Canada:

1. The full influence of the Church should be exerted to secure the eradication of racial segregation and discrimination, whether imposed by law or by social custom, and to fight against whatever implies for any group a "ghetto pattern" of living.

2. All religions or other missionary enterprises now organized on a basis of segregation should be re-examined with a view to removing as rapidly as possible all barriers to free intercourse without reference to race.

3. The Church at large should be summoned to accept the principle of ministry to all people on the basis of community, irrespective of race or social status.

4. Wherever possible experiments in inter-racial activities and associations should be promoted.

5. Special study should be devoted to the strengthening of the ministry of the Church among any groups or types of population now inadequately reached.

6. Home Mission forces should join with other forces, both inside and outside the Church, in positive measures to relieve tensions and to promote mutual understanding and goodwill among all races and groups.

Warning against the impact of secular forces on a divided Protestantism, the statement declared: "Modern society is increasingly complex and highly organized. Broad areas of concern, once left to the initiative of individuals or voluntary groups, are now functions of the state. Most forms of work have become highly mechanized. Many types of face-to-face relationships have been displaced by the relatively impersonal relationships of large-scale organizations. The simpler motivations of a simpler day have been overlaid with an intricate fabric of institutionalized ethics. Many wholly secular forces take very high ground on questions of social welfare of undoubted ethical significance. Nevertheless, the tendency of a secularized society is to 'play down' ethical and spiritual considerations, and to relegate religion to the category of one among many special interests.

"The Protestant Church, divided organizationally and in point of view on many vital issues and lacking adequate agencies for collective action, is at a serious disadvantage in maintaining itself against this secular trend. Secular society is not necessarily anti-religious but the impact of secular forces upon a divided Protestantism is destructive. At the same time powerful interests in the press, radio, motion picture, advertising and amusement fields are developing a type of culture in which ethical religion has little place.

"The effects of change upon the Church and the home mission enterprise have been made progressively evident. Increasing mobility and secularization have combined to create prevailing attitudes less favorable to religious development. Public progress in relation to social welfare, education, recreation and culture have tended to circumscribe the general field of influence of the Church. The tendency of many churches primarily to identify themselves with particular social, economic or racial groups has made more difficult their adjustment to the demands of a dynamic, changing period. The parish areas of most churches have drastically changed in their specific social characteristics. Secular movements have challenged the leadership of the Church among large segments of the population and in relation to vital ethical issues, as race relations and social justice. A striking phenomenon has been the rapid growth and wide distribution of churches of various emotional sects. In general, the rate of membership growth of the older Protestant denominations has been disappointingly slow and there has been an actual decline in Sunday School enrolment."

Viewing the future function of the Home Missions Council as a "master planning board for Protestant home missions," the statement outlined the following over-all strategy:

"The total program of home missions should be brought within the scope of common planning and agreement, recognizing that the tasks of evangelization, education and service are becoming essentially corporate in nature. This common planning and agreement should have in view, negatively, the elimination or avoidance of competition and overlapping, and positively, the development of a well-balanced coordination of program so that all aspects of the work will reinforce each other and make a unified impact upon the community and upon society in general.

"Serious thought needs to be given to the missionary message we are trying to project, to its relevance in relation to pressing problems of contemporary life, and to its impact upon particular situations and populations. Modern life offers a laboratory for fruitful experimentation in creative Christian service; this is illustrated by such questions as industrial and race relations, the place of Christian teaching in education, the concern of the Church for good government, sound economy and broad social welfare and other interests which affect the Christian community in the most fundamental sense of the term.

"Recognizing the imperative need to strengthen the total impact of the Churches we represent upon the total life of our nation, home mission agencies should accept a measure of responsibility in the development and strengthening of interdenominational agencies in local communities, states and areas, in the mobilization of our total resources, missionary and ecclesiastical, for our common task, and in furthering cooperative and ecumenical ideals nationally and on a world basis."

CHURCH ARCHITECTS CONFER

New York (RNS):—Modern church architecture is breaking away from the copy-book technique of the past and is emerging as a forward-looking art form employing the best in modern materials, experimentation, and design, according to speakers at the North American conference on church architecture here. The one-day conference attended by 125 architects and churchmen, was sponsored by the Interdenominational Bureau of Church Architecture and the Church Architectural Guild.

Pointing out that Greek architecture became great because it was experimental, Prof. Henry L. Kamphoefner of the University of Oklahoma told the conferees that the "fad of eclecticism, or copying from a system of architecture, is now running to its end. The use of traditional or eclectric forms was a trend for many years but modern architecture has taken a new direction."

Admitting that there is not one "great, outstanding example of the modern church." Prof. Kamphoefrer added: "It is easy to pick Amiens or Rheims as supreme examples of the climax period of the Gothic work, but I am afraid that a comparable building in organic architecture has not been built."

W. A. Taylor, director of the department of education and research of the American Institute of Architects, asserted that "if the architects of the thirteenth century had had our techniques and materials they would have rejoiced in them and would have done much more daring things than we are now doing in church architecture."

According to the Rev. E. M. Conover, director of the Interdenominational Bureau of Architecture, more than $650,000.000 will be invested in new church buildings and improvements throughout the United States as soon as materials become available. This new construction, he added, has gone beyond the planning stage and awaits only the release and production of building supplies. He added that skyscraper churches are "definitely out" because they have proved impractical in the past. He also reported a trend toward construction of chapels on college campuses. From 200 to 300 are expected to appear on college campuses within the next two or three years.

CLID HELPS TO SPONSOR CONFERENCE

Atlanta, Ga.:—The Church League for Industrial Democracy is one of the sponsoring groups for the Southern Religion and Labor conference to be held here, on February 4th and 5th. The call to the conference, which went to all clergymen in southern states, says: "All over the world today the common man is rising to claim his rightful place in a just and democratic society. The growth of the labor movement out of the needs and aspirations of working men and women in the South is one manifestation of this claim. We feel that in labor's assertion of its right to organize, religious leaders face an unprecedented opportunity to put into practice their respective faiths, by interpeting labor's struggle in accord with the will of God for a social order of divine justice and an abundant life for all." C.L.I.D. members who are on the planning committee for the conference are Miss Lucy R. Mason, the Rev. Matthew H. Warren and the Rev. Robert M. Cook.

The Rev. David Scovil recently became the rector of Holy Trinity, Alhambra, California. With Mrs. Scovil he is pictured with the three-year-old twins, Dorothy and Mary

EDITORIALS

The Presiding Bishop

AT a service marked by dignity and simplicity, Henry Knox Sherrill, Bishop of Massachusetts, was installed this week as Presiding Bishop of the Church. It was a difficult service to plan. The pageantry of a similar service in England, when the new bishop knocks at his cathedral door and demands entrance, was lacking. Washington Cathedral after all is not the cathedral of our Presiding Bishop. He has a chair there but only at the gracious invitation of the Bishop of Washington and the cathedral chapter. Yet the remarkably beautiful cathedral, the processions of dignitaries, the great choir, combined to make this service, the first at which a Presiding Bishop has been installed, impressive.

But it was the address by Bishop Sherrill which gave the service significance. Here is a man who has suffered, and is suffering, because he has seen unbelievable suffering. Twice since the war he has visited Europe so that when he spoke of "untold suffering and privation" everyone felt, from his expression as well as his words, the depth of his emotion. He is a man of vision and courage, aware of the tremendous struggle facing the Church to which he referred; a man who has earned the right, by action, to demand of us that we "be done with easy going, thoughtless complacency."

That more than vision is needed in a Presiding Bishop we pointed out in our Pre-General Convention number. We asked for no man-pleaser but a man who is decisive; an able administrator and capable executive; a democrat who seeks the help of clergy and laity in making plans and setting policies. We called for a man who would see that the Church is in the thick of the struggle for social justice, racial equality, world order; a man who has a comprehensive view of what is happening in the world and first-hand experience with world affairs to give substance to his attitudes; a man who has already committed himself to ecumenicity and who is in touch with the great political and social movements of our world.

Our Pre-Convention editorial did not name Bishop Sherrill. It merely described him.

"QUOTES"

LORD make me an instrument of thy peace. Where there is hatred let me sow love. Where there is doubt, faith. Where there is despair, hope. Where there is darkness, light. Where there is sadness, joy. O Divine Master, grant that I may not so much seek to be consoled as to console; to be understood as to understand; to be loved, as to love; for it is in giving that we receive, it is in pardoning that we are pardoned, and it is in dying that we are born to eternal life.

—St. Francis of Assisi.

Watchmen

THE Church needs watchmen. Her clergy are called to this function. They make a vow that they will drive away all "strange and erroneous doctrines from the Church." They promise to give warnings and exhortations to the people. But, as in the days of Amos, the prophet, the watchman is usually forced to speak outside the confines of organized religion. This can be partially accounted for because there are customs, labels, and accepted things in our world which do not appear immediately to Church people to be "strange and erroneous." In fact, quite the opposite may be the case. Christian doctrine often seems strange and erroneous when applied to daily life.

Historic Christianity states that the world, and all that in it is, was made by God, and has insisted that all things in the world are for the life of man. This does not sound strange until someone starts to say, as St. Ambrose did, "The land was made for all; why do ye rich men claim it as your private property; Nature knows nothing of rich men; she bore us all poor." Then, St. Gregory the Great asserts that "it is absurd for people to think that they do no harm when they claim God's common gift as their private property," and the great of our present day begin to shout that the clergy should stick to the simple gospel, and stay out of the realm of economics, which they cannot possibly understand.

Again, Christianity has a view of man. Man is created in the image of God, and fellowship with him is man's purpose and end, and this fellowship is expressed in a family relationship. God is our father, and we are all brothers. This is no strange doctrine, until. . . . The Negroes are happier with their own kind, someone says, and God made them different, so we must have "Negro work," churches and even a seminary for them. Or we hear that Hitler was right in what he did to the Jews, for after all they did reject Christ. Or no one can live in the same world with the Russians, so we might as well clean them up now as later. There are numerous other statements that Church people make about some other group, and they accept it as commonly held doctrine. The fact that Christ said that every human is a Prodigal means that all of us have a common need, a coming-to-ourselves, and a return to our father. The classless society of miserable sinners sounds like a strange and erroneous doctrine to respectable Episcopalians, and the watchman who proclaims it will be considered queer.

When "the prophets prophesy falsely," "the people love to have it so." But for the ancient watchman, Jeremiah, the word of God was fire in his mouth, the people were as wood, and the words devoured them. The Church needs not clergy with smooth words, but watchmen, prophets, filled with zeal to drive away all the much-loved strange and erroneous doctrines glibly accepted by people today.

Daniel McGregor

ANYONE who has worked in the field of Christian education over the past fifteen years has witnessed with some anxiety the constant fluctuation of the philosophy of presenting Christian knowledge, and instigating Christ-like living. Methods, materials, the "perfect courses" have been a dime a dozen in a fertile (sometimes futile) effort to satisfy the impoverished teacher in such diverse places as a Possumtown or Chicago.

Yet, unencumbered by ecclesiasticism, religious education has been in the vanguard of the host of seekers after truth.

It is in the spirit of this vanguard that Daniel McGregor, who recently resigned as head of our national department of religious education, conducted his responsibilities to the Protestant Episcopal Church. Vigorously aware of Christianity and the social order, he was of the school of men who do not conform to the status quo even though it has the majority vote. May his critics remember, he served as editor not publisher. His fine mind will always be a credit to our Church in national Christian education circles.

Long after the "perfect Episcopal courses" have been produced, the spirit of men like Dr. McGregor will still be out ahead. We thank him for his devoted service.

Presiding Bishop's Address

Delivered by Henry Knox Sherrill

At the Service Installing Him as Presiding Bishop Held at Washington Cathedral, January 14th

IN A VERY few words I express my appreciation of the trust which has been placed in my hands and my gratitude for the generous kindness of many friends. My reticence is due to no lack of personal feeling, but in these times no life is of great significance, especially when this happens to be your own. It is the cause to which we are all committed which is of supreme importance. Nor shall I at this time attempt to suggest any detailed program for the Church or the National Council. Such plans demand careful study and certainly more knowledge than I have at present. Furthermore, while programs are essential, they are entirely theoretical unless there is a consecrated and convinced membership of the Church eager to translate strategy on paper into determined action in life. It is therefore of the temper and mind of the Church of which I would speak. My remarks are directed to you not so much as a normal congregation, but as representatives of the entire membership of our communion, hundreds of thousands of men, women, boys and girls, clergy and laity scattered throughout the world. While I am thinking especially of our own household of faith, what I have to say is applicable to every Christian communion. Whatever our differences in faith and order may be, we all live in the same world, sharing great truths, and facing the same responsibilities and opportunities.

Certainly, no true Christian can be complacent today either about the state of the world, the Church, or himself. Such a statement would seem to be superfluous, were it not that so many of us are apparently content to move along the same conventional routines and paths. What do we need to see before we are stirred to face realities? Twice within our generation so-called Christian nations have engaged in the most devastating and cruel of wars which have involved not alone the fighting forces but entire civilian populations from the aged to infants in untold suffering and privation. We live in a world not only of starvation and want, but more dangerous even, of suspicion and of hatred. With new and terrifying weapons of destruction, without a new understanding and spirit, man stands on the verge of not divine but self destruction, this on the word not of the preacher but of the scientist and of the military leader. Nor can we in our own country rest back on self-righteousness. Democracy is a great ideal but it must work. War, with the pressure of common necessity, brings cooperation and united sacrificial effort. When that pressure is removed, we revert to selfish aims and objectives. There are evidences of ugly racial and religious intolerance. The divorce rate goes up alarmingly. Out of broken homes comes the widespread problem of juvenile delinquency. Deeper than all of these outward signs is to be found a growing spirit of secularization evident in the atmosphere of our homes, our schools and colleges, our personal lives. These are not the opinions of a prophet of pessimism and of doom. These are stern and hard facts well known to us all. I recount them here for one purpose: to emphasize as strongly as possible that we of the Church face an heroic and tremendous struggle in the name of Christ. Let us have done with easy going, thoughtless complacency.

This struggle would be severe were even the entire membership of all the Churches of Christ on the firing line. When we stop to examine the facts we find that in every parish and diocese it is largely the few who bear the burden and heat of the day. It is as if an army were engaged in a life and death struggle, with a large proportion of the soldiers busied in some other activity or else taking the position of spectators or neutrals. The Churches are at a tremendous disadvantage, for we are in essence waging a desperate spiritual warfare in a most critical period of history, at the same time carrying a vast weight of nominal Christians who, as someone has remarked, having been once inoculated by weak religion, seem to be impervious to the real thing. Dean Hodges* used to say that the task of the Church is to make the indifferent different. We must begin to do this within our own ecclesiastical family.

I wish to make it entirely clear that I am in no way faulting the faithful here or elsewhere, and least of all am I reading any group out of the Church, for we are all of us fallible human beings. But I do feel that the times call us to be more clear-cut, to examine more critically our own beliefs and practices and more particularly our own personal sincerity and loyalty.

THE FAITH of the Christian is complex, and yet in essence is extremely simple. We see in and through and behind creation, as well as in history, the will and purpose of an Eternal and Living God. We look at Jesus of Nazareth, living in the limitation of space of time and of human form, and we believe that the Word became flesh and dwelt among us—that in Him we find the Way and the Truth. "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." We have faith that God does not dwell in some far distant Heaven but that His Holy Spirit is at work in the world, especially in those who have given themselves to God in the fellowship of faithful people in the Church.

These are such familiar statements to Christians that they have ceased to have startling news value. But there we are wrong; if they are true there is nothing possibly in all the world of greater significance. If there be a God revealed to us so personally in Christ, if Christ has shown to us the divine pattern for our lives, if there is in Christ the power to make us become the sons of God, then here is the news to make all other affirmations of any character whatsoever insignificant. If these statements be not true, then no one of us should wish to make any pretense of either believing or of acting upon them. Here is too serious a matter for trifling, or for mere lip service. The point is that the members of our Church do say that they believe. We join in the words of the creed: "I believe in God, I believe in Jesus Christ His only Son, I believe in the Holy Ghost, the Holy Catholic Church." Many thousands of our people have stood in the chancel of some church and have solemnly of their own will pledged themselves to follow Jesus Christ as their Lord and Saviour. It is now time to ask ourselves what we mean by these words and by these acts. No one asks for perfection. We all are weak and we constantly fail. That is why there are confessions of sin in our liturgy. But we do have a right to expect of ourselves and of others an underlying sincerity of effort and the realization of the greatness of our commitment.

If we truly believe in God in Christ, then worship becomes no conventional act of outward respectability, but the very bread of life through prayer and sacrament. If we truly believe, then brotherhood becomes more than a slogan; it is a conviction that we belong, all of us of every nation and race, to the family of God. Selfishness, intolerance, hatred give place to the compulsion of love. If we really believe, then Christian discipleship, the mission of the Church are not inconsequential asides or the task of peculiar people. They are the absorbing responsibility and opportunity of every member of the Church. In one of the most popular of missionary hymns, joined in lustily by every congregation, we sing, "Give of thy sons to bear the message glorious; Give of thy wealth to send them on their way, Pour out thy soul for them in prayer victorious; Till God shall bring his kingdom's glorious day." Are these mere words? If so, they are shocking in their insincerity. If they are meant, then there is demanded and implied a consecration of life and of our means.

I am not naive enough to believe that the solution of our present difficult problems is easy or simple. I know full well the complexities of our world. But I am convinced that these questions, whether of international conferences, of industry, of labor, of the home, of education, or of human relationships can only be given satisfactory and definite answer by the standard of the mind and spirit of Him we call our Lord and Master. But before we can dare to apply Christ's teaching to the world, we must meet Him in our own minds, wills, and hearts. The world must find evidence of the presence of Christ in the membership of the Christian Church. "If the salt have lost its savor wherewithal shall it be salted?" "If the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness." The first task is to see that we and all who are of the Church are Christian.

THE AMERICAN people have on the whole seen the importance of education and of health. We have thought of these causes rightly in large terms of millions upon millions of dollars, with the enlistment of a personnel of remarkable ability. I mention this only in contrast to the small way we have envisaged the work of the Church, in terms of both money and workers, clerical and lay. Similarly, we talk much of democracy in world terms. Democracy emphasizes the worth and the value of the individual. But apart from a faith in God, of what eternal significance is personality? Apart from human souls, what incentive is there to care passionately for human minds and bodies? In the faith of the Christian is to be found the inspiration of the finest and best in our civilization. It is time that we think of the Church in large terms of intelligence, interest, and support. For if the Christian Evangel be true, here is the greatest of all causes given by God into the hands of men. Upon this rests all other efforts for the attainment of peace and of righteousness.

If there are stern realities to be faced courageously and realistically, it is equally true that there are firm grounds for encouragement. Never before has the cause of Christian missions been so justified by the march of events. It is not so long ago that the Christian who talked of the family of nations, of human brotherhood, of the world community of interest was considered to be an impractical dreamer. Now we know that such a Christian talked hard common sense. The organization of the United Nations, the proposals for World Government, every peace conference of the leaders of the nations, indeed every newspaper headline prove the essential correctness of the Christian view of the world and human nature. With the advent of modern methods of communication and of transportation we have an unprecedented means and opportunity of telling the Good News, not of our Western civilization, but of the Christ who will draw all men unto Him.

Furthermore, we can rejoice that not in many centuries has there been evident such a spirit of cooperation among many of the great communions of the Christian Church as shown in programs of vital importance. I am happy to emphasize a resolution passed overwhelmingly by both Houses of our General Convention as indication of the mind of our own Church: "Resolved that this General Convention herewith goes on record as expressing its sincere intention to seek closer cooperation and joint action with other Churches and with the Federal Council of Churches and the World Council of Churches in facing together in the light of our Christian faith, the material, moral and spiritual issues of our day." If the Christian forces of the world can stand together for Christian truth and practice, then there is reason for the conviction that the powers of evil can be overcome.

But of course the great reason for realistic and determined confidence is in the character of our faith. If, to the best of our ability, we are true and loyal, then we work not in our own feeble humble strength but as living channels of the power of God in Jesus Christ. Like the servant of old, if we have the eyes of faith we shall know that "around and about us are the horses and chariots of fire," that "they who are with us are more than they that be with them."

So as this month, by the act of the General Convention, I assume a position of leadership within the Church, I ask of every bishop, clergyman, layman, and laywoman: "Where do we stand? What do you believe? What do you plan to give of your means, above all of your life, in this cause?" If you are not deeply concerned, then let us know that and have it settled where we stand and upon whom we can count. Again I say, let each of us throughout the Church face again the overwhelming implications of the Christian faith and his own sincerity in affirming that faith.

Numbers are important, but not vital. The essential things are consecration, determination, loyalty, the character of the Christian community that God may use us as instruments of His purpose and will. Here today, as representatives of all our people, in humility, in trust, in thankfulness for all that God has given to us, we rededicate ourselves, our souls and our bodies.

Financing Theological Education

by Frederick C. Grant

The Editor of THE WITNESS

THE average churchman has only the vaguest idea of the way in which theological seminaries are maintained. True he has not much of an idea of how colleges and universities are supported, though he reads in the newspapers from time to time that someone has given a fund or left a bequest to some college for some particular purpose, say scientific research or a professorship or some part of the library. When John or Mary go off to college regular bills for tuition begin rolling in and their parents probably assume, without thinking very much about it, that several hundred—or several thousand—students paying tuition provide the funds for operating the institution. But if colleges had no other income than tuition fees most of them would have closed long ago. And the same is true in even greater measure of theological seminaries. Some of them do not even charge tuition; others find it necessary to offset tuition charges by providing scholarships; others by organizing a program of outside work for students, often so heavy that it seriously interferes with the student's main business in life, for the time being, which is study.

For the plain fact is, theological students are not, as a rule, adequately supplied with financial resources to pay their own way. Often their parents have done all they can to see them through college. The expense of three years more of study in a seminary—three more years of support from home—is impossible for many parents with moderate incomes. If a boy is going into medicine or law the cost can sometimes be met by borrowing, for a medical or legal career is a kind of investment and if the student is worth his salt he can surely pay back his loan in ten years at the most. But who would advance a loan to a theological student on the expectation of such a return? True enough there are cases where this is done but they are very uncommon. It is therefore a practical necessity for seminaries to undertake in some measure to provide not only for the education of their students but for their living expenses as well. The Canadian Church already faces this fact and recognizes it through an appeal for candidates for the ministry: "Do not let your lack of funds hold you back. The great majority of students in all courses start out with no more than enough money to see them through the first year or so." We too here in the United States will have to recognize the situation and begin to do more about it than we have done in the past.

But why should the seminary assume the whole responsibility for financing theological education? Are not candidates for the ministry really the responsibility of the Church which accepts them and intends to use them in its parishes and missions after their education is finished? The seminary has its hands full in raising funds for educational purposes; for salaries of faculty and officers of administration; for wages for help; for fuel, repairs, library upkeep and dozens of other items in the budget. We do not expect a university to finance the living expenses of its students, as well as their education. But we do, apparently, assume that a seminary must do all this, and more.

One way in which the costs of theological education have been met is through endowment. But the returns from investments have dropped to a serious point in most cases during recent years. At the same time living costs have gone up. The result is that a seminary depending solely upon endowment income has had no way of bridging the widening gap between receipts and expenditures. Another way is the appeal to a group of "friends of the institution," usually a select list of wealthy and generous contributors. But this is unsatisfactory for it is not fair to expect a handful of generous churchmen and churchwomen to bear a burden which probably belongs to the whole Church. Furthermore these people have their problems too these days.

Still another plan is to appeal to the alumni for regular contributions. But this is not enough. The alumni of the great universities give large sums, but even these gifts do not fully finance the institutions they benefit. And who would expect a group of clergymen to do what a group of lawyers or doctors or business men do not succeed in doing through their alumni organizations.

Still another plan is to advertise regularly and appeal for gifts—the Church's step-children hold out their empty hands, week after week, appealing for the daily bread which is their right—not a charity but an obligation of the Church itself.

ONE might reasonably assume that the Church itself would undertake responsibility for the establishment and maintenance of its seminaries and for the supplementing, through scholarships or through remunerative field-work positions, of the income of candidates sufficient to enable them to meet both tuition and living costs. The Episcopal Church is one of the richest, per capita, in Christendom, and our people are generous. But the giving of the Church is not fairly planned, or apportioned in the right way. The missionary budget is viewed by too many of us as the sole and essential large-scale corporate undertaking, that is, by the Church as a whole. Even this is not too large. We ought to do more than we are doing at present, and the per capita offerings for missions in some of the other Churches show us up rather badly. But the missionary budget takes no account of either Church colleges or seminaries. Contrast what other Churches are doing—Roman Catholic, Lutheran, Presbyterian, Methodist, Congregational, Baptist, Evangelical and others. They have a multitude of colleges and strong theological schools or seminaries, often located near the great universities where their students and faculty enjoy the immense advantage of free use of large libraries, extra-curricular lectures and so on. Some Churches, numerically and financially less able than ours, outdo us two to one in the support of education, not only theological but general.

I have a friend who is pastor of a large Roman Catholic parish, full of ordinary people, not half a dozen of them well-to-do. He inherited a debt of over $600,000—these were the figures when last I saw his budget—which must be amortized at about $50,000 a year. On his staff are half a dozen clergy, and there is a large parish school besides with perhaps twenty sisters on its faculty. All in all the parish just about breaks even financially each year. But on that parish budget is an item, every year, of $500 for theological education. When I mentioned to the pastor my delight at discovering this item it was his turn to be surprised. "This is just about the most important item in the budget. Don't your parishes all do the same?"

I have another friend who is head of a famous Jewish seminary. As his guest I recently attended a dinner marking an interesting anniversary in its history. Some mention was made of the need of funds. On the way home one of our hostesses addressed her husband: "My dear, I am simply ashamed that Dr. . . . . had to mention money on such an occasion. Why don't you and your friends get together and take care of such needs before they arise?" Could such an incident occur in the Episcopal Church? Frankly I wish it could. It simply is not fair-play to let the seminaries do everything; provide the faculties, buildings, libraries and all the maintenance costs through special appeals and then have to worry over students' board and room and other expenses as well. When will we begin to measure up to our responsibilities in this task? Here and there a generous layman sees the need and gives abundantly. There are two or three conspicuous examples in recent years of which we all should be proud.

Proud, yes, of them; but ashamed of ourselves. For the burden of financing theological education is one that belongs on the shoulders of the Church as a whole, not on those of a few generous and devoted laymen. May their example hearten and inspire the rest of us to do something and encourage every parish to have a share, however large or small, in this task. Without adequate seminaries the ministry will suffer. Without an adequate ministry the whole Church will suffer. Theological education is the responsibility of the whole Church.

Sunday, January 26th, set aside by the Presiding Bishop as theological seminary Sunday, is a good time to start both with sermons and generous offerings.

New Books

Color Blind by Margaret Halsey. Simon and Shuster, $2.50.

This book has the great merit of being written in a language understandable of the people. The author has sub-titled it "A White Woman Looks at the Negro," but much of the material seems to be that of a white person looking at white persons in an endeavor to discover the root of prejudice. She has an approach to the matter which is not sentimental, but takes into account human sinfulness, admitting that she is not trying to achieve the absolute, but just "narrow the field in which prejudice operates." Miss Halsey puts scientific findings about race in such a way that the reading of them is a joy. The chapter on "Sex, Jealousy and the Negro" is excellent, not only as a diagnosis of color problems, but of the whole human problem. She combines Marx and Freud, without mentioning either, in an analysis of the ordinary treatment of Negroes in this country. This is a book that ought to have extremely wide circulation, and should be given especially to those who are convinced that all experiments in brotherhood, which include social brotherhood, are doomed to failure. Student Christian Association Gives Support to UN

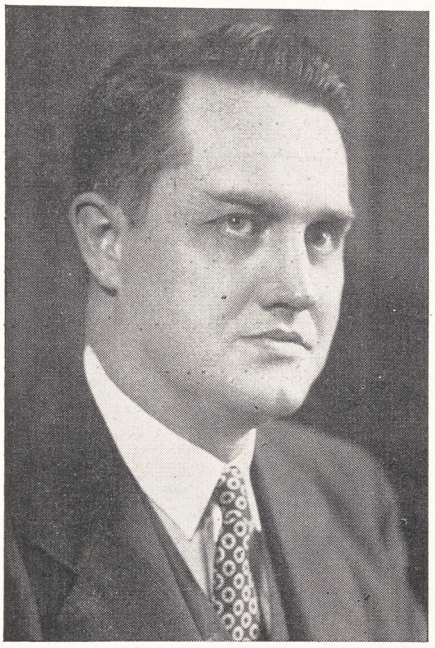
Faith Declaration Adopted by Conference Although There Was Opposition from Many

Edited by Sara Dill

Urbana, Ill. (RNS):—Strong support of the United Nations and its related organizations was pledged by the national assembly of the Student Christian Association Movement at its annual meeting here in a resolution which also called upon the United States to assume full responsibility in the UN. The U. S. was further urged to work for limitation of the veto power in the Security Council and the settlement of international disputes through the UN.

Progressive world disarmament by international agreement was asked by the delegates who suggested that the U. S., in cooperation with other members of the UN, begin immediate reduction of its military force with complete disarmament in view. The assembly went on record as supporting the U. S. plan for civilian control of atomic energy in this country. Another resolution rejected a policy of unilateral military intervention in affairs of other countries.



Sponsorship of an international bill of rights by the U. S. was urged by the group which also called for the promotion of the welfare of non-self-governing peoples. It was suggested that occupied zones be placed under a UN trustee other than a permanent member of the Security Council.

A pledge of united effort toward establishment of a social order in which all people would have equal economic rights was given by the assembly. Full support of collective bargaining and strong and responsible labor unions was promised in a resolution which stated that "concern for the public welfare on the part of both labor and management in the adjustment of disputes" is necessary.

Government stabilization of prices, establishment of regional development projects, and passage of national and state legislation to improve rural economy and social life, housing, and recreational facilities were called for.

The assembly rejected a bid to affiliate the National Intercollegiate Christian Council with the World Federation of Democratic Youth but indorsed the Council's affiliation with the International Union of Students.

Resolutions were passed and a letter written to President Truman asking him to grant amnesty and restoration of citizenship rights to conscientious objectors who were given prison sentences.

Dr. John Milton Potter, president of Hobart College, died suddenly on January 9 following a heart attack. He was forty years of age. He was a deputy at the last General Convention

A declaration affirming adherence to the Christian faith was approved despite some opposition from the floor that its adoption might alienate non-Christians who participate in the work of the YMCA, YWCA and the Student Christian Associations.

The declaration was also opposed by a minority of delgates on the ground that no one statement could adequately represent the members of the movement, who come from many denominations. This objection was answered by George Younger of Yale University who said there are theologians "of many stripes who could punch any declaration we could make full of holes, but that need not stop us from putting the Christian faith at the center of our movement."

A preface to the declaration asserted that its acceptance is not a prerequisite for membership in the Student Christian Association Movement.

The declaration stated:

"We affirm our faith in God, the Creator of the universe and the source of all life. God is holy and righteous. He is the judge of men and of nations and the loving Father of all. Through the ages mankind has found strength and hope in Him. God reveals Himself most fully to men in Jesus Christ. Through Him we see what God is like and man should strive to be. For Christian insight and strength in faith and action we turn to the Bible which contains inspired words of God.

"We affirm our belief that God has created men in His own likeness with moral responsibility to God, to his fellow men, and to himself. Man cannot fully meet his responsibility without mutually recognizing the equal rights of all races, nations, classes, creeds, and sexes."

Asked to Picket

Boston (RNS):—Asserting it is the duty of priests, ministers and rabbis to take their place in picket lines when workers go on strike, Michael J. Quill, of New York, president of the Transport Workers International Union, C.I.O., called for greater cooperation between leaders of all Churches and labor, in an address here. The Church as a whole, he declared, is not doing enough in working with labor to combat race discrimination, building world peace and securing full employment.

He levelled criticism at the labor policy of the Roman Catholic Church in New York, of which he is a member, claiming the Church's labor movement is a "hindrance, nuisance and a strike-busting outfit."

Mr. Quill lauded the action of some priests and ministers who have taken part in picket lines but as a whole, he declared, the Church has not done enough and most of its leaders "are too conservative."

Church Fire

Trenton, Mich.:—St. Thomas Church here, the oldest Episcopal church in metropolitan Detroit, has been destroyed by fire. The church was built in 1843 and the timbers were hand-hewn logs. On the day of the fire many of the men of the congregation worked to keep the water from the fire hoses from the floor of the parish hall and later fixed the dining hall so it can be used as a temporary church, and the afternoon of the first a sign was placed over the bulletin board reading "Services as usual." A campaign for $60,000 is now under way for rebuilding. The Rev. G. Clare Backhurst is rector.

Discuss Ministry

Evanston, Ill.:—A conference on the ministry, sponsored by the commissions on college work of the 5th and 6th provinces, was held here at Seabury-Western Seminary, Dec. 27-29. Bishop Keeler of Minnesota spoke on the personal life of the minister; Bishop Emrich of Michigan talked about vocation; Chaplain Stephen F. Bayne of Columbia University spoke on the job of a parson in the world today and Dean Alden D. Kelley of Seabury Western told the college men about preparing for the ministry. There were 39 students present, representing 9 states and 21 colleges.

Campaign Postponed

New York:—The campaign for relief in Europe and Asia, approved at the December meeting of the National Council, has been postponed to a later date. The dates now proposed are February 23 to May 25 when a million dollars will be sought.

Bishops Meet

Washington:—Bishops of the 3rd province held an informal meeting here on January 14, prior to the service of installation of Bishop Sherrill as Presiding Bishop. They discussed the new marriage canon and other matters of general interest.

Seek Funds

Danville, Ind.: — Canterbury College, co-educational institution which last spring affiliated with the Indiana dioceses, is seeking $50,000 for the current year.

Scientists Speak

Boston (RNS):—Scientists of Harvard University and Massachusetts Institute of Technology are coming out of their laboratories to tell the story of the atomic age to leaders of all creeds and seek their understanding of its momentous significance.

For the first time in the history of these two universities, members of their teaching and research staffs, banded together as the Association of Cambridge Scientists, are meeting with religious leaders. In an all-day session plans were made for the appointment of permanent committees representing each of the three major faiths.

"Our first purpose is to get certain fundamental facts across to the public," says Dr. Wendell P. Furry, professor of physics at Harvard. "And then we must make it unmistakably clear that we cannot have another war if mankind is to survive. No country could win. Certain widespread misconceptions about the atomic bomb must be dispelled if the public is to understand its implications and act wisely in the great issues of our times.

"Many people falsely believe there is a secret to the atomic bomb that can be kept. That is a misconception. Research in nuclear physics and atomic energy is being conducted by all nations. Any military advantage we have can be only temporary. As soon as one nation obtains a military advantage, it becomes the duty of the scientists of other nations to find ways of offsetting that advantage. And they invariably do. We must understand that there is no defense against the atomic bomb—only desperate ways perhaps, of keeping on going under its assault.

"Some people think atomic warfare is a luxurious method only the United States can afford. That's a mistake, too. The atomic bomb is a bargain-counter weapon. It's ten times cheaper than the old methods of making war.

"We must keep scientific research as free as possible from military control. Science traditionally has been one of the fields in which there has been international understanding. Our only promise of survival comes from the possibility of widening that understanding."

Political Action

Washington (RNS): — A series of seminars for church leaders dealing with legislative and political action will be held here during January and February. Social education and action secretaries of several Protestant denominations met January 14-15 under the sponsorship of the Federal Council of Churches. On February 4-6, the first Churchmen's Washington seminar will be held, sponsored by the cooperative committee of the Northern Baptist Convention, Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., United Council of Church Women, the Women's Division of Christian Service of the Methodist Church, and the Congregational Christian Churches.

The United Christian Youth Movement will conduct a political education seminar for young people here February 12-15.

Religious leaders here pointed out that legislative seminars held under church auspices throughout the country on such topics as housing, mental health, state FEPC and migrant labor, have proved to be an effective means of citizenship education.

Greetings from USSR

Washington (RNS):—The All-Union Council of Evangelical Christians and Baptists of Russia sent New Year's greetings to American Christians in a cable received here at headquarters of the Baptist World Alliance. The Russian group also cabled similar greetings to Dr. Louie D. Newton, of Atlanta, Ga., president of the Southern Baptist Convention, who visited the U.S.S.R. last summer.

Signed by Jacob Zhidkov, president of the Council, and Alexander Kareff, secretary, the message said:

"Heartiest greetings to you and all fellow Baptist and fellow Christians of America. May God give you new power for sacrificial service in the cause of Christ in the New Year."

Dr. Newton cabled a reply from Atlanta in which he stated that "Southern Baptists gratefully acknowledge your geetings. We cherish the assurance of your prayers and fellowship in united service in the Kingdom of God."

Tells of Trip

Newark, N. J.:—Mrs. Arthur Sherman, executive secretary of the Auxiliary, spoke at the meeting of the Auxiliary of Newark on January 8, describing conditions in the various mission fields in the Orient which she recently visited.

Arrive in China

Shanghai (wireless to RNS):—More than 400 missionaries arrived here last week to take up posts in various parts of China. The contingent was the largest of its kind ever to have embarked at one time.

Unity Urged

Wilmington, Del. (RNS):—Asserting that 1947 is the year for Protestants "to think and battle for church union," Oliver J. Collins, superintendent of the Wilmington district of the peninsula conference, The Methodist Church, called here for merger of the Protestant Episcopal and Methodist churches. He asserted that "it is time for us to bury the hatchet that severed the Methodist Societies from the Anglican Communion. We have much in common. The Methodist Church had enough evangelical fervor to increase its membership during the conference year 1945-46 by one million souls. Anglicanism has displayed a vigorous, dynamic churchmanship."

Building Plans

Richmond, Va.:—Since before the beginning of the war, the diocese of Virginia has been faced with the problem of Church expansion in rapidly growing areas around Alexandria and Arlington in the northern part of the diocese, and around Richmond in the southern part. Several additional clergymen have been added in the Alexandria-Arlington area. A new church has been built and others have been enlarged. There is still great need for larger and more adequate church buildings. In one new development where we have a church seating only 150 people, it has been found by a religious survey that there are more Episcopalians among the people who have Church preference than any other religious group. The Roman Catholics are second. In this particular area there are approximately 1200 or 1400 members of our Church.

The diocese, realizing the need of doing something to cooperate with the people who have recently moved into these communities, is working on a plan to assist in needed Church expansion. New developments are being planned for both the Alexandria-Arlington and Richmond areas.

While we are making our plans, other Churches are likewise planning for church expansion. In the city of Richmond the First Baptist Church, with over 3,000 communicants, in addition to sponsoring two comparatively new missions, has announced a plan to make a $300,000 addition to its building which at present is perhaps the largest in the city.

Pray for Congress

Washington:—Bishop Angus Dun and Dean John W. Suter took part in a service held here on the day Congress convened, asking that the legislators be divinely guided. The service was held at the Church of the Reformation and was sponsored by the local federation of Churches.

Discrimination Fought

Portland, Ore.: — The Portland Council of Churches has called upon city officials here to take positive action to eliminate discrimination against minority groups "in all areas of human endeavor." Urging citizens interested in its program to write to Mayor Earl Riley, the Council suggested these steps be taken: (1) Inaugurate democratic employment practices throughout city government; insert a non-discrimination hiring clause in every contract let by the city to private firms. (2) Begin a training program for the police emphasizing good race relations. (3) Organize a representative city-wide civic unity committee with official status to plan for interracial progress and harmony.

Social Relations Discussed

Alexandria, Va.:—The Rev. W. Carroll Brooke of Staunton, Va., chairman of the commission on social relations for the 3rd province, was a headline speaker at a conference on social relations held here under the auspices of the Auxiliary of the province. Specific suggestions made by Mr. Brooke and other speakers for study and action were: strengthening of the home; marital instruction; marital clinics; child guidance clinics; parents' programs; study of divorce; race relations; representation of minorities in diocesan departments; labor-management relations; rural work; social security; raising of standards for Church institutions.

Other speakers at the two day conference were Mr. Arthur Fawcett of Washington, representing the Church League for Industrial De-

Church Income Is Cut

Edinburgh (wireless to RNS):— The Church of Scotland will lose one-fifth of its income when Britain's railroads are nationalized and the Church must accept compensation from revenue-producing stock holdings, according to J. T. Fox, joint clerk of the Aberdeen Presbytery. He added that the Church of England would probably lose about $800,000 annually because of the nationalization plan.

Conflict in China Deplored

Seattle (RNS): — Armed conflict between Nationalist and Communist forces in China "contains the ever-present danger that the United States and the Soviet Union may be drawn in on opposite sides," according to a report adopted by the Federal Council of Churches at its biennial meeting here. The report noted that fighting in China foreshadowed world war two, and "creates a comparable menace today." Beneath many of the issues at stake in the East, the report stated, there is "the pervasive factor of Soviet-Western relations. The peace of the entire world is involved in the fate of East Asia."

Because of U. S. commitments in the Pacific, the Federal Council stated, the future of the American people is especially involved in the final settlement of the China question. Peace and welfare in Asia, the Council declared, depends upon the success of the United Nations, and any settlement of the question must take into consideration the moral and material welfare of the peoples directly concerned. Moreover, the report said, the solution must not only safeguard fundamental rights, but must contribute to and be an integral part of a world settlement. The Council called upon the more privileged nations to share their scientific and technical resources with those less privileged.

Michigan Opens New Churches

Detroit: — Missionary work in three new areas has been opened in the diocese of Michigan. A mission, directed by the Rev. Charles H. Cadigan of Cranbrook, is now meeting in the East Detroit High School. Named St. Gabriel's Mission, it already has a good congregation and Sunday school, with the people looking forward to the purchase of land for a church.

At the Valentine housing project a strong congregation is being developed under the direction of four clergymen—the Rev. G. Paul Musselman, the Rev. W. T. Smith, the Rev. A. Curtis Miller and the Rev. Berton S. Levering. Miss Margaret M. Cook serves this area as a lay worker.

The most recent work to get under way is at Milford where services are being conducted in a private home until a place is found for public worship. This work is under the direction of the Rev. Kenneth Morris of Brighton.

Theological Education Sunday

January 26th

At the request of the Joint Commission on Theological Education, I have designated the Third Sunday after the Epiphany, January 26, 1947, as Theological Education Sunday.

This Sunday I hope will be the occasion for addresses in every Church upon the subject of the importance of the work of our Theological Seminaries, and furthermore that in every parish there will be given an opportunity for the people of the Church to give financial support to the Seminaries.

There are many causes which at first seem more imperative. But I doubt if this be true. To a very large extent the character of the Church is determined by the quality of the clergy.

Without trained and consecrated spiritual leaders the Church cannot meet the necessities of the times. This points straight to the Seminaries and their need of adequate support.

I hope, therefore, that on this designated Sunday, there will be a ready and genuine response.

Billion Dollars

Minneapolis, Minn. (RNS):—Contributions made by the American public to religion in 1945 scored a new high by passing the $1,000,000,000 mark, but they amounted to only one-third of the nation's bill for tobacco and one-eighth its outlay for alcoholic beverages.

The estimated total for religious gifts and bequests in 1945 was $1,035,000,000, or .9 per cent of the $115,000,000,000 for all consumer outlays for the year. It was estimated that of the total, $7,800,000,000 went for alcoholic beverages; $3,000,000,000 for tobacco and $1,200,000,000 for movies and theaters' admissions.

In 1942, religion received $721,000,000 of the total consumer outlays of $89,000,000,000, or .8 per cent.

Seek Law Change

Newark, N. J. (RNS):—The New Jersey Council of Churches seeks a change in the New Jersey minimum wage laws. The executive committee has approved the recommendation of its social education and action department, to request Governor-elect Alfred E. Driscoll, to seek of the State Legislature a change in the existing law to provide for equal coverage for men and women, a floor under all wages that would still permit wage orders above minimum, and a narrowing of the area of exemptions.

In the matter of emergency housing, the council voted to urge State Legislators and Congressmen to "take immediate action" toward the solution of the acute housing shortage in the state through workable plans for temporary housing construction.

Mayors of New Jersey cities with populations of 20,000 or more will receive similar requests to take action "if and when there is a need for such emergency housing in his city."

The council gave its stamp of approval to planned parenthood when, at the request of the National Clergymen's Council of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America, Inc., it passed resolutions favoring the inclusion of planned parenthood services in hospitals and "other agencies where this service should be given." The council further resolved "that favorable policies be sought to permit professional staff members in other health and welfare agencies to make maximum use of these services as a community health resource."

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

REV. JOHN H. JOHNSON
Rector of St. Martin's, New York

I have read the account of the debate in the National Council on racial segregation. To admit that segregation exists and realistically to try to make progress in spite of it is one thing: but to advocate it is an entirely different matter. Segregation is an evil thing. Just because so many people bravely have made the best of it cannot be construed an endorsement. On most questions Negroes are just about as divided as whites, but there is one subject on which there is no division, namely, segregation. I know of no Negro leader in this country, in the north or in the south, who approves of segregation. If Dr. Bentley knows one I wish he would tell us his name. When he says "I should want segregation if I were a Negro," he disqualifies himself from a position of effective leadership among members of the colored race. Youth in schools of the American Church Institute deserve something better.

MISS ETHEL VAN BENTHUYSEN
Churchwoman of Albany, N. Y.

I am sending this because I have had something I have wanted to say since last October and have not wanted to be disagreeable, but I have had it on my conscience just the same. Here it is. When THE WITNESS published the ridiculous picture of the Archbishop of Canterbury putting on his robes I felt that THE WITNESS fell to a level too low for a Church paper. It was discourteous of Time magazine to ridicule a foreigner who came to our shores representing a Church and a country of significance. But it seemed to me such bad taste in a paper of our own Church from which the Church of England could expect sympathy, for me there was something second rate about it.

I had just been passing around with pride Mr. Spofford's account of what Russia must naturally feel about us. I thought that article was even better than Wallace's letter. And then came this cheap crack, by photograph, at the Archbishop, who, it did not seem to me, had put on any vulgar display of side which warranted disrespect for himself or his office.

ANSWER: As explained here before, the picture in question was taken at the request of the Archbishop himself and he was very pleased with it. He stated that a similar picture printed in many papers in England at the time of his enthronement was by far the most popular of the pictures taken on that occasion. And the Archbishop himself indicated that he would be glad to have this particular picture appear in the papers here.

JNO. B. BENTLEY
The Bishop of Alaska

The following letter for Backfire is addressed to the boys and girls of our church schools:

During the past year, you gave through your Birthday Thank Offering approximately $13,000.00. As you know, this offering will be used to establish a hostel in Fairbanks, Alaska, where our boys and girls can have a Church home while attending high school. It will be the means of enabling many young people to receive a high school training who otherwise would not have this privilege.

I take this means of expressing to you all, the boys and girls of the Church everywhere, my gratitude and appreciation for your splendid and generous gift to the boys and girls of Alaska. Through this gift, through your interest, your prayers, and your Birthday Thank Offering, you will have a very real part in the schooling of many young people in Alaska. As their Bishop and their spokeman, I want to thank you all. May God bless you, as you have brought encouragement and a rich blessing to others.

REV. EDWARD J. MOHR
Rector at Belvedere, Calif.

In his column in THE WITNESS of Dec. 5 Mr. Ayres makes the purely whimsical assertion that some National Council departments tend to live in a vacuum because their offices are in New York. It is obvious that this assertion has no basis in fact: on the contrary, no point in the country compares with New York as a place where currents of people and thought come to a focus.

Apart from flying into the face of facts Mr. Ayres shows a peculiar lack of logic. None of the recommendations which he makes for changes in National Council policy have the remotest relation to the location of departmental offices. He offers a solution for a problem that does not exist, as a solution for a problem that cannot be solved. If the text, "We wrestle not against flesh and blood, etc.", which Mr. Ayres recommends for National Council letterheads, were put on parochial letterheads, he would not have to look to a moving van for salvation. No program, or helps, or techniques, advanced by National Council departments, can take the place of religious motivations in the parishes. It is certain in any case that Mr. Ayres' recommendations will not become more acceptable even if he were to add a thousand miles between himself and some National Council departments.

Christian Treatment Necessary To Win Minority Groups

Speaker Also Declares That Church Unity Needed to Attain Rebirth of the Nations

By George Dugan

Buck Hill Falls, Pa.:—America's "unfair and un-Christian treatment" of non-white minority groups is a major deterrent to the spread of Christianity throughout the world, the Rev. Ralph E. Diffendorfer, executive secretary of the board of missions and church extension of the Methodist Church, declared here in an address before the annual meeting of the Home Missions Council. The Council represents 23 major Protestant denominations.

"Treat the Mexican fairly and Christianity will be proclaimed in Latin America," he said. "Clear our American Indian record and East Indians will take notice of democracy and Christianity. Abolish lynching, not by law, but by effectively acknowledging the Negro's right to respect and decent citizenship and not only Africa but all the non-white world will rise up and call the Church blessed."

"The expenditure of an estimated $650,000,000 on new church buildings in the United States will not cause a ripple of comment in the non-Christian world of Asia, Africa, the islands of the sea and elsewhere, nor will the adding of thousands of new members to the rosters of the traditionally programmed churches of our country. Nor, will new Church buildings, settlement houses, educational institutions or hospitals among the minority groups — Negroes, Mexicans or other Latins, Chinese, Filipinos, or American Indians be commented on by the billion non-white people of Asia, as a favorable witness for Jesus Christ. These signs of possible progress may have been evidences of Christian vitality in the days before world-wide communication, international travel and global war—but not now."

The Rev. H. N. Morse, retiring president of the Council, told the closing session that only world-wide spiritual revival will settle the ideological controversies plaguing mankind.

Pleading for unity within the Church as the only sure means to attain a spiritual rebirth among the nations, Morse pointed out that society has been forced by "the very logic of events to a large-scale collectivism as an antidote to the extreme individualism that was characteristic of the frontier."

"We might have made that process spiritual at its core," he said, "if we had insight to do it and if our Churches had been united enough to do it. But the religious separatism that in some instances served the people very well did not serve us well in this."

Describing the "real crisis of our time" as spiritual, Morse added: "The Christian Church must be a much greater force in the future than it has been, or it will become much less important and increasingly socially impotent."

Resolutions adopted at the closing session of the meeting commended the proposed establishment by the United Nations Assembly of an international refugee organization to provide for displaced persons when UNRRA disbands next June and urged Congressional support for the admittance of certain displaced persons as "emergency immigrants."

Also addressing the conference was Professor Charles M. McConnell of Boston University who said that Protestant Churches operating as denominational units have "sidestepped, ignored and all but scorned the marginal rural sections of the country."

He told the delegates that a cooperative Protestantism, functioning above denominational barriers and geared to combat the threat of secularism in the neglected rural areas, is desperately needed if the country is to become Christian in "anything more than name." Evidence of this neglect, Prof. McConnell declared, can be seen in "tumbledown shack churches, dog-eared song books, abandoned churches, scant religious educational literature and an almost total absence of theological seminary graduates in these underserved fields."

"The harvest of this failure of denominational Protestantism to 'seek and to save that which is lost'," he added, "is widespread rural paganism."

According to Prof. McConnell, the worst aspect of the neglect of the rural church field is the low estate of the ministry. "Graduates of seminaries who have been trained for their task, who have a missionary spirit, and who have become established in rural parishes, have been pressured out, appointed out, called out or sympathized out so often that it amounts to a major tragedy," he said.

The Rev. Clifford L. Samuelson, head of rural work of the Episcopal Church, was elected recording secretary of the Home Missions Council.

KINGDON TO SPEAK FOR CLID

New York:—Frank Kingdon, author, radio commentator and co-chairman of the Progressive Citizens of America, and the Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher, who returns from England and the European continent February 1st, will be the featured speakers at the annual meeting of the Church League for Industrial Democracy on February 12 to be held at St. George's Church. At the luncheon, which will be chaired by Mr. Spencer Miller, Jr., highway commissioner of New Jersey, Kingdon will speak on "The Sociology of Our Crisis" and Fletcher will comment upon this topic in light of what he found in Europe.

The annual meeting will open with a two-hour business session starting at 10:30 to be chaired by Dean Arthur Lichtenberger, retiring chairman of the C.L.I.D.'s national committee. At this meeting, the results of the recent national election for new officers will be announced.

Reservations for the luncheon ($2) may be made through the national office of the C.L.I.D. at 155 Washington Street, New York.

BISHOP ALDRICH GOES TO PRINCETON

Princeton, N. J.:—Bishop Donald Aldrich, who resigned as Bishop Coadjutor of Michigan because of illness, is to become one of the deans at Princeton University in September and will have charge of the services in the university chapel.

YOUNG PEOPLE MEET

Waycross, Ga.:—Young people of the Brunswick district of the diocese of Georgia recently met at Grace Church here. The rector of the parish, the Rev. C. M. Wyatt-Brown, spoke on the importance of applying the rule of life adopted at the young people's conference at General Convention last fall.

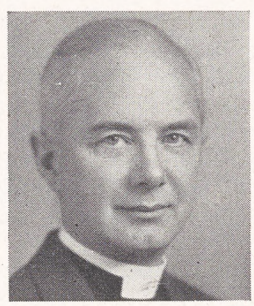
RELIGIOUS CENSUS TO BE TAKEN

Washington: — A census of religious bodies is to be taken this year by the federal Bureau of the Census. Commenting on it the director, J. C. Capt, says: "This is a most important inquiry and for its success it is vital that the Bureau of the Census have the utmost cooperation from the pastors or clerks of the churches, as well as from all religious leaders and officials. The schedule for this census includes a question on the number of members of each local church, with a supplementary question on the number under 13 years of age. The second question on membership will facilitate comparison among denominations having different provisions for inclusion of young children as church members. There are also questions on church expenditures, Sunday Schools, etc.

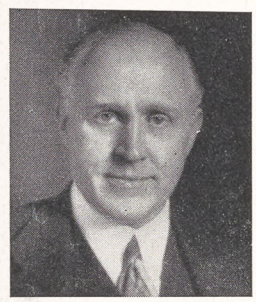
"If the statistics of religious organizations are to be of maximum value, it is essential that the returns be accurate and complete and cover, as nearly as possible, every church or religious organization in the United States. The census can be completed promptly only if each pastor will participate wholeheartedly in the work by filling out the schedule for his church and returning it promptly to the Bureau of the Census. It is a tremendous task to obtain returns from the more than two hundred fifty thousand churches scattered throughout the United States, but it can be done and it is hoped that the church leaders will realize the importance of the census and will do everything in their power to help the Census Bureau secure prompt reports from all the churches."

CHURCH CONGRESS TO MEET

Hartford, Conn.:—Bishop Walter Gray has announced the program for the first post-war national meeting of the Church Congress, to be held in Toledo, Ohio, April 22-24. The subject is to be "Authority and Freedom in Doctrine, Discipline and Worship" with the speakers the Rev. Randolph Crump Miller of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific; the Rev. Charles W. Lowry Jr., of Chevy Chase, Maryland; Bishop Kinsolving of Arizona; Bishop Conkling of Chicago; Bishop DeWolfe of Long Island and Dean John W. Suter of Washington. The preacher at the service will be Bishop Austin Pardue of Pittsburgh; the speaker at the dinner will be President Gordon Keith Chalmers of Kenyon College and the speaker at the closing luncheon, the Rev. Theodore P. Ferris of Boston.



STEPHEN BAYNE ACCEPTS



New York:—The Rev. Stephen F. Bayne Jr., chaplain at Columbia University, has accepted his election as Bishop of Olympia. A few days after his election he flew to Seattle to confer with Bishop Huston, who retires on March 31, and the standing committee and then came back to his post here "to think it over." On January 11th he wrote Bishop Huston that to accept "means the severance of personal ties which are most deep and dear to me, and the end of a ministry to college teachers and students which for nine years has been my life. I am sure you understand that and the cost of it; certainly your patience these last five weeks has been clear evidence of your understanding. I must now write to say that, subject to the requisite consents, I accept my election."

Mr. Bayne is thirty-eight years of age and so can serve as bishop for thirty-four years.

NEW YORK EEF MEETS

New York:—The Rev. Charles Kean, rector at Kirkwood, Missouri, and president of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship, was the speaker at a meeting of the New York chapter of the organization on January 16th. The meeting was held in the community house of St. Bartholomew's Church.

CHURCHMEN IN THE NEWS: Dean John W. Suter of Washington Cathedral is to be one of the speakers at the Church Congress, meeting in Toledo in April: Spencer Miller Jr., highway commission of New Jersey, is to be the chairman of the annual CLID meeting to be held in New York Lincoln's Birthday; the Rev. Vincent C. Franks has resigned as rector of St. Paul's, Richmond, to become rector of St. Andrew's, Jackson, Mississippi

BISHOP'S WIFE DIES

Hastings, Neb.:—Florence George Beecher, seventy-six, wife of Bishop George Allen Beecher, retired bishop of Nebraska, died on January 4th after a brief illness. Mrs. Beecher was a devoted churchwoman who took an active part in all its work.

SCHOOL ALUMNAE MEET

New York:—Bishop Washburn of Newark was the speaker at the annual meeting of the alumnae of St. John Baptist School, held here January 4th. The Sister Superior, Sister Mary Barbara, announced that a mortgage of $40,000 had been paid and that plans are now going forward for the construction of a new gymnasium.

Church of All Peoples Helps Meet Problem of Races

Ministers of the Different Denominations And Races Contribute Services to Church

By Ellsworth M. Smith
Director of War Emergency Services, Detroit Council of Churches

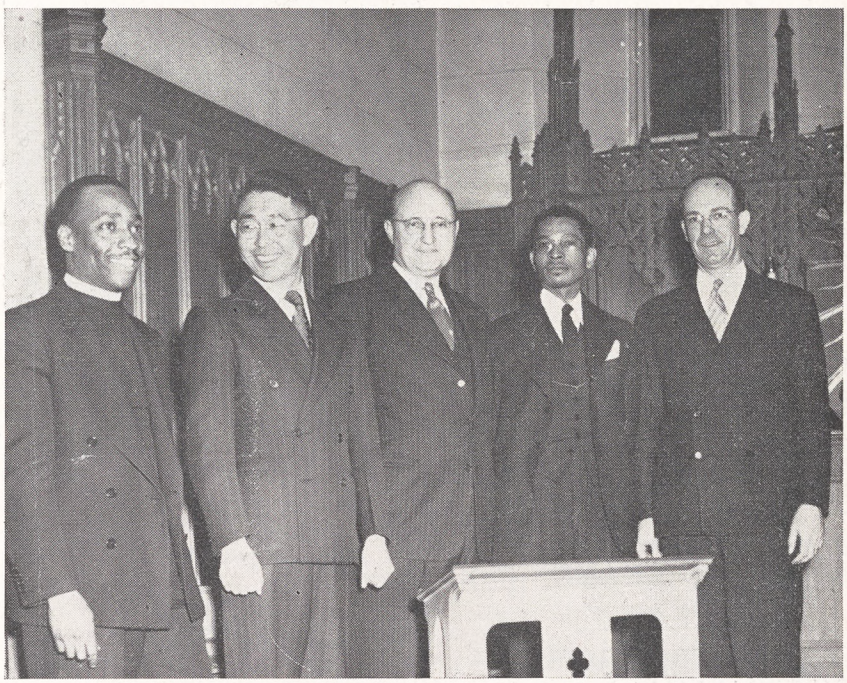
Detroit:—When this city had its race riots, it was remarked by plain citizens and students alike that wherever Negro and white people lived, played, studied or worked together there was no violence. However we may seek to develop speed-up methods of overcoming racial prejudice, the basis of success will continue to be occasions and opportunities for the people of different races to get acquainted in disarmingly natural ways.

The Church of All Peoples in Detroit was founded by a group of people who felt it was time that there was at least one opportunity in this city of tensions for people of different races to worship their God together. Thus, worship was added to living, play, study and work as an area of brotherhood in practice, and it was recognized that it should have been the first rather than the last of these areas.

The staff of volunteer ministers illustrates the church. It includes two Negro ministers, two white ministers and one Japanese-American minister. Guest ministers have included ministers of Italian, Greek, Armenian and Mexican backgrounds. The church is also inclusive of all Protestant denominations.

The Church of All Peoples began one hot Sunday afternoon in the middle of July when the Chapel of St. John's Episcopal Church was borrowed for a meeting place, and packed with interested people. Rev. Charles A. Hill, prominent Colored Baptist minister and Rev. Shigeo Tanabe, Nisei staff worker of the Detroit Council of Churches, conducted the service and the Rev. T. T. Brumbaugh, executive secretary of the Council, preached the first sermon. The music was thrilling—two hundred people of several races giving full voice to "Faith of Our Fathers" as though they had just been set free from a horrible and unnatural bondage. When the service ended many were tearful and laughing at the same time!

Every meeting the church has held has been characterized by that same cleansing sense of relief, as though a family, long separated, was whole again. It isn't important any more, in such gatherings, even to mention "race relations." The problem, for this group has ceased to exist.



To date the budget has been simple. From pledges and loose offerings the materials and mailings, the rental of space and the organist's fee have been met and several hundred dollars of surplus are in the treasury. The ministers give their services, as do the guest soloists and choirs.

The church holds a service every Sunday afternoon at four-thirty. It has a party or dinner meeting once a month. This may not seem to be much of a program, but the members and constituents have found great satisfaction in these simple exercises. Much more is planned and will be possible as soon as a budget adequate to provide full-time leadership can be secured.

One of the primary principles of The Church of All Peoples is that it shall not become an isolated experience, but shall rather be a constantly effective force for better racial practice in all the Protestant Churches. Therefore, the church meets at a non-competitive hour and encourages associate, rather than full, membership. At the end of eight months there were seventy-four associate members and six full members. Offerings and pledges are at the rate of three thousand dollars for the first year. The usual attendance is eighty, equally divided between Negro and white people with a sprinkling of others.

It is especially satisfying that the membership of the church represents a wide cross-section of people, so far as economic and cultural circumstances are concerned. The group is naturally progressive in social viewpoint, tends to be pro-labor and is politically alert. The church gave enormously of food and clothing for Europe and of money for the aid of families of strikers. Yet some of our members are laborers, while others are school teachers, bankers and lawyers. Some are from fundamentalist backgrounds and others are active Episcopalians, liturgists. A few have found in this fellowship the first church experience that has ever strongly challenged them.

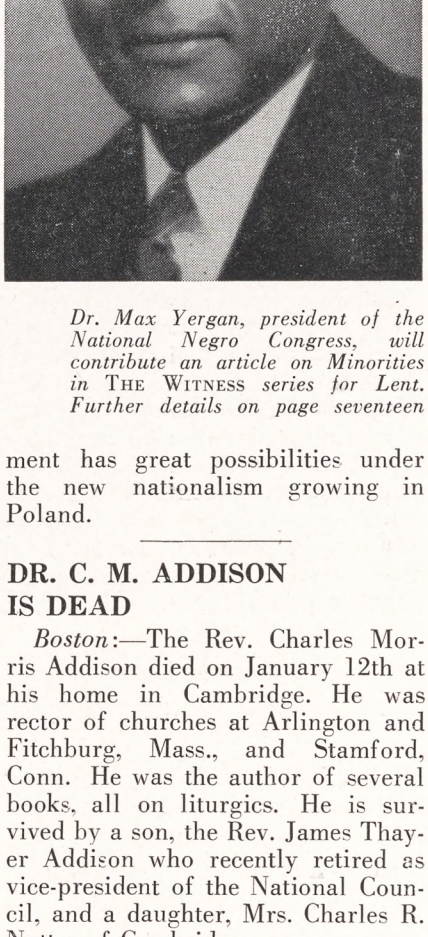
The Church of All Peoples is making definite plans to introduce itself to all sorts of racial and national-background groups in the city. A large list of such organizations includes study and discussion groups of the races, American Indians, Coptic Christians, Armenian Apostolic and Eastern Orthodox groups. Plans are also being matured to develop a Judeo-Christian service to emphasize the commonness of our religio-ethical backgrounds and to build a solid core of intelligent effort to combat the latent anti-Semitism that is all around us and even within us. For these efforts special materials are being written and techniques of visitation and deputation developed.

POLISH CHURCH WELCOMED



Albany, N. Y.:—St. Mary's, a church of the Polish National Church, had the interior of its building completely wrecked by fire on December 31st. Upon the invitation of Rector L. N. Gavitt of Grace Episcopal Church the Polish congregation worshipped there on January 1st. Arrangements have now been made whereby both congregations will use the building of Grace Church until St. Mary's can be restored.

ACTING DIRECTOR OF OVERSEAS

New York:—The Rev. A. Ervine Swift has been appointed acting director of the overseas department of the National Council, filling for the present the vacancy created by the resignation of the Rev. James Thayer Addison.

POLISH CLERGY MEET EPISCOPALIANS

Newark:—Clergy of the Polish National Catholic Church held a meeting recently with a number of the clergy of the Episcopal Church, for better understanding and to discuss the help that each Church might give the other. The meeting was held at Christ Church and was called by Canon William O. Leslie. It was stated at the meeting, attended by Bishop Washburn, that over a third of the clergymen of the Polish National Catholic Church in Poland itself were lost during the war period, many of them having been liquidated. Nevertheless, for the first time as a Church group, they are tolerated under the new government constitution in Poland. Always in the past, they have been an illegal Church with many limitations under such a liability. The new government is willing to turn over many of the Church buildings in areas evacuated by the German population. Twenty-two ex-Roman Catholic priests have already applied to the present missionary bishop in Poland, the Rt. Rev. Joseph Padewski. It is conservatively estimated that many ex-Roman Catholic priests could be immediately taken into the Polish National Catholic Church if funds were available. The movement has great possibilities under the new nationalism growing in Poland.

Dr. Max Yergan, president of the National Negro Congress, will contribute an article on Minorities in THE WITNESS series for Lent. Further details on page seventeen

DR. C. M. ADDISON IS DEAD

Boston:—The Rev. Charles Morris Addison died on January 12th at his home in Cambridge. He was rector of churches at Arlington and Fitchburg, Mass., and Stamford, Conn. He was the author of several books, all on liturgics. He is survived by a son, the Rev. James Thayer Addison who recently retired as vice-president of the National Council, and a daughter, Mrs. Charles R. Nutter of Cambridge.

REGIONAL GROUPS OF CONGRESS

Baltimore:—The Rev. C. Leslie Glenn of St. John's, Washington, is to be the speaker at a regional meeting of the Church Congress, to be held here at Emmanuel Church on January 27th. On the 30th the first meeting of a group of the Congress will meet at Gethsemane, Minneapolis. This group is composed of Church people of the Twin Cities. The dioceses of Delaware and Easton, meeting jointly, will hold its initial meeting on February 5th.

CONVENTION JOURNAL

New York:—The National Council is being flooded with requests for the Journal of the 1946 General Convention. The book is manufactured by a plant in Hammond, Indiana, and the work has been delayed by labor difficulties. However settlement between management and the union was arrived at on December 31 so that production is going ahead, though there will be some delay due to an accumulation of work.

NEW PLANS FOR CATHEDRAL

London (wireless to RNS):—New architectural plans will have to be drawn for war-destroyed Coventry Cathedral, it was announced here following disclosure that Sir Giles Gilbert, distinguished British architect, has resigned as supervisor of the rebuilding project because of differences over his design.

The announcement was made by Bishop Neville Gorton, of Coventry, and the Very Rev. R. T. Howard, provost, in a statement declaring that "the royal arts commission is dissatisfied with the present plans." The new plans, it was stated, will provide for a united Christian service center and a chapel of unity, as stipulated in the original design.

In his letter of resignation, Sir Giles said the differences over his designs "are not surprising, because conflicting ideas exist between modernist and traditional schools" of church architecture.

"The original design was traditional in character," he added. "but the bishop made it clear he wanted a more modernistic treatment."

BEXLEY ALUMNI MEET

Newark, N. J.:—Dean Corwin C. Roach was the speaker at a meeting of the alumni of Bexley Hall, held at the diocesan house here on January 12th. He declared that the seminary would always maintain a high degree of sound scholastic training and at the same time would make possible study for work in the rural field.

Science and Peace

THERE has been so much publicity about the scientists who issue warnings about a future war that one is apt to think that they are the real peace-makers of our day. But with rare exceptions they express little or no realization that war is wrong, criminal, un-Christian. One of the notable exceptions of course is Dr. Arthur H. Compton who does deal specifically with the moral meaning of the atomic bomb in the book, Christianity Takes a Stand. His contribution will be dealt with by another top scientist, Prof. Louis Ridenour, in our series of Lenten articles. Dr. Ridenour, now of the University of Pennsylvania, is one of the atomic scientists who has shown greatest concern over the use of the discovery and was a contributor to the book, One World Or None.

But with most scientists their reason for avoiding war is based on fear that someone else will destroy us before we destroy them. Fear has never been a sufficient reason to avoid war in the past. We doubt if it will be now. Rather it will simply make the next war more destructive. We know that our scientists are busily engaged in preparing for the next war. We know also that they are working hand in hand with more than six hundred German scientists and technicians who have been brought to this country since the end of the war, with more on the way. Not all of these men were Nazi party members. But they are men who designed and perfected the most horrible weapons of destruction known to man, until we came along with the atomic bomb. Whether active Nazis or not, they certainly gave their whole knowledge and experience to devising instruments of Nazi destruction. Why should Dr. Alexander Lippisch, designer of the rocket-propelled ME-163, be grinning from the pages of our newspapers, while a relatively unimportant block captain of the Nazis is in prison for crimes which were infinitesimal in comparison? Why should we invite and even urge Nazi weapon makers to come here with their families, seek American citizenship, and take their places in our universities and research centers? Why, if we are so short of technical skills (which our own top scientists deny) do we import ex-Nazis instead of recruiting technicians from those countries that fought with us in the war? If we must have German scientists why not bring over those who spent years in Nazi concentration camps because of their democratic convictions? These men, apparently, are finding it next to impossible to get over here while those who collaborated with Hitler are now granted favors.

Science is not immoral; rather it is amoral. It has no morality in itself and there is no reason to doubt that if Hitler had won many of our scientists would be working on projects in Germany today. Science, which knows no boundaries, recognizes no morality. Right and wrong are not in the textbooks of physics. The sole end is results.

But what of the morality of our nation? Are we really anxious to find the way to peace? If we are we will not chance infecting our communities with those who threw in their lot with fascism, prepared the war machine that slaughtered millions, and are suspect as possible converts to a democratic — let alone Christian—way of life.

"QUOTES"

IN THIS DAY of nuclear energy and rocket projectiles the whole human race is involved in a struggle for survival. Each one of us is a part of that struggle; the gist of the problem is individual. It is the problem of being able to live with one another in the basic relationships of life; as husbands and wives, parents and children, employers and employees, white men and Negroes, Protestants, Catholics and Jews. Every unfair discrimination a white man practices against a Negro in our community relationships; every nasty slur voiced by a Christian against a Jew; every expression of contempt against a whole nation; every act of discourtesy or prejudice makes less possible the solution of mankind's gigantic problem.

—Luther W. Youngdahl,
Governor of Minnesota

The Way Peace Comes

AS WE linger a little longer in the afterglow of the birth of the Prince of Peace, it will not be inappropriate to rejoice in a particularly peace-like act that was found singularly newsworthy by most of our metropolitan newspapers during the Christmas season. It is the uncommon which is news.

It seems a boy went out to serve his country in fighting the enemy,—to kill the enemy, if need be, but also to run the risk of being killed. His country not unmindful of his sacrifice, insured his life for $10,000 to repay his parents in some small measure for their great loss should his life be taken. He didn't want to kill, he didn't want to die, but the peace of the world was at stake, and that peace was worth whatever risk a man must take to make it real and lasting. The only difficulty was that winning the war was only the beginning of winning the peace,—and when the first job was done he wanted to get on with the next. There must be no slip-up this time if the world was at last to find the things that belong to its true peace,—things like forgiveness, and good-will.

But men do die in battle, and those who carry on in their stead are much inclined to forget that peace does not come when battle cries are stilled and men like wounded beasts withdraw to lick their wounds and recover the strength and wealth so prodigally poured out. Beneath the calm of exhaustion, hatred, and envy, and ill-will do not falter in their stride, and greed and cunning but make ready to seize whatever advantage they can from those who for a moment seem to have relaxed their guard.

This the young man knew, and so he made provision to do what he could to carry on the struggle for peace in the only way that would really count, —in the way of which the Angels sang at Jesus' birth,—of replacing ill-will with good-will,—of atoning for an act of hate with an act of love. He asked his parents, in the event of his death at the hands of the enemy, to use the insurance money which the government would pay them to establish a scholarship in an American college for one of the enemy, thus returning good-will for ill-will and sowing peace instead of the dragons-teeth of another war.

The boy died and his parents did as he had asked them to do. Now at least one former enemy is soon to inherit the life he would have taken in the fury of war. The young man chosen to study under this scholarship has said, "I will try my best to repay the young American's parents for the loss of their son. I can do this only by giving my small bit toward establishing good-will between our two countries. I was suprised that the Americans were so nice as to offer such a scholarship."

Perhaps we too read the story with surprise. We would not have had the opportunity had it not been so unusual that it was news. But as we recover from our surprise let us thank God that when the plans of statesmen seem to bog down, and proceed, if at all, with nerve-destroying caution, there are still a few who know that it is only by small deeds of love and mercy and good-will that the peace will come at last.

Landmarks of the Future

by Stephen F. Bayne Jr.

The Bishop-elect of Olympia

IT IS a world of dog-eat-dog. One of your distinguished predecessors, Alexander Hamilton, said, "Men are governed by opinion; this opinion is as much influenced by appearances as by realities." I do not think this is cynicism. I think it is true. And the more swiftly and thoroughly we recognize that nations are guided and have always been guided by the massive, reckless, blind gods of self-interest, the better off we shall be. Self-interest is the reality; the appearance will be whatever cant about "freedom-loving peoples" or "democracy" as sells best in the world's market.

How can the same world hold this bitter truth and the moving idealism of our dreams of justice? That is the question on which our peace depends. And if you have been set free by the liberating arts of history you will know the answer.

You will know that the answer has always been the same as it will be when we find it, if we do; the answer will be a few men who have the vision and the will to press self-interest far enough, so that it redeems instead of destroying. They seek their interest to the point where it saves them instead of ruining them.

The idealist does not ask for less self-interest. He asks for more. This preposterous anachronism, absolute national sovereignty, this monstrous anachronism of sovereignty,—whose self-interest does that serve, now, in a world of virus bombs and rocket missiles? Who is the realist? The man who pins his faith on the inevitable conflict between Nation A and Nation B,—or the man who has an idea which is bigger than any nation, who sees that the world is too small for nations any more? Who was the realist 20 centuries ago? Was it the emperor who kept his eastern ramparts manned for 300 years, and condemned himself and his people to be imprisoned in a dying empire until it fell in on them? Was he the realist, or was it that plain man, Paul, who had the idea of a race of men, "neither Greek nor Jew . . . barbarian, Scythian, bond, nor free"? Who won then? The emperor or the idea? You know the answer: and please God we may take courage from what we know to face the next step in history which we do not know. That is one way the liberating arts set you free, and it is one certain landmark in the misty sea of time.

Another landmark is the sense of the right order of things in this life. I think I have recommended a certain spiritual exercise to you before: I will do it again; it consists of reading a random selection of advertisements and meditating on the idea of manhood and of life which underlies them. Or the "commercials" on the radio. I have been doing it a lot lately in the subway, particularly watching the same genial and fatuous young man asking the same old boob of a clergyman to make the same ecstatic bride promise to serve Lipton's Tea. I am tired of watching him. I am tired of the old parson who needs a haircut, which I suppose is intended to signify that he is other-worldly, but to me it signifies that he is the advertising man's idea of the kind of religious jelly-fish who would be likely to ask a bride to serve tea. I am tired of being vulgarized. I am tired of men's juicy voices creeping into my room and talking about my digestion. I am tired of being told that bad breath is the worst thing that can happen to you. I am tired of the whole slimy business of having my body and its needs held up as the Summum Bonum. I am tired of a society in which the dollar value of what a man does has become his master, so that his livelihood and his very life itself depend on a blind vulgar chance. I am tired and heartsick and rebellious at a civilization which is training me and my children to think that there is nothing more important than being a tradesman or a salesman. This is not the life you and I have inherited. And I don't see why we have to put up with it.

It is a world upside down, with gain and greed and material comfort and bodily glory raised to the top, and thought and poetry and prayer at the bottom. It is a world in which one of man's needs, one of his rights, one of his selves—his economic self, his need for profit—has lost all relation to his other selves, and has been set up like a God. The dignity of his toil, the beauty and usefulness of what he does and what he is—they do not count. What counts in our world is whether a customer can be wheedled, flattered, cozened into buying something he very likely does not need and which is carefully designed to wear out as quickly as possible so he'll buy another one, with shoddy masquerading as "custom-made"—a world in which every appeal is made to our vanity, our fear, our lust, our snobbishness—and all that degrading and humiliating apparatus of commerce is necessary in order that another man may earn his daily bread. That is the degrading thing about it—that anybody's very life and meaning should depend on my sinful appetites, and should lie so abjectly at the mercy of the worst in the human spirit. We listen to Beethoven through the courtesy of our indigestion. A man depends for his living on somebody else being made anxious to buy for $20.00 what is worth $10.00 and, if it was real and what it is set out to be, should cost $100.00. It is not the profit motive or free enterprise or competitive business that is wrong—it is that it has a kind of cancer—with gain alone growing and crowding out all the parts of a man. It is a pyramid on its apex. It is a world upside down. And you know that there is no joy or peace or maturity possible for anybody in a world that is upside down.

HOW do you know it? You know it because you have read great books and heard great music and have followed the guesses and dreams of great people. There is an order of things in this universe, which gives life and meaning to all our activities—an order of justice and of proportion. You have seen it and known it, and the knowledge of it has set you free. From the consideration of it, as Socrates said, man "will determine which is the better and which is the worse life, and at last he will choose, giving the name of evil to the life which will make his soul more unjust, and good to the life which will make his soul more just; all else he will disregard. For such an iron sense of truth and right must a man take with him." Please God we take it with us when we leave this hill! That "iron sense" of what is important and noble and true in this life and the next—that is what makes it possible for men to live in peace with one another. It is what makes them men.

And that brings me to the last landmark I want to suggest to you. The liberating arts are your initiation into the great society of men. You have lived with these great and petty spirits; you have seen them at their best and their worst; you came here as children; you have learned what the size of a man is, and what the true gravity of his life is, and how transcendently great the choices he is continually called upon to make. You have seen him trying to read God's mind; you have watched him essaying to capture the tones of Eternity; you have stood at his side while he made things useful and beautiful. You have seen how evil and cruel he can be; you have seen how pity and compassion and brotherhood ennoble him—how right they are. You have learned all that he has done and left undone up to now. This is what this place is for—to pass on to you the secrets of humanity, the secrets of manliness.

Beware lest those secrets be simply cut flowers in your life. Beware lest you be simply living on inherited wealth. You can't play fast and loose with manhood. You can't do it in your own life, by yielding to the temptations which will never leave you, temptations to find an alibi to excuse less-than-human conduct in yourself.

You can't play fast and loose with ideas either. There is a precious stock of them, not very many, but radically important. If you use them up and do not replenish them, you will lose, little by little, the capacity to live with your brother and society. Ideas are the common tongue of civilization; there is no truer parable in history than the story of that great unfinished deserted tower of Babel in the land of Shinar, where the language of men was confounded in a confusion of private tongues, and men were scattered abroad and their great work was ruined.

You are free; you are both good and evil; you are responsible for what you do; your life is a gift and a trust; and so is your neighbor free and good and evil and a trust. Mankind cannot afford to lose so precious a cluster of ideas. It is our whole wealth; it is the only universal language. It is all we have to show for 10,000 years of civilized life. With it you can go anywhere and enter in and dwell in peace. Without it there is nothing for you or your world but force and fear.

Responsibility—that is the secret of humanity. Responsibility for one's choices—responsibility for one's brother—responsibility to the truth—responsibility to the love that holds our troubled earth in its arms. When responsibility goes, with its twin satellites of freedom of mind and will, then a man dries up and his impulses of sympathy and sacrifice die and he finds a cheap alibi in power politics and a power state. Even democracy itself has to set itself up as the judge of its own ends when there are no free citizens. No, brethren, take these ideas reverently. They are the best that life can give you.

_Toward a United Church_ by William Adams Brown. Scribners. $2.50.

This record of three decades of ecumenical Christianity is must reading for all who would be delivered from the perils of sectarianism, or for those who despair of progress toward a re-united Church. Though progress in this direction has been slow in certain quarters, this over-all picture is breath-taking. In hardly more than a generation we have made gigantic strides toward reunion along the road of ecumenicity. A debt of gratitude is owed the late Dr. Brown for his devotion to this cause; for this record; and also to the Rev. Samuel McCrea Cavert for completing the manuscript and preparing it for publication.

Strategy and Tactics

by

FRANCIS O. AYRES

ONE of the most shattering criticisms of the Church that I have ever encountered was voiced by Miss Dorothy Sayers in her address to the Malvern Conference. Although I make no claim to grasping the full implications of what Miss Sayers said, I understand enough to make me blush with shame for much that has been done and is being done in this parish, for like most criticisms of the Church this one hits hardest at the parish level.

Miss Sayers accuses the Church of a lack of integrity which is both widespread and profound—a lack of completeness and soundness which extends much further and goes much deeper than moral completeness or moral soundness. Indeed, the main point of her address is that the Church, like the Pharisees, has made itself into an administrator of the Law instead of fulfilling the Law as Jesus did, and lack of integrity is the natural outcome of this failure. "In the province of the Arts," for instance, "the Christian Church of today not only subjects Art to the moral Law, not only fosters corruption by condoning and approving a thing artistically vicious provided that it conforms to moral sentiment, not only thrusts the beauty of the Arts into the same Manichaean condemnation with the beauty of Matter; but she is as a whole ignorant that the integrity of the artist exists at all as a power within the world."

A Young People's Fellowship decides to produce a play to raise money to send delegates to a summer conference. It sends for a catalogue of plays and chooses one, described as a "rollicking and hilarious comedy-drama in three acts" and costing ten dollars in royalty for each performance. After some good hard work by a few and a lot of fooling by the rest of the cast, property-men, directors, etc. the play is presented to an audience of the families and friends of the participants and a few loyal members of the parish. The whole effort nets $27.50, enabling two delegates to attend the conference. Hundreds of parishes, including ours, have done just this and considered the whole thing a very worthy project.

If I understand Miss Sayers correctly, however, the corruption of parish life thus exhibited is deeper than had the play been obscene or blasphemous. The play is ill-written, ill-acted, ill-produced. In order to send two delegates to a conference, the parish has added, not inconsiderably, to the cheapness, shoddiness and vulgarity of our modern culture. It has by implication, at least, given its approval to a play which is "artistically vicious." It has taught its young people as bad a lesson in workmanship in general and in the drama in particular as it is possible to conceive.

Or consider the lack of integrity in the leaflets (for the order of service and sundry notes) which are prepared by the Church as well as by commercial houses and which are used rather widely. Some are paintings so poor in draftsmanship, color value and perspective and/or so poor in the reproduction given them as to defy description. Others are photographs so wholly lacking in imagination as to resemble the pictures taken by the police department at the scene of a murder. Undeterred by the fact that it seems almost impossible to produce a good leaflet even for the great feast days, one institution which prides itself on being a defender of sound Church doctrine offers one for each Sunday in the year. Not only is the series "artistically vicious" but it presents the Church year in such a maudlin and vacuous fashion as to deny the fact that the Church has any doctrine at all. It is time we learned the rudimentary lesson that it is better to go without than to make use of something artistically corrupt.

There is no end to the examples which might be given of lack of integrity in the Church, nor should it be supposed that this lack of integrity is confined to the province of the Arts. Although it is worse here than elsewhere, it is certainly present in the realm of the intellect. Miss Sayers points out that, in a sermon, "the argument must be intellectually uncorrupt before it can even begin to have any value for morals or religion." The same thing can be said of lectures, travelogues, or book reviews. There are enough people lecturing on subjects about which they have only the most superficial knowledge. Instead of condoning and even approving such lectures by giving them a place in the programs of its organizations, a parish should condemn such practice. A parish cannot put a stop, except within its own domain, to travelogues which touch upon the "beauty" spots and ignore everything that is socially, politically, economically, morally and religiously significant, but it can denounce them. A parish can, at least, refuse to give any place to "book reviews" delivered by someone without any qualifications for the job who chooses, for the books reviewed, works which try to hide their ineptness and smallness by masquerading under the term, "spiritual." If the Church is ever to do anything about its lack of integrity, the brunt of the attack must be carried by laymen. Even the intellectual corruptness in sermons is to a great extent the fault of laymen who listen without protest or, what is worse, without knowing it is there.

This whole subject needs a thorough and constant airing—especially by those most qualified to discuss it. Again and again people point out that the Church has become secularized but few will take the time to cite title, chapter and verse. Lack of integrity is one of the worst manifestations of secularism in the Church. It is a good place to begin reform.

SANCTUARY

conducted by W. M. Weber

"Christ seems natural to you in proportion as you are human"

. . . suppose a man to devote himself to the bettering of social conditions; suppose him so far Christian—and it is a great way on the road—as to realize that he is his brother's keeper and must go out to bear his share of the world's burden. Such a one after a few years' work will surely be impressed with the truth that, much as can be done by improved laws, improved social adjustment, improved organization, to remedy the evils under which society groans, the heart of the matter lies in character. The obstacles to progress in every class are within rather than without; they lie in jealousy, in suspicion, in self-assertion, in lust, in dishonesty, in carelessness—in a word in sin. In sin, in the omnipresent fact of sin, there is the evil. In redemption, redemption from sin, there is the central fundamental remedy and the thing supremely needful. More and more, behind legislator, instructor, economist, agitator, there dawns upon the horizon of the true reformer, to refresh his exhausted brain, to reinvigorate his desponding heart, the true emancipator of man, his redeemer, Jesus of Nazareth, whose remedies alone are adequate to human ills, because He gauges so profoundly, so accurately the nature and seat of man's disease, because He deals with men as individual characters, and bases the regeneration of society on the conversion and renewal of men. In a word, brethren, the Son of man will seem in the highest sense natural to you in proportion as you are human.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

THE sacramental rites in the Presbyterian Book of Common Worship (which we introduced last time) will be of particular interest to us Episcopalians, for we are quite right in our insistence upon unity in essential doctrine at this point, in any organic union of our communion with another. Both Baptism and Confirmation are recognized in this book, and in the ministration of baptism to adults the two rites are combined in one office. In the opening exhortation of the infant baptism service, the sacrament is defined as "a sign and seal of our cleansing, of our engrafting into Christ, and of our welcome in the household of God." But one question is put to the parents—a confession of faith in Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior and a promise to bring up the child "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." In the prayer of blessing of the font we read: "Set apart this water from a common to a sacred use . . . we beseech Thee to receive him, to endue him with Thy Holy Spirit, and to keep him ever as Thine own." In the service for adults the blessed word "regeneration" finds a place.

In the Confirmation rite the questions are more meaty and better put than in ours. There is the old Gelasian prayer for the gifts of the Spirit and the minister then lays his hand (note the singular) upon the head of each and says the same prayer as does our bishop, "Defend, O Lord." There follows a form of admission to Holy Communion, a valuable feature, and a brief charge. We Episcopalians would be nonplused, however, by a form entitled: Order for the Reception of Communicants from other Churches or on Reaffirmation of Faith or as Affiliated Members—it is a welcome "in the name of the Lord Jesus" — without handshake, however—and a blessing.

There are two orders for the celebration of Holy Communion. The idea of alternative liturgies is familiar to us, of course, from the English Proposed Book of 1928. The first order is so much like the one in our own Prayer Book that we would be thoroughly at home in it. Its chief differences from ours are worthy of sympathetic attention. The Exhortation, Confession and Absolution come at the beginning after the Collect for Purity, Commandments and Kyrie. This is certainly more logical than our own position of them. There is no recitation of the Creed (but provision is made for the Te Deum or Gloria in excelsis before the lessons); and the Prayer for the Church—almost exactly the same as ours, except that the form of thanksgiving for the saints from the 1549 Prayer Book is substituted for a definite petition for the departed—is placed after the Gospel and before the Sermon. The Consecration is an extraordinarily good condensation of our Prayer Book form, with the notable difference that the Words of Institution are not within the framework of the prayer itself, but read separately as a sort of special lesson before the prayer. This is a characteristic feature of all rites of the Calvinistic tradition, and there are many good liturgical scholars who would defend it as a more primitive arrangement. The Institution is repeated again in connection with the Fraction, which properly comes after the Lord's Prayer. The alternative order is shorter and simpler. It begins with the Offertory. The Consecration Prayer has all the essential parts, though the Words of Institution are treated in the same way as in the longer form.

Communion of the Sick is provided for in a short celebration. The Visitation office contains simply appropriate Scripture readings—prayers for the sick are found elsewhere. There is no form for unction. The Marriage service follows the pattern of our own, but the language is more modern. The vows are for "as long as we both shall live." There is also a form for blessing a civil marriage. The ordination services show the greatest divergence from our Prayer Book, but that is to be expected in a Church which has a one-fold rather than three-fold grade of Holy Orders. The ordination is by laying on of hands with prayer, the crucial phrase being: "Send down thy Holy Spirit upon this thy servant, whom we, in thy Name and in obedience to thy holy will, do now by the laying on of our hands ordain and appoint to the office of the holy Ministry in thy Church, committing unto him authority to preach the Word, administer the Sacraments, and to bear rule in thy Church." A study of primitive Christian ordination prayers in relation to this one will check any hasty tendency on our part to condemn it. I sincerely believe that a sympathetic study of this Book of Common Worship by the people of our own Church will go a long way towards making up the breach that is between us, and it will also, please God, enrich and help our own fellowship in the Mystical Body.

Bishop-Elect Norman B. Nash Called a Co-Agitator

Accepts the Title by Declaring that He Has Always Been One and Plans to Continue to Be

Edited by Sara Dill

Boston:—The Rev. Norman B. Nash, bishop coadjutor-elect of Massachusetts, delivered his first address here since his election at the annual meeting of the diocesan Church Service League. He declared that his election was a home-coming since his life had been lived in the diocese for fifty years. With a play of wit on the term "bishop co-agitator," used in reference to him by a radio commentator, Mr. Nash said: "I looked up 'agitator' in the dictionary and found that it means one who stirs up political, economic, religious and other social agitation. I have been doing this for many years now and hope to continue to do so in the future. This kind of agitation means to keep things moving. I think there ought to be someone assigned in each church for that end" and he urged everyone in the large audience to make himself a co-agitator with him.

Also addressing the meeting was the Rev. Samuel McCrea Cavert, general secretary of the Federal Council of Churches who, having recently returned from Germany, described civilization in Europe as in a "precarious state, encouraging no spirit of easy optimism. Our crisis today is not the problem of the atom but the problem of man. There is simply no safeguard against the misuse of atomic power if men are narrowly self-seeking. We must devote our energies to developing the kind of persons in whose hands that power will be a blessing and not a curse."

Referring to the outcome of the struggle to preserve civilization as being still in doubt in large areas of Europe, Mr. Cavert said: "The problem in Germany is not at the moment whether a recrudescence of power in that nation will again make her a menace, but whether the German people are going to sink into such a state of hopelessness and despair over their future that they will become an easy prey to chaos and communism." He called for spiritual renewal, evangelism and education as the task of the Churches and the need of the day.

A rally for the young people of the diocese was held in the evening, when the Rev. Charles F. Hall of Concord, N. H. urged Christian evangelism toward those Americans unattached and uninterested in Church life. "One of the most unhealthy influences in any community is the religious isolationist who sells the Church down the river for the sake of his social or golf club."

The Bishop-elect in his address also endorsed a new interdenominational marriage clinic being organized here. It will give advice to young couples who are contemplating marriage and aid married persons with their problems. He declared that more church marriages, better preparation for marriage through religious education and more personal consultations with specialized clergymen by married couples, offered greater hope for lowering the divorce than "any special institutional trick" or an absolute Church rule against divorce. He also expressed himself as being in favor of union with the Presbyterians.

Bishop Dibelius

New York:—Bishop Otto Dibelius of the Evangelical Church in Germany is on his way to the United States. He was scheduled to come with Martin Niemoeller but plans had to be changed. He will stay in this country about two months, conferring with Federal Council officials and leaders, but it is stated that he will give no public addresses.

Bishop Dibelius is head of the Evangelical Church government in Berlin and Brandenburg, an appointment which was approved by Russian occupation authorities in July, 1945. He was one of several church leaders liberated from Nazi imprisonment when the German capital was captured by the Russians.

A consistent opponent of the Nazi regime, Dr. Dibelius formerly was superintendent of the United Church of Prussia. He came into national prominence at the time of Hitler's accession to power in 1933 when he preached a sermon in Garrison Church in Potsdam defying the Nazi Party. Temporarily banished from Germany in the early days of the Hitler regime, he was closely associated in recent years with efforts to train and ordain clergymen outside the Nazi-controlled universities. Charges of illegal activities were brought against him by the Gestapo, but he was released when the courts decided there was not sufficient evidence against him.

Interracial Meetings

Columbus, Ga.:—A group of 75 ministers attended a joint meeting of the Columbus-Phenix ministerial alliance and the Negro Protestant ministers organization. It was decided that joint meetings should be held at regular intervals in the future.

Reaches Students

New York:—The Rev. Stephen F. Bayne Jr., chaplain at Columbia University and Bishop-elect of Olympia, reported an attendance of 24,925 persons at services from September 15, 1945 to May 15, 1946 as evidence of interest of college students in religion. The statement was contained in his annual report to Frank D. Fackenthal, acting president of the university.

Great Suffering

New York:—The Rev. R. E. Maxwell, Church World Service representative with CRALOG in Germany, and formerly rector of St. Mark's Church, St. Louis, reports that he believes there is no place in western Europe "where the basic necessities are so perilously lacking to everybody as in the French Zone." He explains that this has been the most neglected of all zones. "Unlike the Americans and the English, the French are economically unable to bring help from the outside, because France is poor and is trying hard to recover from the effects of the war and her own occupation by the Nazis. And the very large number of French civilian and military personnel, unlike the situation in the American and British zones, live off the land. In some of the bombed-out cities, the acute housing situation is intensified by the number of French families which have been coming, thus requiring requisition of many homes and apartments, and the epection of German families. The housing situation in Koblenz, Mains, Ludwigshafen, the Saar and other bombed-out regions is beyond description.

"The food ration here is now about 1,000 calories a day, less than half the required ration for an active person. The fuel situation is desperate. Even families that were rich live in one or two virtually unheated rooms. The people have little if any warm clothing. Rich and poor, learned and ignorant, live in a common destitution which cannot be imagined unless one sees it on every hand. Virtually no clothing can be purchased.

Unity Council

Pittsburgh, Pa.:—Bishop Austin Pardue has been named chairman of a fifteen man civil unity council, appointed by Mayor David L. Lawrence to promote interracial and interreligious understanding. An established branch of the municipal government, the Council will have a paid director and secretary but the members will service without pay.

Disarmament Urged

Philadelphia (RNS): — Demand that the new 80th Congress and the administration in Washington press vigorously through the United Nations organization for general world disarmament, including international abolition of conscription and a thorough-going system of armaments inspection, was voiced here at the annual meeting of the committee on national legislation of the Society of Friends.

More than 100 members in attendance from all parts of the United States signified approval of the committee's contentions that "true government for the world must rest upon the principles of justice, righteousness and law, not upon military coercion."

A report presented by E. Raymond Wilson, committee secretary, of Washington, D. C., maintained that atomic energy should be used for human welfare and not for military purposes. Nor should the United States be arming other countries, it insisted, but rather seeking to extend democracy, education, relief, health and social welfare, and cultural exchange among the nations.

The report reiterated the determined opposition of Quakers to universal military training and extension of the draft; increasing militarization of America through military training in the schools; military subsidization and increasing control of scientific research; military domination of our foreign policy, and the large proportion of federal expenditures which go for military purposes.

Religious Education

Detroit:—The Rev. Richard U. Smith, director of religious education in the diocese of Michigan, has announced that there will be a meeting of the Episcopal Educational Association for the fifth province on February 13th. The meeting is being held at Grand Rapids in conjunction with the convention of the International Council of Religious Education.

Representation Asked

New York (RNS):—A peaceful and harmonious world community can be created if the United Nations organizations avails itself of the worldwide resources of religion, Dr. Hans Simons, dean of the School of Politics, New School for Social Research, New York, declared here. Addressing clergymen and theological students at a session of the institute for religious and social studies, Dr. Simons expressed hope "that the great representative bodies of all religious faiths will find a permanent place in the Economic and Social Council at the UN, to which they have as much claim as the World Federation of Trade Unions or other economic organizations."

Dr. Simons added that the UN Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization, "cannot possibly disregard the essential role which religion has to play in this program."

CLID Aids Strikers

Washington: — The Washington chapter of the Church League for Industrial Democracy is actively supporting the strike of the Cafeteria Employees, Local 471, U.P.W.O.A.-C.I.O., against Government Services, Inc., a private company which provides food to government workers in the nation's capital. The union is asking for a 20 cent per hour "cost of living" increase in wages and, likewise, requests the granting of such privileges as 15 days of sick leave per year, stabilization of the work week, arbitration of dismissal, a welfare fund and maternity leave. The local C.L.I.D. chapter has sent a letter to all the clergy in the area, accompanied by an analysis of the facts in the case made by the department of social welfare of the Washington Federation of Churches, asking for monetary and material aid for the strikers on the ground that the issue of the strike must not be settled by "starvation." Since the average wage of the cafeteria workers now runs from $20 to $25 per week, three soup kitchens were set up in churches in the district, one of which is located in St. Luke's Church of which the Rev. Dillard Brown is rector.

Honky Tonks

Mobile, Ala. (RNS):—Clergymen should make the rounds of honky tonks to find out the kind of competition cheap places of entertainment are offering the churches, Louis B. Nichols, assistant director of the FBI told a meeting of Alabama Methodist ministers here.

"Only by recognizing the competition being offered the church can pastors recruit more persons on the side of the church," he said. "Without this first hand knowledge, countermeasures are likely to be unrealistic and fore-doomed to failure."

Mr. Nichols, a prominent Methodist layman, urged a more militant Church approach to juvenile delinquency. He suggested that pastors work with probation officers and recreation counselors, that churches provide wholesome, lively substitute entertainment in place of cheap honky tonks, and that Church groups sponsor guidance centers for both parents and interested young people.

Relief to Japan

New York (RNS): — First shipment of Church World Service relief supplies to Japan has arrived in Yokahoma for distribution through church agencies in that country, it was announced here by A. Henry Birkel, executive secretary for east and southeast Asia of the interdenominational Protestant agency.

Totalling 466,000 pounds and valued at more than $100,000, the shipment included dehydrated soups, canned food, clothing, spaghetti, noodles, salt, soap, vitamins, and shoes. Biggest single item was 136,000 pounds of powdered milk.

Mr. Birkel noted that a portion of the consignment was purchased from $14,750 contributed by the Southern California Japanese-American relief committee. Other Japanese-Americans in California gave several tons of rice toward the shipment.

Although they were the first relief goods sent from America by CWS, Mr. Birkel pointed out that distribution of relief began prior to the shipment's arrival. This was made possible by the acquisition of $146,000 worth of surplus navy food stocks for use among needy church workers and Christian schools.

Argentine Praised

Rome (wireless to RNS):—In an audience to Dr. Conrado Traverso, newly-appointed Ambassador to the Vatican from Argentina, Pope Pius XII expressed "great sympathy" for Argentina and gratitude for that country's efforts for immigrants from war-stricken areas in Europe. Dr. Traverso, who was formerly Argentine Ambassador to Mexico, was named to his present post last November.

Restore Church

London (wireless to RNS):—Six German prisoners of war have restored Chilvers Coton Churchyard where George Eliot was buried and are now rebuilding the church in which the famous author of "The Mill on the Floss" and "Adam Bede" was christened. Chilvers Coton is the Shepperton of George Eliot's first collection of stories, "Scenes from Clerical Life," which appeared in Blackwood's Magazine in 1856. Her father, Robert Evans, the original of "Adam Bede," is buried in the churchyard.

Nearly all the stone and timber for the restoration of the church came from wreckage of the original structure which was destroyed during an air raid in 1941. The prisoners, comprising six warrant officers and N.C.O.s, mostly from the U-boat Arm, and in a category which cannot be forced to work, volunteered their services "in appreciation of their kind treatment."

Never Too Old

Boston:—It's never too late to get a fresh start in life could well be the slogan of two students at Boston University school of theology—one 68-years-old, the other 62.

"The best part of my life is ahead," declared Joshua Peavy of Slagle, Fla., who at 68 is looking forward to completing his course in June. He is a retired school teacher, with many years of experience in one-teacher schools in Louisiana. He began instructing 50 years ago when he was 18 and had only 27 months of formal school training. He entered Boston University as a senior after taking the three-years equivalent in two Louisiana Colleges and attending summer schools.

After his graduation in June Mr. Peavy will return to Louisiana and preach throughout the state. He says he does not mind being in classes with much younger men because "I find I can learn faster now than before."

The other theology student is Reuel W. Beach, 62, of Cambridge, Mass. He received his bachelor of arts degree at Harvard in 1906 and is president of the Cosmos Press of Cambridge, with which he has been associated for 40 years. Mr. Beach decided to give up the printing business for the ministry after filling vacancies in different churches during the war. In 1942 he became interim minister of the East Weymouth Congregational church and in 1944 was ordained to the Congregational ministry.

Since the Election Is Over

The November election cleared up many issues. It is now a matter of record that our people believe in America and in the traditional American way. They want the state to remain servant and not become master. They want the democratic process, constitutional government and the dignity of individual citizens perpetuated. They don't want foreign ideologies. They want government by law—not by men nor bureaus nor decrees. They want capital "F" Freedom preserved and expanded.

Spiritual Mobilization expects a great number of recruits—ministers who had not faced the issue of the seriousness of recent trends but who, since the election, are more realistic about what has been happening to capital "F" Freedom in America. We shall commend and criticize the Republicans as we did the Democrats—always at the level of principles and never on a basis of partisanship. Our single interest continues to be capital "F" Freedom. Concerning Freedom the election gave new hope but we must not take its future for granted.

It is time to speak plainly about Communism. A new book, "Blueprint for World Conquest" published by Human Events, Inc., has recently appeared and should be read. I was impressed by a recent pamphlet on "Communistic Infiltration in America" and sent a copy to many who will be reading this column. I am perfectly sure a lot of preachers have been unknowing fellow-travelers and have been used by communists. I recently preached a plainspoken sermon "Consider Communism Calmly" in my own First Congregational Church of Los Angeles pulpit and will be glad to send a copy to any who make request. Let the clergy of America take leadership in stamping out this anti-God menace which has been entertained in high and supposedly-respectable places.

Comments and suggestions are respectfully requested and will be appreciated. May we send you tracts and bulletins? Are you ready to make common cause with us? May our traveling representative in your area call on you? Clip and mail coupon below today.

Church Attendance

Austin, Texas (RNS):—Less than one-half of the adults in Texas attend church regularly and at least seven per cent do not go at all, a survey released by the Texas poll reveals. Continuing a study of the church-going habits of Texans made before the war, the poll found the end of the war had no great effect on church attendance in the state. A majority of the adults, 68 per cent, are continuing their war-time church habits; 15 per cent go more often now, and 17 per cent less often.

Interviewers in all parts of the state asked the question: "Do you go to church regularly, now and then, once in a great while, or not at all?" The results showed 41 per cent attending regularly, 33 per cent now and then, 19 per cent, once in a great while, and 7 per cent not at all.

The poll also found a three-fourths majority favoring teaching of the Bible in Texas public schools. In 1941 it found 70 per cent holding that opinion.

Scholars Meet

Geneva (wireless to RNS):—The war has caused Lutheran churches in Europe, which historically have been considered "other-worldly," to recognize the role of Christianity in all phases of life, according to leading Protestant theologians meeting here under the auspices of the World Council of Churches.

The Rev. Nils Ehrenstrom, director of the study department and himself a Lutheran, declared the war has forced many Lutherans to reconsider their beliefs and rediscover that the Church is concerned with life as a whole. "As a result," he said, "they have returned to the original position of Martin Luther and taken a new view of the relation between the church and the state." Ehrenstrom said the conference had rejected both fundamentalism and modernism as perverting the true meaning of Christianity. He declared that "in contrast to a generation which has long ignored the Bible, the major idea emerging here is that the Bible message as a whole is vital for the development of sound attitudes on social and political questions."

Professor Anders Nygren, an outstanding Scandinavian Lutheran theologian, told the sessions that "the Church not only has a right, but a duty, to make demands upon the state concerning what it should do."

MR. VICTOR D. CRONK
Layman of LaGrange, Illinois

Something comes over our clergy when they get to talking about unity. Instance Canon Wedel's explanation (WITNESS, Dec. 19) of the unity action. As to the apology to the Presbyterians the Canon, to begin with, may be right. The rather incredible story of what started the movement will no doubt get into print some day. It will prove more depressing than funny, although it is both. He asks the Presbyterians to be patient with us. Maybe we can be patient while they are getting together among themselves. "We think that we have something precious in Episcopal ordination," he says. We know that we have in it something that is essential. And look out for that word "precious." It means that you are being switched into a vacuum.

He claims for the Presbyterians, "An anchorage of the ministry in the corporate present fellowship of the Church." Well, we have the Catholic doctrine of the ministerial priesthood and the priesthood of the laity, of which the Presbyterian fellowship looks, from here, like a pale reflection, and no more. The Canon looks for a new thing, a Catholic Evangelical Church. Since Pentecost that is what we have had, and it is what we have today. It can, and will, become the nucleus of a united Christendom, if such a thing ever comes to pass.

May the good Lord deliver us from these extra-legal flirtations, and give us more witnesses to the Faith.

REV. KENNETH DEP. HUGHES
Rector of St. Bartholomew's, Cambridge, Mass.

I have read with shocked dismay the debate in the National Council in which the Rev. Cyril Bentley, director of the American Church Institute for Negroes, said: "Some of the Negroes want segregation. They don't want to go to white churches and white schools. I should want segregation if I were a Negro."

This is the sort of vicious half-truth that is worse than an outright lie because it omits so much. Dr. Bentley certainly would want to be by himself if some "super Aryan" group (had they been victorious) shunted him off to one corner of society, bade him keep "his place" and made him feel very uncomfortable (I am not talking of isolated exceptions) when he trespassed the sacred confines set by tradition to be trodden only by the "superior" race.

But Dr. Bentley would not like it. He would grunt and sweat under it as Negroes now do. He would feel, and with justification, that his whole personality was being invaded both in principle and in practice; that the mere fact that he was separated was a limitation of his freedom and implied his inferiority and the superiority of his separators. This he would hotly resent if he had any manhood at all as Negroes now do, openly or secretly as expediency may dictate, but resenting all the time. And he would work and agitate, as Negroes now do, for the day when he would throw off the yoke of this imposed inferiority, artificial to the core.

We segregate criminals from decent society. We say to them, you don't belong; stay where we put you; your freedom must be curtailed. Segregation on account of race is no different save only in degree. No Negro, anywhere, wants any part of it no matter how it is camouflaged, or by what euphemistic term it may be called, because the Negro wants to be as free as any other child of God: as free even as Dr. Bentley. It is fatuous to try to rationalize segregation, and doubly so when this unveiled hypocrisy stems from an official of the Church. It is wrong. This evil must be stamped out, wholly and completely, if the Church is ever to be the Church.

It is tragic that such sentiments should find utterance in a council of the Church. It is a still greater tragedy that one who so little understands Negroes should be allowed in a position of leadership and influence over them. Negroes everywhere resent with all the energy at their command the condescension and patronage of Dr. Bentley.

MR. B. F. STEVENS
Layman of New York City

I was impressed with the address delivered by our new Presiding Bishop at his installation at the Washington Cathedral (WITNESS, January 16). But there was one lack in the service as it appeared in this issue which struck me forceably. Bishop Tucker, in installing Bishop Sherrill, conferred upon his successor "rights, dignities, honors and privileges." What about duties and responsibilities? In his statement Bishop Sherrill did swear to fulfill his duties "to the utmost of my power" but even so in these days I think there should be a greater stress on our Christian opportunities and responsibilities than upon the trappings of days gone by.

"Carillonic Bells"

ADDS NEW COLOR TO ORGAN MUSIC

Schulmerich CARILLONIC BELLS, the climax of development in church electronics, surpasses by far the limited powers of organ chimes. CARILLONIC BELLS not only adds the pure, brilliant loveliness of true bell tones to your organ; but can also send out full bell harmonies from your church tower.

Through CARILLONIC BELLS, your church acquires a voice of incomparable beauty in the community, a heart-stirring eloquence, loved and identified by all who hear it. Nearly seven hundred churches and institutions throughout the nation have chosen CARILLONIC BELLS for true clarity of tone and musical versatility. And now has come an even more gratifying tribute . . .

The famous Westminster Choir College of Princeton, New Jersey has never before provided instruction on chimes or bells. Today, however, the artistry of CARILLONIC BELLS has so impressed this school of sacred music that a course in Campanology has been inaugurated, featuring this marvelous instrument in conjunction with organ and as a tower instrument.

To add new color to the music within your church, or send forth a melodious reminder of its spiritual purpose, or to create a memorial of lasting beauty, choose Schulmerich CARILLONIC BELLS. For complete particulars, address Dept. W-19.

J. F. Dulles Proposal Linked With British Manifesto

Statements Widely Discussed by Churchmen With Some Believing Dulles Should Resign

By W. B. Spofford

New York:—Churchmen on both sides of the Atlantic, within twenty-four hours of each other, came out, last week, vigorously for a Union of Western European countries. The first statement was contained in a manifesto handed the press in London on January 16 by a committee headed by Winston Churchill, with a number of leading British churchmen among its other twenty-one members, including the Rt. Rev. Edward Ellis, Roman Catholic Bishop; the Rev. Sidney M. Berry; the Rev. Gordon Lang, a Labor member of Parliament, and Dean W. R. Matthews of St. Paul's Cathedral.

The manifesto stated that the proposed "United Europe" should have the status of a regional group under the United Nations Charter, and spokesmen for the group insisted that it is "not anti-Soviet, anti-American or directed against anybody." However most reporters attending the press conference came away with the distinct impression that the proposed "United Europe" is designed as some sort of bulwark against the Soviet Union.

This interpretation is also given the proposal by the executive committee of the Labor Party which, on January 22, advised its members to boycott the crusade, chiefly on the ground that the present government of England wants to avoid anything that would tend to embarrass its relations with the Soviet government.

The day following the release of the English manifesto, Mr. John Foster Dulles, speaking for the Republican party, delivered an address here before the National Publishers Association, an organization of publishers of magazines with a combined circulation of one hundred million copies. Mr. Dulles, while not making mention of the fact in his address, is the chairman of the Federal Council's Commission of a Just and Durable Peace and plays such a prominent part in the affairs of the World Council of Churches that he was referred to privately by an executive of the Federal Council as the "most influential layman in the world." Mr. Dulles further elaborated upon his proposal in a nationwide radio speech on January 25.

His thesis was similar to the one of the Churchill group, though different in several important particulars. The latter proposed that the "United Europe" should have status under the U.N., whereas Mr. Dulles made no mention of U.N. The British statement at least claimed that the plan was "not anti-Soviet," whereas Mr. Dulles' speech was based largely upon the supposition that Russia is a threat to the rest of the world.

Also Mr. Dulles spoke strongly for an "individualistic society" whereas the pronouncement of the Church commission which he heads states that "This system has in recent years developed grave defects. There have occurred mass unemployment, widespread dispossession from homes and farms, destitution, lack of opportunity for youth and of security for old age." The complete message, popularly called the Delaware Conference Message, may be secured from the Commission of a Just and Durable Peace, 297 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y. It declares for "a true community of nations" and states that "a world of irresponsible, competing and unrestrained national sovereignties, whether acting alone or in alliance or in coalition, is a world of international anarchy."

That Mr. Dulles' speech and radio address were at sharp variance with the pronouncement of the Church commission that he heads, is the opinion of a number of churchmen. One organization, the Methodist Federation for Social Action, of which Bishop Lewis O. Hartman of Boston is president, and Bishop James C. Baker and Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam are vice-presidents, is reported to have already taken action calling for Mr. Dulles' resignation. It is likely that other Church groups will urge similar action. (See Editorial.)

NO MORE STRIPED PANTS

Buffalo, N. Y. (RNS): — Because of the shortage of cutaways and the desire to be "less formal" at Sunday services, Trinity Episcopal church here has abandoned its 110-year-old custom of insisting upon formal dress for ushers. The vestry voted recently that "ushers shall not be required to wear cutaways but be conservatively garbed." David D. Nash, chairman of the ushering committee, said some men who had volunteered as ushers were unable to buy cutaways because of the suit shortage. Most members say they prefer seeing ushers "informally attired."

CHURCH ROLE IN U.N. IS PRAISED

By George Dugan

Buck Hill Falls, Pa.:—The Christian Church has played a significant role in influencing the United Nations to adopt as one of its major purposes the securing of fundamental freedoms for all people without regard to race, religion, sex, or language, O. Frederick Nolde, dean of the graduate school at the Luthern Theological Seminary, Philadelphia, Pa., and associate director of the commission of the Churches on international affairs, declared here in an address before the annual meeting of the Foreign Missions Conference.

"The Church," he said, "claims no privilege for itself which it does not wish freely granted to all men. It believes that human rights and freedoms must be respected if there is to be a world society of order, justice, and progress. From the standpoint of the Christian message, it contends that all men have the right to hear the Gospel and to determine for themselves what their response shall be. 'The Commission on Human Rights has given prominent place to the construction of an International Bill of Rights in the agenda for its first full session to begin on January 27. It is safe to say that the interpretation which will therein be placed on religious liberty and related rights such as freedom of speech, of the press, of assembly and organization, of ingress and egress will in part determine the facility with which the missionary movement can be projected in the years that lie ahead.

"The United Nations seeks, as an over-all objective, conditions of peace and order in a world society. Under such conditions, the Christian Churches can most effectively pursue constructive tasks. The burden of Christian effort at this moment of history is devoted to reconstruction and rehabilitation. The demand upon Christian resources to bring relief to people in war-torn areas is imperative and every inclination to meet that demand merits commendation. Nevertheless, it should be clearly noted that this emphasis is unavoidable because there existed no international agent competent to preserve peace with justice. The activity of the Christian Church is colored by the condition of the world in which it works. That is so now and it will be so in the future."

The Church must realistically attempt to seek a solution to the economic and physical problems of mankind in addition to carrying on its traditional ministry to men's spiritual needs if Christianity is to continue as a force in the present-day world, according to other speakers at the meeting.

The Rev. Leland S. Albright, assistant secretary of the International Missionary Council, warned that if the Church's ministry is to succeed it must serve the world's people with physical sustenance as well as spiritual uplift. If the Church accepts the challenge of providing physical relief and spiritual ministry as a "continuing and integral part of one process," he declared, "it must reorganize accordingly."

John H. Burt, former navy chaplain, is the first chaplain of the newly organized Episcopal student foundation at the University of Michigan. He has a big job since the student population at the University this year is nearly 19,000, with 1,500 of them Episcopalians

Describing the issue as "one of the greatest challenges to creative thinking and constructive action which missions have ever faced," Mr. Albright proposed the establishment within Protestant denominations of boards of overseas ministry to which would be assigned the responsibility for both relief and Church aid in Europe and for both relief and evangelism in Asia, Africa and Latin America.

A reorganization of such magnitude, he declared, would demand a reorientation in traditional mission thinking and would require the overhauling of long-established machinery. If brought to fruition, he added, it would represent a turning point in the Christian mission enterprise.

Discussing the economic problems of India, the Rev. F. A. Peter of Toronto, a missionary of the Church of England in Canada, told the delegates that while India readily acknowledges the debt it owes Christian missions for pioneer work in education and medicine, nevertheless, the Church must now play a leading role in economics as well.

"To bring about this change," he said, "we need in missions the active aid of scientists, agriculturists, engineers, chemists and businessmen. The shift of emphasis in what missions are now called upon to do means enlisting the services of technicians along with those of doctors, teachers and preachers. It also means giving them the scope and wherewithal to work, and thus a rethinking of our policies and allocation of funds.

"One cannot view the position of the rural Indian Church without reference to the general economic position of the country at large, as the root causes of the prevailing distress are the same. India is a predominantly agricultural country, where 87 per cent of the population live in villages and small towns. The increase of population during the last century has been phenomenal, and is gathering momentum all the time. In 1911 the total population was 311 million and at the last census in 1941 it had increased to nearly 400 million. An increase of 89 million in 30 years! The present excess birth rate over deaths is 6 million per year, and it is estimated that the next census in 1951 will show an increase of close on 60 million.

"If the outlook for the country at large is grim, the picture and position for members of the Christian community is even worse. In the Punjab we have about 300,000 Christians among a population of about 40,000,000 non-Christians. The great majority of the Christians are landless laborers, small artisans and menials in the villages. For their livelihood they depend very largely on their non-Christian landlords. By legislation these classes in the villages are debarred from acquiring land, as they are classed as non-agriculturists—a measure itself designed to protect hereditary farmers against losing their land to money-lenders—but this protection does not extend to the strata to which most of the Christians belong. Without land and with usually only tem-

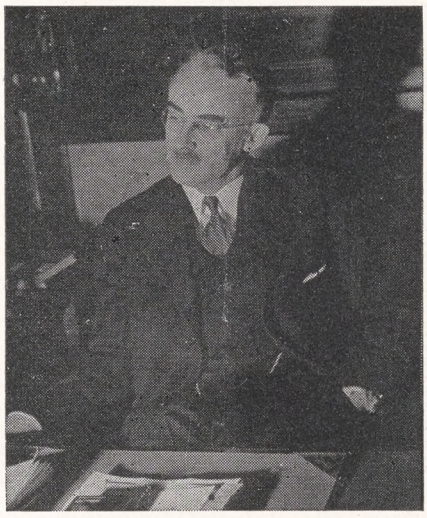
Niemoeller Is Both Defended And Vigorously Attacked

S. M. Cavert Says Attack Comes From Captious Voices While an Editor Turns to the Record



By Sara Dill

New York:—Pastor Martin Niemoeller of Germany was both defended and attacked last week here. The Rev. Samuel M. Cavert, general secretary of the Federal Council of Churches, under whose auspices Niemoeller is speaking in about forty American cities, gave a press conference in which he denied charges made by "certain captious voices" and labelled as "false" three allegations that have been made against the German Church leader. He denied "that Niemoeller was ever a member of the Nazi party; that he had no quarrel with the political objectives of Hitler and was concerned only with a defense of the Church; that he had not admitted the moral responsibility of the German people for their treatment either of the Jews or of the peoples of invaded nations."

Meanwhile the newspaper PM, in an editorial signed by Victor Bernstein who covered the Nuremberg trial and is considered an authority on conditions within Germany, stated that "The pastor is here to 'sell' America a new, Christian, simonpure Germany which has turned its back upon the horrid past and needs only a hand-across the-sea to become a stalwart crusader in the world fight against pagan bolshevism. He comes extraordinarily well equipped as a salesman. He is a man of the Church, which supposedly lifts him above the ordinary criticism. His thin, intellectual face is illumined by the halo of martyrdom; he spent eight years in a Nazi concentration camp. He talks in terms of high moral and religious precepts which no Christian—nor Jew or Moslem for that matter—can challenge without grave risk of being misunderstood and vilified as a scoffer and an Anti-Christ.

"This man breathes respectability. He has, in recent times, issued many statements against racism and for democracy and the brotherhood of man. He has not even hesitated, on occasion—as a German among Germans—to speak of his country's 'guilt' for World War II. Yet it is precisely these qualities which makes Pastor Niemoeller the most dangerous man whom the State Department could have admitted to this country from Germany. His presence here is an insult to every honest anti-Nazi American; and it is an insult to millions of anti-Nazi Europeans who would like to be admitted to this country, but are not.

"For Pastor Niemoeller is the epitome of the arrogant Prussianism—militarism plus nationalism—which made Hitler's rise possible. His quarrel with Hitler was precisely on a par with Schacht's quarrel with Goering, a factional fight on a question of power and authority. Niemoeller's fight was on a question of who was to run the Lutheran Church."

The Rev. Samuel McCrea Cavert enters the controversy over Pastor Niemoeller by defending him at a press conference

The editorial then turns to the record, pointing out that Niemoeller had commanded a U-boat in World War I and blamed "Marxist and pacifist elements" for the defeat of Germany in that war. He helped organize the Academic Defenders' League to aid in crushing the government in Berlin and in 1920 became a battalion commander of the League and played his part in suppressing uprisings in the Ruhr and elsewhere.

From 1924 onward, the editorial states, Niemoeller voted Nazi and in 1933, when Hitler came to power, he stated, "I am confident that Hitler will support collaboration between Church and state." About that time he became the pastor of a fashionable church in Berlin where he had, among his loyal supporters, Schacht and Baron Constantin von Neurath, both tried at Nuremberg.

The editorial concludes with the statement: "No, I don't think there can be any possible doubt where Niemoeller stands politically. He stands with the Schachts and the Junkers and the militarists. He never had a party card in his pocket, but until Hitler stepped on his personal toes, he had the swastika engraved on his heart. It is tragic that the Federal Council of Churches, which has contributed so notably to humanistic and liberal causes in this country, is lending its good name to this belated anti-Fascist."

(The story of Pastor Niemoeller's arrival in this country and the promises required of Church officials before the State Dept. would permit him to enter appeared in the Dec. 12 WITNESS.—Ed.)

TALMADGE'S CLAIM PROTESTED

Atlanta, Ga.:—Bishop John Moore Walker of Atlanta took the lead in calling a meeting of citizens here January 21st to "protest Herman Talmadge's claim to the governorship." Former Governor Ellis Arnall was one of the speakers, outlining the principles at stake in the controversy. The statement announcing the meeting said it was called "by Georgians who are not concerned with political personalities but only with preservation of orderly constitutional government. We are acting entirely as citizens independently of any church, professional or business affiliations." A woman heckler tried to tell the Bishop that he "ought to mind his own business" but the huge crowd good naturedly laughed her down.

BISHOP LAWRENCE IS HONORED

Springfield, Mass.:—A service of thanksgiving, arranged by the standing committee of the diocese and the dean and chapter of the cathedral here, marked the tenth anniversary of the consecration of Bishop W. Appleton Lawrence. In his address Bishop Lawrence expressed his gratitude for the support received in advancing the work of the Church, which he reviewed in some detail, but said that he hoped for even greater support in forwarding the Kingdom of God all over the world in these critical times.

The following day he was the leader of a quiet morning for the clergy and lay workers of the diocese. There was a luncheon for the bishop and his clergy, while Mrs. Lawrence entertained the wives of the clergy and the directors of religious education at luncheon at the bishop's house.

ALUMNI ARE SPEAKERS AT ST. AUGUSTINE'S

Raleigh, N. C.:—The Rev. Henry J. C. Bowden and Capt. Henry B. Perry, alumni, were the headliners at the celebration of the 79th anniversary of the opening of St. Augustine's College, held here January 11-12.

CONSECRATION OF NORMAN NASH

Boston:—It was announced at the office of the diocese of Massachusetts on January 23rd that the Rev. Norman B. Nash, at present rector of St. Paul's School, will be consecrated Bishop Coadjutor of Massachusetts on February 14th. The service will be held in Trinity Church here at eleven o'clock. Presiding Bishop Sherrill will be the chief consecrator and Bishop Angus Dun of Washington will preach. The master of ceremonies will be the Rev. Henry Ogilby of Brookline.

GOUVENEUR P. HANCE IS HONORED

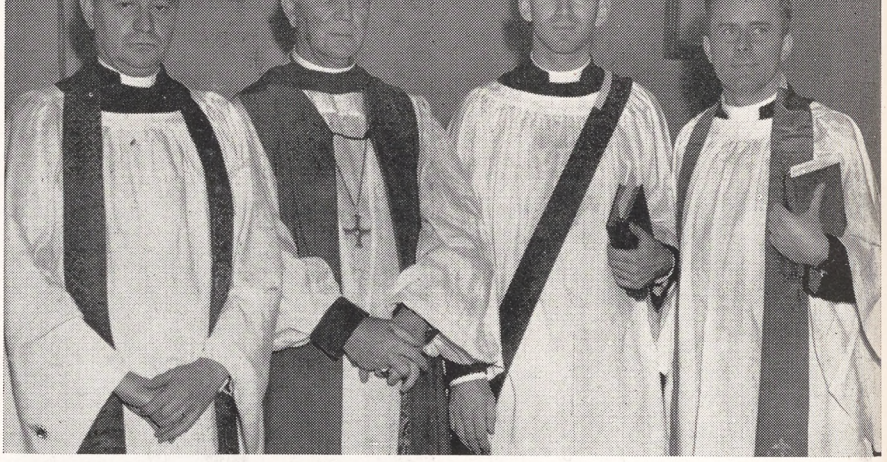
Pittsburgh, Pa.:—More than 2,000 people packed Trinity Cathedral here on January 19 to honor the fiftieth anniversary of the founding by Gouveneur P. Hance of St. Barnabas Brotherhood, a lay order. Hundreds were unable to get into the church. The service was read by the members of the order; Bishop Pardue spoke on the place of Brother Hance and the society in the life of the diocese and the sermon was preached by Bishop Ingley of Colorado, a native of Pittsburgh and a life-long friend of Brother Hance. He referred to him as a modern St. Francis because of his work among the sick and poor. The Brotherhood now has five men under life vows of poverty, chastity and obedience.

CHURCH BROADCASTS ON CIVIC ISSUES

Detroit:—Civic issues that concern this city are to be dealt with in a series of thirteen weekly broadcasts starting February 6th, over WJLB. The program is entirely educational, is partly in dramatic form, and will present Christian social teaching on such subjects as race, work and property. The director is John E. Booty, who is now organizing the diocesan radio guild, and the speakers are to be Bishop Emrich, the Rev. G. Paul Musselman, the Rev. Donald W. Crawford, the Rev. William B. Sperry, the Rev. Seward H. Bean and the Rev. John A. Scantlebury.

JOSEPH FLETCHER RETURNS

N e w Y o r k :—The Rev. Joseph Fletcher, professor at the Episcopal Theological Seminary, arrives this week from England where he has been studying conditions and conferring with various leaders for the past three months. He also visited the Continent. His first public report will be made at the annual meeting of the CLID which is to be held Lincoln's Birthday at St. George's parish house. Reservations for the luncheon may be had by writing CLID at 155 Washington St., New York 6.



BISHOP DAVIS HONORED

Buffalo, N. Y.:—Every clergyman in the diocese of Western New York attended Bishop's Day, held here January 14th, the day having special significance this year since it is the last to be held before the retirement of Bishop Cameron Davis. The day opened with a celebration of the holy communion at Trinity, where the Bishop was rector for many years, after which he lead a clergy conference in the parish house. The speaker at the luncheon was George Ballachey of this city, layreader and well known churchman, who told of the work in the diocese and of his asosciations with Bishop Davis. At the close the Rev. Charles Broughton, president of the standing committee, presented the Bishop with a gift on behalf of the clergy.

EDWARD HARDY GOES TO NEAR EAST

New Haven, Conn.:—The Rev. Edward R. Hardy, Jr., professor of Church history at the Berkeley Divinity School, sailed for Europe on the Queen Elizabeth on January 18th. He will join a delegation of European churchmen, consisting of Bishop Yngue Brilioth of the Church of Sweden, Bishop W. W. Cash of Worcester, England, and Prof. Hamilcar Alivisatos of the University of Athens on a mission to the Near East. The group represents the provisional committee of the World Council of Churches and will visit Athens, Constantinople, Antioch, Jerusalem, Alexandria and Cyprus to confer with the Greek Orthodox Archbishops and Patriarchs and invite their full participation in the formation of the World Council. Especially in view is the organization meeting of the Council to be held in Holland in September 1948.

During Dr. Hardy's absence Berkeley will have the assistance of the Rev. Massey Shepherd and the Rev. Roy Battenhouse, both of whom are on the staff of the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge.

Bishop Oldham and three of the clergy of the diocese of Albany, the Rev. B. H. Burnham of St. John's, Troy; the Rev. Rollin S. Polk Jr., recently ordained priest, and the Rev. George A. Taylor, rector of St. Paul's, Albany, where Mr. Polk is assistant

Dulles Should Resign

THE solution of the German question proposed by John Foster Dulles in an address in New York and again in a radio address on January 25, puts a responsibility upon the Churches which, in their associated capacity, have given him high office. True, Mr. Dulles announced that he spoke as a Republican, after getting the concurrence of Governor Dewey and Senator Vandenberg with his thesis. But the fact remains that his position in the Federal and World Councils of Churches is a political asset. Consequently it is the obligation of the people of those Churches to inquire whether his proposal moves in the direction of the just and durable peace they have commissioned him to seek; also whether it is in harmony with the principles set forth in what is popularly called the Social Creed of the Churches.

The essence of the Dulles plan is a western economic bloc composed of a federated, decentralized Germany and her neighbors — France, Belgium and Holland; this bloc to have joint control of the bases of the German industrial economy in the common interest of its members. This is justified by the geo-politic view that the Rhine Valley is the natural "economic heart of Western Europe" and so its vitality ought to flow westward as well as to Germany. Also it is believed that turning the German states toward their western neighbors will keep them from becoming again a centralized menace to the world.

Thus this responsibility is taken away from the Big Three who have been carrying it, and upon whose effective unanimity its realization depends. In the lengthy verbatim report that covers the description of this plan there is no mention of the U.N. Thus the Soviet Union is excluded from a share in the control of a situation which is vital to her security. This is supposed to be balanced by the exclusion also of the United States. But, as we shall see presently, the plan does not work out that way.

It should be noted that this proposal followed by only one day the formation by Churchill of a British Committee for a United Europe, which included prominent churchmen, Anglican, Roman Catholic and Nonconformist. This also excludes the Soviet Union whose European territory extends from the Arctic to the Black Sea and from Czechoslovakia to the Urals. Its promoters however are careful to declare that their United Europe would have the status of a regional group under the U.N. and would naturally seek the close friendship and cooperation of the Soviet Union and the United States.

It should be noted also that the Dulles plan follows a change in the Soviet attitude toward unification of the German economy. Our leaders gave Soviet obstruction of unity as the reason for an economic alliance between the British and American zones. The Soviet press and radio protested this action as violating the Potsdam agreement by dividing Germany into two spheres of influence. They have also been saying that Ruhr production is too important to be left to one or two powers; it must be controlled by all four. Soviet authorities then made concrete proposals for economic and political unification.

Then came the Dulles counter-proposal ostensibly ruling out the Big Three. It, like Churchill's plan, divides the economy of Europe. This is done under the plea of taking a first step toward the economic unification which is the essential base for a federated Europe. That achievement however, like the stopping of our stockpile under Mr. Baruch's atomic energy plan, is placed in some distant future. What would happen now is that the people of the "new democracies" of Eastern Europe, just emerging from feudal controls, would be denied any benefits from the German industrial potential.

Is this part of the same policy pattern that denies our food and credits to those who do not choose to follow our political and economic line? What pagan logic of geo-politics is it that wants "to find a form of joint control which will make it possible to develop the industrial potential of western Germany in the interest of the economic life of western Europe. . . ."? Does the sacredness of personality stop at that line? Are the people of Eastern Europe

"QUOTES"

IF PEACE is to be achieved there must exist in the hearts and minds of men and women everywhere an understanding, sympathetic and neighborly tolerance. Because this is not universally so, twice within our lifetime we have been plunged into a world war. I do not believe that wars are inevitable. I believe the United Nations offers us the greatest chance we have ever had to avert war. But if the U.N. is to attain its goal, each and every one of us must give it our fullest support in thought and deed, and teach our young people to do the same.

—Admiral Chester W. Nimitz

to be denied the equal rights to all available opportunities for development, which has been a basic principle in all versions of the Church's Social Creed from the first draft? (The Delaware Message for instance . . . see page three.)

THE test of the economic effectiveness and moral worth of all plans for joint economic control or unification is one and the same. Do they lead to concentrated cartel domination for all the traffic will bear, or to democratic planning and cooperation for the mutual development of all concerned? Where Mr. Dulles' plan leads is clear. The success of the plan, he says, depends primarily upon France, Belgium and Holland, with the Big Three ruled out. But then he adds: "If however our Continental friends are thinking constructively (by which he means 'free enterprise'—Ed.)—and there is evidence that many of them are—we Americans ought to be able to give them precious assistance. We possess, with Great Britain, decisive power in Western Germany." So now two of the Big Three are back in the picture.

Who are the "we" and what is the "decisive power we possess"? Does this mean the joint governmental power that now controls the industrial and war potential of Western Germany? And is this the same implied threat that accompanied the proposal Mr. Dulles presented concerning another war potential, our new won Pacific bases? Or does it mean that new international overlordship that war profits have given those who control our finance, with Britain as the junior partner?

This is the power that is now trying, under the guise of "free enterprise," to avoid the restraints envisaged in the Atlantic and United Nations Charters. This is the power that is able to buy, or buy into, German industry, and thus control the "joint control" of our financially weakened Western Allies. Is this the "Western Europe" that Mr. Dulles has in mind? This is the question for which Church people should request a full and frank answer. For his talk of "power we possess" is the language of those who advocate war against the Soviet Union; it is the language of international high finance. It is not the language of seekers after a just and durable peace, whose commission he heads.

That this proposal can lead to neither peace nor agreement is plain from a glimpse at the two other members of the Big Three. Two days before Dr. Dulles made his speech a leading Moscow journal contained an article concerning American ownership in Germany. It gave the figures concerning our pre-war capital investment there. It then described recent buying of German enterprise and patents with government aid, and asserted it meant an attempt to gain a monopoly position, reaching out to the great industrial concentration of the Ruhr and particularly "the Stinnes coal mines." Since that was written it has been reported over the American radio that a group of American bankers are about to leave to consider loans in Germany.

In Britain one of the main attacks of the 150 Labor Party rebels in Parliament on British foreign policy is its alleged connection with our attempts to restore German cartels. For this they can use reports of our own correspondents concerning the activities of some of the "big brass" in AMG, with past connections with German finance, industry and utilities. Names and places are specified in the restoration of Nazi supporters to industrial positions where future business can be done with their former American associates. A policy that restores the control of German economy to international financiers and industrialists can only lead again to war. It is certainly contrary to the findings of all our Church conferences on economic development, which ask for the democratization of the economic and social life of all the people.

Mr. Dulles prefaces his plan with an analysis of Soviet expansion, his favorite theme. He saw it as a nationalist challenge which was checked last year; but since then it has gained in moral leadership in the U.N. and throughout the world. So Mr. Dulles sees us in danger of "moral isolation" and presents his plan as a creative attempt to meet that challenge.

We can never gain any moral influence from a plan which will appear to most of the people of Europe, as well as to millions elsewhere, as a plan for control of the industrial and war potential of Germany by American-British capital; to be used immediately as an economic weapon against the democratization of the economic and social life of all the people of Europe; and to be held as a threat against the future security of the Soviet Union.

The road to moral influence is the same as the road to peace. It is the cooperative use of economic power for the development of all the peoples of the earth according to those principles which were set forth by our Churches long before they were ever embodied in the Atlantic and United Nations Charters.

Since Mr. Dulles' plan is contrary to these principles, he should be asked to resign as chairman of the commission of a just and durable peace of the Federal Council of Churches and from his positions of leadership in the World Council of Churches.

The Church of England Today

by J. Gilbert H. Baker

Associate at the Epiphany, New York

AS YOU approach London you can soon see the Church in England has been, like the people, under fire. Time after time in a bombed area, the church has "caught it," and stands often with its tower intact, but with the rest of the building a shell. St. Paul's Cathedral stands right on the edge of a huge area of ruins, which includes most of the other famous old city churches. In the appeal for the diocese of London it is stated that out of 701 churches, only 77 were completely undamaged. My home church, where I was baptized, was destroyed in 1941 on a night when four others in the same town were lost. Many are carrying on in church halls, in schools or in churches of other denominations.

You don't hear very much about what people went through, for English people are reticent. But while I was at St. Martin's-in-the-Fields I learnt something of the spirit of fellowship among the "fire-watchers"; some of them under the vicar formed a group of singers who have since become a power in the parish and have done some valuable work in religious broadcasting. Another of these fire-watchers, a young girl who works in the civil service, was, I discovered, once buried for twelve hours. Another girl in my confirmation class had been the only survivor in her family when a rocket bomb hit their home.

There has been war damage too at deeper levels. Churches are by no means full, though I don't think they are emptier than before the war. A London parson said to me that the bombing had not produced any great turning to the Lord. The attitude of the average man and woman was "We can take it," and not much reliance on God. National days of prayer were better attended in 1940 than in '45, and in peace time we just didn't have any! In the country as a whole the war has brought a considerable loosening of morals and good deal of violent crime. There is also apathy and a sense of insecurity.

How is the Church meeting this situation? One of the books which has roused a great deal of interest and has in fact become a best seller, has been the report of the Archbishop's commission on evangelism, entitled Towards the Conversion of England. It has raised discussion among Christians of all denominations about methods of approaching those outside the Church, and contains some effective criticism of Church life in England. But there are many who think that it does not go far enough, and does not really recognize the deep gulf that has grown up between the Church and vast masses of the people.

More significant is the new scheme of recruiting and training clergy, which is being devised by the Church Assembly Council for the training of the ministry under the chairmanship of the Bishop of Lincoln. The Church of England is very short-staffed, for on top of the pre-war shortage, there were very few ordinations in the war years. But during the war in nearly every area, and in prison camps in Germany young men were offering themselves for the ministry, and a staff was set up for their preliminary selection and training. Selection centres were set up, and for a few days men would live together in a kind of retreat, and with opportunities for personal interviews with clergy of experience who could help them find their vocation, whether for the ministry or in other ways.

This system has now been extended to the whole of the Church, and everyone offering for the ministry now has to pass this board; if he does the Church is going to make it her special responsibility to help in the matter of training. This is going to cost money, for it means raising standards, and improving theological colleges. It is for this that a big appeal of 600,000 pounds is being launched for the training of the clergy.

This brings us to the matter of the Church's appeals for reconstruction. In addition to the regular diocesan quotas every diocese that has been hit by the war is launching a large appeal for rebuilding of churches, vicarages and schools. By the government's education act of last year the Church of England is able to keep a large number of its own primary schools, provided they are brought up to standard. This is one of the main items, for instance, in the Bishop of London's appeal for 750,000 pounds for his diocese. The diocese of Rochester, Southwark and Chelmsford, which all border on the London area, are also involved in huge appeals. Then there are new housing areas, and government has plans for several new towns, and the Church must act promptly if she is to get sites and buildings ready. Altogether in the next few years I believe the Church of England is committed to raise something like ten million pounds,—it may be more,—over and above ordinary demands. This is from a country which is very severely taxed, and where the war has, as you know, all but brought us to national bankruptcy.

Although the pressure of appeals is heavy it isn't crushing us. There are many live parishes and challenging projects. Soon after we got back last year there was quite an extensive docker's strike, centering in Liverpool, and I noticed from the papers that the person who acted as an intermediary between the unofficial strike committee and the union leaders was the vicar of Liverpool, Ambrose Reeves. I heard later that he had achieved this only by sitting for hours and hours with these men, who were at first very suspicious, and learning what was going on in their minds. Too often people are suspicious of the clergy because they think we think we have all the answers in our pocket. There is a great task in humility in learning about how the world works, and clergy are beginning to see this and to feel the need of time for it; the tragedy is that so much of their time is occupied with the trivialities of the parish that they never get round to outside affairs.

THEN there is an interesting experiment at Bristol, known as the Redfield United Front. Here in an industrial district a number of Anglican and Free Churches have come together to create a youth centre whose aim is to produce useful Christian citizens, with discussions on civics, question periods, and so forth.

They have sought to create community consciousness by a "Street Scheme" in which each street will have its committees on evangelism, social welfare, and war problems. A corporate communion service is held once a month alternately at the Anglican and Free Churches in which both Anglican priest and Free Church minister take part. This is of course exceptional, and is in line with the piecemeal and empirical way which we have in England. But there are many in the Church today who look forward to reunion along the lines of making the ministries of the different Churches acceptable to each other, i.e. that the Anglican clergy should receive some sort of commission to allow them to take services in a Free Church, and that Free Church ministers should receive some kind of Episcopal authority to take any service in an Anglican Church.

Marvyn Stockwood, the Vicar of St. Matthew's Moorfield, Bristol, the prime mover of this scheme, is actually a high churchman; he also stands openly as a supporter of the present government, and has recently won a seat on the city council in the municipal elections. Sir Stafford Cripps, incidentally, is a member of his vestry.

Another approach to Church unity which has grown out of the war is the Coventry Cathedral scheme. You will remember that Coventry Cathedral and a great deal of the core of the city was destroyed in a saturation blitz in 1940. But the 14th Century spire survived, and on the ruins there will be built a new cathedral, which will have three very distinctive features. One is that the altar will be in the centre of the church, restoring an old Byzantine form, and bringing as it were our Lord's table into the very midst of his disciples. The second is a chapel of unity which will be an integral part of the cathedral, but which will be open for the use of other Churches to hold their own services, and for special joint services. The third will be an interdenominational social service centre, which will be endowed, so that there will always be a team of experts on Christian social theory and action which may be brought to bear upon the industrial area all around.

It is in the industrial field that the Church is weakest, and the segregation of such a large part of the population in factories all day is a constant threat to any kind of parish community life. For this reason a number of factory chaplains have recently been appointed, and although this is in the experimental stage, it does present an opportunity which could not be met in any other way. In Southwark Cathedral in South London there is a member of staff whose whole-time occupation is contact with the business houses, and railway stations, etc. in the parish. He told me it was slow going at first, but as he gradually got known he became more and more welcome, and was able to do some really pastoral work with those business men.

Religious broadcasting and drama are also playing some part in the Church life in England today. There are short prayers on the radio every morning and services broadcast from the different Churches both at home and overseas, as well as talks at least once a week. One of the most effective things ever done over the air has been the cycle of plays on the Life of Our Lord, called "The Man Born to be King" by Dorothy Sayers. They were first done in 1942, and have been repeated each year. The same author, who has produced a number of other fine plays, has recently written another called the "Just Vengeance" which was given in Lichfield Cathedral on the occasion of the eighth centenary of the diocese, which was enormously impressive to those who saw it.

A second article by Mr. Baker will appear presently on the work at St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, London, where he was on the staff until August, 1946.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

A Hundred New Prayers and More

THE Prayer Book is an anonymous book. It is, as the title page indicates, the "common prayer . . . of the Church." Every century of Christian devotion has contributed to its contents. But the authors who phrased its formularies have been content to leave their work unsigned. They have generously given of their prayers as a legacy not of themselves but of the whole Church. Only the Lord's Prayer is given the fitting distinction of being designated by its Author. The Prayer of St. Chrysostom, as all students know, is not a composition of that valiant reformer and preacher, but takes its name from the Greek Liturgy of St. Chrysostom, a compilation of the sixth century, in which this prayer first appears.

We are, of course, by no means completely in the dark regarding the source and time of writing of many of the prayers of the liturgy. Of those which were newly composed at the time of the Reformation Archbishop Cranmer is generally considered to be the father. The majority of these are collects for saints' days. We can identify the authors of many of the prayers which have come into the Prayer Book through successive revisions since the Reformation—and if not the authors, at least we can frequently note the time and occasion of their composition. But of the pre-Reformation material—roughly one-fourth of the prayers—the best we can say of their origin is that we find them first recorded in one of the few extant Latin service-books compiled in Rome or Italy in the sixth-seventh centuries. Many of them, however, may be considerably older in date.

Some may ask, Why all the bother about finding out who wrote the prayers in the liturgy, if they are really 'common prayers'? If the prayer is a good one and expressive of our common aspiration, does it make any difference who put it into words? Strictly speaking, No. But then we are all naturally curious to know all we can about those things which we love and cherish very dearly. Often, too, a prayer takes on a new meaning and significance if we understand how and why it came to be. This is the reason why books about our favorite hymns are so popular. This, too, is the justification for all the labor which students of the Bible have put into the problems of authorship, date and place of writing of the several books of Holy Scripture—what is called 'higher criticism.' It makes a difference in our understanding of God's Word to us whether all of Isaiah was written before the Jewish Exile, or whether part of it was written before and part of it written after that tragic experience of God's people. So also with our common prayers. For example, I like to remember in Morning and Evening Prayer that Dr. Peter Gunning, the staunch royalist and high churchman, described as 'the incomparable hammer of the schismatics,' composed the evangelical intercession 'for all Conditions of Men'; and Dr. Edward Reynolds, a noted Puritan, wrote the magnificent eucharistic 'General Thanksgiving.' Such knowledge adds to my appreciation of the catholicity and comprehensiveness of our liturgy.

My late and lamented colleague, Professor James Arthur Muller, spent many years of diligent research to find out the authors of the more than one hundred prayers which were added to our Prayer Book in the 1928 revision. The fruit of his studies is now available in a brochure which he literally finished on his deathbed. It is published by our Church Historical Society (to which all of us should belong), 4205 Spruce St., Philadelphia, for the modest sum of fifty cents, under the title: Who Wrote the New Prayers in the Prayer Book? There is a wealth of information in this little book which cannot be found elsewhere, combined with a fine sense of literary and theological criticism. Dr. Muller had the very unusual gift of being able to write in a lively and interesting way for both scholars and non-technical readers at the same time. What is particularly reassuring in the results of his devoted study is the broad basis upon which our 1928 Prayer Book revisers worked in their enlargement and enrichment of our 'common prayer.' Both ancient and modern sources were drawn upon for material, and both the great and the little among Christ's members contributed to it. Even so, quite a few of the 'new' prayers Dr. Muller found to be anonymous. If you love the Church's liturgy you will not want to miss owning a copy of this book.

Dramatic Arts and Religion

By
WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD, JR.

FROM the days of the regal William S. Hart down to the present hey-day of Roy Rogers, your local theater has been featuring the lowly "western" each Saturday afternoon for the edification of the younger elements in our society. From the very beginning, these modern morality plays, in which the powers of darkness always receive their just deserts at the hands of the forces of righteousness, have followed a standard and noble pattern. Produced on the minimum budget and, generally, with no imagination or technique, most of them, of course, are trash.

But, nevertheless, the "westerns" have an established place in our culture and, from time to time, outstanding pictures in this category, such as the great Ox-Bow Incident, come along. At the present time, two entertaining, though unimportant, pictures in this field are being featured in your neighborhood.

The first is an Australian importation, The Overlanders, dealing with the transfer of a huge herd of steers into the hinterland of Australia during the war so that they might not be captured by invading Japanese troops. The small band of drovers (Australian term for cowboys) is led by one Chips Raffertry, a man who knows how to seat a horse and turn a stampede with the best of our Hollywood buckaroos, and who, of course, fulfills his mission despite all of the obstacles of sandstorms, drought and famine that nature throws his way. Set against a desolate, mid-Australian background and featuring outstanding camera technique, the film adequately gets across the standard point that the moral law will emerge triumphant, no matter what.

The second film is John Ford's My Darling, Clementine, starring such competent actors as Henry Fonda, Ward Bond, Tim Holt and Walter Brennan. The story here, also, is unimportant. Suffice it to say that Henry Fonda, in the role of Wyatt Earp, manages to emerge triumphant over Walter Brennan and his clan of rustling murderers. The important element in the film is the directing of John Ford who, in the past, has given us such films as The Grapes of Wrath, The Informer, Stagecoach and The Long Voyage Home. Throughout this film, he keeps the human actors subordinate to the vast panoramas of western topography and the storms and dust of the Arizona territory. As a result, the struggle between the human contestants is dwarfed by the more timeless forces about it and, yet, through judicious highlighting, one is convinced that the bringing of "law 'n order" to this wild land is not a task unworthy of human beings.

Henry Fonda, in the role of the man with the mission to reorder the topsy-turvy culture, proves once again that he is probably the best actor among Hollywood's leading men and, so good is Ford's directing, even Victor Mature is believable as a consumptive desperado. Outstanding, too, is Walter Brennan in the role of the mangy, old sidewinder who has an unwholesome habit of shooting the "good guys" in the back and using his quirt on his own sons when they draw a six-gun without killing a man. This, without a doubt, is escape entertainment with a vengeance. But, as for me, I liked it.

Rare Prayer Books Exhibited At Michigan University

Most Valuable Book Shown Tells of Services Held in the First English Colony in America

Edited by Sara Dill

Ann Arbor:—The 340th anniversary of the first Anglican Communion service in America is noted in a display of Prayer Books at the Clements Library of the University of Michigan. The display shows the use of Anglican and Protestant Episcopal Prayer Books in America.

The exhibit ranges from a copy of an Anglican Prayer Book of the reign of Queen Elizabeth to a copy of the Book of Common Prayer authorized in 1928 which now is used by the Episcopal Church in America.

Prepared especially for the Michigan pastors' conference here, Monday through Wednesday, the display will run until February 8.

One of the most interesting books to be seen is the Prayer Book proposed by Archbishop Laud in St. Giles, Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1637. The use of the book prompted a lady member of the congregation to throw her stool at the clergyman and led many Scotsmen to emigrate to America in a Presbyterian protest against Anglican liturgy.

The earliest record of the first communion service held in the British Colonies in North America at Jamestown in 1607 is recorded in John Smith's "General Historie of Virginia . . .", printed in 1624 in London. The book is one of the most important in the display.

Most valuable book in the exhibit, according to Clements' Library officials, is a copy of Thomas Hariot's "Virginia," which tells of the religious services in 1585 at Roanoke Island, N. C., the first English colony in America. The book was printed in London in 1588 and is the only perfect copy known in America.

Another rare book in the collection is Hakluyt's "Voyages," printed in London in 1589, which gives the first account of the first Anglican baptism in America at Roanoke Island in 1587. An Indian named Manteo and Virginia Dare, the first white child born in the British-American colonies, were baptized.

Included in the exhibit are pictures of Samuel Seabury and William White, first Episcopal bishops in America.

A Liturgy by Bishop Seabury which he had printed in 1786 for use in his Connecticut diocese is also on display. The Bishop had the book prepared while waiting for an authorized Prayer Book which did not appear until four years later. A copy of this authorized edition also may be seen.

Visitors to the library may view the first picture of an Episcopal church in America ever to be printed in this country. It was engraved in Philadelphia in 1787. It depicts Christ Church, Philadelphia, in which Washington worshipped while president, and in the churchyard of which are buried more signers of the Declaration of Independence than in any other place.

Bishop Penick of North Carolina is the commencement preacher at the Virginia Seminary

"Advertisements," another book by Capt. John Smith printed in London in 1631, first tells the story of the first church building at Jamestown and first notes the presence of a Book of Common Prayer in the British Colonies in America.

Two other interesting parts of the display are a copy of the first printed liturgical work of the Episcopal church in America, 1785, and a copy of the journal of the General Convention of the Church in America in 1789 during which the Prayer Book was approved and ordered printed.

The exhibit also contains an Anglican Book of Common Prayer printed in 1901 which contains a supplement to show the variance between the English Book of Common Prayer and that of the Episcopal Church in the United States. The supplement contains a prayer for the president of the United States, inside the first letter of which is a picture of President T. R. Roosevelt.

New Book Planned

New York: — Announcement was made, following the meeting last week of the Committee on Laymen's Work, that a book containing information and suggested methods of laymen's work would be issued shortly. It is to be in four parts.

Church Army

New York: — Captain Estabrook of the Church Army reported at the annual meeting, held here January 20, that the present staff consists of 19 captains, 9 mission sisters, 6 cadets. They are engaged in various types of work, including town and country, under-privileged, rural, Indian, Negro, Church homes and the foreign fields.

New Church

Royal Oak, Mich.:—St. John's here, through Rector Charles C. Jatho, has announced plans to build a new church on the site next to the present parish house. It will cost in the neighborhood of $320,000 and will be of the finest in the midwest.

City Government

Boston: — The Massachusetts diocesan school, which opened January 23 to meet on eight successive Thursday evenings, is considering "Our duty in relation to city government," among other things. The course deals with council-manager form of government; proportional representation; examination of the Boston city charter; women's responsibility in city government; control of citizens of their government. It is the first time that such a course has been offered at a Church conference, as far as is known. Various civic leaders are lecturing the course.

Other courses are given by Dean Van Etten; the Rev. Whitney Hale, the Rev. Massey H. Shepherd, with the director the Rev. David R. Hunter, executive secretary of the diocesan department of education.

Debt is Cleared

New York:—When the Church of the Heavenly Rest was opened on Easter, 1929, the parish owed $970,000. Today that amount has been completely liquidated. In making this announcement Rector Henry Darlington said: "Now the vestry can ask the Bishop to proceed to consecrate our beautiful church. Such a committee has been appointed." It should be pointed out also that during the eighteen years that this debt has been removed, the parish has spent over a quarter of a million dollars in beautifying the structure. The church is considered one of the most beautiful in the country.

Barber to Speak

Richmond, N. Y.:—Red Barber, sports announcer for the Brooklyn Dodgers, is to be the speaker at the annual corporate communion on Washington's Birthday, for the men and boys of the Richmond convocation of the diocese of New York. He is to speak at a breakfast following the service held at St. Andrew's here.

Organ Recitals

New York:—Organist T. Frederick H. Candlyn, organist at St. Thomas Church, gave the first of a series of organ recitals at St. Thomas Chapel on Sixtieth Street, on the evening of January 14th. On the 21st a recital was given by Paul S. Callaway, organist of Washington Cathedral, with Clarence Watters, organist at Trinity College giving a recital on the 28th. The final in the series will be given February 4th when the organist will be Walter Baker, organist at the First Baptist Church, Philadelphia.

Conciliation Board

Everett, Wash.:—Rector Thomas E. Jessett of Trinity Church here has been appointed by the mayor of the city to serve on a labor relations board. The three man board, with a representative of management and of labor serving with Mr. Jessett, stands ready to function whenever called upon to settle any local disputes between management and labor.

Evangelicals Meet

Kirkwood, Mo.:—The evangelical emphasis must become a more consciously unified movement on a national basis, according to the Rev. Charles D. Kean, rector here, national president of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship. The primary objective of the fellowship is to develop this unity of conviction and to relate immediate problems of policy and program to it.

Mr. Kean has just completed the first of a series of regional tours meeting with Evangelical Fellowship groups in several northeastern dioceses. On January 7, he spoke informally at a small luncheon of Toledo, Ohio, members, and that evening along with Dean Chester Emerson of Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland, addressed a dinner meeting of the fellowship at the Cleveland YMCA. He met with a small committee of Rhode Island members in Providence on January 10.

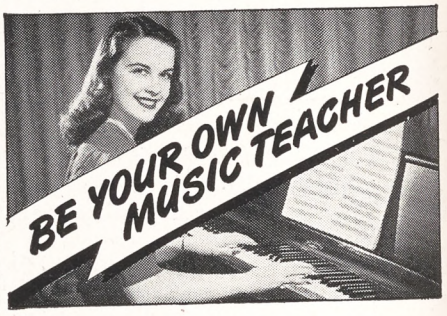
After preaching on January 12 in Grace Church, New York, Mr. Kean went to Boston, where he was the speaker at the monthly meeting of the Massachusetts branch of the Fellowship in Trinity Church Rectory on January 13. That afternoon he spoke to an informal gathering of students of the Episcopal Theological School at the home of Prof. Sherman E. Johnson.

Mr. Kean spoke to a meeting of students of the Virginia Theological Seminary on Wednesday, Jan. 15, and that evening was the speaker at a dinner meeting of the Washington, D. C., branch of the Fellowship in St. John's Church, Georgetown. The following day he spoke to a meeting of the New York branch of the Fellowship at St. Bartholomew's Church, and on Friday, Jan. 17, addressed a meeting of the Cincinnati, Ohio, group at the Church of the Advent, Walnut Hills.

The Rev. R. Malcolm Ward, of Maumee, Ohio, national secretary of the Fellowship, is expected to meet with local groups in Philadelphia and Hartford during the next month.

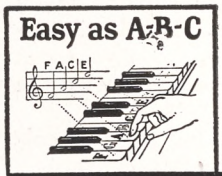
Virginia Graduation

Alexandria:—Ten men were graduated from the Virginia Seminary this week. Bishop Penick of North Carolina gave the address, and the Rev. Packard Okie, acting student pastor at Princeton who is on leave from the missionary district of Liberia, led a retreat for the seniors of the seminary on January 25-27 at Orkney Springs, Va.



Urge Freedom

New York (RNS):—Inclusion of guarantees of religious freedom in the new Italian constitution will be a major factor in determining the attitude of Protestants in this country toward the Italian government, Dr. Alcide de Gasperi, Premier of Italy, was told here during a conference with seven Protestant leaders representing the Federal Council of Churches. Dr. Gasperi has since resigned.



The delegation, in a memorandum presented to Dr. Gasperi, pointed out that "the Protestant and Orthodox Churches in America are deeply concerned to help the people of Italy who have suffered grave hardship because of the war."

This interest, the memorandum said, has been expressed in two ways: by support of governmental and public measures which have provided relief and reconstruction for Italy, and by contribution through Church World Service, joint Protestant relief agency, of goods and money. The Italian Premier was assured that further assistance and support will be given by Protestants in this country.

The memorandum stressed that the Federal Council is "concerned about the contribution which Italy may make in the family of nations. . . . The Council has taken the position that 'the peace must establish in principle and seek to achieve in practice the right of individuals everywhere to religious and intellectual liberty'."

Pointing out that these "lofty principles" have found international acceptance, the statement asserted they should now be put into actual practice.

"We recognize," the Federal Council leaders said, "the crucial importance of the decisions which the people of Italy are called upon to make as they determine the constitutional forms by which their life shall be governed.

"You will understand that, because of our profound interest in the development of international order and in the promotion of respect for the rights of our Protestant brethren in Italy, we shall diligently follow the course of events in your country over the months that lie ahead. Provisions for religious freedom in the new constitution will be a major factor in determining the attitude of our people toward Italy."

The delegation representing the Federal Council included Roswell P. Barnes, associate general secretary of the Council; Robbins W. Barstow, director of the service division, Church World Service; Frederick L. Fagley, associate secretary, General Council, Congregational Christian Churches; O. Frederick Nolde, dean of the graduate school, Lutheran Theological Seminary, Mt. Airy, Pa.; Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of the Methodist Church; George P. T. Sargent, rector of St. Bartholomew's Church, and Robert W. Anthony, former commissioner of the American committee for the World Council of Churches to the Protestant churches of Italy.

Atheism Vs. Religion

Philadelphia (RNS):—A new religious discussion program, "Atheism vs. Religion," is being broadcast here over Station WIP. Participants in the initial program, entitled "Is Religion on the Skids?" included Rabbi William H. Fineshreiber of Congregation Keneseth Israel; Daniel A. Poling, editor of the Christian Herald and pastor of Baptist Temple; Wolsey Teller, and Marshall Gouvin. The latter two are members of the Philadelphia Rationalist Group, which includes atheists, agnostics, and Deists.

What is believed to be the first atheistic broadcast was carried over Station KQW in San Francisco recently when atheist Robert H. Scott spent 30 minutes presenting arguments in favor of atheism. His broadcast followed a ruling by the Federal Communications Commission that atheists should be allowed to present their views over the air. Indignant churchgoers barraged the radio station with protests for allowing the program to be aired.

Delinquency

Des Moines, Iowa (RNS):—"Boys and girls who attend Sunday school and church regularly are not likely to fall into the arms of the law as delinquent children," Ralph Brophy, head of the police juvenile bureau here, asserted. The bureau head made the statement following a survey of the bureau's activities during 1946 which included investigation of juvenile participation in thefts, drinking of intoxicating liquors, running away from home, truancy, smoking, and vandalism. At least 83 per cent of the children with which the police juvenile bureau had contact during 1946 were not regular attendants at any church or Sunday school, Brophy said. Only a few of the remaining 17 per cent attended church or Sunday school with any degree of regularity, he added.

"We cannot blame the children for their failure to attend," the bureau head said. "Practically none of the parents of the children contacted either attend or accompany their children to religious services. I consider religious or spiritual training the most important factor in the prevention of juvenile delinquency," Brophy said in listing "five ways of making a child delinquent." The five are:

1. Don't give your child any religious or spiritual training.

2. Don't let him discuss his plans, problems or pleasures, so he won't develop affection, security or trust in you.

3. Don't open your home to his companions; they will muss up the place. Don't be concerned where he spends his free time.

4. Never praise your child for his worthwhile effort because he might take advantage of your effort and try harder to please you in the future.

"In other words, just don't pay any attention to what your child does or says. He should be able to take care of himself in this day and age," Brophy concluded.

Seek Understanding

Copenhagen (wireless to RNS):—A discussion forum has been set up here by Danish Christian and Communist leaders in an attempt to reach understanding on questions in which both groups have a common interest. The discussions are also aimed at clarifying the issues on which Christianity and Communism differ.

Offer to Arbitrate

Athens, Ga. (RNS):—The Athens Ministerial Association has offered to arbitrate a 16-months-old strike against the Athens Manufacturing Company. The strike was called in August, 1945, by the Textile Workers Union of America and is the oldest strike in the nation. The union has accused the company of refusing to arbitrate.

The ministerial association sent a letter to the president of the company, H. E. Dudley, and the local union president, Seab Burgess, stating it was offering its services as arbitrators "in a non-partisan attitude, hoping to be helpful in seeing this difficulty settled fairly and justly."

Family Clinic

Cleveland (RNS):—Women of 14 Greater Cleveland churches concluded a unique family clinic at Phillips Avenue Presbyterian church here with plans for stabilizing home life in the community. Following keynote addresses by Common Pleas Judge Julius M. Kovachy, president of the Cleveland Church Federation, and Dr. Henry C. Schumacher, director of the Cleveland Guidance Center, the women went into seminar sessions to hold frank discussions on all phases of family life.

First such clinic sponsored by a Protestant church here, results of the meeting will be studied toward establishing similar clinics in various parts of this area. The 150 women attending represented churches, schools, parent-teachers groups and public health and service organizations.

Prime conclusion of the meetings was that the church has become a necessity to a stable American home. Statistics provided by Judge Kovachy in his address showed church membership in this area was one of the best deterrents to breakup of a home. Churched families, he said, registered a higher incidence of harmony, with fewer divorces.

Most of the women attending, although mothers themselves, blamed immature modern mothers as the chief cause of disintegrating homes here.

Jobs for Strikers

Winston-Salem, N. C. (RNS):—Having failed to get negotiations started in an effort to settle a protracted strike which has idled Negro laundry workers at five plants here, Negro church leaders have joined with other groups in setting up laundries in several sections of the city to provide jobs for the strikers.

Spokesmen for the organizing group said the causes of the strike were not considered in the step, but that the laundries, which are to be operated and staffed entirely by Negroes, are being established solely "to give those people jobs."

Negro ministers recently met and launched an effort to attempt some sort of a settlement of the strike. The laundries, however, are still refusing to negotiate with the International Fur and Leather Workers Union (CIO), over whose recognition the strike was called.

Group Evangelism

Buck Hill Fall, Pa.:—Use of "group evangelism" to speed the work of Christian missions overseas was recommended to Church leaders attending the annual meeting here of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America. In a special report delivered at the opening of the four-day sessions, the missions leaders were told that use of the group technique would mean a definite break from the "one-by-one" conversion methods characteristic of most Protestant mission work today. The report explained that "group evangelism" seeks to reach "rulers" in the mission field first, and after securing their adherence to the faith, working to convert their countrymen.

Japan is one of the most fertile fields for this type of evangelism, the report said, because the cultural pattern in that country has been completely changed by the war. "In Japan," the report declared, "there is proportionately the largest group of well-trained national pastors and lay workers in the whole non-Christian world. There are hundreds of former missionaries in Japan who could be marshaled for a teaching ministry."

Similar group approaches might be made in non-Moslem Africa and among other primitive peoples before the "acids of modernity and secularism undermine the traditional social pattern," the report stated.

Stressing the urgent need for Christian evangelization today, the report warned that "in countries which have escaped the actual sufferings of war, self-love and insistence upon personal gain and comfort without regard to the welfare of others seem to be the prevailing moods."

Commenting on the growth of Christianity in relation to world population, the report pointed out that "in almost all countries where foreign mission work is carried on, although the rate of growth of the Christian community is higher than the rate of growth of the general population, the immensely greater numbers in the general population mean that there are more non-Christians today than there were half a century ago."

Report Gains

Chicago (RNS):—Membership of the Methodist Church during 1946 grew by 346,369 persons to a total of 8,430,146, an all-time high, and members contributed more than $150,000,000 during the year for Methodist causes. Albert C. Hoover, statistician of the Methodist Church, in his report here, also disclosed that a nation-wide effort to reverse the trend of declining church school enrollment resulted in an increase of 298,760 to a total of 5,147,508 pupils. The report also revealed that 21,463 pastoral charges administered 40,364 preaching places, an indication of the critical ministerial shortage reported by all denominations.

Of the $150,000,000 expenditures, $113,000,000 was for regular church causes, including $48,322,579 for ministerial support; $37,841,186 for local church maintenance, and $27,979,794 for benevolence. A total of $6,339,007 was spent on church indebtedness and current expenses, reducing the church debt to $18,209,803. Methodism during the year spent $25,016,417 on property improvement, an increase of $6,500,000 over 1945.

The Crusade for Christ war relief and reconstruction fund received more than $6,000,000 bringing its grand total now to $26,861,042.

Church Renewal

Geneva (wireless to RNS):—A movement is on foot in Europe to "rediscover" the local church as a community of people in which each person can find opportunity for service, Professor Hans Hoekendijk, former general secretary of the Dutch Student Christian Movement, declared here. He spoke at the opening of the second session of the Ecumenical Institute established last year by the World Council of Churches.

who will discuss "an American view of the European Churches," W. A. Visser 't Hooft, general secretary of the World Council; Adolph Keller, Swiss theologian, whose subject will be, "An European view of the American Churches"; G. Florovsky, of the Russian Orthodox Institute in Paris; and Eric Wolf, professor of law at the University of Freiburg, and a leading layman in the German church.

Forty-seven theological students from 17 countries have registered for the courses, which will continue until March 29. Four students are from the United States, twelve from Germany, five from Holland, four from Czechoslovakia, three each from Poland and Hungary, two each from Denmark, the Baltic countries, Switzerland, and Finland, and one each from Britain, France, Belgium, Italy, Norway, Austria, Russia (from a DP camp in Austria) and Indonesia.

About three-fourth of the students are men, virtually all of them theological students or pastors. Professor Hoekendijk, who recently served in the Dutch East Indies mission field, is the dean of studies.

porary employment most of them eke out a precarious livelihood. Politically, too, the Christian community constitutes a small minority among unsympathetic majorities of Moslems, Hindus and Sikhs. A fortunate few have obtained government service, been able to buy land or otherwise secure their independence, but the majority are and will remain landless laborers."

Dr. William N. Wysham, eastern area secretary of the board of foreign missions of the Presbyterian Church, who recently returned from a trip to the Philippines and Siam, expressed the opinion that the war set back public health programs in southeast Asia many years and that in these countries there is a "compelling need" for more medical missionary service.

"In Bangkok," he declared, "where our mission has never had a Christian hospital, we found an overpowering demand from Christians and Buddhists alike that we open one at once. In Manila, also, the leading Evangelical laymen insisted on our giving careful consideration to their dreams for a great Christian medical center there. Any wise mission strategy for southeast Asia must include considerable strengthening of medical forces to meet dire physical need."

REV. ELDRED C. SIMKINS
Rector at Sebring, Florida

Thank you for publishing the article by the Rev. George William Brown (WITNESS, January 9). If any of us had any doubts as to the wisdom of the action of the General Convention on the Presbyterian unity question, this article should certainly settle all doubt, if this article really expresses the sentiments of the Presbyterians. This gentleman surely refuses to recognize the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America for what it is and what the Prayer Book says we are. Like most Protestants he wants to insist that we are just another Protestant denomination with frills. It would be fun to analyze the article, pointing out the expressions of error but maybe someone else will do this.

MISS JANE BUTLER
Churchwoman of Philadelphia

THE WITNESS Study Plan for Lent as outlined in the issue of January 9th is excellent. Unfortunately I belong to a small church where there will be no study group. So I write to inquire if it is possible for me to be a "class of one". In other words is it possible for me to buy a copy of the book issued by our commission on social reconstruction so that I may read a chapter each week, together with the articles appraising the chapters as they appear in THE WITNESS.

ANSWER: We will send WITNESS subscribers a copy of Christianity Takes a Stand for 30c—which is 25c for the book plus postage and handling. Or if you prefer the hard cover edition, issued with the title, Toward A Better World, the cost is $2.10. Those ordering are asked to send cash with order to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York, N. Y.

REV. WILLIS M. ROSENTHAL
Rector of Grace Church, Columbus, Nebr.

Thank you especially for the story in your January 9 issue on the progress made toward merging the two largest Presbyterian bodies, and for the reprint of Mr. Brown's article blasting us Episcopalians for the recent "reunion" activities. It is good to know that organic, organizational unity is in sight for two large bodies of Christians who apparently should never have been separate. Mr. Brown's article, while perhaps unduly bitter, is certainly much to the point and seems to me essentially sound—but he fails to credit any Episcopalians with having had as serious doubts about the reunion movement as many Presbyterians apparently did! Had our General Convention acted more favorably than it did on the proposals, their action would have been a severe setback for reunion among Presbyterians.

Very few of us ordinary parochial clergy have the time or opportunity to read Church papers other than our own, and for that reason I think we owe special thanks for this particular story. Mr. Brown points up the doctrinal differences and confusion that exist among us that hinder approaches to other bodies, and specifically the doctrine of the Church. The layman who didn't know he was a Catholic when he wanted to join the Presbyterians is typical: apparently he had never considered the meaning of that word in the Creeds, or he had been taught that the One, Holy, Catholic Church is an ideal toward which Christians are to strive, while many of us think we are being true to historic Christianity only by believing it to be a divine and historic fact. From this fundamental difference, I think, derive most of our other differences—such as on the doctrine of grace, which Dr. Wedel stresses so much.

It does seem to me that the Presbyterian ministers referred to by Mr. Brown have had peculiarly unfortunate experiences in getting cooperation from our clergy in community enterprises: I know that I myself and many of our clergy "bend over backwards" to take part in union efforts of various kinds and cultivate friendly and cooperative relationships. If we are intractable, in the eyes of these gentlemen, surely they have had little experience in dealing with Romanists or Missouri Synod Lutherans!

It all goes to show something.

RT. REV. EDWIN J. RANDALL
Suffragan Bishop of Chicago

In the issue of THE WITNESS for January 9, you quoted from an article in The Presbyterian Tribune by the Rev. George William Brown, blasting at the Episcopal Church for action on unity taken at the Philadelphia General Convention. Many of us who opposed this proposed union, based one of our objections on our conviction that we did not believe the Presbyterians, as a body, really desired the union and were no more prepared for it than members of the Episcopal Church.

It might have been more to the point if the Rev. Mr. Brown and others who shared his opinions had come out quite frankly and opposed the proposed union.

The day-long debate in the House of Deputies certainly gave opportunity for a thorough debate on the part of the clergy and lay delegates, and whatever some of our Presbyterian friends may think of the action, it was the action of the whole Church, through her appointed representatives, and many of us still feel that the action taken was under the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

Charles K. Gilbert Is Elected Bishop of New York

Defeats Dean Claude Sprouse of Kansas City On First Ballot at the Special Convention

By W. B. Spofford

New York:—Charles Kendall Gilbert, for sixteen years the Suffragan Bishop of the diocese of New York, was elected Diocesan Bishop at a special convention held January 28th. He succeeds Bishop William T. Manning who retired on January 1st, and who entered the synod hall following the election to pay tribute to his successor.

The only other person nominated was Dean Claude W. Sprouse of Grace and Holy Trinity Cathedral, Kansas City, Missouri. Bishop Gilbert was elected on the first ballot, as follows:

	Clerical	Lay
Bishop Gilbert	154	130
Dean Sprouse	103	42½

In nominating Bishop Gilbert, the Rev. Louis W. Pitt, rector of Grace Church, described him as "a man of integrity, gentle and fearless, who knows the diocese better than any man in active service in the Church at this hour." The Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, in nominating Dean Sprouse, deplored the newspaper publicity given out in advance of the convention, saying that "It is a sad state of affairs when the business of our diocese is broadcast in the columns of the press." He then said: "When it became evident that no clergyman of our diocese equipped with experience and learning would permit his name to be placed in nomination for the office of Bishop of New York, I proposed the name of the Very Rev. Claude W. Sprouse—and I now place his name in nomination."

Committees representing both men were active for their candidates for some weeks before the election but the campaigns were conducted in a spirit of fellowship, with no aftermath of bitterness or disappointment anywhere evident. There was one rather amusing incident: the committee working for Dean Sprouse apparently thought that a second letter to the delegates urging his election, with a picture of the Dean enclosed, would win added votes. The letter was mailed special delivery the evening before the convention with the result that some delegates were routed out of their beds in the middle of the night to receive it. Some of them were not too well pleased.

Following the election, which according to custom was made unanimous, Bishop Gilbert was escorted to the platform by Mr. Pitt and Mr. Brooks.

"I am deeply mindful of the great honor you have bestowed upon me," he said. "And I cannot but feel very humble and very grateful. Even more, perhaps, do I appreciate the confidence and goodwill which your action here today has demonstrated. I have gone up and down this diocese for a good many years. You have had ample opportunity to know my limitations. In asking me to assume the great responsibilities which the Bishop of this diocese must carry I can only assume that you are prepared to give me that cooperation you must know I am going to need.

"My friends will bear me out, I am sure," he continued, "when I say that I have not sought this office. I know what it means. I would not pretend, of course, that it is not a great satisfaction to feel that one is wanted. But it is a pretty sobering thing to find oneself face to face with the mandate which your action presents to me—a mandate that it would be difficult for any servant of the Church to refuse. . . . Perhaps the greatest compensation that has come to me in these recent years has been in the close association I have had with the clergy of this diocese. I hope that may continue. To be a pastor of pastors is a solemn and sacred undertaking and a high privilege. I shall hope I may be given grace and wisdom to measure up to it. If there is any way that I can give help and encouragement to the clergy I shall hope that they will feel free to call upon me."

After paying a tribute to Bishop Manning, the newly elected Diocesan said that "Our God is laying upon his Church and all who comprise that Church today, a task, a challenge, such as we have never had to face before. It must be obvious to all that we cannot hope to do all that he has the right to expect of us today unless we are prepared to stand together and to work together. We have our differences; we shall probably continue to have our differences. But above all those differences stands our common loyalty to a common cause. We all love this Church and it is my earnest prayer that we may all be ready and willing, in the spirit of mutual trust and fellowship, to do our part, each one of us, to make this blessed Church of ours something God can use in healing the wounds of our stricken world and carrying forward his kingdom. I want you to know that I shall pledge myself to do all in my power—all that you will permit me to do—to unite the forces of this great diocese for the common task our God now lays upon us. And in this I shall need your prayers, your goodwill and wholehearted cooperation. This I ask not for myself but for the sake of the Church to which we have all pledged our allegiance."

PLAN ACCORDINGLY

Orders for the Study Plan for Lent continue to arrive in such numbers that we have decided to start the articles in our issue of February 20th instead of the 13th. This will enable, us, we believe, to get copies of the book, Christianity Takes A Stand, to all those placing orders and to enter orders for WITNESS bundles, as well as new single subscriptions. Your first bundle will therefore arrive on a day between Ash Wednesday and the first Sunday in Lent. The series will continue, as announced on the back cover page of this number, for ten consecutive weeks. The books are mailed from our New York office as fast as orders are received. Therefore, if there are those who have planned the first meeting of a discussion group the week of February 9 we suggest a general discussion of the subject, based upon the book, with subsequent meetings following the schedule as present this week on the back page. We hope that our change of schedule does not seriously inconvenience anyone, but the large number of parishes using the Study Plan makes the change advisable.

Born in Bainbridge, N. Y. in 1878, Bishop Gilbert is a graduate of Hamilton College, where he distinguished himself not only as a student but as an athlete. Since his consecration in 1930 he returned to his college one fall, when Hamilton wasn't doing so well at football, donned a suit and went to work with the coach in order to pull the team out of a losing streak. Upon ordination, following graduation from the General Seminary in 1905, he was placed in charge of Trinity, New Dorp, Staten Island. Later he became the rector of Grace Church, Millbrook, N. Y., where he remained for six years.

In 1913 he was made the editor of The Churchman, a position which he filled with ability. He left the magazine in 1918 to become the rector of St. James the Less, Scarsdale, N. Y., one of the strongest suburban parishes in the diocese. In 1920 he was appointed executive secretary of the social service department of the diocese, a position which he filled so well that it was largely on the strength of this record that he was elected Suffragan Bishop in 1930.

He is a member of the executive committee of the Greater New York Federation of Churches; serves on the executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches; was, until it dissolved a few months ago, co-chairman with the Rev. Ralph W. Sockman of the interfaith committee of Russian War Relief, and was for many years a vice-president of the Church League for Industrial Democracy. He has been a member of the editorial board of THE WITNESS since the paper was reorganized in 1941.

One of the little known facts about Bishop Gilbert is that he is a skilled cabinet maker. His summer home at Dell-in-Heath, Mass. was originally a grist-mill which was converted into a beautiful summer place largely by his own labor and at a cost of but a few hundred dollars. And it is furnished with tables, cabinets, chairs and wall panels which were turned out by the Bishop who gets most of his summer relaxation working in his well-equipped cabinet-makers shop.

Earlier in the convention it was voted to raise the salary of the Bishop of New York to $25,000 a year, formerly $15,000. This was done to meet increased living costs and income taxes. It is planned to make the deanery of the Cathedral of St. John-the-Divine the bishop's house, with $4,800 a year voted for maintenance; $3,500 voted for travelling expenses of the bishop and $3,000 for a secretary.

The Rev. Richard Lief is now the director of City Mission in Los Angeles

TAFT ADDRESSES CONVENTION

Nashville, Tenn.: — Charles P. Taft, Cincinnati layman, stressed the importance of laymen in the Church in an address here at the convention of the diocese of Tennessee. He also said that the trend toward interdenominational cooperation is "one of the most promising facts in religion today." Speaking on foreign affairs he said that our government should not express its stand on any other country's actions unless it is consistent with our own behavior.

CATHOLIC PRESSURE CONDEMNED

Erie, Pa. (RNS):—Blasting pressure it claims is being used on President Truman and the state department for immediate release from prison of Archbishop Stepinac of Zagreb, Jugoslavia, the Erie ministerial association counter-charged persecution of non-Catholics in Catholic countries and urged opposition to American action in the case.

According to the ministerial group, Archbishop Stepinac's release is sought "on the ground that he holds high office in the Roman Catholic hierarchy, and by virtue of his office should be spared punishment for his alleged crime. We, the Protestant ministers in Erie, express our belief that ecclesiastical preferment is no ground for such action on the part of our President and the state department. We feel the only way for religious bodies to keep free from persecution is to practice and teach complete separation of Church and state."

The statement continued that "Protestants are being ruthlessly persecuted in the Roman Catholic-dominated countries of Spain, Italy, Mexico, Brazil, Romania and other countries."

NATIONALIZATION OPPOSED

London: — The Archbishop of Canterbury led a delegation of ranking Churchmen of all denominations to protest over monetary losses that will confront the Churches as a result of the government's plan to nationalize railroads. The delegation pointed out that under the plan the government will take over railroad shares, in which Churches are large investors, and will receive in exchange lower yielding government bonds.

CHURCH CONFERENCES ON RUSSIA

Philadelphia:—The committee on a Christian world order of the diocese of Pennsylvania sponsored a series of regional meetings in January on the Soviet Union. The leaders were Prof. Donald Harter of the University of Pennsylvania, formerly an employee of Amtorg; Robert M. W. Kempner, advisor to Justice Robert Jackson at the trial of German war criminals; Miss A. H. Froendt of the World Council of Churches; Mr. John LaCerda, foreign correspondent.

SOCIAL SECURITY FAVORED

Los Angeles:—The convention of the diocese of Los Angeles passed a resolution urging Congress to include all lay employees of the Church under the social security act. The resolution stated: "We hold as invalid the argument that the inclusion of church employees is an invasion of religious freedom. These employees are now subject to the laws governing compensation insurance, and churches comply with all laws relating to sanitation, fire hazards and other ordinances, without any threats to religious freedom."

Edinburgh Bishop Consecrated In Dramatic Setting

Four Distinct Lines of Succession Are Fused At Service Attended by All Church Leaders

By the Rev. Robert H. Whitaker

Edinburgh (Special to THE WITNESS by air):—The Rt. Rev. Kenneth C. H. Warner was consecrated the 22nd Bishop of Edinburgh in the crowded Cathedral Church of St. Mary on the feast of St. Vincent, January 22. The most dramatic moment in the consecration came when the Dutch Bishop of Haarlem, Monsigneur de Cord, special delegate from the Archbishop of Utretcht, Netherland Old Catholics; the Orthodox Bishop of Vilma, Poland, and the English Bishop of Grimsby joined with the Scottish Bishops in the imposition of hands, thus fusing four distinct lines of Episcopal succession. The Rt. Rev. John How, Bishop of Glasgow and Galloway, and Primus, was the chief consecrator.

Preacher at the consecration was the Rev. Eric S. Abbott, Dean of King's College, London, who spoke on The Bishop as Symbol of Christian Unity. In calling for a new realization of this particular function of the bishop's office in the Episcopal Church in Scotland, Dean Abbott, with consummate tact yet unmistakable clarity, compared the historic ecclesiastical situation in Scotland with the unhappy story of the Churches in Poland and Ireland and pleaded that Christians of Scotland might have their memories purged of the many divisive recollections of their past religious strife. Only thus could the Scottish Episcopal Church escape the nemesis of introversion which so often strangles the life of a minority group and threatens to vitiate the religious life of Scottish Episcopalians who find themselves surrounded by the Presbyterian Establishment.

Into this difficult environment, the Church was now setting aside another bishop as the apostolic symbol of the unity of the body of Christ. In the days ahead it would be his duty to uphold the truth of the Christian faith as he had received it and if, as would be almost inevitable, his views differed somewhat from the views of other Christians in his midst, he must ever remember that the utterance of Christian truth must be accompanied by both charity and personal humility. Only thus could he expect to realize the fulness of his position as a bishop in the universal Church of God and prove himself a true father in God to the members of the surrounding community as well as to his immediate spiritual family. While consecrated this day as a bishop, he must further bear in mind that he ever remains both deacon and priest, and as deacon, his first duty is to serve.

Giving tangible expression to friendship among the churches, representatives from all the major Christian bodies (except Roman) in Edinburgh were present, including many ministers of the established Kirk of Scotland. Likewise seated with visiting clergy was a Lutheran pastor, chaplain among the German prisoners of war, currently interned in British labor camps. Two former American naval chaplains, the Rev. Messrs. J. Cooper, Staten Island, N. Y. and W. N. Jamieson, Aliquippa, Pa., both ministers of the Presbyterian Church U.S.A., and now post-graduate students at New College, completed the inter-church and international character of the proceedings by sharing in the complicated task of ushering in the great cathedral.

Sylvia D. Holcomb, daughter of the late George N. Holcomb, Episcopal clergyman, has incorporated her ideas of religion, social justice and racial discrimination in a novel, THE FORTRESS WITHIN Placed with the clergy of the diocese of Edinburgh were two priests from the American Episcopal Church, now temporarily serving in the Scottish Episcopal Church, the Rev. Oscar F. Green, Palo Alto, Calif., and the writer of Massachusetts.

Before his election to the diocese of Edinburgh, Bishop Warner had served as archdeacon of Lincoln, England, and previous to that as Provost of St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow. Bishop Warner is an alumnus of Trinity College, Oxford. Enthronement took place the same day at an evening service in the Cathedral at which time Bishop Warner called upon his clergy and people to support him as he sought to achieve the high ideals specified by Dean Abbott in his sermon earlier in the day.

MINISTERS SURVEY NEGRO WORK

Holyoke, Mass.: — The Holyoke ministerial association is conducting a city-wide census here to determine if the Negro population is neglected from the religious and social standpoints. The association feels that a large majority of the Negroes, many of whom came here during the war years when white manpower was scarce, are not reached by church services. An Episcopal mission and one Negro Baptist minister, the Rev. H. Benton Harris, have been serving small Negro congregations. The census was planned by the Rev. James F. Madison, of St. Paul's Church, and Rev. Ronald J. Tamblyn, of First Congregational Church, and Mr. Harris.

Dallas, Texas:—Announcement of an 11% increase in communicant strength, admission of 12 new Missions formed within the past year of which one was admitted as a parish, reception of 16 new priests, and launching of a building program for the new cathedral school for boys and for a new diocesan conference center featured the annual convention of the Diocese of Dallas. The two day session was held in St. Matthew's Cathedral with 300 delegates and visitors at the opening dinner and meeting.

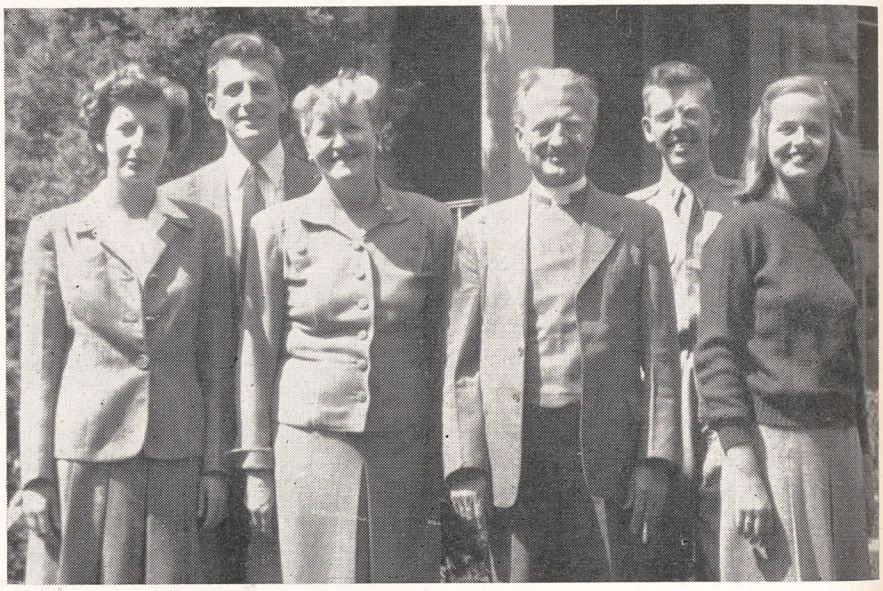
evangelism and the need for thorough instruction for all persons brought to confirmation set the key note for the convention, and a spirit of great missionary zeal and desire for the extension of the work of the Church pervaded the entire meeting.

The bishop reported 858 confirmations, the largest number ever reported in the diocese. Dean Gifford of the Philadelphia Divinity School addressed the convention and cited what he called "a dangerous shortage in the church of trained clergy."

The convention set up a $25,000 revolving fund for the establishment of new missions and budgets of approximately $45,000 for missionary work and $35,000 for diocesan support were adopted. The purchase of a diocesan conference center was approved and the convention voted to raise the necessary funds for the purchase of a tract of land of some 140 acres formerly used by the Y.M.C.A.

PATRONAL FEAST OBSERVED

Burlington, Vt.: — St. Paul's Church here had special services on the feast of the conversion of St. Paul last Saturday and Sunday. On Saturday the vestry attended an early communion in a body and dedicated themselves anew to their responsibilities. On Sunday the emphasis at the eleven o'clock service was on missionary responsibilities and opportunities. Junior Warden J. E. Pooley spoke on the opportunities among the unchurched in the community; Miss Janet K. Fickenscher, president of the Canterbury Club at the University of Vermont, spoke on the opportunities among students and G. A. Barrett of Underhill Calvary Church talked about the unchurched in rural areas of the state. At the close of the service representatives of the parish organizations went to the altar and received a charge delivered by Rector Charles Martin.



BISHOP STEVENS PLEADS FOR UNITY

Los Angeles: — Bishop Stevens made a plea for unity in his address before the convention of the diocese held here. He stated that a divided Church lacks power to make Christian principles effective in society, and asked: "Are Catholics and Protestants, Anglicans and Presbyterians, big enough to continue to work in hope and patience for the Christian ideal 'that we all may be one'?"

Bishop Gooden, suffragan, told the convention that "while prohibition was a failure, the present system is a worse failure." He advocated removal of the sale of liquor from private business for profit.

WORLD CONGRESS OF RELIGION

New York:—The Church Peace Union is to sponsor a world congress of religion to support the United Nations. It will be held somewhere in the United States in October of next year. The announcement was made following the annual meeting on January 23 when the Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, Methodist minister, was elected president to succeed the Rev. William P. Merrill who declined renomination after having served as president for thirty years.

BISHOP ATWILL HONORED

Fargo, N. D.:—The 10th anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Douglass H. Atwill as Bishop of North Dakota was observed here on January 21. Following a communion service at Gethsemane Cathedral, a luncheon was held at a local hotel with speeches and presents.

PITTSBURGH SCHOOL

Pittsburgh, Pa.:—Three parishes of this city are jointly sponsoring a school of religion, held at the Ascension on Thursday mornings from February 13 through March 20. The parishes are the Ascension, the Redeemer and Calvary. The lecturers are Mrs. Theodore Wedel of Washington, D. C., the Rev. W. C. Campbell of the Ascension, the Rev. Lauriston L. Scaife of Calvary, Bishop Austin Pardue, Professor George R. Elliott of Amherst College and President Clark Kuebler of Ripon College.

EQUAL VOTE IN ARKANSAS

Helena, Ark.:—The diocese of Arkansas, meeting here, voted to amend its constitution so as to give representation in the convention to all clergy and congregations on a uniform basis, regardless of race. Bishop Bland Mitchell, in explaining the action, said that passage simply means that all the clergy of the diocese may vote in the convention, irrespecive of race, and that every congregation is given lay representation on the same basis. He stated that the amendments had no bearing upon the present separation of congregations into white and Negro groups.

HERE TO SELL SOFT PEACE

New York:—Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, president of the American Jewish Congress, deplored Martin Niemoeller's "lamentable past" in a statement last week. He also criticized the Federal Council of Churches for the "very great disservice" in sponsoring Niemoeller's speaking tour in the United States which he said is aimed at selling a "soft" peace for Germany.

EDITORIALS

The Bishop of New York

THE elevation of Charles Kendall Gilbert from Suffragan to Diocesan Bishop of New York will cause rejoicing not only throughout the Episcopal Church but among the thousands outside our Church who love and respect him. He is a man of wide experience, unusual gifts and strong convictions. He also has that rare gift of tolerance, understanding and kindness, which assures him the loyalty of Churchmen of all schools. Throughout his long ministry he has been a champion of interchurch cooperation and unity. On social questions he has always proudly called himself a progressive and does not hesitate to stand for unpopular causes. Yet he does so without giving offense to those who differ with him because he, as much as any man we know, never has that "overweaning love of his own ideas" from which the late Dean Rousmaniere prayed that all Christians might be saved.

Bishop Gilbert has been the rector of parishes, small and large; he was most effective as executive secretary of the social service department of the diocese of New York; as editor of The Churchman he maintained the high standard of that important journal for five critical years, and for the past six years, as a member of the editorial board of THE WITNESS, he has given wise and courageous leadership. As Suffragan Bishop since 1930 he has served loyally, wisely, humbly.

That he will administer the affairs of the largest diocese of the Church in the same skillful way that he has handled all his jobs can be taken for granted. That he will also be a voice in the national Church for unity, social justice and international peace and goodwill is an assumption based upon past performance.

Conscientious Objectors

IT WAS hoped that at Christmas President Truman would grant freedom to the conscientious objectors still in prison and amnesty to those who have already been paroled or freed. About a million German war prisoners had their citizenship returned when they were granted complete amnesty as a Christmas gift. In Japan a like number of our former enemies were received back into society. Only in the United States has amnesty been withheld and the full rights of citizenship been refused those who, for conscience sake, were unable to participate in war.

This makes sense only if we are to believe that our nation has shifted completely and is now under the control of the war-making caste. German scientists who perfected the V-2 missile we invite to apply for American citizenship. But we deprive of their citizenship American boys who have the courage of their convictions in following their Christian conscience. Can it be that to go all the way in the practice of what they—rightly or wrongly—consider to be Christian morality, is the one unforgivable c r i m e in America?

Those who believe that the right of conscience should be safeguarded would do well to urge the President to act in this matter at once.

"QUOTES"

IF WE ARE to think about morality, we must think of three things: relations between man and man, things inside each man, and relations between man and the Power that made him. Human beings judge one another by their external actions, God judges them by their moral choices. That is why Christians are told not to judge. Taking your life as a whole, with all your innumerable choices, all your life long you are slowly turning the central part of you, that chooses, into a heavenly creature that is in harmony with God, other creatures and yourself; or else into a hellish creature that is in a state of war or hatred with God, fellow creatures and one's self. To be the one kind of creature is heaven. Each of us at each moment is progressing to this one state, or to the other.

—C. S. Lewis
in Christian Behaviour

Repentance First

THE National Council, over the signature of Bishop Tucker when he was the Presiding Bishop, sent a message to the senior wardens of all churches, and to some others, pleading that every congregation work for improvement in race relations. To have a letter from the Presiding Bishop to wardens was an admirable technique for presenting the great need of the Church to work in the field of race relations. But there was an atmosphere about the letter which was disappointing. It was typified by one sentence,—"The genius and history of our own branch of the Church give it an unequalled opportunity for leadership in this work."

The genius of our Church built galleries where the slaves could be spectators of worship. The genius of our Church established at least one Church college in the north, and a number of prep schools that are assiduously kept "lily-white." The genius of our Church has developed a sense, both within the membership of the Church and outside, that the Episcopal Church is a class Church, and that only certain sections of society are welcome in the fellowship. The history of our Church is that of segregation, such as can only develop from the existence of "Negro work" departments. The number of strictly Negro churches in the north outweighs the few splendid attempts at bi-racial congregations. Most Church hospitals refuse to admit Negroes for nurses' training and internships. Anyone could pile instance upon instance to show that the genius and history of our Church has been in the forefront of bad social relations.

It would be more seemly to call the Church to repentance for the failure to produce a Church in which "all ye are brethren." One is justified not when he says "God, I thank thee that I am not as other men are," but when he says "God, be merciful to me, a sinner." The call to leadership in race relations would be in order after penitence.

Activities at St. Martin's-in-the-Fields

by J. Gilbert H. Baker

Associate Minister at the Epiphany, New York

MY OWN experience as one of a large staff at St. Martin's-in-the-Fields was a stimulating one, though not really typical of English parish life. Those of you who know London will be familiar with its eighteenth century features, standing at the corner of Trafalgar Square, close to Whitehall and almost at the hub of London's swirling life. There is a large congregation, including a great number of young people. What is its message? It is, I believe, a confession of the Incarnation, in present day terms, calling people to realize that they are living in the world of 1947, the atomic age, and that it is the duty of Christians to find out what God is saying to us in this age. It is a call to people to act as Christians not by joining this and that Church organization; (we have been very suspicious of organizations, because they can be great time-wasters), but by entering into the life of their community, in local government and so forth. The other emphasis during this year has been on the subject of bread, the subject that is uppermost in the minds of millions today.

We have been acutely conscious of the needs of our neighbors in Europe in these last months, and although our rations are not large, Christians in England have been genuinely anxious to share them. At first the Government would not allow it, then they said that some foodstuffs could be sent to the value of £100,000 if the money could be found to purchase it. So appeals were made largely through the Churches and it was not long before it was all subscribed. St. Martin's quite quickly produced £500, or $2000. I remember Eric Loveday, our vicar, saying that the rationing was really in line with the Lord's prayer. We ask for enough and not more than enough, and he went on to say that there are those who can waste the sacramental bread by receiving it carelessly, just as people can waste bread, and so let others go short.

Among our other activities at St. Martin's there was a series of lectures on preparation for marriage given by two Christian doctors and one of our own staff, for young men and women. This is one of a number of moves being made by the Church to do more to prepare young people for Christian marriage, for the Church can have nothing useful to say about divorce matters if she does not take care to instruct the people married in Church what it is all about.

Another thing we did was a religious "Brains' Trust" ("Information Please") conducted by the clergy staff during the lunch hour for a month. All kinds of questions came in and it was instructive for people to find that the clergy could sometimes answer a question which they had not prepared to answer, and also that they did not all agree on every point.

But the strength of St. Martin's lies not primarily in these things, nor in the widespread relief work which is done by a trained worker, but by the fact that it is open all day, and that almost any time you go in you can find people there saying their prayers. Apart from the daily services there are always a number who come in just before they go to work at 9 o'clock. A good deal of our time was taken up with personal interviews of all kinds from people who want advice about a missionary vocation to those whose marriages are breaking down. It is impossible to describe this pastoral side of the life of any Church. You know that it is being done in your own parish, but neither you nor the rector can assess the results, and whether it is a parish or a national Church we have to remember that God's standards of success are not ours, and that He works in ways beyond our knowing.

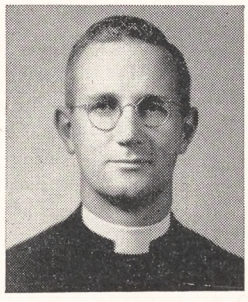
I would like to say a word in conclusion about the missionary work of our Church. It is carried on not by the Church as a body, but by societies within the Church which cover a world-wide field. The war is making it hard for the societies to keep up their commitments in man-power, but there is still a widespread interest in the young Churches which have sprung up in Asia and Africa and elsewhere as a result of Christian missions. A special appeal by the Archbishops has been made for the Church in China. It was a new way of giving, for it was a kind of self-imposed poll tax on every communicant for the sister Church in China. I was acting as secretary for this appeal for a while, and it was very moving to see how even the tiniest villages and the poorest parishes in the land were giving. I went to speak in one of the blitzed parishes in the poorest part of the East End of London, and they gave nearly twice as much as their target figure. The appeal culminated in a great service in St. Paul's Cathedral at which all the dioceses of Canterbury Province formed a procession with banners and made their offerings to the Archbishop of Canterbury, who offered them at the altar, and the sum was then handed to the Chinese Bishop's delegate, Bishop Shen, formerly of Shensi, who has recently returned from England to China.

We are constantly reminded of the missionary and international character of our Church by the large numbers of Christians from overseas in England,—African students as well as those from India and China, European refugees, allied soldiers, etc.



"If one member suffer all the members suffer." It is true of nations and it is true of Churches. The peoples and the Churches in England and America have both learnt suffering and loss at various levels. But we shall never forget the generous way in which the Church in America came to our help, especially in our missionary work during the war; and we still need your prayers. It is vital that the Churches in our countries should lead our people in the way of harmony and living together, and we can do that most surely not when we are seeking to defend ourselves or uphold our system against that of others, but when we meet in the Name of Christ crucified, who on the night of his passion prayed that His disciples might all be one.

Strategy and Tactics

by

FRANCIS O. AYRES

TOWARD THE CONVERSION OF ENGLAND, the report of the commission on evangelism appointed by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, advocates, as many of you know, a vastly increased use of three relatively new mediums — advertising, movies and radio. That this is sound strategy is a basic assumption of much thinking about the Church in our day. David Peck, writing in Christendom, questions our right to make the assumption by a penetrating criticism of the report, "Now the dilemma the commission has got itself into is that of advocating the use of techniques in evangelism which are characteristic of man as he now is—in his present state—and which tend to keep him there. They are the mass techniques—advertising, the radio, cinema. . . . The question is how far the Christian conception of man is assimilable through such techniques?" It seems to me that a great deal of hard thinking is needed before we can continue blithely ahead with our present assumption.

My own experience with movies, religious and otherwise, leads me to venture two opinions. In the first place, religious movies stereotype thinking about the Bible. Like a good many parishes, we became enthusiastic about the possibilities of visual education, purchased all the equipment, and started out in a big way. Our enthusiasm very quickly petered out because the films were on the whole artistically and theologically unsound. I am afraid, however, that damage was done even in that short time. I have been distressed to find how many boys and girls think of the story of the Prodigal Son in terms of the Cathedral Films production of that name which we showed here. I am not so sure but that they will always think of it, subconsciously, at least, in these terms. Under such circumstances, are we setting up blocks to the free working of the Holy Spirit? Are we killing the creativeness which is an integral part of the Christian view of man? Are we helping to dull the imagination of human beings, especially in a field where imagination is imperative? I am very much afraid we are, and that this outweighs whatever good may be in such movies.

The second opinion I should like to offer is that in concentrating on the production of religious movies we have lost sight of the main issue in regard to movies—the development of a critical attitude on the part of Christians to films in general. The average boy and girl spend a minimum of five hours in the movies to every one hour spent in church or church school. Although they may not learn five times as much from the movies as from the church, no one can deny the balance is heavily weighted in favor of the movies. Indeed, I would say that they absorb so much that is sub-Christian and anti-Christian from this source that until they develop a critical attitude toward the movies it is impossible under present conditions to teach this average boy or girl the Christian faith. Instead of trying to produce bigger and better religious movies, the value of which is far from proven, we should concentrate on ways and means of teaching people, especially the younger ones, to look objectively at the Hollywood product so that they may learn to recognize the sub-Christian and anti-Christian assumptions, attitudes, and action in a film.

As for religious broadcasting, I must admit to being more prejudiced than usual. I cannot bear to listen to sermons broadcast over the air. We broadcast our services from St. John's, and I have become allergic to people who, "don't get to church but listen to me over the air." Although there is a lot of pride involved here, there is also the knowledge that these listeners haven't the haziest notion what the Christian religion is all about. There are, of course, famous radio preachers with great followings, but my impression is that personal allegiance to them on the part of their fans just about crowds the Lord out of the picture. I once came upon a parishioner who sat gazing at a picture of a well-known preacher clipped from a newspaper. It was the first time she had seen her favorite. "I don't think I'll ever be able to listen to him again," said the good lady, "and I used to think he was so wonderful." Needless to say, she had no understanding nor sense of the Word in listening to this preacher's sermons.

There are, perhaps, great possibilities in religious broadcasting, but they are largely undeveloped. What are we trying to accomplish in religious broadcasts? The radio can be most persuasive. A "don't delay—get out of that chair and pray now" technique could, conceivably, become so effective as to force millions to their knees. Whether this would develop Christian men and women is another question.

Race and Culture

By

JOHN K. SHRYOCK

Rector of Grace and the Incarnation, Philadelphia

THERE is no problem facing men today more insistent than the differences between races and nations that result in misunderstandings, conflicting policies, and hatreds. If we are to have a stable peace these questions must be solved in some way, or at least, a solution must be approached to an extent which will eliminate the false solution of war. For war never solves this problem; it only aggravates it.

In dealing with this situation, there are two extremes which must be avoided if men are to live peacefully with each other. One extreme ignores the facts of the problem, while the other claims that it is insoluble.

On the one extreme, we have sentimentalists who ignore the real differences between groups of men by pretending that they do not exist, or that they are relatively unimportant. They are apt to be people in such fortunate circumstances that the problem is not immediately present in their lives, which makes it easy for them to be sentimental about it. In Philadelphia, for example, there are very few Americans of Japanese ancestry, and it is relatively easy for Philadelphians to condemn the attitude of the people of California on this matter. It is not an immediate problem for them, for they do not face competition with large numbers of people of Japanese descent. When people do face real competition of one sort or another from a non-Caucasion group, it is not so easy to be liberal. Nothing is to be gained by not realizing that when a minority group with striking differences from the majority becomes larger than ten per cent of the population, a serious problem arises.

On the other extreme there are those who regard such differences between groups as irremovable. Mongoloids and Negroes and Caucasians not only look different from each other but are said to think and act differently, because they belong to different races, and nothing can be done about it.

In approaching this problem intelligently, we must remember that the factors which shape our characters may be summed up under two heads. There are those factors which we include under heredity, which, so far as practical purposes go, we cannot change, because we do not choose our ancestors. And there are other factors which we classify under environment—such factors as climate, food, education and culture. We can, to some extent at least, alter our environment, either by moving to a new one, as when immigrants come from Europe to America, or by changing our old environment, which we do when we build a house, or invent a machine, or discover the cure for a disease.

It is a mistake to minimize the real differences that exist between certain groups of human beings. They exist and they are very important. Japanese have different paths of thought from us, react differently to the same stimulii, and possess different social sanctions.

But the important point is concerned with the reasons for these differences. Are they due to race, or to culture? If the differences are due to race, then we face a hopeless situation in which the only solution is for one group completely to liquidate the other. No amount of education can change differences due to race. But if the differences between groups are due to culture, then, although those differences may be very great, we can have hope, because culture is a part of environment and it may always be altered to some extent.

Before we take up the teaching of Jesus Christ and of the Christian Church on this matter, let us consider for a moment the results of science. For the laws of science, in so far as they are laws, and in so far as we know them, are also laws of God. There are different kinds of sciences, and different types of law, so that the laws of physics, for example, stand on a different basis from the laws of sociology. It is also true man knows scientific laws only with an approximate knowledge, which may always be improved. But in so far as we do know a law of science, that knowledge must be considered in religion, particularly in such a problem as that we are considering.

The science which is more concerned with problems of race and culture is anthropology, and therefore we must ask what evidence anthropology presents on this question.

The layman uses words like race, which are concerned with heredity, and nation, which are matters of culture and environment, so loosely as to make them very misleading. We say, for example, that Italians are emotional and easily excited, whereas Swedes are phlegmatic and more self-controlled. In so far as such over-simple generalizations have any truth in them, is that fact caused by the heredity of the peoples in question, or is it due to their education, and to the different social sanctions of Italy and Sweden, or to such factors as climate and diet? The anthropologist distrusts the facile generalizations of tourists, and is careful not to ascribe them to heredity unless the evidence is indisputable.

It is safe to say that very seldom is there such evidence, and anthropologists are relying more and more on culture and environment as the explanation of the mental differences between such groups of men as nations and races.

WHEN the layman looks at men of a different race, he is impressed by such obvious differences as height, weight, the color of the skin and the eyes, and the amount and texture of the hair. He assumes that there are corresponding mental differences. But there is no evidence that can be called scientific that supports such a view. Matters like the color of the skin or the weight of the body cannot be shown to have any relation to mental traits. Height and weight, for example, are largely conditioned by diet.

There is considerable variation in mental ability within a racial group, from the genius to the moron, and this is true in all races. If we take the mean of such variation, and speak of the average Caucasian or the average Negro, we are speaking of a fiction, for there is no such thing as an average Caucasian. But if we use such a deliberate fiction, then it is true that the average Caucasian does not differ from the average Negro to anything like the degree that Caucasians and Negroes differ from each other within their own groups. In other words, science does not show any essential mental differences to exist between races as such, and the tendency among anthropologists is to explain such differences between groups in terms of culture. In fact, anthropologists use as their racial test, the cross-section of a hair—whether that section is circular or oval—and this is a trivial distinction which has no connection whatever with mental traits.

And even if mental differences could be shown between races, a further difficulty would remain. There is, actually, no such thing as a pure race, save, perhaps, such primitive groups as the Andaman Islanders. The Swedes are mixed with Lapps and Finns, while the Germans are mixed with Slavs who once inhabited most of Germany. The Chinese and the Japanese are mixtures, the latter having at least three main racial elements, one of which is usually considered Caucasian. There is probably not a Negro in the United States who does not have white blood in him, nor a white man in Brazil who may not have Negro strains. Americans offer one of the greatest such mixtures in history, including Indian, which is Mongoloid, blood. The sooner we stop talking about pure races, the better.

There are real differences between groups, but so far as we can tell, such differences are nearly always due to culture. And culture spreads by diffusion, so that American civilization is indebted to many alien sources. Our religion comes from Palestine, our philosophy from Greece, our numbers from Arabia, our printing, compass and gunpowder from China. We cannot sit down to a meal, or put on a suit of clothes, without being indebted to men of other continents and races.

Indeed, if there is one static factor in civilization, it is what we call human nature. Our culture—our languages and customs and religions—may separate us, but we all share a common nature. And this is not a theory of religion, but a fact of science.

It may seem as if all this had little to do with religion, but it has. There are people who think that religion deals with things which cannot be proven, and which must be accepted on faith. They call themselves realists, and say that they deal only with facts. Well, in this case, these are the facts presented to us by science. And it is well for us that the facts are of this nature. For if the important differences between men were caused by race, humanity would indeed have cause for despair. Race cannot be changed, and the problem would be unsolvable.

But the important differences between men are caused by different civilizations—by different languages, different ideals and methods of education, different social sanctions. These may be hard to alter, but it is at least possible to do it, and so we may have hope. Although the task of reconstructing the world is vast and difficult beyond our present comprehension, it is not impossible. The one thing man cannot reconstruct is his own nature, and that will always trouble us; but our culture can be changed.

What does religion say about this? Every monotheistic religion holds that God is the father of all men, who stand equal in his sight. The ancient Hebrews taught that man's duty was to love God wholly, and to love his neighbor as himself. Jesus Christ explained that word neighbor by using as illustration a Samaritan, a citizen of a nation that the Jews to whom he was speaking had just as good reasons to hate as we have to hate the Germans or the Japanese.

Do Jews and Christians really believe the teaching of their religion? Or do we allow ignorance, the dislike of anything strange to us, the fear of economic competition, and similar factors, to weaken or destroy our faith? Do we enjoy hatred, and endeavor to increase it by deliberate propaganda?

Let us pray that we have grace to make our feelings and our behavior consistent with our science, and with our professions of faith.

New Books

*Comfort Ye My People by Russell Dicks. Macmillan, $1.50.

An excellent pocket size book of prayers and Bible reading that will be valuable to rectors in pastoral work. The author is at present the chaplain of the Wesley Memorial Hospital, Chicago, and serves on the faculty of theologicals schools in the city.

Life's Golden Hours by Hobart D. McKeehan. Fleming H. Revell, $2.

In reality a book of ten sermons, and as sermons they are all right. But there is no good reason for paying two dollars for them since you can get more and better sermons for less money.

*Christ and Man's Dilemma by George A. Buttrick. Abingdon-Cokesbury. $2.

Anything written by Dr. Buttrick deserves reading and this is no exception. He deals with business, our machine age, education and other vital matters with a sense of great urgency. This book is a real challenge.

*Top of the Mountain by Vincent C. Franks. Morehouse-Gorham. $2.

The former rector of St. Paul's, Richmond, Va., has done a nice job in presenting us with sermons on the Christian year.

The Layman Looks at the Minister by Murray H. Leiffer. Abingdon-Cokesbury. $1.50.

This probably would be a good book for parsons to read. The author put seventy-one questions about ministers to a flock of people and this book is the result. So if you want to know whether your sermons are good, whether you are alive to social issues, whether you stand well in your community, here's the place to find out.

Parish Giving to Seminaries Fell Off Last Year

The Report Shows a Substantial Decrease From High Point That Was Reached in 1945

Edited by Sara Dill

New Haven, Conn.:—Dean Lawrence Rose of the Berkeley Divinity School, in his report last week as chairman of the national offering for theological seminaries, states 1946 shows a substantial decrease from the high point reached in 1945. However when compared with 1944 and earlier years, the 1946 offering shows "a continuation of the general upward trend, both in the number of parishes participating and in the amounts received."

In 1944 a total of 1,684 parishes contributed $50,983; in 1945 2,135 parishes gave a total of $83,253, while last year 1,715 parishes gave a total of $67,145.

Dean Ross states that "It is probably to be regarded as clear by now that a churchwide offering each year is not the solution to the financial problems of our seminaries, but the increased concern for the work of theological education which is being stimulated among the people of the Church can certainly be counted upon to have an effect which will not be measurable in the annual tabulations of returns. And other efforts by the seminaries to secure adequate resources will be the more likely to succeed."

Dean Rose paid a tribute to the Church papers, "the editors of which gave generous cooperation as always."

Urges Union

Boston:—Presiding Bishop Sherrill told the Methodist Social Union here that he supported the wish recently expressed by Methodist Bishop Lewis O. Hartman that "the day will come when these two great communions will become one." Bishop Sherrill stated that "it is tragic that those of us who are living in the present continue to think of those old arguments as if they were pressing today. It would be a tremendous step forward if our Churches which have so much in common could be one."

Urge Adjournment

Atlanta, Ga.:—Thirty Episcopal clergymen of the diocese of Atlanta last week petitioned the assembly of the state to adjourn or recess "until the courts of the state have given the people a final decision on the issues involved in the present critical and unhappy situation in the government."

Mrs. Sibley Speaks

Raleigh, N. C.:—Mrs. Harper Sibley, Episcopalian of Rochester, N. Y. and president of the United Council of Church Women, told an interdenominational institute of religion here that "one of the greatest threats to our leadership of the world is our inability, so far, to solve the problem of minorities in our own country." She also declared that if we are to retain leadership we must "restore family life to its rightful place."

Pittsburgh Convention

Pittsburgh, Pa.:—The convention of the diocese of Pittsburgh was held at Trinity Cathedral, January 21, with Bishop Austin Pardue in his address stressing the advances made in the work during the past year, especially in debt reduction and new work among the foreign born. He pointed out that in spite of the fact that the city was the most strike-ridden in the country, eleven congregations had cleared off all indebtedness.

College Work

Atlanta, Ga.:—Two conferences on college work were held here at All Saints', one sponsored by the Society of College Work which was attended by workers from the entire southeastern area and the other for college workers of the fourth province under the auspices of the provincial conference on college work.

Pope Denounced

Rome (wireless to RNS):—Leftist political circles here have denounced a recent address by Pope Pius XII to 400 women representatives of the "Christian Revival Movement" as the strongest challenge yet made by the Vatican against "those working for a new Italy."

In a passage to which particular exception was taken, the Pope was quoted as urging the Catholic women to resist the present campaign against the Church, which he described as "perhaps the most serious one which religion has had to face since the origin of Christianity."

Angered leftist spokesmen declared that "the real democrats of Italy will know how to accept and answer this challenge." They added that "it is necessary once and for all to end the so-called Vatican question."

Parish Conference

Atlanta, Ga.:—Prof. Clifford L. Stanley of the Virginia Seminary conducted a week's conference on the Christian Faith at All Saints' here. It was attended by those responsible for parish activities.

Common Cup

Washington:—Dr. George C. Ruhland, health officer of the District of Columbia and nationally-known public health physician, urged Episcopalians to abandon the practice of administering from the common chalice. He stated that his recommendation was based on studies concerning saliva-borne infections.

University in Japan

New York: — Approval of a project to establish an interdenominational, coeducational Christian University in Japan highlighted the annual meeting of the Foreign Missions Conference, held at Buck Hills Falls, January 14-17. A fund of not less than five million and not more than fifteen million will be raised to support the institution in its early stages.

Dioceses Overpay

New York:—Lewis B. Franklin, treasurer of the National Council, reported on January 23 that "Forty dioceses overpaid their expectations and the total received was $38,123 more than the total expectations, or a payment percentage of 102%." This is for the year 1946.

Vocational Conference

Philadelphia:—A vocational conference for women students will be held at Richmond, Va., March 7-9, under the auspices of the committee on college work of the province of Washington. Miss Katharine Duffield, Church House, Philadelphia, is secretary.

Military Training

Albany, N. Y.:—Declaring it an unnecessary tax burden and a temptation to youth, the New York state council of Churches has unanimously opposed peace-time universal military training. A resolution opposing the war training, passed by the Church group at its annual conference here declared peace-time military service was "an obsolete method of national defense, economically unsound and an acceptance of power technique."

The churchmen added that such training leads to "social harm" by exalting the military point of view, by restricting freedom of conscience and initiative, by removing immature youth from the shelter of home, church and school, and by "often exposing them to undue temptation."

Negro Delegates

Columbia, S. C.:—Eleven Negroes representing eight congregations were given voice and vote in the convention of the diocese of Upper South Carolina. It was the first time that any Protestant Church in the state had granted Negroes voting membership.

To Study Policies

Birmingham, Ala.: — Associated Industries of this state was among organizations petitioning the diocese of Alabama to investigate the Federal Council of Churches. Special concern was shown over Council statements on economics and business relations, and particularly tax-free cooperatives. When the matter came before the diocesan convention it was voted that Bishop Charles C. J. Carpenter should appoint a special committee to carry out the investigation.

Relief Is Sent

New Windson, Md.: — 4,503,108 pounds—that is the total amount of goods that came into the Church World Service Center here during 1946. Of the total, 3,105,407 pounds was in clothing, one of the most needed and perhaps the most valuable contribution in the form of materials goods which can be given the relief program. About 1,359,164 pounds was food.

Other relief items that headed for more than 20 different countries abroad last year were: 847 boxes of soap, 18,649 pounds of commercial soap and 52,388 pounds of home-made soap; candles, 65 boxes or 4,267 pounds; shoes, 6,144 bags or about 245.760 pairs, and 20 bicycles.

Even this impressive total is only a small percentage of what remains to be done. There has been little decrease in the needs in Europe and Asia this year. "A new and terrible catastrophe threatens millions of starving people in the war stricken countries. They are without shelter, wretchedly clad and have little resistance to disease and epidemics. Weakened by constant privation, these masses will be quite incapable of winning through this winter unless they receive substantial help and relief from abroad," states an urgent cable from seven relief agencies in Europe.

Through Church World Service, overseas relief agency for 26 Protestant churches, clothing, shoes, bedding, food and other needed relief goods are constantly going abroad. There are nine centers in the United States capable of processing millions of pounds of relief goods a year. The Center at New Windsor alone, working at capacity, could turn out 37,000 pounds of processed goods a day, or about 10,000,000 pounds a year. The total for 1946 indicates only that not enough goods came in to the Center to keep it working at top speed all year. Check your closets, trunks and attics for good usable clothes. Woolen clothing, sweaters, mittens, socks, and underwear, caps, suits and dresses are needed for winter in Europe, China, and Japan. Cotton clothing goes to the Philippines. Sturdy work shoes for people of all ages, especially the wider sizes, are extremely scarce. Look over outgrown shoes for those which can be made wearable for six months. In Central Europe $40 is the price of a pair of shoes; most workingmen make about 30 cents a day.

Soap is perhaps the rarest of all household needs. The lack of soap has meant increased wear and tear on already well-worn clothes. Both homemade and commercial soaps are sent by Church World Service. Candles too, go overseas, carrying light to the dark and cold homes of the world; even small stubs which can be melted over, are used. Bedding and linen are cherished abroad. To families who lost everything in bombing or evacuation, one blanket is a messenger of hope and life. Books, bicycles, tools, feed sacks, kitchen utensils, silverware, toys, all are among the goods shipped abroad by the churches.

Youth Crusade

Dayton, (RNS):—"The best Saturday nights in town." That's the offer of the Christian Youth Council of the Church Federation of Dayton and Montgomery county which on Jan. 25 opened the second annual series of Saturday night mass meetings for Christian "teens and twenties."

In 1945 the committee of youth of the International Council of Religious Education requested the Dayton Federation to sponsor a series of youth meetings of an evangelistic nature as an experiment. Isaac Beckes, of Chicago, youth worker with the International Council, came here with the suggestion. The 1945-46 series of 18 meetings cost nearly $5,000 and a 1,000-odd dollar deficit resulted, but this year there were sufficient requests to conduct another Christian Youth Crusade, plus these encouraging results: Over 2,000 registered last year and official attendance figures totaled 4,771. Nearly a dozen other cities have contacted the Dayton Federation or the International Council for information designed to organize similar Youth Crusades.

A series of 10 meetings has been arranged this year with "Dates With Destiny" the theme. Variety programs have been planned with this overall agenda: 7 to 8 p.m.—recreation and fellowship singing, including games and folk dancing; 8 to 9 p.m.—special music and sermons, followed by a meditation period, and 9 p.m. to indefinite time—group discussions.

Developed around the stated purpose of "To challenge youth to decision and growth in the Christian faith and life," the "Dates With Destiny" theme is carried out throughout the series. On successive Saturday nights there will be "A Date with the World," "A Date with our Neighbors," "A Date with the Master," "A Date with Ourselves," "A Date with the Family," "A Date with our friends," "A Date with Destiny." "A Date with the Church," "A Date with the Bible," and "A Date with Decision."

Meeting at three centrally-located churches, each session will have a special feature—youth group night, college night, brotherhood night, family night, "Y" night, club night, veterans night, Scout night and county night. Roll calls by groups or schools will be a feature of many of those nights.

Instead of a speaker for "A Date with our Neighbors," a "color caravan" will be featured. This will include a Negro and Caucasian boy and a Nisei girl, all students at Denison university, Granville, O.

High school and club choirs will be featured, and for special music the "crusade choir" has been organized. Over 60 Dayton churches have been invited to provide as many as four singers each.

Interracial Churches

Chicago (RNS):—An all-day institute for Protestant laymen and ministers designed to make white and Negro churches interracial was scheduled here under the auspices of the Chicago Council against Racial and Religious Discrimination, and the Church Federation of Greater Chicago in cooperation with the Chicago Presbytery, the Chicago Baptist Youth Interracial Fellowship, and other organizations.

Speakers will include Dr. Will Alexander of the Rosenwald Foundation, Dr. Buell Gallagher of the Pacific School of Religion, the Rev. Nevin Kendell of the department of

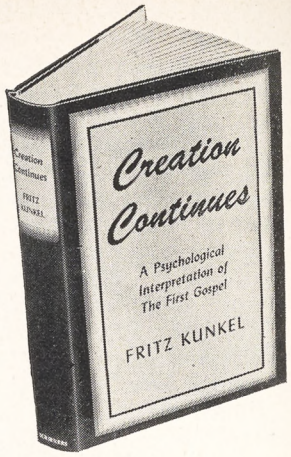
Russian Zone

Detroit (RNS):—Teaching of religion by the churches is now permitted in the Russian Zone in Germany, but 50,000 teachers must be trained and 3,000,000 textbooks secured if it is to be done, Paul C. Empie, director of Lutheran world action, declared at a mass meeting for the relief agency here. Just returned from Central Europe, he said that Christian leaders in Poland, Czechoslovakia, Austria, and Germany believe their most difficult battle lies ahead and that their greatest need is tools with which to work. Empie assured the meeting that relief supplies given by the eight Lutheran bodies affiliated with the National Lutheran Council are getting through and are being distributed by the churches. Less than one per cent of Lutheran relief supplies have been lost or stolen, he said.



Latin American

New York:—The Rev. John A. Mackay, president of Princeton Seminary who was a missionary for sixteen years in Peru, Uruguay and Mexico, was the top speaker at a recent meeting at Union Seminary. He gave a comprehensive report of his recent air tour which covered thirteen Latin American countries.

Dr. Mackay reported that he was thrilled with the rapid advance which he discovered the evangelical Christianity making in South America. He reported that its membership included three to three and one half million people, and that its influence was having far reaching effects upon the continent's statesmanship, education and social standards. As indicative of this advance, he mentioned the fact that no group of people has ever been more frequently decorated or highly honored by the Latin American governments than have the Christian missionaries in recent years. The awards have been won largely by their work in promotion of human welfare. He cited the recent film based upon the life work of William Morris, a Christian missionary, which the people of Argentina attended in great numbers, as an example of the new interest in evangelical Christianity.

Mackay has always believed that missionaries should deal with the underlying philosophic problems of the culture as well as rendering personal service to the people with whom they work. Attempting to convey the basic causes for the new strength of the Christian movement, he reminded his audience of the social and political changes which are currently taking place in the South American countries. These lands have experienced frequent political revolutions, some countries having more than eighty in a single century, but few of these have produced any important transformation in the social life of the people. He felt that this was true because the revolutions were centered around personalities rather than ideals. Preceding the Second World War, Mackay reported that there was no culture which was influenced less by religious ideals than that of Latin America. From this recent tour he reports, however, that many of the leaders now realize that the absence of religious influence makes impossible adequate solution of the basic life problems. Therefore, they are now more receptive toward religious ideologies and welcome the bearers of religious teachings.

The new opportunities for the United States to serve their Southern neighbors was the high point of the address. Until recent years, Anglo-Saxon influence in the culture of Latin America has been largely absent. However, since the European contacts of the past have been broken to a large extent, South America is turning increasingly to us for new associations. Mackay warned that the present situation, in which the government alone is active in extending our influence, is very unfortunate. Our Southern neighbors are primarily interested in attaining an understanding of our culture in aspects other than political. Therefore, he urged other institutions, especially our colleges and church organizations, to become active in sharing the culture of the United States with Latin America.

Press and Radio

Schenectady, N. Y. (RNS):—Closer cooperation between Christian leaders and those in control of the movies, press, and radio was urged here by Stanley I. Stuber, national director of public relations of the Northern Baptist Convention and president of the national religious publicity council. He spoke before the ministers association here.

"Religion, at the present time, is receiving little help from the radio, press, and movies in its crusade for a home life, a way of thinking and living, which will create both individuals with peace of mind and a peaceful world," Stuber asserted.

"While all the blame should not be placed upon the radio, press, and movies," he added, "the fact remains that each of these is considered by many thoughtful people as an enemy of Christianity.

"The movies, for example, have done much to encourage drinking, divorce and loose living in general. The press, including magazines, have made capital of the sordid, playing up crime and playing down virtue. The radio, with its advertising jargon, its noise and confusion, has become so commercial that it has thrown values way out of line and has substituted the viewpoint of the sponsor for that of the ideal of public service."

He called for self-censorship of the press and movies, and asserted

"The battle against tuberculosis is not a doctor's affair; it belongs to the entire public."—Sir William Osler.

But without doctors who are soundly trained, wise and imaginative, the battle would be pretty hopeless.

Apply this to the Church's business in the world, and you will see why the Seminaries count on widespread concern and support for their work.

that church control "would not be advisable." However, he said, the movies, press and radio, on their part should not try to harm the church.

"They should not counteract the fundamental teachings of religion. They should not be permitted to lead America directly into the moral hell of paganism," he said.

Released-Time

Philadelphia (RNS):—Both sides of the issue of released-time for religious education are discussed in a report prepared by the Philadelphia home and school Council for a special committee of the city board of education which is studying the matter for the Philadelphia school system. The report points out that the fundamental principles of modern education require that the total needs of the child be met, while those against the released-time plan note that most children are Protestant, Catholic, or Jewish and question the right of society to force children who are outside of these conventional groups into a position where others will scorn them as Godless.

The school alone cannot give a total education, proponents of the plan assert. They say: "People are religiously illiterate and the stream of juvenile delinquents through the courts attests to the necessity of a type of concentration not yet achieved toward the development of religious ideals and practices."

Opponents assert that "morality derives from what men hold in comman rather than from what distinguishes them as Protestants, Catholics, Jews, Mohammedans, skeptics or atheists.

"If we are genuinely concerned that our children shall acquire habits and ideals of honesty, fair play, self-control, generosity and respect for the personalities of others, we will have to create conditions of living in home and school and community that embody these ways of acting, feeling and thinking."

The education board's committee on the question has been studying the plans and its possible adoption in Philadelphia for nearly a year.

MRS. W. J. BURKE
Churchwoman of Washington

I want to congratulate THE WITNESS for the excellent January 16th issue. The account of the installation of Bishop Sherrill was in THE WITNESS almost as soon as I read it in the Washington newspapers, and it had the added virtue of presenting the new Presiding Bishop's address in full. The editorial about Bishop Sherrill too was excellent, and we may all rejoice that we have such a man as you describe. Then too I thought Dr. Grant made out an excellent case for support for our seminaries. Most Church people, I imagine, think that they have large endowments and therefore are in no great need. I am sure that those who read this article will make some contribution to a seminary on the day set apart for offerings on their behalf.

MR. ROBERT E. DOLE
Layman of New York

Those of us who have over the years followed the efforts made to bring about unity between the Episcopal and Presbyterian Churches were not surprised at the statement by the Rev. George William Brown (WITNESS, Jan. 9). After the action taken at the last General Convention —rather the lack of action that means anything—any self-respecting Presbyterian was bound to say that we were dishonest and hypocritical in the invitation which originated with us. There was a bitter note in Mr. Brown's article which I regretted since it may make any future negotiations between the two Churches more difficult. But I for one can forgive him for his bitterness after the way we have acted.

MISS EDITH GANTT
Churchwoman of Alturas, Calif.

The Study Plan for Lent is a particularly fine thing for THE WITNESS to do at this time and it should be of great benefit to the Church. I think you are doing a very fine thing with your paper. I am asking you to send ten copies of "Christianity Takes a Stand" and ten copies of the magazine each week to the rector here.

VERY REV. CLAUDE SPROUSE
Dean of Cathedral, Kansas City, Mo.

Your plan for study groups during Lent, using Christianity Takes a Stand, together with special articles which will appear in THE WITNESS starting February 13th, is an excellent and timely one. Even though our own study plan has already been set up for this coming Lenten season I want to take advantage of your offer and am entering an order for the book and copies of THE WITNESS for ten weeks for twenty-five people.

REV. WALTER H. STOWE
President, Church Historical Society

I dislike to disagree with my good friend, the Bishop of Albany, but I cannot accept the statistical basis of his conclusions (WITNESS, Jan. 9th).

I. Statistics of our Church for 1946 are not yet available, and will not be available until the middle of 1947 at the earliest. The statistics of the Living Church Annual are always those of two years previous to the date of the Annual; i.e. those in the 1947 Annual are for 1945.

II. The year 1945 was a war year, with hundreds of our clergy still serving as chaplains, and with hundreds of parishes disrupted or undermanned. The statistics for 1946—the first year of peace—will undoubtedly show a much improved picture.

III. To compare the net increase in our communicants (15,186) during 1945 with the 800,000 conversions of the Methodists in 1946, is decidedly unfair on two counts:

1. The basis of comparison should be the number of our confirmations in 1946 with those 800,000 conversions—and not the net increase in communicants. That comparison is not yet possible.

2. The Methodists did not have a net increase of 800,000 in their membership in 1946. According to an AP dispatch of January 17th last, "Methodist membership in the United States totaled 8,430,146 at the end of 1946, an increase of 346,369 over 1945." This was an increase of 4.2%, and not 9.9% as the 800,000 conversions would indicate.

IV. History teaches us something here. During World War I our confirmations dropped more drastically than in World War II: they declined from 61,284 in 1914 to 42,766 in 1917—a net decline of 30%; they declined from 74,318 in 1939 to 63,759 in 1943—a net decline of only 14%.

Moreover, our communicants declined from 1,090,555 in 1916 to 1,078,912 in 1917; and the number did not get back to that of 1916 until 1919.

In short, our Church has suffered less on this score during World War II than it did in World War I; and we have been in it more than twice as long.

V. With regard to the complaint that one-half of our population is unchurched (the total membership of 256 religious bodies in the United States is 52.5% of the total population), in 1890 it was far worse: only 22.2% of the total population was reported in the membership of all religious bodies.

VI. To ignore historic processes and the social forces of a given period, is to fail to appraise properly the state of the Church; and such failure often produces unwarranted conclusions and an unjustified state of mind.

Leaders of Church and Labor Hold Conferences

Unofficial Groups Sponsor First in Atlanta With Official One Next Week in Pittsburgh

By W. B. Spofford

Atlanta, Ga.:—Representatives of the Church and organized labor gathered here on February 4-5 to discuss common problems. It was frankly a pro-labor conference, those attending, as a spokesman put it, believing that "the growth of the labor movement, out of the needs and aspirations of working men and women in the south, is a manifestation of the fact that all over the world today the common man is rising to claim his rightful place in a just and democratic society." The spokesman also declared that religious leaders now "face an unprecedented opportunity to put into practice their respective faiths by interpreting labor's struggle in accord with the will of God for a social order of divine justice and an abundant life for all."

The conference was sponsored by the southern committee of the National Religion and Labor Foundation, with the cooperation of the Episcopal Church's League for Industrial Democracy and the Methodist's Federation for Social Action.

The opening session was presided over by Prof. Alva Taylor of Vanderbilt University, with Dean DeOvies of the Episcopal Cathedral of this city, Henry W. Chandler, president of the local Federation of Trades and Charles Gilman, state director of the CIO, speaking on "Labor and the Church in the South." This was followed by a panel discussion which brought forth lively questions from the audience. Leading the panel were two ministers and two labor leaders.

The speakers at the evening meeting the first day were Paul L. Styles, regional director of the National Labor Relations Board and the Rev. William H. Borders, local Baptist minister.

On the second day the conference members broke up into workshops to consider such questions as Church and labor in the community; press and radio; economic restraints in the south; youth and education; the south as an economic dependency; social and labor legislation. Among the leaders were the Rev. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College; John G. Ramsay, public relations representative of the CIO and a leading Presbyterian layman; Stetson Kennedy, author of Southern Exposure; the Rev. Charles C. Webber, Methodist chaplain to labor and the president of the Virginia CIO Industrial Union Council; Miss Lucy Mason, Episcopalian, who is a CIO public relations representative; the Rev. R. Archer Torrey, Episcopal rector at Darien, Ga.; Myles Horton, director of the Highlander Folks School; Professor Liston Pope of Yale Divinity School; the Rev. W. B. Spofford Jr., executive secretary of the CLID; Jack McMichael, executive secretary of the Methodist Federation of Social Action; Professor C. O. Bacote of Atlanta University; Allan L. Swin of the CIO organizing committee; Al Whitehouse, director in the south of the United Steelworkers, CIO. There were also present, and leading in the workshops, a large number of pastors of southern churches.

This significant conference, the first of its kind to be held in the south on such a broad scale, ended with a meeting the second evening when the subject was "The Social Meaning of Religion." The speakers were the professor of social ethics at Yale Divinity School, Liston Pope; Van A. Bittner, director of the drive of the CIO to organize the south; and Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, vice-president of the Federal Council of Churches.

Another conference on a similar theme, but more conservative in leadership and program, is the one to be held in Pittsburgh February 18-20 under the auspices of the industrial relations division of the Federal Council of Churches. Under the title of "The Church and Economic Life" those attending will meet as a deliberative body, with no addresses. The aim is to have full and free discussion of the issues in economic life about which the Church should be concerned; what is the responsibility, function and contribution of the Churches toward the resolving of these issues on Christian principles; what should be the program of the Churches in discharging their responsibility and how may the Churches equip themselves for this program?

The sessions of this conference will not be open to the public except for the service of worship held at Trinity Cathedral at which Bishop Angus Dun of Washington will give the address. It is expected that the various denominations will appoint a total of about 400 delegates, with special care that they are drawn from various economic groups; agriculture, labor, management, the public.

Next Week

The first of the series of articles presenting Critical Analyses of the chapters in the book, Christianity Takes A Stand will be by Bishop Emrich and will appear next week. The series will run for ten consecutive weeks. Names of writers will be found on the back cover page this week. All orders for Bundles received as late as Friday, the 14th, will receive the issue of the 20th. Orders received after that date will start the issue of the 27th. Copies of the book are still available and will be sent WITNESS subscribers at 30 cents a copy, cash with order please. If no study group is planned for your parish we suggest that you secure the book to read along with the WITNESS articles. All orders should be sent to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Representatives of the Episcopal Church, all appointed by Presiding Bishop Sherrill, will be Harper Sibley, former president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce; Richard Tucker, vice-president of the Pittsburgh Glass Co.; Charles Symington, president of the Symington-Gould Corp.; Noel Sargent, executive secretary of the National Association of Manufacturers; Miss Lucy Mason, public relations representative of the CIO; Jasper Davis of Kansas City, vice president of the Boilermakers Union, AFL; John Metcalf, officer of the Electrical Workers CIO; Giles Courtney, member of the Typographical Union, AFL, Richmond, Va.; the Rev. Joseph Moore of Seabury-Western Seminary; Bishop Pardue of Pittsburgh; Bishop Dun of Washington; the Rev. Beverley Boyd, social service secretary of the Federal Council; the Rev. Felix Floman of Philadelphia; the Rev. Francis Sayre, industrial chaplain of the diocese of Ohio; Spencer Miller Jr., highway commissioner of New Jersey; Prof. William Dennis, a leading authority on agriculture.

The Rev. William B. Spofford Jr., executive secretary of the CLID, will attend as an observer and will report the conference for THE WITNESS.

BISHOP CLARK OFFERS PROGRAM

Salt Lake City:—Bishop Stephen C. Clark Jr., recently consecrated Bishop of Utah, offered plans for enlarged work in the district in his first address at a convention of the district. He said that plans were underway for appointing additional clergymen; for expanding the missionary field; for increasing the number of services; for increasing financial support and reestablishing a district office. He described a new mission among the Navajos at Bluff as "one of the most encouraging and thriving fields of work" in the district.

MARRIAGE COUNCIL IS FORMED

Miami, Fla. (RNS):—A marriage and family life council has been organized here to further education for marriage and family living and also to curb the rising divorce rate. The new organization, which will work with churches, schools, social agencies, and health departments, is headed by the Rev. Albert D. Hagler. The aid of clergymen and other religious leaders, as well as educators will be sought, and a campaign for $16,700 in paid memberships is being conducted.

PRESIDING BISHOP'S RESIDENCE

New York:—The National Council has taken an option on a large property at Greenwich, Conn., as a residence for the Presiding Bishop. Immediately a bill was introduced in the General Assembly of the state of Connecticut whereby the estate would be incorporated as Seabury House, and would be exempt from taxation. Action on the measure, which was introduced by Senator George Griswold of Greenwich, is expected within a month.

It is an estate of ninety-nine acres belonging to Herbert L. Satterlee. It has an assessed valuation of $321,-160. It includes two large houses, sixteen other buildings, a swimming pool, tennis courts and ponds. The larger of the two houses, if the deal goes through, will be used for conferences and as a hostel for missionaries on furlough. This is a twenty-five-room establishment. The smaller house would be the residence of Presiding Bishop Sherrill and his successors. It has fifteen rooms according to the real estate firm handling the deal.

The houses were built in 1910, with the larger one occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Satterlee until her death last October. Mrs. Satterlee was the daughter of the late J. Pierpont Morgan.

EDITORS PROTEST NIEMOELLER

Boston: — Three editors of religious journals protested the sponsorship of a meeting for the Rev. Martin Niemoeller of Germany by the local council of churches. The meeting is scheduled for February 18. The protest stated:

"The implication is that Dr. Niemoeller is a representative of German Christianity. We are not opposed to free speech for the German churchman but we feel that the Boston public may well wonder why Christian churchmen invite Dr. Niemoeller, and we urge the public who come to hear him to listen with a discerning mind.

"Our question as Church editors is this: Why can we not have the best possible ambassador from Germany—some heroic anti-Nazi like Pastor Walbaum or any one of many other ministers who languished in Dauchau and other Nazi concentration camps? How is the cause of freedom served by a minister who served Hitler so long and so well before their disagreement over ecclesiastical matters?"

Signing the protest were Stephen H. Fritchman, editor of the Christian Register; Emory S. Bucke, editor of Zions Herald, and Emerson M. Lalone, editor of the Christian Leader.

CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL RECEIVES GIFT

New York:—Dean Hewlett Johnson of Canterbury Cathedral received a surprise gift last week. The week before he had announced in London that $1,200,000 was sought to restore the much-bombed cathedral and that $328,000 had been raised. He said the campaign would be extended to all English-speaking countries.

On February 5, through the Archbishop of Canterbury, he received word that Thomas W. Lamont, chairman of the board of J. P. Morgan & Co., had made a gift of half a million dollars. Mr. Lamont said the gift was unsolicited and was made as a tribute to the English nation. "We Americans of all others can never forget that in the darkest days of 1940 and 1941 it was only British courage and the blind faith of free men, undismayed by disaster, that saved the world from the evil of Teutonic onslaught."

ARMY OFFICER SPEAKS OUT

Jackson, Miss.: — At a diocesan council specializing in education, Col. Harwood C. Bowman, who was a commander of Chinese troops under General Stillwell, warned that unless Christianity has more to give than it is now offering, the little peoples of the world will turn to communism. "We have a responsibility to little people," he said. "I have no respect for the Shanghai missionaries nor the snooty, snobbish white men with no respect for the people. In spite of the superiority of British Anglicans, who rarely did anything for the natives, the good God doesn't give a hoot what race you are. We can only get the little people on our side by holding out the hand of hope."

Another main speaker was President Milan Davis of Okolona College who showed the rapid educational growth of the Negroes. The Council also endorsed a $60,000 campaign for a conference center and $50,000 for a chapel at All Saints' College which will be a memorial to Bishop Bratton.

Marriage Canon Interpretation Given By Chancellor

He States that if True Christian Marriage Is Intended Bishop Can Grant Permission

By John C. Spaulding
Chancellor of the Diocese of Michigan

You ask my opinion as to the proper construction of Canon 17, as amended by the 1946 General Convention, as to the nature of the judgment to be rendered on application for remarriage after divorce, with particular reference to the question whether such judgment must necessarily include, as a condition of permitting remarriage, a finding of fact that one of the impediments listed in Canon 16 existed as to the previous marriage.

Section 2 (i) of Canon 17 authorizes an application to the Bishop "for a judgment as to his or her marital status in the eyes of the Church or for permission to be married by a Minister of the Church."

Section 2 (ii) provides:

"If the Bishop or ecclesiastical authority is satisfied that the parties intend a true Christian marriage he may refer the application to his Council of Advisors, or to the Court if such has been established by diocesan action. The Bishop or ecclesiastical authority shall take care that his or its judgment is based upon and conforms to the doctrine of this Church, that marriage is a physical, spiritual and mystical union of a man and woman created by their mutual consent of heart, mind and will thereto, and in an Holy Estate instituted of God and is in intention lifelong; but when any of the facts set forth in Canon 16, Section 2, Paragraph (b), are shown to exist or to have existed which manifestly establish that no marriage bond as the same is recognized by this Church exists, the same may be declared by proper authority. No such judgment shall be construed as reflecting in any way upon the legitimacy of children or the civil validity of the former relationship."

It is a well established rule of common law for interpretation of amendments that there shall be taken into consideration: (1) the former law, (2) the defect to be corrected, and (3) the remedy. The former law provided that no remarriage should be permitted unless it were found as a fact either that certain impediments existed making the former marriage void or that divorce had been granted for the cause of adultery. The defect in this law was that it was too legalistic and inconsistent with the doctrine of mercy, and with the purpose of the Church to help and restore those who had fallen into trouble. It seems to follow that the remedy must be to base the judgment, not on a finding of facts as to the past, but on the future welfare of the parties and of society. In the light of this intent we note the following points.

John C. Spaulding, chancellor of the diocese of Michigan, presents his interpretation of the Marriage Canons

The application may be for either of two purposes, for a judgment as to the applicant's marital status, or for permission to be remarried by a Minister of the Church. There is a difference between the judgments to be entered in the two cases.

If the Bishop "is satisfied that the parties intend a true Christian marriage, he may refer the application to his Council of advisors or to the Court if such has been established by diocesan action." As the Canon does not establish a Council or Court, the Bishop alone renders the judgment, unless the Diocesan Canon provides for a Council or Court, and is not bound by the advice of the Council or Court unless the Diocesan Canon so provides.

The Canon then cautions the Bishop that his judgment "is based upon and conforms to the doctrine of this Church," but does not specify what facts are to be set forth in the judgment. Up to this point the Canon is complete and requires only a finding that the parties intend a true Christian marriage. The question is whether the following clause, that when any of the facts set forth in Canon 16 as impediments to marriage "are shown to exist or to have existed, which manifestly establish that no marriage bond as the same is recognized by this Church exists, the same may be declared by proper authority," requires a finding that such facts exist as a necessary condition of a judgment permitting remarriage.

It is proper that when such impediments existed, or now exist, as to the former marriage, it be so declared, for in that case the parties were never married, or are not now married, in the eyes of the Church. This is a judgment as to the "marital status" of the parties, and if it be so adjudged, no permission to remarry is necessary.

If such impediments did not or do not exist and the petition is for permission to remarry, the clause providing that such impediments "may be declared" does not apply and the only finding necessary to a judgment granting permission is that above mentioned, "that the parties intend a true Christian marriage." This does not necessarily depend on the reasons for the dissolution of the former marriage, although the facts in connection with such marriage may be material to the question of present intention. I am of opinion that the Bishop has the power, after making a finding that a true Christian marriage is intended, to grant permission to remarry, even though none of the impediments named exist, or ever existed.

I have questioned the correctness of this opinion in view of the interpretation given by the spokesman for the amendment in the House of Deputies that no permission can be granted except on the finding of such an impediment, since it might be considered that this interpretation, given before the passage of the amendment, was binding on the House. It is to be considered that this interpretation was given, not in the opening statement but after the time for amendments and for debate had passed, and after the House had apparently determined to pass the Canon without amendment. This determination was made in the belief by many Deputies that the interpretation is as above stated, and not as stated by the spokesman, and I do not believe the House is bound by his interpretation. Such interpretation would retain the legalistic nature of the former Canon and would be inconsistent with its well known purpose.

NO QUICKIES FOR OHIO

Cleveland:—Bishop Beverley D. Tucker warned here that "quickie" remarriages of divorced persons are out in the Episcopal Diocese of Ohio. Making his annual address at the convention of the diocese, Bishop Tucker said the newly-effective marriage canons adopted by the General Convention in Philadelphia last September are designed "to heighten rather than let down the Christian standard of marriage.

"Furthermore," he told the 257 clerical and lay delegates, "I am contemplating the requirement that the petitioner must have been resident in the diocese and in the state for at least a year before becoming eligible for applying to the bishop of the diocese for remarriage."

Since Jan. 1 when the new Church marriage canons became effective a large number of applications by divorced persons for episcopal inquiry as to their marital status in the eyes of the Church has been made to the diocese.

The convention adopted a resolution on fair employment practices legislation following some debate as to whether the issue was properly a subject for consideration.

Passed by a small majority voice vote, the resolution endorsed the enactment "of sound and workable fair employment practices legislation by the General Assembly of Ohio." It also resolved that members of the Episcopal diocese give active support to the enactment of this legislation.

Bishop Quentin K. Y. Huang, of Southwest China, was the convention speaker. Bishop Huang presented a stark picture of material and spiritual need among the 24,000,000 people in the 245,000 square miles of his district in southwest China. He stated that the world's greatest mission field, China, can be cultivated only with the aid of American help. Because of inadequate facilities, many opportunities to bring Christ to the Chinese are being lost. Speaking as a good will ambassador, he thanked the American people for the aid already given, which has helped immeasurably with the great task.

CONFERENCE ON THE MINISTRY

Philadelphia:—"The whole question of recruitment for the ministry goes back to the parish level," declared Bishop Hart at a meeting of twenty clergy from the dioceses of Pennsylvania, Harrisburg and Bethlehem, held January 27th, in Houston Hall, University of Pennsylvania. The twenty clergy were gathered under the auspices of The Church Society for College Work at a regional conference to consider recruitment for the ministry and the work of the Church Society.

"The present weakness, both in numbers and the quality of the men," continued Bishop Hart, "is due to the fact that we do not find in the parishes the most able young men being turned toward the leadership of the Church. Another weakness," said the Bishop, "is the laxity of vestries in recommending candidates. Instead of taking the recommendation of candidates as the most serious part of their duties as vestrymen, the average vestry will sign the recommendation for any man the rector suggests.

"The Episcopal Church is not producing its own leadership. Probably one-half of our leaders are coming from other Churches. That is one of the causes for the present split. Candidates coming from other Churches are likely to be extremists on one side or the other. We will maintain a far more unified leadership when we can produce the great majority of our clergy from our own ranks."

Miss Katharine Duffield, secretary for College Work in the third province, also addressed the group, stressing the importance of college work. "College work," she said, "is particularly important for the following reasons: (1) College students have a new sense of freedom and independence. College workers can help students to maintain religious values. (2) A great number and variety of new demands are placed on the student. By the time the student is ready to leave the university, the Church is apt not to be as important as it formerly was. (3) The majority of colleges are doing very little in the field of religion. What little is being done rarely deepens the religious life of the student. (4) Many persons who are on the college campus have little or no religion. Here is a real missionary field. (5) The extent to which the Church is at work on the college campus is obviously of the greatest importance to the Church of the future."

The discussion was led by the Rev. J. Clemens Kolb, chaplain of the University of Pennsylvania.

INTERESTING SERVICE ABOARD SHIP

Amherst, Mass.:—Canon Richard S. Zeisler, now residing here and until recently canon at the cathedral in Paris, France, tells an interesting story of his return from Cherbourg on January 5. It was one of the stormiest crossings on record, the ship arriving two and a half days late in New York. In the midst of storms and delays he was asked to conduct a service. He asked Rabbi Maurice Perzweig of Morristown, N. J., chairman of the political committee of the World Jewish Congress, to assist; and also the Archimandrite, Bishop Theophile Janesco, of the Rumanian Orthodox Churches in the United States. Many commented on the significance of three different religious groups worshipping together. "Many of the immigrants," writes Zeisler, "and there were many fleeing from Europe, said it could only happen in America."

EDITORIALS

The Pittsburgh Conference

ONE of the first functions of Mr. Charles P. Taft, as the first layman-president of the Federal Council of Churches, will be chairing the national conference on The Church and Economic Life next week. The conference itself is the first predominantly lay group that the Churches have called together to consider the full sweep of economic issues.

Mr. Taft's year at the head of the Federal Council could not begin in a more significant fashion. At this Pittsburgh conference he will lead some of the ablest laymen of the country into the study of our central problem as Christians—the question of Christian leadership in economic matters. The statements preparatory for the conference are most encouraging. Ignoring ultra-conservative red-herrings, they assume that economic issues are basically religious and that Christians have a responsibility to act in them by Christian principles. This one conference is not an isolated event, but part of a larger, long-range study of Christianity and the Economic Order which has been under way for a whole year. The Council is now facing laymen with the thorny questions of their Christian calling in our imperfect economic situation. This is real leadership.

What will be the outcome? We hope for the best, but the best cannot be any great degree of unanimity. Every major economic force of the nation will be represented (see page three), and these forces will probably clash. Clashes will be better than polite bowings and scrapings. Beyond the flying of fur, we can hope for a real meeting of Christian minds. Christians can sometimes transcend the secular interests they represent.

One danger shadows the conference. Although every effort has been made to make the delegation fairly representative of every part of our economy, in all likelihood business will have the most vocal representation. If past actions indicate future events, the highly staffed religious division of the National Association of Manufacturers will be on hand to steal the show. Every effort will be made to obscure what Gunnar Myrdal, the Swedish finance minister, called our "immense and unprecedented differences in income and wealth, which until recently have been left comparatively undisturbed by taxation." It will be near disastrous if the tone of the conference is set by those who represent the great concentrations of wealth.

Ash Wednesday will be the central day of the three day discussion. Some Episcopalian, even Mr. Taft, may remind the delegates that American Christians must approach the economic situation with penitence. We who are not at the conference can have no better object of intercession on Ash Wednesday. Pittsburgh 1947 may, or may not, go down in history as the great Christian awakening of our generation. Pray that it will.

"QUOTES"

THE natural man acts as though God had created the world in order that he might gratify his own little soul, and the tragedy of his life is that the more he gets the more he craves. Possession cannot keep pace with desire. He worships the creature which he fondly believes will satisfy him and he ends by being the slave of the creature which he worships. He avoids God for it seems to him as though God, if indeed there is a God, exists to rob him of his heart's desire. The selfish man is a spoiled child grown to man's estate.

—Bishop Irving P. Johnson.

The Beam In Our Own Eyes

THE Archbishop of Canterbury when here last fall stated repeatedly that "the task before the nations is to give the people a just share of the good things of life and at the same time maintain freedom. Not being an economist I do not know how it is to be done, but I am sure that your country and mine will not do it the Russian way."

The present government of his country is trying to do just that through nationalization of basic industries—a peaceful, orderly revolution, preserving freedom. Yet when the Churches are required to take lower-yielding government bonds in exchange for their large holdings in railroad securities, a delegation composed of leaders of all Churches, with the Archbishop as spokesman, vigorously protested.

Here is a glaring instance of Christian conviction yielding to economic self-interest. The various schools of Marxists, you may be sure, will welcome the incident as an example of one of their basic tenets; that when the chips are down men, nations and even Churches act from economic motives. Some will doubtless push the incident even further and contend that when Christians refuse to practice the unselfishness they preach, there is left but one practical way "to give people a just share of the good things" that the Archbishop advocates, and that is the Russian way.

Unsolicited Advice

THE bureau of census of the government has sent forms to all churches for a 1947 religious census. It is a simple document, asking few questions. But knowing the clergy we hazard the guess that less than twenty-five per cent of them will be returned, unless there are multitudinous follow-ups. As far as the Episcopal Church is concerned, time, labor and money would be saved if the bureau would send a half dozen clerks to 281 Fourth Avenue where they could get the figures they want from diocesan journals on file there. Headquarters of other Churches undoubtedly also have the figures handy. That's the only way the census bureau will get them unless a fine and imprisonment clause is inserted in the form. We send out forms, and we receive forms, so we know what happens to them.

Niemoeller Supported Hitler

by Diedrich Meyer-Kluegel

A Free German Protestant Pastor

AS IN other countries, there are different schools and parties within the German Protestant churches: Orthodox, Liberals, Modernists, Socialists, Pacifists, etc. Under the Nazis the last two were immediately banned and their leaders imprisoned, and two new parties came into existence —the "German Christians" and the "Confessional Church." The first wanted to Nazify also the doctrines and institutions of the Church, while the latter wanted to adhere to the old creeds and confessions, and was made up of the old and new Orthodox. Liberals, Modernists and those who had belonged to the Socialists and Pacifists hardly supported or joined the "Confessionals." The "Confessional Church" is therefore not a Church, but only a party within the German Protestant Churches, and—compared with the whole number of Christian people in Germany—a minority.

The "Confessional Church" is by no means an anti-Nazi movement; on the contrary, its members welcomed and supported the Nazi revolution wholeheartedly. They kept silent in the presence of all Nazi terror, and sanctioned and blessed the war not less than the "neutral" Lutherans of the so-called "intact Churches" under Marahrens, Wurm and Meiser, or even the "German Christians."

The so-called "Church struggle" was only for a "theological existence," i.e., a kind of ecclesiastical "reservation-park," a quiet corner where confessions and and rites could be practiced within the Third Reich. (See the Declaration of Barmen of 1934 and Karl Barth's Theological Existence Today, wherein Barth says that his concern is only theology and nothing but theology—"like the monks go on with their litanies"—and that Hitler must be given a chance because he had proved to be a real leader.) In November, 1933, the Protestant Churches, with the consent also of the "Confessionals," voluntarily offered the incorporation of all Church Youth Guilds into the Hitler Youth Organizations, even before the Nazi had asked the Churches to do so. In 1935 even Barth (then a professor at Bonn University) was prepared to take the oath of absolute loyalty and unconditional obedience to Hitler, after his "Confessional" friends (Niemoeller and others) had told him that there was no harm in doing so, as long as he made the mental reservation that loyalty to God comes first. It was not until 1939 that Barth—by then professor of Basle University, in his own country, Switzerland—began to discover what Nazism really meant.

Very many of the "Confessionals" were members of the Nazi Party, even of the S. A. There were swastikas on and in the "Confessional" churches and in the "Confessional" meetings. Not seldom there were S. A. men in uniform as chairmen of these meetings, and there was no "Confessional" meeting which did not express its absolute loyalty to Hitler and his regime through resolutions or telegrams sent to Hitler. That is why the "Confessionals" are so touchy with regard to de-Nazification.

In 1938 the "Confessional Church" adopted the "Aryan" clause. That is why there are "Confessional" refugee pastors in Britain; all of them are Lutherans and had to leave Germany because they or their wives are what is called "non-Aryans"; real "Confessional" refugees do not exist.

Also in the same year, 1938, the "Confessional" pastors and Church officials (with the exception of a very few courageous outsiders) took the oath of absolute loyalty and unconditional obedience to Hitler.

Editor's Note:—The Rev. Diedrich Meyer-Kluegel, the author of this article, is at present lecturing to German prisoners of war at Northfield, England, on behalf of the Control Office of Germany and Austria. This article is published with the permission of The Christian Register and appears in the February number of that publication. It is particularly timely since pastor Niemoeller is now lecturing in the United States under the auspices of the Federal Council of Churches and the World Council of Churches.

Niemoeller and other nationalist churchmen had made treaties with the Nazis for mutual support, the Nazis promising increased state subventions as well as the restoration of the inspection of the schools by the Churches. According to one of his admirers (Leo Stein, I was in Hell with Niemoeller) Niemoeller said, "We were all very favourably impressed with his (Hitler's) talk and with his apparent modesty, and he gave his solemn word of honor that he would do what he said."

Quarrels began when the Nazis later broke some of their pledges. But even then the "Confessionals" continued again and again to express their absolute loyalty to Nazism as such, as in their cautiously generalized and rather late "protest" of May, 1936, which is always quoted as the example of their "resistance," but in which criticism of anti-Christian ideas and concentration camps is mixed with repeated expressions of deepest reverence for the Fuhrer Hitler and of trust in him and his words.

The backbone of the "Confessional Church" is the German (and particularly the Prussian) officer clique; even men like Count Schwerin von Krosigk and Schacht attended the "Confessional" services, etc. Therefore pastors of the "Confessional Church" were among those conspirators who in July, 1944, tried to murder Hitler and to replace him by a military dictator, either Goering or one of the generals.

NIEMOELLER is the prototype of a Prussian officer and of a Lutheran nationalist. "The national idea was always foremost in his upbringing and by nature he had a leaning toward the Right. Love of his profession as an officer was a matter of course to him, and he was in his element in the war." (Niemoeller, From U-boat to Pulpit, written as late as 1934!—London, 1936—p. 9.) The purpose of this book was to show the Nazis what good patriots and militarists the "Confessionals" were. He glories in his deeds as a submarine officer and commander, even in downright war crimes like the prevention of the rescue of torpedoed sailors, which he goes so far as to call the "turning point" of his life because as he says, "it opened my eyes to the utter impossibility of a moral universe."

Niemoeller hated the German Republic and democracy. "He belonged with all his heart to the enemies of the Weimar Republic. . . . Their (i. e., the Nazis') program for a national revival was fundamentally his own, with its vehement denial of all that was meant by individualism, parliamentarism, pacifism, Marxism and Judaism." (Niemoeller and His Creed, by one of his close friends, Pastor Hildebrandt, with a foreword by the Bishop of Chichester; London, 1939.)

The general strike of the German workers in 1920, which was in support of the lawfully established and constitutional democratic government, was perfectly disgraceful to Niemoeller, and in the White Terror against these workers he commanded a Free Corps battalion. When the Reds, taken prisoner by the Free Corps, were not summarily shot at the White headquarters, "there was a tacit understanding amongst the troops that no further prisoners would be sent back" to them, and the prisoners were liquidated on the spot in one way or another. The White Terror was the beginning of the Brown Terror, and the workers were fighting to avert what then developed into Hitlerism.

While studying theology in Munster, Niemoeller was one of the organizers of the notorious Organisation Escherich (From U-boat to Pulpit, p. 187). This nationalist gangster and terror organization was one of the main nuclei of the S. A., S. S. and Gestapo.

Niemoeller became an ardent Nazi. He "welcomed January 30, 1933, from the bottom of his heart as the fulfillment of cherished hopes." (Niemoeller and his Creed, p. 33). When thousands of anti-Nazis and Jews were tortured and murdered in the concentration camps, Niemoeller thanked the Fuhrer from his pulpit: "We again feel ourselves created beings. Profession and social standing, race and nationality are today again being regarded by us as important facts." (First Commandment, pp. 58-59.) Long after Hitler had come to power, Niemoeller told his congregation (consisting mainly of members of the higher officer caste) of the "divine call in Hitler's spiritual revolution which is beginning to take place throughout the whole of our nation." He quarreled with Hitler and the Nazis only about matters of Church administration, telling him: "We are not driven by care for our Church, but much more by care for the Third Reich."

He was sent to prison and concentration camp because he broke the laws of the state which had forbidden the taking of unauthorized collections and the announcing from the pulpit of the names of people who had resigned from church membership. In the concentration camp he was never treated as an anti-Nazi but, backed by the officer caste and high Nazi officials, was always in a very privileged position. It is worthy of note that chief Nazis like Thyssen and Schacht were also at some time in concentration camps. Children of anti-Nazis were thrown into concentration camps like their fathers; Niemoeller's sons were officers in the Nazi forces.

From the concentration camp Niemoeller offered his services as a naval officer to the Nazis at the outbreak of war (see Karl Barth in the Christian Century, May 6, 1940). He himself admitted this fact, which has constantly been denied or doubted by the 'Confessional' propaganda. His excuses are: "If sons can die for their country, so can fathers. Germany could have my body, but not my soul. . . . A German in time of war does not ask if the war is right or wrong; he has to fight and die with his fellow-Germans." He admitted also that he had no political objections against Nazism, and he made it quite clear that he still rejects democracy and still believes in an authoritarian regime for Germany. Furthermore, he said that up to his liberation he had not heard anything about all of the Nazi terror, nor had his wife known anything about it (London News Chronicle and other papers, June 6, 1945, and following days). If he has now stopped talking about these things, it is only on the advice of his friends in Great Britain and Geneva.

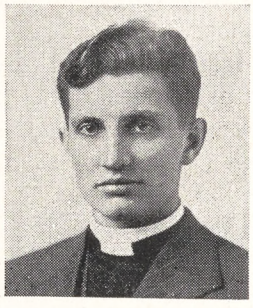
There were courageous pastors in Germany who fought Nazism as such: Liberals, Modernists, Free Christians like Pastor Walbaum and his friends, Socialists, Pacifists and some "Confessional" outsiders; among the latter was Pastor Schneider of Dickenschied, who was murdered in a concentration camp because he refused to give the Nazi salute. But these active anti-Nazi pastors and their friends were scattered over the whole of Germany, without any organization of course (except underground), and not seldom slain or tortured to death in concentration camps, unless they were lucky enough to escape out of Germany. The "Confessional Church" never became illegal, and that alone is sufficient proof that it never was an anti-Nazi movement.

The Roman Catholic Church in Germany is also an established Church, but as an international Church is more independent. Her attitude toward Nazism has been on the whole not very much different from that of the German Protestant Churches. Especially through contracting a Concordat with the Nazi rulers the Roman Catholic Church gave the Nazi regime a very great support. There have been some bishops, e. g., Cardinal Faulhaber, who were fairly outspoken against Nazism, and a great number of Roman Catholic priests and monks were thrown into prisons and concentration camps, mostly for alleged sexual crimes and offenses against the foreign currency regulations; but on the other hand there were also men like Bishop Berning of Osnabruck who was a Nazi Councillor of State (Staatsrat).

So far neither the Protestant Churches nor the Roman Catholic Church in Germany are being de-Nazified. It seems that bishops, theological professors and pastors are not even screened, and Pastor Walbaum's letter shows that the old reactionary gang in the German Churches is enjoying the absolute confidence of the Military Government and is using this powerful position for stamping out all "heresy."



It is of no use only to eradicate Hitlerism in Germany, for Hitlerism is only the final outcome of German nationalism and militarism. And as Frederick II and Bismarck were Hitler's political predecessors, so Luther laid the spiritual foundation on which Nazism could be built. Unless that is realized, the real discussion about establishing a better and more peaceful Germany has not started. It is therefore completely wrong to give the power in the German Protestant Churches to the "Confessionals" who are already usurping it by downright totalitarian methods. They will only restore that type of reactionary and nationalist churchianity which was one of the bud cells of Nazism.

Dramatic Arts and Religion

By

REV. WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD JR.

BEHIND the glittering facade of high-pressure promotion and big name stars, The Razor's Edge offers added proof that religion, to the Hollywood mind, is nothing but queer lights, disembodied music from heaven and an oozy feeling in the pit of the stomach. I must admit that as I watched the screen adaption of Somerset Maugham's best-seller I did get an oozy feeling, but I don't think it was a sign of religion. It was more likely just plain nausea.

The picture, which is receiving a terrific build-up throughout the country, might be likened to one of Bing Crosby's famous morality plays with "reverse English" applied. This time, virile Larry Darrall goes on a quest to get religion. After throwing over his girl (a wise move whether he was on a quest or not), working in a coal mine, playing chess on the Left Bank of the Seine, he finds peace, solus cum solo, on a papier-mache mountain top in the Himalayas. It seems the secret is to go sit on that particular mountain alone for a time and then, one morning, when the sun is coming up, one will be wafted out of this material (and by implication, naughty, evil, sinful) body—and, presto, be a good man. After 1947 years and countless church councils, this old Persian heresy certainly dies hard.

The proof of the goodness of Larry Darrall is shown by: a) an intense look of strain on his face henceforth which, for some reason, is called peace; b) his ability to practice faith healing on a friend who has headaches; c) his offer to marry a drunken harlot; d) his practice of keeping the latter individual on the wagon by twitching his right eyelid at her, and e) his feat of getting an invitation to the Riviera's best party for a silly, old snob by the simple technique of kissing the hostess' homely secretary. All of these feats, apparently, impress everyone involved because, in the words of the character called Somerset Maugham, "Man seeks for goodness and Larry Darrall has got it." Since the good Mr. Darrall is spreading honeyed sweetness during the thirties in France, one can only wonder why he confined his activities to the Riviera set who, as history unfortunately relates, liked the word Vichy, whether on the label of a bottle or used as a political adjective, better than they liked their fellowmen.

All in all, Larry Darrall, after his so-called conversion, acts like one of those persons who used to go to week-end house-parties in the Berkshires and discuss the state of their souls back in the days when I was attending prep school up that way. At that time, the members of the sixth form felt that this type of religion could only be described as "phony" and could hardly be equated with what we were being taught in sacred studies. I see no reason for changing my mind.

Religion in Education

by J. Clemens Kolb

Chaplain at University of Pennsylvania

LAST December I saw an article protesting the singing of Christmas carols in the schools of a certain state. Does the singing of Christmas carols interfere with a law prohibiting the teaching of religion in the public schools? This whole matter was just ridiculous enough to make the papers. Christmas is participated in by people who are not even nominally Christian. I received a Christmas card from a direct descendent of the prophet Mohammed. Nevertheless, this incident does bring to the forefront what is basically an extraordinarily complicated problem: The place of religion in education.

In this country, we have tried about every tenable position and some that are not so tenable. One position is that taken by some states, which say that religion has no part in education. I take it for granted that those states which say that religion has no part in education do not say so because they are headed by some league of the godless, nor is it because the majority of the voters are atheists. Not at all. They have simply sidetracked a difficult issue by ignoring it. Because there are so many people of so many differing faiths, and because what one taught might be quite unacceptable to another, they have decided that religion is a personal matter that must be dealt with in the home and in the church and kept out of the school.

There is another position, that of the schools and colleges before the Reformation, which made theology preeminent and no one could teach anything that was contrary to the teachings of the Church. The mistakes that the Church made under this misguided policy which changed education from a quest for truth into the propagandizing of a faith have cost us dearly. The separation between religion and education has been even sharper and longer lasting than the cleavage between Church and state. There are a few, I think, who would wish to return to the time when the Church could say what a man could teach or what he could not teach. But now, we are in little better case, for the secular arm is supreme and is telling the Church that it cannot teach anything in some places and gives it very little scope in others.

The position that I think is the most widely assumed in American education rather falls between two schools in that it gives religion a courtesy place in education. The convocation usually begins with an invocation and ends with a benediction. Clergy get far more than their share of honorary doctorates. Every university has courses in the philosophy of religion, the psychology of religion, the history of religion, comparative religion and sometimes primitive religion, and also a course on ethics—not necessarily Christian ethics or Judeo-Christian ethics. A student taking a course in ethics may end up with almost anybody's ethics. They have courses in these fields for about the same reason that they have courses in Horace and Euripides—not because they consider them necessary or because the courses are popular, but you have to provide these subjects to be a self-respecting institution.

But there is another reason, too, for our giving religion no more than a place of courtesy. That reason goes back to a basic tenet in the American philosophy of life—so often the parents' first interest is in this, that their children shall be so technically trained that they can go out into the world and make money. They would like to have their children God-fearing and ethical, but the average parent thinks these things come by chance; whereas he knows that the ability to make money doesn't come by chance; therefore, our universities have become so largely schools of technical training. The diploma must be first and foremost a guarantee of economic value so that the graduate shall be able to go out and pile up a sizeable bank account, have at least a fifteen thousand dollar house in the suburbs, a radio with record changer, short wave and FM, and a two-car garage. If that is compatible with an educated mind and a noble spirit, splendid; if not, get all the frills if you can, but first be sure your education gives you a chance for the upper income tax brackets.

BECAUSE parents so often put material success first in their objectives for their children, they put the technical training whereby material success may be achieved first in the curriculum of a university. A further complication arises from the fact that very few educators have a clear idea of what the end product of their education shall be. That, I think, is a great handicap. It is easy enough to criticize other systems of education, but up to our own time they had a clear picture of the kind of man they wanted to produce—whether it was the ancient Persians' idea of teaching the youth to shoot straight and tell the truth or the Nazi ideal of teaching its youth to shoot straight and not tell the truth. We don't know what we want our education to be and we can't make up our minds whether God is the first reality or the last myth, whether godliness has any more validity than ungodliness, whether spirituality is more than sentimentality. Education is showing unmistakable signs of being a split personality because faculties are split on the issue; and faculties are split on the issue because the nation is also divided on the question. Many faculty members really believe in God and they want to see godly men come out of educational institutions. Other faculty members do not believe in God and they don't believe that the spiritual world has any particular value in life.

If we want men to be religious, we must help them in their religion. If we want them to be ethical, we must help them in their ethics. We don't expect men to have sound bodies just because we believe in health in general. Many schools have compulsory physical education. We don't expect men to learn English just because we believe in good English. We require courses in the subject. Why not some compulsion about religion and ethics? Otherwise, we have done nothing to prevent our graduates from being men with sound technical training in sound bodies guided by unsound morals. Some universities may fear that they will run afoul of state laws and some private institutions, too, may wonder whether there will be objections to making courses in religion and ethics compulsory. That might be true if there were only one course offered. But why do it that way? I suggest a choice of courses in religion along the following lines:

1. A course in Judaism.
2. A course in the teachings of Thomas Aquinas.
3. A course in the writings and teachings of Luther and Calvin.
4. The chief contributions of religious leaders.
5. Religious orientation—Belief in God; The Relationship of Religion to Philosophy and Science; The Value of the Church; The Bible; Concepts of Immortality; Evolution of Present-Day Denominationalism.

The student could select any one of these five courses.

Secondly, I suggest the following courses in ethics:

1. Judeo-Christian Ethics.
2. Christian Social Ethics.
3. Philosophy—A general course in ethics or analysis of ethical theories.

Compulsory courses in religion and ethics are no guarantee that every graduate is going to be a man of delicate conscience and spiritual insight any more than compulsory physical education is a guarantee that every man will come out something of an athlete. But it would mean that the educational institution which took such a stand would say unequivocally to the world what education has been saying equivocally for a long time, that the godly man is superior to the ungodly man, and that spiritual values are important, and that the man of delicate conscience is a better product than a man who has no conscience.

Whether universities change radically in their attitude toward religion I do not know, but I do feel this very strongly, that they must make up their minds on their end product. I hope that some institutions will have the courage to make up their minds and to take their stand on one side or the other. If we had the courage to make up our minds on the kind of man we are trying to produce, the best curriculum whereby this end might be achieved would be well on the way to being solved.

Protest General Church Budget In Diocese of Texas

Reduction in Appropriation Is Averted After Criticism by Both Laity and Clergy

Edited by Sara Dill

Beaumont, Texas:—A move on the part of laymen and clergy of the diocese of Texas to reduce their diocesan appropriation to the general Church was narrowly averted at the recent diocesan council when an increased budget was accepted by a small majority. The meeting was held January 26-28.

O. F. Jones, layman of St. Mark's Church, Beaumont, introduced a motion to reduce the Texas quota from $35,500 to $28,000. The Rev. Aubrey Maxted, in speaking to the motion, pointed out the confusion that exists in expending Reconstruction and Advance Fund balances and suggested that Church officials did not know what to do with monies already on hand. Mr. Jones, speaking to his own motion, pointed out that many dioceses do not come up to their quota in giving to the general Church. He could not understand why Texas should give nearly $10,000 more than the assigned quota. The Rev. C. A. Higgins said that confusion in the department of foreign missions might have resulted from the illness and subsequent resignation of the head of the department. He suggested that money withdrawn from the general Church budget be used in Texas until the department of foreign missions could be completely reorganized.

The Rev. Robert R. Brown, member of the National Council, argued that missionaries in the foreign field are starving for lack of proper support and his speech closed the debate which defeated the motion of Mr. Jones. The increased appropriation was then voted by a majority.

A commission on race relations problems as they affect the Church was formed. Purpose of the commission will be to study ways and means by which white and Negro Church members can work more effectively together. Formation of the commission was announced after extra sessions of the annual meeting, made necessary by prolonged and heated debate on the question of racial segregation in Episcopal churches. A number of delegates challenged the vote for approval of the commission, but were overruled by Bishop Clinton S. Quin.

Bishop John E. Hines, coadjutor, compared the issue of whether Negro and white delegates should fraternize at diocesan banquets as well as business meetings to "a keg of dynamite." He said that "either it will explode and blow the Church to heaven or the nether regions, or the fuse will be pulled out by the calm, collective action of this council."

The meeting unanimously endorsed a resolution calling for a million dollar fund raising drive for construction of an Episcopal hospital unit in the proposed medical center in Houston. The hospital, to be known as St. Luke's, will cost about $2,500,000, but more than half of this amount has already been secured.

Also approved by the meeting was a motion to make women eligible as council delegates, final action to be deferred, however, until the 1948 meeting of the council.

Fellowship Service

New York:—A service of fellowship in observance of race relations Sunday and Lincoln's birthday was held at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine last Sunday afternoon. The Rev. John A. Mackay, president of Princeton Seminary preached on "God's New Order." Taking part in the service were the Rev. Toru Matsumoto of the Reformed Church, formerly a member of the commission on Japanese relocation, and the Rev. Tollie L. Caution, secretary of Negro work of the National Council. The service was sponsored, upon the invitation of Bishop Gilbert, by the Interracial Fellowship of Greater New York.

Pan-Protestantism

London (wireless to RNS):—An appeal to the Church of England and the Old Catholic Churches to "save the ecumenical movement from degenerating into a shallow pan-Protestantism" was voiced by Pierre Bertrand, Swiss Old Catholic professor of Geneva, Switzerland, who is visiting England. Bertrand's reference to the world Church cooperation movement sponsored by the World Council of Churches in Geneva was made at a meeting arranged by the Society of St. Willibrord held in the chapter house of Sheffield Cathedral. He spoke to an audience of Anglican clergymen and laymen and representatives of Sheffield University.

Declaring that inter-communion with the Anglican Church has saved his Swiss co-religionists from developing "a congregational or sectarian outlook," Bertrand expressed hope that association with Old Catholics will help Anglicans, in turn, "to restore contact with the continent broken by the Reformation."

Put Themselves In It

South Gate, Calif.:—The Rev. Kenneth E. Nelson took over the work at St. Margaret's Mission here in 1945. It had been founded in 1942 with services held in a women's club. But Vicar Nelson and many of his people worked on Saturdays, digging, pouring concrete, laying steel. On January 12 Bishop Stevens laid the corner stone of the new church. It will have a seating capacity of 200 and be 15th century Gothic. It is the first Episcopal Church in this city although there are now 28 other denominations represented here.

Dean Retires

Sewanee, Tenn.:—Dean Fleming James of the theological school of the University of the South retired last week. He has been the head of the seminary since 1940, and he leaves the largest number of students, forty-seven, in its history. Dean and Mrs. James will live in North Haven, Conn., and on March 1 Dean James will begin work as executive secretary of the Old Testament section of the Standard Bible revision committee.

Raise Large Sum

Gambier, O.: — Kenyon College reports that in 1946 more than $700,000 was raised in its three year campaign for $2,160,000. Leaders of the campaign from twenty-four metropolitan areas throughout the United States, are to meet in Cleveland tomorrow, February 14, for the first general meeting of leaders of the campaign.

Famous Organist

San Francisco:—Richard Purvis, internationally known conductor and composer, has been appointed organist and master of the choristers at Grace Cathedral here. Following his studies abroad under a scholarship of the Curtis Institute of Music, he became organist and choirmaster at St. James', Philadelphia; head of the music department at Episcopal Academy and organist with the Philadelphia Symphony. He entered the army in 1942, was captured in Luxemburg and was a prisoner for five months.

Michigan Convention

Detroit:—Twelve hundred people attended the opening service of the convention of the diocese of Michigan, held January 29-30. There were about 900 who received communion from the three alters of St. Paul's Cathedral, where the convention met.

Bishop Creighton stated that 2,383 were confirmed in 1946, the largest ever to be confirmed in one year in the history of the diocese; there are now 30 postulants for orders, likewise a diocesan record.

Bishop Richard Emrich, reporting on the missionary work of the diocese, stated that three new missions had been opened, two churches reopened and that ten of the aided churches had reduced their grants. He also outlined plans whereby money will be raised to enable some of the badly housed missions to build new churches.

The proposed amendment to the constitution to permit women to serve on vestries was defeated 60 to 48.

Honorary Degrees

Alexandria, Va.:—Virginia Seminary, at its mid-winter commencement conferred honorary doctorates upon the Rev. Jennings W. Hobson, for thirty years rector at Bluefield, W. Va.; the Rev. William H. Laird, rector of St. Paul's, Charlottesville, Va., former army chaplain and longtime worker in the field of college chaplaincy; the Rev. Charles H. Cadigan, rector at Bloomfield Hills, Michigan.

New Constitution

Grand Rapids:—Consideration of the proposed new constitution and canons, the work of a committee appointed in 1943, was the chief business of the convention of the diocese of Western Michigan, meeting here at St. Mark's Cathedral, January 28-29. Simplification, clarity, availability and usefulness were the prime considerations of the committee. The new constitution will become effective in 1948.

Bishop Whittemore, after ten years as bishop, reviewed the growth of work in the diocese and of opportunities ahead in a fast developing industrial area. He also stressed the need for education and expressed the hope that the National Council would give more vigorous leadership in this field.

Bishop Emrich of Michigan was the guest speaker at the evening service, emphasizing the need for missionary work in rural and vacation areas.

Student Centers

Birmingham, Ala.: — The largest convention in ten years, with 120 delegates, met here at All Saints', January 22-24. Bishop Carpenter called upon people of the Church "to put aside racial prejudices, selfish interest and false superstitions." He congratulated the diocese on its missionary giving in 1946, but called for more than $100,000 to erect student centers and chapels at various colleges and institutions, including a chapel at Tuskegee Institute. He also announced the purchase of 320 acres for a permanent Camp McDowell site, with plans for a campaign to finance it under way.

The newly created department of missions was given the task of studying religious work among the minority races, especially the Negroes. A proposal that women be given places on vestries, as well as representation at diocesan convention, was held over for further study.

The most heated discussion was over criticism that came from various delegates of the Federal Council of Churches. (WITNESS, Feb 6). Bishop Carpenter is to appoint a committee to study and report.

New Project

Detroit:—The diocese of Michigan announces that next summer, during the months of July and August, twenty young men will

How Much Longer Must They Wait?

For months pathetic appeals have been reaching us from refugee missionaries and Christians in Europe wanting to enter our work of carrying God's word to all the Russian people of Europe. Through the generous contribution of America's Christians we have the facilities for housing (the former Italian Embassy Building in Washington, D.C.), training and returning them to the field. We now need only the added funds. There are four such missionary families and 50 Russian refugee Christian young men to be brought over for training at our Bible Institute. We are praying to the Lord and waiting for help from God's people.

AN OPPORTUNITY & CHALLENGE

A faculty member of Columbia University visiting our headquarters said, "This is the greatest undertaking of this age—to give the Russian people the Gospel—the only means to save Russia and the World." The Bible, the Gospel of Jesus Christ which is the water of life, alone can hold back the eruption of the atomic volcano that threatens the whole world. Will you grasp the truth in these words and pray and give generously that we may rise to the challenge?

HELP MEET THIS NEED

The Russian Bible Society has this program:

1. Bring four missionary families to America ("I was an hungred and ye gave Me meat. . . . I was a stranger and ye took Me in"). $1,000.00 each.
2. Bring over to train 50 Russian refugee students for work among their people so Russia may be evangelized. $900.00 each.
3. To pay off mortgage on our property—lifting the burden that retards our progress. $50,000.00.
4. To complete plates for printing whole Russian Bible. $8,000.00.
5. Establish a Bible fund to publish a million Bibles and 5 million New Testaments in Russian which we have officially offered the Soviet Government to print in Moscow.

RESPOND NOW---DO NOT FAIL US

Pray that we may be able to fulfill this great program—that hearts may be opened to the opportunity of releasing these missionary families and young Christian Russians to the task of evangelization of their home lands. If your heart is opened send whatever you can, whether it be large or small and if you wish, tell us which of these five phases of our work you would like most to help.

A Representative from the Russian Bible Society will be glad to come to your Church and tell more of this work. Invitations may be sent to the address below.

work in the mission field in the northern part of the diocese. The diocese is undertaking this new project because of the fact that hundreds of thousands of people are now spending their vacations in this area. The young men will work in pairs, under the direction of the local clergy, and will both strengthen the existing churches and attempt to establish new ones. The work is made possible through a grant from the Bishop Herman Page Foundation, a sum of money raised last year by the people of the diocese in memory of the former bishop.

South Carolina

Charleston, S. C.:—Miss Margarite Miller, churchwoman of this city, has presented her family mansion to the diocese of South Carolina for a headquarters. Bishop Curruthers in announcing the gift said that it is the fulfillment of a dream of many leaders of the diocese over a period of years. The building will house the offices of the bishop, the secretary of the executive council, the treasurer, and the director of young people's work. It is expected also that the diocesan library and archives will be housed there, with meeting rooms for various diocesan organizations. It is hoped that there may be a bishop's chapel and one or two guest rooms for visiting clergy.

Sponsor Institute

Martinsville, Va.:—The Auxiliary of the diocese of Southwestern Virginia sponsored an institute here January 28th-30th, with representatives present from parishes throughout the diocese. The Rev. Robert A. Magill of Lynchburg, reported on his trip to China and the Philippines as a member of the National Council's Commission; Mrs. Theodore O. Wedel of Washington, gave addresses on social and race questions; the Rev. Carleton Barnwell of Lynchburg spoke on the doctrine of the Holy Spirit.

New Buildings

Ann Arbor, Mich.:—The student foundation at the University of Michigan has acquired two buildings. One is a large mansion beside St. Andrew's Church which will become the center for Episcopal students and the other is a home for Chaplain John H. Burt.

Stresses Unity

New York:—Under the leadership of its new Presiding Bishop, Henry Knox Sherrill, the Church will place far greater emphasis on cooperation with other communions than it has in the past. This was the general reaction among Church leaders here who heard Bishop Sherrill make his first public address in New York since his installation in Washington on Jan. 14.

Speaking at the third annual dinner of the Protestant Council of the City of New York, Bishop Sherrill expressed his personal conviction that only through united action can Christian forces make an effective impact on the world, the nation, or the community.

sporadic, intermittent, individualistic action or by Churches working as separate and distinct units, but only by a well planned and effective strategy backed by the pressure of Christian consciences and purposes in all of the Churches."

"Church cooperation now," he added, "will make more likely in the future the building of the one Church of Christ for which we pray. We shall either hang together or hang separately."

Mrs. Harper Sibley, Episcopalian of Rochester, N. Y., president of the United Council of Church Women, emphasized the "new role" women are playing in church life. Describing recent projects of the Council designed to combat racial segregation within the Church, Mrs. Sibley said that since the women's organization operated under no "ecclesiastical limitations" and carried none of the "obsolete baggage" burdening many Church bodies, it could therefore, "move in where others feared to tread."

Record Breaking

Buffalo, N. Y.:—One of the largest confirmation classes in the history of the diocese will be presented to Bishop Davis by the Rev. Edgar L. Tiffany of the Transfiguration on February 23. There will be sixty-one candidates, forty of whom are adults.

Russian Orthodox

New York: — Reconciliation between the Russian Orthodox Church in America and the Patriarchal Church in the Soviet Union is imminent, according to reports.

In a cablegram received by the Metropolitan Council of the American Church, Patriarch Alexei of Moscow announced he has raised the decree of suspension imposed upon the Church more than ten years ago and has agreed in principle to demands for complete autonomy for the Russian Church in America.

These demands were made by a sobor or general council of the American Church which was held in Cleveland, Ohio last November, with more than 300 lay and clerical delegates from 275 parishes in attendance. The Council adopted a resolution by a vote of 187 to 61, requesting Patriarch Alexei "to continue the Russian Orthodox Church in America in his fold as its spiritual head," provided the American Church retains "full administrative autonomy."

Penalties Proposed

Sydney, Australia (wireless to RNS):—A recommendation that only members who attend services regularly be permitted to have Church marriages is reported being studied by Church of England authorities in Brisbane. Another proposal being examined is that members who fail to attend services be deprived of church baptisms and funerals. The recommendations are contained in a report of a sub-committee appointed to study ways and means of combatting "laxity" among church members.

Japanese Church

New York:—The House of Bishops of the Nippon Seikokwai (Holy Catholic Church in Japan) meeting in special convocation January 17, elected the Bishop of South Tokyo, the Rt. Rev. Todomu Sugai, Presiding Bishop, in succession to the late Bishop Paul Shinji Sasaki, who died last December. This information has just reached Church headquarters here.

The new head of the Church is 64 years old, a graduate of the former Holy Trinity College, Tokyo, forerunner of the present Central Theological College. From 1908 through 1911 he attended Seabury-Western at Evanston, Illinois. He was ordained in 1911 at St. Bartholomew's, Chicago, by the late Bishop Charles Anderson, and was advanced to the priesthood in 1913, in All Saints' Church, Tokyo, by the late Bishop John McKim.

Ministers Condemn Talmadge

Atlanta (RNS):—Thirty-six ministers from Atlanta's Methodist churches and the Gainesville (Ga.) ministerial association have condemned "the seizure of the governor's office" by Herman Talmadge.

The ministerial association urged the courts to settle the controversy and expressed its "utter condemnation of the obvious disregard of the will of the people in the seizing of the Governor's office and the shameful manner of the proceedings."

The Gainesville group declared that the "whole world still condemns the clergy of Germany for its unwillingness to challenge in its infancy the dictatorship which later ruined that nation. We consider that this action violates our basic guarantees of democracy."

The statement of the Methodist ministers urged all Georgians to join in protest against the actions of the Talmadge forces and declared: "We, the undersigned Methodist ministers, view with great alarm the present situation in Georgia concerning the Governorship. It appears to us that the seizure of the Governor's office and of the Governor's mansion by troops is dictatorship of the worst order. It is a setting-aside of Democratic processes, and, in our opinion, is sure to create general disrespect for law and order. Our very homes are insecure when a small group of men can flagrantly disregard the fundamental rights of the people as a whole, and by force place a man in office and in the mansion of the Governor. We urge all freedom-loving Georgians to rise up quickly in protest against such un-American tactics. Georgia will be in grave danger until this awful wrong has been set aside and law once more reigns."

Seminaries in Russia

Moscow (by wireless to RNS):—Soviet authorities have given permission for the creation of new Baptist seminaries in Russia and for the reopening of a previously-established theological school. Jacob Zhidkov, chairman of the Baptist and Evangelical Union in the U.S.S.R., made this announcement during an interview here when he was asked whether Russian Baptists have any seminaries or Sunday schools. He said Sunday schools do not exist in the Soviet Union as the constitution does not permit religious instruction to children except in their homes.

Zhidkov, a red-bearded energetic man of sixty-two, disclosed that five services are being held weekly in the church adjoining his office here. The church was recently redecorated and galleries were added to provide accommodation for 1,500 persons. Originally a Lutheran church, the building was taken over by the Baptists in 1923. It claims to have the best organ in Moscow.

The Baptist and Evangelical Union, Zhidkov said, comprises 150,000 Baptists and an equal number of Evangelicals, but as many as four million persons regularly attend services in 3,000 churches scattered throughout the country. About 70 per cent of Baptist and Evangelical pastors in Russia, Zhidkov declared, also work in other occupations, mainly in factories and offices, and on collective farms.

Questioned regarding facilities for Bible printing in Russia, Zhidkov replied: "Since the revolution, there have been two Bible printings—in 1926, when 25,000 copies were printed; and in 1927, when 10,000 were printed. In each case the printings were done on presses owned by the state." The Baptist leader added that in 1940 the Union received large numbers of Russian-language Bibles from missionary societies in London, New York, and Chicago, which were sent via the Baltic republics.

"At present," Zhidkov declared, "there is a paper shortage, but we have been given official authority to print Bibles and hope to do so soon. At present, we are publishing a magazine called Brotherly Herald, which appears six times yearly and is distributed to all our communities as well as to Baptist friends abroad."

Although the film is a travesty on religion, it is a clever, and therefore, a vicious one. It has been well directed by Edmund Goulding and has been graced with such adequate performers as Tyrone Power, Gene Tierney, Anne Baxter, Clifton Webb and Herbert Marshall. In the lead role, Tyrone Power is much too intense and smug. Probably that's the fault of the character he is called upon to play. Clifton Webb is superb as the precise snob and Anne Baxter does wonders with the role of the alcoholic prostitute, although, naturally, false Hollywood censorship tells us that she is no such thing. Worthy of particular commendation is an unknown actor who flits into the picture for too brief a moment as an unfrocked priest who is being chased down the span of years by the Hound of Heaven. Alone, and for that single moment, he brings something like real artistic power to the film.

As has been said, the picture is being pushed hard. Most movie-going Church members will see it. Perhaps it should be made compulsory homework for all the clergy so that they can counter-act its "erroneous and strange" doctrines with a good powerful sermon or two.

REV. WILLIAM K. RUSSELL
Rector of St. Stephen's, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

The Rev. Mr. Spofford and Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt are to be commended for their criticism of the Federal Council of Churches in bringing Martin Niemoller to this country. The Council has made a tragic mistake in this action; and it is doubtful whether those responsible can say that they were in ignorance of Niemoller's thought and outlook. The leaders of the Federal Council have been on too many junkets to Europe not to have known. There are pastors in Germany who have an all-out record of witness against Nazism; men who have been valiants for Christ's truth right through the years. Why did not the Federal Council secure one of them? Why did they bring the man who opposed the Weimar Republic, who gave very active support to most of Hitler's program, who is reported to have said that "Nazism is an instrument approved by God," who in 1939 volunteered to serve in the German navy. His explanations for his record do not ring true, and his reported speeches in this country do not give the impression that he is a repentent Nazi. If Niemoller is typical of the leadership of the new Germany, we want none of him or it. We have much to fear, if he is being recognized, and important bodies like our Federal Council of Churches are encouraging him and his ilk.

I write as one who believes in the Federal Council of Churches and has supported it. It has up to now done a tremendous and heroic job for Protestant Christianity. We know that Mr. Spofford has encouraged our Church's participation in Federal Council and has strongly supported its leadership. It must have been with great hurt that Mr. Spofford felt he must lodge his protest.

We are entitled to know the full story back of the action of the Federal Council in bringing Niemoller to America. Have the officers allowed themselves to be drawn in as propagandists for the Dulles' line,—or worse. Were they simply seeking to bring to these shores a big-name German, regardless of the man's background and mentality. In either case they are to be strongly faulted. Niemoller, as Cecil Brown said this week, is a "dangerous and unwanted salesman."

MISS ELIZABETH P. FRAZIER
Churchwoman of Philadelphia

Your editorial of January 30th, "Dulles Should Resign," is excellent and I am very thankful to see it. Since Mr. Dulles has become so important in the making of our foreign policy, which is a far cry from the basic principals laid down by the Commission on a Just and Durable Peace, I have been wondering how he could continue his position in the Federal Council. One begins to think he uses this position to pull Church people along to what amounts to an imperialist foreign policy all the while thinking it stems from the early statements of the Commission on a Just and Durable Peace. The Federal Council of Churches certainly should demand his resignation. Thanks for the editorial.

THE REV. S. NORMAN MCCAIN
Rector at Copenhagen, New York

Last Sunday I did as the Presiding Bishop requested and made an appeal for the seminaries. At the same time I wondered if the commission of theological education felt any responsibility in trying to eliminate race prejudice from the schools on whose behalf this appeal for funds was made. I feel that if New York City can say that it will not give funds to institutions that discriminate that this commission should be able to refuse to appeal for funds for those schools in which there is discrimination. As individuals and groups realize that the responsibility rests with them for taking a stand on this issue then improvement may be hoped for. The Church should, and I am sure will, give leadership in meeting this question.

MRS. ROBERT K. JONES
Churchwoman of Burnham, Pa.

The editorial (WITNESS, Jan. 30) on Mr. Dulles and his recent announcements was splendid. It takes solid headwork these days to keep one's balance in the midst of conflicting ideologies. The KKK seems to be rearing its ugly head in Pennsylvania from all accounts. I am waiting to see what the Pennsylvania Council of Churches will have to say about it, if anything. It seems to be a logical spot for a strong statement.

REV. F. RICKSFORD MEYERS
Rector of St. Matthew's, Detroit

It is interesting to place alongside the article by George Dugan (WITNESS, January 16), "Class distinction in the Church must be eliminated," the statement by Dr. Bentley, "I should want segregation if I were a Negro." Did Dr. Bentley speak authoritatively for the Episcopal Church? He could well become a bedfellow with Bilbo. But on the point which he raised, a recent author wrote, "No white person even if he wants to, can understand what it means to be a Negro living in the United States any more than a noncombatant can understand what it means to be in action." Loose talk by people, small of caliber and Christian stature does the cause of Christ incalculable harm.

Middle Ground

An Ohio Pastor recently inquired "Would you fight as hard against Rightist Reactionarism as you have fought against Leftist Radicalism?" The answer is an emphatic YES.

We can imagine exactly that reversal, but it is still a long way off. Freedom's present peril is leftist radicalism, not reactionarism, and it is with NOW we must first deal.

The nation has been pushed so far left of center that concerted effort will be required for a long time, to get back to Middle Ground —the ground where capital F Freedom takes root—the ground to which Christian Leaders are dedicated.

Communists, Redists, Fascists, Socialists and advocates of other forms of pagan stateism, push leftward frantically. Some few who lack perspective may be hoping for a return of laissez-faire, the roaring twenties, control by Wall Street or some other anti-social dreamchild. But this Crusade champions the Middle Ground where rights and responsibilities go hand in hand—including the rights and responsibilities of Freedom.

If you share our convictions and concerns about root Freedom, let us send you our monthly Bulletin and tracts for parish distribution in your church. Just sign below and you will hear from us promptly.

"Is the ministry 'from above' or 'from below'? Is it a gift to the Church from her Founder and Saviour, or an expedient evolved by the Church to meet the exigencies of her daily life?

Those whose experience of God and His goodness has been vouchsafed to them within an episcopal communion must necessarily desire to understand for themselves, and to set out for the consideration of others, both of the same communion and of other traditions, how far episcopacy has been a primary determinant of that which they have received. They are bound to ask themselves quite frankly whether after all episcopacy is essential to the continuous integrity of the Gospel of Christ throughout the ages; and if so, in what respects it is essential; what elements in the traditional forms in which it has appeared must be retained at all costs, and what elements can be or ought to be discarded for the removal of difficulties and the right solution of problems."

The National Council Approves Budget for This Year

An Executive Committee Appointed to Make Decisions in Interim of Council Meetings

By W. B. Spofford

New York:—The story of the meeting of the National Council for February is always budget, and so it was for the meeting held here February 11-13. General Convention adopted a budget for 1947 which called for $3,386,887. After various adjustments such as "cost of living" bonuses to missionaries; new appointments and deducting estimated lapsed balances, etc., the amount needed to finance the budget was $3,321,918. Estimated income from all sources: payments from dioceses, income from investment, United Thank Offering, came to $3,167,307. Therefore $154,611 had to be cut—a remarkably small sum when compared with other years.

It is to be kept in mind, when considering the matter, that the 1937 budget was far in excess of the 1946 budget in most items. Rural work for example in the division of domestic missions, had $12,250 last year, and was down for $77,150 in this year's budget. This latter sum was cut $16,500. Negro work of the same division was $31,919 in 1946 and $36,490 this year. It was cut $5,000 so that actually it will operate on practically the same basis as before. The division of promotion operated on a budget of $150,240 last year. The 1947 budget called for $211,108 and was cut $25,000 so that actually there is an increase in the expenditures of the division over last year of $35,868. Administrative expense in 1946 was $67,501. This year's budget called for $90,357 and was cut $4,457.

Well, these illustrations will give you the idea. It can be summed up by saying that cuts were made of a cross-the-board character, including the foreign field, the domestic field, departments, and administration, but with everyone having more money appropriated for 1947 than they had last year.

There was drama in the closing hours of the Council meeting. A cable was received from Bishop Gilman of China saying that conditions there are so chaotic at the moment that no more missionaries should be sent until affairs are more settled. A long distance phone call was therefore immediately put through to San Francisco and three missionaries, who were to sail the very next day with their families, were told not to leave. They were the Rev. Gilbert Baker, Dr. Logan Roots, and the Rev. Alfred Starratt. It was pointed out that the China situation could very easily throw the whole budget out of balance unless the situation is watched carefully, since inflation is so wild now that large extra sums have to be sent to keep missionaries now there functioning.

Confidence was expressed that the million dollars being sought for World Relief would be raised. Another financial note was that the book value of trust funds increased $456,043 in 1946, now total $14,157,892, and yielded 3.69% in 1946 against 3.39% in 1945.

Treasurer Louis J. Hunter of the American Church Institute for Negroes presented to the Council a program for building and other needs of the various institutions it directs. Close to $400,000 was voted from the Reconstruction and Advance Fund toward this program. However, the Bishop Payne Divinity School was temporarily excluded until the trustees of the school decide whether it is to continue at Petersburg, or move to Raleigh, as some are advocating. The discussion, held in executive session, we learned, brought forth some lively remarks on the subject of segregation, with Mrs. Harper Sibley of Rochester, N. Y., contending that there should be no seminary for Negroes but that candidates for the ministry should be admitted to all seminaries, regardless of race. Nevertheless the sum of $192,000 was set aside from the R. and A. Fund for the Seminary for Negroes which apparently will be turned over to the trustees of the institution as soon as it is decided where the school is to be. Incidentally, there was a delegation of southern bishops present to urge that these large appropriations be made: Bishops Brown of Southern Virginia; Barnwell of Georgia; Gravatt of Upper South Carolina; Penick of North Carolina; Dandridge of Tennessee; Jackson of Louisiana, and Gray of Mississippi. They all pleaded particularly for the Bishop Payne Divinity School, emphasizing the need of the seminary if work among Negroes of the South is to grow.

A new department of Christian education was organized, with the following divisions: children, youth, adult. Bishop Angus Dun is chairman of the department, and heads the adult division with Bishop Haines of Idaho heading the children's division and Bishop Carpenter of Alabama the youth.

No nominations were made for the important posts of director of the overseas division or religious education, Bishop Sherrill stating that time was needed to find the right men.

The new Presiding Bishop also asked, at the opening session, for an executive committee. He declared that the officers at 281, generally referred to as the Cabinet (heads of divisions), should not be called upon to make decisions which were really the responsibility of the National Council. He therefore proposed, and got, an executive committee which will meet from time to time between the sessions of the whole Council, which meets but three times a year, with a particularly long gap from April to October. Appointed as this committee were the Presiding Bishop, Treasurer L. B. Franklin, Mrs. John E. Hill of Philadelphia, the Rev. Horace W. B. Donegan of New York, E. T. Look of Brookside, N. J., Bishop McKinstry of Delaware and J. A. Dykman of Brooklyn.

The executive board of the Auxiliary which met February 7-10, came out strongly in support of the United Nations as the best hope for peace and urged its 105 diocesan branches to take similar action and to forward their resolutions to President Truman, the Secretary of State, and the U. S. representatives on the security council and general assembly. The extension of reciprocal trade agreements was also urged; likewise the admission of greater numbers of displaced or stateless persons than is provided by the present quota. All of which again demonstrates that the women of the Church are ahead of the men when it comes to dealing with vital issues.

BISHOP SCARLETT ON NEW CANON

St. Louis: — The new marriage canon permits the bishop of a diocese to authorize the second marriages of divorced persons with "the freedom of a Christian man's conscience," Bishop Scarlett of Missouri told the diocesan convention at Christ Church Cathedral, February 4. The Bishop said that the canon, which he described as a compromise between those who favored a liberal view and those who believed only in second marriages after annulment, permitted second marriages where the first marriage has broken down because of defects of personality arising after as well as before the marriage, "which make competent and continuing consent to a Christian marriage impossible."

"It is my conviction," he said, "that if the bishops of the Church interpret this canon conservatively we shall gradually build up a body of precedents on which permission to remarry may be granted. A questionnaire is now being prepared in this diocese which will be printed and given to the clergy to be filled out by the applicant for permission to marry. I hope that the clergy will carefully sift these cases so that none will be presented to the ecclesiastical authority for judgment unless the clergyman himself is fully convinced that a case comes within a conservative interpretation of the canon."

Bishop Scarlett announced that a panel of laymen and laywomen would be set up, including lawyers, two of whom together with the minister of the applicant would make a committee of three to recommend action to the bishop, who after consultation with the chancellor of the diocese would make the final decision.

Referring to the question of Church unity, Bishop Scarlett said, "Many of us were profoundly disappointed that the proposals looking toward ultimate organic union with the Presbyterian Church met with a set-back at the last General Convention. We need to remember that we have lost a battle but not the war. The movement toward Christian unity is in full swing. I believe it is as inevitable as the tide. I do not believe this movement can be stopped, not even by the Protestant Episcopal Church."

He announced that he would recommend the appointment of a diocesan committee to prepare a study course on the problems of unity for diocesan-wide use. "In the meantime we would ask our Presbyterian brethren to be patient with us, to recognize the disunity within the Episcopal Church itself which must in some measure at least be bridged before we are fit to ask others to unite with us."

The Rev. George A. Wieland, director of the home department of the National Council warned the convention that "America today is a Christian nation in name only. It is only a question of time before illiteracy will be banished from the American scene. But spiritual illiteracy and spiritual blindness are on the increase among us. Men and women of mature age and with excellent mental equipment are still in the kindergarten of religious culture. We are in danger of becoming a nation of physical and mental giants with the spiritual growth of a four-year old child."

Wieland pointed to the clergy shortage in the Church declaring, "The shortage of ordained men hits hardest where the need is greatest—in the smaller and weaker parishes and dioceses. Filling a vacancy here simply means creating a vacancy there. Fortunately our seminaries have more men studying for Holy Orders than ever before in our history."

Seated in the center is Bishop Emrich whose article is featured this week. The occasion is a recent conference on the Church and Labor. At the left of the Bishop is James Wishart, a leader of the CIO and at his right, Anthony Tashnick of the A. F. of L. Standing, left to right: the Rev. William B. Sperry, Dean Kirk B. O'Ferrall, the Rev. G. Paul Musselman, the Rev. Malcolm Dade and the Rev. James G. Widdifield, all of the Detroit area of the diocese of Michigan

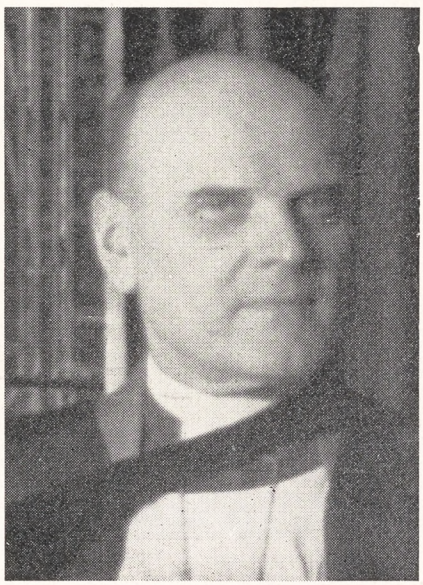
Norman B. Nash Is Consecrated To Lead Massachusetts

Coadjutor Bishop Will Become the Leader Of the Big Diocese on the First of June

By W. B. Spofford

Boston: — Norman Burdett Nash, rector of St. Paul's School, was consecrated Bishop Coadjutor of Massachusetts at Trinity Church here on February 14. The church, one of the largest in the country, was jammed with people who witnessed an impressive and dignified service, with a minimum of pomp and frills in line with the best traditions of the diocese.

Bishop Nash was consecrated by Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill whom he will succeed as Bishop of Massachusetts on June first. The co-consecrators were Bishop John T. Dallas of New Hampshire and Bishop W. Appleton Lawrence of Western Massachusetts, whose father, Bishop William Lawrence, was a distinguished Bishop of the Diocese. The presenting bishops were Bishop Raymond Heron, suffragan bishop of the diocese, and Bishop Malcolm E. Peabody of Central New York, nurtured in the diocese of Massachusetts where his famous father, the Rev. Endicott Peabody, was the headmaster of Groton.



The attending presbyters were Dean Charles L. Taylor of the Episcopal Theological School, where Bishop Nash taught before going to St. Paul's School, and the Rev. Whitney Hale, rector of the Advent, —a nice gesture since the Advent is definitely an Anglo-Catholic parish in a diocese that has few of them.

The litany was led by Bishop Lewis B. Whittemore of Western Michigan. The epistle was read by Bishop Herman R. Page of Northern Michigan, associated with Bishop Nash at the Cambridge Seminary, and the gospel was read by Bishop Oliver J. Hart of Pennsylvania, who was the rector of Trinity, Boston, before his consecration.

Another bishop taking part in the service was Bishop Henry W. Hobson of Southern Ohio, likewise closely identified with the traditions of Massachusetts, and an intimate friend of both Bishop Sherrill and Bishop Nash.

The evidences of election, signed by the president and secretary of the standing committee of the diocese, and the canonical testimonial, signed by members of the convention that elected Bishop Nash, were presented by Mr. F. Winchester Denio. The evidences of ordination were presented by the Rev. Edgar W. Anderson, rector of the Good Shepherd, Watertown, and the consent of standing committees were presented by the Rev. Charles C. Wilson, rector of St. Stephen's, Cohasset.

The master of ceremonies, who did a most effective job, was the Rev. Henry McF. Ogilby, the rector of the Church of Our Saviour, Brookline.

Bishop John Dallas of New Hampshire was a co-consecrator of Bishop Nash and was one of the speakers at the luncheon that followed the service

The sermon, preached by Bishop Angus Dun of Washington, long associated with Bishop Nash on the faculty of the Episcopal Theological School, is printed in full in this number.

The large and attractive family that is added to the diocese of Massachusetts as a result of the consecration is pictured on the cover. The back row, left to right: Marianne Nash, who is a senior at Madeira School, Greenway, Va.; Cynthia Nash, who has recently returned from Germany where she served with UNRRA for a year and a half; Bessie Fair, a graduate student at Boston University; Mrs. and Dr. Henry H. Nash, the latter an interne in a Boston hospital. Seated are the newly consecrated Bishop Coadjutor and Mrs. Nash, the latter holding Norman Hughes Nash, son of Dr. and Mrs. H. H. Nash. In the front row are Mrs. Mary Fair Gosnell, a physiotherapist in Oklahoma City, and Isabel Fair, recently released from the WAC. The three Fair girls are the daughters of the late Rev. Harold I. Fair and Mrs. Fair, who was the sister of Bishop Nash. Both Mr. and Mrs. Fair died in the early twenties and their three daughters, then babies, became members of the Nash household.

The dog (he is there if you look closely) belongs to the bishop's wife. His name is Thor and when he gets ready for bed he goes out the front door, runs around to the back door, barks for a biscuit which he gets, then curls up for a night of sleep. Discipline and training is a Nash characteristic.

A large delegation from New Hampshire attended the service, including a delegation of masters, trustees and boys of St. Paul's School. Besides the ten bishops taking part in the service, eleven other bishops attended and were in the procession, with several hundred priests.

The service was followed by a luncheon at a hotel near Trinity Church, with addresses by Bishop Dallas, Suffragan Bishop Heron and Bishop Nash.

TO SEEK FACTS ON USSR

New York:—Bishop Charles K. Gilbert of New York is a member of an interfaith committee for fact finding on the Soviet Union. An adjunct of the American Russian Institute, the committee is headed by the Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, Methodist minister, who visited Russia last summer. The aim of the committee is to bring about better understanding between the two countries. Also on the committee is John R. Mott, winner of the 1946 Nobel Peace Award.

CHARGES ANSWERED BY BOYD

Birmingham, Ala.: — The Rev. Beverley Boyd, WITNESS editor and head of the department of social relations of the Federal Council of Churches, addressed congregations of several churches here last week to answer charges that the Council is "communistic." He said that interest in industry was nothing new to the Council. "The Church's primary concern is its people," he declared. "There are Christian laymen in unions and as industrial leaders. Therefore it should be possible, without taking sides, to bring about better relations through Christian principles."

The diocese of Alabama, at its diocesan convention this year, attacked the Council through resolutions and appointed a committee to study its position on social and economic questions.

CHURCH WOMEN MAKE PROTEST

Indianapolis, Ind. (RNS): — Refusal of hotels here to house Negroes may cause the national board of the United Council of Church Women to go elsewhere for their national convention. Mrs. James H. Smiley, local president, said the organization is "embarrassed and humiliated." She made various protests but stated that "in spite of the fact that the United Council represents Christian Protestant women of the United States from east to west and from north to south, not one hotel in Indianapolis, as far as we could discover, would receive our guests for the reason that some of them do not have white skins."

OPPOSE A WAR WITH USSR

Lynchburg, Va.:—Resolutions asking "spiritual rearmament" against war with the Soviet Union and opposing federal appropriations for parochial schools were adopted unanimously at the annual meeting of the Virginia Council of Churches, meeting here. The resolution on Russia urged church people to become fully informed about that country; to guard carefully against promoting war by loose talk and to demonstrate by positive practice of Christian principles and extension of democratic freedoms the superiority of the American form of government.

The Council asked the Un-American Activities Committee of Congress to be as assiduous in its investigation of the Ku Klux Klan and the Columbians as it has been in pursuing alleged communists. Both the Klan and the Columbians were attacked as being fascist. Other resolutions announced opposition to any organization persecuting any minority group in the country.

Historic Trinity Church, Boston, where Norman Burdett Nash was consecrated Bishop Coadjutor of Massachusetts on February 14. He will become Diocesan Bishop on June 1, succeeding Bishop Henry Knox Sherrill, the Presiding Bishop

BISHOP KEELER VISITS HONOLULU

Honolulu:—Bishop Stephen Keeler of Minnesota was a guest at the convention of the district meeting here February 4th. He also represented the Presiding Bishop at a conference of Pacific Bishops, that included Bishop Kennedy; Bishop Leonard S. Kempthorne of Polynesia and Bishop Philip N. W. Strong of New Guinea.

Bishop Keeler, in several addresses, praised the work being done in the district under the leadership of Bishop Kennedy, and urged the district to become a diocese "and in that way make it impossible for another diocese to take away your bishop."

Bishop Kempthorne, coming from Polynesia, which is under the jurisdiction of the Anglican Church in New Zealand, gave an insight into the missionary problems of that scattered diocese. If such names as Tahiti, Tonga, Suva, Fiji, are mystifying to us who have constant contact with travellers from that region, what must they be to mainland churchmen? It requires an absence of six weeks when members of his staff attend convocations; hence such meetings are held only once in three years. The missionary challenge is complicated by the presence of native Indians, brought there as laborers, and full of inherited Hindu and Mohammedan thought and practices.

GEORGIA REPORTS PROGRESS

Savannah, Ga.: — A budget of $41,000 for this year was approved at a meeting of the executive committee of the diocese, meeting here January 29th. There were encouraging reports from missions, with several of them discontinuing or reducing their grants from the diocese. Thus the Rev. Archer Torrey, rector of St. Andrew's, Darien, stated that the parish was now able to pay its own way and requested that the $600 from the diocese be discontinued. The Rev. Irwin Hulbert Jr., in charge of St. Paul's, Jesup, also asked that $400 less be sent by the diocese to the support of the work.

EDITORIALS

Bishop of Massachusetts

THE charge delivered by one of our Contributing Editors, Bishop Angus Dun, at the consecration of his friend and ours, Norman B. Nash, we proudly make our own:

My Brother: This is for many of us a rarely happy day. I can speak personally, for we are among friends, and you and I are old friends and fellow laborers under the yoke which Christ has laid upon us. We rejoice that you bring so many gifts to this new service: your knowledge of that gospel under which the Church forever stands; your courageous and informed concern for greater justice in our economic and political life; your skill as a teacher; your experience in striving to recover for the Church its part in the education of the younger sons of God.

In the years that you and I worked side by side in that greatly loved Seminary in Cambridge, I came to know your father. I never knew him in the flesh, but I came to know him in the spirit. I looked often on his homely, lovely face in that portrait on the refectory wall. His prayers came to be my prayers. So for you, Norman, son of Henry, a man in whom is the spirit, my prayers today are his prayers:

That you may be blessed with the vision of God's being and beauty, and in the strength of it may work without haste and without rest.

That you may be ill-content with any peace save that of our Saviour who won his peace after he had made the world's ills his own.

That you may keep yourself close to the lives of the great body of men, and pass through things common into the things eternal.

That you may be set free from vanity and from all pride of office, and from all self-guarding fears, to the end that God's everlasting gospel may through you reach the world without hurt or hindrance.

That day by day you may be led deeper into the mystery of life and be made an interpreter of life to your fellows.

And that at the heart of all the troubles or sorrows which may come to you, unconquerable gladness may dwell. Amen.

"QUOTES"

LENT is a season in which we are to break up the hard soil by penitence and so let the word of God be sown in our hearts that our lives may be fruitful. And the fruits of the spirit are love, joy and peace. Just now the world is reaping its harvest of selfishness, hate and recklessness and if experience is worth anything men should have learned that we cannot have love, joy and peace unless we are willing to undergo the discipline of the Christian life.

—Bishop Irving P. Johnson

The Training Season

ST. PAUL said that we wrestle not against flesh and blood but against spiritual and mental forces which make us act as we do. He said also that there must be a strict training schedule for the match. Lent is our opportunity for beginning or expanding training.

There is an illness which psychiatrists call paranoia. One so afflicted has delusions of grandeur, accompanied by a persecution complex. Hitler's Germany was an example of it in a nation. It had a grandiose world mission, one Reich. It thought of itself as being constantly persecuted by either Jewish plutocracy, or communism, or both.

National paranoia did not perish with the fall of the Nazis. We can see it in many nations, not least of all in our own. Many seek to spread the so-called "American way" over the earth, and so sure are these people that it is the only proper way for people to live, that they denounce, even to the point of persecution, any who question it.

Our Church too, along with most others, often betrays this hidden illness. We call ourselves the "bridge" Church, by which we mean that we have the truth. A good deal of action at General Convention was paranoiac as we looked around for insidious forces that were attempting to ruin either our historic catholicity or our historic protestantism.

In the political scene we find officials who treat any criticism of their policies as coming from those who can not possibly understand such things. Sometimes they go so far as to say that their critics are out to overthrow the government.

Our social and economic order manifests the disease also. White supremacy and the efforts to uphold it spring from paranoia. Economic plutocracy, endeavors to thwart industrial democracy, result from the same disease.

Individuals are infected, and also families where we see a father or mother taking a position of absolute authority, blaming all failures on others. When thoughts and actions come which are not in harmony with those of any individual or group, they are likely to be rejected and suspicion cast upon the motives of those who think or act differently.

Paranoia is only another phrase for pride. A delusion of grandeur, a conviction that self or some opinion is absolutely right, will always seek to protect itself by looking for reasons for any attack upon it, not within itself, but on the outside. We are told that paranoia is a most dangerous disease, for in its heightened phases it leads inevitably to destruction. Violence is visited either upon the paranoiac himself or upon others. Our society shows widespread symptoms of paranoia, and to heal the ills, we must go to the seat of the trouble. The fight must take place in the realm of the mind and spirit of man. Pride is the worst form of idolatry. It is an easy thing to acquire. We enthrone our own will, build a fortress about it which never allows any contrary influence in.

Difficult to obtain is humility. The humble man realizes that God must be enthroned in the center of life. Pride speaks at the dinner table when the parent says that his own labor has produced this meal, and so he should be appreciated. Humility on the other hand acknowledges the king of the universe "who alone bringest forth bread from the earth." The proud Church says that it holds the true faith. Humility dictates that God has chosen people for his work, but when they reject his mission, he establishes a new people. National and economic pride points to itself and says here is the one way to organize life. Humility questions whether brotherhood and justice are well served by any order and so sets about to improve it.

Wrestling against pride and seeking to achieve humility is spiritual warfare. Training must be rigorous. The athlete cannot condition his body one day, stop for six, and expect to be ready for the contest.

If we see symptoms of paranoia in ourselves, and in our world, then we need strength to combat it.

The exercises and practices are well known: daily prayer and meditation; gathering with others in worship; being regularly fed with divine power through holy communion. It means that we will give more of ourselves for the way of God in this world.

Lent is time to examine our conditioning program; to see what needs to be added or discarded to make us more effective in the battle. It is an opportunity to draw up a schedule that will train one to wrestle. Pride threatens our own lives and the life of the world. We must fight it mightily with the weapons God gives for the strife.

Back To Main Street

by Richard S. Emrich

The Suffragan Bishop of Michigan

AT THE Episcopal Theological School Bishop Dun was my teacher and dean. That means that I have learned from him, and have under him drunk, though less deeply, from the same sources. I say this, because I want to make clear at the beginning that there is little that I would add to what he has said in the opening and foundation article on the Social Responsibility of the Christian and the Church, and nothing with which I disagree. Let us confine this review to pointing out for the purpose of discussion four great marks of his chapter and of the traditional Christian position which it so ably presents.

Its Simplicity. Many people conceive of the Christian ethic as a series of disconnected commandments and obligations which resemble a row of trees or a picket fence. For this reason their faith lacks that unity and simplicity which is so evident in the opening pages of Bishop Dun's article. He holds before us the One Thing that means a thousand things, the flaming sun that has a thousand rays, the one hub that holds the many spokes. One thing and one thing only is asked of us in the Christian faith—that we love God because he first loved us. But that one thing means a thousand things, for if we love God, we will love what he loves and seek his will for it. So, to love God means to love our fellowmen with all that that means, and to have a concern for the world for which God has a purpose. Having turned our faces toward God in worship, we discover that God is "faced" toward the world which he has made and loves, and which he sent his son to redeem. We seek to understand God's will for our neighbor and for ourselves, and that means, says

Bishop Dun, a recognition that men need not only economic necessities, but "truth, education, companionship, play, joy, beauty, order, freedom, the opportunity for meaningful work, protection from the aggressive egotism of fellowmen, just laws, hospitals, good government, and so forth." The love of God means, then, a concern for all of these things. Our lives are lighted by a central sun which gives unity and simplicity to our lives, and lights our concern for all that has been created.

Its Realism. The realism of Bishop Dun's chapter springs from his Christian faith, and it makes his writing both conservative and revolutionary. His conservatism springs from the fact that this is God's world, created by him. It has already been formed by another, and his laws govern it. The primary task of the Christian is, therefore, to respect the creator's hand by reverence for what he has made. To many people Christianity in the writings of Bishop Dun will appear hopelessly conservative. "He instituted marriage as an honorable estate; he saw men's needs of law and government and raised up rulers and judges. These are not things to be regretted and escaped; they are part of God's will for us." It is just this reverence for the handiwork of God which is so lacking in the modern world, and to many irreverent innovators Christianity must say, "no," because of its worship of the creator.

But Bishop Dun not only affirms the creator's hand, and is, therefore, conservative: he likewise knows with the Christian faith that this world has been corrupted by the sin of man and has need of a redeemer. There is to be no contentment with the world as it is, for there is no one of the divine orders which has not been twisted and blackened by the sin of man. This world is a vineyard in rebellion, and our Lord came to it, not primarily to comfort it, but to return it to its proper allegiance. No Biblical Christianity can ever, therefore, say a simple "yes" to any existing political or economic system. If it did, the salt would lose its savour. But Bishop Dun knows well that only he is the true reformer who first with reverence considers the creator's will. It is not a simple position to one outside the Christian faith, but it is the full truth to one who knows that Jesus Christ is both the creator and the redeemer of the world. A Biblical Christianity must always be both conservative and revolutionary.

THE relative autonomy of the sciences. In speaking of the difficulty for the leaders of the Church in making pronouncements on present problems Bishop Dun brings out a truth which both William Temple and Baron von Hügel held to be very precious. Let us call that truth the "relative autonomy of the sciences." By it we mean that it is always the duty of the Church to point out the ends for which scientific knowledge and technology exist; but it is certainly not the sphere of Church leaders to interfere without technical training in those spheres of knowledge which have their own training and disciplines. No sphere of knowledge is completely autonomous, for they all stand under the moral law; but they are relatively autonomous and free in the sense that they require special training and skills and have definite rights of their own. So Bishop Dun finds no technical knowledge in the Scriptures which will enable us to make nice decisions in economic problems, but he does see that it is the duty of the Church to judge the purpose of an economic system and the influence it exerts in the formation of character. "The Church," says he, "must respect the specialities"; but this means that there is a truly desperate need for Christian men who will train themselves as specialists and arm themselves with the best technical knowledge. Without them there is an alarming gap between general principles, on the one hand, and their concrete application on the other. Technical knowledge alone gives us the "uneducated expert" of whom America should be afraid; but principles without technical knowledge can be so vague that they have little influence on the contemporary scene. There is a real need in our day for an increase in specialized ministries. "Our problem," says Bishop Dun, "in the political and economic realms is to produce the best results we can out of the motives to which we can actually appeal." What are those motives and what the peculiar circumstances? It is here that the "relative autonomy" and rights of political and economic knowledge must be respected. The prohibitionists meant well.

Penitent participation. Finally, and of the greatest importance for all the readers of this book, Bishop Dun asks us for "penitent participation" in the affairs of our day. The Church, to be sure, is "called out" of the world, and it must break with many of the standards which govern our thought. It must turn its face toward God. If it is not "called out" it has no different point of view than any other group, and the salt has again lost its savour. But the Church is "called out" of the world in order to serve the world which God loves. It must do this penitently, for there is not one of us who is not involved in the evils of our present economic and political systems. As I see it the primary tragedy of the Church's life and of the world is that the Church, for the most part, now exists far removed from the chief struggles of our day. It lives and thinks on a side street in the suburbs while the great life of the world moves down the large main street some distance away. This is what lies behind the remark of some that "little that is important takes place in many churches." They cannot somehow become excited over the battle between high and low churchmen, for in the white light of the atomic bomb and the gray light of the hunger in Europe and Asia, it resembles the ridiculous warfare between Tweedle Dum and Tweedle Dee and the sinful placing of the traditions of men before the obvious will of God. Bishop Dun asks the people of the Church to turn from the side street and in "penitent participation" to bring the Church back onto the main street. There are many encouraging signs that this is happening. Among them is the presence of this little book which will be read by tens of thousands, and the presence of Bishop Dun himself in our National Cathedral in Washington. Like him we are not meant to alternate between the sacristy and the altar, but to live our life between the world and the altar. Until we do that our sincerity as Christians can be doubted.

Sermon at the Consecration of Norman B. Nash

by Angus Dun

The Bishop of Washington

THE words of the text* are those of a devout writer reaching back in his imagination to describe what he believed must have been in the old, old days of God's people, when one who had led them for many years came to the end of his time of service among them, and another was called to take his place. These are words of the imagination, written long ago of times long before; yet how well they fit this occasion today! They fit, because they come out of the depths of the ongoing life of God's people, and whatever comes thence speaks to the life of God's people in all times.

God's people in every time, and every congregation of God's people, needs a leader; one who can bind them together and hold them together in their own shared purposes by holding them together in his own heart and mind. They need someone to stand before them for what they are and for what they are called to be. They need someone to go out before them and to go in before them, to lead them out and to bring them in. Which I may interpret after a somewhat free and spiritual manner to mean that they need one who will again and again call them home; home to the faith which is at the heart of their shared life, home to the places and the times of prayer, home to the word in which their life is rooted, home to the altar where their spirits are fed and their lives re-dedicated. They need someone to come in before them and to bring them in. And they need someone to go out before them and to lead them out; out into the world where men toil and hunger, play and grasp and fear and fight; to show justice and mercy out there, and to be out there a light and a leaven.

Every least congregation of God's people needs such a one, lest they be as sheep which have no shepherd. And the wider congregations of God's people need such a one if they are to be held strongly by personal bonds within one fold and to know the ties that bind them to those who have gone before and to those who come after. Leaving aside all special claims, this is what we believe bishops are for, to be strong and faithful shepherds of the larger congregations of God's people.

When in the providence of God the people of God have lost a leader by death or by his calling to a still wider service, they seek another to follow him. Then, if they seek well, they ask for a man in whom is the spirit; in whom the very spirit constitutive of their special common life is present; a man in whom are manifest the hidden energies that bring forth faith and new hope for man, and clean, courageous, self-giving holy love. Having found such a one, they call the congregation of God's people together and set this man in their midst. They set him before those who represent the sanctities of their common life.

*"And Moses spake unto the Lord, saying, 'Let the Lord, the God of the spirits of all flesh, set a man over the congregation, which may go out before them, and which may go in before them, and which may lead them out and which may bring them in; that the congregation of the Lord be not as sheep which have no shepherd.' And the Lord said unto Moses, 'Take thee Joshua the son of Nun, in whom is the spirit, and lay thine hand upon him; and set him before Eleazer the priest, and before all the congregation; and give him a charge in their sight. And thou shalt put some of thine honor upon him, that all the congregation of the children of Israel may be obedient.' "—Numbers 27:15-20.

Hands are laid upon him, with all the human naturalness with which a father lays his hand upon his son when this son goes to a great new task or enlistment. Hands are laid upon him with prayer, in blessing and consecration and authorization. A charge is given him. A high task is laid upon him. And some, in truth much of the honor of those who have served in this place of leadership before is put upon him. He enters into a heritage of honor beyond all his own achieving.

How special and high that honor is, here in this city of Boston and this diocese of Massachusetts! This chosen man enters into the honor that Henry Sherrill has brought to this office, the honor that William Lawrence brought to it through his wise, far-reaching ministry. He enters into the honor of that figure of heroic mold, Phillips Brooks, who in this very place poured out his telling witness to Christ and awakened faith and new hope for their humanity in so many. Time would fail us to tell of all the faithful servants of God throughout the generations into whose honor this man enters today.

All this is done, not to give this man honor, but for the sake of God's people, that all the congregation of the children of God committed to him may be obedient. A man is in the center of this great act of prayer and praise, but the man and his office and his calling all take their meaning from the shared life of God's people. The heart of what you ask of him is asked of all of you. It is a covenant betwixt you, and all you represent, and him.

You ask that he shall faithfully deliver among you the everlasting gospel in order that you may be made more answerable to that gospel.

You ask that he shall guard among you the great sacraments of the gospel: the sacrament of baptism, in which God in Christ reaches out to receive into the cleansing adoption of sons those committed to him in faith, and admits them into the nurturing fellowship of the household of faith; and the sacrament of the Lord's supper, in which there is celebrated before the eternal Father with praise and thankfulness the self-giving of Christ for and to us, and we are bidden to receive him and to be taken up by him in his service. You ask this man to guard these, in order that you and your children may enter more faithfully into these offered means of human cleansing and unselfing and strengthening.

You ask him to go about in all your churches to lay hands in blessing on those who stand before God and men to renew for themselves their pledges of allegiance. This you do in order that you may be confirmed in the spirit of steady year-by-year faithfulness to that life of faith and common prayer and moral obedience which is the Church's calling.

YOU ask this man to pledge himself to exercise a patient and wise discipline in accordance with the manifest standards and traditions of this branch of Christ's Holy Catholic Church. This you do in order that this Church may maintain its integrity and its own unity. We do not seek a rigid, legalistic stiffness, that allows of no growth, of no recovering of lost or slighted values, of no fresh movement of the ever-creative spirit. But we do rightly seek to maintain a common mind and a common loyalty overreaching our inevitable partialities and differences. You cannot ask this man to exercise a godly discipline unless you are ready to accept a self-discipline of irresponsible individualism and of divisive, sectarian partisanship.

You ask this man to go out into this whole community in the spirit of true servanthood. That you do because you know that every member of the body of Christ in his vocation is called to servanthood.

To think of this man's task is inevitably to think of the Church's task. For his task is none other than the Church's task. Thinking of this man's task and of the Church's task, this sermon and this whole service could readily take on a somber and disheartening note. It would be easy to lay upon this man and upon us all a burden of obligation grievous to be borne and beyond his and all of our powers of fulfillment.

Our human world is a very tragic world. There is hunger and homelessness and despair in it beyond all our power of imagining. There is moral confusion. Rival faiths, political and religious, struggle for mastery. The terrible forces brought under dominion by man's technical cleverness far outrun our human moral stature and threaten everything in this world which we hold dear for ourselves and for our children. In our economic order, powerful interests jockey for advantage, often wilfully and with no sober sense of public responsibility. Minority races among us suffer grievous indignities and deprivations and injustices, and resentment smoulders among them. We grope confusedly for a middle way between an unChristian individualism which fails to recognize our deep human interdependence, and an oppressive collectivism which would take from men the personal and responsible freedom in which alone they can achieve their true dignity. A substantial proportion of the membership of all our churches is informed by no deep and illuminating faith, is without any stable habits of life-changing worship, any radical moral commitment. Many a congregation lacks the vitality to nurture profoundly a young life admitted into its fellowship. The whole body of God's people is broken and fragmentized. Parts are too often competitive and too often stand apart from one another in a proud assurance of superiority.

All this we can say, and more. And then we could say to this man, and to you who are to be in a special way his people, "Now we lay upon you all this burden. It is your responsibility to change all this. Woe to you if you do not change it!" That would not be good news for him or for you. It would be bad news. This would then be no happy occasion.

But the gospel is good news. This man is not called to be the world's saviour. The Church is not called to be in itself the world's saviour. This man is called to point men and to lead men to God and to his Christ, who is the world's saviour.

The Church is the company of those who have recognized in Christ by faith the world's saviour, who have opened themselves by faith to his saving work, and have begun to manifest in their shared life the fruits of his redemption. In the midst of the darkness of our world and of our own failures and insufficiency, we can rejoice because we believe that out of the mystery of God himself there came down into our humanity the very image and bearer of his saving love for men. He has awakened in us the good beginnings of an answering love for him. In him whose life was broken in this world, and no success as the world counts success, we know that they are blessed—very happy—who with him hunger and thirst after righteousness, who in his purity of heart have come to see God, who with him are makers of peace in the midst of man's strife. "At the heart of all our trouble and sorrow, unconquerable gladness dwells," because we are persuaded "that neither life nor death, nor angels, nor principalities, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height nor depth nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." That is not to turn our backs on the world's ills or the world's sins. It is to turn our trust to the only center from which healing and redemption can come to our world. The Church can play its humble part in the world's redemption only when the people of God have recovered that conquering joy which alone can draw men to the source of that joy.

New Books

Excellent Good *Fair

*The Church and Christian Education by Paul H. Vieth. The Bethany Press. $2.50.

Christian education is a very live subject these days and nowhere more than in the Episcopal Church. This book by a member of the faculty of the Yale Divinity School is based upon the work of a committee of fifty-nine top educators and churchmen.

*The God We Worship by Roger Hazelton. The Macmillan Co. $2.00.

A most suggestive and helpful book by a professor at Andover-Newton School. When a Congregationalist takes a rather high church position on the subject of sacramentalism you have one of the signs of the times in the field of religion.

*Small Communities in Action by Jean and Jess Ogden. Harpers. $3.00.

The book tells interestingly of accomplishments in small communities in marketing, cooperative production and distribution, public health and other civic activities, carried on under the direction of the extension division of the University of Virginia and other social agencies in the south. A stimulating book.

Europe Greatly Fears America Fletcher Tells CLID

The Annual Meeting Calls for Resignation Of Dulles and Condemns Congress Committee

Edited by Sara Dill

New York:—The Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher, professor at Episcopal Theological School, just returned from three months in England, France and Germany, told the 150 people attending the annual meeting of the CLID, which met here on Lincoln's Birthday, that the great fear of Europeans is of America. They believe, he said, that a major economic crisis in the United States is inevitable since this country demonstrated in the twenties that "it is impossible today to export unemployment; that is, the surplus of our great industrial potential can no longer be exported. An economic collapse, with tremendous unemployment, is therefore inevitable, and it is the fear of Europeans that we will drag the rest of the world down with us."

"Internationally, they see three possibilities; first is peace between the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R. Second, war now between these two powers which means that western Europe will be the battleground. Three, war later—in five or ten years—which they are convinced means world annihilation. They are not optimistic about realizing the first, with reaction in the driver's seat in America, but they pray and work for it since either of the other alternatives will probably mean the end of the world."

He described a Europe of destitution and despair, with the only effective leadership coming from the communists. People therefore are turning to the left rapidly, not in most instances because they accept communism but because there is nothing else to turn to.

Also stressing the meeting, held at St. George's Church, was Dr. Frank Kingdon, co-chairman of Progressive Citizens of America, who described a colossal machine, with wheels within wheels, that is threatening to run man instead of being run for man. "Unless we see the face of a man in the wheels our world is lost." He, too, stressed the fact that peace between Russia and the United States must be maintained, "otherwise our world is likely to be completely destroyed within fifteen years."

The meeting, attended by Church League members from Boston, Washington, Detroit, Philadelphia, Buffalo, in addition to the metropolitan area of New York, also passed, unanimously, a number of resolutions. One called upon the Federal Council of Churches and the National Council of the Episcopal Church, to ask for the resignation of John Foster Dulles as chairman of the Federal Council's commission of a just and durable peace. The resolution stated that Mr. Dulles, in his recent pronouncements, had repudiated the Delaware Message of his own commission; resolutions which were later confirmed at the Cleveland Conference of the Churches.

Another resolution affirmed that the threat to democracy today "comes from such fascist organizations as the Ku Klux Klan, the Columbians, Spiritual Mobilization, Youth for Christ, and similar organizations," and called upon the Un-American Committee of Congress "to devote itself to exposing such groups rather than to the investigation and often persecution of anti-fascist organization which now seems to be the sole function of the committee." This resolution, and another urging the confirmation of David E. Lilienthal as chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, were ordered sent to President Truman and to various committees of Congress.

Commendation of Bishop Walker of Atlanta and Bishop Barnwell of Georgia, and the clergy of both dioceses, was contained in a resolution which pointed out the fine stands they have taken against the "white primary" bill and the forces in the state led by Herman Talmadge.

A large part of the business session, chaired by Dean Arthur Lichtenberger of Newark, was devoted to a consideration of a revised statement of purpose. Action was not completed and was referred to the newly elected executive committee for further consideration. The Rev. W. B. Spofford Jr. made his first report as executive secretary, which indicated a healthy and vigorous organization, with tremendous tasks ahead both in the domestic and international fields.

Mr. Spencer Miller Jr., state highway commissioner of New Jersey, who was chairman of the luncheon meeting, opened by reading a letter from the president of the League, Bishop Parsons of California, in which he said: "We of the CLID have a job cut out for us. We have to make as clear as we can to Church people the meaning of their faith in relation to national and international problems. We have to lead the van in bringing the Church's influence to bear for Christian solutions. We have to develop more and more fully the capacity to cooperate with other Christians and with those beyond the Christian frontiers who cherish the same kind of ideals even if they have not the same faith. It is a heavy responsibility that rests upon us."

Corporate Communion

Chicago:—It is expected that 500 men and boys will participate in the corporate communion on Washington's Birthday, held at St. James' Church. The celebrant will be Bishop Randall, assisted by Bishop Conkling, the Rev. Duncan Browne and Canon David E. Gibson. A fellowship breakfast will follow the service when the speaker will be the Rev. Irwin St. John Tucker.

Lippman to Speak

Washington: — Walter Lippman, columnist and author, is to be the speaker at Washington Cathedral Sunday afternoon, February 23, when a marble statue of George Washington is to be unveiled. The figure is seven feet, six inches tall, and is presented by the supreme council of Thirty-Third Degree Masons, and is the work of Lee Lawrie, sculptor.

Salary Increases

Tacoma, Wash.:—The convention of the diocese of Olympia, meeting here, voted to increase the salary of the bishop from $6,000 to $8,000. The Rev. Stephen F. Bayne Jr. is the bishop-elect. The salaries of missionary clergy in the diocese were increased to a minimum of $2,400 and a house. Bishop Hines, coadjutor of Texas, guest speaker, declared that the Church should lead in social and political as well as spiritual life.

Lenten Program

Newport News, Va.: — A notable list of preachers are holding forth this Lent at St. Paul's here where the Rev. Theodore V. Morrison is rector. Following an organ meditation by Ralph Russell, organist, there is a brief service and then addresses on the general subject "Faith" by visiting clergymen. The services are held daily from 12:35 to 12:55. The preachers are Bishop Ludlow of Newark; Bishop Walker of Atlanta; the Rev. James W. Kennedy of Lexington, Ky.; the Rev, Churchill J. Gibson of Richmond, Va.; Dean Wicker of Louisville. Before and after the service coffee and doughnuts are served by the members of the Auxiliary for the benefit of the workers in the shipyard nearby.

Educators Meet

New Orleans:—Fourteen dioceses of the south were represented at a conference on religious education held here. Bishop Gravatt of Upper South Carolina said that he believed "a large number of veterans found God during the war and are now tending toward religion. But a lot of young people are just drifting and the Church must reach them. They must be taught how to meet the problems of the day."

Others to speak were Bishop Clingman of Kentucky; the Rev. Leo M. Pippy, director of education of the Methodist Church, and the Rev. Curtis Junker, director of education for the diocese of Dallas, who told of his survey of the Christian youth movement in England, France, Germany and Switzerland where he recently visited.

Conference Center

New York:—The Rev. Horace W. B. Donegan, rector of St. James' and chairman of the committee on promotion of the proposed residence for the Presiding Bishop and conference center, has released a statement about the project, which we reported last week. He lays stress on the fact that it is to be a conference center, and that the larger of the two houses on the 99 acre property will be used for that purpose, with the Presiding Bishop living in the small-

Visiting Church dignitaries from other countries could also be entertained there."

He states that while the Church has an option on the property, the purchase will be possible only if there are gifts from interested individuals, both for the purchase and for maintenance.

Eddy the Speaker

Washington, D. C.: — Col. William A. Eddy, former president of Hobart College and now with the state department, will be the speaker at the annual corporate communion and breakfast here on Washington's Birthday. He was formerly American minister to Suadi-Arabia and attended the Yalta conference with the late President Roosevelt.

Oppose New Law

Waycross, Ga.: — At the semi-annual meeting of the clergy of the diocese of Georgia, meeting here February 2-5, a resolution was passed against the "white primary" law which is being sponsored by the Talmadge forces of the state. The resolution states that: "The Bishop and clergy in charge of the congregations throughout the diocese of Georgia unanimously request all members of the legislature to enact those laws and directions which will give to every citizen, whether white or black, the right to vote accorded him by the Lord of Life and the Constitution of the United States of America."

All Bishops

Birmingham, Ala.:—The noonday Lenten speakers at the Advent here are all bishops: Bishop Carpenter of Alabama, Bishop Clingman of Kentucky, Bishop Powell of Maryland, Bishop Jones of West Texas, Bishop Goodwin of Virginia, Bishop Sterrett of Bethlehem, Bishop Walker of Atlanta. They are also to be the speakers at the services on Tuesday evening when all the Episcopal churches in the city have united services.

Oppose Discrimination

Denver, Colo.:—The ministers alliance of this city came out for the passage of the fair employment practices bill, now before the legislature.

Drive for Relief

New York:—A parish drive for overseas relief, to continue through Lent, will be launched with a special service on February 23 at St. George's here. Members of the parish and their friends are asked to pledge both financial aid and material contributions for a six weeks' period, culminating at Easter. The materials aids project is planned under the chairmanship of Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, while the financial project is directed by Mr. Swasey Crocker. A workroom in the parish house to receive the materials is to be opened each Tuesday during Lent until ten in the evening.

Timely Questions Asked

Brooklyn, N. Y.: — The department of Christian relations of the diocese of Long Island sent a letter to all of the clergy, relative to race relations Sunday and Brotherhood Week. The clergy were urged to ask themselves these questions and to use the answers as a basis for a permanent program for parish life:

"Is anyone of any racial or national group welcome in your parish activities, including your Church school?"

"Does your Lenten program include study of Christian principles of brotherhood and their local application?"

"Does your Church school give to each child a knowledge and understanding of other racial groups?"

"Does your local library contain good books on race relations?"

"Are there recreational, educational, and leisure-time activities for all groups in your community?"

"In the board membership of your community service agencies, such as schools, hospitals and welfare associations, are you careful to have representatives of all groups in your area?"

Important Decree

Port au Prince, Haiti:—A decree has been promulgated by the President of Haiti, the Hon. Dumarsais Estime, under the Law of July 8, 1921, concerning the public welfare.

"In view of the request of the Episcopal Church of Haiti, represented by C. Alfred Voegeli, Bishop of said Church:

"Considering that the educational and uplifting work of this institution was founded in 1861 for the promotion of the common welfare, and that it responds to the conditions required by law.

"On the report of the Secretary of State for Religion and on the advice of the Council of the Secretaries of State, '1. The Episcopal Church of Haiti is declared essential to the public welfare (d'utilite publique).'

"2. The present decree will be published and executed by the Secretary of State for Religion and the Secretary of State for the Interior, each in those points in which the Secretariat is concerned.

"Given at the National Palace, Port au Prince, January 16, 1947, in the 144th year of the Independence.

Dumarsais Estime"

The Roman Catholic Church has been the state religion of Haiti since the foundation of the Republic under Toussaint L'Ouverture and other Churches have merely been tolerated. Official education was entirely in the hands of the Roman Church, which meant that missionary schools were handicapped in the matter of the validity of their diplomas. This decree changes this situation considerably.

CARILLONIC BELLS

"... now a vital part of the message of Foundry Church."

That is how the Rev. Mr. Harris of Foundry Church feels about this beautiful Schulmerich instrument. Here is what he wrote us:

"We cannot speak too highly of the 'Carillonic Bells' which you installed. They seem to create an atmosphere of worship which far exceeds the confines of the sanctuary. As people listen in their homes, and as they walk along the streets, there is no question, from the comments that come, that the playing of the old Hymns awakens uplifting memories and leaves a spiritual deposit in the hearts of many. The ministry of the Bells, which are pure and clear in their tone, is now a vital part of the message of Foundry Church."

Hundreds of churches are using CARILLONIC BELLS to give their organ music new color, and to send a message of beauty from their towers. Your church, too, can acquire a leading voice in the community through CARILLONIC BELLS. For particulars, address Dept. W-20

February 14-16, with Barbara Hunt of Mt. Holyoke College the chairman. "Why is the Christian world interested in worship?" was the subject of a panel that opened the meeting, with Prof. Adelaide Case of the Episcopal Theological School, Barbara Hunt, Ivan Nickerson of Wesleyan University, the Rev. Samuel Shoemaker of Calvary Church, New York, and the Rev. W. B. Spofford Jr., secretary of the CLID, taking part. Addresses were given by these leaders at other sessions on such subjects as "Devotional use of the Bible"; "Worship and Social Action"; "Corporate Worship"; "Cell Groups." There was also an address by Prof. Roger Hazelton of Andover Newton Seminary on "Planning Services of Worship."

Honolulu: — The last surviving daughter of the first Anglican Bishop of Honolulu, Dr. Mildred E. Staley, died here on February 4 at the age of 82. She was born here three years after the arrival from England of her father, Bishop Thomas N. Staley, his wife and seven children. Her godmother was Queen Emma, wife of King Kamehameha IV, at whose request the Church was sent to the Islands.

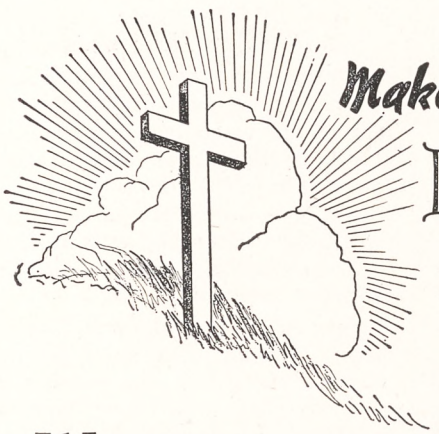
She received medical degrees in Dublin and London Universities, after which she spent 20 years at hospitals in Delhi and Punjab, India. Her medical career took her to Singapore, Egypt, Palestine, Syria, New Zealand, Australia and the Fiji Islands. She was a psychiatrist of note; an expert in child welfare and prison reform. Returning to Honolulu in 1928 Dr. Staley helped establish the one mission hospital in the Islands and also aided in building two missions, one for native Hawaiians and the other the only Korean mission in the American Church.

Next Convention

San Francisco:—The Rev. John C. Leffler, rector of St. Luke's, here, is the chairman of the preliminary committee on planning the General Convention of 1949. The diocesan convention, meeting at Grace Cathedral, February 4 and 5, also approved the proposal of Bishop Block to raise $200,000 between now and the General Convention as a commemoration of the centennial of the founding of the Episcopal Church in the state. Guests of the convention were Bishop Barton of Eastern Oregon and Bishop Nicholai of Zicha.

A high point in the convention was the welcome home of the Rev. Joseph K. Tsukamoto and the announcement of the reopening of work for Japanese Americans at Christ Mission here.

The Church Club



New York:—The Hon. Robert McC. Marsh, president of the Church Club of New York, has announced that its annual dinner will be held at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel on April 10th. Bishop Gilbert will be one of the speakers, with other speakers announced at a later date.

by the younger Grant, Second Century Christianity, was recently published in London by the Society for the Promotion of Christian knowledge.

Youth Neglected

Philadelphia (RNS):—Woeful neglect of youth by churches was charged here at a conference of chaplains and civilian clergy sponsored by the general commission on army and navy chaplains. Commander C. W. Nelson, senior chaplain at the U.S. naval air station, Lakehurst, N. J., estimated that "barely more than 15 per cent of the Protestant personnel there, or in any place I have been stationed, are at all regular in their worship."

Advocating establishment of community or denominational weekday church school courses, Major M. H. Imrie, of the army chief of chaplain's office, Washington, D. C., said: "We are receiving so many unchurched youth that it is apparent the churches are not giving them Christian training."

Rear Admiral William N. Thomas, navy chief of chaplains, declared churches will have to reach more than the hundreds they now are reaching. "Protestant churches need a unity of purpose and a unity of action, in the face of the keen and clever competition of the more worldly aspects of life," he added.

Two other chaplains reported "a fairly general condition of religious illiteracy" among the many teen-age Army and Navy personnel they had encountered. General consensus among conference participants was that churches need to promote more Christian education among their youth.

Minimum Salaries

Cleveland, Ohio (RNS):—Minimum salaries for pastors of Congregational Christian Churches have been set at $2,400 for rural clergymen and $2,400 plus a house for urban pastors. Official telephone and pension dues are also added to the pay of city ministers. The action marks a "sharp life of pastoral remuneration" according to officials. Of a total of 3,640 men, 488 previously received $1,000; 555 from $1,000 to $1,500; 820 from $1,500 to $2,000; 798 from $2,000 to $2,500; 987, $2,500 or more. Food is the biggest item in a pastor's budget, with car maintenance for pastor work second. Most spent 20% of their salaries to keep their cars running. The third largest expenditure was heat.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

MR. E. T. LAWRENCE
Layman of Tacoma, Washington

You carried (WITNESS, Jan. 9th) a lengthy letter from the Bishop of Albany bewailing the fact that our Church makes no progress. I was in sympathy with him the whole way until I came to his concluding paragraph where he says: "what steps are to be taken I do not know. I am not advocating a campaign or a crusade."

Why not? Backbone is infinitely more rugged than wishbone. If we discover a dangerous grass fire near our home we don't stand by and watch. We fight it. If, then, a house is worth fighting for are not the souls of men? I agree with Bishop Oldham that "over half our population are thoroughly pagan and a greater proportion only nominal Christians." It seems to me, however, that if we Episcopalians wish to survive as a Christian body we must drop our superior aloofness and smug complacency and behave like work bees instead of drones.

However, before any change for the better can take place there will have to be radical changes in our governing body, and this in turn means that the rank and file of Church membership must wake up and send delegates to Convention who will demand that a progressive policy be adopted and that lackadaisical methods, pseudo-Romanists and all other forms of impedimenta be exorcised. Then, and then only, may we hope to have a truly live Protestant Church pulling its own weight in the stream of life instead of drifting as at present.

I have been an Episcopalian for seventy years and have seen it sink to its present level. However, I still think that if properly organized our Church could attract and hold untold numbers of people who now pass us by.

May I say also that THE WITNESS for Jan. 9 and 16 are full of profitable reading matter, special mention being made of "Presbyterian Church Merger"; "Women's Work in the Church"; "Class Distinctions Must Go"; "The Presiding Bishop's Address."

REV. BENJAMIN MINIFIE
Rector of the Good Shepherd, Corpus Christi, Texas

I wish you'd inquire about this in your column someday. We have had a succession of English war brides come here since the end of the war, the majority of them belonging to the Church of England. I have called on them one by one, enjoyed their delightful way of speaking, had long and pleasant visits, and welcomed them to the local Episcopal Church. In every instance, they have been very friendly and pleased that I had come, and already aware that the Episcopal Church was the same as the mother Church. But with one exception they have never yet put in an appearance! And this in a church-going part of the world where people really turn out Sunday mornings. One of them explained to her neighbor, a communicant here who was also working on her, "You Americans take the Church much more seriously than we do. You go to Church much more often."

I know it's misleading to generalize about these things. After all we, too, have plenty of indifferent people, and maybe I've hit a bad crop. But when upwards of a dozen young women belonging to the Anglican Church arrive in a community, and all but one of them seemingly have no interest in the work and worship of the local parish you begin to wonder about the vitality of the mother Church. How well is she holding her people? I had expected a special response from these young women because the Episcopal Church was one of the few definite links with their former homes way down here in south Texas. But I have to report that they are well behind our own people in that good Christian duty of worshipping God every Sunday in his Church. The fact that their husbands are not Episcopalians is hardly the excuse; in several instances I found that the husbands were not going anywhere in particular themselves.

I pass this on with some curiosity wondering if others have had a similar experience, and wondering why the English Church is not holding its people any better if these young women are typical.

REV. SAMUEL J. MARTIN
Rector of St. Edmund's, Chicago

The recent debate in the National Council involving Doctor Bentley has caused considerable unrest and resentment among both Colored and white churchmen. How can we convince a secular and pagan society when our top leaders publicly express themselves not being in accord with Christian principles? For a priest, to say nothing of a director, of a large department as the American Church Institute for Negroes, to declare himself in sympathy with a system which has as its purpose to enslave, insult, humiliate and segregate Negroes, proves his inefficiency and unworthiness for the office of the sacred priesthood. Doctor Bentley has openly insulted the colored citizens of this country and owes them an apology. The National Council should not harbor one with such convictions any more than Congress should harbor Bilbo.

BOOKS RECOMMENDED FOR LENT

The Books Announced Here Received Either Three or Two Star Rating by THE WITNESS

The Modern Parent and the Teaching Church

By Wesner Fallaw

Dr. Fallaw concerns himself with finding a workable solution to the problem of keeping young people active in the church and Sunday school. His major thesis is that, rather than starting out to educate children, the church should start its educational work with adults in the firm conviction that religious education of children will follow as a by-product. By using this book the minister can analyze his own local situation and plan for a more effective educational program. Selected for Lenten reading by Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick. $2.50

Religious Education Leaders Stress Family Unit

Communities Throughout the Country Enrolled More than Two Million in Weekday Programs

By Philip C. Landers

Grand Rapids, Mich.:—New emphases on family-centered religious training, lay leadership and educational evangelism were major themes of Christian education programs adopted at business sessions of the International Council of Religious Education in annual meeting here, Feb. 13-15.

Representatives of 40 Protestant denominations and of 32 state councils of churches and Christian education, attending the meetings of the Council heard the general administrative report which was presented in the absence of Roy G. Ross, because of illness, by the associate secretaries. Ross declared in the report: "Christian education forces are determined to provide the home with as much support as they can as means of helping parents in their work of Christian education. . . . In cooperation with the Federal Council of Churches, the International Council of Religious Education is conducting 13 four-day missions during 1947, in which nationally known religious leaders are helping local churches enlist and train lay workers for educational evangelism."

Former Governor Harold E. Stassen of Minnesota, president of the convention of the International Council, arrived by airplane from New York to attend the annual meeting of the board of trustees. In a press conference he stated: "The upsurge of religion in this nation since the war, and the work of national religious organizations in promoting the cause of Christianity will provide a better moral foundation and a sound basis for the support of the United Nations by the United States."

Religion, Mr. Stassen added, will play a large part in preventing a third world war, and future relations of this country with Russia will depend to a large extent on future growth of religious freedom in Russia.

In commenting about the need for further Christian education of children and youth in this country, Mr. Stassen said: "Children are handicapped by a postwar lack of moral values. A method of weekday religious education should be used throughout the country, with local communities deciding upon the basis for such teaching."

Two thousand two hundred communities enrolled more than 2,000,000 boys and girls in weekday programs of religious education last year, Ross pointed out in his report to the Council. At the same time, 590 community training schools for church school workers were held and there was a record-breaking attendance at summer religious training conferences.

Guidance for the total future program of Christian education in the United States and Canada is contained in the final report of the committee on the study of Christian education which was presented to the Council at its business session. The report was prepared by a committee of 60 scholars, of which Paul A. Vieth of New Haven, Conn., a professor of Yale Divinity School and chairman of the Council's commission on education program, was chairman.

Presented for the first time at this year's meeting was the chapter in the study on the "Community approach to Christian education." Other chapters were presented at the annual meeting in 1946. A final chapter on the "Structure and function of agencies of religious education" was received and referred to member agencies for further study.

"Churches of any American community have a responsibility for relating the basic concepts of freedom and democracy to the ongoing process of community life," the Study committee stated in the chapter on the community. "The church is concerned with community life because there is need to resolve the tensions arising in social living which require a spiritual ministry for their resolution."

"Interchurch cooperation (in the community) is indispensable for interpreting fully the meaning of world Christianity to the community. . . . The challenge of secular trends in public education makes it urgent that the churches and synagogues engage in bold experimentation with new patterns of relationships between the public schools and the churches of a local community," the report continued.

In the field of political activity in the community, the study states: "For the Protestant church, the end of political activity is not to gain some special privilege or power for the Church, but the spiritual, moral and social welfare of the community

STUDY GROUPS

Insofar as possible the articles in THE WITNESS will follow the order of the chapters in the book Christianity Takes a Stand (Procurable by sending 30c to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6). However since those who are to contribute are extremely busy men there may be one or two weeks when the order is changed. Thus this week the article is on Relations to Russia, with Mr. Stassen's comments on Sumner Welles chapter on United Nations following in the issue of March 6th. Unless things beyond our control upset the schedule, the WITNESS articles will appear as follows:

March 6: Harold E. Stassen on United Nations.

March 13: Prof. F. W. Foerster on Treatment of Ex-Enemy Nations.

March 20: Prof. Louis Ridenour on The Moral Meaning of the Atomic Bomb.

March 27: Dr. Max Yergen on Minorities.

April 3: Carey McWilliams on Japanese Americans.

April 10: Philip Murray on Full Employment.

April 17: The Rev. Stephen F. Bayne Jr. on Man and the State.

April 24: The Rev. Frederick C. Grant on The Duty of a Christian.

as a whole. To achieve this end, it is neither desirable nor necessary for the Church to act in any other capacity than as a moral force in the community."

Dr. Fleming James, for the past 10 years professor of Old Testament and dean of the Divinity School, University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn., was appointed executive secretary of the Old Testament Section of the Standard Bible Committee by the Council. Revision of the Old Testament by the Standard Bible Committee now is approaching final stages of preparation, and it is expected to be released in 1950.

BISHOP LANE BARTON INSTITUTED

Bend, Oregon:—Bishop Lane W. Barton was instituted third bishop of the district of Eastern Oregon at a service held here at Trinity Church on February 10th. There were three other bishops present: Bishop Huston of Olympia, Bishop Walters of San Joaquin and Bishop Lewis of Nevada. The Rev. James Leach represented the diocese of Colorado and the diocese of Idaho was represented by the Rev. F. V. C. Ward. The sermon was by Bishop Lewis of Nevada who stressed the need for greater work in the mission field.

There was a reception in the parish hall following the service when over 200 people gathered to honor their bishop.

A clergy conference was held in connection with the service, with Bishop Barton meeting with all of his clergy for a full day of discussion of various projects. Summer camps were planned, with the juniors in charge of the Rev. H. E. Parrott and the senior school under the leadership of the Rev. Fred Wissenbach. There was also discussion of advancing the work in the mission fields of the district, with plans made for full time work in Langell Valley, Hermiston and the Wallowa areas.

TRANSFER WORK TO U. S.

New York:—In the Cathedral of St. John Baptist, Belize, the pastoral care of thousands of Anglicans in Central America was formally transferred from the Church of England to the Episcopal Church, following the execution of a proclamation of transfer dated January 21, 1947.

This was the culmination of the action of General Convention in September, resulting in our assuming responsibility for the half of Panama lying towards North America, and all of Costa Rica and Nicaragua. The formal transfer was made by Bishop Douglas J. Wilson, and the recipient of the transfer was Bishop R. Heber Gooden of the missionary district of the Panama Canal Zone, to whose jurisdiction the new territory is added.

The document of transfer was executed by the Presiding Bishop and Bishop Gooden for the Episcopal Church, Archbishop William George Hardie of the West Indies, and Bishop Douglas J. Wilson of Honduras.

Bishop Carruthers of South Carolina was the preacher at the services opening the noonday services held in Lent in Charleston

HERMAN TALMADGE'S PASTOR RESIGNS

McRae, Ga.: — The Rev. Joseph A. Rabun is the pastor of the Baptist Church here where Herman Talmadge is a member. He went to Atlanta recently and appeared before the state Senate committee to oppose the white primary bill as undemocratic. So eleven of the thirteen deacons of the church wired Talmadge that the views expressed by their pastor did not represent their own. So Rabun submitted his resignation but a number of them have told him that they do not want to accept it.

The pastor, a former marine corps chaplain who saw action in the Solomons, said it seemed odd that some persons would permit in state affairs moral lawlessness which they would not approve locally. He defended his right to hit at wrongdoing wherever he finds it and said that "some would have the pastor submit in writing his every sermon before he delivers it. Some want a pastor to preach for them instead of to them."

Outspoken in his criticism of racial discrimination, he led a move at the convention of his Church last fall which resulted in a resolution denouncing the late Eugene Talmadge's "white supremacy" campaign.

LUNCHEONS SERVED AT TRINITY

Boston:—Working people who attend Lenten services at Trinity Church here will be able to have lunch in the parish library. The novel plan, calling for a quick, inexpensive meal, started the day after Ash Wednesday and will continue from Monday through Friday each week during Lent. The Rev. Theodore P. Ferris, rector, has made the arrangements so that working people attending Lenten services may have lunch and be back at their desks within the hour usually allotted at noon.

CHURCH SPONSORS CONFERENCE

Princeton, N. J.: — Under the chairmanship of the Rev. Robert D. Smith, social service secretary for the diocese of New Jersey, an all-day conference of the New Jersey Council for World Organization was held here on February 18. Speakers dealing with the economic responsibility of the United States, our food committments and our responsibility to displaced persons were Prof. Max Gideonse of Rutgers, Prof. Winfield Riefler of Princeton, Mr. Charles D. Coe, president of Farm Research, Inc., and Mr. Allen Burns of the Citizen's Committee for Displaced Persons.

BISHOP HUSTON GETS GIFT

Tacoma, Wash.:—Bishop Huston of Olympia was presented with a check for $5,000 as a gift from the people of the diocese at the dinner which closed the two-day diocesan convention. The guest speaker at the convention was Bishop Hines, coadjutor of Texas, who challenged Christians to fight secularism.

Western Bishops Hold Meeting To Discuss Problems

Say the Church Has Failed in Extending Its Work in Missionary Fields of West

By Robert B. Gooden
Suffragan Bishop of Los Angeles

Boise, Idaho:—Deploring the failure of the Episcopal Church to fill vacancies in existing organized work; its failure to extend its ministry to new areas of greatly increased population; and its complacent acceptance of a norm of a total of approximately five thousand active clergy when at least 10,000 are needed to meet present opportunities for service, the Episcopal bishops and delegates from eight western states of the province of the Pacific, meeting in a three-day planning session, February 12, 13, 14, at the Bishop's House, headquarters of Bishop Frank A. Rhea, of Idaho, took decisive action toward providing increased numbers of rurally-trained ministers for the Western area.

Action taken called for the appointment of an instructor in rural work to the faculty of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, Berkeley, Calif., who will also direct student field work in the western states. Further action included the endorsement of Washington State College, Pullman, Wash; Oregon State College, Corvallis, Ore.; and the College of Agriculture, University of California, Davis, Calif., as the land-grant colleges where systematically chosen clergy and women Church workers will be enrolled each year in refresher courses on rural Church and rural community life; the placement of seminary students from Eastern schools in accredited fields for receiving supervised rural Church experience; adoption of a policy for mileage travel allowance for clergy sufficient to cover cost of travel and replacement of cars; the approval of a program to reach isolated families by correspondence, radio and evangelical and Bible teaching institutes.

The meeting was under the chairmanship of the Rev. Clifford Samuelson, associate secretary for the division of domestic missions, who stated that the National Council and the General Convention has made available $62,150 for the current year for rural Church advance. A large part of this money will be used in the western area if sound plans are developed for rural Church extension.

Attending the planning session, which was called by the provincial commission on rural work, through the Ven. W. F. Bulkley, Archdeacon of Utah, chairman, were Bishop Rhea; Bishop W. F. Lewis of Nevada; Bishop S. Arthur Huston of Olympia; Bishop Sumner Walters of San Joaquin; Bishop Stephen Clark of Utah; the Rev. Edward Slater, representing the Bishop of Spokane; the Rev. Perry Smith, representing the Bishop of Oregon. Also attending were the Ven. Norman L. Foote, Archdeacon of Montana, who reported on a new policy for mission work in that jurisdiction growing out of a recent survey of the state; and the Rev. David Clark, superintendent of the Good Shepherd Mission, Fort Defiance, Arizona, who discussed the relationship of the Church's Indian work to rural work.

Other steps toward strengthening the ministry of the Episcopal Church in rural areas will be presented to the annual synod of the Province of the Pacific, to be held in Medford, Oregon, April 30-May 3. Special emphasis, according to the findings of this session, will be placed on trying to get the Episcopal Church to overcome its lack of ordained leadership to meet the immediate needs of the nation and the Church.

URGE UNDERSTANDING OF SOVIETS

Lynchburg, Va. (RNS): — Resolutions asking "spiritual rearmament" against war with Soviet Russia and opposing federal appropriations for parochial schools were adopted unanimously at the annual meeting of the Virginia Council of Churches here. The resolutions on Soviet-American relations urged member churches to become fully informed about Russia, to guard carefully against promoting war by loose talk and to demonstrate by positive practice of Christian principles and extension of democratic freedoms the superiority of the American form of government.

The resolution on parochial schools provided: "That our secretary transmit to the Congressmen and the Senators from Virginia and to the committees before which hearings are to be held, the protest of this body against the appropriation of federal funds to parochial schools for any purpose whatsoever."

The Council asked Congress' Un-American Activities Committee to be as assiduous in its investigation of the Ku Klux Klan and the Columbians as it has been in pursuing subversive Communist groups. Both the Klan and the Columbians were attacked as being Fascist.

HARDSHIP FACES CLERGY

London (wireless to RNS):— Church members are faced with the responsibility of keeping clergy salaries up to "tolerable" levels in the face of current financial difficulties, the Archbishop of Canterbury declared at spring sessions of the Church of England Assembly here.

"Despite all done by the ecclesiastical commissioners, Queen Anne's bounty, and other central bodies, in recent decades to keep clergy incomes up to just a tolerable level," Dr. Fisher said, "there is a fresh and grave deterioration in their condition."

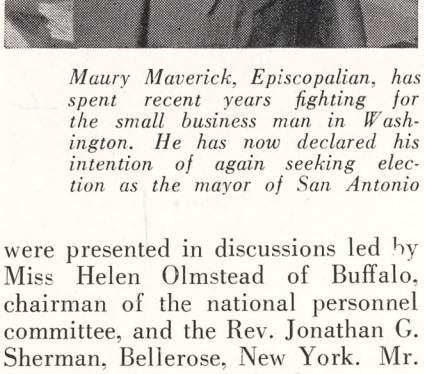
The Archbishop disclosed that this year 7,300 benefices which have local loans among endowment stocks will lose 49,500 pounds ($198,000). He said it is possible that next January, under the transport bill, an additional 1,500 benefices holding railway stocks will lose a total of 41,500 pounds ($166,000) yearly.

"At the same time," he warned, "the clergy will have to bear a steep rise in the cost of living, a high level of taxation, and heavy increases in rate contributions under the national insurance act. What was before just tolerable has become intolerable. There is no margin in clerical incomes to meet these demands, and the future prospect for most clergy is desperately hard."

Declaring the situation cannot be met by recourse to central funds, Dr. Fisher asserted that the responsibility for clergy maintenance must therefore fall on Church members. He added the clergy should be kept out of efforts to raise funds, which should be done "by the laity going to the laity."

EPISCOPAL SERVICE FOR YOUTH



New York:—Young people's need of a sense of values in the confusion of modern life was described by Mark McCloskey, a churchman and New York City board of education director of recreation and community activities, at the annual meeting of Episcopal Service for Youth, which took place February 13 and 14. "A terrific lot of kinetic energy is thrown loose on the world today," Mr. McCloskey said. "The pace of our time is a destroying thing. New kinds of problems grow out of the machine age, with its motor cars, movies, radio. Parents are not too well settled themselves. Young people have great capacities but they need a patient teaching of values, and they need to be given a sense of belonging."

Black market activities in babies, exploiting the mothers for financial gain, contrasted with the thorough study and activity carried on by reliable social agencies for the permanent good of parents, children and foster parents, were discussed by Miss Dorothy Hutchinson, associate professor of child welfare, New York School of Social Work.

Casework as part of the healing ministry of the Church was discussed by the Rev. Thomas J. Bigham, Jr., instructor at the General Theological Seminary, New York. General discussion brought out convictions that the difference between secular casework and Church casework is partly a difference of emphasis but also that the Church has a different foundation to work from, and a different aim.

Study homes, centers where study, diagnosis and treatment, corrective and preventive, are carried on continuously for adolescents, were described by Mrs. Aileen Burton, Community Service Society, New York, and Mrs. Ann Boyce Harris, Girls Service Bureau, Philadelphia.

Problems of finance and personnel were presented in discussions led by Miss Helen Olmstead of Buffalo, chairman of the national personnel committee, and the Rev. Jonathan G. Sherman, Bellerose, New York. Mr. Sherman had a panel whose members were the Rt. Rev. Theodore R. Ludlow, suffragan bishop of Newark, Miss Ethel Van Benthuysen of Albany, Mrs. Joseph Higgins, Chicago, and the Rev. John K. Mount, Jr., Baltimore.

Maury Maverick, Episcopalian, has spent recent years fighting for the small business man in Washington. He has now declared his intention of again seeking election as the mayor of San Antonio

The national executive, Miss Edith F. Balmford reported a continued increase in the demands made upon the society; personal and family readjustments, especially among young people, are numerous and acute, Miss Balmford stated.

DRAMATIC SOCIETY IN DIOCESE

Detroit:—A dramatic society, known as the Vesper Players, is making increasing contributions to the life of the diocese of Michigan. Under the direction of two churchmen, John Booty and David Farlow, it is staging benefit performances in many areas for the department of missions and for local parishes. It has already staged "Cinderella," the proceeds of which have gone toward the building of a new summer chapel. Plans are now being made to produce "Cinderella" again for the benefit of St. John's Church, Wayne, and to give Bernard Shaw's "St. Joan" in Ann Arbor, Michigan. The local church sells the tickets, and 60% of the proceeds go to the church.

Notices were sent out by the Vesper Players to all of the young people's fellowships in the greater Detroit area asking that all young people interested in acting and in the production of plays make contact with this growing organization.

SEEK TO CONVERT COMMUNISTS

Geneva: — The World Council of Churches held a conference here to discuss methods of converting communists to Christianity. It was attended by Protestant leaders from fifteen countries. Pastor Jean Lassere of France, one of the speakers, urged churches to "turn the communist cell technique backwards" and bore within communist circles. He said that communism and Christianity can find meeting points in common ideals of justice, brotherhood and mutual service, but declared that "there is the inevitable clash between communism and Christianity over the ideas of love and forgiveness and the meaning of the cross. Forgiveness is considered by communists to be weakness. Like the Nazis, they worship heroism."

The Rev. J. H. Cockburn of England, director of the Council's department of reconstruction and interchurch aid, was elected chairman of the conference and Edgar G. Homrighausen of the Federal Council of Churches in the U. S. was made first vice-chairman.

BISHOP SHERRILL THE SPEAKER

Trenton, N. J.:—Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill was the speaker at a service held here the afternoon of February 23, under the auspices of the Churchmen's Association of the diocese of New Jersey. The service was held in the War Memorial Building which was packed with men and boys from parishes throughout the diocese. A buffet supper followed the service.

Was Our Lord a Snob?

THE Gospel for the Second Sunday in Lent is hard reading for those Christians who hate discrimination on the basis of race, unless they assume, as they well may, that Jesus spoke to the Syrophoenecian woman with a twinkle in his eye. If there were any discrimination there it was going to be on the basis of her possible lack of understanding. He had no time in his three short years to act as a wonder worker among those whose gratitude would impede the true spiritual purpose of his ministry. Thus when his healings had been purely physical he said, "Tell no man"; when they had an element of forgiveness of sins he said, "Go show yourself to the priests."

The woman understood his twinkle and his point and thus he could help her. But he was not always so tentative in his dealings with people. That is why he knew that his time was going to be short.

Our Lord seems to have had two rules of discrimination. He sought the company only of those he could help spiritually. He was not polite to those who thought themselves better than others.

We might do well to practice both these rules this Lent, especially with those of our acquaintance who make a hobby of preaching race hate. The Christian ideal of brotherly love is not the same as the weak, wet, wabbly legged, would-be amiability of small puppies and inebriates.

"QUOTES"

IT IS FOOLISH of the Church to try to make an assistant Sunday school secretary out of a twenty-year-old who has been trusted with a $200,000 bomber over Europe. Instead the Church must demand that he be as expendable for Christ as he was for the government. Many veterans have returned with a definite sense of mission only to discover that the Church is playing at the fringe of life. They want the Church to stand up and fight sinister forces instead of proving helpless.

—Richard E. Plummer
Director of Adult Education Presbyterian Church

Demonstration Also

"THE word of God is not only for proclamation but also for demonstration." This quotation from the address of Joseph F. Fletcher at the Lincoln Day luncheon of the Church League for Democracy merits thoughtful consideration by Christian bodies in general and the six thousand or more parishes of the Protestant Episcopal Church in particular.

The word of God has been preached for something over four thousand years and Christianity has been proclaimed from the housetops for about two thousand. The times and places where the Christian way of life has been the accepted way have not always coincided with the greatest eloquence and the largest audiences. We are reminded of the old saying that "What you are speaks so loud that I can not hear what you say."

The CLID since its organization has believed in both proclamation and demonstration. There have been many who would assist when it was time to proclaim but they have frequently been a lonely band when it was time to demonstrate. The Church owes a great debt to the gallant few—and there are some of them in every parish—who are not content with their mission unless it includes the active witness of demonstrating their support to those causes and individuals who stand firm in their opposition to political, social and economic injustice.

Hats Off Department

IN ATLANTA last week a layman said to us: "I have never been so proud of my Church as now. Bishop Walker just preached a good sermon on the doctrine of man and divine judgment to the boys up there in the state house. I actually glowed in appreciation and pride. Then the papers carried the story that the clergy of the other diocese, led by Bishop Barnwell, unanimously condemned the 'white primary' bill, and he personally came to Atlanta and presented it to the senate committee. No wonder I am proud of my Church."

To a man the clergy of both dioceses in Georgia have opposed the bill which would effectively take the vote from both Negroes and poor white folks. Several of the clergy, including both Bishops, have testified at the hearings.

In the midst of the tensions that grip the state it took positive courage to make such a witness for Christianity and democracy. So we join our layman friend in saying that we, too, are proud, and we express our thanks to Bishop Barnwell, Bishop Walker and their clergy for the great service they have rendered the Church and the cause of democracy.

Our Relations to Russia

by Harry F. Ward

Professor Emeritus of Union Seminary

PROF. NIEBUHR'S attempt to improve our relations with Russia begins with a somewhat lengthy account of the difficulties in the undertaking and ends with only scant hope for their removal. At two of the points of conflict discussed we are given much needed positive directives. One to destroy the dogmatism which says that capitalism and communism cannot live in the same world. The other to lessen self righteousness on both sides. At the point of immediate danger—political-military strategy—the rather vague final counsel is apparently contradictory. "We must actually be willing to risk some immediate securities for the sake of establishing a greater degree of trust." But this involves the kind of strategic bargaining that will, we have been told, "always tend to incite, rather than allay, apprehensions because it assumes an ultimate conflict." On the basic question of totalitarianism we are given only tentative advice: "We may have to cease challenging some aspects of Russian rule in Eastern Europe, even though our democratic conscience is outraged."

The unstable and unethical nature of these two major conclusions requires us to ask whether the opposing forces and their relations have been correctly described; whether any essential factors have been left out of the picture; whether there is any other approach with more promise of overcoming the formidable difficulties in the undertaking.

The necessary task of destroying the "dogmatism" that says capitalism and communism cannot live in the same world is described in terms of dealing with a "Marxist dogma" in Russia and with "circles in America as fanatically devoted to the 'free enterprise system' as Russia is to communism." The actual situation is the opposite. In the Soviet Union the "dogma of an irreconcilable conflict" lost its vitality when Trotsky's policy of the "continuing revolution" was defeated, received its death warrant when Bukharin lost his philosophical leadership and, when he later lost his life for treason it gave up the ghost, to linger only among a few Marxist fundamentalists. Stalin's recent assertion to Elliot Roosevelt that capitalism and communism can live together is the third time within a year he has said that to foreign questioners. It is not merely his opinion. It is the collective decision of the Polit-Bureau, the Cabinet, and the philosophers' brain trust which is required to hold conferences on national policies before they are decided. This policy is based on the view that the inescapable struggle between declining capitalist and rising socialist society can be prevented from developing into more war, as the struggle between the feudal order and the capitalist order could not. The condition is that the democratic elements in capitalist society overcome its imperialist tendencies. That is why the Soviet government is supporting democratic forms of state capitalism in liberated countries and not trying to enforce a socialist economy. Out of bitter experience Soviet leaders have gained historical perspective.

In this country devotion to the "free enterprise system" is certainly not limited to fanatical circles. Preservation of that system is the proclaimed aim of all our political leaders—progressive, conservative and reactionary. Extension of that system is now a major objective of our foreign policy. Hence we are faced not merely with dogma, but with an imperative emerging from the nature of our economic system, to conceal whose identity the phrase "free enterprise" was coined by propaganda experts. That element is monopoly control which has now become dominant in finance and basic industry. It is a powerful source of the idea that war with Russia is inevitable because the increase of Soviet influence threatens its dominance and hinders its expansion.

Here we come face to face with a factor which gets only a few passing references in Prof. Niebuhr's discussion. It is the nature of two opposing economic systems and their respective influence upon the policies of the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R. upon whom the present fate of the world depends. In one glance at this factor the Soviet economy is called a "consistent collectivism" in contrast to a "consistent laissez faire." This means consistent state control against consistent hands off. Neither one nor the other exists anywhere today except in the minds of writers who work too much with ideas and too little with facts and moving forces. One glimpse at the Soviet Constitution of '36, a day's reading of the Soviet press, or any article on its economy, will show three forms of socialist enterprise and property—state, cooperative and private; also a combination of three groups in the administration and in the unifying control of the economic plan—government officials, technical experts and managers, workers. The Soviet Union is prepared by experience to take part in developing the world community which will, as Prof. Niebuhr states, have to be pluralistic. But, to be able to progress, it will have to be held together by a unifying principle, as the Soviet Union is.

This is a critical appraisal of the chapter with the same name in Christianity Takes a Stand, which may be purchased by sending 30c to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y. Dr. Ward has made two extended visits to the Soviet Union for study; one for an academic year. It resulted in the book, In Place of Profit, the only study of Soviet incentives to be published in English. It was brought up to date and republished with the title, Soviet Spirit, in 1944. Dr. Ward also published the first analysis of the 1st Soviet Constitution of 1919 in this country and has been a lecturer and writer on Soviet life ever since.

Prof. Niebuhr's proposal to lessen the self righteousness that is indeed "one of the fruitful causes of friction" fails to realize the possibilities of his religious insight. It tends to encourage the attitude of moral superiority it seeks to remove because it sees us as "slightly less self righteous" than the Russians. Is that a correct comparison? Where in their record is there any of the hypocrisy shown in our pretense of holding the atomic bomb as a trust? Or in our notes about free elections in Eastern Europe after our record in the deep South, our behaviour in Korea, our complicity in Greece? The Soviet people have an equally flaming scorn for the moral platitudes that adorn the speeches and reports of our representatives in the United Nations. Soviet criticisms of us are sometimes exaggerated but always concrete. Their attitude of superiority is rather a sense of the rightness of their system than a claim of righteousness; for example the claim that it is more democratic than ours. This is not a matter of moral attitude but, of facts, one way or the other.

PROF. NIEBUHR recognizes that Russian Communists are not morally cynical, that they do not worship power for its own sake. Yet his one specification in the charge that they are more self righteous than we is that, according to their communist religion, "a nation which has gone through a revolution is not imperialistic and is free of all the vices of lust for power which other nations betray." This assertion is as unfounded as their pretension would be if they indulged in it. Their claim that they are not imperialist is based on the nature of their economic system. The basis and aim of imperialist power is the exaction of economic tribute, whether it be by the loot of conquering armies, by trade for all the profit the traffic will bear, or by acquiring natural resources and cheap labor through investment expansion. The Soviet assertion is that their economy removes the main source of imperialism in the modern world, the need to export goods, machinery and capital for profit, and to search for cheap labor in other lands.

They also point to the fact that all the races and nationalities which come into the Soviet Union are given equality of opportunity—political, economic, cultural, social. Prof. Niebuhr mentions the strategic reason behind the Soviet request for a trusteeship over Libya. Their press mentioned another. They said they wanted to show that a socialist nation could bring backward peoples to complete independence quicker than capitalist nations had done.

Instead of thinking they are "free of all the vices of lusts for power" one of the aims of the Soviet educational system, and of their practice of "self criticism," is to prevent the development of the tendencies to power inherent in the individual. For the checking of those inherent in state, nature and political life they have successively developed various devices that are impossible in capitalist society.

The imperialist element in our present economic expansion is being concealed by the phrase "freedom of economic opportunity," because if its real nature is seen the democratic conscience of the American people will be roused against it. Hence Prof. Niebuhr's effective use of Paul's injunction: "Whosoever thou art that judgest, thou thyself doest the same thing," needs to be turned more powerfully upon our nation. To be effective the ethical know-how of Jesus needs to be added, about the mote and the beam, the speck of dust and the splinter. Even if it is a case of two splinters the only way we can see clearly enough to help the other fellow is to start getting rid of ours.

This ethical method of Jesus needs to be used also in the conflict arising from "political-military strategy." Here again the picture given us is incomplete. The generalization that each side is "planning unilateral systems of defense," and so is equally responsible for hindering the building of mutual security leaves out too much. Surely the Soviet Union is no such potential threat to our security as we are to theirs. Our correspondents agree there is no psychological preparation for war there as there is here. The Soviet Union could not fight an offensive war against us. It is not a naval power. Its reduced military budget provides only for defense of the home land. Our stockpiling of bombs, experiments in long flight bombers and self guided planes, our research in deadly bacteria prepare for the offensive war these weapons call for. Our far-flung bases are defensive only in relation to our expanded investment areas. A pipe line from Saudi Arabia to the Mediterranean has become, even to Prof. Niebuhr, "our life line."

He recognizes that the Russians are not aggressive as the Nazis were, that they "need peace not war," that if they get into war "they will stumble into it while seeking security; and so will we." The difference is that with us security for hearth and home is being transformed into security for the kind of investment expansion that in the end has no protection against the union of the needs of the people with the principles and examples of socialist society. Experience has shown that no weapons no matter how deadly; no wars no matter how successful, can win anything for our type of economy but more debt, more bankruptcies, more unemployment. To win security, for ourselves and for others, we have to follow the path on which we are now turning our back by our actions on relief and food . . . the path of United Nations planning and action for world-wide economic development according to the aims and principles set forth in the Atlantic and UN charters, and before them in the declarations of our Churches.

ACROSS that path Prof. Niebuhr puts an impassable barrier when he accepts and repeats the propaganda phrase which classifies the Soviet system as another "totalitarianism." If that is true the effort to get collaboration between the United States and the Soviet Union to establish security and peace is doomed to failure. The only possible foundation for that great undertaking is the continuing extension of democracy; and between democracy and totalitarianism there is indeed irreconcilable conflict. By its nature, and the law of self preservation, each is compelled to seek the ending of the other. That is why those who want war with Russia spread the idea that the Soviet Union is a totalitarian state. Fortunately for the future of mankind the facts do not support the charge. A political system is totalitarian when it gives all power to the state, makes it the be all and end all to which the individual must yield his freedom, his conscience, his life. The Soviet view of the state is completely the contrary. It holds that at its best the state is still evil because it is repressive by nature. It looks forward to a time when this necessary evil will be replaced by more democratic forms of association and control.

It is incorrect to think that the presence of only one party makes a government totalitarian. That happens only when one party creates a totalitarian state in order to exercise total power itself. One party rule in the deep South is certainly undemocratic but its states' rights, anti-collectivist legislators are certainly not totalitarians. The main point is that the Soviet Communist party is not a political party in our sense of the term. It is a leadership organization designed to guide the people in the transition from feudal to socialist society and is supposed to make itself unnecessary in time. So far Soviet history shows a gradual distribution of the power almost entirely monopolized by the party in early years. The organization of the "party and non-party bloc" in last year's Supreme Soviet election is some guarantee of the continuance of this movement.

It is also an error to equate acts of repression with "totalitarianism." They are on the record of every democratic nation, including our own. Sometimes they are the exercise, and the excesses, of the constitutional right in an emergency to prevent anti-democratic forces from seizing power. Sometimes they are the expression of anti-democratic forces within the government. In the Soviet Union the undoubted, and admitted, excesses of repression in times of danger have checked, but not stopped, the over-all movement toward more democracy. Once the record is examined there is no question about the aim of the Soviet system being to develop socialist democracy as a higher form than that of capitalist society, and to proceed from that to a still higher form in communist society.

Lenin grounded the Soviet system in the basic democratic principles of liberty and equality. The commission that drafted the constitution of '36 was instructed to write the "most democratic constitution in the world, that is one that most fully expresses the will of the people." Lenin, like Lincoln, had taught the people that this was the essence of democracy. Founders of totalitarian states don't do that. The story of the nature of working of the economic plan which is the guiding control of Soviet life, and the record of recent elections, show an increasing expression of the will of the people, the opposite of the history of totalitarian states.

Here is the ground for another approach to the problem of American-Soviet relations, with more promise than that from which Prof. Niebuhr and our current diplomacy start. They view the situation in terms of two centers of power. Today a great power is one that can wage war upon another great power. So their effort is primarily to seek an adjustment between war potentials. When the situation is approached in terms of two developing democracies the task becomes the mutual unfolding of peace potentials. The development of democracy provides a community of interest, the only one capable of replacing the common interest of the war. The positive factors on both sides, omitted from Prof. Niebuhr's discussion, emerge to influence the situation. The condition of success is the overcoming of anti-democratic tendencies on both sides. For us this means the curbing and ending of our economic imperialism which is a threat to both our own democratic advance and that of the areas it penetrates. This road of mutual democratic development requires no compromise of conscience like the dangerous road of strategic bargaining. It is the only road that expresses the social principles of our Churches and gives any promise of peace.

Strategy and Tactics

by

FRANCIS O. AYRES
Rector of St. John's, Waterbury, Connecticut

EVERYONE who understands the work of the Church in the world today will have nothing but praise for the decision of General Convention to increase the missionary budget of the Church and to raise the fund of $1,000,000 for famine relief and reconstruction. Personally, I hope that the money available for the whole missionary endeavor of the Church will be doubled in the next ten years—i.e., I hope the giving will increase one hundred per cent over the figure raised last year, instead of stopping at the projected fifty per cent. Furthermore, I believe it can be done, on two conditions. The first is that the individual parishes of the Church must become fired with the missionary possibilities in their own communities. The second condition is that we develop new ways of raising money for missions. I would like to discuss this second condition here.

The red side of the envelope is a proved method of raising missionary funds. Needless to say, there are few parishes in which the giving through this medium cannot be greatly increased. Before this is possible, in most cases, the people of a parish must be given the opportunity to work together to supplement the regular giving. Most parishes once had large organizations which performed such important tasks as making clothing, rolling bandages, etc., for the mission field. For a number of reasons, such work has been rapidly disappearing, and I do not believe it can be revived. Something must take its place, for in the common endeavor women learned about the missionary work of the Church and found a personal interest in it. Moreover, it provided an outward and visible sign that the Church really was interested in missions.

Every parish should have something like a bazaar, auction, supper, or street fair in which men, as well as women, could work together for missions. I once suggested to an official of the Church that the National Council put out pamphlets on such subjects as "How to run an auction," or "How to run a street fair," for there are many facts about such projects that are valuable to beginners. The answer was: "And why not one on bingo?" This seems to me to display not only an unrealistic attitude about the present condition of the Church, but also a spirit which is aging rapidly around the edges. Auctions and street fairs are fun, and there need be no gambling in either. The man who no longer enjoys spending a dollar or two throwing baseballs at wooden bottles or darts at balloons is a man who needs to be reborn. Many small parishes are strategically located in summer colonies. Individually, or in conjunction with two or three other parishes, they could hold street fairs which would give people real pleasure and solve the problem of their missionary giving. Furthermore, a number of pagans might learn something about the importance of missions. Larger parishes could accomplish the results within their own constituencies or communities. There are, of course, many parishes which are already doing this kind of thing. There should be many more.

Two projects which have recently come to my attention hold great possibilities. The first is in the Church of the Holy Spirit in Orleans on Cape Cod. Although I do not know the full story, the parish under the leadership of the rector and his wife have developed a wide variety of craftsmanship among the members of the parish. The finished work, or a large proportion of it, is contributed to the parish and sold to members of the community and to summer visitors of whom there are a great number. Ten years ago there was no church; now there is a full parish life. A great deal of the growth has been made possible by this project. Certainly, the opportunities for creative work today are few and far between, and the provision of such opportunities is essential to the development of full Christian personality. A parish could do no greater service for its members than finding the leadership and the working space for such activity. The funds thus contributed to the parish and to missions would be, in all sincerity, a secondary matter, but they would be, nonetheless, important.

The second project is one developed by lay people of St. Mark's, Foxboro, Mass., at a time when there was no rector in the parish. Faced by the cost of buying a rectory, they opened "The Trading Post" in which they sell articles either given outright to the church, or left for sale on a commission basis. In a small town, a small parish, (105 communicants), will come very close to buying a new rectory and paying for it within a year, through the common effort of its lay members. The same means could be used to raise money for missions.

It seems to me that a larger parish, a group of small parishes, or a diocese (acting for all its parishes) could open a Trading Post which would combine what has been done by the Church of the Holy Spirit, and St. Mark's. The common endeavor and the outward and visible sign thus provided would go a long way toward making the Church's interest in and support of missions what they ought to be.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

'Keep Silence Before Him'

IF MEMORY does not fail me I read somewhere that Mozart said that the rest, the silent beat, was the most important thing in music. The rest clarifies melody and rhythm and so assists the mind's ear to give steadier attention to a piece and hence grasp its structure and content with greater understanding. The same principle applies to the use of silence in liturgical worship. God reveals Himself and communes with us in the silence no less than in 'the voice of his word.'

But many of our congregations are afraid of silence. It bores them or embarrasses them to be left for even one moment to their own spiritual resources. Their common worship is like the radio in some of their homes, one continous noise and sound. Their organists' hands itch to cover every single transition from one part of a service to another; especially if the officiating clergyman is a bit sluggish, and fails to 'beat it' to altar, lectern or pulpit before canticle or hymn is finished. And who of us has not heard the minister, after some martial processional of Sir Arthur Sullivan's, rush to say the opening sentence: 'The Lord is in his holy temple: let all the earth keep silence before him,' and, hardly pausing to take a breath, proceed to 'Dearly beloved brethren, the Scripture moveth us, etc?'

Periods of corporate silence are of ancient tradition in Christian worship. Indeed they are rooted in the worship of Judaism, whether in temple or synagogue. Silence may cover the prayer of adoration, of penitence or of intercession. The silent prayer of intercession is particularly ancient in the Church's liturgical tradition, and it still survives in the Good Friday rite of the Roman Missal. The celebrant bids a prayer, then the congregation kneels in silence for a space until the deacon bids them rise for the celebrant's 'summing-up' collect. There is no reason why we should not use this method in our own Prayer Book liturgy whether for the intercessions of the Daily Office or the 'authorized prayers' after the Creed in Holy Communion. Let the officiant give a simple bidding: 'Let us pray for . . .,' then pause in silence for a half-minute while the congregation directs its thought to the subject. His summing-up prayer or collect will receive much better attention and will be the more readily understood. Sometimes instead of a bidding it is helpful to introduce the period of silence with a well-chosen passage of Holy Scripture, comparable to the versicle and response.

Another possibility in the use of silence is the provision for such a period at the close of the intercessions and before the General Thanksgiving. Each single worshipper will be thus afforded an opportunity to add his own particular prayer or thanksgiving to the common offering. There is a famous passage in the Book of Revelation (8:1) which says that at the opening of the seventh seal "there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour." Dr. R. H. Charles in his learned commentary on this verse says: "The praises of the highest orders of angels in heaven are hushed that the prayers of all the suffering saints on earth may be heard before the throne. Their needs are of more concern to God than all the psalmody of heaven."

Significant actions in the liturgy are often enhanced by silence—the entrance of choir and clergy, the Gospel procession, the Offertory procession. They do not need to be covered over with music, least of all with an organist's extemporizations—and how trivial many of them are! The silent intent of all upon the important act which is to be performed is dramatically expressive and effective. Perhaps the best use of silence in all its climactic power is immediately before the act of communion. Yet this opportunity is all too often missed by the haste of choir and congregation to sing something, the Agnus Dei or a hymn perhaps, the minute the priest has finished the Prayer of Humble Access. If only we would wait just a few moments at this place and give Almighty God a chance to say something, or even to give ourselves a chance to pour out before Him the unutterable gift of entire self-oblation.

Church Gets Farm For Center For Rural Workers

Kansas City Editor Gives His Large Farm Which Will Be Operated as Training Center

Edited by Sara Dill

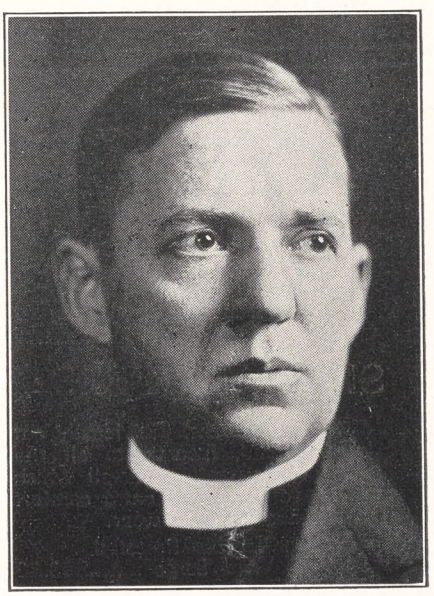
Kansas City, Mo.: — Wilber A. Cochel and his wife, Church members of this city, have completed transfer of a 320-acre farm in Platte County, Missouri, to the Church for use as a training center for rural Church workers. It will be used by clergy, students and other Church leaders who will be trained in actual farm work.

During the past two summers the farm has been used by the town-county institute of the Church, and this is now being expanded into a year-round program. A permanent dormitory will eventually be erected on the property.

Mr. Cochel, who was chairman of the committee on arrangements for the General Convention, meeting here in 1940, is editor of a farm journal and developed the farm as a center for demonstrating proper land use and soil improvement. A board of seven trustees will operate the property for the Church, with Mr. David T. Beals, local banker, as president and Bishop Benjamin D. Dagwell of Oregon as the vice-president.

Reaches Palestine

New York:—After four months of delay and travel, the Rev. Walter C. Klein has arrived in Jerusalem to begin his work as Episcopal chaplain working under the Anglican bishop.



Hit Discrimination

Moline, Ill.:—A group of ministers here and in neighboring cities, with a number of labor leaders, adopted a resolution denouncing racial prejudice in employment. It was adopted at a meeting called to consider treatment given a Negro mechanic by some fellow employees of the International Harvester Co., who walked off the job because the Negro was promoted.

Naval Bases

Grand Rapids, Mich.:—The determination of the United States to hold permanently the naval bases seized during the war refutes our talk of world brotherhood, the Rev. David D. Baker, St. Louis, Mo., former missionary to Japan, asserted in an address before ministers and lay workers in missionary education attending the annual meeting of the International Council of Religious Education held here.

Speaking on world evangelization, which is the 1947-48 study theme of the 40 Protestant denominations represented at the meeting, Baker warned that too many American churches are more concerned about "keeping the roof repaired than they are about drawing the whole world, including Russia, into a spiritual fellowship."

Bishop Dagwell of Oregon is vice-chairman of the trustees of the new Church center in Missouri

"Until we do something about race segregation in the Christian church in America, we might as well whistle at the moon as to talk about the evangelization of the world," he concluded.

Attacks Communism

St. Paul, Minn. (RNS):—Church members should unite in a common battle against communism to save Christianity, so they were told by the Rev. Andreas Bard of Kansas City, speaking here at the Minnesota's pastors' conference. Bard, a Lutheran, said that the age-old conflict between belief and un-belief is rapidly coming to a climax in the Christianity-communism battle. He pictured Christianity as "upholding faith and hope and love" but said that communism "stands for destruction and the dethronement of all ideals pertaining to religion. The two views of life presented in these two camps are absolutely incompatible."

Also speaking at the meeting was the Rev. Robert W. Searle, director of community relations for the Protestant Council of New York, who said that the "whole body of human society, from the national to the individual level, is undergoing a disintegrating process caused by the most materialistic age in history. Our forms of religion have been preserved but materialism has so permeated society as to make us a godless people."

Youth Meeting

Lynchburg, Va.:—There were 27 parishes represented by the 165 young people who attended a conference here called by the youth commission of the diocese of Southwestern Virginia. The theme was "The Significance of the United Movement of the Church's Youth" with a number of speeches and seminar discussions. A highlight of the meeting was an address by the Rev. Robert A. Magill of St. John's, here, who told of his recent visit to the Far East.

Looking Forward

Detroit:—The theme of the round table fellowship of the diocese of Michigan, meeting for five successive Monday evenings at St. Joseph's here, is "The Church Looks Forward." The lecturer on the 24th was Canon Theodore Wedel of Washington Cathedral. Others are to be the Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell of Chicago; the Rev. Joseph R. Sizoo of Brunswick, N. J.; the Rev. Richard C. Raines of Minneapolis and Bishop Emrich.

Visit Delayed

Berlin (wireless to RNS):—The proposed visit of Bishop Otto Dibelius to the United States has been postponed until the return of Pastor Niemoeller. According to spokesmen here the trip was delayed in order to evaluate the results of Pastor Niemoeller's visit.

Boiler Trouble

Savannah, Ga.:—Boiler trouble of a freighter, on which they were to return to China, resulted in three missionaries making speeches in churches here recently. Sister Louise of the Community of the Transfiguration spoke at St. Paul's; Miss Laura Clarke spoke at St. John's and Mr. Harbinson, a lay teacher, spoke at St. Michael's.

Arizona Convocation

Phoenix, Ariz.:—The convocation of the district of Arizona instructed the secretary to write the state's Senators and Congressmen urging the inclusion of lay employees of the Church in the social security act. Bishop Kinsolving in his address reported that the bureau of Indian Affairs had "given us the right of way among the Havasu Indians and we should continue that work or turn it over to others." He also pointed out that every missionary clergyman of the district had received an increase of $400 in salary to help meet the increased cost of living.

Lenten Preachers

Charleston, S. C.:—Bishop Thomas Carruthers led off the first week at the noonday Lenten services being held at St. Michael's here, and sponsored by an interparochial committee of laymen. Other preachers are Dean Claude Sprouse of Kansas City; Dean Kirk O'Ferrall of Detroit; Bishop Hart of Pennsylvania; Bishop Lawrence of Western Massachusetts; the Rev. Don Frank Fenn of Baltimore; Bishop Sterrett of Bethlehem.

Leads Quiet Day

Waterboro, S. C.:—Bishop Carruthers conducted a quiet day here on February 12th, sponsored by the diocesan Auxiliary. He gave six meditations on the petitions of the Lord's Prayer.

Church Papers Hit

London (Wireless to RNS):—All religious weeklies in Great Britain have been ordered suspended for at least two weeks under a last minute decree issued by the government as a part of its emergency fuel and power conservation measures.

Equal Rights

Augusta, Me.: — Clergymen and others representing Church groups voiced strong support for an equal rights bill now before the Maine legislature. Leading the Church forces was Mrs. Marion Bradshaw, member of the committee on social education and action of the state's council of churches, who asserted that every act of racial discrimination "helps to dig the grave of democracy." Bishop Loring of Maine was represented by the Rev. John T. Knight of Waterville, who said the legislation would "not correct all the inequalities but it is one step. It is a club that we need; there are many in the human race who do not understand any other form of persuasion."

The bill was introduced by Senator Ruth T. Clough at the request of students at Colby College as a result of a Waterville hotel refusing to serve a Negro student.

Progressive Action

St. Louis: — Resolutions favoring the enactment of the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill which would establish the federal housing authority, and also one favoring a legislative act to give legal status to the local planning commission so as to enable it to promote adequate housing projects, were passed by the convention of the diocese of Missouri. Another resolution favored a minimum wage law for the state, with wage boards to be composed of representatives of industry, labor and the public. The convention also went on record as being for a permanent fair employment practices commission and instructed its own department of social relations, headed by the Rev. Charles C. Wilson, to work against all discriminatory practices against Negroes and other racial minorities.

Back Lilienthal

Washington, D. C.:—Nine religious groups were among the 21 national organizations to sign a statement deploring recent attacks on the Acheson-Lilienthal report on international control of atomic energy. The statement declared that "only world law in atomic energy can bring us security and peace. This is the last field in which we should permit partisan politics, not the first. Atoms are not Republican or Demo-

Referring to the appointment of David E. Lilienthal, the Rev. A. Powell Davies, spokesman for the group, declared that "We cannot afford to lose any capable public servant whose work can be vital to success in this field."

It Would Help

New York:—Chaplain James H. Terry, stationed at the Fitzsimons General Hospital, Denver, Colorado, never imagined that a knowledge of the Chinese language would come in handy. He knows better now, according to the army and navy division of the National Council. In a recent report Chaplain Terry tells of a celebration of the Holy Communion for a Chinese flight officer and an American-born Japanese from Hawaii. In the same ward are twelve Chinese air corps cadets who want to be baptized, instructed and confirmed. None of them speak English. Chaplain Terry is arranging to give instructions through an interpreter, and the army and navy division is scouring the country to locate a dozen New Testaments and Prayer Books in Chinese.

No Mass Revival

Toyko (wireless to RNS):—The Japanese people are undoubtedly interested in Christianity and what it can do for their country, but there is no revival sweeping the land as has been claimed in recent reports. Despite many optimistic predictions both here and in the United States, no evidence exists that any mass movement into the Christian Church is about to take place, according to missionaries who are closely in touch with the situation today.

Sixteen months after surrender the Protestant Churches are still absorbed in problems of scattered congregations, lack of places to meet, insufficient pastoral support, frozen funds, and especially, at present, difficult transportation conditions. Congestion is so great that a regular speaking and touring schedule is impractical.

Toyohiko Kagawa's meetings do not appear to be attracting much notice beyond the group directly interested in promoting them. Kagawa is still the greatest drawing card for mass evangelism. He is giving his full time to the three-year evangelistic campaign sponsored by the United Church of Christ in Japan with the slogan "Three Million Souls for Christ."

However, the "twenty thousand converts" claimed for the past six months are not baptized Christians, but those who signed cards at meetings stating their intention or desire to learn more about Christianity, or perhaps their intention to become Christians. The number who actually join the church is said to be only a fraction of the card signers.

spiritual vitality, are straining to get their churches on a sound basis. There are a number of local speakers who are quietly helping them to bring the church back to a higher level. But no mass movement or even spectacular growth has yet appeared.

Race Relations

Cleveland (RNS): — A three-day race relations institute sponsored here by 20 religious and civic groups brought to light that Cleveland is making gradual progress in the major phases of its race relations but much must yet be accomplished. Among major racial problems considered at the sessions were education, housing, recreation, and employment.

Action projects outlined by the institute included support of a proposed municipal ordinance to license amusement parks to prevent discrimination against any group in the use of its facilities, support of state legislation for a fair employment practices bill, and relief for the plight of dependent children. This last dealt with the "problem of discrimination against dependent Negro children in Cleveland orphanages."

Prof. Maynard Krueger of the University of Chicago, speaking at the final session, said breaking the pattern of discrimination is one of the most important approaches to the solution of race problems. "To get at the basic root of the race problem, it is necessary to realize that the first spring that gives any leverage over the problem is the making of discriminatory actions illegal," he stated.

Snakes Outlawed

Richmond (RNS):—Biblical quotations echoed through the historic hall of the Virginia House of Delegates as the House debated and then overwhelmingly passed a bill making it unlawful for any person to handle poisonous reptiles in public gatherings in such a manner as to endanger human life. The bill, requested by Governor William M. Tuck, already had passed the state senate.

Purpose of the legislation is to outlaw the handling of snakes by a Southwest Virginia cult which indulges in this practice as a demonstration of faith. Several persons have died from bites received during such demonstrations.

One delegate made a spirited attack on the proposed legislation, declaring it violated the principle of religious freedom. He said snake-handling may be repulsive to the vast majority of people but that to the cult members it was their way of worshipping. He warned that passage of the bill might lead to "tampering with and regulating" other churches.

"These people have no voice here," the delegate told his colleagues. "They don't even speak our language. They are different from city churches and city preachers. Yet their religion is just as vital and dear to them. . . . Maybe if some of the other churches had snakes, they'd get a better attendance."

Surpass Parents

Cambridge, Mass. (RN:):—Postwar students at Harvard and Radcliffe Colleges are more religious than their parents and elders were in the 20's and 30's is the belief of Prof. Gordon W. Allport, Harvard University psychologist. He reported that a survey of 400 students revealed that 82 per cent of the girls and 68 per cent of the boys felt they required "some form of religious orientation of belief in order to achieve a fully mature philosophy of life."

Prof. Allport said that while 53 per cent of modern college students are religious, they regard denominational distinctions as being "outworn and unnecessary."

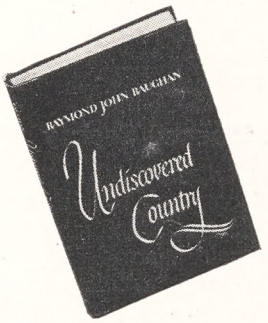
Pastoral Counseling

Boston:—An interdenominational pastoral counseling center has been established in The Cathedral Church of St. Paul. Following an experimental period of several months during 1946 when the center was staffed by professional and lay persons who were interested in such service being provided, the response of the community verified the need and led to the establishment.

The pastoral counseling center is a project of the Institute of Pastoral Care, and the Cathedral Church of St. Paul. Director of the center is the Rev. Henry H. Wiesbauer, who has completed graduate study in clinical pastoral training as well as the master's program in social case work.



A board of advisors, which meets bi-monthly and guides both the director and the executive committee in matters of general policy, includes Dr. John W. Monks, an internist; Dr. Robert Fleming, psychiatrist; Prof. Gordon W. Allport and Dr. Stanley Estes, psychologists; Miss Marguerite Meyer, family case worker; the Rev. David Hunter; the Rev. Robert C. Yarborough; Rabbi Albert A. Goldman; Chaplain James H. Burns; the Rev. Rollin J. Fairbanks; Mrs. Basha Powers; Mrs. Harriet Brown; Mrs. Nina Lee; Pro. Paul E. Johnson; the Very Rev. Christ or Confusion

Edited by H. Torrey Walker

In the 20th Century we must choose Christ or confusion. The answer is given in this new book of eighteen Lenten sermons by well known pastors, edited by a prominent layman. Sermons are for Sundays preceding and during Lent, Ash Wednesday, days of Holy Week and Easter. CHRIST OR CONFUSION is a cross section of Lenten preaching.

the Rev. Francis H. McPeek of Washington tell of the political obligations of the Protestant Church. State representatives, unusually busy with a flood of proposed legislation as the deadline for submitting new bills approached, took time off to receive the churchmen and discussed with them pending legislation dealing with the social, educational and moral welfare of the state. Much of the seminar time was devoted to procedure in securing information on legislative matters and making individual or group opinions felt. The churchmen had a first-hand source of information in one of their number, the Rev. Charles X. Hutchinson of East Hartford, who was formerly a representative to the Connecticut general assembly.

A Planned Society

London (wireless to RNS):—A planned society, while necessary, holds the threat of national suicide and totalitarianism if individual initiative and responsibility are lacking, the Archbishop of Canterbury warned in a sermon preached at Sittingbourne, Kent.

"In this congested world," he declared, "we can't get on without a planned society, but it is an immense danger if it merely means orders issued from above which people just have to put up with and obey. This is the beginning of national suicide and totalitarianism."

The only way in which to avert this danger, Dr. Fisher suggested, is for every member of the community to be "alert, responsible and enterprising," putting into action "the power of individual initiative."

Negro Rights

Atlanta (RNS): — Representatives of 600 Baptist youth organizations in Georgia have adopted a "minimum bill of rights" for Georgia's Negro citizens. Introduced before a meeting of the Royal Ambassadors, who represent the youth groups, the measure calls for the right to vote, the right to equal education, the right to serve on juries when cases involve Negroes, equal pay for equal work, and the right to work when qualified.

Adoption of the "bill of rights" at a time when the state general assembly was moving to enact "white supremacy" voting laws included in the late Gov.-Elect Eugene Talmadge's platform drew wide press comment.

The "bill of rights" has been recommended to the home chapters of the youth groups.

RT. REV. FRANK W. STERRETT
The Bishop of Bethlehem

THE WITNESS for January 30, 1947, carried an article describing certain reactions to the opinion of John Foster Dulles expressed in public addresses on January 17th and 25th, in which he favored some kind of economic unification of Europe. THE WITNESS article maintained that this position was regarded by a number of churchmen as so much at variance with the pronouncement of the Federal Council commission, of which he is chairman, that some were calling for his resignation.

While I at times disagree vigorously with my friend, the writer of this column, I have a warm regard for him and respect his right to his opinion. I wish, however, that he had in this instance asked for and also included the opinions of some who welcomed and were not alarmed by Mr. Dulles' statement and who might have recalled that he made such a proposal in September 1941, while serving as chairman of this commission, a fact that would seem to indicate that his present stand is certainly not against anybody but for a positive solution to a difficult problem, and that, therefore, some of these fears were without too strong a foundation.

But that which really disturbs me is the editorial in the same issue, which, being unsigned, I assume represents the studied opinion of various members of the editorial board, maintaining that because Mr. Dulles has taken this position he should resign his position as chairman of the Federal Council commission. I feel that I must take issue with this statement for a number of reasons. First because I know Mr. Dulles and believe him to be a sincere Christian who has no ill will toward any race or nation, but is trying to do everything in his power not only for our own people, but to promote a just and durable peace for all mankind. This is not the place to go into detail as to the grounds of this confidence. You must depend on what you know of me in deciding whether or not I would make such a statement carelessly.

In the second place I have become convinced not only that Mr. Dulles' plan for some such European federation is essential if chaos is to be avoided, but that his program of fairness plus firmness (not "toughness") for what we believe to be right has by far the best chance of providing a strong foundation for world peace, and that, therefore his position is not out of accord with that of the commission of which he is the head.

But my main reason for regretting your editorial rests on the conviction that since I know him to be an honest and able man who is trying to further world peace, even if I disagree with his judgment in this instance I certainly would not feel that would make it necessary for him to resign the position that he has held with such distinction. I believe the Church needs and should be proud to have the services of men like this Christian layman whether or not we always agree with him, and I would regret to see the Christian Churches accepting for high posts only those who hold to generalities and hesitate to take a strong stand.

I am happy to report that there are many who feel as I do, and while most of you editorial gentlemen are my good and respected friends, I am sure you will understand my saying that this time I hope that Mr. Dulles will not follow the advice contained in your editorial but will hold his post and continue to carry on.

ANSWER: The question at issue is not the sincerity of Mr. Dulles' Christianity, nor his honesty and ability. Our request for his resignation was based upon analysis of the specific features of the economic plan for Germany which Mr. Dulles has just proposed. The question is whether our statement of his plan is exact; whether our judgment concerning its relation to the principles and objectives of the United Nations and the Churches is sound.

Unless error can be shown it must follow that it is inappropriate and self defeating for the Churches to keep in high office one whose course moves in a direction opposite to that in which he has been commissioned to lead their constituency.

A friend lent me THE WITNESS for January 9 in which I read "The Study Plan for Lent." As there will be, so I am informed, no class here I am asking if I may form a class of one. That Christians generally are "terrified at the social dynamite in the Gospel" there is no doubt. One does not live past seventy without finding it out.

ANSWER: we will be glad to send a copy of Christianity Takes a Stand and the ten numbers of THE WITNESS dealing with the chapters in the book if you will send name and address, with one dollar, to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N.Y.

CONSTRUCTIVE READING FOR LENT

We suggest: THE CONFESSIONS OF ST. AUGUSTINE in F. J. Sheed's new translation ($3.00) in which this classic seems so startlingly modern, or THE COMPLETE WORKS OF ST. TERESA translated from the new Spanish edition by Allison Peers. This comes in sets of three volumes and costs $15.00. But it will not only provide spiritual reading for the whole of Lent: it will be a lifelong treasure as well.

Three small but meaty books are HIS WILL IS OUR PEACE ($1.25) by Gerald Vann, O.P. author of the DIVINE PITY ($2.50) which everybody loves, ST. CATHERINE OF GENOA: The Treatise on Purgatory and the Dialogue, ($2.00) two spiritual classics bound in one cover, recently praised in The Living Church, and CREATIVE LOVE by Father Martindale ($1.00) six readings for Holy Week on God's love for us and what ours ought to be for Him.

For the clergy we recommend A RETREAT FOR PRIESTS ($2.00) by that man of many talents, Ronald Knox. His translation of the NEW TESTAMENT ($3.00 plain, $5.00 illustrated) has now been followed by THE PSALMS ($2.00). Oddly enough this version in clear modern prose reads more like poetry than any other version we have seen.

Stassen Says Trade Agreements Necessary For Peace

Trade for Benefit of People Everywhere Is Only Sound Policy for Worldwide Peace

Edited by W. B. Spofford

New York:—Harold E. Stassen, whose comments on the United Nations appears in this number, left by plane on February 23 for a two months' tour of Europe where he will observe economic conditions. He is to visit England, France, Russia and Yugoslavia.

Prior to leaving he delivered an important address here which deals with American economic life and its effect on the world situation. It is presented, in part, with the belief that it will be useful to discussion groups as supplementary to his brief article found elsewhere.

Speaking of American economic life, Mr. Stassen said:

"We have attained an amazing productive ability. Through the fundamentals of our free economy, with free labor, private capital, individual management, and independent agriculture we have reached the point where one-sixteenth of the world's peoples within our borders are producing more than one-fourth of all the world's goods and services. By the grace of God and the stalwart fighting of our armed forces and those of our Allies, our homeland is untouched by war. We are now the great creditor nation of the world.

"We desire for the future a continued high standard of living, with jobs to be had for all who wish to work, with abundant production and wide distribution of goods and services, with ample profits, and with an excellent parity income for agriculture, all with the maintenance of individual freedom for our citizens in a world at peace.

"We wish to see the peoples in other lands likewise make progress for higher standards of living, with more and better food and clothing and shelter, with an increased measure of individual freedom, and to share with us in a world at peace."

The former governor of Minnesota then gave the opinion that the United States must give up all remnants of a policy of economic isolation and move forward in a new policy of world-wide economic participation, with an increasing flow of goods and materials and services and travel around the world. He then pointed out factors that make this essential.

"First of these is the tremendous increase in our productivity. . . . Second, we have developed tremendous capital resources and have become the great creditor nation of the world, so that we need high investment of capital at home and worldwide sources of investment as well, else our capital becomes stagnant and idle and reflects in turn in idle men and economic turmoil. Third, with the extensive drains on our natural resources through war and peace, we are becoming increasingly dependent on raw material sources elsewhere in the world for the sound long-term future of our economy. Fourth, and above all, it is crystal clear to all of us that in this modern one world, we can enjoy that precious peace with justice only in a world at peace. And this world cannot remain at peace unless there be that slow but steady improvement of standards of living of other peoples everywhere. This can only come in turn through an increased flow of trade and higher world production and increased individual rights and freedoms, which will never develop if America turns back to economic isolation."

The impending conference between the representatives of eighteen nations, to be held in April in Geneva, Mr. Stassen said, should result in extensive reciprocal trade agreements, since "only by an increasing multilateralism of trade, fair and equal toward each other, can the peoples of all nations hope to restore and develop their standards of living."

He warned that adjustments must be gradual; that American industry and labor must be safeguarded against sudden and extreme dumping of goods. He also maintained that our exports and imports must maintain a balanced percentage between agriculture and industry of various sections of the country.

"But the choice," he declared, "is clearly this. Do you wish to share in an expanding market with rising standards of living around the world, or do you wish to hold exclusively a shrinking market with increased unemployment and lowering standards of living? Do you wish to sell 80 per cent of a large and expanding domestic market or do you wish to sell 100 per cent of a small and shrinking domestic market? It is only natural that many would wish that they could do both. They would wish that they could hold exclusively a market which was also rising and expanding. But the plain laws of world economics in this modern world point out definitely that this is not possible. Just as an attempt to be narrow and restrictive between our states at an earlier day failed, so would an attempt to separate the nations of the world in an economic sense in this modern world fail.

"The direction we must travel is clear. It is the direction of increased flow of trade and of travel and of capital, for the benefit of all people everywhere. Along that path,

Copies of Christianity Takes A Stand, the book on which our Lenten articles are based, may be secured by sending 30c to The Witness, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N.Y. The article next week will deal with Prof. William Hocking's chapter on the Treatment of Ex-Enemy Nations, and will be by Prof. F. W. if coupled with sound domestic economic policies, fair and balanced national labor policies, the maintenance of our individual freedom of capital and of labor and of agriculture, with alert and dynamic and humanitarian government, lies a future of jobs and freedom and high standards of living for the American people. It is a path that will turn other people increasingly in the direction of individual freedom and away from dictatorial concepts, economics, social, political or religious. Above all, it is a path which keeps faith, through our fundamental concept of the individual dignity of man, with men and women and little children around the world."

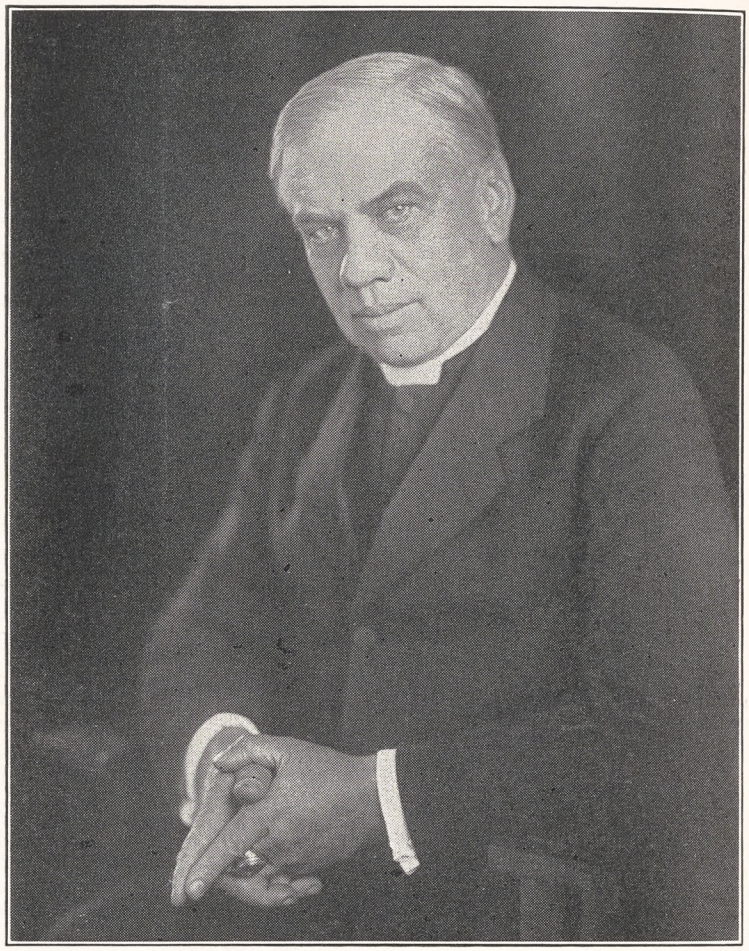
Lisbon (wireless to RNS): — The creation of a Christian democratic party in Portugal modeled after the Popular Republican Movement in France was hinted here by Emmanuel Goncalves Cardinal Cerejeira, Patriarch of Lisbon, in a radio address. Although the National Union Party is the only political organization permitted in Portugal under the Salazar regime, there is a strong feeling here that the cardinal's address may be followed by the announcement of a change in the present political set up which would permit the formation of another right wing party.

In his address, Cardinal Cerejeira denounced Communism as "the most serious threat to man and to human freedom that exists in the world today."

BISHOP GILBERT THE SPEAKER



New York:—The annual dinner meeting of the Church Publishing Association, for whom THE WITNESS is published, is to be held the evening of March 27th in the parish house of St. James' Church. The speaker of the evening will be Bishop Charles K. Gilbert. Tickets for the dinner are $2.75 and may be secured from THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

WHITE PRIMARY DENOUNCED

Atlanta, Ga.:—The Atlanta Christian Council, an interdenominational group, denounced Georgia's white primary law here as a violation of the "American principle of no taxation without representation." A resolution adopted by the executive committee of the Council asserted that the law robbed the state of any legal right to control the election of its own officials, and scored the legislation to disfranchise Negroes as "an attempt to circumvent the Constitution of the United States."

The white primary bill was signed by Herman Talmadge, recently-elected governor by the Georgia Assembly, who is the son of the late Governor-elect Eugene Talmadge, a strong advocate of "white supremacy."

The Christian Council said the state should have a law requiring education qualifications for voting, but insisted "such a law would have to be applied justly to all peoples."

Irving Peake Johnson, retired Bishop of Colorado and Founder and for twenty-five years the editor of THE WITNESS, died at his home in Minneapolis on February 27th

CANADIAN DIOCESE OPPOSES UNITY

Edmonton, Canada (RNS): — The time is not ripe for the Church of England in Canada to accept the principles of a ministry mutually acceptable to it and the United Church of Canada, a special committee of the synod of the Edmonton Anglican diocese declared at the annual meeting here. It also held that any scheme of union within Canada which might jeopardize relations with other provinces of the Anglican communion would be a retrogressive step. The committee declared that conversations looking toward union with other communions must begin at the parochial level, and recommended that in each parish steps be taken to prepare for discussions with local units of the United Church.

HEAVENLY REST CONSECRATED

New York:—The Church of the Heavenly Rest, one of America's most beautiful churches which was erected at a cost of three and a half million, was consecrated by Bishop Charles K. Gilbert on March 2nd. The occasion also marked the completion of twenty-five years as rector of the Rev. Henry Darlington. A large number of clergy of the diocese of New York attended the service, as well as clergy of other dioceses. Also present were representatives of the Greek, Old Catholic and Roumanian Churches.

The gospel was read by the Rev. Herbert J. Glover who later this year celebrates his twenty-fifth anniversary as vicar of the parish, and he celebrates the 50th anniversary of his ordination in June.

Industrial Leaders Meet Labor At Church Conference

Many Questions Are Raised But Few Answers Are Agreed Upon Due to Divergent Interests

By Joseph G. Moore
Professor at Seabury-Western Seminary

Pittsburgh, Pa.: — For three days the American economic structure was taken apart and given microscopic examination by more than 400 churchmen and women who gathered here for the conference on the Church and Economic life. Its membership covered a wide range of society with 27% coming from management and industry; 30% from the ministry; 15% labor, about evenly divided between CIO and A. F. of L.; 8% from farms and the balance from the professions—teachers, lawyers, doctors. There were 28 denominations represented officially and two unofficially, including the Roman Church.

The purpose was "to seek to discover the part, if any, that the Church should play in shaping our thinking and acting towards more Christian motivations in ordering our economic life; and as a reconciling force in the conflicts which emerge within our economic life?"

When the discussions, held simultaneously in three sections, came to such currently controversial issues as labor-management relations, government planning, social security, profits and a host of other topics, the differences of opinions among delegates were sharply pronounced.

For example on the question "what is the role of government in establishing security and maintaining freedom," Episcopalian Noel Sargent, secretary of the National Association of Manufacturers, declared: "In peacetime we want to have the government maintain an atmosphere which will permit a maximum of freedom of movement." This was supported by Prof. J. V. Van Sickle of Wabash College who said that "Labor must flow as easily as capital" and he pointed out that areas like Mississippi must not be prevented from maintaining very low-wage markets in order that capital might be induced to come to such a state to enjoy profit. Thus would unemployed people at least receive some wages, even if not adequate, he said. In conversation after the session, Van Sickle thought that even as little as 10 cents an hour would be better than federal intervention. Disputing this, President M. W. Boyd of Morristown (Tenn.) College declared that "where the people's welfare is concerned we should be Christian enough to allow the government to come in and do what we cannot do for ourselves."

On the subject of management and labor the delegates in all three sections generally favored collective bargaining, but disagreed on the extent to which it would be used. This subject, the closed shop and industry-wide bargaining brought out lively debate, with a determined effort on the part of a small group representing management to force a vote condemning the closed shop and in favor of the open shop. In the sections where votes were taken however, they were overwhelmingly defeated.

It was again Mr. Noel Sargent of the NAM, supported by W. L. Goldston of Houston, who tried to force through the open shop statement. Goldston declared: "I don't know anything more un-Christian than the closed shop. Since 75% of the working class are not members of unions, the closed shop is an attempt to regulate the freedom of most of the people." Many tried to reach the floor to express their opposition to Goldston's resolution, and among those who succeeded was the Rev. A. Guerrero of Chicago who said: "I belong to a closed shop. I'm a Methodist. The Methodist system is quite a closed shop. Not everyone can preach in the Methodist Church. I'm not ready to stand up and say the closed shop is an evil. I think it is a democratic expression of the people, despite its abuses."

However Mr. Charles Taft, chairman of the conference, cut off the discussion at this point, apparently fearful lest it split the conference. So the delegates went on to consider atomic energy which resulted in a resolution stating that the Churches "should stand firmly for civilian and public control of the processes of atomic energy production." Also a resolution was passed which stated that the classic doctrine of Adam Smith "that the individual in pursuit of his selfish gain will be led by an invisible hand to work the common good" was an unsatisfactory answer to present economic problems.

In the final day of the conference four basic assumptions, none new in Church declarations, were agreed upon: 1): that the dignity and worth of the individual and the welfare of mankind is of primary importance in the Christian ethic. 2): the ethical doctrines of the Bible, enlarged by centuries of Christian thought and practice, are of unlimited scope and relevant to all areas of human relations. 3): Human society is in the process of growth, but in no area of human relations have we fully attained a truly Christian standard of life. 4): The principles of the gospel are applicable to the structure of social relations, to the organization of society, as well as to the personal relations of human beings. The factors of economic status and economic relationships are of basic importance and fundamental in shaping the quality of life.

Among the Episcopal Church delegates at the Pittsburgh Conference were Spencer Miller Jr.; Miss Lucy R. Mason; the Rev. Beverley Boyd

In the light of these assumptions a large number of problems were posed, with no apparent agreement among the delegates as to their answers. Some of the questions raised were:

1): Can our economy so utilize

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

its resources as to assure economic stability and progress and at the same time preserve and enlarge the essential liberties of man?"

Under this there was discussion of full employment; the right of people to work without regard to creed, race, color or class.

2): How can full production, full employment and equitable distribution of the national income be achieved and maintained and what is the relation thereto of restrictions that may interfere with these results?

Under this head a number of issues were raised, with the conference affirming that "members of Christian communities have a moral obligation to consider the many complexities of the situation and to promote an intelligent understanding of economic relationships as they work for the objectives of full employment, full production and equitable distribution of income."

3): What role should government play in our economic life?

The question was raised as to what extent there could be governmental planning without loss of private initiative, and without political encroachment upon large areas of life in which cultural freedom has, in our tradition, been highly prized.

4): What role showed voluntary economic groups — business, labor, agriculture, finance, consumers — play in our economic order?

Here there was a pro and con discussion of cooperatives.

5): To what extent has concentration of ownership and control brought beneficial or harmful effects to public welfare?

There was debate here as to whether the contention is valid.

6): Upon what basis can the Church concern itself constructively with the problems of wages, prices and profits?

It was decided that the public needs information, standards, measurement of the contentious claims. The question was also raised as to what extent may the acquisitive urge in people be appealed to, through profits and wages, without undermining the Christian character.

7): How can industrial relations be made more harmonious and the Church use its influence toward this attainment?

Again, questions were asked as to how effective the Church could be in developing good will, social responsibility and developing a "togetherness" between those engaged in collective bargaining, with various and diverse answers offered.

8): How may government be used to provide social security without thereby undermining the assumption of responsibility of individuals and groups?

It was agreed that there is wide support for socialized protection for old age, sickness and unemployment. But "at the same time self-reliance is necessary for character."

9): How can the Church most effectively assist in solving agricultural problems?

Economic equality for agriculture in relations to other groups, and the organization of farm labor, was here proposed.

10): What should be the relationships of the United States to other nations in the light of its influential economic position?

Bishop William Scarlett of Missouri took a leading part in the Pittsburgh Conference

It was agreed that this is a tremendous area for question and study involving even the development and use of atomic power for the best interests of the people of the world.

The subject dealt with by the second section of the conference, "The Responsibility of the Church in the Economic Sphere," then came before the entire conference. Again a number of affirmations were first agreed upon: "God is the source and sustainer of all life"; "Love is the basis and fundamental commandment for the fulfillment of life"; "Men are unequal in natural abilities but they are equal as sons of God who has no particular mercy for the privileged and no special forgiveness for the strong."

These statements led the delegates to declare that "Christians then must concern themselves with basic economic factors such as work, production, property, wages, profit, prices, taxes and economic organization."

The following general principles were therefore affirmed:

1): Each person has a right and a duty to take his share in the world's work and to work at jobs which will enable him to fulfil the true purpose of labor.

2): Production exists to serve necessary and desirable consumption.

3): Property represents a trusteeship under God and it should be held subject to the needs of the community.

4) It is desirable to work toward an economy which provides an assured annual income for every family.

5): Profits are characteristic of a money economy and are defensible, subject to proper methods of accumulating and distributing them. Christians must be motivated more largely by a service motive than by a profit motive.

6): Economic groups should have the right to organize, provided only that their purposes and activities do not contravene the welfare of the entire community. The larger community cannot tolerate monopoly over information, processes, capital, labor or natural resources.

7): Man is endowed with moral freedom. The use of his freedom is always conditioned and limited by the freedom of other persons and by many necessities over which he has little control.

8): Man, though created in God's image, is also a sinner, often using his freedom to serve false gods. Most conspicuously he tends to use his freedom to serve himself before all else and to make his own will the supreme rule of his life.

9): The individual is a responsible agent in religion and in human relations, including economics. Because of the basic affirmations of the Christian faith, the Churches have the right and the duty to speak and to give message to all economic organizations and systems.

10): The Christian community must seek continually to create social conditions under which it will be less difficult to express in daily living the spirit of redemptive love that is enshrined in the New Testament. This means that the principles of the Christian gospel are to be applied to the structure of social relations and the organization of society.

In the closing portion of the re-

No Other Alternative

THE WITNESS, on the record, has opposed inflation. We had articles and editorials repeatedly backing OPA and all other efforts to hold prices. Facts were presented; prophecies were made; readers were urged to support the hold-the-line forces, both in their local communities and in Congress.

It was to no avail. We have inflation. There is nothing THE WITNESS can do, if we are to continue, but accept the fact. The opinion magazines, as distinct from the mass circulation magazines, depend largely on subscription money to meet bills. Advertising revenue is limited. Yet even the magazines whose income is derived primarily from advertising have been forced to advance their subscription prices. Thus Colliers and the Saturday Evening Post went from 5c to 10c; Time, Newsweek, Life, all advanced their prices. Among the opinion magazines, The Nation went from $4 to $6; The Christian Century from $4 to $6; the Living Church from $4 to $5.85.

It is a statement of cold fact that it costs over 100% more to produce THE WITNESS now than it did in 1945. Paper has continued to go up almost week by week. The union men who do the mechanical work on the paper, faced with increased prices themselves, asked and received two substantial wage increases in the last twelve months. The last of these went into effect January 1 and is retroactive to September, 1946. All of which means that we have not covered production costs, let alone editorial costs, rent, postage, office help and the other items that go into our costs, for many months.

We have tried to figure some way to meet the situation other than by increasing the subscription price. We have considered running sixteen pages instead of twenty. However we could not cover costs even by doing that. Then we tapped the adding machine to see how we would come out if we ran every-other-week from May to October and every week the rest of the year. Still no dice.

So there is nothing left to do but advance the subscription price to $4 a year and 7c a copy for bundles. We do so rebelliously and promise our readers to fan that spirit until we find some way of bringing the price back to $3 a year. We started out thirty years ago to bring out a weekly within the reach of all families of the Church. That is still our aim. It is our belief that before too long the aim can again be realized.

Meanwhile we are sure our readers, who after all know as much about current inflation as we do, will cooperate by paying the added dollar for their annual subscription.

Irving Johnson

WORD reached us at press time of the death of Irving Peake Johnson, the founder and for many years the editor of this publication. Nothing can adequately express our sense of loss. He was one of the truly great men of the Church; a great preacher and missioner; one of the most gifted writers the Church has produced; a shepherd of souls as a rector; a father in God as a Bishop. Above all he was a true and loyal friend. Our tribute to him—inadequate as we know it will be—will appear on this page next week. Meanwhile the many thousands who share with us the loss, will also rejoice with us for a truly triumphant life.

Memory Is Short

IT WAS a number of years back that the people of the United States were inflamed against Mr. John Strachey, British author and lecturer on economic topics. He came here for a lecture tour, was denounced as a "red"; had his meetings broken up; contracts for halls where he was scheduled to speak were torn up by landlords who were under pressure. He finally landed on Ellis Island as an undesirable alien, with our federal government taking steps to deport him. THE WITNESS, in the name of civil liberties, defended his right to be heard, with the usual number of letters received from indignant readers who jumped on us as being "subversive."

On February 20th Mr. Strachey, now Britain's food minister, arrived in Ottawa aboard Prime Minister Attlee's personal plane to confer with Canadian officials about the food supply. Since then he has been received in Washington as an honored official guest.

Today there are other aliens in custody on Ellis Island, charged with being "subversive" and "seeking to overthrow the government of the United States" just as Mr. Strachey was.

History has an interesting way of being repeated.

The Veto Must Remain

by Harold E. Stassen

U.S. Delegate at San Francisco Conference

SUMNER WELLES has written an excellent informative piece in his chapter on the United Nations in Christianity Takes A Stand. It is very well worth reading as a basis of increased information of the agencies and hopes of this new international organization.

It should be made clear, however, that the veto provision in the Charter cannot be laid aside until some other voting method is developed which will reflect in some manner the population, industrial strength, and position of the individual members in the organization.

It clearly would neither be sound nor democratic to have each nation have one equal vote in matters of national security when in some instances this vote would represent a hundred million and more of people and in other instances only a very small number of people.

In other words, unless a different voting procedure is developed, if the veto were simply removed it would be possible for a few of the smaller nations to outvote the United States and Russia combined. Clearly this would not be a sound basis for future peace nor would it be reasonable representation for the people of the world, and after all, we should think more in terms of people and less in terms of national sovereignties.

I also feel that we should emphasize to a greater degree the social and economic phases of the United Nations Charter and the provisions for human rights. Unless the organization, through the Social and Economic Council, through the development of an international trade organization and through similar activities which affect the living conditions of the peoples of the world, is successful in improving the resources of food and shelter and clothing, advancing culture and understanding and increasing the ease of travel and trade, it is doubtful whether any kind of security arrangement can be successful in maintaining peace.

I agree with the comment of the unsoundness of the position of those who advocate scrapping United Nations. I, on the other hand, feel that greater emphasis should be given to the need of the early amendment of the United Nations Charter under its own provisions, to advance in accordance with our increased experience to the methods by which disputes could be solved and armaments could be controlled.

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

1. Do you agree that the veto in the United Nations charter should remain? Give your reason, pro and con.
2. Should nations give up part or all of their sovereignty? Is a world government desirable at the present time? Is it possible?
3. What are some of the functions of the Social and Economic Council?
4. How do you think armaments may best be controlled?
5. Discuss the paragraph in Mr. Stassen's speech (page 3) beginning "We desire for the future, etc." Do you agree with him?
6. Do you believe that higher standards of living for other peoples in other lands are necessary in order to maintain our own standards?
7. Why is it essential, if it is, for the U. S. to have a policy of world-wide economic participation?
8. Do you favor reciprocal trade agreements?
9. Do you think that foreign trade is essential in order to maintain our economc system? If so, why?
10. What is the significance, for peace, in the fact "that one-sixteenth of the world's peoples within our borders are producing one-fourth of all the world's goods and services?"

Steps Toward Unity

By

EDWARD L. PARSONS

Retired Bishop of California

IN THE WITNESS of January 25 a layman writes of Canon Wedel's article concerning unity with the Presbyterians. Of the tone of his letter I shall not speak; but it is I think desirable that one of his obvious misunderstandings should be cleared up. Speaking of the specific movement to achieve "organic unity" with the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. he says "the rather incredible story of what started the movement will no doubt get into print some day." It has been in print. It can be found in the reports of the commission to General Convention and in many articles in the Church papers. But since there must be many in the position of the writer of the letter, it is worthwhile to state briefly a few facts:

At the General Convention of 1928 Bishop Brent, speaking for others as well who had been inspired by the Lausanne Conference of the previous year, proposed that a commission be appointed to confer with the Presbyterian and Methodist Churches on questions of Christian morality as related to unity. The commission was appointed. At a two day Conference of representatives of the three bodies (the northern branches of the other two Churches) it became apparent that while there were differences of emphasis in moral questions, there was no difference such as would stand in the way of unity. The commission so reported. Its scope was widened to the consideration of ways to unity and it was directed to include the Lutherans. Conferences went on from year to year until it became clear that they could go on indefinitely but without much fruit unless we could get to some specific proposals for action which would bring the whole question vividly before the Churches.

Some tentative proposals along the line of what later came to be called "extension of ordination" were drawn up and discussed. That was in 1936. The Edinburgh Conference on Faith and Order was held in August of 1937. While there one of the proposals was presented to the delegates from the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. by members of our delegation. It met with favorable response as a possible way of approach to the solution of our unity problems.

With that in mind and under the inspiration of the great Edinburgh gathering our commission meeting before the General Convention (which was held in Cincinnati in October) decided to offer with its report some specific proposals. The Methodists because their own reunion movement was engaging all their thought had asked to be dropped for the time from further conference. The Lutherans were still very much divided. That was the reason we went ahead with the Presbyterians alone.

At the Lambeth Conference and in many conferences on unity there had been much discussion of the principle that where two Churches had definitely committed themselves to find a way to unite "irregularities" might be overlooked if the end might be attained. We believed in accordance with that principle that we might find the whole slow process of uniting easier if it was worked out under a definite agreement to find a way. When we came however to the question of what specific proposals to make, we decided that the proposals concerning extension of ordination were not sufficiently well worked out. We limited ourselves therefore to opening the way for definite negotiations by asking the Convention to invite the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. to join us in a declaration of purpose to achieve organic unity. That was passed so far as I remember practically unanimously. We had thereby moved forward from the general purpose expressed in the Lambeth Quadrilateral and the Faith and Order movement to a specific task.

It is a simple story in which I am sure those who had any leading part had only tried to go forward step by step as God seemed to be leading. There is nothing incredible about it unless one is to suppose that it is incredible that Christians should want to heal the wounds in the Body of Christ.

A Defense of Niemoeller

by John C. Bennett

Professor at Union Seminary

THE article, Niemoeller Supported Hitler (WITNESS, Feb. 13), is unfair to the point of irresponsibility. The basic unfairness is that it does not bring out the real change in Niemoeller's position. Niemoeller was a German nationalist, limited in his vision by his German loyalty and by his form of Lutheran theology. Today no one could be less of a nationalist because his whole life now is controlled by his sense of mission to bring home to the German people their guilt, to make them aware of God's judgment upon Germany. He now admits the social blind-spot in his type of Lutheranism. You may ask if this change is sincere and not merely a strategy to gain favor with the Allied authorities. That question is answered affirmatively by those who know Niemoeller best in World Council circles in Geneva and among the leaders of the Churches in formerly occupied countries. All of my contacts during six months on the staff of the World Council in Geneva confirm this view of him.

The article is unfair also in detail as well as in this general refusal to take seriously Niemoeller's change. For example, the author says: "the so-called 'Church struggle' was only for a 'theological existence,' i.e., a kind of ecclesiastical 'reservation-park,' a quiet corner where confessions and rites could be practiced within the Third Reich." This is a purely external judgment that shows a failure to understand the real dynamics of the Church struggle. For the Confessional Church the theological question was the question as to who was Lord, Hitler or Christ. It meant that the Nazi regime was to be condemned, not only on narrowly ecclesiastical grounds, but also because it violated fundamental Christian morality as expressed in the Ten Commandments. I do not deny that the leaders of the Confessional Church were slow to see all of the implications of their position but gradually and in a cumulative way these did dawn upon them and when finally the war came they broadened out their attack on the German state and in some cases, in the case of Dietrich Bonhoeffer, who was the head of the theological seminary of the Confessional synod, for example, they found themselves praying for the defeat of Germany.

The author's intent to smear those whose theology or policy differed from his own can be seen in the way he discusses Karl Barth. He says that in 1935 even Barth was "prepared to take the oath" to Hitler but that is exactly what Barth did not do and in 1935 he was expelled from his post at Bonn for refusing to take the oath.

The author says that "in 1938 'the Confessional Church' adopted the 'Aryan' clause." This contradicts the whole record of the Confessional Church before and after that date. He probably means that at about that time the Confessional Church did set up a committee to aid the emigration of Christian Jews in the interests of their safety. In 1940, the chairman and staff of that committee were put into a concentration camp because of their efforts to help the Jews.

Nothing is said about the Stuttgart Declaration and Niemoeller's part in that. This declaration, which confessed the solidarity of the German Church with the German nation in guilt for the war and for the crimes of the Nazis, cleared the air among the Churches in Europe and made possible reconciliation between the Christians who resisted Nazism in Germany and the Christians in the occupied countries. You may ask why some one was not brought to America whose record has always been unambiguous. The answer is that Niemoeller happens to be the greatest symbol, inside and outside of Germany, of Christian resistance to Hitler and of Stuttgart. Niemoeller as early as September 1933 fought the Nazis with integrity on the issues that he saw clearly and his vision of those issues broadened steadily. His eight years in a concentration camp kept him from speaking on these issues for a long period and they also made impossible adequate knowledge of events in the world, but they prepared him for the change that now makes him the prophet of the renewal of the Church in Germany.

—and an Answer

By W. B. SPOFFORD

OF GUILT and Hope by Niemoeller has just been published (Philosophical Library, $2) which contains two sermons he preached in Germany since his release; a letter to his brother; an interview with an American chaplain. Niemoeller can therefore speak for himself.

From the interview:

Chaplain: "Should the German people be punished at all for the war?"

Niemoeller: "The German people have already been punished by God; their young men and the old ones died at the front and at home; their cities and villages, and everything that was in them, has been destroyed; and the hopes and ideals of all the people have been shattered."

Chaplain: "Should the world say simply to Germany: 'We forgive you' and then start all over again?"

Niemoeller: " 'The world' will not be able to say, 'We forgive you,' but the Christians all over the world should say that and they should start all over again with us. Measures of punishment against the people will not help. The Christians in Germany and many others who start believing in God, know that no human being can punish them more than God already has. As for the others they would only say, 'Taking everything into consideration, Hitler was not the worst that could happen to us.' They would turn to radicalism and to underground propaganda of all kinds. But correcting measures are certainly necessary and beneficial, starting with a new way of educating youth and with a slow training toward public responsibility. I think that the way would be clear in that direction."

Chaplain: "How could Germany be cured of militarism? Can it be cured at all and how?"

Niemoeller: "I think Germany is cured of it for years to come. The rest must be achieved through Christian education at home and in schools and through spreading Christianity from the pulpit, over the radio, etc."

The argument that Mr. Bennett and others offer on Niemoeller's behalf is that he is repentant; that he recognizes the guilt of Germany. That may well be true. It is also true that the German people do not recognize their guilt. Not only does Niemoeller say this himself in this book, but recent newspaper dispatches have made it abundantly clear. The United Press reported from Darmstadt on February 19 that influential Nazis and S. S. troops have set up their own courts in a prison camp and that they refused to punish any of their own number who tried to escape.

The N. Y. Times reported from Herford, Germany, February 22, that a report of the Information Services Control (British) "indicated that 65% of the population are ready to follow any strong leader who might emerge from the 10% unregenerate Nazis."

The N. Y. Tribune reported from Frankfurt on February 23 of a movement in Germany, led by former Nazi officers, with the long-range objective of enabling Germany "to resume its military might." The same day the Associated Press reported that "the Nazi underground movement claimed possession of a secret bacteriological weapon to turn against the occupying powers." So there is evidence that the German people do not admit their guilt—and I could pile up the evidence, just as anyone else can who reads the newspapers.

Mr. Bennett says that Niemoeller's "whole life now is controlled by his sense of mission to bring home to the German people their guilt." It is a worthy mission. So it seems proper to ask: "Why is he not now in Germany pursuing his mission, instead of spending months of precious time lecturing to Americans?"

With 65% of the population of his country ready to turn again to "a strong man," is it unkind to suggest that an intelligent man with such a compelling mission as Niemoeller is said to have, would know that his place at the moment is in his own country, bringing home to his own people that guilt which he himself feels so deeply?

Mr. Bennett says: "You may ask if this change (in Niemoeller) is sincere and not merely a strategy to gain favor with the allied authorities." Niemoeller himself sheds light on this in one of the sermons in this recent book (page 28):

"The German people has been silenced. However the Evangelical Church in Germany can talk to the outside world and be heard by the outside world. We can talk to the Christian Churches in North America and the Churches will listen to what we have to say—because on October 18, 1945, the provisional leaders of the Evangelical Church recognized the guilt which I mentioned in the beginning before the representatives of foreign Churches as a confession before God, our Lord, and before our Christian brethren against whom we have sinned. The representatives of foreign Churches said, as we pronounced our confession of guilt before God and before themselves: 'Dear brothers, your words have shown us that you did not cease to be our brothers in Christ and we recognize that neither can we cease to be your brothers in our Lord Jesus Christ.' And thus did this tie remain and was renewed and strengthened among Christians here in Germany and Christians in America, the Netherlands, France, etc. And thus, from a practical point of view, such a confession of guilt has political consequences. (italic ours). We will be helped by those men in foreign countries who know they are joined with us in Jesus. And this is the result of our being able to talk to their representatives. We can take our prayers to them from now on. I think the situation is clear."

I, too, think the situation is clear. Niemoeller has a sense of mission all right. And as a German I do not blame him for having it. It is to win a soft peace for his country. And a soft peace for Germany means the building of heavy industries—which as a matter of fact are largely intact; it means the recreation of her military might. It means that Germany, as she has already done twice within the lives of most of us, will again be prepared to plunge the world into war.

The process, as the dispatches mentioned above state, is now under way. It is too bad, I think, for the World Council of Churches, the Federal Council of Churches—for men like John Bennett, Reinhold Niebuhr, Sam Cavert, Hank Leiber, and many others who have such great influence with Christians throughout the world—to be a party to it.

You may say, as many have and will, that I'm wrong. But suppose I'm right? What price lecture-tour for Martin Niemoeller.

And now comes to our shores His Eminence Konrad Cardinal von Preysing of Berlin. Sometime, at your leisure, look up his record over the past ten years. Then ask yourself: "Why is he here?" and also: "Why should he be allowed to come?"

It's too bad, I think, for Americans to be such suckers.

Children of Today

By
KATHARINE F. LENROOT
Chief of Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor

WE CANNOT decide what principles should guide us in the rearing of children unless we have faith, vision, and conviction concerning the human society into which they are born, whose destiny will so soon be in their hands. The philosophy of Rousseau that the child's development should be influenced as little as possible by the practices and ideology of adult society has proved to be unrealistic. Children are a part of the society into which they are born. Their education should equip them to become active agents in the unfolding and fulfilment of its aspirations and ideals and in its enrichment or re-direction as necessary in the light of deeper insights and broadened experience.

In a free society, though there are central purposes deeply embedded in the consciousness of the citizens, there are not one, but many modes of thought as to their relative importance and the methods of achieving them. That is why the problem of education in such a society is so much more difficult and tremendously more challenging than in a totalitarian society where all are to be cast in the same mold.

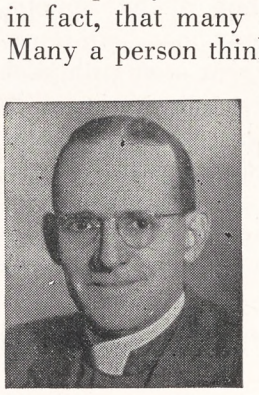
Our people are sharply divided, for example, regarding the privileges and responsibilities of labor and capital, though most of them affirm their belief in a system of free enterprise. They hold opposing views as to the role of government in economic, social and cultural affairs, and as to the international policies which our government should follow in this period of building the foundations of a stable and free world.

Yet the conflicts of ideas that divide our world are essentially religious, as well as economic, social and political, in character. The question of whether people of different races shall have equal opportunity is basically religious, for our answer is determined by our concept of the worth and dignity of the human personality. The standards of living that shall be allowed to prevail in a country as rich in natural resources and technical skill as our own likewise is a religious question, for the same reason. So is our responsibility for the relief of suffering and distress in war-devastated countries. Questions involving the nature of freedom and its relation to authority must be viewed with reference to the meaning of human life and the eternal verities on which faith is built.

IN OUR society, education, secular and religious, has a vitally important role, which cannot be minimized. To the public school and perhaps to a lesser extent the church school, come children and young people with differing family backgrounds and opposing ideas concerning the issues of the day. It is the responsibility of the school and the church to enlarge the basis of common understanding and agreement, help youth to develop principles and standards which will enable them to form intelligent and morally sound judgments, point out the ways in which democracy may resolve conflicts and push ahead, and prepare young people to be effective in the defense of principles and the support of leadership of causes which they find valid and impelling. The development of initiative and responsibility in relation to personal and social obligations must be a central purpose of education in a free society.



It will take the joint planning and combined effort of citizens, private agencies and government to assure parents the help that is needed from the community if children are to have opportunities essential for the development of citizens in the world today.

Free churches can exist only in a free society. We know now that a free society can exist only in a world order based on freedom and justice. The preparation of children for citizenship in such a world is in the long run our most important task. That preparation requires much in material goods and services, but more in spiritual understanding and dedication. The function of the Church begins within the parish but it cannot stop short of the world and must relate itself effectively to other agencies, to planning and coordinating groups, and above all, to parents. Much is being done by the Churches for children, but what is needed reaches far beyond present effort. The survival of civilization is at stake. Let the response match the challenge of the task.

Tolerance

By
GEORGE I. HILLER
Rector of Trinity Church, Miami

THE line between tolerance and intolerance is a pretty difficult one to discern. So difficult, in fact, that many of us deceive our own selves. Many a person thinks he or she is being very tolerant, when in reality theirs is only indifference.

There are many who boast of tolerance, who in spirit are not tolerant, but simply too lazy to think out, or fight for their own opinions.

Again there are those who insist on their liberality or tolerance, when in fact, they "have their tongue in their cheek"; they do not mean what they say, and are merely adopting what seems to be an advisable front.

The first test hinges on one's sincerity. It is a question of intellectual honesty. One who says what he does not mean, or even one who means what he carefully restrains from saying—is not honest. True tolerance is a matter of one's inmost secret thought. The "sham" article, like every imitation, is not so good.

The above may seem, at first glance, to be more or less a platitude.

Let us, in our thinking, be sure. Are we Christians? Dare we accept the attitude of Christ to the questions which press upon us?

The world today is badly in need of absolute honesty in leadership. Much which passes for tolerance is indifference; and far too much is mere "bally-hoo."

I would rather trust and associate with the person who was honestly intolerant, than with a person who was too lazy to think.

Certainly, I would rather have for a friend, one with whom I could not agree, than to relate myself to a deceiver who expressed agreement only for expediency.

What do you think in the absolute privacy of your own thoughts—and is that the "front" you share with the world?

Our Relationship With Soviets Test For Christians

Church Leaders Declare that Good Relations Is an Essential for a Peaceful World Order

Edited by Sara Dill

New York:—Bishop Charles K. Gilbert was one of the sixteen Church leaders to issue a statement last week declaring that "The supreme moral test of Christians of our time is in their thoughts and works in the field of Soviet-American relations." The statement was issued by an inter-faith committee of the American Russian Institute, headed by the Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, Methodist.

The statement declares that "The supreme moral test of every Christian today is in the issue of war or peace. Science has placed Americans and Chinese, Russians and British, as near to one another as formerly were the residents of adjoining villages. We have a free-will choice: we may use this development as a blessing or as an opportunity for brutal carnage and world destruction. There could be no greater sin open to our generation than the wrong choice of these alternatives.

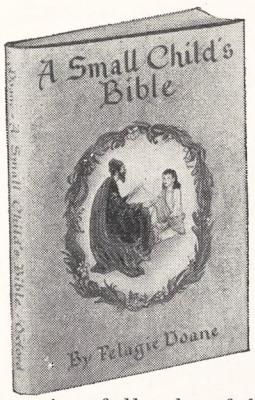
"A Christian has, in this circumstance, but one choice. A man who would choose war would be no Christian.

"We go further. The American people do not desire war. We think that our people ardently desire peace and will continue to do so. We think that our government desires peace, and will continue to reflect this wish of our people. But history shows that wars come to people who want no war. Ignorance breeds suspicion, suspicion breeds fear, fear breeds hate. And ignorance, suspicion, fear and hate breed war.

"We believe, therefore, that a Christian does not pass the great moral test of our times by obeying in a merely mechanical and naive sense the injunction to 'love thy neighbor as thyself.' To pass that test, a Christian must pray, preach, and take action. A Christian must enlist and fight against ignorance, suspicion, fear and hate.

"One does not effectively, however, inveigh against mere abstractions. To be an influence against the evil of future war, the Christian must be practical.

"Stripped of peripheral and confusing elements, the issue of world war or peace today resolves itself into a problem of Soviet-American relations. If the people of the United States and of the Soviet Union retain a spirit of friendly cooperation and mutual admiration, peace can abide with us. But if suspicion, fear and hate rise between these two peoples, atomic holocaust, and a just damnation inexorably will be ours.



"We believe, therefore, that the supreme moral test of Christians of our time is in their thoughts and works in the field of Soviet-American relations. With deliberate emphasis, we affirm that the Christian Churches and all Christians must actively engage themselves in this field.

"We have organized an inter-church committee of the American Russian Institute as a practical step in the war against war. We shall combat ignorance, which we see as the root of suspicion, fear, hate—and war.

"The inter-church committee has formulated a broad program of education and information about the Soviet Union. We plan sponsor discussion groups, lectures and study groups in the churches; to prepare special study material for children, women's groups and other organizations; to supply religious publications and radio programs with authoritative current information on various phases of Soviet life and culture; and to distribute authentic information through other appropriate church channels.

"We are confident that the whole of the Christian church will cooperate with us. We invite help from clergy and laymen alike."

Others to sign the statement were the Rev. Louie D. Newton, president of the Southern Baptist Con-

City Mission

New York: — Churches and missions of the diocese of New York are seeking to raise a half million dollars for St. Barnabas House, a temporary shelter for women and children operated by the City Mission Society. The announcement was made by Presiding Bishop Sherrill and Bishop Gilbert who held a press conference at the center on February 24th. Also present was Red Barber, broadcaster, who is the chairman of the committee.

Urges Action

Washington (RNS):—Senator John J. Sparkman (D.-Ala.) challenged church people here to lead in mobilizing public opinion for lasting peace through international cooperation. The legislator, teacher of a Bible class here, addressed a service at Asbury Methodist church in connection with the annual Methodist "laymens day" observance.

Church people can help opinion against war through their organizations, young people's meetings, church services and other means, he said, and added: "This thinking, this forming public opinion, is the greatest single force in the world."

Senator Sparkman said success of the United Nations Charter would depend largely on the support that church-mobilized public opinion gives it.

"It is the responsibility of the Church," he said, "to indoctrinate its laymen with the understanding that public opinion is the best means of promoting international cooperation. It is our one great tool for preserving civilization. Failure to produce workable peace at this time means another war and destruction of civilization as we know it today."

Niemoeller in Canada

Toronto (RNS): — The Canadian Council of Churches invited Pastor Martin Niemoeller of Germany to visit this city for three days, to speak in the four largest Protestant Churches. Some churchmen expressed doubt over the wisdom of bringing the German to Canada but to no avail.

Meeting On Unity

Newark:—The committee on unity of the diocese of Newark is holding a series of meetings on the subject. The first was on March 4th with the Rev. James A. Mitchell, rector at Englewood, the speaker. Speakers at future meetings will be the Rev. Eric Tasman of Orange and the Rev. Charles P. Staples of Hoboken.

Church Fire

Fairbanks, Alaska: — "Saint Matthew's Church, one of Fairbanks' treasured landmarks, apparently escaped serious damage today as firemen controlled a blaze that started in the basement and filled the log structure with smoke," reports the local newspaper on February 8. "The fire department located the fire in a corner of the basement. The blaze was knocked down in a short time but clouds of acrid smoke kept firemen from entering the building. . . . The blaze was believed to have been started by the furnace, possibly from a clogged draft."

parently badly damaged; the lectern Bible was scorched; most of the pews were not damaged, and the parish hall was not damaged. The use of the Presbyterian Church was offered but the Rev. John M. Balcom, in charge of Saint Matthew's, said the parish hall could be used.

A year ago Bishop Bentley reported that the Fairbanks church had just become self-supporting, third of the Alaska missions to achieve this status in the past two years. The log church is more than forty years old.

Social Awareness

Porto Alegre, Brazil:—A greater awareness of the Church's role in bettering social conditions marked the convention of the district of Southern Brazil, meeting at the procathedral here, February 5-9. Reports were presented, followed by discussion, on the various social agencies operated in the district. There were thirty-six clergy present, the largest number in the history of the district. An outdoor service, under floodlights, was an innovation. Also a moving event was the presentation of a gift to Bishop and Mrs. William Thomas who have served the Church in Brazil for forty-three years.

Presbyterian Honored

Pittsburgh, Pa.:—Over 1400 people packed Calvary Church here on February 16 to honor the Rev. Stuart Nye Hutchinson, for twenty-five years the minister of a large Presbyterian Church here. Bishop Pardue spoke on his outstanding work in the community, with Mr. Hutchinson responding by expressing his gratitude for the opportunities for service that have been presented to him during his long pastorate. He is to retire May 1.

Commission for Youth

Topeka, Kan.: — The national youth commission met at the diocesan building here, February 14-18, with twelve clergymen and thirty-eight young people present, representing the eight provinces. The leader was the Rev. William C. Crittenden, head of youth work of the National Council.

Unique Mission

Owensboro, Ky.:—Something new in the way of missions was held at Trinity Church here when the Rev. James W. Kennedy of Lexington conducted a forum mission. In addition to the usual addresses he had long question periods. The meetings were well attended not only by Episcopalians but by members of other churches. The rector of the parish is the Rev. Ben T. Tinsley.

No Bus Ordered

Philadelphia (RNS): — A Chester county court has declined to order directors of the Kennett consolidated school district to provide bus service for children of St. Patrick's parochial school in the town of Kennett Square. quires a public school system to supply transportation for other than public school pupils.

Until last September parochial school pupils at Kennett Square were provided free transportation on public school buses. The directors of Kennett consolidated school said at the beginning of the school year they would no longer haul parochial pupils.

A move to have the directors ousted was dismissed in Chester county court because of an alleged faulty petition. Paul Connell, resident of Kennett township, then asked the court for an order directing the school board to show cause why bus transportation was not made available to his daughter Catherine, 10 years, a pupil in St. Patrick's. Connell's contention was that the state school code, through its compulsory attendance clause, made it mandatory for school directors to furnish free transportation.

Judge Harvey's opinion made no mention of the recent U.S. Supreme Court ruling which declared that public school funds can be used to transport parochial school pupils. It was expected that an appeal to a higher court would be made by the parochial school group which is supporting Connell.

Missionary Work

New Haven: — On February 6th in the chapel of the Berkeley Divinity School three Japanese, Mr. and Mrs. Risaburo Noda, employees of the School, and their infant son, were baptized by Dean Rose at Choral Evensong with sponsors from the student body and staff. Through Dean Rose, who was in charge of Japanese resettlement in the New Haven area, the Nodas came to Berkeley from the relocation camp in Topaz, Utah, in June 1945 and have been there ever since. Formerly Buddhists, Mr. and Mrs. Noda have so deeply appreciated their acceptance in the Berkeley community that they wished to share in what they felt must be the source of its strength and family spirit, and last fall came to the Dean with the request that they might become Christians.

Healing Mission

San Diego, Calif.: — The Rev. John Gayner Banks, director of the Fellowship of St. Luke's, is holding a number of healing missions during Lent and the Easter season. They are being held at St. John's, Charleston, W. Va.; the Heavenly Rest, New York; St. Stephen's, Philadelphia; St. Peter's, South Amboy, N. J.; Christ Church Cathedral, Springfield, Mass.; All Saints', Worcester, Mass.

In May Mr. Banks is to visit England for a two months' study of healing in the Church of England.

Park Babies

Buffalo, N. Y.: — Mothers of infants who attend daily noonday Lenten services at St. Paul's Cathedral here may park their babies in the cathedral house, where they are under expert supervision. The plan has increased attendance sharply.

Issues Denial

New York:—The Rev. Samuel McCrea Cavert, head of the Federal Council of Churches, has denied that the Council signed a statement which deplored attacks in Congress on the principles of the Achison-Lilienthal report on the control of atomic energy. He stated that while the Council is on record as supporting the basic principles of the report, no statement about Congressional hearings had been made, and that it is contrary to the policy of the Council either to endorse or oppose the appointment of any specific person to public office.

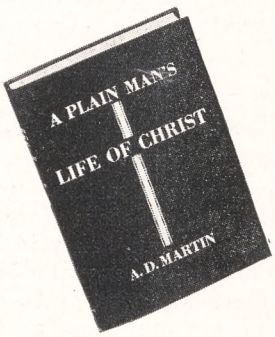
Home and School

Newark, N. J.:—Frances Young of the department of education of the National Council was the speaker on March 3 at a meeting held by the diocese of Newark. Her subject was the Church school and the Christian home.

Wants No Bibles

Denver (RNS):—A Denver atheist sought here to prevent distribution of Testaments in the local public schools, arguing that "the Bible is not a moral guide for children." He also advanced the contention that "more criminals come from religious homes than from non-religious homes."

The atheist, Samuel Menin, an attorney, charged at a meeting of the school board that distribution of Bibles to school children is unconstitutional and "departs from the basic principle upon which our country is founded."



Denver clergymen immediately rallied to defense of the Bible. They expressed no objection to school board approval of a request by the Gideons for distribution of Scripture portions to school children above the fifth grade.

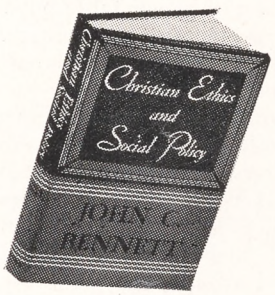
A Plain Man's Life of Christ



By A. D. Martin

"Its happy combination of true scholarship and simplicity," writes Professor Sidney Cave of this book, "its mellow wisdom and freedom from pedantry, should make it attractive to many who are repelled by books written primarily for students. It is indeed, 'A Plain Man's Life of Christ,' written with knowledge and insight, with reverence and imagination."

The author's aim was to show Jesus, not only as he must actually have appeared to his first followers, but also to describe how their view of him passed, as they knew him better, into wonder. He discloses Jesus to the general reader as a real person.

Book study "as a step toward greater unity among ourselves and toward a more vigorous and effective prosecution of our mission to draw all men into the communion of the Church. The society stands, as it has always stood, for:—first, the teachings of the Prayer Book; second, the traditional ceremonial of the Anglican Communion which goes with and expresses these teachings. To this end, the society suggests that throughout the Church the third Sunday after Easter, April 27, 1947, be observed as a day of special thanksgiving for the Prayer Book, a day on which to teach, through sermons and instructions, what the Prayer Book really is and how loyally and thankfully we should use it."

INDUSTRIAL LEADERS MEET

port from the second section a number of immediate tasks for the Church were set forth. They included the "setting of an example in its own employment, investments, and other economic practices"; condemnation of segregation; work for the abolition of preventable poverty; promote democratic and informed participation in discussions which affect our economic destiny.

Episcopalians played a large part in the conference. The sermon at the opening service, written by Bishop Dun of Washington, was read in his absence by Bishop Scarlett of Missouri. Bishop Dun arrived later to take a leading part in the conference. The chairman of the conference, Mr. Charles Taft, is an Episcopalian; likewise Mr. Noel Sargent, the executive of the National Association of Manufacturers, and Mr. Eric Johnson, formerly the head of the Chamber of Commerce and now the czar of the movie industry. In the Episcopal delegation of twenty-five persons were two women who played an important role in the affair; Mrs. Harper Sibley of Rochester and president of the Council of Church Women, and Miss Lucy R. Mason, who is a public relations official of the CIO in the south.

Mrs. Sibley, wife of the former president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, declared at one point in the debate on the closed shop, that "The trouble with lots of management is that they are like farmers who, in breeding corn, place sacks over the ears and gradually weaken the seed. Managers seem to put sacks over their heads, with much the same result." It brought forth one of the really healthy laughs of the conference.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

MR. W. F. RICHARDS
Layman of Philadelphia

I would like to express my agreement with the point of view of the Rev. S. Norman McCain (Backfire, Feb. 13) in regard to race attitudes in our seminaries. Certainly there is no place for segregation in the Christian Church. Yet there are those who insist that we maintain a seminary, the Bishop Payne School, exclusively for Negroes. Why should not the young men there be admitted to any seminary they choose, providing of course they meet the intellectual standards.

Also I am informed that there is not a seminary of our Church, with the exception of Bishop Payne, that has a Negro on its faculty. Yet I could name a number of Negro priests well qualified to fill such a position.

MR. F. M. LAWRENCE
Layman of New York City

I am grateful to you for printing the article on Niemoeller Supports Hitler (Feb. 13). It is unanswerable it seems to me with its many quotations and documentations. Whether the noted German pastor was ever an actual Nazi party member does not seem to me to have much to do with the matter. The fact is that he now stands for a soft peace with Germany and is lining up with those like John Foster Dulles, Herbert Hoover, the Pope, who want to use Germany as a jumping off place for war with Russia.

REV. JOHN M. KRUMM
Rector at San Mateo, Calif.

Apparently THE WITNESS is counting on the current confusion between Niemoeller's political decisions and his theological position and Christian witness to undermine him and his lecture tour. Not very many Americans understand the intricacies of the German mind as that relates itself to political matters. What is more, I suspect that most Americans would heartily disavow Pastor Niemoeller's political decisions—he himself would repent of many of them. He has said so. All this has nothing to do with the validity of his message to the Christian Church of America. Having read his Seattle address I cannot believe that any American Christian ought to miss hearing him for the imagined reason that his political thinking will become corrupted. This is surely a true Word of God spoken to this generation of American Christians.

Your correspondent, Mr. Russell, in Backfire (issue of February 13th), asks whether the Federal Council has been drawn into "the Dulles line or worse." I would ask whether THE WITNESS has been drawn into the Niemoeller controversy primarily because it is known that Niemoeller is working hard against the Communist party line in Germany—a line that THE WITNESS seems to follow with increasing slavishness in America?

I am distressed that a religious journal should lack the perception because of political differences to see the truth and vigor of Niemoeller's magnificent Christian addresses. By the way, why not print some of them—in full?

ANSWER: We believe that Mr. Krumm was fully answered by the article that appeared February 13 written by the Rev. Diedrich Meyer-Kluegel. THE WITNESS has consistently stood for one world in international affairs. We still do. Niemoeller, Dulles, the Pope, are, we believe, among those who seek to split Europe into East and West with war the almost sure result. That this would be a catastrophe hardly need be argued. As for "party lines" we follow none; we do try to apply what we consider to be sound Christian principles to the vital issues of the day. If communists, or any other group, come to the same conclusions we are glad. Certainly we have no intention of repudiating our conclusions merely because others also hold them, whether they be communists, socialists, pacifists or members of the two major parties.

MRS. A. L. ROBERTS
Churchwoman of Dallas, Texas

Although I have taken THE WITNESS for years and, on the whole, approve its bold stand for the truth as seen from both or many sides, I emphatically disagree with the Rev. W. B. Spofford Jr. on the subject of movies suitable for children. I have often felt that their bad influence is the cause of juvenile delinquency. As for "My Darling Clementine," which I saw with much disgust last week, it was a horrible portrayal of a depraved character drinking away his God-given gifts, and a lot of shooting etc. bound to damage impressionable children who flock to see such movies.

I have long deplored the poor use of the mechanical characters of the so-call "comics" made especially for children. The theme is usually horribly grotesque fights or flights; never anything constructive which could be at the same time entertaining to less perverted minds, and the sounds and language put into their mouths are from gangsterdom.

Behold, I Make All Things New!

THE REVISED STANDARD VERSION OF THE

NEW TESTAMENT

Easter and springtime both bring messages of resurrection. Whether death is physical or spiritual—whether man is buried in a grave, or in despair, or sin—newness of life is made available through the Word of God.

This message is brought to you with renewed hope and clearer understanding in THE REVISED STANDARD VERSION Of The NEW TESTAMENT—written in clear modern English free from archaic words and phrases.

And in keeping with the beauty of the Easter season, the publishers now offer in beautiful new bindings this authorized revision of the American Standard Version, published in 1901, which was a revision of the King James Version, published in 1611.

Dr. Frederick William Foerster Continues His Warning

Brief Sketch of the Scholar Whose Article On Pan-Germanism is Featured in This Issue

By Herbert Kreidman
Of the Society for the Prevention of World War III

New York: — Frederick William Foerster, whose article is featured this week on perhaps the most important problem before the world—Germany—has been an educator and religious philosopher for over fifty years. Upon receiving his doctorate in economics he became the editor of Ethical Culture in 1894. There he fearlessly criticized the spirit of the Wilhelminian era, denouncing Prussianism and its leaders. For this he was given a jail sentence for criticism of the state. Soon after his release he wrote (January, 1896):

"Is there anyone who doubts that we owe our inner demoralization to the general worship of success which has overawed our people in view of the splendor of Blood and Iron? Once the sense of the deeply rooted solidarity of the world of culture is devaluated, once the idol of national might has been placed on the altar, moral idealism disappears from the spiritual life of the nation. . . . Mere national might is not an ennobling goal. It keeps constantly awake within us the beast of rape. It dulls us toward the need for harmonious happiness with others and brings brutal covetousness into all human relations."

These words, written over fifty years ago, are the basis of Foerster's ethics, and at the same time they explain why Bismarck's power-policies led, via the Kaiser, Ebert, Hindenburg and Hitler, right to today's catastrophe.

In 1897, denied an academic career in Germany, Foerster went to Zurich, Switzerland, where he lectured at the university on social and economic questions. His writings on ethics and education totalled hundreds of thousands of copies and were translated into almost all European languages. He won international recognition as an educator and could have easily made peace with the ruling power. But his conscience and love of his homeland, permitted no compromise.

During the first world war, speaking to overflow audiences at the University of Munich, Foerster denounced power-politics. "We must," he said, "abandon national egotism and join a new European cultural order." For this the faculty of the university protested that Foerster represented opinions which should "make every German ashamed." Soon all of his utterances were censored and ultimately they were forbidden as "damaging to the interests of warfare."

After the collapse of 1918, Kurt Eisner, prime minister of Bavaria, recognizing Foerster as the only German respected by the Allies, appointed him ambassador at Berne, Switzerland. Here whatever he asked for was granted; food for starving Germans; no partition of Silesia without a plebiscite; alleviation in the condition of prisoners of war. But he demanded not only concessions for Germany, but expiation from Germany as well. He proposed to the Chancellor of the Reich, Bauer, that a few hundred thousand German volunteers aid in the reconstruction of Belgium and France. He intended to join the first volunteers. But the plan was turned down by the German government for fear that it might be construed as an admission of war guilt.

Foerster had been confident that defeat would lead the German people to reason; to amending their ways. With the idea of stirring up conscience he travelled from city to city, lecturing everywhere. Some success was achieved but reformation did not take place. Nationalist Germany organized behind the Weimar Republic and in 1923 Foerster was advised by a friend to take the next train for Switzerland. So again from beyond Germany's borders he called the attention of the German nation and of the world to the dangers in a recovery of militaristic Germany. He wrote in his magazine, Die Menschheit (Mankind) in 1927 that "The masters of Germany today need peace . . . in order to be armed at a time set by the weakness of her neighbors. This time will come between 1933 and 1938." His disclosures at the League of Nations, and how they were received, he relates in his WITNESS article this week.

The people of Germany were not to be aroused. No one realized that here was a highly respected international figure who could have saved Germany. A proposal by the liberal editor, Helmut von Gerlach, that Foerster be the people's candidate for the Reich's presidency was in vain. In vain also was Maximilian Harden's statement that Foerster was towering "Himalaya-high" above all other candidates for the office. Prussian Germany stunned the world by electing Hindenburg and from then on the downward way was taken with increased speed.

Today Professor Foerster is warning us, as he did twenty years ago, against illusions about the German mentality. Anyone who believes this man to be activated by hatred and bitterness does not know him. Out of a feeling of great responsibility, Foerster asks for firm determination for the solution of the German prob-

The article in the series based on the chapters in Christianity Takes a Stand next week will be on the Moral Meaning of the Atomic Bomb. The author is Dr. Louis N. lem. In spite of privation and disappointment, the veteran of the German emigration has not become embittered or destructive. He has remained a great man, enduring his own hard lot with a smile. Friends have often said that it is shameful that a man of Foerster's standing should have to fight so hard. But this is not apt to deter German historians from telling readers of 1955 how "that scoundrel Foerster was carrying on the vilest propaganda against Germany from New York, for which, of course, he was abundantly paid by the enemy." They will probably have to do so for Foerster is too dangerous an accuser and they hate him for not condoning Germany's bad conscience. To them he never rated anything but "traitor"; one who fouls his own nest. To this he himself answered as early as 1923: "He does not foul his own nest who is conscious of the filth therein; who calls a spade a spade and tried to sweep it clean. The nest-fouler is the one who does things which blacken the honor of his people."

We cannot do better than to end this brief sketch of this week's contributor by quoting from an address delivered in this city in 1944 by Jan Masaryk, foreign minister of Czechoslovakia and head of the delegation of that country to the San Francisco conference:

"For fifty years," said Mr. Masaryk, "Professor Foerster has been warning the world against the Bismarckian way of life; against Pan-Germanism and vulgar Prussianism. The world, with certain noble exceptions, was either deaf or hard of hearing. If my father were alive today, he would be among the first to think of Foerster with genuine friendship and great admiration. It is not generally known perhaps that the first president of Czechoslovakia and Frederick W. Foerster cooperated closely and intimately for a generation. I remember many years ago my father telling me: 'If you want to understand Germany you must read Foerster' and I repeat it to you who are listening to us today: You must read Foerster. The intellectual architects of that quintessence of vulgarity, known as the Siegesallee in Berlin, hated Foerster. Their successors, whether inside or outside of Germany, hate him today. I know that he would be a very sad man if they started liking him.

"Today this patriarch of decent Germany is as hard at work as he was fifty years ago. We are honoring a man who for fifty years swam against the Pan-German stream. Foerster has been assailed by the different breeds of Teutonic knights of evil as a pacifist. Indeed he was a pacifist in the sense of fighting day in, day out, to destroy German goose-stepping militarism in order to bring about a decent European peace. He never for one minute belonged to the school of pacifists who oppose interference with evil. Indeed we need many more pacifists like Professor Foerster.

"Professor Foerster has had the doubtful satisfaction of being right for the past fifty years. I beg of you, listen to his voice of warning; read his books; believe in his absolute intellectual honesty."

His latest warning, which is an answer to Professor Hocking's chapter in Christianity Takes A Stand, will be found elsewhere in this number. Certainly nothing could be more timely, in view of the proposals for Germany of John Foster Dulles and the later report on Germany by Herbert Hoover.

A STEP TOWARD UNITY

Springfield, Mass.:—A service in recognition of the agreement for intercommunion between the Episcopal Church and the Polish National Catholic Church was held at Christ Church Cathedral here on March 2. The service included singing by the choirs of both churches, with vespers of the Polish Church sung in the native language, followed by a shortened form of Evening Prayer from the Book of Common Prayer. Taking part in the service were Bishop Lawrence and Bishop Lesniak of the eastern diocese of the Polish Church, Dean Donald Campbell of the cathedral and Canon D. N. Alexander who was in charge of arrangements. Clergy of both Churches were in the procession.

Bishop Lesniak, in his address, stated that "All of us deeply appreciate every sincere effort made in our times by diplomats and political leaders to lay the foundation for a united and peaceful world, yet it is the conviction of every Christian that, without the presence of Christ's spirit of united Christianity, all purely human plans and schemes will not bring the desired ends. I dare to say that political unity, peace and amity among the nations of the world is unattainable without the powerful moral influence which only a united Christianity is able to exert."

Bishop Lawrence emphasized the similarities and family likenesses between the two Churches, and said that "a service such as this ought to help dramatize our feeling of consideration and fellowship for each other and our brotherhood, one with another. May we ever grow closer together in understanding each other and in common loyalty to Christ."

The achievement of intercommunion is of real significance for New Englanders since the Polish National Catholic Church is comparatively strong there. Of the 63,000 members in the United States, according to figures compiled in 1943, approximately 40,000 of them are in New England. The Church has eight parishes in the diocese of Western Massachusetts.

LEADING CHURCHMEN OF GEORGIA

Savannah, Ga.: — The diocese of Georgia has lost by death two of its leading churchmen. Thomas Purse was for over thirty years the secretary of the standing committee and of the board of officers of the diocesan corporation. He was also prominent in civic affairs, being secretary of the local board of trade.

William K. Miller, chancellor of the diocese, died on February 12th. It is interesting to note that the diocese has had but two chancellors, the other being Mr. Miller's father.

Anti-Discrimination Bills In Many Legislatures

Many States Planning to Follow the Pattern Of New York Bill Which Has Been Successful

By Religious News Service

New York: — Enactment of legislation designed to curb racial and religious discrimination is being sought on a broad scale in current state legislative sessions throughout the country, a survey discloses. Although several other types of anti-discrimination bills are pending, main interest centers on proposals—advanced in at least a dozen states—to outlaw discrimination in employment because of race, creed, color or national origin.

General pattern of these bills is to create state replicas of the Federal Fair Employment Practices Commission, which was set up in June, 1941, by executive order of President Roosevelt and which went out of existence in July, 1946, after unsuccessful efforts were made in Congress to continue it on a permanent basis.

Utah's Senate recently killed a bill to prohibit racial or religious discrimination in employment, despite the advocacy of such legislation by an interim legislative study committee. Action was still awaited at this writing, however, on similar proposals in many other states, including California, Colorado, Connecticut, Iowa, Maine, Michigan, Missouri, Minnesota, Ohio, Rhode Island and Washington.

Widely cited as models for action in other states are laws enacted in the last two years by New York, New Jersey, and Massachusetts. Although these measures provide stringent statutory penalties for racial and religious discrimination in employment, marked progress is claimed thus far on the basis of education and mediation efforts of administrative officials. Indiana and Wisconsin also have fair employment practices statutes, but without stringent penalty provisions.

Supporters of the New York law are currently seeking an amendment further to strengthen the measure by permitting the filing of complaints by interested organizations as well as by individuals. A bill to repeal the Massachusetts law was introduced in the 1947 Massachusetts Legislature but appeared to have little chance of approval.

Bills designed to prohibit racial discrimination in places of public accommodation, such as hotels, restaurants, theaters and stores, were introduced in the legislatures of California, Maine, New Mexico and Utah. Strong support and no opposition was voiced at a hearing on the Maine measure. A resolution was introduced in the Indiana Legislature to censure publicly several Indianapolis hotels for refusal to accommodate Negro legislators.

Measures designed to outlaw organizations which advocate racial or religious prejudice have been introduced in the legislatures of Indiana, Nebraska, California and Pennsylvania, with indications that this form of legislation, aimed at such groups as the Ku Klux Klan, would spread further during current-year legislative sessions.

The Rev. O. H. Brown who is raising an organ fund at St. Philip's, Buffalo, to honor the noted scientist, George Washington Carver Prevention of racial or religious discrimination in institutions of higher learning is sought in bills pending in the New York and New Jersey legislatures. This type of legislation, as exemplified by the New York bill, would recognize as a civil right "the opportunity to obtain education on any level or of any type, including but not restricted to primary, secondary, college, university, professional, industrial and vocational education, without discrimination because of race, religion, color, national origin or ancestry."

Another form of anti-discrimination legislation is indicated by a pending New York State bill to outlaw discrimination in mortgage financing because of race, religion, color, national origin or ancestry. Based on research in the housing field by the American Jewish Congress, this bill would set up both criminal and civil penalties for violations. The sponsors asserted enactment of such legislation was a "necessary first step towards elimination of racial slums in New York City."

Municipalities as well as states are acting in the field of anti-discrimination legislation. Following similar action in Chicago, Milwaukee and other cities, the Minneapolis City Council this year enacted a local ordinance to outlaw racial or religious discrimination in employment.

T. TERTIUS NOBLE RETIRES

New York:—T. Tertius Noble, for thirty years the organist and choirmaster at St. Thomas Church here, played the great organ of the church for the last time on February 26th.

The famous composer of sacred music, who will be eighty years old next May, closed his brief recital with a group of three of his own compositions, "Theme with Variations," "Solemn Prelude," and "Fantasy on the Tune Leoni." The major part of the recital, which was one of a series by organists in churches throughout the city sponsored by the American Guild of Organists, was made up of sacred music by Bach, Correlli and others.

Dr. Noble said no formal words of farewell in St. Thomas, but indicated later that he would play no more because he wanted to rest his eyes. "I also want to stop while I can still do a good job," he added.

He will go to England on the Queen Elizabeth on a sailing scheduled for June 11. There he will play the organ one time—at the York Minster Cathedral, where he was organist from 1897 until he came to St. Thomas in 1913. He will play there "some time in July" at the request of the dean.

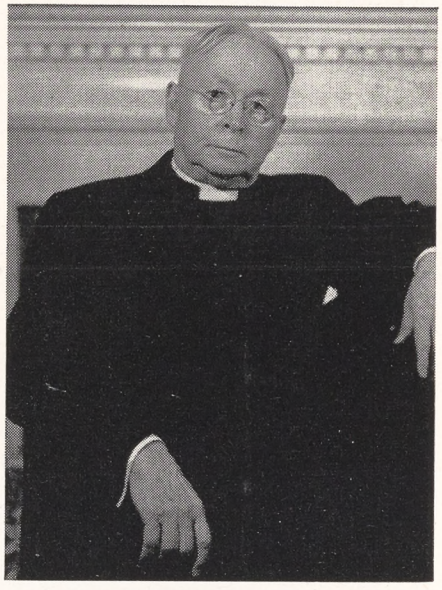
"It's rather nice not to be forgotten," he said of the invitation.

Dr. Noble and his wife plan to remain in England, where he was born at Bath in 1867 and began his career as organist in a Colchester church at the age of thirteen, for at least three months. They will visit Dr. Noble's sister, Mrs. Edith Margaret Wells, near London. On their return, they will live at their home in Rockport, Mass., except for a few months of each year to be spent in New York.

At the recital, Dr. Noble played three preludes and a fugue by Bach; Corelli's "Suite in F," "Prelude on an Old Folk Tune" by Beach; "Lento" by Reinecke, and "Toccatina for Flute" by Yon, as well as his own compositions.

During the thirty years in which Dr. Noble played the organ in St. Thomas, he was honored at a golden jubilee celebration in 1931 marking fifty years' work as an organist. In 1932 he received the Lambeth Degree of Doctor of Music, conferred through the Archbishop of Canterbury for the first time to an organist outside the British Isles. At the same ceremony a stained-glass window was dedicated in his honor in St. Thomas.

His two best-known compositions, "Fierce Was the Wild Billow" and "Souls of the Righteous," voted the finest contribution to American church music by the National Association of Organists, are prominently featured in the memorial window.



PLANS RELIEF TO RUSSIA

New York:—Church World Service, joint Protestant relief agency, is to undertake relief shipments to the Soviet Union and will provide clothing to 100,000 war orphans. The Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, chairman of the inter-Church committee of the American Russian Institute, declared the project "will not only render an important service in terms of relief but will also serve as an expression of friendship from American Church people to our friends in the Soviet Union."

The Soviet government will pay ocean freight on the shipments which will be distributed through Russian welfare organizations.

JOHN G. WINANT SPEAKS

Philadelphia: — Success of the United Nations in achieving world peace will depend greatly upon the extent to which the people of the United States can wipe out intolerance and bigotry, according to Episcopalian John G. Winant, former ambassador to Great Britain. He was speaking to the religious workers council at Temple University. He stated that he had discovered during recent travels that religious and racial tensions today are not as intense as they were immediately following the war because of more satisfactory economic conditions. He warned however should crowded housing conditions continue coincident with a rebirth of economic insecurity upon the part of any substantial number of people, religious and racial tensions inevitably will tighten again.

The Rev. Joseph H. Earp, honorary canon of St. John's Cathedral, Wilmington, Delaware, is also secretary of the convention of that diocese

THE WORLD DAY OF PRAYER

New York:—The World Day of Prayer, sponsored annually by the United Council of Church Women, is observed in fifty countries and in thousands of American communities. So it may be overplaying New York to call attention to its observance there. But there were two services in lower Manhattan this year which were unusual, since the forty-three Protestant churches of the area joined forces for them. In the morning a service was held at the Church of the Holy Communion at which Mrs. Harper Sibley, Episcopalian and president of the United Council, was the speaker. Also taking part in the service were Mrs. J. Leon Hooper, Presbyterian, who helped found the World Day of Prayer in the Philippines while there as a missionary; Mrs. John M. Pearson, Methodist; Mrs. Alexander Wiley, officer of the Auxiliary of New York; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, of St. George's Church.

In the evening a service was held at St. Mark's-in-the-Bouwerie, when the preacher was the Rev. Allan Knight Chalmers, pastor of the Congregationalist's Broadway Tabernacle. Also taking part in this united service were the Rev. Richard McEvoy of St. Mark's; the Rev. E. R. Palen of Middle Collegiate Church; the Rev. J. O. Mellin of the First Presbyterian Church; the Rev. Donald J. Walton of the DeWitt Memorial Church and the Rev. E. O. Miller, rector of St. George's.

FILLING THE GAP IN BUFFALO

Buffalo, N. Y.:—With the local public school system in a state of collapse, due to the strike of teachers for more pay, St. Paul's Cathedral announced a school of religion, non-denominational and open to all teen-age children. The announcement was made by Dean Edward R. Welles and received wide publicity in the local press. Canon Robert E. Merry directed the first course on "Our Common Heritage." Leading clergy of the diocese responded enthusiastically to the idea and volunteered as lecturers. Also the idea was wholeheartedly approved by professional people of the city who offered their services.

Presumably the experiment has now ended, since Dean Welles, in making the announcement, stated that the school would continue only for the duration of the strike.

ERIE HONORS ITS BISHOP

Erie, Pa.:—Religious differences were forgotten in the common spirit of brotherhood when the Temple Men's Club of this city held a dinner in honor of Bishop Harold E. Sawyer, new bishop of Erie. A Roman Catholic pastor, a Presbyterian minister and a Jewish rabbi appealed to the more than 200 men present to further the cause of brotherhood, with Bishop Sawyer responding with an address on the doctrine of man. "The man who is sure he has a purpose in life, given to him by God," he declared, "finds that there is no greater satisfaction than this fact."

EDITORIALS

Bishop Johnson

IRVING JOHNSON was already the Bishop of Colorado when I first met him. So I knew nothing first hand about the famous South Omaha mission, or of his days as a seminary professor or as an able and beloved rector. It was in 1919, shortly after the founding of THE WITNESS that he asked me to become managing editor, filling the place of the Rev. Charles Shutt who had died suddenly. When I declined for what seemed to me adequate reasons, he said: "Well, get the sheet out for a few weeks until I find someone to take over." That was the end of the matter. He never did, nor do I know whether he ever tried. After a few months of intimate association with him I was more than satisfied that he did not.

He edited the paper by remote control from Denver, or from where he happened to be as he travelled about the country holding missions and preaching, for in those days, and for many years that followed, there was no man in the Church in greater demand. The arrangement was quite haphazard. His job was to write a weekly essay, which he did unfailingly week after week for nearly twenty-five years. And it can be said that the vast majority of those who took the paper did so only to get his masterpieces. The rest of the job was mine—news gathering, circulation promotion, advertising solicitation, make-up, finding the cash to pay the bills.

Bishop Johnson was a conservative, both ecclesiastically and politically, and there were many times, during our long association, when articles appeared with which he thoroughly disagreed. Not infrequently we discussed them. But never once during those many years did he even hint that I should write other than as I pleased. Never once did he fail to back me up when attacked by a critic, no matter how thoroughly he agreed with the viewpoint of the critic. He was a liberal conservative who genuinely believed in complete freedom of expression.

As for his own contributions to THE WITNESS, they were characterized by sharp thinking and common sense. Shams, unrealities, conventionalities made him impatient. But he dealt with them with his trenchant wit, never with caustic comment. His large hearted sympathy for people, whatever their position or task, lifted his message to a high plane where he challenged his readers to live realistically and constructively for the Kingdom of God. As he travelled about the country, with railroad trains and stations his editorial office, and the top of a suitcase his desk, he saw the foibles and weaknesses of ordinary men. And good-naturedly and with ready wit, he revealed them to themselves.

His faith was unfailing. He believed wholly in God's power to redeem; he believed thoroughly in the Church as the Body of Christ, even while he was pointing out her failings and weaknesses.

He was also a man of tremendous intellectual attainment and ability, a side of this great man which many missed because of his humility and complete lack of pretense. I recall very well being told by one of the great scholars of the Church how he had gone to hear Bishop Johnson lecture on Church history prepared to scoff at this unconventional looking westerner. He remained to sit at the feet of a man with greater knowledge than he himself possessed.

Bishop Johnson was always one of the most—perhaps the most—colorful and able men in General Conventions. It was a common saying that if you wanted to know in advance how a debate was to come out, find out which side Johnson was on. He was also an expert on parliamentary procedure, as many will remember who attended the Atlantic City Convention. The House of Bishops got themselves into a terrific parliamentary tangle—with amendments, amendments to the amendments, and all the rest of it. Finally the Presiding Bishop gave up, completely at a loss to find a way out of the jam. So the House went into a Committee of the Whole and Bishop Johnson was called to the platform to straighten them out if he could. He walked down the aisle, chewing his tongue in characteristic fashion, his hands deep in his pants pocket. Then, in two minutes, like an expert butcher dressing a

To Bishop Johnson

THESE individuals carry in themselves the deathless life of all humanity. Their ceaseless life flows like a river of mighty volume of flood, through the green fields and deserts, through the dark caverns of oblivion into the dancing joy of the sunlight, bringing water to the door of the multitudes of men through endless years, healing and allaying thirst and cleansing impurities of the daily dust, and singing with living voice, through the noise of the markets the song of the everlasting life.

chicken, he took the whole procedure apart, carefully labelling each step that had been taken, so that the men at the news desk where I was sitting sat up starry eyed and began saying: "What a guy."

And to a great man that I loved there is no better tribute I can pay than to repeat: "What a guy." I have never known a more able man; I have never known a man with finer Christian instincts and values; I have never had a more genuine and loyal friend, and I know there are hundreds throughout this nation who are saying the same thing.

He ran a straight race, unencumbered with things of this world, and he has attained his goal.

The Treatment of Germany

by Frederick W. Foerster

Formerly Professor at Munich University

THE contribution made by Professor Hocking in Christianity Takes a Stand has aroused my greatest interest since it deals with a question to which I have devoted my life.

He begins by criticizing the projected punishment of the German nation. But who ever proposed such a general and equal treatment of a nation whose shades and grades of responsibility are so very different? Mr. Hocking fights against something that does not exist. Certainly the supreme leaders and instigators of the gigantic crime have been punished, but who else besides the leaders and their intimate collaborators? As to the rest of the German people it has certainly to suffer the material consequences of their war of aggression: that is, destruction; reparation; a long-term moratorium of its self-determination. Prof. Hocking says that the German people are already over-punished. This is a confusion of very different issues. If a bandit is at last encircled in his home and it is destroyed, with half of his family killed, because he did not unconditionally surrender in time, this is no punishment and it has not been inflicted as such.

No punishment has been imposed on the German people. There was no revenge, except in the manner in which the expelled German populations in the East were dealt with—and this special treatment was an elementary reaction and not a measure decided in Yalta or Potsdam as a legitimate punishment. As for the real punishment imposed on the top Nazi leaders, Prof. Hocking pretends that it lacks a solid moral foundation. He points to what he considers an established fact, that up to now even wars of aggression and conquest have not been outlawed. This is not true. The Kellogg Pact clearly outlawed wars of aggression. Bonaparte's wars were severely punished by the English with the consent of the whole world. After the eruption of the first world war the passionate discussion about the war guilt clearly showed that everybody recognized that a war of aggression was condemned by the overwhelming approval of the civilized world. The Germans produced mountains of literature to whitewash their government from the accusation. The whole campaign of the "Innocentists" was refuted when, in 1924, the memoirs of Conrad von Hoetzendorf appeared, where letters were produced in which General Moltke admitted that, while Europe was bent on peace, nobody wanted war but Germany, therefore it was extremely difficult to bring them before the German knife. There was only one chance, he said: invasion of Serbia. But a good occasion was needed—let us hope that it will come soon, since the beautiful occasion of the annexation of Bosnia and Herzogowina was missed because it was swallowed, unhappily, by pacifist Russia. (I recommend these memoirs to any who, as I can prove, have been led astray by German propaganda.)

In any case modern mankind has clearly condemned the war of aggression. Dr. Alfred Fried's voluminous and well documented book, The Struggle Against the Threat of a World War, has told the whole story of how the civilized world tried to prevent the German war against Europe.

Prof. Hocking holds the astonishing opinion that there should be no reaction at all against the defeated nation, in spite of the fact that it let loose two long-prepared world wars which killed approximately 40 millions; caused immense and irreparable devastation and resulted in a completely chaotic world. Prof. Hocking does not see that the Hitler war was not a mere war, even not a war of mere conquest. No, it was nothing but the most ordinary and the most ruthless collective robbery ever attempted in human history; a robbery which was only disguised as war and masked as an honorable conflict between nations. This enterprise did not aim at a simple act of annexation but at the permanent enslavement of the whole world, as it is cynically announced in the Nazi literature and long before in the Pan-German literature. More than a hundred years ago the founder of Pan-Germanism, the Prussian poet Ernst Moritz Arndt, declared in his book, Germanien und Europa: "Germany needs a great military tyrant capable of exterminating entire nations." This, in a nutshell, was the whole program of Hitler. In Pan-Germanism the leading classes of the German people embarked on limitless crime. This can be doubted only by those who ignore the thousands of books, pamphlets and articles which poisoned the German people so that Hitler could write in Mein Kampf about the responsibility of all the people for the first world war: "As true as a God lives in heaven, this war has not been imposed on us, it has been desired by the German nation."

Hitler knew what he said. Does not what he states constitute a collective crime? Prof. Hocking, rising against the clearest evidence of such a phenomenon, argues against the possibility of it. Collective guilt does not mean that there is a mystical collective soul directing certain national action. Nothing else is meant than the fact that all the members of the nation cooperated in moral aberration and felt guilty of deflection from God.

As to the German people, the case is much more complicated because we there have to do with German foreign policy and its military consequences. It may seem that the responsibility for this foreign policy can be attributed only to a limited group of leaders who ordered the crimes which the rest simply obeyed, but this appearance does not conform to facts. The whole German problem, and particularly the problem of the Prussianization of Germany, cannot be understood unless one realizes that the very purpose of this Prussianization was to drag the whole nation—at least its politically active, educated, bulk—into the responsibility for the great Prusso-Pan-German enterprise for the conquest of the world. Hitler was only the last popularizer of this power-madness which has for decades tried to win over to an aggressive foreign policy a wholly non-political nation. This propaganda had a splendid success. Almost the whole nation, except the passive masses and a minimum of immune people, were filled with a kind of national drunkenness, as it has already been pictured in Prof. O. Nippold's book, The German Chauvinism, published at the end of the last century. German nationalism became a mass-infection, a new Islam without Allah, which satisfied not only the unchained instincts, but also the need of the better Germans for a new political ideology by appealing to the longing for sacrifice, devotion and discipline, which the liberal era did not offer as a goal and ideal.

Strindberg once said: "Crime is already a punishment." These profound words mean that crime is only the final eruption of long bred aspiration: the unmasking of tendencies nourished and fostered long in secret. The Germans themselves were frightened when in Hitlerism the last consequences of a century of national worship of limitless power, and of the cynical contempt of the rights of other peoples, had their day and their shameless display. If all this does not constitute a terrible guilt and a collective sin, where everybody's lust for power was heated and encouraged by his neighbor's madness, then the age-old word "guilt," the focus of man's deepest experience of himself and of God, the starting point of regeneration, is nothing but a ridiculous and impotent invention.

A MOST interesting passage in Mr. Hocking's chapter is devoted to German disarmament after world war one. When I read the passage I said: "This is pure German propaganda." But I was mistaken. Every German agent knows that you cannot in 1947 still use the deceitful formulas about German disarmament submitted to the world in 1926 and 1927. Has not Goebbels already, in 1935, announced with cynical laughter how splendidly the world was betrayed? Everybody knows that Hitler would not have succeeded in surprising the world with his gigantic armour had not the foundations been laid many years before Hitler's coming to power. I only need remind Mr. Hocking of the famous letter written by the former Chancellor Wirth to Krupp von Bohlen where Mr. Wirth boasted of having granted forty million marks for the secret rearmament of Germany. This contribution took place just at the time when the German representatives at Geneva assured the world that Germany was "completely disarmed." This was a big lie and the German government knew it. But the lie was imposed by the German general staff. How is it possible that a philosopher dares to publish affirmations on such a great question of truth and deceit without having tried to get more solid information than the official German swindle at Geneva? Why did he not study the Nuremberg documents?

I recommend to him the book published by General I. H. Morgan, former British member of the Inter-Allied military control commission. This book, Assize of Arms, tells the whole story of the secret German rearmament. In his book the General has also published a letter which he wrote me as early as 1926 in which he unmasked the whole work of General von Seekt in the rebuilding of the German army ("behind the little Reichwehr arises the gigantic shadow of the former German army"). I tried in vain to get this letter published in a German liberal paper. All the editors refused because they feared the nationalist terror. I finally published it in my review, Menschheit, and distributed it in Geneva, together with other grave documents delivered to me by my German military friends, General von Deimling and Colonel von Sonnenburg, together with other reliable information. My documentation was published just at the moment when Germany entered the League of Nations and when Stresemann solemnly assured the League that Germany was completely disarmed. He became so excited that in an interview granted to the international press he called me a rogue and a liar. But who was the liar and who was the patriot? Was it really in the true interest of the German people that it was dragged into a second conflict with the whole world? The bombed German cities and the whole present misery of the German people give the clearest answer to the question.

Mr. Hocking refers to his impressions of Geneva. He has not seen that Geneva was just the place where the German militarists, and their ardent servants, the German Socialists, played the pacifist role in order to deceive foreign opinion. Hitler's special friend, Colonel Hierl, cynically revealed this tactic in the following words addressed to a German audience in order to defend the official German collaboration with the Geneva-Pacifism: "Our pacifism is a weapon of political fight and in fact serves the preparation for war. Lulling the enemy to sleep with pacific phrases it hopes to persuade him to neglect his armaments. The narcotic vapor with which we surround him conceals our own military preparation for war; it is from this point of view that we should regard the Kellogg Pact and the disarmament conferences of the League."

The world owes thanks to Colonel Hierl for the frankness with which he unmasked the very meaning of the German game in Geneva. Mr. Hocking tells us that he was in Geneva when German disarmament was discussed. I hope my quotation will show him the trap into which he fell. Christianity was abused in favor of the Antichrist. And the game continues. Otherwise it would be impossible, after all the striking revelations at Nuremberg, for a book on the Christian stand in politics to be published in which those who were fooled in Geneva continue to defend the cause of the swindlers and mock those who fought for truth.

PROF. HOCKING warns the world against emasculating a great nation. Does he not know that since 1866 the Germans were ten times over-masculated? This was called "education for total war." Re-Christianization of the German nation means not only spiritual regeneration but also the re-establishment of a sound balance in the soul between the "eternal masculin" and the "eternal feminin." We liberals of German origin cannot sufficiently protest against characterizing Germany's demilitarization as emasculation.

Prof. Hocking mocks at the Allies' effort to organize security and to deprive the Germans, in their deepest interest, of their industrial power-machine. He asks why not also cut off their brains because these brains are the very seat of their war potential. If Prof. Hocking's family were killed by gas, or if he had lived in Greece, Poland or France during the German occupation, he would refrain from such jokes. It is not necessary to destroy the German brains, but it is of immense importance that they be no more misused for mass-destruction but led back to all those applications which were the true glory of the German nation. This can be done only by Caesar's iron presence and readiness. The Germans will not find their way back to their best traditions unless they see no more chance to take up the old game. This is a very simple affair but it needs an allied policy which is not "emasculated" by a wholly erroneous interpretation of Christian charity. There are many "displaced persons" today, but displaced virtues cause the greater trouble in the world. To apply ever yielding mildness where unflexible strength and uncorrupted vigilance are necessary will surely lead to a new, unspeakable, catastrophe. Following this prescription will serve Christ's cause much better than all kinds of displaced mildness in face of powers which only wait the hour of softness in order to break out again and yell their scorn over those who blindly helped them to restore their power.

Plato calls punishment the medicine of the soul because the soul itself needs repression of morbid expansion. Once a terrible killer, condemned to death, was asked whether he accepted the verdict. "A hundred lives should be taken from me," was his answer. If Germany would have thus spoken she could have been saved. Instead of such an attitude the great bulk of the nation rejects guilt and responsibility and seems not to know what state of mind has for decades animated their political consciousness and that this mentality was bound and doomed to a gigantic criminal outburst. And the worst is that the rest of the world, instead of helping the Germans to make up their minds for a national examination of conscience, is now going to excuse everything and sabotage in the name of Christian love and forgiveness. We witness the strange spectacle that in order to accelerate reconciliation, the very religious and moral conditions of true peace and reconciliation are sacrificed.

Almost in the first hour after the armistice in 1918 I had a talk with the French minister, Albert Thomas, who said to me: "For the first time in history the question of responsibility is put before a great nation which is responsible for an unspeakable slaughter. If the German people understand what that means, they and the rest of the world can be saved—if not, they and the rest of the world will be dragged into new catastrophes."

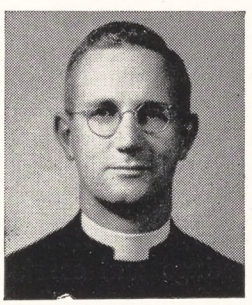
So it happened and the result is at hand. If now shortsighted Christian pacifism and mistaken generosity for the second time keep the German people from the Christian prerequisitions of regeneration and reconciliation then all is lost and the underworld will again have its day. The German people cannot reconcile themselves with the rest of the world unless they first reconcile themselves with truth.

On the ground of all my observations, made during the years between 1918 and 1947, I am fatally disposed seriously to remind a great part of Anglo-American Christendom of their large share of responsibility for world war two. They took the lead in a gullible open-mindedness toward German propaganda, demanding trust, equality and freedom of restrictions for a wholly unconverted nation, preparing behind a deceitful facade the re-establishment of its Prussian robber-potential. I cannot stress enough this question: "Was all this blindness in the true interest of the German people and the people of the world?"

I say that blind generosity toward nationalist Germany is not at all in the interest of the better part of the German nation. It paves the way to perdition. It goes beyond my capacity of mild patience to see the same blind and ignorant generosity, that resulted in world war two, again in full swing. My courageous friends in Germany, a small minority, are in real despair because they foresee that they are doomed to pay one day in blood for their trust in the earnest will of the victorious nations to put an end forever to German nationalist terror.

Mr. Hocking surely wants to aid the rise of a better Germany. Actually he serves the third rise of the underworld. Of course he is right, as a Christian, to show the truth that the only solid and lasting guarantee of peace lies in Germany's spiritual regeneration. But this will not come as long as the Nazi underground and its above-ground agents are allowed to continue their work. They can only be tamed by merciless military control.

In any case it surpasses all that is tolerable if now again, contrary to the most vital interest of the world; threatened by an eventual new conspiracy organized by the wholly unconverted part of the German people, a wholly uninformed, most gullible, Harvard professor dares to repeat the ten times refuted (and by Goebbels admitted) official German swindle of the twenties.



Is it tolerable that, thanks to the spreading of those lies, all Germans who exposed their lives and their reputations by warning the German people and the rest of the world, must now appear as liars and bad patriots? How are we to explain this perverted pro-Germanism, which again and again embraces the cause of Prussian militarism, and which was unmasked and condemned at Nuremberg?

Strategy and Tactics

by

FRANCIS O. AYRES
Rector of St. John's, Waterbury, Connecticut

PARISHES throughout the country have been holding their annual meetings. When the ladies are persuaded to cook a supper and/or when a speaker is imported from far or near, the number attending such meetings sometimes equals the average congregation of a Sunday morning. When the parish meeting consists only of reports, elections and "other business," the number present dwindles almost to the vanishing point. In addition, few parishes have meetings more than once a year. The conclusion is inescapable that the parish meeting as an institution within our Church life is just about defunct.

The seriousness of this situation cannot be overestimated. To cite one aspect, the parish meeting is the voice of the local parishes. No one else has the authority to speak for a parish in regard to contemporary problems. I do not mean that a parish meeting is an authority unto itself. It is bound by the Bible, by the Prayer Book, by the canons, and, to a certain extent at least, by the traditions of the Church. Nevertheless, the parish meeting is the only means by which the corporate voice of the local parish can be made articulate. Just as the diocesan convention should speak for the Church in diocesan-wide matters of social concern, just as the General Convention should speak for the Church in nation-wide or world-wide matters of social concern, so the parish meeting should speak for the Church in community-wide matters of social concern. Where parish meetings are held only once a year with the emphasis on routine business, entertainment or gustatory delights, a parish never speaks at all and the community draws the logical and justifiable conclusion that the Church is not concerned with social matters or, to put it another way, that the "Body of Christ" is in a coma from which there seems to be little chance of recovery. Under the circumstances, little is to be gained by berating diocesan and General Conventions for presenting the same picture. In the Church, irresponsibility begins at home.

There has been very little written about the parish meeting. An excellent little book "The Church Meeting and Democracy" by Daniel T. Jenkins is published in England by Independent Press, Ltd. The supplement to Christian News Letter No. 228 dealt with the same subject. If you can lay your hands on one or both of these you will find them stimulating reading. Here, I have space to quote the introduction to the second which is written by the Rev. Alan Ecclestone, Vicar of Darnall, Sheffield:

"It is generally admitted that the pattern and relationships of the society we have grown up in no longer suffice. The disintegrating processes of past centuries have undermined the structure of social life to a perilous extent, chiefly indeed in the weakening of that sense of local attachment and local responsibility such as the ancient parish system fostered and expressed. The name of the parish survives, the substance has largely disappeared. The responsibilities once shouldered by the parish, discussed at its meetings and carried out by its officials, are now largely unrecognized. A town parish has little meaning, being quite often an arbitrary collection of streets.

"In the process we have lost something vital and necessary in social and spiritual life. A sense of neighborhood and neighborliness is necessary to our spiritual and moral growth. The parish is important, and we must face the task of recovering its life and meaning, not simply to restore a piece of social machinery but to work out afresh in terms of present-day human needs one part of that Gospel committed to our charge. To save men in a world which is disintegrating the Church must confront the man in the street with the spectacle of the common life of a closely-knit body. It must 'be the Church' to men in terms of their need. We shall not get men and women assembled again with a full, strong, vigorous, sense of common life until by example and precept we have made manifest its truth. The 'parish meeting' as it is now being developed in several parishes, is an attempt to find an answer to this problem. What is actually happening is described below, though details and experience vary according to the kind of parish and the time in which it has been at work.

"The parish meeting is the focus of all that is planned and done in the life of the parish. It is the assembly of the Church in that locality to realize its true nature and to grow in deeper understanding of its calling. The report of the Malvern Conference proposed that, 'where possible, the whole congregation habitually worshipping together should regularly meet to plan and carry out some common enterprise, however simple, for the upbuilding of its community life and for the general good.' There were some such meetings in existence at the time, but one may wonder how far these words were taken seriously and how much effort was made to call together the congregation in this way."

Albert Schweitzer: Christian Revolutionary by George Seaver. Harper and Brothers. $1.75.

This is primarily an appreciative exposition of Schweitzer's interpretation of the New Testament and his ethical philosophy. And as such it fills a need, since many who know of his great work in Africa as a medical missionary, know little about him as a scholar.

There is hardly a man of recent decades as gifted as this noted German. He is a great New Testament scholar; he is a distinguished organist and second to none as an interpreter of Bach; he is an expert surgeon and physician; he is surely one of the great Christians of our time.

Here in but 125 pages the author presents this man's ethics for our times—the reverence for life. And as such it is a stimulating and valuable book. Mr. Seaver has promised a biography of Schweitzer later which is surely needed.

Trygve Lie Urges U. S. Lead Fight for Tolerance

Dean Charles P. Deems is Honored at Dinner For His Work for the Cause of Brotherhood

Edited by Sara Dill

Minneapolis: — A plea that the United States lead the way in the struggle for racial and religious tolerance was made here by Trygve Lie, secretary-general of the United Nations, in an address highlighting American Brotherhood Week. Achievement of the goals envisaged by the United Nations Charter, Lie said, "requires that ordinary men and women, in their ordinary, day-to-day lives, shall practice racial and religious tolerance toward their fellow men."

Pointing out that "a desire to escape from intolerance elsewhere" led to the founding of this country, Lie declared "the whole world watched the United States."

"In this country, where so many races and religions have been brought together in a common quest of freedom, it is almost unthinkable that there should be even a suspicion of intolerance," Lie continued.

He said the United Nations welcomes a "demonstration of good faith and human decency" by the United States.

"Of all the things for which the United Nations is struggling," Lie said, "none is more important than the idea of racial and religious tolerance. The only danger from which the United Nations suffers in this regard, is the temptation to take racial and religious tolerance for granted. Because we are not conscious of any racial or religious prejudices in ourselves we may be inclined to assume that all other people feel likewise.

"The only type of intolerance to which we, in the United Nations, subscribe is intolerance of intolerance. We do not and cannot tolerate fascist and nazi doctrines, which are based upon prejudice. All of us, after all, are old enough to remember that the doctrine which led eventually to the second world war, to the ruination of countless countries, to the death and mutilation of millions of our fellow men, to the disruption of civilization, first showed its foul possibilities to the world in an open attempt to create racial conflict.

"So today we may be excused for viewing with violent feelings of disgust and deep suspicion any similar manifestations which may appear, no matter where they appear and no matter who may be responsible for them."

Among those honored at the dinner was Dean Charles P. Deems of the Cathedral of St. Mark, who was presented with a certificate of appreciation for his service to the cause of brotherhood.

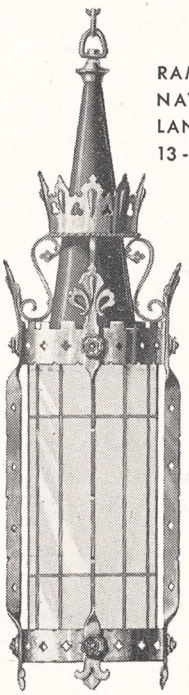
Dean Takes Leave

Detroit:—Dean Kirk B. O'Ferrall of St. Paul's Cathedral here has been granted a sabbatical leave, effective May 1 and continuing through October. Friends here have stated that he probably will not return to his post. The Dean would not commit himself when questioned about the rumor. "I have made very definite plans for study and travel," he said. "I will be ready to announce them in a few weeks."

Consider Ministry

Gambier, O.:—Fifty young men from eight states gathered at Bexley Hall recently to consider the ministry as a vocation. The speakers were the Rev. Thomas V. Barrett, head of college work of the National Council; the Rev. Frank L. Titus of the overseas department; the Rev. Robert A. George, rector at Defiance, Ohio; the Rev. Maxfield Dowell of Shaker Heights, Ohio.

Pussy Willow Sunday



Winthrop, Mass.:—Sixty children of St. John's Church here observed their annual "Pussy Willow Sunday" last week. Then after service they brought 700 large pussy willows to the congregation at St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston.

Rev. Ralph M. Harper, rector of the Winthrop church, made the presentation to Dean Edwin J. van Etten on behalf of the children, saying "these 60 boys and girls of St. John's Church, Winthrop, bring the good tidings to Dean van Etten and our Cathedral congregation that Spring is just around the corner. No matter what Mr. Weather Bureau may say about it, no matter what Mr. Windy March may do about it, these 700 visible prophecies of Springtime are given you to warm the heart and cheer the soul of every home."

Dean van Etten welcomed the children and gave each a silver medal of St. Botolph.

"We believe great and immediate results will be the outcome of this alliance between the church and the court," Judge Mamie Dowd Walker declared. "Sometimes we find parents and children who have never identified themselves with any religious influence."

The plan was presented to the court by the Rev. B. E. Morris, head of the Durham Ministers Association, and the Rev. Miles Mark Fisher, president of the Durham Ministerial Alliance (Negro).

Women Pastors?

Philadelphia (RNS): — Should women be admitted to the pulpits of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. as pastors? Presbyteries are now voting on this question, and the returns to date show 36 Presbyteries in favor of, and 41 Presbyteries against, an overture which would permit women to be ordained. Five Presbyteries report no conclusive action yet taken in the controversial matter. There are 268 Presbyteries in the Church, leaving more than two-thirds of the total number yet to be heard from.

The overture, adopted at the General Assembly held last May, proposes to amend the Church's form of government to read as follows: "The ordinary and perpetual officers in the Church are bishops or pastors; the representatives of the people, usually styled ruling elders and deacons. These officers may be either men or women, and wherever this provision is applicable, directly or impliedly, there the terms employed are to be interpreted in harmony therewith."

A favorable vote of a majority of the Presbyteries is required for the overture to become the law of the Club, composed of faculty and graduates of St. Paul's University, has placed its clubroom at the disposal of the allied Episcopalians for two evening meetings a month.

Chaplain William J. Chase, chaplain of the far eastern air forces, who comes from the diocese of Central New York, spoke on the significance of Lent.

Plan New Work

Providence, R. I. (RNS):—The Rhode Island Council of Churches is planning expansion into three fields which it has not previously covered. The proposed new projects include a chaplain for state institutions who will work in cooperation with state authorities; an assistant executive secretary who will contact community agencies and church groups; and a program of systematic hospital visitation and clinical work through community institutions.

Goes to China

New York:—Mr. Richard T. Corsa has been appointed by the National Council to be teacher and athletic director at the Mahan School, Yangchow, in the diocese of Shanghai, China. Mr. Corsa was principal of the United States army information and education service in Shanghai during the war. He speaks and reads both Chinese and Japanese. His interest in the Chinese people prompted his offering himself for this position.

Mr. Corsa is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania and has done graduate work at the University of Michigan.

Students Lose Weight

Indianapolis, Ind. (RNS):—Four Butler University students who embarked on a week-long "starvation diet" to focus attention on the Week of Compassion sponsored by the Disciples of Christ for overseas relief, lost a total of 28 pounds during their fast. Robert Funk dropped 10½ pounds, Roger Chittick lost 5½, Kenneth Brown, 8, and Miss Alta Bond, 4½. Funk lost four pounds in one 24-hour period. The students donated $40, the saving on food during their diet, to overseas relief. They said they felt "good," and that it would not be hard to continue the fast another week. They subsisted entirely on half a pound of food daily, including link sausage, cheese, pudding, crackers, cocoa and a few chocolate bars.

Tell Legislators

Manchester N. H. (RNS):—In a five-point letter to members of the State Legislature, the New Hampshire Council of Churches and Religious Education, which represents more than 65,000 New Hampshire Protestants, announced it opposes a state lottery, granting of approval for dog tracks, relaxing of controls on the sale of intoxicants or the legalizing of any form of gambling with a view to securing revenue. "We do not believe such action to be either economically sound or morally defensible," the letter stated.

The Council declared it would

"vigorously support" good legislation having to do with "public welfare, conservation of natural resources, general education, state institutions, domestic relations, equal rights and privileges for women, the protection of children and the safeguarding of the character of youth."

Bishop Stevens Invited

Sydney (wireless to RNS):—Anglican and Protestant Episcopal leaders from the United States, Great Britain, and South Africa are expected to attend celebrations in Melbourne next June commemorating the centenary of the Church of England in Victoria. Among those invited are Bishop Bertrand Stevens, of Los Angeles; the Most Rev. John R. Darbyshire, of the Anglican metropolitanate of Capetown, South Africa; and Canon Roger Lloyd, of the Anglican diocese of Winchester, England, a well known Church writer.

The centenary observances will be linked in commemorative rites for John Sackfield, pioneer Anglican missionary, who disappeared among the snowclad mountain ranges on his way to the inland hamlet of Combienbar to hold services. Plans are on foot to erect a memorial cairn in the mountain region where Sackville perished, and to make the site an annual diocesan pilgrimage center.

Boycott Proposed

Las Vegas, Nev. (RNS): — Plans for a boycott against youth activities of local churches were considered and then unanimously rejected by a group of teen-agers here. The meeting climaxed the youngsters' resentment of what they called the clergy's failure voluntarily to come forward and back them and their leader, Miss Eileen Abbott, 21, in a campaign to stop the sale of liquor to minors in this community. The teen-agers rejected the plan "because we need more and better, rather than fewer, youth activities in our churches."

On February 8, three youngsters under the leadership of Miss Abbott made a surprise sortie in which they secured evidence against thirty liquor establishments that were selling to minors. The group have since declared themselves resentful that the churches of the community had not made any move to rectify the situation before they took matters into their own hands.

"The trouble with the clergy," said one teen-ager, "is that most of them are getting financial support from the liquor and gambling interests."

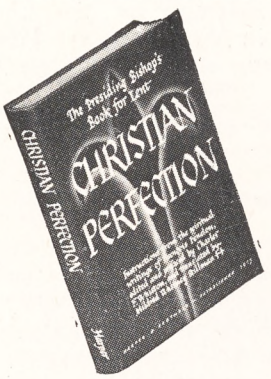
After deciding against the boycott the youngsters discussed the churches in general, and the clergy in particular, in their relations with young people.

"The ministers are so busy preaching Christianity they don't have enough time to practice it," was characteristic of their comment.

One 17-year-old said he had gone to Sunday school for ten years to learn Christianity and to the Boy Scouts for ten months "to learn how to use it."

The group finally reached the conclusion that, "What the churches in Las Vegas need are ministers with as much horse-sense, guts, and understanding as Eileen Abbott." And the meeting broke up with each boy pledged to "try to figure out what we can do about it."

Friends of Okinawa



New York:—The formation of a New York chapter of "Friends of Okinawa" is announced by the Rev. Garland E. Hopkins of Washington, D.C., provisional national president of the organization. Elected to head the New York group is former army chaplain Frank L. Titus, on the staff of the overseas department of the National Council, and who participated in the initial landings on Okinawa. The purpose of the movement is to promote a wider interest and understanding of the economic and cultural needs of a people who were first to fall victims of Japanese expansion.

annual feature at the fashionable Anglican Church of St. Philip here for many years, according to the Rev. Ernest K. Cole, pastor in charge. The function attracts about a thousand couples each year and consists of wedding hymns, a commemorative wedding service, and a sermon stressing the privileges and duties of married life, Mr. Cole declared.

He said arrangements are also made for Protestants of other denominations to hold similar services, intended to remind couples of their marital vows and to reconcile couples "unconsciously drifting apart."

Raise Large Fund

New York (RNS): — The Restoration Fund of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. has raised $21,108,616 to date in its three-year drive to net $27,000,000, it was announced here by Harold A. Delzell executive director of the fund commission. With less than $6,000,000 yet to be raised by the time the General Assembly of the Church convenes in May, 1948, the Fund is three months ahead of schedule, Dalzell said. The drive was launched by the General Assembly in May, 1945.

Austin-Mahoney Bill

New York:—The Church League for Industrial Democracy is seeking support for the Austin-Mahoney bill in New York which is designed to eliminate racial and religious discrimination in colleges and schools. On the other hand the Catholic Welfare Committee is opposing the legislation. Concern over this fact was expressed by the Rev. Jack McMichael, secretary of the Methodist Federation for Social Action.

"We believe that Christian churches and individuals are being tested today by the specific stand they take on racial and religious discrimination," McMichael said. "We are disturbed, therefore, by the report that the Catholic Committee has asked for defeat of the pending Austin-Mahoney bill designed to eliminate racial and religious discrimination in institutions of higher learning.

"The Methodist Federation for Social Action considers this position untenable, ethically and religiously —especially in view of the unqualified refusal of the Catholic Committee to respond to the American Jewish Congress request for proposed amendments."

MISS MARY WILLIAMS
Churchwoman of Boston

The Church may well be proud of the stand taken by the clergy in the state of Georgia. It surely is not easy for a minister there to come out against "white primary" laws. Yet under the fine leadership of both Bishop Barnwell and Bishop Walker, as you have reported, our clergy took a stand both on this issue and against the Talmadge forces. It took courage that one rarely sees in the Church and we all ought to be grateful for it.

REV. RANDOLPH CRUMP MILLER,
Professor at Divinity School of the Pacific

The Rev. S. Norman McCain is misinformed about racial prejudice in the theological schools. Among the graduates of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific are the Rt. Rev. Light S. Maekawa, the Rev. Joseph Tsukomoto, the Rev. John H. M. Yamazaki, all of Japanese descent; the Rev. Daniel Wu, the Rev. Yim Sang Mark, the Rev. Wai On Shim, of Chinese descent; the Rev. Alfonso Gomez Camberos, the Rev. Jose Flores, and the Rev. Leonardo Cespedes, of the Mexican Church; the Rev. Victor Rivera, of Puerto Rico; and the Rev. James H. McIlvaine, a Negro. Our alumni list includes eleven Japanese, three Chinese, three Mexicans, one Negro, one Hawaiian, one Greek, and one Puerto Rican. Two Japanese have been given honorary degrees. At the present time our student body includes one Chinese, one Negro, one Mexican; and another Negro was a student last year. This is a small percentage of our graduates, but it makes clear that our doors are open to all candidates to the ministry who meet our other requirements.

ANSWER: Dr. Miller, would you consider taking on the task of writing to our other theological schools asking each to give a report similar to yours, so that we may see if all of our schools come up to the standards of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific?

As our Church comes to be a living example of the Christian way of life, even as the Church Divinity School of the Pacific is an example, then we will be respected for what we are. My hope is that not only will all of our seminaries be as your school is, but also that all Church institutions will be as you. I look forward to the day when any Church person may enter any Church camp, seaman's home, prep-school, or such regardless of his color or nationality.—S. Norman McCain, Jr., Rector at Copenhagen, N. Y.

DANIEL E. WILLARD SR.,
Layman of Nebraska City, Nebr.

Referring to "Interesting Facts," published by the Presiding Bishop's committee: on page 14 is a paragraph which impels me to speak. It is commented correctly that many people upon first acquaintance with our Church remark upon the "coldness" or aloofness of our Church. Then it is explained that the "aloofness is but a natural feeling that God's house is no place for small talk and handshaking."

"Let all the earth keep silence before him." I say why not "Make a joyful sound unto the Lord." If the Lord is only or chiefly in his holy temple then woe to the world outside where there is too little knowledge of his teaching of love. The Man of Galilee went among the common people. The record does not show that he "shook hands" with the multitudes, but he did not keep silence either within or without the churches. He mingled with the people. He taught love for and kindliness to our neighbors. He ever extended a helping hand. He did not proclaim, so far as I can understand his teaching, that it is the duty of man to go to church every Sunday and there to worship God as the thing of first importance. Rather emphasis was placed on goodwill and love for our fellowmen.

The Episcopal Church (or any other Church) will not (as I understand the Scriptures) bring the world to the teachings of the Man of Galilee by solemnly worshipping God in church as though God were only in the holy temple (church). If there is anything in solemnly worshipping in church and bolting out of the church in silence and aloofness to our neighbors that exemplifies love for our fellowmen, which is what Jesus taught, I, in all sincerity fail to see it.

I say again "Make a joyful sound unto the Lord." Shake hands with your neighbors, whether strangers or not. Make the house of God a temple of goodwill, love, and friendliness. Then maybe the stranger that is within our gates will feel kindly disposed to come in. By friendliness and kindly greeting we may induce them to come in. Until friendliness and goodwill are extended I do not see how they will ever be induced to come in. Carry the gospel of love to all the world. Go to Church not to worship God in silence and aloofness only but with a cordial handshake seek to extend the gospel of love as taught by the Man of Galilee.

Ministers Affirm Their Faith In Moscow Conference

Hit at H. D. Gideonse Who Stated That He Hoped the Conference Would Not Succeed

By Rita Ruben

Brooklyn:—A group of prominent local clergymen issued a public statement on the eve of General Marshall's departure for the Moscow Conference, in which they expressed their faith "that the conference can be a success and will make a contribution to world peace as our delegates seek honest and reasonable agreements with the delegates of the other great powers."

The statement was released in protest against an address delivered by the president of Brooklyn College, Harry D. Gideonse, on February 26 in Upper Montclair, N. J., and reported in national newspapers, in which he made a plea for a stalemate at Moscow and the immediate establishment under American leadership of a western European bloc.

"We feel this statement," declared the clergymen, "to be highly irresponsible and contrary to our American aspiration towards a worthy international order. We deprecate such thinking as expressed by the president of Brooklyn College as unrepresentative of our community, and we trust that public opinion will register its quick reaction."

Expressing their own confidence in the conference method of reaching agreements among the great powers, the clergymen in their statement called Gideonse's position "an expression of moral cynicism" and "a fundamental repudiation of the United States' solemn commitment to the United Nations, for the U. N. Charter presupposes the coexistence of the different member-nations, whatever their varying political and economic systems, in a permanent collaboration for peace."

"It seems to us," said a spokesman of the group, "that Dr. Gideonse has allowed his personal antagonism to the Soviet Union to warp his entire outlook. Whatever the differences and the difficulties between the United States and the Soviet Union, the road to peace does not lie through the creation of blocs and reliance upon coercion but through the reaching of working agreements. We, who signed this letter, regret greatly that such a statement as Dr. Gideonse made, should come from a man who is at present the president of Freedom House, an institution founded by public subscription raised in memory of Wendell Willkie, whose faith in 'One World' so stirred the hearts and minds of men. It seems so inconsistent with the whole outlook of 'One World'."

The full text of the declaration of the Brooklyn clergyman is as follows:

"To us it is a matter of painful regret that the president of Brooklyn College, Dr. Harry D. Gideonse, should publicly voice the hope that the forthcoming Moscow Conference will end in failure, and that, in anticipation of a deadlock, he should advocate the immediate establishment of a western European bloc directed against the Soviet Union.

"Does Dr. Gideonse propose that General Marshall simply go through the motions of peace-making? Does he solemnly suggest that our negotiators at Moscow sit down to write the peace treaties for Austria and Germany with their tongues in their cheeks?

"We feel this statement to be highly irresponsible. It borders on the immoral in that it advises our delegation to the peace conference to use deliberate double-talk, and it is contrary to our American aspiration towards a worthy international order.

"Not only do we see in Dr. Gideonse's proposal an expression of moral cynicism but it means a fundamental repudiation also of the United States' solemn commitment to the United Nations, for the United Nations Charter presupposes the coexistence of the different member-nations, whatever their varying political and economic systems, in a permanent collaboration for peace.

"We deprecate such thinking as expressed by the president of Brooklyn College as unrepresentative of our community, and we trust that public opinion will register its quick reaction.

"For ourselves, and in the name of the Brooklyn community, we wish to affirm our faith in the genuineness of the will for peace with which our delegates go to Moscow. We believe that this Conference can be a success and will make a contribution to world peace as our delegates seek honest and reasonable agreements with the delegates of the other great powers."

There were twenty signers to the statement, fourteen of whom were Episcopalians: Alger L. Adams of St. Philip's; John M. Coleman of St. Philip's; Egbert A. Craig of St. Martin's; C. C. S. England of St. Augustine's; John H. Fitzgerald of Christ Church, Bay Ridge, who is also the secretary of the House of Bishops; Guy H. Frazier of St. Gabriel's; Duncan M. Genns of St. Thomas'; Gordon C. Graham of St. Simon's; George H. MacMurray of St. Philip's, Dyker Heights; John H. Melish of Holy Trinity; William H. Melish of Holy Trinity; Harold C. Swezy of Holy Apostles; James Williams of the Holy Cross; John L. Zacker of St. John Baptist.

CHURCHMEN APPEAL FOR DP'S

Los Angeles (RNS): — Brotherhood Week took a practical turn here when religious leaders asked Californians to aid the movement to free thousands of displaced persons now in European camps. The churchmen urged citizens to write their Congressmen to support a bill now before Congress to liberalize present immigration laws.

Signers of the statement were Archbishop John J. Cantwell, of the Archdiocese of Los Angeles, Rabbi Edgar Magnin, president of the Southern California Board of Rabbis, Bishop William B. Stevens of the Los Angeles (Episcopal) Diocese, and Dr. E. C. Farnham, executive secretary of the local Church Federation.

"Nowhere is brotherhood more needed than in the European camps in which more than 800,000 men, women, and children are confined," the statement declared. "About 400,000 of them are Catholics, 200,000 Protestants and 200,000 Jews. Let us open our doors to some of those unfortunates.

"During the war only 10,000 immigrants per year were admitted to this country, whereas the quota set in 1929 provided for 154,000 a year. If Congress will clear the way for the normal set quota only, this nation will be helping to wipe out a bitterness that threatens to generate new conflicts.

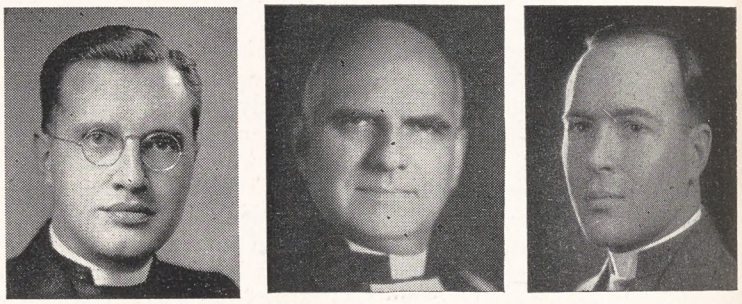
"No immigrant would be a public charge, because his or her financial security would have to be guaranteed by an individual or group in the United States."

LAURA R. LITTLE IS DEAD

Boston:—The death of Laura R. Little on March 2 removes one whose name is honored in missionary circles at home and abroad for the efficiency and sympathetic insight with which she administered the supply bureau of the Massachusetts Church Service League for over twenty years. She gave a major part of her time as a volunteer to this work which she directed with rare skill and devotion, permeated always with a sense of humor.

STUDENTS CONSIDER CHURCH UNITY

Boston:—Speaking to a group of over eighty Presbyterian and Episcopal college students, the Rev. Sherman E. Johnson and the Rev. William E. Denney presented the cases of their respective Churches in a discussion of the problem of Episcopal-Presbyterian unity. The meeting was a part of the program of the Canterbury Club of Emmanuel Church.



Prof. Johnson, speaking first, stated that the primary reason for unity is that there should be no schism in the body of Christ. Due to the basic purposes of the Westminster Confession and the theological tradition maintained by both Churches, he said, Episcopalians and Presbyterians are well-suited for merger. Mr. Johnson, a professor at Episcopal Theological School and member of the commission for unity, presented the Episcopal objections to unity, and concluded with a plea that we rise above the details that are now hindering us. "There is a definite lack of zeal for union in the Episcopal Church . . . there is a lack of education." He stressed the necessity of working together, this cooperation to take the form of exchange professorships, inter-association of students, joint worship.

The Rev. Mr. Denney, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of the Covenant, stressed the "remarkable orthodox solidarity" of the Presbyterian Church, stating that had the General Convention voted favorably on the unity overtures, the General Assembly would, of a certainty, have voted it down. The basis of unity, Denney said, is to break down the distinction that now exists between prophet and priest; the solution lies not in the paths now taken, but, first of all, in keeping the doors open, and, secondly, in both Churches promoting an ecumenical world institute, which has on it men representing all the parties in both Churches, to deal with doctrinal issues. A new confession of faith, expressed in words of our time, is sorely needed. Such an institute, producing a new confession of faith, would not only lead to Episcopal-Presbyterian unity, Denney felt, but also to a union of most non-Roman denominations.

The group then united in a prayer service, conducted by Donald T. Oakes, director of the Emmanuel Church Canterbury Club and student at Episcopal Theological School, and the Rev. Alison Bryan, director of the Boston Westminster Foundation.

CONFERENCE ON MINISTRY

Exeter, N. H.:—The Rev. Clinton L. Morrill, former navy chaplain, is to give the opening address at a conference on the ministry to be held here March 21-23. Other speakers are the Rev. Shunji F. Nishi, assistant chaplain at Columbia University; the Rev. W. B. Spofford Jr., secretary of the CLID; the Rev. Howard P. Kellett, social service secretary of Massachusetts; the Rev. George L. Cadigan, rector at Salem, Mass.; the Rev. Sherman E. Johnson of the Episcopal Theological School and the Rev. William Brewster, head of St. Mark's School.

CHURCHMEN IN THE NEWS: The Rev. Theodore P. Ferris, rector of Trinity Church, Boston, leads a conference on religion at Brown University; Bishop Stevens of Los Angeles joins in plea for European displaced persons; Prof. Sherman Johnson, professor at the Episcopal Theological School, leads in a discussion of unity with Presbyterians

DIVINITY SCHOOL CONVOCATION

Philadelphia: — A special convocation of the Philadelphia Divinity School is to be held on March 28 when honorary doctorates will be conferred upon Presiding Bishop Sherrill, Bishop Banyard, suffragan of New Jersey, Bishop Wilner, suffragan of the Philippines (in absentia) and Bishop John Z. Jasinski of the Buffalo diocese of the Polish National Catholic Church. Bishop Sherrill will be the preacher.

A School For Blind Children Is Opened in China

Evangelistic Services Are Held for Ten Day Period with the Hope of Doubling Membership

By Kimber H. K. Den

Nanchang, China:—One of the new projects which we opened here, after my return to undertake post-war reconstruction, is a school for blind children. We are keenly aware, as a result of the war, that many hundreds of children are suffering the loss of sight and are in a miserable condition. To do our bit in extending Christian love to this unfortunate group of children we have opened this school here for fifty children, coming from all parts of the country. We hope to be able to expand it as the money is found.

With the consent of Bishop Craighill we are now using temporarily a building formerly occupied by a war service agency, but we hope soon to move to more adequate quarters on the outskirts of this city which was originally designed for a school for the blind. It is now used by the military officers' training camp.

For the current support of this work the local board of directors, consisting of leaders of different missions and organizations, are now undertaking to raise twenty million dollars (Chinese currency). It of course sounds like a lot to Americans but it will have very little purchasing power as a result of the terrible inflation. In view of the widespread interest manifested by all classes of people, irrespective of their religious faith, we feel sure that it won't take very long before the goal of our financial campaign can be reached.

As has been the usual practice at St. Matthew's Church here during the pre-war period, we utilized the old China New Year (January 28-February 6) for holding evangelical meetings every day for ten days. These meetings were held every afternoon in the homes of members of our vestry and other members, where a family altar was established as a center of worship. Because of travelling difficulties and the heavy expenses involved, we were not able to secure a special preacher for these services and meetings. I therefore preached at all of them throughout the campaign. The general theme was "Spiritual rehabilitation and home evangelism" and each member of the parish was urged to bring along one or more friends, for whom he would be held responsible to lead to Christ as the objective of his Christian endeavor for the year. In this way it is hoped that the membership of the parish will be doubled, as it will be if each member keeps his pledge in Christian faith and loyalty.

The Rev. Kimber H. K. Den who announces the opening of a school for blind children. This is a recent snapshot taken following a severe illness from which he has entirely recovered

I am aware of course that we are nearer Easter than we are Christmas, and yet my American friends, even at this late date, may be interested in our Christmas celebration here at St. Matthew's. In spite of our constant worries due to the uncertainty of the days ahead, and the sorrows for the tragic sufferings all around us, we allowed nothing to interfere with the full flow of our Christmas joys. I was especially glad, as priest in charge, to get back only two days before Christmas after a long visit in Shanghai for the biennial conference of the National Christian Council. There I was assigned the task of writing an article on the social reconstruction work at Kiangsi for the missions study course. This I will send you in a few days since many readers of THE WITNESS, who have been so generous in supporting this work with Chinese refugees and orphans, may be interested in the report.

Of course everything was well arranged and planned by our vestry and staff members for the celebration of the holy feast of Christmas before I returned. It meant a great deal to me to be back in time for Christmas and to share with my people the great joys of the holy season. It was also a great joy to us to have Miss Muriel Lester of England and Miss Owen from India as our guests for Christmas.

After our carol service on Christmas eve, during which a Christmas pageant was presented, we had a large social party in our parish hall for all members of the church. The hall was packed to the doors in spite of the cold and rain. Everyone, whether young or old, was asked to bring a small Christmas gift which was turned over to Santa Claus for distribution. The first hour of the party was devoted to carols and the telling of Christmas stories. Then followed a short play and a few games by the members of the young people's fellowship. The whole party lasted over two hours during which we enjoyed our fellowship in our highest spirits. Then at midnight on Christmas eve, through the courtesy of our UNRRA friends, our young people were taken around in their bus for carol singing at different mission stations, hospitals and homes of Christian friends. This lasted for the whole night.

The high light of our Christmas joys was the presentation of a class of twenty persons for catechumen and nine adults and eleven children presented for baptism at our celebration on Christmas morning.

My friends may also be interested to learn that I also was called to Nanking to serve as the advisor of the Kiangsi provincial delegation to China's first National People's Congress. Because of the non-participation of the communists this Congress could hardly do anything other than adopt in principle the national constitution.

How I wish that editors of THE WITNESS, my very good friends, could be with us and see everything here with their own eyes. Let us keep up our hope and look for such a day.

Readers who care to make contributions to the work Mr. Den is doing in China should make checks payable to "Treasurer, C.L.I.D.," and mail to the Church League for Industrial Democracy, 155 Washington Street, New York 6, N. Y.

UNION PLAN COMPLETE

New York (RNS):—Final draft of the proposed basis of union between the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Church has been completed and will be submitted to both bodies within the next few months, it was learned here.

At its April meeting the executive committee of the general council of the Congregational Christian Churches will be requested to transmit the plan to its churches, conferences and associations for study and action. If 75% of the bodies vote approval, the proposed basis of union will then be presented to the meeting of the general council in June 1948, for final action.

The proposed plan will be submitted in July to the triennial meeting of the general synod of the Evangelical and Reformed Church, and if adopted by a two-thirds vote will be sent to the 34 synods of the Church. Final adoption by the general synod requires a two-thirds affirmative vote by the local synods.

Following approval by both denominations, a special joint meeting will be called to complete plans for the merger.

According to the proposed basis of union the unit of organization for the new United Church will be the congregation. Men and women will have the same rights and privileges in the Church, and it is recommended that at least one-third of the members of national administrative bodies be women.

The proposed plan also provides for freedom of worship and education as now enjoyed by congregations of the negotiating denominations.

DISCUSS RELIGION AT BROWN

Providence, R. I.:—The annual religious embassy was held at Brown and Pembroke Colleges, March 3-6. The leader at Brown was the Rev. Theodore P. Ferris, rector of Trinity Church, Boston, and the leader at Pembroke was another Episcopalian, Mrs. John G. Magee of New Haven, who was for a year a missionary in China. Other Episcopalians on the program were the Rev. Paul Van K. Thomson; the Rev. William Berndt; the Rev. Raymond S. Hall; the Rev. Shirley B. Goodwin; the Rev. John R. Wyatt; the Rev. L. H. Flicher; the Rev. Robert S. Beecher; the Rev. J. A. McNulty; the Rev. Henry P. Krusen and Miss Barbara E. Arnold, head of college work in New England. The chairmen of the committee sponsoring the conference were also both Episcopalians; Richard M. Morris of Brown and Mary E. McNulty of Pembroke.

The Rev. Charles H. Cadigan, chairman of the board of the Church Society for College Work, has secured a three month leave of absence from his parish at Bloomfield Hills, Michigan, to present the claims of the ministry to college students. He will be assisted by the Rev. Hugh C. White, a recent graduate of Virginia Seminary

PUBLIC NEGLECT OF YOUTH

Boston:—Bishop Norman B. Nash declared here last week that the state legislature had remained deaf to the need of correctional institutions for youth, with increasing sex crimes the result. The statement followed the murder of a young girl by a mentally defective boy who had recently been released from an institution even though his parents has stated that he should not be released.

"The deplorable lack of adequate educational and psychiatric programs in the commonwealth's institutions for young offenders against the law has long been known," Bishop Nash said, "but the public reliance upon mere detention as a corrective, and the public unwillingness to meet the cost of expert psychiatric study of individuals and the expense of proper education and training in the institutions have been enough to thwart the repeated efforts of trustees, administrators and penologists to secure the necessary funds. The legislature has remained deaf."

Declaring sex offenders must be studied and educated, the bishop said "such a program will cost money, but I hope Massachusetts will need no more tragedies to convince us that we must institute such a program for the sake of our young people. They are not expendable."

BRITISH EDITORS ARE ANGRY

London (wireless to RNS):—Religious weeklies here, suspended for two weeks in the interest of power and fuel conservation, reappeared last week with editorials sharply criticizing the government's action as morally and legally unjustifiable. The Recorder, Methodist, said that it showed "indifference if not hostility to religion," whereas the Christian World asserted that it would be willing "to have accepted equality of sacrifice but what we complain of is arbitrary discrimination." Other weeklies commented along the same line.

TWO BEQUESTS TO KENYON

Gambier, O.: — Kenyon College has received from the estate of Florence E. Lewis Rauh of Elyria, Ohio, a bequest of $50,000 for a scholarship fund and another of about $273,000, part or all of which is for a new building. The trustees have assigned the latter for the construction of a freshman dormitory.

URGE SEMINARY BE CLOSED

Chapel Hill, N. C.:—The following resolution was passed at the annual state conference of Episcopal college students, meeting here: "We strongly recommend that the Bishop Payne Divinity School at Petersburg, Va., be abolished and that Negro candidates for holy orders be admitted to the regular southern theological schools of the Church." Further details of the reasons for the stand taken will appear in THE WITNESS for March 27.

EDITORIALS

The Meaning of Greece

IN AN editorial on International Policy (Dec. 12, 1946) we stated that "We will oppose, with every resource at our command, those who loosely talk about war with Russia and who would increase our military establishment for such a contingency." The editorial also declared that "it will be our constant endeavor to make our readers deeply conscious of the fact that we face times of great international change and readjustment and to endeavor to guide that change by reference to the one form of world policy that offers the only hope—the Christian gospel of brotherhood."

To deal with such subjects, we are fully aware, brings charges that we are pro-Soviet even when we state, as this editorial did, that we believe Russia has a long way to go before political democracy is realized. But more than that, we are of the opinion, as Bishop Johnson was always saying, that it is far more profitable and healthy to confess our own sins than those of the other fellow. The fact that we do not join the swelling anti-Russian chorus, which is rapidly conditioning the American people to accept war, does not mean that we are blind to Russia's faults. It is simply that we are sure we have plenty of our own that need attention if we are to have the Christian brotherhood we talk about.

Food for starving peoples, which of course all decent people are for, was until recently the moral pretense behind which our foreign policy was concealed. But there is no pretense about Greece or Turkey. Our government now tells us bluntly that we are to save "Western civilization" and "democracy" even though to do so means military support for anti-democratic governments. We are waging an undeclared war of nerves, preparations, food and financial pressures, allegedly against communism and the Soviet Union but actually against the development of economic democracy.

The policy, we believe, is doomed in the end to defeat. We are trying to put the peoples of the earth into the mold of the old economy but it is too late for that. A page of history has been turned, as Sumner Welles pointed out last week, and once that is done no power can turn it back. The failure of the old order is written all over Europe and a large part of Asia. The socialist era of history has begun, with nations all over the world, by their own routes, moving in that direction. In trying to stop it we are endeavoring to halt the course of history. That is something that cannot be done for long.

The tragedy of our effort is not merely that history will push us aside if we persist. It lies in the fact that for the first time in the history of man there has emerged a possibility of society moving to a stronger economic base without destroying much of the gains of the past in devastating revolutionary wars. All over the world the leftists have recognized this new historic situation and have declared their willingness to join in the attempt. But our present policies of supporting such anti-democratic governments as Greece, Turkey and China, will make it impossible to overcome the difficulties involved in the undertaking.

If we persist the moving finger that writes the record of man will put us down as bearing the heaviest responsibility for making the transition the most costly of the great upward steps that mankind has taken in its slow and devious course across the centuries.

"QUOTES"

I APPREHEND for the next hundred years an ultimate, colossal, cosmic collapse; but not on any of the old lines. My belief is that science is to wreck us, and that we are like monkeys monkeying with a loaded shell; we don't in the least know or care where these practically infinite energies come from or will bring us to.

—Henry Adams
Written in 1902

Worthy of Their Hire

THE nation has a new headache—strikes of public school teachers, who apparently have discovered that they are workers instead of professional people.

There are few communities where teachers are paid an adequate wage and it is a disgraceful thing that we have not recognized, in financial return, those whom we so largely depend upon to educate our children and young people. Teachers themselves are now doing something about the matter and Church people ought to back them.

The Church has had to think about strikes for only a short period of its history. It has only been in the recent decades of our rapidly developing industrial society that workers have withheld their labor to win what they considered just demands. But there is ample justification in biblical and

Church teaching to warrant vigorous support of school teachers in their demands. The Old Testament prophets said that God demanded of his people that they "do justly"; our Lord insisted that "the laborer is worthy of his hire."

Our Church, along with most others, has recognized this basic principle in resolutions unanimously approved by General Conventions, particularly in recent years. Thus in 1933 the Pastoral of the House of Bishops declared that "The Master's concern for the under-privileged and neglected folk was repeatedly manifested in his habit and teaching. That millions of the people of our country are denied the common necessities of life; that approximately one-third of our population is below the poverty level; that there is wide-spread want in a land that is abundantly productive, make evident the lamentable inadequacy of existing economic systems. With these conditions the Church is immediately and vitally concerned. If our present Christian civilization produces these ills then obviously it has departed from the right principles enunciated by Christ. No mere establishment of an old economic order will suffice. Christ demands a new order in which there shall be a more equitable distribution of material wealth; more certain assurance of security for the unemployed and aged, and, above all else an order which shall substitute the motive of service for the motive of gain."

Pope Leo XIII also issued a pronouncement on the subject which is official teaching of the Church of Rome. "Remuneration," he said, "ought to be sufficient to support the wage earner in reasonable comfort. If the workman accepts harder conditions, because an employer will afford him no better, he is made a victim of force and injustice." The Church goes on to say that if a just contract has been made with an employer then the natural right to strike is suspended, but contracts cease to bind when they are unjust.

In the last election the governors of a number of states promised that something would be done about the low pay of teachers. They admitted the injustice when they wanted votes. But having done nothing to fulfill their promises they are now faced with strikes. The ethics of the situation is clear. The teachers are morally right. We as Christians are morally bound to support their effort to correct the injustice.

Moral Meaning of the Bomb

by Louis N. Ridenour

Professor at the University of Pennsylvania

EVEN today, a year and a half after the first use of atomic explosives in warfare, our thinking on the important matter of atomic energy and the atomic bomb is muddled and confused. As this is written, a number of the country's Senators, including such leaders as Taft, are attacking the appointment of David Lilienthal on the grounds that he favors public ownership of public utilities, when it has not been many months since the Senate unanimously passed the McMahon Bill, which patently and in so many words provides for the socialization of atomic energy.

As this is written, there is a strong disposition, on the part of many people, to develop a Maginot philosophy with regard to atomic energy. There is a tendency to entrust our "national security" to our present monopoly of what is called "the secret of the atomic bomb" or "the know-how" of its manufacture. Senator McKellar has said—and this sounds to me, and to many others, like blasphemy—Senator McKellar has said: "I pray God we will never have an international agreement for the control of atomic energy." The Russophobes are taking this position, despite the clear fact that, if Russia is determined on uncompromising nationalist expansion, this policy is exactly what she would hope for from us. For, if Russia really is a threat, then it follows that she is determined never to join in a workable and reasonable plan for the control of atomic energy. To unmask this supposed Soviet plot requires only that we present a scheme for the control of atomic weapons so fair, so practical, so sane, that abstention by the Russians would be clear proof of evil intent. So long as the McKellars must pass on our treaties, we shall never learn whether Russia is determined to attack us, or is simply and honestly wary of a plan that seems to her ungenerous.

Our thinking is confused. Therefore what I say

Louis N. Ridenour is professor of physics at the University of Pennsylvania. Although his specialty is nuclear physics, his wartime work was in the field of radar. From 1941 to 1946, he was a staff member of the radiation laboratory of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, serving as assistant director of that laboratory, and later as consultant on radar to the Army Air Forces in the European and Pacific Theaters. He contributed the chapter "There is No Defense" in the book One World or None which is a report to the public on the full meaning of the atomic bomb by America's outstanding scientists.

about the moral meaning of the atomic bomb may be superficial and unwise. But I have thought deeply about these matters since Hiroshima, and I find myself commencing to attain a stable point of view.

There are those who say that our use of the atomic bomb on Japanese cities was inhumane and wrong. I do not agree. War is inhumane and wrong, no doubt; but, given war, the yardsticks of inhumanity do not apply. Was the atomic bomb inhumane because it killed tens of thousands? More were killed in a single fire raid on Tokyo than died from blast or radiation in either Hiroshima or Nagasaki. Was our use of the bomb unjust because of lack of warning? We did not make a practice of announcing in advance the mass raids of B-29s that were equally damaging to Japan.

The unique thing about the atomic bomb was not the total destruction and death that it caused, but the fact that all this demolition and killing could be visited on the enemy by one aircraft and a dozen men. The logistic and strategic difference between an atomic-bomb raid and a mass fire raid is thus profound; but the moral difference escapes me altogether.

Man has engaged in moral discourse from the beginning of recorded history, and he has had his life shaped by advancing technology for three centuries and a half. While the level of individual or group morality has risen and fallen by small degrees through the millenia of which we have accounts, the level of technical accomplishment has been rising steadily, at an ever-increasing rate. Among other applications of technology, we find it applied to war. Technology has transformed war from the orderly clash of mercenaries to a holocaust in which no one is safe. Meanwhile, morality has been deploring war all along, but has never developed strength enough to prevent its frequent recurrence.

There are those who say that progress in science and technology should be halted to permit man's growth in moral stature, to the point where man is fitted to control the forces that the modern world puts into his hands. I do not agree. The record seems to show that man's moral stature has changed little in a period ten times that encompassing the entire growth of modern science. How optimistic one must be to suppose that ethical behavior could overtake material progress, even if the latter were halted entirely!

It seems to me that the atomic bomb, whose concentration of energy—whether for destruction or for good—surpasses by a millionfold anything we knew before, means this: It is a symbol of what war can become if wars continue. Conflict between organized groups of men has become so frightful, so terribly destructive, that the good which victory might serve is now clearly submerged in the evil of the means of gaining victory. No matter whether attention is focused on atomic energy, or biological warfare, or long-range guided missiles, the conclusion is the same. We must never have another war.

HOW can another war be avoided? The men who favor war are hard to find, in times like these. Can we avoid a war by following the teachings of religion? Certainly we can, in principle, but the record seems to show that attempts to accomplish this have always failed, and we must look for a surer way. It seems to me that the problem of avoiding war is, in the present state of world organization, mainly one of politics. The sovereignty of our present sovereign nations permits no solution of a basic conflict between two of them short of war. This is a defect of political organization, which can be repaired by the development of a world law, written by a world assembly, administered by a world executive, and interpreted by a world judiciary. We have made a faint beginning toward such a political arrangement, by the creation of the United Nations. There is a long way to go before a genuinely working and workable world government can arise, and we live in the difficult transition period that precedes its coming. It will not be easy to bridge the interval between our many sovereign nations of the present and the one world that the future must hold.

What is the place of morals, of organized religion, in this problem? There are those who say that uncompromising individual pacifism is the best route to the goal of peace. I do not agree. Forgetting for the moment that it is impossible to be an uncompromising pacifist, since there is no useful human activity that does not contribute to the prosecution of total war in time of war, and since the mere payment of taxes contributes to the maintenance of a military establishment in time of peace, let us examine the pacifist case. We are faced by a period in which suspicious nations (we are not the least suspicious of nations) must lay down their national arms one by one, must surrender their sovereignty bit by bit, and must at last join in a single government of the world. Instant unilateral disarmament, which is the pacifist ideal, will contribute to the goal only if all other nations are honest and well-disposed, which we hope for but cannot know.

In my opinion, the contribution that religion and morals can make to the present problem—which is not only that of the atomic bomb, but rather that of modern war—is to stress that the current situation is not qualitatively new. Long ago God specified that to kill was evil. It has sometimes been thought that the ends for which murder was committed justified the act of murder; it has sometimes been thought that there were holy wars. The perfection of our modern weapons has now made it clear that, even in a righteous war for a worthy cause, the desolation, death, and destruction make the wisdom of a war most dubious. If to these practical considerations is added a strong religious affirmation that war is evil in itself, man may at last awake. Freedom from war is to be sought in political organization, not in the growth of morals to the point where war cannot begin; but the moral argument against war, coupled with the practical evidence of war's new destructive potential, can be sufficient to force the creation of the required political organization. This is clearly difficult, when the countries of the world are governed by McKellars, but even so it can be done.

Fasting Communion

THE question never fails to come up. Every time one discusses with a group of clergy the necessity of restoring the Eucharist to its primary place in the common worship of the people, someone is bound to ask whether or not this is practical in view of "the rule of fasting communion." I have hesitated for some time to discuss this custom—for I cannot bring myself to speak of it as a rule—because no matter what I say about it someone may misunderstand me and take offense. Let me say at once that I have no personal objection to the custom whatsoever. I am certain that for many of our people it is a helpful discipline. But I could never bring myself to impose it as a rule for any communicant, for the simple reason that there is nothing in the Prayer Book or in the Canons of the Church which would justify my doing so. The Exhortations of the Holy Communion service (pages 85-88) set forth quite explicitly all that the Church requires of its members in the way of preparation for communion. In the cure of souls a pastor may make many other recommendations over and beyond those contained in these Exhortations; but I do not see how he can legitimately require any more.

The Prayer Book does not neglect to teach the wholesome discipline of fasting. It contains a table of days of fasting and abstinence, none of which, however, are Sundays. I understand this table to mean that on Ash Wednesday and Good Friday, at the least, fish is proscribed as well as bacon! Also in the case of adults seeking baptism the Prayer Book says that they are to be "exhorted to prepare themselves, with Prayers and Fasting, for the receiving of this holy Sacrament." One may argue, I suppose, that what is good preparation for one sacrament is also good for another. But then one is baptized only once, not every Sunday and holy day. As a matter of fact it is not exactly correct to speak of making a communion fasting if all that is meant is the postponement of a meal for an hour or so. To fast is to give up eating entirely as a special devotion. Now if the clergy who are so keen about teaching their people to fast before making their communion would recommend this devotion in connection with an 11 o'clock celebration, instead of an 8 or 9:30 one, they would be coming nearer to what the Prayer Book speaks of as "extraordinary acts and exercises of devotion."

The custom of taking no food before receiving communion goes back to the earliest times, when the Christians had to hold their meetings at the crack of dawn before going to their work. Even so, the custom of such abstinence was not universal in these ancient days, for the puritanical Tertullian (early third century) inveighs against those Christians who refuse to give the kiss of peace at the Eucharist to their non-fasting brethren. Far better, he says, that the fasters obey the Lord's precept to conceal their fastings and be at peace with their fellows in prayer. The earliest rule which I can find about fasting communion is in the Apostolic Tradition of St. Hippolytus, a contemporary of Tertullian. But the reason he gives for it strikes us today as nothing short of sheer superstition and magic: "Let every one of the faithful be zealous to partake of the Eucharist before he eats anything else. For if he partakes with faith, even though some deadly thing were given him, after this it cannot hurt him."

It must not be forgotten that however much early Church Fathers pressed the faithful to observe this ancient and godly discipline, the Church did not officially write into her canons any such requirement for the laity until long after they had ceased to communicate very often—usually about once a year, at most three times. The Reformers of the sixteenth century who sought to revive more frequent communions by the people had no quarrel with the old custom. Indeed the Calvinists even went it one better and tried to enforce fasting for a period after communion, as well as before! But no rule about it was written into the Prayer Book. I rather imagine that the Reformers would have agreed with the Caroline poet Robert Herrick that the outward fast is of little moment to God our Father unless accompanied by the inner fast—"from strife, from old debate and hate . . . to starve thy sin, not bin." (See his "To Keep a True Lent.")

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

FREEDOM is a word precious to Christians but there is one "freedom" that we give less attention than we should—freedom of the air. It has to be remembered that this channel of communication is publicly owned, with its operation, in theory, in the hands of the people through their government. The radio, by act of Congress, is charged to operate "in the public interest, convenience and necessity" but actually of course radio is big business and operates in the interest of its own balance sheet. There is nothing in law which says that the trustees of our airwaves must make profits, but it is nevertheless a fact that any radio voice who does not serve that end is soon silenced. This has been abundantly demonstrated in recent weeks. As reactionary forces have tightened their hold on the national economy, following the November elections, the radio industry has demonstrated that, instead of being the servant of the people, as it is always maintaining, it is actually the subsidized mouthpiece of business.

There was a day not so far back when you could hear a news analyst, if you did a bit of searching with the dial, who stood for progress; who was friendly to organized labor; who believed in a high standard of living; who maintained that constitutional liberties should be safeguarded; who was a voice for international goodwill and peace. But you would have a hard time finding such a man today. Quite the reverse: it is anti-labor talk; the anti-Soviet line; preachers of racial hatred and international discord that you hear these days.

Here are a few of those who have gone: Johannes Steel, Robert St. John, John Vandercook, Quintin Reynolds, Hans Jacob, Orson Welles, Henry Morgenthau Jr., Lisa Sergio, Sidney Walton and many more. Don Hollenbeck, who had a daily spot on NBC is now heard for a few minutes once a week on CBS. Frank Kingdon and Raymond Walsh both have had their time cut drastically and both are threatened to be cut off entirely. On the other hand such fascist-minded commentators as Henry J. Taylor, Fulton Lewis Jr., Upton Close, and such a reactionary as H. V. Kaltenborn, go merrily on their way, handsomely backed with sponsors' cash.

THE fact that liberals are taken off the air is not due primarily to the prejudice of radio stations. It is because their goal is profit and hence are committed to the anti-labor, anti-peace line, just as most newspapers have to sing the tune of the National Association of Manufacturers. Steel is a good example. When he was shown the door by WHN he said that he had no quarrel with the station. In fact they had kept him going for some time after his sponsor had quit. But since his analysis of the news was searching and fearless, and because he did not hesitate to criticize the Vatican's political line, no new sponsor was found. After all a sponsor is in business to make money and he is not going to run the chance of having his product boycotted by the millions of disciplined followers of the Roman Church. So, exit Steel.

What to do? Well, radio is sensitive to public opinion—far more so than newspapers for the very reason that they are the trustees of airwaves which are public property; yours and mine. They have to have popular support. Therefore individual protests; mass protests, can and do get results. Write radio stations, networks and above all sponsors, backing the men you believe are telling the truth; condemning those you think are not. Protest is the most powerful weapon in the hands of the people, and nowhere is this more true than in the radio field. And don't be satisfied with their ready excuses. They will tell you, as they have me, that they are sorry Mr. So-and-So is no longer heard over their station; that they are hoping that he will soon return; that a sponsor is soon to be found. Or they will come up with the necessity for "reshuffling program schedules" and "scarcity of available time." But there is time available for reactionary commentators. Time can be found for liberal ones if the demand is strong enough. And don't forget that the radio is yours, charged by federal law to "operate in the public interest."

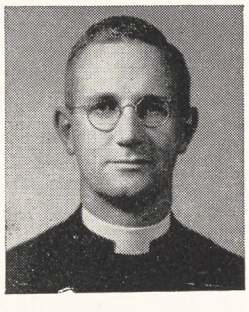
Strategy and Tactics



by

FRANCIS O. AYRES

Rector of St. John's, Waterbury, Connecticut

FOR THE PARISH

THE Church needs a strategy on programs and bulletins. The National Council, the dioceses and the parishes could and should coordinate their efforts in this field in an attempt to aid one another in reaching as many people as possible with as much Christian propaganda and Church news as possible.

At present, it is pretty much every man for himself. Some parishes publish a monthly or weekly bulletin which is mailed to members; others print or mimeograph a weekly program with the order of service and parish notes; a few do both. Each person responsible for a bulletin or a program is left to his own devices to obtain material. The National Council does offer "the partly printed parish papers," but the task of finding more than an occasional picture that is artistically and intellectually sound is a hopeless one and the message on the back page is too often vague and impersonal.

The Congregational Christian Churches have a much more satisfactory set-up. The missions council of that body issues a partly printed paper. In this case, the two inside pages are filled. A number of short articles and two or three pictures appear in each issue. The local church prints or mimeographs the outside pages. If the paper is to be mailed on a second-class mailing permit, the two pages of "general interest" material are already provided, leaving room for title and space for address as well as local coverage.

My suggestions for a strategy on programs and bulletins are:

1. Establish a uniform size so that everyone would be accustomed to the same space.

2. Publish information as to cost of printing, mailing permits, etc.

3. Urge upon parishes the value of reaching all their members once a week through mailing a bulletin. Three or four parishes can join together in such an enterprise.

4. The National Council provide a bulletin once a month with the two inside pages printed. The articles should be brief and cover news of the Church in the nation and in the world. Each issue should have one to three pictures.

5. The diocese provide a bulletin once a month on the same basis. The cost would be a little more than in the first instance but if enough parishes cooperate, it would still be small.

6. The National Council provide monthly mimeographed sheets of material in helping with other weeks. Good material could be taken from books, articles or from parish bulletins. News items could be added. Special releases could be included.

I am convinced that some such method as outlined here is the only way of reaching all the members of an average parish with news of the Church on the national, diocesan, and local parish levels. Furthermore, it provides an excellent means of educating church people on points of doctrine, Church history, Christian ethics, etc. Finally, it serves as a medium of reaching people with propaganda in the best sense of that word.

Revolution and Reason by Emil Brunner. Westminster Press. $4.50.

This is a heavy book for serious students of theology who of necessity, if they are to keep up with their jobs, have to read everything that Brunner writes. There is a great deal in the book that is true and important. However most readers of THE WITNESS will want to wait until a briefer and less expensive book, interpreting this one in language they can understand, comes along.

He Lives by Austin Pardue, the Bishop of Pittsburgh. Morehouse-Gorham. $1.50.

One boy came home from the wars to his mother and there was an all night celebration. A messenger came to another door and handed a mother a telegram: "We regret to inform you etc." This second mother, so Bishop Pardue says, "will see her son face to face, and, judging, from the fine start that he had when he was here on earth, she will see her hopes and aspirations and ideals fulfilled." That perhaps gives you an idea of the book which tells us all about paradise, purgatory, hell, heaven, and guardian angels who, the Bishop says, have pulled him out of jams. Thoughtful people, I think, will do better to read Fred Grant's book on the subject, Can We Believe in Immortality?

A Plea For Adequate Housing By New York Bishops

Declare That the Crisis Assumes Disastrous Proportions and Urge Matter Be Dealt With

Edited by Sara Dill

New York:—The bishops of the six dioceses in New York state have issued a public statement calling for a referendum on the expenditure of 300 million dollars for housing. The statement, issued on behalf of the newly organized inter-diocesan committee on legislation, declared that the housing shortage is "the most serious problem in the state." It went on to say that "the crisis assumes disastrous proportions from the point of view of family stability, juvenile delinquency, health, and the social and spiritual welfare of hundreds of thousands of our fellow citizens."

Ingrid Bergman

New York: — Ingrid Bergman, screen star, has made a radio transcript for Church World Service which has been distributed to 300 broadcasting stations. Called "Flood Tide" it deals with the resistance of the Dutch people on Walcheren and the reconstruction of their flooded island. The National Council's department of promotion suggests that Church people help assure wide distribution of the program by inquiring about it of their local stations.

Rector Returns

Chelmsford, England:—The Rev. E. L. Andrews, rector of Sandon parish here, has asked the Church Pension Fund to spread the news here in the U. S. that he "was preserved through three and a half years' imprisonment in Singapore" where he was taken prisoner by the Japanese while serving as a captain in the intelligence corps. "Since my return," he writes, "I am finding it increasingly difficult to carry on with my work. Those years of starvation and other hardships have left their mark."

College Women

Lincoln, Mass.: — A vocational conference for college women was held here February 28-March 2. Leaders included Barbara Arnold, secretary of college work in New England; Prof. Adelaide Case of Episcopal Theological School; Ellen Gammack, national personnel secretary of the Auxiliary; Marilyn Jones, Episcopal Service for Youth, Chicago; Mrs. Gerald O'Grady of Hartford; Mrs. Arthur Sherman, national secretary of the Auxiliary; Helen Turnbull, director of Windham House, New York; Elizabeth Varney, secretary of rural work for Maine; Prof. Eunice Work of Wheaton College and the Rev. John R. Wyatt, rector at Wakefield, R. I.

Date Is Set

Seattle:—It was announced here on March 11th that the consecration of the Rev. Stephen F. Bayne Jr. as Bishop of Olympia will be held here on June 11th. The service will be in St. Mark's Cathedral. Mr. Bayne is at present the chaplain at Columbia University.

Installation

New York:—Bishop Charles K. Gilbert will be installed as Bishop of New York on April 26th it was announced at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine on March 11th. The exact hour for the service, and other details, are to be announced later. Meanwhile the new bishop has moved to the Cathedral Close, occupying the former deanery which has been vacant for some time. Bishop Manning has moved into the former residence of Bishop Gilbert at 8 Washington Mews.

Jim Crow Law

Baltimore (RNS):—Church leaders of all faiths here have appealed to the Maryland house of delegates to repeal the state's Jim Crow law which they say "degrades and destroys human personality by segregating man from man for no reason except the pigmentation of his skin." They also stated that the law, repeal of which has passed the senate and is now before the house, is "as harmful to the majority as to the minority as it produces arrogance, selfishness and false pride in the larger group."

Brothers Disagree

Berkeley, Calif. (RNS):—President Ronald Bridges of the Pacific School of Religion has expressed disagreement with his brother, Senator Bridges of New Hampshire, over the appointment of David E. Lilienthal as chairman of the atomic energy commission. The educator last week wired Lilienthal: "As churchman and Republican, I heartily support your nomination and hope that a few more Senators, including my brother, will have the good sense to do so." He also sent similar telegrams to a number of key Senators.

Elections Scheduled

Springfield, Ill.:—The election for a successor to Bishop White of the diocese of Springfield will be held June 9 here.

The diocese of Western New York is to elect a successor to Bishop Davis on May 20th at St. Peter's, Niagara Falls. A nominating committee, headed by Judge Charles B. Sears, has been at work for several months and has eliminated all but four nominees from a list of 38 submitted. Nominations can of course also be made from the floor.

Priest Honored

Philadelphia:—The Rev. Henry L. Phillips, retired archdeacon in the diocese of Pennsylvania and senior Negro priest—maybe of the United States—celebrated his 100th birthday on March 11th. Bishop Hart and many of the clergy held a thanksgiving service which was followed by an informal luncheon.

Student Center

New Orleans:—Plans for a student center at Tulane University and its affiliated Newcomb College, were discussed March 4th at a joint meeting of the men's clubs of the various parishes of the city. The speaker was the Rev. Thomas V. Barrett, head of college work of the National Council. The diocese already has centers at the State University, Southwestern Institute and the Polytechnic School.

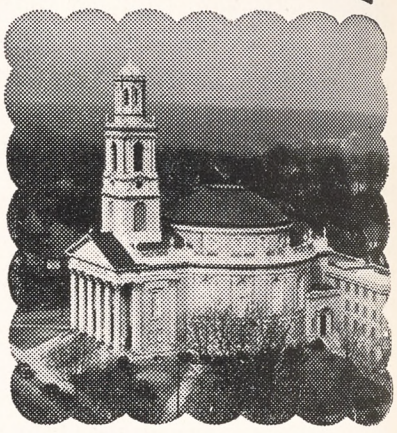
Niemoeller's Visit

New York:—Martin Niemoeller is to extend his stay in the United States until after the meeting of the provincial committee of the World Council of Churches, which is to meet April 22-25. He was originally scheduled to return to Germany early in March.

Methodists Gain

Chicago (RNS):—The Methodist Church has gained over a million members in 40,264 churches as the result of a year of evangelism conducted as a part of its four-year crusade for Christ campaign. The gains are about evenly divided between new members received on confession of faith and those who transferred from other Churches. A total of 894 new and reopened churches was also reported in the statement which covers a sixteen month period.

Italians Protest



Rome (wireless to RNS):—The Evangelical Churches of Italy have filed a protest with the Constituent Assembly against inclusion in the constitution of a statement proclaiming that "the relationships between the state and the Catholic Church are regulated by the Lateran pacts." The protest is based on the ground that such pacts eliminate the equality of all citizens before the law and are in violation of the neutrality of the state toward all religious faiths.

Meanwhile thirty Roman Catholic leaders from several European countries, meeting in Switzerland, passed a resolution declaring that "only when the principles of respect for the human individual and liberty and social progress are realized will Europe, shaken to its foundations, be consolidated and peace among different countries and peoples assured."

CARILLONIC BELLS

"A source of continual delight"

. . . writes the Rev. Mr. Herring, pastor of this magnificent church, in praising CARILLONIC BELLS. His letter continues . . .

"I have been most pleased with their tonal qualities and musical appeal, and I am convinced that they have definitely contributed to attendance.

"During our last revival meeting there were two professions of faith made by young men whose only explanation of their presence at the services lay in the fact that they had been attracted by our 'Carillonic Bells'."

Hundreds of pastors have written us of their satisfaction with CARILLONIC BELLS. This modern electronic carillon, they find, attains finer accuracy and richer tone than are possible with ordinary chimes or bells.

It can be played inside as a solo instrument or with your organ; and you'll find that the messages of beauty it sends from your tower come back to you in greater community appreciation of your church. Ask us about CARILLONIC BELLS; write Dept. W-21.

The policy states that "headquarters, hotels, conference grounds, meeting rooms and eating places shall be approached only with the explicit understanding that there will be no discrimination against, or segregation of, any official participants because of race or color."

"The Christian Church in America is becoming aware, as it has seldom been aware before, of the fundamental unity of all believers in Christ," the policy continues. "It has vigorously opposed the various resurgences of racism and race prejudice in our modern world."

Bells Installed

Philadelphia:—Business men have joined to place more bells in the tower of historic Christ Church here, the house of worship once attended by George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, and other illustrious leaders of early America. The Neighborhood Business Men's Association will present them as a memorial to men and women of the neighborhood who gave their lives during the recent war, also to honor those from the community who served at arms.

For some time Christ Church tower has rung out from an octave of eight original bells installed nearly 200 years ago. Two additional bells will make the set capable of playing nearly all hymns by the addition of two half-note tones. The original bells first rang with the Liberty Bell on July 4, 1776, then were removed from the city when it was occupied by the British.

Important Decision

Frankfort, Ky.:—No law exists or could be validly enforced to prevent whites and Negroes attending the same church and worshipping together, Attorney General Eldon S. Dummit of Kentucky ruled here.

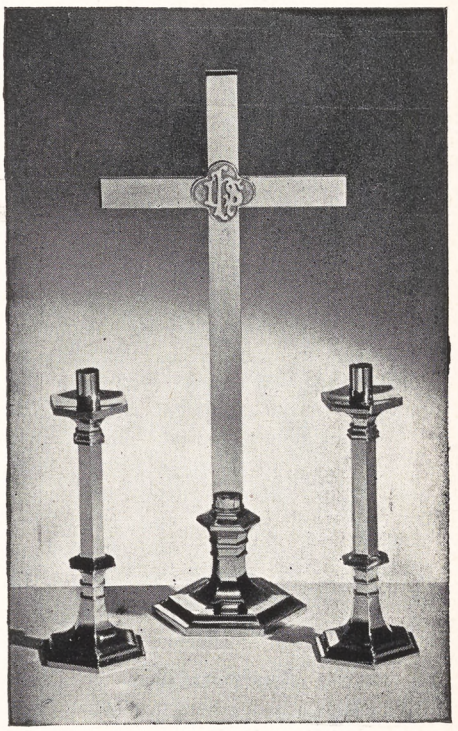
"In Kentucky there is complete separation of church and state," Dummit wrote Willie Combs, Sassafras, Knott County, who inquired whether "Jim Crow" laws prevented such a practice.

"The Church has no power to interfere with the laws and regulations of the state," Dummit stated. "Neither has the state any power to interfere with the Church in its government, rules, regulation and modes of worship of its members, or as to its authority to receive members into its local organization, so long as they do not contravene the penal or criminal statutes of Kentucky.

"If a group of white and colored people desire to worship together, or to belong to the same local church organization, they can do so in the same way and manner that they can and do belong to the same political party."

Dummit quoted from Section One of the Kentucky Constitution the following provision:

"All men are, by nature, free and equal, and have certain and inherent rights, among which may be reckoned: the right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their consciences."



He concluded that "neither the Constitution nor the statutes of Kentucky prohibit white and colored persons from attending, worshipping, or belonging to the same local church."

Study Communism

New York (RNS):—Formation of a committee to study the spread of Communism and its effect upon Protestant foreign missions was authorized here by the committee of counsel and reference of the Foreign Missions Conference. The study, which was recommended at the annual meeting of the Foreign Missions Conference in January, will also be concerned with social and economic conditions which "predispose" people to accept Communist propaganda.

"Read the Bible," is the slogan adopted for the 1947 seals. On the brown background four different designs are shown, the reading of the Bible on the farm, in the home, in the factory and in the office. The sheets of one hundred seals are supplied at one dollar each.

Social Security

Washington (RNS):—House Bill 1992 has been introduced in Congress by Rep. H. P. Eberharter (D.-Pa.) to give employees of religious, charitable, scientific and other non-profit institutions coverage under the social securities act; the federal unemployment tax act, and the federal insurance contributions act. The last two General Conventions have gone on record as favoring such legislation.

Sanctity of Home

Washington:—The Rev. Hamilton H. Kellogg, rector at Houston, Texas, is one of four ex-chaplains, to sign an appeal to veterans to "win the peace by restoring the sanctity of the American home." The statement declares that "Today broken homes, youthful criminals, rampant social disease, lustful and boldly immoral movies and magazines are but a few of the dangerous threats to the moral strength of the American home—the foundation of America's greatness."

Asphyxiation

Arlington, Va.:—The Rev. and Mrs. William P. Peyton were found dead in their garage on February 5th. Death was caused by asphyxiation. Apparently Mr. Peyton had been trying to cover the radiator of the car before going out for a service in a neighboring parish and that Mrs. Peyton was helping him.

Mr. Peyton became rector of Epiphany and Grace Churches here in 1944, having served as rector of Our Saviour, Rock Hill, S. C., from 1926.

Union Plan Approved

Cincinnati:—A plan of reunion of the northern and southern Presbyterian Churches was approved here on March 14 by unanimous vote of their separate reunion negotiating groups. The plan will be submitted to the general assembly of each Church in May.

New Committee Meets

New York:—The first meeting of the newly formed standing committee of the National Council was held on March 13. The function of the committee is to act on matters that arise between Council meetings. A number of small appropriations were made but otherwise the business was purely routine.

Baptist Clergy Oppose Buses

Des Moines, Ia. (RNS):—Iowa Baptist ministers, meeting here, disapproved of transporting parochial school children in public school buses. They voted approval of an Iowa law which permits only public school pupils to be carried in school buses. (The law has been upheld in district court and now is on appeal before the state supreme court.)

The question was presented to the Iowa Baptist Ministers council, by the Rev. T. V. L. Harvey, Fort Dodge, who mentioned a recent U.S. Supreme Court decision allowing New Jersey public school districts to transport parochial school pupils.

that," he declared. "In no way should the government foster or pay the upkeep of denominational schools."

In approving a resolution on the bus issues the ministers stated: "This action is based on the belief that any group has the right to educate in its own peculiar doctrines but that such education should not be carried on either in whole or in part by public taxation. We believe that transportation of private or parochial school children in public buses may be a small thing in itself but is an opening wedge in the changing of our national policy of separation of church and state."

Legislative Seminar

Albany, N. Y. (RNS):—Protestant churchmen from all parts of the state gathered here for their first legislative seminar, and heard a plan under which the state's Protestant churches expect to keep the legislature informed of the political opinions of their members. The two-day conference was under the direction of the Rev. Harvey W. Hollis, executive secretary of the federation of Churches in Albany and vicinity.

The Rev. Philip A. Swartz, Poughkeepsie, representing the New York State Council of Churches, outlined the legislative program and emphasized "we will in no sense act as a pressure group."

"Our sole purpose," he said, "will be to inform the Legislature of the free opinion of the church constituency, which heretofore has had no voice in political matters."

Swartz disclosed that the first state-wide poll of church members showed that the majority favored anti-discrimination laws, provision of state funds for the cure of alcoholism, and establishment of a state university.

Also favored was the taking of periodic polls of church opinion to guide legislators, and the removal of law officers negligent in enforcing liquor and gambling laws. Most church members were opposed to granting state funds to religious institutions.

Catholics Protest

New York:—The Catholic War Veterans have issued a protest against Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt's recent comments in the press in which she objected to the visit to this country of Conrad Cardinal Count von Preysing of Berlin. Mrs. Roosevelt has said in her daily column that both the Cardinal and Pastor Niemoeller "naturally create sympathy for Germany—a country which twice has plunged the world into war."

Witch Hunts

New York (RNS):—A warning that "witch hunts against socially-minded men" may become "the rule and not the exception," in coming years was voiced here by the World Alliance News Letter, organ of the Church Peace Union and the World Alliance for International Friendship Through the Churches. Citing the controversy over appointment of David Lilienthal as chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission as an indication of this trend, the editorial declared that back of this "red-baiting heresy trial" lies the effort of "bigoted men to mold American policy along purely national lines."

The editorial also warned against the danger of isolationists sabotaging the effectiveness of the international trade organization now in process of formation, and declared that "crippling" reservations on American membership would "undermine the entire structure of the organization and ultimately destroy it."

Calling upon churches during the Lenten season to "create in the minds of men and women an honesty of mind and an integrity of spirit," the editorial asserted that "we must throw the light of religion not only on self, but also on the nation and the society of nations."

The Gallicans

Paris (RNS):—One of the most colorful, but least known, religious sects in France is the Gallicans, composed of dissident Roman Catholics organized under the leadership of Patriarch Louis Francois Giraud, 71-year-old former tenor of the Bordeaux opera company. The sect claims a membership of 20,000 in France. It does not recognize the supremacy of the Pope but has retained most Roman Catholic rites and practices. Two outstanding deviations from Roman practice are: the clergy are permitted to marry as in the Oriental Rites, and the Mass is conducted in French.

No collections are made in Gallican churches. When a service is over the priest doffs his vestments and changes to ordinary laymen's clothes.

Next in rank to Patriarch Giraud is Archbishop Gerard Marie Edmond Lescouzeras, who has the right of succession. Father of three children, the archbishop supports his family by running a dry goods store.

About 130 Gallicans have formed a colony in Paris. Their church was burned down recently and they now meet in a small room in the Rue du Temple and hold their services in the Rumanian church in the Rue Jean de Baeuvais.

Each year, Patriarch Giraud, Archbishop Lescouzeras and several bishops, go to Ruschilov in Switzerland, where the Swiss sister Church owns a monastery, to hold a special council at which priests are ordained and new bishops chosen.

Quakers Plan Camps

Philadelphia: — Two international work camps will be part of the 1947 Quaker summer projects, it was announced here by the American Friends Service Committee. The new work camps will be set up in Finland, Italy, and perhaps one other foreign country to repair and rebuild homes and community-facilities in war-ravaged areas. Quakers will continue sponsorship of work camps in the United States which enable young people to live cooperatively in under-privileged areas while they assist in the improvement of community services.

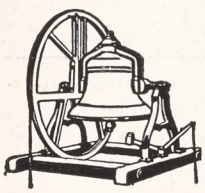
High school work campers will help construct a library and laundry in a Connecticut camp for Negro children, and will help with road and bridge construction in Shannon County, Mo. College-age campers will conduct projects in nine states.

Similar work camps are being planned for Mexico.

Italian Laws

New York: — Protestants in Italy are not satisfied with their status under the new Italian constitution which will be voted on by the new constitutional assembly, according to Mrs. Catharine C. Anderson, secretary of the American Waldensian Aid Society. She told the annual meeting of the organization that the provisions for religious liberty are phrased "too vaguely" and "could easily be misinterpreted." Italian Protestants want specific guarantees of full religious liberty for minorities, she said, without any qualifying clauses that might lead to future misunderstandings.

Marriage Laws



Philadelphia (RNS):—All ministers and stated clerks of presbyteries of the Presbyterian Church were called upon in a letter from the office of the Church's General Assembly here to obey strictly the denomination's laws concerning remarriage of divorced persons. The letter pointed out that the General Assembly, at its meeting last May, demanded that Church rules with regard to marriage and divorce be more scrupulously observed. The Assembly also stated that provisions in the Directory for Worship concerning marriage and divorce should be read publicly at a stated meeting of each presbytery. Action was taken by the General Assembly as a result of complaints that Presbyterian ministers were disregarding Church regulations.

The Directory for Worship requires ministers who are requested to marry divorced persons to exercise great care in complying with such requests. Ministers are permitted to marry the "innocent party to whom a divorce has been granted on Scriptural grounds, providing a year has elapsed since the decision allowing the divorce."

Presbyterian ministers are not allowed to marry any member of another denomination whose re-marriage is known to be prohibited by the laws of the denomination of which the person is a member, unless the minister believes that his refusal would be unjust to an innocent person who has been divorced for Scriptural reasons.

New Law Proposed

Trenton, N. J.: — All churches which employ one or more persons would be affected under the terms of an unemployment compensation bill which Assemblyman Jacob Friedland of Hudson County has introduced in the New Jersey Legislature. Under present law, only employers of four or more persons come under the terms of the unemployment compensation act. Thus, a church sexton would not be obliged to contribute to the fund nor would he receive benefits under it should he later become unemployed.

A number of New Jersey churches have reported difficulty in recent times in hiring sextons, since the latter were unwilling to take positions which provided neither unemployment benefits nor federal social security old age payments.

Clergymen also would be affected by the Friedland bill, lawyers who have studied the measure declare, as they would come under the classification of employes of church corporations or societies. Thus, should they find themselves without a pastorate, they would be entitled to benefits. Present New Jersey unemployment benefits range from $9 to $22 weekly, payable for a maximum period of 22 weeks.

REV. V. L. LIVINGSTON,
Rector at Toledo, Oregon

As a small voice crying in the Oregon wilderness I would like to join with others in protesting the sly innuendoes and Red baiting talks of Fulton J. Sheen on the NBC networks (Catholic Hour). If the skirts of Rome were clean from totalitarian practices then I would keep a holy silence. As Brother Sheen moans for the people of Russia let us pray for the poor Christians in Spain who worship in secret. I have written NBC.

REV. CHARLES A. PARMITER, JR.
Rector at Framingham, Mass.

In the article by Harold Stassen in the WITNESS for March 6, he stated that the veto must remain in the Charter for the United Nations until "some other voting method is developed which will reflect in some manner the population, the industrial strength and position of the individual members in the organization." This is an indication that, so far as Mr. Stassen represents the thought of the leaders of this country, they are thinking of the United Nations in terms of nationalism, and nationalism of the worst sort: nationalism of the strong, the prosperous, the large nation, against the weak and the undeveloped. This policy we ought to be able to recognize. It is simply the old economic imperialism in new finery. It is what sent troops into backward lands on the guise of "civilizing" them.

"It is hard for the rich man to enter the kingdom of God." If that is true of men, how much the more is it true of nations. Nations operate on a lower standard of ethical behavior than individuals. Perhaps we might paraphrase these words of our Lord for today in this way, "doubly difficult is it for the rich nation to work for the kingdom of God." Mr. Stassen's proposal is nothing less than to legalize voting in the United Nations on the basis of wealth and strength. He claims that that is "reasonable representation" and democratic. When he uses as an illustration the fact that a populous nation might be outvoted by a few smaller nations, he is dragging a "red herring" across the path of the discussion. Would he advocate giving a representation on the United Nations Council to China and India on the basis of population? If so they could outvote most of the rest of the world. It is not population, but wealth and strength that he thinks should be the determining factor.

Furthermore, his statement shows little knowledge or understanding of the history of international negotiation. In the past most of the really constructive ideas have been put forward by the representatives of the smaller nations. The reason for this is obvious, they have fewer world economic interests that can be affected by progressive international programs. Their leaders are, therefore, able to consider the fundamental issues with greater impartiality, to say nothing about their freedom from political repercussions at home.

While to allow the smaller nations equal vote in the United Nations will not, in itself, bring about a heaven on earth, the record shows that their influence will be for world unity and against selfish economic imperialism. How can the Social and Economic Council do what Mr. Stassen feels must be done, improve the resources of food and shelter and clothing, advance culture and understanding and increase the ease of travel and trade when one strong and wealthy power whose individual economic position would be affected by a proposal for the good of the other nations can veto it? The veto provision is one of the weaknesses of the Charter and, until it is removed, it will impede any effective effort to make one world.

ANSWER: The veto is generally misunderstood, as has been repeatedly pointed out by Mr. Stassen and others. In the last analysis there are but two nations today that can make war—ourselves and Russia. The veto simply means that these two nations, together with Great Britain, France and China, have agreed to continue discussions on every issue until they arrive at agreement. It is a technique for arriving at agreement and thus maintaining peace, rather than a device whereby one of the five may block the will of the majority.

REV. J. M. B. GILL
Executive Sec'y of Eastern Oregon

Answering the inquiry of the Rev. Benjamin Minifie in Backfire of Feb. 20th: may I say for his information that it has been my privilege to assist in the forming of a new mission in the District of Eastern Oregon at Hermiston, and among the members are two English war brides.

Both of these young women are regular attendants at the services, one of them driving fourteen miles to do so. This one remarked to me after the first service she attended that "the Church service made her feel more at home than anything else she had experienced since her arrival in the United States."

I feel confidant that Mr. Minifie has as he expressed it "hit a bad crop," and unfortunately it is a crop which grows quite luxuriantly among our own people here in the United States.

Seminary Sunday Makes a Difference in the Seminaries, Too

Parish offerings for the theological schools make students and faculty members aware of grass-roots concern for the training of clergy for the Church of the future. Result — a healthy sense of gratitude, encouragement and responsibility.

Wherever the appointed Sunday proved inconvenient, parish calendars can surely find an appropriate time for a sermon on the ministry and an offering for one of the Seminaries.

Southern Students Urge Closing Of Bishop Payne School

Declare Negro Students Should Be Admitted To Regular Southern Theological Schools

By Earle C. Page

President of the North Carolina Episcopal College Students Conference

Chapel Hill, N. C.:—Out of the discussions on "The Negro in the Church" at the annual North Carolina state conference of Episcopal college students, which met here came a consideration of the Bishop Payne Divinity School (for Negoes) at Petersburg, Virginia. After careful consideration and discussion we adopted a resolution on this subject which we feel will be of special interest to you. There was wide participation and presentation of views by both white and Negro delegates, although the majority were white students of Southern background. We saw the problem from many aspects, but agreed on the following points:

1. As Southerners we realize the weakness of the Church's work among Southern Negroes, and believe that the frequently inadequate preparation of our Negro clergy is a prime cause. We feel that the Bishop Payne Divinity School, specifically, does not offer adequate preparation, and as a segregated institution can never do so, in spite of the efforts of its faculty. This condition not only produces poorly trained ministers but discourages able men from entering the holy ministry.

2. The small number of students this school now serves could be easily absorbed into existing superior institutions. To pour the Church's money into maintaining and improving this school at a time when money is desperately needed elsewhere in the Church's program is economically unsound and morally questionable.

3. The lack of fellowship and understanding between white and Negro clergy, especially in the South, is due in part, we believe, to dissimilar background and inadequate opportunity for shared experiences. This condition would be partially remedied by unsegregated seminary training. Aside from economic and educational considerations, therefore, segregation is undesirable.

4. Finally, any segregation within the Church because of race or social position is unequivocably antithetical to the teachings of our Lord and the purpose of his Church. As the official representative of Christ on earth we cannot compromise his example and message by conformity to the pressure and prejudice of the world.

Therefore, our conference officially resolved: "We strongly recommend that the Bishop Payne Divinity School at Petersburg, Virginia, be abolished; and that Negro candidates for holy orders be admitted to the regular southern theological schools of the Church."

The Episcopal Church, because of its unified administration, has a unique opportunity — and responsibility — to make real the brotherhood which Christianity teaches.

The resolution, with a covering letter, has been sent to various leaders of the Church urging them to lend their personal and official influence to carry out the resolution.

PRESBYTERIANS NOT DISCOURAGED

Philadelphia: — The Presbyterian Church will continue to be receptive to suggestions looking toward union with the Episcopal Church, it was announced here by its department of Church cooperation and union. The statement expressed regret over the action of General Convention last fall.

"The department is still not in a position to make any definite expression upon the possibility of union with the Episcopal Church," the statement explained. "Whether or not the action of that Church at its convention nullifies or alters the previous basis of negotiations necessarily depends on clarification of the position of the Episcopal Church, which is now awaited by this department.

"In this situation the department would recommend that judgment continue to be suspended, and that our Church refrain from action. At the same time we believe that we should be receptive to any suggestions looking toward union that may come from our Episcopal brethren and be willing to consider them. This is the attitude that we have consistently maintained since overtures were received from the Episcopal Church in 1937.

"Admittedly the action of the Episcopal Church appears to be a reverse to the movement for union with that body. But the union of all Christ's followers is of such supreme importance that we must not allow ourselves to be halted or discouraged by this seeming setback."

GREEK POLICY ASSAILED

Chicago (RNS):—The Rev. Harold W. Ruopp, former president of the Federation of Churches here, last week assailed President Truman's proposed policy on Greece as American imperialism which may lead to war.

"This policy, if put into action, means the certain weakening and the probable doom of the United Nations to which the President has paid at least lip service," Ruopp said. "This policy means American imperialism abroad and militarism at home. Imperialism plus militarism spell in the long run catastrophe for us and for the world.

"If we are stupid enough to permit another war, there will not only be no civilization worth talking about but also no democracy. If we really want world-wide Communism, let's have one more war. It is not by chance that most of the large nations of the world, except the United States, have moved to the left since the last war.

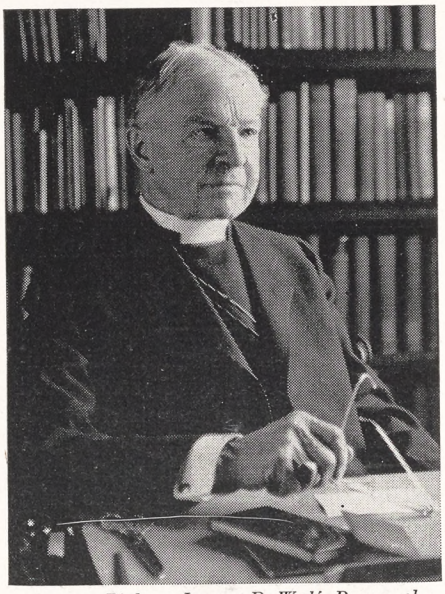
"We need leaders who will say to the peoples of the earth that we cannot have a world based on constant fear and hatred, but only on understanding, leaders who will articulate and bring to pass the dreams and hopes of the common people of the world who most certainly do not want everlasting wars."

HASTY MARRIAGES BLOCKED

Topeka, Kansas (RNS):—Kansas' Governor Frank Carlson was expected to sign into law a bill to stop hasty marriages in the state. By requiring a three-day waiting period, the law will halt the brisk marriage business Kansas has drawn from neighboring states with waiting period requirements. Justices of the peace and ministers will lose a rich source of revenue when the law takes effect, but most Church leaders in the state have favored passage of the bill.

Under the law a probate judge cannot issue a license to the couple until three days after application is made. At least one of the two persons wishing to be married must apply for the license in person.

The Rev. Milton R. Vogel, executive secretary of the Kansas Council of Churches, said the Council has backed the bill directly and through the Kansas Council for Children with which it is affiliated.



"The Council favors any law or program that will safeguard home life in America," Vogel declared at a committee hearing on the proposal, "and that's what we feel this bill will help do."

RUSSIAN ORTHODOX PROTEST

New York (RNS):—Metropolitan Benjamin, exarch (representative) in America of Moscow Patriarch Alexei, has protested to Pope Pius XII against "unmerited attacks" on the Russian Orthodox Church and its hierarchy by the Rt. Rev. Msgr. Fulton J. Sheen, of the Catholic University of America.

The exarch was joined in his protest by Archbishop Adam of Philadelphia and Archbishop Makary of New York, constituting the hierarchy of the Russian Orthodox Patriarchal Church, which represents a minority group of Russian Orthodox in this country.

The churchmen cited a recent address in which Msgr. Sheen is said to have referred to an impending visit by Metropolitan Gregory of Leningrad and Novgorod as "an attempt to win over the Russian Church in the United States for Stalin."

Bishop James DeWolf Perry, the retired Bishop of Rhode Island and former Presiding Bishop, died suddenly on March 19 at Summerville, South Carolina

They also complained that Msgr. Sheen had described Metropolitan Gregory as "a professor of atheism at the Soviet Atheistic College."

The protest was sent to the Pope through Archbishop Amleto Giovanni Cicognani, Apostolic Delegate in Washington.

"Metropolitan Gregory is a Christian and Orthodox archbishop," the protest stated, "Metropolitan of one of the most ancient and respected sees of Russia . . . and a professor of theology in a theological academy devoted to the training of priests in Christian morals and the principles of faith set forth by Our Lord Himself."

The protest also declared that Metropolitan Gregory's mission "is not to win the Russian Church in this country for Stalin," but to serve as an emissary of Patriarch Alexei in seeking to unite all Russian Orthodox churches and congregations "under the spiritual jurisdiction of the Moscow Patriarchate."

Refuting another alleged statement by Msgr. Sheen that "Russia is using the cloak of religion to spread Communism throughout the United States," the protest said: "Surely it is not a Machievellian plot for the Patriarch of Moscow to send an archbishop and metropolitan to this country as his representative in religious and ecclesiastical matters. Is there any necessity for Msgr. Sheen to mix Mr. Stalin into the purely ecclesiastical problem of our Church discipline, Church order, and Church obedience?"

CHARGES AGAINST PRIESTS

Paris (wireless to RNS):—Five Roman Catholic priests and one layman have been arrested in France charged with forging credentials to aid political criminals to flee to Spain. Raids on abbeys and monasteries in the Paris district were begun after several recently captured collaborators and former members of the Vichy militia said they hid in convents and obtained false papers there. Edouard Dupreux, minister of the interior, declared that in the library of one abbey police found a complete plant for the forging of false identification papers.

RURAL WORKERS FELLOWSHIP

Kansas City, Mo.:—Workers in the missions of West Missouri have organized as a diocesan Rural Workers Fellowship. Meetings are to be held four times a year to consider common problems and to weld through fellowship and worship their strength for the tasks before them. In addition to nine clergymen serving missions the fellowship consists of Bishop Robert N. Spencer; Dean Claude W. Sprouse; Canon Missioner E. J. Downes and Miss Elizabeth Clay, diocesan rural worker.

At the first meeting there was consideration of national policy for rural work; lack of resident priests in missions; development of local leadership; means of increasing financial support. The Rev. Robert Mize Jr. of Ellsworth, Kansas, conducted a quiet day on the second day of the conference.

Churchmen Request Congress To Refer Greece to UN

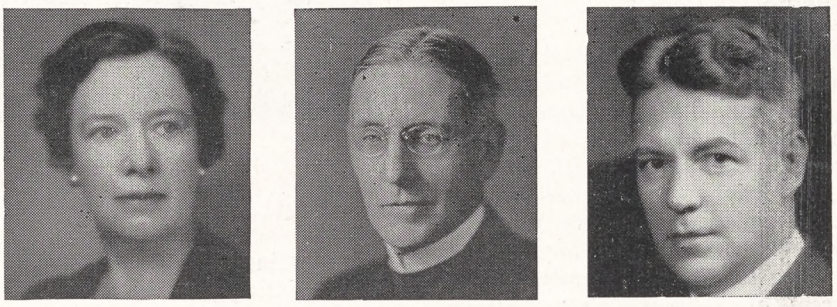
National Committee of Church League Votes Overwhelmingly in Favor of Such Action

By Rita Rubin

New York: — The officers and national committee of the Church League for Industrial Democracy, with but two negative votes, has called upon Congress not to support the Truman proposals for Greece and Turkey, but instead to refer the matter to the United Nations.

Of the forty-two Churchmen and women who are members of the committee, twenty-eight favored the statement; but two opposed. There were two undecided while the remaining ten had not voted at this writing. Of the ten who have not yet voted, six are bishops who presumably are away from their offices filling Lenten engagements.

Among those who voted for the statement were Bishop Edward L. Parsons, retired bishop of California and president of the CLID; Bishop Elwood L. Haines of Iowa; the Rev. W. Russell Bowie of the Union Seminary; the Rev. J. Howard Melish, rector in Brooklyn; Miss Mary Simkhovitch, former director of Greenwich House, New York; Prof. Vida D. Scudder of Wellesley; Miss Mary van Kleeck of New York.



Also Prof. Adelaide Case of the Episcopal Theological School; the Rev. David Hunter, director of religious education for the diocese of Massachusetts; Mr. Arthur Fawcett of Washington; the Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher of the Episcopal Theological School; the Rev. John H. Johnson of New York; the Rev. William Russell of Wilkes-Barre, Pa.; Mr. Robert Luce of New Haven; Miss Lucy R. Mason of Atlanta, Ga.; the Rev. William H. Marmion of Birmingham, Ala.; the Rev. Robert D. Smith, director of social service of the diocese of New Jersey; Miss Helen Turnbull, director of Windham House, New York; the Rev. William M. Weber of Newark; the Rev. Charles C. Wilson of St. Louis; the Rev. Allen F. Kremer, Episcopal chaplain at the University of Pennsylvania; the Rev. Joseph G. Moore of the faculty of the Western-Seabury Seminary, Evanston, Ill.; Miss Elizabeth Frazier of Philadelphia; the Rev. Thaddius Clapp of Worcester; the Rev. J. Ogden Hoffman of the diocese of Los Angeles; the Rev. William Kirk of the Virginia Seminary; Miss Wilma D. Butler of the diocese of Western Massachusetts; the Rev. W. B. Spofford Sr., managing editor of THE WITNESS; the Rev. W. B. Spofford Jr., executive secretary of the CLID.

The statement, which has been sent to President Truman, to members of the Cabinet, and to leading Senators and Representatives, follows:

"President Truman's message to Congress on March 12th calling for unilateral financial and military aid to the governments of Greece and Turkey on the part of the United States is a step towards dividing the world into two camps and, as such, it is a step towards war. The situation in Greece and Turkey, as well as throughout the Middle East, as presented by the President, arises out of the failure of imperial policies and systems. This policy has brought Great Britain into bankruptcy and has solved no major problems concerning the fates of the peoples of that area. The President simply proposes to continue this policy, which has already tragically failed, by pledging American men, munition and money to support governments that are notoriously inefficient and undemocratic. This amounts to United States imperialism and we, as Christians, are opposed to imperialism by any country in any form.

"We urge Congress to appropriate every dollar necessary to meet the relief needs of the suffering peoples of the world. It is for this reason that the CLID asked for the continuation of the UNRRA which the United States government was primarily responsible for destroying. We ask that funds be provided for starving peoples and displaced persons, to be distributed strictly on the basis of need and with due attention to the principles that the nations who fought as our allies in the war should be the first beneficiaries of our aid.

"We, as members of the National Committee of the Church League for Industrial Democracy, urge Congress to reject President Truman's proposed financial and military support of the fading and out-moded policy of imperialism and substitute for it a comprehensive United States program in which all the concerned powers will cooperate to create a just settlement of the outstanding problems of the Middle East. The United Nations represent all the peoples of the world and, as near as any organization can, it represents the brotherhood and sovereignty of mankind. We do not believe that United States dollars and men should be pledged to the support of kings, of empires or of reactionary regimes established by them in any country. The full power of the United States should be behind the United Nations and the reconstruction of a war-destroyed world and the support of people's governments. The problem of the Middle East is a world problem and, as such, any attempt to a unilateral solution of that problem on the part of the United States is morally indefensible."

Officers and members of the national committee of the CLID by an overwhelming vote call upon Congress to refer the situation in Greece and Turkey to the United Nations. Among those calling for such action were Prof. Adelaide Case of the Cambridge Seminary; Bishop Edward L. Parsons of California and Prof. W. Russell Bowie of Union Seminary

PRESBYTERIAN UNITY

Cincinnati (RNS): — As reported last week, a plan of reunion between the Presbyterian Church in the USA and the Presbyterian Church in the US (Southern) was approved here by unanimous vote of their separate reunion negotiating groups, after two days of joint sessions. The plan will be submitted to their national General Assemblies in May, and they in turn will submit the plan to local presbyteries for several months of study and comment.

Reactions of presbyteries will be analyzed by the negotiating groups, revisions made in the reunion plan if deemed advisable, and the results will be submitted to the 1948 General Assemblies for vote of approval.

Again the Assemblies will refer the plan to the presbyteries, this time for vote, and if 75 per cent of the total presbyteries of the two Churches approve, it then will be submitted to the 1949 General Assemblies for final concurrence with presbytery action.

The procedure completed, the new united church—"The Presbyterian Church of the United States"—will be ready to hold its first General Assembly meeting in 1950.

The Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. is commonly referred to as the "Northern" Church, but its 8,750 congregations, with membership in excess of 2,200,000, are scattered throughout the 48 states and the District of Columbia. Its general assembly sessions will be held in Grand Rapids, Mich.

The Presbyterian Church in the U. S., formed in 1861, has a membership of about 600,000, scattered through 17 states of the South.

Montreat, N. C., will be its 1947 assembly city.

The U.S.A. Church has 50,000 Negro communicant members in the South, while the Southern body has only 2,400 Negro members in the area which it covers. Presbyterianism was first planted in Eastern United States more than 300 years ago. Its first General Assembly sessions were in 1789.

First step toward reunion of the Churches was taken 60 years ago, but that and subsequent reunion overtures failed.

Present series of negotiations started in 1939 and continued through the war years. The Cincinnati meeting was hailed by both the Department of Church Cooperation and Union of the U.S.A. Church and the U.S. Church's Permanent Committee on Cooperation and Union as "a splendid achievement."

Both Churches have huge property holdings and investments—numerous colleges, schools, seminaries and other institutions—and mutually satisfactory adjustment of these in the reunion plan proved a time-consuming problem for the joint negotiating groups.

The plan of reunion is a complicated assemblage of statements, propositions and stipulations, representing a spread of many thousands of words in type.

A new book of church order, as a part of the plan, includes sections on form of government, book of discipline, and worship.

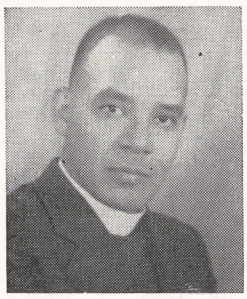
The two Churches have been the same doctrinally. Prior to the Cincinnati meeting, the negotiating committees had agreed on a proposal to group state synods in eight regions covering the entire United States, calculated to facilitate General Assembly work.

URGE STUDY OF COMMUNISM

New York (RNS):—New missionaries to China should have a good background in communist philosophy in order to discuss the political situation there intelligently with Chinese groups, Secretary L. S. Ruland of the China division of the Presbyterian board of missions said here. He also urged that the churches consider establishing work in the communist areas of China.

DELEGATES TO OSLO

New York:—The division of youth of the National Council have named five young people to represent the Episcopal Church at the youth conference to be held this summer at Oslo, Norway. They are Miss Joned Billings, a sophomore at Kansas City Junior College; Frank W. Stringfellow, a sophomore at Bates; Miss Betty Street, at present employed by an industrial firm; David S. Thayer of the University of California and George M. V. Hook, a graduate of Yale, at present employed by a steel firm.



The Rev. William Crittenden, head of the youth division, is to head the delegation and is to be a Bible study leader.

SAYS VATICAN AGAINST WAR

Chicago (RNS):—George N. Shuster, president of Hunter College, New York, told the local Council on Foreign Relations that the Vatican will not back a war against Russia, and that it is supporting the United Nations "in every sense of the word." He is a leading Roman Catholic layman. He said that the Church is fully aware of the complete destruction of Europe which would follow a third world war and that while his Church is opposed to communism it is also opposed to promoting war.

He declared that in 1938 the Vatican foreign office rejected "a grandiose plan of Franz Von Papen for war on Russia" and that the Vatican today would also refuse to consider such a proposal.

He further stated that the European communist parties are "organizations of despair" to which millions turn because of injustices.

Other members of the CLID committee to urge a repudiation of the Truman policy in the Middle East were the Rev. John H. Johnson; Prof. Vida D. Scudder and Miss Mary van Kleeck

SEEKS EMIGRATION TO AUSTRALIA

Sydney (RNS):—The Rev. G. G. Morgan, Melbourne Baptist, regarded as Australia's most militant Protestant, sails shortly for England to confer with British authorities on plans to stimulate emigration of Protestants to Australia. A one-time Welsh amateur boxer, he came into prominence in 1935 when he led a hunger march of coal miners on London.

A Bit of Advice

JUDAS, you should have shouted "Hosanna" with the rest; no matter what was in your mind. You were going to compromise with the world: you were sure to be cheated; and you could have hardened yourself for that experience by losing your sense of perspective on the inside. As people who have sung hymns and prayed prayers and then compromised with the world, we know easier and more graceful methods than that you followed.

You know now that you didn't sell Christ; he is a drug on the market—you peddled him. You went to the priests; they were waiting for you, but they did not come to you.

You know now that they didn't pay you; they promised to pay you. They were respectable scoundrels, so that had to be enough.

You know now how small a bag containing thirty pieces of silver is; how light it is, compared with the weight of a Man on a Cross! They named the price, you didn't. It is always a buyer's market when we sell Christ, when we compromise with the world. When we visit the Munich of the world, we come to terms—their terms. But still perhaps you thought it was enough until you saw it, and saw what it had bought.

Perhaps you thought you could force him into action by producing a dilemma for him to solve one way or another; you learned the hard way that the absolutely spiritual and the very slightly spiritual cannot be compounded together. They eliminate each other, or explode, or curdle, or turn to slime or dust.

You did not know the forgiveness of God. Perhaps we who are partly his disciples (and if only partly his, partly yours) have a little too much made up for ourselves your ignorance in this matter.

So far, we have given you the advice of the world. We could give you his advice, too: Don't compromise with the world. You may well say we bring it to you too late; the only reason that we mention it, is that we bring it to ourselves too little.

"QUOTES"

THE present Greek government claims the support of 85 per cent of the people. It is more than a little amazing that it must call for outside help against "a militant minority." What is wrong with the 85 per cent? Is it craven- - -r fictitious? The government has the artillery, it controls the food. It has the king and the money presses. Do its supporters lack fervor, or courage, or numbers? Or can it be that only the militant minority learned how to fight when it was a question of fighting the Nazis? Personally, I'm willing to wait for Mark Etheridge and his UN border commission to bring the picture up to date. The guerillas of the dispatches may be the revenging Reds King George's ministers always say they are. On the other hand, they may be just underfed, liberty-loving peasants. I have a long memory. I remember very well when a militant minority of pastoral Americans in revolt against another King George also were called guerillas and worse.

—Jennings Perry.

The Clergy Shortage

THE present shortage of clergy in the Episcopal Church, which Dean Taylor calls attention to in his article this week, is due partly to the war and partly to the failure of the Church to plan realistically any program of recruiting young men for the ministry. A realistic program would mean a careful study of the number of clergy needed for old and new work in the next ten years, a systematic and continuing recruiting program, and the proper support of all Church seminaries. How many men, for example, are needed in the specialized ministries which have grown up in recent years on college campuses, on school faculties, in hospitals, or in administrative positions in diocesan houses? How many pieces of new work are there which the bishops could undertake if they had the men with which to do it? How many parishes have grown to such a degree that now two or three clergy are needed to staff them? Adding these needs together, are our seminaries, even filled to capacity, able to meet the need? Do we need the five thousand clergy asked for by the recent meeting of some of our western bishops? As far as we know no such planning has taken place, and our hand-to-mouth policy, our individualistic approach to the whole problem, and not just the war, has brought on the clergy shortage with all its evil results.

Some of the results of this shortage are:

The curse of vacancies. Not only have many churches stood vacant and dying for some years, but many others have gone through the weakening experience of waiting months for a new rector.

The bishops of some of the smaller dioceses and missionary districts are given the impossible task of trying to man mission stations in the face of the competition of the larger, wealthier, and more established dioceses.

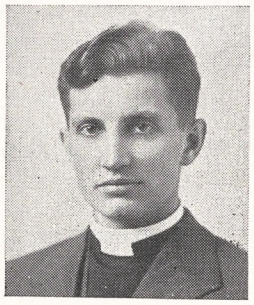
The opportunities for new work which now lie before us cannot be grasped, and we must soberly face the fact that some of these opportunities will be closed within the next five years.

Many bishops, rather than close existing work, are compelled to admit into the ministry by the "back door" men who have never received seminary training, and, generally speaking, this is not a good policy.

The young men now in the seminaries are in danger of being spoiled by the many and varied offers which are made to them, and, while some will want to begin their work in the smaller missions, the majority will be drawn into the snug harbors of the established Episcopal pattern, and will never know the stimulus of breaking new ground.

Money and time are wasted by the Church as bishops and clergy seek to lure young men from necessary work in one area to "a great opportunity" in their own.

Because of the vacuum of vacancies in the American Church and because of the more adequate salaries paid by the American Church, clergy are constantly being drawn from Canada into the United States, which is good neither for the Canadian Church nor for the relations between Canadian and American bishops.



In brief, there is no greater need in the Church than definite planning on this subject, and one can only marvel that with the Episcopal Church failing to raise up its own clergy we have drawn as many young men as we have from other communions. We can, therefore, rejoice that the Rev. Charles Cadigan and the Rev. Hugh White are now touring the colleges organizing the recruiting plans of the Church and interviewing men who are considering the ministry. They deserve the enthusiastic support of the whole Church and the full cooperation of every area they visit. What they are doing is what every group with a strategy has done for years in the American college scene. They will go to the source of supply and seek the best men for the work of the Church,—men of intelligence and initiative who know at first hand in their war experience that the greatest need of our day is a revival of the power of the Gospel in the hearts of men. For decades, generally speaking, the cream of American manhood has not gone into the ministry of the Church but into the building up of our technological civilization, and now it is clear that this civilization, so rich in things and poor in soul, is near to death unless the breath of God revives it. We need the best men in the ministry, and an adequate number. There is nothing more important for the future life of the Church, or for the healing of the sick age in which we live. What is vitally important also is that the leadership of the Church see to it that the work Mr. Cadigan and Mr. White are doing continues into the years that lie ahead, and that a sound policy and strategy be developed and maintained.

Dramatic Arts and Religion

By

REV. WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD JR.

THERE is no doubt that Sergei Eisenstein, the famous director of the Soviet Union, is one of the truly creative artists in the motion picture field. Indeed, with students of this 20th Century all-inclusive art form, Eisenstein can only be equalled by Charlie Chaplin and the old Walt Disney.

Now Eisenstein's newest picture (which was actually made several years ago), Ivan the Terrible, is being shown in this country and is receiving a mixed reception from the critics. The film is Part I of a trilogy and, therefore, doesn't have the unity and pace of a standard picture. The story drags and is not helped by the over elaborate posturings of many of the actors.

And yet, with all of its obvious faults, Ivan the Terrible is an excellent picture which sets forth new relationships between the camera, the stage and the orchestra pit. The story deals with the reign of Ivan the IVth of the 16th century who takes it upon himself, in the name of the people, to weld all of the Russias together to withstand both external and internal enemies. The conflicts in the film are: Ivan vs. the Tartars, Ivan vs. the German-Livonians, Ivan vs. the Boyars and Ivan vs. the Church. I don't know enough about this period of Czarist history to know whether Eisenstein's presentation is fact or romance although, knowing that the film was made during Russia's darkest hours in the war, I hazard the guess that it is romanticized history: the same kind of tripe which Hollywood delights in producing.

The greatness of the film lies in three things: a) the bold and imaginative camera work which catches the fire of battle, the pageantry of Russian orthodoxy and the portrait personifications of good and evil with equal skill; b) the acting of the company in some of the most effective costumes ever seen and c) the integrated musical score by the great composer, Sergei Prokofieff. Eisenstein and Prokofieff collaborated a decade ago on the story of another Russian hero, Alexander Nevsky. If Ivan the Terrible shows that they have learned little new in the intervening time, it likewise proves that they have forgotten nothing. That is truly great praise.

Church men and women will get a particular thrill out of the picture because of the careful and precise attention that is given to the religious scenes—the coronation of Ivan and extreme unction. Like its predecessor and Laurence Olivier's Henry the Vth, Ivan the Terrible is one tremendous pageant setting forth in remarkable detail the nature of life in the Middle Ages and in that period when Reformation, capitalism and nationalism were breaking over man's horizon.

Negro-White Relationships

by Kenneth Hughes

Rector of St. Bartholomew's Church, Cambridge

THE title "The Negro Problem" for the chapter in Christianity Takes A Stand is misleading, and Dr. Bowie recognizes this when he says, "The Negro problem is not so much a problem about the Negro as it is a problem about the white man." The problem is not in the race but in the relationship which exists between the races, and this the white man largely dictates. "The white man" (Dr. Bowie is speaking generally) "would keep the Negro 'in his place'; wants him 'to behave himself' and be conveniently useful" because "bluntly put, the white man thinks the Negro an inferior being."

Considering the great available mass of scientific and other evidence to refute the dogma of inferiority this is a severe castigation of the intelligence of any group holding such a view. We begin, however, to understand why this belief is possible in this day and age when we look for motive, and in the motive for the continued fostering of this belief Dr. Bowie evinces no interest.

Those who think the Negro inferior are made to so think, and for a reason. e.g. Hollywood with its stereotyped inferior roles for Negroes; the press which mentions the race of a criminal only when Negroes are involved; our history books with their misleading and sometimes slanderous portrayal of the Negro in American life; plus social customs designed to convey the idea of inferiority. When we consider that millions of white people have no contact with or knowledge of Negroes save what they see in the movies or read in the newspapers and text books the seriousness and effectiveness of this campaign become apparent.

Dr. Bowie outlines with accuracy the difficulties the Negro must face in making a living. In addition to the natural obstacles which all must face, the Negro has to hurdle artificial barriers put in his way in the form of oppressive legislation (poll tax, Jim-Crow, restrictive covenants) and the absence of positive legislation (FEPC, anti-lynching, cloture) plus a host of retarding social mechanisms which make the going doubly hard for him. Moreover, the Negro is more liable to be typed than the members of any other race and his conduct judged by that of the lowest in his group. One black sheep condemns the Negro flock, but not so the white flock.

All this our author decries and urges Christians "to face these facts with shame" so as "to incite them . . . to positive action." But he does not say what action; advocates no definite program for the Christian to follow on these vital social issues which disgrace the Church as a partaker of them. He does not "see the sure road ahead or know the solution of our beset race relationships."

In the face of this admission the question of Dr. Bowie's qualification to write this chapter becomes inescapable. If Christianity is to take "a stand," then the Church, the exponent of Christianity, must act on these issues. It must actively endorse what promotes the Gospel and actively oppose what is detrimental to it. The Gospel is interested in the total man. Everything which militates against his welfare must be anathematized; everything conducive to it welcomed and espoused. The Church's business is to contend against evil. Sin, in whatever form found, is an object of her wrath. In every moral issue (and it is difficult to conceive of an issue which is not moral) we must take a side. Not to choose is a choice, and usually the worse choice. In a moral universe only morons and a amoral people are neutral. Controversial issues can never be avoided. They are only postponed. They force themselves upon us sooner or later with the relentlessness of tide.

Dr. Bowie confuses prejudice with discrimination. Prejudice is an attitude. In and of itself it is innocuous. We cannot control that, nor are we any too concerned about it save as it affects a man's soul. That is a matter between a man and his Maker. But discrimination is an objective act, a matter between man and man. When prejudice becomes overt and issues in discrimination society must take the necessary steps to protect the equal rights of its citizens. This is a moral matter, and the Church as the arbiter in things moral must take the lead. It must resist rather than follow the pressures of the secular world.

It is not enough to pray God that "the course of this world may be so peaceably ordered by thy governance that Thy Church may serve Thee in all godly quietness." Prayer without action is superstition, just as action without prayer is presumption. The Church's stake in this is tremendous. It is costing all branches of it now well over a hundred million dollars for Reconstruction and Advance. This national problem is part and parcel of the international problem. If we continue merely to pray "to direct and dispose the hearts of all Christian rulers to faithfully administer justice" without doing something about it, then, within our life time, we will all be called upon again to subscribe another hundred million dollars for reconstruction if at all reconstruction will then be possible.

Dr. Bowie quotes Myrdal's "An American Dilemma" to point out the Negro's dominant grievance,—the economic hardships resulting from discrimination. "Negroes are in desperate need of jobs and bread." But here again our author does not look for motive in denying that bread. He enumerates injustices and moralizes about Christians having "to reckon with Christ." But suppose we do a little reckoning with each other first!

THE evidence should have led to the conclusion that the tap root of race discrimination is economics; not its sole motive, to be sure, but its chief. Burrow deep enough into any given case of it and invariably you will find a money motive. The sinister reason back of the attempt to keep the Negro "in his place" is exploitation. Most else is excuse. Someone must "hew the wood and draw the water." Inferior jobs must be done by inferior people, therefore an inferiority theory becomes necessary and handy. If you treat a man equally you have to pay him equally. "The real Negro problem," said a governor of Mississippi, "is the problem of the Negro to make a living for himself and his family." Who denies that bread, and why?

This incident quoted by Dr. Bowie is enlightening. It shows that even the failure to fight discrimination can often be traced to an economic motive. Four Negroes were lynched last year in Freeport, New York. A business man of that town was going all out to see justice done until someone said to him, "Hey, what's this I hear about you hanging out with Comyoonists?" Immediately he faded out of this Christian crusade saying defensively, "These people are my livelihood." O economics! what a god thou art! Remember the first commandment?

Communists do not know it, yet these so-called atheists steal the lead in contending against evil while Christians who have an oath in heaven to do just that, fearful of economic reprisals, slink away to their arm chairs, the very complacency against which Dr. Bowie warns. And why? Because the choice is: Make a living OR accord justice. The system will not permit both. We preach cooperation and service and send our hearers out into a competitive society organized on lines of "getting" which is pagan; not "giving" which is Christian. In such an environment our moral admonitions take a beating. The good seed is sown among thorns which choke it "because of the deceitfulness of riches." Away with the God of the prophets and release unto us the god of profit!

Felix Adler traced the basic cause of maladjustment among his patients to their failure to appreciate the truth of our Lord's words, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." If this is true of individuals why should it not also apply to corporate society? We keep repeating these words, parrotlike, to our people Sunday after Sunday but their social significance has not yet dawned on us. When they do we will rearrange our economic system which now so stacks the cards against the Christian conscience in its essays to do what it knows to be right. (That Freeport well-meaning, but ineffectual citizen is no isolated case.) Until then it will be difficult for organized Christianity, with its close bond between vestments and investments, to take an effectual stand on this problem.

As to segregation, that most execrable thing in American life which the Church slavishly follows to the destruction of its fellowship, Dr. Bowie quotes a Federal Council of Churches resolution renouncing segregation for itself and urging its constituent communions to do likewise and "to work for a non-segregated Church and a non-segregated society." The Federal Council of Churches is to be congratulated for having caught up, at long last, with the New Testament.

However, when it comes to action Dr. Bowie excuses: "To carry out this principle in action will be admittedly difficult . . . churches are inescapably community conscious." In other words, the pagan tail wags the Christian dog which claims authority from Christ himself to decide on all moral issues. But these churches which follow community pattern "must reckon with Christ" so Dr. Bowie gives us the small comfort, "Conscience will be troubled until the Church begins to move ahead."

But when will it? Pious phrases about brotherhood and equality are revolting in the face of the facts. They can hardly be considered "a stand." "The word of God must be proclaimed and demonstrated" Dr. Joseph Fletcher reminds us. "By your fruits shall all men know that ye are my disciples." Words are cheap. Action is costly and always demands a price. Are Churchmen willing to pay this price? It will require, as a beginning and at the cost of investments, open and aggressive advocacy by the Church of remedial legislation—FEPC, full employment, anti-poll tax, anti-lynching, anti-Jim-Crow, anti-restrictive covenants, cloture,—to correct these social injustices.

Anyone who thinks that such matters are not the concern of religion should recall William Temple's dictum, "There is nothing secular but sin." God is interested in all that he has created; and he created the idea of democracy. It is in the Bible. That is where we get it. The Church, therefore, is interested in the achievement of a "de facto" democracy because democracy is the purest political expression of the Christian religion. Democracy says that every man is tremendously important. His voice and vote must be heard in determining what form the body politic shall take. So too, the New Testament on whose every page is stressed the infinite value of human personality. Every soul counts, "even unto the least of these little ones."

So this is the question which the Church must ask in deciding whether it shall sponsor a legislative measure. Does it further the democratic process? Having so decided, then, as individual Churchmen and as a corporate body we must pressure for it, meeting pagan pressure with Christian pressure. This is a beginning worthy the name and more objective than "a troubled conscience."

Dr. Bowie quotes Myrdal at great length. He might have added this from the eminent sociologist's monumental work produced after four years of intensive study of this problem. "America must do something big and do it quick." And in this the Church must lead or else cease to be the Church.

The Clergy Shortage

by Charles L. Taylor Jr.

Dean of the Episcopal Theological School

IN THIS postwar world Christianity is entering on one of the greatest periods of opportunity in its long history. But instead of moving forward the Church in many ways is scarcely holding its ground. In 1945 there were fewer pupils in Sunday School than at any time since 1890. One diocese is seeking 30 young clergy to man its existing missions and small parishes; otherwise some of its mission churches which have been subsidized to the extent of $1500 a year for the past 20 years must be closed and the total effort and investment written off as a loss. Another diocese has nine parishes without rectors. Fifteen dioceses in the United States showed a decrease in the number of communicants in 1946. We wonder, moreover, if the numerical growth of our Church may not be due rather to the weakness of others than to our own strength; perhaps people who are ashamed to have no church connection choose ours as the one which makes so few demands on its members that they name it as the Church from which they stay away.

One cause of the trouble is easy to find: lack of trained leaders.

In 1890 the Episcopal Church in the United States numbered 504,898 communicants. In 1946 there were 1,540,594, an increase of approximately 200%. In the same period, however, the number of clergy has increased only from 4000 to 6000, or about 50%, while the number of churches abandoned in that period runs well into the thousands.

Doubtless one of the main reasons why the number of ministers has not kept pace with the Church's increased membership is that it is now much harder to become a minister than it once was. Gone are the days of easy requirements for ordination. Today's candidate for ordination must have a college education and three years of graduate study in a seminary besides. And although this raising of standards has meant that fewer men in proportion have become ministers, the net result has been a more capable ministry and a strengthening of the leadership of the Church.

In the years following World War I the demand for ministers to carry on the existing work of the Church did not greatly exceed the supply. But World War II changed all that. Men who might have gone into the ministry went from college into the armed forces. Lack of students caused some seminaries to close their doors. Enrollments in the remainder were cut in half. In the war years, 1942-1945, two schools, the Episcopal Theological School and Virginia, both of them reduced in size, produced 45% of the ordinands from all the eleven theological schools of our Church. A conservative estimate places the number of parsons lost to the Church during these war years at between 400 and 500.

Although the majority of established parishes may not yet have felt the pinch, the shortage of good clergy stands out in bold relief when the Church attempts to move forward in the postwar world. Where are the men for the mission field, foreign and domestic, for Alaska and South Dakota; for hospital chaplaincies; for the kind of industrial reconciliation that Frank Sayre is attempting in Cleveland; for service with relief agencies or ecumenical organizations; for radio promotion or a real attack on our rural problem?

EVEN more alarming than the shortage of men for current operations and advance work is the dangerous practice, now on the increase, of filling up the deficit by taking men into our ministry by the back door. In the triennium just past, one very sobering fact is that out of 617 men ordained 239 were not graduates of our seminaries. Doubtless some of these had attended seminaries of other denominations. Some will be genuine assets, but as a whole this proportion means real weakness and spells trouble in the Church for many years to come. Some were misfits elsewhere. Some became Episcopalians with very little knowledge of our Church, having been attracted by more colorful ritual and stricter doctrine and discipline; once within the fold these converts often undertake to show the rest of the Church what its doctrine should be, how its ritual should be performed, and how its discipline should be kept. Some of them are not extremists but are conservative and limited both in knowledge and outlook. When a diocesan convention with only 27 members, clerical and lay, can send nine delegates to the General Convention to counteract the vote of nine delegates who represent a diocese of over 250 clergy and more than 100,000 baptized persons, it behooves the Church at large to have a care who those five clergymen and the four laymen they attract to them are. Someone might profitably make a study of their ecclesiastical backgrounds and the way they came into our Church and ministry.

There is more at stake here than the effect on our conventions. There is real danger, I believe, that the theology in which we have found our freedom may be crowded out of the rank and file of our churches, not only as it pertains to the doctrines of Church, ministry and sacraments, but perhaps especially to the doctrine of grace. All too often respect for the freedom of their fellows is forgotten by zealous converts to our Church. Regimentation is the order of their day. Angus Dun said well in Philadelphia that the issue in our Church is between those who, beginning with laws and rigid traditions and institutional forms, see no way of breaking down the middle wall of partition between form and form, and those who, on the other hand, starting from a life of the spirit that has found fellowship over and around those barriers, now try to create new forms to embody that spirit. The Church badly needs more men of this latter type in its ministry and it needs to give them the very best theological equipment possible. Otherwise it will become more of a sect than ever, and, what is more important, it will have little to do with the creation of a peaceful world in which it can survive at all.

New Books

Excellent Good *Fair

*The First Epistle of St. Peter. By E. G. Selwyn. Macmillan, $6.50.

In the exegetical field, the past year has seen the publication of this and one other indispensable commentary. Both stress the theological significance of the books dealt with. Selwyn's work is full of homiletical materials and of technical New Testament information.

—ROBERT GRANT.

*An Outline of Biblical Theology. By Millar Burrows. Westminister, $3.50.

One of four recent books on New Testament subjects which should prove especially valuable for the parish clergyman. Professor Burrows' book stresses a subject too infrequently taught in our seminaries. It will not only guide the reader's thought into unfamiliar fields but will also provide him with material for preaching and for further meditation.

American Student Learns About Resistance Movement

Declares that Terrible Conditions Create Moods of Disillusionment and Frustration

Edited by Sara Dill

Celigny, Suisse, Switzerland:—The Rev. William Clark, attending the ecumenical institute here, reports that fourteen countries are represented among the twenty-seven students present. This will be increased when the Germans, who are having difficulty in leaving the various zones, arrive. Most of the lectures and discussions at the institute are on technical theological questions such as "The Anglican Idea of the Fall"; "Does the Bible have Primacy?"; "Apostolic Succession."

Outside the class room however Mr. Clark and his wife are learning a great deal about what has gone on, and is going on, in Europe.

"The war years have brought struggle and suffering in various forms to all the groups here," he writes. "Thus yesterday Rosemary and I sat with a young Dutch husband and wife in a cafe having coffee. Both of them were in the Dutch Student Christian Movement. The movement sought to aid Jewish children by placing them in Christian homes and thus escape the anti-Semitic laws of the German occupation. This meant travelling with them on trains without proper passes and papers. Then it meant obtaining ration cards through some illegal means. Once having embarked on this 'good but forbidden' work they found themselves more and more involved in committing acts normally considered un-Christian, including extreme violence.

"The husband was caught by the Germans, sentenced to death, escaped and they both lived in hiding as farm hands while remaining active in the resistance movement. They went on to say that while many noble and heroic things were done in the resistance movement, the attitudes and standards developed by such a movement has created one of the most terrible of postwar problems. In the movement there was but one cry, 'For Our Nation' and one end, 'Drive out the Occupying Forces.' The end justified any means. The intense nationalism of the resistance movement hangs on today when cooperation among nations is so needed. Having learned to disrespect and break all laws, most of the movement continues to do so today against their own government. For example, it was considered right to 'dive under' from German labor service, and so today when the Dutch government is calling up youths for service in the army a considerable number are 'diving under.'

"This couple are now in their thirties and remember a regular adult life conducted on rather decent ethical standards before the war. But the generation who were twelve to eighteen when the occupation began and are now entering adult activities have no such background. Many of them are nihilists. This is increased by the fact that during the war they told one another for morale purposes that everything would be fine after they drove out the enemy. But after the enemy had left things remained in a terrible state and the predominant moods are disillusionment and frustration. This coupled with their reports of such things as 75% of the children in Amsterdam of working class homes have TB, made the lovely walk back to Bossey, through peaceful farms, over a mountain brook, past an old cemetery with the motto 'Ici L'Egalite' (Here is Equality), a very thoughtful affair."

Lead in Worship

Minot, N. D.:—Boys from the State Training School here recently conducted the devotional exercises at a recent session of the North Dakota Senate. The Rev. E. D. Murdoch of Mandan, chaplain of the senate for a three day period, had the boys read the psalms and prayers. The senators were amazed at the innovation.

Push Federation

Sydney (wireless to RNS):—Plans for a federation of Australian Methodist, Presbyterian and Congregational Churches are being studied by committees of the three denominations and are expected to be submitted shortly to their governing bodies. The proposed federal union does not involve doctrinal or church policy matters. Each denomination would retain full control over its own affairs, but the federation would speak with a united voice on such matters as education, temperance, and social services.

It is expected that the federation plan will be given impetus when the Presbyterian Church holds its annual conference in May, and that efforts will be made ultimately to extend the plan to embrace all Protestant denominations in the country.

Truman's Program Hit

New York (RNS):—President Truman's proposed program of help to Greece and Turkey was attacked by twenty-four ministers as leading to militarization of the country and eventual atomic warfare. "The administration's proposed course accepts the division of the world into American and Russian spheres of influence and proposes to stop the spread of communism by force of arms."

Among those signing the statement, issued by the Fellowship of Reconciliation, were the Rev. George A. Buttrick, the Rev. Allan Knight Chalmers, the Rev. John O. Nelson

Oppose Bill

Little Rock, Ark. (RNS):—The Greater Little Rock Ministerial Alliance has asked the Arkansas legislature to defeat a Senate bill which would cut from two years to 12 months the statute of limitations in which a laborer could sue for wages. The ministers expressed belief that the bill would be unfair to eastern Arkansas sharecroppers who many times do not get accurate pictures of the year's earnings until the shortened period of limitations would have expired.

Freedom is Non-Partisan

A minister in New Jersey wrote "Your crusade may be twelve years old, but I suppose it will wind up now that the Republicans are in power."

The election didn't restore and safeguard Freedom for America. It terminated some trends which were destroying it and gave the other Party an opportunity to prove whether it will really champion Freedom — even when it is unpopular, costly of votes and restrictive of patronage.

But habits created under governmental paternalism are still part of our people. The fight for Capital "F" Freedom continues—and the most important battles are in the future, not the past.

The rank and file citizenry in other nations have been betrayed by those who have promised them security, taken their freedom in payment and delivered NOTHING except enslavement.

We common people in America do not propose to be betrayed. We shall not yield our constitutional government, our states rights, our due processes of law, our concept of private property and our belief in the sovereignty of the citizen, rather than the state. Collective security has no meaning if in application it fails to insure individual security.

No bigwigs in Washington, Wall Street, Moscow, or anywhere else shall take away the Godgiven rights which we common people have as children of God—not without the sort of fine, unyielding opposition by the Clergy that took Niemoeller through eight years' imprisonment as Hitler's personal prisoner.

The clergy of America must get their ardor up. Freedom is still in peril, all over the world. This has been a Freedom-abandoning age. It is the responsibility of ministers of Churches to speak courageously and turn the tide. They can and are doing so by exerting their community-wide influences of helpfulness—on behalf of Freedom, spiritual Freedom, non-partisan Freedom.

Of course this Crusade continues! Ten thousand ministers banded together for Freedom—pledge to champion it in their areas of influence and in their own ways. What a force! Want to join us?

passage of a Senate liquor bill which would allow cities to vote on alcohol sales regardless of the local option preferences of the counties in which those cities are located. It was said the bill would greatly weaken the state's present local option law, in which 35 counties have voted dry, because dry strength in the rural areas often offsets a wet tendency in the towns.

The alliance asked withdrawal of a third Senate bill, this one repealing laws affecting women and child laborers. Hope was expressed for strengthening of labor laws affecting women.

Go To Japan

New York:—American Protestant churches are planning to send 500 missionaries to Japan within the next three years, it was announced here today by Luman J. Shafer, chairman of the Japan committee of the Foreign Missions Conference. The Conference represents 123 Protestant mission boards and agencies in this country and Canada.

The new missionaries, according to Shafer, will supplement the 65 Protestant workers already in Japan. Most of them, he explained, will be qualified, permanent missionaries; some will be specialists in medicine, agriculture, and science; and others will be short-term workers assigned to definite teaching tasks.

Shafer expressed the hope that during the same period 30 or 40 Japanese students might be permitted to come to the United States for advanced study in theology or other subjects.

Youth Conference

Geneva (wireless to RNS):—The World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches will be one of the sponsors of the Christian youth conference to be held at Oslo, Norway, this summer. Among the speakers will be Bishop Berggrav of Norway; Prof. Kirtley Mather of Harvard; the Rev. D. T. Niles of Ceylon; Reinhold Niebuhr. It is expected that 1,500 delegates from 21 countries will attend the conference which opens July 22.

Interracial Center

San Francisco (RNS):—San Francisco's first experiment in a joint Y.M.C.A.-Y.W.C.A. center to serve the community regardless of race, color or creed has been launched. The center, built in 1936 at a cost of $125,000 as a Japanese Y.M.C.A., served as a Negro U.S.O. after the Japanese had been evacuated from the west coast during the war. When the center was turned back, the Y.M.C.A. board decided neighborhood conditions no longer warranted a building for one race and opened it to all.

With some 100 members already listed, the new center expects to enroll 200 charter members as sponsors. First signers, all adults, are residents of the center area and represent the Japanese, Filipino, Negro and Caucasian races.

Bishop Voegeli

New York: — Bishop Charles A. Voegeli of Haiti has just completed a visitation to the Island of La Gonave, forty miles out in the bay off Port-au-Prince. Telling of the visit he said:

"We (three seminarians and I) left on Friday evening by sailboat and arrived in time . . . something of a hazard by the way. Had great services. Over 800 were present on Sunday for the 'big service' and it was pretty thrilling. They sang, not too badly either, unaccompanied, the plain-song setting of the communion office as arranged by the Rev. Rene Vaillant of New York. I was happy to be able to bring them the hope of a new church and other help. So you see, we are anxiously awaiting approval of our projects by National Council in April. I might add that they have organized about 35 young people into a cooperative. They range from 8 to 18 in age, boys and girls, and they plant and care for and harvest their crops. The profit will be used for the support of their own school or for other parochial needs. It's really grand. I attended their meeting and about 60 people were present, quite a few adults, and it was conducted with great interest, ability and dispatch. These are encouraging signs in a country where the situation is not only unsettled but still critical."

Admit DPs

Pomona, Cal. (RNS):—The Southern California Council of Protestant Churches urged at its annual meeting here that unfilled quotas be utilized in admitting up to 600,000 European displaced persons at once without changing present immigration laws.

The delegates also unanimously favored community veto and local liquor control and authorized preparation of a bill to be placed on the California ballot in 1948 as an initiative measure.

A resolution opposing universal military training was passed with only two dissenting votes.

E. C. Franham, general secretary, and Roy Crounch, representing the survey and planning group of the Church Federation of Los Angeles, revealed that planning groups are working with city and county planning officials to carry out a long range church planning program, as far ahead as the year 2,000.

Franham said Southern California communities need to construct at least 100 new churches each year to keep pace with population growth.

World Order

Washington (RNS):—A three-day Washington Workship on World Order, attended by more than 50 leading social action representatives of the Disciples of Christ from many states was held here under general sponsorship of the denomination's Crusade for a Christian World Order.

College presidents, ministers and prominent laymen were among those who attended sessions held at the National City Christian Church and the Columbia Heights Christian Church here.

Delegates visited the Department of State, Capitol Hill and other government departments, taking part in on-the-spot discussions with both administrators and Congressmen.

At sessions held in the host-churches, delegates heard an array of speakers discuss national and international problems and social action that is being carried on by other religious and social welfare groups.

Act Promptly

Washington (RNS):—A unique approach to church-construction problems posed by huge new housing and apartment-house projects is being made here by John Halko, director of the department of research and church planning of the Washington Federation of Churches. Halko is urging big builders to make provisions for space to be used by churches in housing developments which the builders undertake.

At the same time, he is urging church organizations to "get in on the ground floor" of such developments and to purchase land, or to get such land allotted for church-building purposes, before the actual building of the project begins.

"In the vast majority of the cases," he declared in an interview here, "church organizations wait until a project is completed and a new congregation is formed before purchasing the property for a potential church-building.

"By this time, the value of the land to be purchased has increased two or three times—sometimes much more—and frequently is out of all proportion to its intrinsic worth to the congregation."

Morals Slump

Toronto (RNS):—Asserting that the "Canadian morals picture is an ugly one," J. R. Mutchmor, secretary of the board of evangelism and social service of the United Church of Canada, criticized the Church for evading "the hard moral issues, tough social problems, and complex international questions."

"The decline in our moral behavior," he told the annual meeting of the board here, "has not reached its lowest point. Its rate of decline is being checked by the churches, but the waging of war on evil is not easy."

He said the gravity of the moral crisis is revealed in "such significant figures as the illegitimacy rate, the abortion, divorce, venereal disease rates and the mounting sales of contraceptives."

"All these rates in Canada are at record highs," he declared.

Urging that no moral issues be by-passed, Mutchmor said the Church must realize that "God means business, that we must throw into the struggle everything we have. Then and only then will Christ's redemptive teachings come alive."

Support FEPC

Jefferson City, Mo. (RNS):—Church groups have joined with civic, Negro and labor in urging the Missouri legislature to pass a bill providing for a fair employment practices commission for the state. Groups which spoke for the measure included the St. Louis race relations commission, the YWCA, the National Negro Congress, the St. Louis Civil Liberties commission, the Institute of Social Order, AFL and CIO unions and the Communist Party. The Rev. Joseph Cantillon, a Jesuit, who is chairman of the interracial department of the Institute of Social Order, told the legislators that the measure "is still a good bill" even if it is supported by communists.

See Governor

Lansing, Mich.:—Two Episcopal clergymen were members of a delegation of twenty to call upon Governor Sigler of Michigan to urge the adoption of fair employment practice legislation in the state. The Rev. John H. Burt, student chaplain at Michigan University, attended as a representative of the department of social relations of the diocese, and the Rev. William B. Sperry, rector of Christ Church, Detroit, chairman of the department, went as a representative of the Detroit Council of Churches. The governor agreed to give consideration to a bill patterned after the New York bill.

"As He Went to Jerusalem There Met Him Ten Men."

No, this little girl was not with them. But if our Lord were now on his way to Jerusalem, she WOULD be there. She, too, would "stand off, and lift up HER voice and say, 'Jesus, Master, have mercy on me.'" For she needs mercy. She, too, has leprosy, and she has not been cleansed. Upon her face in childhood are imprinted the pitiful stigmata of premature old age. Needlessly!

To thousands of little children this CAN happen but NEED NOT happen. In leprosy colonies of Christian missions they can be healed, as He healed them; or in preventive homes they can be kept free and spotless from their birth.

You can "touch" a child today with the touch of Christ by sending a gift through the American Mission to Lepers, cooperating agency of all mission boards.

If the gift is $30 it will care for a child for a year.

Send your gift today to Seek Ministry

Calcutta, India:—The Metropolitan of India stated recently that he has received the names of 46 men now in the army who seek ordination. At the last meeting of the Church Assembly it was reported that over 1,000 candidates are at present in the armed forces and arrangements are under way to train them properly once out of the service.

Advertising Pays

Athens, Tex.: — "If you are an Episcopalian, call this number . . ." That advertisement, in the Want Ad columns of the Athens Review, brought response from twelve Episcopal Church families in a town in which it was thought only one Church family lived.

Having learned of one Episcopalian in Athens, the Rev. Roy L. Gaskill, rector of a number of parishes and missions in Kaufman County, suggested that if two or three more could be found it might be possible to have services in Athens. The want ad was the result, with twelve people taking the trouble to telephone the person who inserted the advertisement. Several others have since been discovered, and Mr. Gaskill is enthusiastic over the prospect of establishing a mission in Athens in the near future. "The best part of it," he said, "is that several of the families have young children, so a Church school is practically ready made."

Builds Church

Africa:—The Christian chauffeur of an African chief in Uganda wanted to show his gratitude to God. So he built a church on the top of a hill. The walls were only made of mud but were neatly plastered and whitewashed and inside were benches and all the other necessary furniture. When the church was finished the chauffeur helped to pay the salary of a Christian teacher and also gave him a banana garden.

Goes to Mexico

New York:—The overseas department of the National Council has appointed the Rev. Robert F. Gibson Jr. as liaison officer to the Church in Mexico. He was formerly on the faculty of the Virginia Seminary and is now in charge of the Chapel of Immanuel, Alexandria, Va. He will continue to make his permanent headquarters in the United States but will make periodic trips to Mexico for consultations.

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

VERY REV. J. H. TOWNSEND
Punta Gorda, Cienfuegos, Cuba

I am planning to write a biography of my father, the late Rev. John Hardenbrock Townsend, and would like to include leters and incidents that some WITNESS readers may know about. His spiritual ministrations and untiring pastoral work are especially remembered in Camden and Atlantic City, N. J. His modesty and unselfishness made the task at once easy and less difficult. You don't often see the rector of a fashionable church sweeping the sidewalk because the janitor is ill or catch him taking supplies in the dead of night to a poor family on the wrong side of the tracks. Such things he did unquestionably as routine part of the ministry and would not imagine it could have interest for anyone. Any letters entrusted to me will be copied and faithfully returned.

REV. CHARLES W. POPHAM
Middle Haddam, Connecticut

I congratulate THE WITNESS on securing Dr. Foerster for the appraisal of the chapter in Christianity Takes A Stand by Prof. Hocking. I know Dr. Foerster personally and I am proud of THE WITNESS for its fearless stand. I am seventy-one, retired and collecting dust at the back of the shelf but if I had a parish I would be using your Lenten discussion material with as large a group as I could shanghai.

REV. W. B. SPOFFORD JR.
Secretary of the CLID

I was glad to read (WITNESS, Feb. 20) that Mrs. Harper Sibley vigorously challenged the ethical position of our Church in maintaining an exclusive seminary for Negro candidates for the ministry at the recent meeting of the National Council. Nevertheless, $192,000 was earmaked for the Bishop Payne Divinity School for its work, including the erection of more buildings. It seems that this is an excellent way to perpetuate a policy of segregation by memorializing it in brick and mortar. The argument for the school that I have always heard is: "It can do a specialized job with the Negro candidates so that they can enter into a specialized field." As a point of information, I would like to know exactly how the training and curriculum at Bishop Payne differs from the training in the other Church seminaries. If it is special training in a sociological situation, why can it not be given in other seminaries by men of the quality of Profs. Joseph Fletcher, Joseph Moore, Oscar Seitz and Albert Mollegan, or special guest lecturers? How many ideas of the New South—the South of the Arnalls, the Peppers, the Folsoms—are presented at Bishop Payne? How are those forces actively working for the elimination of discrimination—like the unions' organizing drives, the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, the Fellowship of Southern Churchmen, the National Farmers Union—presented? What is taught about the South as an economic "colony" of the North? There might be some excuse for an exclusive seminary dealing with the Southern ministry along these lines, since there is a particular job to do, but, even then, it would be defeating its own purpose if it failed to train both Negro and Caucasian candidates together to work for fundamental Christian aims on a common front. It seems to me that a good, honest study of the situation is called for, carried through by Christian sociologists of both races who know what the problems are and what forces are at work in the South.

JOHN M. GOLDSMITH
Layman of Radford, Virginia

I wish to congratulate THE WITNESS on the present study plan. I have read each of the articles and believe that Dr. Foerster hit the jackpot. His article alone would make the series worthwhile.

THE REV. MALCOLM G. DADE
Rector of St. Cyprian's, Detroit

The Church not only should be proud but should feel impelled to encourage by letters and telegrams Bishop Coadjutor John E. Hines of the diocese of Texas for his forthright, courageous stand in appealing to members of the Texas Convention, as a Christian duty, to break bread together with Colored delegates. Unfortunately the laity failed to follow this high leadership. Thank God for the leadership. The narrowness of the vote, 67-64, reveals that the Bishop was not alone in his sincere and realistic approach to brotherhood. We rejoice, too, that in the diocese of Michigan we have in Bishops Creighton and Emrich like-minded leaders for the advancement of all the work of the diocese.

The President Refuses To See Churchmen About Greece

Dr. Mark Dawber Reconciled to Membership On Commission by New Statement on Germany

By W. B. Spofford

New York:—The refusal of President Truman to see a delegation representing the Federal Council of Churches on the Greek issue was the big news that came out of the meeting last week of the Council's Commission of a Just and Durable Peace. A White House spokesman said that it was impossible because so many agencies are making similar requests that the President has found it necessary to clamp down. No official interpretation was given to the refusal by Council spokesmen, but several members of the Commission believe that it means determination on the part of the administration to push through its Greek-Turkey proposals, irrespective of public opinion.

The Commission, which met March 24th, was itself divided on the Greek issue. Some believed that the Truman proposals should be repudiated; others were of the opinion that the U. S. had to take some action in Greece and Turkey, but that unilateral action should be opposed and that it should be made clear that the U. S. will work through the United Nations. There was such division on this that the matter was referred to a committee which will prepare a statement to come before the Commission at some later date.

Meanwhile the executive committee of the Federal Council, meeting the following day, issued a statement on Greece and Turkey without waiting for any recommendation from the Commission. It urges that the United States seek the "counsel and cooperation" of the United Nations, and declared that the UN would be strengthened if it would undertake any part of the relief program.

"Our government should do everything possible to reinforce and equip the United Nations so that it will become competent to undertake such responsibilities as President Truman now seeks our own governmment to assume," the statement declared.

It said the major factor occasioning the Truman proposal is "the attempted subjugation of peoples by armed minorities and outside powers using coercion and infiltration.

"The implication is clear that the main difficulty lies in our relations with Soviet Russia," the committee stated. "It is therefore also clear that the endeavor to reach an understanding with Russia must be a major emphasis.

"If Soviet foreign policy is aggressive and expansionist in character, we have the obligation not only to discourage expansionist action but also to seek a comprehensive settlement of all our conflicting interests with Russia and thereby offer Russia the prospect of a peaceful development of her legitimate interests that will appeal to the less expansionist elements in her government."

The Commission of a Just and Durable Peace did approve a statement on the German question, which brought into sharp focus a division within the Commission which has existed for some time. There are those within the Commission who are convinced that it is dominated by its chairman, John Foster Dulles, and that his public utterances on U. S. foreign policy run counter to the pronouncements of the conference held in Delaware, Ohio, in 1942, and which are contained in a Federal Council pamphlet called "A Message from the National Study Conference on the Churches and a Just and Durable Peace." This opinion is held by a sufficiently large group for the proposal to have been put forward that the Commission should be dissolved thus ending Mr. Dulles' chairmanship, with the work of the Federal Council in the field of international affairs then reverting to the Department of International Justice and Goodwill, now practically defunct. This proposal received considerable support, not only from Commission members but also from Federal Council officers, but was never carried out because, as one member put it, "too many believed that such action would be embarrassing to Mr. Dulles."

One member of the Commission, the Rev. Mark Dawber, executive secretary of the Home Missions Council, was so strongly convinced that "the Commission has been led into a betrayal of the findings of Delaware by Mr. Dulles" that two weeks ago he announced his intention of resigning from the Commission. He was persuaded however not to do so pending the Commission's meeting on March 24th. He then stated, following the meeting, that he considered the pronouncement on the German problem to be so contrary to the public utterances of Mr. Dulles on the subject that it amounted to a repudiation, and that he was therefore "reconciled" and would not hand in his resignation.

The commission's pronouncement on Germany, prepared by a committee headed by the Rev. John Bennett, states that Germany must pay reparations but that this must be done with full consideration for the needs of the German people. The statement has not yet been made public, being in the hands of a committee for editing. However it was stated by an official of the Commission to this reporter that he did not consider it a repudiation of Mr. Dulles' leadership. The chairman was, of course, not at the March 24th meeting, being in Moscow. The officer stated that Mr. Dulles had seen some parts of the pronouncement before he left the country, and that he has approved some parts and disapproved others.

In any case, whatever the pronouncement turns out to be when it is released, it cannot be called "A Dulles Statement," a fact of sufficient importance to prevent Dr. Dawber, and possibly others, from resigning from the Commission.

COMMITTEE IN SPRINGFIELD

Springfield, Ill.:—A committee of five clergymen and five laymen, headed by the Rev. F. L. Arvedson, rector at Pekin, has been set up in the diocese of Springfield to receive the names of suggested candidates for bishop of the diocese. The committee was named at a conference of sixty-five clergy and laymen meeting here March 17th. They will investigate the qualifications of the men nominated and send their findings to every parish and mission as early in April as possible. The election of a successor for Bishop John C. White, who is retiring, will be held at a special diocesan synod on June 9th.

The committee reported that the following men have already been placed before them as possible candidates for the office: Rev. Calvin H. Barkow, rector of St. Paul's, Oakland, Cal.; Rev. S. Whitney Hale, rector of the Advent, Boston, Mass.; Rev. Richard Loring, rector of St. David's, Baltimore, Md.; Rt. Rev. Theodore R. Ludlow, Suffragan Bishop of Newark, N. J.; Rev. Herbert L. Miller, rector of Emmanuel, Champaign, Ill.; Rev. William A. Simms, rector of St. Thomas', Battle Creek, Mich.; Dean Claude W. Sprouse, of Kansas City, Mo.; Rev. Walter H. Stone, rector of Christ Church, New Brunswick, N. J.; Rev. Jerry Wallace, rector of Grace Church, Tucson, Ariz.; Dean Edward R. Welles, Buffalo, N. Y.

Qualifications listed by the committee as being desirable in a new bishop were: one who can be the center of unity, loved and respected; proven administrative ability; missionary-minded; a man of God, with sound faith; preaching ability; sound health and temperate habits; median age, although this is not a determining factor.

ARCHBISHOP ON WORK

London (wireless to RNS):—Britain's present crisis is "very largely moral and spiritual" and cannot be remedied by economic planning alone, Archbishop Garbett of York told the House of Lords last week at the opening of debate on the government's new economic policy.

"When we have the best panels of planners and the most effective modern machinery, we shall not necessarily have people working any better or necessarily have greater production," he declared. "Some inducement must be found to persuade people to give more concentration and effort to their work. An appeal should be made to the nation to walk uphill for the next few years, without expecting an earthly paradise around the corner."

The Archbishop said many workers are apathetic and disillusioned, and added, it is "useless to exhort people to work for work's sake."

"That is all right," he said, "for people with interesting and creative work to do, but much work is dull and monotonous."

The Rev. Mark Dawber decides to continue as a member of the Commission of a Just and Durable Peace

"It is human nature to desire to see visible results of our work in the form of increased leisure, increased benefits and wages. But if the profit motive becomes the predominating motive, it will be unsocial. There must be a far higher motive of working for the whole community. That is the motive that should inspire both employers and employed."

RESUMING WORK IN JAPAN

New York: — Plans for resumption of missionary work in Japan are taking place rapidly, according to an announcement by the overseas department of the National Council. It is pointed out that the Church in Japan is an autonomous body and people are being sent only if they are requested by the Japanese Church authorities.

During the year it is expected that the following people will go to Japan, some of them immediately: the Rev. K. L. Viall of the Cowley Fathers, who will be liaison officer of our Church and also associate dean at St. Paul's University; Karl Branstat, who will be a member of the St. Paul's faculty; the Rev. Robert Shaw, who will be in charge of the Japan Church Publishing Co. and will teach in the theological school of St. Paul's; Miss Hallie Williams, now on the staff of St. Mary's School, Burlington, N. J., who returns to St. Agnes School, Kyoto; Miss Helen Skiles, to be director of kindergarten training work in the diocese of Kyoto; Miss Nellie McKim, who will be supervisor of kindergarten work in North Kwanto; the Rev. Richard Merritt, who will be on the faculty of St. Paul's, and who is at present on the staff of St. John's, Williamstown, Mass.

MINISTERS MEET PSYCHIATRISTS

Washington (RNS):—Closer cooperation between ministers and psychiatrists was discussed at a conference here sponsored by four national agencies. Twenty clergymen and an equal number of psychiatrists attended the meeting, first formal conference of its kind ever held.

Subjects discussed included preventive aspects of mental health; cooperation in family counselling; relation of the counsellor's individual philosophy to his therapeutic results; and procedures of cooperation between ministers and psychiatrists.

DEAN DE OVIES LEADS CITYWIDE MISSION

New Orleans: — Dean Raimundo de Ovies of Atlanta, Ga., last week conducted a citywide preaching mission at Trinity Church here. It concluded on Palm Sunday when he was the preacher at the morning service.

PARTIES HELP MISSIONS

Fargo, N. D.: — Branches of the Auxiliary and parish guilds have been holding parties throughout the district of North Dakota, with the money raised going to support the work in China done by Deaconess Riebe. Her home parish is Grace Church, Jamestown, N. D. and she recently returned to the China field.

The Crux of the Greek-Turkish Problem Is Set Forth

A Six Point Program Is Offered Which Can Be Supported Unitedly by Christian People

Director of the Fellowship of Reconciliation
By A. J. Muste

New York: — Among progressive and socially minded people, both in and outside the Church, there is very grave concern over the military and political aspects of the Truman proposals with respect to Greece, and more especially with respect to the proposal to aid Turkey, which is entirely politico-military and not a relief measure in the accepted sense at all. Such people do not believe that in the long run we can or should try to "stop Russia and Communism by force" or take over British power commitments all over the world. They recognize that this means an atomic armaments race and eventually war. They believe that the democratic way of life must prove its superiority to Communism by making better provision for the material and cultural needs of men, and recognize that both our efforts to build a sound economic order and our ability to provide other peoples with desperately needed relief and aid in rebuilding their shattered economies, will be thwarted if we sink our money in military intervention in one country after another. These people, finally, hold that unilateral action by the United States knocks the props out from under the United Nations. They are not prepared to see that institution scuttled and recognize, therefore, that the political issues in Greece, Turkey and elsewhere must be turned over to the United Nations and that outside policing in troubled areas must be carried on, if at all, under United Nations auspices.

Many of these people nevertheless hold that at this juncture the Truman proposals must be supported—with the proviso that this is an emergency measure and that there must be assurances, once the present crisis is surmounted, that U. S. foreign policy will follow the lines set forth in the preceding paragraph.

The argument for this position is as follows: "Repudiation" of the President, now that he has made his request, will be interpreted as a sign of American disunity and weakness by the men in the Kremlin. This will encourage Russian "aggression" and will, therefore, be an influence for war rather than peace. On the other hand, if the U. S. "for once takes a firm stand" in Greece and Turkey—shows the Russians she has the will and the power to do this if the occasion requires—then she will be in a good position to call on the Russian government for an "across the board settlement" of the issues between the two nations, based on real support of United Nations, disarmament, and large-scale United States aid for putting the economy of war-stricken peoples, including Russia's, into working order.

In evaluating the soundness of this position the following considerations must be taken into account:

The United States is in the position of not having adhered up to now to a course of clear support of United Nations and of democratic forces throughout the world. On the contrary, she has engaged in a power-struggle with Russia; has been lukewarm in support of United Nations; has failed to provide adequate aid for relief and economic rehabilitation and has refused for the most part to put such activities into international hands; is insisting upon sole administration and unilateral arming of Japanese mandated territories in the Pacific, and so on. Suppose the Truman proposals are now adopted, how are Russia and the masses in other countries to be persuaded that the United States—from here in—is going to reverse itself on these matters and means to take the lead of the internationalist and democratic forces? Will Congress as at present constituted attach conditions to the Truman program which will hold out a reasonable hope that such a reversal is about to take place? Even if it should do so on paper, would this in Russian minds offset the act of military intervention in Greece and Turkey and persuade the Russians that this act was the last of its kind?

The Junior Choir of St. John's Cathedral, Denver, sings an Easter hymn before the altar at a special children's service

Is it not rather the case that in the United States today we are confronted with a powerful swing to the right, clearly and startlingly symbolized by Truman's proposals, by-passing United Nations, etc., and that progressives are simply playing into the hands of this reactionary trend, if they support the Truman proposals, without the slightest hope of convincing the Russians and others that this trend is to be reversed?

The argument we are analyzing assumes that a "show of firmness" in Greece and Turkey will bring the men in the Kremlin to their senses. But this will not be the first instance of "firmness" on the part of the United States. Admittedly, the policy of firmness has prevailed for some months now—at Trieste, e.g., in sending warships into the Mediterranean, with respect to the Baruch plan, etc. The result is that we are where we are. Will one more "firm stand" suffice to make the Russians reasonable? Obviously—on the present assumptions—it will do so only if the Greek-Turkish stand is not bluffing, i.e. if the United States is ready to make a "firm stand" with military backing in Iran next, in Lebanon, and so on, if that should prove necessary. In view of the record and of all the factors in the current situation, is it not virtually certain that, no matter what temporary or apparent "retreat" may occur, confronting the Russians with another show of force now will simply mean that they will be stiffened in their attitude and, as opportunity offers, will use their military forces, their Communist Parties in poverty-stricken countries, etc., to challenge U. S. power in one vital spot after another? Do liberals and churchmen in the United States want to let themselves in for this?

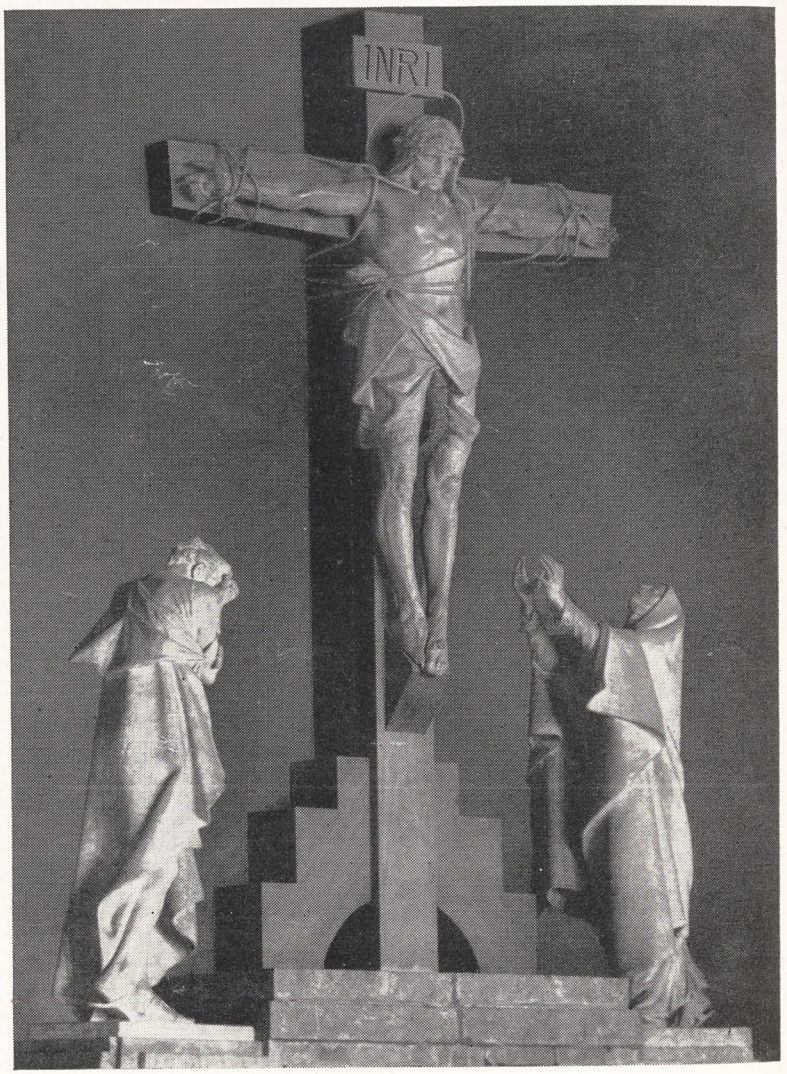
The assumption that another show of force will lead the Russians to sit down for an "across the board settlement" with U. S. underestimates the suspicion and fear of the United States, which already fills the minds of the Russian rulers and people. It fails to consider where the Russians were in 1917 and where they are now. If all the intervention, etc. thrown against them then failed to stop them, what reason is there to think that some more show of force can stop them now? Even if they are temporarily stopped, it can only result in a determination to plot in new ways, to come back presently with all the greater vigor and vindictiveness.

What, then, should our program be?

Support the Truman proposal for relief for Greece—under civilian auspices. Reject the Truman proposals for political and military action in Greece and Turkey.

Refuse to adopt a policy of taking over British imperialist commitments in Greece, Turkey or anywhere else, the policy of trying to fill the power-vacuum created by British withdrawal from one post after another around the world.



Reject all proposals for unilateral political and military action by the United States. Turn over all such matters to the United Nations for international action. Where policing is to be done, let it be done by the United Nations. Admittedly. U.N. is now too weak and ill-equipped for such tasks. This very fact argues that the job of making U.N. truly effective cannot be postponed any longer. If it is dealt the blow which the adoption of the current Truman proposals would involve, it is dead.

Take vigorous steps to get action for universal disarmament and international development of atomic energy for peaceful purposes.

The United States should indicate its readiness to pour the billions, which would otherwise be spent on war preparations, for large-scale relief and economic rehabilitation in Russian and elsewhere.

Seek an immediate across-the-board understanding with Russia on the basis of the above program.

Such a program offers our one chance of preventing or stopping civil war in Greece, China and elsewhere. It is the one way to stop the spread of Communism outside Russia. It is the one way to dissolve the fear and suspicion which grip the Russian people today. If the Russian leaders rejected it, they would lose the confidence of the masses everywhere in the world and would not be able to maintain their hold on their own people. The course here outlined would give the United States the moral leadership of the world; provide work for our scientists, industrialists, farmers and workers; and create the atmosphere of security, confidence and hope in which democratic forces all over the world could be revived.

The Resurrection Faith

IT OUGHT to be quite evident at Easter that Christianity proclaims a gospel: that it is good news, not good advice. Christianity does not point us to Christ and say, "There is a great and noble man. His teachings will help you, his graciousness will make you all friends; follow him as best you can." That is no gospel. It is difficult to understand how anyone who looks at life with open eyes, who knows what people are like, who is aware of our precarious situation at this point in history can still believe that good advice, even Christ's good advice, can save us. The word of Christianity is not, "follow this teacher and do your best," but "Jesus Christ, the power of God unto salvation."

One of the greatest New Testament scholars, Johannes Weiss, becomes poetic when he describes the transformation that Easter made in the lives of the disciples: "The dying and rising Son of Man was for them no longer a doctrine, a matter of speculation, a novel addition to the hope of the good time to come; it was an actual experience, a prototype and pledge of their own patient endurance and of its reward."

We stand today in desperate need of that transforming power. We need it in our lives to give us faith and patience and courage. We need it working through us to bring unity and order and justice to our world. And this gift of God to us is like all his gifts, we cannot have it for ourselves until we have given it away. The Church must always make it clear that the resurrection faith can only maintain itself when men accept the burden of their humanity and their solidarity with their fellows. Sometimes this faith is presented as a recipe for security from the tensions and responsibilities of the human situation; but that is to deny the crucified and risen Lord. The power that Christ promised his first disciples, the power he gave them, carried a condition: they must be witnesses for him. That witness takes different forms in different ages. In every age the same qualities of personal life are required, but the changing social conditions of the world call for a new witness for a new age. What sort of things are required of us, then, at this precise moment? These three primarily.

First, we are to be active living members of the Church, worshipping in it, supporting it, helping to make the Church more effective. Bishop Bergraav of Norway has described the need: "Let the Church of Christ be the fire in the forge of the world, for it is cold now in the world. Even you his potential instruments are cold and therefore cannot be shaped to his will. Come! Pray! Be one in Christ and penetrated through and through with his fire."

Next we must do all we can to relieve the hunger and want of millions of starving people in Europe and Asia and throughout the world. There are many opportunities for us to share in this relief work. Our own Church has promised to raise one million dollars this year through the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief. And after we give generously to that fund as an expression of our Christian faith we must go much further to work in all ways to bring the "good news" to bear on the insidious sin of poverty.

The third required witness is this: to be servants of the cause of unity among the nations of the world. That cause is becoming increasingly unpopular in this country, for it is now understood that if there is to be unity and peace there must be a working agreement between the United States and the Soviet Union and great numbers of our people do not want such a working agreement. It is in this difficult area that we are called to witness the power which comes to us through the resurrection of our Lord. What are the conditions of peace? None of us can be satisfied with facile answers to that question. Perhaps we cannot know the answers, but at least we can make every effort to see that we do not put our efforts and our influence on the side of those who spread disunity and prepare the way to war.

"QUOTES"

THE first Easter changed defeat into victory, despair into the proclamation of good news—cowardice into heroism. This is not a matter of opinion, even of faith. It is an historic fact. The disciples, by their own account, at the time of the Crucifixion held that all was lost. Discouraged, saddened, they were on their way to take up life as best they could, when they had the overwhelming experience of the living Christ. His transforming power sent them out into the ancient world as indomitable apostles of his kingdom. What a lesson for our day! There can be no minimizing the tragedy of our world. Man has wrought unimaginable destruction and suffering upon himself. We still fumble for the ways and means of recovery and of salvation. Many have lost faith in the possible goodness of men. Disillusionment and cynicism as well as despair are in the air. Easter comes! He is risen! As this fact grips our lives we know that God lives and reigns, that in Christ he gives us the power to become sons of God. Hearts are brave again and arms are strong. Alleluia! With hope and courage we face the tasks of reconciliation and of rebuilding. The true disciple is one who can do all things through Christ who strengthens him. Perhaps the surest test of our faith is the ability by that faith to overcome the world.

The Roots of Negro Oppression

by Max Yergan

President of the National Negro Congress

THE oppression and exploitation of a race is a form of imperialism. When viewed and understood as such, racial discrimination reveals its true character and makes it quite obvious that an evil so strongly supported is not to be regarded lightly nor its removal thought of as an easy task. The rule of many by a few is a part of man's long history. The means used for achieving that rule account for the misery to which millions are subjected.

A striking illustration is the doctrine of racial inferiority and the subsequent segregation imposed upon the so-called inferior race. The means however must not be confused with the end. The latter is to exploit, to obtain wealth and power at the expense of the oppressed. The means, whether they are harsh laws or customs, or whether they are brute force or vicious propaganda make the victim a prey to those who would do him violence.

Let us therefore look at our problem of racial discrimination in America for what it is—an expression of imperialism which still today in many other parts of the world, as well as here, curses the peace and happiness of mankind.

Most Americans know something about imperialism. In so far as it has oppressed the people of India and of other colonial areas many Americans are opposed to it. They are opposed to it because it is undemocratic, because it robs and debases people and because it is the prime cause of national and international conflict.

But most Americans do not seem to know that ours is one of the great imperialist powers in the world today. This is true in the national as well as in the international sense for the fact springs from America's past. In the same way that this power has affected the life of many hundreds of millions in modern empires, it has made for the plight of present day American Negroes and explains what is usually referred to in America as the "racial problem."

Negro Americans are an oppressed people in the United States. Throughout America there exists a pattern upon which their oppression is based. Nowhere within the United States are Negroes free from discrimination in one or more forms. To be sure in the Mississippi of Bilbo and in the Georgia of Talmadge the most barbaric form of Negro oppression exists. But in Freeport, Long Island, and in the ghettos of New York, Chicago and other large cities they are murdered, robbed and debased by the same forces of oppressive greed that account for their conditions in the South today.

It is, I believe, a very great mistake to attribute the condition of Negroes in America to ignorance on the part of whites, or to a lack of understanding between Negroes and whites. This is not to argue against the need for a maximum of knowledge of Negroes by whites and vice versa, nor is it to minimize the great value of an ever increasing understanding between the races. It is, rather to say, that the condition of Negroes in America today is what it is because men plan and maintain the illegal, undemocratic and debasing conditions under which Negroes live. This is the explanation of human misery wherever the few hold sway over the many. It has to be pointed out therefore that it is not the entire white people in America, certainly not the entire white population even of the South, that is responsible for the injustices imposed upon Negroes. Such universal guilt is not in the character of imperialism. The Rankins, Bilbos and Talmadges and their masters and accomplices, North and South, are only a small section of the people. Relatively few in numbers though these individuals are, they play havoc with American life and in doing so visit a bitter plague upon Negroes and degrade our entire country. The record is appalling.

Negroes in America are lynched, millions cannot vote and their economic status is restricted. In most cities a rigid ghetto system is enforced by greedy owners of property. Educational and other cultural facilities are limited, and even many churches draw the line against them. I think it is quite unrealistic to say that these conditions exist because of ignorance amongst whites. I think it is much nearer the truth to say that they exist because they grow out of a definite pattern which is planned and developed. This pattern of oppression is planned and put into operation because it is profitable, in one way or another, to those who are responsible for it. This, I believe, is the nub of the problem and to recognize it is to know what to do.

NEGRO oppression in America has its roots deeply sunk in American history. The profits of pre-Civil war cotton production gave first support to the assertion of Negro inferiority made by early enslavers. Those profits laid the basis for a century and a half of national hypocrisy. The stakes in money and power have all along been high. It is therefore not strange that basic institutions in America, such as the courts, educational centers and often churches, have become effective instruments in this disgraceful game of double talk and double standards and in the negation of constitutional guarantees in relation to Negroes. To have the power as is true in the South to rob millions of colored workers of part of their daily wage is good business for the poll tax overlords and those whom they serve. That is why the poll taxers fight so strenuously to keep their power. By the same token the maintenance of a low economic standard and of ghetto residential areas is profitable outside of the South, and that is why the effort to change these conditions is so difficult.

Nothing more clearly demonstrates the real attitude of power in America towards Negroes than the failure of those in authority to take effective action against men who incite to violence and are responsible for lynchings. During the summer of 1946 Negro men and women were lynched in Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana and other southern states, and Negro soldiers were murdered in Freeport, Long Island. In the latter case Governor Dewey approved a whitewashing investigation. In the southern states not a lyncher has been punished. The few apprehended have been freed, and the participation of the FBI in the investigation has led to nothing. The promises of the United States Department of Justice have been empty for they have got no results in the apprehension and punishment of the criminals. President Truman has appointed a committee to study the civil rights of Negroes and make recommendations! And all of this takes place in our country whose government proclaims itself as the guardian of democracy, and of the rights of minorities in European countries and elsewhere! It is not without significance that this claim to guardianship is applied to those countries where the great mass of people who have suffered, as Negroes in America still suffer, are today seeking to change their conditions and are doing so with some effectiveness.

The character of Negro oppression in America is further revealed in the policy and action of the officially appointed American delegates to the United Nations Assembly last September. I refer particularly to those delegates who represented our country on proposals brought before the Assembly affecting Africans and Indians. There were two such proposals: one, which would hand over to General Smuts—the South African counterpart of American poll taxers — many thousands of African workers to be exploited and persecuted even worse than their blood brothers in some of our own southern states; the other, a petition by the government of India condemning South Africa's discrimination against Indians resident in that country.

On both of these issues the responsible American delegates concerned threw their strength, in effect, on the imperialist side aiding General Smuts against freedom and against the struggling colonial people. Again, this was not ignorance or lack of understanding. This action could only have been a reflection of high policy. On these vital issues, American governmental influence was on the side of world imperialism which represents the form of racial oppression from which Indians, Chinese, Africans, American Negroes and others are seeking to free themselves.

It must therefore be emphasized that Negroes are oppressed in America because oppression is deeply rooted in and is part of power as it exists and is exercised in America. Moreover, Negroes are not fully free because so many non-Negroes in America also lack freedom. The power in America that deprives many millions of southern whites of their votes finds it just a little easier to do the same to Negroes. And Negroes who live in ghettos, though they have many disabilities, are but lower in degrees to whites who are forced to live in slums.

Yet, what I have just said seems to me to be one of the hopes which brighten the future of Negroes in America. It is a hope for Negroes because it also brightens the future of all the American people. Negroes will be free Americans when all of the people of our country are full and free citizens. To be sure, as Negroes, as a people shaped by a common culture, tradition and circumstances, they will struggle and by that struggle hasten the attainment of an ever expanding freedom and dignity for themselves and their fellows. But it is of paramount importance to note that Negroes will neither have to struggle alone nor against the great body of Americans. The Negro people are a part of the American people, and will have the benefit of the struggle of this great majority against power which oppresses so many and which stands in the way of a good life for all. This is the great hope.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.

Professor at Episcopal Theological School

WHERE DO YOU GO EASTER DAY?

THEY always hand out tickets for admission to the 11 o'clock service at St. Vogue's on Easter Day. This is to make certain that the faithful and the unfaithful members of the parish can fulfill their obligations as communicants. Otherwise some of them might be crowded out by the large number of visitors which St. Vogue's attracts at that particular time. They come for many reasons. Of course, back of it all is the vague feeling that one ought to give a little time each year to Almighty God. And this is most easy to do when many attractive features make the time pass pleasantly.

First of all, it is a great show — of religious pageantry, I mean. And one can count on hearing very fine music, some of it the latest in church musical fashion, rendered by the best choir in town. But then St. Vogue's has the highest paid soloists in town outside the opera. The organist also gives a free recital before the service. One would have to pay at least three dollars to get a seat at a concert downtown which was equally as good both in selection and performance. After all it is well worth the dollar bill given ungrudgingly at the time they pass the collection plate.

The rector will do well by his reputation as an excellent public speaker. There is always some fun in trying to guess which one of his favorite themes on Easter he will discuss—whether he will try to improve on Plato's arguments for the immortality of the soul, or whether he will polish up his notes taken in seminary classes thirty years ago and try to prove that the women really did find the right tomb and that it really was empty. He never says much directly about the risen Lord—that sort of thing just doesn't appeal to his audience. With so many strangers present he thinks it better not to try and win them to faith in Christ, but to sell them an idea: "There is no death."

Then also one goes to St. Vogue's, albeit with a certain guilty feeling, to see the fashion parade and those rows of gardenias spread across great ladies' bosoms like military decorations. The new spring hats alone are enough to keep one's fancy occupied for hours. (Ah, St. Paul, what mischief you have caused with your silly rule that women keep covered with bonnets such as these when in church!) Monday morning the society page of the papers will advertise without charge many of these chic creations, and it will be pleasant to recognize some of them as already familiar.

On the opposite side of town Christ Church also celebrates Easter Day at 11 o'clock with a large congregation including many visitors. But some of these visitors come back in less than a year's time. They get a taste of something they do not expect—reality. The music there is good, yes; not professional, but good. It is obvious that the choir has worked hard on it. But the amazing thing is that the congregation sings so much of it, too, and with perfect ease and naturalness as though one were expected to sing in this church and not just listen.

The sermon is a surprise also. The minister really believes in Christianity and preaches the Christian faith as though he expected people to accept it. When he gets through one feels as though he has seen the risen Christ as vividly as St. Peter or St. Paul did. And like those famous apostles one is tormented with the question, What are you going to do about it?—well, until one surrenders and comes back to Christ Church and pitches in with the rest who are helping to bind up the world's wounds and spread the good news of God's "inestimable love in the redemption of the world by our Lord Jesus Christ."

The congregation at Christ Church is the greatest surprise of all. They are wearing gay Easter bonnets, too, but instead of their being distracting they seem to add to the happy air of festivity. It is obvious that these people have worked together very hard all during Lent to make this Easter a memorable one. When they washed their faces Easter morning they found them shining with a new lustre and radiance. The Father, who seeth in secret, had rewarded them openly.

Power of His Resurrection

by Angus Dun

The Bishop of Washington

DID you as a child ever play Follow the Leader? I remember playing it in a big back yard in the city where I grew up. The leader was usually one of the bolder, more adventurous spirits among the boys who played together. He would climb what looked to me like a very high fence and then stand on the top and jump off. He would climb far out on a branch of a spreading tree and then drop to the ground. In the fall when the leaves were being burned in piles he would run and jump through the smoke and flames. And the rest of us—more timid souls—would hesitate and fear, but usually follow after. Where he had gone, we could go too! It was play, but it was living too, and preparation for living, as children's play often is. Without the leader we should have lived more restricted, self-guarding lives. He served us well by enlarging our experience of what we could do. He helped us on towards manhood, for manhood includes the power to overcome fears and take some shocks and hurts.

The people who help us to go through experiences from which we draw back are not necessarily those who do things we fear to do. They may be those who have lived through them in sympathy and understanding and stand by us as we face some difficult experience. If I may be personal, for the sake of illustration, I remember that as a boy in my teens I had to take ether for an operation. In earlier childhood I had had to take ether a number of times, and as a result of unskillful handling, I had developed a panic fear of it.

I did not see how I could bring myself to face the thing that terrified me. Then a nurse, who was also a friend, helped me greatly. She said she would go into the operating room with me and stand beside me and take my hand as I took the ether. She told me to be quiet and to breathe deeply. And I went down into that little temporary darkness of which I was afraid, because someone who loved me and understood was there, holding my hand.

Surely there is no part of Scripture more widely known and loved than the 23rd Psalm, and no part of it more moving than its central verse: "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me." It speaks to our universal human longing for someone to be with us in all the kinds of darkness we face.

These things can help us to understand what Christ has meant to man and could mean to you. He came among us to lead us out into life, into more adventurous, free, abundant living. He said, "Follow me! I will show you possibilities of life you did not know you had. You are so shut up in your self-guarding fears. You are afraid to be hurt; afraid to be shamed; afraid to be mocked; afraid to give recklessly; afraid to die. Follow me. I shall not ask you to go anywhere save where I have gone before. I shall not leave you. I shall go with you."

He came among us as one who knew himself sent by the Lord of all Life. He found us shut in, held back from life by so many things. He said to us: "You won't live by always guarding your life, trying to keep it from getting hurt, trying to keep it from getting tired, trying to keep it from getting old. Your life is given to you to be spent, to be used—spent for God and your fellows; used by God for your fellows. You're made that way."

Some of you have failed, failed badly. All of you have. You've done unclean things, disloyal things, selfish things. You know it was down deep. But often you won't admit it, not to God, not to anyone else, not even to yourself. You must guard your pride, you think. So you pretend this morality is all bunk, or that you don't care a continental, or you comfort yourself by saying that everybody does it and you are as good as most. You're blocking your own life. Come with me into the presence of the Eternal God, who knows you through and through. I shall go with you. Acknowledge the truth about yourself before Him. Call the dark things you find in yourself by their true names. Though that humble you, it will take you on into newness of life. The Lord of all life does not wait for your perfection. He asks your truth and your humility.

Some of you are shut up with what you consider your own kind, moving in a little narrow circle of guarded respectability. "The Jews have no dealings with Samaritans," it was written. You draw apart from people of other races or other ways. You are afraid that your own standing or the privileges of your own group will be threatened. And Jesus says: "Follow me. Move out with me across the barriers of fear and pride, and find the wider brotherhood." There are those who never let themselves love greatly because they know that to love is to open oneself to hurt. They fear their love may not be returned or that those they love may be taken from them. To them Christ has ever said, "It is true that love exposes you to hurt. But it is better to love and to be hurt than not to love, for they that love not are counted dead before God."

It is because we share so little in Christ's love for men that we share so little his suffering in the hunger of our brethren. You know that you live always close to the borders of the realm of pain and loss and sorrow. You see friends or acquaintances move slowly or suddenly into that realm. You know that some day most of you will be compelled to enter it. When that day comes for you, do not enter like a frightened child dragged into an operating room, or as a proud stoic, refusing to admit that he can be troubled by human infirmity. To you Christ says, "I have been in that region and I have gone into it with others. There are depths of love and goodness to be found there by the humble in heart that are hardly to be found in the sunlit areas of God's world. And God is there too. Though you go down into hell, he is there also."

And finally we come to the valley of the shadow of death. The last enemy death has been called. We turn our faces from it. Many will not even use the word. We acknowledge its universality in the abstract. But we confront it personally in the death of those near to us and in its inescapable certainty for ourselves. Our animal vitality struggles against it, sometimes with terrible tenacity. It breaks the tenderest bonds. But worst of all, it seems like a judgment of final futility on all the highest values which life has brought to us. At the end of this life, so far as our bodily age can see, stands sheer nothingness, dust to dust. We try to comfort ourselves with the thought that our influence may go on for a little, that we shall remember or be remembered. Some build memorials—and that is good, for some are worthy of remembrance. But how short our memories are and how many without any memorial!

It is plain that persons—persons in relationship—are the bearers of all the most precious things that give glory and meaning to existence. And if death is indeed the last word, the universe is a deceptive fraud that ends in a meaningless movement of sightless, mindless, loveless matter.

Christ faced the dark part of death, faced it for every man, since he lived in imaginative self-identification with all his fellows. He brought to it the strange, over-turning wisdom he brought to all of life.

The way of trusting surrender is the way of victory. God calls us to put our whole trust and confidence in him whose eternity overarches our little times. Death is the final call to yield our little hold on our own private destinies, and throw ourselves on his besetting care. Christ in his true humanity drew back, but quickly gathered his will and went as a King to drink his cup. "No man taketh my life from me, but I lay it down of myself." And do not we all love the man who truly gives his life for something beyond himself?

Of all these things Christ talked much with his friends. They half believed him. They followed their leader, though often afar off, and in fear and trembling. He led them into heights and depths of life and of companionship they had never known before.

When he began to tell them that he, too, must enter the realms of pain and sorrow and death, they were astonished and cast down. "It can not be so, Lord, that one who is so good, so alive, and so dear to the Father as you, should suffer these things and die." But he said it was so. And it was so. "He suffered unto Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead and buried."

And then, in ways that outran all their powers of telling and baffled their understanding, his living presence and power was manifested to them. They remembered him, yes, but remembrance can be a sad and defeating thing, turning the face backward on a past that is gone. The warm, strengthening power of his love flowed into them. The meaning of his life broke in upon them as it never had in the days of his bodily presence. They were knit together in his dear companionship. They could believe now that in truth "He that loseth his life shall gain it." New life had come to them out of his death.

They could even believe that it was good that he had gone away that he could come again in the spirit, and in all these many, mysterious experiences on the plane of their this-world living they found the compelling intimations that what had seemed a defeat on earth was a victory with God.

Out of all this came the Apostolic word, which you are asked to make your own. "That I may know him and the power of his resurrection and the fellowship of his sufferings; becoming like him in his death, that if possible I may attain the resurrection from the dead. Not that I have already attained this—but I follow after him, to make it my own, because Christ Jesus has made me his own."

W. Russell Bowie Hits Effort To Outlaw Communism

Warmly Congratulates the New York Times For Its Position on this Important Issue

Edited by Sara Dill

New York:—The Rev. W. Russell Bowie, formerly rector of Grace Church, and at present on the faculty of the Union Theological Seminary, last week issued a public protest against the recommendation of Secretary of Labor Schwellenbach that the Communist Party be outlawed. He characterized it as "an amazing instance of how our own American democracy might be infected by the poison of Adolf Hitler. Hitler began by denouncing Communists and then used this as a front for an indiscriminate fanaticism which presently outlawed free associations and free opinion of every kind.

"America might not be immune to that same sort of hysterical process. As a contrast to Secretary Schwellenbach's ill-considered utterance," declared Dr. Bowie, "it would be a good thing for everybody to read the short editorial in the New York Times. When the communist paper, The Daily Worker, recently ran out of paper the Times loaned it sixteen tons of its own paper to continue publication. Self-appointed critics were very much annoyed at that but the Times replied as follows: 'We are not afraid of free discussion in the United States. We think democracy in this country is strong enough to withstand any verbal blows that can be delivered against it.' In those words there is sound common sense and a wholesome American confidence from which Secretary Schwellenbach could profit."

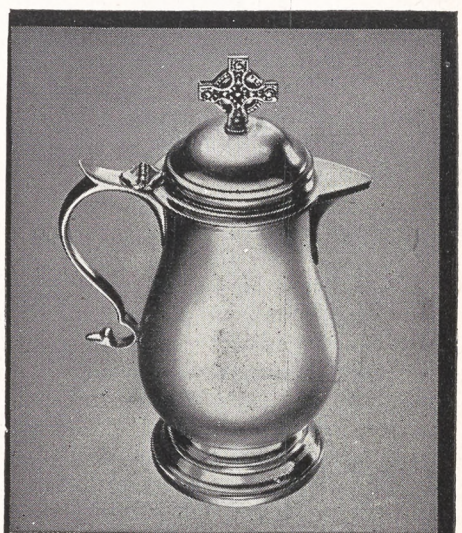
Policy Condemned

New York:—Following action by the executive committee of the Methodist Federation for Social Action, Bishop Lewis O. Hartman of Boston, president of the organization, sent a letter to President Truman on the Greek-Turkey proposals. Serious question was raised over the President's advocacy "of unilateral economic and military intervention in royalist Greece and totalitarian Turkey" on the ground that it by-passes the United Nations, would ruin great power cooperation, undermine the Moscow Conference, involve America in a pattern of imperialism such as Britain has rejected, and lead into depression, bankruptcy and possible war.

President Truman was also called upon to discontinue diplomatic representation at the Vatican on the ground that it is "a violation of the basic American doctrine of the separation of church and state." Approval of a proposed constitutional amendment forbidding expenditure of public monies for church schools was registered and the 5-4 Supreme Court decision upholding tax-supported transportation of pupils to parochial schools was protested.

The President and Congress were also asked to reject Secretary Schwellenbach's proposal to outlaw the Communist party in the United States. To do this, Bishop Hartman said, would deny Secretary of State Marshall's definition of democracy, enunciated in Moscow, that "freely constituted political parties should be insured the right to participate in a free and competitive election system in which each is accorded equal opportunity to present its view, win adherents and obtain just representation."

Other resolutions adopted by the executive committee called upon Congress to pass the long-sabotaged anti-poll tax, anti-lynching and fair employment practices legislation and to change Senate rules to permit majority rule and eliminate the filibuster.



In the field of economics the executive committee reiterated its program to "secure a more widespread and equitable distribution of mass purchasing power for the prevention of depression." Believing that increasing concentration and maladministration of wealth through exorbitant profits, spiraling prices and ominous cuts in real wages is making depression more likely, the committee called upon Congress for a more progressive tax structure, maintenance of all possible controls and curbs on unprincipled profiteering and price raising, opposition to general rent raises, and repressive labor legislation, approval of the federal housing program and the expansion of social security and higher minimum wage. International economic cooperation was advocated, including the continuation and strengthening of the reciprocal trade program.

Fear of the development of nationalistic peace-time militarism was expressed by the committee and Congress was asked to reject all proposals for compulsory peace-time military training. Budget reductions by curtailment of exorbitant military expenditures rather than at the expense of social welfare appropriations were urged.

Cooperation

Topeka, Kan. (RNS):—Leaders of ten major Protestant denominations in Kansas have issued a "compact of interdenominational cooperation."

"We should instill into the minds of our people the inherent unity of the Church," the joint statement declared. "We should give every possible encouragement to those forms of inter-church cooperation in which our members can work together for social, moral and religious progress."

The churchmen urged that immediate consideration be given to situations within the state "where a more unified and wholesome Christian fellowship could be secured by the merging or federating of congregations."

They cautioned, however, that such mergers "cannot be accomplished hastily nor in disregard of the sentiments and convictions of the members involved. But beginnings should be made wherever conditions justify them."

Stressing that the time is ripe for closer and more sustained cooperation among the churches they represent, the churchmen said: "We are brought to this conviction, first, by the remembrance that it is the expressed will of our Lord that his followers should all be one, and second, by the realization that the needs of a confused and discordant world can be fully met only by the witness and ministry of a Church which is demonstrating the reality of its own essential unity. To these more basic considerations we must add such immediate facts as the shortage of qualified ministers, the over-lapping and duplication of effort on the one hand and neglected areas on the other, and that, in many small communities in the state, the church which should be a unifying force is failing to fulfill that responsibility.

"The differences which separate us are relatively minor; the basically important elements of our faith are held by all Christians. We believe that it is highly important that the New Testament concept of the oneness of the Body of Christ should be given definite and dramatic emphasis in the reception of members, in the administration of the ordinances and in the promotion of fellowship across denominational lines. Our major interests in social, moral and religious fields are identical. They can best be served by a common understanding of the Christian ideal in community life."

Signers of the compact were Bishop William C. Martin, Methodist; A. Walton Roth, Presbyterian; John D. Zimmerman, Disciples of Christ; L. M. Rymph, Congregational-Christian Churches; Evert L. Haney, United Presbyterian; Harlan H. Thomas, Evangelical United Brethren; E. G. Winstedt, Evangelical Missionary Covenant Church; Bishop I. Arthur Hamlett, Colored Methodist Episcopal Church; James H. Elrod, Church of the Brethren; and Theodore Hauck, Evangelical and Reformed.

Cathedral Day

Washington: — The Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, Methodist of New York, is to be the guest preacher when Cathedral Day is observed here May 18th. Dean John W. Suter, in announcing the observance, stated that its purpose is "to re-state its reason for existence, its mission, and the impact which it hopes to make upon the nation and the world in the name of God." In addition to the morning service, there will be the traditional massing of the colors service in the afternoon.

Debts Paid

Springfield, Mass.: — Bishop W. Appleton Lawrence, head of the national commission on conscientious objectors, announced last week that the Episcopal Church is all paid up in this particular project. Bishop Lawrence added that there were 90 Episcopal Church members who were sent into Civilian Public Service, with no provision for their maintenance, medical expense, pay or dependents. The commission raised for CO support about $13,000, the men themselves paid $5,760, the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship raised $38,000

The commission is still working for the restoration of the rights of conscientious objectors of citizenship, and of amnesty for those still in prison. None of the latter are Episcopalians.

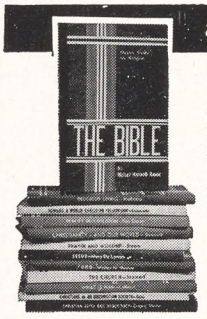
Supports Union

New York:—"The Hebraic-Christian tradition dignifies all work, whether it be by hand or brain and the same tradition demands that all workers have the fullest possible material life" the Rev. W. B. Spofford Jr., executive secretary of the CLID told 200 members of the Financial Employees Guild, Local 96, UOPWA-CIO, at its first general membership meeting on March 25th. "All Christian bodies have recognized the necessity for workers to organize into unions of their own choosing so that through the processes of collective bargaining they may obtain that high standard of living," he said. Stating that manual laborers were first to understand this necessity, Mr. Spofford said that the Churches should be encouraged by the fact that the "white-collar" workers were now awaking to their responsibility to organize. Pointing out that it was this group of workers that are being hardest hit in this period of high profits and high cost of living, he asked that "white-collar workers forget false pride and sense of superiority and combine with all working men in the fight for the full life for all men."



World Council

New York:—The provisional committee of the World Council of Churches meets at Buck Hill Falls, Pennsylvania, April 22-25, with 36 Protestant and Orthodox leaders from 14 nations expected to attend. Subjects scheduled for discussion include the relationship of the World Council to other world-wide bodies; increased participation of Asiatic and African Churches in the Council; and the relief and reconstruction program of the Churches.

Prior to the meeting, World Council executives will hold a two-day joint conference with representatives of the International Missionary Council, beginning April 16. The committee on arrangements for the Council's first World Assembly, to be held in Holland during August, 1948, will convene April 19-21.

European delegates to the provisional committee meeting include George Bell, Bishop of Chichester, England; J. Hutchison Cockburn, director of the department of reconstruction and inter-church aid of the World Council, Scotland; W. A. Visser 't Hooft, general secretary of the World Council; Archbishop Strenopolous Germanos, Metropolitan of Thyrateria, and vice chairman of the World Council; Lutheran Bishop Gustaf E. Aulen of Sweden; Prof. Georges Florovsky of Paris, representing the Russian Orthodox Church in Exile; Marc Boegner, president of the French Reformed Church; and Alphonse Koechlin, president of the Swiss Protestant Federation.

Asiatic delegates are Rajah B. Manikam, secretary, National Christian Council of India; Michio Kozaki, moderator of the United Church of Christ in Japan; and Hyung Kyu Pyen, president, Seoul Theological Seminary, Korea.

Protest Greek Aid

San Francisco:—Eleven San Francisco Methodist ministers issued a joint protest here against President Truman's program to aid Greece and Turkey on the ground it will encourage the spread of Communism in both countries.

"If our purpose is to aid the needy of Greece, and of the world," said the clergymen, "let us burden ourselves to the utmost to do so without making human suffering the football of power politics. Let us pour out our treasure for the hungry, naked, and cold, but let us give not one dollar to buy tanks and guns and planes, and not one dollar to train soldiers to contribute further to the world's already well-nigh irretrievable ruin."

Laymen Wanted

New York:—More active lay participation in the affairs of American Protestantism was urged here at a laymen's luncheon honoring Charles P. Taft of Cincinnati, president of the Federal Council of Churches.

Sponsors of the luncheon, attended by 250 laymen, were Henry R. Luce, publisher; John Foster Dulles, chairman, commission on a just and durable peace of the Federal Council; Lowell Thomas, radio commentator, and Cleveland E. Dodge, president, Protestant Council of the City of New York.

"The overwhelming majority of laymen will support a vigorous and thoroughly informed ministry of reconciliation in the present ideological and class struggle," Mr. Taft declared.

The first step in this ministry, he said, is true research in human relations.

"For twenty years some of the great universities have sought to widen our knowledge of this almost neglected science, and of its application to labor relations and industry. The results of the research are essentially religious, but the Church had no part in it.

"The challenge to the Church is to provide informed Christian guidance in giving help to troubled souls who are trying to live straight in a fighting world."

Churchman Dies

Wilmington, Del.: — The Hon. Daniel B. Holt, for forty years the chancellor of the district of North Dakota, died here on March 15th. He was also for many years a member of the chapter of Gethsemane Cathedral and served several terms as a member of the executive council of the sixth province. He had resigned as judge of the first district court in North Dakota in the fall of last year and was living here with his son, Dr. Harold Holt.

Rector Resigns

Fort Wayne, Ind.: — The Rev. J. McNeal Wheatley, rector of Trinity Church since 1932, announced his resignation last Sunday. He had no announcement to make of future plans beyond the fact that he is to take an extended vacation.

Victor Teaching Triumph

An innovation in 16mm sound projector development . . . the new, sleek Victor "60" combines modern design and many new mechanical improvements. It is truly the finest teaching tool for religious training.

As smart in appearance as today's airplane luggage — with its light-weight, aluminum case and matching speaker — the Model "60" further affirms Victor leadership in the 16mm equipment field. As far ahead as its striking appearance are the new engineering refinements which provide simplicity of operation and peak performance for small or large groups.

Learn about this teaching triumph by writing today for booklet describing "The New Victor 60" — a booklet of good counsel in making the correct sound movie equipment selection.

had a debt of approximately $60,000, with two-thirds of it a mortgage which had been on the property for many years. This debt has been entirely liquidated and there have been many improvements in the material fabric of the church plant. Also about 400 new communicants have been added to the roles and more than 600 have been added by baptism.

Mr. Wheatley has also been active in diocesan and civic affairs.

Bishop Is Ill

Detroit:—Bishop Frank Creighton of Michigan was stricken with a slight heart attack last week. Attributing it to "excessive strain of diocesan duties," his physician states in a bulletin that "The Bishop is resting comfortably in the episcopal residence and expects to resume his duties in the future."

Bishop Sherrill Speaks

Philadelphia: — Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill was the speaker at a luncheon held here on March 28th at which the presidents of Hobart, Kenyon, the University of the South and Kenyon were the honored guests. Bishop Sherrill spoke on the present world crisis and Christian education.

Unite To Eat

Wilkes-Barre, Pa.: — A dinner, sponsored jointly by the four churches in the central part of this city, was held on March 25, with the Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, Methodist of New York, the guest speaker. The dinner, for men only, was held at the First Methodist Church, with a large delegation attending from St. Stephen's where the Rev. William Russell is rector.

New Parish House

St. Louis: — Ground was broken on March 16th for the next unit in the building program of the Church of the Holy Communion here. It will consist of a parish house and educational facilities for the school and parish organizations. During the seventeen years of the rectorship of the Rev. W. W. S. Hohenschild the parish has grown to be one of the strongest in the diocese. The present building, to cost $100,000, will be the undercroft of the church which will be built as soon as building restrictions allow. In addition the parish now has an endowment fund of about $300,000. Meanwhile gifts from parishioners totaling about $800,000 have been made to missions, hospitals and educational institutions.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

JOHN C. HOWE
Layman of New York City

THE WITNESS deserves praise for giving to us the startling article by Frederick W. Foerster on the German situation. (WITNESS, Feb. 13) I do not see how anybody can refute its well documented revelations nor fail to be made aware of the deep seriousness of what he has to say. We were told during the war, and we were quite willing to believe it then, that the Nazis has a long-range program, with plans made to carry on in case of defeat. There is increasing evidence that these plans are now being carried out, and it is also becoming more apparent each day that many of our leaders, either through ignorance or design, are aiding them in this. I hope that Dr. Foerster's article may be read and reread by thousands of Americans, and THE WITNESS would be doing the country a great service if you reprinted the article in an inexpensive leaflet which we could afford to hand out to our friends and enclose in letters.

LANE W. BARTON
Bishop of Eastern Oregon

Three cheers for the issue of March 13th. The article by Dr. Foerster was superlative. Cheers too for the March 20th number and particularly for Talking It Over about news commentators.

MRS. FRANK SKIPP
Churchwoman of Jamaica, N. Y.

THE WITNESS in every way is getting better and better. The editorial about Bishop Johnson was an excellent piece of writing. I also rejoice that you are aware of the heads that are falling among the news commentators. The situation is most discouraging, with William Shirer the next to go the way of the others who have the courage to tell the truth.

Layman of Thief River Falls, Minn.

You sure are to be greatly respected for your fine intelligent stand on world affairs. I agree with you 100 per cent. Greed and Reaction are trying to stampede the common man into another war, and against the best interests of the average citizen. Keep up the good work and don't let them scare you.

I had three sons in our last war, but they all came back safe, for which I am thankful. They are fine, progressive, clear-thinking, Christian boys and I would surely hate to see them go off again for mere selfish gain for greedy interests.

Wishing you good luck and keep your articles coming in THE WITNESS.

CARLETON CLYMER
Layman of Denver, Colorado

I have been reading the appraisals of the chapters in the book, Christianity Takes A Stand, with much interest and trust that after the series is over I may see an announcement in THE WITNESS to the effect that they will also be published in booklet form.

ANSWER: If there are a sufficient number of readers who desire the articles in a booklet we will be glad to bring one out. We will be glad to hear from readers by postal cards. The booklet, if published, would probably cost about 25c a copy. However do not send money at this time: merely indicate whether or not you would order copies if printed.

PROF. VIDA D. SCUDDER
Wellesley, Massachusetts

May I thank THE WITNESS for its wise and brave attitude toward the change in our national policy suggested by our proposed action in regard to Greece? Many Christians, including some religious leaders of distinction, are shaken in their loyalty to the Church Visible by its apathy and evasions. It is indeed a comfort to find such clear and courageous insight into the future combined with such devotion to the best traditions of the past as THE WITNESS offers its readers.

Churchwoman of Berea, Ohio

Congratulations for your editorial (Jan. 30) calling for the resignation of John Foster Dulles as the chairman of the commission on a just and durable peace of the Federal Council of Churches.

VIRGINIA COGSWELL
Churchwoman of Northport, N. Y.

May I tell you how deeply I appreciated the editorial tribute to Bishop Johnson (WITNESS, March 13) signed by Mr. Spofford. It was outstanding for its simplicity and sincerity.

REV. OSMOND H. BROWN
Rector of St. Philip's, Buffalo

I wish to thank THE WITNESS for the publicity which you gave me March 13th in regard to the George Washington Carver Memorial Organ Fund. I have received $10 from a Southerner living in Hartford and he has allowed me, omitting his name, to publish this note of thanks. God being my helper, I am determined to have an organ in the house of God which, while it helps in the worship of God, will at the same time plead against man's inhumanity to man.

Church Scholars Are To Meet In Church Congress

Authority and Freedom Will Be Discussed As Preparation for Next General Convention

By W. B. Spofford

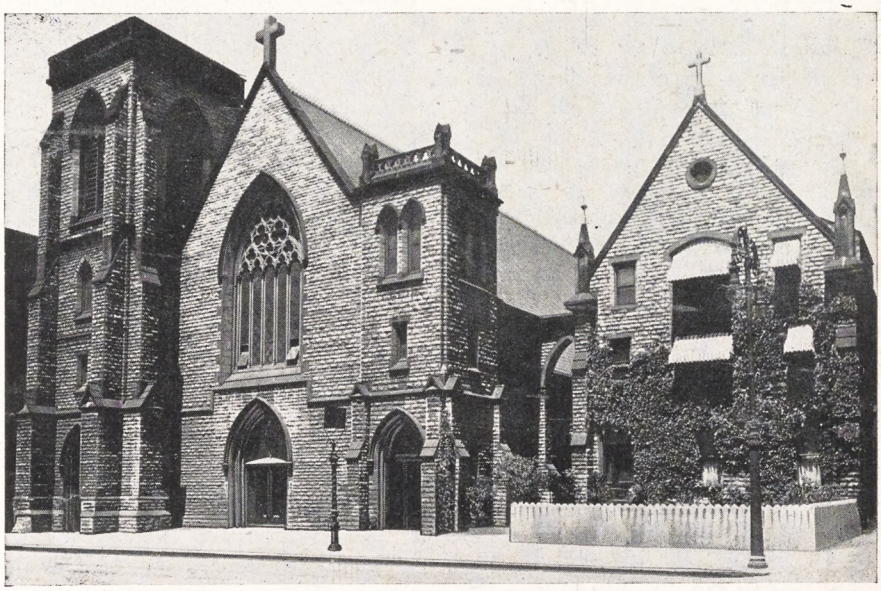
Hartford, Conn.: — Church leaders from all parts of the country will meet in Toledo, Ohio, April 22-24 for the Church Congress. The general theme is to be "Episcopalians Unite" and the special subject under discussion will be "Authority and Freedom in Doctrine, Discipline and Worship."

As the practice has been at previous Church Congresses, each topic will be presented by two speakers, representing different points of view. Thus it is emphasized that the Church Congress represents no party in the Church. "The national meeting," declares Bishop Walter H. Gray, Coadjutor of Connecticut who is the president, "represents an opportunity for people of all groups to meet and to think constructively about matters of great importance to the Church at this time and should be helpful in formulating our Church's thinking on the 'statement of faith and order in harmony with the Lambeth Quadrilateral,' which is to be considered at the 1949 General Convention."

The national meeting opens with a service at eight o'clock on April 22 at Trinity Church, when the service will be conducted by Bishop Beverley D. Tucker of Ohio and the preacher will be Bishop Austin Pardue of Pittsburgh.

Following a communion service and fellowship breakfast at St. Mark's the following day, the first session will be held in the parish house of Trinity at which the Rev. Randolph Crump Miller of the Divinity School of the Pacific and the Rev. Charles W. Lowry Jr., rector of All Saints', Chevy Chase, Maryland, will read papers on "Authority and Freedom in Doctrine."

The afternoon session that day will be devoted to "Authority and Freedom in Discipline," with the papers by Bishop Wallace E. Conkling of Chicago and Bishop Arthur B. Kinsolving 2nd of Arizona.



The convention dinner will be held at the Secor Hotel that evening when the speaker will be President Gordon Keith Chammers of Kenyon College.

The third session will be held at Trinity the morning of the 24th at which Dean John W. Suter of Washington Cathedral and Bishop James P. DeWolfe of Long Island will present the papers on "Authority and Freedom in Worship." The Congress will close with a luncheon in the parish house of St. Mark's at which the speaker will be the Rev. Theodore P. Ferris, the rector of Trinity Church, Boston.

The local committee in charge of the Congress is the Rev. Gordon M. Jones Jr., the Rev. James F. McElroy, the Rev. R. Malcolm Ward and the Rev. Arthur W. Hargate.

The national leadership of the Church Congress is composed of men and women of all schools of thought. The officers, in addition to Bishop Gray who is president, are Bishop Donald B. Aldrich, chaplain at Princeton University; the Rev. W. Norman Pittenger of General Seminary, and the Rev. Victor Kennan of Baltimore, vice-presidents; the Rev. Raymond Cunningham, rector of Trinity Church, Hartford, secretary; the Rev. Ralph D. Read, executive secretary and treasurer.

The executive committee includes the Rev. Stephen F. Bayne Jr., bishop-elect of Olympia; the Very Rev. Donald J. Campbell of Springfield, Mass.; the Rev. Samuel M. Dorrance of the diocese of Long Island; the Rev. Frederick C. Grant of the Union Seminary; the Rev. S. Whitley Hale, rector of the Advent, Boston; the Rev. C. C. Kennedy, rector of Christ Church, New Haven; the Rev. E. Felix Kloman, rector of Christ Church, Philadelphia; the Very Rev. Arthur Lichtenberger, dean of Trinity Cathedral, Newark; the Rev. Hugh D. McCandless, rector of the Epiphany, New York; the Rev. Daniel A. McGregor, formerly director of the national department of religious education; the Rev. J. Howard Melish, rector of Holy Trinity, Brooklyn; the Rev. Howard C. Robbins of New York; the Rev.

Samuel M. Shoemaker, rector of Calvary, New York; the Rev. Grieg Taber, rector of St. Mary the Virgin, New York; Canon T. O. Wedel of the College of Preachers, Washington; Miss Avis Harvey and Miss Ellen B. Gammack of the national staff of the Woman's Auxiliary; and two laymen, Dr. G. F. Thomas and Mr. J. Taylor Foster.

Miss Ellen Gammack, calling attention to the fact that Bishop Gray had sent letters to all diocesan Auxiliary presidents inviting women to attend the Toledo meeting, stated that "This extremely interesting conference will offer an opportunity not only for clergy and laymen of different points of view to think together about basic Church questions, but here the women of the Church will be able to share in this thinking and discussion. The Toledo meeting will be of special interest to women professional Church workers who are eager for just such religious and intellectual stimulation."

BISHOP GILBERT ASKS FOR SUFFRAGAN

New York:—The Presiding Bishop certified on March 27th that a majority of the bishops and standing committees had given their consent to the election of Bishop Charles Kendall Gilbert as diocesan bishop of New York. He is to be formally installed at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine at a service to be held Saturday, April 26th at 2:30. Bishop Gilbert also has announced his intention of requesting the diocese to provide him with a suffragan bishop, and the hope is expressed that consents from a majority of bishops and standing committees will be received in time for the election to take place at the annual convention of the diocese on May 13th.

CHRISTIANITY TAKES A STAND

Troy, N. Y.:—Open forum sessions are being held at St. Paul's, here, where the Rev. John Gass is rector. They are based on the book, Christianity Takes A Stand, and the corresponding articles in THE WITNESS dealing with the same subjects. The moderator is Dr. R. Stanley Thomson, professor of political science at Russell Sage College, and the leader is Mr. Edward H. Pattison, local lawyer, both vestrymen at St. Paul's. Taking part in the forums have been Prof. Scott Mackay of the department of physics at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute; Prof. Charles Gray, former president of Bard College who is now head of the English department at Rensselaer, and many of the faculty members of Russell Sage. These, together with members of the congregation of St. Paul's and the community generally, have kept the questions and discussions on a high level. The forums have been preceded by a supper.

The Toledo committee in charge of the Church Congress are, left to right, the Rev. Arthur W. Hargate, the Rev. Gordon M. Jones Jr., the Rev. James F. McElroy and the Rev. R. Malcolm Ward

CENTENNIAL DINNER

Brooklyn, N. Y.:—Bishop Charles K. Gilbert of New York, Mayor William O'Dwyer of New York and the Hon. John Lord O'Brian are to be the speakers at the centennial dinner of the Church of the Holy Trinity on April 23rd. The associate rectors of the parish are the Rev. J. Howard Melish and the Rev. William H. Melish.

BISHOPS' CHILDREN TO MARRY

New York:—The son of the Bishop of Shanghai and the daughter of the Bishop of Anking are to be married, it was announced last week by Bishop and Mrs. Lloyd R. Craighill. Mary Katherine Craighill is at present a student at Hood College, while John Carleton Roberts, the son of Bishop and Mrs. William P. Roberts is a student at Yale. No date has yet been announced for the wedding which will take place at the home of Miss Craighill's aunts, Misses Mary and Katherine Gardner at Englewood, N. J.

CLID SUPPORTS NEW BILLS

Trenton, N. J.:—The New Jersey branch of the Church League for Industrial Democracy has taken stands on five pieces of state legislation on the recommendation of the Rev. Robert D. Smith, social service secretary of the Diocese of New Jersey and member of the CLID national committee. In statements to the state legislature, the Church League opposed bills which would establish a commission to investigate "communist and un-American" teachings and activities in the public schools and, likewise, expressed opposition to a bill which would exclude injured newsboys from the benefit of the state workman's compensation act. The CLID said it was supporting bills which would reduce the maximum hours for women workers, repeal the clause in the minimum wage law which exempts hotels and amend the basic school law so that children of agricultural migrants in the state would have the same opportunities for public education as regular residents of New Jersey.

Clergymen Issue a Statement Hitting Truman Policy

President's Grounds for Aid in Middle East Is Condemned by Ministers of Many Churches

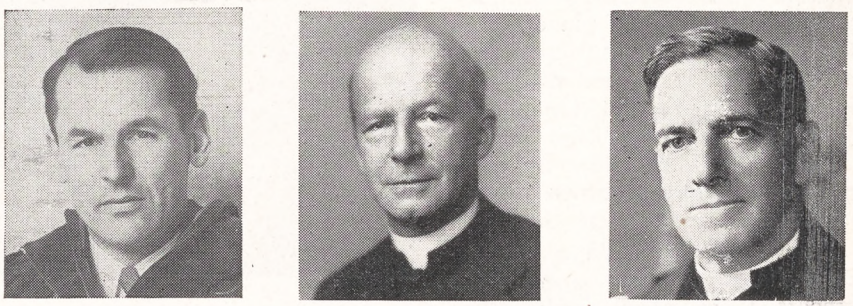
By Rita Rubin

New York:—Ministers from all parts of the United States joined last week in opposing "the grounds on which the President has requested the grant of immediate aid to Greece and Turkey." The statement was released by the National Council for American-Soviet Friendship, on behalf of a committee of religious leaders headed by the Rev. W. Russell Bowie, formerly the rector of Grace Church, New York, and now a professor at the Union Theological Seminary.

The statement declares that the grounds for the aid given by President Truman "constitute the blunt abandonment of the vital principle that this is 'One World.' Such a division of the globe into two armed camps, with no recognition of any intermediate economies or the possibility of the evolution of both existing systems, seems to us a dangerous misreading of history.

"We continue to affirm that this is 'One World.' Ethical considerations require us to believe that the different peoples in it must be permitted to work out their respective futures in their own ways in mutual concord and cooperation. We respect the fact of diversity and we see in the United Nations an international organization within which different nations can collaborate constructively for peace. We are convinced that whatever steps our country takes should be taken through the machinery of the United Nations in the spirit of its charter.

"We distrust the President's foreign policy because it would abandon true moral leadership in favor of reliance on naked military and economic power. The two nations which it now proposes to assist are not chosen primarily for humanitarian sentiments or democratic affinities. Greece and Turkey, and especially the latter whose role in world war one and two we cannot overlook, are to be assisted because of their strategic location and usefulness against the Soviet Union, as potential bulwarks to check the assumed spread of communism and as vital gateways to the oil of the Middle East.



"If these two countries are to be defined as 'needy' nations on such grounds, the logic of this definition will inevitably lead the United States to offer aid to other governments and movements even less democratic in character. We shall certainly be disposed as a government to view with suspicion and to thwart any peoples' movements which seem to call in question the status quo. In the name of advancing democracy this foreign policy will actually frustrate and inhibit its spread.

"We appeal to the Congress of the United States to face these basic issues now and to refuse outright this military loan proposed for Turkey. As churchmen we are not against immediate help to Greece in the form of food or loans for social reconstruction. This we strongly favor, provided it is done through the International Bank, the Food and Agricultural Organization, or some other United Nations subsidiary or affiliate. We do oppose emphatically any form of grant which bypasses and thereby weakens the United Nations, declares political and economic war upon our recent ally, the Soviet Union, and encourages the militarization of any impoverished little land like Greece and also its war-ravaged neighbors.

"We wish to see the foreign policy of the United States assert a true moral leadership by uniting, not dividing the world, through binding up its wounds, not stimulating the divisions and emotions which make for war."

At the time the statement was released it had been signed by 168 clergymen, representing 29 states, with more affirmations coming with each mail. It was sent to 1,000, which indicates a high percentage of returns. Episcopalians to sign the document were Bishop Edward L. Parsons, retired bishop of California; Bishop Arthur Moulton, retired bishop of Utah; Bishop John Moore Walker of Atlanta; the Rev. Gardiner M. Day, rector of Christ Church, Cambridge; the Rev. Robert D. Smith, social service secretary of the diocese of New Jersey; Dean John W. Day of Topeka,, Kansas; the Rev. Prof. Joseph F. Fletcher of the Episcopal Theological School; the Rev. William B. Spofford, managing editor of THE WITNESS; the Rev. Charles B. Ackley, rector of St. Mary's, New York; the Rev. Percy M. Gilfillan of Waterloo, Iowa; the Rev. F. Ricksford Meyers, rector of St. Matthew's, Detroit; the Rev. W. B. Spofford Jr., executive secretary of the CLID; the Rev. George L. Paine of Boston; the Rev. B. H. Smith of Laredo, Texas; the Rev. Leonard F. Thornton Jr. of Kirkwood, Mo.; the Rev. Charles C. Wilson, rector of Grace Church, St. Louis; the Rev. W. H. Melish of Holy Trinity, Brooklyn; the Rev. Guy Emery Shipler, editor of The Churchman.

Among those of other Churches whose names appear on the statement are Prof. James Luther Adams of the Meadville Seminary, Chicago; the Rev. Wade C. Barclay, head of missions of the Methodist Church; the Rev. Charles F. Boss Jr., head of the commission on peace of the Methodist Church; the Rev. Mark A. Dawber, head of the Home Missions Council; Prof. Halford Luccock of Yale Divinity School; Dean Edwin McNeill Poteat of the Colgate-Rochester School; Prof. Paul Tillich of Union Seminary; Prof. Henry Nelson Wieman of the Divinity School of the University of Chicago; the Rev. William Lindsay Young, former moderator of the Presbyterian Church; the Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, Methodist of New York; the Rev. Ernest Fremont Tittle of Evanston, Illinois.

CHURCH CONGRESS leaders include Gordon Keith Chalmers, speaker at the Congress dinner; the Rev. Raymond Cunningham, secretary of the Congress and Bishop Beverley D. Tucker of Ohio who is to conduct the opening service

Word is received as we go to press that a considerable number of other ministers have signed the statement, including the following Episcopalians: Bishop Elwood Haines of Iowa; Dean Sidney Sweet of St. Louis; the Rev. William Marmion of Birmingham, Ala., and the Rev. John Howard Melish of Brooklyn.

TRADE AGREEMENTS ENDORSED

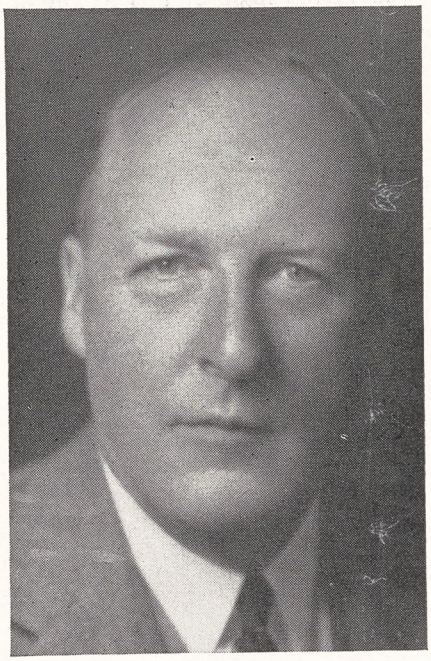
New York (RNS):—International conferences scheduled at Geneva in April to work out reciprocal trade agreements and review plans for an international trade organization were endorsed here by the executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches. The committee said it would deplore any course by members of Congress which might "undermine" the conferences.

"The world's need for a prosperous exchange of goods, and for the democracy and peace which that can further is too great for such efforts to be placed in jeopardy," the church group stated. "The economic policy of the postwar world has come to the time for decision."

The conferences will be held simultaneously in Geneva. One is a meeting of the 18 trading nations to negotiate bilaterally with each other for the reduction of trade barriers. The other is a conference to review proposals for an international trade organization which would promote regulation of restrictive business practices (cartels), suggest rules for intergovernmental commodity agreements, and stimulate reduction of trade barriers.

ECONOMIC LIFE DEPARTMENT

New York:—Formation of a department of the Church and economic life was authorized here by the executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches. The department will include the present industrial relations division. Most of its members will be laymen who are prominent in agriculture, business, labor, and consumer movements.



Action setting up the agency was in line with recommendations made at the national study conference on the Church and economic life held recently in Pittsburgh under auspices of the Federal Council. The new department will have four principal aims:

1—to conduct conferences dealing with various aspects of economic relations;

2—to formulate statements on current economic issues and publish literature on the Church's role in economic life;

3—to promote study leading to Christian action in the field of economics;

4—to cooperate with agricultural, consumer and industrial groups, as well as with church agencies, in developing resources to strengthen the churches' ministry in economic life.

J. Taylor Foster, layman of New York and a member of the executive committee of the Church Congress, declares that the coming Congress presents a real opportunity for laymen. See "Quotes" on opposite page

SEMINARY STUDENTS TO MEET

Philadelphia:—An inter-seminary conference is to be held here April 11-13 at the Philadelphia Divinity School, to discuss problems relating to the ministry. The theme of this conference, with others planned for the future, is industrial relations and rural work. The leaders are the Rev. Robert C. Denton of the Berkeley Divinity School; the Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher of the Episcopal Thelogical School; the Rev. Albert T. Mollegen of the Virginia Seminary; the Rev. Cuthbert A. Simpson of the General Seminary and the Rev. William B. Spofford Jr., executive secretary of the Church League for Industrial Democracy.

The leaders of the panel on rural work will be Bishop Horstick of Eau Claire; the Rev. E. Dargan Butt of the University of the South; the Rev. Russell S. Hubbard of Bar Harbor, Maine, and the Rev. J. W. Nicholson of the Bishop Payne Divinity School.

COMMUNIST SPEAKS IN CHURCH

Winston-Salem, N. C. (RNS):—Sam Hall, chairman of the Carolina district of the Communist Party, spent 30 minutes explaining the program and policy of the party in the United States at a meeting in Liberty Street Church of Christ here. The Rev. Percy Cross, the pastor, presided. In announcing that Hall would be given use of the church building to express his views, Cross said, "We are going to give him a fair hearing and we expect him to give us a fair hearing on a book, chapter and verse basis. If what any of us believes as a faith for life, no matter what it is, cannot stand up in the arena of free speech, then the best thing to do is chuck it out the window."

CHINESE BISHOP A VISITOR

Santa Barbara, Calif.: — Bishop K. T. Mao, assistant bishop of Shanghai, consecrated last fall, has arrived in this country for a six months' visit. He is at present attending a rural seminar at Scarritt College, Crossville, Tenn., since he is especially responsible for the rural areas of the district of Shanghai. He will then attend several summer conferences and will speak on a number of occasions, including a preaching engagement on June 1 at the cathedral in New York. He expects to return to China in time to attend the general synod of the Chinese Church in August. While in Santa Barbara he was the guest of the Rev. John Pettus.

Requiem

ONE hundred homes in Illinois are dressed in black, the color of coal. The mourning clothes have been put on because, in the ebony bowels of the Illinois earth, one hundred and eleven working men have gasped their last breaths . . . and died. Throughout the country at large there have been charges and counter-charges. Lewis accuses Krug; Governor Green accuses the U. S. Bureau of Mines; the newspapers say Lewis is playing politics; the president of the Illinois mines bemoans the loss of a week's coal supply—and profits. All admit the disaster could have been avoided. There are both state and federal laws dealing with industrial safety. Science has shown that mine explosions, caused by the unholy alliance of firedamp and coal dust, should never occur. What was lacking, obviously, was the will to enforce the safety measures. And so, in the middle of the 20th Century, one hundred homes in Illinois are dressed in black, the color of coal.

Away From It All

WE LIKE the New York bus driver who recently said "the heck with it all"; turned his $18,000 vehicle to the right instead of the left; found himself on the Pulaski Skyway, heading south; and ended up in a town called Hollywood, Florida. When he was apprehended and charged with grand larceny, he said that his fellow-workers would understand. They do. When interviewed, the other drivers said sympathetically: "The poor guy makes eight round trips a day and his schedule makes him catch the to-and-from-school rushes as well as both commuter jams. It just drove him nuts."

Maybe it's spring or maybe it's the nature of the times. Anyway, we often feel that way ourselves. The tension of modern life, the automatic routine of earning a living, the personal sense of futility in the face of major conflicts and problems . . . they wear one down. We need to recreate. But we don't drive a bus so we can't head south.

Jesus, we know, felt this way. He, in his turn, went off into some closet or up some hill and prayed, meditated and thought things out. Then he returned to what is called the "daily grind." Our driver's bus and our Lord's prayers had, on occasion, much in common. We hope that our driver is exonerated and will be back on the job. We think that such a "rebel" will tone up the whole New York transportation system just as that other "rebel" toned up the whole of creation.

"QUOTES"

MEETINGS of the Church Congress would seem to present to laymen an unique opportunity for discussion and enlightenment. Experience during recent years has convinced many of us of the lay group of our Church of the necessity of understanding more clearly and possibly tolerantly the different schools of thought which exist. Back of all this, and probably more important than anything else, is the fact that there are too many of us laymen who, while brought up in the Church, are very hazy as to doctrine and practice. Certainly we should take advantage of the opportunity to take part in a meeting where the subject will be "Authority and Freedom in Doctrine, Discipline and Worship."

—J. Taylor Foster
Layman of New York

Just a Plug

THERE are a good many parishes getting a bundle of THE WITNESS each week which they are using in discussion groups. There have been enough letters received for us to be satisfied that the combination of Christianity Takes a Stand and the corresponding articles in THE WITNESS has supplied them with good material for the discussion of vital issues. This series ends with the last number of April so that a large number of people who now get the magazine will no longer be able to secure copies at their parish churches. Naturally we are anxious to have them continue. So if you are one of that group a note to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y., with a check or money order for four dollars, will place you on our mailing list for one year.

The Meaning of Wartime Exile

by Carey McWilliams

Noted Author and Journalist

THERE is little that I can add by way of comment to the admirable summary which Bishop Parsons has prepared of the evacuation and resettlement of Japanese-Americans. Today there can be no doubt whatever that mass evacuation of the Japanese from the west coast was dictated by prejudice and not, as we were told at the time, by considerations of military security. Since Bishop Parsons prepared his article, the War Relocation has issued a nine-volume final report covering all phases of the evacuation program. The volume in this report entitled "Wartime Exile: The Exclusion of the Japanese Americans from the West Coast" —(available from the Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D. C. Price 45 cents)—contains an excellent step-by-step account of the manner by which the government was high-pressured into taking this drastic action. What some of us said at the time has, in fact, now been more than confirmed by the very agency established by the government to execute the program.

Bishop Parsons correctly emphasizes the dangerous character of the precedent established in the Korematsu case. If this precedent is allowed to stand and if the United States were one day to become involved in war with Russia, one can predict quite freely what would happen. Using the Korematsu case as a precedent, the government would proceed to round up all "reds," "radicals," and "left-wingers" and place them in "protective custody." No hearings need be held; no charges need be filed. In the Korematsu case, the court said that "ethnic affiliations" could properly be made the basis of establishing classification of persons deemed dangerous in case of war. It requires nothing, in the way of further elaboration or rationalization, to extend this doctrine and to make "political affiliations" the basis for similar group action on a large scale. Beyond all doubt, the Korematsu case is a standing threat to civil liberties in the United States and should be reversed at the earliest possible date.

Also, since Bishop Parsons' article was prepared, the University of California Press has published the first volume in the elaborate research project which Dr. Dorothy Thomas directed on the evacuation program. This first volume, entitled The Spoilage, deals exclusively with the Tule Lake segregants—the so-called "disloyal" exacuees. With a great wealth of detail and the most elaborate and scientific documentation, Dr. Thomas and her colleagues demonstrate how the Tule Lake segregants—or the great majority of them—were pushed into assuming attitudes and defining positions which placed them in the "disloyal" category. Anyone who takes the trouble to read The Spoilage will understand that only a very small number of the Tule Lake evacuees could possibly be branded as "disloyal" by any objective tests or standards. The great and bitter irony of the "segregation" of loyal from disloyal, mentioned by Bishop Parsons, is that even the disloyal, —those who were pushed into filing petitions of renunciation—have now been released for resettlement in American civilian communities (with the exception of those who were repatriated). If these people were so disloyal that they had to be held in custody during the war, and were encouraged to renounce their American citizenship under great pressure, why were they released from custody? Why are they today back in civilian communities, divested of their American citizenship? Although it was not intended as such, the segregation program has been a cruel hoax committed by a democratic government toward a group of its own citizens toward whom it has at all times owed the highest obligation to act in good faith.

THE evacuation program has permanently changed the base of Japanese-American life in the United States. Thousands of the younger, better educated, better adjusted, more energetic Nisei are today permanently resettled outside the West Coast and have no intention of returning. To some extent, this has been a favorable by-product of the evacuation program. But it has had its reverse aspect, for many of the most imperfectly adjusted, the least efficient, and the oldest among the evacuees have returned to the west coast where the problem of integration has always been most acute. One of the serious present-day problems faced by those who have returned to their former homes is the absence of some of the best Nisei leadership. While public attitudes remain favorable on the west coast, time alone will tell to what extend the pre-war pattern of prejudice has really been changed. In March, 1947, I visited the cities and communities of the Pacific Northwest and, while attitudes were on the whole favorable, one could easily recognize that a period of acute economic depression might once again give rise to demagogic movements aimed at eliminating unwanted Japanese-American competition. Today 50% of the Negroes of Portland, Oregon, 75% of those in Vancouver, Washington, are unemployed; and, in these communities, one can feel the tension and uneasiness that is rapidly developing.

I agree with Bishop Parsons that great credit is due the War Relocation Authority, and to its Director, Dillon Myer, for the excellent job that this agency did with an impossible assignment. But I would suggest that his specification of those responsible for the tragedy of mass evacuation might have been more detailed. General DeWitt must, of course, assume major responsibility; but, high on the list of those who must also be charged with major responsibility, would be Governor Earl Warren of California; the late Senator Hiram Johnson; the professional race baiters on the coast; a majority of the west coast congressional delegation; and the organized farm groups. With Earl Warren a likely Republican nominee for the Presidency, I think it quite appropriate to point out that he was one of the most forceful advocates of mass evacuation and that he had a great deal to do with the behind-the-scenes pressures which finally brought about this momentous decision. His testimony before the Tolan Committee, at the time when mass evacuation was being considered, was every bit as prejudiced and as bigoted as General DeWitt's attitude and, long after evacuation, he strenuously opposed the efforts of the government to lift the ban against the return of loyal evacuees to the west coast. As late as mid-summer 1943, for example, Governor Warren issued an hysterical statement in which he said that California might have its own "Pearl Harbor Disaster" if so much as one evacuee were permitted to return to the state before the end of the war. Being one of those who opposed mass evacuation at the time it was being considered, I do not intend to let this ugly chapter in the political career of Mr. Warren pass into oblivion.

I should also like to add to Bishop Parsons' recommendations that legislation now pending before Congress which would make it possible for lawfully resident Japanese to become American citizens, should, by all means, be supported. One of the greatest mistakes made in America's treatment of racial minorities was our sanction of the "aliens-ineligible-to-citizenship" category. For it was this exception that laid the foundation for most of the discrimination against Japanese on the west coast, a pattern of discrimination that culminated in the fiasco of mass evaculation. If anyone is to suffer as a result of the wholly unfortunate precedent of the Korematsu case, one might be pardoned for wishing that it would be some of the individuals who were responsible for mass evacuation; but, ironically enough, it will probably be some of the very individuals who fought to uphold the rights of Japanese-Americans against an unconstitutional abridgment who, at some future date, will most likely find themselves involved in the dangerous principles established in this case.

The History and Purpose of the Church Congress

By

SAMUEL M. DORRANCE

Of the National Executive Committee

THE history of the Church Congress is the history of an institution that has deeply affected the life of our Church for good. Roland Cotton Smith, late rector of St. John's Church in Washington, himself the son of one of the founders, read all the journals of the Congress for its first fifty years before writing the brilliant historical address which he gave at Boston in 1924. His estimate of the Congress after this thorough study will come as a surprise to most: "the greatest institution in the Church, far greater than is realized by the most ardent supporters, inevitable, indispensable, royal. She discovers the thinker and sets him in the high place. She broadens communities and cements friendships; she teaches the Church to think; establishes liberty, discourages trials; carries the Church through great crises, and saves her from the sin of schism in loyalty and love. Her death would be the Church's death, for the Church has still stern work to do in the day of the Lord at hand." Again, he says, "the history of the Church Congress is a great object lesson, a demonstration of how a Church, if it is allowed to think, can come through perilous problems to a satisfying solution."

A solitary thinker may indeed see truth, but he is in danger of missing the truth seen by someone with a different point of view, which also demands recognition. Like-minded men thinking together find their arguments convincing. Victory for their beliefs comes too easily. They need the opposition of one who honestly disagrees to prod their minds. But too often in the Church frank discussion of live questions is limited to groups of the like-minded. That tends to misunderstanding, to over-emphasis of differences, and to a one-sided grasp of truth. Also it makes for distrust of those who disagree. Can men be quite trustworthy who hold such odd opinions?

From its beginning it has been not only the purpose but the fine achievement of the Church Congress that it has brought together men who were not like-minded to say what they believed in each other's presence, to argue in friendship face to face for the truth as each saw it. By so doing it has widened horizons and promoted friendship. Let me quote Dr. Smith again: "A man convinced against his will is of the same opinion still, but a man unconvinced in an argument is not of the same opinion still, when he reaches home, for he has by then discovered that there was truth on the other side which has already colored and changed his point of view. And he also has discovered that this antagonist of his was no villain but a man of good conscience, grievously mistaken."

In "General Education in a Free Society," the report of a committee of the Harvard faculty, we read: "It is impossible to escape the realization that our society, like any society, rests on common beliefs and that a major task of education is to perpetuate them. This conclusion raises one of the most fundamental problems of education, indeed of society itself: how to reconcile this necessity for common belief with the equally obvious necessity for new and independent insights leading to change." The Church also has these two necessities, for common belief and for new and independent insights leading to change. The Church Congress by its frank debates has helped to uncover common beliefs beneath differences, and has provided opportunity for the expression of new and independent insights.

The Church Congress in America owes its inception to two clerical clubs. "The Club" was organized in New York on January 9th, 1872, "for the purpose of discussing the questions of the day, and also by lectures and sermons to influence public opinion." Its membership included men whose fame is still with us: Henry Codman Potter, Bishop Clark, Dr. Muhlenberg, Phillips Brooks, William R. Huntington. Some of the members lived in New England, and soon they formed a club of their own in Boston. At a joint meeting of these two clubs in New Haven on May 19th, 1874, it was decided that, following the example of the Church of England, the Protestant Episcopal Church in America ought to have a Church Congress. Less than a month later, on June 16th, fifteen men lunched with Mr. Percy R. Pyne at his house at Riverdale to discuss the matter further, and then in the open air, on the banks of the Hudson, founded the Congress. These were the men: Edwin Harwood, Heman Dyer, Edward Washburn, Samuel Osgood, John Cotton Smith, C. E. Henry, Percy R. Pyne, Samuel Babcock, Charles C. Tiffany, George Wildes, J. H. Rylance, Cornelius Smith, Alexander H. Vinton, William R. Huntington, William H. Appleton, Henry K. Spaulding.

These founders meant business. They decided to hold the first meeting the following autumn in New York. And there, on the 6th of October, in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, it was held.

AT VARYING intervals, and in many places, the meetings have continued ever since. The meeting places show that interest has been widespread. Here are some of them: New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Providence, Richmond, Rochester, Buffalo, Pittsfield, Norfolk, Ann Arbor, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Chicago, Baltimore, Washington, Indianapolis. The Congress made its longest journey from its birthplace in 1927 when it met in San Francisco. After twenty-five years "the large audiences dwindled and the popular enthusiasm waned." But though the number interested was smaller the good work went on. And in the twenties of this century the efforts of a group of men who believed whole-heartedly that such an open forum was essential to the Church's welfare began to bear fruit. The meetings at Rochester in 1919, in Baltimore in 1922, and Boston in 1924 saw the Congress re-established. The leader of these men was Charles Lewis Slattery. Working with him were William Austin Smith, Selden P. Delany, Dean Fosbroke, Howard C. Robbins, Malcolm C. Douglas, Charles L. Gomph, George R. Van De Water, Loring W. Batten, and others. None were more devoted to the cause than Dr. Harry P. Nichols and Dr. Roland Cotton Smith.

Again, in the thirties, the Congress went into a decline. The energies of some who had worked hard for it, and the attention of many who had attended its meetings, were diverted to the Catholic Congress and the Liberal Evangelical Fellowship. Men were too absorbed in the fellowships of the like-minded to give time to a fellowship comprehending those not like-minded. Yet the very stressing of differences increased the desirability of such a meeting-ground as the Congress.

In this dilemma the wise decision was made to entrust the future of the Congress to the Rev. Donald B. Aldrich, then rector of the Church of the Ascension in New York. Patiently he explored the possibilities, consulted men of many molds, won back old friends, enlisted new ones. The plan was inaugurated of providing Church Congress syllabi, articles on pertinent subjects by qualified authors, which were published as they still are, in The Anglican Theological Review. And here and there groups of clergy were formed to study them. The preparatory work was well done, and at Washington, in 1939, the Congress sprang to life again. A meeting followed in 1942 in Indianapolis. And then the war not only took away Dr. Aldrich but made any meeting of the Congress on a national scale impossible.

But local meetings were still possible. And under the vigorous leadership of Bishop Walter H. Gray, now president of the Congress, the novel plan of one-day regional Congresses was put into effect. It is already evident that these local meetings have aroused wide-spread interest in the first post-war national Congress, which is to convene this month in Toledo.

In closing it must be emphatically stated that the Church Congress belongs to no party. Look at the names of the present Executive Committee! Three men whose churches all stood on the same Brooklyn street made the long journey to San Francisco in 1927. All of them were members of the committee which planned that Congress. One was Rev. J. Howard Melish, rector of the Church of the Holy Trinity. Another was Rev. Granville M. Williams, today superior of the Society of St. John the Evangelist.

Read the list of speakers who will be heard in Toledo! The Congress belongs to no party. It belongs to the Church.

It should also be emphasized that the Congress is not meant for the clergy alone. Lay men, and women too, have been amongst its speakers, have been and are members of its executive committee, and at many meetings have constituted the majority of the audience. That is as it should be. For the Church Congress was founded and lives, not for academic discussion of theology, but by debate amongst the disciples of Christ to clarify the truth and meaning of the Gospel for the present day.

*The Existence of God. A Commentary on St. Thomas Aquinas's Five Ways of Demonstrating the Existence of God. By Eric G. Jay. Macmillan, $1.25.

This little book is a capital introduction to St. Thomas, and includes just enough on the Platonic and Aristotelian philosophies for the beginner to grasp what the argument is all about, without his getting lost in details of philosophical history. The exposition of the Ontological Argument (which Thomas rejected) is especially good, and its implication of the Platonic type of realism is properly stressed—a feature which is often ignored, with the result that the Ontological Argument sounds like a man talking in a dream.

The relevance of St. Thomas for the present day is taken for granted, and the bearing of his philosophy upon both Modernism and Barthianism is made clear. (But how many "extreme Liberals or Modernists" hold that "human reason is all-sufficient"?—p. 15. Why do so many conservatives think to justify their position by socking liberals—and by misrepresenting them?) The book was meant for laymen, though written by an expert. It ought to be used with Texts for Students, no. 40, Fr. Hebert's edition of selections from the Summa (in Latin), under the title of God and His Works.

The Soviet Impact on the Western World. By Edward H. Carr. Macmillan Co., $1.75.

Prof. Carr, one of England's outstanding political economists, deals with the most controversial question of our era in an unemotional and rational manner. Showing just how the existence of the Soviet Union has forced the United States and Great Britain to make fundamental ideological, economic, political and social changes, he develops the thesis that there is no necessary conflict between the eastern and western modes of democracy and there is much precedence and argument for the intermingling of the two forms of culture. This book should be required reading for a public largely living on a diet of scare headlines.

A Timely Church Congress

by Ernest Victor Kennan

Rector of Emmanuel, Baltimore, and Vice-President of the Church Congress

THE theme to be presented and discussed by the first postwar national Church Congress is "Authority and Freedom in Doctrine, Discipline and Worship." Behind the theme is the historic balancing of the tensions between authority and freedom in our tradition, a synthesis which each passing age has challenged and which must be re-examined and re-stated in our times. In all of life today the tendency is toward some form of authoritarianism, while the human spirit cries out for redemption and for freedom.

The false antithesis of the early years of the present century between the religion of authority and the religion of the spirit has broken down. If the fringes of liberalism have tended to be secularized in the attempt to redeem our chaotic society, the forces of conservatism tend to retreat into the ivory tower of cultus and ecclesiological interests. The desire for a security denied our generation drives men either into the arms of authoritarianism or toward the vagaries of individual eclecticism. The prime problem of community in our world is no less the problem of the Divine Community, and Sion is not a city which is at unity within itself.

Of this contemporary situation all Churchmen are aware. There is an agonizing desire in the hearts of the clergy for a revelation of an evangel for our day. The virus of secularism in the blood stream of the Church with the evident symptoms of the rash of promotional, organizational and statistical blots is being overcome by the antibodies of devotion, of revolt against secular techniques and the seeking of the healing light of the eternal Gospel. The case is now so far advanced that the surgery of deep and disciplined thought is needed to remove from the Body of Christ the malignancy of mutual distrusts and the threat of rapidly growing despair.

An increasing body of the younger clergy, oppressed like their elder brethren with ever increasing demands upon them, bolster their morale and seek refuge in the authoritarian interpretations of Anglicanism. Often without examination of the historical foundations of what Anglicans hold to be of authority in doctrine, discipline and worship, pronouncements and teachings are set forth as the faith of the historic Church. Others assail the traditional Anglican synthesis of the religion of the word and the sacrament, as stated in the formularies of ordination, by stressing the word to the seeming neglect of the unity of the body in the sacrament of the altar. Either position in any other groupings of faith and practice tends to substitute for the genius of Anglicanism, modern developments of the Protestant heritage or incomplete interpretations of the Catholic Revival. Both strains of conviction might ignore the world-wide tension between the secularized world view of the common man and the Gospel of redemption within our Church which, in its accent upon the Incarnation, has a mission to bring within the covenant of grace all the manifestations of our common human lot.

The debate in the House of Deputies on the question of unity with the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., during the last General Convention, marked as it was by charity for leaders of diverse faith, revealed this tension point within the Church, while the national press, stirred by the efforts toward unity in the secular world, excoriated the Church for failing the hurdle. At that time, men of conviction and good will would have broken the Anglican synthesis between the word and the sacrament, with their faith in freedom expressed in unity with diversity, and place the Church within the orbit of Protestant conceptions of freedom, while those of another strain of our tradition stated their faith in terms of the authority of Church order and the sacramental principle. Meanwhile, the observing press, in its own terminology, expressed what might be noted in theological nomenclature as the continuing false and unhappy antithesis between the secular and the religious.

COMMUNITY must have its authority of census, and the individual must have freedom within the accepted authority of communal life. Anglicanism ministering within the current American scene has a contribution for a growing ecumenical Christianity that needs the two facets of divine truth which our Church holds in its concepts of authority and freedom. For our own unity as well, we need to reexamine our historic position. As Bishop Parsons wrote recently, in commending the Church Congress, "The subject (of the national Church Congress, 'Authority and Freedom') is in substance the essence of the problem of unity in our own Church. We cannot have that unity unless we recognize the validity of both categories, and therefore the legitimacy of the position of those who differ because they begin, one with authority and the other with freedom. Anglo-Catholic and Evangical both belong whether we call them by those names or not."

It will be pointed out that in the complex of current attitudes many Catholics will consider freedom as their point of departure, while by no means a few Liberals will maintain their loyalty to authority.

The opportunity to face honest differences of conviction between all points of view within the Church is provided essentially by the Church Congress in the United States.

The theme has been discussed and continues to be studied by the clergy meeting in regional groups in various parts of the Church. Its cogency and relevance at this time is noted in the correspondence of the regional chairmen who report the response of their members. Such groups also lead various of the clergy to the study of theology, while in the discussion of group papers, fellowship conditions thought. The mission of the Church Congress to the laity lags, except at the level of leadership, as Americans shun the study of theology and accent the practical application of Christianity in terms of service too easily degenerating into patterns of secular goals and motivation.

The focusing of study and discussion in a national Church Congress in which both clergy and laity speak their convictions, will, we believe, as in earlier years of the Church Congress, sharpen the awareness of both clergy and laity to the problems of the day and the relevance of the Anglican position re-stated in terms of living issues and instinct with the truth of the eternal Gospel.

To the national Church Congress have been invited men of deep conviction who are known for those convictions. Their papers will state their positions constructively. The discussion of differences will be marked by that tolerance possible only to men of conviction. Common agreements will be arrived at through the action of mind upon mind, such as never can obtain where Churchmen are content to remain warmly complacent beside the firesides of the same opinions.

One has only to read the names of the leaders who will present the papers (page three) to realize how in our day the Church Congress remains true to its initial purposes and continues to bring together without a partisan spirit, but with fervor of belief, the representatives of the many insights within American Anglicanism.

The Church Congress believes it is an instrument of the whole Church for the conditioning of faith and practice by bringing together, in brotherhood and Anglican comprehensiveness, the proponents of differing emphases, to the illuminating and strengthening of the Church, and the facing with deeper faith and wider tolerance the challenge of these critical times.

In such a spirit and to such a national Congress of men of conviction, the clergy and laity are invited to participate, not only by their attendance, but in order that the various voices of faith may be raised and current thinking of the Church be more freely and constructively expressed.

Western New York Committee To Nominate Four Men

Donegan, Heuss, Kennan and Sheerin Approved With Other Nominations from Floor Likely

Edited by Sara Dill

Buffalo, N. Y.:—John K. Walker, vice-chairman of the committee on nominations for Bishop Coadjutor of the diocese of Western New York, on March 29th notified Bishop Davis that the committee would place four names in nomination at the convention which meets at St. Peter's, Niagara Falls on May 19-20.

They are the Rev. Horace W. B. Donegan, rector of St. James' Church, New York City; the Rev. John Heuss Jr., rector of St. Matthew's, Evanston, Illinois; the Rev. Ernest V. Kennan, rector of Emmanuel Church, Baltimore, Maryland; the Rev. Charles W. Sheerin, rector of the Epiphany, Washington.

The committee pointed out that this action will in no wise prohibit nominations from the floor. The man who is elected Coadjutor will become the diocesan bishop on September 1st, succeeding Bishop Davis who retires on that date.

Church Needs

Detroit: — Bishop Emrich emphasized the following needs of the Church in an address at the final session of the round table fellowship of the diocese: more publicity, of the better type, so that the general program of the Church will be known to all people; "Trouble shooters," clergy who have the special knack of pulling parishes out of the hole should be used and then moved along to other places of need; retreat centers should be acquired and kept in year round operation for the use of clergy and laity; reading rooms on main streets should be made available for the public. The Bishop also stated "We must move the church off the side street; for years it stood on the town square but lately it has been pushed onto the back street. We must and we can place it on main street."

Bishop Perry

Providence, R. I.:—The funeral of Bishop James DeWolf Perry, for over 36 years the Bishop of Rhode Island, and for more than seven years the Presiding Bishop, was held here at the Cathedral of St. John. There were more than 800 persons in attendance, with at least 200 others unable to get in. The service was conducted by Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill and Bishop Granville B. Bennett, with Dean Duncan Fraser of the cathedral assisting. Burial was in Bristol where the committal service was read by the Rev. Russell S. Hubbard of Bar Harbor, Me., a nephew of Bishop Perry.

New Secretary

Geneva (wireless to RNS):—Rev. Herbert W. Newell, Anglican who is general secretary of the national council of Churches of New Zealand, has arrived here to become assistant general secretary of the World Council of Churches.

Defeat Bill

St. Paul, Minn.:—Attempts to ban Communists from running for state office under the party label have been defeated in the Minnesota legislature. The house elections committee voted to postpone indefinitely a measure which would have outlawed the Communist party. The committee's action came after educators and labor representatives claimed "the same procedure was used only a few years ago to weaken democracy in Italy and Germany."

One veteran declared, "Once you start this business of barring persons from representation on the ballot under their own party label, you cannot stop. The next step would be attacks on labor unions, then the Jews, then the Catholics, then the veterans."

Church Colleges

Philadelphia:—About 200 alumni and friends of our Church colleges attended a luncheon here on March 29th to hear the Presiding Bishop. "The war is over," he said, "but the crisis remains. The supreme difficulty we confront is that men have lost their hold upon what may be described in the broadest terms as the life of the spirit. The Church college, unashamedly Christian in its worship, emphasis, fellowship and atmosphere has its great opportunity to rise to the need presented by the world crisis. The true significance of the Church college is that it may act as example, as stimulus, as a proof of our conviction that Christ and his truth are vital to every field of life."

Following the luncheon the Philadelphia Divinity School conferred doctorates upon the Presiding Bishop; Bishop Wilner of the Philippines; Bishop John Z. Jasinski of the Polish National Catholic Church, and Bishop Banyard, suffragan of New Jersey.

sponsored by the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, in which a large number of Church leaders took part. A committee called the Conference to Defend Democracy in Florida was set up to work against Jim Crow legislation in each of the six Congressional districts in the state.

Program Building

Omaha, Neb.:—A conference on the relation of the departments of the National Council to program building was held here at Trinity Cathedral, April 9-10, sponsored by the National Council. Officers and department heads of the Council attended along with corresponding leaders of departments in the province and the dioceses of the province.

Consider Ministry

New York: — Students from a number of eastern colleges attended a conference on Christian vocations which was held last week at Calvary Church. The Rev. John O. Nelson, director of the commission on the ministry of the Federal Council of Churches, said that "The world needs ministers who will work for non-material rewards; who will live by a different discipline than most people around them and adhere to a different social code." He also urged improvement of seminary standards, including enforcement of higher student qualifications.

Ellis Van Riper, a member of St. Simon's, Brooklyn, who is an organizer for the Transport Workers Union, declared that the Church has "too many resolutionary Christians and not enough revolutionary Christians." Instead of making prononcements about labor, he declared, the minister should encourage his parishioners to enter the labor movement and at the same time urge trade unionists in his parish to become active in church work.

Toward Unity

Cincinnati, Ohio: — Residents in the Indian Hill section of this city have felt the need of an active church program and an opportunity for their children to receive religious instruction. So, after a survey made jointly by the Presbytery and the Episcopal diocese, a plan has been formulated whereby a parish has been formed, with members from these two Churches and others. The Rev. John U. Harris, former army chaplain and before that on the staff of Trinity Church, Boston, is the minister. A church and parish house will be built eventually.

Bishop Elected

Annandale, N. Y.:—Bishop Frederick L. Barry, coadjutor of Albany, was elected a trustee of Bard College on March 27th. He is an alumnus of St. Stephen's College which became Bard College in 1933. Also elected a trustee was Mr. Andrew Oliver of New York who is a trustee of the Society for the Promotion of Religion and Learning, an Episcopal Church foundation.

Militarism

Philadelphia (RNS): — Criticism of the alleged dominant role being played in U. S. foreign policy of our war and navy departments, "which has contributed to our unsettled international relations," featured the report of the Friends peace committee submitted to the Philadelphia yearly meeting of the Religious Society of Friends (Quakers) here.

"We have been much disturbed over the role of the military in our foreign affairs," the report stated. "It is unique in our history and represents a grave challenge."

Hits Secularism

Boston: — The Rev. David R. Hunter, head of education in the diocese of Massachusetts, told the women's division of the diocesan Church Service League on March 19th that "the secularism of present day America, when properly evaluated, takes on the proportion of a national emergency. Our culture is now one which does not have, nor does it seek, any kind of determining relationship with God.

"Looking at this situation from the Christian point of view, it is difficult to keep one's utterances from becoming feverishly apocalyptic in tone. Man, when separated from God, is at the mercy of selfishness and pride. Apart from God, these basic factors in our being and personality cannot be overcome. They may be disguised or rationalized, they may even be held in check by a sophisticated culture which continues to show a veneer of Christian morality; but there is no force in human personality, when that personality exists apart from God, that can change selfishness and pride into anything other than a different manifestation of the same urge.

"An atomic age which is at the mercy of proud and selfish men is an age which will as surely result in the catastrophic downfall of the civilization which introduced it, as does selfishness in personal interrelationships destroy all friendship and understanding. The home is the indispensable laboratory where people can refashion their rightful and necessary relation to God. The family group can become the God-intended nucleus for society wherein a people learn to live as a group in communion with God."

The Rev. A. Ervine Swift, acting director of the National Council's overseas department, addressed the 300 women delegates from 84 parishes at the afternoon session, giving them a factual account of the problems and the opportunities inherent in the situation in the Far East, and paying a moving tribute to the missionaries anxious to return to their fields where conditions cannot fail of being hard and hazardous.

Mrs. Everett R. Wilkinson presided as president of the Women's Division; and among missionaries present, soon to return to their respective fields, were: Miss Nina Johnson of the Church General Hospital, Hankow, China; the Rev. George C. Bartter of Baguio, Philippine Islands; Miss Jessie Turtle of Japan, now helping with rural work in Doster, Michigan; and Mrs. Bertha Corbin of Liberia.

Urge Vatican Probe

Washington (RNS):—A group of Protestant editors have written Attorney General Tom Clark here repeating a demand they made last November for an investigation of Vatican activities in the United States.

The five editors requested Clark to "immediately call a grand jury investigation to see how the Foreign Agents Registration Act is being violated by the representatives of the Vatican State in America."

They asked that the investigation include "an inquiry into the control of the channels of communication by the Vatican State."

The editors explained they were making the latter request because the Associated Press, the United Press and the New York City newspapers had not given any publicity to their demand for an investigation of Vatican activities in this country.

Also, the editors urged the Department of Justice to make sure that Roman Catholic parochial schools do not "operate as propaganda agencies of a foreign state, namely the Vatican State, in violation of the Foreign Agents Registration Act."

This request was made "in view of the recent Supreme Court decision approving use of public school funds for Roman Catholic schools."

Editors who signed the letter were Emory Stevens Bucke, Zions Herald, unofficial New England Methodist weekly; John W. Bradbury, Watchman Examiner, unofficial Baptist weekly; Stephen H. Fritchman,

. . . AND LIFE

In all its meanings!

This lovely Korean boy has been given a few simple things, and his pleasure has flashed up in his face.

But he is being given far more than these. For he lives in a Christian leprosy colony. He is being given Life in all its meanings: healing for a body that would otherwise be hideously marred, intelligent care, the love of friends, and all the inner beauty and love that the Resurrection means.

Will you make such a gift to another boy or girl like him at a cost of only $30 a year?

Send it today through the AMERICAN MISSION TO LEPERS, cooperating agency of all mission boards.

Reconciliation

Moscow (wireless to RNS:) — Metropolitan Gregory of Leningrad and Novgorod will leave Moscow for the United States shortly after Easter to discuss plans for reconciliation of the Russian Orthodox Church in America with the Church in Russia, it was announced here by Archpresbyter Nikolai F. Kolchitsky, manager of affairs for the Moscow Patriarchate.

Metropolitan Gregory will act as personal representative of Patriarch Alexei in negotiations with Metropolitan Theophilus and other leaders of the American Church. Conferences will be held to clarify terms under which the Russian congregations in the United States, which have been under canonical suspension for more than ten years, will be brought under the spiritual jurisdiction of the Moscow Patriarchate.

The Metropolitan Council of the American Church received a cable from Patriarch Alexei in January saying he had agreed in principle to its demands for complete autonomy.

However, a number of questions must be decided before a reunion agreement can be announced. Among these are the degree of autonomy the American Church will enjoy, and whether or not the Patriarch will permit the American Church to appoint its own bishops without the necessity of his confirmation.

Women Ministers

Toronto (RNS):—If a woman minister of the United Church of Canada sought commissioning at the hands of a bishop of the Church of England in Canada, would she be granted Anglican orders?

This question has been raised by R. C. Chalmers, associate secretary of the United Church's board of evangelism and social service, in connection with the plan for a "mutually acceptable ministry" now being studied by both Churches.

The United Church has more than a dozen women in its ministry, while the Church of England in Canada does not admit women to clerical orders. If the Anglicans don't recognize women clergymen, says Chalmers, how can the ministries be "mutually acceptable?"

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

MRS. FRED BIRTCH
Churchwoman of Detroit

May I express the hope that we may see more from the pen of the Rev. Kenneth Hughes on race relationships (WITNESS March 27). It is stimulating to have someone penetrate the problem to point the motive and propose action. Too many words are written and spoken solely in analysis and criticism—all true enough, no doubt—but the sum total of which only leave readers and workers still struggling without solution to the situation.

In parish life there is a soft-pedaling of any voice that attempts to proclaim a positive program on racial problems, thereby projecting luke-warmness to a point of paralysis. Mere attendance at ineffectual discussion groups may lend a complacent sense of accomplishment but in reality such attendance serves only as an anonymous cloak to cover "a troubled conscience" which may be truly wrestling with the question but afraid to "stand up and be counted."

Mr. Hughes says, "in every moral issue we must take a side. Not to choose is a choice, usually the worse choice." How about churches with white membership, perhaps a Negro community close by, front lawn signs with some such words: "This is a friendly Church—all are welcome." Will the Negro in the neighboring community think it means him? Does it mean all are welcome? Does it mean all are welcome? If so, why not "demonstrate" some Sunday morning and say: "Negroes are cordially invited to worship with us"—and then welcome them. This would be "Christianity taking a stand" and "actively endorsing what promotes the Gospel." Thank you Kenneth Hughes for some road-signs on that almost uncharted highway toward better race relations.

THE REV. ALAN R. MCKINLEY
Rector at Sanford, Maine

I have read the article by Massey H. Shepherd Jr. (THE WITNESS, March 20, 1947.) To start a discussion about Fasting by linking it with the restoration of the Eucharist may, or may not be, good strategy according to one's point of view. It is unfortunate that anyone has to discuss restoring the Eucharist. But if any churches have so far forgotten the meaning of the faith I suppose it is necessary. But when fasting is considered as a stumbling-block to such restoration I can only wonder whether Prof. Massey wants people exempted from fasting by not restoring the Eucharist or whether restoring the Eucharist would be a stumbling-block to those who don't want to fast. What to do? True, there are no specific instructions about fasting in this sacrament, although we are told that one is required to fast for Baptism. He quickly adds that this is only once in a lifetime. What a relief. He then makes light of giving up eating for an hour or two. Does Prof. Massey fast? Does he think that there is virtue in fasting for five hours and no virtue in fasting for two hours? Just where are we to draw the line. Almost every priest of my acquaintance abstains from all bodily nourishment from midnight preceding the day of celebration of the Eucharist until after the last celebration of the day. I do recommend this devotion in connection with the 10:30 celebration and the 7:30 one.

Nobody is required to fast; it is purely a voluntary discipline of the body and, like all true discipline it strengthens the will and clears the mind for the act of devotion. Digging up the apostolic tradition is beside the point. We can dig up anything we want to, to agree with our point of view; but it accomplishes nothing if we do not have some constructive and positive statements to make. Prof. Massey either believes fasting is good for the body and soul, or he does not. If he has not arrived at any conviction yet (and from reading the article, I gather that he has not), the trivial treatment of sources and references is not likely to help anyone else to arrive at a conclusion which will produce any conviction.

The ending of the article with the implication that those who do not fast from food are more likely to fast from sin is so smug that I need only say that it's an old trick and did not start with Robert Herrick. It's the "either . . . or" fallacy, and Prof. Massey ought to know better than to succumb to it. It is "both . . . and" Prof. Massey; we fast and abstain from food to discipline the body so that we may take seriously the challenge "to walk after the Spirit and not after the flesh."

W. H. BORCHERT
Layman of Thief River Falls, Minn.

Let me say that THE WITNESS is doing fine work and I particularly enjoy the editorial page. Your stand for progress is what will save the day for Christianity. The article on Freedom of the Air (March 20) was particularly timely and very much to the point. I agree with you 100%. It gives one courage to read THE WITNESS. Keep up the good work and know that there are more people with you than against you.

The Society for College Work Reviews Its Program

Much Has Been Accomplished on Objectives Over a Ten Year Period Under Able Leaders

By Flora Symons

Washington:—The purpose of the Church Society for College Work is to promote knowledge and acceptance of Christ's religion and in other ways to strengthen the work of the Protestant Episcopal Church in college and university centers; and to establish a fund for this purpose.

Woodrow Wilson was once asked what the purpose of a college should be. His reply was, "Trust your initial impulse." The initial impulse of the Church Society for College Work is expressed in the words above, but this purpose was spelled out into eight objectives. The objectives are the result of the experience of all five men who held the post of secretary for College Work between 1936 and 1945. In other words, all the living ex-secretaries: Leslie Glenn, Brooke Stabler, Thomas Wright, Theodore Wedel, Alden Kelley, and Thomas Barrett, the present secretary.

In the beginning, we called them Immediate Objectives. Ten years later, it is interesting to review them and consider how far they still shine on the horizon. But some progress has been made on the following:

1. To assist in the placement of clergymen, laymen, and women workers who will minister to students in college and university centers; and to increase the number of such workers in places which are undermanned. Ordinarily they will be attached to the local parish. This will be done by advising bishops and vestries when requested; and, where necessary, by making temporary or permanent financial grants from the funds of the Society.

There are 542 clergymen in college communities today who were not there in 1936, and there have been even more changes than this because in some cases perhaps two or three men have been in a given position since 1936. We estimate roughly that there have been about 925 changes. Of this number the Society ventures to think it has had a part to play in about 400. We have helped financially three-fourths of these, or about 300.

The chief difference between 1936 and now is that today the Society is recognized as a helper in such problems, and welcome letters come in every day asking for advice and financial assistance.

2. To develop an adequate and detailed file of clergy interested in and qualified for college work, this in order to advise intelligently about placement.

This has proved to be one of the hardest things of all. Every clergyman, senior warden and bishop has his own file of names which he carries on the back of an envelope in his coat pocket. We have attempted to codify some of these informal lists, but the results are still haphazard.

3. To continue emphasizing the strategic importance of college work to the Church. This will be accomplished by writing and speaking, by publishing pamphlets, and by other means.

We are still far from successful in presenting this missionary aspect of the Church's work. A certain amount has been done, but much of the early writing did not have a wide circulation. It is hoped to get more and more literature into general use.

4. To aid the movement for conferences and retreats. To get students off for a week-end or a longer time for prayer and religious thinking is one of the most effective tools of the Church in an over-busy age.

The Society may have stimulated this, but most of what has been done in the last ten years has been done by local leadership. Operations Uzziah and Mantle will mark our first major effort in this direction.

5. To recruit for the ministry. In all the present-day interest in placement of clergy, disturbed world conditions, discouragement for unfit men, and selections of only the best, every part of the task seems to have its workers except one, namely, the provision of a sufficient number of candidates from which to choose. "Laying hands suddenly on no man" is an ideal often impossible to follow because there are not many from whom to choose.

This is our specific project for 1947-1948, Operation Uzziah.

6. To gather together those committed to the cause of college work for prayer, inspiration, and exchange of ideas. To get college chaplains, rectors, faculty members, headmasters and chaplains of schools together for weeks of prayer and study. Fellowship is a need of the scattered workers in college towns.

This is Operation Mantle which has been presented under Objective Four. However, there have been other notable successes in the past in this field such as the Groton conference and the various provincial gatherings.

7. To raise money for the support of the work. The opportunity presented in most college centers is often a greater one than can be met financially by the local parish, the diocese, or the National Council. Some fund must be available for openings which lack only money for the security of a clergyman or other worker fitted for college work.

We always hoped in the beginning that we might become a foundation with millions in endowment. We will some day, but at present we are going along raising the money for the immediate needs as they arise. One of our problems is to get it out of people's minds that we are a foundation and make them realize how desperately we need many small gifts.

8. To unite in intercession all those who care about the college work of the Church.

The Society has never been simply a cashier's office. Like every work in the Church, it is a fellowship of prayer.

CHRISTIAN OBJECTIVES IN EDUCATION

Northfield, Mass.: — "A positive Christian approach in one corner of a fumbling and nervous world"— This statement was made about the conference on Christian objectives in education held here recently. It was a new venture in New England, combining the resources of two annual meetings which for the past ten years have made significant contributions to college religious leadership.

The New England Episcopal commission on college work and the Student Christian Movement brought together Church leaders, chaplains, faculty members and Christian Association advisers to clarify the objectives, increase the effectiveness and strengthen the fellowship of those concerned with the responsibility of the Church in colleges. Thus, for the first time, the well-known Groton conference for faculty and clergy and the Student Christian Movement staff conference pooled their resources in a common quest.

For the Episcopalians, the conference was opened with a retreat led by the Rev. William S. Chalmers of Kent School. The Rev. Stephen Bayne, Jr. of Columbia University, was chaplain for the whole conference, and Professor John Finley, of Harvard University opened the conference proper with an address on the moral responsibility of education. Professor Theodore H. Greene of Yale gave three addresses on the ideal of a community: its academic and religious ingredients. Members of the conference selected one of six work shop groups dealing with the study of Christian belief, religion in curriculum, religious counseling, program planning and resources, Christian social action and Church student groups. The Rev. Thomas Barrett, Professor Adelaide Case and the Rev. Robert Rodenmayer were among those taking leadership.

RUSSIAN CHURCH HAS SPLIT

New York (RNS):—A split has developed within the Russian Orthodox Church in America over proposed reconciliation with the Moscow Patriarchate. Metropolitan Theophilus of San Francisco, head of the Church, has severed all administrative relations with four prelates who announced they will not recognize the "apostate Red Church" in Russia. The four prelates — all known for their strong anti-Soviet attitude—are Archbishop Vitaly of Eastern America and Jersey City, Bishop Iosaf of Eastern Canada and Calgary, Bishop Ieronim of Detroit and Cleveland, and Archbishop Tikhon of Western America and Seattle.

Metropolitan Theophilus' decision was conveyed to Archbishop Vitaly in a communication dated March 28. Its effect has been to reduce the Church's hierarchy of nine to five bishops, including the metropolitan himself. The other prelates, all of whom favor reconciliation with the Moscow Patriarchate, are Bishop John of Alaska, Bishop Benjamin of Pittsburgh, Bishop Leonty of Chicago, and Bishop Anthony of Western Canada and Montreal.

The Rev. Charles H. Cadigan is chairman of the board of the Church Society and chairman of its commission on recruiting for the ministry

Observers here recalled that the four bishops were originally sent to the United States by the anti-Moscow Karlovtsky Synod and have been consistently opposed to any form of relationship with the Moscow Patriarchate. Their jurisdiction extends over five or six parishes, whereas the other bishops control roughly 350 parishes, with an estimated membership of up to 500,000.

Suspension of the four bishops means that Russian Orthodox in this country are now divided into three factions. The third group is the Patriarchal Church in America headed by Metropolitan Benjamin, who was sent to the United States by the late Moscow Patriarch Sergius several years ago to serve as Patriarchal Exarch. His jurisdiction has never been accepted, however, by more than a fraction of Russian Orthodox.

The new rift in the Church occurs on the eve of a visit to this country by Metropolitan Gregory of Leningrad and Novgorod, who has been delegated by Patriarch Alexei to discuss plans of reconciliation with leaders of the Russian Church in America. Metropolitan Gregory, it was learned, has already received a U. S. visa and is expected to arrive in New York within a month.

WANTS GOOD RELATIONS WITH CHURCHES

Budapest (wireless to RNS):— Hungarian Communists want to establish "healthy democratic relations" with the churches, Matyas Rakosi, Communist Party leader, told a meeting of electors in Sumeg, West Hungary.

Rakosi, who is Deputy Prime Minister in the Hungarian cabinet, denounced as "reactionary propaganda" charges that the Communist party is seeking to destroy religion in Hungary by advocating optional instead of compulsory religious education in state schools.

"The Communist party has shown its goodwill toward the churches," he said, "by insisting that small estates be provided for pastors where congregations are poor. In addition, Communist workers have helped to repair damaged church buildings in many places."

COLLEGE PRESIDENT RESIGNS

Raleigh, N. C.—The Rev. Edgar H. Goold, for thirty-one years the president of St. Augustine's College here, has resigned, effective September 1. Bishop Penick of North Carolina, president of the board of trustees, states that the resignation will be considered by the board at a special meeting to be held in the near future.

ZABRISKIE ADDED TO DELEGATION

New York:—Philip T. Zabriskie, undergraduate at Princeton, has been added to the delegation representing the Episcopal Church that will attend the youth conference to be held this summer at Oslo, Norway. He is the son of the Dean of the Virginia Seminary.

Seminarians Present Ministry To College Students

Enthusiastic Way Seminarians Have Adopted The Program Is Ample Evidence of Its Need

By Hugh C. White Jr.

Washington: — "In primis: the reason that moved me to enter religion (the ministry) is: first, the great misery of the world, the iniquities of men, the rapes, adulteries, larcenies, pride, idolatries, and cruel blasphemies which have brought the world so low that there is no longer anyone who does good." This could have been written by one of the twenty pre-theologues at Kenyon College or by one of the twenty-five men considering the Episcopal ministry at Harvard. Actually, they are the words of Savonarola written to his father the day he entered the Convent of San Domenico in Bologna the 25th of April, 1475. The evil of men is the same today, yesterday, and tomorrow, and the men entering the Christian ministry today are challenged by the crisis of their post-war generation. This is their calling.

Seminarians are keenly conscious of the need for men in the ministry. Eight of our Church seminaries and Union Theological Seminary in New York have organized groups of six to twelve men to make week-end visitations to the colleges in their respective areas. At the invitation of the local rector or college chaplain, they speak with individuals and groups on Christian vocations and the ministry in particular.

This spring, seminarians will visit some 130 colleges to make contact with individuals, have luncheons and dinners with three to five men, speak at student services, and lead discussions on the ministry. They will try to make their visits informal. They are not holding conferences on the ministry. They are aiming at the men who are undecided, and the men who are skeptical because they are ignorant of what the ministry entails. Most college men do not know what a seminary is. They think it is something resembling a monastery, and I have even heard it referred to as a cemetery. Seminarians can speak at first hand of their decision to study for the ministry and what life at seminary is like. One seminarian wrote, after visiting William and Mary College: "The personal meetings were effective in that we were able to sound out the views of the men contacted, and could present a strong, personal view of our own stand, and show them whereby they might be effective in the ministry." Seminarians, being closer to the age of the college group, are more capable of receiving a frank, open, and natural response from the college-age group.

Most of our seminarians today are veterans and have had from two to six years in the armed services. They have a kinship with and a sympathetic understanding of the great number of veterans in our universities. One such seminary veteran visited his alma mater and found five men in his class at the fraternity dinner table. He spoke to them informally about his decision to go into the ministry and what it was like at seminary. One of these old classmates wrote him a nine-page letter two weeks later to say that he had decided to study for the ministry. "I have been thinking of the ministry off and on for the past ten years. You are the first person who has ever spoken to me about the ministry as a life work."

The returned veterans in our seminaries are concerned about recruiting for they feel that failures in the chaplaincy were due largely to "man power." A graduate of Annapolis and a retired colonel of Marines who is a junior in one of our Church seminaries said, "The chaplaincy and the Church as a whole need men of conviction, initiative, and maturity. Such men must be challenged to give their lives."

Seminarians in their deputations to colleges are endeavoring to do three things:

1. Give personal witness of their decision to study for the Christian ministry.
2. Counsel the undecided and challenge the men of conviction, initiative, and maturity.
3. Give a first-hand account of what life at our Episcopal seminaries is like.

The seminarians will endeavor to keep in touch with interested men and those who show promise as potential ministers. They will invite men to visit the seminaries over a week-end or during vacations.

The spontaneous and enthusiastic manner in which our seminarians have taken up this program of recruiting is evidence of its need. The seminarians are not going out with the idea that by a week-end junket they can win five men, or even one, for the ministry. They realize that the real work of directing more and better men into the ministry depends upon the attitude of parents, home parish example and teaching, the associations and teaching in our schools and colleges, the effectiveness of each college chaplain, and, more than any of the above-mentioned factors, the individual's faith in Christ and relationship with him.

Though the spirit truly is a "wind that bloweth where it listeth" there is a sense in which it is a trade-wind steady in certain channels. Surely the Church militant fighting for the kingdom and calling for new leaders is one such channel. Here is a definite call to confront "the iniquities of men, the rapes, adulteries, larcenies, pride, idolatries, and cruel blasphemies which have brought the world so low that there is no longer anyone who does any good."

The nine seminaries cooperating in this program of recruiting hope that their respective groups will be a regular society that can be called on by rectors and chaplains year by year. If you would like one, two, or three seminarians to visit your

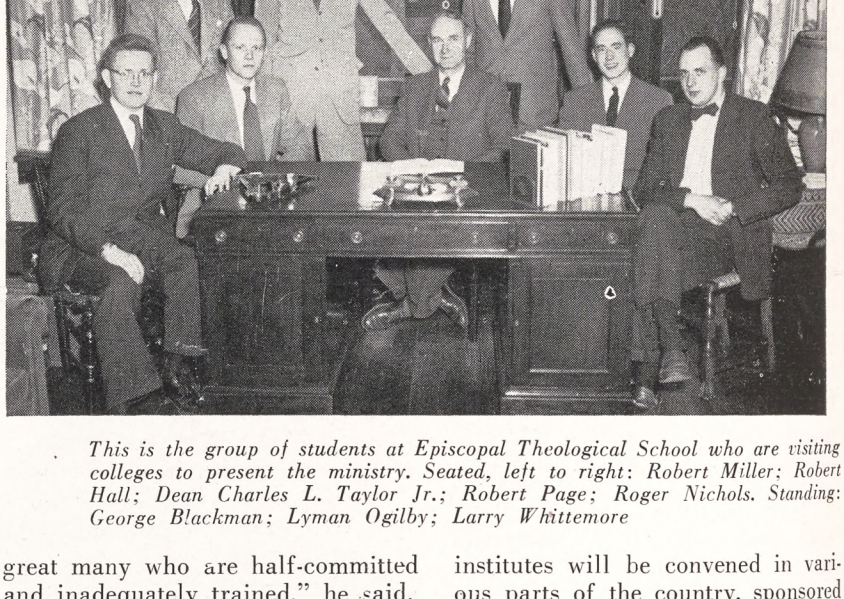
CHURCH CLUB DINNER

New York:—About 500 Church people attended the annual dinner of the Church Club of New York, held at the Waldorf-Astoria on April 10. The speakers were Bishop Powell of Maryland; Hershel V. Johnson, deputy United States representative on the U. N. Security Council, and Bishop Gilbert of New York. Judge Robert McG. Marsh, president of the club, presided.



VETERANS STUDYING FOR MINISTRY

New York: — Veterans training for the ministry constitute 25% of the total enrollment in 119 leading theological seminaries, according to a survey made here by the commission on the ministry of the Federal Council of Churches. The survey also revealed that total enrollment in the seminaries studied has increased from 9,746 regular students in 1940 to 14,001 this year—a gain of 44%. Of the total, 3,437 are veterans. Average enrollment in seminaries has increased from 82 to 118 students per school during the same period, the survey showed.

According to John Oliver Nelson, director of the commission, the present enrollment of veterans, although large, does not tell the complete story of the interest former servicemen are showing in the ministry as a career. A great majority of veterans interested in the ministry, he explained, are still college undergraduates who plan to study at seminaries later. Some colleges and universities, Nelson said, including Princeton, Yale and Ohio Wesleyan, have a higher enrollment of pretheological students than ever before.

"Candidates for church vocations are appearing in numbers not equalled during the past two decades," Nelson declared.

He cautioned church groups and theological schools that growing interest in the ministry by students calls for wise selection of candidates. "The Church is better served with a fewer number of genuinely able, dedicated workers than with a great many who are half-committed and inadequately trained," he said.

DOCTORS FIRED FOR STAND

Waterbury, Conn. (RNS): — Six Protestant doctors said here they had been dismissed from the staffs of three Roman Catholic hospitals in Connecticut for refusing to withdraw from a group of physicians supporting a birth-control measure pending in the General Assembly. The bill would permit doctors to give information on birth control to patients whose health they believe would be endangered by pregnancy.

Drs. Joseph L. Hetzel, John H. Foster, and Arthur H. Jackson declared they were dismissed by St. Mary's Hospital here. Dr. Oliver L. Stringfield said he was dismissed by St. Joseph's Hospital, Stamford. The third hospital named was St. Vincent's in Bridgeport. Two of the physicians issuing the dismissal announcement asked that their names be withheld.

UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCES

Providence, R. I. (RNS): — A series of conferences to familiarize Christian leaders with the principles and purposes of the United Nations will be launched here April 22 when the first regional institute on church strategy and world order is held under the auspices of the Rhode Island Council of Churches. Similar institutes will be convened in various parts of the country, sponsored by local councils of churches in cooperation with the commission on a just and durable peace of the Federal Council of Churches. The second institute has been scheduled for April 30 in Harrisburg, Pa.

UNITY COMMISSION HAS MEETING

Washington:—The joint commission on approaches to unity held its first meeting since General Convention here at the College of Preachers, April 10-12. They considered, among other things, the recent statement of the Presbyterian commission which stated that they had not given up hope entirely of arriving at a basis of unity with the Episcopal Church. Bishop Strider of West Virginia presided as the chairman of the commission.

EDITORIALS

A New Strategy

THE Church should be deeply grateful to the Church Society for College Work for its current drive to recruit men for the ministry. There are few parishes that have not been affected in one way or another by the shortage of clergymen. Many of the smaller ones have had to go without rectors or a priest-in-charge while many large parishes have had to go without curates. At a time when the Church should be able to strike in full force, we are greatly handicapped by lack of clergy. It is to the credit of the Society that it has the vision and faith to institute a drive which is the best possible action at the moment.

In the long run, however, we must develop a new strategy in respect to the vocational decisions of our young people. The primary decision with which every young man should be confronted is "Will I give my life to Christ (or will I withhold it for myself or for some other cause)." If he answers this question in the affirmative, he must decide in what special field he will serve the Lord. The ministry (in the narrow sense of that term) is only one of the fields. At the present moment it is no more important than a number of other fields of Christian service nor is it as difficult and as dangerous as some others.

Unfortunately, the Church has allowed a secondary decision to become the primary one or, at least, to become confused with the primary one. In the minds of most young men the vocational decision, from the Christian point of view, is whether to serve Christ as a clergyman—or not at all. Anyone who has been at young people's conferences will have talked with some young man who is struggling with the problem in just these terms. He has been deeply moved, perhaps for the first time, he wants to give his life to Christ, but for any number of reasons he doesn't feel he can become a clergyman. That there is any other Christian calling, that other fields are just as important to God and that God may want him in one of them are facts which have never been presented to him. The Church has become so desperate that sometimes a young man who asks a question (not necessarily an intelligent one) about religion or shows any interest in the subject is approached on the possibility of his becoming a clergyman.

This whole problem is part of the larger one of developing within the Church a true priesthood of all believers, a ministry of the laity. There is God's work to do in all areas of the common life. When the Church Society for College Work has finished its present campaign, we hope that once again it will take the lead in finding ways of presenting this great truth to young men and women of our country. We are convinced that in the end it is only as part of a campaign to get all men to choose a Christian vocation that we will solve the problem of a shortage of clergy.

Be a Regular

THERE are several thousand Church people who will read this number of THE WITNESS who are not regular subscribers. Many of them are getting their copy at the parish church, but many of these bundles will stop the first of May. We of course are anxious to have you for regular subscribers. So if you would like to have THE WITNESS in your home each week please use the form that is found on page fourteen.

Follow Up

THE most serious criticism of the Church Society for College Work is "there is no follow up." Leave us analyze this remark, as the sergeant used to say in basic training. It does not mean that the Society will be interested in a certain college church for a few years and then drop it. When it gives money to get a chaplain started it is only for the first few years, but that is because the chaplain is usually so good that after a bit he will have so commended himself to the congregation, students, alumni and others that they take over the support. That is understood from the beginning in the agreement with his bishop. The Society's money is pump-priming money and the organization has always believed that if a work was any good it would commend itself locally. Bishop Tucker said that in his travels as Presiding Bishop he was amazed at how much had been accomplished in college work by the small grants of money given here and there to start a piece of work, which from then on was on its own and held its own successfully.

Nor does criticism of lack of follow up apply to getting men placed. There are clergymen who have been pursued for years with offers of jobs in college towns. Every time they run into a member they give a guilty start and say, "Yes, I'll do college work some day. Just leave me alone another five years."

The remark does not apply either to college openings. When you read that things are now going well at last in a certain college town it's no accident. The Society tried to fill that job years ago and can show a letter written in 1937 when old Dr. Go-Lightly was busy on his monograph on Edible Fungi Native to Greene County instead of calling on the students in the college dormitories across the street. Persistent stubborn watching for openings in college towns is one of the best follow ups of the Society.

No, the failure to follow up lies here: Someone comes to Toledo, a lunch is held, a speech is made on college work, all hands leave in a glow. But no one follows that up, and no one ever will. The speaker at that luncheon has a church of his own; he can't give any more time. So if you were at the luncheon it's your job to follow up and hold more meetings and spread the word and try to raise money. The Church Society does not admit failure to follow up; it admits failure to inspire some self-starters. The call to help college work is the call of David—no one else went out to fight Goliath, so David did. One person sets another on fire is the serious word about this, and that is the only way the work spreads.

This does not mean that the Society isn't going to do all it can with the mimeograph, the tea for the Auxiliary, the appeal to the diocesan convention. But the burden is carried by volunteers, each of whom has a parish or a college or a diocese or a business to look after. So if the cause appeals to you, act.

Man and the State

by Stephen F. Bayne Jr.

The Chaplain of Columbia University

"CHRISTIANS and Christian social systems are not good and just; they are sinful like everybody else and every system. What distinguishes them from others is that they recognize this . . . . . " Or, as Eduard Heimann writes elsewhere,* "When in the Bible the Philistines conquer the Jews, this does not prove that the Philistines were right, but that the Jews were wrong. . . . The Jews were elect because God chose to reveal the spiritual character of his creation unto them and through them. This quality of being elect is far from guaranteeing that their behavior and activities will always be holy; it proves historically to be rather a curse than a privilege."

With this rather somber principle of judgment, with which Heimann ends his essay on "Man and the State," we may do well to begin. It is not a case of our self-consciously assuming an attitude of righteousness or humility. Unlike Pooh-Bah, our family pride does not, in these days, require to be denied. We perceive in our world effective challenges to our traditional beliefs which make us acutely uncomfortable. Some of us are uncomfortable exteriorly. All of us, who think at all, are uncomfortable interiorly.

And our discomfort is the curse of which Heimann writes—our recognition that there is no changelessly good and just social system, that the tension between order and freedom is relentless and endlessly pervasive, that we have been living beyond our means ethically, that we must find both a new understanding of principles, of ends, and new social techniques if we are to survive. We may vary in our identification of the Philistines, but the judgment is hardly open to question.

To the ordinary student in college (and he is the soul whom I know best, but I do not think he is unique), that judgment is profoundly real. He sees, as Heimann says, that "the fundamental problem of political life is how to establish equilibrium between freedom and order." He has probably spent some years of his life in a war against one solution of that problem. On his campus he is confronted with other solutions, insistent, logical, and theoretically neat as no presentation of his traditional democracy can ever be. In his own personal life he sees the same problem: he, like society, cannot live for a day without order—freedom is the loser in any conflict—yet freedom is what matters. In the industrial society into which he will shortly go, a society in which order is increasingly a necessity and liberty a luxury, he finds still another instance of the problem.

From the study of history he learns about the marriage of what Heimann calls "the Greek understanding of freedom in the order of the community" and the Hebrew-Christian sense of "freedom from the community." He sees working out in history the dual principles "the powers that be are ordained of God," and "we must obey God rather than man"—order and freedom again. He finds the issue in acutest form in the conflict between Church and State and the uneasy postponement of that conflict in the Reformation and in the post-Reformation experiments.

In all this, I think, he sees one lesson emerging clearly—that the vast power in modern society requires more adequate moral controls than what are now at work. Power is not the villain in the piece. Power is the amoral stuff—economic power, military, atomic, technological, political power. It slips from one disguise to another, and he is not overly deceived by the disguise. But he knows that this gigantic idiot demands control, demands order; and he questions whether the existing pattern of order in his inherited democratic society is adequate to do the controlling and at the same time provide the freedom he seeks in and from the community. Perhaps no pattern can do it.

This is an essay about man and the state, not about college students. But the uncertainty, the "perhaps," is most characteristic of college students and therefore is a factor of transcendent importance in the future of man and the state.

THERE is no question in my mind as to what will resolve that uncertainty. The first requirement is a reaffirmation in new and relevant terms that "liberty is the air which we must breathe for the spiritual realization of ourselves." Heimann assumes that principle. That is not a safe assumption to make. Modern society breeds a spiritual peonage incomparably shameful—you cannot organize society, much less a college curriculum, as if there were no God and expect freedom and responsibility to reproduce themselves automatically. There are too many persuasive alternatives—psychological, economic, philosophical.

The second requirement is a sincere and informed attack on the problem of irresponsible power in society. Heimann cites the example of the helplessness of society "to utilize its own facilities," to manage its affairs so as to provide full employment or to protect its citizens from the consequences of corporate mismanagement. "What democracy requires," says Heimann, "is responsibility of its governors and equal liberty of its citizens . . . Justice includes liberty . . . but liberty guarantees of itself neither order nor a just order. They must be deliberately willed."

That is a magnificent phrase. But it is nothing more than a phrase as long as the Church—which is, in its laity and clergy, the locus of the will of society—does not buckle down to the drudgery of thinking through the ethical problems of modern society and giving people some practical and realistic guidance in these matters. As matters stand, the Church seems a luxury, and not a very useful one—like a Victorian sofa, it represents the best an earlier generation could produce but it won't bear much weight now.

The third requirement is an honest acceptance of the fact of the pluralistic community in which we live. Heimann says, "the same justice which demands equal freedom between individuals demands it between groups as well. This is the principle of pluralist democracy." The problem of the minorities, (and we are all minorities)—the problem of adequate representation—the problem of the obligations of the group to the whole—these measure the degree of freedom between groups.

In all these, the age-old sacramental imperatives of the Christian faith are urgent and insistent. The problem of man in the modern state is not a theoretical problem to anybody; it is acute and personal; but to the Christian it is also a religious problem. Civil liberty, to the Christian, leads inescapably to the costly, responsible, grave freedom of the created spirit under God. The problem of order in society melts imperceptibly into the problem of a cup of cold water given to the Lord. The Christian is never sure which bread he is talking about at any given time—indeed our daily bread, and the order which safeguards it, is in the end the same as the Bread of Life, and the freedom which gave It.

Above all things, the Christian knows that the State is neither bad nor good; it is at best the neutral penalty for man's sins and his freedom. God alone is good. The state cannot make anything good, or anybody. God alone creates and redeems. Therefore we end as we began—"What distinguishes Christians and Christian social systems from others is that they recognize that they are sinful, and are extended the hope that, by taking criticism and blame seriously, they may be lifted to the plane of a new, more just, and more durable life." The hope is great and life-giving. Whether the rising generations will ever hear of it, or trust in it, is another question which only the Church can answer.

This is another in the series of articles based upon the chapters in the book, Christianity Takes A Stand, which may be bought for 30c from THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y. The series will be concluded with the next number with an article by Mr. Philip Murray on Full Employment and one by the Rev. Frederick C. Grant on The Duty of a Christian in the Modern World.

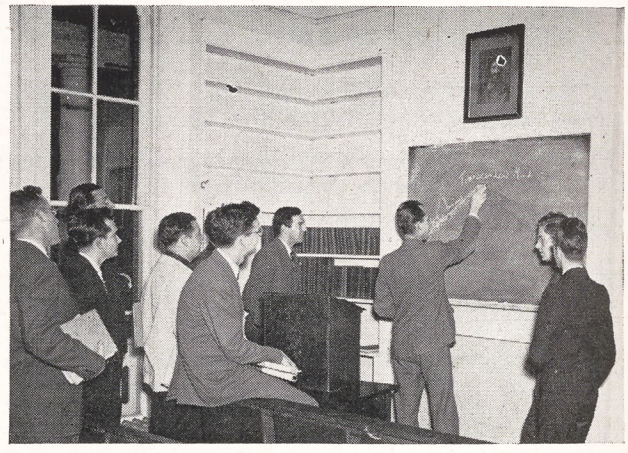
Need for Negro Clergy

By

JOHN M. BURGESS

Chaplain to Episcopal Students at Howard University

FOR lack of clergy, Episcopal Church work among Negroes will not be extended much in the next few years. With at least thirty churches vacant it is useless to think of any advance in this field. At the present time there are only nineteen colored men studying for our ministry, and this number hardly makes up for the normal reduction through death and retirement. That we have opportunities for growth is beyond question. Where the work is adequately supported and realistically planned, our parishes are making a commendable impact upon the Negro community. We find among many of our churches a desire to bring to the people not only an impressive liturgy, but what is more important, a keen interest in interpreting the Gospel and training Christian leadership to meet the aspirations of people who face a disheartening social order. Examples of their success can be found in every section of the country.



In the face of these opportunities it is discouraging to know that we shall be marking time for a while. However there are certain definite things we can do now to correct our present situation and advance our work in the future.

First, we can bring the challenge of the Church's ministry to our college campuses. We dare not sit idly by while a meagre, unpredictable supply filters in. The schools of the American Church Institute, the large centers of Negro education in Washington, Atlanta, Nashville and New Orleans, and the great northern universities are all sources of our best leadership. We must deliberately seek such candidates. More of our college students should be given the opportunity to weigh the possibilities of entering the ministry.

Second, this lack of Negro clergy is a national problem and not necessarily a diocesan one. In some dioceses where there are many colored communicants but few separate churches, bishops are unwilling to accept candidates because there is little possibility of their being employed in their home dioceses. In the face of our great need, a bishop would hardly be left with an unemployed man if he accepts him as a candidate with no prospect of work in his particular diocese. Still, if he is reluctant to accept him on these terms, certainly other bishops would take him if adequately recommended. The office of the secretary on Negro work in the home department could reasonably act as a clearing house to distribute candidates over the Church.

Third, we must demand adequate collegiate training from these men and be prepared to offer them the best theological education. The cultural standards of the Negro community are rising rapidly and if the Church is to maintain its traditional position of leadership and influence there can be no letting down of the bars. Though we are inclined to rush matters because of the critical shortage, the problems will not be solved for tomorrow by filling the gaps with ill-prepared men today.

Fourth, if we are to attract the best type of leadership, the Episcopal Church must testify to an unequivocal stand on those issues that directly concern the well-being of all races and classes. The Church might well follow the example of the YWCA and the National Council of Church Women in implementing high resolutions with effective action. If the Church sincerely wants Negro members, then it must break down those barriers of discrimination that tend to mark them as step-children within the household. We must be prepared to challenge the young Negro with the full power of the complete ministry, and not particularly one "among his own people." There is no logical reason why an "interracial church" should necessarily be an undenominational church, nor why diocesan and national Church administrative and clerical jobs should be held by white people only. Other mission boards are appealing for missionaries, Negroes included, for work in all parts of the world. Until recently it seemed that the Episcopal Church was reluctant to send American Negroes as missionaries even to other Negroes in foreign lands. Are we yet willing to impress the colored youth with the world-wide character of the ministry that we would have him enter?

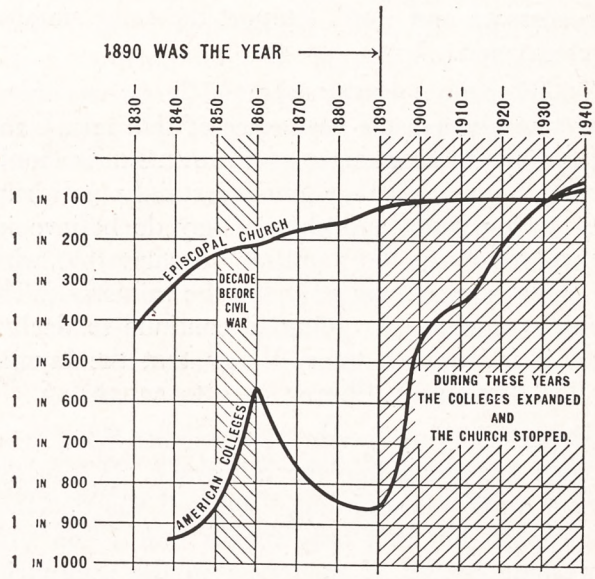
Through wise and unprejudiced planning we can present to our youth the great opportunity that the Church's ministry affords. And we can hope that enough will be interested that bishops can choose carefully among them for the best to do the job.

State of the Church And Its Relation To the College

By

C. LESLIE GLENN



President of the Church Society for College Work

I NEVER know what the state of the Church is until I count something. I never trust my own impressions because I always feel fine. Cheerful optimism pervades every guess I make. So recognizing my sanguine temperament and having once been an engineer and a teacher of mathematics, I always want to add or subtract before giving an opinion.

My first arithmetical observation is that the Church in the United States has not grown in this century, that is, in proportion to the population. In the last century it grew rapidly, but it started a negative acceleration in 1890. That is the very year that the colleges started their phenomenal growth. When the colleges started, the Church stopped. So much is clear from the census and I venture to guess that the two facts are not unrelated.

To those of you who are familiar with graph paper I will report that the curves of Church growth and college growth are always going in opposite directions. For this fact no one will offer as an explanation that religion and learning are incompatible nor that the Episcopal Church is a particular form of Christianity which withers with education. Darwinism, Fundamentalism, Freudianism, dialectic materialism and other current intellectual difficulties are hardly worth mentioning as causes for decline in Church growth compared with what Booth Tarkington's Penrod would call "the main and simple reason." Namely, the boys and girls left strong home parishes for weak college parishes. If the home church is weak, at least it is the church of childhood; but the ineffective college church makes a pitiful contrast with the growing and stimulating university. The state of the Church in general is tied up with the state of the Church in the colleges.

This is confirmed by unquestionable figures—the number of clergymen compared with the population.

There may be many reasons why Church growth stopped in 1890, but chiefest was the Church's failure to minister adequately to the rapidly expanding universities. Note that just before the Civil War the same thing started to happen, but the war set the universities back.

Proportion of Church and College to Population of United States

Year	Church	College
1840	1 in 308	1 in 940
1850	1 in 235	1 in 856
1860	1 in 209	1 in 561
1870	1 in 166	1 in 775
1880	1 in 147	1 in 843
1890	1 in 118	1 in 858
1900	1 in 102	1 in 453
1910	1 in 99	1 in 347
1920	1 in 98	1 in 206
1930	1 in 97	1 in 112
1940	1 in 89	1 in 98

This shows that clergy kept up with the population fairly steadily until 1890. From then on the people increased greatly in proportion to the clergy. Of course, radio and automobiles and telephones and mimeographs enable a modern clergyman to minister to more people than his predecessor could, but this is offset by the decline in the custom of church membership and attendance, and it is not conceivable that these mechanical inventions permit the clergyman of 1947 to be the shepherd of nearly three times as many people as his brother of 1890. The fact is that he does not shepherd these extra people; they are lost. Our communicant figures are really suspect when we claim in them that the clergyman of today is able to care for nearly three times as many communicants as the clergyman of 1890. This could not possibly be true unless we have lost all sense of what pastoral care involves in time given to individuals. The fact is that the communicant figures must be disregarded, and total clergy figures used instead. That is a very accurate count, for at least we know the names and addresses of all the clergymen. Comparing clergy with population shows either an increase in population or a decrease in clergy. Either the modern clergyman is more efficient than his predecessor or modern citizens are less religious than their predecessors and won't support the same number of clergymen.

Today, people won't support a clergyman unless they like him (in the best sense of that term) and believe him to be doing a good work. But it should hastily be added, they most certainly will support a clergyman and church they do believe in. So we return to the familiar chestnut that what we need is good men only for the ministry. The number of clergy is going to continue to decline until it is down to those clergy that the laymen of this democratic Church care to support.

Hence the very pertinent question: What kind of men are going into the ministry? If you ask me for a personal opinion, I will tell you that they are superb but that only means that I can give you some names of men now in the seminaries who are as fine as any I have ever known. I don't know the rest, but I am optimistic and they all look good to me. The first post-war class is superlative.

Some of you, however, may have been looking for curates or rectors lately and may be willing to put up with more arithmetic. This time from the Bible, abridged and reversed. The four fat and well favored post-war years that the seminaries are going to have under the G I Bill will only make up for the four lean and ill favored years of World War II, when the seminaries were practically empty.

The heart of this college generation has been touched with fire, as Justice Holmes said of another war generation years ago; but what happens after this? The war is not the war with Germany and Japan. Who will explain that? How is the Church to get clergymen for the great expansion before her in the next twenty-five years? Only by further efforts to reach college men. Strengthen the churches in college towns, increase the number of clergy ministering to students. By count, more present-day seminarians found their vocation in college, or in the army or navy, due to the chaplain, than found it under any other influence. The college chaplain is the person to get the men the Church needs.

Here the statistics are encouraging. I have not tried to count the places that were doing good work ten years ago that are doing nothing now, but from acquaintance across the country I can think of only five or six. On the other hand, there have been a large number of rectorships in college towns filled by interested and able men in the same ten years, and alumni concern is manifest in many quarters. Bishops and churchmen generally are alert to the opportunities. Three hundred and eight new clergymen have gone into college churches or chaplaincies in ten years, most of them with the primary purpose of reaching the college and many of them able to show clear results.

Every reformation in the Church's history was effected by new men. Wise popes did not try to change the clergy, but looked for new ones. St. Francis and Ignatius Loyola started over again with the laity. Oliver Cromwell developed his New Model Army out of new recruits before he was ready to fight.

Students at William and Mary College talk things over with the Rev. F. H. Craighill Jr., the Episcopal chaplain

The most hopeful sign of the state of the Church is the way people's eyes are fixed on future leadership.

THE Church Society for College Work, founded only ten years ago, though dreamed of by many persons for twenty years before that, has focused a scarcely dreamed of interest on the part of the Church in this field. In this Society there is at last a union of prayer and work for this cause, and if money is any index of enthusiasm, nearly $40,000 is raised each year for supporting chaplains to students.

However, let us be realistic. Allow the mathematician once more to correct the advocate. A grain of mustard seed and a little leaven are hopeful signs to us preachers because we know what they may become if planted in the ground or in the dough. But the metaphor-scrambling mathematician warns against counting chickens before they are hatched, or seeds before they find rootage, or leaven before it sets overnight.

There is a stirring in our Church, and our Church is more alert to this than any other, Roman or Protestant, but two warnings must be sounded.

1. Almost nothing was done, until the day before yesterday, for the intellectual side of religion in our colleges. Effective rectors and chaplains in college towns means some measure of pastoral oversight for student, but we must not deceive ourselves into thinking that we are offering a teaching ministry equal to the teaching offered in the classroom. We are just beginning to supply the great numbers of lay professors of philosophy, history, the Bible, theology, sociology and psychology who are convinced Christians and whose courses for undergraduates will at least give an opportunity for information on Christianity for the adult mind. When we do, the dream of Christian education will be fulfilled as it is far from being fulfilled today. Christians mature in heart, soul, and mind.

2. The second warning is about missionary interest. Without any investigation, I will announce the statistic that one sermon every two years is preached about missions in every college chapel (i.e., the official college chapel, as distinguished from the local Episcopal church where our chaplains preach).

If you wonder what is happening to missionary giving, consider that 300,000 men and women graduate every June who have heard two sermons on the subject in four years (if they went those Sundays). Perhaps the missionary enterprise will always have as its backbone, as Bishop William Lawrence used to say, the ladies sewing in the basement of the parish church. Certainly it will get no help from college graduates without a process of re-education. We have made almost no effort from our Church Missions House to teach students about missions or to recruit them for the field. The thin red line of new rectors and chaplains won't do much for missions for a long time to come. We'd better still place our confidence in the Woman's Auxiliary.

The leaven has to set in the dough a spell, and yet it's there. That is the important fact. There are 1,500 colleges and universities in America, and the leaven is in 537 of them. Ten years ago it was in 229. Even a mathematician will permit himself a faint smile of encouragement.

Nor is this the leaven of the Pharisees, who were always looking for an outward sign. For the work in the colleges today is a deep work, rooted in prayer, and making inward as well as outward progress.

I would like to end on this note, but I can't. (The choir often tells me I miss good places to stop my sermons.) This must go on for I am afraid it may fall into the hands of my friends at Columbia, Williams, Louisiana State, U.C.L.A., Iowa State, Yale, Howard, Vassar, Winthrop, Harvard, or two dozen other places. They do not feel like farmers sowing seed or housewives waiting for dough to rise. They feel like fighters. There is a struggle going on today for the rich prize of the undergraduate mind. If the college is a field, it's a battlefield, not a wheatfield. Professors are not absent-minded dreamers walking along elm-shaded paths carrying green bags. They are protagonists, on one side or the other, in a contest that every day increases in intensity—democracy versus communistic fascism, idealism versus cynicism, spiritualism versus materialism. Every issue in the modern world makes for the university, because there is the future. And the Christian Church is fighting for that same future. Fighter is a better metaphor than farmer because there isn't much time left.

New Books

Excellent Good *Fair

The Predicament of Modern Man and Foundations for Reconstruction.* Both books by D. Elton Trueblood. Harper's. $1 each.

The first named is a masterly diagnosis of the situation in which we find ourselves and the way out, by the professor of philosophy at Earlham College, formerly chaplain and professor of philosophy at Stanford University. The second book is an application of the Ten Commandments to contemporary life. These two books of scarcely more than a hundred pages each are challenging and stimulation to preaching and teaching. If you haven't read these two books I recommend that you hurry to buy them. —George B. Myers.

The Resurrection of Christ.* By A. M. Ramsey. Westminster, $1.00.

Another important contribution to biblical theology. Unlike older studies, which seem determined to prove either that Jesus did not rise or that he was not changed, this work emphasizes the positive meaning of the resurrection.

The Society for College Work Sponsors Conference

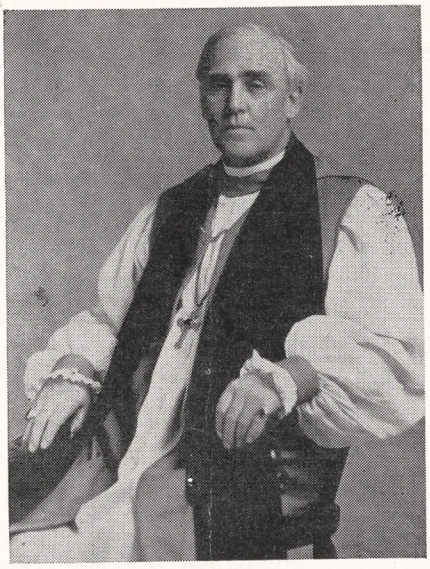
Those Teaching or Planning to Teach Religion In Colleges to Meet at Virginia Seminary

Edited by Sara Dill

Washington: — The Church Society for College Work is sponsoring a conference for ordained college teachers of religion and graduate students who plan to teach religion in college, including twelve of the Episcopal clergymen now working for their doctorates at Union Seminary. This will be held at the Virginia Seminary sometime early in May. The purposes of the conference are to explore problems of placement, to examine reasons which favor or handicap ordained Episcopalians in the various colleges, to discuss several colleges where the administrations might be persuaded to appoint Episcopalians as teachers of religion.

To make clear the Church Society's interest in college teachers of religion as well as in college pastors and chaplians, to explain that in general this is a new emphasis and an additional strategy from the point of view of the Church Society, to suggest that this first sizable group organize as a special group within the Church Society and lead the way in the teaching field.

To discuss responsibility of teachers of religion to recruit for the ministry, to support conferences on the ministry by their attendance and by sending their able students, and by encouraging their students to visit the seminaries while they are still undergraduates.



World Relief

New York:—St. George's Church here has contributed $7,200 in cash and about 400 items of material aid to the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief. Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, chairman of the workroom, said that attendance there has varied from 75 on the lowest day to 114 on the highest.

Artificial Insemination

London (wireless to RNS):—British churchmen and doctors are divided as to whether "test tube" babies should be encouraged, according to a series of discussions sponsored by the British Morality Council, a report of which has just been made public here.

The Council, organized by churches and sociologists under the chairmanship of the Rt. Rev. John W. C. Wand, Anglican Bishop of London, said the report was released so readers might "arrive at a balanced judgment of the issue."

Archbishop Derwyn T. Owen, Primate of the Church of England in Canada, died of a heart ailment on April 9 in Toronto in his seventieth year

Most churchmen, according to the report, denounced artificial insemination as "degrading and adulterous unless the donor is the woman's husband." On the other hand, some doctors said the practice is "often justifiable because it will bring into many homes happiness where unhappiness previously existed, and tends not to destroy but to safeguard the marriage."

Dr. Thomas G. Dunning, director of education, temperance and social service of the Baptist Union, said he felt that "religion should sanction artificial insemination from a husband." The Rev. J. C. Heenan, a Roman Catholic priest, and the Rev. G. L. Russell, of the Church of England, both condemned the practice. A number of lawyers argued that children born after artificial insemination by a stranger are illegitimate.

Dr. Mary Barton, a gynecologist, said 300 "test tube" babies have been born in England during the last five years as the result of artificial insemination by strangers, and "thousands" after artificial insemination by husbands. She added that 10 per cent of all British marriages are infertile, and adoption, in 70 per cent of cases, would not satisfy the woman's maternal instinct.

College of Preachers

Washington: — Canon Theodore O. Wedel announces a number of interesting conferences at the College of Preachers. In Easter week college workers of the 3rd province met, with Prof. Edward McCrady of Sewanee the main lecturer. Others were the Rev. F. H. Craighill, the Rev. J. Clemens Kolb, Canon Wedel, Miss Katharine Duffield, Miss Helen Turnbull and the Rev. Thomas V. Barrett.

This week the Rev. Otis R. Rice of New York is leading a conference on the pastoral ministry; next week, April 21-26, Dean Zabriskie of Virginia Seminary leads a conference on Hooker, Maurice and Dubose, Anglican theologians.

Dom Gregory Dix, British liturgical scholar and the author of The Shape of the Liturgy, will be at the college the entire week of April 28 to lead a conference in a study of doctrinal and liturgical tensions; ancient and modern. Dean Charles L. Taylor of the Episcopal Theological School is the leader of a conference on Old Testament theology, May 19-24; the Rev. Percy L. Urban of the Berkeley Divinity School heads the conference the week following, and from June 2 to 7 the Rev. John Bennett of Union Seminary directs a meeting on the gospel and society. Finally from June 9 to 14 the Rev. Charles W. Lowry of All Saints', Washington, leads a conference on the Christian doctrine of God.

In addition the college will be host to a number of smaller gatherings, including the National Cathedral Association and the yearly conference on management and labor sponsored by the Presiding Bishop.

Bard Chorus

Annandale, N. Y.:—The Schola Cantorum of Bard College, a chorus of sixty students, will give a recital of sacred music tonight, April 17, at the Church of the Heavenly Rest, New York. The program will include the Requiem by Gabriel Faure and the Alto Rhapsody by Johannes Brahms. Admission is free and without ticket.

Heads Council

Newark: — Bishop Theodore R. Ludlow of Newark is the new president of the New Jersey Council of Churches. Dean Arthur Lichtenberger of Newark continues as chairman of the Council's department on social education and action.

Summer Session

Berkeley, Cal.: — A five weeks summer term will be offered at the Church Divinity School of the Pacific. It is primarily for veterans who desire to accelerate their preparation for the ministry. The first period of two and a half weeks opens June 23 and the second July 10. All the members of the faculty will give courses.

Discuss Politics

Lewiston, Maine:—The first political emphasis week ever held on a college campus was concluded recently at Bates College. Sponsored by the Bates Christian Association to stimulate student interest in political issues and problems and to try to discover "the role of Christian students in political activities," the week was highlighted by the address of Governor Horace Hildreth of Maine, and by assembly pro-

The Eloquence of
receives another tribute

The Rev. Mr. Hoffman, minister of Christ Church, writes:

"Your 'Carillonic Bells' has been in operation in our church for almost a year, and there has been fulsome praise not only from our own members but also from other groups in the city. There is simply no comparing them with the old tubular chimes we used before —'Carillonic Bells' is so much superior. It not only adds to worship on Sunday, but also extends the message of the gospel for miles from our tower daily."

In choosing a carillon, as the voice of your church, choose by ear. It is this test, this factor of audible beauty, that has decided hundreds of churches, schools and colleges in favor of CARILLONIC BELLS. Its richer tone and beautiful clarity are beyond rivalry, achieving a musical brilliance impossible with ordinary bells or chimes.

CARILLONIC BELLS can be installed in your church tower without additional construction. For further details write us, at Dept. W-22.

grams, dormitory discussion groups, radio programs, library exhibits, a student opinion poll, and other special events. The issues considered during the week concerned international affairs with particular emphasis given to the Greek crisis, disarmament, and the development of federal world government.

Governor Hildreth's address, calling for students to assume their responsibilities for "vigorous, aggressive leadership" as Christian citizens, keynoted the week-long program designed to furnish not only an informational background to the issues considered, but also, a significant motivation for student political action.

At the conclusion of political emphasis week, F. William Stringfellow, organizer of the program, commented that the experiment in student political activity was so successful that it would become a regular event at Bates. Stringfellow, who was recently named one of the five delegates from the Episcopal Church to the world conference of Christian Youth to be held in Oslo this summer, said that "it is hoped that other colleges will join us in this kind of program in an attempt to more clearly evaluate the relation of the American student to political affairs in view of the social ideals and political implications of Christianity."

Churches Act

Austin, Texas (RNS):—The Austin Council of Churches has petitioned the city council to deny utility services to any addition or subdivision that discriminates against any religious group. The church request followed a stormy three-hour city council meeting at which three councilmen strongly denounced sub-dividers of two new additions, just outside the city limits, for the inclusion of anti-Semitic restrictions on the ownership and occupancy of property. Developers of the property had applied to the council for the extension of city utility service and entrance to the sub-division through a city park. Action on both requests was postponed, but the city council indicated it would deny the requests unless the religious discrimination stipulations were removed. Developers have indicated they would comply with the city's request.

Represents Council

Atlanta, Ga. (RNS):—The Rev. Forrest Cleburne Weir, of Miami, Fla., was installed here as southeastern representative of the Federal Council of Churches. Speakers at the investiture included Charles P. Taft, Episcopalian and president of the Federal Council and Bishop Arthur Moore of the Methodist Church.

Mr. Taft said the greatest social need of the church is acquiring "knowledge of the techniques of cooperation." He was critical of "the churches' failure to aid laymen with their everyday problems," and proposed that the Federal Council mobilize united American lay thought to influence world politics.

Bishop Moore asserted that "a sectional, factional, divided Church cannot cope with secularism, nationalism and materialism. A warring Church won't produce a warless world. There are many demands for comradeship, none for competition."

Gifts Received

New York:—The Rev. P. H. Vogel, secretary of the foreign relations department of the Old Catholic Church in Austria has notified the National Council that packages sent by the Presiding Bishop's Fund have been received by congregations in Linz and Ried, Upper Austria. Also the Presiding Bishop has received a letter from Bishop Eivind Berggrav, Primate of the Norwegian Church, expressing gratitude for help received.

JAMES M. STONEY
The Bishop of New Mexico and Southwest Texas

I was happy to see the excellent article "The Clergy Shortage" by Dr. Taylor in your issue of March 27. The situation is serious and should be called to the attention of our young men as earnestly as possible. Dr. Taylor's statements are correct, of course, but it is not quite so desperate as the bare facts would indicate. There has been a steady trend of population to the cities during the past fifty years which means that congregations are larger and there are not so many of them. Though the numbers in the church may be increasing all out of proportion to the numbers of the clergy it is a fact that when people are gathered together in large numbers we do not need as many ministers to look out for them. For instance, in the District of New Mexico and Southwest Texas we have slightly over five thousand communicants. If these were gathered together in ten parishes, ten clergymen would be sufficient. But as they are scattered over 154,000 square miles of territory, in over 50 groups, it takes three times that many merely to cover the field.

The lack of recruits during the past few years is serious but it is a delay rather than a total loss. Many of the men who refused to take advantage of their exemption and went into the military service are now in the seminaries and soon we will have a goodly number ready for work. Some of these prospective clergymen changed their minds and will never enter the ministry but there are many others who decided for the ministry while they were in the army.

The temptation to lower the educational requirements to meet the immediate emergency is certainly great, but there is ground for argument with regard to the type of training that is needed. When I was in seminary, many years ago, we seemed to learn everything except the things that we needed, to run a parish. It may be that the seminaries are giving a more practical training now, but my generation of theological students were pitched into their work without knowing much about the management of a parish, the conduct of Church School, the organization of parish life or the deeper problem of personal dealings with individuals. From the standpoint of dealing with the ordinary rank and file of church members these things are of far greater importance than the purely intellectual training that used to be given. The Church needs a great many more practical parish priests and not so many expert technicians.

I think too, that the seminaries have failed to impress our young men with the fact that the smaller places, particularly in the rural areas, are of equal importance and dignity with the more prominent parishes in the cities.

We definitely need more clergy and we need well trained men but the type of training apparently needs to be re-studied.

MR. ALEXANDER L. TINSLEY
Layman of Plainfield, N. J.

I call your attention to the advertisement in THE WITNESS headed "The Guild of All Souls." I cannot reconcile myself to this. Prayers for the dead on the part of relatives and friends and collectively by the Church is one thing, and apparently has never been objected to by the early undivided Church. It is too personal, sacred and voluntary a matter however to be bought or sold. The fruits of the latter practice are evil as shown by the history of the Roman Catholic Church. I can but see in this advertisement an attempt, whether conscious or not, to have us follow the example of that Church. The time to check this trend is in the beginning.

MR. MARTIN V. FRANKS
Layman of New York City

It is a great comfort to many of us that there is at least one Church paper that deals with the matters that concern our daily lives. The issue of April 3, just received, is a case in point. The analysis of the Greek situation by A. J. Muste was excellent and his program thoroughly Christian. As I read the daily papers it becomes increasingly clear to me that our representatives in Moscow are bent upon war, quite regardless of the concessions the Russians are making. It was also good to learn in this same number of THE WITNESS that there are those on the commission of a just and durable peace who are unwilling to stand quietly by while Mr. John Foster Dulles leads them along the war path.

THE CHURCH SOCIETY FOR COLLEGE WORK

"OPERATION UZZIAH"

Why "Operation Uzziah"? We lift the idea from Isaiah's great Chapter Six which begins, "In the year that King Uzziah died." That was a very bad year for Judah, and yet it was in that year that Isaiah had his vision.

This is a bad year for our world. Men's hearts are failing them for fear of things which are coming on the earth. But need it be sheer disaster? May it not be glorious opportunity? This may be the very time when many young men will catch a vision of God and answer His call to the ministry. Now is our chance to say to them: "Who knoweth whether thou art come to the Kingdom for such a time as this?"

At any rate, the Church Society for College Work has this vision. We propose to go ahead quietly but on a wide scale throughout the country and present the claims of the Christian ministry to college students, especially to returned servicemen, and to young men in business. If they catch the vision and give themselves to leadership, the times will be faced, let them be dark as they may.

What Is the "Church Society," and What Is It Doing?

The Church Society for College Work was incorporated in 1935 to promote the knowledge and acceptance of Christ's Religion and to strengthen the Church's ministry to college students, and to solicit and disburse for this enterprise.

The Church Society has these definite objects: (1) Help Bishops find and place the right kind of worker (clerical and lay) in college centers and assist them with our funds, where needed. (2) Stress the strategy of Church college work by literature and conference. (3) Recruit men for the ministry, but only the best according to proven standards. (4) Gather the supporters of college work for prayer, inspiration and exchange of ideas. (5) Unite in intercession and supply with information all those who care about ministry to students.

If you think this is worthwhile, if you want to join us, please fill in the blank below, tear off and send to us:

Rural and Industrial Problems Faced By Seminarians

The Situations in Both Require Imagination And Determination on Part of Church Leaders

By Fred Harriman
Student at the General Seminary

Philadelphia: — Eighty-two students from nine Episcopal theological seminaries met at the Philadelphia Divinity School, April 11-13, to consider rural problems and industrial relations. The conference opened with a service at which the Rev. E. Frank Salmon, rector of Holy Trinity, told the men that there has been a decided advance in "the social consciousness and social conscience" of the Church in the past 25 years.

The students, the following morning, divided into two meetings, with panels on the two subjects before the conference, with Bishop Horstick of Eau Claire the chairman of the rural panel and the Rev. Cuthbert Simpson, professor at General, the leader of the panel on industry. In the former the Rev. E. Dargan Butt, lecturer on rural work at Seabury-Western, declared that the 57 million persons are rapidly becoming pagans, with the Episcopal Church hardly touching this vast group. He said that a great part of the difficulty is that the Church is sending to rural areas only the very old, the very young, or the misfits, and that the Church must develop and foster rural vocations, with adequate pay for the work.

Prof. J. W. Nicholson of the Bishop Payne Divinity School warned against attempting to translate urban Church life to the country and recommended that a rural church must operate in terms of definite objectives based on a study of the community.

The Rev. Russell S. Hubbard, rector at Bar Harbor, Me., pointed out that there are two major divisions in rural communities: the extensive commercial farming of a highly organized and efficient agricultural industry and the subsistence farming of the poor community. In the latter, he said, there is a definite relation between soil erosion and soul erosion, with a high rate of immorality and an almost total lack of social consciousness. He declared that less than 17% of rural America has any Church connection, and that much of this was of a doubtful sort. In the more substantial areas the pagan influences of urban areas are a strong factor, but there is a greater sense of community life. He gave many illustrations from his experience in South Dakota and Maine which made the need for missionary work clear and challenging.

The addresses were followed by discussion, with students from rural areas giving additional data and illustrations, to complete the picture of the situation in town and country which offers such a challenge and opportunity. It seemed clear from the panel discussion that the crux of the rural Church problem is to supply the areas with a sufficient number of priest and other professional workers.

Prof. Robert Dentan of the Berkeley Divinity School opened the panel on industry and declared that work to have value in the Christian sense must have purpose. This requires, among other things, not minimum wages to permit maximum profits, but a wage that will permit the highest development of personality for the individual.

The Rev. W. B. Spofford Jr., executive secretary of the CLID, declared that the rise in prices, the disproportionate rise in profits, the impending economic collapse partly due to the removal of price controls, the continued strikes for higher wages which never will catch up with living costs, all point to a socialized, planned economy as the only alternative. Under our conflict economy, he said, collective bargaining, which serves as a temporary stabilizer, continually breaks down because of the increasing power of management. In fact management is so powerful today that many in that group seek to smash unions entirely.

Prof. Joseph F. Fletcher of the Episcopal Theological School spoke of the disappearance of "community" due to de-personalization and the family's loss of many of its traditional functions which require that the Church work in the new situation with new means. Chaplains for industrial firms, he declared, have real possibilities of reviving the prophetic ministry through the interpretation of Christian principles to labor, management and government. He declared also that well trained and consecrated laymen could play a vital part in this work, and often could speak more effectively than ordained ministers. He said that the Church must face economic and social problems and be prepared to act progressively.

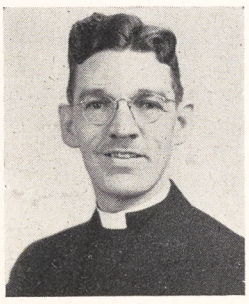
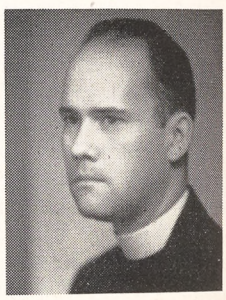
The final speaker on industry was Prof. A. T. Mollegen of the Virginia Seminary who stated that the crisis facing the country and the world is serious and inevitable. He said that the Christian is obligated to take his stand on every political and social issue and to bear witness to a Christian interpretation.

Following the panels the students held a plenary session on rural work and then one on industry, with summaries first given by the chairmen of the panels. The discussions were characterized by keen interest and enthusiasm, with occasional healthy disagreements. The speakers spoke frankly and faced facts squarely. The general impression one got was of a Church that is providing a completely inadequate ministry in both fields, but of situations that may be corrected with straight thinking, imagination and determination.



At the close of the conference the students met under the chairmanship of Theodore J. Jones, student at the General Seminary, and voted unanimously to hold a similar interseminary conference annually. They voted also that those attending the various Church training schools for women should be invited to participate. A continuation committee was organized, with Henry A. Seaman of Virginia as chairman, William A. Eddy Jr., of General, secretary, and with one representative from each school. A proposal that the conference assist in creating rural missions and in furthering the work of industrial chaplains, particularly by vacation work, was referred to the committee.



Features of the conference were an illustrated lecture on rural work by the Rev. W. F. Allison of the diocese of Newark and an address by Prof. Fletcher on his recent trip to Europe. He declared that there is a definite swing to the left in politics, discernible in England and much more patently discernible on the continent. He stated that the English are quite convinced that free enterprise can never be revived and they look to America as trying to enjoy an anachronistic luxury while the rest of the world starves. He also stated that, viewed by the laboring classes, the Church is hopelessly allied with the conservative classes and that churches in England have never been so empty. On the continent, he said, the situation is worse, with the Churches, Protestant and Catholic alike, making common cause with every reactionary movement.

He declared that Europe fears America since the people there realize that we have unprecedented power, and they fear that this power cannot be controlled by a country which insists upon unilateral control of a growing stockpile of atom bombs.

The address was received by the students with mixed emotions but with stirring interest on the part of all and there were few if any delegates who did not agree that this talk was the high spot of the conference. It pointed up the urgency of the considerations before the men and gave to the deliberations an appropriate worldwide frame of reference.

Leaders at the Interseminary Conference included the Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher of the Episcopal Theological School; the Rev. E. Dargan Butt of Seabury-Western Seminary; the Rev. Robert Dentan of the Berkeley Divinity School

CONFERENCE ON WORLD RELIEF

New York:—Presiding Bishop Sherrill and Bishop Gilbert of New York, together with a small group of lay men and women, met with the Rev. J. Hutchinson Cockburn, director of the department of reconstruction and interchurch aid of the World Council of Churches on April 15. He set forth the tremendous needs throughout the world, especially in Europe, along the lines set forth in the story found elsewhere in this number by Bishop Larned, written from Geneva.

Among those attending the meeting were Bishop Ludlow of Newark; the Rev. Horace W. B. Donegan of New York; Dean Arthur Lichtenberger of Newark; the Rev. Roscoe T. Fouse, editor of THE WITNESS; the Rev. Henry Darlington of New York; the Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins of Connecticut; the Rev. Randolph Ray of New York; the Rev. Louis W. Pitt of New York; Messrs. John Glenn, E. Townsend Look, Mrs. Kendall Emerson, Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce and Miss Edith M. Denison, all of New York.

LAY GROUP DRAFTS STATEMENT

Bernardsville, N. J.:—A small group of laymen of divers backgrounds, met here March 29-30 at St. Martin's House to consider their function as laymen. They united at the close on a statement which stresses the need for living "a Christian life positively, boldly and constantly" in all areas of life. Special stress was laid on the importance of Christian education among children and young people. They also endorsed "the proper use by the Church of all modern public relations facilities."

The conference was under the auspices of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew which is holding similar meetings in various parts of the country.

ROBERT F. GIBSON JR. MADE DEAN

Sewanee, Tenn.:—The Rev. Robert F. Gibson Jr. is the new dean of the School of Theology of the University of the South. He succeeds the Rev. Fleming James. The Rev. Robert M. Grant will continue as acting dean until Mr. Gibson arrives in July. At present he is liaison officer for the National Council for the Church in Mexico, and prior to that was on the faculty of the Virginia Seminary.

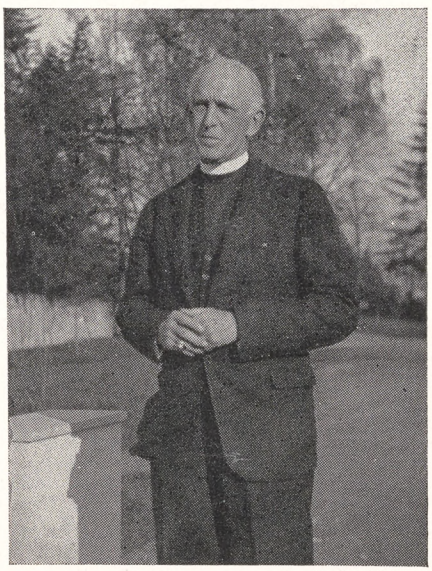
Tremendous Needs of Europe Faced at Conference

American Bishop Tells of Most Significant And Inspiring Experience as Leaders Meet



By J. I. Blair Larned

Bishop in Charge of the American Episcopal Churches in Europe

Geneva, Switzerland (air mail): —I have but recently returned from the annual conference of secretaries from the "giving" and "receiving" countries—all vitally concerned with the needs of Europe at the present moment. Organized under the leadership of the department of reconstruction, rehabilitation and interchurch aid, this conference must ever remain an indelible memory to all who were privileged to attend. From the "giving" countries there were those who spoke for Great Britain, Canada, Sweden, Switzerland and the United States. From the "receiving" countries delegates came from Austria, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Holland, Hungary, Italy, Norway, Poland and Roumania, to express their heartfelt thanks for the great help they had received, but also to outline the desperate needs they faced in the immediate future. Present, also, were representatives of the YMCA, WYCA, WCSF, the British and Foreign Bible Society, Friends and Brethrens' committees. The heads of the various divisions of our reconstruction department also presented their reports. Throughout six days of morning, afternoon and evening discussions we listened to a moving description of desperate needs, but likewise to the story of world-wide sacrificial effort to meet those needs.

I know that our Church at home is now engaged in the effort to raise the million dollars we have pledged through the Presiding Bishop's Fund. I am sure we shall meet that goal. But when we heard that the budget for Church World Service was twelve million for this year, and that only eight million was in sight it is all too evident that we, and all other participating Churches, must strive to the utmost to surpass our self-appointed objectives. How easily this would be accomplished if only those at home could have listened in at our conference, heard reports of the efforts of the "giving" countries, and the detailing of the tragic emergency needs of those "receiving" countries who so pathetically await our help!

Think of this little country of Switzerland—a population half the size of that of New York City — contributing its hundreds of thousands of francs to general relief, sending thousands of books in many languages to pastors and institutions, affording continuous hospitality to so many European pastors who are utterly worn out through their many years of suffering and deprivation, caring for many other Christian leaders afflicted with tuberculosis. And what of little Denmark, with its three million inhabitants, receiving some help from us, but truly a "giving" country when one understands that for many months they have been feeding and housing over 175,000 displaced persons and refugees at a daily cost of $100,000. Recall, too, the sacrificial example of our mother Church of England, and that of the non-conformist Churches of the British Isles. In spite of the devastation and ruin that war brought to them; despite the recent floods which have added immeasurably to their already desperate burdens, they will not only not accept relief from us — but rather pledged one million pounds by way of relief to Europe — and have already raised nearly three quarters of that amount.

Bishop Larned, in charge of the Episcopal Churches in Europe, is snapped in the garden of the headquarters of the World Council of Churches in Geneva

And then the needs—the desperate emergencies! I know that every possible effort has been made through much admirable publicity to acquaint our people with the real facts. But to hear the appeals from the lips of the representatives from these tragic countries, to look into their faces as they speak, is quite a different matter. We tell you we need three quarter of a million dollars to buy paper pulp, but does that request convey the true picture? Do our people realize that institution after institution has had all books carried away or burned, that thousands of pastors' libraries are gone, that there are no pads upon which pupils in school or college or theological seminary may take notes, that Bibles and catechisms, and hymnals are begged for in millions, that there are no paper bags in which to distribute the food or supplies that we are able to send?

We ask your help for the re-equipment of theological schools, deaconesses' homes, orphanages, colleges, hospitals. But do those at home know that when we speak of "re-equipment" we refer to the most elemental needs such as glass for windows, beds, tables, chairs, cups and plates, sheets and blankets? It breaks one's heart to hear of so many makeshift buildings where thousands of orphan children are sleeping upon straw on the floors; of theological schools where students study and live in buildings without heat—yes with paneless windows, seminaries still functioning in their former underground hiding places, or carrying on behind barbed wire in prisoner-of-war camps.

We plead for the continuance of generous allotments of food and clothing and medical supplies. We rejoice in the knowledge of what the acceptance of the Hoover proposals will mean to Germany. But even that will not begin to cover the needs. We are only now beginning to learn of the frightful severity of these past winter months in Europe. It's one thing to state—and tragically true—that, because of it, thousands have frozen to death. But it is quite another thing to hear of mothers hurrying to improvised clinics with their babies because, as they sought to change their diapers, they found them frozen to their little bodies, so that the skin came off with them, when they were removed. We seek increased supplies of medicines and vaccines of all kinds not only for present needs but to be prepared for what many fear may be serious epidemics this spring. In countless homes in Europe there has been, during this winter, no heat—and hence no running water. While pipes and toilets are frozen solid and feet of snow still cover the ground there has, so far, been no serious spread of disease—but what will happen when the great spring thaw sets in?

We place high in our priorities for spiritual reconstruction the vast problem of the refugee and the displaced person. Many of us knew that a department of the World Council was devoting all its energy to this work, and were being nobly assisted in this field by the work of the YMCA and YWCA. But many of us were totally unaware of the fact that there were still some thirteen million men, women and children in camps, or frightfully congested quarters—scattered all over Europe. Imagine the task of the chaplains and the civilian workers who seek to keep up the courage, the morale—yes morals—of such a multitude who see little or no hope ahead, but know that each day presages less food, or even more congested quarters. Among them are vast numbers of highly educated, cultured people—musicians, authors, artists, teachers and trained technicians who would make great contributions to the life of any nation opening its doors to them. Yet so few doors are even ajar, much less open, to these hopeless, helpless folk. UNESCO has recently allotted seventy-five millions to the problem of resettlement of such numbers—many many times this sum will be required. It can only be forthcoming as Christians, the world over, at last decide that such tragedy, such starvation, and moral deterioration just cannot be permitted to continue.

These are some of the more tragic, soul searching pictures which keep coming back to me as I recall those days we spent together. Yet, thank God, other impressions as frequently recur that bring hope and light and vast encouragement.

There was present, first of all, a very high note of courage. In spite of the overwhelming needs and the apparent lack of means with which to meet them—there was never a hint at possible failure for we knew that "with God all things are possible." Dr. Comba, the head of the Waldensian Seminary in Rome, referred to this when—in speaking for all the receiving countries — he sought to express his thanks for what the conference had meant. Said he, "We cannot put into words our gratitude for the blessing of these days together. The weight of our burden has lessened as we have heard of the even greater sufferings of others. We have learned, too, so much more of the sacrifices of those who are striving so desperately to help us. We pray for ever deeper humility as we are blessed by their gifts. But many of us have been talking of another impression which, perhaps, above all others we shall never forget. It is that upon the faces of you who day by day are trying so hard to find the gifts with which to meet these heartbreaking needs there seems always evident a smile! You make us ashamed of our complaints, our discouragements. We promise you that henceforth, we shall pray earnestly that the same smile may day by day light up our faces."

Even more heartening was the example of true Christian brotherhood that was evidenced in the tone of the addresses, the spirit of the devotional hours, the happy and intimate character of the fellowship. Here were gathered together delegates from seventeen European nations, friends and former foes alike; here were representatives from some twenty-five different Protestant and Orthodox communions; yet our morning and evening worship, our fellowship, our discussions were carried on in a glorious unity of purpose and rededication to a common task. It mattered not a whit that one morning our service was in German, the next in French, the next Hungarian or Swedish or Finnish. Even the hymn book we used was printed in three or four languages. We united in the Lord's Prayer, each in our own tongue. We moved from place to place at our meals that we might broaden the completeness of our brotherhood. National and sectarian isolationism vanished before the bigness of our challenge. Man's extremity—be it said to our shame—had become God's opportunity to

When the Holy Communion was celebrated in the village church in Switzerland, Dr. Cockburn (with Prayer Book) formerly the moderator of the Church of Scotland (Presbyterian) was celebrant, assisted by the Rev. Eugen Gerstenmaier, noted German pastor, the Rev. Alphons Koechlin, French-Swiss, and M. Becker, who was a member of the French underground during the war. Dr. Cockburn is now in the U.S. attending a meeting of the committee of the World Council of Churches at Buck Hill Falls, Pa., which will be reported in THE WITNESS next week. He is also to preach at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine this Sunday evening

Eternal Life, Now

DURING this past Easter Season treasurers all over the land, and here and there a clergyman of course, have been basking in the warm reflection of the heaped up offering plates which blessed the cause of the risen Christ on Easter Sunday. Nothing so titilates the pious emotions with a sense of grace than to have a "just cause" abundantly supported by those who regularly place everything else first in their budget and philosophy. Who of us is not guilty of enjoying the unexpected check, the elegant memorial, or other blessings on a good cause by the pillars of respectability? In fact, the tendency is to accept it gleefully as though it were the one heaven-sent opportunity to get something out of a donor who usually padlocks the zippers on his pockets. It is always mollifying to have a "good cause" to melt the resistance, even if Resurrection Day must be pulled into that category.

No one wants to be accused of buying eternal life. Yet the encouragement of this practice of dramatic giving leads the giver into an unadmitted sense of piling up merit by good deeds for good causes for which he expects a reward. Where? Not in this world. He is astute and skillful enough to get ahead in the hottest of commercial and social competition, and of course he would only capitalize a little on the benefits of being known as a benefactor. No, he expects that reward to come to pass when this life "he owns" comes to an end. It is unfortunate that this accepted ritual of a good life has come to be known as philanthropy (derived from the Greek "love for man") for it is striking how often these munificent gifts are devoid of Christian results. That they help is only partly true.

The familiar rich young ruler who asked Jesus about eternal life was more than just a lover of good causes, yet when Jesus' answer came to him he was extremely embarrassed. He hadn't known that eternal life involved a plan and program of sacrifice now, and he had great possessions. "Philanthropists" who are so comfortable in their niceness ought to be disturbed by any group purporting to be the Body of Christ. It is no asset to these troublesome times to have the Christian Church identified with a meritorious stop-gap which Christ himself rejected. The whole truth about eternal life is that it cannot be bought or earned by supporting good causes. It demands that one begin developing now an entirely new set of habits regulating the use of "private" property and God's good earth. The eternal life cannot breathe in a vacuum—it exists and thrives in air which has a God-filled quality of man's duty to man. Call this economic change if you will, but there is no eternal quality of personal life without the accompanying eternal quality of community life.

Community life involves government and daily bread. The people who laud the benevolence of the philanthropist will almost inevitably deplore the philanthropy of a government as being a "hand out." We all know the disrupting effects upon individual and group stability when either the rigors of begging or the easy road to daily bread are the prevailing pattern of livelihood. We believe that this is as true of private philanthropy as it is of government relief. The community of the philanthropist is that of the feudal estate. He is Lord of his domains, large or small, and his benevolence depends upon his whim and fancy. This is not Christian community, and therefore is subject to change. It is almost impossible to believe that this can be changed without a complete change of structure.

The Risen Christ completed a pattern of eternal life which altered the motives and objectives of a group of men so that they made the Roman Empire tremble. That pattern has not changed. It must impinge upon and change the structure of a Church now diluted by benefactors for good causes, and vitally judge the economy of a people obsessed by the blessings of benevolent corporations.

"QUOTES"

FOR our sin of intolerance which has closed our eyes and our hearts to fine contributions which might have made us all richer and happier, we pray. We have not remembered that a wealth of philosophy and literature could have reached us from India; that song in its loftiest cadence was the gift of Africa; that from China and Japan come the most delicate forms of art; that Europe has its form of organized industry; and America her vigor of youth. In our enthusiasm for the growth of our own little systems we have failed miserably, each one of us, to realize that each culture and each religion might have its own gift for the enrichment of the whole. We have imagined that devotion, sincerity, holiness and humility are the exclusive possessions of our own group. For this our sin of intolerance, Our Father forgive us.

Our New Editor

HARDLY anyone ever looks at a masthead. However if you glance at ours on page two this week you will find changes. Since we started group-editing in the fall of 1941 the Rev. Frederick C. Grant has been our editor. Week after week he sat at the head of the table and in his genial and able manner directed the discussion on all sorts of topics until, through the exchange of ideas, editorials were evolved. But Dr. Grant's first responsibility is to Union Seminary. There he carries not only the full load of a professor, but is also the chairman of the faculty committee for graduate students. And when you realize that there are over 150 such students now at Union you get some idea of the task Dr. Grant has. These men have to be interviewed; conferences are held with them; their work has to be supervised; their theses must be read. This job got so heavy a year or so ago that Dean Arthur Lichtenberger was made Chairman of the Editorial Board and presided at three of our meetings a month. Then once a month the members met with Editor Grant in his study at the Seminary.

However Dr. Grant's responsibilities at Union have not lightened — quite the reverse. He is therefore compelled to drop many things, including the editorship of THE WITNESS. He does so reluctantly and quite as reluctantly do the board of editors and the board of directors of the Church Publishing Association agree that he should. He has demonstrated a remarkable ability in resolving differences of opinion in these days when opinions are clung to tenaciously. And, as our readers well know, Dr. Grant is not only one of the great scholars of our time but is also an able and gifted writer. So we announce his resignation as editor with a great sense of loss. However we take some comfort in being able to announce that he will continue as a Contributing Editor, writing articles from time to time as well as editorials, with special oversight of book reviews.

Also it has been the practice of THE WITNESS to rotate membership on the editorial board so that each editor, after serving a period, is not eligible for one year. The idea, of course, is to keep things freshened with new blood. The time came this Spring for Arthur Lichtenberger to drop out. The rest of us did our best to persuade him that, as chairman, the rule did not apply to him. However, believing thoroughly in the rule, he would have none of it. So we have to announce the loss of our chairman as well as our editor. But we do not feel as badly about this since Dean Lichtenberger has promised to return to the board at the end of the year.

You will therefore find at the top of the masthead the name of Roscoe T. Foust. Mr. Foust, the rector of the Church of the Ascension, New York, was elected to the board of editors in 1945 and has been one of our most able and faithful members. He is a man of evangelical fervor and social vision so that readers may be sure that THE WITNESS will continue to stand for inclusiveness, liberalism, evangelism and interpretation of the Christian religion in contemporary terms, with a rigorous application of the principles of Christ in our social life.

Mr. Foust also was elected president of the Church Publishing Association, for whom THE WITNESS is published, at the annual meeting of the directors on April 9th. He succeeds Mr. Samuel Thorne who retires as president after having served in that capacity since the Association was organized in 1941. The meeting adopted unanimously a resolution of appreciation and gratitude to Mr. Thorne for his many years of loyal and devoted service to the Association.

Other officers elected were Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce as vice-president; Mr. Elliott W. Robbins as treasurer; Mr. Frederic D. H. Gilbert as secretary.

Also an editorial committee was named consisting of Mr. Foust, Dean Lichtenberger, Mrs. Pierce and Mr. Robbins. Among the duties of this committee is the nomination of those to serve on the board of editors. The board, as it appears in the masthead this week, consists of but six men. However there are a number of others, now listed as Contributing Editors, who meet regularly with the editors and who will be, in all likelihood, elected as editors at the May meeting of the directors of the Association.

Finally, in the interest of greater reality, we have made some changes in the list of Contributing Editors by presenting only the names of men and women who are fairly frequent contributors to these pages.

how narrow is the margin on which life is possible —a few degrees more or less of temperature, a few feet more or less of soil on the earth, and the phenomenon we call life would be utterly impossible, at least under the forms we know. The conclusion is obvious: chance does not seem sufficient to account for this, and so a theistic conclusion is required—Man does not stand alone, but is the creature of God.

Christian in the Modern World

by Frederick C. Grant

Of the Witness Editorial Board

IN THIS final brilliant chapter of the stirring and genuinely challenging book Christianity Takes A Stand Dr. Stringfellow Barr suggests that there is a series of questions to be asked—and some "that we have not been asking." We are usually inclined to ask the wrong questions, i.e. to ask the last questions in the series before the first ones have been answered, or even asked. The book we have been studying helps to get these questions into their right order. As Dr. Heimann insists, principles must come before applications, and principles are the business of the Church to teach, to expound, to exemplify, to persuade people to accept and live by. Christianity "takes a stand" not by sending delegates to the Peace Conference (as it was proposed a while ago that the Vatican or the World Council of Churches should do) but by making clear to everybody just what the Christian principles are. Then, in the second place, it must make clear that the principles really do apply to relations between nations, between labor and management, between racial groups, between citizens and their government, and not only between the individual soul and God. Hence the Christian has a considerably larger responsibility than we used to assume. One might almost say, "a larger responsibility than other men." But that is not so. Everyone is responsible —we are all in this mess, up to our necks.

It is true, as Dr. Barr points out, a person may think of his responsibilities simply as those of a man: he must survive, and must provide for his family, and that means, for ninety-nine in every hundred, getting and keeping an adequate job. Or he may think of his responsibilities as those of a citizen, which somewhat modifies his outlook from that of the mere biological or economic individual man. Finally, he may think of his responsibilities as those of a Christian, with still further modification of his outlook. Conceivably, he may take a view, as a Christian, almost diametrically opposed to the view of the biological or economic man: for example, as a Christian he has no right to press his own advantage, and look out for himself alone, and "let the devil take the hindmost." But it ought to be added that this theoretical trichotomy is no good, practically. Dr. Barr asserts, quite rightly, that it cannot hold for the Christian: he has to stand up and be counted three times!

It has been the curse of western society for centuries that men have viewed their responsibilities as occupying segregated areas, so that a man could act in one way as a man, another as a citizen (or, in the old days, as a loyal subject), and still another as a Christian. It marked the downfall of Scholasticism, for example, and the failure of the mediaeval unification of human thought, when the proposition got accepted that "what is true in theology and what is true in philosophy (or science) may not agree." Far later, it marked the capitulation of the Church to Caesar (i.e. to Hitler) when a group of German pastors announced, the year Adolf Hitler came into power, that their business was "to preach the pure Word of God, with no concern for political or economic questions"—which was the business of the secular state. And today, even the biological man cannot be sure of his own survival if he disregards his responsibilities as a citizen: the uncontrolled atomic bomb may put a period to all his hopes and aspirations. Nor can the citizen of one state ignore his responsibilities as member of a nation within the world family of nations—either on the economic level or the political: to do so is to risk total ruin. This really is, not in theory but in fact, "One World."

Nor, finally, can the little individual in his private search for survival or security ignore the vast unveiling of human nature and of divine purpose that Christianity provides. If man is really sinful, then some widespread "breast-beatings" are in order. But more than that: all the way along, and to the very end, "sin that lieth at the door" must be looked out for, and scotched, like a snake in the grass. We are a sinful nation, a sinful race, and no one can say that one particular proposal of world-order is perfect, and all the rest are worthless. It is not a question merely of war-guilt; we have, all of us, got to watch ourselves a lot more closely than we have done heretofore, and approach these questions in humility and penitence. That does not mean that the Christian will retreat before the problems discussed in this book, and say, "I can do nothing; sin is all-powerful; the whole world is in revolt against God, and that situation excuses me from trying to set things right." What it does mean is that Christianity sees things as they really are—and the private man and the citizen had better take this Christian unveiling of human nature, and its accompanying proclamation of divine purpose, in absolute seriousness. Christianity is here, in this world, just as really as the atomic bomb is here: and everybody must face up to it.

OF COURSE, it may be argued that the Christian view is not true; men are not really sinful, but only misguided, or ignorant, or a little bit too selfish. (This view of human nature was a good deal more popular twenty-five years ago than it is today.) But for the Christian, the stripping bare of human nature, and the recognition of the drastic nature of God's demands upon us (if we are ever to obey His will, or even to have a peaceful world-order, or attain world-wide economic harmony and security)—this two-fold revelation is central, and controls all his thought on the subject. Not that the Christian is concerned only for some "kingdom of the saints," and will do nothing at all unless he can take over the whole scheme of things. Naturally he will compromise, as Bishop Scarlett said, hoping that his compromise will "give us a push in the direction of the ideal, and not away from it."

What I am trying to say is that the private individual, as "a man," and the citizen are just as much concerned with this unveiling of human nature and of divine purpose as the Christian is, if they would only realize it; and that the duty of the Christian is to live by, exemplify, teach and expound—in season and out of season—this fundamental and indispensable truth about God and man. If he has really caught hold of the truth himself, or rather if it has taken hold of him, there can be no alternative. And in a human society driven schizophrenic by wars, poverty, unemployment, class-hatred, racial and religious antagonisms, he must stand out courageously for sanity and truth. In practice:

(a) The Christian knows that "God has made of one blood all nations of men"—the barriers between nations have got to come down. The kind of trade agreements, for example, that are designed to suffocate and crush one nation in order to benefit another are diabolical; they cannot be tolerated, if we are to have a decent world.

(b) By the same principle, the exclusion or suppression of minorities is simply contrary to the will of God, and we shall never have peace on earth while such conditions survive.

(c) By the same principle, no war-guilty nation should be punished in such a manner or degree as to prevent its eventual admission into the family of peaceful peoples. To do so would be to lapse into savagery, where conquered enemies are starved, blinded, maimed, or chained in dungeons till they die.

(d) By the same principle—and it only states briefly what the whole Bible and the whole Christian revelation take for granted—poverty and unemployment must be abolished. Not merely because unemployment weakens the nation, or jeopardizes the survival-seeking individual, but because it is contrary to the will and purpose of God. This is nothing arbitrary: as St. Augustine wrote long ago, "The will of God is the nature of things"—and we ignore it at our peril.

"Earth might be fair and all her people one"—but see what a mess we have made of it! And it is still God's world: he created it, he has never abandoned it, he sent his own Son into the lists to strive and to save it — or, in equally orthodox language, God himself came, to do something about it. In spite of the sombre view which Christianity insists is the true view of human nature, and the constant warning this gives us to watch out for the sinful motives that continually dog our steps and lead us astray; in spite of all this, the Christian insists that the earth is still "the Lord's, and the fulness thereof, the world and all they that dwell therein"; that God's Kingdom is no mere utopia to be contrived by human skill or established by human effort, but the reign of God himself over his world; that this Kingdom is no mere other-worldly state of bliss, but is to "come" into this realm of time and place, when God's will is "done on earth as it is in heaven." The duty of the Christian in "this present evil world" is not to run away from it, not to find some tiny refuge where he can exist "until this tyranny be overpast," but to stand up manfully and proclaim the truth of things as he has caught sight of it, to live by that truth, to act in accordance with it; as persuasively as he can, as gently as he can, but "having done all, to stand," and if necessary to die in his tracks rather than yield.

Christians are still a minority, after all these centuries; but a minority can be heard, can wield an influence far out of proportion to its numbers, particularly if it is united in its determination, and if it makes sure that it is standing on the right side —"lest we be found fighting against God." Dr. Barr's final words ring absolutely true: We cannot "look for any social reconstruction of consequence until those among us who profess Christ rediscover the practical premises that will make Christian action possible. And . . . even then the results of such action would not be in our hands but in God's. This fact we must learn to welcome or else we must deny Christ and go it alone. I doubt whether in modern history the choice before us has been clearer."

This is the final article in the series based upon the chapters in the book, Christianity Takes A Stand. THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y., still has a few copies of the book which may be secured at 30c a copy.

Full Employment

by Philip Murray

President of the Congress of Industrial Organizations

FULL employment of all willing and able workers at a guaranteed annual wage, fortunately for the future of America, is becoming a widely discussed topic. No man of goodwill can fail to appreciate the contribution that may be made in attainment of this high objective by Churches of every denomination. This is as it should be, because when labor unionism is analyzed down to its philosophical basis, it resolves itself into moral factors which were concretely stated by the Divine Redeemer on many occasions. For it is the function of the labor union to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, shelter the shelterless and implement what are known to Christians as the other corporal works of mercy.

Former Secretary of Labor Francis Perkins is a recognized expert on the question of full employment. As a member of President Roosevelt's cabinet from the dark days of 1933 onward, she had under observation daily the dire social results of idleness, forced by lack of employment opportunity upon millions of the world's most efficient producers: the working men and women of America. Mrs. Perkins knows the nuances of depression, and she has made it clear in Christianity Takes A Stand that she is by no means impressed with what are commonly referred to as the economic laws considered immutable by careless or malicious people. There are no such things as economic laws. The so-called laws of economics are merely a summary statement of the vicious practices that occur in the market place as men wage the mad struggle for money gain at the expense of all else.

As Mrs. Perkins observes, the Church has a large function in the field of economic life. This statement will, of course, be challenged by persons who incline to the opinion that clergymen and church-going laymen should confine their activities to the four walls of the sacred edifice. That is the viewpoint of those who consider the Church merely a structure of four walls and a roof. They miss or choose to ignore the wider concept of the Church's function. The Church is not merely a building. It is a body of moral truth, and most assuredly the Church has a duty and authority to speak in matters of morality. This does not mean that the Church must draft economic blueprints or furnish factual data. It does mean that the Church should proclaim the principles by which proper blueprints are made and factual data assembled.

There is ample authority for the Church to proceed. There is authority in the natural law, but there is more than mere authority in the divine law. Labor does not derive its dignity only from the fact that it renders the laborer self-supporting; it derives its dignity mainly from the mandate given man in the second chapter of Genesis where the Creator enjoined him "to keep the garden and dress it." In other words, man was then and there charged with the high function of carrying on, extending and improving, the work of the first creation. Hence, we were given intelligence, reason, and above all the ability to make decisions.

It is difficult to reconcile these natural and divine laws with the illogic of some persons that full employment of all willing and able workers at a guaranteed annual wage is impractical or impossible of realization. There are actually some who concede the right of a man to a job, but deny his right to an opportunity to obtain the job. Most certainly, commonsense dictates that the opportunity to carry on the work of creation coexists with the operation itself.

There is only one possible, sound argument against full employment and that is that the world's work is done, that the job is finished, that the work of the first creation has been completed. This argument is so incredible on its face that, of course, we never hear it. For man's work serves two purposes. First, he produces for his own needs and those of his immediate family, and second, he produces and improves for those who are to come after him. The transitory nature of things, even such seemingly indestructible objects as massive steel bridges, makes constant replacement of things necessary. Forced unemployment is, therefore, not only a crime against the existing individual and his dignity; it is a crime against posterity.

THERE has been extensive discussion of the role that government should play in bringing about full employment in the guaranteed annual wage. It has never been the philosophy of the Congress of Industrial Organizations to lean exclusively on the government. We believe that men should do things for themselves out of the powers that have been given to them. We do not, for example, expect or desire the government to represent our unions in collective bargaining. We do expect the government to fulfill its function in the field of collective bargaining through the adoption of wise measures that will preserve to both employers and workers their human rights at the collective bargaining table. We ask only that we be permitted to exercise our rights. We predicate our position in the concept of justice. Therefore we do not ask the government to lay down a mandate making full employment an obligation upon the whole people attended by a penalty for whosoever should violate its provisions.

We believe the role of government in the matter of full employment at the guaranteed annual wage resides in its sovereign authority to decree policies with and by the authority vested in it by all of the people. Adoption of this formula would prevent our government from becoming an economic instrument in the hands of those who wield the greater power, or, more succinctly, it would enable our government to redeem itself completely from the economic captivity in which it found itself at the close of the Twenties. It will be recalled that our federal government at that time was unable even to formulate a single policy that could have stayed or even allayed the greatest economic depression that ever blighted our nation's progress.

Let us now look at the practicalities of full employment at a guaranteed annual wage. There certainly is no shortage of raw materials in the natural storehouses of the earth nor a shortage in the contributions of science and invention. We are not, therefore, faced with either a dearth of raw material or of the human ability to improve and adapt that raw material to the use and benefit of man, the human person. It is merely a problem of bringing the raw material and the ability together in orderly fashion so that the desired result may be obtained.

It is inherent in any proposition that contributions to an enterprise be recognized by an equitable and just division of whatever results from the contributions. Accepting as true that there must be universal equity and justice for moral reasons, let us now consider a more materialistic approach. Economic well-being is determined by two factors: the rate of circulation of money and the rate of circulation of goods. When, in plain everyday language, money does not pass readily from hand to hand, we have economic stagnation. When goods do not pass rapidly from hand to hand, we have similar stagnation. The result in either case is the evil phenomenon we call a recession or depression.

There are reasons why such stagnation occurs and considerable thought must be given to them in considering the matter of full employment at the guaranteed annual wage. It is obvious that if an undue proportion of the community's money is retained in the hands of a few persons, it cannot circulate rapidly, for money represents in our modern complex society the purchasing power that makes possible the rapid circulation of goods from hand to hand. It makes no difference whether the stagnation occurs through unduly high prices or unduly low wages, or decreased production to create scarcity, the impact on the community is precisely the same, and the purchasing power of the people is decreased. In 1933 it had decreased well nigh to the vanishing point.

We do not believe these questions can be resolved by statutory mandate. Various types of totalitarianism have repeatedly tried to resolve them in that fashion and they have invariably failed. We maintain that in the United States these problems can be resolved through collective bargaining between those who contribute their capital and those who contribute their labor. We have had long and fairly successful experience with political democracy in this country. If we can attain the same degree of industrial democracy with strict observance of the rights of all, we will be well on the way to the attainment of the common good.

Unity Commission Will Hold Public Hearings

It Wants Opinions of Church People Before Preparing the Final Statement for Lambeth

Edited by Sara Dill

Washington:—Public hearings on the subject of unity will be held in October by the commission on approaches to unity. This decision was reached at a two day meeting of the commission held here at Washington Cathedral. These hearings will be held before it is determined finally what should be included in a statement of faith and order that is is to be presented to the Lambeth Conference in 1948.

Following the meeting last week a letter was sent to the commission on unity of the Presbyterian Church but Bishop Strider, chairman of our commission, did not make the contents of the letter public.

After studying resolutions passed by the last General Convention regarding its instructions, the commission decided that its chief job is to prepare "a statement of faith and order in harmony with the Lambeth Quadrilateral upon which the Protestant Episcopal Church in the U.S.A. is prepared to enter into intercommunion and to proceed toward organic federation with the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. or with any other interested Christian bodies."

Therefore, a committee was appointed to prepare a preliminary draft of this statement. Members of this committee will seek the aid of recognized scholars in the Church.

A second committee was created to formulate questions on which the counsel of the Lambeth Conference is desired.

Memorial Service

Massena, N. Y.:—Something new in the way of a Good Friday service was held at St. John's Church here when a memorial service was held for the 111 miners who lost their lives in the mine disaster at Centralia, Illinois. The speaker was Kenneth I. Dailey, teacher of social studies in the local high school who was formerly president of a local of the Aluminum Workers Union (CIO). He declared that it was fitting that such a service should be held on Good Friday. "As Christ died upon the cross the victim of selfishness, corruption, greed, contempt and base inhumanity, so also died our working brothers during this Lenten season in a dark pit in the earth."

A collection was taken at the service for the widows and orphans of the mine disaster. The rector of St. John's is the Rev. N. B. Godfrey.

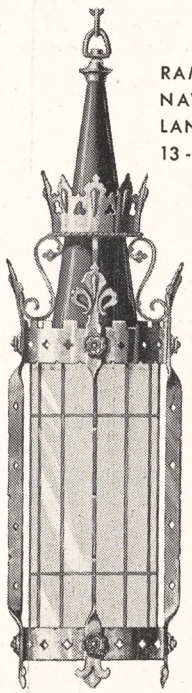
Women Ministers

New York:—The Presbytery of New York by a vote of 76-21 voted in favor of admitting women to the ministry of the Presbyterian Church. Presbyteries throughout the country are voting on the proposal, the results of which will be announced at the General Assembly next month.

Parochial Schools

Bellows Falls, Vt.:—The Fellowship of Churches from six Vermont towns voted last week as being opposed "to the use of public funds for the support of private or Church schools, Catholic or Protestant." The Protestant Pastors Union of Birmingham, Ala., took similar action, as did also the Baptist ministers of Mobile, Ala.

Attack Council



Gadsden, Ala.: — The Churchmen's Club of the Church of the Holy Comforter, Episcopal, and the board of stewards of the First Methodist Church here have passed resolutions condemning certain activities of the Federal Council of Churches as being "communistic." They declared that the industrial relations division of the Council campaigns for labor organizations and has actively campaigned for pro-labor legislation on a national scale.

Oppose Truman

New York: — Seventy ministers, all members of the New York East Conference of the Methodist Church, issued a statement here protesting against President Truman's program of aid for Greece and Turkey. Asserting that the Truman proposal means "underwriting monarchy and tyranny in Greece and Turkey," the ministers added that the program would "stimulate Communism."

"If the common people of the world have to choose between black reaction, monarchial tyranny and Communism, they will choose the latter, even if for a time they are restrained by United States bayonets, guns, and bombs," the statement said.

The statement, sent to members of Congress, declared that the relief program "will make America hated by subject races everywhere for backing monarchy, reaction and imperialism, and will set the pattern for the destruction of the United Nations."

South India Church

Bombay (wireless to RNS):—Fourteen bishops for the new Church of South India, which will be inaugurated in September, have been appointed by a joint committee which is making final preparations for the union. Some of the nominees were bishops of their previous Churches. The new Church, which will comprise a Christian community of about 1,200,000. unites the four Anglican dioceses of Madras, Travancore, Tinnevelley and Dornakal, the South India provincial synod of the Methodist Church and the South India United Church. The latter body is itself a union of Presbyterian and Congregational Churches. Outside of the Roman Catholic Church, the three groups are the principal Churches in South India. The plan to unite them, which has been in progress for some years, received final approval from all the participating Churches early this year.

Priests' Institutes

Washington: — Priests' Institutes are to be held at Kent School, June 23-27, and at Racine, Wisconsin, September 22-26, sponsored by the American Church Union. At Kent Dom Gregory Dix of Nashdom Abbey, England, will lecture on baptism and confirmation, and the Rev. Felix L. Cirlot will lecture on "What are bishops and why have them." No announcement is yet ready for the Racine meeting as far as program is concerned. The chairman of the committee is the Rev. Albert J. duBois, rector of St. Agnes', Washington.

Japanese Bishop

New York:—Bishop Timothy Makoto Makita was enthroned as fourth bishop of Tokyo in All Saints' Chapel, St. Paul's University, on April 10. He succeeds Bishop Sasaki who died last year. Bishop Makita was formerly the bishop of North Kwanto.

More Protests

New York:—The Rev. W. Russell Bowie, professor at Union Seminary and formerly rector of Grace Church here, announced on April 10 that a total of 270 clergymen from 32 states had signed the protest against the Truman policy for Greece and Turkey. (WITNESS, April 10). His letter states that "this is at least two times the reasonable expectation of return on this amount of mailing." Episcopalians to sign the statement, in addition to those listed previously, were Bishop Lane W. Barton of Eastern Oregon; Bishop James M. Stoney of New Mexico and Southwest Texas; the Rev. John Gass, rector of St. Paul's, Troy, N. Y.; the Rev. Fleming James, formerly dean of the Theological School, Sewanee, Tenn.; the Rev. J. Brooke Mosley, social service secretary of the diocese of Washington; the Rev. George L. Paine of Boston; the Rev. Leonard F. Thornton of Kirkwood, Mo. and the Rev. W. Carroll Brooke of Staunton, Va. The statement appeared in full in THE WITNESS of April 10.

Clergy Protest

Durham, N. H.:—Thirty-two New Hampshire clergymen, educators, and civic leaders issued a statement here protesting Secretary of Labor Schwellenbach's "call to illegalize the Communist Party in America" and President Truman's order aimed at weeding out "subversive" federal employees. The statement declared "these actions seem to indicate the assumption that majorities have the right to stamp out minorities, in contradiction to the rights inherent in democracy. Just as we rightly insist that European countries allow minority parties to exist and express themselves, we must allow the same rights in the United States."

Signing the statement as "representing no organized group," the 32 called attention to these actions in Washington, D.C. as "attacks on civil liberties. The logical result of such actions developed into a national policy would easily lead to a one-party dictatorship."

Debt Is Cleared

Seattle: — Within 15 months St. Mark's Cathedral here has raised $210,000 to pay the mortgage on the church building and to buy a deanery. A large congregation gathered for the impressive service, when the mortgage was burned, the church consecrated and a large class confirmed.

St. Mark's has had its ups and downs. The mortgage company was compelled to foreclose and a remnant of the congregation met in St. Barnabas' Chapel, hoping that some day the Cathedral doors would again be open. Then during the war the army took over the building for a short period for a training school. The Rt. Rev. S. Arthur Huston, Bishop of Olympia, later received permission from the Mercantile-Commerce Bank and Trust Company of St. Louis, Mo., holders of the mortgage, to reopen the Cathedral for services, rent free for one year, making an effort to liquidate the indebtedness within that time. The Bishop acted as rector and just at the close of the year's period, secured the Rev. Richard S. Watson to be dean. Under Dean Watson's leadership the Cathedral is now free from debt and is already becoming a moving force in the community.

Niemoeller Called Saint

Los Angeles: — The Rev. James W. Fifield Jr., who is the director of the organization called "Spiritual Mobilization," which has been charged widely with being a fascist organization, stated last week that he regards Martin Niemoeller "as a near-martyr and full saint."

He declared that "Niemoeller is an inspiring example of resistance against stateism, communism and all anti-God philosophies."

He also revealed that he entertained Niemoeller at his home when the German pastor visited Los Angeles recently.

Intercommunion

London (wireless to RNS):—Church of England and Free Church leaders are shortly to begin a new series of conferences at Lambeth Palace to discuss full intercommunion. They follow an appeal by the Archbishop of Canterbury in which he said that the time has come for free exchange of ministers and ministries between Anglican and other Protestant Churches in Britain. A preliminary meeting of Methodists, Presbyterians and Anglicans has already taken place at the invitation of the Archbishop.

Bishop Creighton

Detroit:—Bishop and Mrs. Frank W. Creighton are spending a few weeks in the east. Bishop Creighton recently suffered a slight heart attack but is gaining steadily. It is expected that he will take up a somewhat limited work upon his return to the diocese of Michigan the first of May.

Meanwhile Bishop Herman R. Page of Northern Michigan and Bishop Lewis B. Whittemore of Western Michigan have been assisting in the diocese with confirmations.

Seabury House

New York:—Bishop John T. Dallas of New Hampshire, on behalf of the diocese, has sent Presiding Bishop Sherrill a gift of $1,000 to go toward the purchase of Seabury House. The house is at Greenwich, Conn., and is to be the residence of the Presiding Bishop and also a hostel for missionaries and other guests. The New Hampshire gift is a memorial to the late Bishop William Woodruff Niles who was the bishop of New Hampshire from 1870 to 1914.

World Religions

New Delhi, India (wireless to RNS):—The fifth annual conference of the Federation of World Religions was opened here by Mrs. Sarojini Naidu, president of the Asian Relations Conference.

"There is a prophecy in the Bible," she said, "that there shall be a great gathering of the nations of the East which will mark the beginning of a new era. It is a happy coincidence that a meeting of exponents of world religion is being held as the Asian Conference convenes."

Discussing various faiths, Mrs. Naidu regretted that "people today have discarded the essential truth contained in their religion."

She said religion is being criticized not because there is something wrong with it, but because wrong things are being done in its name.

Hinduism, Mrs. Naidu asserted, still remains the convenient religion of a race, but its basic teachings have been forgotten.

She said, "Islam, which brought us democracy and which broke down all barriers of class and sect, needs to be revived, reviewed and regenerated because Musselmen today have turned away from the essential truth preached by their religion."

She also criticized the Sikns for allegedly having departed from the teachings of their faith.

Rose Elected Dean

New York:—Dean Lawrence Rose of the Berkeley Divinity School, New Haven, has been elected dean of the General Seminary and will take office on August 1. He will succeed Dean Hughell E. W. Fosbrooke, who has been dean for thirty years.

Dean Rose is forty-six, has been a missionary to Japan, and was on the faculty of Bexley Hall, Gambier, Ohio, before becoming dean of Berkeley in 1942.

Tremendous Needs—

re-unite us in service to his suffering children.

The high point of the conference was reached on Sunday morning when we walked down from our hill top to the near by village to join in worship in the Swiss Church. Dr. Koechlin preached the sermon. The service consisted of a celebration of the Lord's Supper according to the rite of the Scotch Presbyterian Church. Dr. Cockburn, former moderator of that Church, was the celebrant. Assisting him were Dr. Gerstenmaier, the famous German pastor who is the only survivor of the fifteen who attempted to kill Hitler by placing a bomb in his briefcase, and Mr. Becker, a French layman who had rendered gallant service in the underground resistance movement throughout the war. As these representatives of countries which during the war had either been neutral, friend or foe, stood together behind the simple altar table and shared in the distribution of the bread and the wine not one present but must have thanked God for the spirit of Christian unity that there prevailed and which the spirit of Christ alone could have brought to pass. National and ecclesiastical barriers melted away as one by one every delegate present filed reverently forward to partake of that feast of fellowship and love. We were indeed upon the mount with Jesus. We were experiencing, anew, the truth of our common Lord's words when he said: "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

MR. FRANK W. HAWTHORNE
Student at the University of Michigan

Considering that a so-called "social consciousness" is plainly non-existent in the private and parochial lives of many Episcopalians your article in the March 27 WITNESS should satisfy the needs in part for potent stimulation of inanimate Churchmen.

The North Carolina Episcopal College Students Conference is to be praised for their healthy resolution. It is significant that action is being taken by the Church's young men and women, for when we see the adult "Christians" of today discriminate against their fellow men both inside and outside the Church we realize that there are blows to strike. The Rev. Mr. Hughes presents the situation admirably. Episcopalianism in the parish, for example, is now largely morally ineffectual. It must stop concerning itself with the personalities of ushers for the 11:00 service, the soggy topics of Women's Guild luncheon meetings, the meaningless discussions over whether St. Paul meant this or that when he wrote some obscure passage, the one-hour-on-Sunday concept of religion rather than the twenty-four-every-day-concept. The Rev. F. H. Smythe in his book "Discerning the Lord's Body" expressively labels our inherited socially ineffectual religious attitudes in which the Church is the vehicle for the soul's ride from this imperfect earth to an enchantingly dreamlike heaven as "extricationism." Our failure is in recognizing the truth of the words of our Lord who said, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

Cheers for your magazine's forthright policy of being more than a weary voice of tradition, for calling for, if I may use the term, Christian revolution.

MARTIN SCHLESINGER
Layman of Jamaica, N. Y.

Bishop Sterrett (WITNESS, Feb. 27) asserts a warm regard for the editors while at the same time commending the Christianity of those in strategic positions whose outlook, social and economic, is directly at odds with what is considered creative Christian thought today. In the early pre-war days the Christian groups who saw the portent of the use of fascism were dubbed subversive and atheistic. It was only when the shooting was over that the public learned that our most powerful industrialists had found it profitable to deal with the German industrialists up to the very eve of Pearl Harbor.

There may be wide agreement that much of the tragic past might have been averted had there been a fuller acceptance of religion as a criterion for action. The trouble is that there is a marked aversion to consider that phase of religion that has always served so well in lending respectability to the phonies. I am referring to the religion that lays all the stress on "reward in the hereafter." A religion, on the other hand, that places emphasis on "love God and thy neighbor" could not so easily be perverted, though it would be naive to assume that the powerful of this world would cease bending it to their purpose.

We know that vigorous campaigns were carried on, while men were fighting overseas, to break down the forty hour week in their absence. We know that industrial leaders saw no necessity for improving working conditions on the mass production belt when recourse to the threat of armed force is available.

And now we learn that a representative of the group that advocated restrictive legislation, together with a representative of a group that negotiated with the German banks that financed Hitler, have been appointed to the board of one of our largest seminaries. During the years when I was in close contact with a neighborhood Episcopal Church I was fortunate to meet a number of young clergymen who inspired me with the breadth of their social vision. And I marvelled at the soundness of American institutions that, in spite of the pernicious influence of big business, respected the seminaries where these men got their training and vision. We can only hope that this is not going to change.

We need men, like those who manage the affairs of the Church League for Industrial Democracy, who seek to bring religion abreast of the times; who will demonstrate a program that will make religion a significant factor in the affairs of our nation; who will have the courage to speak, in the name of the Church, for the common man.

We need too THE WITNESS, with editors free to express their minds fearlessly in the American tradition, without being made to feel hedged in—particularly by the very men who have such high regard for them. That is what hurts most.

New York:—A radio, movie and advertising campaign of evangelism, aimed at reaching the whole nation, was approved at the meeting of the National Council meeting here April 22-24. The plan calls for a half-hour radio program over a national hookup for forty weeks; full page color ads in mass circulation magazines and farm papers; two motion pictures annually, written and directed by experts, with professional actors. The campaign will cost approximately $1,200,000 annually ($600,000 of it for radio) and the plan is to raise this sum by asking each person who makes a pledge toward the grand total of $55,000,000 raised by the whole Church each year, to add 3% to his pledge during the every member canvass this fall.

An entire day at the meeting was devoted to a discussion of the proposal. Mr. Robert Jordan, head of the promotion department, opened the day by proving, by means of charts, that the Episcopal Church is virtually standing still. Various Council members then made speeches, with the following quotes indicating the trend:

"Our Church has pearls," said the Rev. Robert A. Magill, "but apparently we made up our minds long ago not to cast them before swine."

"The Church has great potential strength, particularly in its laymen," declared Mr. Clark Kuebler, "and they must be given work to do. They are ready to be trained for the task but we sit by while the world burns around our ears and do nothing."

"There is little sense in using the radio and advertising to urge people to join our fellowship when the quality of our spiritual life is so low," said Bishop Angus Dun. "They may come as a result of our pleading but they won't be convinced."

And in this he was supported by Treasurer Lewis B. Franklin who said that "There is little sense in adding another half million members if they are to be like the million and a half we already have. We are rotten in worship, in conviction, in sacrifice, with 70% of our present membership on the fringe of the Church. Why ask others to join us in our weakness?"

Bishop John B. Bentley of Alaska is the new vice-president of the National Council, in charge of the overseas division, succeeding the Rev. J. Thayer Addison who resigned in December because of illness

Mr. E. Townsend Look stated: "We need to present two or three big plans so that laymen will have something to do that is worthwhile."

The Presiding Bishop and Bishop Elwood Haines of Iowa each contended that it was not an "either-or" business; that we certainly should deepen the life of our present membership, but at the same time reach out for others in every way possible. Bishop Haines spoke particularly of the successful techniques of the Roman Church "whereby they are about taking over in the middle west."

Practically everyone had a say—Bishop Carpenter, Mr. Alexander Whiteside, Mrs. Harper Sibley, the Rev. John Heuss, the Rev. Horace W. B. Donegan, the Rev. Robert R. Brown, Mr. C. McD. Davis—after which the plan was approved as submitted by Mr. Jordan. A committee of experts in radio, movies and advertising is to be immediately set up; the money, it is hoped, will be raised as "an extra" to the every member canvass this fall; and the program will be launched in the fall of 1948. It is then expected that parish life will be so stimulated by the effort that no difficulty will be experienced in raising the funds in future years to enable it to be continued.

Bishop John B. Bentley of Alaska was appointed vice-president of the Council and director of the overseas division. He has not as yet indicated that he will accept, but it is assumed that he will since he had a long conference with the Presiding Bishop the week before the Council meeting. So it is safe to say that he will take up this new work in New York on January 1, 1948. He was elected suffragan bishop of Alaska in 1931 and was elected the successor to Bishop Rowe in 1943.

The Presiding Bishop announced that the 98 acre estate in Greenwich, Conn., had been purchased. To be known as Seabury House, the larger of two houses will be used as a conference center and hostel while the smaller house will be the home of the Presiding Bishop. Bishop Sherrill stated that it can become "the spiritual capital of the Protestant Episcopal Church around the world. It can be to the Episcopal Church something at least what Lambeth is to the English Church."

Announcement was made of the appointment of Robert G. Cook as assistant director of the promotion department. Following the war he worked for a couple of years as a radio script writer for a New York advertising agency and more recently has been the producer of a sports program on a nationwide network. He, presumably, will have a lot to say in connection with the radio-movie-ad campaign.

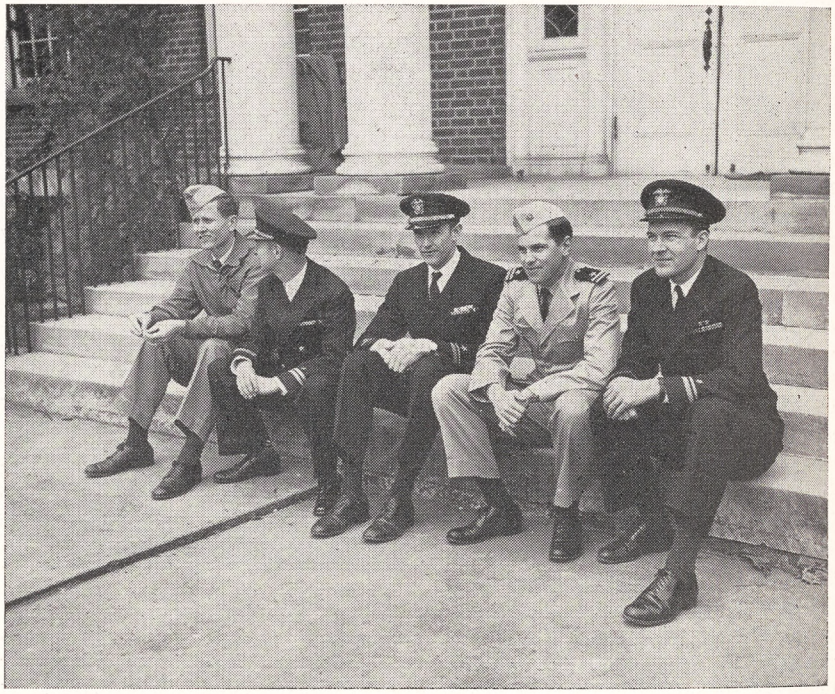
the U. S. was turned down with one of those "intention-to-give-careful-study-to-the-problem" type of resolutions.

The Council also went on record as opposing the use of public funds for sectarian educational purposes, referring specifically to bus travel and text books. While not mentioning the Roman Church, the resolution was of course directed against the inroads that Church has made in recent years in securing public funds for these ends.

WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

Buck Hill Falls, Pa.:—The tremendous needs of people and of churches throughout the world, and efforts to secure the full participation of more Eastern Orthodox Churches, were the highlights of the four day meeting of the World Council's provisional committee, meeting here April 21-24. The Council represents 103 Church bodies in 32 nations, and they are represented here by about twenty-five high-ranking Church leaders from Europe, Asia, North and Latin America.



The Rev. W. A. Visser't Hooft, general secretary, reported that the Russian Orthodox Church is giving "serious attention" to the question of relationship with the Council, while the Greek Orthodox Churches have already indicated their willingness to participate as full members in the first world assembly of the Council, scheduled for Amsterdam next summer. He said that one of the major obstacles is the impression that the Eastern Orthodox Churches have that the Council is "largely a Western and more specifically, an Anglo-Saxon organization which identifies itself consciously or unconsciously with the concerns and interests of the western nations."

On the matter of European needs, the Rev. J. Hutchison Cockburn, formerly moderator of the Church of Scotland and now director of reconstruction and interchurch aid, presented a picture of great privation and suffering. "The slowness of economic recovery is affecting the Church life and for this reason it is necessary to help the Churches along many lines if they are to function at all and be able to help others."

He stated that anti-Christian forces are so strong in Europe today that the Christian tradition "no longer dominates the European scene," and he stressed particularly the need for religious work among youth, declaring that in a vigorous youth program "perhaps we would have the answer to the Communist ideology. Communism can't be argued down, it must be lived."

The Rev. Marc Boegner, president of the Federation of French Protestant Churches, expressed thanks to America for "your brotherly welcome in this lovely place" and declared that "in our world of uncertainty, violence, hate and despair only the Church of our Lord Jesus Christ can reveal to men the secret of true community life, built upon reverence for human personality, acknowledgement of minority rights and a sound note of social justice."

This meeting, called chiefly to plan for the Amsterdam meeting next summer, set forth the following as the principal functions of the first world assembly: to provide opportunity for thorough study of the main theme, "The disorder of man and the design of God"; to adopt the Utrecht constitution of 1938; to decide on the program and policy of the World Council; to provide opportunity for discussion of any matters of common concern to the Churches.

COLLEGE WORKERS CONFER

Princeton, N. J.:—Secretaries of college work and chairmen of college work commissions of the provinces met here April 16-22 to discuss their problems. There were addresses by John O. Nelson, director of the commission on the ministry of the Federal Council of Churches; Wilmer J. Kitchen, head of the World Student Service Fund; John Deschner, head of the United Student Christian Council and Ray Sweetman of the staff of the Student Christian Movement in the state of New York.

Attending were the Rev. Robert Rodenmayer and Miss Barbara Arnold, first province; the Rev. Stephen Bayne Jr. and the Rev. James Rockwell, second province; the Rev. Francis Craighill and Miss Katharine Duffield, third province; the Rev. Joseph S. Ditchburn, fourth province; the Rev. A. Thorp and the Rev. John Heuss, fifth province; the Rev. LeRoy S. Burroughs, sixth province; the Rev. John A. Winslow, seventh province; the Rev. Charles Neville, eighth province.

WORLD PROBLEMS CONSIDERED

Geneva, N. Y.:—Problems involving both the administration of the Church and its role in national and international affairs were considered by the bishops of the province of New York and New Jersey, meeting here April 28-30. Cooperation with other Churches was also considered.

The Plight of the Seminaries Today Is Very Great

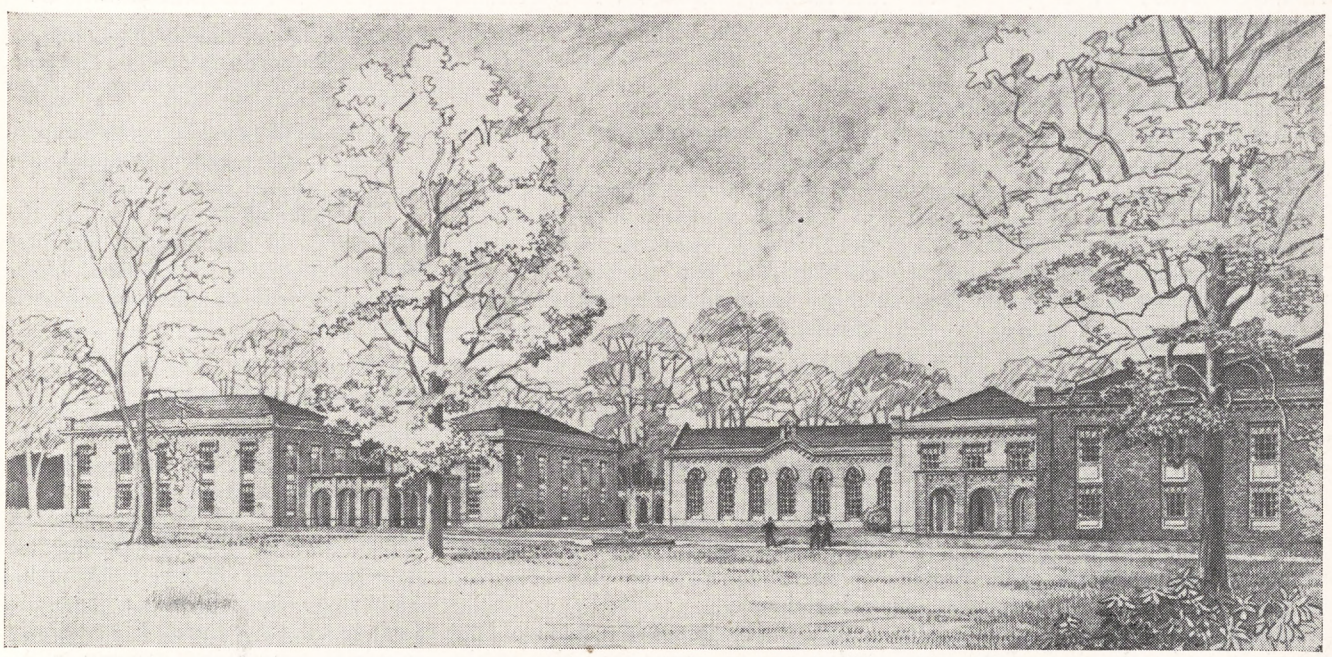
The Virginia Seminary Well Illustrates Needs Today of All Our Church Seminaries

By Robert O. Kevin
Of the Virginia Seminary Faculty

Alexandria, Va.:—It comes apparently as a shock to many lay people to learn that their gifts on "the red side of the envelop" do not subsidize the seminaries of the Church. This note of surprise is general and genuine. In congregation after congregation it has appeared as a characteristic reaction when people are told of the current effort of the Virginia Theological Seminary to secure funds with which to carry on its work.

Many assume that more efficient planning by the National Council is needed. Funds for the training of ministers, they say, should be part of the missionary program. They argue that nothing so important as the continuing supply of clergymen for the Church should be left belatedly to chance and to charity. It may be that they are right. But the probable truth is that few congregations in the Protestant Episcopal Church think much about the question of where ministers come from until they are driven to the necessity of finding a rector—in these days an increasingly difficult task. For although our communicant strength has tripled in the last fifty years, the number of clergy has only slightly increased.

Others perhaps give no more thought to the question than to assume that ministers are somewhat as babies



". . . not in utter nakedness,
But trailing clouds of glory do we come
From God, who is our home."

There is much in this notion to commend it. A man who is presented for ordination needs to have had an experience like that. But he also needs certain skills and equipment and knowledge and wisdom that only a Christian theological seminary can teach him. There are eleven of these in our Church with libraries, dormitories, faculties and staffs, and every one of them is in need of more lay support so as to carry on its work. Some of them are desperately in need of it.

The Virginia Theological Seminary is currently asking $660,000 with which to build urgently needed dormitories and a refectory, and to make certain repairs to its property. This sum, however, is only a part of its real need. To serve the Church as the Church of Christ ought to be served, the Virginia Seminary should have $2,110,000. Other seminaries face much the same problem. Their facilities are inadequate to the task of meeting the Church's demand for ministers.

One might ask why the seminaries are in this plight. A glance at their history tells the story. The Virginia Seminary was begun in 1823, with Francis Scott Key, author of the Star Spangled Banner, one of its founders. Others of the seminaries are approximately a century old. They were set in certain areas by devout men and women who believed that the religion of Christ should be finely taught and finely lived. The endowments they gave, their buildings and equipment, were intentionally made independent of purely local diocesan authority and control. For the sake of the freedom "wherewith Christ hath made us free," they were established so they could "seek the truth, come whence it may, cost what it will."

As Dr. W. Russell Bowie has written of our seminary in Alexandria: "The life and spirit of the Virginia Seminary are linked with a long past. The Seminary was founded, and has been nourished by men who breathed instinctively the atmosphere of reverent and simple piety which came to them from the Book of Common Prayer. Their religion was ardent and unafraid, and the reason was that it rested on convictions about Christ. He was and is Lord of the Church, and the worth of the Church in any generation depends not upon ecclesiastical claims but upon the measure of the spirit of Christ which its thought and life exhibit. This is what the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia has always believed and witnessed to, within its own walls first, and then wherever its men have ministered and its missionaries have pioneered."

In the age of secularism, however, there arose a generation of Church people which failed to relate itself realistically to the task of helping to train men for the ministry. And now the seminaries are the bottleneck of the Church. Candidates are asking to be admitted, but buildings have fallen into disrepair and some of the seminaries' equipment has become obsolete. Expansion of plant facilities to care for the growing needs of Christ's flock has become almost impossible.

That is the situation we now face at the Virginia Seminary. Last fall at the beginning of the school year there were 101 undergraduates. Seventy-four of these men were lately in the armed services of our country. They had been offering their lives for the preservation of values in our inheritance we deeply cherish. Now they were seeking to give them again in the ministry that the world might be saved and men might live unto God.

But of these 100 or more students, only 52 could be housed on the campus. The others had to find lodgings elsewhere as best they could. At an unfortunate time, the old and loved St. George's Hall where Phillips Brooks once lived as a student, had to be torn down. It had stood for nearly a century. But building inspectors condemned it as no longer safe.

For the future, the Seminary must make provision for a continuing student body of 100 men on the Hill. Accommodations for them must shortly be made available or first-rate candidates will have to be turned away. To help house them a group of buildings which includes 4 dormitory units and a refectory has been planned. The group will cost $425,000 to build. These living halls will care for 48 men. Another $235,000 is needed to furnish the new buildings and to repair and restore the other property of the Seminary.

This is not the whole problem at Virginia, only the immediate one. As with all institutions, income from invested funds has declined while operating costs have arisen. Yet it is from an institution's endowment that scholarship aid is granted to students. To offset an anticipated loss of $8,000 annually because of decreased income, there should be an additional endowment of $260,000.

So with the need for capital endowment for other aspects of the school's life. Properly to maintain the new dormitory buildings when they are erected, an endowment of $350,000 should be available. To raise the salaries of full professors to $5,000 annually and to allow other departments of the Seminary's work to operate effectively requires endowment of $540,000.

In order to give a greater measure of clinical training and supervised field work to students, to add needed facilities for medical care, to secure an additional member of the faculty, and to open post-graduate opportunities of study for men who show promise as teachers, there should be further endowment of $300,000.

This is but a glimpse of the problem faced by one of the leading, honored institutions of the Protestant Episcopal Church, one whose spiritual contribution has been incalculable.

When the issues for human life today are so grave and the whole principle of a Christian world order is at stake, it is difficult to believe that consecrated men and women, in a position to help, will hold back the means whereby the ministry of Christ can be given to the Church.

BISHOP CLINGMAN URGES UNITY

Louisville, Ky.: — Bishop Clingman urged closer unity, even federation, between Churches in his address to the convention of Kentucky. "I am convinced that peace in the Church is a condition of peace in the world," he said. "Can we expect men and women whose chief interests are secular to find a basis of fellowship when those who profess that their chief interests are spiritual cannot achieve unity?"

The convention was told of the new wing of the Church hospital here, now under construction, where alcoholics will be given psychiatric treatment.

ORANGE COUNTY RECTOR DIES

Middletown, N. Y.:—The Rev. J. Holmes McGuinness, who served as rector of Grace Church, Monroe, N. Y. and St. Paul's, Chester, for fifty years died on April 4th in his 75th year. He had been a leader in Orange County Church life and also in social service and community affairs.

The Virginia Seminary

IF THE only out from the confusion of the present world is the spiritual life, and if the only security offered to man is faith in God, then the opportunity before us now is to have a ministry of God's Church, strong in faith, deep in spiritual life, and keenly alive to the problems of mankind. That even the Church has neglected its training of the ministry is so evident that 99% of the Church hardly knows how or where its ministry is trained.

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia—to use its legal title—is a case in point. For almost 125 years, this great evangelical institution has produced clergy for the Church. It is significant that every mission field was founded by its graduates, until in recent years the Church has followed the flag into The Philippines, Cuba, Haiti, Panama, and Puerto Rica. Thirty per cent of the ministry of the Church was trained at this institution, and its alumni furnish the greatest number of bishops of any seminary group. As its own catalog states, "It has not felt a need to debate what was obvious: that it was good for it to be Episcopal and preserve the living continuity with Christ's Church Catholic from the beginning; and good to be Protestant, because that meant freedom in evangelical newness of life. Its religion was ardent and unafraid, and the reason was that it rested on convictions about Christ."

Yet seldom in its history have lay people left money for the endowment of this institution, and it has been rare even for its alumni to urge people to make gifts of any type as a thank offering for a ministry that has been effective in the past and becomes doubly important in the present confusion of today.

Fortunately, in this present moment, the Virginia Seminary still has the most essential things —a faculty of real power and skill in training men, and in addition a student body mostly just out of our armed forces, of young men of deep conviction who have had to go through the horrible experiences of war and have been matured by that spiritually. But it is like asking men to make bricks without straw to ask faculty and student body to work without equipment. One poorly built old dormitory had to be pulled down. Other older buildings are inadequate for present needs. In time, the lack of equipment could discourage the student from attending, and dull the zeal of the teacher. To those who have the eyes to see, the future of our world and its real security in religious foundations is pretty well wrapped up in what we do about such an institution as the Viriginia Theological Seminary.

Just goodness in a minister is not enough, if it ever was enough. Our Lord himself demanded that those whom he trained for the ministry be with him for three years. Today the necessity of skilled men, capable of reaching and meeting the cynical, faithless, war-disillusioned generation of the present time is an absolute must. A good man with just a clerical collar and an ability to push a doorbell can give the appearance of a hopeless cause. The same man, however, trained in a theology that recognizes the darkness of the present and the light of the eternal God, and who in practical training has had a clinical supervision where he has learned to know and meet and study the causes of maladjusted behavior, and is not shocked by the evil because he knows the goodness of the eternal, is a man capable of commanding the respect of any community and leading many to the God revealed by Jesus Christ.

That the Virginia Theological Seminary is asking for a sum far less than it cost to train a platoon of officer-candidates in world war two, in order that buildings might be erected fit for modern needs and that a faculty might be paid a living wage, is such a small demand that only the ignorant would refuse to face the need of the present time. There are many important calls to Americans these days, but this call is the call to answer

"QUOTES"

OUR Church is faced today with a challenge, a test, such as we have never had to face before. We have to think of that Church, and our spiritual loyalties, in terms of a world that is beside itself with fear and anxiety. Today all our thought of fellowship one with another in the life and service of the Church, our sense of mutual concern and corporate responsibility, has to be set over against a world that is divided against itself, a world torn with strife and conflict, a world in which many sinister influences, at home and abroad, seem to be arrayed against those ideals and principles of freedom and justice, of moral decency and human brotherhood which Jesus came to build into human life and human relationships. If, as we believe, the Church was instituted and ordained by our Lord to be the means through which his own saving purpose for our world should find fulfilment, then it must be evident that you and I as members of that Church have a job on our hands today, a task that is going to make heavy demands upon our loyalty and devotion and our capacity for genuine sacrifice.

the question of what kind of a world we are going to have in the future. To neglect such an institution now is to turn one's back on God's call.

"How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? How shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher?"

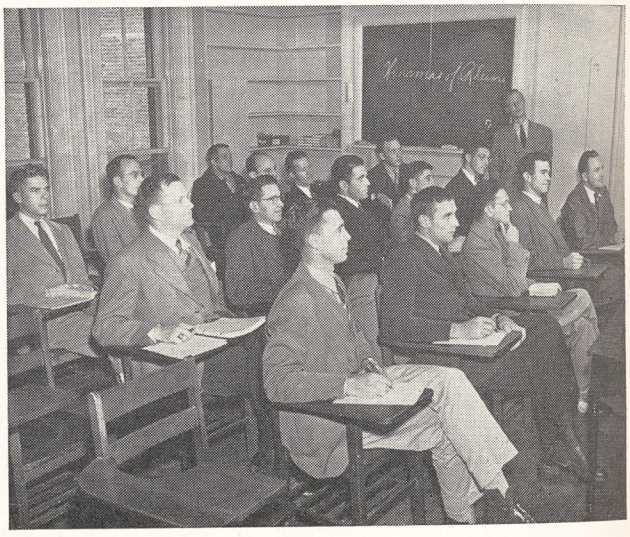
The Virginia Contribution

by Alexander C. Zabriskie



Dean of the Virginia Seminary

ON AN afternoon in June 1818, in a house in Georgetown, a few miles from the then raw, sprawling village of Washington, D. C., a group of men were in serious conversation. These were Francis Scott Key, Dr. Henderson, the surgeon-general of the United States army, and three clergymen. They were desperately concerned that Christianity should play a more effective part in the lives of their fellow Americans and in the life of the infant republic. They were Episcopalians, and they were anxious that their Church should do its part. How could their aims best be forwarded? Their discussion led them to the conclusion that a Church is as strong as its ministerial leadership; and that if the gospel of Christ were to have more effectiveness in America, the chief need was for an able, trained, devoted ministry. So they determined to give their time and energy and money to founding a school wherein such ministers might be trained.

At first this group re-established the chair of divinity at William and Mary which had lapsed for nearly forty years, but a brief experience with this device convinced them that proper ministerial education demanded a separate institution. So they bought property near Alexandria, and in 1823 established their professor and his few students there. Thus was the Virginia Seminary born.

The Seminary began to grow. Able teachers were brought in—Drs. Packard and Sparrow and others. Students came from both sides of the Potomac. New buildings were added through the gifts of St. George's Church, New York, of Mr. Bohlen of Philadelphia and Mr. Aspinwall of New York. By 1861 there were nearly seventy students and four professors. The war between the states ended the first era. The buildings were taken over by the federal army as a military hospital. The students scattered, most of them entering the Confederate army, some the Union, others going to other Seminaries. Dr. Sparrow moved first to Halifax, Virginia, and then to Staunton, where, despite the fact that he was known to be a staunch unionist and anti-slavery man, he ministered to Virginia congregations and trained some young officers who had been urged by their superiors to resign their commissions and qualify to serve as chaplains.

In 1866 the Seminary reopened in Alexandria —with a student body composed entirely of Confederate veterans. Soon men again came to it from the north. The painful effort to reconstruct its plant, and to provide adequate training for men who had not been able to secure much collegiate education in the bankrupt south, made it a relatively primitive place. But it turned out ministers like Peterkin and Tucker and Lloyd, men whose service to Christ and the Church were as significant, though less spectacular, as that of pre-war graduates like Leonidas Polk, Phillips Brooks and Henry Codman Potter. Its growth in number of students, in teachers and in equipment grew gradually but steadily through the latter part of the 19th century and the beginning of the 20th.

All eyes are focused on the lecturer in this classroom at Virginia Seminary

THE first world war interrupted it again. Some of its students and one professor entered the armed forces, and the student body shrank to a very small size. But after the war it began to grow again. A new library and dormitory were added. The student body increased to eighty, and applicants had to be declined all through the thirties for lack of space.

Throughout its history, the Virginia Seminary has had several marked characteristics. Born of the evangelical revival, it has always insisted that the first requirements of ministers were manliness, integrity, genuine devotion to Christ. Its religion has centered in him. It has gladly maintained the Episcopal Church's catholic heritage, with its stress on continuity through the centuries with the earliest Christians, on the sacraments, liturgical worship, on the corporate aspect of Christianity. It has championed the Church's reformation heritage, with the emphasis on the Bible as the final norm of faith and ethic, on salvation as the free gift of God, appropriated by faith alone, on the freedom and responsibility of the individual. It has proclaimed the orthodox faith of the Church with evangelical emphasis. It has been intensely missionary-minded, thinking that the Church must seek out and win people to Christ rather than wait for them to come to it. It has held that a Seminary must be a Christian brotherhood, and therefore it has fostered warm and intimate friendliness between students and between the students and the faculty. While never regarding intellectual attainment as the chief requisite of a clergyman, it has insisted upon high and rising academic performance. It has insisted on simplicity in life and in worship as incumbent upon the followers of the man of Nazareth.

The Virginia Seminary's contribution to the Church has been varied. Its sons have been conspicuous in overseas missionary work—founding the missions in China, Japan, Liberia, Brazil and Greece; taking large part in other areas—the Philippines, Alaska, the Caribbean islands. Other graduates have labored in frontier parts of the United States, missionaries to the scattered and lonely pioneers. Its alumni total 1,910; of these 117 have served overseas. Others have expressed the missionary spirit in specific areas of American life such as city missions and colleges (alumni founded for the Church Society for College Work, and the first three secretaries for college work in the National Council were all Virginia men). It has contributed its full share to the leadership of the dioceses at home, seventy of its men having served as bishops. It has provided the Church with a few great preachers, of whom Phillips Brooks and Alfred Randolph were the best known; a few theologians of note, especially Drs. Sparrow and Bell; a great many faithful pastors.

Life at the Virginia Seminary

by Kenneth E. Heim

Of the Virginia Seminary Faculty

THE Virginia Theological Seminary stands in a grove of oak trees on a hill looking out over Alexandria and the Potomac River towards Washington. It consists of dormitories, class-rooms, a dining hall or refectory, and a chapel. The buildings present an appearance of unpretentious dignity, to which their setting contributes. They have been used constantly since Civil War days, and they look that way. On one side of a dormitory there is a sign reading, "Notice. Tie Horses at the Stable." There is no stable. A winding road leads up a hill from the seminary gate to the school itself. The seminary can be located for miles around by the tower of Aspinwall Hall, the main dormitory. From some of the students' rooms in Aspinwall one can get a fine view of Washington, with the Capitol showing impressively in the distance. Scattered through the oak grove are faculty homes.

Here, on the Hill, a life goes on, into which men come with their peculiar gifts, and from which they go out after three years to preach the gospel. When they leave here they carry the same gifts with them, but something else has been added, and it is this something else which makes their gifts useable in the service of Christ and his Church.

As a newcomer to the faculty who is not an alumnus of the school I have been experiencing freshly what it is that seminaries do for men, and in particular what this seminary is doing for its students. I wish I could tell it so that laymen could understand. They would then know what the Church owes its seminaries.

It would have to start with the students, with what they bring with them to the seminary. There are over a hundred of us here, who mingle with each other every day. We get to know each other pretty well in this way. There have been great men in the seminaries in the past. Today, though only God knows who they are, one feels that the material for greatness is here. This is an exciting student body. These people are mature, they are intellectually wide awake, they have the war behind them, many have successful careers in business, law, teaching, the army or navy behind them, and all of course have the ordinary college equipment. As people they are impressive. And with all their interesting diversity of background, they bring one uniting element: their common Christian background; their decision, sometimes a costly one, to dedicate their lives to the ministry.

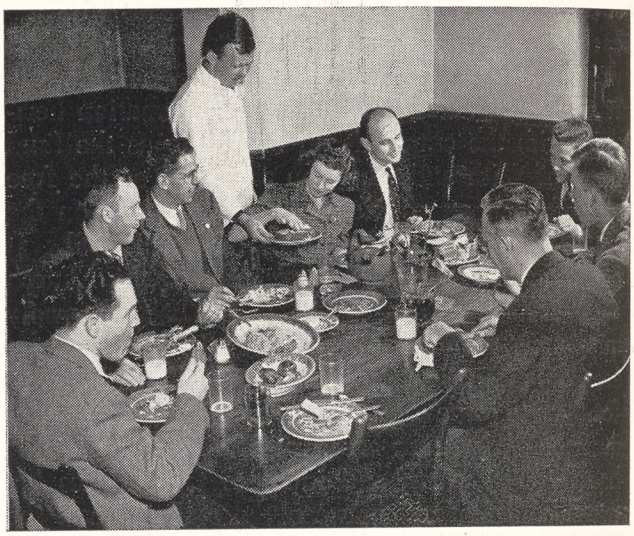
Every morning these hundred students come to the chapel. They come from their apartments where they live if they have wives and children, or they come from the dormitories if they are unmarried. This is the first act of the day. The service may be morning prayer, which will be shared by a student and a faculty member, or it may be the service of holy communion, celebrated by a member of the faculty.



THE quality of the worship is the quality that you get when people with a common faith and intense purpose draw together for help which they know they need and which they believe God will give.

It appears most obviously to the outsider in the singing. Many of the voices are fine, trained voices. The whole student body, singing together a strong well-known hymn such as A Mighty Fortress Is Our God or Glorious Things of Thee Are Spoken is an unforgettable experience. The remembrance of it will pursue these men into their parishes later on.

After chapel, four solid hours of class. Old Testament, New Testament, liturgics, Church history, pastoral theology, Church music, Christian ethics, systematic theology, homiletics, apologetics, public speaking. "How dull," someone may say. Say rather: intensive, perhaps shattering to previous notions dearly held, always touching basic attitudes and beliefs about people, their relationships with each other, their destiny in the world; but not dull, though sometimes difficult for the former engineer or naval officer.

Here, the Bible is allowed to speak in its authentic voice for the first time. Cleared of obscurities of translation and misinterpretations, it becomes the record of God entering human history and acting powerfully within it. So too, the study of history becomes a viewing of events seen in a new light, with the Church and all human organizations, nations, classes, races, seen as the arena into which God enters to create, to judge, to redeem.

One could go on. Three years is a long time. But so much must be covered. The field of God's activity is so vast, His ways of working are so manifold, and our secular education has been so inadequate. The men write papers and read books, study long hours, take examinations. They sometimes get confused and worried and go to a friend on the faculty for help. They go out to missions on Sundays, conduct services, preach, teach Sunday school classes, do parish calling. In the summer they go to mental hospitals, jails, institutions of all kinds, work under supervision.

All the students seem to be extremely interested as a student-waiter passes the bread to the wife of a G.I. student at Virginia

After lunch on school days, dispersion. Home, to the library, sometimes tennis, volley-ball, or soft-ball, the demands of families. Evenings: study, serious or light conversations, prayers.

Out of the common purpose, out of the common study and worship, out of the friendships, gradually, the life emerges. It acquires quality, tone; it becomes the spirit of the body, and it stamps each individual in the body, indelibly. It is, I believe, of God, for there is great joy in it, and we could never have guessed it possible. We feel grateful, and we want to communicate it.

If this little book had been published in smaller format and bound in cloth and sold for a dollar, it would have been hailed as one of the "religious best sellers" of the year. Instead, it is in paper covers, and the price is within everybody's reach—25 cents—thanks to the Church Congress. It is a series of pictures drawn by a historical expert, showing how the Communion Service was observed in A.D. 150, 500, 1400, 1830—and how it may be celebrated at "the parish communion" in the year 1960. The "teaching value" of this little book, as well as its devotional value (it was published for use in Lent) is apparent on every page.

Playing Fair with the Veterans

by W. Barton Murdock

A Student at the Virginia Seminary

OF THE students preparing for the ministry at the Virginia Seminary, seventy-four are veterans. This story is about the men for whom the road that led back from war to peace, led also to the Seminary campus. For some of these men, the decision to enter the ministry was made before or during college, for others it was made in the business and professional world, and for still others it was a decision that came as a result of war service, either during or after the war years.

A poll recently conducted of the student body showed that 39 had served with the army, 24 with the navy, 7 with the marine corps, and 1 each with the coast guard, the office of strategic services, the American Red Cross and the American field service.

Our roster includes an army colonel, a navy commander, a marine major, a half dozen or more army captains, a navy carrier pilot, an infantry platoon sergeant, a marine artillery battery commander and three chaplain's assistants. All branches of the army seem well represented including the signal corps, chemical warfare service, ordnance, the quartermaster corps and proud representatives of the army air force.

A tabulation of awards would include a distinguished service medal given to an army battalion commander in the ETO, an air medal to an eighth air force navigator, a bronze star to a marine platoon commander at Iwo Jima, a legion of merit to a marine signal officer at Okinawa, and several purple hearts.

The greater part of the veteran contingent is married. Single men find themselves outnumbered, 34 to 28. Of the married veteran couples, 15 have one youngster, four have 2 and one—champions in this regard—have three children. All of this, one may be sure, has had a salutary effect on the department of pastoral theology. When the subject of child psychology is discussed in the classroom, a professor is assured of an audience of proud fathers who have more than an academic interest in the subject.

No report on seminary undergraduate life today would be complete without a bow in the direction of the wonderful seminary wives. They are as much a part of the campus scene as is Aspinwall tower. Some add to the family income, others have a full time job looking after "Buster" and "Suzzie" and all are getting a seminary education by remote control.

Many of the married group would have found the expense of three years of seminary training utterly beyond their means had it not been for the G. I. bill of rights. In normal times there are a number of aids for the aspiring seminarian in the form of scholarships, grants from a sponsoring diocese, or from organizations for the propagation of the ministry, but these resources never approached the kind of aid available to veterans under the G. I. Bill.

Why did these men enter the seminary? When did they decide? These were questions asked in the poll of the student body and from their replies, it was discovered that 33 of the veterans made their decision before or during college, 8 as a result of experience in the business and professional world, and 26 decided in favor of the Church during, or as a result of, war time experiences.

Typical of the eight who determined to enter the ministry as a result of experience in the business and professional world there is the story of Harry Frownfelter. Before the war he was the manager of a New England branch office of a large commercial credit corporation.

"I came out of college into the business world in the middle of the great depression," he said. "In my business I had to do a certain amount of counselling. It consisted of listening to the other fellow's troubles. Far too often there was nothing I could do, for I was working on an impersonal level as my firm's representative. I began to feel more and more a sense of obligation to my fellow man. Just before I was inducted into the army I asked my bishop to make me a postulant after it was all over. My experience as a "non-comm" in Italy served to confirm the wisdom of this move."

Of the 33 who made up their minds about the ministry before or during college, the case of Bill Williams is somewhat typical. To begin this story one must go back to the year 1937. That was the year Bill graduated from high school. It was also the year his father was injured, and a college career had to be postponed. Bill took a job as an accountant in his home town and for two years attended a university extension school in the evenings. It was during this period that he became active in the work of the Church.

As an officer of the local and later of the diocesan young people's fellowship, he travelled extensively along the eastern seaboard. This broadened his view of the work of the Church, and he decided then and there to make the ministry his life work. At college he worked at nearby Episcopal chapels, wrestled, was active in student government and graduated with honors and a Phi Beta Kappa key. After this campus interlude, he dashed off for a 33 month tour of duty with the infantry, eighteen months of which were spent in Europe chasing Germans across the lowlands.

ONE of the 26 who decided in favor of the ministry as a result of the war is Henry Rightor, an air corps captain, a graduate of Harvard Law School and a former member of the House of Representatives of his home state. Once an active layman, he represented his diocese at three General Conventions. He had been mildly attracted to the ministry for some years, but having an established law practice, it was a decision not easily made. Along came Pearl Harbor, and the Japs helped him to take a step long contemplated. "Actually, the important break with the past came when I closed the law office and entered the service. My coming to seminary was just like going from one post to another."

Other men say that their decision to study for the ministry came as a result of having a few close calls, of thinking of the meaning of their own lives and the meaning of the lives of those lost and still living, and another said that he was influenced by having to deal with the problems that his men brought to him as a company commander. A battle-scarred veteran says he made his decision after he was wounded in action.

Four students are back at seminary finishing their course after a lengthy interruption due to war. Sid Goldsmith, one of this group, left seminary in his middle year and skippered LCI's and LST's in the Pacific as a two-striper. He had some prior business experience as well, having represented a wholesale importing house during his 4 years at Williams College.

The Virginia Seminary Library is one of the busiest places on the Hill

When Virginia opened her doors last fall a record enrollment of 101 students was registered, and this at the very time of an acute housing shortage on the campus occasioned by the razing of ancient St. George's Hall. The seminary's actual housing capacity is only 52, and it should be a sobering thought to a Church short of clergy to realize that had there not been a preponderance of married men, almost half of the record enrollment would have been turned down. A backlog of men who had decided on the ministry and who have had their college careers interrupted by the war will shortly be knocking at our doors. College men, most of them young single veterans, are offering themselves for the ministry in unprecedented numbers. The answer that this seminary will be able to give them depends greatly on the kind of support our laymen give to the Seminary at this critical time.

Barton Deals With Live Issues In Convention Address

He Hits at Truman's Policy for Near East And Move to Make Communist Party Illegal

Edited by Sara Dill

Pendleton, Oregon:—Bishop Lane Barton, in his first address to the convocation of the district of Eastern Oregon, stated that the present situation in the United States "is alarming because we are attacking Communism without dealing with the conditions which breed Communism."

"It is further alarming," he stated, "because we seem to be following the same pattern the German people followed under Adolph Hitler. Witness our effort to suppress the Communist party and the elimination from the air of such commentators as William L. Shirer, and the irresponsible and hysterical talk about war with the Soviet Union. Have we never learned that ideas cannot be suppressed and that to try to drive them underground is to make them difficult to trace and counter? Since when are we afraid of honest comment in this country and what is dangerous about it?

"There is no denying that the Soviet Union is proving difficult in this post-war world. But would we be easy to handle if Russia were to threaten to move into Central America or the Caribbean with military power and four hundred million dollars in economic power? It would be disastrous to let Russia have her own way, but who thinks it would be less disastrous to foment war with Russia? Is there no middle, firm, reasonable course?

"In community relations there happily is a middle course. When anti-social people in the neighborhood threaten the peace of the community we neither let them dominate the scene, not move in on them with weapons of death. Our methods of handling unsocial nations is not as far advanced, but they deserve a trial. We have organized the United Nations in the hope that the way to peace may be worked out. The principle of cooperation through the United Nations deserves a trial. If it is argued that the United Nations is weak and inexperienced, it can be answered that it is bound to be weak and inexperienced when it is bypassed by the world's most powerful nation. Furthermore, when we go in for unilateral action, we destroy the principle of one world and have no grounds for complaint when any other nation also resorts to such action.

"As Christians we have rejoiced that for much of our history our influence has been potent because it has been an influence based upon moral power. We cannot view with complacency this new swing to a policy based upon naked military and economic power. God give us the wisdom to regain our moral influence. Let us feed the hungry because they are hungry and not because we want to use these people against an alien ideology. God help us regain our leadership in uniting the world in cooperation toward the securing of peace and security for one world."

Bishop Barton, in his convention charge, pleaded for a strong laymen's movement; for the use of publicity in letting the people of Oregon know about the Episcopal Church; for support of missions and world relief and for unity of the Churches, both on the national and community levels.

Bishop Gilbert Installed

New York:—Bishop Charles K. Gilbert was installed as Bishop of New York with an impressive service at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine on April 26th. Attended by civic and religious dignitaries, with the reading of formal documents certifying to his election, declarations were heard, solemn promises made, prior to the Bishop being ceremonially seated in his cathedra, or official seat, which signified his complete possession of his diocese. Bishop Manning, for 25 years the bishop, invested his successor with the pastoral staff thus marking the transfer of spiritual jurisdiction from one bishop to another. Presiding Bishop Sherrill declared that Bishop Gilbert was rightly "admitted to all the honors, dignities and rights" of the bishopric of New York, after which he imparted to him his blessing.

The canons of the cathedral, who form the cathedral chapter, led Bishop Gilbert to the cathedra, after which he delivered his address. Several processions, formed of different groups, entered the cathedral from various points, and all officers of the diocese, both clerical and lay, participated, together with clergy and laity representing all the parishes and missions of the diocese.

Admission to the service was by ticket only and the great edifice was overcrowded. The whole service was marked by a dignified pattern of ecclesiastical symbolism, replete with historic interest.

Religious Lobby

Washington (RNS):—Prof. Liston Pope of the Yale Divinity School, speaking at a dinner for Congressmen, said that a "religious lobby is emerging in the nation's capital which will represent the welfare of all men." He pointed out that several Protestant Churches have established legislative offices here with the dual purpose of presenting the views of Church bodies to Congress and the executive agencies of government, and of keeping Church people informed of political and legislative developments. He cited interdenominational agreement on support of the United Nations, on preservation of religious and civil liberties, on labor's right to bargain collectively, or no discrimination-in-employment legislation. Fifteen senators and representatives, with their wives, attended the dinner which was given by the Rev. Douglas Horton and his wife, Mildred McAfee Horton, former director of the WAVES.

Execution of Tiso

Rome (wireless to RNS): — The execution of the Rev. Joseph Tiso, Nazo collaborationist who was made the puppet president of Slovakia by Hitler, was a cause of "deep distress" to Roman Catholics everywhere, Osservatore Romano, semi-official Vatican newspaper declared. The paper did not discuss the guilt or innocence of Father Tiso but said his execution showed a complete disregard of his "sacerdotal calling and for that reason was particularly distressful to the Catholic faithful."

Low Sunday Crowd

Atlanta, Ga.:—There was of course a large congregation at St. Timothy's Easter. Notices had gone to all of the communicants; special music was prepared by the choir; notices of the service were in all the papers. But for Low Sunday no special effort was made in any way by Rector C. B. Lucas. Yet the attendance that day was 15% greater than on Easter Sunday, with 40% of the congregation composed of young people and children.

Pastor Gets Threats

Chapel Hill, N. C. (RNS):—Members of the Presbyterian Church here have received anonymous phone calls threatening to burn the church as a result of the interracial activities of Pastor Charles M. Jones. Two Negroes and two whites, said to be representatives of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, were recently arrested here when they tried to establish Jim Crow test cases. Mr. Jones took all four into his home. So he also got phone calls threatening to burn his home, and a visitor leaving his home was stoned.

Negro Delegates

Summerville, S. C.:—The convention of South Carolina, meeting here, voted to give representation to Negro priests and lay delegates. To become part of the constitution of the diocese the action will have to be approved at the next convention. A proposal to allow women to be delegates and to serve on vestries was defeated.

Bishop Carruthers in his address reported that the diocese set a new high in confirmations last year.

Editors Take Stand

New York:—Editors of Protestant magazines, meeting here as the Associated Church Press, passed resolutions opposing "the assault upon organized labor's rights" and expressing opposition to "the current drive to regiment public opinion through censorship of the press and radio and intimidation of citizens by investigations on the part of the Thomas-Rankin Committee." A resolution was also passed urging higher salaries for school teachers, and endorsed federal aid for education with the proviso that federal funds should not be diverted to parochial schools. Continued support of Church overseas relief programs was urged with the statement that it "should have a first claim on the conscience of prosperous America."

Students Discuss Freedoms

Annandale, N. Y.:—Students from 25 nations inquired into "what has happened to the four freedoms" at a conference held at Bard College. Delegates from countries as distant as Burma and Australia presented first hand information of the situations there. The USSR was represented by American citizen, Neal Burroughs, who returned to the U.S. in February after having lived in Russia since he was eight.

Keynote addresses were given by Isador Lubin, economic advisor to the late President Roosevelt and a delegate to the 1945 Moscow conference, and Ferdinand Eberstadt, member of the Baruch atomic energy commission.

North Dakota Easter

Fargo, N. D.:—Bishop Atwill started out from here by bus Easter Eve expecting to hold Easter services at Oakes and Guelph. Four hours were spent trying to make 45 miles west of Wahpeton, with the snow four feet deep, and drifts much deeper. All service stations were closed. All telephone and telegraph wires were down. The Bishop spent the night in the bus with the rest of the passengers. They were dug out Easter when the Bishop returned home without completing his trip.

Prison Chapel

Spokane, Wash.:—The district of Spokane at its convocation on April 14 voted to participate in a cooperative project to erect a chapel at the state prison at Walla Walla. It will be built within the prison enclosure and will provide facilities for all types of religious services. The prisoners have volunteered their labor for construction and have contributed $2500 from their welfare fund toward the cost.

The convocation also heard plans for the construction of a student center at the University of Idaho at Moscow.

Addressing the convocation was Bishop McElwain, retired bishop of Minnesota, who delivered a forceful appeal for recruits for the ministry and for financial support for the seminaries.

Catholic Students Meet

Toledo, Ohio (RNS): — Delegates from 107 colleges in 25 states and representing 200,000 members of the National Federation of Catholic College Students, held their first postwar congress here. Highlights were addresses by Archbishop Cushing of Boston and Bishop Karl Alter of Toledo, with the latter cracking at the Soviet Union and declaring that "there is no hope in continuous appeasement or in compromise."

Free Speech

Hartford, Conn.: — A hospital which limits free speech on medical matters by members of its staff should not receive support from public funds, the Plainville, Conn., Council of Churches declared in a statement. Issuance of the statement recalls that six physicians charged recently they were ousted from Catholic hospitals in the state for ex-

GOD IN HISTORY

Sherwood Eddy

This quest for evidence of God in history begins with the five sources which formed the mid-current of Western civilization. It is concerned with man's total life: moral and spiritual, intellectual and esthetic, economic and political, individual and social. Dr. Eddy sets up four criteria to test the presence of God in the efforts and achievements of men, and uses these criteria as a means for determining when man is working on the side of God. For serious-minded Christians this substantial book provides absorbing and rewarding reading. April selection of the Pulpit Book Club. $2.75

Bishop Enthroned

Bombay (wireless to RNS):—The Rt. Rev. A. N. Mukerjee, of the Church of India, Burma and Ceylon, formerly assistant bishop in charge of the Archdeaconry of Delhi, was enthroned as first Bishop of Delhi on Monday, April 21. The ceremony took place in the Church of the Redemption, which will become the diocesan cathedral. Bishop Mukerjee is a native Indian.

Evangelization

London (wireless to RNS):—One of the biggest efforts ever made in the evangelization of London began here when 3,000 commandos opened a ten-day Christian commando campaign at Albert Hall. During the ten days the commandos will preach the gospel in clubs, public houses, movie theatres, workers canteens and open air gatherings. Every branch of the Protestant Church is represented in the evangelistic teams. They will work in 34 London districts.

Nearly every outstanding Protestant church leader was present on the Albert Hall platform, including J. Arthur Rank, movie producer. The demonstration concluded with a dedication service conducted by the Anglican Bishop of Rochester.

The Christian commando campaign is the culmination of four years' planning of a drive to take the Christian faith to the people. The commandos will meet the average Londoner at home, at work, and at play. The 34 evangelistic teams are made up of clergymen, church officers, deaconesses, students, businessmen, doctors, journalists, workers, politicians, sportsmen and many others.

Laymen Confer

Geneva (wireless to RNS):—Doctors, lawyers, politicians, journalists, and other laymen—all members of leading Protestant laymen's organizations in 13 countries—met here for the first international conference of lay leaders sponsored by the ecumenical institute of the World Council of Churches. The conference heard reports on activities being conducted by laymen's groups in Holland, Germany, and France.

A. W. Kist, a lawyer, director of the Church and the World Institute at Driebergen, Holland, said his organization plans a summer conference of laymen actively concerned with atomic energy. Dutch scientists, politicians, union leaders, economists and others will examine the cultural and religious aspects of the employment of the atom at that time, Kist said.

"There are 80 full-time students studying at the Dutch Institute to become modern evangelists, not the old-fashioned type," Kist stated. "They spend half their time in studying social and cultural questions, and the other half in practical religious study. They will live not as clergymen, but as laymen, after their graduation."

Simple Funerals

Detroit: — Lavish floral displays, eulogies, open caskets and expensive funerals are discouraged in a brochure on "Christian Burial" issued by Bishop Creighton and Bishop Emrich of Michigan.

Purpose of the statement, they said, is "to combat some of the newer customs connected with death and burial."

"It is fitting to place flowers on the altar, and to have one or two other baskets of flowers in the chancel, but do not crowd the church with a lavish array," the bishops declared. "We say this because simplicity better symbolizes the Christian life, and because we desire in Christian and democratic spirit to avoid anything approaching competition in funerals. Those who desire to pay tribute to the deceased should be encouraged, either as individuals or as a group, to give some lasting memorial to the church or to some other good work in which the deceased was interested.

"Eulogies at church funerals are unnecessary and out of order. The people assembled in the church know the deceased anyway, and it is certainly not necessary to give information to him 'unto whom all hearts are open and all desires known.'

"Since 'we brought nothing into this world and it is certain we can carry nothing out,' and since simplicity again should be a mark of the Christian life, we urge our people not to lavish their money upon expensive caskets or funerals. A pall may be placed over the casket to add to the simplicity and to preserve the teaching that, since God looks upon the heart, he is not impressed by caskets. . . . Flowers should not be placed upon the pall or the casket. The casket should be closed from the time it leaves the home or funeral parlor. If the body lies in state, or friends desire to view it, this can be done before the church service. The casket should never be open in any part of the church building. During the service our thoughts should rise to God, our eternal home, and not dwell upon the physical aspects of death or the art of the undertaker.

"The burial service of the church is complete in itself, dignified and brief, and should not be combined with the services of any fraternal or military organizations. Fraternal groups may, of course, attend the church service in a body, but if the family desires the rites of a lodge, those rites should take place at the funeral parlor before the church service."

the United States, Alexander McCurdy, head of the organ department of the Curtis Institute of Music, Philadelphia, and one of the world's great organists, is making a transcontinental recital tour featuring the use of organ music and Schulmerich and Carillonic Bells. Under the auspices of the American Guild of Organists, this distinguished musician will appear in churches of all Protestant denominations.

In addition to his work at the Curtis Institute of Music, Dr. McCurdy heads the organ department of the Westminster Choir College at Princeton, N. J., and is organist at the First Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia. He is recognized as a foremost recitalist, teacher, and director of oratorios.

Dr. McCurdy has described the Carillonic Bells he will demonstrate during his recital tour as "the answer to every organist's dream." "Formerly," he said, "the use of percussion with organ was limited to tubular chimes and because of their limited volume, they were inadequate for use in combination with any mass of organ tones. Tubular chimes also were lacking in the brilliance and fullness desirable in a bell tone.

"The reproduction of Carillonic Bell tones can be so arranged," Dr. McCurdy said, "that they can be heard from the great organ or the echo organ. So superior is their tonal quality that the bells may be used in numbers that have never been effectively played with tubular chimes.

Spearfish, S. D. (RNS):—Observances of the 60th anniversary this year by All Angels Episcopal church here recalls the fact that the church was built as a memorial to Alexander Hamilton, financial genius of the Revolutionary War. A granddaughter, living in New York City, not only donated the money needed to erect the little pink stone church, but supplied the money for its repair when it was gutted by fire. She furnished Christmas gifts for Sunday school children and on her death she left a substantial bequest. Miss Hamilton, described as a little old bachelor girl, was prompted to sponsor the church as a memorial to her distinguished grandfather after hearing a talk in New York by Susan J. Weare, founder of a Sunday school in a pioneer Black Hills community.

Layman of Philadelphia

I am told that THE WITNESS forwards donations to the Rev. Kimber Den to help him with his great relief work in China. I would be glad to know if this is correct.

ANSWER: The Church League for Industrial Democracy has for years collected funds for the work Mr. Den is doing and which is considered by many to be one of the finest jobs being done anywhere by the Church. Checks should be made to "Treasurer, CLID" and sent to the CLID, 155 Washington Street, New York 6, N. Y.

REV. KENNETH W. HANSEN
Rector at Marshall, Minnesota

In regard to the article on Fasting and the letter about it (April 10) may I ask:

How would the Anglo-Catholics deal with the problem faced by one of our high church ministers when he asked three of the young men of his parish why they had been absent from church lately. They replied: "We have been attending the Roman Catholic Church instead of this struggling Protestant Episcopal Mass House." He admitted that he had gone too far in Roman doctrine and ceremonial.

As a small town rector I have found a vital, living and courageous Protestant Episcopal fervor among the laity. I teach the precepts of the Protestant Episcopal Church and believe that it would be disloyal to ape Rome and thus confuse the faithful.

I have been a subscriber to THE WITNESS for several years and in the past have thought the magazine one of the best Church publications in the country. Your recent issues have, to my mind, been so pro-Russian that I now believe your editorial staff must consist largely of Communist sympathizers.

ANSWER: Our policy on international affairs was stated clearly in our issue of December 12, 1946. We believe that war must be avoided if mankind is to continue to live on this earth. And the way to avoid war is to work for understanding between this country and Russia. We are fully aware that Russia has plenty of faults, as that editorial stated. We also know that the United States has plenty of faults, and we believe it to be a far better Christian practice to confess our own faults than those of the other fellow.

May I congratulate THE WITNESS for the excellent numbers devoted to the Church Congress and the Church Society for College Work. Both give us valuable information about two important Church agencies. I hope that there may be other numbers devoted to agencies of the Church. I want also to take this opportunity to praise THE WITNESS for the most unusual series of articles based upon the book Christianity Takes a Stand. I am sure it has been a long time since any religious journal has offered readers articles by such a notable group as Harold Stassen, Dr. Foerster, Prof. Ridenour, Carey McWilliams, Philip Murray, Max Yergen, Harry F. Ward, Bishop Emrich, Dr. Bayne and Dr. Grant. Certainly a noteworthy performance on the part of WITNESS management.

F. K. HOWARD
Priest of Berkeley, Calif.

Thank you for the unusual amount of special articles urging right thinking and action on vital matters concerning the welfare of the Church and the world. The Church Congress articles (WITNESS, April 10) give an encouraging picture of the Anglican Communion of a really liberal-catholic view of our Christian heritage. The article by Carey McWilliams, based upon Bishop Parsons' contribution to Christianity Takes A Stand, shows the test of believing aright resulting in doing right to the wronged Japanese. Now if our Christian forces will prevent our latest hysteria in regard to the communist scare, worse than after the first world war, from blotting the pages of history by the suppression of communism—always the worst and futile way to combat error—we may take steps toward one Church and one world. I appreciate THE WITNESS very much for its fight for both liberty and authority by putting each in due proportion.

THE VIRGINIA SEMINARY

ALEXANDRIA, VIRGINIA

The Campaign Goal

I. The Seminary's immediate need

Four Dormitory Buildings	$300,000
Refectory and Kitchen Facilities	125,000
Dormitory and Refectory Furnishings	50,000
Restoration of Main Buildings	90,000
Sewer Installation	27,000
To Restore Faculty Houses	58,000
Refashioning Prayer Hall	10,000
	$660,000

II. The Seminary will need in the near future

For Endowment of New Building	$350,000
Student Scholarship Aid	260,000
For Increase of Current Budget	540,000
Growth in Curriculum and Expansion	300,000
	$1,450,000

Gift Opportunities For You

The estimated cost of the four new dormitory buildings and refectory is $425,000. Another $50,000 is needed to provide the dining room and kitchen equipment and to furnish the rooms. Donors may wish to contribute some part of the buildings or their furnishings. The table below gives an idea of the approximate cost of gift memorials in the dormitories and refectory. Names of the donors and those they wish to have commemorated will be inscribed on a bronze tablet.

Individual Dormitory	$ 75,000
The Refectory	125,000
Dining Room and Furnishings	75,000
Kitchen and Equipment	50,000
Matron's Apartment	7,500
Common Room	7,500
Tutor's Suite	7,500
Guest Room and Bath	6,000
Student's Room	5,000

A Gift of $2,000 would permit a donor to designate by an appropriate placque a Student's Room as a Memorial.

The American Bible Society Is Honored by Navy

It Receives a Certificate of Achievement In Recognition of Services to the Sailors

By the Rev. James V. Claypool

New York:—There was the noisy clicking of motion picture cameras on the second floor of the Bible House here recently. The floor was strewn with equipment. The blinding glare of spot lights shone on three figures, two navy chaplains and the third, the Rev. Gilbert Darlington, treasurer of the American Bible Society. Camera men, in the uniform of the signal corps, were making a permanent record of a unique distinction being conferred on the Society.

The crisp accents of Rear Admiral Robert D. Workman rolled on to the sound track as he presented to Dr. Darlington a certificate of achievement, from the bureau of Naval Personnel, in recognition of the Bible Society's outstanding services to the naval personnel during World War II."

If one could see the activities behind the facade of parchment, and follow the paths taken by the books it represents he would travel into many strange places. Chaplains of the navy distributed hundreds of thousands of these copies, directly into the hands of young men eager for a copy of the book that brought to them a message of hope and faith; he would find himself behind the barber wire of prison camps, where Scriptures in Japanese and German were supplied whenever requests came through the chaplains of the naval forces; to our allies in China, the Philippines, Korea and many a Pacific Island, and to our fighting brothers in Europe, went Scriptures in their own languages.

Ever on the alert to meet new conditions, the Society developed a water-proof envelope, in which was sealed a New Testament. This was a part of the standard equipment, along with Red Cross supplies and foods, to be found on all liferafts, lifeboats and navy transport planes.

Impressive as this picture is, it is only a part of the war service given by the Bible Society during a six-year period ending June 30, 1946. Over 14,500,000 copies of the Scriptures, in more than forty languages, were distributed. During the peak period a record run of 10.000 copies a day poured from the presses of the printing plant. And with the urgency created by this war emergency program, the regular work of the Bible Society went on. Annual circulation of the Scriptures, starting from a total of more than seven million copies rose to over twelve. Work was going on, wherever possible. In the forty countries where the Society operates, Scriptures were being distributed in well over one hundred languages. Even in our own country there were calls for Scriptures in 78 different languages.

The ending of the war brought new problems for the Society to solve. Much of the Scripture distribution in Europe had formerly been carried on by the British and Foreign Bible Society and by the national Societies of the various countries. The Nazi-controlled fighting machine had taken its toll from all of them. Printing plants had been smashed, printing plates destroyed, and paper had become almost an unknown commodity. Never had the need for Scriptures been greater. Thousands and thousands of Bibles had been war casualties. Refugees lost their Scriptures on their forced marches. Europe faced a real famine of Bibles.

In May 1946 representatives of Bible Societies from 13 countries met in England to discuss the Bible in the remaking of Europe and appraise the measure of Europe's need of Scriptures. It was estimated there was a shortage of five million English Bibles in the British Empire alone. But the conference agreed that Germany presented the greatest area of need. There had been no printing of the Bible there for ten years. Nurtured on the great German Scriptures, of Luther's translation, there were many who still owned and read their Bibles. What of the new generation with their great moral and spiritual confusion? For them the Bible should be provided.

To the American Bible Society fell the great opportunity of getting such a program underway. The Society published in the United States, and shipped to Germany, during 1946, hundreds of thousands of Bibles, Testaments and Gospels at a cost of about $262,500. Even a quantity as large as this in total is very small in proportion to the need. The Society's representative from Geneva, on a trip through Germany, reported that the most frequent phrase used other than those of gratitude was that the Scriptures sent were "like a drop of water on a hot stove."

Further production in this country is continuing for Germany until a second project of prime importance, the publication of Scriptures in her own country, can be gotten under way. In Germany there are paper mills, presses and workmen. But a variety of materials goes into the making of a Bible and it is the furnishing of these raw goods that now engages the attention of the Society.

A list of the necessary materials was submitted to Dr. Darlington and probably no one ever faced a shopping list that presented greater difficulties in these days of shortages. Three hundred and sixty-one tons of cellulose for paper making, additional tons of paper, tons of binders board, yards of binding cloth and over a million yards of thread! From rayon to Bibles is quite a transformation and yet this actually occurred in one of the factories in Stockholm. A request for fifty tons of cellulose reached the factory, from the American Bible Society, to be delivered to Germany and to be used in the manufacture of Bibles! The factory executives pondered. They had never been faced with such a decision before. What to do? What they did was to divert from the manufacture of rayon the needed tons of cellulose that paper might be made on which the precious words of God would later be printed.

Bulgarian, Czech, Danish, French, Greek, on through the alphabet of European lands runs the need for Scriptures. The Society is publishing more than a million volumes in these languages.

To Japan, where the Christian forces are in an evangelistic campaign for 3,000,000 new Christians in three years, already the Society has sent many thousands of Testaments and Gospels. So great has been the call for the books that by the end of last year only 200 copies were left in the Japan Bible Society's office. There is no possibility of production in Japan because of the destruction of presses and lack of paper. So the Bible Society is working on a program of production in this country that extends to 150,000 Bibles and 1,100,000 New Testaments.

This partial picture of the Bible Society's accelerated program, a direct result of the war, must not black out its regular work to which, through its 131 years it has been committed—the furnishing of Scriptures to "every man in his own tongue." Translations, in languages never before published, are coming from the press, are sent on their way to readers, new in the ways of Christianity, who find in the printed word the precious promises they have learned from the missionary.

Fast as the presses turn out the Scriptures, carefully as they are distributed, more and more books are required to fill the demands that come to the Society. Last year nearly three million Scriptures were sent to Latin American countries, and still the Society's agency in Rio de Janeiro wrote that if it might have 50,000 copies of the Portuguese Bible on their shelves, every one could be placed. Nearly four million copies were distributed in this country last year—but there are still many areas that have never heard of this book. One of the Society's colporteurs tells of a trip back into the mountains of Pennsylvania where he came upon a tiny settlement. He asked the people if they had Bibles. He noticed that they seemed confused. Then he asked if they had heard of Jesus. "Jesus," they asked. "No, we have never heard of Jesus. But," they added, "very few strangers pass through here, and we feel sure no one by the name of Jesus has gone through."

Help with the translation of the Scriptures, publication in many languages and dialects, and the distribution of these books, has been the big business of the American Bible Society for 131 years. At the celebration of one century and a quarter of service, the president of the Society said, "We have only just begun." That is the watchword the officers of the Society hold before them as they consider, in these trying days, the immense possibilities and opportunities the Society faces, knowing it dare not fail, for in the Bible are found the precepts and principles on which a world of safety and sanity may rest.

The Guild of Saint Barnabas For Nurses Fills Need

The Chaplain General Presents Its History And Relates the Services That It Performs

By John Goodridge Martin
Superintendent of the Hospital of St. Barnabas and for Women and Children, Newark, New Jersey

Newark, N. J.: — Garden lovers are continually intrigued by the miracles they witness. Mother nature teaches us many lessons and not the least of these is the love of beauty. From the humble earth, enriched with very unlovely fertilizer, there rises a life from a previous death. The seed perishes and decays and its germ of life resurges into another growth bearing beautiful blossoms to delight us all. Thus life persists, a constant wonder of God's creation.

We read in the Bible of the beauty of holiness. Somehow I like to relate that phrase to the service rendered by nurses in behalf of their stricken brethren. By their daily acts they enrich life. They express in a very tangible way the Christian virtues which may be compared with the sweet and beautiful flowers of Paradise—the "beauty of holiness."

It is quite natural for us to think of flowers when we behold a group of student nurses rounding out their course of instruction wherein they have learned the intimate lessons of life. We have watched them budding forth in their pre-clinical period and anxiously attended the unfolding process of trial and experience until the time arrived for the full-blown blossoms to rejoice in the possession of diplomas. The climax of growth arrives and the period of service begins. Now come the glow and radiance of life—the pouring it forth, lavishly, for the benefit of others. A life given in service for the afflicted takes on a new beauty, and a new power of freedom of soul is its reward.

The Guild of Saint Barnabas for Nurses is dedicated to the development of Christian character in the life of the nurse. While incentives are not lacking in the profession itself, still the association of kindred souls, who freely and of their own accord assemble periodically to express their spiritual aspirations, is a stimulating means of achieving mutual enrichment of soul. To emphasize the spiritual aspects of the service of nurses is a most important function. The Guild offers nourishment and refreshment of soul for its members to support them for the important duties which are essential in the task of restoring human life.

The benefits of the Guild should be extended to many more nurses. Especially is there a need for its ideals and aims to be presented to student nurses so that from the early days of their professional training they may enjoy the privileges which membership offers. The seed should be planted early. The nourishment should be constant and of a satisfying nature. The plant should grow and the flowers unfold in beautiful splendor.

The Rev. John G. Martin is the Chaplain-General of the Guild of St. Barnabas for Nurses. He is also the Superintendent of the Hospital of St. Barnabas and for Women and Children in Newark, N. J.

The Guild of Saint Barnabas for Nurses was founded in 1886 in Boston, by the Rev. Edward William Osborne, who later became the Bishop of Springfield. It had been started ten years earlier in England in response to the need for an organized effort to promote the principles which underlie the Guild. In this country it has become national in extent with branches in all sections of the country.

The Guild may be compared to the fraternity and sorority movements among college students. Similar social and entertainment features are found in both. Methods of selection of new members, while not identical, still follow related patterns. The Guild is purely a voluntary body, depending for its extension chiefly upon the character and enthusiasm of those who have enjoyed the benefits of membership.

The fact that its ideals and aims fulfill the requirements of good Christian conduct explains its natural association with the churches of the several communities in which it operates and the large dependence upon clergymen whose interest in wholesome social and religious activities leads them to give special attention to the needs and desires of nurses.

The practice has been found desirable for each branch of the Guild to have its meetings and other activities at the church of which its chaplain is the pastor. Many advantages of this arrangement are immediately apparent to those who are aware of the exacting and confining features of nursing service which lead to the desire to get away occasionally from the scenes and atmosphere of hospital and sick rooms.

The Guild has a three-fold program. Its aims include spiritual, social and cultural activities. Through its nation-wide organization it is able to exert a sisterly influence among those who go from place to place. It promotes friendliness among all nurses and it makes definite provision for contacts with women outside the nursing profession in its policy of including associates in its membership. Lay women, as associate members, cooperate with nurses in achieving the objectives of the Guild, both local and national in scope, to effect a useful, constructive and altogether commendable society. The inspiration to attain these ends is the peculiar privilege and duty of the chaplain of the branch. Local conditions control the activities of each branch.

In Cleveland, where an admirer of the work left a large legacy, a Guild House is in use for housing guests and post-graduate students of the University. A fund is in use by a scholarship committee providing financial aid either for missionary nurses who have returned from the mission field on furlough and who are anxious to fit themselves still further for their work, or for nurses who desire to prepare for the mission field. Other scholarships are available for post-graduate work in the Frances Payne Bolton School of Nursing of Western Reserve University.

When Miss Grace Crosson, a graduate of St. John's Hospital School of Nursing in Brooklyn, N. Y., went to the Hudson Stuck Memorial Hospital in Fort Yukon, Alaska, several branches sent boxes of supplies to aid in the activities of that missionary hospital.

For a number of years the stipend of a nurse director of a hospital in Puerto Rico was provided by the Guild.

About a quarter of a century ago the late Rev. Charles Thomas Walkley invited all nurses to be the guests of the Orange, N. Y. branch, of which he was chaplain, at a memorial service in honor of Florence Nightingale and all other nurses in Paradise. Similar memorial services are now held annually all over the nation on a Sunday near the birthday of Florence Nightingale, May twelfth.

Other activities of the Guild include inspirational addresses by speakers of note on various subjects; talks on the opportunities in the several fields of nursing interests; gathering of sick benefit funds and visiting of sick nurses; formation of glee clubs; holding suppers, teas, picnics, bazaars, entertainments, dramatic readings, travel talks, monologues, plays, etc.

The national organization is especially interested in the expansion program of the Guild. Through region and local committees it seeks to offer the benefits of membership to all nurses everywhere. It is also concerned with the program of securing financial aid for the support of nurses who give themselves to missionary activities in connection with our Christian churches. It also endeavors to be of real service in securing nurses for such purposes. Another interest of the national office is its desire to cooperate with nursing organizations in securing suitable young women for schools of nursing.

Graduate nurses and student nurses enrolled in recognized schools of nursing may become members. They form the active membership group. Interested women who are not nurses but who desire to take part in the Guild program are welcomed as associate members. Clergymen and physicians are welcomed as associate members and their interest and assistance are greatly appreciated.

While the Guild has been the favored child of the Episcopal Church it has rightly become interdenominational in its activities. It aims to help nurses everywhere. In a recent message Dr. Walkley wrote: "The glory of the nursing profession is indicated in its ministry to personality. What a glorious profession! To be trained and able to minister to motherhood, and then the child, sanctified in the mystery of life in God's gift of personality. To be the angel of comfort at a birth, to give assurance of sight, life and light to a child, to be a minister of comfort from birth to the end of living is the blessed privilege of the trained nurse. From the manger to the descent from the Cross loving hands blessed the Christ. May you see him in your every ministration. God give you his grace to minister to his Son. Where he is, is home."

SUFFRAGAN FOR NEW YORK

New York:—Bishop Gilbert announced on April 28 that a majority of consents for the election of a Suffragan Bishop had been received to enable the annual convention on May 13th to act upon the matter. There have been three clergymen mentioned prominently in the press for the position; the Rev. Louis W. Pitt, rector of Grace Church, New York; the Rev. Horace W. B. Donegan, rector of St. James', New York, and the Rev. Ross Greer, rector of Grace Church, Millbrook. Mr. Donegan is also one of four men whose names will be put before the convention of Western New York a few days later for Bishop Coadjutor.

SUFFRAGAN BISHOP OF JAMAICA

Kingston, Jamaica:—Canon P. W. Gibson was consecrated Suffragan Bishop of Jamaica at the cathedral here on May 1. He is a Jamaican and is the first West Indian to be elected to the episcopacy. Bishop C. Alfred Voegeli of Haiti represented the Presiding Bishop and the National Council at the service.

INTER-COMMUNION IS URGED

London (wireless to RNS):—Full communion between Anglican and Free Churches, on the basis of the proposal of the Archbishop of Canterbury for a mutual exchange of ministries, was urged here by the conference of Evangelical Churchmen.

CIVIL RIGHTS COMMITTEE

Washington: — President Truman's committee on civil rights, of which the Presiding Bishop is a member, were told last week that race discrimination here should be investigated. With Bishop Sherrill presiding, Walter White, top man of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, told them that "We are in danger of being looked on as a nation of hypocrites until we do something about discrimination in the capital." He urged that the committee should ask for legislation which would make it possible to end a filibuster by a majority vote; should recommend a strong anti-lynch law; outlaw the poll tax; establish a permanent FEPC; abolish Jim Crowism in every phase of American life; set up a presidential agency to end discrimination in government hiring and end discrimination in the armed forces.

Seed Time and Harvest

THE importance of seed time and of harvest not only to the United States but to the future of the whole world is a subject that does not need to be stressed before any thinking American. Unless good seed is freely available and is generously sown, there cannot be a prosperous and happy economy. In an age of miracles, the miracle of the tiny grain of mustard seed that grows into a large plant is still unsurpassed.

On the 8th of May 1816 in the Garden Street Dutch Reformed Church, near what is now called "Exchange Place," the American Bible Society was founded to translate, publish and distribute the good seed of the Christian gospel. For the past 131 years over 366 million separate packages of seed in the form of Bibles, Testaments and separate books of the Bible have been published and distributed by it throughout the world. In scores of languages and versions, it has perfected and multiplied the varieties and species of the good seed of the gospel. Through the whole recent war period it has done the greatest work in its history, 9 million copies published for the army and navy, and a grand total of 14,229,525 published or ordered for the entire war emergency program, which included service to prisoners of war, displaced persons, liberated areas and other regions where the war had created a dearth of Bibles. The demand continues, and indeed is increasing as the doors open to the impoverished countries of Europe and the Far East. It is not possible today to supply all of the demand for the Scriptures that is coming to the Bible House in New York.

To finance this world-wide organization specializing in producing and packaging the most powerful seeds known to man, less than sixty million dollars has been contributed in the past 131 years. This is much less than the cost of the battleship U.S.S. Oklahoma. The Oklahoma was sunk at Pearl Harbor in a few moments, raised and repaired at great cost, and then sold for junk a few months ago. On the other hand, some copies of the American Bible Society's packages of seed dated 1816 are still readable and the vitality of their message is unimpaired.

Gifts to the American Bible Society come from individuals, from churches, and to a less extent nowadays, from auxiliary Bible societies. The total amount that has come from investment income is less than 10 per cent of the 130-year grand total. The current 1947 budget of the Society calls for $1,282,400. Income from invested funds amounts to only 9.3 per cent of this total, but the Society also must raise an additional million dollars to carry on the postwar work of supplying the packages of seeds known as Bibles, Testaments and Gospels to the war-torn and desolated areas of the world. None of this comes from invested funds. Without generous donations the seed cannot be grown or sown.

"QUOTES"

FOR our many forms of exploitation of peoples weaker than ourselves, we pray. Exploitation of industry with its low wages. long hours of work, cheap labor, unsanitary and low standards of living; exploitation of intellect where masses of many lands live in ignorance and superstition because the light of knowledge has not reached them; exploitation of the natural resources and markets of a country for the grab of rubber, oil, cotton or coal; exploitation of people's freedom for self-expression, politically, culturally, economically or religiously. For this great sin of ours, our Father, forgive us.

—The World Day of Prayer, 1947

Must We Stay at the Bottom?

WE ARE glad to devote this issue of THE WITNESS to a presentation of the great and far-reaching accomplishments of the American Bible Society, as well as a consideration of its present needs. Through the Society American Christians have carried on a far-reaching ministry of the Word for 130 years. Yet it must be said that American Episcopalians have by no means given their full and fair share that the Gospel might reach the hands and hearts of all nations.

Let us look at the figures which show the contributions of the Protestant Episcopal Church to the regular work of the Society since 1941: 1941, $1,609; 1942, $1,723; 1943, $4,032; 1944, $3,513; 1945, $3,724; 1946, $6,144.

This is an average gift per member, in 1946, of 3/10 of a cent, and in comparison with the gifts of other Churches, puts us at the bottom of the list. This poor showing is doubtless due to the fact that the work and needs of the American Bible Society have not been very widely presented to our people.

It is true that the Episcopal Church can show a better record in giving to the war emergency fund of the American Bible Society, and through grants made from the Presiding Bishop's and other funds, a total of $74,570 was given during the years 1941-1946. But this was emergency giving, and is still $12,000 less than one Christian Church gives annually for the regular work of the Society.

These are days when the regular work of the Society must increase and prosper. It is our hope that WITNESS readers will wish to do something to enable our Church to play a more important part in this vital ministry. It is our opportunity for a practical demonstration of our real interest in Church unity. We need compromise no convictions in spreading abroad the Scriptures from which we boast that our convictions are derived.

The Miracle of Literature

by Francis C. Stifler

Secretary of Public Relations, American Bible Society

IT HAS never been difficult for me to believe in the miracles of the Bible because I have witnessed the miracle of the Bible itself. The Bible is the miracle of literature. I rest my extravagant appraisal on four pillars of well established fact.

In the first place the Bible has outlived all other books. It is the oldest book that most people know anything about and yet it is the best known book in the world today. The oldest portions of the Bible were written not less than 4,000 years ago and its final compilation as we know it was made at least 1800 years ago. Well, can you name any other book as much as 500 years old?

There are many fascinating angles to this subject of the Bible's age. It was written in languages that are no longer in common use. The death of ancient languages usually means the death of everything written in them. But the Bible was snatched from this death trap even before its original tongues had died. By the time the revival of learning in Europe in the 15th Century had brought Ancient Greek back into the curricula of the universities, the Bible had already found its way into 22 European languages. But that was only a beginning. With the invention of printing which meant more demand for books and cheaper production, the figure began to climb. By the year 1800 the number of languages possessing the Bible had reached 81. Then came the opening up of Christian missions in India, China, and elsewhere through the marvelous work of William Carey and others. In the first 30 years of the 19th Century the figures for all the centuries before were more than doubled, 86 languages, spoken by a total of more than 300,000,000 people being added in those three decades. But fresh wonders were to follow. Today some useful portion of the Bible, if not the whole book, has been translated and published in 1072 languages. At present—now listen carefully to what I am going to say—at present and for the past 40 years the Scriptures have been passing into a new language at the rate of one a month.

But that is not all. Languages are always changing. The English I am writing at this moment is very different from that of Chaucer. I would find it hard to write Chaucerian English and you could scarcely understand me if I succeeded. Because languages change, Bible texts have to be constantly revised and that is just what is going on all over the world. We got a new English Revision of the New Testament last year. Japanese scholars are in the midst of revising their Old Testament and missionaries are working on a hundred other revisions. The Bible has outlived other books because men have kept it up to date.

Sewing Testaments—three Books at a time

And that suggests my second pillar that upholds the Bible as the miracle of literature. Men have kept the Bible alive because it outteaches every other book. The Bible tells every man on earth, no matter where he lives or what his social status or nationality, the answers to the most important questions he ever asks. No matter whether he be a Gypsy or an Eskimo, a Finn, or a Patagonian, here is a book that tells him of the kind of God he has always wished he had, and so much better than he ever wished. The Psalms express his own heart's longings, the stories of Jacob and Joseph, of Elijah and Daniel and Job are all unforgettable stories of men who dealt with God. But when he comes to Jesus—ah, who could ask for more than Christ. The theologian may make his teachings difficult—but his appeal to plain untutored men the world around is instant and transforming. Where the Bible has gone, men have turned from savagery, women and children have been emancipated, homes have been beautified, villages made clean, disease reduced, songs have been sung—that abundant life which the Master promised has begun to appear.

Yes, the Bible has the answers to the deepest questions of the human heart and when men hear them and heed them, life begins anew. The Bible outteaches every other book.

THE miracle is further supported by the fact that the Bible outsells every other book. No other books can hope to overtake the Bible for at least three reasons, and there are many many more. First, no other book is obtainable in so many tongues. The Bible is available in the speech of possibly 2,000,000,000 people. A book even in English, the world's most widely read language, could be read by only 600,000,000 people. In the second place, no other book can ever hope to compete with the Bible in its sales organization. Who sells the Bible? The Christian Church. Of course "sells" is hardly the right word because those who distribute God's word, for the most part, look for no financial return. Their satisfaction is in seeing still another human introduced to God in Christ. Even if there were another book in everybody's language, who could finance its worldwide sale?

And the third reason why no other book can ever outsell the Bible is that it has so enormous a head start. There were 25,000,000 copies of the Scriptures sold last year throughout the world. For a few years before the war the figure approached 30,000,000. In the coming years this figure will mount sharply, not only because the channels of trade are opening again, but because of the irrestible wave of literacy programs that are sweeping across the backward nations. In another few decades it is apparent that there will be not 900,000,000 literate people in the world but more like 1,400,000,000. Among many who are now learning to read, the Bible is already their first reader. No book will ever outsell the Bible.

And the fourth pillar on which I base my appraisal of the Bible as the miracle of literature is that it has outdone every other book. Maybe I had better say "outwrought." To begin with it has preserved the Hebrew people to whose fathers God spoke the words of this book. But although its origin was confined almost wholly to this one people, it has become the civilizing agent of the whole world. You cannot explain, apart from the Bible, all the good things that Europe has given the world in art, in music, in literature, in science, and in architecture. The story of England's supremacy is the story of the Bible's influence, through King Alfred, Wycliff, Tyndale, Milton, Wesley, and a hundred other Bible bred leaders. You cannot explain America and her peculiar genius for harmonizing people who elsewhere have been natural enemies, for resisting the temptation of imperialism, for hating war, for loving democracy and decency and self rehabilitation. America is paradise to most of the world today and it all roots back to the fact that for 150 years during the colonial period, five generations of Americans were schooled principally in the Bible. America is a Bible born nation, the only such among the great nations of the world.

And the Bible is going right on outdoing all other books in its influence upon the nations of men. China is today the most promising of the giant peoples of the East and it is largely due to the Bible's influence. Her government leaders, her students, her newspapers, her authors, and millions of her common people, honor, respect, use and love the Bible, and have done it in a rapidly expanding way for the last 35 years.

What Japan becomes may depend upon the Bible. Just now Japan is turning to the Bible with avid interest. Tokyo government middle schools are asking for missionaries to teach the Bible. One minister has been invited to give a series of lectures at the Ise Shrine. Tokyo University, a major Buddhist school, has asked Christian leaders to provide six lectures on Christianity during the current term. Bibles are selling as fast as they can be printed in this country and shipped to Japan. If history means anything it means that if we supply Bibles to Japan today, she will be the better nation for it tomorrow. What a book!

The miracle of literature that has outlived, out taught, out sold, and outdone every other book. How explain it? There is only one way. Take it on its own testimony—it is the word of God.

Strategy and Tactics

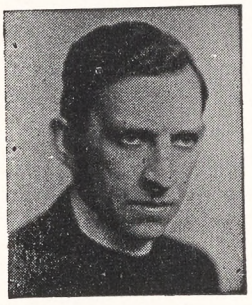
by

FRANCIS O. AYRES
Rector of St. John's, Waterbury, Conn.

ONE criticism of the Church which is, in general, true is that it does not reach out to touch men where they are — rather it waits to have people come to it. The seriousness of the situation is pointed up by the following statement: "F was convinced of the necessity of the Church's finding new means of ministering spiritually to many eager 'seekers' who are willing to listen but had inhibitions about actually coming to Church. They have been so remote from the Church that so much as to pass through a church door would by them be going a long way. He said that he was certain that many of the youth really wanted to know about Christianity." The quotation happens to come from "Report on Germany" by John Baillie but F's observation certainly holds true for our country.

I think it can be said, in all fairness, that the Church is aware of its failure in this respect. Furthermore, it has tried to correct the situation. The Church has used newspapers, the radio, pamphlets and other mediums. Sometimes this effort is on the level of a barker outside a sideshow, but more often it represents an honest, and sometimes successful, attempt to reach men where they are. The Church has gone into many hospitals, schools and prisons, and a few men like Frank Sayers, are trying to develop a ministry to those in industry. Nevertheless, when measured against the task to be done, even the cumulative effect of these efforts is not very great.

It seems to me that in our talk and in our action along these lines we are missing our best bet. We are making the old, and disastrous, error of thinking of the Church as its clergy. Obiously, if the job is left to the clergy, the Church will never reach very far. But laymen are also members of the Church and because they are the Church reaches everywhere in almost every community of the land. The hand of the Church, so to speak, is in everything but the hand is badly paralyzed and accomplished little.



That hand of the Church will remain paralyzed until laymen themselves are willing to allow new life to flow through it from worship, study, and Christian fellowship. The Church has made a good start in bringing before its members the importance of lay work. The effort should be broadened, deepened and intensified in every possible way. We need to cut loose from tradition. The senior warden of St. . . . Church handing out literature in front of the local movie theater would cause quite a stir. When people were sure that he had not lost his mind, they might take some of the literature and read it. If the members of the same church could talk to their fellow workers about religion with the same conviction and knowledge that they do about baseball, the Church might once again become truly apostolic in its outreach.

Talking It Over

By

W. B. SPOFFORD

A CHAPLAIN ENDED up a Major. Before the war he was a good parish priest. He is healthy, in his thirties. He has personality and a fine family. He thinks we were way off the beam in that editorial of March 27 called "The Clergy Shortage." He thinks Dean Taylor was off too in his article in that same issue. He writes: "Maybe you know whereof you speak. So maybe does Dean Taylor. But I still maintain that the ex-chaplains have had a raw deal. Where are all these needs for clergy? What about some of the institutional work? It surely doesn't look as if the needs are so great if I'm a curate and other chaplains I know have not yet found parishes. I'm enough of an egotist to say I'm not a misfit, and I know these others are not either. Either somebody knows a lot we don't know, or being a chaplain disqualifies a man in the eyes of the Church. How about it?"

That I'll pass on to the seminary deans for answering.

SOME haven't liked what we have said about John Foster Dulles, which of course is ok—there is plenty of room for disagreement in the Episcopal Church. And Mr. Dulles is a Church matter inasmuch as he remains chairman of the Federal Council's Commission of a Just and Durable Peace. So I ask these Be-Tough-With-Russia people what they think the Christian attitude should be when an on-the-spot American journalist can write from Moscow: "Time and again Molotov agrees to the American point of view to the embarrassment of Secretary Marshall, who did not expect agreement and who then insists upon thinking over his own proposals. In short, Marshall, pushed by Dulles, will not take yes for an answer."

That, I think, requires some careful thinking, and perhaps penitence, on the part of American Christians. Are there powerful Americans who are hell-bent for war, regardless? Pastor Niemoeller tells his American audiences how he indicated his opposition to German fascism by pausing, in reading the Ten Commandments, after "Thou Shalt Not Kill." May I suggest to those who have been kicking THE WITNESS around for what we have said about both Mr. Dulles and Pastor Niemoeller, that the time has arrived for them to find some effective means of indicating their opposition to the rising tide of American fascism? After all their defense of Niemoeller is that, in their judgment, he proved himself to be a militant anti-fascist. The way things are going some of his champions in the U.S.A. might well follow his example in this regard.

God Speaks to You

by Angus Dun

The Bishop of Washington

THIS is about the Bible. I am going to begin by asking you to do a little supposing. Suppose you were sitting in your room or in your home, and there came a knock at the door. And suppose that when you opened the door, there was someone standing there holding an envelope with a name written on it. If the name on the envelope were your name, you would open it and read what you found inside with a special kind of interest. Of course after reading a little you might decide that some mistake had been made. You might decide that this was not really meant for you. You might say, "I don't know anything about this: it does not say anything that could be meant for me." But we all read with a special kind of interest what we know is meant for us.

Suppose again that in the corner of the envelope there was printed an address. If the address were that of our father or our brother or of a dear friend, we would open the envelope with a special interest, because we would expect to find inside a message from someone who meant much to us. If the address on the outside of the envelope happened to be The White House, Washington, D. C., we would again open the envelope with some excitement, because anything coming to us from such an address might be important. Again, in reading what we found inside, we might decide that it could not be from the person it claimed to be from, because it did not say the sort of things which that person would say. We might decide that someone was trying to play a trick on us.

From these simple illustrations, I conclude two things. The first is that it makes a big difference in reading or in hearing words, whether we believe they are menat for us. We judge in part whether they are meant for us by the way they fit our case. Secondly, it makes a big difference in reading words from whom we believe they come. So when we receive a letter or a message, we look at the postmark or the handwriting or the signature; we want to discover whether it comes from home or from someone who is important to us. If we are in any doubt as to who is sending us the message, we try to decide whether they are in character.

All this is preparatory to saying something about the book we call the Bible. There are two very remarkable things about this book. The first is that it is addressed to you. It has your name on it. It is not addressed to you alone, but to everyman, to every man personally and so to you. If you do not read it or hear it or take in what is said there, you will miss something that is meant for you. It brings you an invitation to meet the most important person you could possibly meet. It brings warnings that are meant for you. It brings instructions that are meant for you. It won't do any good to say, "I didn't bother to open it and read." You will be like a person who received an invitation to meet someone very much worth meeting, and who never took the trouble to find out where or how you could meet him. Or you will be like a person who received a valuable instrument and never bothered to read the instructions that came with it. If you make a mess of it, it will do no good to say that you did not bother to read the instructions. The Bible contains the instructions that come with the most valuable gift any of us receives, the gift of our own life and of our own relationships.

The second remarkable thing about this book is that the heart of what it has to say to you is from God. You remember what Christ said: "The word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's who sent me." This is what the prophets were constantly saying; they said that the words which they uttered were a message from God to men. This is what all the men who wrote the Bible were constantly saying.

The really important things in the Bible are postmarked "Heaven." They come from headquarters. They come from home, from every man's home. "The word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's who sent me."

That is the word of God which bears God's thought to us, shares God's life with us, making him present.

OF COURSE the words of the Bible are human words. They could mean nothing to us if they were not. But they have it in them to be more than that. Above, beneath, within the human words those who have ears to hear can hear God's word to them. You may be reading or hearing read the old words of Isaiah from a time 700 years before Christ; "In the year that King Uzziah died, I saw also the Lord sitting upon the throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple. Above it stood the seraphim . . . and one cried unto another and said, 'Holy, Holy, Holy, is the Lord of hosts; the whole earth is full of his glory.' And the posts of the door moved at the voice of him that cried, and the house was filled with smoke. Then said I, 'Woe is me, for I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips, for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts.' Then flew one of the Seraphim unto me having a live coal in his hand which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar, and he laid it upon my mouth and said, 'Lo this hath touched thy lips and thine iniquity is taken away and thy sin purged.' Also I heard the voice of the Lord saying 'Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?' Then said I, 'Here am I; send me.' "

If you listen or read in the spirit, God may take those old words and speak to you through them of His majesty, of your littleness, and of his claim on your life.

You may hear the minister read words as dulled by familiarity as the Beatitudes. "Blessed are the poor in spirit for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven. Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth. Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy. Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God."

Perhaps your only response will be, "They are beautiful old words, aren't they?" or, "He read them well," or "He read them badly." But it can be that in them the Lord speaks to you, telling you with an authority that compels your sense; "Your standards are upside down. You wish to be served and to rule; those who serve are the truly blessed. You like to possess and hold on; those who share and give are the real inheritors of life. You are a contentious person, quick to resent, harboring old dislikes; the peacemakers are the people of God."

That holy presence that spoke to Isaiah and in Christ can speak to you. He has things to say to you we know not of; old familiar things, new things, words of rebuke, of forgiveness, of command, of consolation.

It is worth everything to sit patiently through many words of men, listening to hear one word of God to you.

To read or hear the Bible rightly is to look for what God is saying to you. In it there is one who is speaking to you; what is he saying to you? I cannot tell all that he says to you, for he says something different through the Bible to every person; but I do know some of the things he is saying to you, because he is saying them to all of us personally.

He is saying, "I made you. You belong to me. I know you through and through; better than you know yourself or better than any of your friends know you. I know the best in you, that you sometimes try to hide, and I know the worst in you, that you often try to hide. I have a purpose for you, better than any purpose you have yet found for yourself. I have hopes for you, that are higher than your own hopes for yourself. I care greatly for you. But I care just as much for the man next to you, whoever he is. I have showed you what is god: to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God. If you think the wrongness in the world is someone else's wrongness, and not yours, you are greatly mistaken. The first wrongness for you to deal with is your own, and after you have dealt thoroughly with that, you might possibly be in a position to do something about somebody else's wrongness. If you think that you can do quite well without me, you are greatly mistaken. I give power to those that wait upon me; even when you forget me, I remember you. My way is the way of forgiveness. If you would know me better, listen often to my Son, whom I have sent and who bears my word to you."

That is the kind of speaking we are to listen for in the Bible. "The word which you hear is not mine, but the Father's which sent me." "If any man hath ears to hear, let him hear." "Blessed—very happy—are they that hear the Word of God and keep it."

Bishop Scarlett Urges Church To Be More Daring

We Must Be More Specific About Concrete Situations Than We Have Ever Been in Past

Edited by Sara Dill

Brooklyn, N. Y.:—"The function of the Christian Church is not just to make men good but by changing their environment to make it likely they will be good," said Bishop Scarlett of Missouri at Holy Trinity here. The sermon was preached at one of the services marking the centennial of the parish.

"We cannot be content," said the Bishop, "simply to maintain and extend the very same pattern of life which has had war as its center, war as its logic, war as its only answer to the problems set by the primacy which our world places on self-interest, by the undue individualism which thinks in terms of its rights and not in terms of its obligations, by the prejudices and intolerances of race and nation and class which divide us, by the terrible inequality of racial and economic circumstance which bears down too cruelly on too many people, and by the wide divorce which we tolerate between our ultimate beliefs and our conscious aims.

"Vague generalizations, nebulous aspirations after human brotherhood are no longer of any value whatsoever," declared the Bishop. "We shall have to run the risk as a Church of being much more specific about concrete situations than we have ever dared to be in the past. We shall have to undertake what the great Archbishop of Canterbury, William Temple, called 'the heroic intellectual task of giving to our spiritual faith a living content as over against the extremely effective this-worldliness of the Marxists and secular humanists; while absorbing the elements of truth which these movements have often perceived more clearly and emphasized more strongly than Christians in recent times have done.'

"In the center of modern life," concluded the Bishop, "amid all the conflicts of group interests of race and nation and class, stands ideally the Christian Church. It is the bearer of the greatest tradition which has ever dawned on the mind of man; the tradition of man's dignity and sacredness as an object of God's concern; the tradition of equality of all men in the sight of God; the tradition of man's accountability to God for the use which he makes of his life; and, if man is accountable, the necessity of his freedom. Into the Church we come as group men, clad in the rags of our group interests, and here within the Church we enter into this great tradition, become inheritors of it, and, since God has no other tools, responsible for it. We kneel at the Communion Rail, group men, reaching out hands for the satisfaction of our common need. And then out of the Church we go, still group men, but surely with a difference, having caught some vision of our essential unity transcending our differences. Surely with a compelling sense of community, world community, community toward all peoples in all lands. And surely under an enormous ethical obligation to think out our problems together and to stand together to mitigate the tensions and conflicts of groups, and to reshape the structure of our society more after the pattern of God's will for his children. That is our task."

At the start of his sermon, the Bishop paid a warm tribute to the rector of the parish for the past forty-three years, Rev. John Howard Melish. "In the Church at large," the Bishop said, "there is a multitude of men and women to whom Dr. Melish has become a symbol of all that is noblest and highest in the Christian ministry. This church has risen above custom. It has been a city set upon a hill! With its open communion, and its wide hospitality to men of all churches and none, it has risen above denominationalism. It has transcended racialism in its membership, and that in this segregated land is worth talking about. Any discrimination in the Church of God is a shocking thing. The people of this parish have seen his worth, caught his vision, given him a free pulpit and a free hand, and have backed him and worked with him to accomplish his great goals. A great people as well as a great minister make a great parish."

There were 25 ministers of various denominations in the procession at this final service of a full week of celebration. The service was opened by the Rev. Charles C. S. English, rector of St. Augustine's, a parish which was aided in its beginning by Holy Trinity. The lesson was read by Rabbi S. S. Tedesche of the Union Temple; the benediction was pronounced by Bishop Ludlow of Newark. Seated in a special pew were the consul general of the USSR, Yakov Lomakin, and the vice consul, Pavel Fedosimov and Mrs. Fedosimov. Holy Trinity has worked for years for greater understanding and amity between the U.S. and the USSR, particularly through the activities of the associate rector, the Rev. William H. Melish, who is the chairman of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship.

Hit Discrimination

Montreal (RNS):—Racial discrimination in all its forms was condemned in a resolution adopted at the synod of the Church of England in Canada, meeting here. It called upon churchmen to "repudiate racial animosities and to promote in every possible way the spirit of harmony and good will in the community."

The meeting refused to approve an item in the report of the social service council that "anti-Soviet propaganda has reached new heights of infamy" and that "a large stockpile of atomic bombs exists in the U.S.A. under monopoly control." Instead the synod adopted a resolution deploring "any form of publicity which tends to sow hatred, fear or distrust of the Russian or any other people."

Hit Hartley Bill

Chicago:—More than 400 industrialists, union officials and clergymen, all members of Reform Jewish Congregations, favored a resolution which condemned the Hartley bill, restrictive labor act, which was passed at the close of a two day conference on religion and economic problems, sponsored by several national Jewish organizations.

"We strongly condemn the excesses of the Hartley bill, which among other things have the vindictive purpose of crippling the labor movement of this country by eliminating the closed shop and industry-wide bargaining," the resolution declared. "We deplore all legislation which would liquidate the improved status which labor has enjoyed since the passage of the Wagner Act. It is our belief that management and labor unions should peaceably resolve their differences without the necessity of Congress attempting to club the unions into submission."

Ask Reinstatement

Waterbury, Conn. (RNS) : — Dismissal by St. Mary's Hospital here of three Protestant physicians for their public support of birth control legislation was deplored in a statement signed by 17 Protestant ministers, two rabbis and a social worker. The statement said the doctors were exercising a constitutional right and "a principle of conscience."

Press Relations

Buck Hill Falls, Pa.:—How the press is to be handled when the World Assembly of the World Council of Churches meets in Amsterdam next summer caused lively discussion at the meeting of the provisional committee here. Bishop Oxnam, New York Methodist, said that the pronouncements of the assembly can be brought before Church people only "by the use of the mass media of communications, such as the press and the radio. The press can create an atmosphere congenial to the respect of the Council and to the financial support of the Council, but the press must have full opportunity to hear and to interpret. The press can be relied upon to deal fairly with difficult issues and to hold in confidence off-the-record statements. The only way to dissipate darkness is to let in light." He therefore proposed that the press should be admitted to all sessions, including closed sessions.

Delinquency Reduced

Louisville, Ky. (RNS) :—The committee on institutions of the Council of Churches here was given a substantial share of credit for the reduction of juvenile delinquency by 47% in the past two years. Captain William Kiefer of the crime prevention bureau of the police department, speaking at a dinner of the committee, said that "most of the credit must go to you and people like you who have shown those kids a better way of life." The committee on institutions was founded by Layman George Stoll and has enrolled several hundred church members who work in hospitals and other institutions. Cooperation and not criticism is the basis of the program.

Receives Large Grant

New York:—The Bishop Payne Divinity School received a grant of $192,000 from the Reconstruction and Advance Fund, by action of the National Council at the April meeting. The money is to be used in a rebuilding program.

There are many in the Church who believe the School should not exist, contending that to have a theological seminary exclusively for Negroes is discriminatory. The latest group to take this position was the Episcopal college students of North Carolina, meeting at Chapel Hill earlier this year, who passed a resolution recommending that the seminary be abolished "and that Negro candidates for holy orders be admitted to the regular southern theological schools of the Church." (WITNESS, March 27).

Courses on Labor

Geneva, N. Y.:—Hobart College, in its eight weeks' summer program, is offering seminar courses, aimed at developing junior executives for industry and up and coming labor leaders. Those accepted for the course will be carefully selected by their industry or by their labor organization.

Goes to China

Philadelphia:—Dr. Henry P. Brown, Jr., professor of surgery at the University of Pennsylvania and chief surgeon at two hospitals here, goes to Kunming, China, this month to serve as a medical missionary. He is to take his own medical library and up-to-date surgical instruments and is now busy buying drugs to use in his work.

Choir Festival

Charleston, S. C.:—A chorus of 250 voices gave a choir festival at St. Michael's here. There were 17 choirs taking part, representing Episcopal, Baptist, Lutheran, Methodist, Presbyterian, Greek Orthodox and Jewish congregations.

Convention Address

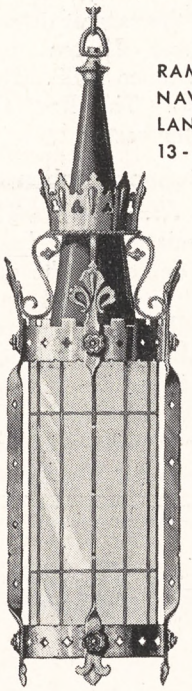
Boston:—Bishop Norman B. Nash, in delivering his first address before a convention of the diocese of Massachusetts, strongly urged a modification of the laws of the state so as to permit planned parenthood (birth control); urged an increase of clergy salaries to take care of increased living costs; and stated that "our own country's vast power lays on all her citizens a solemn responsibility for the use of that power not to make America mightier yet, but for the good of all mankind. Right now the fear of Russia as our chief rival for world leadership threatens to warp all our thinking and to increase the likelihood of the very war we dread. We need a Moses to remind us, 'Sirs, ye are brethren,' that we may together build a durable world order."

The convention, meeting April 22-23, urged President Truman to have the government take immediate steps to provide a haven in America for displaced persons in German and Austrian camps; urged support of Massachusetts legislation for housing for low income families; opposed the establishment of a legislative committee on un-American activities; opposed the returning to America of the bodies of persons killed in the war. It also called for the amendment of the state law so as to permit welfare agencies to offer counsel for planned parenthood "to those married persons who need and seek it."

Addressing the convention was Igor I. Sikorsky, aircraft designer, who told the churchmen that "the Soviet government is undoubtedly an adversary, therefore a most cautious and firm position in regard to this adversary is dictated by necessity."

Reports on Alaska

Seattle (RNS):—The Rev. Mark A. Dawber, head of the Home Missions Council, described Alaska as "the most irreligious and overchurched territory I have ever been in" when he arrived here by plane following a survey of the territory. He said that there "is the terrific problem in the matter of organized vice" and that Alaska is "overchurched" through a racket being conducted by independent groups who go "outside with sob stories" to raise money. He declared that a Council of Churches probably will be organized but that it would be independent of the Federal Council of Churches.



U. N. Support

Providence, R. I. (RNS):—A program to train lay and clerical leaders in presenting international questions was urged at an institute on world order strategy, held here under the auspices of the Rhode Island Council of Churches. It was attended by 150 representatives of eight denominations.

"The United Nations is no stronger than the will of the people of the world," said the Rev. Richard M. Fagley, secretary of the Federal Council's commission on a just and durable peace. "The churches should be in the forefront in shaping the will of the people. We must recognize that the world situation is not hopeless, that world war three is not inevitable and the possibility of losing the peace can be overcome."

Hit the Military

Paterson, N. J. (RNS):—The increasing military influence in the United States was protested in a resolution approved by the executive committee of the Greater Paterson Council of Churches. "The education programs announced by the navy which will give to the military an increasing role in the schools and colleges and will drain off from civilian professions thousands of young men," was given as an example. Opposition was expressed particularly to the "proposal of universal military training in peacetime" which was characterized as a betrayal of "our American democratic way of life, and a threat to the moral and spiritual life of our youth."

Record Again

Albany, N. Y.:—It is getting to be a habit with the children of St. Paul's here. They have won the award for the largest offering in the diocese from Lenten mite boxes every year since 1908. This year it was $1,000. The Rev. George A. Taylor is the rector.

Support Robeson

Peoria, Ill. (RNS):—The ministerial association here has gone on record as deploring the denial of a public hall to Paul Robeson because of his alleged Communist sympathies. Mayor Triebel had refused to give Robeson use of the assembly hall in the city hall for a talk. Previously a scheduled concert by the noted singer at Shrine Mosque had been cancelled when the sale of seats turned out to be negligible due to a campaign directed against Robeson. The ministers stated that "the denial of a right to a citizen of a public expression of his views is a disservice to democracy itself."

Funds for Schools

Washington (RNS): — A nationwide poll of officials of schools and colleges belonging to the American Council on Education has disclosed that 91.5 per cent are against allowing federal funds to be used by private schools. Private school officials voted 75% for the use of such funds and 25% against. The figures were presented at a hearing before a subcommittee of the Senate that is considering various aid-to-education bills.

Good-Natured in Pubs

London (wireless to RNS):—The Christian commando campaign, a drive in which 3,000 trained leaders are seeking the evangelization of London, has reached a peak, with more than 1,000 meetings being held every day in all parts of the city. Teams of evangelists preaching in factory canteens have been invited to pay return visits, and campaign organizers hope that hundreds of additional factory chaplains will be appointed in the London area as a result of the drive. Commandos visiting night-clubs and public houses report audiences there are "good-natured" and apparently receptive to their gospel message.

Pusey House

Oxford, England:—Pusey House, which exists to carry on the work of the famous Dr. Pusey, is to celebrate its diamond jubilee on May 31, postponed from October, 1944. At the service the sermon will be by Bishop Kenneth Kirk of Oxford, and it is expected that the Earl of Halifax will be the speaker at the luncheon which will follow. The announcement, received from the principal, A. Frederic Hood, presents a long list of preachers and speakers at Pusey House in recent years, with but one American on the list, the Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell of Chicago.

Funds are now being sought to maintain the work.

toral counseling? Is God a personal God of individual interpretation and experience?

These are some of the questions asked by a group of 83 college students from New England and the Middle Atlantic states at a three-day conference here to study opportunities afforded by the Christian ministry as a career. The conference was sponsored by Union Theological Seminary.

Other questions put to religious experts and laymen on hand to sell the ministry concerned opportunities for religious radio, definitions of sin, and the position of the Church on controversial issues.

Charles P. Taft, Episcopalian, of Cincinnati, told the group that the Church has its greatest opportunity in the study of human relations.

"Laymen in responsible positions," he said, "are now looking to the Church for leadership in this field, but get only theories and easy answers."

Pastors Buy Space

Colorado Springs, Colo. (RNS):—Twenty-four pastors here bought space in a local newspaper to express their disapproval of the paper's editorial policy. They declared that they had acted "in view of the stand taken by the Gazette-Telegraph against organized labor, the public school system and the Federal Council of Churches." The pastors said they believed "in the rights of both capital and labor to organize," insisted that a "wholesome, prosperous community is promoted by an adequate public educational system" and pointed out the value of the church in the community.

one denying or questioning the legitimacy of children born of such unions.

Warning against marriages between Protestants and Catholics, the Council said, "spiritual unity is essential to successful married life, and vital differences in religious conviction tend to mar the peace and happiness of the home."

The Council also opposed mixed marriages because "the Roman Catholic Church insists that the Protestant party to such a marriage must allow any children of the marriage to be brought up as Roman Catholics, thus depriving the Protestant husband or wife of the spiritual liberty which is the lawful right of British citizens."

Give Fur Coats

Durham, N. C.: — Church women at Tryon, N. C., recently offered to give their best fur coats for overseas relief in distressed war areas, it was announced here by the North Carolina Council of Churches, which has decided to sponsor a state-wide campaign for collection of relief items for war-torn countries.

The Rev. Ernest J. Arnold, executive secretary, said "there is widespread interest in the work of relief" and that collection of goods already is going ahead in many towns.

Protests Boycott

Durban, South Africa (wireless to RNS):—The Rev. Michael Scott, Anglican clergyman who was recently fined by a Johannesburg court for residing in the Orlando Negro section in defiance of racial taboos, has protested in a letter to Prime Minister Jan C. Smuts against "racialistic tendencies" in the boycott imposed upon Indian traders in the Union of South Africa.

Mr. Scott, who conducts a mission among non-Whites, declared the boycott was organized as a reprisal for the Indian government's trade embargo against South Africa, which was declared after the Asiatic land tenure act was passed by the Union government. He submitted statements from Africans charging they are subject to violence and dismissal from employment for having bought from Indian traders. According to reports from country districts, Indian merchants have lost a great deal of European business because of the boycott in the Transvaal. The Indian Congress has asked General Smuts to intervene and stop the boycott.

MRS. R. B. LAWSON
Churchwoman of Chapel Hill, N. C.

I received the April 17 WITNESS and I fear it has fallen on barren ground. Being in a college town and my husband teaching in the University of North Carolina, I see too much of college students and am heartily disgusted with ones I see in our church: what they do and how they talk to us old ones. I would rather help some poor old Negro who knows how to appreciate kindness and is polite. I am sorry I have lived this long to see our youth so changed and not for the better.

MISS PEARL BLISS
Churchwoman of Boston

The editorial A New Strategy (WITNESS, April 17) is timely. It was my privilege not long ago to sit in on a conference for college men and I was distressed to hear speaker after speaker talk as though the ministry was the only way to serve the Church. As a matter of fact what our Church needs primarily is consecrated lay people, both men and women, who will witness to their faith not only through parishes but everywhere else.

THE MARY FAWCETT CO.
Plainfield, New Jersey

The price reductions offered in our new ad (page 18) represent a genuine effort on the part of our small firm to help reduce high prices. Advices from Belfast show a firm to higher tendency in linens and no over-supply. Our own government's farm price policy and the huge demand tend to keep cotton up. We have been receiving plenty of business at current rates but feel that unless mark-ups and profits are generally cut down we shall not be able to overcome threatened inflation. Therefore we voluntarily offer our little contribution. As we see it the principle is: salaries and wages have been cut by rising prices; therefore mark-ups and profits must be cut also to help check the spiral until production catches up and does it naturally.

THE REV. KIMBER H. K. DEN
Priest of Nanchang, China

I hope and pray that you will hold fast to our heroic fight against reactionaries. The Lord, I believe, will always be with the editors of THE WITNESS and give the courage and strength for the great tasks ahead.

I am pleased to know that you have on hand a few hundred dollars in U. S. Currency which has been collected for my work. Recently I had a request from the village people of the Great Pond Village, one of our rural service centers near this city where the Marcia Spofford Memorial School is located, for helping them to start a small handicraft weaving and spinning factory on a cooperative basis. It needs, at least, a capital fund of one thousand U. S. dollars. I will start it as soon as this donation reaches me.

ANSWER: Donations that have been made for a total of $750 have been sent to Mr. Den. If there are others who wish to aid in this kindly make checks payable to "Treasurer, CLID" and send to the Church League for Industrial Democracy, 155 Washington Street, N. Y. 6, N. Y.

MARY CORNELIA LEE
Churchwoman of Manhattan, Kansas

I should like to tell your correspondent, Mrs. Summey, whose letter appeared in THE WITNESS for April 24 that the articles on Christianity Takes A Stand are published in book form. The book is in an attractive stiff cover and the chapters in the book are well worth reading.

ANSWER: THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty St., New York 6, still has copies available which may be purchased at 30c each.

ALEXANDER M. RICH
Clergyman of Baltimore, Md.

I would like to add my little tribute to my dear old friend, Bishop Johnson. He was truly a great character. May I also say that THE WITNESS is my idea of a really excellent Church paper.

REMARKABLE what a little Regular Income will do!

● MAYBE it merely supplements irregular earnings . . . Maybe it's just the difference between peace of mind and frequent worry . . . Maybe it's all there is to protect old age . . .

There are many situations in life which can be taken care of successfully by an Annuity Agreement of the American Bible Society.

It can be planned to provide for you, for you and your husband or wife, or for a relative or friend. And when once it is arranged there is no further bother. No coupons to clip—no papers to keep track of—just accept the check which arrives at regular intervals.

Such checks have been bringing comfort and peace of mind to thousands. And for over 100 years, those checks have never failed, regardless of business conditions.

Then too, there is a great personal satisfaction to all those who secure an American Bible Society Annuity Agreement. They help extend the all-important, worldwide Bible ministry of the American Bible Society.

Organized Religion in Decline According to Survey

Episcopal Church Failed to Grow as Rapidly As Other Churches According to the Study

By Religious News Service

New York: — Religion faces the prospect of holding a "small and declining" place in American life unless existing trends are reversed, according to a Twentieth Century Fund survey of "America's Needs and Resources." The survey indicated that "the war has been a depressing effect on the growth of the church," and that contributions to the church amount to little more than $1.50 out of every $100 spent by consumers.

Explaining the war's effect the report observed that "millions of young men were drawn from their homes and from normal lives at the very time when they might have been forming church-going habits. The manpower demands of war industries drew workers from their home communities and broke church ties, while the pressure of over-time work often interferred with church attendance."

It was noted that "the trend of Sunday school membership over the past few decades does not promise a substantial future growth in church membership." The survey also found that the trend of adult church membership in relationship to adult population "has been slightly but definitely downward since the 1920's."

In the period between 1926 and 1941-42, the biggest membership gain was reported by the Roman Catholic Church, according to the survey. The Catholic increase was set at 4.3 millions.

"It is interesting that the 43 larger Protestant denominations," the survey added, "showed a combined rate of growth of nearly 24 per cent from 1926 to 1941-42—almost identical with the percentage gain of the Roman Catholic Church."

A few of the largest Protestant denominations, "notably the Presbyterian bodies and the Protestant Episcopal Church," it was stated, failed to grow as rapidly as average church membership, or as population during the 15-year period.

The Fund study also revealed that: "There are about 250,000 churches in this country, affiliated with over 250 denominations, and they claim close to half of the population as members. These churches are conducted by about 137,000 clergymen, or about 104 for every 100,000 of the population. This compares with a ratio of 137 clergymen per 100,000 persons in 1900.

"The churches are housed in buildings valued at about $3.5 billion. In the pre-war decade, churches spent between $25 million and $60 million per year on new buildings, compared with expenditure of over $150 million a year toward the close of the 1920's."

The survey noted "an apparent slackening in some of the more socialized aspects of the church program" in the ten years preceding world war two. This was evident, the study explained, from the shrinkage in church expenditures for benevolences and missions. It observed that "this reflects a trend in recent years toward intensification along the more traditional lines of church activity."

The study said that "on the whole it appears that organized religion as an institution has barely held its own since the 1920's—indeed, some claim that it has lost ground. In spite of this, however, many individual churches have grown or maintained themselves and have continued to be an important influence in the lives of those whom they have touched."

HEADQUARTERS FOR CHAPLAINS

Washington (RNS): — The commission on army and navy chaplains has voted to purchase the former home of the late Senator Hiram Johnson here as a headquarters and as a memorial to the chaplains who lost their lives in world war two. The announcement was made by Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill, chairman of the commission, who presided at a luncheon here last week. He declared that it would be necessary to go to the various Churches represented on the commission to get the necessary money "but we do not anticipate great difficulties along this line."

Robert E. Van Goethen, Protestant chief of chaplains for Belgium and the Belgium Congo, told those at the luncheon that people in his country do not have any fear of war with Russia and that there is no longer any great concern that western Europe will turn Communist. He did say however that western Europe has already turned Socialist — moderately Socialist. He further declared that while America has freed his nation from the bondage of men that the United States still has a great responsibility to free Europe of fear and of pronounced nationalism.

BEN MINIFIE TO ORANGE

Orange, N. J.:—The Rev. Benjamin Minifie, rector of the Good Shepherd, Corpus Christi, Texas, has accepted the rectorship of Grace Church, Orange, New Jersey. The parish has been without a rector since Lane W. Barton was consecrated Bishop of Eastern Oregon.

MISSIONS FESTIVAL SERVICE

Boston: — About 2,000 Church school pupils and their teachers filled Trinity Church here on May 4 for the annual missions festival service. Junior choirs, each in distinctive vestments of black and white, purple, red or blue, led by crucifers and banner bearers, were in the procession, 950 strong. Bishop Nash preached, and the offering topped $16,000.

Detroit:—The Rev. Malcolm G. Dade, rector of St. Cyprian's, wrote THE WITNESS recently to congratulate the editors for the April 19th number devoted to the Church Society for College work. The letter informs us that the parish he serves has three men preparing for the ministry, all of whom are pictured on the cover. On the left is Samuel Williams, lay chaplain at the juvenile court of Wayne County and a candidate for a masters' degree at Wayne University. His work was highly commended at the last convention of the diocese of Michigan. He has also been a lay reader at St. Clement's, Inkster, and is to be ordained this spring.

Beside him is Capt. Richard T. Brown, recently separated from the army where he served as a chaplain. A minister of another communion, he saw larger opportunities in the Episcopal Church and was recently confirmed at St. Cyprian's by Bishop Creighton. He is at present in charge of St. Augustine's, Detroit, and is to be ordained this year.

At the right, with Rector Dade seated, is Robert Christman, in charge of the acolytes at St. Cyprian's, who is studying for orders under Mr. Dade's direction and who, because of the discrimination against Negroes which he saw in the war days, plans to devote his life ministering to Colored people.

The bust on Mr. Dade's desk will be recognized as that of the late President Franklin Roosevelt.

Back of Mr. William's call to the ministry is a rather dramatic story. A successful business man, he served his parish as a Sunday school teacher. Connie Ross, one of the pupils in his class, died suddenly. She had been one of those youngsters whose lives give so much of promise. She was engaged to one of the finest young men of St. Cyprian's. The young people of course were tremendously moved by her sudden death. So at the funeral service Mr. Dade challenged them to give a practical demonstration of their love for Connie Ross.

After the service Mr. Williams came into the Rector's study and said, "I want to do something with my life that is useful and meaningful for others. What would you advise?"

It happened that St. Cyprian's had just taken charge of the mission, St. Clement's, so Mr. Dade asked him how he would like to see what kind of a job he could do there. Sometime later he gave up his business and decided to study for the ministry. The mission, incidentally, is flourishing.

QUAKERS REVIEW THEIR WORK

Philadelphia:—The 30th anniversary of the founding of the Friends Service Committee was observed here on April 30th, with a Commemorative program at Haverford College on May 10th. Brought into being during the first world war, the committee has administered $60,000,000 in relief and rehabilitation in 22 countries. About 4,500 persons, many of them volunteer workers, have served on its domestic and foreign programs. An estimated 1,800 of these operated in the foreign field. Some 6,000,000 persons in foreign countries are estimated to have received help under the committee's programs over the 30 years.

The committee now numbers 597 workers in this country and abroad, of whom 32 per cent are Friends. More than 85 per cent of its support comes from non-Quakers.

Under the committee's current program, for which it has budgeted $8,000,000 this year, there are three main sections: foreign relief, social and industrial work and peace education.

During and since world war two, the committee again has emphasized foreign relief, its original activity. As governments have permitted, the Quaker group has brought food, clothing and shelter to the suffering in foreign lands until it now operates in 11 countries, besides the United States and Mexico. These are Austria, Germany, Hungary, France, Poland, Italy, Spain, Finland, India, Japan and China.

In addition to distribution of milk and hot food to thousands of children in Europe and Asia, the committee's relief and rehabilitation program includes operation of neighborhood centers in several European cities; distribution of clothing and blankets; voluntary work camps to help reconstruction in Italy and Finland; transport assistance in Poland and France; medical assistance in China and in many other needy areas, and industrial cooperatives in India.

One of the thriving parishes in Los Angeles is St. Alban's which ministers to the students of the University of California. The parish, whose rector, the Rev. John A. Bryant, is pictured above, has over 1,200 members and an active student club

ELECTED TRUSTEE OF PENSION FUND

New York:—Richard K. Paynter Jr., executive officer of an insurance company, was elected a trustee of the Church Pension Fund at a meeting on April 30. He is also a director of the affiliated companies. He is junior warden of Trinity, Princeton, a member of the finance committee of the diocese and a trustee of the diocesan investment trust.

Gordon Fearey was elected secretary of the Fund and of the Church Life Insurance Corporation. He is a grandson of the late Bishop William Lawrence of Massachusetts.

Groups Agree on H. W. B. Donegan As Suffragan Bishop

Election Held May 13 Will Probably Result In His Election on the Very First Ballot

By W. B. Spofford

New York:—Unless old Mr. Cup-Slip-Lip steps in the Rev. Horace W. B. Donegan will be elected Suffragan Bishop of New York when that convention meets at the synod house on Tuesday, May 13th. You will have read all about it by this time if the papers outside this city show the interest in the election that has been shown by the dailies here.

Needless to say there has been a good deal of to-do over the business, with various groups holding conferences, separately and together. The first result of it all was for the two leading candidates, the Rev. Horace W. B. Donegan, rector of St. James', and the Rev. Louis W. Pitt, rector of Grace Church, to issue a joint declaration on May 3 announcing that neither of them were candidates "in the interest of harmony and unity in the diocese." This of course threw everything into great confusion, with ten or a dozen names bobbing up like Halloween apples as possible candidates. Huddles were quickly formed. The Anglo-Catholics met at the University Club on Fifth Avenue, the Liberals in the parish house of St. Bartholomew's on nearby Park Avenue. Later they got together, after which a group of prominent leaders, representing both groups, declared themselves unitedly for Donegan. When he was informed of this the St. James' rector agreed to withdraw his May 3 statement that he was not a candidate.

The statement was signed by twenty-five men, including the following who are generally considered Anglo-Catholics: the Rev. F. S. Fleming, the Rev. Randolph Ray, the Rev. Grieg Taber, the Rev. Joseph S. Minnis, the Rev. Leicester C. Lewis, the Rev. Leslie Lang, the Rev. Gerald V. Barry, the Rev. Charles T. Bridgeman. Liberals to sign were the Rev. Louis W. Pitt, the Rev. Paull Sargent, the Rev. Roscoe T. Foust, the Rev. Samuel M. Shoemaker, the Rev. Hugh D. McCandless, Judge Edward R. Finch, senior warden of St. Bartholomew's, and Mr. Charles G. Proffitt, a vestryman of Grace Church.

Others to sign the document were the Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, the Rev. Frank D. Carruthers, the Rev. F. J. H. Coffin, the Rev. B. A. Hemsley, the Rev. Arthur V. Litchfield, the Rev. Lunde E. May, the Rev. Worcester Perkins, the Rev. Raymond G. Rogers and the Rev. Alan H. Tongue.

The Rev. Horace W. B. Donegan, rector of St. James', New York, is the choice of leading churchmen to be suffragan bishop of New York when the convention meets this week

The statement declared that "two major groups of clergy and laity in the diocese now have unanimously agreed to support Dr. Donegan and have pressed him to allow his name to stand. This, after careful and prayerful consideration, he has consented to do. Such being the case, we, representatives of these groups, strongly commend his name to the clerical and lay delegates to the forthcoming diocesan convention."

Mr. Donegan, forty-five, came to St. James' fourteen years ago from Baltimore where he was the rector of Christ Church. He is president of the standing committee of the diocese of New York and a member of the National Council. He is unmarried.

Bishop Gilbert has let it be known that he wishes to have the new suffragan live in the northern part of the diocese and to devote himself largely to rural work and to the opening of new missions there.

Final word: don't interpret this story to mean that this election is in the bag. That's what I mean by "Mr. Cup-Slip-Lip" and I can say that the diocese of New York is buzzing as I send this off to the printer. After all there are more than these 25 delegates to the convention of the diocese of New York so anything may happen, and probably will.

DEAN FOSBROKE IS HONORED

New York:—A service marking the completion of thirty years as dean of the General Seminary by the Very Rev. Hughell E. W. Fosbroke was held in the Seminary chapel on May 7, and was followed by an informal dinner in the refectory that was attended by a large number of distinguished churchmen.

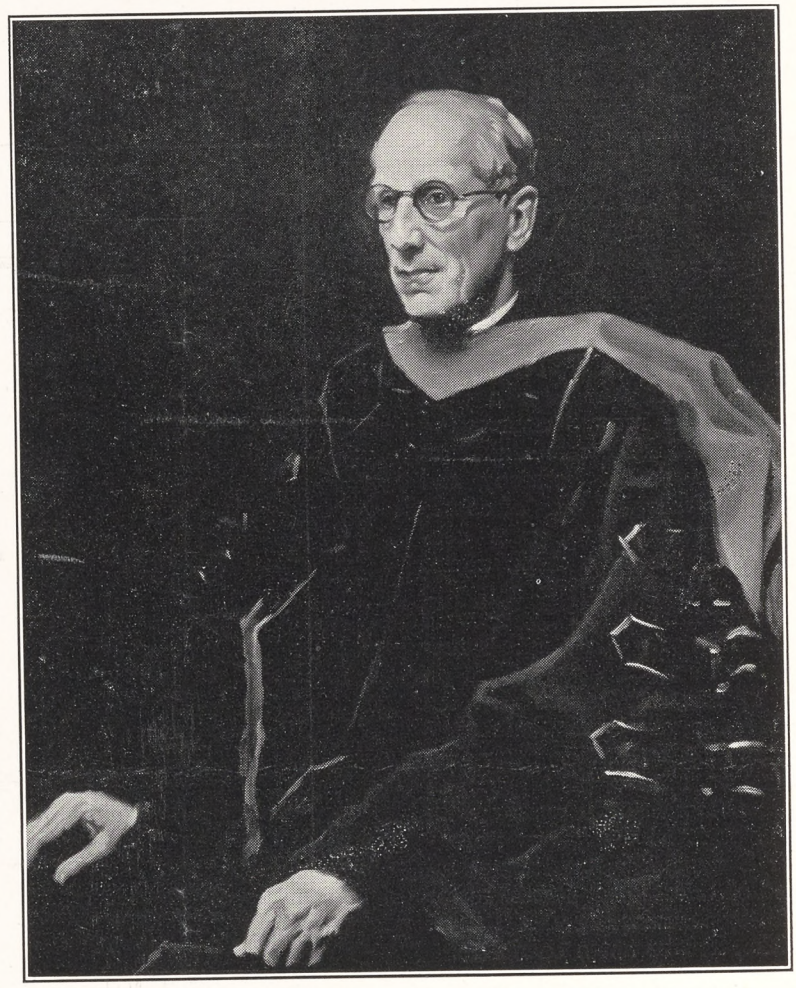
The sermon was preached by Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill, a former student of Dean Fosbroke's at the Episcopal Theological School.

"We are met," he declared, "to thank God for all that he has meant to the Church and to us. I am here in no conventional or official capacity but as one of his students who many years ago came under his influence as an inspiring teacher and friend. Ever since I have turned to the Dean for never-failing help, guidance and spiritual insight. This experience of mine could be multiplied many times among the graduates of Nashotah, the Episcopal Theological School and the General Seminary where, for almost fifty years, he has given himself to the ministry of theological education. Dean Fosbroke is a truly great scholar and teacher. . . The Dean is not only a scholar and a teacher; he is in himself and in his outlook, an example of that sometimes greatly abused but none the less significant word—a churchman. He has given his life to the Church. As a result of this deep conviction he has emphasized those truths and practices which are vital and central. . . . Soon the Dean lays down administrative responsibility but we may confidently believe that this freedom will increase the scope and the breadth of his ministry. . . . So tonight we, of many points of view and from varying positions within the Church, meet to thank God for all that has been given us because there is a man sent from God whose name is Hughell Fosbroke."

Among those attending the dinner which followed the service, in addition to the faculty and students of the General, were the trustees of the Seminary and a number of professors of other seminaries and colleges. Among them was Dean Lawrence Rose of the Berkeley Divinity School who is to succeed Dean Fosbroke at the General this summer.

The Bishops present included Bishop Gilbert of New York, Bishop DeWolfe of Long Island, Bishop Washburn of Newark, Bishop Lawrence of Western Massachusetts and Bishop Ludlow of Newark.

UNITED CHURCH OF CHRIST



Columbus, Ohio:—The executive committee of the Congregational-Christian Churches, which is itself the result of a merger of two denominations, voted to submit the proposed basis of union with the Evangelical and Reformed Church to all members of their fellowship. Should 75% of those eligible to vote favor union, final action will be taken at the biennial meeting of the general council to be held at Oberlin in June, 1948. If the merger goes through the new denomination will be known as the United Church of Christ and will have a membership of about two million.

WARREN KEARNEY HONORED

New Orleans:—Warren Kearney, for 47 years the secretary of the Church Club of Louisiana, was made a life member at the meeting on April 30. Mr. Kearney is a former member of the National Council and was in charge of the arrangements for General Convention when it met in this city.

DIOCESE TO HAVE SECRETARIES

Philadelphia:—The convention of the diocese of Pennsylvania adopted a plan for reorganization whereby each of the four departments, missions, social service, religious education and finance, will have a full time executive secretary. A resolution was also passed calling for the expansion of the department of social relations because of "the need for a more vital program of social education and community welfare." Suggestions laid before the convention called for more active promotion in such fields as race relations, the family, delinquency, industry and labor, world order, and closer contact with the 25 social agencies, hospitals, homes and schools that are related to the Church in the diocese.

Dean Hughell E. W. Fosbroke of General Seminary, who is to retire this summer, was honored at a service and dinner on May 7th

Basic Stipend

WORDS pile up telling us that we must recruit men for the ministry because of a clergy shortage. Much of the talk misses the mark. There are large dioceses where the "no vacancies" sign is up. Some bishops see no sign of a shortage even though they have had no ordinations recently. They can always choose from a list of available clergy when they need a new man. There is no clergy shortage from where they sit. Yet it is undoubtedly true that the Church needs more clergy —certainly there are many bishops saying that they need men.

The smallness of salaries is a part of the problem. One diocese, in convention this week, seeks to meet this by considering a resolution which would make $2,750 a year the minimum salary for every clergyman in the diocese. There is no clergy shortage there now and, if this resolution passes, it is good insurance against any in the future. But is this a just solution?

The Pittsburgh conference on the Church and economic life called attention to the fact that the employment practices of the Church should be a pattern for the rest of society. Actually it is the other way around: the Church uses the practices of present-day society in determining salaries. If a clergyman is an able administrator and executive his salary is likely to increase. If he is in a small parish or mission where he, more often than not, has to be also janitor, choir director, secretary, director of religious education, then worrying about keeping his family alive on a meager salary is added to his other burdens. The pattern is that of the business world.

This should not be in a fellowship which is supposed to have a concern for each member; that professes to believe that when one suffers, all suffer. Setting a minimum salary throughout the whole Church might help but we doubt it. That ugly question, "Where's the money coming from?" would be asked. Larger and wealthy parishes would be expected to give more in order to raise the salaries of men in the smaller and poorer ones, and they are sure they are doing all they can right now. A minimum salary in dioceses with many independent parishes would turn out to be just another pious resolution—a goal accepted but quickly forgotten—except by those whose hopes were raised that they might now be approaching a living wage.

The answer, we believe, will be found in accepting brotherhood and rejecting the way of the world which we have so slavishly followed in this matter of employment. This approach is found in the idea of Basic Stipend. In this salaries are determined by the specific need. It is the method widely used for our missionaries in foreign fields. There is a basic salary paid, with additional grants for years of service, size of family, education of children, doctors, and varying cost of living.

If our Church is seriously to face the matter of clergy shortage then we would do well to go into the economics of the matter. A study of how basic stipend could be put into operation would be an admirable project for committees created by diocesan conventions. We don't say that it would end clergy shortage but it would, we think, remove one obstacle by meeting the economic problem squarely.

"QUOTES"

IF THE VET was pro-labor, he was disillusioned by the behavior of some of labor's bosses. Or maybe he had faith in his bank and was a good conservative. It was a shock to find that the bank, which sent him Christmas cards while he was overseas, had become more interested in collateral than character, and his GI Bill of Rights loan wasn't what it was cracked up to be. Whatever form his disillusionment took, it wasn't pleasant. He wanted a surplus truck. Maybe he has some sort of moral priority, but unless he represented a big dealer and talked in terms of dozens, he was usually out of luck—unless he wanted to buy retail from the dealer. He found himself being bombarded with the idea that maybe he had spent the war helping his worst enemies kill his best friends. If he praised a Russian or criticized Franco he was a Red. He found that his war record and a dime would get him on a crosstown bus. Very confusing.

The United Jewish Appeal

A NUMBER of parishes have made a nice gesture in having offerings for the United Jewish Appeal. Part of the $170,000,000 being raised goes to the various Jewish agencies to maintain their work in the United States, but by far the larger part of it is for the relief of suffering Jews throughout the world. That they have suffered as no other people in the world have suffered is a simple statement of fact. That the massacres, gas chambers and concentration camps were in countries that are at least nominally Christian is also a fact for which all Christians must be thoroughly ashamed.

We therefore wholeheartedly agree with the Southern Churchman which recently urged parishes and Sunday Schools to contribute to UJA, and also suggested that the Church World Relief and our own Presiding Bishop's Fund make an offering. "It would say to the world in a way that the world understands," says our contemporary, "that in America, Christian and Jews stand side by side in common understanding; in concern to help the needy and against all hatred that would divide us."

Notes on a Visit to England

by Joseph F. Fletcher

Professor at Episcopal Theological School

ENGLAND is very tired and impoverished. Englishmen know (as Americans don't) that the war did not end when the shooting stopped—only the first stage of it. Fatigue leads to selfishness, self-regard, and pessimism about politics. The Labor Party is saddled with all the backwash of the war—poverty, destruction, deprivation and despair. The Labor government is the people's choice but it does not seem to have the capacity to inspire them with much sense of destiny or determination. Slogans like "Extra Effort Now Means Better Living Sooner" don't work any too well. Nevertheless they all show a fine spirit of patience and fair play under severe rationing and overtime labor—of the sort that our people have never seen. It's tough to have only one egg every five weeks, two and a half slices of bread daily, few cigarets, no fats in your food, and so on, indefinitely. No homes—bombed out and not enough labor or materials to replace them. No furniture hardly; permits required to buy what there is. No fuel—of the four essentials, food, shelter, fuel and clothing, only the last comes near the minimum in supply. Itma, a BBC fun program, said one night, (and here lies the story of humor and hard times) "She sat before her empty fireplace, like all the rest of us, in her utility rags, like all the rest of us, thinking how much warmer she'd be in a fish queue."

Social ethics: England lost her shirt in the war. She hasn't got near rehabilitation, to say nothing of reconstruction. We finally lent her a niggardly less-than-five-billion to buy basic necessities like wheat, then quit all rationing ("the war is over now"), skyrocketed prices and thus cut what they had borrowed to two thirds of what they had been promised. All for "free" enterprise. They tie themselves to us and our economy kicks them in the teeth. So—they mutter more and more about just accepting a much lower standard of living from now on and going back to the pre-war Ottawa system of preferential tariffs within the Commonwealth. They exist in near poverty, and self-denial, trying to ship things to America to buy a few things we have in abundance here. A lesson in One World diplomacy? How to treat your partner? How to strengthen the Anglo-American bloc? But when Truman offered Atlee the coal going to Europe, he declined it on the score that Europeans need it more than the English.

When I think of Europe now I think of queues. People stand shivering in them everywhere, for everything.

Nobody in England seriously expects to see free enterprise again. Their fear is that their effort to build a democratic kind of socialized economy won't be tried on its own merits—that their lack of self-sufficiency makes them too dependent upon the USA and that the USA doesn't care. The result of their failure will be leftward sympathy. If Americans want a "middle way" they had better begin transcending greediness, selfishness, isolationism. Englishmen are more afraid of the Colossus of the West than the Colossus of the East.

Further ground of fear: the history of our economy is one of periodic breakdown. We increased our production potential enormously during the war. Will we increase wages and salaries to raise purchasing power 30-40%, for full employment, or will we seek to sell the surplus abroad, scrambling for world markets? This will intensify the crisis in other, less self-sufficient economies.

Perhaps the Labor government is trying to inaugurate a socialist economy with a nineteenth century trade union mentality. TUC insists, for example, on closed shop agreements for all employees of the public authority—whether they want to belong to unions or not. Here are unions regarded as ends, not as means.

Labor strikes against a Labor government: absurd? But the distance between rank-and-file officials and leaders and the top officialdom is very great. To close it they would have to consult more intimately with shop stewards and local officers, a great many of whom are communists—who get jobs because they work at it! To consult with them would be to raise their prestige. What are the TUC officials to do—as in a union like Bevin's Transport Workers?

Family life: penalized at all points. If you eat in a restaurant you save points. If you go out for the evening, or don't come home, you save fuel. There are no homes for the new families trying to get a start. Young people try bravely to build families under impossible conditions, and fail. See the divorce rate—one out of every three marriages. I saw a Wayside Pulpit sign in front of a bombed church, "This is the Lord's doing, and it is wonderful in our eyes." Homeless and hungry people don't believe. The Bishop of Durham uses only two rooms in Aukland Castle—he and his wife put on their coats and run from one room to the other.

CONFLICT of foreign and domestic policy: a big army (plus universal two-years military training), soldiers all over the world, while there is a dangerous labor shortage at home for export production. The Labor Government is working fast to liquidate an imperial network, but it's easier decided upon than done. American critics are too self-righteous about this and unrealistic. Should Britain, for example, get out of Egypt, and the Sudanese be left to Cairo's exploitation?

Rationing is always just. You can always get what your coupons call for. It has levelled living standards and habits. Brings the poor up to a decent standard of diet. A symbolic scene in Sydney Place, Kensington: a long chauffeur driven limousine with a toff in the tonneau, and a bucket of coals (black diamonds) tied on back! It's all tightly controlled: I had to surrender my ration book before I could leave the country. And hosts of people at Christmas time gave up their month's sweet ration for the children in Germany.

I said that England fears America (all of Europe does). The strongest ground of fear is the intensive anti-Soviet campaign that goes on here. Europe will be the battlefield of another war. Europe can't take it again. Englishmen of all classes are simply appalled at what Americans say and write. Their view is that Russia was worst hurt of all in the war and doesn't want any more—that she has everything to lose by one and nothing to gain. They put our bellicose antagonism down to a combination of political naivete, distance from the reality situation, ideological hatred, and unilateral control of a growing stockpile of atom bombs. The Colossus of the West—with gaiters and a chin beard.

The Church: never has attendance been so low, never has there been so much secularism in English culture. It grows, quite apparently. The people are idealistic, but humanist. The Church is not attacked, which would be better from its point of view. It is tolerated. Its "clientele" quite patently upper and middle middle-class. General feeling that the Church is either conservative or outright reactionary. To wit: a delegation of ecclesiastics protesting the loss of 200,000 pounds per annum through the socializing of railway shares (not confiscated, note). Various journals (not "red" ones) point out that the communicants could make it up, without troubling themselves or the nation, by a contribution of ¼, or about 26 cents, per head per year. They also comment further that the Churchmen are worried because they don't think the people would contribute that much. Temple must weep in heaven over things of this kind. The people furious. Indifference to religion seen in these figures: a few decades ago 80% of the clergy were Oxford and Cambridge men, 20% were not. Today, the figure is exactly reversed. This does not, fortunately, mean that it is becoming a people's church.

I must stop. Most of these things are papers in themselves. Put it this way: England is hurt, perhaps mortally. American indifference (the Luce line, much mentioned over there) is stupid and shameful. Shameful because we ought not to abandon our mother to destitution. Stupid because England is trying so hard and generously for a middle way between capitalism and One-Party Socialism. Europe watches to see whether she succeeds. If she does, Western Europe at least will follow her down that path. If she fails, they will move into the security of Russia's orbit. If we can't see the importance of helping England, then our policies (such as they are) are in the end doomed along with Britian's.

Just before I sailed home I talked again with Tawney. He said, "The people of England now have the power, as they do all over Europe in one degree or another. But the question is: what will they do with it? The lack of morale, of clear and accepted and sound values and beliefs, is an Achilles heel. A spiritual revival is vitally necessary. But such a religious movement cannot come from the Church. I don't know where it will come from, but if it does it will be a people's movement, not institutionalized, just as political developments are." This is a bitter pill to swallow. I find a little comfort in the existence of small groups like the Christian Frontier, and in some ecumenical elements. They may be a saving remnant, but they touch pitifully few people.

Editor's Note: This article came to us as a memorandum written in terse, almost shorthand, style. With the author's permission it has been summarized even more. Another article dealing with the situation in Europe, particularly France and Germany, will follow.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

Two Proposals for Revision

THE monumental work of Dom Gregory Dix, The Shape of the Liturgy (Dacre Press, 1945), which is being widely read and discussed, has now provoked two attempts at suggested revisions of the Prayer Book Eucharist based upon the findings and interpretations of Dom Dix's learned study. This is all to the good, and it is to be hoped that others will be stimulated to similar efforts. For whatever may be the mind of the Church as a whole, both in England and America, with regard to the advisability of revision of the liturgy in the near future, careful proposals for its revision keep us alert to fundamental liturgical problems and needs. In teaching liturgics to seminarians preparing for the parish ministry I have discovered that one of the best ways for them to learn the Holy Communion service, both as regards its theological meaning and its liturgical structure, is an assignment of an essay in its improvement.

One of the proposals before us comes from England—called to my attention through the kindness of Canon Demant during his recent visit to this country—and is the work of a parish priest: W. S. Porter, The English Eucharist, An Essay in Revision (Dacre Press, 1946). The other is by our well-known scholar and librarian at Washington Cathedral, Mr. Stephen A. Hurlbut: An Order for the Celebration of the Holy Eucharist in Accord with Early Tradition and the Book of Common Prayer (The St. Albans Press, 1947). Both little books have brief and concise introductions and notes to their texts. If in comparison of the two revisions Mr. Hurlbut's seems more rich in content and flexible in its use we must remember that he has the advantage of starting from the American rite, which is more close to primitive, Catholic tradition than is the present English form. Fr. Porter's task is as much one of recovery as it is of revision.

Some points of agreement between the two revisions are not surprising, but rather were to be expected. Both put the Gloria in excelsis back to its original position after the Kyrie and allow for the singing of the Kyrie in Greek. I dare say that it would not take our people long to get the same feeling for the 'acclamation-character' of the Greek Kyrie eleison that they have for the Hebrew Hallelujah. More important is the restoration of the Fraction to its proper place after the Consecration and before the Communion. And with the Fraction both revisions have revived the primitive, indeed apostolic, giving of the Peace. Our present imitative rather than functional ceremony of the Fraction in connection with the Words of Institution is an Anglican novelty dating from the 1662 Book. Surely, however, the solemn breaking of the Bread should have its own significant place in the 'shape' of the liturgy, as Dom Dix calls it, and not be a ceremonial appendage—and often a misleading one at that—to a section of the Consecration.

Both revisers have broken up the Prayer for Christ's Church into a litany form, rewritten the petition for the faithful departed to make it more in accord with sound doctrine, and added (what should never have been dropped from this great prayer) the "high praise and hearty thanks for the wonderful grace and virtue declared in all thy saints." Interesting, too, is the fact that both revisions have placed this prayer before the Offertory of the bread and wine, thus making its position as well as its form more nearly akin to the ancient 'Prayers of the Faithful.' Of course, both revisions make room for the Offertory procession of the elements by representatives of the people. Actually this is permissible under our present rubrics, and my guess is that it will not be long before it will 'take' in many of our parishes.

The revision of the Consecration Prayer will seem to some perhaps the setting of violent hands upon holy things. But the changes proposed deserve careful study. One is the extension of the thanksgiving to include creation and providence as well as redemption. Mr. Hurlbut does it by expanding the Preface; Fr. Porter does it immediately after the Sanctus. And both forms have restored the reference to the heavenly altar where our prayers and oblations are taken up into the perpetual intercession and offering of our High Priest. Shall we ever make these improvements? Yes, when we get up enough courage to bury the ghosts of Bishop Seabury and his non-juring Scottish friends.

Dramatic Arts and Religion

By

REV. WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD JR.

THE educational value of documentary films is becoming increasingly recognized all of the time. The use of such films, of course, received a noticeable boost during the war when the armed forces commandeered the best professional talent to turn out pictures dealing with everything from A to Z. Today we find labor unions, corporations, governmental agencies, social agencies and churches having budgetary allocations for the production and use of such films. Some of them, dealing with contemporary social issues, are surprisingly good and should be of immense value to any parish. An important thing to remember, however, is that a film, alone, can't do the educational job. Every picture has to be followed up with discussion and projects.

Four particularly fine documentaries dealing with race relations can be rented cheaply from most film distributors in your area or from Award Films, 115 West 44th Street, New York 18. They are:

1) Man: One Family ($2.50 rental)—a scientific account of race prepared by the British scientists, Sir Julien Huxley and Prof. J. B. S. Haldane, exploding widely accepted beliefs on racial distinctions, emphasizing the fact that many so-called national characteristics are common to all mankind. Has a lively commentary delivered by Mr. Huxley. Runs 16 minutes.

2) Brotherhood of Man ($3.00 rental)—a cartoon, done by ex-Disney artists and with script by Ring Lardner, Jr., which is based on the Ruth Benedict and Gene Weltfish pamphlet, The Races of Mankind. It is particularly excellent for children and young people. Runs 10 minutes.

3) Whoever You Are ($3.00 rental)—documents the organization and operation of a New York community's project to fight intolerance. Runs 20 minutes.

4) Teamwork ($2.50 rental)—a dramatic record of the Negro soldier's contribution to the European invasion, in all branches of the service. This important factual data is given broader significance by being contrasted with the lies of Nazi propaganda. Runs 16 minutes.

Documentaries dealing with the reality of atomic power are, likewise, coming to the fore. Recommended are:

1—A Tale of Two Cities (Free rental from Army Signal Corps. Hdqrs. in your area)—dramatic photographs of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Runs 20 minutes.

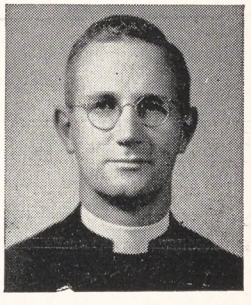
2—Operations Crossroads (Free rental from Navy Dept., Washington)—joint Army-Navy Task Force film of the Bikini experiments from start to finish.

3—One World or None ($2.00 rental from Film Publishers, Inc., 25 Broad St., New York 4)—the official production of the National Committee on Atomic Information which combines pictures and cartoons to show the real destructive nature of the bomb. Runs 9 minutes.

4—Atomic Power ($3.50 rental from March of Time, 369 Lexington Ave., New York 17)—traces the development and history of nuclear fission. Runs 17 minutes.

All the pictures mentioned are 16 mm. sound films.

Strategy and Tactics



by

FRANCIS O. AYRES

Rector of St. John's, Waterbury, Conn.

FOR THE PARISH

IT IS seldom easy to determine what the Christian Church as a whole thinks about any issue of current importance; but it can be said in general that advance has been made in some phases of our job of interpreting the social order in terms of Christian truth. We do recognize more and more the family as an essential and primary unit of the Christian society which is our aim; and we are at least giving time and effort to discovering ways of building or of re-building a strong family life. We must recognize humbly that much remains to be done, but there is real reason for encouragement. Despite the difficulties clear to all of us, we can know with joy that in this and related fields, the Church has entered with enthusiasm and vigor into the essence of a tough problem.

Unfortunately, however, there are issues with which the Church has done little or nothing; and this deficiency is nowhere more evident than in our parishes. It is feasible here to mention briefly only two of these: work and the profit motive in our economy, and the increasing disintegration of social life outside the family.

There are few errors in dealing with a Christian society more devastating than that of trying to isolate and treat its factors as independent; yet that is what, unwittingly perhaps, we are doing. Unless, for example, we succeed in dealing effectively with the two problems of the profit motive and the social disintegration, it is clearly impossible for us to bring about any substantial improvement in the Christian family. For the two issues we are talking about here have both a real existence themselves, and are derived from, and contribute to, the enrichment or the abolition of the family as the basic social unit.

The extent to which the profit motive has entrenched itself in the mores of our civilization is evident; and its relation to the whole problem of work is scarcely less so. None of us could deny that it is a major factor in choosing a career; one has consciously to deal with it, even in order to reject its claims. But we must face squarely the fact as it stands today: the motive of profit is more than a determinant to the individual in his choice of a career. Income is often the criterion of social worth, and of inclusion in, or exclusion from, a given social group.

As a Church, we speak glibly enough about what we like to call the "Christian doctrine of work"; and for all of us, if we have done so in what we consider a sufficiently "liberal" spirit, it is easy to escape the practical implications of what we have piously and devotedly affirmed. Yet if we enlarge our view of the profit motive, we see that its almost complete universality in economic terms makes any realization of our Christian doctrine of work quite impossible. It is not easy for us to push to their conclusion the implications involved in a situation where a grown man of physical, mental, and moral maturity is employed eight hours a day in fitting red caps securely on the cases for ten-cent lipsticks; and this because a given rate of profit must accrue to those whose money controls the financial structure on which his life depends. It is easy for us to speak of all work as being the service of God; yet how can ours be a complete witness to what we profess, unless we are capable of bringing our theory with power into the sphere of the actual?

Another factor on which the Church has failed to make herself sufficiently clear is that of the social disintegration of our culture. This is vividly seen in the lives of our parishes; few of us escape the feeling of being torn by demands from every side which make us almost incapable of responding effectively to any of them. Even our services of worship are no longer Sunday morning's main concern; we must compete with the golf course, the trip to the country, or the "morning after." Some of these things are good, indeed necessary; but that they should vie with the Church on more or less equal terms is symptomatic of something deeply wrong.

Our young people can have a better dance at the juke-box joint, if nothing worse. The boys can have a livelier game of basketball at the nearest gym or boys' club. The arguments multiply ad nauseam, but the pitiful thing is that the Church of Christ not only cannot compete with better equipped secular institutions, but is content to let the challenge go unanswered, and in this respect to let its ministry fail increasingly.

The simplification in any such hypothetical illustrations as these is perilous. But behind them lies the urgency to speak out with courage and with assurance if we are to go ahead or even to keep our captured positions. We must examine courageously and take a stand; for how can we long hope for a Christian family life, unless the moral and spiritual implications of the alien forces attacking it are clear?

SANCTUARY

conducted by W. M. Weber

Christ: Proletarian and God

IF WE ask how, in fact, God's will can be done on Earth as it is in Heaven, the answer, given in the technical language of theology, is that the omnipresence of God involves His immanence in This World and in every living soul in it, as well as His transcendent existence on supra-mundane planes. In the Christian conception of the Godhead His transcendent aspect (or 'person') is displayed in God the Father and His immanent aspect in God the Holy Ghost; but the distinctive and crucial feature of the Christian Faith is that God is not a Duality but a Trinity in Unity, and that in His aspect as God the Son the other two aspects are unified in a Person who, in virtue of this mystery, is as accessible to the human heart as He is incomprehensible to the human understanding. In the Person of Christ Jesus—Very God yet also Very Man—the divine society and the mundane society have a common member who in This World is born into the ranks of the proletariat and dies the death of a malefactor, while in the Other World He is the King of God's Kingdom, a King who is God Himself.

Religious Revival in Russia Reported to Council

World Council Leader Says Collaboration With Orthodox Church Is On the Horizon

By Sara Dill

Geneva (by wireless): — There are "strong indications" that the Russian Orthodox Church is friendly to the idea of linking itself closely to the World Council of Churches, W. A. Visser 't Hooft, general secretary of the Council, declared here.

Visser 't Hooft's statement was made after a series of conferences here between World Council leaders and Father Seraphim Rodinoff, representative of the Russian Church in Paris, who recently returned from Moscow where he discussed with Patriarch Alexei proposals for some form of understanding between the Russian Church and the World Council.

"Collaboration between the two groups," Visser 't Hooft asserted, "is on the horizon, in fact, actually closer than the horizon." He added, however, "there is nothing definite at this time" concerning the possibility that the Russian Church may send delegations to the World Council's first assembly at Amsterdam next year, or to the World Student Christian Conference to be held at Oslo this summer.

Father Seraphim, who was prominently identified with negotiations which led the late Metropolitan Eulogius of Paris to return to the jurisdiction of the Moscow Patriarchate, told the World Council he had not discussed with Russian Church leaders the question of cooperation with the Council's program of church reconstruction.

He also stated that "it did not occur to me as fitting to discuss political or social questions." He added, however, that his observations while in Russia showed that the Church "enjoys liberty in the religious sphere."

During the last six months, the priest reported, 3,500 parishes have been established in the Soviet Union, making a total of 25,500.

"I was impressed," he said, "by the great spiritual forces of the Russian clergy. One must emphasize their difficulty in ministering to thousands who come for confessions. At one church I saw twelve marriages being performed on a single Sunday, one of the couples being a young Red Army officer and his bride, who wanted the priest's blessing. The Russian churches are filled at every service. When Patriarch Alexei holds a service, it is impossible to accommodate all the people who want to attend. Worshippers have to stand at Orthodox services, but crowds of from eight to ten thousand nevertheless attend services in the Moscow cathedral which last four hours, including two hours devoted to preaching."

Father Seraphim declared it is impossible to estimate how many persons in Soviet Russia are church members, but he said that "half the population of Moscow are touched by religion, and there is a strong spirituality in the Russian Church."

Bayne Consecration

New York:—Chaplain Stephen F. Bayne Jr. of Columbia University is to be consecrated Bishop of Olympia on June 11 at St. Mark's Cathedral, Seattle, Washington. Presiding Bishop Sherrill will be consecrator, with Bishop Huston of Olympia and Bishop Gray of Connecticut the co-consecrators. Mr. Bayne will be presented by Bishop Block of California and Bishop Lewis of Nevada. Bishop Quin of Texas will preach. The attending presbyters will be the Rev. John V. Butler Jr. of Providence and the Rev. John P. Craine of Washington, D. C. Bishop Stevens of Los Angeles will read the litany.

The Rev. Frederick C. Grant of THE WITNESS will attend as the representative of Union Theological Seminary.

Cowley Fathers

Chicago:—The Cowley Fathers, with headquarters in Boston, are to establish a community here in June, according to an announcement made by Bishop Conkling at the diocesan convention. The Bishop also announced that the diocese is opening a student center at Northern Illinois State Teachers College and that a campaign for $300,000 will be conducted to open student centers at the University of Chicago and Northwestern University. Thirteen new parishes have been established in the past five years and parochial debts of a million dollars have been reduced to less than $85,000.

New Parish House

Denver:—St. Thomas' Church is raising $125,000 for a new parish house. In announcing the drive the Rev. Robert M. Redenbaugh, rector, announced that $25,000 had already been raised. Since the parish was founded 39 years ago a tiny cubicle in the basement of the church has been the only meeting place for organizations. The new building will make it possible to extend the activities of the parish in the Park Hill neighborhood and particularly youth activities.

Church Club Elects

New York:—The Hon. Robert McC. Marsh was unanimously re-elected president of the Church Club of New York at the annual meeting on May 5th. Other officers elected were Vice-Presidents, Allen Davies, J. Ralph Jacoby, Edward N. Perkins; secretary, Douglas M. Moffat; treasurer, Hall E. Shepherd; trustees, class of 1950: G. Forrest Butterworth, J. Horton Ijams, Clifford P. Morehouse.

Intolerance Growing

San Francisco: — "Racial intolerance and discrimination are on the upswing on the Pacific coast," according to Carey McWilliams, noted author and newspaper man whose article on Japanese Americans was featured in THE WITNESS for April 10. He made the statement after a survey along the three coast states.

Particular hotspots, he said, are Portland, Oakland, and Los Angeles where ex-war workers are losing their jobs and are continuing to hold down living space.

"It's as simple as that," McWilliams said. "Increase the pool of labor, aggravate an already serious housing shortage, and things will go from bad to worse. During the prosperous war years there was a minimum of racial unrest. Today in Portland, 50 per cent of the Negro population is out of work. They're restless and old inhabitants resent their being there. Los Angeles is in better shape if only because the civic groups are attempting to educate the public to the situation and its potentialities. The recent race strike of Fremont High School students, however, was an open demonstration of feeling. And rumors are being spread that Negroes and Jews are responsible for the housing shortage."

The seeds of trouble in Oakland are still dormant. But tighter employment conditions and the housing shortage are prime ammunition for an explosion, he said.

McWilliams urged citizens to bear in mind there can be trouble and prepare themselves to meet it calmly and sensibly. He spoke under the auspices of the San Francisco council for civil unity.

This situation on the west coast was called attention to in THE WITNESS as early as May 31, 1945 in an article by Mr. Lawrence A. Oxley who then pointed to factors that would result in riots and bloodshed unless speedily corrected, and who then called upon the Church to "send an expert investigator to the coast to do a thorough job on America's number one domestic problem—minorities."

Evangelicals to Meet

Kirkwood, Mo.:—Plans for a southeastern regional conference of evangelicals to be held in Atlanta, in May, 1948, were made as a result of a visit to several southern dioceses of the Rev. Charles D. Kean, president of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship. On the trip he met with groups in Houston, Texas; Baton Rouge, La.; New Orleans; Birmingham, Ala.; Sewanee, Tenn. and Atlanta, Ga.

Parochial Schools

Washington:—Appropriation of funds for public education but not for parochial schools was urged by the Rev. Samuel M. Cavert, head of the Federal Council of Churches, in testifying before a Senate sub-committee. "To provide federal funds for parochial schools would be to encourage segregated educational systems and thereby threaten our democracy by fragmentizing our culture," he declared.

Divorce Rise

Washington (RNS): — Unless the Church makes a determined effort to stem the rise in the nation's divorce rate, there is grave fear for the future of the American home, Warren D. Bowman, chairman of the Washington Federation of Churches' committee on marriage and the home, warned here. In a statement marking the inter-faith observance of national family week, May 4-11, Dr. Bowman said: "The American home is disintegrating and we must put forth every effort to preserve it."

Bowman, who is pastor of the Washington City Church of the Brethren and a former moderator of his denomination's general conference, blamed "hasty marriages made during the war and other unstabilizing factors engendered by the war" as largely responsible for the rapid rise in the number of divorces in the United States.

In 1945, he pointed out, more than 502,000 marriages ended up in the divorce courts of the nation, an average of one out of every three. "This all-time record represents a gain of more than twenty-five per cent over 1944, the next highest year, and is nearly twice as high as nine years ago."

He urged that churches, high schools and colleges provide courses for youth on "the ideals of love and marriage," and also advocated premarital conferences between couples and the minister who will perform the marriage to discuss adjustments necessary for a successful married life.

Marriage Guidance

Montreal: — Establishment of a marriage guidance council "as an instrument of the Church's ministry of reconciliation" was approved by the synod of the Montreal diocese of the Church of England in Canada. The synod also endorsed collective bargaining and declared that the field of human relations in industry "is the area where there should be the keenest and most practical application of Christian principles."

Dom Gregory Lectures

Evanston, Ill.: — Dom Gregory Dix, monk of Nashdom abbey, England, temporarily stationed at the Benedictine priory, Three Rivers, Mich., delivered two series of lectures at Seabury-Western seminary. In the introductory lecture, he elaborated on the cultural setting of Christianity out of which the apostolic ministry evolved. He described the ultimate conflict which arose when Christianity, a fundamentally Jewish religion, was brought into a Hellenistic world.

The second lecture of this series brought out the relation of the problem to the ministry. Since the Christian ministry grew up as a Jewish institution, its transference to a Hellenistic world forced an adaptation to the social and political framework then existing. Dom Gregory concluded that to the Christian Church the apostolic succession was a fact before it was a doctrine.

In the first lecture of the second series, "A Study of the Liturgy," the eucharist was discussed. Looking back into the second century, Dom Gregory pointed out that there was no set form of the eucharistic prayer. For the early Christians, the eucharist was something done, not said. Then, as now, liturgy is the offering of life to God, not setting religion aside as a department of life. The whole of human life is offered in the eucharist under the forms of bread and wine.

"The Liturgy of Initiation" was the topic of the second lecture in this series, in which the speaker traced the history of baptism and confirmation. Originally, the two sacraments were administered together but since their separation in the Western Church, they have undergone startling changes. While both are still believed to convey the Holy Spirit, the emphasis now placed on baptism is that of initiation.

Dom Gregory Dix will return to Seabury-Western on June 11 to deliver the alumni day address.

Cooperation Urged

Montreal: — Cooperation between Anglicans and Roman Catholics was urged by Bishop John Dixon of Montreal in addressing the annual synod here. Calling for a study of proposals for a mutually acceptable ministry of the Church of England in Canada and the United Church of Canada, he added that since "in this province it is natural that leadership in many matters of public good should be taken by our Roman Catholic brethren, I make bold to ask them to call upon us for cooperation and support."

Hit Robeson Ban

Albany, N. Y.:—Mayor Erastus Corning and the Albany board of education were urged by 13 clergymen here to grant permission for a recital by Paul Robeson, baritone, in a local high school on May 9. The board had approved the recital, but later withdrew permission.

The clergymen said they spoke as "individual citizens" and that they "do not believe our democratic way of life will be strengthened by closing our public halls to those whose viewpoints may differ from our own."

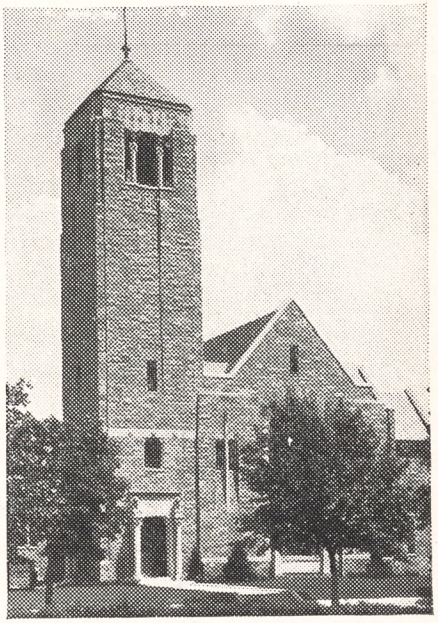
When Robeson was recently denied use of a public hall in Peoria, Ill., because of his alleged Communist sympathies, the Peoria ministerial association adopted a similar statement.

Fancy Religions

Victoria, B. C. (RNS):—An attack on "fancy religions" and salacious literature and a plea for religious instruction in schools highlighted the address of Bishop Harold E. Sexton of British Columbia in his address to the synod. "It is extraordinary," he said, "that so many people are seemingly impressed by all kinds of self-appointed evangelists, quacks and persons who are only too ready to pervert the Christian religion into a channel for the conveyance of money to their own pockets."

He urged that scientists and politicians give wholehearted cooperation to religious leaders in securing a recognized world-wide standard of right conduct so that there may be no misuse of scientific discoveries.

Higher Salaries



Sydney (wireless to RNS): Archbishop Howard W. K. Mowll of New South Wales addressing the synod urged better education and higher salaries for the clergy as a means to create more zeal in the ministry and encourage careers in the Church. He also urged a world-wide campaign of evangelism to combat atheism, and was supported by Bishop Francis Batty of Newcastle who said that such a campaign could be undertaken without the Churches "losing their denominational individuality."

Protestant Action

Richmond, Va. (RNS): — Establishment of a "Protestant Action" organization in Washington, with also state and local chapters, through which the voice of Protestantism may be heard on issues of the day was urged by the Rev. George S. Reamey in an editorial in the Virginia Methodist Advocate.

"Protestants need in particular a central bureau in the nation's capital to interpret the Church to legislators and to interpret legislation to the Church," the editorial declared. "But whatever the name and nature

CARILLONIC BELLS
Like a Prayer in Music

In hundreds of churches, CARILLONIC BELLS has proved that its beautiful music contributes outstandingly to increased church attendance, to a deeper awareness of the church's presence and message.

As the Rev. Mr. Garner of Washington's Sixth Presbyterian Church, writes: "Through 'Carillonic Bells,' we have been able to inspire and refresh Christian faith for the thousands of people who hear its music."

This modern electronic carillon has a glowing richness of tone, a matchless accuracy and clarity, that make it the choice of those who select a carillon by the proper gauge —its audible beauty. It can be played as a solo instrument or in combination with the organ. It can be installed in your church tower without additional construction, its cost is surprisingly moderate. We shall be glad to send you further details, if you will write us at Dept. W-23.

of the organization, the Church needs a united voice if its message and will are to be heard and heeded in such a day as this."

Experience in Europe has shown what can happen when the Church focuses its entire attention on "the individual's inner religious life and his heavenly destiny" and pays no attention to what is going on in the world around it, the editor said.

"Will the Church in America profit by the mistakes of its sister church in Europe?" the editorial asked. "If so, it will recognize that, as imperative as it is to win the individual to God, the Church must also recognize its God-given responsibility to challenge every influence and condition that tends to restrict and impoverish life. Who is to create sentiment for a Christian world unless it be Christian citizens? Big business will not do it. Little business will not do it. The universities will hardly accept a major responsibility in this direction. . . . There is no group that can be held responsible for marked world improvement unless churchmen awaken to the opportunity, study existing needs and give themselves in united effort in the directions that God seems to direct. . . . Christians can no longer be good Christians unless they are also good citizens!"

Minister Training

Richmond, Va. (RNS):—Ministers should be required periodically to sit through sessions of the police courts, Rev. J. Blanton Belk, pastor of St. Giles Presbyterian church here, proposed after he had observed court proceedings for the first time. He said clergymen, along with many other persons, sometimes tend to view the world through rose-colored glasses. In police court, he added, they would see to what depths some of humanity has fallen and also become aware of how widespread is moral corruption.

"The sliding moral conditions of today raise grave questions," Belk declared. "Since the first world war we have steadily deteriorated morally. Nothing has stemmed the tide, even temporarily. Unless we mend our ways and return to the moral standards of God, we will suddenly awaken to find that we've lost our liberty. We can't take our democracy for granted."

Belk was one of nearly a score of clergymen who appeared in court together to press charges against a 47-year-old advertising solicitor and former lieutenant-commander in the navy who was charged with obtaining money under false pretenses from 10 of the ministers by telling a false hard-luck story. The other clergymen left after the case was disposed of, but Belk stayed to watch court proceedings throughout the morning and, on invitation, occupied a chair beside the trial justice.

At one point in the proceedings, the judge had a quart bottle of a cleaning fluid brought up for Belk's inspection.

"They drink that stuff," the judge explained. "A little of it produces a terrific jag." Belk sniffed lightly and shook his head.

A Long Job

Harrisburg, Pa.:—The Rev. Henry C. Koch, head of world relief for the Evangelical and Reformed Church, told the annual convention of the Pennsylvania Council of Churches, meeting here, that it will take "from 15 to 20 years to rebuild in a minimum" the cities of Europe and stated that the uncertain policies of the allied nations had led to cynicism and despair. Also addressing the meeting were the Rev. James H. Cochburn of Scotland and the Rev. Marc Boegner, president of the French Reformed Church.

People's Congress

New York (RNS):—All religious denominations have been invited to participate in an Emergency World People's Congress, scheduled to be held here in September when the U. N. General Assembly is in session, according to Professor Kirtley F. Mather of Harvard University, chairman of the advisory board for the congress. Plans for the congress will be made at a joint organizing conference at the New School for Social Research here on May 17-18.

The congress will bring together leaders and representatives of organizations, except governmental and political, from all over the globe, to work out a common program of action on six emergency tasks confronting the world. These tasks are: mobilizing the people of all nations for support of a system of international control of atomic energy; saving millions imperiled by famine, disease and destitution; making effective use of the U. N. for world peace and reconstruction. Also, bringing about adequate world organization; making the most effective use of the world's resources for the benefit of all; and helping to insure for all people the exercise of their basic human rights.

The joint organizing conference will determine the organization and agenda for the Congress.

Professors Agree

Greencastle, Ind. (RNS):—Teaching of religion has a place in all liberal arts college courses, it was decided at a consultation here between DePauw University professors and Walter M. Horton, professor of theology at Oberlin Theological Seminary. The consultation was one of 20 to be conducted at different American colleges under the sponsorship of the American Council on Education, the National Council on Religion in Higher Education, and the Edward W. Hazen Foundation, New Haven, Conn.

An appreciation of the effects of Christianity, it was decided here, gives the arts and sciences greater meaning in an age which leans "to extremes and excesses."

Horton declared, "it is a tragedy that so much harmony has been lost between religion and education in the last two centuries. We have a generation of religious illiterates on our hands. I believe that courses should be taught so that the student learns profound respect for religious values connected with each subject."

Marriage Code

Los Angeles (RNS):—Under terms of a code of ethics adopted by the Ministerial Union of Ontario (Calif.) no marriage rites will be performed for divorced persons who are unable to give proof that their divorce grounds are "sufficient from a Christian standpoint."

The code, signed by fifteen pastors of Ontario churches, pledges members of the Ministerial Union to require interviews with couples prior to marriage, and to obtain pledges from couples to seek the guidance of a minister in case of marital difficulties before consulting a lawyer or starting divorce proceedings.

Also, it pledges pastors to perform all marriages in the church when possible, to emphasize that "marriage is a high, spiritual contract, vital to human welfare and therefore sacred in the eyes of God and His church," and to strive constantly for higher community standards of marital and family relationships.

Urges Unity

Toronto (RNS):—A plea for a "United Christian Church"—a reunion of all Christians, Catholic and Protestant, in one Church—was made by the Rt. Rev. W. L. Wright, Anglican Bishop of Algoma, in an address at Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.

"The Anglican Church is both Catholic and Protestant," he said. "She will throw away her opportunity to serve as a 'bridge-church' if she stresses only a nominal unity with Protestants and abandons her position in regard to the apostolic ministry, which she holds in common with the Catholic three-fourths of Christendom."

Coventry Cathedral

London (wireless to RNS):—A resolution that Coventry Cathedral be rebuilt on its present site in its old form was adopted at a public meeting in Coventry. Sir Alfred Herbert, a leading British manufacturer, who presided, declared that modernistic architecture would be "out of harmony with the spire and the remaining portions" of the cathedral. A petition, bearing 720 signatures, has been sent to the cathedral commission urging that traditional architecture be employed.

Threat to Press

Washington (RNS): — Humphrey E. Desmond of Milwaukee, president of the Catholic Press Association, told the House committee on post office and civil service that a proposed increase in postal rates "threatens the Catholic parochial press of the nation."

Mr. Desmond, who said that he represented 200 Catholic newspapers with varying circulations, warned that if the proposed increase in rates is put into effect, it would deal a death blow to most Catholic papers.

The proposed postal rates, which have stirred controversy in press circles generally, would increase the rate per pound of religious, educational, agricultural or other related publications from one-and-one-half cents to two-and-a-half cents. In addition, there would be a flat charge of one-fourth cent for each piece of mail.

Religious spokesmen here, although not planning to testify against the proposed increase, say privately the bill would work a financial hardship on every church that publishes a bulletin, every small denominational newspaper, and would increase greatly the mailing costs of the big religious journals.

Mr. Desmond told the committee that the bill would hit the Catholic press in the most vulnerable possible spot and that undoubtedly many Catholic newspapers would have to suspend publication if the new rates are put into effect.

REV. OSCAR J. F. SEITZ
Professor at Bexley Hall

I want to congratulate THE WITNESS for the series on the subjects in the book, Christianity Takes A Stand. If you decide to reprint them in pamphlet form the two on race relations alone would be worth the price. I refer to the excellent article on Negro-White Relations by Kenneth Hughes and the one on the Roots of Negro Oppression by Max Yergan. And I would include in my appreciation the one on the Need for Negro Clergy by John Burgess.

The series stimulated very lively interest among the ten Bexley students who received THE WITNESS in the bundle plan and met weekly to discuss the articles, together with the corresponding chapters in the book.

MISS JEAN DYKEMAN
Churchwoman of New York

THE WITNESS for May 8 has just reached me and I want to thank you for it. The work of the American Bible Society is of great importance and it is to be hoped that such an excellent number, devoted so largely to this work, may bring a response from the people of our Church. I would add that I was also delighted to have the article about the Guild of St. Barnabas for Nurses by Dr. Martin.

MR. JAMES A. KEITH
Layman of Philadelphia

It is to be hoped that many church people will read the excellent article by Dr. Grant in THE WITNESS for April 24th. It is a call to Christian action that is greatly needed these days. I would add that the entire series of articles, based upon the book, Christianity Takes A Stand, is a call to such action and the Church is greatly indebted to Bishop Scarlett and his commission for the book and to THE WITNESS editors for dealing with the chapters as you did. It was one of the finest exhibitions of journalism, religious or secular, that I have seen for a long time.

JOSEPH HOFFMAN
Layman of St. Louis

We are inclined to think that if our religion were strong enough or great enough we could resolve our problems. We could, if it were an active leaven everywhere. It must become just that in all fields of thought and activity if we are to avert world catastrophe.

We must understand what is happening in every field and see how the knowledge or acts of each relate to and work toward or tend to destroy peace. We need the facts that determine the thoughts and actions of men and set into motion historical movements.

We need more unity of action among the churches, among labor, farm, scientific, educational, cultural and minority groups to understand each other. We need to know how the work of each relates to the other; the objective results and the subjective motives involved.

We need a wide spread discussion of the many problems involved in the problem of peace. We need, as Wallace says, meetings everywhere. We need forums, conferences and open meetings. We need to learn that it is more profitable to spend for peace than for war. We need the faith and courage to really live up to our professions; the wisdom to use atomic energy in the interest of all mankind.

REV. F. T. NORMAN
Rector at Verdun, Quebec, Canada

The people in England are miles ahead of the people in Canada and I think also those in the United States. That applies to ecclesiastical as well as to political thinking. Certainly our own synod, just ended, dealt with the most irrelevant issues. The distinction between the world and the Church, a feature of early Christianity, is continually narrowing and this is certainly not due to world improvement.

Keep THE WITNESS coming and keep up its great witness to the faith.

The Political Aims of Catholics Hit By Methodists

Council of Bishops Say They Are a Threat To Religious Liberty Throughout the World

By Rita Rubin

Riverside, Calif.:—The Council of Bishops of the Methodist Church meeting here accused the Roman Catholic Church of political activities in the United States and throughout the world which amount to bigotry and a denial of religious liberty.

The accusation was in the form of a report which was adopted by the forty bishops attending the council meeting. Following is the text of the declaration:

"We are aware of the denials of religious liberty in many countries where Government, at the insistence of the Roman Catholic hierarchy, has passed legislation seriously limiting the freedom of other religious bodies.

"We refer particularly to the Argentine, where law now requires the teaching of the Roman Catholic religion even in the schools of Protestant churches.

"The situation in Italy and Spain denies to Protestants religious freedom which Protestants in the United States desire the Roman Catholics to enjoy.

"These denials of religious liberty are made at the very moment that protestations of belief in democracy are made by the Roman Catholic hierarchy in the United States and demands for the public support of parochial enunciation are advocated as a contribution to the morality essential to freedom.

"We stand for religious freedom everywhere and believe the Roman Catholic Church should cease to misinform the American people by affirmations of loyalty to democratic ideals when deliberately denying religious freedom wherever it has power to do so.

"A simple rule might guide all of us as we face the issue of religious liberty, and that is to do unto others as we would be done by.

"The recent decision of the Supreme Court, affirming the constitutionality of state legislation providing public funds for the transportation of children to parochial schools is, in our estimation, a departure from the American principles of the separation of Church and state and carries with it a serious threat to our public educational system which is the bulwark of democracy.

"We rejoice in the liberty this nation grants churches to maintain schools if they so desire, but we hold that the support from public funds of sectarian education is fraught with danger and must be resisted and ended. We shall resist all attempts of the Roman Catholic hierarchy to secure public support for such schools and other religious enterprises on the ground of the separation of the Church and state because we believe that such action will create a reaction here as it has elsewhere, which may limit religious freedom.

"We call for the end of the anomalous situation in which the President of the United States maintains a personal representative to the Pope without the consent of the representatives of the people and in violation of what an overwhelming majority of the American people believe to be an American principle.

"Are our Roman Catholic brothers, with whom we desire the friendliest of relations and for whom we demand the same religious liberties we insist upon for ourselves, to push their demands so far that we must in self-defense take steps that will protect our liberties and those of our children?

"We wish the fullest of cooperation and offer it gladly as Christian brothers. But we can no longer tolerate bigotry and discrimination in Roman Catholic controlled lands, particularly in view of the Roman Catholic ability to act as one and to stand for religious liberty and brotherly cooperation if it so desires."

Minneapolis:—When Bishop Benjamin T. Kemerer, suffragan of Minnesota, attended a Shriner's circus recently he was fascinated by a tiger. The picture on the cover is the result.

HORACE DONEGAN IS ELECTED BISHOP

New York:—There was a flurry of excitement at the convention of the diocese of New York on May 13 but it worked out as planned by the 25 men who, a week before, issued a statement urging the election as suffragan of the Rev. Horace W. B. Donegan of St. James' Church (WITNESS, May 15). With 240 clerical and 153 lay votes cast, 121 clerical and 77 lay votes were needed to elect. Mr. Donegan on the first ballot received 184 clerical and 123½ lay votes, with scattered votes for the Rev. Louis W. Pitt, the Rev. Ross Greer, Dean Claude Sprouse of Kansas City, and the Rev. Richard Beaty.

The excitement was caused by the resentment of some that men "meeting in smoke-filled rooms" should presume to make a deal and tell them what to do. It was expressed most forcefully by the Rev. Wendell W. Phillips of Rye, N. Y. who nominated Mr. Pitt as a "liberal, evangelical churchman" and asked whether it was necessary for a man to be a "middle-of-the-roader" who never commits himself to have a chance to be elected a bishop in the diocese. Mr. Pitt, immediately stated that he stood by his earlier decision not to be a candidate, in the interest of unity in the diocese. Later however the Rev. Sydney A. Temple Jr., again placed Pitt's name before the convention, stating that pre-convention caucuses were "disgusting" and that "rotten politics and newspaper nominations have no place in the election of a bishop." Pitt however declined to run.

When it was all over Bishop Gilbert welcomed his new assistant to the platform, assuring the delegates that they would "work in complete harmony," with Donegan responding that it would be the greatest privilege to work with Bishop Gilbert. Then, after Bishop Gilbert had said that under tension sometimes "feelings get the best of our judgments," the convention turned to other business.

A retirement allowance of $6,000 a year was voted to Bishop Manning; a salary of $25,000 plus allowances was voted Bishop Gilbert and a salary of $12,000 and allowances to the newly elected suffragan. In all the sum of $59,700 was voted for the support of the episcopate. The sum of $23,400 was voted for the diocesan fund and $54,000 to the missionary and extension society.

Bishop Gilbert in his address, the first before a convention as a diocesan bishop, stressed the need for expanding missionary work and stated that the new suffragan would "make his headquarters at some accessible point in the northern part of the diocese" the better to strengthen and encourage the assisted parishes and missions. He also spoke of the need for strengthening the work in the rapidly growing colored communities and of the need for "moving in upon some of the new housing developments which lie beyond the reach of our existing parishes and missions."

He spoke of the "difficult and uncertain days ahead" and added that "we may be sure that God means to have his way with this sorely troubled world of ours; but much is going to depend upon you and me, upon our response to the needs and claims of his Church, yes, and upon our measure of faith, our own sure vision and our willingness to stand together and work together in mutual good will and confidence."

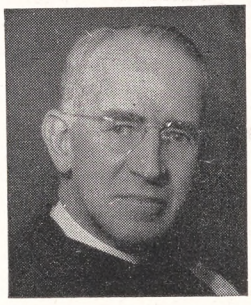
There was mild dissent to the granting of a retirement allowance of $6000 to Bishop Manning. The Rev. John B. Langstaff of the Bronx stated that he appreciated the work Bishop Manning had done but that he also knew many men with families in the diocese who are in need. Bishop Gilbert however urged the delegates to defeat Mr. Langstaff's motion to strike from the committee's recommendation the allowance, which was done with an overwhelming vote.

URGES RELIGION IN SCHOOLS

Grand Rapids, Mich.:—A series of elective courses in religion and ethics can and should be incorporated into America's public school system, declared Dean H. Ralph Higgins of St. Mark's Cathedral here, at a special meeting of citizens to consider the matter.

"It is a pure myth that the American tradition of separation of church and states makes 'non-sectarian' synonymous with 'non-religious'," he asserted. "The founding fathers never intended to kick religion out of the educational experience of American youth."

Speaking before an audience that included many specially invited public school teachers, Dean Higgins charged the omission of religious training in public schools with having produced an ethical "infantilism" in American youth. He pointed to the chasm between technical "progress" and moral and ethical lag and declared "our educational failure is so profound because education and religion have been almost total strangers.



"There is little hope for the future unless religion and ethics can be integrated into popular education," he asserted, claiming such a proposal would not violate the policy of Church-state separation.

BISHOP TO VISIT LIBERIA

New York:—Bishop Elwood Haines of Iowa is to represent the National Council at the centennial celebration of the founding of the Republic of Liberia which is to be observed in July. Formerly a missionary in Liberia, he will fly there early in July and will be gone several weeks. In addition to making several addresses, Bishop Harris has arranged for him to see a great deal of the work of the Church, not only in the Monrovia area but also at Bromley, Cape Mount and Cape Palmas. He will report on his trip at the September meeting of the National Council.

JAPANESE SYNOD MEETS

Nara, Japan:—After six years of surveillance by nationalistic officials and virtual suppression, the Japanese Episcopal Church resumed its triennial General Synods here May 6-9 at Christ Church. In addition to the Japanese bishops, headed by the Primate, Bishop Todomu Sugai of South Tokyo, the synod was attended by the Archbishop of New Zealand, the Rt. Rev. Campbell W. West-Watson.

CHURCHMEN IN THE NEWS: Bishop Gilbert delivers first address as diocesan to convention of New York; the Rev. Rollin Fairbanks leads conference on ministry at Harvard; the Rev. Theodore P. Ferris is a headliner at the convention of Albany

The Church in Japan is patterned after the American Church, with a House of Bishops and a House of Deputies, clergy and laymen, with legislation requiring the concurrence of both houses.

EASTON STRESSES EDUCATION

Elkton, Md.: — Determination to cope with problems of religious education was stressed at the convention of Easton, meeting here at Trinity Church, May 6th. Bishop McClelland in his address stated that the schools in the diocese have "passed the low water mark." Prof. William V. Dennis of State College, Pa., at the dinner session, told the delegates that the Episcopal Church is 85% urban and urged evangelization of rural areas. He recently completed a survey of the dioceses which revealed that of a total population of 195,000, 145,000 are unchurched.

Church of Nearly 2000 Members Admitted as a Parish

The Story of Christ Church in Diocese Of Michigan Centers Around Francis Creamer

By John G. Fort

Detroit:—A routine motion at the last convention of Michigan to accept the report of the committee on admission of new parishes was supported and passed. There was no discussion and the entire matter took about twenty seconds. Each of those seconds had behind it a year of work and the parish which had asked for admission to the Diocese was Christ Church, Grosse Pointe, which numbers eighteen hundred communicants; had paid in 1946 the largest amount of any parish in the diocese in its apportionment and had contributed the second largest amount to the Rehabilitation and Advance Fund.

Not only had it had this record of diocesan giving but in the arrangements for its independent existence the rector, wardens and vestry with the solid backing of the congregation, had waived any claim, technical or moral, to a half million dollar endowment fund and a church filled with costly memorials most of which had been given by members of families of the new parish which was now asking for its own status.

Behind all this is the century of history of Christ Church, Detroit, founded in 1845 but the story of the new parish of Christ Church, Grosse Pointe, largely revolves about one man. The Rev. Francis Bunnel Creamer interrupted his college career to serve as a Major in artillery in world war one. He graduated from Trinity College and then Berkeley Divinity School. For two years he was in charge of St. John's, Huntington, Penna. In 1926, when Francis Creamer was twenty-eight years old, the Rev. William M. Maxon who for thirty-five years was rector of Christ Church, invited him to become his curate.

The first task assigned him was to see what he could do about a Sunday School for the children of some of the parishioners of that fashionable old church who had now moved to the suburbs. In basements and attic playrooms the classes were organized. Then a Presbyterian church rented space where an evensong service was held. More of the parishioners and then some of the vestry moved to the same neighborhood. Plans for a church were drawn. Money was raised and a beautiful English gothic chapel was built.

Dr. Maxon resigned and the young curate who had built the church, but who had also been a leader of the social service work that had grown up at the old parish, was asked to become rector. Now rector, wardens and most of the vestry had their headquarters at the chapel and the parish business was centered there. The old church was carried on with its social service department, gymnasium and neighborhood clubs with the congregation at the chapel meeting the deficit.

More changes came to down town Detroit so there was a feeling that the old Christ Church could again meet its own needs and the chapel, if an independent parish, could again look for a strategic location for further church extension. Again Francis Creamer was the one who tactfully and generously steered the negotiations. The old Church retains its parish status with its buildings and endowment intact and the new parish carries on vigorously, raising a budget of over fifty thousand dollars in less than three weeks.

Mr. Creamer has also been a leader in diocesan and civic affairs. Three times he has been either Deputy or alternate to the General Convention, he has served on the diocesan finance department, been chairman of the standing committee and member of the executive council. He was chairman of the British War Relief and last July was awarded the king's medal of the Order of the British Empire for work in this connection. He was also a leader in the French War Relief and the first chairman of the Russian War Relief in Detroit.

CHURCH PARTIES ARE HIT

Indianapolis:—Bishop Kirchhoffer of Indianapolis, in his convention address, deplores the "stress and strain of Church parties" and declared that both Anglo-Catholics and Evangelicals were doing the Church a disservice by placing party ahead of the corporate life of the whole Church.

MISSIONARIES ARE APPOINTED

New York:—Miss Mary Edith Collett is to go to Liberia this summer for work at Julia C. Emery House at Bomley, Liberia. Miss Collett is the daughter of Mrs. Edith Collett and the late Rev. Charles H. Collett who was on the staff of the National Council and later rector of the Church of Christ and St. Michael, Philadelphia. She is a graduate of Simmons College and for the past two years has studied at St. Margaret's House, Berkeley, California.

REGISTER CONVICTIONS FOR FREEDOM

Stamford, Conn.:—Due to the recent ousting of six physicians from Roman Catholic hospitals in Connecticut because they openly supported the Alsop Bill for maternal health protection, the Ministers Association here at their last meeting took action in three ways. They sent a strong letter of protest to the Roman Catholic superintendent of hospitals of the Hartford diocese, which denounced the apparent distinction he had made between holding medical views and speaking about them publicly. This stand, the ministers contended, was a direct violation of a doctor's freedom of speech and is contrary to the American way of life.

The group also sent a letter of commendation to the local physician in Stamford who had been told to shut up or get off the staff. The physician publicly announced his resignation from St. Joseph's Hospital and stated his decision to speak as his conscience directed. In his stand the Stamford Medical Association gave him full support.

A third communication was sent to the legislative committees in Hartford which were considering the Alsop Bill to allow physicians to prescribe and disseminate information on contraceptives, when the health of mothers would be endangered.

The six physicians expelled from three hospitals in the state were all members of a committee of one hundred doctors who had initiated and supported the Alsop Bill as a medical measure for the welfare of the people of Connecticut.

The Rev. Stanley Hemsley and the Rev. Charles Havens were Episcopalians among the 19 signers of these statements.

ADELAIDE CASE HEADS SCHOOL

Atlanta, Ga.:—Prof. Adelaide Case of Episcopal Theological School headed a diocesan Church School Institute here May 14-15, with the Rev. Matthew M. Warren of All Saints', here, also giving courses. The opening address was given by Bishop Walker. There were exhibits of handicraft, visual aids, and books.

SOCIAL ACTION GROUP

Stamford, Conn.:—At their regular monthly meeting St. John's Auxiliary unanimously adopted a resolution urging passage of the Alsop Bill allowing to all dissemination of birth control information by physicians. The bill is now being debated in the state legislature. The group is composed of more than 200 women. Telegrams were sent to state legislators from this area to inform them of the action and to urge their support of the bill.

At this meeting the women heard an address by the Rev. Leland B. Henry, secretary of the commission on social relations of the diocese of New York. He described five fields of social action in which the Church should make itself vocal. He called them "work with social agencies," industrial relations, race relations, the area of political legislation for higher standards of living for all people, and "world responsibility," which he divided into two parts—overseas relief through CWS, and Christian world order, especially by strengthening the UN.

At the conclusion of his talk, Mr. Henry urged those present to start a parish social action group which could consider and act upon local, state and national problems. St. John's Parish is now organizing a social action group under the leadership of the Rev. Stanley F. Hemsley, rector, and the Rev. Charles Havens, associate.

The Ven. Joseph S. Doron was recently named Archdeacon of the missionary district of San Joaquin

NEW BISHOP FOR BOMBAY

Bombay (wireless to RNS):—The Rev. William Q. Lash, British-born missionary, has been named Anglican Bishop of Bombay by the diocesan council to succeed the Rt. Rev. Richard Dyke Acland, who recently retired from the bishopric under the 65-year age limit. The new bishop will be consecrated at St. Thomas Cathedral here on August 10 and will be enthroned a few days later. Nomination of Bishop-elect Lash marks the first time the Bombay diocese, which was founded in 1837, has selected its own bishop. Heretofore, the diocese was headed by a so-called Presidency Bishop, appointed by the crown.

V. C. McMASTER RESIGNS

New York:—The Rev. Vernon C. McMaster has resigned as secretary for administration in the department of Christian education of the National Council. He informed THE WITNESS that he believes that thirteen years on the job is long enough and that he is anxious to return to parish work. He has been called to a parish in the South, where he came from originally, but states that the announcement must come from the office of the bishop.

CONFERENCES ON THE MINISTRY

Cambridge: — Sixty-five Harvard students met with Bishop Nash recently at the house of Chaplain F. B. Kellogg to hear him present the ministry as a vocation. It was the first of five meetings on the subject, with the Rev. F. H. Arterton, rector at Belmont, being the leader at the second affair. Other leaders were the Rev. William Brewster, head of St. Mark's School; the Rev. Rollin J. Fairbanks, chaplain of Massachusetts General Hospital; the Rev. Theodore P. Ferris, rector of Trinity, Boston; Dean Taylor and Professors Sherman Johnson and Joseph F. Fletcher of the Cambridge Seminary and Bishop Lane W. Barton of Eastern Oregon.

CONVENTION OF ATLANTA

Columbus, Ga.:—Support for the Presiding Bishop's Fund was urged by Bishop John Moore Walker at the convention of the diocese of Atlanta, meeting here at Trinity Church, May 6-7. The salaries of missionary clergy were increased by $300. Mr. W. C. Turpin Jr. of Macon was elected chancellor, succeeding the Hon. E. E. Pomeroy who resigned because of ill health.

Highlights of the Auxiliary meeting held in connection with the convention were addresses by Dr. Guion Johnson, psychiatrist, on the Christian family; Mrs. A. W. Simms-Lee, a missionary from China; Mrs. J. F. Heard of the national board of the Auxiliary.

GEORGIA TO SEAT NEGROES

Augusta, Ga.:—The convention of the diocese of Georgia voted to seat Negro delegates, both clerical and lay, at all future conventions.

An Old Role Revived?

THE plan to spend $1,200,000 commencing in the fall of 1948 for a radio-movie-advertising campaign of evangelism (WITNESS, May 1) is being received with enthusiasm by churchmen. Already a number of groups have endorsed the plan as being one "for which the Church has long waited," and with the director of promotion, Mr. Jordan, now on a swing through the mid-west, conferring with leaders in fifteen dioceses, it may be assumed that further enthusiastic endorsements will be forthcoming.

Through much of its history the Church has been a patron, protector and initiator of dramatic art as well as, on numerous occasions, serving as its inspiration. From the very beginning the drama of the liturgy, complete with personal dialogue and material props, has stood in the center of our eccelesiastical cultus. As a complement to this drama, the Church developed the art of musical presentation with the composition of liturgical music and sweeping oratorios. During the Middle Ages, it was the Church which kept both secular and religious drama alive in the monastery libraries and which fostered dramatic expression as an educational technique through the writing and primitive staging of folkplays and Passion dramas.

However, with the breakdown of the medieval synthesis and with the puritanical reaction against "play-acting," the Church quickly slipped from its role as foster-parent of drama and, with but a few minor exceptions, passed its mantle on to the non-ecclesiastical community. By so doing the Church dodged a vital opportunity to educate and to stimulate, although we must grant that the wider community has done a fine job by and large through the development of techniques of production and acting and its stimulation of creative writing.

As a result of such a negative approach we now find Church drama pretty sterile. It is confined for the most part to the production of insipid missionary plays by parish organizations, and fifth rate movie shorts put out by various agencies, the chief aim of which is to raise funds for quotas. Although such productions may have value in so far as they foster dramatic participation, nevertheless they do a disservice in that they are poorly written, staged and acted.

Assurance was given the National Council, when the evangelical plan was presented last month, that the radio programs would be of high order. The expenditure of $15,000 for writers, actors and radio time for each of forty half-hour programs was justified by this promise. That amount of money ($600,000) should be enough to guarantee top performances. Nevertheless it is a fact that radio networks, not lacking in cash, have not yet come up with religious programs that satisfy after diligent searching for writers and actors. Church people will do well therefore not to expect too much. Mr. Jordan and his committee of experts have a real job, of which they are well aware, in presenting programs that will satisfy the sensitive ears of religious people.

That it can be done has been demonstrated by the English Church that periodically puts on Canterbury Plays, written by such expert dramatists as Dorothy Sayers and T. S. Eliot. Just the reading of such offerings as Murder in the Cathedral and The Man Born To Be King is proof enough that Canterbury stimulates great art. In our own country we have some first-rate dramatists who undoubtedly are willing to be used. W. H. Auden is an Episcopalian. Archibald MacLeish, whose Son of Man script was the highlight of radio's Easter offering, has shown that he can do a great job. There are others like Robert Sherwood, Lilian Hellman, Marc Connelly of Green Pastures and Maxwell Anderson of Joan of Lorraine who, with proper stimulation, should be able to produce religious

I AM constantly amazed by the vigor and growth of some of the smaller Christian bodies. It may be true that in our complacent eyes some of them border upon the fanatical. But I am not at all sure that lethargy is any safer ground than fanaticism. Who among us has ever encountered a fanatical congregation in the Episcopal Church? Yet many of us have had experiences with congregations so complacent in their comfort and security and self-satisfaction that they bitterly resent the influx of any new-comers and but grudgingly greet the newly confirmed unless they have known them for twenty-five years. It is too much to hope that we may find some middle ground (and there would seem to be some hope since the genius of the Church is to find a middle ground!) — some middle ground between fanaticism and lethargy which we might well call enthusiasm. Enthusiasm literally means being filled with the spirit of God. And we can never be filled with the spirit of God—that is, be enthusiastic,—as long as we are filled with the spirit of self. No matter how well we may be supplied with clergy, no matter how much money we may have to spend on our work, unless such results grow out of deep convictions and real enthusiasm, they have no lasting effect.

drama worthy of our great tradition in this field.

Then too there are undoubtedly amateur playwrights within the Church who, if coordinated under some group like the experimental Vesper Players of the diocese of Michigan, could turn out highly acceptable dramas for stage, radio or screen.

With community and little theatres springing up about the country; with interest groups such as labor unions, and racial groups such as the Negro Theatre, making the public drama conscious, the Church has a great opportunity, not only on the national level but in dioceses and parishes as well. But this vigorous step we are taking must be in the right direction, with programs of the highest order, and not just a comparatively small American Church trying to sell itself the way a commercial firm sells soap.

Notes on a Visit to Germany

by Joseph F. Fletcher

Professor at Episcopal Theological School

I CANNOT go into detail about my arrangements for this part of the journey. It will do to say that I fixed it with a friend in the military intelligence, on short leave in London, to go along with him on a roving assignment. Before I left England I arranged with friends in Paris for that part of things. My passport was all I needed for France, but Germany was strictly a matter between me and the military.

I went over on the Golden Arrow via Dover-Calais (the ship stood on end coming and going). Picked up a message from my friend in the American army headquarters in the Avenue Kleber in Paris, which told me to meet him next evening outside the Bahnhof in Basle. I did so, and we drove over to Freiburg, spending the night in a French officers' mess.

Here is my itinerary: From Basle to Freiburg. Then—as the main points—Ulm, Neue Ulm, Augsberg, Dachau, Munich, Nuremberg, Ausbach, Halle, Stuttgart, Freudenstadt, Strasbourg, and back into France. Lots of visits and stops in towns and villages en route. It was comfortable in an army car with heater, right in the middle of a frightful cold wave. The big autobahns make speed possible when required, or you can dawdle along. Staying in officers' messes meant warm beds and good meals—though one felt uncomfortable about it amidst the surrounding misery, cold, hunger and idleness.

What can I say? I stayed away from big shots, universities, Church officials and bureaucrats. Saw and talked with hosts of rank and file people, local administrators, professionals, workers, children, housewives, and operations-level military. We have all seen stories about Germany. No data, description or pictures give you any real idea of what it really is. England's damage is slight comparatively. We really destroyed people and buildings the way we spray insects with DDT. The Luftwaffe just played at it! However, here are a few observations.

As a sample, Nuremberg, the medieval city, simply gone, both parts. Rubble, rubble, rubble. So with Munich (large parts), Augsburg, Stuttgart, etc. The housing is hell. Lack of fuel meant closed factories, in addition to serious unemployment anyway in the Western zones. Lots of hunger oedema (thick legs, distended bellies), greenish lined faces. Things better in the country and villages than in the cities—the vulnerability of urban life. I saw people burning precious furniture to keep warm, stealing fences and the bars off closed shops. Wooden slats off all the park benches. People's nerves tangled, on empty stomachs and in overcrowded dwellings, many of them in jerry-roofed basements of bombed houses. The captain and I got meals that represented a whole German family's ration for three days. They try to supplement out of the black market, as long as they have possessions to sell. Cigarets are still big stuff; one is a good tip or reward. The medics I talked with say the T.B. rate has gone up 30%. German doctors argue that soy beans would help out on the diet spread a lot. Now they are collecting human hair from barbers and making it into a paste to supplement the food elements, putting it into other food. But why go into all this? Does it do any good really?

The shame of the vanquished embraces the victor. Our people there are uncomfortable and uneasy, being so well fed while others are starving. (UNRRA is being closed out—what then?) And the German small-business, professional and administrative personalities are so craven and insincere. They all hasten to assure you that their Frageboden (political questionnaires) have been most satisfactory. There are no Nazis—never were—in Germany, to hear them tell it. Oceans of insincerity. The Germans who had it best under the Nazis chatter constantly about the Russian menace. That's their line to a new start with the victors, and gives them a "bastion" function of "vital importance to the West"—still another value-word they play up. Our working soldiers are on to it, thank goodness, though they fear, with reason, that the average man in America is being taken in by it. They spread it on thick with lots of visitors, especially those who come for a limited time under brass hat auspices and spend all their time talking with pre-arranged job-holders. They really think they can pull the Cordon Sanitaire stunt a second time. Well, maybe they can!

I SAW several DP camps. Mostly Jews. But not all; for example, I went into one camp of Poles who refuse to go back to the new Poland, and still another camp of people who claim they reside in the Baltics and have to wait for a case-work clearance of their claims. UNRRA's folding will be disastrous for these people.

This reminds me of the Iron Curtain which is of such concern to Churchill, Hearst, and others. It's a little silly when you are actually there. One night in the intelligence offices near the courts of justice at Nuremberg I talked with officers from all four zones and asked what some of the inter-zone frictions are. A Russian said, "people who sneak across the lines after dark." This turned out to mean that they figure about 500 people "escape" (that was a British officer's word for it) into the Russian Zone every night. Not for ideological reasons in many cases, but just to get work and to have a better food ration. Germans in the western zones get letters from their families and friends in the Russian zone (through the "Iron Curtain" incidentally) and they know what's going on. The Russian scare, still strong from the Nazi kultur, is wearing off with hordes of the German common people. The slow, "back to normalcy" economic policy of the American zones especially is a strong reason for this. And, as a Frenchman put it to me in Freiburg, "The commercial press can't have it both ways much longer; telling us that the Russian occupation is a steamroller over all freedom, and then reporting election after election in which the Soviet-favored parties take a licking!"

Our intelligence people regard the churches as centers of Prussianism and Lutheran state-worship. They insist that the important thing about Niemoeller coming over here is not that we invited him, but that the German churches chose him as their representative, rather than a pastor who fought the Nazi from the beginning and unequivocally. In some places military intelligence and trade-union chaps felt that the pastor was all right from the deNazification point of view, but mostly, No. The German Churches politically are conservative, and the Roman Church is the backbone of the Christian Democratic party, on its organizational side, though the Protestants go along with it. Like MRP in France, this is really the rightist bloc.

The Social Democrats (I talked with many of them in Bavaria and Wurtemberg and Greater Hesse) are getting discouraged. Our insistence upon an American-pattern economy, in spite of the emergency situation and Europe's history, is the chief cause. All segments of the Germans want what Britain has to offer. Classical capitalism is finished in Europe; they get either the British or the Russian precedent. Germany just now needs crisis-planning and coordination to get a start and to feed itself, but the American policy makers evidently fear that even pro tempore planning and coordination would not be easily abandoned later, so they simply run the risk of political disaffection by holding the west back until they can find more-or-less non-Nazi business men to take hold of a "free" program. And Britain is pretty helpless to revolt because we have the stuff to do the job and Britain hasn't. Meanwhile the Russkis go ahead. Our policy doesn't satisfy the communists (or does it?), nor the social democrats—only the Vatican-Hearst philosophers are pleased.

This is no essay on Europe Today. But I can say this—that centuries of state idolatry, metaphysical idealism, Bismarckian and Hitlerian leadership and following, two dreadful defeats in war they started, the present debacle—all this adds up to Germany being a center of physical and spiritual disease. My nightmares show it spreading over the rest of the world. As in Existentialism, for example, the philosophy of despair. It works into France and Italy. There are vital questions here with which we must come to grips.

Editor's Note: This article came to us as a memorandum written in terse, almost shorthand style. With the author's permission it has been summarized even more. A third and final article on France will follow.

Prayer Book Fundamentalism

by Hugh McCandless

Rector of the Epiphany, New York

THERE are two strong trends among lay people in the Episcopal Church today which will be familiar to every parish clergyman. The first is a feeling which may be expressed thus: "Why doesn't the Episcopal Church become more united in itself before it attempts to unite with other Churches?"

This is, of course, not quite practical. The fact that I may not approve of the government of Georgia, would hardly be a valid reason for disapproving of the United Nations idea. However, approaches to unity within our own Church must certainly be taken seriously.

The other frame of mind found among lay people can be exemplified by the request made to a clergyman by a group of young men. They asked him to speak on the subject: "What do we, as Episcopalians, believe?" This request shocked him. These young men were such good Episcopalians that they were ready to subscribe to the doctrines of the Church before they knew what they were! Some of them were just back from fighting the Nazi dictatorship; most of them were afraid of Communistic totalitarianism, and yet they wanted to create a kind of intellectual dictatorship out of "Episcopalianism."

The danger of such worthy requests will be that many of us may say that since the teaching of the Church is to be found in the Prayer Book we must then approach the Prayer Book in a Fundamentalist way. We shall build up our own systems of theology and use the Prayer Book as a source of proof-texts. We shall do this in the Fundamentalist manner by snatching a phrase here, by patching up a few words there. We shall have an answer to all those who object to our point of view: "Why, it is right there in the Prayer Book!"

Several years ago I found myself on the mailing list of a magazine issued by a group of five or six Fundamentalist churches; they used the proof-text system as a way of understanding the Bible, as a means of finding out a definite method of "getting square with God"—in other words, of finding an absolutely certain way of salvation.

It was not long before this group of churches split up and I was receiving two magazines from the rival factions. One group had apparently slid off into a form of religious depravity known as "water baptism." I am still not sure just what this was, although I suspect I am tarred with the same brush. The two magazines carried on a debate marked by zeal and forgiving charity. The arguments brought up by both sides were extremely ingenious and showed a great knowledge of the contents of the Bible, mingled with complete ignorance of what the contents actually meant. The final unanswerable argument was reached in both cases when each assured the other that he obviously did not believe that the Bible was the Word of God.

I hope we shall be spared such hair-splitting in our Church. The Prayer Book will prove to be just as hard a book to be fundamentalistic about, if we are intellectually honest, as the Bible is.

A recent pamphlet by a chaplain in the armed forces proves this beyond a doubt. He is trying to explain in this what the Church teaches, and the certainty of that teaching. It is the feeling of many who have read this that his method of using the Prayer Book as a proof-text does violence to the whole general feeling of the Prayer Book; and while his effort is commendable in these uncertain days, it would hardly seem that "getting square with God" is the cut and dried thing he makes of it. Like all Fundamentalists, he makes the most use of portions of the Prayer Book which may be of the least importance.

The phrase, Lex orandi, lex credendi—"the law of prayer is the law of belief"—has an ancient and honorable history. But to make beliefs that the Prayer Book allows into rules that the Church requires is not in accord with this maxim. Making laws out of permissions is against the whole spirit of Christian prayer, as found in the Prayer Book or any other orthodox liturgy.

THE final blow to Prayer Book Fundamentalism has been struck in The Shape of the Liturgy by Dom Gregory Dix, an Anglican Benedictine monk. It will take some time for the effect of this book to be felt, as it is over 700 pages of fine print, heavily weighed down with footnotes. The writer attempts to poke holes in all our smug, cherished Anglican beliefs about the Prayer Book. For example, he says that our Communion service is essentially Zwinglian. (It should give some satisfaction to those Presbyterians who have heard that their Communion service is not Catholic, to learn that ours is basically less Catholic than theirs!) He attempts to prove that the Roman service to which we have condescended as a haphazard collection of North Italian prayers without much logic or connected purpose, is really the work of the Englishman Alcuin and very logical indeed.

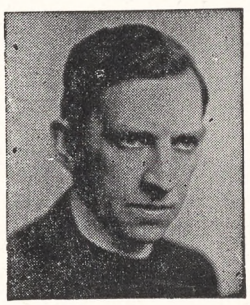
It may be that Dom Gregory's purpose is to justify the use of such books as the Anglican Missal. Be that as it may, and whether he has proved specific points or not, he has certainly pointed up the deliberate ambiguity of our Book of Common Prayer. Whether we say with him that its ambiguity is a sort of two-facedness, or whether we maintain the older—and I think more correct—idea that the lack of definiteness in our Prayer Book is really an attempt at inclusiveness, it would seem that it is impossible for anyone to use the Prayer Book as a dogmatic, dictatorial proof-text for his private preferences.

Just what does the Prayer Book teach? It is meant to be used in conjunction with the Bible. The Bible teaches us of the salvation of God, which has appeared unto all men in Christ Jesus our Lord. Our Lord teaches us that we must love God, and love our fellow man. The Prayer Book is meant to inspire, to direct, and to implement this love. It is therefore full of sacramentalism in the first place, and full of social implication in the second place. As the Bible Fundamentalists miss the social implications in the Bible, so the Prayer Book Fundamentalists will miss those same implications in the Prayer Book and in the Roman Missal, too.



The Prayer Book was written as the Bible was, by serious consecrated men, who differed with one another in as much a spirit of humility and charity as they could muster. They hoped the book would help people live with God and for God; to live with and for man. In a spirit of generosity to other men's convictions they admitted many shades of interpretation. The Burial Office is a good example of this. They sacrificed definiteness for broadness and richness.

No one man can say that his religion, experienced in one short lifetime, contains the whole of the religion of the Prayer Book, which has taken twenty centuries to come to where it is today. Those who would use it as a very straight and narrow way leading to a guaranteed salvation violate its spirit of inclusiveness, permissiveness, and tolerance; and in most of the cases I have seen, they neglect entirely its essential implications as a book written by fallible men for struggling Christians in an imperfect—but not untouchable—world.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

TRADITIONAL liberalism pulling one way and reaction pulling another has created quite a problem for the Unitarians. This numerically small Church has always boasted that it stood for progressive ideas and the absolute right of a man to express them. It is also one of the rightest denominations in the world per capita. This conflict has resulted in the suspension of the Rev. Stephen H. Fritchman, a progressive who exercises his rights, as the editor of their official publication, The Christian Register.

Some of the big-shots of Unitarianism have been gunning for Editor Fritchman for a long time, including the Rev. Donald Harrington of the Community Church of New York, which prides itself on being the last word in liberalism, and the co-pastor of that church, the Rev. John Haynes Holmes who, as the head of the American Civil Liberties Union, has always fought for the principle attributed to Voltaire: "I disagree with every word you say but I would give my life for your right to say it." However the "red hunt" has apparently so far developed in America that even Unitarians will toss their principles out of the window rather than apply them to such a wicked man as Fritchman.

For, you see, their editor has proved himself to be an extremely dangerous man by identifying himself with a lot of organizations that the Un-American Committee, Elizabeth Dilling, Gerald L. K. Smith and Cowboy Springer brand as "communist fronts." The fact that the last annual meeting of the Unitarian Church roundly condemned the Un-American Committee apparently makes no difference at this stage of the game; and while the Dilling-Smith-Springer tribe may be pretty bad in some respects, "they are after all right about some things."

Fritchman's record is clear enough. Way back at the time of Munich he belonged to the American League for Peace and Democracy which proved itself to be a "front organization" by being "prematurely anti-fascist." It did this by opposing international aggression and the technique of totalitarian war at the time the Nazi moved into Austria and Czechoslovakia, and took the position that Hitler would plunge the whole world into war unless the democratic nations, through concerted action, refused at once to surrender to his demands. That of course was wrong, and Fritchman of course was wrong in having anything to do with such an outfit.

But that isn't all: he did what he could to aid China in its struggle against Japan by affiliating with the China Aid Council, and he even went further than that by being a member of an outfit which urged the American people to boycott Japanese goods.

He got himself hooked up with an organization which sought to aid German seamen who got into a jam for being anti-Nazi; he had dealings with a committee for the protection of the foreign born; he let it be known that he thought Harry Bridges, the labor leader, should not be deported to Australia; he urged that Earl Browder, then the head of the Communist Party, should be let out of prison where he was serving a sentence for conviction on a false passport charge.

More recently he has urged friendship between the United States and the Soviet Union since he seems to think that world war three might be a rather messy business. He has also questioned the wisdom of the Truman doctrine, taking pretty much the same position on this as do several hundred clerygmen who recently issued a statement prepared by the Rev. W. Russell Bowie, former rector of Grace Church, New York, and professor at Union Seminary. It might be added that the Unitarian Commission on World Order issued a statement on April 4 on the Greek-Turkey business urging "extreme caution in proceeding with financial and military aid" to Greece and Turkey, but I presume the Unitarians, when they have their annual meeting later this month, can repudiate this statement if it is necessary for them to do so in order to fire Stephen Fritchman.

Anyhow it will be interesting to see what this Church body, which has always prized free speech and free press so highly, decides to do with this troublesome man. Incidentally, I have more than a little personal interest in their decision, since as near as I can judge from reading the papers, I share most of his opinions and have been a member of quite a number of the organizations that he is now condemned for having joined. I even spoke in Madison Square Garden at the time of the Munich sell-out, along with Thomas Mann, Dorothy Thompson and the late Heywood Broun, at a meeting that was sponsored by this terrible American League for Peace and Democracy. And I ended my little talk by saying: "The people who want peace must stand by China, Spain, Czechoslovakia and whatever nations are next on the list of the fascist aggressors. We must demand of our governments foreign policies that will distinguish between aggressors and their victims; we must demand of our governments concerted action to quarantine Hitler, Mussolini and the war lords of Japan. It is only thus that we, the people of France, the United States and Great Britain, can have that peace we so fervently desire."

That of course was heresy then. And many of the opinions that Fritchman now holds, and I hold, are heresies now. But that does not necessarily prove them wrong. So it will be fun to see whether the rank and file of Unitarians stand by him, and their traditions, or give him the boot.

New Books

Excellent Good *Fair

_A Study of History_. By Arnold J. Toynbee. Oxford University Press. $5.00.

This is an able abridgement, by D. C. Somervell, of the first six volumes (three more are to come) of one of the most important historical works to be published in modern times. Vols. I-III appeared in 1933, IV-VI in 1939; the notes for the remaining volumes are in a vault here in America, where they have been since the outbreak of the war. Most readers will be grateful for the skilful abridgement which Mr. Somervell has made—as a labor of love and enthusiasm, by the way, and not by contract. The tremendous range of the original (it takes all history into its embrace) is discouraging to the layman; but the abridgement can be handled, with patience—589 pages. And it is a book people ought to read, certainly the clergy. For the theory of history it unfolds and supports is diametrically opposed to the cheap dialectical materialism so often associated with radical social views; and at the same time it does not share the gloomy outlook of Spengler and others who predict the downfall of our civilization. Toynbee insists that there is hope! Some of the lessons that can be learned from the past are really applicable to our own times, if only we will have the sense to learn them and then apply them.

The Catholic Trade Unionists Hit By Speaker For CIO

Gives Talk on Labor and Religious Thought To a Group at the University of Minnesota

Edited by Sara Dill

Minneapolis (RNS):—Criticism of the activities of the Association of Catholic Trade Unionists was made here by Douglas Hall, general counsel for the Minnesota CIO. In an address on "Labor and Religious Thought" at the University of Minnesota, Hall described as "the most sinister development within some sections of the Church today" a campaign of "interference" within unions themselves.

"The Association of Catholic Trade Unionists," he said, "organizes and instructs its members in carrying out the policies of the Church as an organization within the unions. That is not religious thought or religious action. That is political activity outside the proper function of the Church."

Hall broadened his criticism, stating: "Our opposition to interference within the trade union movement applies to all groups. No group has any business sending its members into a union to secure adherence to the policy of that group. This applies to the Communist party, the Socialist party, the social democrats, the United States Chamber of Commerce, and to any Church."

The CIO attorney called on the Church to fight "the accomplished fact of a witch hunt" which he said is aimed at "thousands of little people in unions, in politics and in government service."

"These people," said Hall, "are not the real targets. The real targets are the organizations of workers, farmers and consumers that are the only bulwark against an American fascism. There is a force in the suppression of thought which does not stop, but which swallows up all who do not conform, for whatever reason. The Church may not be affected until after the so-called 'reds' and labor are taken care of. But it will be reached inevitably, and inexorably, it will be engulfed."

Hall, who gave one in a series of lectures on "Religions and Civilization" at the University, challenged the Church "to get into the arena and join the struggle" for civil rights and workers' economic security.

"More than just a few religious leaders must enter the struggle against reaction," he said. "The millions in the congregations also must join in."

More Zeal Needed

Albany, N. Y.:—Bishop Oldham told the convention of Albany, meeting here May 6-7, that deeper evangelical zeal was needed in order to remedy the lack of growth in the Church which he presented as grave.

A leader at the convention was the Rev. Theodore P. Ferris of Trinity, Boston, who preached at the convention service and also lead a conference of the clergy on preaching.

Adult Prejudices

Los Angeles, Calif.: — There is little intolerance and prejudice among youth of the United States, but young people are disturbed because too many adults still are discriminating between races, creeds and colors, according to "The Panel of Americans," a group of Los Angeles girls who returned here after a speaking tour of the country. They made their report at the annual conference of the University Religious Conference, with which they are affiliated and which for the last nineteen years has been active in combatting race and religious prejudice.

Bishop Larned Returns

Rome, Italy:—Bishop J. I. Blair Larned came here to explain the work done by the World Council's reconstruction department to the guild at St. Paul's Church. As a result the guild voted a part of the proceeds of their recent annual bazaar to the work. The guild also voted to make this an annual gift so long as the reconstruction program continues.

Bishop Larned, described in a release of the National Council's promotion department, as "Episcopal ambassador to the World Council's Reconstruction Department" arrives in the United States this week to give addresses on behalf of the Episcopal fund drive.

Important Test

Washington: — The Rev. Richard Morford, Presbyterian, who was formerly the director of the United Christian Council for Democracy and is now director of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, was one of twenty whose cases on contempt of Congress opened May 9th in the U. S. district court for the District of Columbia. The initial round in a case which will probably last all summer was arguments on motions to dismiss the indictments. Mr. Morford and Mr. George Marshall, also of the same organization, are represented by a member of the law firm of Dean Acheson, former under secretary of state. Eighteen members of the Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee, are represented by O. John Rogge, former assistant attorney general of the United States.

All of them were cited for contempt of Congress for having refused to produce all books and records of their organizations when called upon to do so by the Committee on Un-American Activities, which is dominated by Congressman John Rankin of Mississippi. Included in the group is Miss Helen Bryan, secretary of the Anti-Fascist group who was formerly on the staff of the international YWCA.

The lawyers on May 9th presented a number of arguments why the cases should be dismissed. It was argued that neither Congress nor the committee has ever defined the meaning of the word "Un-American" and that within these bodies there is not only vagueness as to its definition, but disagreement as well as unwillingness to agree on any definition. It will be shown that the committee has applied the term "Un-American" to any and every political and social doctrine or measure it happened to oppose or to any person or organization supporting such views, ranging from the New Deal, OPA, opposition to Franco Spain, foreign relief, etc., to Wallace, an army pamphlet on how to spot a fascist, and a whole variety of political and progressive organizations in many fields.

Women on Vestries

St. Johnsbury, Vt.:—The convention of the diocese of Vermont votes to permit women to serve on vestries but postponed action for a year on a resolution permitting them to be delegates to the convention. Governor Ernest W. Gibson was elected to the standing committee.

New York Auxiliary

New York: — Presiding Bishop Sherrill told the 500 women attending the annual meeting of the Auxiliary of New York, meeting May 6, that most people fail to realize the seriousness of the times and that the great majority of Church people only play at being Christians. He deplored the fact that the Episcopal Church is so largely an eastern Church and an urban one. Our only hope, he declared, is to get the enthusiasm of the people so that they will lose themselves in a great missionary cause.

The newly elected officers were installed by Bishop Gilbert at a service at the Cathedral.

Elect New President

Raleigh, N. C.:—Dr. Harold L. Trigg of Atlanta, associate executive director of the Southern Regional Council, has accepted the presidency of St. Augustine's College. The announcement was made by Bishop Penick, chairman of the board of trustees. The new president's wide experience as an educational administrator was obtained as principal of the Berry O'Kelly Country Training School, Method, N. C., and the Columbian Heights Schools, Winston-Salem. From 1928-1939 he served as supervisor of the Negro high schools of North Carolina under the state department of public instruction. He gave up this position to become president of the State Teachers College, Elizabeth City, where he served for six years.

He will be the first Negro to become the president of St. Augustine's since it was organized in 1867. He will succeed the Rev. Edgar H. Goold who has been president for the past thirty-five years.

Regional Congress

Spartanburg, S. C.: — Representatives of five dioceses attended a regional Church Congress held here at the Advent. The papers were read by Prof. C. Sturges Ball, formerly of the Virginia Seminary and Rev. Albert R. Stuart of Charleston, S. C. Another congress will be held in the fall at the Holy Comforter, Charlotte, N. C.
