Cambridge:—Students and faculty members of the Episcopal Theological School here, meeting as the St. John Society, passed a resolution at a meeting on May 12 calling upon the National Council to delay raising $1,200,000 for the radio-movie-ad campaign of evangelism (WITNESS, May 1) "at least until the goal set for the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief has been reached and until there has been full opportunity to acquaint the entire membership of the Protestant Episcopal Church with the proposed program and to discover the general opinion with regard to its advisibility."

Another resolution condemned racial discrimination in seminaries as a compromising of "certain fundamental truths of Christian belief and therefore requires decisive action by the Church to break the pattern of racialism."

Factory Chaplains

New York:—Bishop John W. C. Wand of London, now visiting here, says that one of the most remarkable results of the evangelical campaigns which just closed in England was the large number of factories now seeking permanent chaplains. He said that applications have been received from 250 industrial plants. He also declared that the Churches in England are showing an increasing social consciousness.

World Council

New York:—Protestant Churches in the United States have been allotted 75 seats for the first assembly of the World Council of Churches which will meet in Amsterdam, August 22 - September 5, 1948. Canadian Churches will have 15 seats. The recommendation has been made that the delegations be evenly divided between clergy and laity and stress is laid on the fact that "laity" means either man or woman.

Parish Mergers

London (wireless to RNS):—The clergy shortage calls for drastic mergers of parishes the Archbishop of York stated in his last diocesan bulletin. "Many parishes," he wrote, "could be worked in the future from a common center and possibly the smaller deaneries might be grouped around a mother church. In the towns more parishes would be worked from a clergy house. In addition I hope there will be communities of itinerant mission priests not attached to any single parish who would supplement the work of the resident parish priest, and who would undertake special teaching and evangelistic work."

Buchmanism Condemned

Grand Rapids, Mich.: — Charges of "a false religion" and "a serious challenge to the Christian Church" were leveled at the Moral Rearmament (Buchmanism) movement by leaders of the diocese of Western Michigan. Dean H. Ralph Higgins made a study of the movement at the request of Bishop Whittemore "because of so many requests" from residents of this city which has been the headquarters for some weeks of a task force of 150 members of the movement, headed by H. K. Twitchell of Montreal. The study was issued as a pamphlet and "points out questionable techniques and truly absurd claims" by the movement.

"Because of the basic incompatibilities between MRA and the doctrine, discipline and worship of the historic Church, members of MRA should not be allowed to carry their organizing propaganda into parish life," Dean Higgins asserted.

"In all MRA literature and plays," says the dean, "there is an extraordinary profusion of catch phrases which do not point to clear-cut solutions of the problems presented, but which do create a strong emotional bias in favor of 'let's all get together under the banner of MRA'."

He charged that MRA speaks "ceaselessly" of its converts, but says nothing of those who investigate and do not join or join and later quit the movement.

"One sees in the ideological structure of MRA, its 'new social order under the dictatorship of God,' the raw materials of what could become a highly dangerous and powerful threat to the very social virtues MRA professes to serve—individual liberty and democratic institutions. One wonders if the MRA leadership has pondered sufficiently the moral and spiritual implications of means and ends."

The answer "God provides" is not sufficient to the neutral inquirer who asks "Whence comes the cash?" the dean asserted. "Anonymous testimonials are never as satisfying as audited financial reports."

Dean Higgins also noted "the marked preference of MRA for people of publicity or promotional value. The MRA is little interested in the little fellow, although the movement is not necessarily after the money; the primary consideration seems to be the news value of the convert.

"To reply that the educated and cultured need salvation is true so far as it goes, but the movement's overweening interest in 'big names' is cause for questioning the fundamental soundness of an organization which once was so committed to primitive simplicity as to call itself the First Century Christian fellowship.

"For a member of the Christian church, MRA is to be criticized on the ground that its entire orientation is such that it tends to make the church member dissatisfied with the church and to offer in place of churchmanship a highly individualistic and selective type of piety that quite easily results in separating the churchman from his church."

Bishop Whittemore, in a foreword to the pamphlet, pointed out that "Moral Rearmament does not possess any secret or forgotten factor not known or used by the church which will transform the relations of labor, industry, family life, race relations, etc.

"The established churches of the world with all their faults are furnishing the real moral background and the motivation for good will and mutual respect which are necessary in all human relations.

"Without the blare of trumpets, the spotlight and high pressure propaganda, this saving work is still going on," the bishop concluded.

On the credit side, Dean Higgins said MRA offers a "real" religious experience, adding, "MRA comes to grips with the guilt, frustration and moral conflicts which bedevil an increasing number of people in our chaotic, complex society."

Criticism of the work of the Buchmanites has been widespread in the city because of its "high pressure methods" and "spiritual and financial vagueness."

Applied Christianity

Geneva (wireless to RNS):—Problems of applying Christianity to social, cultural and professional life were discussed here by 60 doctors, lawyers, artists, teachers and theologians at a week-end meeting sponsored by the Protestant study center. Speakers included Pastor Andre Bieler, who declared that a "humanistic Communism of a Christian type" may provide a solution for present-day economic problems. Pastor Jacques Senarclens, another speaker, expressed hope that the Geneva center may some day lead to the development of an international center of research on social-Christian relations for the Protestant world.

The meeting took place in a small village outside Geneva where a group of farmers, led by a local pastor, have launched an experiment in cooperative ownership. They aim to build a community in which "the will of God may be expressed in all phases of life."

Joint Action

Chicago (RNS): — The Church Federation of Greater Chicago, representing 1,200 church with 400,000 members, has begun a large-scale write-in campaign designed to raise the standards of Illinois state mental institutions currently under fire from medical and social service organizations.

It is the second such drive undertaken by the Federation. Last spring it conducted a campaign against the Chicago school board which was partly responsible for a shake-up in which several members of the board resigned.

The Federation, in letters to ministers of member churches, asked that they urge their congregations to write to Governor Dwight Green demanding that conditions in mental institutions be improved immediately.

It also called a meeting of ministers to hear representatives of the National Committee for Mental Hygiene and Bernard Clausen, pastor of the Euclid Avenue Baptist church, Cleveland, tell how to arouse public opinion about the conditions of state homes for the insane. Clausen was a leader in a similar campaign to improve conditions in Ohio mental hospitals.

Drive Opposed

London (wireless to RNS):—A projected government drive to encourage married women to return to factories has been protested here by the Industrial Christian Fellowship, an organization of Anglican clergymen and business leaders formed to promote Christian ideals in social and industrial life.

Declaring that increased industrial production should be promoted in other ways, the Fellowship added, "The welfare of the nation depends upon the stability of the home, and the unemployment of married women is one of the factors undermining the structure of the home."

Ideals Needed

London (wireless to RNS):—Importance of "moral, ethical and religious ideals" in Britain's economic recovery was stressed by Sir Stafford Cripps, president of the Board of Trade and a noted Anglican, in an address before business men last week.

"Do not let us be afraid," Sir Stafford urged, "of bringing the force of moral, ethical and religious ideals to bear on every day life. As soon as we realize that straight dealing, sympathetic understanding of mutual difficulties and high moral standards are an essential part of the cooperation which alone can lead to increased industrial production, we shall appreciate that religious and ethical standards have a direct bearing on the solution of economic difficulties.

To Ordain Woman

Montreal:—For the first time in this country a Protestant church body has recommended a married woman for ordination to the ministry. The Montreal Presbytery of the United Church of Canada, one year after the question first came before them, voted that Mrs. Margaret Butler should be ordained by the Montreal and Ottawa conference of the Church meeting here next month. It is expected that before the recommendation is acted upon the whole question of whether a married woman can be an ordained minister will again be thrashed out, this time by five presbyteries.

Mrs. Butler graduated with her husband, A. Melvin Butler, from the United Theological College here last spring. He was ordained to the ministry but she was only licensed to preach. When her application for ordination came before the Montreal Presbytery it was passed on to the General Assembly who last September ruled that the Presbytery should have come to some decision in the first place.

Hit Federal Aid

Milwaukee, Wis. (RNS):—More than 1,500 Protestant ministers in Wisconsin have been urged to oppose bills now before Congress which would include parochial schools in the federal-aid-to-education program. The letter went out under the signature of Ellis H. Dana, vice president of the state's council of churches. He said such aid is "aimed at breaking down separation of Church and state."

Church-State

St. Louis (RNS):—The Rev. Louie D. Newton of Atlanta, who was re-elected president of the Southern Baptists at their convention here, asserted that the United States is "confronted by the most determined and adroit campaign" to undermine the complete separation of Church and state. He denounced as "an ominous decision" the recent Supreme Court ruling allowing New Jersey to remunerate parents for carfare paid by their children in going to parochial schools.

"This decision," he said, "casts a shadow, now no bigger than a man's hand, but portending a cloud that may be drifting out over every hamlet and dale from Plymouth Rock to the Golden Gate to darken the torch of religious liberty in our beloved land."

Dr. Newton described as "unauthorized, unfortunate and dangerous" the action of the late President Roosevelt in naming Mr. Taylor as his representative to the Pope, and said President Truman had promised that the appointment would be terminated not later than the signing of the peace treaties. However, he added, treaties relating to countries adjacent to Italy have been signed without bringing an end of the appointment.

Church in Hungary

Budapest (wireless to RNS):—Formation of a Hungarian Council of Churches, modeled after similar organizations in other countries, was approved here at a two-day meeting of the synod of the Hungarian Reformed Church. It was announced that the council will be set up "as soon as the international atmosphere is quieter." The synod adopted a resolution "to uphold spiritual brotherhood" with Hungarian Protestants "ousted and dispersed" from their homes under the terms of the Hungarian peace treaty and now being resettled in other countries, including the United States.

Gradual separation of Church and state by bringing about an end to state subsidies, was approved in another resolution which called for a new system of Church membership which would abolish the present custom of enrolling members at birth.

Russians Get Property

Jerusalem (wireless to RNS):—Reliable sources disclosed here that an agreement has been reached between the Palestine government and the Soviet Union for transfer of church property formerly controlled by the Czarist government to the Russian Orthodox Church. The agreement climaxes negotiations initiated with the British authorities last November by Metropolitan Gregorii of Leningrad, first high-ranking Russian churchman to visit Jerusalem since the tour of Patriarch Alexei after his enthronement in 1945.

The property in question—said to be worth about $4,000,000—was held by the Czarist government prior to the Russian Revolution of 1917, but subsequently remained in the possession of local Orthodox leaders who have refused to recognize the jurisdiction of the Moscow Patriarchate outside Russia.

An official of the Soviet legation in Beirut, Lebanon, is now in Jerusalem, presumably to arrange details of the property transfer.

Clergy Seminar

Shrine Mont, Va.:—The seminar for clergy held here annually will meet this year July 14-25, with Bishop H. St. George Tucker heading the faculty. Others giving courses are Bishop Powell of Maryland; Canon George J. Cleaveland of Washington Cathedral; the Rev. William H. Dunphy of Philadelphia; the Rev. Hunter Yen of China; the Rev. S. R. Davenport of Oak Ridge, Tenn.; the Rev. Churchill J. Gibson of Richmond, Va. The chaplain and director will be the Rev. Edmund L. Woodward.

Urges Use of Press

Madison, Wis. (RNS):—Pastors and laymen must abandon the idea that the newspaper is primarily a means of publicizing individual church functions, according to James O. Supple, religion editor of the Chicago Sun. He said church leaders must exploit the press as a method of bringing to the unchurched, the skeptical and the indifferent "the relevancy of the Christian gospel to the problems of this chaotic era."

Supple was one of the principal lecturers at the first annual pastors conference held at the University of Wisconsin here in cooperation with the Wisconsin Council of Churches.

He said churchmen must "regard the press as a vast pulpit of black ink on white paper reaching an audience far greater than that of a multitude of churches, an audience that can never be reached in the church because to the church it never goes."

Clergymen can cooperate with newspaper editors to make the Christian gospel actual news, Supple argued, if they make available the record of "what Christianity is doing to solve the problems of the socio-economic order."

He declared that churches have been responsible in part, and newspapers in part, for inadequate, sporadic and insignificant coverage of church affairs in the past.

But he added that the prospect of church news has changed "with the emergence of the social gospel in the past few decades, with the growing conviction of the clergy that Christianity must come down from its ivory tower in a monopolistically capitalistic society and enter the marketplace."

Bus Service

Philadelphia (RNS): — The state supreme court of Pennsylvania has upheld the directors of the Kennett Consolidated School, in nearby Chester County, who have refused to provide bus transportation for parochial school students. This decision of the state's highest tribunal upholds a previous verdict of the lower court of Chester County, which maintained the Pennsylvania school code does not require provision of transportation except for public school students.

Leftists Win

Jerusalem (wireless to RNS):— Leftists will have a deciding voice in the selection of a new Greek Orthodox Archbishop of Cyprus, according to the results of a ballot of 100,000 voters who named representatives to take part in the forthcoming ecclesiastical election. Leftist leaders said their representatives will recommend the election of Metropolitan Leonidios, former locum tenens of the Cyprus archbishopric, despite rumors he has already promised the Ecumenical Patriarch at Istanbul he will not accept the nomination.

Metropolitan Leonidios, who is said to have strong leftist leanings, recently resigned because of a dispute with British authorities over the question of uniting Cyprus and Greece, and announced he would retire to a monastery.

VIRGINIA SUMMEY
Churchwoman of New York

A news item in THE WITNESS records, oddly to me, that two churches in Alabama condemn the Federal Council of Churches as being "communistic" because the industrial relations division "campaigns for labor organizations and actually campaigned for pro-labor legislation on a national scale." Why does this make the Federal Council "communistic"? Is it not so that most churches, including our own, have declared themselves to be for collective bargaining and for the support of labor through legislation?

THE REV. J. J. D. HALL
Open Air Evangelist of New York

I read THE WITNESS with interest to see what is going on. When will the bishops and clergy come to realize that the same thing is needed now that was needed just before Pentecost—the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. Peter was surely a member in good standing, as well as other Apostles, but they did not have the power they needed to smash the world. They did not seek to have conferences with plenty of eats to discuss their need but went to prayer until something happened to them and then they were able to turn Jerusalem upside down. Note that they did not get their power from any college or seminary courses in psychology but from heaven. We have all the machinery we need but no power. I think the Church needs to go to the filling station where this power is found.

I wish you would give us an article on the Church's greatest need—fire from heaven such as Wesley and Whitefield have to give to England—nay to the world. Too many clerics are depending on their degrees and head knowledge instead of what is in the heart.

THE REV. GEORGE A. WILSON
Rector at Fairfield, Connecticut

This business of clergy placement always has been one of the Church's greatest problems. I too have read of clergy shortages and have known able men who couldn't find a church. I know also that the Church papers have long offered their services as clearing houses. Still the jobs and the priests to fill them never seem to catch up with each other.

MR. J. E. FLYNN
Layman of Hollywood, California

Articles and news of "The Clergy Shortage" fill me with foreboding as I have a vivid recollection of a "shortage" some 30-40 years ago, with bishops writing letters to the Church papers calling for help. But when clergy I knew to be competent wrote to offer help, or saw some pleading bishop, nothing was available and in some instances letters remained unanswered!

On the basis of Dean Taylor's figures there ought to be a shortage, but I doubt if many missions need to be closed or vacant parishes be in difficulty, with perhaps 400-500 disability and age-pensioned men who would be quite equal to helping out, and who would be delighted at the opportunity to add to hopelessly inadequate pensions by devoting a few extra months to the loved lifework. Actually it is appalling to note the indifference shown by bishops and rectors towards such men. I myself know of several rectors taking extended vacations, but instead of calling on these pensioned men who are capable, engage some man in active service who ought to be in permanent work.

But I wonder whether the shortage really is of men or money (due in part to excessive salaries paid to some bishops and rectors). We don't want to see another unemployment scandal.

May I suggest the urgent need for a national Church fund to bring up the pensions of married men at least to $100, not excepting those now penalized by a poverty which caused delinquent assessments, who should receive help first and especially any on disability.

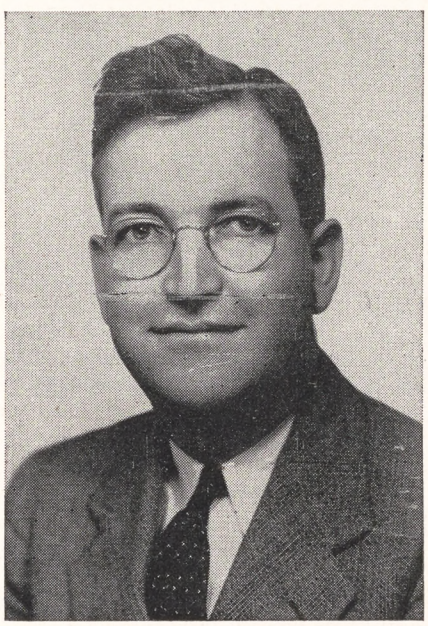
Department on Economic Life Set-up by Council

As a Result of the Pittsburgh Conference Federal Council Sees Need of Expanded Work

By W. B. Spofford



New York:—During the closing minutes of the national study conference on the Church and Economic Life, held last February in Pittsburgh, the final action which went into the record was a resolution requesting the Federal Council of Churches to establish an appropriate commission or department to continue the work that was begun so successfully at Pittsburgh. At the March meeting of the Council's executive committee this step was taken, with the industrial relations division of the department of Christian social relations being expanded into a full department, to be known as the department of the Church and economic life.

The Rev. Cameron P. Hall, who has been associated for the past year with the Rev. James Myers in the administration of the industrial relations division, becomes executive secretary, with Mr. Myers becoming emeritus executive secretary of the new department. Members of the department, not yet selected, will have at least a majority of laymen, and will, like the membership of the delegation to the Pittsburgh conference, include Church men and women from management and labor, from consumer and farm groups and from other important fields, together with ministers.

The Pittsburgh study conference which was held under the auspices of the Federal Council focused attention on the post-war problems in this field, and the organization of the new department comes as recognition of the importance of economic life to human welfare and to religious and social progress, Mr. Hall commented.

This new department will assume and carry on "all the functions, responsibilities, program and staff" of the old industrial division, including the committee on the Church and cooperatives. The new status of the entire program will give this department greater scope and opportunity to lead the Churches in a major advance in this area of work.

Plans are under consideration for a series of regional "little Pittsburgh conferences" sponsored by state and local councils of Churches with the cooperation of the Federal Council.

The Rev. Cameron Hall is the executive secretary of the new department of the Federal Council

There will also be a series of one day institutes for the training of laymen and ministers in methods of education and action in the field of economic life.

The department will also carry on the previous activities of the industrial division, including Labor Sunday messages and public statements on specific economic problems; information to the Churches on labor and social legislation; the publication of pamphlets and literature in the field of the Church and economic problems and the religious significance of these problems; cooperation with national Roman Catholic and Jewish groups; investigation of industrial problems, including conflict situations and also studies of constructive union-management cooperation; techniques for churchmen in economic education and action; conferences on specific economic problems such as consumers' cooperatives, labor management relations.

As Dr. George W. Richards pointed out at the recent meeting of the executive committee when the new department was authorized, the Federal Council has pioneered in the application of religion to social issues for nearly forty years. Dr. Richards was himself present at the first meeting of the Federal Council in 1908 at which time the "Social Ideals of the Churches" was adopted. The social service department under Dr. Worth M. Tippy, now the emeritus secretary, was the first department of the Federal Council of Churches, and 22 years ago Dr. Tippy secured James Myers to start the industrial relations division of the department, which has carried on a vigorous program ever since. Later the department of the Church and social service became the department of Christian social relations, the industrial relations division remaining as a part of its structure until its recent change to the status of the department of the Church and economic life.

In 1937 the widespread interest among Church people in the ethical implications of cooperatives led to setting up the committee on the Church and cooperatives in the industrial relations division. This committee has conducted conferences, study tours, and issued literature in the field of religion and cooperatives. Its work will be continued by the committee on the Church and cooperatives now located in the new department.

As Dr. Richards pointed out, the formation of the department of the Church and economic life is a fruition of years, and gives promise of an expanding program and still greater usefulness in the years that lie ahead.

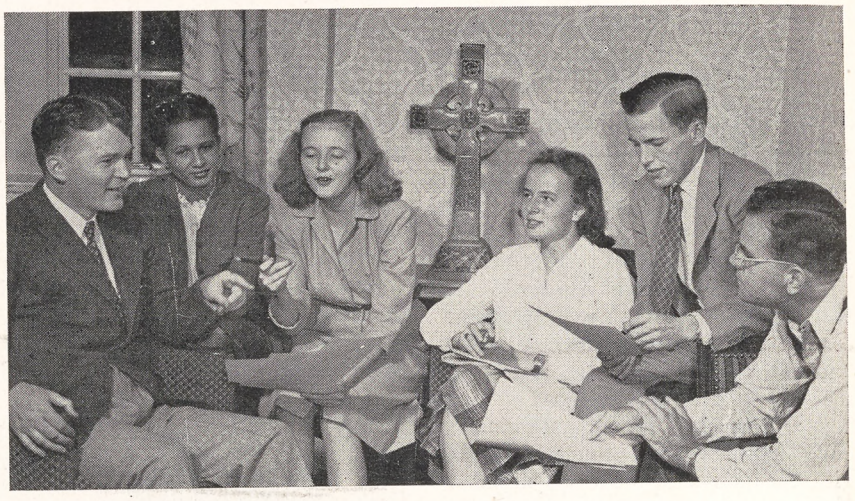
New York:—When the executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches meets, or any of the various committees of the Council for that matter, it brings together a notable group of Church women and men. Thus in the foreground of the cover picture there is the chief of navy chaplain, Admiral Thomas, and beside him Nolan B. Harmon of the Methodist Church, and beside him L. W. McCreary of the Disciples. In the second row, at the edge of the picture, is Charles H. Seever of the Congregational-Christian Church, and in the same row, with his eyes apparently closed, John R. Mott, Nobel Peace prize winner, who represents the international YMCA.

Under the wall picture, toward the back, is the Bishop of New York, the Rt. Rev. Charles K. Gilbert. Directly in front of him is Mrs. Henry Sloane Coffin, representing the Presbyterian Church, and in front of the window beside her, Eugene Barrett, the director of the YMCA. In front of Mrs. Coffin, reading, is William Barrow Pugh, the stated clerk of the Presbyterian Church.



Episcopalians who serve on the executive committee, in addition to Bishop Gilbert, are Bishop Sterrett of Bethlehem who is chairman, Mr. John M. Glenn of New York and the Rev. Charles L. Gomph of Newark. Alternates are Bishop Henry St. George Tucker, the Rev. Whitney Hale of Boston, the Rev. Louis W. Pitt of New York, the Rev. Almon R. Pepper of New York, and Bishop McKinstry of Delaware.

The president of the Council is Charles P. Taft of Cincinnati, an Episcopalian, and the treasurer is likewise an Episcopalian, Harper Sibley of Rochester, N. Y. Many other members of the Episcopal Church serve on various committees.

ELECTION DEADLOCK IN BUFFALO

Buffalo, N.Y.:—The convention of the diocese of Western New York failed to elect a bishop to succeed Bishop Davis who is to retire in September. Five ballots were taken, divided between Dean Edward Welles of Buffalo and the Rev. Charles Sheerin, rector of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., and the Rev. Joseph Groves, rector at Olean. The Rev. Louis W. Pitt, rector of Grace Church, New York, was also nominated, following a meeting between ballots, but this failed to break the deadlock. Also receiving votes were the Rev. Ernest V. Kennan, rector of Emmanuel, Baltimore, and the Rev. John Huess, rector of St. Matthew's Evanston, Illinois, who, along with Mr. Sheerin, had been recommended by a nominating committee. A special convention will be held in June to elect.

In the balloting Dean Welles was but three or four votes short of a majority on several ballots, and on the fourth ballot Mr. Pitt lacked just one clergy vote to be elected.

New York:—The western shoreline of Alaska—at one point less than 100 miles from Russian territory—has been transformed into an armed fortress. This disclosure was made here by the Rev. Mark A. Dawber, executive secretary of the Home Missions Council, who has just returned from a three-week air tour of Alaska.

While no one can be certain as to the purpose of such a transformation, Dr. Dawber told a meeting of the Council's executive committee, "everyone is suspicious and that suspicion is grounded in a growing fear of war with the U.S.S.R."

"All along the Alaskan coastline from Nome to Point Barrow," he declared, "there is evidence of military preparation. Huge concrete structures have been erected in rocky wasteland for air bases and military service."

Until this fear of war with Russia can be wiped out, Dr. Dawber warned, the picture of Alaska as a pioneer land ripe for settlement and for raising families must be heavily discounted.

Dr. Dawber severely censured army authorities for condoning the existence in Alaska of "the most deplorable vice conditions I have seen anywhere."

PROPOSED CAMPAIGN EXPLAINED

New York:—The Presiding Bishop issued a statement on May 26th about the proposed campaign of evangelism, because of apparent misunderstandings. He declared that "the financial aspect is a secondary consideration" with the National Council "interested primarily in the revitalization of the spiritual life of the Church." He states that the special board to supervise the radio-movie-ad program will have "the confidence of the Church" and he is sure they will see to it that the programs are not "divisive, boastful or even undignified" as some fear.

He also states that "no additional apportionment upon dioceses, parishes or individuals" will be made in raising the $1,200,000 needed for the program but that the opportunity will be presented and the money raised "will be used for this purpose as far as it will go and no commitments will or can be made beyond cash in hand. . . . There are to be no pressures involved. . . . If there are interested and generous Church people who believe that this plan has real possibilities, we shall be happy to make the experiment if the financial means are made available."

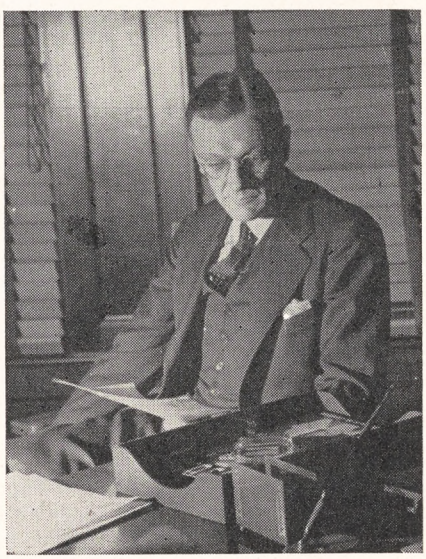
Federal Council's Commission On Health Expands

Established Ten Years Ago It Now Becomes The New Department of Pastoral Services

By John L. Fortson



New York:—One of the most rapidly developing fields of interest in the life of the Churches is that which is most easily described as the relationship of religion to health. And a measure of this growth may be found in the fact that in 1937 the Federal Council of Churches established a new activity—the commission on religion and health—with the Rev. Seward Hiltner as executive secretary to do pioneer educational work. And now, only ten years later, it has proved necessary to expand the organization of this work in order properly to encompass the many activities involved.

The organization of the department of pastoral services was completed this spring and will include the old commission on religion and health as a part of its total program. In the words of Mr. Hiltner: "The word pastoral may well be thought of in its original meaning of shepherding. This ancient healing and comforting function of the Churches is so important, yet so much taken for granted, that it needs to be lifted up once again.

"We of the department interpret the new status accorded our work by the Federal Council as strong evidence of increased general interest, and of renewed conviction that pastoral service to individuals requires work and study and concern, as well as art," Mr. Hiltner said. "We expect the new structure to open up new opportunities for us to help pastors help their people."

The department will itself concentrate on education for pastoral work and personal counseling, while the commission on religion and health, continuing as a part of the new department, will focus its attention on basic aspects of religion's relationship to health. Also under the general oversight of the department is the new commission on ministry in institutions. For more than ten years the commission on prison chaplains has nominated candidates for Protestant chaplaincy in federal penal and correctional institutions; while the commission on religion and health has studied. agreed about standards, and promoted more and better chaplaincy work in hospitals and other institutions. In the new commission on ministry in institutions these interests are brought together in an improved structure.

An important project of the new department is the study of religious ministry to older people, which was begun during the past year under a grant from the Arbuckle-Jamison Foundation. This project is being executed by two research associates, the Rev. J. Lennart Cedarleaf and the Rev. Paul B. Maves. The two-year study has a four-fold objective: 1—To analyze what is already known about older people; 2—To summarize what churches already are doing for older people; 3—To study methods of pastoral and personal ministry to older people; 4—Experimental group and action projects in relation to older people, out of which is expected to come suggestions on how local churches can help meet the needs of older people. Mr. Hiltner pointed out that "although it is impossible for any one study to do more than touch so vast a problem, it is hoped and expected that this Federal Council project will be able to define the field, give some practical guidance, and contribute a first major step in dealing with a question which will become more important in the future."

The Rev. Roswell Barnes is the associate General Secretary of the Federal Council of Churches

Some idea concerning the wide variety of activities now included in the new department of pastoral services may be obtained from the 1946 biennial report. Following are some of the high points of the present program:

Prepared a pamphlet for the department of evangelism applying the insights of psychology and personal counseling to the methods of home visitation evangelism — Cooperation with the University of Pennsylvania concerning its course on health and human relations to provide background education for ministers in the field of sex education and venereal disease—Last summer more than 175 ministers took special courses in clinical pastoral training, the largest number in any single summer—Sponsored with the I.C.R.E. an exploratory study of religious ministry in a mental deficiency institution—Began the significant new study on problems in connection with religious ministry to older people—Prepared literature on the problems of returning service men which was distributed to the extent of 300 thousand copies—Continued to advise on the religious aspects of the curriculum of the Yale School of Alcohol Studies, which was attended by 50 churchmen in 1945 and by 60 in 1946.

These are some of the activities of the commission on religion and health for the past two years, which indicate the extent to which the program has spread, in response to need, beyond the original plan adopted when the commission was organized in 1937.

To find the origin of the new department of pastoral services—we must go back to 1923, and to the insight and enthusiasm of a lay woman, Mrs. John Sherman Hoyt. It was she who brought together a group of physicians and ministers to consider the relations of religion and medicine. The result was the joint committee on religion and medicine, which the Federal Council's research department and the New York Academy of Medicine maintained until 1936.

In 1937 when the Federal Council formed the commission on religion and health, Rev. Howard Chandler Robbins was named as chairman and Edward H. Hume, M.D. as vice-chairman. The aims of the commission on religion and health, said Mr. Hiltner, were from the beginning "to show that health of body, mind and spirit is an essential concern of religion, to discover and demonstrate the distinctive place religion has in the restoration and maintenance of health, to aid in revitalizing the pastor's ministry to individuals, to promote closer working relationships of doctors and ministers, and to improve ministry in institutions."

The commission on religion and health has made large strides toward fulfilling its objectives. During the war it cooperated in the sponsorship of nearly two hundred seminars on personal counseling in camp communities in every state. Its pamphlet publications such as "The Ministry of Listening" and "A Road to Recovery" are being used by the thousands, even by many who are not ordinarily readers of religious literature. Its special two-year study of religious ministry to older people, initiated last fall, promises to break new ground in an increasingly important field. Cooperation with the Yale School of Alcohol Studies has made it possible for more than two hundred ministers to take advantage of that unique course of instruction in the scientific background of alcohol problems. These are but a few of the many activities developed over the past few years.

In November 1946 the American Journal of Public Health commented editorially, "We commend the work of the commission on religion and health to our readers. We should like to see a few health officers, who have surplus energy to lift their minds from daily routine, do something concrete to make medicine and the churches in their communities effective partners." It added, "Its work is of vital significance to the public health profession."

It became clear some months ago, added Mr. Hiltner, that while the commission must continue, the greatly increased scope of the work itself, in response to need and demand, suggested that a new structure was necessary to accomplish two purposes. The first was to recognize and demonstrate to the Churches the full scope of the program which is actually being carried on. The second was to free the commission to devote its major attention to those fundamental concerns which brought it into being, rather than permitting it to be distracted by the important immediate concerns which have now become the function of the department.

FEDERAL COUNCIL IN COLLEGES

New York:—A total of 18 university Christian missions were held during the academic year now closing, and plans are going forward now for a continuation of the series next year, according to Rev. Phillips P. Moulton, national director of the mission which is sponsored by the department of evangelism of the Federal Council of Churches and the United Student Christian Council.

The purpose of these campus missions is fourfold: to awaken interest in religion; to make clear what Christianity involves; to deal with intellectual problems regarding the faith; to win students to a fuller commitment to Jesus Christ. Among the speakers participating in the 1946-47 missions were two from abroad: Prof. Gonzalo Baez-Camargo of Mexico, and Rev. Bryan S. W. Green of England. Mr. Green is a member of the Archbishop of Canterbury's commission on evangelism and participated in five of the eight campus missions conducted this spring. He is rated as one of the finest ministers of London and is prominently identified with interdenominational work.

Although making no roseate prophecies about a revival of religion on the campus, the university Christian mission committee, of which the Rev. Arthur Lee Kinsolving is chairman, feels that the mission technique is finding the secret of evangelism on the campus. Almost without exception the leaders state that the impact of the campus work exceeds anything they have witnessed previously. The national committee summarizes the effectiveness of the program for the last year as follows:

Interest in Christianity is aroused in students who had previously seemed indifferent. In some state universities almost every student took part in at least one meeting. The missions are at least partially successful in "reaching the unreached."

A new conception of Christianity is imparted. Repeatedly undergraduates comment that they had never realized religion could be so vital. After a "bull session" finally broke up at 2:00 a.m., a student exclaimed, "This is a type of religion I can really get hold of!"

Students are often led to a more complete dedication to Christ. Many are influenced to enter church vocations.

Faculty members are frequently stimulated to give religion a more important place in their teaching and living. Leaders of intellectual stature bring a challenge they cannot ignore.

Campus religious organizations are strengthened. Church groups and Christian associations receive new life and direction. The basis is laid for closer cooperation among them.

Visiting team members become better acquainted with the needs of students and with methods of meeting those needs. Their own work with young people is made more effective.

The National Conference of Young Churchmen which met in Lakeside, Ohio, under Federal Council auspices, brought together many leaders in colleges. Back row, l. to r.: Fred A. What's Wrong With Alabama?

FOR many years prior to the General Convention of 1940 the Episcopal Church was an active consultative member of the Federal Council of Churches. Since 1940 at the Kansas City Convention when our Church became a constituent member that activity has increased. In the space of four years two prominent Episcopalians, one a bishop and the other a layman, have served as president of the Council: former Presiding Bishop St. George Tucker and the present president, Mr. Charles P. Taft. In addition the General Convention of 1943 and 1946 increased our Church's contribution to the Council. Further a good number of both clergy and laity serve voluntarily on various boards and commissions. This support has come not from one party in the Church, but from both the liberal Evangelical group and the Anglo Catholic group. Witness to this is evidenced by the fact that at the Philadelphia Convention, the Bishop of a definite Anglo Catholic diocese presented a resolution in the House of Bishops commending the work of the Federal Council. The resolution was unanimously adopted. What all this adds up to is—The Episcopal Church has from the beginning been interested in the Federal Council. Now as one of its constituent members, it is through its representatives and by its financial support actively engaged in the work of the Council. This has all been brought about through a democratic process of action by our highest legislative body.

Therefore we ask what's the matter with the diocese of Alabama? This is no idle question. That splendid diocese, whose Bishop serves on the National Council and is on General Convention's joint commission on social reconstruction, at its January Convention passed a resolution charging the Federal Council with failure to stand back of its published pronouncements. One section of the resolution as adopted reads as follows:

"That the said Federal Council henceforth unequivocably assume complete responsibility for all writings and pronouncements distributed by it of all persons who are or who have been members of said staff."

Would the brethren of Alabama have the Federal Council's executive committee, in addition to its already existent editorial committee, set up a board of censorship over its staff and people of special competence who are asked to write for the Council and have this censorship board limit freedom of individual expression? We cannot believe it was the intention of the mover of this resolution and those who voted for it to go this far. However, the logical outcome of the adoption of such resolution would be just that.

Like most other organizations who publish papers, the Federal Council does print on the masthead of its Information Service this sentence "Articles appearing herein furnish information on current issues and are not to be construed as declarations of official attitudes or policies of the Federal Council of Churches." We note that the National Association of Manufacturers in a news sheet published by them entitled, Understanding, in its current issue had a review of a new publication sponsored by the N.A.M. and entitled "America's Individual Enterprise System." In the course of review of this book we found this sentence, "the author makes it clear, however, that they are expressing their own views not necessarily those of the N.A.M."

The answer to the resolution from the diocese of Alabama is that the Federal Council of Churches does assume full responsibility for all of its official pronouncements when they are adopted by the Council in biennial meetings or special sessions or by its executive committee empowered to act in the interim between the meetings of the Council as a whole. This does not prevent the Federal Council from publishing either in Information

"QUOTES"

WE HAVE BEEN glad and thankful to note the increasing demonstration of cooperation by the Episcopal Church with other Christian bodies through the Federal Council of Churches. We must seek to enlarge those areas of cooperation for the salvation of the world. The cause and need are so great that a divided Church, or separated Churches in isolation, cannot meet them. At a time when the world is numerically and thus actually becoming pagan faster than we realize, there is more than enough for all of us to do without criticizing one another. Thank God the Churches are increasingly working together and are tearing down the walls of partition between them. Let them cease entirely their attacks upon one another for the sake of a united front against the forces of disintegration. Thus in God's good time there will emerge a united Church which is pleasing in the heart of God.

Service or the Federal Council Bulletin statements from the staff or from any of its constituent members in the denominations, or from competent people without its ranks who have points of view that would be valuable in aiding the membership of the Federal Council to form judgments respecting vital, even though controversial issues.

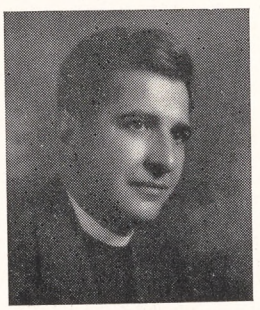
Would Alabama have a censorship set up over the secretaries at 281? We notice that in the new Parish Helps for 1947-48 sent out by the National Council that a good many listings of material given are not written by Episcopalians, in fact they list quite a number of pamphlets and brochures published by the Federal Council of Churches.

Come on Alabama and Churchmen elsewhere who are afraid of cooperative statements issued by the communions comprising the Federal Council, are you afraid of democracy particularly when it is backed by honest attempts at undergirding that democracy with Christian principles?

We are bold to believe that this resolution from the diocese of Alabama is indicative of deeper prejudices. Tragically there are Christians who wish the Church to become a private society that will offer them a way of escape from their social responsibilities as members of a vast human society. Thank God the Holy Spirit has raised up outstanding leaders in our own generation who have been fearless in their approach in attempting to make all of us see our social responsibility. We quote from two such leaders. The first, the late Archbishop of Canterbury, William Temple, in an address before the bank officers guild in London on February 4, 1943 and published in a little booklet entitled The Church Looks Forward, has this to say: "Having got the main standards of value set in that way, I want to justify, if I can, in a very brief outline sketch, my claim that Christianity has quite steadily had a social witness to give. Of course, it starts from the very first days. It is not that they inaugurated any political movement; the first Christians found themselves knit together in so close a fellowship, through the complete supremacy of their faith over their life, that they became an illustration of voluntary communism."

The second is a quotation from Bishop Angus Dun's article in Christianity Takes a Stand under the heading "The Social Responsibility of the Church," in which he says, "We have no one to serve but God, nothing to do but serve God." But, "There is no service of God that is not a service of men." . . . "The Church cannot withdraw into a corner to deal with a private specialty called religion, and leave vast areas of human life outside its concern. As a matter of fact, whenever men are thoroughly convinced that high human values are involved in any cause, they want the Church to show its hand. We rejoiced, didn't we, when we heard that the Church in Norway or in Germany stood up against Nazi tyranny? Wasn't that politics?"

Surely our brethren in Alabama would at least be sympathetic to the views expressed by these two great religious leaders. They cannot be so blind as to say that the Church has no responsibility in attempting to bring about better understanding between management and labor, between all religious groups and between all racial groups. There is a Christian approach that we all believe will help us resolve some of the differences that exist between the groups named and some of us believe by honest conviction that there is no other agency than the Christian Church to perform the task.



We turn back to the question which heads this editorial "What's the matter with the diocese of Alabama?" We answer—there is nothing wrong except they need a little more courage to carry out their inner basic Christian convictions. This may be said with equal force of Christians everywhere. What are we waiting for? We glibly say we believe in the application of Christian principles to our economic, political and social life. Then let's apply them. The Federal Council is attempting to help cooperative Protestants to be articulate in the fields of social justice and wherever basic human rights are in jeopardy to speak boldly, yet humbly through the spirit of the living Christ.

A Word With You

HUGH D. McCANDLESS

"GLORY"

FROM time to time this column will deal with the meanings of certain words often bandied about Church circles. People will seize a word by the ankles and belabor an opponent with it; sometimes the opponent is crushed, but more frequently the word takes the major part of the punishment.

The title of the column will, I hope, indicate my irenic purpose. It also shows the care one must use. If I am having a word with you, it simply means a brief chat. If I were having words with you, it would mean we both were shouting.

To my mind, the absolute master of words was Lewis Carroll's Humpty Dumpty. ("When I use a word, it means just what I choose it to mean—neither more nor less.") I had thought of calling this series "glory," which he defines as meaning "there's a nice knock-down argument for you," and ending it with the single word "impenetrability," which means "we've had enough of that subject and it would be just as well if you'd mention what you mean to do next, as I suppose you don't mean to stop here all the rest of your life."

The editors of THE WITNESS have no idea how many of its readers are interested in this form of word lore, so suggestions or questions from the word-lorn will be gratefully received at 1393 York Avenue, New York 21.

Federal Council of Churches

by Frank W. Sterrett
The Bishop of Bethlehem

WHILE the Episcopal Church has for many years been represented on certain commissions, it was at the General Convention of 1940 that action was taken bringing us into regular membership. The main points of its purpose and procedure are given clearly and briefly in a recent statement published by the Federal Council of Churches.

The Council is the accredited agency through which twenty-five national denominations, comprising 142,354 local congregations with a total communicant membership of 27,749,967, cooperate in common tasks. It is the central instrument through which these otherwise separated bodies are brought into a united witness to their central Christian convictions and united service in undertakings that can be carried out better together than separately.

The Council has been strengthened by more than three decades of testing since it was created in 1908. It has steadily grown in influence and effectiveness. Today it holds a unique place as the greatest movement of Christian unity in our national life.

The Council is the direct creation of the Churches themselves. It has a carefully drawn constitution, officially ratified by the highest authority of the Churches that comprise its membership.

The objectives of the Council, as defined in its constitution are: 1. To express the fellowship and catholic unity of the Christian Church. 2. To bring the Christian bodies of America into united service for Christ and the world. 3. To encourage devotional fellowship and mutual counsel concerning the spiritual life and religious activities of the Churches. 4. To secure a larger combined influence for the Churches in all matters affecting the moral and social condition of the people, so as to promote the application of the law of Christ in every relation of human life."

All Churches which share the basic faith in Jesus Christ as "Divine Lord and Saviour" are eligible to membership. Into the details of doctrine the Council does not enter, its function being practical rather than theoretical. It has no separate creed of its own but stands firmly upon the great historic confessions of faith of the bodies which comprise it.

Although until a few years ago the Council included only Protestant bodies, it is organized on a basis broad enough to welcome all branches of historical Christianity—whether Protestant or Catholic—which are committed to the ideal of fellowship and the practice of cooperation with other Churches. Since 1938 three Eastern Orthodox bodies have been received into membership.

As the Council was officially created by the Churches, so also is it wholly responsible to them. Organized on a strictly representative principle, it is governed by approximately 400 delegated representatives, all named directly by the constituent communions. These representatives, in their biennial meetings, constitute a central board of interdenominational strategy, developing a common mind, planning united policies and providing for concerted action. In the interim, an executive committee, made up of 85 members, all of whom also directly represent the cooperating Churches, meets bi-monthly for the supervision of all the Council's work (see cover picture).

The genius of the Council is to foster a united spiritual fellowship which will express itself in many lines of united action. It has no legislative authority over the denominations and is in no sense a super-organization but through its representative character and its democratic processes it federates the Churches themselves and coordinates their programs. It conserves freedom and diversity, with no thought of dictation or enforced uniformity, at the same time that it secures a needed unity in action.

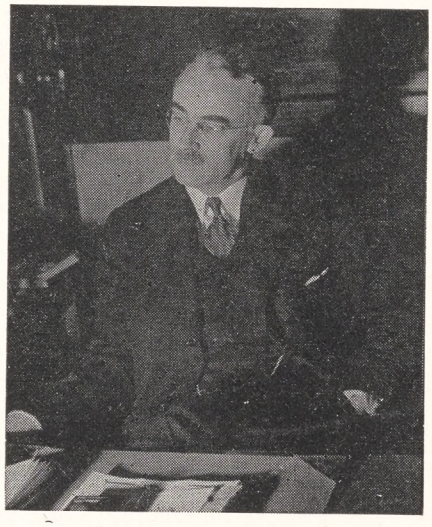
DURING the years in which the national denominations have been drawing together in the Federal Council, a similar process has been at work in local communities, and the furthering of this development is one of the most important responsibilities of the Federal Council. There are now more than 500 city and county Councils of Churches, created by the Christian groups of their own communities, responsible for cooperative efforts there. In 35 states there are statewide Councils of Churches providing leadership for a united Christian program throughout their areas.

At the time when our Church became a constituent member, the world war had been in operation more than a year and the leaders of the Council realized that there would be an ever-increasing need for sustaining united service of the Churches. Many have reason to be grateful for the helpful leadership of war-time commissions. We have highest praise for the executive staff and recognize the vital service of the regular commissions.

During the war years the overwhelming majority of the representatives of the Churches staunchly upheld our country's effort, together with the other United Nations, to check and punish aggression and to preserve freedom. These were days when we all had strong convictions and felt that we had to stand by them. But the readiness of these neighbors to work together in mutual considerateness of divergent views provided an example of constructive united support of a great cause while maintaining respect for minorities that promises well for the future. This has always been in evidence with regard to our own communion. It is recognized that included in the Council's membership are those who, while united in common loyalty to our Lord, differ as to main emphases of the Church's witness.

We believe in this great enterprise and feel sure it has great promise. We are all eager to see definite steps in the direction of organic unity, believing it to be God's will and realizing what it can mean in the greater power for good of a united Church. But this, if it is to be sound, will take time. Here in the Federal Council is ground on which, regardless of difference in emphasis, we all stand and work together. In the understanding that we know from experience surely grows from such fellowship, we believe it will be possible for us to work intelligently for the deeper unity of the Church.

As we, working with the representatives of other communions, strive to make our common witness and service effective, we hope you will sense the difficulty and complexity of the problems we must face, the occasions when, humbly conscious of our limitations, we will find it hard to know what is wise and sometimes to know what is Christian. We know that we in the Federal Council constituency are in no sense a super-Church, that in matters of doctrine the constituent Churches must speak for themselves. We are aware that to use the Federal Council to further partisan politics, or a particular economic or social program, on which sincere Christians widely differ, would be to abuse our trust. Yet we know there are vast areas of life in which it is clearly our duty to speak with courage and clearness in support of what we believe to be Christian principles and where the Churches, witnessing together, can exert an influence far greater than that of any one communion.



When you hear from time to time that the Council has taken a certain stand, we hope you will bear in mind that the Council speaks officially only through action of the biennial meeting or through its executive committee. Reports of committees, commissions or individuals are frequently published for study as the expression of the opinion of those individuals or groups (see Editorial). Obviously there are many occasions on which they would not express the views of the Council itself. If information is desired concerning any action, its standing or its purpose, the chairman of your delegation will be glad to give the information to the best of his ability, and your representatives will always welcome advice.

Meaning of the Federal Council

by Samuel McCrea Cavert

General Secretary of the Council

IF I were asked to summarize the significance of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America,—as I see it in the light of twenty-five years of continuous association with it,—I would do so in the following seven points:

The genius of the Council is to manifest to the world a unity among Christians that really exists. The Council is not so much an effort to create unity as to express a spiritual reality that is already ours. It has come into existence not because of our attempt to make separated Christian peoples into one but because of our realization that we are one in our relation to Christ and in our central convictions as to Christian truth.

For, with due recognition of all the differences between us—differences which are serious and not to be glossed over or minimized—there is an underlying oneness arising from the fact that we all share a common faith: in God and his forgiving love, in Christ and his redeeming power, in the Holy Spirit and his creative work in the community of the faithful. The Federal Council is our common effort to express this core of our common faith through a common fellowship in a common witness and in common action at those points where real agreement is found.

The Council is not an association of diverse and heterogeneous faiths but a fellowship of Churches which all confess Jesus Christ as "Divine Lord and Savior." Its constitution declares that the Council "has no authority to draw up a common creed," but is explicit at the point of saying that the Churches which comprise the Council's membership cling to the heart of the historic evangelical faith. On the crucial point that God has become incarnate in Christ they leave no room for question. They stand within "the goodly fellowship of saints, apostles, prophets, martyrs" in testifying that in Christ, God has entered into the world for man's redemption.

So the Council is not to be thought of as simply a federation for "good works" and useful activities. It is that, but it is much more. It is a form of Christian witness as well as of Christian service. Beneath all its programs lies the basic principle that when the Churches act together they do so because they really belong together in allegiance to one Divine Lord and Savior.

The Federal Council represents a common Protestant front in support of the priceless heritage that comes from the Reformation. This does not mean that it takes a negative or "anti" position toward any other group of Christians. It does mean that Protestants (as the literal meaning of the Latin pro-testari implies) have something to testify for, and intend to bear that testimony before the world in the most united manner possible. We testify to the world that Protestantism in all its forms represented in this Council is in agreement on such cardinal points as the directness of man's relation with God, the Scriptures as the decisive norm of spiritual authority, the universal priesthood of believers, religious liberty, and the potential sanctity of the common life and labor.

These points make it clear that Protestantism is the guardian of the principle of Christian individuality in the modern world. The emergence of the ecumenical movement is a dynamic witness to the fact that Protestantism is also concerned for Christian community. Moreover, the Council includes not only those bodies which have maintained the Protestant witness with greatest vigor but also Churches like the Eastern Orthodox and the Episcopal which have been more zealous to preserve the Catholic emphasis on the Church as a corporate fellowship.

The Federal Council is an instrument of Church cooperation, not of union. It rests upon the conviction that even within the framework of our inherited denominational systems, tragically divided as we are, there is sufficient spiritual unity to justify and to require our working hand-in-hand with others of "like precious faith." The Council really is a Council of Churches, not a super-Church nor any kind of ecclesiastical hierarchy. It is trying to provide for a truly democratic process of drawing the representatives of the Churches together, in an atmosphere of warm Christian fellowship, to facilitate the Churches' doing together those things which they themselves decide can be done better if done as parts of a common plan.

But the fact that the Council's program is limited to cooperation does not mean that it is indifferent to problems of union or irrelevant to them. It means rather that when we think of union on any inclusive scale we realize that it could come, or be spiritually significant, only if it be the result of increasing fellowship, understanding and appreciation. To bring about that kind of ecclesiastical climate in which meaningful union might some day come is a great contribution which the Council may make and which it is making now.

THE Federal Council is an instrument for bearing a combined witness to the principles, derived from our Christian faith, which must be applied in the social, political and international life of the world. It is a way of making it clear to our nation that the Churches are neither inarticulate nor hopelessly divided in the face of those contemporary issues on which the peace and well-being of the world depend.

There are, of course, immense difficulties in the way of discharging this function. The problems which now confront our civilization are so titanic and complex that the Church is tempted to refrain from tackling them. But Christians know that there are fundamental principles of social conduct, rooted in the very nature of the universe as the creation of God, which give at least a sure sense of direction in even the most baffling issues. As to what those principles require in terms of specific application no group of Christians may be certain but the Council uses the best available resources of cooperative study and thought to shed such light as it can upon the present scene. It also lays hold of the experience of Christian laymen and women of competence in practical affairs so that what is said is not merely the voice of clergymen, whose experience has not usually qualified them for expertness in economic and political issues, but of Christians who in their daily vocations in the rough-and-tumble world have wrestled with the problem of translating Christian motives and convictions into concrete policies.

The Federal Council provides a channel for relating twenty-five American Churches as a group to the world-wide Church as an ecumenical community. One of the greatest things in the Council's history during thirty-eight years is the way in which its experience in cooperation has influenced and aided the movement of Christian cooperation in other lands, especially the World Council of Churches, now in process of formation. Unless all signs fail it will be the most important development of the Church in our generation,—perhaps in many generations. The most immediate illustration of its value is its program of reconstruction and relief. The need for such a ministry today it is impossible to exaggerate. In Central Europe tens of millions of people are undernourished to the point of slow starvation and cold to the point of freezing except for what we do. In such a time the ecumenical Christian spirit is becoming a reality for them in terms of food and clothes.

In our own country the response of our Churches to the call of need is woven into a coordinated pattern through our Church World Service, Inc., created by the Federal Council, the Foreign Missions Conference and the American Committee for the World Council. The funds thus raised through the Churches are distributed through the Churches. So the program is not one merely of relief: it is relief plus Christian witness. It is Christian witness because given directly by the Church in the name of Christ. It is also a witness to the reality of the Church as a world-wide Christian community, exemplifying in some measure at least, St. Paul's description of the Church as so truly one body that "if one member suffer all suffer with it."

The Federal Council is an instrument for helping local churches, in spite of their divided state, to develop a common strategy in relation to the geographical community in which they are set. This is doubtless the most crucial service that the Council renders. For it is illusory to talk of an ecumenical Church or of Christian community on either a national or a world-wide scale unless there is true Christian community in the village or city where Christians actually live.

The lack of a common strategy among the churches of the local community is chiefly responsible for their feeble impact on various aspects of the community at large,—on the municipal government, the social work agencies, the public school, business and industry, the press and the radio. Fortunately, through local and state councils a better condition is coming. During the last five years the number of such councils has more than doubled. There are now 635 of them. Each of them is directly responsible to the churches of its own area but it is the Federal Council's responsibility to help them all and to knit them together in a common movement.

Reviews of Several New Books That Are Worthwhile

Large Variety of Religious Subjects Dealt With by Church Leaders in Recent Books

Reviews by Frederick C. Grant

Tales of the Hasidim: The Early Masters.* By Martin Buber. Schocken Books, New York. $3.75.

If we are ever to have friendliness and understanding between people of different religions, we must know a great deal more about one another than we now know. People have got to stop "pigeon-holing" each other, and judging by labels: as if we knew all that "Jew" or "Jewish" means; or "Christian" or "Protestant." The new book by Martin Buber the Jewish philosopher is a good illustration. Not one American Christian in a dozen knows there ever was such a movement as Chassidism (the usual spelling). It was a mystical and enthusiastic movement in Polish Judaism a century and a half ago, which taught people to enjoy their religion, even dance their prayers, and cast out gloom and fear. Some of the saints sound like Holy Rollers! All this inside a religion usually labelled "legalistic!"

The anecdotes are told in brief units, like the oral traditions underlying the Gospels (for the best of reasons: these also are Jewish religious stories); they often need to be elaborated and introduced, for the benefit of the modern Gentile reader. Dr. Buber is the best qualified editor in the world, and has done this work well. It is a book that will repay the Gentile Christian reader, and one that really adds to the wealth of the world's religious literature.

Biblical Theology and the Sovereignty of God.* By Leonard Hodgson. Cambridge Univ. Press (Macmillan), $.50.

Professor Hodgson is well-known in America, since he was for several years professor of apologetics at General Theological Seminary. In the present lecture he deals with one of the most vital issues of current theology, and states a sound Anglican view: "My contention today is that to make any one of these three, the Bible, the Church, or the inner light, our final and absolute authority is to land ourselves in absurdity, and that in so far as the Church is divided into rival partisans of one or other, it stultifies itself." For the benefit of readers who haven't a Greek lexicon at hand, the quotation on p. 21 means that even God cannot make that not to have been which has ever once been—God does not blot out history.

The Holy Spirit in Puritan Faith and Experience.* By G. F. Nuttall. Oxford: Blackwell (N. Y.: Macmillan), $3.25.

Many persons of today have not the faintest conception of what Puritanism really was—in their minds it is only a synonym for blue laws and overworked consciences. But it was a tremendously important movement historically, and had a great influence upon Anglicanism: in fact, there was a central Puritanism (represented by Baxter) which was Anglican, and held a middle course between the conservative Presbyterians and the radical Congregationalists and Baptists. The doctrine of the Spirit is a touchstone of great value, and the present book opens a new perspective on the 17th century.

The Affirmation of Immortality.* By John Haynes Holmes. Macmillan, $1.50.

The Ingersoll Lecture on immortality, delivered at Harvard College in 1946. The lines of the argument are familiar, the setting contains a new emphasis; for it is insisted that faith in immortality depends upon one's total outlook. A spiritual view of reality carries with it a faith in the persistence of what is most real, viz. the soul and the values it has achieved here in this world.

The Abolition of Man. By C. S. Lewis. Macmillan, $1.25.

The famous author of Screwtape Letters is now discovered in the role of Riddell lecturer at the University of Durham. The book is one of his best. He points out the fallacy in much modern education, its "debunking of all sentiment as propaganda, and . . . its fortifying of youth against emotion." We recognize the danger here in America: a cold, blasé, skeptical, even cynical attitude toward life has been positively cultivated (not merely tolerated) by our educators for a generation and more; today we are reaping the harvest! The "gentle cynics," the "mild skeptics," the sweet and gentle anti-theists and anti-religious teachers—we have had a whole generation of these men without conviction, posing as teachers. Let us rejoice that the fashion is beginning to change—and welcome the signs of a change across the water as well as here.

Prophetic Religion. By J. Philip Hyatt. Abingdon-Cokesbury, $1.75.

This very interesting and readable book undertakes to set forth the basic characteristics of prophetic religion, using as a criterion the work of seven great prophets of the Old Testament: Amos, Hosea, Isaiah of Jerusalem, Micah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, II Isaiah. The work and the teachings of these prophets are studied with sympathy — their vocations, their criticism of life, their view of history (past and future), their attitude toward ritual, their patriotism, their doctrine of God, and their teaching on sin and forgiveness. The book would make an excellent text for a Bible class; while of course the importance of its subject for the interpretation of the New Testament is obvious: our Lord himself stood in the line of the prophets, and his teaching "fulfilled" the best that had gone before.

The Psalms: A New Translation.* By Ronald Knox. Sheed and Ward, $2.00.

Father Ronald Knox has followed up his recent very successful translation of the Vulgate (Latin) New Testament, with a translation of the Psalter and the biblical canticles. It is an independent work, and apparently has no connection with the recent and important Liber Psalmorum cum Canticis Breviarii Romani issued by the Pontifical Biblical Institute (a new Latin translation of the Psalter authorized by the Roman Church). Fr. Knox's book is a good modern prose translation, designed to make the Psalter better understood. The beauty of his prose is apparent from the beginning: "Blessed is the man who does not guide his steps by ill counsel, or linger where sinners walk, or, where scornful souls gather, sit down to rest." This is paraphrase, more or less; but it is good paraphrase—in the sense meant by the one who said, "The best commentary is a good translation."

Anglican Commission Proposes New Marriage Canon

Lively Debate Is Expected When Proposals Come to Canterbury and York Convocations

Edited by Sara Dill

London (wireless to RNS):—Formation of Anglican ecclesiastical tribunals empowered to permit divorced persons to remarry in special cases is proposed in a report which will be submitted to the Convocations of Canterbury and York. The report was prepared by the archbishops' commission set up in 1939 to revise the canons of the Church in England in the light of modern conditions. The revised code, which contains 134 canons as compared with 141 devised in 1603, must be approved by the convocations and receive royal assent before it becomes law.

The new marriage canon (No. 36) was included in the commission's report with a dissent by the Archbishop of York and two other members. It is expected to stir considerable controversy when it comes up for discussion at the Canterbury Convocation and the York Convocation. It reads in part: "If in regard to a marriage which has been duly dissolved by secular law the bishop of the diocese, sitting with his chancellor, is satisfied that there were good ground upon which such marriage could, instead of being dissolved, have been declared to be null and void, it shall be lawful for such bishop, in his discretion, to allow either of the parties to such marriage, although the other of them is still living, to marry, or to be married to, another person, according to the rites and ceremonies of the Church of England, in like manner as if such first mentioned marriage has been declared to be null and void."

Another proposed canon forbids ministers to allow their churches to be used for marriage where both the parties are unbaptized.

Some outdated canons have been deleted from the new church code and the archaic language of others has been modernized. The Church of England is alone among Churches of the Anglican communion whose canons have not been revised and supplemented to meet changed conditions.

A modern note is seen in the suggested new canon which exhorts members to attend divine service on feast days, "except they shall be hindered by necessary and unavoidable labor or business." Another modern touch is in the canon which declares that the presentation of plays, films, and concerts in churches must have the sanction of the bishop.

Book for Lent

New York:—The Presiding Bishop has appointed a committee to aid him in the selection of the Presiding Bishop's Book for Lent, which has been published each year since 1935. Dean Fosbroke of the General Seminary is chairman, aided by the Rev. W. Russell Bowie of Union Seminary and Prof. Frederick A. Pottle of Yale. Efforts are to be made to encourage both clergy and laity to submit manuscripts which will be judged mainly on their possible contribution to the spiritual life of Church people. The book is published by Harpers.

Fifteen Million

New York:—During the first year of its operation, Church World Service, representing the cooperative overseas work of the major American Protestant Churches, has sent 15 million dollars in reconstruction funds and relief supplies to 29 countries in Europe and Asia, according to A. Livingston Warnshuis, executive vice president. And at a recent meeting of denominational officials on plans for the future, it was emphasized that "due to the desperate needs still existing, both in Europe and Asia, it is now clear that an adequate program of relief and reconstruction must be developed for several years to come." This group recommended a tentative over-all relief and reconstruction goal for 1948 and 1949, of at least 60 million dollars with half of that total being channelled through Church World Service.

The total of 15 million dollars distribution through Church World Service during the last twelve months, was contributed by more than 30 denominations, and of this total almost two-thirds represents cash, the other third being in goods contributed—clothes, bedding, seed, etc.

Church World Service was organized on May 7, 1946, by the merger of three agencies—Church Committee on Overseas Relief and Reconstruction; Commission for World Council Service; and Church Committee for Relief in Asia. Mr. Harper Sibley is president of Church World Service, Inc. The Rev. Almon R. Pepper and Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce are among the members of the board of directors; and Mrs.

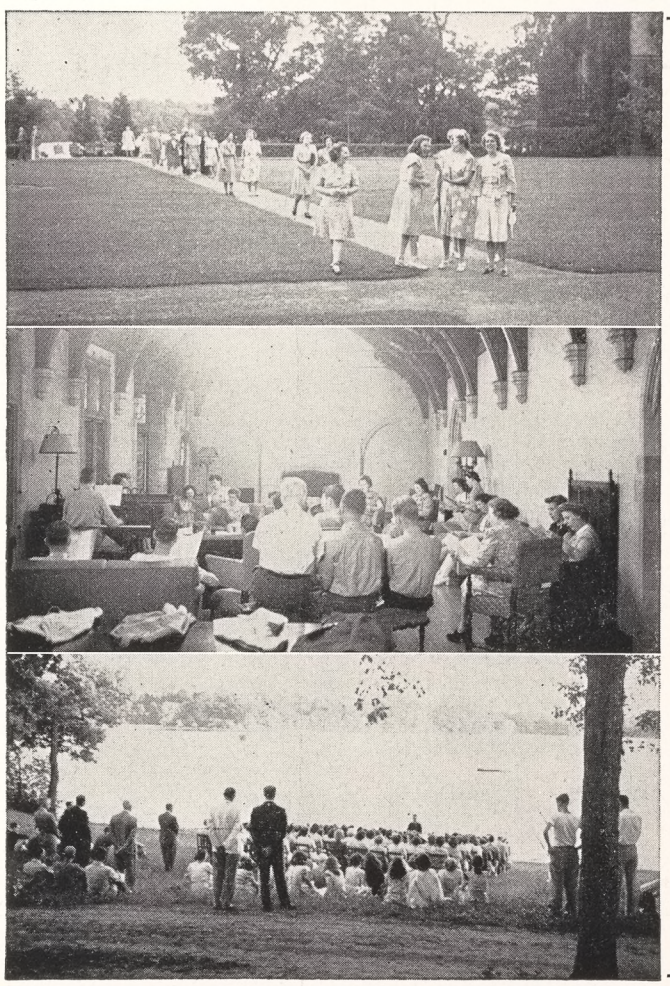
Parson Elected Mayor

Berkeley, Cal. (RNS):—The Rev. Laurence L. Cross, pastor of the Community Church here, was elected mayor in a hotly-contested election which brought out the largest vote in the city's history. He was drafted to run by a citizen's committee, his only opponent being the former mayor. The new mayor is considered a progressive and has been particularly active in bettering race relations. Elected with him to the Council was Mrs. Lilly Whitaker, a member of his church, who polled the greatest majority of any of the ten candidates. She was the only woman candidate.

Better Race Relations



New York:—The Rev. James Oscar Lee, the first Negro to receive the degree of doctor of theology from Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Virginia, is newly-elected executive secretary of the department of race relations of the Federal Council of Churches, succeeding the Rev. George E. Haynes who retired last January. Dr. Lee served the department last year in the capacity of field secretary following his resignation from the position of assistant secretary of the Connecticut Council of Churches at Hartford. In this field work Dr. Lee assisted in promoting the interracial clinics held in various tension areas.

Among the Episcopalians interested in the phase of the Federal Council's work is Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce who was co-chairman of the department for two years, 1944-45, and is continuing as an active member of the department. In the last few years there has been a sharp increase in interracial activities of all kinds, with more real efforts to break down discrimination in employment, housing, recreation and education, to implement the usual resolutions and pronouncements. The observance of race relations Sunday this year, marking the twenty-fifth anniversary, was approximately twice as extensive as it was five years ago.

No Aid to Schools

Reading, Pa.:—The diocese of Bethlehem, meeting in convention here last week, unanimously passed a resolution condemning the use of tax money for the aid and support in any form of parochial and private schools.

Bishop Sterrett in his address spoke out strongly for freedom of speech. He said that in times like these "honest, able, patriotic Christians, who have at heart the interests of all mankind, will differ as to what method to follow and what course to pursue. It would be difficult to think of anything more to be deplored than any attempt to interfere with freedom of speech. Many things are being said and will be said with which most of us vigorously disagree. But surely we Americans will not forget that to deprive them of the right to say them will be a far more serious threat to the well-being of our people. . . . What we must stand for is the right of men and nations to choose between security at the price of liberty, and freedom with its admitted but glorious risks."

Family Week

New York:—The week of May 4th to 11th was observed in homes, churches and communities across the country as family week, sponsored by the intercouncil committee on Christian family life representing the Federal Council of the Churches, the International Council of Religious Education and the United Council of Church Women. "There was never a time when we needed more emphasis on the rebuilding of American family life," Dr. L. Foster Wood, executive secretary of the committee on marriage and the home, said in discussing the importance of the week. "We had one divorce to every three marriages in 1945 and the record promises to be still more serious when the figures for 1946 and 1947 are available. Child neglect is a major factor in juvenile delinquency. Many families are greatly handicapped in regard to housing and other matters. Many marriages strained by wartime separation have not yet grown together firmly. All this means that we need nation-wide attention to the well-being of families."

Roman Catholic and Jewish groups have parallel family-life programs for this same week and civic agencies cooperate. Family week celebrates all good marriages and calls the attention of the nation and of its people to the fact that in a troubled world good homes help to rebuild life on foundations of faith, love and creative cooperation.

Evangelism • Comfort • Spiritual Growth • Fellowship

● "On a busy Sunday morning the guard at the gate of our vast air base called me and said: 'Chaplain, there's a Jap here who says he wants to talk to a Protestant chaplain. What shall I do?'

"I hurried across the field and was met by a middle-aged Japanese civilian who was nervously twisting the pages of a copy of THE UPPER ROOM. I could not learn where he had picked it up—probably from a GI trash pile. He told me how he had managed to read the book, using the English he had learned in school and with the aid of an English-Japanese dictionary, a laborious process at best. He said to me, 'Sir, could you talk to me about your Christ?' "

— An Army Chaplain

● "Miss Wallace send me copy of 'The Upper Room.' I like to read it very much. It seems the bright lantern to show me walk on the right way, to lead me to get the eternal life. I read it first when I get up from my bed, and then to charge our morning devotions. Many patients here were converted, and they are very glad to hear the words from the book when I translate for them. I got great influence and comfort from the book."

Religious Center

Detroit (RNS): — The Presbytery of this city has been given the private estate in Bloomfield of Edwin S. George, industrialist, for the development of a religious center. The gift will include a million dollar church; a site of 28 acres; several buildings; perpetual maintenance and aid in operating costs for several years. The church will be started next year and will be next to Cedarholm House, the residence of Mr. George, which will eventually become the educational unit of the center. The value of the gift is estimated at more than $1,500,000.

United Nations

Wausau, Wis.: — Bishop Sturtevant told the convention of the diocese of Fond du Lac, meeting here May 13, that the Sunday schools of the diocese were increasing in enrollment. He also said that giving for outside things was better, but that it "comes from less than 50% of our membership."

The Auxiliary, meeting concurrently, passed resolutions urging strong support for the United Nations and for the lifting of quotas on immigration to enable a fairer share of European displaced persons.

Seminary Offerings

New Haven:—Dean Lawrence Rose of the Berkeley Divinity School, chairman of the committee on the theological seminary offerings, reports that receipts this year were higher than any previous year. Total in 1947 was $86,150 from 1,881 parishes. In '46 it was $67,145 and in '45, $83,253.

The amounts received this year were as follows: Berkeley, $4,751; Bexley, $1,950; Bishop Pane, $1,482; Pacific, $6,660; Cambridge, $7,683; General $22,197; Nashotah, $13,558; Philadelphia, $5,934; Seabury-Western, $8,327; Sewanee, $1,336; Virginia, $12,267.

New Chancellor

Pittsburgh:—Arthur M. Scully has been appointed chancellor of the diocese of Pittsburgh as successor to the late Hill Burgwin. Mr. Scully is a vestryman of Calvary Church and is vice-president of a banking firm.

15th Centenary

London (wireless to RNS):—The Archbishop of York took part in celebrations commemorating the 15th centenary of the establishment of Christianity on the Isle of Man, situated in the Irish Sea halfway between England and Ireland. Preaching at Douglas, he urged the Manx people to thank God for "the great-hearted missionaries of the early Church, who, at the risk of their lives built churches for the revival of Christianity, which had often been almost wiped out by heathen teachings."

frey Francis Fisher, Archbishop Canterbury, hailed the Manx Church as "the child of the Celtic Church which played so great and glorious a part in the evangelization of this country and, indeed, of Europe."

It was announced that church visitors to the Isle of Man for other centenary observances will include John A. F. Gregg, Anglican Archbishop of Armagh and Primate of All Ireland. Special interest was created by the visit of Lutheran Bishop Arne Fjellbu of Nidaros, Norway, who preached at Peel. The Manx Church was associated with the Nidaros diocese centuries ago.

THE REV. WALTER C. KLEIN
St. George's, Jerusalem, Palestine

Increasing numbers of Americans are taking up permanent residence in the Near East, and as American chaplain to the Anglican Bishop in Jerusalem I feel responsible for the pastoral care of the Episcopalians among them. I shall be happy to receive the name and address of any Episcopalian moving from the United States to any of the following countries: Palestine, the Lebanon, Syria, Transjordan, Arabia, Iraq, and Cyprus.

MR. H. J. MAINWARING
Layman of Wollaston, Mass.

The Rev. Kenneth W. Hansen (THE WITNESS, May 1) cites the case of three young men from a parish who belonged to this Church but were found to be attending the Roman Church. And he asks how "the Anglo-Catholics would deal with the problem of fasting," apparently in connection with this case.

It is difficult to see any connection between fasting and the desertion of these young men. If Mr. Hansen means to imply that fasting per se is Roman and not Anglican, I think he is somewhat in error. He says that he "teaches the precepts of the Protestant Episcopal Church and (he believes) it would be disloyal to ape Rome and thus confuse the faithful."

It seems to me that either Mr. Hansen is confused or he is trying, himself, to confuse the faithful. For fasting is surely one of the precepts of this Church, and one of the practices our Lord taught, saying "When ye fast," etc. The appeal of our Church has always been to the faith and practice of the ancient, undivided Catholic Church—of which our Church claims to be a living part. And fasting was one of the elements of the practice of that ancient Church, from which we descend. Moreover, the Prayer Book itself particularly provides for the practice of fasting.

May I ask Mr. Hansen how he would deal with the members of our Church who attend Protestant services—often when they should be at a Prayer Book service?

THE REV. JOHN T. PAYNE
Vicar of All Saints Cathedral, Indianapolis

In his May 15th "Strategy and Tactics," Francis O. Ayres says in part: "Our young people can have a better dance at the juke-box joint; the boys can have a livelier game of basketball at the nearest gym. The pitiful thing is that the Church of Christ not only cannot compete with better equipped secular institutions, but is content to let the challenge go unanswered, and in this respect to let its ministry fail increasingly."

May I ask why you continue to print such sorry twaddle? It is not the function of the Church to compete with secular institutions, and to attempt to do so is to prostitute the Church's first obligation, namely, to adore the living Christ and to seek to make him known to all men. It is precisely because so many of the clergy have turned their parish halls and church basements into places of so-called entertainment that the Church is fast losing, if indeed it has not already lost, the respect and loyalty of our young people. The Church's ministry fails in its mission to youth not when we neglect to provide them with the best, or worst, in juke-box bedlam, but when we fail to make them understand that the art of true worship is vitally necessary to a well ordered life. Dancing and basketball playing and such like have their places in the activities of youth, but I cannot think that these places are rightfully centered in the heart of the Church's life.

MRS. A. M. JOHNSON
Churchwoman of Boston

I have just read your editorial Basic Stipend (May 15) and it is the first Church complaint that I have seen that Church people are not giving as they should. Its all income tax with me. I used to give about $3,000 a year, all to the Church, and now I am down to the minimum. Fifty cents a Sunday is just enough to enable me to attend a service in my parish. In Massachusetts we have enormous tax on income and I am now trying to get out of Massachusetts. If the Church would put in words to the President and Senators it might help. I am tired of writing them. I foresaw this and the Church apparently did not. Bishop Sherrill has done a lot. Churches and hospitals have suffered loss as the larger income groups supported these.

To all the Readers of the WITNESS

Dear Friends:

May I share with you the problem of the financial support of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America as the cooperative agency for a wide range of common tasks of American Christians?

In order to meet its postwar responsibilities the budget of the Council for the year 1947 has been increased to $557,000. This requires more adequate resources than are now available.

Approximately one-half of the budget can be expected from contributions of the churches themselves as a part of their denominational responsibilities. The other half of the Council's income must be secured through the personal interest and devotion of a very large number of individual Christians. There are already more than 13,000 such contributors. Their gifts average about $15.00 each. Many additional contributions will be necessary if the Council is to meet its full responsibilities at this time when the spirit and practice of Christian unity are more imperative than ever before.

There are three ways in which you can strengthen this united effort: by making a personal gift; by getting a group or organization in your community to do so; or by securing a gift from your parish.

This letter is a frank appeal for your continuing prayer and support for the increasing fulfillment of our Lord's prayer for His followers "that they all may be one."

Faithfully yours,

Samuel McCrea Cavert

Stephen Bayne Goes to Seattle To Be Consecrated

An Exciting Trip by Air and Motor Is Now Under Way With His Father and Three Sons

By W. B. Spofford

New York:—The Rev. Stephen F. Bayne, Jr., whose cover picture was taken in his chaplain's office at Columbia University, left here on June 3 following commencement. He is now on the way to Seattle where he will be consecrated Bishop of Olympia on June 11th by Presiding Bishop Sherrill, with sixteen other bishops joining in the laying on of hands. He is making an exciting event of his journey: rushing from the Columbia commencement to La-Guardia Field to fly to Des Moines. There he was met by his father, a vestryman of Trinity Church, New York, who had previously motored to the midwestern city with the three sons of the bishop-elect. From there they are now driving to Seattle while other members of the family go on various trains at different times. They are all to meet in Seattle on the 10th.

The service on the 11th is to be at the cathedral at 10:30, with a luncheon following, and a reception at the art museum at 3:30. That evening there is to be a mass meeting, held in the First Presbyterian Church, with addresses by Bishop Sherrill, the newly consecrated bishop and one or two laymen of the diocese. The day will open with a corporate communion at the cathedral, which will be attended by all of the clergy and others, the celebration being taken by the retiring bishop, Bishop Huston.

The cathedral will seat but 1,500 so that the public reception has been arranged to enable others to meet their new bishop. It is expected that a capacity crowd of 2,200 will attend the mass meeting in the evening.

I asked the bishop-elect just before he left New York what it felt like to be taking charge of a diocese. "Everyone here of course has been terribly nice," he said, and there have been innumberable farewell parties. And of course I hate to leave my work as chaplain at Columbia. I guess there really isn't much to say. I wish I felt more confidence in myself as a bishop. At this point my heart is in my boots, which I suppose is standard practice for all bishops-elect. People make so much of the externals of the job, and think of it as a great and highly decorative honor. I think it is an honor, but I also know that to give leadership to the Church in this generation is an unbelievably dangerous and critical enterprise, and I just hope someway I can measure up to it, even a little."

Something of what the bishop-elect had on his mind is indicated in a letter which he sent to all of the clergy of the diocese some days ago. First off, he asked that the clergy and people remember him in their prayers; and he urged as many as possible to attend the corporate communion on the 11th. "Will you ask each family in your care," he wrote, "if they will, at breakfast on the 11th, say aloud and together, a prayer for us all, and for me. I would suggest the prayer on page 547, or the parallel one on page 544—but perhaps there is another which seems to you better. Or you might care to adapt one."

He then went on to tell them that he was counting on Bishop Sherrill to make an important address at the mass meeting. "For my part I think what I will say will perforce have to be somewhat general in character—I am currently thinking of speaking about the vocation of our Church, our duties, our place, our contribution to society and to united Christendom, etc. I hope, incidentally, that we won't have a lot of reading-between-the-lines of what few speeches I make in the early days; when you know me better you will know that I am about as subtle and devious as a fire-truck; I have been a little troubled by an assumption (not from Olympia) that of course I will start in with a clear program and plans which I will 'feed to the diocese as fast as they can take it,' as one letter phrased it. I'm afraid that is decidedly not the case. When the time comes, I will say quite clearly what I think. At this point I have only the most general senses and feelings; and I am content to have it that way until I know what problems we face and where we are. Then I can tell where I want to go. So don't look for hidden things; they won't be there; but only the most genuine, even painful, humility and eagerness to learn.

"That applies especially to the conferences at Annie Wright, when I want quite clearly to be on the receiving end, and indeed to the whole summer. I expect to have no engagements of any kind outside the diocese until September. I want to spend the whole summer (except for moving into the house) driving around, meeting people and getting the 'feel' of the diocese. I expect to be away from mid-October to mid-November, at the House of Bishops, and two or three other meetings, and taking a week or so off. But until that time I will be in school in the

THE WITNESS appears every other week during the summer, from June 15th to September 15th. In common with all publications we have a difficult time with summer address changes since it takes fully two weeks to make them. Often this means that a subscriber no sooner has the address changed than we are notified to change it back to his permanent address. We suggest therefore that unless the change is to be permanent, or for a fairly extended period, that you arrange with a friend to forward your copies while on vacation. We will of course gladly make changes when requested to do so. In making the request please give both the old and new address and allow at least two weeks for the change. most real sense.

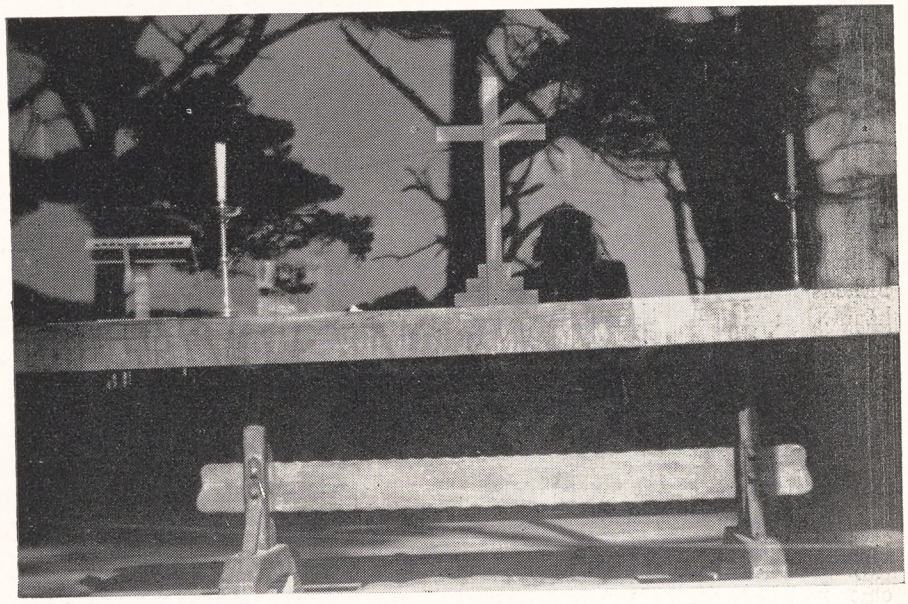
"Well, that is enough for one letter, I guess. Surplice, red stole, and hood, please, for the consecration. I hope it will be a simple, deep, true service; you will understand how strange I feel, I know, and that it is, in nearly every sense, the beginning of a tremendously adventurous new life for me and mine. I'm sure I need not ask you to make allowances for what I do not know and can not do. But let us begin this fantastically important and critical ministry of ours together, on our knees, and with affectionate remembrance one of another."

CLID CHAPTERS ORGANIZED

New York:—The Rev. William B. Spofford, Jr., executive secretary of the Church League for Industrial Democracy, met with members and interested persons in Chicago, Detroit, Gambier and Cincinnati in what was called an "exploratory trip" through the mid-west last week. The purpose of the trip, Mr. Spofford said, was to find out what Church people thought of the C.L.I.D.'s program and activity and to get suggestions on how the organization could exercise a more dynamic Christian social witness in our day. As a result of the informal meetings, it was voted that the Chicago and Detroit chapters of the Church League should re-organize.

DOWNTOWN CHURCH HAS BIG JOB



Washington: — "The downtown Church has a new ministry but a more important ministry than ever before," the Rev. Charles W. Sheerin, rector of the Church of the Epiphany, declared at the parish's annual dinner on May 20. "In these transitory times," he continued, "the stranger must find a place of refuge, and a Church equipped to meet the emotional problems of a neurotic world should be in the center of every city. The financial problem can be solved by the gratitude of the hundreds of people who find religion worthwhile, and their many small gifts make up for the loss of the wealthy who have moved either to the country or to far out suburban areas."

Reports were submitted showing that over 1200 meetings of a church and community character had been held in the parish house and that services of public worship were held 859 times. The parishioners and strangers in the congregation had contributed $136,000 for the expenditures of the parish church and its various activities.

Dr. Leonard M. Elstad, President of Gallaudet College and a vestryman, was the principal speaker with the topic "The parish belongs to the parishioners," and he pointed out that when the democratic process is applied to a parish church, as it has been at Epiphany, the program and work of the church receive generous support.

clarification and restatement. On finances it was announced that $22,746,717 had been subscribed to the $27,000,000 fund to restore Presbyterian work in war areas, and an annual budget greatly in excess of previous years was adopted.

One of the highlights of the meeting took place on May 25 when 51 delegates preached in churches in this city and surrounding area. The Rev. Frederick W. Evans, former moderator, was the preacher at St. Mark's Cathedral and the Rev. Henry Sloane Coffin, also a former moderator, preached at Grace Church.

One of the most beautiful conference chapels is the one at Asilomar, California where the altar is before a plate glass window through which one sees the grounds and the Pacific beyond

PRESBYTERIAN ASSEMBLY

Grand Rapids, Mich.:—A plan of evangelism with the objectives of a million new members by 1950; 300 new churches and the enlistment of 100,000 lay workers, was planned at the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the USA, meeting here. They also voted to keep the door open for possible unity with the Episcopal Church, and hopes that the few remaining differences between the northern and southern branches may be reconciled during the coming year was expressed by the Rev. William B. Pugh, secretary of the department on union. Negro members of the assembly raised the issue of racial segregation which they declared are a barrier to reunion.

BIBLE TRANSLATION IS APPROVED

London (wireless to RNS):—Plans for a new modern translation of the Bible were approved in a resolution adopted here by the upper house of the convocation of Canterbury. The resolution called upon the Archbishop of Canterbury to appoint representatives to an interdenominational editorial committee which will work with the Oxford and Cambridge University press on the translation. No indication was given as to when work on the translation will begin. The Rt. Rev. Kenneth E. Kirk, Bishop of Oxford, stressed that the proposal "is in a very preliminary and fluid state."

Bishop M. S. Barnwell Deplores Current Witch Hunt

Tells the Convention of Diocese of Georgia That He Grows Weary With the Name Calling

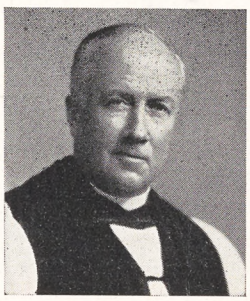
By Julia St. Clair Moore

Augusta, Ga.: — Bishop Barnwell of Georgia in his address to the diocesan convention hit out strongly at the critics of the Federal Council of Churches and at all who are indulging in name-calling. He also strongly urged that full representation in the convention should be provided for Negro Churches; urged support for world relief; asked for contributions from parishes for the Presiding Bishop's center in Connecticut and asked for aid for other financial campaigns now under way in the Church.

However it was his comments on Communism that stirred the most interest.

"In this country," he said, "it seems as if we were getting ready to engage in witch-hunting—looking for Communists. I go to the dictionary to see what Communist means and I find that it is a 'scheme for equalizing the social conditions of life; specially a scheme which contemplates the abolition of inequalities in the possession of property, as by distributing all wealth equally, or by holding all wealth in common for the equal use and advantage of all." You will remember that the early Christians tried this and it did not work very well because in the Christian community there were some cheats and liars—Ananias and Sapphira. It was abolished not because it was not good for the people, but because the people were not good enough for it. The only Communists I know of in the world today are in certain small religious orders of monks and nuns who seek to have all things in common, and even there human nature is at work, and while all are equal, some are more equal than others.

"In the light of the above definition, which comes from Webster's Revised Unabridged Dictionary, I am not a Communist. It is a beautiful vision but unworkable in this imperfect world. But I have a right to be a Communist if I want to be one, just as much as I have a right to be a Democrat or a Republican or a member of the United States Chamber of Commerce or a labor union. Every poor man who seeks an advance in wages or tries to make a little more money for himself is seeking the abolition of inequalities in the possession of property. To this extent he is a Communist and in all probability a loyal citizen of the United States of America.



"If you hate Russians, say so. I hate totalitarianism and secret police and thought-control and political purges and the exploitation of the peasant class and the ruthless dealing with conquered and dependent countries. Of all these things Russia has been guilty. But these things are not Communism. They are Power Politics, stark and unashamed. The present Power Politician is as far from being a Communist as Joe Stalin is from the twelve Apostles. So do not hate people because they are accused of being, or admit being, Communists. They may be Russian or even American villains of the deepest dye, or they may be simple-minded Christian perfectionists, seeking the Kingdom of God in an imperfect world."

Applying his remarks specifically to the recent criticisms of the Federal Council of Churches, Bishop Barnwell stated that "if the Council is communistic, it is so in this latter sense. I might even join you in criticizing it for being impractical and for advocating the principles of a stage of life to which we have not come. Jesus was not practical either. He said, 'if you have two coats, give your brother one.' "

He explained to the convention the set-up of the Federal Council; told the delegates that "for a long time we stayed on the side-line, but that we entered into full membership seven years ago and already have furnished it with two presidents, our former Presiding Bishop, Bishop Henry St. George Tucker, and now Mr. Charles Taft.

"In recent months there has been some criticism of the Council because of some pronouncements of one of its many committees; the one dealing with industry. This one committee, after a meeting in Pittsburgh, reported that in its opinion the Christian industrialists' motive should be one of service primarily, rather than profit, and that free enterprise should be regulated for the common good, and this is held to be a trend toward Communism on the part of the Federal Council. Well, I would not call the Rotary Club communistic, and in all their literature and slogans they very definitely put service ahead of profits. Nor would I call the Elder Roosevelt, Theodore, a Communist, and no man ever bore down on big business more than he. In those days it was not called the New Deal, but the Square Deal, and the present anti-trust laws of the nation were considered quite communistic by the old guard of the Republican party. Most of you are too young to remember those days. I remember when the interstate commerce commission was considered a dangerous interference with private free enterprise; when the federal reserve was considered dangerous banking practice. In Acts the Athenians were condemned for spending their time in hearing and telling of some new thing. It has always been so, and probably always will, for life moves on.

"I am not speaking to defend the Federal Council in these matters. I

CHURCHMEN IN THE NEWS: Bishop Keeler of Minnesota who is again the director of the Wellesley Conference which opens June 23; the Rev. Gordon C. know very little about so-called non-profit motives, for we get our profit out of life in so many different ways. All the Church secretaries I know of who denounce the profit-motive work for wages and all the industrialists I know of are trying to serve the community. It's a great pity to see right-thinking people quarrel over words and definitions, or even methods, for we are all brethren if our common pursuit is for the good of mankind, and I think that is the goal of nearly all of us.

"There are some tremendous values in the Federal Council of Churches and it becomes increasingly necessary in this country and in the world for the Protestant or non-Roman world to speak with a united voice, and to act in concert if it is to combat effectively the world-wide political pressures which spread from the Vatican. This latter I consider to be the greatest single threat to world peace and is responsible for much of the hatred of Russia which is growing in this country among people who know nothing whatever about the subject. The Church of Rome loves totalitarian states and is the staunch backer of Franco in Spain and of various anti-democratic movements in Latin America. These statements can be documented but I have not time to do it now nor perhaps is this the place. I only mean to say now that the Federal Council of Churches deserves in my judgment the loyal support of free Christian people."

OPPOSE PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Gambier, O.:—The faculties of Kenyon College and Bexley Hall sent a protest last week to the senators and representatives in Ohio against the proposed bill which would set up a commission to investigate "un-American activities" in all schools, universities and colleges in the state. "In principle the proposed law goes on the totalitarian assumption that a small group of men may, by their own interpretations, dictate the political, economic, social and religious teachings of the educational institutions," the statement declared.

PLANNED PARENTHOOD SUPPORTED

Springfield, Mass.: — Planned parenthood was endorsed in a resolution adopted by the convention of the diocese of Western Massachusetts, meeting at the cathedral here May 20-21. The convention also condemned lotteries and also the use of public funds for non-public schools. A resolution favoring the admission of displaced persons from abroad was also passed. The convention urged Congress to distribute the booklet Fascism in Action as well as the one now being distributed dealing with Communism.

A highlight of the meeting was an address by Bishop Keh-Tsung Mao of Shanghai, who mentioned that there was not a single movie projector in his whole diocese. So the hat was passed at luncheon and he was handed $170 with which to buy one.

Professor Wilber G. Katz of the law school of the University of Chicago is to give the commencement address at Seabury-Western Seminary

DISCRIMINATION CONDEMNED

Petersburg, Va.:—The alumni association of the Bishop Payne Divinity School went on record last week against segregation and racial discrimination, and urged the trustees to see that references to racial designation be deleted from the school's charter. The resolution also declared that "If rehabilitation of the school property is to be done, money having been set aside for the same, the alumni association urges the most immediate action in bringing about this much needed building program." However the resolution also stated that "Integration with any other institution of the Church, if such is proposed, should be completely Christian in all of its ramifications."

The point of this latter statement is that there are many in the Church who are of the opinion that the Bishop Payne Divinity School, which has always been exclusively for Negroes, should not exist but that all seminaries should do away with racial qualifications for students, and faculty.

HEADQUARTERS PLANNED

Lynchburg, Va.:—Bishop Phillips announced to the convention of the diocese of Southwestern Virginia, meeting here May 20-21, that he has received a gift of $30,000 for the building of new diocesan headquarters. The convention voted to add $10,000 to provide the $40,000 necessary to construct and furnish such a building. At present headquarters are in the parish house of St. John's, Roanoke, which is expanding and needs the space.

The convention also adopted a budget for a missionary program calling for $75,000 for 1948 compared with the current budget of $40,000.

SOCIAL SERVICE SECRETARY

Brooklyn, N. Y.:—The Rev. Gordon C. Graham, rector of St. Simon's, has been elected executive secretary of the social service department of the diocese of Long Island, effective September 1. He succeeds Mrs. Muriel Webb who, after ten years of effective work, has resigned because of family responsibilities. Graham has been a member of the editorial board of THE WITNESS and is at present a contributing editor. He is also the editor of Tidings, the official organ of the diocese of Long Island.

BISHOP BOYNTON ENTHRONEMENT

San Juan, Puerto Rico: — Bishop Charles F. Boynton will be enthroned as bishop of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands on June 24th at the cathedral here. The National Council is to be represented by the Rev. Ervine Swift and the American bishops in the area will be represented by Bishop Voegeli of Haiti and the British province of the West Indies will be represented by Bishop Nathaniel W. N. Davis of Antigua.

Completeness and Unity

TRINITY Season is for the average churchman principally notable as the longest season of the Church year, comprising approximately twenty-five Sundays and a siege of green in the liturgical color scheme. The more educated churchman may take a dim view of such an appraisal and no doubt rightly, for the doctrine of the Trinity is basic in the theology and tradition of the Church. But to view with alarm does not improve the situation.

Perhaps Trinity Sunday should come at a more advantageous time of the year. In late May or early June, week-ends have begun to take toll of the congregation and it is difficult to teach those who are not there. Many clergy avoid involvement with the doctrine of the Trinity by allowing their assistants to preach or by giving over the sermon to a worthy appeal by a visiting dignitary. The layman who comes up against the doctrine of the Trinity in the collect for the day or in the proper preface is more than likely to be somewhat bewildered because the phrase "by the confession of a truth faith, to acknowledge the glory of the eternal Trinity and in the power of the Divine Majesty to worship the Unity" is not exactly A.B.C. theology; and in the proper preface, "For that which we believe of thy glory, O Father, the same we believe of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, without any difference of inequality" is not a statement of the one syllable variety. "Without any difference of inequality" is a strange and haunting phrase.

We do not, however, need to become metaphysicians in order to have some understanding of the Trinity. We are already Trinitarians in innumerable ways and are not bothered too much by it. Three Persons in one God is not a mystery nor an insurmountable dilemma. Because God is Father, Son and Holy Spirit does not make him a problem or divide him. Because he is all three, yet one, we can understand the more adequately his revelation of his purpose for us. If God were only Father the message of the Incarnation would he lost. If God were only Father and Son, we would be like the disciples before Pentecost—having seen, but not having understood. God needed to reveal himself through the power of the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of Truth, before the disciples were able to comprehend the full meaning of the Gospel.

There is more than one area in our own lives where we could profitably apply trinitarian principles. Democracy to be complete and fully effective must be applied in three phases. Political democracy we are becoming more familiar with, but democracy is incomplete and cannot live unless it is applied also in the economic and social spheres. Only when we so learn to apply it will its advantages be evident to the rest of the world. Political democracy and economic tyranny will never achieve prosperity for any nation of men.

There is no need for churchmen to consider the doctrine of the Trinity too difficult for comprehension. It is the liveliest doctrine in the faith once delivered. It already undergirds more of our life than we are apt to think. It is the doctrine of completeness and unity. A more intelligent effort on the part of clergy and laity alike to understand and use the doctrine of the Trinity would result in a greater completeness and unity in the effectual impact of revealed Christianity in a far from integrated world.

"QUOTES"

LET ME NOT forget the tumbled cities, lying on their creators. Let me not forget the churches, hospitals, markets, homes and hopes that have gone down in dust and going, smashed my brothers and sisters of all ages and races and creeds. Let me not forget the dispossessed, who live now in tunnels and caves and fields and woods and fear, nor why they came to that. Let me remember my debt to the gallant young in the sky and to the gallant old on the ground, with the bombs about them. Let me remember my high calling as a man more dedicated to justice and peace than to living. The torch is in my hands, be mine to hold it high and light the way to truth and right for all time.

A Blasphemous Act

THE dumping of thousands of tons of potatoes in Foley, Alabama, when both allied and ex-enemy countries seem to be losing in the race against starvation, is obviously the wrong thing to do and the governmental excuse that it was to keep potato prices from going down adds insult to injury.

It is possible that the government agency in question might give the following answers to any objections to this practice:

One; nature is prodigal to a very wasteful extent. Everyone has had the experience of growing more tomatoes or catching more fish than one can give away, and this crop of potatoes may be just a freak of nature.

Two; bumper crops are always a tragedy for farmers; sometimes almost as bad as no crops at all. When the farmers raise slightly more produce than people are prepared to use the price of such produce often goes down to a point where it is barely worth harvesting. The government is endeavoring to take the gambling out of farming in order that agriculture may not die out. It is dirty and difficult work and people prefer any other kind.

Three; it may be that the place where these potatoes were harvested is too far from the mills where the potatoes could have been processed into potato flour or industrial alcohol. It also may be that the potatoes themselves could not have been shipped to Europe.

Four; when a nation is attempting to regulate agricultural prices and to ship food on a vast scale, it is obvious that mistakes and wastage will also occur on a vast scale.

If any of these reasons are the cause of this shameful waste, why doesn't the government tell us? It owes such information to its citizens.

Even if there is a reason for this action it is up to all Christians to protest in principle, especially as we learn that the same thing may occur if there is too great a harvest of wool this year. We learn in the creed that God the Father is the creator of heaven and earth, that the worlds were made by God the Son, and that God the Holy Ghost is the Lord of Life. While to anyone this unexplained wastage is a criminal thing in these days, to us it must take on the odor of blasphemy and in the absence of any explanation or excuse it seems the plain duty of every Christian to protest to his representatives.

Notes on a Visit to France

by Joseph F. Fletcher

Professor at Episcopal Theological School

I CAME out of Germany at Strasbourg, went to Paris. I had seen the shambles of the Pas de Calais as I came over from the Channel. The Vosges and Lorraine and Bas-Rhin were the same. Paris is almost another world, not having been war damaged. And that esprit is still there, after betrayal and occupation. London in comparison is dour, dirty, down-in-the-mouth.

All Europe is going to the left in its social policy but in some ways France and French conversation makes it more evident than elsewhere. Every election gains votes for the Communists from the rightist bloc, MRP, and from the Socialists. I had dinner one night with a friend in the working-class faubourg Vaugirard and he told me that 18,000 votes were cast there (four arrondissements), of which only seven were not for the communists. His was one of the seven, incidentally.

What did I do in Paris? I visited the emigre Russian seminary in the Rue de Crimee, where I talked at length and coffee'd with Zenkowski, Cassian, Kartashoff, Kovalevsky and the Archimandrite Cyprian, formerly of Serbia. Florovsky was in Geneva; Fedetoff, of course, in America. We mourned Bulgakoff's passing. Ran around some with Donald Lowrie but missed Paul Anderson who left town the day I arrived. Spoke with him on the phone—sounded well. Captain Theodore Pianoff of Action Sociale Orthodoxe was enormously and endlessly helpful, especially in my effort to meet with Russian churchmen and get the revised picture of their situation. I mean to write it all up elsewhere, and to get out some stories about the martyrdom of Mother Maria of Action Sociale in Ravensbruck's furnace, and how Pianoff worked until they took him off to Dachau. I met leaders of both the groups, the Moscow submission and those who have refused to follow Eulogius, remaining under the ecumenical patriarch in Istanbul. Saw nothing of the Kavlovski Synod, but they are of no consequence in Western Europe. Visited L'Eglise de Trois Saints, and talked with Father Stephen who has succeeded Benjamin (now Moscow exarch in America). Also met his assistant, Father Seraphim, who is the Moscow patriarch's "specialist" in ecumenical affairs. Brought back to the States some letters and greetings for Benjamin and others, including Jerome Davis with whom Pianoff worked for the YMCA under the Tzarist regime.

I visited the YMCA (SCM) offices in the Rue Didier. Went out to the Universite with Lowrie. Attended a special meeting of the decanal council of the Moscow Church in the Priory of St. Denis, Rue D'Alleray, and met Poltoratsky, Pere Alexis (the only one I know who could hold his own with Gregory Dix), Father Arseniev, Professor Lossky of the Sorbonne, Dean Imofeef, and others. Visited their seminary in the Blvd. Blanqui. There are two now, the old St. Sergius and the new St. Denis. The latter is interesting for its effort to hold on to young emigré Orthodox who are secularizing so fast, by using the Divine Liturgy in the vernacular French—permitted by a patriarchal ukase. I was fascinated by Dom Chambault, a Benedictine prior who became Orthodox in communion with Moscow. He's another story. Sergienko, Poltoratsky, Father Seraphim and the Metropolitan Seraphim were flying to Moscow at the week's end (through the "Iron Curtain").

Details on this side of my Paris experience must wait for writing up a little later. It all, incidentally, ties in with Europe's complex situation.

One night I spoke to a group (mostly Americans) of business men at the American Union Church in the Quai D'Orsai, where my old friend Clayton Williams is pastor. It was good to see him and his family again; they are comfortable and sensitive to the things around them. I took a celebration once at the American Church and had meals a couple of times with Dean Beekman in the Avenue George V. Sorry I missed my former student Dick Zeisler, who just two weeks earlier gave up his canonry at the Cathedral.

ONE afternoon and evening I spent with Nicholas Berdiaeff out in his little Clamarte home. Lots was said, of course. But the main thing is this message from him: There is real danger that the churches, and the World Council of Churches, are too identified with the old and dying culture based on middle-class values; that slogans about "the struggle against secularism" may really mask a struggle against change and against socialism; that if so, the Churches are doomed. He feels there is a world of symbolism in the fact that the new ecumenical institute is built with Rockefeller money (a millon), not by the Europeans themselves, and he says this though he had just taught a session there and hopes it will work out well. As for his loyalty to the Church in Russia, rather than to the schismatics, he says we can call Bolshevism anti-Christ and spit at it and the Russian people under it, or we can regard it as the greatest redemptive challenge and stay within "conversion distance" of it. He chooses the latter course.

Another afternoon I spent interviewing technical students who stay at the Union Chrétien in the Rue de Trevise, as a sampling of youth opinion. They were completely cynical about all social purposes and parties, want only to "get along" somehow as individuals, believe in nothing. A tragic experience, truly, of the maladie spirituel in Europe, of the spiritual vacuum. Several of the "conservatives" (MRP), about a third of the group, said (believe it or not) that life was better under the Occupation! This compared with the young workers (none "conservative") in the Rue Lecourbe whom I talked with in a bistro one night. They were confident of the future (pace atom bombs and Uncle Sam), and concerned at the moment to strengthen the backbone of Blum's interim government. They were talking about the hope they saw in the union's having seized eggs held back in a warehouse, to sell them outright at official prices, and about new squatters' movements springing up again in empty chateaus, villas, Catholic schools, etc.

This is quite enough. There are other things: experiences with the black market, odd things in restaurants and hotels, the cold cold rooms everywhere, the contrast between black market life and the existence of the masses, hearing furcoated people in trains arguing for the communists—the whole amazing complex of a whole social order and continent in revolution and breakdown and painful change. It's grim—and very little ideological with the majority of people. Some of us have talked for years about its logical development and its inevitability—but we never conceived it in terms sufficiently drastic and tragic.

Europe is impoverished by the war. Her forces are re-grouping, her class issues sharpening, and the weight is going left. For most of the people, who have no doctrinaire views of the left or right varieties, it is just a matter of their being pushed around by forces they don't understand, and trying desperately to figure out what it's all about. Never has there been so much cultural self-examination in western civilization. Many of them can't find any reason in it all, it appears just tragedy and senseless, and they rationalize their despair in various ways.

It doesn't make it any less pathetic to recall, as Toynbee puts it, that when a social order disintegrates many of the people "formed" in the old order suffer a "schism of the soul" as a result.

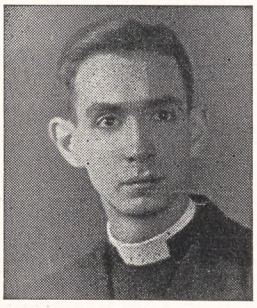
This is inescapable, of course, but nonetheless pitiable. Let me make a confession: I have much more compassion for the educated bourgeoisie, religious and secular, than I used to have. After all, they have worked and struggled by their values in their world, and now that it comes tumbling down, it's pure abstraction to shrug their tragedy as something "of history" and that's all. The greatest pity in some cases is that they can't go along with history. The greatest danger is that some of them, in their social and moral torture, may become pretty vicious when they feel increasingly cornered and frustrated.

But I mustn't analyse here. I sometimes can't sleep well at night, and almost wished I had stayed at home—here in this other world of America. Remember that we in America are both lucky and powerful, but we won't stay lucky if we don't use our power properly.

One more thing. When I meet friends they ask, "Did you have a nice trip?" That's a very pre-war question. Put it to me some other way.

Editor's Note: This article, the last of three, came to us as a memorandum written in terse, almost shorthand style. With the author's permission it has been summarized even more.



The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.

Professor at Episcopal Theological School

The Layman's Part

OUR Church is not priest-ridden. The founding Fathers, who drew up our Church's Constitution, saw to it that the laity share a large part of the government of the Church, whether it be in General Convention, or in diocesan and parochial councils. This is as it should be. The clergy have no grace of omniscience or infallibility in things temporal any more than in things spiritual. There are 'diversities of gifts' and 'differences of administration' among the many members of the One Body.

This principle should apply to the Church's worship no less than to its government. The Prayer Book is the layman's guarantee of protection from all forms of priest-monopoly in his common prayer. Not only is it the layman's 'bounden duty and service,' it is also his privilege and hereditary right to take an active part in the performance of the liturgy with the officiating clergy. There is no excuse for anyone feeling 'shut out' from participation in the Church's prayers. Divine worship is the responsibility of each and every one of us. Wherever congregations allow the clergy alone or the clergy and choir to take over the whole service, there truly 'we have left undone those things which we ought to have done. . . . And there is no health in us.'

There is no more depressing experience than to lead in worship a congregation of passive, listless sitters. At times one senses that they even cease to be an audience; their thoughts are far away. In some of our parishes' services one would get the impression that the only responsibility of the laity is to pay the bill. I have never been one to disparage what is often irreverently called the 'procession and elevation of the cash.' Whenever the offering represents and includes real sacrificial giving, though it be but one widow's mite, I am certain that such an oblation is more pleasing to God than all the 'thrice-holys' and 'glorias' which we chant before His presence. Only let each one of us examine our consciences before we cheerily sing: 'All things come of thee, O Lord, and of thine own have we given thee.'

There are other tests of our active participation. To mention only one, how do we recite together the Creed and the Lord's Prayer? Do we mumble unintelligibly the confession of our faith which we made at our baptism and re-affirmed at our confirmation? Or do we make the rafters ring with it? Are we bold to say the prayer our Savior taught us? Are we really in earnest about 'Thy kingdom come'? There are countless thousands of starving, homeless people today who are pleading, 'Give us this day our daily bread.' What does this petition mean to us, with our profits and plenty, with our anticipation of a good, hearty meal when the last Amen is sung? Let us remember that our worship can never be more true and real than is our concern. He prays best who cares most.

The lack of hearty congregational singing in the Episcopal Church is notorious, and the reasons and suggestions given for its cause and cure are many. Mr. Robert Bridges had the ingenious notion that it is due to our musical sophistication. He wrote some years ago: "It seems perhaps a pity that nature should have arranged that where the people are musical . . . they would rather listen, and where they are unmusical they would all rather sing." There is some truth in this, but it is not the whole story. Again, I think, it is basically a matter of our interest and our concern. It is often observed that many people who can learn the latest song hit after one or two hearings—and some of them have rather complicated rhythms—find the simplest new hymn-tune beyond them. In the history of the Church it has been the periods of religious revival which have produced enthusiastic singing of new 'psalms and hymns and spiritual songs.' It is the dead Church which can muster courage to sing only the hymns that grandmother knew, and to sing these but feebly.

A Word With You

"Doctor"

MOST clergy squirm when they are called anything but "Mister" or "Father"; but having learned this, you are now no better off than you were before, because the "Mister" kind usually squirms if you call him "Father," and vice versa. A squirmy lot.

They have some reason to squirm when called "Doctor," however. Most Episcopal clergymen do not have doctors' degrees, and they wriggle out of modesty, if not frustration. Besides, they are usually called "Doctor" by undertakers, aldermen, and people who address all policemen as "Lieutenant," all railway porters as "Chief." A squirm is one way to suppress a shudder.

Some have had the experience of having elderly and absent-minded lady parishioners embark on tales of woe, mostly internal. If they allow these to call them "Doctor" they may find themselves learning all about the ladies' most clinical symptoms. Besides, the respect we all have for the medical man, makes us not want to usurp his title without benefit of a real degree.

Perhaps we should worry less. In France, a physician is just a licentiate in medicine unless he has written a doctor's thesis. And it would be regrettable if we spurned the title so much (either out of modesty or out of regret that we hadn't gone to Podunk College where they give them out more freely) that people began to suspect that there was something wrong in deserving the appellation. Our civilization would be retarded centuries if it were not for its graduate schools.

Religion and Health

HAL M. WELLS

THE Church is gradually awakening to its pastoral responsibility as the problems of present day living press in on it from every side. People are turning in ever increasing numbers to the Church for guidance when their lives become frought with difficulties and anxieties. It has been very gratifying to both laity and clergy to see the Church meet its task energetically and with courage.

In recent years psychiatrists have been looking at the illness in man not as an isolated thing but as a symptom of general personality disturbance. They have been considering man as a unity, as a combination in one person of both material and spiritual entities. This has led to an ever increasing cooperation between medicine and religion to the end of physical and mental health.

It has been found by many clergy in dealing with upset parishioners that good advice from trained people in the field of psychology and psychiatry has helped a great deal. They have been able to take the teaching of modern psychiatry and sharpen their tool of understanding and spiritual insight.

This combination of technical skills and the general sympathetic understanding of the clergy is comparatively easy for the rector of the large city parish to obtain. He is located where large psychiatric clinics are and where he can pick up a phone and receive considerate attention to his questions. This is not true for the majority of clergy working in the Church. It has long been a problem for the clergy living in localities without adequate medical facilities to obtain this needed help. In order to sharpen his tools the cleric has attempted many things. Some have been able to take graduate work or to attend special classes where he can learn to understand people more thoroughly. Still others have been able to take three months or more from their parish duties and take an intensive course in human problems under the Council for Clinical Training where they have the opportunity of studying directly under a clergyman and staff psychiatrists.

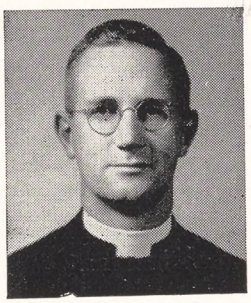
It is in an attempt to be of some little help to clergy who do not have sufficient opportunity for psychiatric consultation that we are beginning this new column. This will be a column where anyone can send questions he would like to have answered by competent psychiatrists. These will be answered by physicians who have specialized in various branches of psychiatry. The length of time this column will run will depend upon the need expressed by our readers.



All questions should be mailed to Chaplain Hal M. Wells, Philadelphia State Hospital, Philadelphia 14, Pennsylvania.

Strategy and Tactics

FRANCIS O. AYRES
Rector of St. John's, Waterbury, Conn.

THE new plan of the National Council to spend $1,200,000 annually on a campaign of evangelism through radio, movies, and advertising has received wide publicity. Personally, I think the plan is, in general, a good one. Certainly the Church should try to utilize these new mediums in preaching the Gospel. Although the method of raising the funds will not be as effective or as painless as the plan seems to indicate, most parishes will, I hope, do their best to raise their share.

There is, however, at least one great fallacy in the plan. It assumes that when the funds have been provided it will be easy to produce good religious movies, radio programs, and advertising copy. Mr. Jordan ought to know better. He went to Europe in order to produce a film for use in connection with the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief. The result, "Not By Bread Alone," was as ineffective a bit of movie-making as I have seen in a long time. Indeed, the same thing can be said for all the movies produced by or for the National Council. "We Too Receive" (the one about the aviator rescued by a Christian native) might be cited in refutation of this opinion but I think it serves to clinch the argument. The lessons to be gained from that movie, in the order of the force with which they were made, were: 1) it is exciting to be an aviator; 2) Christians help each other and 3) missionary support can be justified by the profit motive. If the third was the lesson intended, the theology involved is, to say the least, open to question. The fact of the matter is that there are men with technical skill, men with good theology, and men with imagination, but there are not, as yet, any with the combination of the three qualities necessary to produce good religious movies. Unless they are hiding, they must be developed.

The same point is more or less true about radio programs. In the discussion of the plan, Bishop Dun pointed out the fact that the proposed radio program would bring us in competition with other programs. Well with what program or programs do we intend to compete—the Catholic Hour, the Lutheran Hour, the Old Fashioned Revival Hour, or the type of soap opera which uses Biblical names and purports to be a presentation of Biblical stories? If we are going to avoid direct competition, we will have to develop something new, which might not be a bad thing for radio as well as for the Church. Again the men to do the job must be trained, for if they exist they have been hiding their light under a bushel.

The part of the plan which calls for "Color ads in mass circulation magazines and farm papers" sounds the easiest and will be, I should think, the most difficult. At least we are in this field further from anything really effective than in the others. The Church cannot invent and slap around such words as "creamy goodness," "double-whipped" or "triple-rich" unless it wants to aid in the final death-blow to all meaning in words. What the Church must learn is to present the most profound truths known to man in concise, dignified yet forceful language. Color, when available (not in Farm Journals), will not help much. What is needed are men trained in both copy-writing and theology. It will take time to produce such men.

It is good to see our Church ready to enter new fields with adequate funds. We desperately need such leadership. But let's put the plan on a sound basis. We will need three years to develop the skills necessary to produce good religious movies, radio programs and advertising. What we need the $1,200,000 for now is for experimentation along these lines. I believe that if we present the plan as one of developing methods of evangelism which hardly exist today, we will not only avoid the disappointment and resentment which will come from viewing what we can produce now but we will, I believe, find more support from the members of the Church for the whole program.

Baptists Ask for Cooperation With UN and Russia

The Convention Deals With Various Social And International Problems in Resolutions

Edited by Sara Dill

Atlantic City, N. J. (RNS): — A resolution censuring the state department for "military plans and programs of an imperialistic nature evolved for protecting private foreign investments" was defeated at the closing session of the Northern Baptist convention here. The 4,000 delegates approved a substitute resolution supporting the United Nations. The original resolution, submitted by the resolutions committee, stated military alliances of nations have failed in the past and suspicion and ill will are aroused by military missions, financial or otherwise.

Declaring that international relations, particularly with Russia, cannot be improved in "an atmosphere of hate, fear and suspicion," the convention, in another resolution, asked that friendly cooperation with Russia be obtained by "interpreting all international negotiations upon a Christian basis of brotherhood." Churches were urged to make special efforts to create a better understanding of Russia through correspondence, lectures and study courses and by cooperating with the inter-church committee of the American Russian Institute. An attempt was made to strike from the resolution any reference to the institute on the grounds that its personnel and ideals were not known to the convention. However, the resolutions committee named outstanding religious leaders as members of the inter-church group and the resolution was carried as submitted.

In other resolutions the convention acted as follows: Opposed universal compulsory military training and called for discontinuing such training in the public schools. Asked the enactment by Congress and state legislatures of laws prohibiting discrimination in employment because of race, color, or origin. Pledged support of legislation to make available unused immigration quotas for displaced persons. Expressed concern over the growing loss of civil liberties, especially the decision of the Supreme Court permitting search of a home without a warrant. Urged the President to declare a general amnesty for all conscientious objectors, restoring them to full civil rights.

Worship Service

London (wireless to RNS): — The Archbishop of Canterbury conducted a service which opened the conference of the British Labor Party, meeting last week at Margate. Among those attending were Prime Minister Clement R. Attlee and other cabinet members. Philip Noel-Baker, secretary of state for air, read the lesson.

Dean Katz to Speak

Evanston, Ill.: — Dean Wilbur J. Katz of the University of Chicago law school is to be the speaker at the Seabury-Western commencement on June 12. The alumni are to meet the day before when there will be an address by Dom Gregory Dix of England. That afternoon a stained glass window, dedicated to Bishop Frank E. McElwain, is to be unveiled. The speakers at the supper meeting are to be Bishop Emrich of Michigan and Prof. Arthur H. Forster of the Seabury-Western faculty. Major alterations are being made in the Bishop Anderson chapel of the seminary in time for commencement.

Monks in Politics

Athens (wireless to RNS): — Aghion Oros, an independent state in Eastern Macedonia inhabited entirely by Eastern Orthodox monks, is reported to have become an area of sharp tension between a group which wants to preserve the community's exclusively Greek character and another which is seeking to bring it under pan-Slav influences. Although the religious state of Aghion Oros is located within Greek territory, it contains monasteries belonging to the Bulgarian, Russian, Serbian and Romanian Orthodox Churches. The monks of these Churches, according to Greek Orthodox officials here, are taking advantage of current political complications in Greece to stir up dissension, their ultimate object being to make Aghion Oros a pan-Slav stronghold.

Open conflict is said to be developing between the Slav and Greek monasteries. Greek Orthodox sources here said the Slav monks, acting on instructions from the governments of Yugoslavia and Bulgaria, have organized a "Religious Pan-Slav Society," aimed at changing the status of Aghion Oros and alienating it from the Greek state. This Society is reported to have the support of the Russian government.

Union Directors

New York: — Benjamin Strong, president of a large New York bank, was elected president of the board of directors of the Union Seminary on May 20th. He has formerly served as treasurer and Mr. Frank P. Shepherd, also a New York banker, was elected to this post. Mr. Strong succeeds Thatcher M. Brown, president since 1936, who is the senior partner of a large banking firm.

Goes to Virginia

Cleveland: — The Rev. Theodore H. Evans, rector of St. Paul's, Cleveland Heights, has accepted the rectorship of St. Paul's, Charlottesville, Virginia, effective September 1. This parish ministers to the University of Virginia where 1,100 of the 4,500 students state a preference for the Episcopal Church.

No C. O. Amnesty

Alexandria, Va.: — If the diocese of Virginia has its way there will be no amnesty for conscientious objectors. The 1946 convention passed a resolution urging full amnesty for them, whether in prison or serving in camps. But this year a special committee headed by Judge John Paul recommended that the resolution be not reaffirmed. The convention also turned down a recommendation to permit local churches to decide whether or not they wanted women on vestries.

Rector Retires

Titusville, Pa.:—The Rev. Albert Broadhurst has formally terminated his rectorship of St. James' Memorial Church here, after service for 35 years. He is retiring from the active ministry and is now living at Townville, Pa. Mr. Broadhurst is secretary of the diocese of Erie, a member of the standing committee and of the executive council.

Delaware Convention

Christiana Hundred, Del.:—A report by a committee on Negro work, calling for new missions and agitation for improved health facilities, was unanimously backed at the convention of Delaware, meeting here at Christ Church. Bishop McKinstry in his address stressed the need for increased attention to youth, and a committee was appointed to promote work among Episcopal students at the University of Delaware.

Speakers at the convention were the Rev. Charles Cadigan who urged support for the Church Society for College Work and Mr. Robert D. Jordan who explained the proposed radio-movie-ad campaign of evangelism. The speaker at the convention dinner was Bishop Angus Dun of Washington.

Got a Cassock?

New York:—Thousands of pastors in Europe have lost their robes and cassocks as a result of the war. There is no chance today to get black cloth—or any other kind for that matter—to make new ones. Church World Service is hoping to find 10,000 second hand robes and cassocks in the United States. If you have one send it to C.W.S. at 37 East 36th St., New York 16.

Bishop Consecrated

London, England: — William M. Selwyn, archdeacon of Bath and prebendary in Wells Cathedral, was consecrated suffragan bishop of Fulham and bishop-in-charge of the Anglican Churches in Europe at St. Paul's Cathedral here. Bishop Blair Larned, in charge of our churches in Europe, flew from Geneva to attend the service at the invitation of the Bishop of London.

Bishop Larned arrived in New York last week to report to the Presiding Bishop on the situation in Europe and to fill a number of speaking engagements.

Bishop Gesner Speaks

Boston: — Bishop Conrad Gesner, coadjutor of South Dakota, was the headliner at the meeting of the Auxiliary of Massachusetts, held in connection with the presentation of the United Thank Offering which was $14,475.

Diocese To Elect

Decatur, Ill.: — The diocese of Springfield (Illinois) is to hold a special convention on June 9 to elect a successor to Bishop John Chanler White who retired at the close of the convention held here on May 21. A committee reported favorably on seven men out of the 26 names placed before them: the Rev. John Higgins of Minneapolis; the Rev. Richard Loring of Baltimore; the Rev. Herbert L. Miller of Champaign, Ill.; Dean Claude W. Sprouse of Kansas City; the Rev. Walter H. Stowe of New Brunswick, N. J.; the Rev. Jeremiah Wallace of Tucson, Arizona; Dean Edward Welles of Buffalo, N. Y.

The convention paid tribute to Bishop White, who was eighty the day of convention, with a dinner attended by about 500 persons at which Bishop Ivins of Milwaukee was the chief speaker. The convention also voted Bishop White a retiring present of $2,000.

Hit Segregation

Boston:—The convention of Massachusetts passed a resolution calling for "the elimination of discrimination and racial segregation in seminaries accredited by the Church" and called for an investigation of the situation.

Harold Bowen Elected

Denver: — The Rev. Harold Bowen, rector of St. Mark's, Evanston, Illinois, was elected bishop coadjutor of Colorado at the recent diocesan convention. Nineteen men were nominated but six of the diocesan clergy withdrew their names. The first ballot cut the number to six, with Mr. Bowen receiving the largest number from both the clergy and the laity. He received the necessary two-thirds vote on the clergy second ballot and on the lay delegate fourth ballot.

The convention and the Auxiliary, meeting concurrently, attended a memorial service for the late Bishop Johnson, for many years editor of THE WITNESS, and Bishop Ingley paid a tribute to him in his convention address.

The Rev. Thomas V. Barrett, head of the division of college work of the National Council, was the speaker at the convention dinner.

Evangelism Is Urged

Hartford, Conn.: — Bishop Budlong in his address to the convention of Connecticut called upon churchmen to join in a diocesan program of evangelism next fall, aimed at revitalizing the present membership and bringing in new members. He asked for groups in each parish that would study the faith and practice of the Church. He supported the National Council's radio-movie-ad plan but stated that such a publicity campaign "will be of small avail unless at the same time we of the Church more earnestly and effectively live and practice what we profess to believe." The convention unanimously endorsed the proposal of Bishop Budlong and instructed him to appoint committees to further it.

Bishop Walter Gray, coadjutor, in his address stressed the need for new missions in many parts of the state to meet the needs of a growing population; called for better religious training for both children and adults; cited an urgent need for well qualified men for the ministry.

Justice Owen J. Roberts, president of the House of Deputies, was the speaker at the convention dinner, sponsored by the Church Club, and called upon the United States to take the lead in promoting the federation of "like-minded" democratic nations.

Minnesota Convention

Minneapolis: — There were four bishops at the convention of Minnesota which met at St. Mark's Cathedral here, May 20-21: Bishop Keeler, Bishop Kemerer, suffragan of the diocese, Bishop McElwain, the retired bishop of the diocese, and Bishop Lane W. Barton, the bishop of Eastern Oregon who was the speaker at the convention dinner.

Bishop Keeler, in his address, said that in his opinion "the question of clergy supply is the most serious one confronting the Church today. The whole question of clergy salaries

STOP LOOKING AND LISTEN

An Invitation to the Christian Faith by Chad Walsh

In persuasive manner and in pungent style STOP LOOKING AND LISTEN contains a little primer of Christian belief. Mr. Walsh begins by exposing the cult of secular optimism, eyes closely some standard stumbling blocks to belief, then presents an outline of Christianity and its varied meanings together with some frank words on the advantages and disadvantages of being a Christian. He closes with a view of Christianity and society, and a statement of the challenge to the convert.

came into the picture. I cannot escape the conviction that the vestries and people in our smaller places must rouse themselves to a realization that salaries are too low to keep promising men at work."

He also announced that Bishop Kemerer, having reached the age of retirement, would submit his resignation to the House of Bishops in November, but that he would not ask for episcopal assistance at this time but instead would use the money to employ a director of religious education.

The convention adopted a budget of $124,610.

Evangelism Needed

Albuquerque, N. M.:—Bishop Stoney called for increased emphasis on personal evangelism and increased confirmations at the convocation of the district of New Mexico and Southwest Texas meeting in Gallup, N. M. The convocation passed a resolution calling upon General Convention to provide a more equitable basis for clergy pensions and to equalize the method of calculating pensions for bishops and other clergy.

Wants a Suffragan

Syracuse, N. Y.:—Bishop Malcolm Peabody urged the election of a suffragan bishop at the convention of Central New York, held here May 13-14. He declared that the duties of Archdeacon Higley, who is both diocesan secretary and archdeacon, were so heavy that missionary work was being neglected. He declared that reorganization was called for and suggested either a secretary and an archdeacon or a secretary and a suffragan bishop. He himself prefers the latter since a bishop would make it possible for all visitations and confirmations to be taken by bishops of the diocese without calling in outside aid. A committee of ten clergy and ten laymen was appointed to investigate the changes proposed and to report as soon as possible.

A resolution, presented by the Rev. Burke Rivers who is chairman of the social service department of the diocese, was passed condemning the use of federal funds for parochial or sectarian schools. A budget was passed which will require an increase of $18,000 over present giving in order to meet a budget of $137,136.

A notable address was delivered by Prof. William Dennis of Pennsylvania State College who emphasized that we are a "dying Church" unless we concern ourselves with a greater evangelistic effort and a deeper concern for the missionary opportunities in the diocese, especially in rural areas.

To Enter Union

New York:—Two sons of Presiding Bishop Sherrill, Henry and Edmund, are to graduate from Yale this month and then plan to study for the ministry at Union Seminary here.

Welles Withdraws

Buffalo:—Dean Edward Welles of St. Paul's Cathedral here, who missed being elected Bishop coadjutor of Western New York by but a few votes at the recent convention, announced on May 28th that he "and the clergy who supported his candidacy have agreed to withdraw his name from any further consideration." A special convention for the election is to be held here June 10. In the last election, when the convention failed to elect after five ballots, the Rev. Louis W. Pitt, rector of Grace Church, New York, was short just one clergy ballot of election. The story is current that two clergy votes, intended for him, were not properly marked and therefore were not counted.

Northern Michigan

Iron Mt., Mich.:—Bishop Page in addressing the convention of Northern Michigan, held here May 21, commended the people of the diocese for the progress made in the past five years, and called upon them to work in the three years ahead toward the goal of making the diocese completely self-supporting. He also expressed concern over the status of religious education and urged that outstanding laymen be used as teachers. Robert Jordan, director of promotion of the National Council, spoke on world relief and also outlined the proposed radio-movie-ad plan of evangelism. Bishop Emrich of Michigan was the preacher at the convention service.

Rural Workers

Lebanon, Mo.:—Bishop Haines of Iowa led the quiet day at the meeting of the Rural Workers Fellowship of the diocese of West Missouri, meeting here May 20-22. At the business session there was discussion of minimum salaries, upkeep of mission properties, use of laymen in missions.

Des Moines, Iowa: — The convention of Iowa was held here May 13-14, with Bishop Haines stressing the need for advancing work in the diocese. Most of his recommendations were adopted: the acceptance of the mathematical quota for missions; a program for proportionate giving to be promoted by the departments of promotion and education; approval of the National Council's radio-movie-ad program of evangelism; approval of the proposed move of the bishop to this city from Davenport; instruction for lay readers; authorization for the diocese to join the state inter-church council; the appointment of a council of advice to the bishop in marital matters.

Bishop Quin of Texas was the speaker at the convention dinner and said that he hopes to confirm President Truman. "I'm out to get that boy," he said, "and I'll stay on his neck and not let go."

Meeting concurrently was the Auxiliary with Mrs. Quin the headliner.

MISS A. J. HART
Churchwoman of New York

THE WITNESS did a great service to the Church some years ago by pointing out in a number of articles and editorials that elections of bishops should be orderly, with an impartial committee to receive nominations and report to the convention. This was done I believe in Pennsylvania, Washington, Western Massachusetts and other dioceses, and these were all praised by your paper for this. However when it came to the election last week in New York this largest diocese in the Church reverted to the caucus method. Is THE WITNESS to let this pass?

FREDERICK M. ELIOT
President of the Unitarian Association

I greatly appreciate your courtesy in sending me a copy of THE WITNESS of May 22 containing your article concerning Stephen Fritchman and the recent crisis in the affairs of THE CHRISTIAN REGISTER.

Without expecting you to agree with me, I simply want to go on record as saying that the action taken by our board of directors which was ratified by the action of our annual meeting last Thursday was not due to any basic change of policy or attitude and most certainly does not represent a surrender to the spirit of a "witch hunt" or a "red hunt."

In a release issued to the press following the annual meeting, the officers of the association stated that they interpreted the action taken as a mandate to follow the straight road of true liberalism without yielding to pressure from either the extreme right or the extreme left.

MISS RUTH HUNTER
Churchwoman of New York

The issue of May 29th has just arrived and I hasten to thank you for it. There has been a good deal of discussion as to whether or not the Federal Council of Churches is "leftist" and this number is an effective answer to the charge. I hope that the number may reach those laymen of Alabama and elsewhere who seem so filled with fear of honest discussion of vital matters.

A FORMER CHAPLAIN
Residing in the Southwest

I am much interested in the ex-chaplain's potent comments, quoted by you, and in your issue of the 8th and also in your comments about alleged clergy shortages on the 15th. The two things relate, naturally, to each other.

As an ex-chaplain, I endorse all your chaplain said. The chaplains did get a raw deal. A friend suggested to me that bishops expected to fill all the impossible, vacant missionary posts with returned chaplains who were out of jobs and had to take whatever was offered. I just returned from conducting a mission for a friend in a district 1500 miles from here. He is an ex-navy chaplain with a wife and two children. The place he has is impossible, but my hat is off to him for the guts and the faith he displays, and his determination to carry on with his vocation to the priesthood, wherever it places him.

I have been out of the army nearly fifteen months and am still without work. I may be an unemployable screw-ball, but the fact remains that this is my first unemployment in more than twenty years as a pecusan minister. Before four and a half years in the army, I had one parish for one year, another for four years and a third for ten years, in that order.

I don't mind for myself, but my wife has now become the breadwinner for the family, and my two children of high school age probably think of their old man as a loafer.

May I add my voice to those who ask, "If there's a clergy shortage what about many of us now unemployed?" Like your chaplain friend, I suspect there are many of us without work.

So far as basic stipends are concerned, why not a clerical union with striking powers, until a living wage is provided?

Please do not use my name, it may embarrass my bishop and others.

MISS RUTH HAEFNER
Churchwoman of Portland, Ore.

The May 22 WITNESS is filled from cover to cover with pertinent items. You certainly are right on the case of Mr. Fritchman and the Unitarians. The board of the Unitarian Church here voted 10 to 3 that their pastor should not introduce Henry Wallace at a meeting here.

Stresses Need for Relevant And Creative Faith

Only Thus Can Men and Nations Come to Terms With the Tremendous Pressures of Modern Life

By Charles D. Kean

President of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship

Kirkwood, Mo.:—Will the Protestant Episcopal Church be able to make a vital contribution to the world-wide need for a relevant and creative faith by which men and nations may come to terms with the tremendous pressures of modern life? This is an open question.

Those of us who have lived within the Episcopalian tradition are used to it. We know what it does to satisfy our own spiritual longings. We know that the heritage we have received, handed down and developed since the days of the Anglican Reformation, is one of faith tested in life. But in terms of these modern days, our feeling of satisfaction may actually be an escape. Certainly in terms of modern needs, there is no guarantee that the world will appreciate our sets of values.

The primary concern of the evangelical in the Protestant Episcopal Church is that our heritage of faith and practice be made available today, not in abstraction from society, but in terms which have a real meaning in these days of colossal political, economic and physical power. This commits us to unity between the Churches. And this is much more of an issue than whether we Episcopalians find internal unity, desirable as that may be.

The core of evangelical faith today, as always, is the preaching of Christ crucified as the revolutionary factor in the lives of individuals and groups, with the Church being the fellowship of those who share that transforming faith. And it is our evangelical conviction that this faith, when presented as itself, not compounded with alien elements, is as vital and relevant today as in the time of Paul, Augustine and Luther.

There are two basic doctrines which the evangelical can never compromise, even to secure internal unity in the Church, else that unity will be at the expense of relevance. The first of these is the doctrine of Justification by Faith. There is no substitute for the personal conviction of each individual Christian, because it is by means of his faith that the Church itself comes to life in every age. By means of individual faith, man exercises his freedom and chooses the basic group setting which will give meaning to his life.

There is no way by which the question can be by-passed which Christ asked the disciples on the road to Caesarea-Philippi—"Whom do ye say that I am?" Unless a man shares personally, individually, immediately in Peter's confession, "Thou art the Christ," he can have no functional share in the Christian answer to the world. Except he consciously and deliberately makes Peter's confession his own in the context of actual political and economic and social decisions, his Church is not actually different in any significant way from some kind of fraternal order, proud of its ancestry but with nothing much to say.

It is only in the setting of Justification by Faith—our own personal conviction—that we create in the grace of God a fellowship which can have a transforming impact on the world. But lest this fellowship become apostate to the faith which created it, there is the twin doctrine of evangelical conviction—The Priesthood of All Believers.

This second doctrine is the statement that the job of bearing Christian witness is common to the entire body of the fellowship, and that it is the function of the official ministry to represent and dramatize liturgically what is proper to the entire Church. The official priesthood is in this fundamental sense created by the Holy Spirit, which is the life force, not of an order of ministry, but of the whole body which chooses to deputize certain individuals to one ministry in Church administration and other people to other ministries in political and economic life.

The doctrine of the Priesthood of All Believers saves the Church from the foolish pretensian that one tradition of official ministry is in some intrinsic way superior to the traditions of other bodies. It also saves the Church from allowing the laity to abdicate ultimate authority and responsibility to a supposedly superior order of priests, which will then make pronouncements on faith and morals in a vacuum without really changing the course of history. Particularly is the Eucharist saved from being a sacrificial rite offered by a superior individual on behalf of others, but rather our Holy Communion retains its apostolic meaning. It is the sacrifice of "our selves, our souls and bodies" which all of us offer in many ways as the minister leads us in that act of sacramental identification with our Lord.

There is one particular area where the force of evangelical conviction must make itself felt if it is to relate our Anglican heritage to the need of the world. The evangelical is committed uncompromisingly and unequivocally to the practice of what is called "open communion." Indeed, any other kinds look to him like a blasphemy. If unity in Christ is the answer to a divided world, who are we Episcopalians to put man-made stumbling blocks in the way?

Several persons have proposed possible ways for our Church to achieve internal unity. The differences of opinion at the last General Convention have bothered them. It is too bad when there is variance within the household of faith, but it is a betrayal and a tragedy when faith itself must be dulled in order to avoid variance. We of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship will be glad to discuss all possible ways to strengthen the internal solidarity of the Protestant Episcopal Church with anyone, provided that we can remain loyal to the apostolic heritage of "Justification by Faith," "The Priesthood of All Believers" and "Open Communion."

If these central evangelical convictions are maintained, the Church has a basis upon which to winnow the wheat from the chaff in matters of religious definition and practice. Above all it can talk to the world in terms of what the world needs—a principle upon which the divided personalities of individuals can be unified, and a loyalty in terms of which a divided society can find a realistic unity.

The dean of the conference is the Rev. E. Dargan Butt, instructor at Seabury-Western Seminary, and there are lectures by distinguished authorities in rural life. Those attending are to make a tour of the farm given to the National Council as a center for rural Church work this coming Saturday, and the following day members of the conference are to preach in neighboring parishes and missions. There are about sixty enrolled, including clergy, women workers, seminarians, representing all parts of the country.

Sewanee, Tenn.: — Ellis Arnall, former governor of Georgia and alumnus of the University of the South, was the speaker at the commencement exercises here on June 9 when about fifty men received degrees. The sermon at the service the day before was preached by Bishop Scarlett of Missouri.

Those to receive honorary doctorates were Mr. Arnall, Senator Harry P. Cain, Bishop Quarterman of North Texas, the Rev. L. Valentine Lee of Jacksonville, the Rev. Willis P. Gerhart of Abilene, Texas, William R. Webb of Bell Buckle, Tenn., Oscar N. Torian of Indianapolis and Charles S. Piggott of Washington.

HISTORIC PARISH RECEIVES BELLS

Philadelphia:—Old Christ Church here was presented with two new bells on June 4 which have been added to the set of eight that rang with the Liberty Bell on July 4, 1776. They were given by the neighborhood business men's association of the parish which is composed of men of all sects and creeds. The bells are symbolic of the spirit of freedom, being cast from metal captured from the Germans, Japanese and Italians — metal originally forged into weapons to crush liberty. They are given in memory of men of the neighborhood who fought in world war two. The metal which came from the army ordnance on order of President Truman, was shipped to the famous Meneely Bell works at Troy, N. Y., whose craftsmen studied the existing bells in order to determine the right tones for the two new bells. When they were installed the workmen found that the sturdy belfry was ready to take the weight—420 pounds and 250 pounds.

Special ceremonies marked the dedication; Rabbi D. A. Jessurun Cardozo gave the invocation; Bishop Oliver Hart blessed the bells; Rector E. Felix Kloman received them from the committee of the business men; Robert T. McCracken, chancellor of the diocese of Pennsylvania, gave the address.

COMMENCEMENT AT VOORHEES

Denmark, S. C.: — President-elect Harold L. Trigg of St. Augustine's College was the speaker at the commencement of Voorhees Normal and Industrial School, held here May 28th. Bishop Gravatt presented diplomas to 34 from the junior college; 44 from the high school and 22 tradesmen.

It was the 50th commencement, and for 25 of these years J. E. Blanton has been principal. He writes THE WITNESS: "We retire tomorrow —my wife and I." E. H. McClenney, former dean at St. Augustine's became principal on June 1.

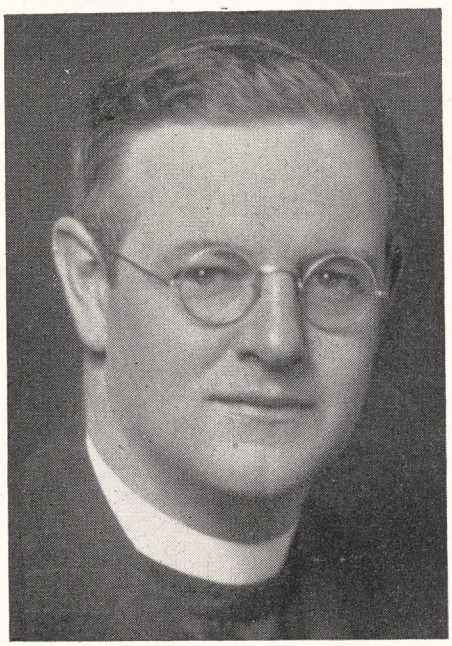
The Education for Evangelical Christians Is Vital



The Responsible Answer to Life's Challenge Has to Be Hammered Out in Parishes and Homes

By Charles F. Penniman
Vice-President of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship

St. Louis, Mo.: — The turmoil in the place of education has become an open sight for the most casual observer. This may be more in the public eye when the occurrence is in a national headquarters, but it is not only there; it is everywhere. Neither do we consider that it will be healed by curing a national headquarters. Even that eminence can not carry the errors of us all; perhaps it has already carried too much of the blame. The urgency is where the people are and they are at home with their own pastors.

A turmoil is not always bad, it would be only if it were futile and led to dead results. Perhaps we are discovering that the ingenuity and best hunch methods are not really relevant to the requirements of education in religion, even though they often result in letters to the papers about thriving and popular Sunday schools. We must have known for a long time that the most sophisticated and polished techniques of general education are no good for us unless we know what we want to do with them, in spite of the published pictures of childishly contrived Indian villages or well planned temples at Jerusalem. Many people have been saying that we need a new understanding of the whole matter; and, if the turmoil really leads there, one might look on it and say "Behold, it is very good."

But there is one response to such a challenge that would strike dread into the heart of any evangelical, or any other honest Christian for that matter. Turmoil in our times has engendered the cry from many cravenly tormented people: "It is all too hard for us; We need an authoritarian answer." Sometimes the lazy and sometimes the energetic who believe in authoritarianism, choose them out a leader to whom they would turn over this problem of a new understanding. This authority will understand, they assume; he can put everything we ought to be doing into a nice uniform set of packages and deal them out. The dead body of minimum knowledge, so delivered, would doubtless serve two purposes: whoever made it would be an obvious scapegoat who, when the time is full, could be diligently driven out of the camp for the sake of a purged conscience; and, in the meantime, the really responsible body of all "believers" would not have to be disturbed by the turmoil. There are both Churches and states which have lived for a long time on the basis of an authoritarian substitute for a personal meeting of the demands that life presents, but they are filled with violence and blood; no one doubts that the day cometh.

But let no one suppose that the alternative to a national headquarters approach is that in these days every man shall do what is right in his own eyes. Such a state of affairs has meant that the highways become so unsafe that traffic is not worth the trouble. No, the promises of God are where the people are and they are at home in their own parishes with their own pastors. Of course their parish is not just an accident of history, neither is their pastor just a nice man of uncertain parentage. Both are in the context of a living response to a question which only an inward ear can hear. They have heard and are giving an answer to an insistent demand for their own clarification: "Whom do ye say that I am?" Their association for the answer is with angels and archangels and with all the company of heaven; it is also with the glorious company of the apostles, the goodly fellowship of the prophets, and the noble army of witnesses. The question is not just any old question and the answer cannot be whatever happens to come to mind. These fellows, our associates, are listening; and outside of their company the question would only be another batting of the breeze in the first place. This is a holy apostolic community, but the only place it knows itself to be such is where the people are making the decisions of their day to day life in the recollection of the question and in the realization of the answer.

This does not rule out the national headquarters, rather it gives it meaning and an honest Church will not ask it to do the work that can only be done where the people are. Nor does it rule out the House of Bishops with its demands for a national headquarters, rather it makes them real; it knows them to be set apart within the group life to perform functions within that life. A modern way of saying it is that they are constitutional officers, an ancient way of saying it is that they are an apostolic succession. The meaning is the same if one knows where the heart of the matter lies: it is in the people, where the Holy Spirit is promised and realized, where the vital question is being asked and the resonant response sounded. The thing is all backwards when some say that lacking a bishop there is no Church; getting the horse before the cart, the saying is: without the Church there is no bishop. And their office, when it is real, speaks to us a unity far transcendent and precisely in Christ. It will not seem slighting to any one to realize that in some such setting we also have an educational national headquarters. It has no superknowledge, and in its name cannot be recommended any super-authority; that would be too easy a way of supposing that we might come to ourselves after squandering our substance in every form of noisy unreality. No, an evangelical understanding of the educational reality is not latitudinarian nor anti-nomian. Fundamentalists have always wanted to suppose that it was a kind of haphazard easy tolerance because fundamentalists never know where a living and responsive authority really is; they always distort the understanding that transforms the faithful answerer; they make the keys of the kingdom of heaven a kind of thing that can be converted into property and stored away somewhere. But the faithful, who are charged to nurture their children in the chastening and admonition of the Lord, will not be led astray to understand their opportunity in fundamentalist terms.

But what about this matter of a new understanding, or, as some say, a new approach to the Church's education which the people know in the echo of their practical cry, "Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God." If the ingenuity and best hunch methods are irrelevant to this high task, and the best polished techniques of general education are no use to us unless we know what we want to accomplish with them, and there would be no good purpose in electing the best possible commission to solve the dilemma, and we only tease God when we clamor for a sign from heaven even through the "proper channels"; then where do we look? Would it be too much to suggest that the blessed company of all faithful people go to work? There is no place for them to do that except where they are. That might be it: but they will need understanding of where they are as well as of the meaning of their faithfulness; and no one can tell them. This would be a discovery of their very own. Guidance might be suggested and here is one of many spots at which it might be picked up.

Sometime or other these children of the household are going to hear the words: "Lift up your hearts"; and they will be expected to give a highly personal answer. These words when they come to life do not seem to us just words of good counsel from here or there; they are in the language of the fellowship of the Holy Spirit. They are heard by those who have been, and who are, exploring that fellowship; to others they might be heard as a moral injunction in the form "you ought to lift yourself"; or, as an exhortation in the form "heave ho, now, it is heavy but let's do it"; or in a host of other objective and irrelevant guises. A mighty achievement would be wrought in this group life if its young, and old alike, might hear them from within, in the form of the proclamation of a new and undreamed of possibility for a dimension of living.

But we all know that to hear the language of a family vitally one must be exploring the life of that family as a member, and this is a vital hearing that is being talked about. The same thing would go for hearing the language of the Chamber of Commerce or of the Communist party; any language. But it is only a living organism that has a language. Who can, for instance, in the year 1947 hear the language of the Congress of the United States, which sounds so like sheer barbarism. Perhaps here is represented too truly the uncouth sound of a people that has no real and common basis for understanding the meaning of its own life, a people that is no people, a generation that has lost its vital language. The country is both like that and not like that. If the Church has a real and common basis for understanding the meaning of its own life it holds it tenuously. How can the Church, where the people are, tighten its meaning; how can it accompany its young in the exploration of its commonness? These are not answers, these are questions. It is firmly understood that people ought to stop giving the final answer before the real first question is asked.

The Rev. E. Felix Kloman presided at unique ceremonies at Christ Church, Philadelphia, last week. He is a leader of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship

There is no doubt that where the people are, where they live in the common day by day enterprise, is being hammered out the responsible answer to life's challenge, which is this faith. The practical thing, then, would be for the community to tighten its apprehension of its commonness, not through studying its Prayer Book but by living its life; and, by the process of living together meaningfully, accompany its young in the exploration of its hidden brightness. Then would the Prayer Book, and the Scriptures, too, come alive as the vehicle of a living way. Where hearts are indeed being lifted up unto the Lord, he is speaking into them really. There we know that Christian education is going on: exploration of this community is taking place, the values of its peace are being tasted, the commitment wherein members are partakers of the resurrection is being known.

NOTABLES AT HOBART

Geneva, N. Y.:—Eleven notables took part in the commencements of Hobart and William Smith Colleges, June 5-9, taking part in discussions on "the moral and civil responsibility of education to the community" before about a thousand alumni. Those taking part were Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt; the Hon. John G. Winant, former ambassador to England; Paul Herzog of the National Labor Relations Board; William A. Eddy, former president of the colleges and now assistant to the secretary of state; Frank C. Moore, comptroller of the state of New York; President Edmund E. Day of Cornell; the Rev. Robert I. Gannon of Fordham; Amory Houghton, industrialist; A. A. Taylor of Fisk University; Edward P. Curtis, former chief of the U. S. strategic air force in Europe.

Another distinguished guest was Bishop Charles K. Gilbert of New York who preached the baccalaureate sermon in Trinity Church on the 8th.

Toward a Living Marriage Canon

by Stoughton Bell

Chancellor of the Diocese of Massachusetts

I AM sorry to disagree with my learned brother Col. Dykman, chancellor of Long Island, but as I see the situation his argument is based upon a wrong premise. In his article "The Meaning of the Marriage Canon" appearing in the March 9th issue of The Living Church he refers to the report of the commission that reported two new canons to the House of Bishops and says "In the canon presented as proposed canon 17 and enacted after amendment by the House of Bishops, as canon 18." But the canon presented by the commission was not amended but was turned down in the House of Bishops and a committee of Bishops was appointed to bring in a new canon. This committee reported as follows: (I quote from the "Report of the Special Committee on Marriage Legislation" to the House of Bishops.) "Your special committee consisting of the Bishop of Missouri, the Bishop of North Carolina, the Bishop of Upper South Carolina and the Bishop of Western New York to consider the question of legislation, upon the subject of holy matrimony (Note that the committee was appointed "to consider the question of legislation upon the subject of holy matrimony" not upon the commission's report) recommend unanimously the adoption of the following resolutions:

I. Resolved (the House of Deputies concurring) that canon 16 be amended to read as follows: "canon 16" (now canon 17) "Of the Solemnization of Holy Matrimony"

Then follows the canon as it was adopted by the General Convention

II. Resolved (the House of Deputies concurring) that canon 17 be amended to read: "canon 17" (now canon 18) "Of Regulations Respecting Holy Matrimony"

Then follows the canon as it was adopted by the General Convention.

Therefore we are not dealing with the report of the commission and Col. Dykman's remarks concerning it cannot be taken as an interpretation of the canons drafted by the committee of Bishops. Who can say what interpretation that committee or even the House of Bishops that first adopted them would place on the words of the canons?

In attempting to interpret the canon I submit that we are not bound by an interpretation placed upon them by the commission that reported to the House of Bishops. Their report and the canons that accompanied it were not before the House of Deputies even in amended form.

Col. Dykman goes on to say "It never occurred to me that anyone could have the slightest doubt that the same rule governed both classes of applicants" i.e., for permission to be married after divorce by a minister of this Church for a judgment as to his or her marital status.

In this connection we should consider canon 16 "Of Regulations Respecting the Laity" that deals with the one "who desires a judgment as to his status in the Church and provides that he shall lodge * * an application with the bishop," and unless the bishop sees fit to require the person to be admitted or restored to the Holy Communion he shall "institute such inquiry as may be directed by the canons of the diocese * * * and should no such canon exist the bishop * * * shall proceed according to such principles of law and equity as will insure an impartial decision." (canon 16, sec. 2) section 3 (b) of the same canon provides that "any persons who have been married * * * otherwise than as this Church provides, may apply to the bishop for recognition of communicant status."

Let us assume then that one has remarried after divorce and a minister of this Church has "cause to think that that person has been married otherwise than as the word of God and the discipline of this Church allow" such minister before receiving such person to the ordinance of Holy Communion

> "shall refer the case to the bishop for his godly judgment thereupon. The bishop, after due inquiry into the circumstances, and taking into consideration the godly discipline both of justice and of mercy, shall give his judgment thereon in writing." canon 16, sec. 3 (a).

If then Col. Dykman is right when canons 16, 17 and 18 are read together the bishop is not limited in granting permission to a divorced person to be married by a minister of this Church to the cases where he finds the facts set forth in canon 17 section 2 clause (b) since in the cases of a divorced person already married the bishop must take into consideration "the godly discipline both of justice and mercy."

Let us now consider the phraseology of canon 18 section 2 clause (b). It should be remembered that this is a permissive canon. Under it the bishop can do nothing unless he is satisfied that the parties intend a true Christian marriage. (Italics mine)

> "If the bishop * * * is satisfied that the parties intend a true Christian marriage he may refer the application to * * * the court." (Italics mine)

The bishop is then warned that he must take care.

> "The bishop * * * shall take care that his * * * judgment is based upon and conforms to the doctrine of this Church, that marriage is a physical, spiritual and mystical union of a man and woman created by their mutual consent of heart, mind and will thereto, and is a holy estate instituted of God and is in intention life-long."

First let us deal with the sentence as it ended with the above quoted words. Assume if you will that the applicant was an active member of this Church in good standing and the amendment or dissolution of the former marriage had taken place more than one year since its entry in a civil court of competent jurisdiction and it was found by the bishop or the court to which he referred the question that the former marriage had not been a true Christian marriage as defined above. Under these circumstances it is hard for me to believe that the bishop could do otherwise than to declare that the facts establish that no marriage bond as the same is recognized by this Church existed. But Col. Dykman would say you have not taken into consideration the words that follow. This is true. They follow a semicolon and they read

> "But when any of the facts set forth in canon 17, section 2, clause (b) are shown to exist or have existed which manifestly establish that no marriage bonds as the same is recognized by this Church exists, the same may be declared by proper authority." (Italics mine)

These words like the rest of the section are merely permissive. They are not exclusive. Had it been intended that they should be exclusive the draftsmen should have used exclusive expressions such as "but only when the facts existed etc." can the bishop declare that no marriage bonds as the same is recognized by this Church exist. As I read the words they mean only that when those facts or any of them are found to exist the bishop should or may declare them.

Evangelical churchmen desire that the new marriage cannon be administered in a way which will result in an increasing number of Christian marriages. There is considerable disagreement concerning the meaning of the new canon passed by General Convention last September. While a determining factor will be the decisions handed down in different dioceses as the result of the consideration of actual cases, these decisions will be decided in large measure on the basis of the interpretation of different bishops and chancellors. Therefore, we believe that the following reply of Mr. Stoughton Bell, chancellor of the diocese of Massachusetts, to an earlier interpretation by Col. Dykman, chancellor of Long Island, is significant.—E.E.F.

What Makes a Good Missioner?

by Samuel M. Shoemaker

Rector of Calvary Church, New York

EVERYONE who is in close touch with the ever-changing moods of men and women will recognize that there is a "going in the tops of the mulberry trees" today which, if it be not yet full-blown spiritual awakening, may be the prelude to it. People's guilts and fears, their search for abiding security, their discovery that paganism and materialism do not actually work well over the long haul of daily life, have opened them to the influence of a vital religion. The amount of material in secular magazines relating to religious faith, the increasing number of commercial firms that realize nothing is more to the fore in the popular mind than interest in religion, are indications that the Church has seldom had a greater opportunity than it has at present.

We will agree also that whatever is to move in and capture this interest must have in it three qualities: (1) an experimental, inductive approach which gives to people a handle by which they may lay hold of a vital religious experience; (2) open-mindedness to new truth, readiness to meet the scientifically-minded half way and try to find common ground with them, appreciating and not condemning their special approach and conviction; and (3) rootage in the past, some previous trial and test which gives a historic basis, and establishes an organic relation with historic Christianity. All this gives to the Episcopal Church a rather special opportunity, if we will dig ourselves out of our conventional ruts and really give people what we have to give. And this applies, for obvious reasons in a particular way to the convinced evangelical members of the Episcopal Church.

One of the effective ways in which genuine evangelism has always been carried on is by parochial missions. A man experienced in this work is invited to visit a parish for a week, say, preaching every evening, meeting smaller groups throughout the day, and talking with individuals. Many people can date a fresh grip in their religious life to some special effort of this kind, supplementing the steady impact of the regular parish work.

Such missioners are not easy to find. Many who are trained in it belong to a very different school of thought from the evangelical. We have thought it well, therefore, to outline some of the characteristics which should belong to such a missioner, hoping in this way to cause men to be recognized who may now be ready to do this kind of work, but have not been given opportunity to do it, and to encourage others to "stir up the gift that is in them," latent, perhaps unrecognized, but at this time greatly needed by the Church. We are not describing an archangel; we are denoting qualities that might all be found in some men, and some of which might be found in quite a number.

The first characteristic is that a man should know what conversion is in his own life. Whatever the relation between sudden and gradual elements, the essential experience must be there, or he cannot pass it on to other people. Defeat in human relations, defeat in character, inability to work with others, temper, pride—these things must have been dealt with through such a spiritual struggle as has resulted in actually putting God first in his considerations and in his emotions. Clergy intent upon mere professional advancement, and itching to be somewhere else than where they are; clergy whose homes are divided because they have never been able to bring their wives to real fellowship in their ministry; clergy who are not on top of their personal problems, simply cannot have power. They may say the words, but they cannot transmit the life. The royal road of conversion seems to take us through some one decisive and initial surrender of ourselves to God and his will for us; and then to require numberless repetitions of this decision as fresh situations are reached. In the end, a man's message stems from his experience. All living Christianity has meant a fundamental change in human nature itself. Ian McLaren said a man could not preach a mood he had never passed through. Our message can only come from an ever-deepening dipping down into the well of our own increasing experience of our Lord himself.

The second characteristic must be a knowledge of how to make Christian conversion attractive and accessible to others. It is doubtful if a man can be effective in speaking to crowds in public today if he is not familiar with the problems of individuals whom he sees in private. If he gets his information, and draws his illustrations, mostly from books, his knowledge of human problems will grow rarified and abstract; he will deal with an unreal human being, and he will miss the special "zeit-geist" of his own time. The way of Christian conversion should become second nature to him, he should increasingly become as famliar with its rationale and progress as an artist is with the techniques of his art. One of the marks of the missioner's knowledge of conversion is his own unconcern as to mere numbers converted and their prominence, his complete disregard of any prestige accruing to himself in his calling, his freedom from distress and name calling when the mission does not go right. The steps in helping people to Christian conversion are clear. They center in a person coming face to face with the tangled impossibilities of his own life and the life about him, the ability to see where he has some responsibilities and can do something about them, but, more than all else, his discovery that the whole shape of things, whether he can do anything about them or not, is different with Christ at the center of them than with himself at that accustomed point. But no one can make others believe things like that. It is a discovery. The steps begin with a getting together, sometimes formal, sometimes not, but always carefully considered. A common ground, a view into the hidden places (shared or not) follow. Wesley has said that what we do is "offer him Christ" then help him see where this Christ meets his precise needs. On the heels of such real presentation of Christ, follow such responses as these: decision to turn the situation over to him, and to surrender himself with his sins or needs, in as full a self-surrender as he is able to make; such restitution to others as may be necessary to right old wrongs; the cultivation of spiritual habits—prayer, Bible study, church-going, which fortify the new life; and expressing the new life in home relations, in his own field of work, and in seeking to draw others into the faith which has captured him. The missioner's mind should be stocked with stories of persons who have found faith today, from which he can draw illustrations and analogies for those with whom he counsels or to whom he preaches. One man who had groped for years in spiritual search of reality went to live with a minister and his wife who knew the way of Christian conversion, came away a completely new man; but asked, "Why did none of the others know enough to teach me the simple psychology of all this?" But the missioner will know that it isn't conversion if they understand it as "making wrong things right for them"; more nearly he would mean "making them right for wrong things." And it does not sound either priggish or proud when it is heard in the presence of Christ.

THE missioner must have a solid doctrinal basis for his work. This means he is not solely dependent upon experience however much he draws on it: he is dependent upon Christ the Lord, and his mighty acts of redemption. We must work out a truer synthesis between the modern art of counselling, with its careful effort not to dominate the thinking and decisions of the counsellee, and Christian evangelism which seeks to bring people to definite Christian faith and conviction. These may be supplementary, not contradictory, if we begin on solid Christian foundations but call upon the insights of the modern psychological approach which have much to teach us. Fundamentally, our own belief about Jesus gives us the right to offer him to others, and will often appeal to them as the real reason why we are content, adjusted, and purposeful ourselves. But this doctrine must often make its first appeal, not by our full announcement of it, but by its effects in our own lives. In talking with the woman at the well, Jesus did not begin by telling her who he was, but by getting into contact with her and her problem and meeting her need—later he told her about himself. People need doctrinal education. Theology is interesting when it is mixed with experience. So profound a doctrine as that of the Trinity is best explained as we begin with the fact that men have experienced God in these three ways—creator, redeemer, sanctifier. Perhaps the world was never riper for a reaffirmation of the typical Protestant doctrines of conversion, justification by faith, and the priesthood of all believers, than it is today. But these doctrines must be clothed with the life of relevance and of experience.

The missioner must know what mental sickness is, and how to deal with it. The amount of nervous and mental disturbance grows alarmingly; neurotics, psychotics, and those on the road towards being one or the other, usually seek some help in religious faith. Most of them will find general help in services and preaching, for the atmosphere of friendly welcome and of faith will assist them: but when it comes to counselling, we do well to have a doctor or psychiatrist, or both, working with us from their special angle. We must know that religion can be, for the mentally sick, an avenue of escape as well as an avenue towards reality. Such people cannot make the kind of spiritual decisions which normal people can make, and must be led along by more gradual steps: we can be of great assistance in helping them see what next step is indicated, and helping them to take it. But adequate dealing with them is a long, patient business, and we shall want to seek local help for them which they can depend upon long after we may have left town.

The missioner should be a man of fellowship. At Pentecost, Peter stood up "with the eleven." He preached, but he preached as of the company. The missioner should have a spiritual fellowship in his own parish backing him all the while in prayer, but he should have a growing fellowship in the parish where he is preaching, not only with the rector, but with others who will help him, guide him about local conditions, bring people to him, pray and plan for and with him daily. This is excellent training for the group—and for him! If he can take along two or three lay people with him, and train them in personal work so that they help him with it during the mission, it will serve two clear purposes. The sure sign of the return of apostolic Christianity is the spiritual nucleus, or cell. If we are spiritually vital, we should be creating these cells wherever we go. They are the best continuance of a mission after the missioner has gone: they provide a principle of continuity through which he may work, returning later on to nourish and sustain what has been begun. The cell is the very essence of the Christian organism—and the mission must itself be the impartation of a life, not the mere carrying out of a schedule of meetings and services. We need others about us for strength, for prayer, for corrective, and for impact.

The missioner must be a man of prayer. That is a bromide with a tomb in the middle of it. We all say this, to ourselves and to others. Then one day we really begin to pray—pray for people, pray not to succeed even for God, but to be his, and to be his channels. And that night when we preach, someone is standing beside us. We may not be so eloquent as we have been before, but we have more power. Prayer is not so much framing requests, as it is letting the whole power and life of God flow through us. We cannot pray without some effect upon us and so upon others. We shall do more to dispel ideas about magical prayer, or the selfish and immature prayer that wants its own way, by ourselves keeping in the power and spirit of prayer, than by any amount of argument or preaching about it. Keep the back of your mind open to the Holy Spirit as you preach. "As I hear I speak." Listen to people as you talk personally with them, with the forefront of your mind; and with the subconscious, keep listening to God. Prayer maintains the bridge-like quality of our lives, between needy people and the God who can supply all their need. One can see spiritual power fade, and the conduct of a mission become a purely intellectual or organizational matter, as prayer is neglected; and one can see the whole period charged with life, far beyond the deserts or the powers of the missioner himself, as the whole thing is bathed and soaked in prayer—his own, and all the intercessors he can muster.

Are there not men waiting to be called out into such service — men who feel inadequate (who would not?) but yet crave the adventure of stepping out in faith with God to do something which badly needs doing? Is there not great need in many, perhaps most, parishes for some extra spiritual effort, possibly in Advent or Lent, where a visiting minister might be called in, not to preach a lot of old stale sermons, but to do something new—to preach with conviction for a verdict, to preach for true conversion to Christ? Would not hundreds of such missions conducted in city and town and in rural areas bring new life and blessing to the Church as a whole, and refresh and encourage all the positive forces of our time that seek to create brotherhood and peace?

Then will you, gentle reader, not put this article down till you have gone on your knees and asked God's Holy Spirit to guide you in your part and responsibility for evangelical missions throughout our Church?

Some Comments On the Propers

WHENEVER anyone mildly suggests that revision of proper lessons appointed at the Holy Communion is needed a howl of protest goes up from certain quarters in our Church as though a proposal had been made to tinker with the Creed. But anyone who takes the trouble to examine the table of epistles and gospels as it is laid out in Easton and Robbins' The Eternal Word in the Modern World (Scribners, 1937) will see at once that our present Prayer Book schedule of lessons has nothing sacrosanct about it. Our present system goes back basically to a seventh century scheme made up at Rome, the rationale of which is often obscure. Meanwhile successive modifications of the original pattern have been made in the medieval Sarum use, in the first Prayer Book of 1549, and in the 1662 and 1928 revisions of our liturgy.

A revolution has taken place within the last hundred years with respect to our interpretation of Holy Scripture. There is not one of our seminaries now which does not teach a modern, critical approach to the Bible. Why should we be so 'fundamentalist' about the proper lessons anymore and continue to ignore the insights and corrections of modern critical study of the Scriptures? The Holy Communion lections are the pivot of the Church's ordered exposition of God's Word in all its fulness and riches. The preacher of that Word today, however, is often forced to ignore or to explain away the selections offered for our consideration.

The following comments are a few notes on some of the ineptitudes and obstacles put in our way by the present propers of chief festivals and holy days. (I pass over for the time being the matter of faulty translations—that is another large problem in itself.)

The gospels for the first and second Sundays after Christmas are chronologically out of order. The one for the first Sunday belongs to a vigil Eucharist for Christmas Eve; the other should not be read before the Epiphany gospel, which precedes it in point of time. (I hope to discuss at another time the inept custom which is growing in our Church of celebrating the first Eucharist of Christmas Day as an evening communion on its Vigil!) The epistle for the chief service on Christmas Day stops at the wrong place. We should either end it earlier (at verse 4) or extend it to include the first four verses of chapter 2 of Hebrews.

The gospels for the two communions on Easter Day are probably the worse selections in the Prayer Book. Neither of them presents us with the vision of the living, risen Lord, or with any positive teaching. Our faith in the resurrection does not rest on the empty tomb, but on the apostles' witness to their own meeting with Jesus alive again. Besides, the two stories of the empty tomb from St. Mark and St. John contradict one another. In the former the women are so afraid that they tell no one of their experience; in the latter Mary Magdalene runs to tell Peter and the beloved disciple what has happened. Neither account squares with the one in St. Luke. I believe most scholars would agree that the story in St. John is the least satisfactory one of all.

Similarly the propers on Ascension Day present critical problems of contradiction. The epistle says the Ascension took place forty days after Easter. The gospel puts it on the very day of the resurrection itself. We need a new gospel for this great feast. The present one says nothing which is not contained in the more detailed epistle.

Let us note a few other less happy selections. The gospel for the Conversion of St. Paul has to do strictly with the Twelve, and when a vacancy occurred in their number due to the defection of Judas, it was not St. Paul but Matthias who took his place. No first rate Old Testament scholar would defend the translation of 'maiden' as 'virgin' in the Isaiah prophecy read as the epistle on the Annunciation. This whole passage has to go—however much we may regret it—as a prop for the Virgin Birth. Likewise the testimony to the Transfiguration in the second epistle of Peter, read on that feast, is inauthentic. How much better as an epistle on Transfiguration would be II Corinthians 3:7-18! Finally, we need something better for the epistle at a Requiem than St. Paul's curious speculations about the Second Coming. It is hard to "comfort one another with these words."

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

"THE vigor and vitality of our democracy, as expressed in improved health, education, productivity and morale of the American people are of paramount importance"—but—"since it would be impossible to obtain enough volunteers for the professional force required for adequate defense" of this vigorous and vital democracy, and since universal military training "would present additional opportunities for inculcating spiritual and moral ideals in support of the American democracy" therefore "we recommend that it be the obligation of every young man upon reaching the age of eighteen to undergo a period of training that would fit him for service to the nation in any future emergency."

That's the report of the President's commission on universal training in a nutshell. So I have written Mr. Truman and my Senators and Congressman saying, "Nuts"—politely of course.

I suggest that you do also.

In 1941 the Archbishop of Quebec wrote to the author, the professor of New Testament Language and Literature, The University of the South, as follows: "I wish someone would publish a little corpus of those odds and ends which link the New Testament period with the developed catholicism of the end of the second century." This is it, and a unique compilation of Christian thought and belief at this period. It is highly commended by New Testament scholars. —GEORGE B. MYERS.

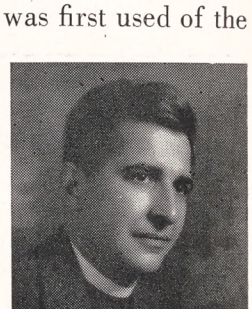
Characteristic vigorous and straightforward sermons by the retiring Bishop of New York. Many persons have the idea that Bishop Manning never preached on anything but Anglican Orders or the Apostolic Succession. This book will open their eyes—here are sermons on "All Races are One in the Church" and "The Spiritual Effects of Bad Housing." To my mind, the Bishop was even greater as a champion of social justice than as an ecclesiastic—or even as the builder of New York's cathedral. —F. C. G.



A Word With You

By
HUGH D. McCANDLESS
Rector of the Epiphany, New York

"FATHER"

FORMS of address for the clergy have never been fixed. In mediaeval times they were called "Sir John"; in the Tudor era, "Master Jones" which has latterly become "Mister."

Father as a name for clergy was first used of the abbots of monasteries, whose position and function in their convents was just that. Then the term was broadened to include all monks in clerical orders, to distinguish them from the lay brothers. This is the European custom today, where monastic clergy ("regular clergy": those who follow a certain rule) are called "Pere So-and-so" and the others ("secular clergy") are called "Monsieur."

Fighting men are courteous men, and in Holy Ireland, less than two centuries ago, the title began to include all clergy, even parish priests. This is just enough. These men have given up physical fatherhood for spiritual: they deserve the title.

This custom was taken over, not by the English Roman Catholics, who regarded it as Gaelic barbarism, but by the Anglo-Catholics. One English Roman priest is quoted as saying, "Don't call me Father; do you take me for an Anglican?"

The use of the word in this country is particularly lush, since it has become a sort of battle flag, a propaganda wedge. At some youth conferences one may hear (indeed one must hear, one is meant to hear and be edified thereat) such conversations as: "Hello, Father." "Hello, Father, where have all the Fathers gone?" "Oh, I meant to tell you, Father, they were taken down to the lake by Father." "I guess I'll join them, Father." "Oh fine, Father, can I lend you a bathing suit?" I heard that one myself, and was duly edified.

The rule would seem to be, if such words as "Mister" and "Father" are courtesy titles, that courtesy demands that one call a clergyman by the one he prefers. By being deliberately or ignorantly offensive, one does not convert the other, but merely tempts him to unprofitable wrath. And the courteous clergyman will answer to any title of courtesy, provided he does not think it is being used to uplift him, or to put him in his place.

Please address all rebuttals, refutations, and so forth, to Mister McCandless, 1393 York Avenue, New York 21.

A Committee To Push Church And State Separation

Bishop William Scarlett of Missouri Is On Committee to Formulate Plans and Policies

Edited by Sara Dill

Washington (RNS): — Sponsored by key Protestant leaders, an organization tentatively called the National Council of Citizens on Church and State is being formed to maintain and extend Church-state separation. Members of a committee on plans and policies include Bishop Scarlett of Missouri; Bishop Oxnam, Methodist of New York; the Rev. Louie Newton, president of the Southern Baptists. There is difference of opinion among the sponsors as to whether the group should work primarily for the constitutional amendment on Church-state separation proposed by Congressman J. R. Bryson of South Carolina, or should seek to bring about changes in state laws which allow use of public funds by parochial schools.

Discuss Intercommunion

London (wireless to RNS): — The first joint meeting between representatives of the Anglican and Free Churches to discuss proposals of the Archbishop of Canterbury on intercommunion was held at Lambeth Palace last week. Bishop Rawlinson of Derby was elected chairman of the Anglican delegation and the Rev. Nathaniel Micklem the head of the Free Church group.

St. Augustine's Commencement

Raleigh, N. C.: — Degrees were conferred on 38 graduates at the commencement at St. Augustine's College on May 28th. Col. John W. Harrelson, commencement speaker, paid a tribute to President Edgar H. Goold who retires on September 1 after serving the college for 35 years. The sermon at the baccalaureate service was by the Rev. Oscar E. Holder, the rector of the Incarnation, Jersey City.

Sockman on Russia

New York (RNS): — "Hysterical and irresponsible pillorying" of groups and individuals who are sincerely seeking a basis for friendly relations between Russia and the United States was denounced by the Rev. Ralph W. Sockman at a meeting last week of the New York chapter of the Methodist Federation for Social Action. Unless this trend is curbed by a sane Christian approach, he warned, America will soon find itself in a "terrible impasse."

Four powerful blocs are back of current anti-Russian sentiments, he charged.

"One of these," he said, "and I say it despite the danger of accentuating differences between Protestants and Catholics, is the Roman Catholic Church. Others guilty of the same charge are certain militarists, Wall Street opportunists, and press columnists who gain their reputation by playing on the fears and prejudices of their readers."

Describing himself as a "sad" optimist: "saddened by the growing hysteria against Russia, but optimistic that the 'we-must-beat-Russia-down' school of thought will disappear in time," Sockman reaffirmed his belief that Russia does not want war and that war can be averted provided the United Nations receives adequate support.

Conscription Opposed

New York:—A statement signed by 652 clergymen and religious leaders was released on June 3, the day after the President's commission reported favorably on conscription, which strongly condemned any such legislation. It urged President Truman and Congress to reject the proposals of the commission and seek instead universal abolition of conscription and universal disarmament.

The Rev. Allan Knight Chalmers, Congregationalist, in releasing the statement asserted that despite efforts to camouflage military training as a means of supporting the U. N., its adoption would be regarded by other nations, and particularly by Russia, as an announcement "that we have no faith in the efforts we and they are making in the United Nations to achieve peace through world organization and disarmament. We shall inevitably arouse suspicions even about the sincerity of our own professions."

Dean Rose Honored

New Haven:—Dean Lawrence Rose was honored at the commencement of the Berkeley Divinity School here on June 5. He was the guest of honor at the alumni dinner when tributes were paid to him and gifts presented by the alumni and by the trustees. It was his last commencement as dean of Berkeley since he is to become the dean of the General Seminary this summer.

The sermon at the alumni service was preached by the Rev. William B. Spofford, managing editor of THE WITNESS and the commencement address was by Prof. Chauncey B. Tinker of Yale.

Community Conflicts

Los Angeles: — Community conflicts in the light of Christian teaching were discussed here on May 27th at a conference sponsored by the diocesan department of social relations and the Auxiliary. Bishop Stevens opened the affair, after which there were talks on industrial tensions by Prof. Paul A. Dodd of U.C.L.A.; racial tensions by Carey McWilliams, noted journalist; marital tensions by Canon Richard Lief. Bishop Gooden was the speaker at luncheon, dealing with international tensions. In the afternoon the following took part in panels on the topics previously presented: the Rev. Wayne Parker, Miss Susan D. Adams, the Rev. Robert Lessing, the Rev. J. Ogden Hoffman, the Rev. H. Randolph Moore, the Rev. John H. M. Yamazaki, Miss Helen Dean, Mrs. William Mason, Canon Lief and the Rev. Kenneth E. Nelson. The conference was held at St. Paul's Cathedral.

Brent School to Open

Manila:—Bishop Binsted of the Philippines has announced that Brent School will reopen in September. It will be directed by the former headmaster, the Rev. Arthur H. Richardson, who returned last fall from the United States after recuperating from the effects of three years' internment in a Japanese concentration camp.

Better Relations

Minneapolis (RNS): — A large number of Negro and Nisei children from this city and St. Paul will spend vacations with white Congregational families in at least nine rural Minnesota communities. The project was initiated as a result of a visit here of the Rev. A. R. Low, Vermont pastor, who carried out such a plan successfully.

Service in Japan

Tokyo:—A procession of sixty bishops, priests and seminarians opened a great outdoor service held May 25 on the grounds of destroyed Central Theological College here. There was a choir of 150 voices made up of nurses of St. Luke's medical center and girls from St. Margaret's and St. Hilda's high schools. It was directed by Private John Micheltree, formerly choirmaster at St. Mary's, Cleveland. There were addresses by the Rev. K. A. Viall of the Cowley Fathers who is liaison representative to the Japanese Church from the National Council, and Chaplain William J. Chase, assistant staff chaplain of the army of occupation. Bishop Todomu Sugai, Presiding Bishop, pronounced the benediction.

Wellesley Conference

Boston:—A young professional woman was asked why she attended the Wellesley Conference at the end of the sessions last year. "Well, I discovered I was muddle-headed about the meaning of existence. I found myself questioning the Christian motive in this pagan-materialism age. I came to get straightened out. I'm coming again next year. It is a great conference."

Priests, Church school teachers, organists, choirmasters gave similar testimony after last year's conference. This year the Wellesley conference offers a faculty of recognized ability with days of comradeship in uncommon living; with spiritual revitalization as well as intellectual stimulation the keynote. The chaplain is the Rev. Joseph Fletcher of the Episcopal Theological Seminary, with Prof. Adelaide Case of the same seminary directing the courses on the Church school. Prof. C. A. Simpson of the General Seminary faculty is to direct the division of clergy courses, while the Rev. Charles F. Hall, rector of St. Paul's Church, Concord, N. H. is in charge of the young adult division.

General courses are to be given by Mrs. Margaret Sherman, head of the Auxiliary; the Rev. Arthur M. Sherman of New York; the Rev. S. Whitney Hale of Boston and the Rev. William B. Spofford, managing editor of THE WITNESS.

The Church music school is to be directed by Mr. George Faxon of the Advent, Boston, assisted by Paul Callaway, organist of Washington Cathedral, and Lawrence Apgar of Trinity, Newton, Mass. There will also be special lecturers for organists and choirmasters.

A detailed program of the conference may be had from Miss Ruth Cheyne, 233 Clarendon Street, Boston. The dates of the conference are June 23-July 2.

Parish Celebrates

Burlinghame, Cal.:—A debt clearance ceremony, confirmation and an anniversary for the rector all happened on one day at St. Paul's Church here. On May 18th, the Bishop of California confirmed a class of 62 persons, and read prayers of consecration of the church building; and it was the eighth anniversary in the parish for the rector, Rev. Francis P. Foote. The debt had once stood at $60,000, and the payment was made possible by the work and gifts of individuals and organizations in the parish, rather than by a single intensive campaign. One remarkable group having a large part in this project is known as the Hillsborough Circle, 30 women who hold two rummage sales a year. In recent years, in addition to sending to Europe the kind of garments needed there, this group has sold other kinds of articles, even hardware and books, and regularly brings in two thousand dollars in a three-day sale.

During the eight years of the present rector's service, he has presented 516 persons for confirmation, and 649 have been baptized. The communicant strength has grown from 530 to about a thousand.

Bucharest (wireless to RNS):—Patriarch Alexei, head of the Russian Orthodox Church, has arrived here from Moscow, accompanied by other Church dignitaries. Here for a ten day visit, he stated: "I trust my visit will contribute to the solidarity of religious and cultural relations between Russian and Rumanian Churches."

Meanwhile from Jerusalem came word that Greek Orthodox Patriarch Timothy had received an invitation to attend the convocation of the holy synod of the Russian Church in Moscow in September. Similar invitations went to the Patriarchs of Istanbul, Antioch and Alexandria and the heads of the Orthodox Churches of Rumania and Yugoslavia.

G. Ashton Oldham
The Bishop of Albany

Everybody that I know is shocked and indignant at seeing the picture in The New York Times of thousands of bushels of potatoes destroyed, which was preceded a short time ago by one showing potatoes in Maine, many times the number, amounting, I am told, to millions of bushels; all of them there not by accident or inadvertance, but bought by the Government and kerosene poured upon them to make them inedible, and this when they might have helped to stay the pangs or save the lives of multitudes of starving people.

In the same issue one reads that $350,000,000 has been voted to feed the Greeks and that $5,000,000,000 will be needed in the next two years for similar purposes. One further reads that the "United States would ship 1,200,000 tons of foodstuffs to Germany within the next seventy-five days."

Wherein lies the consistency of these two sets of acts? Why could not these potatoes have been shipped abroad?

Of course there will be learned technical economic arguments—a rationalization of gross selfishness—but to the average person this just does not make sense. Why destroy and send food at the same time? If this is the best our capitalistic system of free enterprise can do, no wonder it does not commend itself in many quarters of the world. Moreover, the deliberate destruction of food under these circumstances is ethically wrong and warrants the condemnation of decent people.

As stated above, many people are shocked and indignant, but nothing is done. Hence, I am writing this brief line to ease my own conscience and to arouse, if possible, other people to express the outrage they feel in order that this immoral and senseless procedure may be stopped.

Mr. John F. Scott
Layman of Louisville, Ky.

Over the years we have become quite used to having Spofford tell us how the Episcopal Church ought to be run. But apparently the field is too small for his energetic activities so that he now presumes to tell the Unitarians how they should run their Church. I hope that he is told in no uncertain terms that it is none of his business whether or not the Unitarians fire Mr. Fritchman as the editor of their official publication.

I enjoy The Witness more and more. You seem to have the right slant on things and I trust your message may yet be received by the Church as a whole. Power to your elbow.

Mrs. S. E. Goodbody
Churchwoman of Brooklyn

I want to thank you for the excellent page of book reviews by Frederick C. Grant in The Witness for May 29th. We have come more and more to respect his judgment on things pertaining to the Church so that I hope that this may be a regular feature of the paper. May I add that those of my household look forward to the weekly visit of The Witness. Indeed there is such a rush for it when the postman arrives on Thursday that I am not sure we won't have to subscribe for two copies.

Mrs. R. N. Willcox
Churchwoman of Fredonia, N. Y.

Almost from the beginning my husband was a subscriber to The Witness and I have continued since his death. The friendly bouts between Bishop Johnson and Mr. Spofford were always a constant source of stimulation and through the paper Witness editors have become old friends.

Mr. George Barnes
Layman of New York

The number devoted to the Federal Council of Churches (May 29th) was an excellent piece of journalism. It gives us the things that laymen, many of whom I presume are as poorly informed as I am, need to know about this important organization that has been under attack recently.

The Relations Between Germans And Poles Are Better

Priest Says That He Frequently Receives Presents from Poles for German Children

By Percy W. Bartlett

London:—Hermann Hoffmann is a German Roman Catholic priest, long resident in Breslau and still there now that Breslau is included in Poland and called Wroclaw. He is about 65 years of age. He was formerly a teacher in a Catholic high school and was called professor. He retired comparatively early to devote himself to research in the history of the extension of Catholic education in Czechoslovakia. He has collected an invaluable library on this subject in his rooms in the convent in Breslau where he lives.

Professor Hoffmann remained in these rooms throughout the war and the occupation, though a bomb, which fortunately did not explode, only just missed the end of his bed. He has suffered a great deal of privation and persecution.

He recently sent to the office of the International Fellowship of Reconciliation here an account of recent experiences, which was published in News Letter No. 54. His account is passed on with the belief that it will be of interest to WITNESS readers.

A problem indeed—the time has not yet arrived to reach a solution, scarcely to make an attempt at one. Is it even the moment for discussion? Certainly we can now see the problem and feel it and realize its difficulty and its urgency.

Allow me to speak of my own personal experience. Here in Wroclaw I meet Polish people known and unknown, but for all of them I am simply a German.

The other day I met a woman going for water to my pump. I asked her who had given her permission. "My employer sent me," she replied. "Who and where is he?" I asked. She came from a little restaurant in the ruins of a house. I went to see the man and pointed out that he ought to ask my consent. "Hitler took away all our property without our consent," was the reply. "But," I remarked, "a severe judgment has come upon Germany. Do you want the same thing in Poland? If you have no water nearer than my house, you may draw some; but you must pay for what you take." "Well, I cannot earn my living without water, so I am willing to pay if I may have some of yours." Thus we came quickly to an agreement.

Two men in the restaurant had intervened in our discussion. One was a shopkeeper and the other the director of a theatre. I paid the latter a compliment for presenting Municeszko's "The Terrible Court."

"Do you, a German, know Polish opera?" "Yes, I had the pleasure of seeing it at Warsaw when I was there for a F.o.R. meeting." "F.o.R.? What is that?" I began to tell him and said, "I am a pioneer of German-Polish understanding," "Impossible! The German and Polish nations will always be enemies." "Impossible! You and I, Polish and German men, can meet together here and discuss just such a difficult problem in friendly and peaceful fashion." "You are a gentlemen; but the other Germans . . ." "No. We are three gentlemen of two nations: we are a cell of peace and reconciliation. Cell draws to cell."

That little conversation is frequently repeated. Often it begins with the story of Nazi atrocities, personally suffered. Well, the sufferers must be allowed to make known what they have against the German people. But then the conversation can be turned to the problem of ending hatred and of making a new beginning, and so to the question as to who shall be first with the new spirit.

But though numberless such private talks are possible daily, it seems to me that the time for general discussion and public meetings is not yet come. F.o.R. workers for German-Polish understanding remember very well all the earlier difficulties of the task. Now these difficulties have increased enormously. Poland was the first of Hitler's victims and perhaps the victim most cruelly tortured. Yet, in spite of all, I meet Poles who have suffered in the concentration camps, but who declare to me, "I cannot hate, not the German people; I hate the hate because it so diabolically corrupts human souls."

Relations between German and Pole are growing visibly better. Gifts for poor German folk are being sent to me by Polish people. At Christmas time I frequently received Polish gifts for German children, as did other priests also. So we can already see a new beginning. One kind of man is finding the other in the other nation. More than that, the Christian is discovering his fellow Christian. To see another man praying to the same God is an experience which reconnects separated men and estranged nations. German and Polish people are together attending the same service in the same church

THE WITNESS appears every other week during the summer, from June 15th to September 15th. In common with all publications we have a difficult time with summer address changes since it takes fully two weeks to make them. Often this means that a subscriber no sooner has the address changed than we are notified to change it back to his permanent address. We suggest therefore that unless the change is to be permanent, or for a fairly extended period, that you arrange with a friend to forward your copies while on vacation. We will of course gladly make changes when requested to do so. In making the request please give both the old and new address and allow at least two weeks for the change. Notices should be sent to the editorial office at 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

—for which the Latin language of the Holy Mass gives unique opportunity. I give the Holy Communion to both Polish and German Christians. Over there a German is making his confessison to a Polish priest, here a Pole to a German.

The statesmen are hard and severe. They seek by every means to make another war, a fresh German aggression, impossible. But human, Christian endeavour is also at work; and I foresee the time when our own work, the work of our Fellowship of Reconciliation, can again begin in Poland. It has begun already in a few small cells, not in organised form but in the spirit. Though the difficulties are greater than before, the spirit of love is still more powerful than the difficulties. Meetings and organisations are impossible for the moment. But something is at work from man to man, from cell to cell. Human sowing is possible; the harvest is of God's grace. It is possible to create—no, not to create, there is only one creator, God the Almighty—it is possible to awaken, to call out the spirit of peace, of good will, of reconciliation. Everywhere there are those who see our terrible dilemma: either we must kill war, or war will kill us. But power to kill war is given by God only to men of good will, those possessed of the spirit of reconciliation. How wonderful is this communion of thought and ideal in our dear Fellowship of Reconciliation. I am resolved to stay here as a fellow of reconciliation.

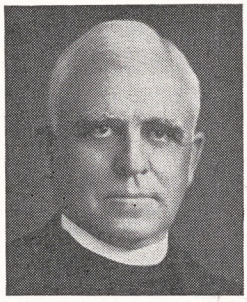
New York:—Bishop W. Appleton Lawrence of Western Massachusetts is also the president of the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship to which this number of THE WITNESS is devoted, edited by members of the organizations except for the news items. With him in the picture is the Rev. J. B. Lyte, the rector of All Saints', Providence, and chairman of the standing committee of the diocese of Rhode Island. The picture was taken last fall in Philadelphia at the time of General Convention. The smiles are due to the fact that the two men are ducking the business of convention to take in a baseball game.

ANOTHER DEADLOCK IN BUFFALO

Buffalo:—The diocese of Western New York again failed to elect a successor to Bishop Davis at a special convention held June 10. Four ballots were taken this time, resulting in a deadlock between the Rev. Louis W. Pitt, rector of Grace Church, New York, an evangelical, and the Rev. John S. Higgins, rector of Gethsemane, Minneapolis, who was supported by the Anglo-Catholics. The vote on the fourth ballot gave Pitt 30 clerical and 33⅓ lay votes and Higgins 34 clerical and 28⅓ lay votes. Election requires 33 clerical and 31 1/6 lay votes.

At the previous election on May 20 the deadlock was between Mr. Pitt and Dean Edward Welles of Buffalo. On that occasion Pitt was within one clergy vote of election, with two clergy votes intended for him declared invalid because they were not properly marked.



Within 14 days of September 1 delegates will be elected for another convention which probably will be held sometime in October. Bishop Davis' resignation becomes effective September 1, which means that the standing committee will be the diocesan authority until the consecration of a new bishop.

TAFT HITS CHURCH FAILURE

Boston:—Charles P. Taft, Episcopalian and president of the Federal Council of Churches, told 700 Church men and women here last week that the Church had "missed the boat" almost entirely in meeting problems which laymen face in responsible leadership of business, politics and labor. The occasion was a dinner of the state's Council of Churches, with those attending paying $50 to attend as a way of supporting the organization.

Mr. Taft said that "we have reached a time when the prophetic message and the battle for the underdog is not needed nearly as much as the reconciliation of bitter ideological conflict by a Christian probing for the real techniques of human relationship and cooperation."

Bishop Ivan Lee Holt, Methodist of St. Louis, spoke strongly for Church unity and predicted that Protestantism within the next ten years would have the largest fellowship in history and said he hoped to "see the day when the Methodist and Episcopal Churches would be united." He was not supported in this however by the toastmaster, Episcopalian Robert Cutler, who was chairman of the committee promoting the affair, who stated that he doubted if union was possible "because the fundamental conflicts of spiritual beliefs and theological doctrine are the breath of liberty and life."

Bishop Mitchell, the retired Bishop of Arizona; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce of New York; the Rev. Walcott Cutler of Boston are leaders of the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship

Among those honored at the dinner was the Rev. George L. Payne, Episcopalian, who was the executive secretary of the Greater Boston Federation of Church from 1923 to 1936. Bishop Nash of Massachusetts and Bishop W. Appleton Lawrence of Western Massachusetts were at the speakers table.

RICHARD LORING ELECTED BISHOP

Springfield, Ill.:—The Rev. Richard T. Loring, rector of St. David's, Baltimore, was elected bishop of the diocese of Springfield on June 9 on the first ballot. The voting was as follows:

	Clergy	Lay
John S. Higgins of Minneapolis	1	4
Richard Loring of Baltimore	13	46
Herbert L. Miller of Champaign	4	19
Claude W. Sprouse of Kansas City	2	4
Jeremiah Wallace of Tucson	1	11
Edward R. Welles of Buffalo	0	4

Necessary to elect: 11 clergy and 45 lay votes.

Civil Liberties Fight Matter Of Concern To Church

Unofficial Organizations Point Out That The Pattern Is Similar to Nazi Germany

By W. B. Spofford

New York:—The Church League for Industrial Democracy, and other denominational social action groups that are affiliated with the United Christian Council, last week urged Churchmen to wire or air-mail Attorney General Thomas C. Clark demanding the dismissal of the trials of those indicted for contempt of the Congressional Un-American Activities Committee. It is the contention of these Church groups that the defendants, by standing on their constitutional rights in defiance to the unconstitutional procedures of the Congressional committee, have committed no crime and therefore deserve no trial. It is also urged that Churchmen send protests to Congressman J. Parnell Thomas, chairman of the Un-American Committee, protesting the activities and procedures of this committee.

The communication sent by the Church groups quotes extensively from a letter recently made public by the faculties of Kenyon College and Bexley Hall, in protest against a proposed bill in Ohio to set up a state Un-American Activities Committee, the communication stating that "the excellent reasons given in this protest apply with even more force to the House Un-American Committee in Washington."

The Kenyon-Bexley statement declared that such an un-American committee was "a violation of the principles of democratic government" and gave the following reasons for their opinion:

"1. Through failure to define the term 'un-American activities' the bill sets up a body with power to label any activity un-American of which for any reason that body does not approve.

"2. It thereby empowers the proposed commission to interfere with the free discussion at any educational institution of any controversial issue, although the right of such free discussion is explicitly guaranteed by the federal and state constitutions.

"3. It empowers the commission to conduct investigations and to make search and seizures, without legal check on its procedures, and with no provision for an appeal to the courts.

"4. It thereby empowers members of the commission to indulge in unrestricted accusations, allegations, libel, and slander, with no legal recourse for persons or institutions so treated: a privilege clearly contrary to established principles of law.

"5. In principle the proposed law goes on the totalitarian assumption that a small group of men may, by their own interpretations, dictate the political, economic, social, and religious teachings of the educational institutions of Ohio. Serious concern for the preservations of democracy in this state leads us, therefore, as American citizens, to protest against the law as itself wholly un-American."

The Rev. Richard Morford who is on trial for contempt of Congress for his defiance of the Un-American Activities Committee. A social worker for the Presbyterian Church in Albany, he was for a number of years the executive secretary of the United Christian Council for Democracy and is now the executive director of the National Council for American-Soviet Friendship

The defendant best known to Church people is the Rev. Richard Morford, who was for a number of years a social worker for the Presbyterian Church in Albany. For a number of years he was the executive head of the United Christian Council for Democracy which he left two years ago to become the executive head of the National Council for American-Soviet Friendship. This organization concerns itself with maintaining friendship between these two countries so as to prevent atomic world war three, and has listed on its letterhead among its sponsors the following distinguished Church men and women: the Rev. William H. Melish, chairman; Prof. Arthur Upham Pope of Yale Divinity School, vice-chairman; Prof. Joseph F. Fletcher of the Episcopal Theological School; Mr. William F. Cochran of Baltimore; Dean Christian Gauss of Princeton; Prof. Walter M. Horton of Oberlin; Bishop Malcolm Peabody of Central New York; Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill; Canon Anson Phelps Stokes; Miss Mary van Kleeck of New York.

Called before the Un-American Committee, Mr. Morford challenged its authority and procedures, refusing to turn over the books and records of the organization. For this he was indicted for contempt of Congress, with his trial set for June 25.

Another defendant is Miss Helen Bryan, a former worker for the Friends Service Committee and more recently the head of the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee which aids the victims of Franco and other European fascists.

The first to be tried was Gerhart Eisler, German anti-fascist and communist, who was convicted on June 10th. Also to be tried is Eugene Dennis, general secretary of the Communist Party, who refused to appear before the committee.

The Rev. John Darr, executive of the UCCD, in commenting on the cases, declared that "the pattern is very much like that of Nazi Germany. The first to be tried are the Communists on the assumption that nobody gets excited when a Communist is sentenced to jail. After the Communists however come others —just as in Germany; first the Communists, then the Jews, then labor leaders, and finally the ministers both Protestant and Catholic, with of course all branded as 'communists.' The important thing for Churchmen to understand is that these defendants in Washington have already taken a stand in upholding American freedom and democracy that the faculties of Kenyon College and Bexley Hall would have to take to implement their excellent statement with action should the Ohio Un-American Activities Committee become a reality. Not only these members of a college and seminary faculty, but every clergyman in this country who is determined to maintain a free pulpit would also have to defy this Committee, just as these people being tried have defied it. They are standing where the ministers of America will be standing unless immediate and strong action is taken."

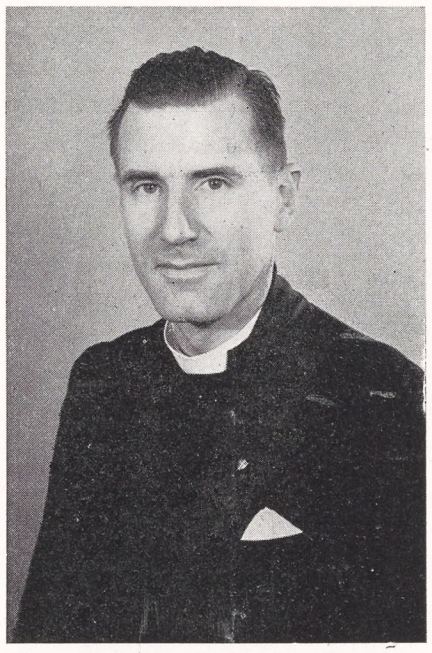
COMMENCEMENT AT PACIFIC



Berkeley, Cal.:—Four men were graduated from the Church Divinity School of the Pacific on June 5: John G. Harrell, Paul E. Langpaap, Robert F. Lessing, Alfred S. Tyson. An honorary doctorate was conferred upon the Rev. Perry G. M. Austin, rector of St. Luke's, Long Beach, Cal. Bishop Gooden of Los Angeles in the commencement address gave a stimulating address on the attitudes of the Church toward communism, fascism, United Nations and other elements in our culture. Dean Shires announced that the Rev. E. Dargan Butt, authority on the rural Church, would initiate a new department on the rural ministry with lectures in the spring quarter of 1948.

NATIONAL YOUTH LOBBY

Washington:—"The proposal for peacetime military training can't be discussed in a social vacuum and must be considered in light of the nation's reactionary domestic and international policies," the Rev. Wm. B. Spofford, Jr., executive secretary of the CLID told the National Youth Lobby, sponsored by the Young Progressive Citizens of America on June 15th and 16th. "When all angles are considered," he said, "it becomes apparent that this proposal is a step towards the increased militarization of our nation and has little relationship to the health, education and security benefits proclaimed for it. It is based on the premise that force of arms, regardless of social righteousness, makes for peace; that militarization of a people, regardless of the lessons of history, makes for security." In conclusion, he said, "Only as we expand our democracy, increase our educational facilities, eliminate racial and religious antagonisms, secure disarmament throughout the world, can we achieve security. The U.N.T. proposal leads to a dead-end, both morally and physically." Other speakers on the two-day program included Mr. Henry A. Wallace, Dr. Clark Foreman of the Southern Conference of Human Welfare and Mr. Leslie Perry, legislative counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

at services at St. George's Cathedral, Madras, September 27. The rites will be presided over by Bishop C. K. Jacob of Central Travancore and will be marked by the consecration of nine new bishops. He will be assisted by other Anglican bishops and by presbyters of the Methodist and South India United Churches. The inauguration will be symbolized by placing upon the altar signed copies of the constitution of the Church of South India and a list of all bishops, presbyters and deacons who have signed the declaration of assent and accepted the constitution.

It was announced at a meeting of forty leaders of the Anglican, Methodist and South India United Churches, meeting recently to complete plans for the union, that a letter had been received from the Archbishop of Canterbury endorsing as "fully acceptable" the services for the consecration of the new bishops and the ordination of presbyters.

Those Who Do the Will

The following editorial was written for this number devoted to the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship by Mrs. Arthur M. Sherman, the national executive secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary, and has received the unanimous approval of the editorial board of THE WITNESS.

A RECENT book which has had wide publicity and general circulation and was the basis for the series of articles that appeared in THE WITNESS during Lent bears the title Christianity Takes a Stand. A good title and a good book. It is not enough, however, for Christianity to take a stand. We must have Christians who will take action.

We in the Church, in General Convention and in the Triennial Meeting, and in other national and diocesan groups pass many resolutions which take a stand on current political, economic, and social issues, and such procedure is important. But even in these cases we are more likely to pass general resolutions setting forth principles rather than specific resolutions calling for concrete action or opposing certain proposed legislation. It is easier to get a group to affirm faith in the United Nations, for example, than to secure endorsement for a world government which would require the United States to relinquish some of its sovereignty; it is easier to secure the passage of a resolution renouncing war as an instrument of national policy than it is to persuade a group to oppose universal military training as a practice in time of peace.

Resolutions and pronouncements are effective, but they are not enough. Christlike action alone is convincing. This takes courage, courage such as was demonstrated by the conscientious objectors during the war in resisting conscription.

It has been pointed out that "this common human weakness of being willing to endorse large scale general programs and principles but being much less willing to go in for hard work in applying or carrying out the particulars in part accounts for the fact that people in Germany let Hitler get the control he had."

A divergence between the declared objectives of the United States and the concrete policies used to achieve them is noted by Vera Micheles Dean in the May issue of the Foreign Policy Association Bulletin. Under the caption Humanitarianism not Enough, she states, "One of the primary objectives of the United States is to give as much aid as possible to less fortunate peoples." In the matter of the nearly one million displaced persons "our unquestionably generous humanitarianism would seem more convincing to other peoples if we would squarely face the fact that . . . we might contribute to their resettlement and rehabilitation by immediate use of immigration quotas not filled during the war."

In 1943 the National Council adopted guiding principles to govern the Church's Negro work which pointed out that the first responsibility of the Church is to demonstrate in its own life "the reality of community as God intends it," and that "the Church should not only ensure to members of all races full and free participation in worship, she should also stand for fair and just access to educational, social, and health services, and for equal economic opportunity, without compromise, self-consciousness, or apology." It is not difficult to approve these principles. The test comes when we are called upon to apply them.

Our expressions of belief should be supplemented by self-examination and the will to action:

I believe in peace.

What am I doing to build it?

What price will I pay to keep it?

I believe in the equality of all men before God and the law.

How do my day by day actions bear witness to this belief?

What would I be willing to suffer to prove it?

It is not only in relation to our social responsibility that we discover the discrepancy between principles and practice, belief and action. In many aspects of the Christian life we are faced with the same necessity for consistency.

I believe in the world-wide mission of the Church.

How can I share in its extension? What will I give for its support?

I believe in intercessory prayer.

How regularly do I offer it? How much time am I willing to devote to it?

I believe in Church Unity.

"QUOTES"

FOR our failure to use the basic elements of life fairly, we pray. Voices in the air which should have spoken of friendship and courage have been harsh with words of hate. Sounds that should have been sweet music to the listening ear have been the thunder of bombs killing the innocent population of this planet. The production of this earth: food, minerals, metals, all of which should have gone into the making of a healthier, nobler race we have turned into poison. For the misuse of thy great gifts of nature, our Father, forgive us.

—World Day of Prayer, 1947

What steps am I taking to promote it? What sacrifies am I willing to make to further it?

Our Lord warned against words without deeds when he promised the Kingdom not to those who call, Lord, Lord, but to those who do the will of the Father.

Was It Worth While?

By
SHELTON HALE BISHOP
Rector of St. Philip's, New York

WHETHER one is part of a majority or a minority, victor or vanquished, the reaction after physical or spiritual encounter is quite naturally to put this question. It may not be entirely a valid question to put even to one's self. In part, it comes as the result of external pressure. Any evaluation we make of our moral convictions is partly conditioned by the recognized or imagined evaluation of the neighbor. He controls us of necessity and more than we think.

There is a sense, however, in which one must be independent of external opinion, criticism or evaluation. There must be an inner center of life-at-its-best when we never can ask, Was it worth while? This is the blessed isolationism of the human spirit. The true religious pacifist must be near this high estate.

When the war is over, any war, the pacifist cannot ask himself this question; and yet he does. He does because psychologically he cannot be completely isolationist or obscurantist. He knows that other people, not committed to his way of life, are asking the question about him. If his convictions do not falter and he escapes final disillusionment, the answer to his question comes before he puts it.

Eminently worth while! This rings out through his spirit as a clarion that no din can silence. It rings beyond his spirit in the silent majesty of his witness—a witness not confined within conscientious objection to armed struggle on a global scale, but spread out to include embittered and depersonalizing strictures in human relationships wherever found. If he succumbs and his witness appears many times to be ineffective, it will not be because of the lack of deep and abiding confidence in the supreme rightness of his cause, but because of the enormous power in the forces ranged against him through propaganda, military organization and mass hysteria. And, because of the seeming irrationality of simplicity, trust and love while the powers of darkness gather their own proof of worth.

Behind his confidence lies much reason. No man can be a blind pacifist long — blind to the things which keep him true and sure. But that is not to say that he is not dealing with an intangible in human values that escapes logical demonstration. Behind his conclusions and convictions lies a whole realm of faith in the way life works that will not always prove reasonable or valid to his adversary. Reasons there will be a plenty, but they will be the reasons of faith.

For the religious pacifist, the way of the cross is the beginning of wisdom. Christ is the way, the truth, and the life in this matter for him as in all others. The state cannot settle upon the way and bid him follow in it. No substitution of "my country in travail" can be made for "God in Christ." The one great purpose of redemptive love has been manifested once for all, and anything short of that as a way of life under all circumstances is repudiated as radically by the servant as by the master. Of course, he understands that his obedience to his master is but a dull reflection, but such light as can shine through him must shine.

Does he ask, was it worth while? Is that a question he could ever dare ask? Would he not be flaunting a faulty evaluation of his obedience in the face of the perfect revelation God had made in Christ of his will for all men? Does a light ever ask was it worth while shining? Does one ever seriously ask whether Jesus died in vain? History may not have answered that question for the people whom Paul addressed, but it has for us, or we are of all people most deluded.

It is the man of military mind and commitment that must ask is his way ever worth while in the light of the Christian religion. Surely he would not say — does anyone of his persuasion ever say?—that his way is the way of redemptive love. This last war has proven in so many specific instances that men in their country's service secretly cherish the ideal of redemptive love in moments of real spiritual discernment, but when their country calls, lay it aside as a method of reconciliation between nations and races whose ideologies and habits have become too different, too aggressive and threatening. To lay aside this ideal as a way of overcoming differences, no matter how great, seems to me actually to deny the validity of Christ's death and the life that ended thus tragically and yet victoriously.

IT IS eminently worth while, historically and personally, if one dare speak that way, never to repudiate the way of the cross even in the face of the most threatening issues and eventualities of the affairs of men. One recognizes that it is one thing for an individual to practice, in a way called extreme, the fullest measure of redemptive love, and quite another thing for a nation. But that, it seems to me, has never been an issue in Christian history. In the Hebrew tradition it was. The Christian conceives of a fellowship within the nation—the Church, if you will—as the instrument through which Christ redeems. There is always the thought of the twelve, the seventy, the inner circle. The remnant that had not bowed the knee to Baal was not an "inner circle," not "the leaven to leaven the whole lump," as the blessed company of the faithful is. The conception is similar, but essentially different, especially in function.

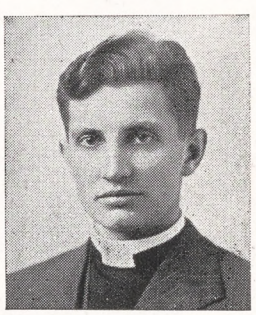
It is a question whether the genius of a nation can be conceived of as any higher agent of God than the arbiter of justice. The Church is the protagonist of redemptive love—that primary and essential element in salvation—with justice only secondary.

But even beyond that there must be the "inner circle of absolutists," if you will, who feel a divine responsibility to witness to their unfaltering faith that in all political, economic and social arrangements, in all secular life as well as spiritual life, love and not justice is their primary concern. These are the pacifists within the Church, within any Church. Their number is small. In this they are conformable to history and tradition. The inner circle must always be small. Its genius is not only in the over-all Christian life they feel called upon to live, but in the peculiar association they may have with their lord and master out of which comes continuously the message and the life of peace and of the healing of the nations and the breaches in society to which they feel strangely commissioned to bear witness.



How can such a one ask, is all this worth while? It is one's life. There seems to be no other. It has absolutist quality. It becomes immediately relative only because it appears to be so illogical, unreasonable and unnecessary to so many just as convinced, just as faithful and just as humble as he. If one is to look for consequences—for proof of whether it is worth while—one looks searchingly at his interior life and the quality of his relationships with all others of whatever persuasion. There he sees God redeeming him and his relationships, and believes in that divine action as eminently worth while for all. Nor can he see in the uniform, or gun, or tank, or the atomic bomb of his military comrade, the same hope of salvation through such symbols. If such a hope there be, it is too well concealed and scarcely placed in Jesus and his cross. But his own submission to Christ must shut out for him a search for results or their value. His witness, no matter how impaired, is worth while to his Lord. He must leave it there and be grateful if he can have been found faithful. If misunderstanding, social ostracism, C.P.S. camp, imprisonment or even a large measure of disillusionment be his suffering, he will glory in it for Christ's sake. If his Church forsake him, or deny him entrance into its ministry; if his family have suffered, or, upon release, friends stand off and employment seems remote, he will remember all men suffer in war. It can be part of the process of his own redeeming, lest there be any vestige of pride in him.

Those who are of the Episcopal Church, and pacifists as well, will find much added solace in the fact that the whole Episcopal Church was not left without this distinctive witness to her lord in time of national emergency. This is not a boast. Many a man and woman in the armed forces shared this sentiment. To have known that every Christian Church (so far as I am aware) had its company of witnesses who withstood the claims of government with the prior claim of Christ, and that this great Church of ours "was not disobedient to the vision" and in this became associated with all Churches of Christian allegiance—this too is to have made our witness definitely worth while.

Dramatic Arts and Religion

By
WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD, JR.

Monsieur Verdoux, the first Charlie Chaplin film in several years, has received more critical attention than any other film of 1947. And well it might. Many critics scorned it. Others, like James Agee who criticizes for both Time and the Nation, consider it the most significant picture of the past six years. My own opinion approximates that of Agee.

I doubt that Charlie Chaplin knows anything about the theology of "judgment" in an academic sense but Monsieur Verdoux proves that, as a sensitive artist of the people, he knows much of what seminary professors have been teaching for the past twenty years. The plot deals with a bank teller who, scorned as a moral man by an immoral society—i.e. forced into unemployment by the last depression—uses his God-given brains in the life-work of marrying wealthy widows, murdering them and inheriting their fortunes. For years, the dapper murderer and bigamist manages to succeed but, inevitably, is caught, tried and hanged.

It is a simple, macabre story but, wonder of wonders, Charlie Chaplin does manage to get his old-time humor and pathos into it, even though the "little tramp" of the Gold Rush and the Circus is no longer on the scene. He can still get more dramatic passion in the simple exercise of snipping a bouquet of roses than most other actors can get in their climactic clinch with the heroine just before their pictures end. And Chaplin's attempts to "love 'em and poison 'em" are masterpieces of art, truly combining real humor and honest tragedy. Many critics said that this was not a successful experiment. I believe that it was.

Even more important, however, was the message that Chaplin was trying to get across—the message for which sundry Hearst and Scripps-Howard papers rolled out their big smear-guns. In short, it was a condemnation of any political and economic system which takes qualified human laborers (personalities, not commodities) and cuts them off from creative activity in the prime of life so that, as an alternative, they have to turn to the decadent existence of Monsieur Verdoux, the mass-murderer . . . or follow the dictates of even greater mass-murderers named Hitler and Mussolini. The sermon that Chaplin preaches is a powerful—and true—one. His prophecy certainly does not please our powers-that-be and opinion-makers. Even now, they are trying to prevent the showing of this picture and, of course, doing it in the name of "patriotism." They are afraid that the message will get across to the people. The fact that a sophisticated New York audience clapped for a full minute after the film the day I saw it shows that their fears are justified.

Maybe Chaplin doesn't know anything about theology in an academic sense but I'm sure that theologians, whether they follow Temple, Barth, Kierkegaard, St. Thomas, St. Augustine, St. Paul or Jesus Christ, would hate to be forced into a position of arguing with the film, Monsieur Verdoux. It's a powerful, biting satire and more than worthy of your attention.

The Lunatic Fringe

by Sydney A. Temple Jr.

Rector of the Mediator, New York

EMERGING from a recent political conference Mr. Ed Flynn, the well known political boss of the Bronx, pontificated, "Henry A. Wallace is a part of the lunatic fringe which every political party has." The words were well chosen and truly said for Mr. Wallace can certainly qualify as a member of such a fringe which is possessed not only by every political party but also by every state and every society. What were the Apostles in their day and the prophets before them but a fringe considered insane by the "steady citizens" of their times? In the last Beatitude our Lord stated their case and prophesied the perennial problem which face men who dare witness for that which they hold to be true, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake. Rejoice and be exceeding glad; for great is your reward in heaven; for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you."

We need not consider that Henry Agard Wallace is of the line of the prophets and apostles in order to justify our looking at him in the light of the last Beatitude, for whatever the merits of his case, certainly none will gainsay that he is a Christian who holds his ideals so dear that he is willing to meet scorn and ridicule and turn his back on political advancement in order to fight for what he holds to be the right. It is enlightening for Church people to turn their attention from canonized individuals of the past to men of our own day who, saints or not, are truly trying to "fight the good fight" for their fellow men. It helps us some to realize that Mr. Wallace is a consecrated and practicing churchman who was accustomed to serve at the altar of his church at the early service during a part of his official term in Washington.

Let us look for a moment at some of the ideas which have caused Mr. Wallace to be in such disrepute in certain political circles. Almost any cartoon which concerns him, and they are legion, shows him carrying a milk bottle or with a ridiculous little milkman's cap on his head. Do you remember the source of this great joke? This character was foolish enough to suggest that every child in the world has a right to a pint of milk a day. What a terrible thought! Can we think of the people of South America and the crofters of bleak Iceland affording daily milk for their children, the coolies of China and the Untouchables of India knowing such luxury, the babies born to Russian factory workers and the children in London's Limehouse District having a chance to grow with sound teeth and ricket free? It's unthinkable that for such purpose my child should lose his portions of ice cream or have the slab of cake in his lunch box cut down. Why it might even come to the point (horrible idea) that he would be deprived of his just quota of bubble gum.

Such insanity reminds one of the time when the Bishop of Melanesia, spoke in New York City. In answer to those who would say that the natives of the South Sea Islands should be left in their happy native condition, he stated that the birth mortality among the natives was about 8 out of 10 while in the United States and Australia it is 3 or 4 out of 100. It is only because of the insanity of missionaries that doctors and teachers are sent to change the status quo. So in India, where even the highest caste children have never seen fresh milk, and throughout the world we should leave well enough alone.

The lunatic ideas of this man are now expanded and he dares suggest that we help all people of the world, even when they differ from us. He would even go so far as to suggest food for Yugoslavia and agricultural tools for devastated Poland. We can find much better uses for our money than that! Standard Oil and Texas Co. have a great interest in the Saudi Arabian oil fields, therefore we must keep a feudalistic order in Greece and force the people to support their king in order to protect this noble enterprise in Arabia. We shall insure our capital investment with loans, munitions, planes, yes even with the lives of our sons molded for battle in universal military training if the need should arise.

The Pax Romana was wicked for by that the ancient Roman Empire sought to keep peace in the Mediterranian at her own price. The power of Rome was such that she could say to those nations on her sea, "Do it our way or die." For such use of power we have unqualified condemnations. . . . but the Pax Americana is something else and to be thought of in an entirely different light. The whole world is our field and Democracy marked made in U.S.A. our product. All nations must follow our way, and our pattern if they would not have all our power, our wealth, our atomic stockpile raised as a threat against their "revolutionary elements." Only a lunatic fringe would say that there is another way, a way of conversion and suasion rather than power and threat, that the way of the United Nations and of greater understanding is any sort of workable world policy.

Of course the Quakers take that "Good Samaritan" stuff literally. After the first world war, during all the difficult years of reconstruction at that time and in like manner today they are quietly going about the business of helping all people. These Friends are loved and respected where Americans are increasingly hated and feared. But the Quakers always were a queer sect whose members have a tendency toward overdoing their liberalism.

But wait! Even in our own Church we are in the midst of raising the Presiding Bishop's million dollar Fund for World Relief, which may be dangerous. When the World Council of Churches distributes the money and the supplies the recipients are not asked how they voted. Beware of this, for it may well be undermining the official policy of our government by its equal distribution in certain suspected countries.

LET us frankly face all the problems raised by this man Wallace. Now we read that he is recommending that a loan of several billions of dollars be extended to Russia for reconstruction there. Why? I really don't know what all the facts are nor what arguments are given but I believe that we can see something of the problem if we look at things the other way round. Assume that the U.S.A. were invaded and the whole eastern part of the country ravaged. The enemy was stopped at Chicago and St. Louis and all that remained of eastern industrialism was that which we had been able to remove and set up in the Rocky Mountains. Our land would not simply have had a war fought across it but the people had been sent into slavery, everything pillaged and only rubble remained. In this reversed situation the U.S.S.R. would have sent her young men to war but her country and its industrial potential would have benefitted greatly by the war. There would be numbers of new war millionaires and every person would be richer. Ascending spirals of wages would be paid there in order to retain the wartime prosperity.

If I were living in the U.S.A. under such reversed conditions I honestly believe that I might look to prosperous, war rich U.S.S.R. for a loan. I am sure that if that untouched U.S.S.R. were continuing to devote one-third of its total budget to preparation for the next war I should be a bit worried and suspicious in my struggling U.S.A. If military missions of this mighty Croesus were sent to Argentina and Panama (guardian of our Dardanelles) terror would be struck to my heart.

When you look at it that way it does make you stop and think, doesn't it? All that anyone can ask is that Christians stop to-day and think; that they refuse to be taken in by newspaper and other inspired propaganda. Men and women in America should remember that the Vatican declared war on Russia several years ago and that they wield a great pressure upon the American press. Right now the industrialists of Germany are being brought to trial, and we are reminded that without their backing Hitler would not have come into power. And Hitler preached "oppose Communism my way."

No intelligent American would trade the Communist way for our way here in America. The Christian does not press for the downfall of Democracy nor defend either the system set up by Russia but one generation removed from serfdom nor the methods inherited from the Czars and little changed to-day. But the Christian is one who is concerned to be a peacemaker and who is anxious to make sure that the methods of the Inquisition or of Salem witch hunts are not again substituted for the way of Christ in helping neighbors to live together.

PRAPAGANDA based upon greed and fear catches on all too soon and memory is short. Only four years ago we all agreed with the words of a poem by Dan Blanding, read by Upton Close on his broadcast of July 4, 1943.

What did you eat, Soldier . . . what did you eat at war?
I ate the sour bread of fear, the acrid salt of gore.
My lips were burned with wine of hate, the scalding drink of Cain.
My tongue has known a bitter taste I would not taste again.

What did you think, Soldier . . . what did you think at war?
I thought, how strange we have not learned from wars that raged before,
Except new ways of killing, new multiples of pain.
Is all the blood that men have shed but blood shed all in vain?

What did you learn Soldier . . . what did you learn at war?
I learned that we must learn sometime what was not learned before,
That victories won on the battlefields are victories won in vain
Unless in peace we kill the germs that breed new wars again.

The greatest danger is always that men will agree to the general principle of peace while running down the road that leads to war. Again so soon the wielders of threats are popular and the prophets of peace in disrepute. When Mr. Wallace was refused permission to speak in the Hollywood Bowl it was easy to remember the words of Jeremiah, when he said to Baruch, "I am shut up; I cannot go into the house of the Lord. Therefore go thou and read . . . the words of the Lord in the ears of the people." Others have been refused the right to speak before this.

Then the owners of Gilmore Stadium in Los Angeles granted Mr. Wallace permission to use their structure which will hold as many persons as will the Hollywood Bowl. The strength of democracy is still alive in our country. We know that such could not happen in Russia and just because it can happen here our responsibility to all mankind is greater. Democracy can win, not by money, by force, by threat but by its moral power. Why is it that the people of the earth who used to see the U.S.A. as the star of hope and flock to her shores seem now to be turning to Communism? Just because we have lost our positive moral power, because our faith in our fellow man which started the great experiment on these shores has become weakened and we are more concerned now in guarding our horde of wealth.

Bishop Lane Barton, the new bishop of Eastern Oregon said in his first address to the district words which should be widely read (WITNESS, May 1, 1947).

> "As Christians we have rejoiced that for much of our history our influence has been potent because it has been an influence based upon moral power. We cannot view with complacency this new swing to a policy based upon naked military and economic power. God give us wisdom to regain our moral influence. Let us feed the hungry because they are hungry and not because we want to use those people against an alien ideology. God help us regain our leadership in uniting the world in cooperation toward the securing of peace and security for one world."

The situation is far from hopeless. In all the confusion and hate-mongering our Christian conscience in America has not been lost. Jeremiah who was put in stocks, hooted at, thrown into dungeons and escaped into exile was not always to be held in disrepute. His words were saved and came to be so highly honored that 2500 years later they are still read with profit. The lunatic fringe does find first a few followers, then more until society catches the vision. This is the way that progress comes to humanity. We have reason, therefore, to exult in those who fight for their ideals, though they are reviled and persecuted and all manner of evil is spoken against them falsely. We can rejoice and be exceedingly glad for it is in the practice of the faith of such leaders that we can be sure that we are not existing temporarily under the shadow of the atomic bomb, but are living constantly under the promise of Christ's redemption of this whole world.

A Number of Important Books On the Causes of War

Cartels Played an Important Role in Nazi War Machine Revealed by Vital New Books

Reviewed by W. B. Spofford Jr.

Treason's Peace by Howard K. Ambruster. The Beechhurst Press. $2.50.

I. G. Farben by Richard Sasuly. Boni & Gaer. $3.00.

These two books, which should be read together, deal with frightening and guilty role played by the German dye, coal, steel and munitions cartel, known as I. G. Farben, in the rise and explosive expansion of Hitler's Nazi machine, and the subversion and sabotage of the war efforts of the allies. Through an intricate web of over 2,000 cartel agreements, reaching into practically every country in the world and involving individuals of much social respectability, I. G. Farben managed to be the guiding economic force in Germany's plan of conquest. Mr. Ambruster, who is an industrialist in the chemical dye field, deals particularly with the role that I. G. Farben played in this country during its growth and through the war. Mr. Sasuly, who was a leading member of the A.M.G. team appointed to investigate the dealings of this economic monster on the continent, points up the inner workings of the home office. But men give documentary proof that I. G. Farben is not dead and that it has not changed its plans. The knowledge contained in these books, which read like an Eric Ambler detective novel, should be obligatory reading for all persons who truly desire to understand the inner mechanism of World War II and are passionately devoted to the idea that such a catastrophe shall not be repeated.

Behind The Silken Curtain by Bartley C. Crum, Simon and Schuster. $3.00.

A straight-forward account of the work of the Anglo-American Committee of Inquiry on Palestine which sets this vital issue, along with the questions of the D.P.s, Zionism, the Arab Higher Committee and Nazi crematoria, against the realistic frame-work of contemporary Near East diplomacy between the major powers. Mr. Crum, a Willkie Republican and a Roman Catholic layman, presents the intricate maneuverings of our State Department, the British Foreign Office and the ruling Arab chieftains in an unholy light and, to our shame, he speaks with authenticity. In a book made exciting by the introduction of such witnesses as Albert Einstein, Chaim Weissman, Ibn Saud and, above all, the remnants of European Jewry, Mr. Crum presents a documentation of a major problem which anyone, who desires to understand present world political and economic developments and who is honestly concerned with the plight of the D.P.s and the working Arab, must read.

Stalin Must Have Peace* by Edgar Snow. Random House. $2.50.

The associate editor of the Saturday Evening Post, who has the reputation of being one of the most reputable reporters in the journalistic field, explains why the Soviet Union desires and needs peace. His analysis will not please American oil, military or monopoly interests—nor even most members of Congress. Nevertheless, he punches objective facts home and it would take a closed-mind to refute them. Unfortunately, we seem to have too many of the latter type in our high-policy-making circles. As an antidote to our "free" press, Snow's book should be read by all who, honestly, desire to understand what is going on in the world.

Man Against Myth by Barrows Dunham. Little, Brown & Co. $3.00.

A witty and wise book which analyzes the destructive social myths of our culture and shows them for what they are—convenient rationalizations perpetuated by those who can profit, either in terms of power or monetarily, by keeping them alive. Typical shibboleths that are dissected by the professor of philosophy from Temple University are: You can't change human nature; There are two sides to every question; You cannot mix art and politics; All problems are merely verbal (for all semanticists); Words will never hurt me (for name-callers in general); That you cannot be free and safe; etc. This book should be read by ministers, all persons who call themselves liberals or progressives, everyone who ever reads a daily newspaper—in short, by all of us.

Dictatorship Is Threatened By Military Training

Several Hundred Clergymen Send a Statement Against Proposal to President and Congress

Edited by Sara Dill

New York:—Several hundred clergymen of all denominations have sent a communication to President Truman and to Congress opposing universal military training. They declare that "a sound and constructive foreign policy and the preservation and strengthening of democracy at home require (1) that the administration should abandon its efforts to secure the adoption of peacetime conscription and that Congress should decisively reject any compulsory universal training programs which should be laid before it; (2) that the president and Congress put forth the utmost possible joint efforts to secure an immediate agreement of all nations to a program of universal abolition of conscription and universal disarmament with international control of the development of atomic energy for peaceful purposes."

They declare further that the adoption of peacetime conscription would be to announce to the world "that we have no faith in the efforts we and they are making in the United Nations to achieve peace through world organization and disarmament."

The statement urges that American people should "refuse to be turned by fear of other nations from our imperative task, the abolition of war, while there is yet time" and they say further that every effort must be made now "to preserve this land from the blight of militarization and dictatorship."

Episcopalians among the 652 to sign the statement were the Revs. William H. Marmion of Birmingham, Ala.; E. L. Pennington of Mobile, Ala.; Bishop Walter Mitchell, retired bishop of Arizona; John C. Leffler of San Francisco; Richard Millard of Danbury, Conn.; Frederick B. Wolf of Belvidere, Ill.;

CARILLONIC BELLS

In selecting bells to give eloquence to your church, remember this simple precept: choose by sound. It is this accurate method of comparing and choosing by ear that has resulted in the selection of CARILLONIC BELLS for so many hundreds of churches. CARILLONIC BELLS, with a beauty and brilliance of tone far surpassing all ordinary bells and chimes, shows its natural leadership in performance.

The minister of the College Avenue Methodist Church shown above writes us of the pleasure the "deep, soft tones" of CARILLONIC BELLS create in his community. He speaks, too, of the versatility of this modern carillon; it can be played inside or outside, alone or with the organ. "We send forth the music of the great hymns twice a day; and, at Christmas and Easter, lovely programs of carols."

CARILLONIC BELLS can be installed in your church at moderate cost, without additional construction. For further details, please write to us, Dept. W-24.

Racial Equality

Sewanee, Tenn.:—Bishop Scarlett of Missouri made a plea for racial equality in his sermon to graduates of the University of the South. He stated that the mature American is beginning to realize "the meaning of the Christian doctrine of unity regardless of race and class, the doctrine of a society in which each is responsible for the welfare of all."

Deyo Heads Huguenots

Washington:—Mr. Harrison Deyo, chairman of the house of deputies of the synod of the province of New York and New Jersey, and warden of the French Church du Saint Esprit, New York, was recently elected president of the Federation of Huguenot Societies.

Labor Bill Protested

New York:—Bishop Scarlett of Missouri was one of a number of religious leaders to wire President Truman expressing opposition to the Taft-Hartley labor bill. The group declared that they wanted a conference with him to "express the personal concern of over 400 religious leaders" who assert that "the ethical and social implications of the bill for a growing democracy are of fundamental significance. We believe the bill should be vetoed."

THEOLOGICAL STUDENTS HAVE MEETING

Oxford, Ohio:—Charles P. Taft, Episcopalian and president of the Federal Council of Churches, told the 900 theological students from 75 seminaries, in conference here at Miami University, that he does not believe that "civilization is at the point of death. Nor do I think it even needs a major operation. Furthermore, I don't believe any revolutionary change will make things different. Russia, with the most notorious revolution in history, hardly is any different today than under the czars."

Others to address the conference were Prof. Theodore Green of Yale, also an Episcopalian, and Dr. Moredecai Johnson, president of Howard University, who declared that "the spirit of Christ crosses all lines and color."

STANLEY D. PETTER
Warden, Grace Church, Paducah, Ky.

The Living Liturgy by Rev. Massey H. Shepherd, Jr. (WITNESS, June 5) described the depressing experiences of some of our clergy who have congregations of passive, listless sitters. In my humble opinion, this condition can be materially bettered if the afflicted clergy will repetitively urge their congregations to take active part in services.

Most people want to participate in the services but the inherent shyness of a normal person prevents him from speaking out. Any minister really anxious to improve on this condition should actively urge his people to fully participate in all parts of the service. If the minister cannot bring himself to a point of charging his congregation with full participation for greatest enjoyment of the service, he should at least be able to urge each and every member of his vestry to actively participate and set an example for the rest of the congregation.

A vestryman, certainly during his term of office, should be willing to assist the rector in any plan that makes sense, and if he is requested to assist. Any rector who fails to charge his vestrymen each year with their various obligations to him and to the Church, is passing up an opportunity for aid that is his for the asking. Most vestrymen want to help, but their help must be actively solicited by the rector.

First see that each person has in front of him a prayer book and hymnal. Then actively and repetitively urge the use of them if you wish to relieve a condition of "spectatoritis."

REV. WILLIS M. ROSENTHAL
Rector at Columbus, Nebraska

I hope that your editorial on a basic stipend for the clergy struck a responsive chord here and there in places where it will do some good: there are people who could do something about it, but I don't see what the average parish priest can do. The basic stipend would seem to be a practical economic application of Christian principles, and after all, it would simply be an intelligent extension of the "minimum stipend" principle which many dioceses have already adopted. I think that a subscription to THE WITNESS might well be considered in a basic stipend; I very much regret that I am simply unable to renew my subscription at this time, much as I will miss receiving your magazine. Like most of the clergy, my real income has gone steadily down for the past year or more. It doesn't help any to read of cases like that of the rector of a certain famous parish whose salary was recently raised by an amount larger than the average total stipend of our clergy. Some cuts at the top might help put such a program into operation. That is too much to expect, of course, but not too much to ask, I think.

I wish some information would be given out explaining in what sense some returned chaplains have been, and still are, "unemployed" and have gotten a bad deal from the Church. It simply doesn't add up, as far as I can see, with the call for more prospective parsons and with the fact that many vacancies undoubtedly exist, both at home and abroad. The vacancies don't pay a chaplain's salary, no doubt, nor are some of them as pleasant as some chaplaincies were. Just what does the Church owe these men? I honestly don't understand what it is all about, and there must be others who don't, too, and I certainly don't want to be unfair or unsympathetic.

My nearest Church World Service regional center (at St. Louis) wrote in answer to my inquiry that CWS could place to good advantage copies of our obsolete "New Hymnal." It occurred to me that our Church has an unusual opportunity to help out in the matter of hymnals on a scale that would really do some good, since there must be many thousands of copies of the hymnal already discarded and not used, with more being added to the discard all the time. Why not an effort on a national scale to help with hymnals through CWS?

ANSWER: THE WITNESS has a Subscription Fund which is drawn on to take care of subscriptions of clergy, missionaries and others who want the paper but cannot afford it. Donations should be sent to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty St., New York 6, N. Y.

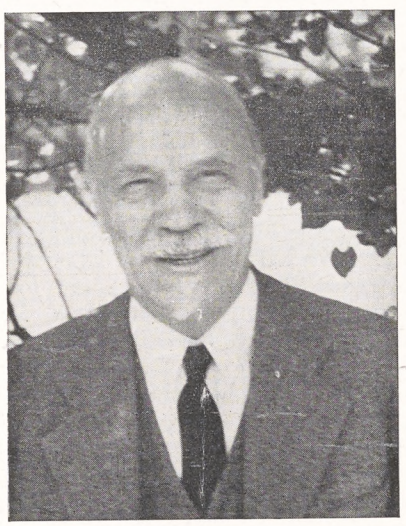
Church Army Training Center Turns Out Workers

Faculty of Competent Lecturers Prepare Captains and Sisters for Various Tasks

By Rita Rubin



Cincinnati:—"Over hill, over dale" might well be the theme song of five students who, having completed one term at the Church Army Training Center, are about to roll into evangelistic and missionary activity for the summer months in rural and urban America.

"Roll" is exactly the word for Cadets William Johnson, Los Angeles, Calif., and Robert Smalling, Flushing, L. I., who have been assigned to the recreational and religious program in the coal mining areas of eastern Ohio under St. Paul's Wayside Cathedral (Church on Wheels) of the Diocese of Southern Ohio.

Cadet Fred Nussbaum, Tallequa, Okla., has been assigned to social institutional Church work in Philadelphia; Cadet Ernest St. Andrew, Munising, Mich, to town and country work in southern Michigan and Cadet Ernest Swanker, Burnt Hills, N. Y., to rural parish work in Greenwich, N. Y.

The Church Army, a lay missionary organization of the Church was established in England in 1882 by the Rev. Wilson Carlile, Prebendary of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, who began his ministry, which the late Archbishop Temple declared did more for the Church of England than any other in the past two generations, by going into the slums of London to "bring the Church to the people and to talk to them in their language" about the gospel story. Gradually, a group of lay workers formed around his dynamic personality to help in this work. Those who undertook a basic theological course and passed Church examinations were then commissioned as "Captains" or "Mission Sisters" in the Church Army and worked under the authority and discipline of the Church. There are now 1400 officers in Church Army in the British Isles and similar organizations have been founded in Australia, New Zealand, Canada and the United States. Church Army workers may be found in almost every missionary field in the world today.

Many G.I.'s will remember with affection the Church Army mobile canteens (mostly bought and maintained by contributions from this country) which rolled into "blitzed" areas in England and Europe. Perhaps some will even remember one "Tea-Mobile" which had to be abandoned when it got too "hot" and which had a sign on it reading "Help yourself!"

SAMUEL THORNE
President, Church Army in U.S.A.

The Church Army in the United States, a separate organization entirely governed by the Protestant Episcopal Church, began in 1925 and has its headquarters office at 435 Ninth Avenue, New York City, close to the General Seminary and the National Council of the Episcopal Church. From here, Captain Earl Estabrook, National Director, assigns the 38 officers in this country to various Church activities under the direction of the clergy of the Church. Only volunteers are sent to overseas mission fields, there being one Captain in Liberia and Sister Ada Clarke in the Philippines, who was interned by the Japanese during the war and lived in 14 different prison camps in the islands.

Captains and Mission Sisters are at work in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, Ohio, Kansas, South Dakota and California where two trailer chapels roam the Mohave Desert and San Bernardino Mountains, bringing the Church to those living in isolated and remote areas.

The Church Army training center is under the direction of the Rev. F. J. Moore, rector of the Church of the Advent, who teaches courses in the Old and New Testaments, voice and reading. Other courses are: The Book of Common Prayer, by the Rev. R. S. Lambert; Christian doctrine, by the Rev. Gilbert S. Pennock; Christian social relations by the Rev. Benjamin Priest; Church history by the Rev. Maxwell Long; evangelism by the Rev. John Albert and the Rev. John Yungblut; Christian education by Miss Irene Scudds, director of Christian education of Southern Ohio; homiletics by Capt. Earl Estabrook; meditations and devotions by Capt. John Prior of Christ Church, Cincinnati, and music by Sister Florence Puffer.

When commissioned all workers give full time service, wear uniforms when on duty, promise to give at least two years' service but are encouraged to make it a life-time vocation, and are subject to indefinite assignments depending upon the need at the time. During war years, for instance, workers were placed in trailer camps and in new housing units in order to reach strangers in the communities and to welcome them to the churches in that area.

There is a great need for more candidates for training for this work among all sorts and conditions of men, with not much offered in the way of recompense excepting the joy which comes through truly adventuring with Christ in our modern world.

CHRISTIAN STUDENTS MEET

East Sebago, Me.:—Over two hundred students from New England colleges attended the student Christian movement conference at Camp O-At-Ka, June 16-21. Leading speakers on the subjects of Christian beliefs, Christian marriage, the economic order, political problems and international relations were Prof. Peter Bertocci of Boston University; the Rev. Robert Rodenmayer of St. John's Church, Northampton, Mass.; the Rev. Wm. B. Spofford, Jr., executive secretary of the CLID; Prof. John Bennett of Union Theological Seminary; Prof. Ralph Harlow of Smith College and Prof. Adelaide Case of the Episcopal Theological School. Episcopalians on the faculty also included Clif Wharton of Harvard; Miss Barbara Arnold, Episcopal College Work at Vassar; the Rev. Luther Tucker, general secretary of Dwight Hall, Yale; and the Rev. William Spurrier, instructor in religion at Wesleyan University.

CZECH PATRIARCH A VISITOR

Newark, N. J.:—Bishop Francis Kovar, patriarch of the Czechoslovak Church, visited the parish of Saints Cyril and Method here on June 22. At the close of the service, which attracted people from many communities in northern New Jersey, the rector, the Rev. Basil Scytha, called upon the Rev. Robert C. Hubbs, rector of St. Andrew's Episcopal Church, who greeted the Prague patriarch in the name of the diocese of Newark. In reply the patriarch spoke of the strong feeling of unity and brotherhood existing between the two Churches. Rector Scytha augmented the statement by telling of the specific instances where the Episcopal Church had given aid to the Czech Church, and particularly that his parish for many years held services in two of the Episcopal Churches in the city. The patriarch was formerly a Roman priest and a member of the faculty of the University of Prague.

FINE CONFERENCE AT WELLESLEY

Wellesley, Mass.: — There were over 150 registered at the Wellesley Conference, in addition to a considerable number of visitors each day who attended from parishes in the vicinity of Boston. Courses were offered on a variety of subjects, with a faculty of outstanding leaders directed by Bishop Keeler of Minnesota. The program was in charge of the Rev. A. Vincent Bennett, rector at Fitchburg, Mass., who also gave a course on religious drama. Among those on the faculty were Prof. Simpson of General Seminary; the Rev. Charles W. F. Smith of Wellesley; Miss Vida Scudder of Wellesley; Prof. Adelaide Case of Cambridge Seminary; the Rev. Thaddeus Clapp of Worcester; the Rev. Henry Ogilby of Brookline; the Rev. W. B. One of the most popular departments was Church music where the courses were given by George Faxon of the Advent, Boston; Paul Callaway of Washington Cathedral; Lawrence Apgar of Trinity, Newton Center, Mass. There were a number of joint meetings with the conference on international relations, sponsored by the Quakers, and running concurrently in other buildings of the college.

Church Army Workers Present Story of Varied Tasks

From Parish Visiting and Wayside Chapels To Work in Occupied Germany and Canada

Edited by Perry O. Martin

STUDENT MISSION

Martins Ferry, Ohio:—Camping in the parish house of St. Paul's Church, six students of the Church Army recently conducted a preaching mission here as a part of their training program under the direction of Capt. Earl Estabrook, national director. A youth mission was held each morning, followed by handcraft and class projects. Afternoons were given over to games and recreation. The students had entire charge of the evening services for adults, using as a theme the phrases in the exhortation to confession in the Holy Communion service.

BY WAY OF THANKS

Los Angeles, Calif.:—Diocesan authorities have just received a highly encouraging report from a new mission started up through the efforts of evangelistic work done by one of the diocesan trailer chapels. The report, in part, reads: "The congregation of All Saints' Church, Brawley, Calif., would have you know how confident it is that there is a fine opportunity for the Church here. This report is presented as a way of thanking the diocese and all those concerned for the faith and effort which has been expended in building an Episcopal Church in this community. It is also presented with the hope that it will encourage the cause of missions in new places.

Baptised Members	25	83
Confirmed	15	51
Communicants	15	45
Families	5	30
Offerings	$79.75	$734.31

Our objective is to meet all local needs this year so as to carry all normal parish expenses and pay for a rector's salary in 1948 and thus relinquish all aid from the diocese. We deeply appreciate the wholehearted help of the Church Army Captains working with St. Christopher's trailer chapel who have done so much to put All Saints on its feet, especially Captain Raymond Lewis, who is now in charge here."

GROUNDED!

New York, N. Y.:—The urgent need for missionary workers is pointed up in a "S.O.S." call just received at Church Army headquarters office from Miss Eva Hasell, director, Western Canada S.S. caravan missions.

"I am terribly short of workers and have caravans in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Northern Ontario, and Alberta without either drivers or teachers and one in British Columbia without a driver. In the spirit of 'lend lease' have you any women workers or do you know of any Episcopal Church members who would come and help. I am short of eight drivers and eight teachers. I have been struggling all winter lecturing in Great Britain and I have a number of workers from there who have come for a period of time as well as those who remain permanently and others who come from eastern Canada. The Spring has come to the prairies and it is very sad to see the Caravans grounded for want of workers."

Many boys like him await the ministry of Church Army in rural and mining areas in America

ST. BARNABAS' BROTHERHOOD

Gibsonia, Pa.:—Hundreds of Churchmen made a pilgrimage to St. Barnabas Free Home recently to take part in the annual observance of St. Barnabas' Day and to pay tribute to the wonderful work for incurable men and boys done by the members of the St. Barnabas' Brotherhood. This year marks the fiftieth anniversary of the founder. Brother Gouveneur Hance's start in the religious life began when he was commissioned as a Captain in the Church Army. In honor of his commissioning, Capt. Earl Estabrook, national director of Church Army was the guest speaker, and pleaded for more sense of vocation on the part of Church youth and especially vocations in the religious orders in the Episcopal Church as exemplified by the men in the St. Barnabas' Brotherhood and the five Church Army cadets who were present.

Bishop Pardue and many clergy were in the colorful procession and outdoor service with the choir of Trinity Cathedral, Pittsburg, furnishing the music. An added feature was the presence of St. Paul's Wayside Cathedral, Diocese of Southern Ohio, which was brought to the celebration since it was about to begin the summer evangelistic program in nearby eastern Ohio coal mining camps and rural areas under the direction of Church Army personnel.

DON'T WALK!

Barstow, Calif.:—"There isn't the slightest doubt that the only way to get to know people and their problems is to visit them in their homes," Captain Stephen Sherwood, Church Army, told the people of St. Paul's Mission here. He records 54 hours in visiting alone, reaching 112 people last month but was puzzled over one thing. Dogs barked at him and were inclined to "nip" him in the heels. Night visiting was especially awkward. The puzzle was solved when it was discovered that the dogs were unfriendly only to those who walk since most persons in the community drive up in cars!

TOP THIS?

Brawley, Calif.:—We don't want to start a flood of hot weather stories just yet but Captain Raymond Lewis, Church Army, in charge of El Centro, Calif., Episcopal Church claims that he has the hottest and lowest mission in the country! In May it was 114 when he wrote and it is considerably lower than that. (Send all counter claims to him!)

He together with others are working out a plan of self-government at the detention home in Imperial and reports that it is thrilling to see how the plan gives poise and courage to the youth there.

have now returned with the exception of Lieut. King Laylander, U.S.A., who writes from Germany:

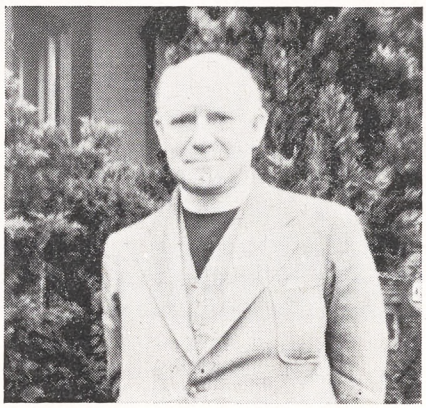
man is preparing his paper for a degree in philosophy and his wife has returned to her girlhood hobby of drawing and painting. Before becoming a doctor the man was a grain broker and visited a large part of the world in his business. He has a fairly good command of English and his wife manufactures words when her English fails to convey a thought. There is always the inevitable comment about the great Eastern Neighbor and query as to how long our troops expect to remain.

"I spend much more of my time getting acquainted with Europe's Tomorrow. In a hall once devoted to another culture we began with a handful of children. In a couple of months our Tuesday evening fun night attendance has grown to about three hundred, from six to sixteen years old. My interpreter is a German lawyer who is an ardent sports enthusiast. It makes one feel a little like the Pied Piper to be leading a swelling band of youngsters with a gay tone of fun and frolic along paths of sportsmanship and fair play, to tolerance and understanding. Watching their expressions and responses to constructive recreation I can already sense a change in their attitude and behaviour for the better. With this clay, too, can be built our God's Kingdom on earth as it is in heaven. If we can only find the courage and guidance to fight the good fight; to liberate these children from the tradition of fear, hatred and misunderstanding. If we can only help them find the abundant life and inoculate them against the powers of evil."



Church Army Cooperates

Parkville, Mo.:—In spite of the emphasis which the Episcopal Church lays upon "community" and "corporateness" in worship and work, in actual practice it often develops that much work is hampered by the whims and sensitiveness of individuals or church groups engaged in various kinds of Christian endeavour.

How refreshing it is therefore to find a project, national in scope, in which there is excellent cooperation on the part of many agencies of the Church, such as is now being demonstrated in the National Town-Country Church Institute located at Parkville, Mo.

It all began through the enthusiastic, generous far-sightedness of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Cochel, Church people, who offered the use of their farm, Roanridge, and their life estate to the Church for the purpose of establishing in the mid-west a center of training for rural Church and rural community leadership.

Roanridge consists of a 320 acre farm, eleven miles from Kansas City.

The Rev. Francis J. Moore, Warden of Church Army Training Center

On this farm Mr. Cochel, editor, farmer, Churchman, has developed a fine head of Short Horns, valuable for beef and milk production. Roanridge is also a demonstration center of proper land use and soil improvement.

The National Council accepted this offer and under the direction of the Rev. Clifford L. Samuelson, division of domestic missions, the Roanridge Rural Center and National Town-Country Church Institute for training in rural Church and community leadership was organized. Beginning in the summer of 1945, and resumed in the summer of 1946, this project became the nucleus of the student field service program of the personnel committee of the National Council. During the two summers the institute brought into the area a staff of experienced rural Church leaders and men and women students in training for Church work. The institute had the two-fold purpose of providing guided rural Church experience to the students and obtaining further information concerning the resources and nature of the rural area around Roanridge.

The program included conducting of daily vacation Bible schools, evangelistic and mission services, community surveys, pastoral visitation, recreational and educational community activities, manual labor at Roanridge and seminars and directed study related to rural sociology and agricultural economics.

All of this has meant the wholehearted cooperation of bishops, priests, and laymen from various parts of the whole Church and in their various capacities. Enthusiastic cooperation from the officers of the National Council, the heads of Church training schools and students has resulted in a gradual and carefully directed growth in activities and also results.

The Church Army as a co-operating agency of the National Council has assigned Captain William S. Paddock, C.A., to that field to be associated with Miss Elizabeth Clay, field worker, in the year-round program of the rural center. Captain Paddock, who has worked in the mission fields of West Virginia, Western North Carolina and North Dakota brings to the institute much experience gained in these missionary areas of our Church, and although he has just arrived in Roanridge he reports that "there are great possibilities and I am glad to have a part in this program."

The Girls Friendly trailer is to be used in the program this summer which brings into cooperation even another organization within the Church. Here is the finest example of cooperation within our Church.

FRANK W. MOORE IS DEAD

Auburn, N. Y.:—The Rev. Frank W. Moore, a member of the National Council from 1939 to 1946, died here at his home on June 17. Originally a Presbyterian, he was a professor at Auburn Seminary. He entered the Episcopal Church in 1930, the year he retired from the seminary position, and spent his remaining years largely working for the Church. He was a deputy to several General Conventions and served on the budget committee in 1937.

The Call of Christ

A FEW years ago the world was engaged in the greatest war in all its history. Millions of our young men gave up their work, left their homes, their families and their friends, and went through a period of the most rigid training, that they might play their part in preserving justice and freedom for those who were near and dear to them and for the generations yet to come.

Our young women followed suit and enlisted in great numbers, not for combat service but to help forward in every way that was open to them the cause they had so much at heart.

However averse one might be to war, he could scarcely fail to be impressed by the seriousness, the courage and the spirit of self-sacrifice these two groups manifested.

They may not have realized, from the nature of the case they could not have realized fully, all that lay before them, but they knew that when they went forth they might never return; they knew that the conflict into which they were to enter would be a matter of life and death; perhaps even worse, a matter of living death, of weeks, months, possibly years of helplessness or of continuing agony.

Nor were they alone. Older men and women labored night and day—sometimes to the point of exhaustion — went without many things to which they had become accustomed, and bore with uncomplaining fortitude the inevitable and heart-breaking anxiety for loved ones at the front. All this was done in response to the call of their country. It was an inspiring, a deeply moving, a very humbling thing.

The sobering thought is: it has not brought peace. Necessary as it was, used of God as it undoubtedly has been and will be, it could not bring peace in the deeper sense.

So another war must be waged, a war of a different kind, a war which has its physical aspects and its material weapons but which is fundamentally spiritual and must rely on essentially spiritual means. A new army must be raised, equipped and trained or rather an army already in existence must be enlarged, re-equipped and better trained, an army which will go into battle in the name and at the call of Christ. This call is not new. It has sounded out through all the Christian ages, but there is a special urgency about it to-day because the enemy is in such deadly earnest and is so obstinately determined to destroy the Kingdom of God and to set up in its place a kingdom of slavery, of lies, of satanic cruelty. He has been beaten but his power has not been destroyed. The call of Christ therefore is to renewed warfare, to warfare which shall never cease until his Kingdom is fully and finally established.

The army of Christ is the whole Church just as the national army is the whole nation. The call therefore is to all Christians. All are under obligation to play their part in the great conflict. The devotion, the strength, the wisdom of all are needed.

But there is special need now of new recruits for active service, of young men and women who are on fire with zeal for the fight against the powers of evil, and for the powers of good, for the warfare against the devil and his angels, and for Christ and his Church.

There will be hardship; there will be discouragement; there will be loneliness; there will be "blood, sweat, and tears," if you will; there will be the giving of self in fullest measure. But the country made all these demands in the late war and they were met. Is it thinkable that the demands of Christ will not be? He will not draft us. He will and he does ask us to enlist.

The Church Army—but one section of the great army which is the whole Church—asks for recruits in Christ's name; for young men and women to work in the slums of our cities, in our far-reaching rural areas, in missionary districts at home and abroad. It asks also for the gifts and

HOLY FUN

YOU can be an Associate of Church Army. And it is "holy fun" to have a share in any work that Church Army does. It was first the beloved "Chief"—the late Rev. Dr. Wilson Carlile, who founded Church Army in England—who said this, but now we say it too here in the U.S.A. What do Associates do? They pray regularly for Church Army—they give what they can for the work—and they do whatever they can to help. One Associate has given music lessons to a young C. A. Captain, and sent some of her home-made preserves to the Training Center. One found a new office for the Headquarters in New York this year! They are good thinkers-up of things to do—there is something catching about Church Army spirit —and they do things to help because they like to do it!

the prayers of the whole Church. It is sure that those who must for one reason or another stay at home will not forget those at the front. The war is the war of Christ and his Church; it is the war of all Christians. It is imperative that each one do his part.—The Rev. J. Wilson Sutton of the board of trustees of the Church Army.

The Problem of D.P.'s

THE most pitiful aftermath of the war is, of course, the plight of the displaced persons who were victimized before, during and after the struggle. At present, there are 850,000 left in the European camps—camps which all observers state are dead-ends. Some 150,000 of these people are under 17 years of age; 70,000 are less than six years old. They have to be saved. That is obvious. And yet, it is no simple problem. The Stratton Bill (H.R. 2910) would allow 100,000 of them to enter this country each year for the next four years. This number would equal less than half of the number of quotas that were not used during the war years. It is a small enough gesture on our part. But, within the camps, are many sympathizers, and actual partners, of the fascist cause. Most displaced persons have returned to their native homes. Many of those who remain can't go home because they left willingly, retreating along with the Nazi armies. We believe that the United States should do all in its power to solve the D.P. problem, opening up our doors to those who might wish to find haven here, but we urge rigid screening. Knowing the temper of our country—and having heard several so-called experts speak on this topic recently—we are fearful that the screening might be of a reverse kind, keeping out all trade unionists, liberals and progressives and allowing in all those who give a terrible enough story of life under the "godless Soviets." The D.P. problem is a problem concerning human beings. We must save them but we do not want to help fascists escape those tribunals which they established by their acts at Dachau, Buchenwald, Lidice and millions of little villages scattered across the face of Europe.

Labor Sets An Example

CONGRATULATIONS to the A.F. of L. for their series of radio broadcasts which dealt with the Taft-Hartley bill! Those who listened to "Lift Up Your Voices" and "Did They Ask You?" sent over a nationwide hookup, have not remained unmoved. Some probably had their ulcers aggravated, while others cheered. The latter, in great numbers, undoubtedly did what the programs were designed to make them do, — write their Congressman and the President. It was a thrill to hear big names in the entertainment field loudly proclaim that they were members in labor unions, and to hear plain speaking about class struggle, and the social forces at work in our nation.

National Council could do well to study these broadcasts as propaganda in relation to their proposed campaign of evangelism. If the Church could get writers and composers of the talent which produced "The Old Oak Tree" for the A.F. of L., they would certainly bring back the lapsed, and touch the unchurched. These programs were based on the knowledge that there is a fight going on and issues were faced frankly. The Church will have an effective work in the field of evangelism if it too realizes that it is in a fight in this world, and faces the issues just as courageously and ably as did the A.F. of L.

Linguist At Midnight

By MARY EDITH OLIVER

IT WAS midnight in a Boston hospital, a time when one would expect quiet and freedom from any unusual disturbance. However, there were sounds which made the nurse in charge realize that some of her small patients were not only awake, but waiting. One small boy of four, a French refugee, was leading the chorus. He was alone in a big world where apparently no one cared. He could not speak English, and the efforts of the nurse to quiet him were unavailing. She even brought him a cracker—not usually allowed in the night.

The nurse knew that the sick boy was to undergo an operation in the morning and that rest was important. With regret and a feeling of defeat, she turned her attention to some of the others. At the far end of the ward was a little girl of twelve, a German refugee, also scheduled to be operated on in the morning. The nurse found her awake, and asked her if she could do anything for her. The child replied, "No, but I think I can do something for you," and then she added, "you see, I am a refugee. I can speak English and French as well as German. If you would take me to that little boy, I might find out what is the trouble with him."

The nurse wrapped her in a blanket, put her in an invalid's chair, and wheeled her down beside the small boy's bed. In a few moments after a whispered conversation, she said, "I know what he wants; he wants a prayer. If you will kneel down and the boy will kneel up in bed, I will say the prayer." After a short pause, she began to sing very softly a Jewish chant. In five minutes the little boy was asleep, the ward restored to normal and the little girl returned to her bed, quiet in mind and unafraid. "That Good Part...."

By

CAPTAIN S. R. BANYARD

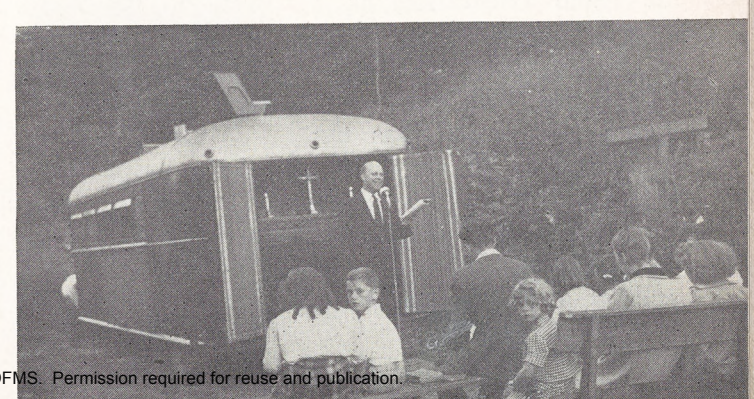
of the New Zealand Church Army

JOHN walked slowly home from Church school, rebellion in his heart, and a few unwelcome words ringing in his ears. "The Master is come, and calleth for thee." "If I'd known that that missionary was going to speak I wouldn't have gone," he thought, irritably. But John hadn't known—he had been absent the Sunday before, and so had missed both Church School and Young People's Fellowship.

John was a pleasant, good-living, sports-loving American youth. But he had already received one or two jolts. The first one came from his rector. He had stopped him one Sunday on his way out of Church and said, "By the way, John, I shall soon be needing a new teacher for Church school. Would you like to help?" "Not me, I couldn't do it," John began. "No, of course you couldn't do it right away, but we have training courses to help you and the summer conference you are attending this year will have classes to give you more training, and when Mr. Brown leaves this fall, you will be ready for it," replied the rector. "But that means I'll have to break away from the senior class in Church school. We fellows have been together now ever since confirmation," the words came tumbling out before John could stop them. Twinkling eyes and a trace of a smile took away the sting of the rector's answer as they parted but nevertheless it was there: "John, didn't someone say, 'Freely ye have received, freely give'?"

Since then whenever John read his Forward, Day-By-Day or listened to the rector preach, or even when he just saw his rector, some shaft seemed to be aimed directly at him, urging him to share with others his glorious heritage of the Christian faith.

Today's appeal for Church Army workers had been the last straw. Something within John kept crying out, "I can't, I can't, it isn't for me." Why did he imagine that these things were directly at him anyway? Of course he could tell the rector that he would teach that class and then he could at least stay with those he knew and he could be an influence on the other fellows. Yet that didn't seem to be the answer. It didn't make him feel any better. Of course, John didn't realize that the Holy Spirit was at work in his heart, urging him to give as he had received; he only knew that he was terribly confused, disturbed, unhappy. The discussion at the youth meeting the month before on Christian vocations had all seemed clear, logical and agreeable to all there—and easy to understand but this inner turmoil was so different!



Graciously the rector received John, even though he had had a hard morning and Sunday dinner was ready. Let us be as gracious and draw a veil over that experience which ended in the two kneeling in prayer and a decision made by John. Strangely enough, when John left the rector's door, he was walking on clouds. There was a peace and joy and inner calmness, a surrender which was a victory. He would tell his father and mother at once.

Another jolt! It was his mother who had taught him his first prayers, taken him to Church school and his father who had been so proud at his confirmation and who loved to watch him carry the cross on the great festival days in the Church year when the congregations were large. But when it came to giving up the opportunity for a good job, with high salary and excellent prospects for the future, for a life of service with a (by comparison) small salary it was carrying religion altogether too far. John received consent, but it was grudging, half-hearted and disapproving, and he knew it.

This was the first shadow on John's new-found joy, but it was removed the very next Saturday. When he returned from tennis a new atmosphere around the house assured him that something had happened, and soon he discovered that once again the rector had been on the warpath. John had told him of the step he was taking and he had called to congratulate his parents, only to find that they considered it a calamity rather than a cause for congratulation. The rector talked to them for some time, understanding their point of view, sympathizing with their natural shrinking from seeing their son leave the home they had made so happy for him for so many years. He could also genuinely share in their experience for he had had secret hopes of John attending his seminary and studying for holy orders.

It was a very happy and excited John who went to bed that night and somehow he felt very close to God. But wait—was his name John, or was it Mary, or Ted, or Shirley or YOUR NAME?

'Twas a Sheep

'Twas a sheep, not a lamb, that went astray
In the parable Jesus told,

'Twas a grown-up sheep that wandered away
From the ninety and nine.

And out on the hilltops, and out in the cold,
'Twas a sheep that the Good Shepherd sought;

And back to the flock, and back to the fold,
'Twas a sheep that the Good Shepherd brought,

Now why should the sheep be so carefully fed
And cared for still today?

Because there is danger if they go wrong
They will lead the lambs astray.

For the lambs will follow the sheep, you know,
Wherever they wander, wherever they go.

If the sheep go wrong, it will not be long
Till the lambs are as wrong as they.

So, with the sheep we must earnestly plead
For the sake of the lambs today.

If the lambs are lost, what a terrible cost
Some sheep will have to pay.

FOR THE PARISH

IN A recent Backfire, the Rev. John T. Payne writes concerning this column. As Mr. Payne and I seem to be in agreement on the point in question, I gather that the point was not clearly made. Furthermore, from the heat of Mr. Payne's epistle, I take it that he not only agrees with me on the importance of the problem but has experienced some of the same frustration as I have in trying to deal with it.

The subject under discussion at the point where Mr. Payne takes issue was the disintegration of community life and the failure of the Church to make a realistic attempt to deal with it. Here, for instance, is a boy in his third year of high school. Obviously, he goes to school and, at least, eats and sleeps at home. Without any real backing from his parents he attends church school, goes fairly often to church, and belongs to the Y.P.F. He also belongs to the YMCA and the DeMolay, he plays basketball with a team of neighborhood boys, and the Boy Scout troop to which he belongs is trying to hold him as a leader. Now each one of these groups is competing with the other for a larger proportion of the boy's time and loyalty. In addition, there are other groups which are seeking to have him join. Then there are appeals being made to him in obvious or subtle ways by such good institutions as the nation and by such bad groups as the ones who would win his unquestioning approval of status quo. And there is practically no integration between any of these groups. Between the family, the school, the church and all the others, any cooperation is purely coincidental. The old method of tearing a man apart among four wild horses was a much quicker, a less painful and, consequently, a more humane way of murdering him. At least, it was a method which could not destroy the soul as the present one can and does.

Under the circumstances, to say that the function of the Church is distinct and unique and that the Church preaches a loyalty which transcends all loyalties is to shout words into a vacuum. No one can be expected to understand these Christian truths until they are implemented in some way. How to implement them is another question. Personally, I believe that it is just at this point that the Church is suffering the sharpest attack and the worst defeat at the hands of the powers of evil. It was in the hope of getting help from others that I undertook to write this column for THE WITNESS.

I feel that, in the heat of the battle, parishes are apt to make one of two mistakes. One is to compete with secular institutions on a basis of basketball games, dances, etc. The result of such competition is, if the rector is a good organizer, many young people and no religion. In view of the disintegration of community life, it makes the parish a willing participant in the crime. The other mistake is to refuse to have basketball games, dances, etc. The result may provide religion pure and undefiled but, as far as I can see, no young people to whom to give it. In this case, the parish becomes a bystander while men are being murdered. Morally speaking, I prefer a murderer to a bystander.

Most parishes, and I am sure Mr. Payne's is one, are making a desperate effort to be the Church. They see the problem, and they know, perhaps subconsciously, some of the compromises which they must make, in order to hold their young people. They try to avoid both errors of which we have spoken. There is an analogy here to wartime. The Church cannot join the nationalists nor can it hand itself over to the isolationists. If the Church is to do anything really constructive, it must take the lead in developing a well-integrated community life. I am sure I do not know what steps to take. I think that the Church, and its parishes, working as a fellowship can find some constructive line of activity. Up to the present moment the Church has done nothing to reinforce, indeed has left almost undefended, the sector where it is taking the worst pounding.

What Shall I Do to Help the Adolescent Boy Who Steals?

By DR. KURT FANTLE
Bellevue Adolescent Ward

WHEN I attempt to help a boy who steals I try to help him to try to get what he wants and that is most frequently not what he has been trying to steal. Take for instance Jack. He comes from a good home, gets nice clothing from his parents, enough money for movies, comic books and ice cream and still he is a chronic truant and has been caught several times robbing. Why does he steal?

Jack has a reading disability. He is one of the many children who cannot learn to read in his school, so the teacher calls him lazy or stupid and the other boys make fun of him. He tries real hard for some time then he gets discouraged and starts playing hookey. Then the parents start scolding and belittling him. Everybody makes him feel insignificant and small. About that time, he hears a crime story on the radio or sees a gangster movie. He starts thinking of becoming a bigshot, perhaps a big gangster. So with trepidation and after weeks of preparation he finally makes a half hearted attempt and now he stands in front of me having been caught trying to rob a candy store.

He tries to appear tough like the man in the movies but he can hardly keep back his tears and is scared to death. He doesn't know why he did it, but he is secretly proud of his accomplishment. He is proud of being bad because being good has failed him.

Doctor Loretta Bender states that two-thirds of the children who come to the children's wards at Bellevue Hospital for psychiatric observation have reading disabilities. One-third of the adolescents in the same hospital are here for the same reason. Many adolescent boys come to us for stealing. They need help by individual remedial reading instruction, understanding, praise and encouragement for their efforts and minor accomplishments.

Stealing is often an ineffectual attempt of a boy to regain his self esteem. The boy will tell you, "I got in with the wrong crowd." He doesn't realize that he chose the wrong crowd because he felt unacceptable in the right crowd. The too fat, the too poor, too little, the mentally retarded, the cross eyed or otherwise deformed, the stutterer, the boy belonging to a racial or religious minority, the out-of-wedlock boy, the unwanted child or the offspring of separated parents, the alcoholic parent or parents whom he can't be proud of—all of these tend to feel unwanted and it is essential that we find the basic cause for their feeling this way if we are to help them. Sometimes the boy with strong guilt feelings about masturbation or homosexuality will attempt to join the wrong crowd.

Do you remember the time when you were sick and tired of being told what not to do by some incompetent old person who just didn't understand you? That was your adolescence. Do you recall how much you wanted to be understood by these same incompetent old people, your parents and teachers? You were craving excitement, action, heroic daring, romantic adventure and most of all independence. How were you helped? Perhaps by being told to sit still in school for hours and not to bite your nails or chew your handkerchiefs, by being reprimanded for coming home late when you went out on an exciting date.

Adolescence is a critical time in a person's life. It is the time when healthy children rebel against their parents. They need distance, emotionally and sometimes physically, from their homes in order to grow up, which means doing their own thinking and feeling. They need independence in order to find their place in life.

We must embark on a program of education with the boy which consists primarily of rewards and punishments. The reward consists most frequently of approval of a loved person like the parent or teacher.

When I discussed with the boys the question of punishment for stealing they all said, "It justs gets a boy mad. Then he will go and do something because he is mad." I should like to qualify this. In my own observation punishment is necessary at times but we must make certain that the boy really understands why he has acted wrong and most important that he knows you love him in spite of the fact that you punish him. Only if you convey this to him, not just in words, but by your actions, will punishment be beneficial.

Have you ever felt blue or discouraged and then run out and bought yourself a new hat or something good to eat? Makes you feel better doesn't it? The discouraged boy will frequently steal instead. If you want to help him, find out why he is discouraged. That takes a good deal of time and patience but it forms the only solid basis for a constructive program of real health.

Advertising Pecusa

THE Episcopal Church is planning to spend a goodly sum of money advertising itself. I am not certain just what variety of Episcopalianism is going to be advertised, because we take the name 'Protestant' in our official title pretty seriously. Really we do. Parish churches in the same town, let alone in the same diocese, tend to be a law unto themselves. We have our differences, surely, and perhaps that is not a bad thing. But it should be possible to differ without being confused and ineffective.

Sometimes I think the Episcopal Church is like the good old Democratic party—a unity in name only, none too certain about its platform because of so many conflicting interests and outlooks. Our individualism, instead of contributing to the normal tensions of growth, seems somehow to sap our vitality, and we look a little ridiculous from the outside. It is nice to sit back and dream of ourselves as the great Church of this fair land, sixty million strong and more, instead of our present two million. But it is high time we got down on our knees and penitently asked before God, Why should anyone prefer our company to that of others? What do we stand for, and what are we fighting for, besides Apostolic Succession and the Historic Episcopate?

I do not want to be captious. It is very easy to criticize. But we are in a situation of dreadful urgency, not simply because we are Episcopalians, but because we are professing Christians living in 'an evil and adulterous generation.' It is not the Episcopal Church, it is Christianity itself which is on the defensive with its back to the wall. And the wall threatens to collapse. There are some big cracks in it. There is no more shameful chapter in our history than our failure to reach, even to over-subscribe, the goal of our Reconstruction and Advance Fund. Four dollars a head isn't much of a goal, and we didn't make it. Or take the sector of our religious education, for instance. It is crumbling under our very noses from lack of leadership and material. What a pathetic prop our Sunday Schools have been against the failure of our homes to provide even the basic rudiments of religious instruction and worship!

Someone will always point to the Prayer Book, however, as a last, impregnable line of retreat. But what do our Prayer Book services really look like in actual performance? In Podunk Junction they have sung mass and sermon on Sundays with all the tinsel and trappings of gingerbread Gothic. They make more genuflections and crossings than the Romans do. In Podunk Crossing they have Morning Prayer and sermon on Sundays, where the choir murders the chanting of canticles and salves the crime with a cheap, vapid Victorian anthem. Both churches have a good many empty pews; few in the congregations show any enthusiasm of participation in the prayers and hymns; the children are not there—they had their 'opening exercises' in Sunday School; the priest drones or wails the liturgy; and fussy acolytes in dazzling red cassocks make much of the candles. Meanwhile the great American public rides blithely by to the golf course, the swimming hole or the picnic. At least, they are doing something healthy.

Which service are we going to put in a movie, or send over the air, by television perhaps—the one in Podunk Junction or the one in Podunk Crossing? Probably neither, but some cathedral service. Most people, however, do not live near cathedrals, either in body or soul. The vitality of the Church is and will remain in the parish community. Let us take a good look then at our parishes and their services, and before we rush into spending money on the theory that 'it pays to advertise,' let us ask ourselves seriously: It pays to advertise what?

Professor Thinks Depression Is Nearly Upon Us

Negro Educator Also Addresses Nine Hundred Seminary Students Who Meet for Conference

Edited by Sara Dill

Oxford, O.:—The Rev. Albert T. Mollegen, professor of Christian ethics at Virginia Seminary, Alexandria, Va., told the 900 seminary students meeting here in conference that it was his considered judgment that the United States would enter a period of economic depression within two years. "An economy that was staggering in the 30's and that was given an injection of new blood in the war years has not basically recovered and shall return to the original sickness once the injection has worn off."

Dr. Mordecai Johnson, President of Howard University, in one of the most stirring addresses of the convention, charged that there was "more real Christian fellowship in the CIO, at Ebbetts Field or in a New York public school class room when it comes to the matter of racism, than there is in the Christian Church." Predicting "the last stand of the forces of intolerance in the next 20 years," the famous Baptist educator asked, "Is the Christian Church for brotherhood or against it? If we can't make up our minds on this burning question—and NOW—God may pass the church by."

"Racism is a denial of the Christian belief in equality. A child of my race may learn reading, writing and arithmetic along side of his white brother in New York. But to learn about God and our Lord he must go to a segregated church. And now the Roman Catholic Church has recently begun to show a belated interest in my people. The Roman Catholic Church which hasn't got a black face from stem to stern above the color hierarchical water line now begins to see the colored man as its brother. What is our answer going to be? More to the point, what is God's judgment on his Church going to be?"

Colleges Merged

New York:—Three of China's oldest and most famous Christian colleges are now merged into the East China Union University. There formerly were St. John's, an Episcopal institution, Hangchow, largely Presbyterian, Soochow, which is Methodist. The announcement was made at the joint commencement held in Shanghai the last week in June.

Interesting if True

Manila:—Monsignor John P. Boland of Buffalo, N. Y. has been recalled from Tokyo, where he was labor relations consultant to General MacArthur, to become labor relations consultant to President Truman, according to an American owned newspaper here. The paper said its information came from "a reliable informant."

Assistant Secretary

Parkville, Mo.:—Miss Elizabeth A. Rhea, daughter of Bishop Rhea of Idaho, has been appointed assistant secretary for rural work of the National Council. She is primarily responsible for educational and promotional work, according to the Rev. George A. Wieland, director of the home department, who made the announcement here at the conference on town and country church work.

World Relief Fund

New York:—The contributions to the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief stood at $635,155 on June 26.

Has New Name

New York:—It is now the Church Fire Insurance Corporation, instead of the Church Properties Fire Insurance Corporation. The company, subsidiary of the Church Pension Fund, has the insurance on 3,500 churches as well as on the property of many other organizations affiliated with the Church.

Conference on Ministry

Avon Park, Fla.:—Candidates for the ministry met here June 5-7 led by Bishop Louttit, assisted by the Rev. Mark Carpenter of Sanford and the Rev. Charles O. Ferrar of Delray Beach.

East Carolina Conference

Camp Leach, N. C.: — Bishop Wright was the director of a clergy-adult conference held here June 16-20, with the following faculty: Canon Wedel of Washington; the Rev. Moultrie Guerry of Norfolk, Va.; Prof. Albert T. Mollegen of Virginia Seminary and Mrs. Derrill D. Taber, field secretary of the Auxiliary.

Judge F. S. Reese Dies

Carlisle, Pa.:—Judge Fred S. Reese, a leading layman of the diocese of Harrisburg, died here of a heart attack at the age of 50. In the diocese he was a member of a number of important committees, and was also prominent in civic affairs.

Exceeds Goal

New York:—All Angel's Church here is among the first parishes of the diocese of New York to complete its campaign for the Presiding Bishops Fund. Its contribution of $3,000 exceeds by 50% the goal set for it by the diocese. On a recent Sunday Bishop Blair Larned, in charge of our Churches in Europe, explained to a large congregation some of the uses to which the money would be put. He also spoke of the ecumenical movement and declared that "Church unity among Protestant groups in Europe is far more of a reality and has progressed much

THE WITNESS appears every other week during the summer, from June 15th to September 15th. In common with all publications we have a difficult time with summer address changes since it takes fully two weeks to make them. Often this means that a subscriber no sooner has the address changed than we are notified to change it back to his permanent address. We suggest therefore that unless the change is to be permanent, or for a fairly extended period, that you arrange with a friend to forward your copies while on vacation. We will of course gladly make changes when requested to do so. In making the request please give both the old and new address and allow at least two weeks for the change. Notices should be sent to the editorial office at 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

further than in the United States."

The rector of All Angel's is the Rev. John M. Mulligan who is also an editor of THE WITNESS.

Prelates Convicted

Athens (RNS):—Archbishop Antony of Elias and Archbishop Joakim of Kozanis, two of Greece's leading Orthodox prelates—have been found guilty by an ecclesiastical court of political activities in defiance of Church prohibitions, and have been ordered degraded from their rank. Both Churchmen were condemned for collaborating with the National Liberation Front (EAM).

The conviction of Archbishop Antony is said to have made "a very sad impression" in Church and public circles here. The metropolitan was distinguished for his spiritual leadership and social activity during the Nazi occupation. Severely persecuted by the Germans, he was forced to seek refuge in the mountains where guerrillas proclaimed him as their spiritual leader.

Meanwhile, according to authoritative sources here, the Greek government will shortly begin negotiations for establishment of diplomatic relations with the Vatican.

Anti-Lynching Bill

New York: — The Case-Douglas-Wagner-Morse federal anti-lynching bill, which provides criminal penalties for local officials who fail to prosecute lynchers, was endorsed in a resolution adopted by the human relations commission of the Protestant Council which is headed by Bishop Charles K. Gilbert.

Want Bombs Destroyed

Omaha, Neb.: — The Methodist conference of Nebraska adopted a resolution calling upon the United States to destroy all existing atomic bombs and to work for UN control of atomic energy. The conference also expressed opposition to compulsory military training in peacetime; voted support of universal disarmament; declared that the number one problem today is for the U.S. and the USSR to live together in peace.

Another resolution asserted that "to allow parochial schools the right to draw upon public tax funds for support constitutes a severe threat to democratic education."

We Like This

Albany, N. Y.:—Miss Louie J. Mulligan was honored for twenty-five years as a pupil and then a teacher at St. Paul's Church here. Rector George Taylor paid her tribute and then presented her with an annual subscription to THE WITNESS.

What Youth Reads

Newark:—When Youth Consultation Service had open house at their new headquarters here recently a plaque was presented to Dean Lichtenberger, president, commemorating the contribution of the Kiwanis Club in furnishing the reception room. The bulletin of the society then goes on to say that "many of our young people are giving daily testimony of their appreciation of the room by arriving early for appointments, and remaining afterward to finish that article in Popular Mechanics, Seventeen or THE WITNESS."

World's Disorders

Oxford, O.:—Churches should spend more money to prevent world disorders and less on remedial relief, the Rev. O. F. Nolde, associate director of the commission of the Churches on international affairs told the 900 seminarians meeting here. He declared that tensions are more severe than before the first world war but that more forces are also at work to prevent another catastrophe.

Kenyon Commencement

Gambier, Ohio:—The largest class in the history of Kenyon College, ninety-six, were awarded degrees at the commencement on June 16. The commencement address was given by Dean Christian Gauss of Princeton and the address to the alumni was by Bishop Herman R. Page of Northern Michigan. Missionaries Confer Whitby, Canada:—More than 100 Protestant leaders from 41 countries gathered here July 5 for a conference which will be in session through the 18th. It is the first full conference of the International Missionary Council since 1939. Among matters being considered are political, social and cultural changes as they bear upon evangelism and the trends of government policy which influence the prospects of religious liberty and the relations of Church and state in the educational, medical and other fields. There is no representative of the Episcopal Church attending.

Word from Germany

New York:—The Rev. Raymond E. Maxwell, Episcopal clergyman now with CRALOG (Council of relief agencies licensed for work in Germany) in addition to his regular duties, finds it possible to do much real evangelistic work. He tells of having spoken to students at the University of Tubingen, the address being followed by discussion and then informal discussion with a group of students far into the night. His calendar is full of ecumenical services, synod meetings, student assemblies, young people's gatherings, up to September, some of the engagements in three or four places on a Sunday, and some weeks a different place every night.

Mr. Maxwell said: "I am reaching thousands of people in a kind of ministry which I would not have anticipated when I left the States. The meetings with both boys' and girls' groups in the schools, with university students and Church young people's groups are perhaps the most valuable. I can think of nothing more important than this kind of personal liaison between the Churches. The ideas that most Germans have of America after thirteen years of non-information and mis-information are often fantastic. It is a pretty general idea that all Americans live in New York and Hollywood."

Mr. Maxwell told of the laying of a corner stone of a new Church at Pforsheim in the American Zone. He was the only American present and was asked to bring greetings. The town had 75,000 people, and 30,000 of them were wiped out in one twenty-minute air-raid. The new church is being built from the rubble by the congregation itself, and is considered by Evangelisches Hilfswerk a model for several new churches to be built in this way.

YOUR NEW BIBLE

is a more deeply satisfying companion when printed on genuine Oxford India Paper. This finest of all papers permits a thin, thin Bible . . . lighter, pleasanter in the hand. Oxford India Paper has a most agreeable tone, and it is extremely opaque: the words on one side never show through to the other. Oxford Bibles are delightfully "readable"; and the text is so accurate that the Press offers a reward of five dollars for the first discovery of a misprint. Bindings are wonderfully soft, yet so strong and durable that Oxford Bibles invariably become cherished family heirlooms. Many styles, variously priced.

Churches here. Further registrations are expected to bring the number of countries represented to 50 or 60, and the total attendance to about 1,000.

In preparation for the Oslo meeting, Christian youth groups throughout the world are now studying questions to be debated at the conference. These include the clash of freedom and social justice; world order; church union; family relations; good and evil in modern life; and the Bible's bearing on concrete daily problems.

Enforcement Urged

London (wireless to RNS):—The rising divorce rate in England can only be curbed by rigid enforcement of church rules banning remarriage of divorced persons, Anglican Bishop Phillip H. Lloyd of St. Alban's told a meeting of his diocesan conference.

"The number of divorces is terrible," he declared, "and the only remedy is to make it unthinkable for a communicant to remarry while his former partner is still alive." The bishop is noted for his opposition to remarriage of divorcees in the Church of England and for his refusal to sanction the blessing of couples married in registry offices.

Church-State Issue

St. Paul, Minn.:—Editors of Roman Catholic papers, meeting here in national convention, were urged by the Rev. Gerald G. Walsh, Jesuit professor at Fordham, to tell "four simple truths" regarding the "confusion of issues involved in federal aid to Catholic schools."

They are: (1) "That every Catholic child is an American citizen and as such is entitled to the benefits of American welfare legislation.

(2) "That every parent in the country—Catholic or non-Catholic—has a right to choose the school where his child is to be educated.

(3) "That the original and authentic American school was and is the school where morality and belief in God are inculcated along with the principles of science and art.

(4) "That the so-called 'secularist' school must end, by sheer logic, in the positive profession of atheism."

Regarding the mission of Myron Taylor to the Vatican, the editors were urged by Fr. Walsh to make clear "that the sovereignty of the Holy See is an established fact of recognized international law. The papal sovereignty is, as a simple matter of history, the oldest sovereignty known to the western world. Its sovereignty is recognized by England, as it was recognized even by pre-war Prussia, although both England and Prussia had established national Churches. This papal sovereignty is, in fact, the very best guarantee for the genuine separation of Church and state, since the spiritual and religious competence of the holy see is by its very nature different from the political and economic competence of the modern state. Only a totalitarian state will want either to liquidate the religious competence of the Church or absorb it as a part of its political competence. A democratic state, by its nature, limits its competence to political and economic efforts to achieve the temporal common good of its people. It does not claim jurisdiction over consciences. It leaves the responsibility for the salvation of souls to the Church."

ple, themselves possessed of no large quantity of this world's goods, are eager to share in helping the campaign for world relief through the Presiding Bishop's Fund. A second remittance came from the Rev. William J. Gordon, Jr., of Point Hope. The amount was $97.48. A previous remittance from the missions cared for by Mr. Gordon was in the amount of $70. Mr. Gordon's own feeling is expressed in a recent letter, saying, "I continue to be amazed and humbled at the response of our people to this appeal for help, because they have so little. The Point Lay offering will probably be over a hundred dollars eventually, because the bulk of the offering was five white fox skins and I figured them conservatively at $15 each, but they will probably bring much more. There are only 57 people at Point Lay now, and I think this could well be an object lesson to the Church at large."

The missions contributing in this area include Kivalina, Pt. Lay, Noatak and Point Hope.

Increased Attendance

St. Joseph, Mo.:—Rev. James S. Allen, rector of Christ Church here, figured something had to be done to get people out for communion services on saints' days. Since study-suppers had worked well during Lent, a plan was proposed for a supper the evening before saints' days. There was an attendance of 100, the limit set, at the first one when they were reminded that they should attend the early celebration the following morning. About a fourth of them did.

G. ASHTON OLDHAM
The Bishop of Albany

The Benedictus Qui Venit is rightly much beloved by all sorts and conditions of churchmen, but its present use is open to doubt. When Prayer Book revision was in process the proposal to attach it to the Sanctus was brought up and voted down. Had it never been brought up, the argument from silence might have been held to permit its use; but, since such was disapproved, the conscientious observer of rubrics can scarcely feel justified in using it at this place.

To many this seems a regrettable loss; but, on further reflection, it may not so appear since it can be used, in full accordance with the rubrics, immediately after the Prayer of Humble Access, which both devotionally and historically seems to be the appropriate place.

From the devotional standpoint, its insertion at the end of the Sanctus interrupts a continuous stream of praise to the Father, the Sanctus ending, "Glory be to Thee, O Lord Most High," passing naturally and merging into the opening words of the Prayer of Consecration, "All glory be to thee, Almighty God, . . ." which should be said without pause in accordance with sound and ancient liturgical use.

Historically, the evidence indicates that its earliest use was immediately before the communion of the people. It is found there in the Apostolic Constitution and in the Testamentum Domini as well as in such ancient liturgies as that of St. Chrysostum and the Jacobites. When it became attached to the Sanctus is uncertain, but there seems to be no doubt about its original place.

Consequently this suggests a very happy solution of the problem, namely, that if the Benedictus Qui Venit is used it should be placed immediately after the Prayer of Humble Access, and before the communion of the people. The Liturgical Commission commends this as possessing devotional and liturgical propriety and ancient authority, as well as being in strict accord with the rubrics of the Book of Common Prayer.

RT. REV. LLOYD R. CRAIGHILL
The Bishop of Anking, China

Like the rest of the world China is in very much of a mess, but I have seen her pull through so many "hopeless" situations in the past thirty years I believe she will work her way through this one too. The rice is growing in the fields all about us here, and as long as that is so it does not make such a fatal difference how many pieces of paper one has to pay for a bag of the stuff. China's wealth is in the fields and not in the paper. This is not to minimize our troubles but merely to reassure oneself of China's inherent stability. The Church has a real opportunity, for people, young and old, are seeking the way which the Church can show them.

MR. H. H. LOUDEN
Layman of Lakewood, Ohio

At a time when our Church is urging support of Episcopal schools by its members, I notice that the two sons of the Presiding Bishop are planning on attending Union Seminary (WITNESS, June 5). How is this to be explained?

ANSWER: The sons of the Presiding Bishop made their own decision as to the seminary they would attend. We are informed that they plan to go to Union for one year and then to the Episcopal Theological School for the other two.

REV. FREDERICK C. HAMMOND
Rector of St. Alban's, Los Angeles

In an article at the time of the last General Convention, Father Joseph Fletcher spoke of the trivia to which the members of that Convention were likely to address themselves, leaving the weightier matters untouched. It seems to me that this is the choice of too many of our Church publications which pass across my desk. It is good to get hold of THE WITNESS each week and reading its columns to realize that the Church still has an organ which supports its prophetic function by bringing into the light of Christian teaching all the areas of life: an organ which is unafraid to speak out on issues involving politics, economics and society, when such speaking does brand one "Red," "Communist" and etc.

Let us have more of such fearless, outspoken handling of our present problems. I sincerely hope that nothing will occur to change your policy.

Courses Offered On Marriage At Church Conference

By Mrs. George Ossman

Vice-President of Virginia Council on Family Relations

Chatham, Va.:—With one out of every five or six marriages ending in divorce; with over fifty per cent of our juvenile delinquency attributed to emotional instability in the home, what might a Church youth conference offer to aid young people in their human relationships?

The directors of the youth conference of Southern Virginia, with the Rev. Paul Martin of Richmond directing, considered it a responsibility of the Church to give the matter some direct action. We must teach people the art of living together as children of God. The problems of youth must be faced on the level of their own relationships between the sexes. Therefore we planned for one of the courses to deal directly with such problems in human relations as the leaders should find in the groups gathered at the conference. This course was entitled: "The Church Helps Me Solve My Problems." Mr. Martin asked me to work with the girls and the Rev. Carter Harrison of Hampton, Va., to work with the boys at the conference last year when the experiment was launched.

This first year our main problems were:

1. We had five class-room hours for five days with one hour each in which to free these young people sufficiently for them to state their needs and for us to give them information pertinent to their own problems.

2. We were attempting to handle openly and frankly a subject which among English speaking people had been considered too sacred to voice aloud since the Victorian era.

3. Our classes were huge, I had one hundred and twenty girls while Mr. Harrison had about forty boys.

The night before the conference opened a meeting was called of all counselors. These counselors were to be surrogate parents during the conference, living with their groups. They were the leaders who would get the immediate response of the young people as they came from their classes, therefore a careful explanation and orientation of the course was given them. They were surprised and a little fearful but wonderfully cooperative.

It was particularly important that these men and women be ready to listen but not to judge and, because they were not trained, that they not attempt to counsel. Mr. Harrison and our chaplain, the Rev. John B. Walthour, who was at that time chaplain of the U. S. Military Academy at West Point, now Dean of the Cathedral of St. Philip in Atlanta, Georgia, and I were available throughout the afternoon and evenings for personal counseling.

From the first class we emphasized—God made us—God loves us—there is nothing about us to be ashamed of. Here in this Church group any question that you ask will be answered frankly to the best of our ability. In this course we will try to help you understand yourself and the people around you in order for you to carry out Christ's plan of love for and toward all human beings.

The general subjects considered were: dating, courtship, preparation for marriage or engagement period, the Christian family and child birth, but we were kept busy most of the hour for the five days answering questions. Questions rolled in, some from the floor, but most of them were handed in anonymously. They were answered straight-forwardly regardless of their content. Then throughout the remainder of the day these two clergymen and I sat under the trees on the campus and talked with any of the young people who wanted to join us. We were not psychiatrists or psychologists but we were well prepared to listen and supply factual information to people confused in their personal relationships.

Of course these classes were popular but popularity was not accepted as an important criteria for their justification. Popularity could certainly indicate a need but with such an emotional subject popularity might be said to be the result of emotional excitation. Success was judged on the need evidenced by the large number of vital questions and the number of persons coming for individual counseling who had real problems.

They needed information from the simplest dating level of "how to get a date"—"what to do on a date"—"what is menstruation"—"what is petting" to "choice of mate"—"psychological conflicts"—"sexual perversions" and "guilt."

Counselors and faculty who attended the classes along with the young people were impressed with the great need for help and information. Many of them said how much they personally would have been helped had they had this opportunity in their youth. One older counselor who was particularly fearful of our giving such a course, said, "I want to tell you now that the week is over, that I wish my daughter could have had such a course when she was fifteen."

This second summer we were better prepared and courses were planned more fully. The group was divided into four; younger and older boys, and younger and older girls. The dividing age was sixteen years merely because that fitted our group best. The youngest were about fourteen years and the oldest were about eighteen years.

Three other persons were chosen to help with the teaching. They were given an outline and bibliography on which to base their course. Mr. Harrison and Dean Walthour were not able to return.

The younger girls were taught by Mrs. George Barner, Gallilee Episcopal Church, Virginia Beach, Va. Mrs. Barner was chosen because of her interest, personality, and general experience. She is a married women with adolescent children, trained as a teacher and she sat in on all my classes the first year. The younger boys were taught by the Rev. Robert Whitman, Vicar of Grace Church, Yorktown, and assistant at Bruton Parish, Williamsburg, Virginia. Mr. Whitman is a young married man with a small daughter who was keenly interested in this subject. The older boys were taught by the Rev. Edward Williams, minister in charge of St. James', Accomac, Virginia. Mr. Williams, a married man, had had experience as instructor in sexual relations with boys' groups before he entered the ministry. He had also taken the clinical training for clergymen at Bellvue Hospital, New York City. I taught the older girls, of which three-fourths had been in my class the preceding year.

Each teacher was free to adjust to the immediate needs of his or her group as evidenced by the discussion and questions. Each of us had read and studied some of the same recent books, particularly A Marriage Manual by Drs. Hannah and Abraham Stone; When You Marry by Evelyn Millis Duvall and Reuben Hill; Marriage and Sexual Harmony by Oliver M. Butterfield; Emotional Problems of Living by O. Spurgeon English, and Gerald H. J. Pearson.

The courses were planned to give information pertinent to the age level of the group in their present situation. Young people who needed to know how to get a date, when to pet, when not to pet, and how to pet, how to know when they were in love, how to plan a house, were given the information they wanted. Detailed facts as to their own physiology and that of the opposite sex as well as the entire birth process were taught.

The findings indicated a lack of preparation for heterosexual life. Much information of a negative character had been acquired by the young people but very little that was positive. The danger of rape, illegitimacy, and the horrors of child birth were well known but rarely did we find one of these young Christians who had ever been instructed in the positive ways of choosing a mate and preparing for a Christian marriage.

Our approach was always a positive one. We stressed how to live constructively and understandingly. How to keep growing and maturing through knowledge of themselves and of others. We tried to give these young people a start in working out their own problems. First, they have a better general understanding of themselves. Second, they have books, pamphlets and a bibliography through which they can secure more information. Third, they know to whom they may go for advice in the diocese or in the state.

They were taught: Love is a tool given us by God who expects us to learn to use it creatively and positively for the good of us all. When love is understood and handled properly by both those who love and those who are loved, individuals are released to develop and actualize their highest potentialities.

A Date Nighters Social is held each Tuesday evening at Trinity, Buffalo, to provide wholesome fun for the young people

WANTS CHURCH IN POLITICS

St. Louis (RNS): — Church members are numerically strong enough to create a better society and therefore the Church must assume a larger share of political responsibility, the Rev. Cameron P. Hall, executive secretary, department of the Church and economic life, Federal Council of Churches, declared here. Addressing a conference held under the auspices of the commission on Christian social action of the Evangelical and Reformed Church prior to the meeting of the general synod, Mr. Hall asserted that "we find few places on earth in which government is not exercised by elected officers" and this means that members of Christian churches "are responsible for the kind of government we get."

"Every member of a church is, whether he wants to be or not, a part of political life," Mr. Hall said. "The real question before the Church is not whether it could enter politics. It is: what kind of politics are the churches going to be in?"

Other speakers at the conference discussed attitudes the Church should take toward economic questions. Arthur G. Dress, president of a local manufacturing company which employs 4,000 workers, said the Church is ignorant of the problems of business and should be "chary about expressing itself on industrial issues." He said: "I know of no group that so badly needs a businessman to come in and talk to them as a group like this."

An opposite viewpoint was expressed by A. L. Whitehouse, of the United Steelworkers, CIO, who declared that if the Church kept neutral on issues involving human welfare, it would in reality be throwing its support to the status quo, and would, therefore, be acting "in violation of its own ideals."

COWLEY FATHERS IN CANADA

Toronto (RNS):—The Society of St. John the Evangelist, an Anglican order of priests which has served the rural district of Muskoka for 20 years, has branched out into British Columbia. The trek across the continent was made by Father R. R. Palmer, the Society's leader, and a few priests in a jeep station wagon. They obtained seven acres on Shuswap Lake, where they will erect a mission house to serve the people round the lake and in the Kootenay hills.

Several New Books From Pen Of Dr. Emil Brunner

His Works Are Important to All Those Who Desire an Understanding of Neo-Orthodoxy

Reviews by Frederick C. Grant

The Mediator.* By Emil Brunner. Westminster Press, $6.00.

The Divine Imperative.* By Emil Brunner. Westminster Press, $6.50.

Man in Revolt.* By Emil Brunner. Westminster Press, $6.00.

Revelation and Reason.* By Emil Brunner. Westminster Press, $4.50.

Everyone is aware that a great change has been coming over Protestant theology these past few years, especially since the hard times in central Europe following world war one. A parallel change has come over Roman and Anglican theology, to a slight degree—wherever the influence of Thomas Aquinas has gained ascendancy. The consequences of this change in Protestant preaching, a greater emphasis on the sovereignty of God, on the reality and primacy of his initiative in revelation, our utter dependence upon him—all this sounds strange to those whose ears had grown accustomed to the language of "liberal" circles in the first two decades of the century. It used to be thought that man was naturally good, and had only to develop his latent capacities; the race would evolve naturally into the Kingdom of God; the child ("set the child in the midst") was good by nature, and needed only to be set free to develop steadily into a saint. Then crash!—came the world war; and again crash!—another. The natural goodness of the human heart now seems the most absurd and impossible theory that ever lulled a generation into somnolence on the brink of doom!

The prophets of neo-orthodoxy have been reiterating their criticisms of this idle assumption for almost a generation now. Their followers are more numerous than ever, even here in America. The two leaders are Barth and Brunner, and if one wishes to judge the movement fairly, he must read the works of these two men. We Anglicans are not as vulnerable, perhaps, as some others—we are not by nature fundamentalists, for one thing; for another, we have never either officially or actually, got away from the Prayer Book; and the religion of the Prayer Book is certainly God-centered, not man-centered. Many of us feel a strong sympathy with one of our eminent Church historians, who remarked, "Neo-orthodox? Why should I be neo-orthodox? I have always been orthodox, and have no need to be neo!" But we certainly ought to know about this movement, which is attracting many of the best minds in Christendom, in this generation.

Fortunately, the Westminster Press has brought out most of the major works of the second of the above-named prophets, Professor Brunner of Zürich. Heretofore they have been available only by importation, and the war interfered sadly with that procedure; reprints here were not undertaken while the war continued. The significance of the whole series is almost summed in the opening words of The Mediator: "Through God alone can God be known." This volume is devoted to Christology, "the central doctrine of the Christian faith." The Divine Imperative is a study in Christian Ethics (in German, Das Gebot und die Ordnungen), Man in Revolt is "a Christian Anthropology," while Revelation and Reason deals with the Christian doctrine of faith and knowledge. It is clear that these four works deal with the great fundamental subjects of Christian dogma and apologetics, and are sure to present neo-orthodoxy in its most positive and compelling form. Both its friends and its foes will welcome the new American edition, and give thanks to the Westminster Press for their ambitious undertaking!

The Lord Reigneth. By Adam W. Burnet. Scribner. $2.00.

Lectures given in this country, in 1944, by a well-known Scottish preacher. The Apocalypse of John is taken up section by section and expounded, and the application of the lessons of that book to the situation in which we live today is made clear and compelling. Dr. Burnet takes for granted the modern view of the Apocalypse, namely that it was written in the time of the emperor Domitian, about 95 A.D. This is also the ancient view—that of St. Irenaeus. Like other apocalypses, it presents history in the form of symbols, and deals with a crisis. In this case the crisis is the persecution of the Christians of Asia Minor for their refusal of divine honors to the emperor. They were caught in a totalitarian system and were threatened with extinction. The theme of the book is the certainty of victory, in spite of the unpromising present. There is in this sacred book much that applies to our day—not as fulfilments of prophecies, detailed working out of mysterious predictions, and so on; but rather the great fundamental principle of conflict and victory, the trial of faith, the promise of the coming reign of Christ, the certainty of divine triumph in the end.

A Scientist's Approach to Religion.* By Carl Wallace Miller. Macmillan, $2.00.

People are always curious to know how a scientist can be religious—as if that were any stranger than a musician being religious, or a banker, or a coal miner. Emerson said long ago, "The undevout astronomer is mad." In this book Professor Miller tells in plain English, yet most attractively, what religion, i.e. Christianity, means to him, and why he is a Christian. He closes with a strong appeal to the Church: "If the rising generation of secularly trained young people is to take over the direction of world events with its moral framework firmly supported by Christian principles, the Church today must carefully revaluate its position in society. It must relinquish once and for all its isolationism in the intellectual realm." Good!

CONFERENCE FOR MEN

Meredith, N. H.:—Men of the diocese of Massachusetts held a conference at the conference center here June 27-29 under the direction of Frederick W. Holmes of Dedham and John E. Buddington of Trinity Church, Boston. Speakers were Bishop Norman Nash; Prof. E. E. Curtis of Wellesley College; Ulysses S. Harris of Allston; Philip H. Stafford of Swampscott.

INDUSTRIAL CHAPLAIN TAKES PARISH

Cleveland:—The Rev. Francis B. Sayre Jr., industrial chaplain of the diocese of Ohio, becomes rector of St. Paul's, East Cleveland, on September 1. He came to the diocese in February, 1946, to develop chaplaincy service in industrial plants in cooperation with both management and labor, and Bishop Beverley D. Tucker, in announcing the new rectorship, states that Mr. Sayre will continue this work.

MISSIONARY SCHOONER RESUMES TRIPS

Boston (RNS):—When the sailing schooner, "Morning Star VI" slips down Boston Harbor July 27, en route to lonely atolls of the Pacific, she will be laden with spiritual and material cheer for South Sea Islanders who stoutly kept their faith under Japanese occupation that another of "God's little white ships from Boston" would one day sail triumphantly back to their waters. The vessel, outfitted by the American Board of Foreign Missions, carries out a tradition begun here 90 years ago when the first "Morning Star" set out from Boston to bring the Bible to the natives of Micronesia. The ship is believed to be the only "missionary ship" sent out by an American religious body to foreign lands. The ship, carrying supplies to Congregational missionaries and to natives in the Micronesian Islands, will remain in the islands to serve the needs of the far-flung mission station there.

Four thousand Bostonians crowded a wharf on Atlantic Avenue in 1856 to wish the first "Morning Star" Godspeed, and prominent citizens and civic officials will be on hand when today's modernized schooner weighs anchor for her remote ports of call. Though equipped with a Diesel engine for emergencies, the schooner will normally travel under sail because oil and coal are scarce in the far Pacific. She will carry a two-way radio and modernized, long range navigation equipment.

The vessel's adventurous young skipper, Capt. Price Lewis, Jr., Dartmouth, '42 and former executive officer of the U.S.S. Spangler, will spend at least two years in the Micronesian Islands, carrying supplies and passengers between missionary outposts. His white crew of seven will leave the ship at Hawaii to be replaced by native sailors.

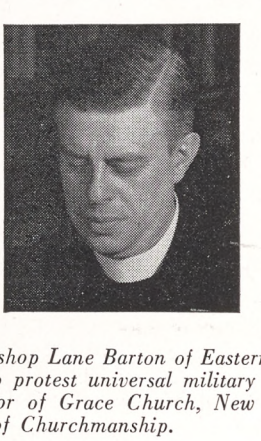
PROFIT MOTIVE IS HIT

San Diego, Cal. (RNS): — Described by delegates as "striking a bolder note than in previous years," a resolution was adopted at the close of the annual meeting here of the Southern California-Arizona conference of The Methodist Church condemning the profit motive in business and industry. Sharp dissent was voiced by the Rev. Paul D. Elgin, of Los Angeles, who declared that the resolution, which called for the "fullest possible cooperative control of industry and of natural resources upon which industry depends," was "definitely Communistic." Mr. Elgin was a member of the committee which drew up the motion.

Asserting that the Church has long expressed moral judgments "against the un-Christian motivation of industry by the lust for profit," the conference declared that "for many years some industrialists, confusing profit incentive with economic incentive, have resented this condemnation by the Church, insisting that the only force that can be depended upon to keep the industrial machine going and progressing is the desire for the acquisition of profit."

The delegates approved a report prepared by the commission on world peace which opposed universal military training and condemned U.S. aid to Greece and Turkey as unilateral. The report also urged that displaced persons be allowed to enter this country.

COLLABORATIONISTS CONFESS GUILT



The Hague (RNS):—In a message read in all Dutch churches, both Protestant and Roman Catholic, 25 leading members of the former Dutch National Socialist Party who are now in prison awaiting trial as Nazi collaborators confessed their guilt "for the bitter sorrow" the nation suffered during the five years of occupation. The confession was accompanied by a statement drafted by the Churches which urged the nation to understand "the political delinquents" and asked the population not to take the law into their own hands.

In their confession, the 25 collaborators attributed their wartime actions to "a tragic confusion of thought" and to a "conviction that the destruction of Germany would mean utter chaos in Europe and the ruin of our own country."

The prisoners appealed for forgiveness and called upon God to "save our people from permanent hatred and save us and our fellow-prisoners from embitterment which must bar for us the way of reconciliation."

The Church statement was drawn up by the Interchurch Council, which was set up during the war.

CHURCHMEN IN THE NEWS: Bishop Lane Barton of Eastern Oregon is one of a CLID committee to protest universal military training; the Rev. Louis W. Pitt, rector of Grace Church, New York, condemns pigeonholing on matter of Churchmanship.

EDITORIALS

A False Assumption

WHEN the Chicago Tribune or the New York Daily News say that we have an enemy, and that enemy is Russia, it is no longer news. But when a journal of the Episcopal Church editorializes about "our enemies—and we must frankly admit that we have enemies," it is news of the first order. This The Living Church did recently, though delicately refraining from naming the nation which "has deliberately chosen . . . to foment strife . . ." No argument is needed; the editor blandly assumes that we have an enemy. It is as if he said, "We must admit it; this is an unassailable assumption. The overwhelming evidence is that war is ahead: we must prepare for war." No amount of lukewarm imperatives that "we must do everything in our power . . . to prevent war" can atone for this Living Church assumption that we have an enemy.

This news was broken in the magazine's complete endorsement of the recent report made by the President's advisory commission on Universal Military Training. You will find that wherever such complete assent is given to UMT—now lightly known as "Umtee"—this "We-have-an-enemy" assumption is its motive force. With iron logic, the one flows out of the other.

THE WITNESS board questions this assumption. We agree with the columnist Samuel Grafton that ". . . when this is the best that can be produced (by a distinguished commission) . . . this is a syllabus for a wake. If this is the post-war world, it's a stinker. If this is the best we can have, after the kind of war we had to fight, then we should proclaim a day of national mourning, with slow drums beating while this report is read over the radio, and with bits of black cloth adorning our buildings, and ashes on our heads." We suggest these rites and ceremonies to The Living Church for the national day of prayer which it requests of the President in the same batch of editorials.

We reject the assumption of an enemy because we find it still possible for the United States to live on the same globe with the Soviet Union. The President's commission gives us eight years before the probable outbreak of atomic war. In that time, the two great nations can be a long way towards resolving their differences. They can do so through healthy competition in solving the world's real problem: to bring the prosperity of machine-production to people in every part of the earth. This is far more than "the reconstruction and rehabilitation" to which The Living Church makes slight reference. None of the glowing pictures of material plenty in the Book of the Prophet Isaiah are adequate to describe the world which may lie ahead. In the vision of an age of abundance the winds of the Holy Spirit are blowing.

In contrast, we find the attitude expressed on our sister-magazine's editorial page to be uncreative, senile reasoning from an assumption far from established, except in the majority of the American press which seems thirsting for an enemy. We believe that this is an evil spirit which must be exorcised if the world is to have peace.

Though The Living Church editor begins by renouncing the "non-military benefits" of Umtee as fallacious, at the end he adds them as a fillip to a bitter drink. To us the intellectual by-products appear simply a nation-wide intensification of the dire belief "We have an enemy." Our youth at the age of eighteen and nineteen years will be taught that they are, in the last analysis, only a multitude of well-trained ants, who will start scurrying purposefully about to control a dazed population of cow-insects when the heavy boot of the atomic bomb begins to fall.

We will deal with Umtee later in more detail. We now challenge its basic assumption, that the danger is great, that Russia is threatening an at-

Christian Action

By

THEODORE R. LUDLOW

Suffragan Bishop of Newark

AT THE present time it does not look as if Russia was making progress in the right direction. But that is no reason why we should join the hue and cry of certain interested parties who find that country a stumbling block in the way of their military, economic and ecclesiastical designs and are all out "to stop Russia."

I hold no brief for Russia, but I do believe that history can teach us many things if we will substitute thought for irritation. Recently, in commenting upon the world situation, Mr. Baruch said, "Let us never forget this: our unrest is the heart of their success." Communism thrives upon discontent arising out of injustices and the attempt to compel compliance with a policy which has little regard for those who do not profit by or share in the policy. The fact that Russia herself is guilty of using the same method does not alter the result wherein the little man confronted by two power policies complies with the one which seems to be controlled by little men rather than by big interests or by force.

President Roosevelt was a known friend of the military, but he had the good judgment to keep foreign policy under civilian control. Today we have as President a former captain of artillery who is deeply influenced by the military mind. He has replaced a civilian Secretary of State with a general, the Under-Secretary by a former War Department official, and there will be others. With the age-old technique of crisis pressure, the President is calling for the use of military force in the Near East.

This Truman policy is called an effort to help democracy among the Greeks, but it smells of oils and is acknowledged as a deliberate effort to stop Russia. Such a policy will inevitably stiffen Russian determination to instigate further Communistic activities in all lands so as to combat our unilateral action.

The next step will be a concerted and determined drive in this country to put over universal military conscription in peace time. It will be urged as necessary to meet the crisis, even though the deadline put before Congress has already passed without the world falling apart. Conscription in peace time will be sprinkled with rose water and called education, but the principle once admitted to practice, the succeeding steps are matters of history in other countries. This is the kind of practice we once loudly denounced in Germany and Japan.

If we plunge into this policy, we will not only reverse our own way of life, but we will render ourselves untrustworthy in building the one world for which men have died. It will not only fly in the face of man's experience in human history, but it will undermine the whole purpose and effort of the United Nations.

Why should we expect this new cordon sanitaire which the United States now proposes to build around Russia to be any more successful in 1947 than was the one built by the Allies in 1919? Any attempt to build a Chinese wall around ideas only renders them more explosive and destructive.

WHAT then should we do? I believe that we should support all-out aid for Greece and for any country similarly situated, but under civilian auspices. I believe that we should refuse to take any unilateral action without the previous knowledge and consent of the United Nations. I believe that our primary responsibility is the moral leadership of the world and not the military. To that end, we should make a serious effort to enlist our young people in the definite task of going to the ends of the earth as Christian businessmen, educators, doctors, nurses and missionaries. We have got to show our good intentions by sharing and by serving and not by compulsion. "Be not overcome of evil but overcome evil with good," so said a wise Christian strategist who faced a world very similar to our own.

Such a policy bears fruit in cooperation. The aid given to our troops in the South Pacific by missionary-trained natives is now an old story. But the fruits are appearing also in peacetime. For example, China has 86 secretaries working with the United Nations Organization. Approximately one-third of them, or 29 to be exact, are graduates of 13 Christian colleges in China. Six of these 29 are from our own St. John's University in Shanghai and two are from Hua Chung University in Wuchang. So, of the one-third of the total number of secretaries who are Chinese Christian graduates carrying on the work of the United Nations, approximately one-third of these are from our own two missionary colleges. These men and women are helping to shape the future of the whole world. Here is where our opportunity and our responsibility lie rather than in the use of force.

A final reason for facing the Russians with a policy of world service is the realization that their own Church failed them in their time of need, because it remained silent in the face of injustice and inequality. There is a warning for us there. Under the circumstances, it is not to be wondered at that the government in power in Russia has little use for the Church or for Christian principles. Without the influence of those Christian principles, Russia has no interest in persons, except as they minister to material ends. The only way she will be convinced of any other way of life will be by a demonstration of service and not by a threat of force.

U.N.'s Ethical Foundations

by Herschel V. Johnson

United States Representative to the United Nations

I SHOULD like to reaffirm the simple universals of religion as they apply to the work of the peace-makers in our bruised and war devastated world. While human beings associate themselves in many different forms of worship and ecclesiastical organizations, there is nevertheless a remarkable and important area of agreement among the religions of the world on the fundamental foundations of life.

It is a truism to say that Christianity is universal in its concept, encompassing the whole human family. Among all its dissident sects there is agreement on the concepts of honor and kindness and charity, and forebearance and good will among men. They find common ground in the belief that good ends must be sought by good means; that God's ways cannot ultimately be imposed by the devil's instruments of fear and force: that force to be good must be in support of morally defensible law and not the instrument of selfish interests.

In my view, mankind divided into many independent nations is being moved by relentless forces toward a new political order corresponding to the principles of the great world religions and especially the ethic of the Christian religion. It is as if the Great Designer of the universe had concluded that after thousands of years of cultivation of the human spirit the people of the world should now be able to make the choice between life and death, between law and anarchy on a world scale. For at last man has achieved the knowledge by which he may disintegrate life on the earth or raise man to a new level of common life. This, therefore, in a sense, is the testing time for all religions, testing whether they can so illuminate the problems of the world with the accumulated spiritual insight of all of the philosophers and saints as to produce a fusion of ethics and practical politics.

The United Nations Charter affirms universal ethical principles in its preamble. It states as one of the main purposes of the organization "to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war." This was written before the authors knew the facts of Hiroshima—before they understood that war is no longer a mere scourge but has become an instrument for mutual annihilation. Hence, in our present state of knowledge our main objective can be stated even more briefly: "to save succeeding generations."

The preamble of the Charter does not stop with the question of survival. It goes on to describe—and I think in terms imbued with true religious feeling—the conditions of life which would make survival attractive and worthwhile to human beings.

First it reaffirms "faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person." It expresses the determination of the peoples of the United Nations to establish conditions of justice and respect for obligations, "to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom." It pledges the peoples of the world to "practice tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbors."

These are fine phrases. They constitute the ethical foundations for the United Nations. Many undoubtedly tend to discount them as pious words calculated to strike a responsive cord in the hearts of idealists. High-sounding as these phrases are, in the light of the facts of the atomic age, they take on the character of an ultimatum. Either we mean them and succeed in applying them in the practical measures of international affairs or we face the prospect of destruction. The old line between the idealists and realists has been erased. What was good and right is now necessary as the price of survival.

The dangerous gap between these idealistic yet hard imperatives and certain so-called realistic practices in international relations may induce cynicism and despair. On the other hand, recognition of the realism of idealism could motivate a worldwide spiritual revolution in which all men of faith and aspiration might participate. In such a revolution the institutions based on religious and ethical principles could find new expression.

While it has always been true that man has suffered and caused suffering by violating the spiritual laws, in the past those who accepted the principles of brotherhood as good but impractical usually lived to learn through their painful experiences. Now that the practice of brotherhood —and the spiritual precepts which flow from the concept of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man—is essential to survival of civilization, those who persist in thinking they are realistic in acting contrary to the idealistic principles as well as the rest of mankind may not live to learn the error of their ways. This realization of the urgency of seriously practicing what we have for so long preached might provide the motivation for a genuine religious renaissance and provide a more practical and effective expression of the ethics of Christian faith.

Spiritual principles must be applied to material life. The central question is: what do we do with our power to control and expand the material facilities of the world? Do we make our modern knowledge serve the welfare of man, or do we squander it ignorantly and selfishly to the ultimate destruction of man? This is not only a material but also a religious question. It deals as much with the spiritual life as with the material existence of man; for these two are not separated. What man does with his hands and his mind and his time has a material expression, but more important, it is a spiritual expression. This is the part of the unseen which is seen.

By working with the laws of the universe as they have been progressively discovered by science, we have vastly expanded the power of man to build and create physical foundations for his spiritual development. It now appears clear that these physical laws complement and support the spiritual concepts which are attested by Christianity.

The question, then, of continued human progress is partly one of giving spiritual direction to the control and expansion of the material world. This is not essentially a matter of multiplying the gadgets and material conveniences of life, but rather of determining to use the "know-how" of modern science to build an economic platform on which mankind as a whole can stand with some security and well-being above the ancient struggle for existence.

The paradoxes of religion need to be applied concretely in this important business of making life as liveable as we know how. The parable of the talents puts forward a paradox which is equally true in the spiritual and physical realms. It says to us that you cannot hold on to a capital value by burying it in the ground. That is the sure way to lose it. The paradox is: to keep it, you must invest it.

The economists agree now that an advanced material civilization cannot maintain its high level of productivity unless other parts of the world are raised to higher levels of productivity. The way to get a sustained prosperity is with others in a generally expanding world economy. You can't have it long on an island surrounded by poverty and low-productivity. When this concept of increasing the total world capacity to produce and exchange is put into practice, the spiritual truth is thereby vitalized. People everywhere are released from the fear of being prevented from producing as much as they can according to their abilities. They are, therefore, put on the way to becoming better people—creative people, hopeful people, cooperative people. They are working with the laws of the universe rather than contrary to them. They are using their gifts and thus increasing them instead of living in frustration and fear of idleness.

The wide-spread fear of over-production—of creating too much—in certain areas of the world, coupled with the complementary fear of shortages —not enough for mere survival—point up a spiritual as well as an economic problem. We know how to match surpluses and needs. The question is: do we will to use our knowledge? The other day I saw pictures in a current magazine showing mountains of potatoes and citrus fruit being dumped and destroyed. This is a ghastly thing to happen in a hungry world. It should draw our attention to a blindness which afflicts our western civilization. To destroy the fruit of the fields to which the energies of the universe have contributed is not the right of those who have contributed the smallest part to growing these fruits.

THIS has a direct bearing on national policy and world policy through the United Nations. So often men of limited vision ask whether we can afford to do what is necessary to build a stable and prosperous world order? They seem to assume that the cost is going to be borne by this generation. It could not be borne by this generation.

The cost of destroying much of what previous generations built up without the help of bulldozers or electric power was borne mostly by this generation. But to rebuild, to construct, and to create the facilities by which men may produce what they need costs very little. Most of the cost is now deposited in the real bank of the earth in the form of coal and oil and forests—and now uranium and thorium. Another part of the cost—the smallest part—is the labor of this generation in transforming these investments of the ages into new assets for human welfare.

And here again we confront the old paradox: Either we invest this labor or lose ourselves in a stultifying period of depression. We are not talking about running poor houses full of dependent people. We are talking about rehabilitating and reconstructing productive facilities where free and independent people can work and create. Either we use the knowledge we have to create the conditions which make it possible for people to achieve their aspirations through their own efforts, or we take the consequences of coping with growing discontent and frustration.

We have just passed through a terrible war to defeat a fanatical totalitarianism which sought to dominate the people of the world, promising in return a new order. Nazism offered material security to those who would forfeit spiritual liberty. We fought on the side of freedom and won the chance to demonstrate that both freedom and security are possible. We must now consolidate the victory by demonstration.

The forces which have been defeated are not dead. They will rehabilitate themselves if they can feed upon instability, economic chaos and wide-spread fear.

We have created in the United Nations the instrumentalities through which peoples and statesmen, if determined to do so, can in our time lay the foundations for peaceful progress. In the Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the specialized agencies such as, the World Health Organization, the World Bank and Fund, the Food and Agriculture Organization, the International Refugee Organization and the International Trade Organization, nations can do together whatever they can agree upon.

In these organs of the United Nations, no delegates have the power to say "no" to progress. A sovereign nation can, if it chooses, count itself out of a cooperative endeavor but it cannot prevent as many nations as are ready from doing together for mutual benefit whatever they decide they wish to do.

It is in the actual planning for social and economic improvement and stability that we will gain the habits of collaboration. Through doing the specific things together, we will not only relieve the tensions threatening conflict but we will create a spiritual atmosphere of confidence. By doing the most obvious things with dispatch, we will develop the prestige of the United Nations which will enable it to undertake the most difficult tasks.

Important as the political issues are, I think we tend to overemphasize them. They are more dramatic and lend themselves to sensational headlines. But the patient work, for example, of experts on the Economic Commission for Europe and the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East, just formed at the recent Economic and Social Council meeting, may prove to be of greater importance than many of the overly-publicized political disagreements.

If through agreement on practical matters such as access to raw materials, development of markets, trade and commerce, we can enable people to work efficiently for each other rather than blindly against each other, many of the political issues will be resolved.

In my judgment, we have made remarkable progress in the past two years, since the representatives of fifty-one nations met at San Francisco to draft the Charter. We have created the machinery for international collaboration in many fields. During the next year we have the greatest opportunity to operate through these constructive agencies to create the conditions for peace. This work will never get done with the concentrated energy it requires unless the people of the world encourage action by their faithful attention to the problems of rehabilitation, reconstruction and development. Without a vision the people perish. It is the task of religion to illuminate this area of human activity and inspire men to do what they know how to do.

I feel strongly that the opportunities of the next year or two depend directly upon the spiritual forces in the world and, particularly, in America. Only if enough people strive unceasingly to translate the ethical principles into practical results, will the United Nations succeed in this critical period. Only if we can recapture the driving spirit which enabled us to overcome all obstacles in the war, and express that indomitable will through the United Nations, can we hope to consolidate our victory with lasting peace.

The real question is not "What bad things may others do" but rather "What great and good things are we prepared to do."

To my mind, it is not a choice of expending our energies and resources or not expending them. The only question is—do we organize these world energies now for peace or to dissipate them later in war which collective action now could prevent.

In the last analysis, war is the only costly alternative because investing in peaceful construction over the long run pays dividends. Any sound program of construction and development is bound to create a greater sum total from which all benefit.

It is the task of religion to produce in men's minds and hearts the spirit which will motivate their practical actions, which will make them think in large terms and have faith in their ability to achieve great ends.

There are many discouragements in the way in these early formative times, but there is no remedy except to be patient and always forward looking. I believe fervently in the objectives of the United Nations and I believe that our country can go a long way toward achievement, but we must take the leadership which is inescapable from our material power and we must be resolute in striving for our goal.

I am convinced, however, that the United Nations, as far as the United States is concerned, cannot be effective unless it has the whole backing of the American people. If it succeeds in establishing peace in our time and for the foreseeable future, the accomplishment will be done by faith and hard work, not by logic and hard work. It is essential to believe that it can be done.

Angelic Distraction

DISTRACTION is the greatest single enemy of prayer, whether in church or in one's secret closet. It is particularly trying in church, for of all places one should expect church interiors to keep the mind continually lifted up to God. But so many of our churches are cluttered with a number of things, not the least of them being a lavish display of hideous stained glass. In one of his many books the late architect and scholar, Dr. Ralph Adams Cram, opined that if all the stained glass in America were gathered together and smashed the gain would be far greater than the loss. He was dead right.

My reflections on this theme have been aroused by an experience not long since, when I was comfortably ensconced in a commodious clergy stall which faced directly towards a large transept window. In the center of the window were two medallions of sexless, winged creatures, one of whom was playing the violin, the other playing a small harp. Underneath them a scroll in pseudo-Gothic letters read, Alleluia, Alleluia. The donors of this memorial were doubtless sincere in believing that it would be edifying, and God has given them surely their due reward for pious intentions. There is also, no doubt, a very peculiar reward for parish committees or vestries who accept such memorials to the affliction of countless generations of seekers after God.

The preacher at this particular service made a valiant endeavor to keep our thoughts directed towards the things that really matter, but for me, alas, his every sentence was punctuated by the strumming of those pesky little angelic musicians. Try as hard as I might, I could not ignore their heavenly symphony. To turn my head away and look out over the congregation would have been, as every choir boy knows, ill-mannered. To look towards the sanctuary—full also of similarly impossible glass—would make me appear inattentive. If I closed my eyes the choir might giggle at thinking me asleep. There was nothing to do but gaze steadfastly at that violinist and harpist, and try perhaps to catch, between the preacher's pauses for breath, the tune of their music-making.

I was certain it was not plainsong. That kind of church music was never allowed in this church. But then what in the world would angels play and sing, if not plainsong? The combination of strings and harp—a lovely ensemble in chamber music—seemed also a bit puzzling, as it was rarely heard in this church except perhaps at an occasional, expensive wedding. Worse still, neither of these angels appeared to possess enough intestinal fortitude to sing anything as lusty as Alleluia. Then I began to think of some other angelic orchestras which I had met with in church—one in particular which continually reminded the congregation that there was such a hymn as the Te Deum (they might have been a bit more helpful and said that it would be found on page 10 of the Prayer Book).

Doubtless if I worshipped regularly in front of these memorials I would become used to them and forget about them. But I doubt if the donors intended this to be the case. And I cannot help but worry over what impression the Christian religion makes upon the modern American pagan who may be drawn, for some reason or other, to attend divine service in a church filled with such representations in colored glass. Will it seem to him something real, afire with a saving mission, or only silly make-believe and sentimentality? One of the best ways we could start in our three million dollar advertising campaign for the Episcopal Church would be to make a thorough house-cleaning of some of our church interiors.

Universal Military Training Hit By Church League

Officers State That Way to World Peace Lies in Ending of World Fear and Hatred

Edited by Sara Dill

New York:—Declaring that "the way to world peace lies in the abolition of world fear and hatred," officers and national committee members of the CLID last week sent a message to Congressional leaders opposing Universal Military Training.

"As Christian citizens," the statement says, "we believe that the efforts, materials and money of our nation should go towards the stimulation and establishment of those agencies and programs which would make for peace and not be given to a plan based on a premise of war and designed to make American youth think like military men. The great need of our world is for constructive rebuilding, both of its material resources and its spiritual values. We believe that the proposed plan for universal military training is a great step away from the realization of this need and is a false answer to both our security needs and our need for the expansion of democracy in this country. We urge our elected representatives to vote against any plan for universal military training and, instead, to bend all of their efforts toward the constructive rebuilding of a war-ravaged and war-weary world, the attainment of worldwide military disarmament and the establishment of a sound political and economic democracy in this country."

Those signing the statement were Bishops Parsons of California; Barton of Eastern Oregon; Emrich of Michigan; Haines of Iowa; Lawrence of Western Massachusetts; Mallett of Northern Indiana; Nash of Massachusetts; the Rev. Messrs. Walter R. Bowie of New York; J. Howard Melish of Brooklyn; George H. Easter of St. Louis; W. B. Spofford Jr., secretary of the CLID; Allen F. Kremer, Episcopal chaplain at the University of Pennsylvania; John H. Johnson of New York; William H. Marmion of Birmingham, Ala.; Joseph G. Moore, professor at Seabury-Western; J. Brooke Mosley, secretary of social relations of the diocese of Washington; William K. Russell of Wilkes-Barre; W. B. Spofford, manager of THE WITNESS; William M. Weber of Arlington, N. J. Laity to sign were Prof. Vida D. Scudder of Wellesley; Mary van Kleeck of New York; Wilma D. Butler of Athol, Mass.; Prof. Adelaide T. Case of Episcopal Theological School; Arthur H. Fawcett of Washington; Elizabeth Frazier of Philadelphia; Robert Luce of Washington; Lucy R. Mason of Atlanta, Ga.; Mrs. Charles P. Taft of Cincinnati.

Notable Service

London (RNS):—The Archbishop of Canterbury will preach, and leaders of the Free Churches will take part, in a service of intercession on September 24 in connection with the inauguration of the United Church of South India. The service will be held at St. Martin's-in-the-Fields and it is hoped that similar services will be held throughout England.

Union Services

Pasadena, Calif.: — Some months ago 2½ acres of land was given to St. Mark's, and about the same time the parish received $7,500 from the will of former senior warden, James F. Deimling. Last spring the old church property was sold to another denomination and construction started on a larger plant on the new property. The Westminister Presbyterian Church then invited the St. Mark's congregation to worship with them pending the construction. Union services therefore are now being held, conducted jointly by Pastor Max M. Morrison of the Presbyterian Church and Rector Edward E. Hailwood of St. Mark's. Parts of both liturgies have been put together and used successfully and comfortably by the merged congregations.

An Unusual Gift

Cohasset, Mass.:—A new type of philanthropy, believes the rector of St. Stephen's Episcopal church here, is represented in a fund of $150,000 to provide medical and surgical care for the town's "genteel poor," which the Episcopal clergyman, the Rev. C. C. Wilson, will administer under terms of the will of a wealthy Baptist patron of Cohasset.

Deserving persons of all creeds facing unusual expenses incurred by illness, may quietly and without public knowledge, avail themselves of this source of aid. Financial help from the fund also will be available to victims of fire, flood, and hurricane.

Donor of the fund, Mrs. Caroline Griggs Plant, first wife of the shoe manufacturer, Thomas G. Plant, and a long-time summer resident of Cohasset, died last month.

Although this prosperous south shore resort town regularly cares for its welfare and old-age assistance cases without exhausting its appropriations for this purpose, there will be many good uses for the fund, Mr. Wilson believes. One of them will be to aid needy children suffering from contagious diseases or tuberculosis.

Mrs. Plant, for many years a member of the Baptist Church, became interested in the work of St. Stephen's church when she acquired her summer home in Cohasset. She became especially concerned with the need of private aid to worthy persons burdened by extraordinary illness, but unwilling to appeal for public assistance.

St. Stephen's church, which also receives $10,000 from the will of Mrs. Plant, is a noted carillon church. For the music of its 51 bells the church has been likened to cathedrals of the Low Countries.

Lambeth Planned

Albany, N. Y.:—Bishop Oldham of the diocese of Albany left New York by plane on July 18 to represent the Church at a meeting in London of the consultative body of the Lambeth Conference. The agenda for the conference which will be held next summer at Lambeth Palace is to be planned.

E. O. W.

THE WITNESS appears every other week during the summer, from June 15th to September 15th. In common with all publications we have a difficult time with summer address changes since it takes fully two weeks to make them. Often this means that a subscriber no sooner has the address changed than we are notified to change it back to his permanent address. We suggest therefore that unless the change is to be permanent, or for a fairly extended period, that you arrange with a friend to forward your copies while on vacation. We will of course gladly make changes when requested to do so. In making the request please give both the old and new address and allow at least two weeks for the change. Notices should be sent to the editorial office at 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

Church Is Warned

Whitby, Ont.:—The International Missionary Council, in session here, was warned for a second time that the Christian Church must not become too closely associated with the "status quo." The speaker was Bishop Stephen Charles Neill, assistant to the Archbishop of Canterbury and co-director of the study department of the World Council of Churches. A similar warning was voiced earlier in the meeting by Matthew Spinka, professor of church history at Hartford Theological Seminary.

"Christianity can exist under almost any form of government," Bishop Neill said, "and recognize all that is good in it as a principle of order. But it must always retain its independence and its right to criticize. If the Church becomes so closely identified with the status quo as to fail to recognize its defects or to suspect all change as being for the worse, it loses its own revolutionary quality."

Urges Unity

Albuquerque, N. M.:—Union of the Episcopal and Methodist Churches was advocated at the southwestern Spanish-American conference of the Methodists held here. With ministers attending from all over Texas and New Mexico, Bishop James M. Stoney urged such unity in an address at the opening session.

Communion Set Guarded

Albany, N. Y.: — The famous Queen Ann communion set and the intricate burglar alarm system which guards it at St. Peter's Church here form a strange contrast of old world culture and modern science. The complete set, consisting of a chalice and paten, two flagons, a bread plate and almsbasin, was a gift from Queen Ann of England in 1715 when St. Peter's was known as "Queen Ann's Chapel in the Wilderness." The set is dated 1712, and each piece is suitably inscribed. It is now maintained in a case of shatter-proof glass equipped with an electric alarm system in the rear of the church where visitors may see it any day, highlighted by special illumination.

St. Peter's was built in 1715 by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, which had its headquarters in London and financed several new churches throughout the 13 original colonies.

In one instance, Bishop Doane, first bishop of Albany, was confronted in his rectory by a group of Onondaga Indians who had heard of the priceless set and had come to claim it. One Indian threw a tomahawk which struck the wall near the bishop's head as the others started to dance wildly around the room.

The Indians never captured the set, though several subsequent attempts were made, and later it became the permanent property of St. Peter's by a peaceful settlement.

Pre-Fabricated Houses

Trenton:—Pre-fabricated churches —possibly 24 of them over a two-year period—will be set up by the diocese of New Jersey, it was announced by its board of missions here. The churches will be assembled in response to a demand for new houses of worship in the face of continuing shortages of material. Benjamin F. Faunce, a layman from Holy Trinity Church, Collingswood, N. J., and a member of the board, has drawn up a tentative plan for the new churches. He said an experimental structure will be erected in Pleasantville, N. J., and results there will determine the construction work in other areas.

The building will be pre-fabricated in a South Jersey factory. It will have a seating capacity of 150 to 250 and will cost about $6,000. Requiring a minimum of operating expense and maintenance, the standard building is 25x80 feet—nine feet high at the eaves to 14 feet high at the roof peak. Framework will be of structural steel, and walls, both inside and out, will be of composition board. The building will be fireproof.

Bishop Wallace J. Gardner said 12 of these churches are contemplated, most of them in rural areas. But Suffragan Bishop Alfred L. Banyard, who is working with Bishop Gardner on the project, declared that possibly 24 churches may be needed at the end of a two-year period.

To Work Overseas

Hannigan, assistant at St. Andrew's, Kansas City, Mo., who will work largely with displaced persons for the ecumenical refugee committee in Geneva.

Church Lacks Vitality

New York:—The Rev. Louis W. Pitt in a sermon last Sunday at Grace Church here declared that the Church lacks vitality and creative enthusiasm, which he attributed to bickering over petty things. Referring to two recent conventions of the diocese of Western New York, where he failed both times in being elected bishop by a narrow margin, the rector said: "I failed of election in the clerical order because I was too 'low.' One wonders what will happen to a Church which seemingly cannot rise above the level of pigeonholing."

He said this was a commentary on the fact that there is a serious lack of creative enthusiasm in the Church to make an adequate contribution to a world which needs strong leadership.

"One remembers with deep concern and shame some of the things to which one has listened about his brethren in the tensions of an ecclesiastical convention. One bows his head with shame as one considers in retrospect the innuendoes, the sly remarks, the lack of trust in one's brethren's hearts and in one's own

The war years seriously reduced the supply of ordinands to the Church's ministry. Parishes and missions throughout this country and in our Church overseas are without the leadership they need.

It is important that the slack be taken up by men possessed of the best possible equipment for their task. (Of 964 ordained 1942-45, only 626 were graduates of our Church's Seminaries.)

heart," Dr. Pitt said.

He then pointed out that the sources of enthusiasm rest in a profound honesty. "Let us face up to our failures—it is at first a painful business, but it becomes creative," Dr. Pitt asserted, and added "the man who tells himself the whole truth about himself doesn't long despair, because essential honesty with oneself has in it the seed of victory—not only for himself, but for those with whom he comes in contact, and for the Church he loves."

Thinking Urged

Whitby, Ont. (RNS):—The Christian Church must understand the "sickness" of modern society "more thoroughly and more truly than all other would-be physicians," Henry Pitney Van Dusen, president of Union Theological Seminary, New York, declared here in addressing the International Missionary Council.

"As with the early Christians," he said, "we must out-think as well as out-live and out-love this confused, tragic, h e l d - b e n t contemporary world. Christian faith offers not only the sole cure for individual souls and for society—it gives the only truthful analysis. And, for most modern men, it will not do to proffer prescription without first convincing diagnosis. This demands of us thought—hard, painful, persistent, profound effort of mind."

Reconciliation Sought

Moscow (RNS): — Metropolitan gregory of Leningrad is on his way to the United States where he is to seek to bring about reconciliation between the Russian Orthodox Church and the Russian Church in America. It is expected that he will offer autonomy to the American Church if the reconciliation is approved.

Asks Christian Voice

Jerusalem (RNS):—C h r i s t i a n s must have a strong voice in the government of Palestine if that country's Christian minority is to be dealt with justly, Bishop W. H. Stewart, Anglican Bishop, told the UN's special committee.

Meeting Communism

Whitby, Ont.:—The C h r i s t i a n Church can no longer remain passive in the face of Communism, Matthew Spinka, professor of Church history at Hartford Theological Seminary, declared here in an unscheduled address before the International Missionary Council. Coming before the gathering for the second time in two days—on this occasion at the special request of the delegates—Spinka told mission leaders from 41 countries that Communism has challenged the Christian Church to build a better world.

"The best proof of superiority," he declared, "is to accept the challenge and make good. The Christian Church must clear itself from the reproach that it is serving in the class struggle on the side of the status quo. We Christians must not allow masses of men, economically exploited, living in preventable poverty or suffering disease, some on the very verge of starvation, discriminated against because of color or race, to find their most helpful and sympathetic friends outside the Christian Church. The task of making a better world is by rights far more ours than theirs. It is safer for the Church to find itself among the sinned against and the exploited than among the sinning and exploiting."

Addressing himself to the question, "What appeal does the Communist gospel possess for young men," Spinka declared: "I believe that the appeal lies chiefly in the concrete and positive program for the building of the Communist Kingdom of God—the classless society, free of social injustice and economic exploitations—by means of scientific, economic and political organization of society as against the secularist futilitarianism or the old bourgeois-capitalistic order of society. But such philosophy of futilitarianism is intolerable. Man has to worship something: If not God, then half-gods. An intelligent man cannot live in a meaningless world. That is the reason why Marx, Hitler, and Mussolini found among young men such enthusiastic acceptance. They literally gave these young people something to live for, and even die for. It was not always worth dying for. What a pity that Christianity failed to

Church in India

New York:—The Rev. John P. Aaron, widely-known in this country, son-in-law of the late Bishop Azariah of Dornakal, India, says that the work in his area is growing. He is in charge of the Pakhal Mission in the Singareni section of Dornakal. Mr. Aaron said that in 1926 there were 162 adult baptisms and 291 infant baptisms. There were 384 confirmations. "As far as baptisms are concerned this is below normal. One of the pastorates was without a pastor for more than six months. Since January we have found an experienced pastor from another Mission and under his leadership that pastorate will grow."

Outside Speakers

Pittsburgh, Pa.:—Throughout this year Calvary Church has been arranging special services to enable the members of the parish, and others of the city, to hear outstanding leaders in various fields of the Church's activity. The last of these services for this season was held on a recent Sunday evening, when Mr. Charles P. Taft, president of the Federal Council of Churches, spoke to a well filled church on "The Layman and the Ecumenical Movement." Mr. Taft set forth the objectives of both the Federal Council and the World Council, pointing out the variations between the aims of the two groups and also how they supplement one another. He explained how the interest and intelligent support of lay people is necessary if either Council is to fulfill its purpose.

A distinguished visitor at this service, who gave the benediction, was the Rt. Rev. Bishop Andrei, Bishop of North and South America and Australia in the Bulgarian Orthodox Church.

The Rev. Lauriston L. Scaife, rector of Calvary, is anticipating a series of similar services during the coming year. It is hoped that, through these services, Anglican, Orthodox and Protestant people will come to know better and to value more highly the varying qualities which each can give to a united Christendom.

THE REV. KIMBER DEN
Director, Linchwan Service Center, China

The scope of our work, in this post-war period of reconstruction, will be extended to five new areas at five strategic points at Kian, Nanchang, Lotus Pond, Shing Kien and Linchwan. It calls for a current budget of US $1,000 a month besides an initial capital fund of US $20,400 for farming implements and industrial machinery for simple handicraft work. After a year and a half all the work in these five areas is expected to be self-supporting and self-perpetuating. This program should be fully supported by all Christian bodies and missions. To direct such a program the following staff is required: a director of public health; a woman director of home-making; a director of agriculture; a director of recreation and mass education; a director of industrial development; a pastor with special training in religious education.

The Christian Rural Service in Kiangsi under which the new project is to function needs the prayers of the whole Christian Church that it may not fail in this great task of working for a betterment of the Chinese rural life and that it may work better ways of bringing God's love to our needy brothers and sisters of the Chinese villages.

ANSWER: Gifts for this work should be sent to the Church League for Industrial Democracy, 155 Washington Street, New York 6, N. Y., with checks made "Treasurer. CLID."

MRS. JAMES G. COOKE
Churchwoman of Los Angeles, Calif.

As a faithful reader of THE WITNESS for some time I should like to congratulate you on all the numbers, but June 26th in particular, with special reference to "The Lunatic Fringe" by Sidney A. Temple Jr.

MRS. DAVID SUMMEY
Churchwoman of New York

It is a matter of regret to me that THE WITNESS has so eulogized Henry Wallace. There is no doubt that he is honest, sincere and idealistic. The fact that he serves at the early service does not argue for the wisdom of his political pronouncements and I feel that he is hardly "turning his back upon political advancement." I agree with him in his disapproval of military aid to Greece and Turkey and over his concern with the most unfortunate deterioration of relations with Russia. But I think his going abroad to denounce our foreign policy was extremely bad taste and possibly dangerous. I think that we must seek other liberal leadership.

THE REV. FRANK BLOXMAN
Rector at Ware, Massachusetts

Thanks for THE WITNESS emphasizing the work of the Church Army. As an exmember may I say that some of the happiest years of my life were spent with the Church Army. I am hopeful that your special number will bring us a flood of recruits. With the Church's emphasis on evangelism it seems to me that the Army's three c's could form a good program for the whole church—conversion, consecration, churchmanship. With a group of thoroughly consecrated Church Army men going on evangelistic missions throughout the length and breadth of the country there would be a mighty shaking of this staid old Church. I am grateful for the visit of THE WITNESS each week and hope you never have to change your policy.

THE REV. CHARLES BRECK ACKLEY
Rector of St. Mary's, New York City

Congratulations to the editors of THE WITNESS for publishing the article (June 26) by the Rev. Sydney A. Temple Jr., entitled "The Lunatic Fringe." We need not only "Liberal Evangelicals" but also "Liberal Christian Citizens"—men and women with a liberal social and political outlook. There would seem to be so few of us but perhaps if we could get together we might find that there are still prophets who have not bowed down to the dollar sign.

REV. JAMES L. SMILEY
Vicar at Eastport, Md.

You did a good job in publicizing the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship in the issue of June 12. But we must honestly judge that organization by its works. What have they actually done so far but spend money on conferences, talk eloquently, allow admirers to photograph them and finally instruct their treasurer to solicit paying memberships?

Bishop Moody Replies Sharply To Bishop Manning

He Declares That Decision Was Made After A Thorough Investigation into the Facts

By W. B. Spofford

New York:—The controversy over the marriage canons which was started when a letter written by the retired Bishop of New York, William T. Manning, appeared in the secular press on July 25 continues with all sorts of people having a hand in it. We will limit ourselves in this story to those directly involved, with our editorial comments found on page seven. Bishop Manning's letter which precipitated the controversy was as follows:

"I am now a retired bishop and have no jurisdiction, but, as one who holds the office of a bishop in the Church of God, I feel bound to express publicly my feeling of shame and sorrow at the almost incredible action against the sanctity of marriage taken in the diocese of Lexington and also in the diocese of Michigan.

"In both cases the Bishop gave his consent; in each case a priest of this Church is married to a divorced woman; and in one of the cases the woman has been twice divorced and so has three living husbands.

"The action in these two dioceses is a dishonor to the Episcopal Church, and it arouses grave fears as to the effects of our recently adopted canon on marriage. Does this mean that through the wrong interpretation of the canon by some diocesan chancellors, and the weakness of some bishops, we are now to have a number of ecclesiastical and moral Renos, and the consequent abolition of any Christian standard of marriage, in the Church?

"The action in these two dioceses shows complete disregard for the Christian teaching as to marriage and for the plain teaching of our Prayer Book. Is this what the new canon is to give us?

"If, as a Church, we are to acquiesce in such action as this—which God forbid!—it will be complete and ghastly mockery for our priests to stand before the altar and say the words of the marriage service: 'so long as ye both shall live,' 'till death us do part,' and 'Those whom God hath joined together let no man put asunder.' "

The criticism of Bishop Moody of Lexington was over his having sanctioned the marriage of the Rev. Benedict H. Hanson to Mrs. Elizabeth Donner Winson, twice divorced. The fact that her first husband was Elliott Roosevelt of course gave the story added value from a news angle. The criticism of Bishop Creighton was because he approved the marriage of Dean Kirk B. O'Ferrall, a widower, to Mrs. Isabelle W. Morrill, who was divorced from her first husband.

Both Bishop Creighton and Bishop Moody declared, following Bishop Manning's criticism, that they acted in strict conformity to the marriage canons that were approved at the last General Convention, unanimously by the House of Bishops and nearly unanimously by the House of Deputies. They stated further that their judgments in the cases were based upon information that of necessity was confidential and that Bishop Manning was totally unfamiliar with the reasons for permitting the marriages.

Bishop Moody was particularly severe with Bishop Manning for interfering in a matter which "is in my diocese and nobody else's business." He went on to describe the retired Bishop of New York as "an old gentleman who is no doubt sincere" but declared that "he is way off base" and then inferred that Bishop Manning was a headline seeker by declaring "but far be it from me to rob the old man of his last headlines."

He declared further that Bishop Manning was guilty of personal prejudice and was speaking "without adequate knowledge of the facts and without any effort to get them. This marriage was carried out in the strictest and most meticulous observance of the marriage laws of the Episcopal Church. It was right in law and in conscience. It is immoral for any judge for reasons of personal prejudice to take away from any person a right which has been granted to that person under the law. The marriage was carried out only after the strictest personal investigation. It was a decision which affects my diocese only and I am going to stick by it."

CELEBRATES 337th BIRTHDAY

Hampton, Va.:—In the ancient house of worship known as St. John's Church, itself 219 years old, there was celebrated here on July 20th the 337th anniversary of the founding of Elizabeth City parish, now the oldest Protestant parish in continuous existence in America. The present rector of the parish is the Rev. Carter H. Harrison.

Mr. George C. Mason, historiographer of the diocese of Southern Virginia, states that "although no religious ceremony accompanied this founding, it is correctly regarded as having taken place July 19, 1610, when the English, under Governor Sir Thomas Gates, drove out the Kecoughtan Indians and established the settlement of Kecoughtan. This is true because every early plantation in Virginia constituted a parish in itself, for which the securing of a minister and the erection of a church were immediate objectives.

"It is appropriate that Elizabeth City parish should have the distinction of being the oldest Protestant parish in America because the first landing of the Jamestown colonists on American soil, April 26, 1607, took place at Cape Henry, within the original bounds of Elizabeth City County, and the cross there set up symbolized the planting of the English Church in this country.

The historian goes on to say however that "the events which led up to the expulsion of the Kecoughtan Indians by the English in 1610 follow too closely the familiar modern pattern of a minor 'incident' magnified into the provocation for a major military aggression to afford much cause for pride to the student of our early history. It is evident that the friendly, hospitable Kecoughtan Indians suffered unjustly for a crime committed by hostile savages of the Nansemond tribe, who had murdered an English colonist, Humphrey Blunt, at the James River point still called by his name. It has long been known that the English only used revenge as a pretext and that the real objective of their aggression was the poor Indians' rich cornfields and abundant supply of seafood."

CHURCH AND LABOR RELATIONS

Madison, Wis. (RNS):—Clergymen and labor leaders met here for an institute on relationships between church and labor, sponsored by the University of Wisconsin.

On the question "at what point can the Church and labor get together," the Rev. Jack Telfer, of the Ottumwa, Iowa, Congregational church, offered an example: "In our town a milk strike recently tied up deliveries for five days. Feeling was high. Then organized labor invited the farmers and the distributors, with myself as moderator, to a meeting. The farmers and the distributors haggled and quarreled and got out of their systems all the things they had been wanting to tell each other. Finally, they agreed on a settlement."

An AFL man from Duluth, Minn., told the Institute: "One thing bothers me. In our town when the ministers get too active, there's a pressure campaign put on by the Chamber of Commerce, and the first thing you know the minister is out. Take a situation we had in Duluth just recently. Mass meetings of 9,000 to 10,000 people were held in the armory, and we tried for two weeks to get a clergyman to come to the platform and speak to the people. No minister in Duluth dared. Finally, we had to go to a little town nearby and get a minister who had been pressured out of a Duluth church for his labor activities."

Alex Lundstrom, of Madison, a member of the American Union of Telephone Workers, told of a month-long telephone strike in Madison. "During the strike," he said, "the ministers came to us. The social action committee of the Madison Ministerial Association made an investigation of the strike issues. The report was published and was extremely helpful in swinging public opinion to the workers. Many of the local ministers addressed the strikers, and several of them incorporated a discussion of the issues in their sermon. This is an example of what can be done by fearless churchmen united in a cause."

Mary Ann, a Negro girl from Chicago, took the floor. "For three years," she said, "I have been trying to get a young people's movement started in my church. My grandfather is the minister, but that doesn't help. All I got was a pat on the head and the advice that I should leave church activities to those who know how to run them. Finally, by going from door to door, I got together about 50 young people, and we formed a Youth Progressive League. The church wouldn't even give us a place to meet, the elders said we were too noisy. Finally my union helped us to get a place. Who can blame youth for leaving the Church?"

Layman T. W. Holson has greatly stimulated laymen's work as chaiman of the committee in the District of San Joaquin

In a summation of the Institute sessions, Mr. French offered the following point:

"If ministers will continue to stand by their convictions and support the progressive movement in labor, it must be the duty of labor to do everything in its power to work to remove the pressures working against cooperating ministers."

BRADFORD YOUNG GOES TO ENGLAND

Manchester, N. H.:—The Rev. Bradford Young, rector of Grace Church here, sailed with his wife and children on August 1 for England. He is exchanging parishes for a year with the Rev. George H. Handisyde, rector of St. Peter's, Selsey, the mother parish of Sussex and one of the oldest parishes in England. The parish was founded in 681 by St. Wilfrid and includes among its treasures a 7th century Saxon cross and an 11th century Norman font. The present church, though not on its original site, was built in the 12th century.

The purpose of the exchange is to refresh and enrich the experience of both rectors and both parishes, to emphasize the universality of the Church, and to increase goodwill between the two countries. There will be no extra expense for either congregation, each rector will receive the other's salary while he performs his duties. Similar to the familiar sabbatical exchange between universities, it is believed that this is the first application of the principle to church life in a way to enable ministers of two different countries to work through the whole church year in each other's parishes.

AUSTRALIAN ANGLICANS MARK CENTENARY

Sydney (RNS):—Hundreds of thousands of Anglicans participated in commemorative services marking the centenary of the diocese of Newcastle, Melbourne, and Adelaide. The Anglicans paid homage to Bishops Perry, Short, and Tyrell, who came from England in 1847 to build their pioneer parishes in the Australian wilds.

Bishop Augustus Short was faced by perhaps the hardest task confronting the trio of prelates. He was called on to minister to the needs of all the inhabitants of South and Western Australia—almost half the Commonwealth. He arrived in churchless Adelaide with five clergymen. His vigor and earnestness established a precedent which bequeaths on Adelaide the title of "City of Churches."

In South Australia, the centenary celebrations launched a ten-year drive for $100,000 which will be used to expand Church work and mission activities, and build colleges and halls.

Christian Youth Conference Is Well Attended

Leaders From Many Countries Give Addresses In the Opening Days of the World Conference

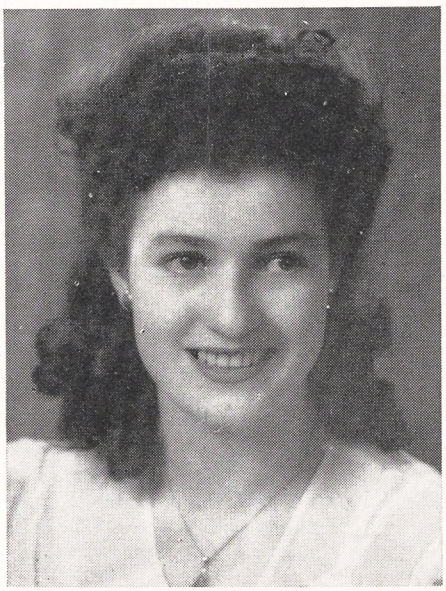
By Sydney C. Lucker
Religious News Service Correspondent

Oslo, Norway:—The World Conference of Christian Youth opened here with more than 1,000 young people and adult Church leaders present at the first plenary session. Bishop Eivind Berggrav, Primate of the Norwegian State Lutheran Church, conducted the opening service in Our Savior's Cathedral here.

The conference, beyond doubt the most representative ever held in Norway, included delegates from the old-established churches of Europe as well as the "younger churches" of Africa, India, China, Burma, Malaya, Madagascar, the Middle East and South America. In addition there was a large delegation from North America.

A delegation from Japan has not yet arrived and it is considered unlikely that they will since they have not received from the government the required exit permits. Sixteen German delegates are present. There are no Russian delegates, which was explained by a message from the Moscow patriarchate stating that the Russian Church is holding a conference this fall to discuss relations with other Churches and that it was considered inadvisable at this juncture to send a youth delegation to Oslo.

A number of delegates and leaders gave informal reports on the status of Christianity in various parts of the world.



Russell L. Durgin, American YMCA executive, who recently served on Gen. MacArthur's staff, declared that "the door in Japan is wide open" and the Church has unprecedented opportunities there. He said attendance at religious services in that country has increased three or four times despite the destruction of 500 churches and the privations suffered by both the people and clergymen.

John W. Sadio, of Nagpur, India, spoke of Christian youth's concern over a proposed Indian law which would allow freedom to propagate religion but which would limit conversions to Christianity to those over 18 years of age.

Annie Baeta, of Africa's Gold Coast, expressed fear that the state there would assume control of all schools. She said 80 per cent of the schools are currently run by mission groups.

Ernesto Cibilx, of Uruguay, reported that Protestants are making progress in South America, including Argentina, where the Catholic Church has retained "supremacy and power."

Dr. Tracy Strong, general secretary of the YMCA, said the outstanding impression he had received dur-

Mrs. Bennie Beauregard was formerly Miss Beryl May Anning of Sydney, Australia, until she met a G.I. She was recently confirmed at Pointe Coupee Parish, Louisiana ing visits to Asia and Africa was "the spirit of hopefulness" evinced by the people there which was "distinctive in these days of despair and tragedy."

Whan Shin Lee, of Korea, declared that Christian leaders in his country are hampered by the lack of communication between the American and Russian zones of occupation.

Spontaneous meetings held by the German delegation with the Dutch, French and other groups whose nations were under Nazi occupation is an interesting side-light.

Mannfred Mueller, leader of the German group, said the Dutch representatives had told him that as a result of their experiences during the occupation they found it difficult to trust Germans any more.

Mueller quoted the Dutch youth as saying, "How do we know that you won't do the same thing again?"

The German leader said the Nazi era showed that man can perform all manner of evils as the result of fear or the lure of obtaining an advantage.

"The Germans have seen what is in man and therefore we do not fully understand ourselves," he said. "Everything in Germany has broken down, especially the belief in man and his righteousness. We therefore don't dare to give any promises though we will try our best to start anew."

When the German delegates reported that an abyss of nihilism now threatens Germany, the Dutch representatives expressed fear that all Europe might be drawn into that abyss.

The Dutch and Indonesian delegations also are conferring and have already issued a joint statement expressing the desire of both groups "to meet each other as brothers in Jesus Christ in order to help clear the road toward cooperation between our two peoples on the basis of liberty and equal right." The Dutch group said the Indonesian people have a right to liberty and independence and added that every opportunity for halting the use of arms must be seized.

Warning that for the first time in history man possesses in the atom bomb power to commit collective suicide, Dr. Kirtley F. Mather, Harvard University professor and churchman, told the World Conference of Christian Youth here that Christians must work for the perfection of a society that provides "the utmost opportunity for the invigoration of the human spirit and the growth of the soul."

He said scientists are becoming increasingly certain that the fate of mankind depends more on the decisions made in the fields of morality and ethics than in physics and chemistry.

If the souls of men are to grow, Dr. Mather said, good will must be added to intelligence.

After the opening sessions, 33 discussion groups were organized, each composed of 30 or more young people. They immediately settled down to a study of the nine main issues before the conference: (1) freedom and order; (2) the Christian and his secular environment; (3) world order; (4) man and his inventions; (5) the Christian family; (6) how to make the local parish ecumenical;

(7) the Christian faces the situation of the Jew; (8) the Church faces the world; and (9) education in the modern world.

Each group was carefully made up of delegates representing various racial, nationality, geographical, ecclesiastical or denominational affiliations. As many as 26 different nations were represented in a single group.

CHARGE DEMOCRACY IS DENIED

Washington (RNS):—Representatives of Church, educational, and farm groups who have been denied a chance to testify on the question of universal military training before the House armed services committee declared here that such action "disregards the principles of democracy upon which our government is founded."

"There is no military emergency confronting this country that could possibly justify such an ill-considered action on the part of the house committee," they said.

The group charged that eight prominent religious bodies, including The Methodist Church, Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., and the United Council of Church Women have been refused a hearing. Also denied a chance to testify, it was claimed, were the National Education Association, American Association of University Professors, Commission on Christian Higher Education, The National Farmers Union, National Grange, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, International Association of Machinists, and the National Association for Advancement of Colored People.

"It will be tragic indeed if we approach our vital peacetime problems with the impetuousness of a wartime psychology," the group declared. "The House Committee has set an example that bodes ill for the future of our democracy in a world where totalitarian forces are eager to discredit our traditions of formulating national policy on the basis of the fully expressed will of the people."

Among those signing the statement were Mrs. Lillian Watford, legislative representative of the United Council of Church Women; the Rev. Carl Soule, representing the Methodist peace commission; Mrs. Paul Gebhard, representing the division of social education and action of the Presbyterian Church; James A. Crain of the department of social welfare of the Disciples; E. Raymond Wilson of the Friends committee on national legislation.

LITTLE RESPONSE TO CHURCH

Roanoke, Va. (RNS):—The religious plight of England "is so deadly and the interest in religion so apathetic" that many English clergymen consider the outlook "hopeless," according to the Rev. Carl J. Sanders, pastor of South Roanoke Methodist church, here.

Mr. Sanders, who is serving in London as an exchange pastor for several weeks, reports in the Virginia Methodist Advocate that he attended a ministers' conference in Hammersmith, a London borough, and that "I have never met a group of ministers anywhere who were so utterly pessimistic in their outlook, hopeless in their faith and defeated in their work."

As to the much-publicized Greater London Christian Commando Campaign, Mr. Sanders found that the ministers, with only one exception, considered the campaign a complete failure, with 90 per cent of the decisions made coming from people already connected with the church but who had become lax in their interest.

The meeting Mr. Sanders attended was of the Hammersmith Ministerial Fraternal, whose members represent the Baptist, Presbyterian, Disciples, Congregational, and Methodist Churches. The clergymen told the visitor that less than 10 per cent of the people of England give any response at all to the church.

Mr. Sanders quoted the president of the organization, a Baptist, as saying that the people of England are "caught in the hopelessness of materialism, socialism, and Communism" and that the church is trying to engineer a revival before the people are ready for it. The president added that the hope of England "is going to come from outside the church, rather than from inside."

"One gets the feeling here that the church, Free and Anglican, is no longer a national institution of cardinal importance," Mr. Sanders declared. "It is rather a social institution that still lingers in a swiftly changing scene."

Outstanding Bishops are Bishop Quin of Texas; Bishop Stevens of Los Angeles and Bishop Gooden of Los Angeles. The Rev. Perry Austin of Long Beach, California, carries the crosier

PRESBYTERIANS HIT CONSCRIPTION

Philadelphia (RNS): — Universal military training was scored by the Presbyterian board of Christian education here as "repugnant to free men and dangerous to free institutions." In an appeal to clergymen and Church members to defeat peacetime conscription, the board declared that "American militarism must be stopped before it leads us and our civilization into the destruction of atomic war." The board warned that adoption of military training means following the lead of European countries which are now "a shambles with neither peace nor security" as a result of 150 years of adherence to the conscription system.

EDITORIALS

The Marriage Canons

FOLLOWING the last General Convention we published an interpretation of the new Marriage Canons (WITNESS, October 10, 1946). It was written by Bishop Davis of Western New York who served as chairman of the commission for many years. Most people will agree that no greater authority could be found in the Church.

Because of the recent attack upon Bishop Creighton of Michigan and Bishop Moody of Lexington by the retired Bishop of New York, we are reprinting this article. It is, we think, an effective answer to Bishop Manning. Bishop Creighton and Bishop Moody are men of judgment. They of course carefully reviewed all the facts in the cases under discussion and rendered their judgments after "taking into consideration the godly discipline both of justice and mercy," as required by the canons.

Bishop Manning, without any jurisdiction whatever and with no knowledge of the facts in the cases he criticized, rendered his unsolicited judgment, without much regard for either justice or mercy, in the pages of the secular press.

The Bishops of our Church are quite capable of exercising the discretion given them in administering the marriage canons without the advice of either the retired Bishop of New York or the editors of the Church press.

Making the Headlines

CONFLICT, money and sex, or a combination of any of these, is news according to the standards of most American newspapers. Bishop Manning has often acted upon the knowledge that the way to make the front page is to attack someone. His frequent practice has been to attack fellow churchmen by writing a letter to the Church papers. Then, once assured that one or more of these journals are to print his communication, he immediately sends copies to the newspapers with a statement that his letter will appear in the next issue of whatever Church papers he persuaded to play his game. The result is the airing in the secular press of what the public interprets to be a bitter controversy in the Episcopal Church. Days later along come the Church papers when the whole affair is as cold as a pitcher's smile when an opponent blasts one of his best offerings out of the park.

There have been occasions when THE WITNESS has refused to play this game. Letters have been written for our columns by Bishop Manning which we refused to print unless he gave them release dates: that is, agreement on his part that they would not appear in other papers, secular or religious, before they appeared in THE WITNESS where we might deal with them editorially if we so desired. Our insistence upon following this established practice hasn't pleased the retired Bishop of New York. So on this divorce matter he bypassed us, telling the reporters that the only journals of the Episcopal Church that amount to anything are the two that cooperated with him in getting his latest attack on two fellow Bishops on the front page of newspapers throughout the country.

We have no objection to controversy over the marriage canons or anything else. But we do think that a matter that chiefly concerns members of our Church would be debated with more reason and less heat if kept within the household. About all that has been accomplished by this renewed passion of Bishop Manning for the headlines is to give the general public the impression that a serious division exists in the Episcopal Church. This is contrary to the facts.

"QUOTES"

IF WE are wise we are neither easy-going optimists nor yet discouraged cynics, but realists, knowing that we are up against the most complicated and difficult problem mankind ever faced, trusting no panaceas, expecting no easy outcomes, but no defeatists either about democracy or Christianity or ultimate world organization and peace. There is hope in that soberer attitude.

—Harry Emerson Fosdick

Christian Marriage

FOR eighteen years the General Convention has struggled with the problem of strengthening and safeguarding Christian marriage. The problem is to give pastoral care to people and not simply provide some way of punishing them if they go wrong. The real effort of the Church must be centered upon discharging its responsibilities for maintaining Christian marriage and not upon passing rules which will allow this or that person to marry. The real attack upon the problem must be launched in the parish and not at the top ecclesiastical level. Three or four years of energetic and persistent teaching and scrupulous application of Christian teaching on the parish level would do more to solve this problem than many General Conventions. Over and over again we must instruct our people as to what the Church means by the solemnization of matrimony. That is the duty of every parish priest. Our task is to prevent the problem rather than to solve it. A thorough job of prevention will do much to solve it.

As an aid in the accomplishment of this task we believe it would be timely to have a committee, appointed perhaps by the Presiding Bishop, prepare a manual, briefly setting forth the teachings of the Church on this subject, and the canonical provisions pertaining thereto, as well as furnishing suitable forms to be filled out by applicants for the solemnization of matrimony, and a suitable declaration of intention to be signed by the applicants.

Meanwhile an interpretation of Christian marriage which represents the consensus of WITNESS editors appeared in our number of November 7, 1946. It was written by the Rev. Hugh McCandless of our board and, at many requests, was made into a leaflet. The Marriage Service is available at $4 for 100 copies, or 10c for single copies, from THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y. We believe rectors would do well to have a supply on hand for those making inquiries and to give couples about to marry.

The New Marriage Canons

by Cameron J. Davis

Bishop of Western New York and Chairman of the Commission

AFTER twenty-one years of study the Church has at last adopted canons on holy matrimony which unlike the present canons reflect the doctrine of marriage that is expressed in the Prayer Book form of solemnization. This doctrine is, in brief, that Christian marriage is more than a civil contract; it is a physical, spiritual and mystical union of two persons, like "the mystical union that is betwixt Christ and his Church"; that if such a union is once formed it is life-long and cannot be dissolved by divorce. It is formed by the will of God when two free and competent persons give their mutual consent of heart, mind and will to it; but if that consent is not complete by reason of lack of freedom or competence to give it, the marital bond in the eyes of the Church does not exist; if the consent was complete, given by two free and competent persons, it does exist even though the civil court has annulled the marriage or divorced the parties. It is the responsibility of the bishop to discover whether the bond exists.

The canons were adopted unanimously by the House of Bishops and almost unanimously by the House of Deputies. They differ from the canons proposed by the joint commission in that they make a diocesan court or council of advisors permissive rather than compulsory. Secondly, they do away with the permanent commission and substitute for it by resolution a special committee of the House of Bishops to which is given the same duties as were given the permanent commission, that is, the duties of collecting judgments, publishing findings therefrom to the House of Bishops, and giving advice, in order that a code of precedents may gradually be formed. Thirdly, they restore the "impediments" listed in the present canon with the addition of two more, namely "concurrent contract inconsistent with the contract constituting canonical marriage" which requires right intention, and "defects of personality" which of course derives from the Church's doctrine of marriage as a spiritual union to which consent of heart, mind and will must be given by persons free and competent to give it. Fourthly, they restore by resolution the two subsections (a) and (b) of section 3 in canon 15 with the omission of the clause which authorizes a minister under certain conditions to bless the parties to a marriage contracted otherwise than as the Church allows, though the amended canon does not forbid him to do so.

Thus the canons adopted retain the principle on which the joint commission's proposals rest and all of the essential procedure though somewhat simplified. Practically they open a way through which the Church can treat each case of marital failure on its individual merits, and as a problem of character rather than wholly by legal and objective tests. Objective tests may be available in a case, but an analysis of personality traits is the essential in any case to the formation of a judgment. A civil divorce or annulment creates a presumption that defects of personality or some other impediment existed in the first place, but the presumption is not always correct. For example many divorced people find after their divorce that they are still spiritually bound to each other and are therefore married again to each other. The attendant conditions of the marriage, the history of the marriage, and the character and life of the applicant all must have a bearing in determining whether the marital bond exists. Wide discretion is given the Bishops in administering the canons. This is as it should be. It is a pastoral rather than a legal problem. And in dealing with a personality problem legalistic tests cannot be specified.

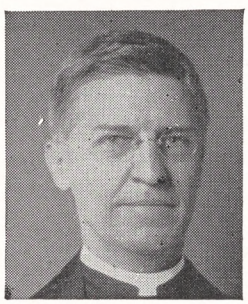
ON THE other hand, the Church's doctrine is clearly stated, and the bishops are bound by their vows to conform to and to guard it, as they are to any other doctrine of the Church. We believe Jesus' teaching to be that a God-made marriage is indissoluble, no matter what the civil courts do, but we believe, too, that all marriages are not necessarily God-made marriages, and in such cases the Church may give permission to remarry. Thus the duty of the Church to build united homes is made possible of fulfilment in many cases where formerly she could do nothing; the Church in many cases can now make contact when a new home is contemplated after a previous failure.

It was undoubtedly the consciousness of this all-important duty along with the feeling that our present canon has put up bars to such contact and has also been ineffective in stemming the tide of divorce amongst our people that brought forth unanimous approval of the new canons.

The resolutions adopted with the canons are also important. The most important of all is the following: Resolved, that this Convention shall, and it does hereby, direct that the National Council, through its divisions of Christian education and Christian social relations, in co-operation with such other agencies as may be involved, and in consultation with the commission on holy matrimony, to prepare suitable guides for the preparation of persons for holy matrimony, offices of instruction on the nature of Christian marriage, the responsibilities and duties of family membership, and the doctrine and discipline of this Church in regard to holy matrimony, and to use every effort to obtain the use of such material in the parishes and missions of this Church.

For no canons will work unless the people are instructed; and no canons will maintain the Christian doctrine of marriage unless children and adults alike are taught the blessings and the responsibilities of a united family life.

The canons differ from the present canons in omitting the "exception clause." This is partly because it is of doubtful scriptural authenticity and also because a physical act of infidelity in itself ought not to be taken as determining evidence of the nonexistence of a spiritual union.



In conclusion it should be noted that by inference no minister is permitted to marry a person previously married during the lifetime of the former spouse, unless the applicant is an active member of this Church in good standing who has obtained permission from the bishop of his or her domicile to be so married. This provision will also guard the bishop from a multiplicity of cases.

The Salaries of Clergy

By

THEODORE R. LUDLOW
Suffragan Bishop of Newark

THE time has come when we should go beyond a minimum salary and consider a basic salary for all clergy. The voice of the Church will be heard with much more authority if its own affairs are conducted upon a more equitable basis. At the present time, clerical salaries are on a competitive basis rather than on the Christian basis of providing each worker with what is necessary for reasonable living. This competitive basis drains financially weaker parishes and fields that are, nevertheless, real opportunities for service and may offer even more strategic opportunities for leadership than the financially competent parish has to offer. So-called strong parishes, because of their financial condition, command what services they wish and pay what salaries they desire to secure what they wish. They do not always take into consideration their responsibility toward the weaker parishes or the effect of their own policy upon the leadership of the whole Church. Much needed missionary work is afflicted with a psychological discount because it does not show up well on this competitive basis.

Why should two clergymen in approximately the same area draw different salaries? Is it because of larger numerical responsibility? If so, the solution of that problem is to provide more clergymen so as to take care of the larger number, rather than a bigger salary for the man who theoretically covers a larger number. There is a physical limit to the capacity of the individual priest, even if sometimes there may not seem to be a limit to his financial receptivity. We are not in the ministry for the money that we get out of it. It was because the husbandman in the parable of our Lord recognized the necessity of a living wage for all workers, irrespective of the number of hours of work that they had done, that he paid the same wage to all of his workers. I believe that there should be a basic salary for all men in a given area to be augmented on the basis of the number of years of service given, plus his financial responsibility for dependents. This is the basis on which all of our missionary work is done.

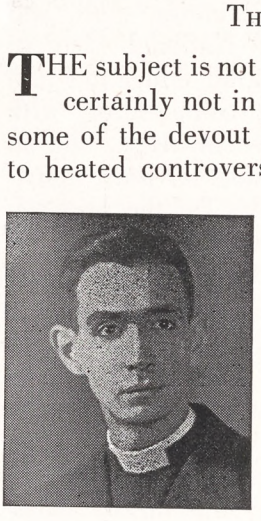
Our present competitive system creates inequities during the active ministry of a man, and continues them after retirement. The man who gets a good salary during his active ministry is able to retire with a larger pension than the man who has received a smaller salary, and yet the latter may have given every bit as much service in just as strategic a field as the former. The man who conscientiously sticks to a poorly-paid job gets a poor pension in return. This has come very close home to me personally this year in the retirement of my brother-in-law. We were classmates in the seminary; we went to the foreign mission field together. By his own choice, he spent most of his life in the foreign mission field, while I, through no choice of my own, was only able to spend five years of my ministry in the foreign field. This February, he and my sister were retired on the munificent pension of $845 per year after 35 years of faithful service in the mission field.

SUCH a method may be actuarily sound, but it is not Christian. I have been told that the Pension Fund cannot do anything about it because it started the Pension Fund on the pledge of an actuarial system and with the understanding that, if the original sum was subscribed, it would not appeal for any more money. If this alleged promise exists, I do not believe that it would or should stand in the way of the Church adding to the Pension Fund whatever might be necessary to see that each man retired with a reasonable living competence if the proper request was made. The Church must share the blame, because it is content to go along with this competitive system. It is bad for the Church because it compels men to keep on working after the time when their physical and mental powers have ceased to be at their best. It is bad for the Church because it prevents the younger men from growing up into responsibilities which should be theirs, but which are held on to by men who are obliged to do so in order to meet the expense of living.

I believe that we should adopt for the whole Church the method of salary payment which now prevails in the mission field, whereby all men start at a basic salary which is augmented by the number of years of service and the number of dependents. On some such basis, a man is not continually looking for something better, because he knows that he is in the same situation as every other fellow worker and that he and his loved-ones will be taken care of properly after his years of active service are over. It will prevent that spiritual death which too frequently overtakes a young man who enters the ministry with unselfish ideals, but finds that he must compete if his family is to live.



A scheme of basic salaries would do away with the ability of some vestries to get the man they want by paying a high price for him, even if they did so at the cost of contributing less to the missionary work of the Church. I do not mean to imply that they would deliberately do this, but such an arrangement does inevitably cut into the giving capacity of the congregation. But supremely, it would demonstrate to the world that we believe what we say when we speak of sharing. One cannot imagine that either St. Paul or St. Peter received more financial return than the other apostles. Their strength was gladly given to a common enterprise commonly shared in.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

The Ablutions

THE subject is not one of tremendous importance, certainly not in times like these, but it agitates some of the devout laity, it provokes many clergy to heated controversy, and it has been known to arouse a few bishops almost to the verge of pronouncing an anathema. The cause of all this is the innocent little rubric near the bottom of page 84 in the Prayer Book, which directs that "if any of the consecrated Bread and Wine remain after the Communion, it shall not be carried out of the Church; but the Minister and other Communicants shall, immediately after the Blessing, reverently eat and drink the same." This rubric came into the Prayer Book in the 1662 revision, and its purpose certainly was to prevent the irreverent uses of the consecrated elements in which some of the Puritans had indulged. It has also been stoutly maintained that another purpose of the rubric was to prevent any reservation of the sacrament for any reason whatsoever.

This last point, however, has been hotly contested. If I may venture my own humble opinion on this matter, I should say that a strictly legal interpretation of Prayer Book rubrics would go against the reservationists. At the same time I would maintain that reservation of the sacrament for the specific purpose of communicating sick and invalid persons is absolutely justifiable on doctrinal grounds. It is one of the most primitive practices of the Church. Moreover it is practical; indeed it is almost a necessity, particularly in a large cure of souls. My own experience has led me to believe that most shut-ins prefer the reserved sacrament to a celebration in their sick-room, because it gives them a more helpful sense of inclusion in the corporate offering of their Church.

But to return to the subject of ablutions—the cleansing of the vessels after the Communion. Three questions about them arise: When should they be made? How should they be made? Where should they be made? The rubric under consideration does not give a clear answer to all these questions—hence the divergence of opinion. I do not expect my own answers to win universal assent, and I offer them only because so many friends ask me about them.

As to When?—the rubric seems to me perfectly clear about this—they should come after the Blessing. There is no profound theological reason for this, however. Many of my clerical friends believe that it is impractical at this place, as it prolongs an already lengthy service, and that it is anti-climactic. They prefer to follow the more ancient custom, preserved in the Roman rite, and commonly called 'tarping,' of making the ablutions immediately after the people have received and before the final prayer of thanksgiving. They say that a practical advantage of this custom is that it affords time for the last group of communicants to return to their seats and make their post-communion devotions before the service is resumed. But then there is not any reason why the celebrant cannot wait a few minutes for these worshippers. Just because one is not doing anything at the moment, one does not have to be saying something!

As to How?—the Prayer Book rubrics, unlike the Roman Missal rubrics, do not give any directions. In this matter I am a convinced disciple of Dean Ladd (Prayer Book Interleaves, p. 68). Only pure water is sufficient for the purpose.

As to Where?—here I would suggest an innovation! Why not dispense with making the ablutions at the altar, and do it in the sacristy? If I may say so, the sacristy is the sacred kitchen of the holy banquet table. The preparations for the feast are made there. Why not also the necessary duties of cleansing after the feast is over? To many people the actions of the priest in making ablutions are not edifying, and they are indeed anti-climactic. They would really prefer to 'depart with the Blessing,' knowing that the priest and his helpers (the altar guild), if need be, will reverently dispose of the consecrated elements that remain according to the Church's custom and law.

New Skills For Old Tasks

By

REUEL L. HOWE
Of the Virginia Seminary Faculty

THE work of the pastoral ministry remains the same as it was proclaimed by Jesus, when, reading from the book of Isaiah, He declared that his purpose was "to preach good news to the poor, to proclaim release to the captives and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty those who are oppressed, and to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord."

The methods for the performance of these tasks, however, and the skills needed for their employment, change with the changing nature of each age and the peculiar nature of its problems. In our time many people no longer live on the basis of belief in God and his relationship to them. Our faith, limited to belief in man and his technical and educational resources, has produced moral, political, economic and social confusion. Our family life is deteriorating alarmingly; delinquency is on the increase; mental illness has more than swamped existing resources for its care; scientific and industrial productivity have equipped us with powers we don't know how to use, sometimes, are afraid to use.

Special and local interests, uncontrolled by concern for the welfare of the whole country and the principles of equity and justice, have robbed us of political integrity and made a parody of representative government; internationally we desperately need and want peace but lack the spiritual power to rise above national self-interest. Finally, psychology and medicine have given us profound insights into the nature and functioning of ourselves which is dangerous knowledge in so far as we are without a sense of our purpose and destiny.

Into this kind of world the young minister goes to teach, preach, and minister. He needs training that will give him a secure hold on the Christian faith and also will equip him with understandings and skills relevant to the special problems of his age. This is the purpose of theological training at the Virginia Seminary. There are two related parts to this training: (1) that which takes place at the Seminary and consists of thorough grounding in the content of our Christian faith, history, and practice; and (2) that which takes place during the summer terms of clinical pastoral training and consists of supervised work with people in carefully selected training centers. The summer training provides a practical pastoral orientation to the biblical, theological, and historical content received at the Seminary.

Clinical pastoral training means training in pastoral work at the "bed-side" where persons in difficulty may be observed and studied directly. Until recent years training in pastoral work was given in a classroom without first hand access to human beings and problems, and was as inadequate in preparing men for pastoral work as would be the same method in the training of men for medical practice. The Seminary's principle of procedure is that its students must be trained through and by contact with people if they are to minister to them adequately. The students receive this training in general and mental hospitals and correctional institutions under the supervision of full-time resident chaplains trained for the purpose.

These institutions are used because the patients and inmates of them are available for concentrated visiting and study on the part of the students. Furthermore, the students are thus put in a situation where they may live in face-to-face relationships with people who are passing through the acute phases of personal crises of one kind or another. They talk with these people daily, and the patients tell them about their lives—their ways of living, feelings, attitudes, beliefs, family relationships, their loves and hates, their hopes and fears. With the help of the chaplain and other members of the institutions' staffs the students come to understand the causes of human trouble and suffering, the remote as well as the immediate signs of sickness and distress, the good and ill effects of family and other cultural influences, the wholesome and unwholesome use of religious resources, and how Christian faith and practice, when skillfully and relevantly fostered by understanding clergy, may both prevent and cure much human confusion, distress, sickness, and sin.

WHEN the students return to the Seminary after each period of such training, they bring to their study of Bible, Church history, theology, and pastoral theology an introductory grasp of the manifold problems that will confront them in their later pastoral ministry. Curricular subject-matter is for them no longer an end in itself. They now recognize it as containing the provision God has made for the welfare and salvation of his people which, as it is expressed through their pastoral ministry, has power to save and to heal.

The correlation of insights gained in pastoral training and theological truth is one of the great purposes of the Seminary's curriculum. Through the centuries God has dealt with persons through persons, and, finally, through the person of Jesus, the Christ. The students thus learn to regard interpersonal relationships which constitute so much of their ministry as being not only the human way of working with people but as being also God's means of salvation.

The aim of the Seminary is to give the students a comprehensive and integrated conception of their pastoral function. The knowledge of the needs of people gained from their clinical experience together with their knowledge of God's abundant provision for the needs of men makes the students aware of the importance, for instance, of preparing the parents and god-parents of children for baptism, the importance of this in relation to Christian nurture in the home, and for later religious instruction in Sunday school. Then there is the relation of all this for the remote and immediate preparation for confirmation in the Christian way of life. The students are trained also to prepare people understandingly for Christian marriage and parenthood; to counsel them in their difficulties; to minister to them in their illnesses; and to comfort them in their bereavements. In all of this the students are informed not only by ancient truth but by modern insight and understanding of contemporary problems.

Their training in teaching and preaching is aided by being directed at specific life-situations and by receiving practice in bringing to bear upon common human problems the light of divine truth.

The Seminary thus has one curriculum with two parts in which each feeds and illumines the other. Theological education as described ceases to be only an intellectual process by which departmentalized sacred knowledge is transmitted from one mind to another and becomes more and more a living process by which the students grow in wisdom, in stature of Christian personality, and in relationship with God and man. The emphasis of the curriculum is on (1) Biblical and theological truth, and (2) the understanding of and ministry to contemporary life and its problems in the light of Christian revelation.

Church Groups Urged To Push Marriage Training

An Authority on Youth and Family Problems Urges More Vigorous Leadership in Parishes

Edited by Sara Dill

Des Moines, Iowa (RNS):—Church groups must take a more vigorous lead in promoting training in marriage and family life, Mrs. Grace Sloan Overton, authority on youth and family problems said here. Addressing a forum at the International Sunday School convention, Mrs. Overton declared that "the underwriting of marriage and family life is an immediate necessity."

"Our national frame of mind as far as marriage and the family life is concerned is more narrow in its practice than is our political and economic life today," she said. "It is impossible for Sunday schools to steer a little path unrelated to the social culture in which our young people live. We have tried to do that and it has failed . . . Protestants need to write a Bill of Rights for family life. Our American pattern of marriage cannot much longer survive the splintering ding-dong of the brazen defiance of all that has gone into making the American home a stable institution. If we want to keep our American home, presided over by one man and one woman, mutually responsible for caring for their children, then education must train, economics underwrite, communities support and religion train and inspire."

Criticizing Protestants for their "psychosis of sexsitivity," Mrs. Overton advocated church support of premarital training in high schools. "There is a lack of reality on the part of Christian people, and their prissiness of attitude toward marriage and family life are more to blame for the moral confusion of today than the movies and radio," she declared. We as Christians need to train our children concerning the sanctity of the body . . . there has been too much talk either of a poetic nature, or of a purely scientific nature. What is needed is a modified presentation of both. The case of chastity needs to be restated. There is still need for it; but old reasons alone are not adequate for today. Girls need to be quite frankly taught what they have at stake. They are potential wives and mothers. There needs to be a new definition of what is expected of the American boy and girl in their relationship with each other."

Calling the American marriage situation a "national hypocrisy," Mrs. Overton said: "Our laws and religions are those of a chaste, modest and monegamous society; our amusements and much of our romantic literature are those of a gay amoral culture. And our sex habits have become something of a world-wide scandal."

New York (RNS):—The firing of the Rev. Stephen H. Fritchman as editor of the Christian Register, Unitarian monthly, is protested on a 21-page "letter to Unitarians" and signed by 32 laymen and ministers of that Church. It calls for an independent Unitarian magazine, an uncensored editor and new leadership on the nominating committee of the Unitarian Association which will hold its biennial conference in October.

Gambier, O.:—Prof. Paul Tillich of Union Seminary is to give the Easter lectures at Bexley Hall in 1948, his theme being "Kerygnatic and Apologetic Theology." Prof. Massey Shepherd of Episcopal Theological School and WITNESS columnist, is also to give lectures at Bexley in 1949 as part of the seminary's observance of the 400th anniversary of the first English Prayer Book, that of 1549.

Intercommunion

Albany, N. Y.:—A joint meeting of committees of the Polish National Catholic Church and the Episcopal Church was held here on June 27 where important steps were taken to strengthen the relationship between the two Churches. It was agreed that the relationship should be one of intercommunion: that is, sacramental communion between two autonomous Churches, each respecting the independence and jurisdiction of the other, and avoiding any actions that would tend to weaken the faith and loyalty of those in its sister Church, while seeking to cultivate all suitable means for increasing mutual acquaintance and fellowship. The committee of the Episcopal Church is Bishop Oldham, Bishop Ivins, Bishop Pardue, the Rev. Theodore Andrews, the Rev. William H. Dunphy and Dean Howard S. Kennedy.

Education Director

Walla Walla, Wash.:—Marjorie B. Gammon, formerly director of education at Holy Trinity, Philadelphia, is now director at St. Paul's here. The Rev. William A. Gilbert is rector of the parish.

Small Legacy Received

Newark, N. J.:—The Guild of St. Barnabas for Nurses will receive a legacy left by Miss Grace Forman of Dutchess County, New York, in the amount of $139. "The amount intended by Miss Forman," according to the Rev. John G. Martin, chaplain-general of the Guild, "was $500 but this was not available from the administration of the estate."

To Teach in China

New York:—Edward R. Van Sant, an employee of the state department who has had wide experience in both India and China, has been appointed to the missionary district of Hankow where he will teach at Huachung University at Wuchang. South India Church

London (RNS):—The Anglican Episcopacy of England and Wales, in a resolution unanimously approved, gave its blessing to the newly-formed Church of South India. The resolution stated: "We wish to assure the bishops and ordained and lay members of our communion who in September will be going forth to form with others the South India Church, of our prayers and continued fellowship in Christ. It is our most earnest hope that God will use them and their fellow members in the South India Church to set forward the gospel with prayer and to help the people of India to grow in unity; and that he will guide their venture of faith to the day when there will be full communion between the South India Church and ourselves."

Favors Bus Funds

New York:—The Rev. Reinhold Niebuhr, professor at Union Seminary, has endorsed the use of public school buses for the transportation of children to Roman Catholic parochial schools. In a syndicated column released by Religious News Service, he declared that the American principle of complete separation of Church and state has resulted in the "official secularization of our culture."

Condemn Race Hate

Lake Junaluska, N. C. (RNS):—A group of 300 Methodist women, meeting here at a school of missions, issued the following statement on the subject of race and Fascist organizations:

"We deplore the rise of mob violence. We bow our heads in shame at the failure of the courts at Greenville, South Carolina, to mete out justice to those who took the law into their own hands and we feel the court has been a party to destruction of law and order in our land.

"We urge and will continue to expect full justice to be given in all courts to all citizens, and we lift our voices in support of good government and law enforcement. We therefore commend Governor J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina for his prompt action that made possible the apprehension of the 33 men, members of a mob who took a prisoner from Pickens County jail. We commend the governor of North Carolina for his wise statements and action against mob rule; we commend the officers of Carroll County, Georgia, who bravely withstood a mob and protected their prisoner, and all other officers who live up to the line of duty.

"We deplore the activities of fascist organizations in our South and the circulation of 'hate sheets' that tend to divide our people. We commend the state of Georgia for revoking the charter of the Ku Klux Klan and the prosecution of the Columbians; Knoxville, Tenn., for its action against cross burning; the federal courts for beginning action against J. B. Stoney, of Chattanooga, Tenn., for circulation of vicious propaganda against the Jews.

"We object vehemently to race being an issue in political campaigns. Such appeals disturb our peace and unity, give rise to racial tensions, put fear into the hearts of inarticulate people, give rise to mob violence. We recognize such tactics as a direct violation of the letter and spirit of our Constitution and Bill of Rights and the principles and teachings of Jesus Christ.

"We recognize also that such appeals are but cloaks to hide motives and issues that would be put over on us. We pledge ourselves to vote for no candidate who makes the question of race an issue in his campaign.

"We rejoice in a decision of the courts of South Carolina against the 'white supremacy' and we thank U. S. District Judge J. Waites Warring for his wise and just decision."

Protestant and Jewish people interviewed expressed strong approval. Among Catholics questioned, 56 per cent disapproved, compared with 35 per cent who said they approved. The rest were undecided.

Government Employees

New York:—The Protestant Council has asked President Truman to protect the civil rights and liberties of government employees undergoing loyalty investigations. It requested seven specific guarantees and urged that organizations "blacklisted" by Attorney General Tom Clark as "subversive" or "Communist" be allowed to defend themselves and be judged by a panel of responsible citizens outside government service.

The Council said each suspect employee is entitled to the following rights: "(1) to be given a specific statement of charges and sufficient time to prepare his defense; (2) to be confronted with his accusers; (3) to be confronted with all evidence alleged against him with opportunity for rebuttal; (4) to be represented by counsel; (5) to subpoena witnesses and examine documents; (6) to be maintained on the payroll until the conclusion of the trial; and (7) to have the costs defrayed by the government if adjudged innocent."

Methodists Urge Peace

Butte, Mont.:—War between the Soviet Union and the United States is not inevitable, and "we should persistently seek to remove fear, suspicion, and distrust through mutual understanding and good will." The Montana Methodist conference issued this appeal in a resolution adopted at its annual sessions here.

"By practicing the principle of tolerance," the conference declared, "nations whose interest at times are in conflict and whose ideologies may differ, may nevertheless work toward common objectives for the good of mankind through peaceful means in meeting the world's needs.

"There are real differences in ideologies; there are real conflicts in policies. Without glossing over these the Christian Church must continue to seek a basis of reconciliation. The nations which held together in the achievement of military victory must now hold together to fulfill their sacred promises that they would unite to win the peace."

The conference called upon the Church to support the leaders of the United Nations, "recognizing that the United Nations is evolutionary and functional in character and must be improved step by step until the world will be united under workable international law."

"Our colonial forefathers took eight years in drafting the constitution of the United States," the Conference stated. "Their descendants should not destroy the progress of the United Nations through impatient expectations that our aim may be achieved in an unreasonably short space of time."

The conference urged the U. S. government to press for the adoption of universal abolition by all nations of compulsory military training, in according with United Nations control of armaments.

YOUR NEW BIBLE

is a more deeply satisfying companion when printed on genuine Oxford India Paper. This finest of all papers permits a thin, thin Bible . . . lighter, pleasanter in the hand. Oxford India Paper has a most agreeable tone, and it is extremely opaque: the words on one side never show through to the other. Oxford Bibles are delightfully "readable"; and the text is so accurate that the Press offers a reward of five dollars for the first discovery of a misprint. Bindings are wonderfully soft, yet so strong and durable that Oxford Bibles invariably become cherished family heirlooms. Many styles, variously priced.

when she addressed a crowded meeting at Central Hall, Westminster, commemorating the silver jubilee of the Bible Reading Fellowship.

In her speech, the queen, who has been a member of the Bible Fellowship for many years, said: "These are challenging days in the history of the world. A new era is struggling to be born. Our nation and empire is called to give moral leadership to the world, and can only do this if it is true to its Christian tradition."

The meeting was presided over by the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Clinical Course

Boston:—The Rev. Rollin J. Fairbanks, chaplain at the Massachusetts General Hospital, is in charge of 25 theological students representing seven denominations who are taking a six weeks' course which will include psychosomatic medicine, psychiatry, clinical psychology and other branches of healing.

Hits Communism

Scarsdale, N. Y.:—The Rev. Charles H. Cadigan, chairman of the board of the Church Society for College Work, who is touring the colleges for the society, and raising funds, said that "many students have been disillusioned by the teachings they have been offered to sustain their intellectual and spiritual life, and more especially by those teachings which seek to win their allegiance to a way of life which in all too many cases is devoid of [illegible]n principles." He hit particularly at communism in the sermon which was preached at the Church of St. James the Less here.

"Communist propaganda," he said, "has long since left the soap box and now wears the academic gown. They have explored the teachings of these 'isms' in their daily lives only to discover that they had nothing to sustain them in a time of crisis and that even for ordinary times, they had been given nothing to fill the need for a sense of achievement which has always been identified with youth.

"The founders of the Church Society for College Work were aware of these conditions. They knew the need and they knew the answer lay in following the principles for life which were given by Him who came upon this earth two thousand years ago.

"To meet the problem, the society realized that clergymen qualified for this particular type of ministry should be placed in churches in college communities. Also, wherever possible, clergymen should be accredited as chaplain to the student bodies themselves, especially in the case of the larger universities. They also realized that both fields could best be served by those whose life and interest are dedicated to the problems of youth.

"While the Society is an officially designated cooperating agency of the Protestant Episcopal Church, its workers on the campus meet spiritual needs wherever they find them. They provide friendship for the fearful and a mature guiding hand for the confused.

"It is significant that those clergymen already assigned to posts, report an enormously awakened appreciation of the spiritual implications of our times both among the students and members of the faculties.

"Students are searching for something to which they can pin their faith. They are finding the answer in the teachings of the Christian Gospel. They are finding in that Gospel that which is definite and uplifting—confirmed by the daily lives of strong Christian witnesses."

Praise for Franco

Madrid (wireless to RNS):—High church dignitaries greeted Generalissimo Franco on a pilgrimage to the cave near Manresa, in the diocese of Vich, where St. Ignatius Loyola, founder of the Jesuit Order, wrote his "Spiritual Exercises." On hand to welcome General Franco, who was accompanied by a retinue of civic and military leaders, were the Most Rev. Juan Perello y Pou, Bishop of Vich, the Rev. Antonio Abad, S.J., vice provincial of the Society of Jesus, and numerous priests of the order.

"The Society of Jesus, represented here by so many of her sons, joyful over your visit and grateful to Your Excellency for the decree reestablishing the juridic rights of the Order in Spain," Bishop Perello declared, "prays to heaven to shed copious benedictions on you, your government, and on Spain."

The reception to General Franco took place in the cathedral at Vich, where the Spanish leader was presented with a gold insignia commemorating his visit. The cathedral choir meanwhile intoned the Christus Vincit ("Christ Conquers").

General Franco subsequently visited Monserrat, famous Catalan mountain shrine, where the ancient image of Our Lady of Montserrat was recently transferred to a new gold and silver throne. He prayed before the statue and was blessed with a relic of the true cross by Father Escarre, abbot of Montserrat monastery.

Replying to an address of welcome by Father Escarre, Franco deplored the growth of Communism in Europe, which, he said, "is a direct consequence of the lack of Christian fraternity in society."

Population Changes

Berlin (wireless to RNS):—Influx of displaced persons into the American occupation zone of Germany has greatly changed the proportion of Protestants and Roman Catholics in the population, according to a survey made public here. Traditional Catholic areas now have larger groups of Protestants than previously, while predominantly Protestant regions have more Catholics.

Bavaria, Germany's chief Catholic stronghold, now has a population which is 26 per cent Protestant. In Greater Hesse, historically a leading Protestant center, Catholics at present comprise 33 per cent of the population. Wurttemberg shows: Protestants, 58 per cent; Catholics 38 per cent; other faiths 4 per cent.

"In most instances," the survey declared, "adjustments are being made without friction between the two major faith groups."

World Council

Geneva (RNS):—No word has been received from the Russian Orthodox Church regarding its participation in the first general assembly of the World Council of Churches at Amsterdam next year, Henry P. Van Dusen, of New York, chairman of the Council's study department, declared at a press conference here. Van Dusen announced, however, that a number of Greek Orthodox Churches have agreed to send delegates. "The assembly," he said, "will thus not be merely a Protestant gathering, but one in which Protestant and Eastern Orthodox Christians will be represented."

Crozier-less Diocese

Belfast (RNS):—Members of the Church of Ireland here are angry with Hugh Dalton, the British Chancellor of the Exchequer, because of his atttitude in regard to the Crozier of the Bishop of Down and Dromore, the Rt. Rev. W. S. Kerr.

When the big diocese of Down and Connor and Dromore was divided in 1945, and Dr. Kerr, then Dean of Belfast, was appointed to the new Bishopric of Down and Dromore a crozier of unique design was ordered for him from a well-known firm in England.

The crozier was to cost about $400, but at the last moment the Chancellor stepped in and clamped on a purchase tax of 100 per cent, rendering delivery out of the question, according to the bishop. Since then the crozier has been stored in England in the hope that sooner or later the Chancellor would relent.

He declines, however, to do so notwithstanding the latest outcry from the crozier-less diocese — a petition from the clergy "respectfully asking that the Pastoral Staff of Down Diocese be exempted from purchase tax, as the diocese is deprived of its due equipment so long as this tax is imposed."

"The crozier should be admitted free of tax in the same way as other works of art such as pictures," Bishop Kerr said here. "Its unique design, representing St. Patrick and St. Columba, with the arms of the two Dioceses, makes it the only one of its kind in existence and an exceedingly interesting work of art apart altogether from its ecclesiastical and historical significance. I don't see why purchase tax should be paid as it is not personal property but a diocesan heirloom."

Meanwhile, the bishop has to carry out his pastoral duties either without a crozier or by borrowing that of his near neighbor, the Bishop of Connor. If the latter should happen to be using the crozier, it means that Dr. Kerr must do without one. This, he says, is an intolerable state of affairs.

Interracial Camp

New London, N. H. (RNS):—An experiment in developing world brotherhood has become a definite program here at Colbytown Camp where again this summer an interracial, interfaith group of children is sharing experiences. Started during the war to introduce emigre youngsters to American life, the camp has become a summer meeting place for Jew and Negro, German and Yankee, French and Norwegian. While other summer projects have mixed attendance, the sponsors of Colbytown deliberately seek children with various national and religious backgrounds.

The camp is financed by the students and faculty of Colby Junior College with the interrace-interfaith fellowship commission of the YWCA assuming direct responsibility. When they arrive, many of the children are frightened as was one little girl from abroad who thought all camps were surrounded by barbed wire and patrolled by stern guards. Another emigre was delighted by American desserts, particularly the colorful gelatine which she calls "nervous pudding."

This is the seventh season for the camp on Little Lake Sunapee, and once again the foreign-born and the natives are learning that they are not so different after all and that what differences do exist make each other just so much more interesting.

Organist at St. Agnes', Little Falls, N. J.

At this late date, may I take issue with Prof. Shepherd about St. Vogue's (issue of April 3). I was brought up a Congregationalist and worked at it with some enthusiasm. Also, in my youth, I learned to play the organ slightly. A few years ago, I became the organist of our local Episcopal Church, having been inside an Episcopal Church probably twice up to then. I was captivated by the service, with all its imperfections, and acquired the habit of attending services in larger Episcopal churches, including St. Vogue's, principally for the music. I deny the implication that it is preferable to have second rate music in church; that so-called professional church musicians somehow are not as close to God as those who sing in Christ Church or St. Also Ran's on the other side of town. One of the most spiritually minded people I know is a devoted member of St. Vogue's choir. In my own case, I feel that the music there has been the greatest single religious influence on my life. I was confirmed two years ago. while in the army, and my interest in the Church is by no means limited to the music. I subscribe to both The Living Church and THE WITNESS (the first copy of which was picked up in another church, also famous for its music, where I study organ); I read Christianity Takes a Stand, and profited therefrom; I have obtained, thru the Church, a consciousness of the social gospel which I didn't have before; I am a not infrequent attendant at our early service of Holy Communion, where my presence at the organ is not required. Yet, rightly or wrongly, all of this would be less meaningful to me if it were not for the music at St. Vogue's. I might add that the choir in our little church, partly as a result of my interest in St. Vogue's, does not resemble as closely as it once did that poor choir at Podunk Crossing (Prof. Shepherd, July 10) with its murdering of the canticles and its "cheap, vapid Victorian anthems." One more thing—when I go to St. Vogue's I don't sing, I want to listen, but I don't listen in the same way I do at the opera.

In closing, I wish to emphasize that I find THE WITNESS valuable and stimulating, including Prof. Shepherd's column.

MR. FRED D. HART
Layman of New York City

THE WITNESS is doing a great service in calling our attention to the various agencies of the Church by means of special numbers. These so far published, devoted to the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship, the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship, the Church Army, and the numbers that appeared previously, have been exceedingly well done and have given laymen like myself, not too well informed, a clear picture of their work. Thank you for the able editing of a great little paper.

MISS C. C. OLIVER
Churchwoman of Philadelphia

I was glad to have THE WITNESS (July 10) call attention to the danger of admitting to this country the displaced persons of Europe. It is true, of course, that our great and rich country should welcome all in need. But it is equally true that these persons should be carefully screened so as not to admit our former enemies and those who aided them during the war. With the wave of reaction which now seems to be sweeping our country this might very easily happen unless we are on our guard. I might add that THE WITNESS, alone of the many papers and magazines I read, pointed out this danger. I constantly rejoice in the progressive stand you take on vital issues.

MR. C. A. LOSADE
Churchman of New York City

You stated May 8th issue that the Suffragan Bishop of Jamaica is the first West Indian to be elected to the Episcopate. I am sure you will be glad to know that Bishop Branch, now long dead, Bishop of the Leeward Islands, was a Barbadian. A member of a brilliant family he was West Indian born and educated. Bishop Hudson, more lately Bishop of the Leeward Islands, was also a West Indian and proud of it. He was a graduate of Codrington College, Bardados.

Harvard Churchman Promotes People's Peace Plan

Kirtley F. Mather Is Now in Europe to Enlist Support of Religious Leaders and Key Persons

By Rita Rubin

Boston:—Prof. Kirtley F. Mather, noted Harvard scientist and Churchman, is now in Europe to address international religious conferences on world peace, and to enlist the support of religious leaders and key figures abroad in the peace proposals of the World People's Congress, of which he is chairman of the executive council.

Dr. Mather also plans to visit the Soviet Union where he is hopeful of making contact with Russians open-minded to the idea of a people's peace plan. He has in mind specific persons in the Soviet, he said, and through them hopes to make known to large numbers of rank-and-file Russians the peace plans of the Congress.

Dr. Mather will go to Leningrad and possibly to Moscow before flying back to the United States the first of September. His itinerary calls for a brief stay in London.

Later, in Edinburgh, Scotland, he will address a meeting of the World Committee of the Y.M.C.A. Dr. Mather is national president of the Y.M.C.A. of the United States.

Throughout his European trip Dr. Mather will attempt to convey to as many as possible of the common people of Europe the earnest desire of Americans for a solution of the world's problems by peaceful and friendly cooperation.

Religious and cultural organizations in Europe will be invited to attend sessions of the Congress in New York during October, to which 350 national organizations in this country have also been invited. At least 50 American organizations, including religious and social welfare groups and societies devoted to political and economic affairs, have announced their intention of sending delegates, he said.

Chief objective of the People's Congress, Dr. Mather explained, is "to do what lies within our power to do through united action—namely, awaken millions of people to the absolute choice between world unity or destruction in the atomic age."

Among other aims of the Congress are adequate control of atomic energy, relief of postwar famine and disease, effective use of the world's resources for all mankind, and the insuring of basic human rights for all.

"We are going to do our utmost to mobilize a large section of the world's population," Dr. Mather said. "Many world religious groups have indicated their willingness to cooperate, including the Hindus and Moslems in India and Persia."

Anti-religious sentiment in Russia, he admitted, has proved a handicap there to a world peace movement which has received much of its impetus from religious-minded groups and individuals. Nevertheless, Dr. Mather said, he is far from despairing over Russian difficulties in the way of the international plan.

Sponsors of the Congress, according to Dr. Mather, hope it will become "a United Nations of the common man; a one-world organization representing the plain people in all countries."

URGES UNDERSTANDING WITH RUSSIA

Des Moines:—Achieving an understanding with Russia is the main issue today, Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, president of Howard University, Washington, D. C., declared here. Speaking to about 6,000 people attending an evening session of the international quadrennial convention on religious education, he called on the leaders of the United States to go back and talk with the Russians and work out a compromise. The speaker also said that the Christian Church "will not support the leadership of this nation in the belief that war is inevitable and that our youth must be militarized in preparation for it."

Dr. Johnson declared that the Christian Church does not want the leadership of this nation to help in the restoration of Western imperialism. In calling for a compromise with Russia, the educator likened the present situation with that which prevailed when the founding fathers had to compromise with the slave owners to achieve a constitution. What we did here, he said, can be done on a world scale. "We can keep on talking to Stalin and can come at last to some kind of a compromise for world organization," Johnson declared.

The United States will have to guarantee the domestic security of Russia and agree to stay out of her territory for a period of years, he stated. The United States will also have to grant Russia something akin to the Monroe doctrine for that area. We will have to do that because we are dealing with a young and trembling nation that the Western nations tried to destroy during her first decade, he said.

Commenting on the fact that Christians don't like Russia's attitude toward religion, Johnson observed that we can't quit because we have to deal with a man that doesn't like us.

Comparing the United States and Russia in that they both possess great economic and material resources, the speaker said that there is no reason for them to be enemies. Our system may be different from theirs, but still we can live in peace if we desire, he said. If the United States were to prepare adequately for the next war, all normal processes would have to be given up, Johnson maintained. Militarization would be accomplished in the United States against the protest of the Christian Church.

In reference to the Western bloc, the speaker said that "it is not without a touch of divine fortune that the bloc of Western powers which spent the last 400 years beating down others is now weak and helpless. God does not want the restoration of the colonial system."

REPRESENTS GLASS MAKERS

New York:—James H. Hogan, chairman of the board of directors of James Powell & Sons (Whitefriars), London firm of stained glass makers, is to be in New York from September 14 to October 14 and may be reached at the office of the American distributor for the firm, J. M. Hall, Inc.

MEMORIAL CHAPEL DEDICATION

Atlanta, Ga.:—The Mikell memorial chapel at the cathedral here is to be dedicated on September 7th by Bishop Walker. It is a memorial to Bishop Henry J. Mikell, former bishop of the diocese who was for a number of years an editor of THE WITNESS. The chapel is the first unit of the permanent cathedral plan. It will seat 110 people and will be used for small weddings, baptisms, funerals, corporate communions and weekday services. It is hoped that work on the cathedral proper may begin soon.

GENERAL SYNOD IN CHINA

New York:—The general synod of the Chung Hua Sheng Kung Hue (Church in China) meets in Shanghai August 23-31, with the opening service held at the Church of Our Saviour, and the sessions of the House of Bishops and the House of Deputies held at St. Mary's Hall. Bishop T. Arnold Scott of North China is the chairman of the Bishops, and Bishop William P. Roberts is secretary. The deputies will elect their presiding officer at the first session. Ten of the 22 bishops are Chinese; the others are missionary bishops from England, Canada and the United States.

Business to come before the synod will include the question of the ordination of women; attendance of bishops from China at the Lambeth Conference next summer; the permanent establishing of a central office for the Church; the situation at several Church schools; the election of a bishop for Shensi, and reports from various committees, especially the committee on the Prayer Book and that on literature.

The Woman's Missionary Service League, corresponding to the Auxiliary of the American Church, will meet at the same time.

URGE CHURCH-STATE SEPARATION

Buffalo, N. Y. (RNS):—Reversal of court decisions which permit the use of public tax funds for religious work and recall of Myron C. Taylor as the President's personal representative to the Vatican were urged here by the International Convention of Disciples of Christ.

The convention called upon "all patriotic citizens to resist every attempt to further widen the breach in the law of separation of church and state" and to work for the repeal of state law "which sanctions grants of public money to the support of religious bodies or to activities supported by such religious bodies."

"This convention urges patriotic citizens to strive by every constitutional means to secure reversal of the decisions of the Supreme Court upholding the use of public tax funds or providing free text books for parochial schools and for transportation of children to such schools," the resolution said.

The resolution deplored what it termed the "continued efforts on the part of the hierarchy of the Roman Catholic Church to secure public tax funds for the support of their parochial schools."

The convention asked President Truman "to terminate the mission of Myron C. Taylor to the Vatican without delay and withdraw all State Department personnel assigned to service at the Vatican in connection with this mission."

Any federal aid to education should include a clause "limiting such assistance to public schools without discrimination as to race or color," the resolution said.

The convention called on the government to "demonstrate the democratic way of life" by furnishing food, clothing, and other needs to people in devastated areas.

The convention also, with but few dissenting voices from the 4,000 delegates, opposed peacetime conscription and warned against "the gradual encroachment of the military arm upon the functions and powers reserved for civilian administration."

PLANNED PARENTHOOD ENDORSED

Boston (RNS):—More than 750 Protestant clergymen, representing many denominations, will support the Planned Parenthood League of Massachusetts when it seeks the signatures of 20,000 registered voters this fall on a petition it will place before the State Legislature to change the present law prohibiting physicians from giving birth prevention information.

The Massachusetts Council of Churches and the Greater Boston Rabbinical Association have given their official endorsement to the League's efforts to place once again before the Legislature the question of allowing physicians to dispense contraceptive advice.

The League in 1942 went before the Legislature with a similar petition, which was denied. Later that year the League succeeded in having placed on the ballot a referendum on the question, only to have the proposal defeated by a majority of about one-third.

At that time, Attorney Frederick W. Mansfield of Boston, who said he represented the late William Cardinal O'Connell of the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Boston, and "a million souls in Boston," appeared before the Legislature in opposition to the bill.

The Planned Parenthood League makes no use this year of the phrase "birth control" but calls the propose new law "an act to allow physicians to provide medical contraceptive care to married women for the protection of life or health."

Northwestern Military Academy Has New Department

A Science Department Is But One of Many Improvements in Church School in Wisconsin

By J. J. Howard

Lake Geneva, Wis.:—The Northwestern Military and Naval Academy, as many WITNESS readers will remember, came under Church management in March of 1944. This came about because Colonel Royal Page Davidson, the former owner and headmaster, who gave it to the Church, believed that the Episcopal Church conducted some of the finest preparatory schools in the country. It was his desire that his Northwestern could and would be preserved and enlarged under Episcopal Church management.

Colonel Davidson's high estimate of the Church's ability to do just this has not been misplaced. Only three years have gone by since Bishop Conkling, as chairman of the board of trustees, received the school in the name of the Church, and throughout these few short years much forward looking activity has characterized the period. In spite of war and the inevitable adjustments that come about whenever there is a change of administrations, Northwestern has been outstanding in its determined drive to maintain and improve its fine plant and traditions.

To enumerate all the constructive activities of this period would take more space than this article would permit. Not least, however, amongst these activities providing finer all-around facilities for Northwestern is the new science department, the result of far-sighted vision, hard work, and a sufficiently generous expenditure to make it possible.

Justifying this effort and expenditure is the Academy's agreement with certain statements of the president of Denison University who has pointed out that Christian schools must first of all be academic institutions, and that they must "be ever watchful lest in their busyness to display the easy evidence of their Christian allegiance, they lack the time and money and the compulsion to be acceptable academic institutions." At Northwestern it is believed that science is, and can be, as much of a course in "religion" as the Bible itself, for to the Christian teacher to understand the principles and laws of the various branches of science is to understand more fully the nature and magnitude of God's handiwork in his creation.

With thoughts of this kind in mind, Northwestern went about the task of creating its completely new department for the teaching of science. The plans for it grew out of days and weeks of thoughtful faculty conference. Soon various parents of boys then in school became as enthusiastic as the faculty itself, and energized these faculty meetings, not only with their enthusiasm but with their generous support and gifts. Through such parental cooperation, and the cooperation of parents of recent graduates, Northwestern now looks proudly at its southeast wing completely given over to the work and teaching of science.

It is a science department more than adequate for the teaching of science at the high school level, for this southeast wing houses the Sheldon E. Ford Chemistry Laboratory which was donated by the fathers of six recent graduates and named for Major Sheldon E. Ford who taught chemistry at the Academy for over twenty years. Adjacent to this laboratory is the chemistry classroom, the gift of certain fathers whose boys are now in school. Across the principal hall is a very fine laboratory-classroom combination devoted entirely to the teaching of mathematics and physics. It is the Froemming Physics Laboratory given in memory of Mr. B. A. Froemming, father of Carl who graduated with the class of '43. At the end of the hall is another fine laboratory-classroom devoted to the work of first year science and known as the Arnold E. Simon General Science Laboratory. Arnold graduated with the class of '43 and was killed in action in France during World War II. Other elements in the plan, all of which are the result of the gifts of interested people, are a fine laboratory-classroom devoted to biology, a photography laboratory and darkroom, and an easily accessible museum for the display of student projects and other scientific exhibits. So adequate are all these facilities that Northwestern would now need to more than triple its enrollment before taxing the capacity of these various laboratories and classrooms. Nothing has been spared in time or thought or money in order to make this new department not only adequate, but more than adequate, for a school working in science at the high school level of instruction.

Since the school came under Church management, the science department, important as it is, is only one of the many physical improvements that has taken place. Amongst some of the others is a fine new side chapel dedicated to Christ the King. Like the science department, this too is the result of gifts from interested patrons. Then there is also a new infirmary building, now almost completed, which is the result of a bequest in the will of the late George D. Kitzinger of the class of 1906, and is known as the Kitzinger Infirmary.

These are some of the big physical improvements that have been made, but it should be pointed out that the administration of the Academy has been equally as active and determined in its drive to improve the life of the corps of cadets and to give to the school a spiritual foundation for its life, without which no boy is truly educated. Each year of Church management in the school is revealing a new and finer Northwestern, and the Church should be proud indeed to have such a school on its lists.

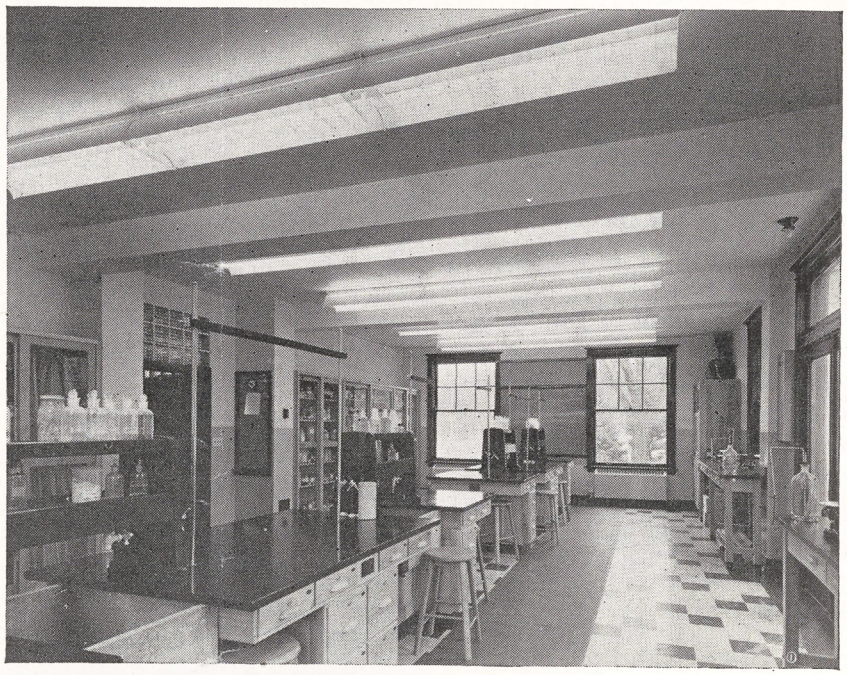
LAMBETH CONFERENCE IS PLANNED

London:—The final preparations of the agenda for the Lambeth Conference has been settled and is shortly to be issued, according to word from Bishop Oldham of Albany, now in England representing the Episcopal Church on the committee. The plans for the hospitality and accommodation of the bishops attending from all over the world have been arranged. The conditions since the last Conference held in 1930 took place have considerably altered and the war damage to London and the present economic position makes it extremely difficult to repeat the wholesale private hospitality which was so freely available before. Hotels are much more expensive, especially when a residential stay of some two months has to be faced. The Lambeth Conference office has made arrangements to meet all this by reserving a number of university hostels in London which will meet the needs of most of the bishops from abroad and will at the same time bring costs within the bounds of possibility for many who would otherwise be financially embarrassed by their Conference expenses. The views of the American Church were put forward by Bishop Oldham to his colleagues representing the various provinces of the Anglican Communion who are all expressly looking to the American Church to play its fullest part in the Conference as befits their place as a national and independent member Church.



All the provinces of the Anglican Communion are sharing in the planning of the Conference and memoranda will be sent to all members of the Conference on many subjects of contemporary ecclesiastial, international problems as well as domestic affairs which affect the spiritual well-being of the Church as a whole. The Church of England is undertaking the central burden of the organizing and administration involved and much of the financial strain that such a Conference must place upon the Church. By force of circumstances much initiative must come from the bishops in England, but it is their wholehearted expressed desire that the other independent Churches and provinces, as well as the extra-provincial dioceses will take their fullest share in the 1948 Lambeth Conference, which will have for all people, whether Anglican or not, a world wide significance. The Conferences will last for six weeks from the 1st of July 1948 and precedes the first full assembly of the World Council of Churches which meets on the 24th of August.

While in London the Bishop of Albany has been the guest of the Archbishop of Canterbury, at Lambeth Palace, and last week assisted in the consecration of the new Bishop of Woolwich. This is the second time that Bishop Oldham has taken part in an English consecration. He was also a guest at the last of the royal garden parties to be given this year by the King and Queen and he has also addressed the luncheon party given by the English Speaking Union for Americans in Britain who are here under the interchange of pulpits scheme.

VOCATIONAL GIVING BUILDS CHURCH

Albany, Cal.:—The church which was made possible by "vocational giving," where members of the congregation use their skills to serve the church, broke ground for a new $45,000 parish house on July 27. The dramatic work of a barber at the Mark Hopkins Hotel in San Francisco, Frank Sibilia, led to the raising of about $10,000 for the fund which now totals over $24,000 in cash at St. Alban's Church, where the Rev. Randolph Crump Miller, a professor at the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, is part-time vicar. Other members of the congregation shared in the barber's vision, and now about 60 members have found ways to use their skills as accountants, artists, writers, plasterers, salesmen, and in other occupations to make contributions to the building fund.

For the past ten years the congregation has met in a store. At the ground-breaking ceremony there was a procession with two choirs, the Bishop of California, visiting clergy, and the congregation of the mission church.

CHURCHMEN FIGHT BAN ON PROSELYTISM

Bombay (RNS):—A recent amendment by the Madras government to its educational rules governing religious instruction in schools and colleges continues to be opposed by Christians in South India, chiefly because they fear it is the thin end of the wedge for further restrictions in the future. The South Indian Christian Association at a meeting in Palamcottah passed a resolution charging that the government's attitude is an infringement of the fundamental rights of every citizen in a free India to preach and propagate his faith. Similar resolutions have been passed by meetings at other centres.

Return to Pastoral Teaching

by Bradford Young
Rector of Grace Church, Manchester, N. H.

EVERYBODY agrees that something is wrong with the Sunday School. The statistician points out that it has steadily declined in the number of children attending. The chaplain reports that it has allowed generations of its own graduates to grow up ignorant of the essential facts and teachings of Christianity. The pastor knows that too few of its graduates become dependable churchmen.

Perhaps then a look at a school that has made a moderately successful experiment in a combination of three reforms would be timely. These are (1) a family service for children and parents, (2) a return to the pastoral method of teaching, (3) greater emphasis on positive doctrine. None of these innovations is original. No claim is made that this school has solved all the problems or that this particular school is any better or even as good as many other schools in other places. But it is better to discuss these reforms in terms of an actual school than to deal only in theories. And this particular school is interesting in that it does not have many advantages to which its success might otherwise be attributed. It is not in a community where Sunday school attendance generally is going up. It does not have a full-time trained director of religious education. It does not have a separate room for every class. It does not use elaborate visual education equipment. It does not enjoy a large grant of money from the parish budget. It does not have paid teachers. Many of these advantages would help the school. But without them it has grown in the last five years from 212 to 325 in enrollment. The mean attendance is about 205. Together with the 90 parents and other adults who attend every Sunday the school fills the church. It is now the largest school in its community and is still growing. The distinctive features to which teachers and parents attribute its growth are not original. But an account of how they work in combination should have value.

The church school is part of a family service. The announcements read "9:30 a.m. Family Service and Church School." Parents are encouraged to come with their children. It is church they are coming to, not Sunday school. The first half hour is a shortened, simplified church service for the whole family. In the second half hour the children go to their classes. The parents stay for a sermon and further prayers. At 10:30 the whole family goes home together. On the third Sunday of every month there is a celebration of the Holy Communion. The high school and eighth grades, practically all communicants, remain for the communion with the other adults. The lower grades go to their classes as usual after the first half hour. But at the opening and closing of the school year, the whole school remains. The kindergarten has its own service in its own children's chapel. But even the kindergarten attends the half hour family service once a month. So this church school fulfils one of its main purposes: to train children in corporate worship in the church.

Most of the children sit with their parents south of the center aisle in what becomes in effect a family pew. Other children, because they are church orphans or by preference, sit with their classes north of the center aisle. The attendance of parents has grown steadily without much urging. A few have brought babies in arms. Anybody who doesn't like a few family noises at the family service can come to adult services at 8 or 11 o'clock.

The children participate in the service. Twenty-four girls sing in the St. Cecilia Choir. Twelve boys, two each Sunday, act as servers, and six each Sunday as ushers. But all the children are taught to participate in the service as a congregation. They learn to stand to praise, kneel to pray and sit to be instructed. They sing the hymns, read the psalms, say the short responses to the versicles and the amens to the prayers. It is a mistaken idea in some churches that participation by children in the service must mean having them take the part of the minister: they must select the hymns, say the prayers, read the lesson. No doubt there are proper occasions for this. But generally their voices and inexperience make most children inadequate for regular leadership in public worship. That is a highly skilled, professional art. The more important form of participation for most children is as members of the congregation. They are in training as worshippers, not as ministers. Visitors who have evaluated many Sunday schools say that the reverence, attention and participation of the children in this school service are outstanding. Perhaps the presence of parents helps. And the teachers say that their pupils show a remarkable memory for what was said and done in the service. This has been accomplished not by many talks on reverence or regimented discipline, but by the vitality of the service and their own share in it. Some children do not care for their class work. But they are practically unanimous in liking the service.

That means that when they drop out of church school they will drop into the church. For they have been in the church all along. It means they are trained in regular habits of church-going and of communicating in the course of their church school training. They are forming associations of hymn, prayer and ritual with joy, beauty, and family church going that will stay with them through life.

The parents, too, enjoy the children's talk. They get a refresher course in Christianity in simple terms. They often get more out of it than the children and they are better prepared to answer their own children's questions. Moreover, they become more interested in the church school and used to getting to church at 9:30 Sunday mornings. So they are a plentiful source of new teachers both male and female.

THE SECOND feature is the return to pastoral teaching. In the family service the pastor gives a ten minute instruction for the children. This is the lesson for the day. Last year the talks until Christmas, were on the Apostle's Creed. Then missionary stories from "Beyond the Blue Pacific" until Lent told by a layman with a gift for vivid narration for children, the parables of Jesus during Lent, knowing your Christian neighbors, Roman Catholics, Congregationalists, etc., after Easter. Other units have been the Ten Commandments, the Lord's prayer, Christian heroes today, a very popular race relations story, "Call me Charlie". Two of these units are being submited to possible publishers. In the future are a short life of Christ, the Hebrew quest for God, makers of Church history.

The hymns, lesson and prayers each Sunday reinforce the instruction. So when the children go to their classes at 10 o'clock, they already have absorbed most of their lesson under the favorable circumstances of an effective liturgy. The teacher does not get them cold and have to create interest. She does not have to shout above other noises to tell the lesson story. She does not have to worry about no preparation by the children. Her job for the next twenty-five minutes is to get the pastor's talk into the experience of her particular children. She does it by asking questions about the talk, showing pictures, suggesting handwork. She has a teacher's instruction sheet that helps her do this. That sheet is adapted to the age group of her children. In the class work, therefore, the school is graded. The talks are prepared by the pastor and the teacher's sheets by the parish worker and one of the teachers. This is a big job that will be better and much more easily done if a well printed series on this plan becomes available.

From the description of the pastor's teaching units it will be seen that the third feature of this school is an emphasis on Christian doctrine. A full unit each year is doctrinal. In a four year cycle it takes up successively, the Apostle's Creed, the Ten Commandments, the Lord's Prayer, the Church and Sacraments. It follows the Book of Common Prayer's Office of Instruction fairly closely. This takes about a third of the year. There is time also each year for other subjects such as missionary education, Old Testament stories, Church history, social problems. But the school offers a larger and more frequently repeated instruction in Christian belief and cult practice than do most schools.

This instruction aims to present systematically the central convictions of Christians in terms of modern life and a child's understanding. It is drawn from the traditional summaries that most churches accept and use Sunday after Sunday in their services. The new temper of church life demands more definite teaching. The pastoral method makes this easier to do. Many teachers are too uncertain about belief or too reticent to teach it. The family service is an effective occasion for such teaching because both parents and children share it. They stimulate each other.

Here are some advantages of pastoral teaching. The average pastor is or ought to be better able to give a ten minute instruction to children than the average church school teacher. If not, he should be able to find someone who is. Therefore the whole school gets better teaching. The children will be more likely to get a grounding in the essentials of Christian doctrine. The pastor has returned to one of his most important functions: teaching the children. In his parish calls he can question the children intelligently about their Christian knowledge because he is teaching them all the same thing. Incidentally, he can also use film strips and slides more effectively and economically for the whole school than for individual classes.

The teachers like it better. Partly because it is easier for them. Much of their work is already done. They have a shorter class period. The monthly teacher's meetings are more to the point because they are all teaching the same ideas at different age levels. The look backward over the previous month's lessons and the look forward over next month's, conducted by departments, has a greater common background. They can compare how they got the ideas over and help each other's techniques and the pastor's. Substitutes and merging of classes, when necessary, are easier to arrange. They feel, too, that they are getting more across than by the old course method.

The parents like it better because they can keep up with their children more easily. If they are at the service, they hear the instruction for the children. They can take an informed interest in how the teacher developed it. They know what the handwork is about. The whole family can discuss the service, talk or class work. They cannot be imposed upon by their child's clever excuse: "I don't want to go to Sunday school: I never learn anything there." Actually their children are interested and want to go.

The children share in most of these benefits as they have shown by their better attendance and growing numbers. It is particularly adapted to the small school where careful grading would be difficult in any case. The method is well adapted also to a school extension project by mail or radio to children prevented by distance or illness from attending any church school. This school does broadcast its family service. Forty-one children receive home lesson materials on the broadcast children's talk.

The fact is that many of the church school methods advocated by religious educators for the past twenty-five years have assumed more time, better teachers, better directors, better class rooms than all but a favored few parishes could secure. Moreover, the emphasis has been more on character and less on doctrine, worship and information than the church now desires.

OF COURSE there are disadvantages. Perhaps the most serious is that much of the family service is necessarily above the understanding of the younger children. Even when the lessons are read from the Revised Standard Version and children's prayers and hymns are included, there is much they cannot fathom. They can feel and reverence the mystery, however. They can appreciate the drama. Since in religion there must always be some things we know but do not understand, this objection to family worship may not be so fatal as is often thought. Certainly the little children like it, even though they do not well understand it.

The problem of ungraded worship reappears in the ungraded talks. It is hard to speak in a family service so simply that young and old will both profit by it. The use of graded classes to review the talk only partly meets this difficulty. There are many subjects one would like to take up with the high school classes that could hardly be taught usefully to the whole school. There is the burden on the school leadership of preparing the lesson material. That material cannot be attractively printed for one school.

Moreover the particular pastor may be very ineffective with children. Pastoral teaching, once common, was replaced by closely graded courses because many pastors were intolerably dull and their catechetical instruction mechanical. Even so, one may question whether their generation of children was not better prepared for church life than ours.

The balance of good over bad can only be determined by experiment and observation. Grace Church School, Manchester, N. H., is only one such. But there the pastor, teachers, children and parents would unite in saying that the combination of a family service with pastoral teaching and doctrinal emphasis is good and deserves a trial elsewhere.

Occasional Conformity

EVERY now and then some priest gets upset over the way some of his fellow clergymen disregard the Confirmation Rubric by admitting to the Holy Communion persons who are communicants of non-Episcopal Churches and who are neither ready nor desirous of being confirmed. He may even go to the trouble of annoying his bishop with a demand that the offending parsons be admonished to obey the law of the Church. Our bishops are kindly men, and they do not like to enforce disciplinary canons and rubrics except for weighty cause.

In times such as these it does not seem expedient or charitable to cut off any channel of God's grace from any person who sincerely desires it, and who can sincerely respond to the invitation: 'Ye who do truly and earnestly repent you of your sins, and are in love and charity with your neighbours, and intend to lead a new life.' God alone is the Judge of a man's conscience in accepting such a proffer. And God is not a respector of persons,—and most certainly not as regards a man's ecclesiastical affiliations.

It is no use arguing over the Confirmation Rubric from the standpoint of its history. The fact is that it was drawn up before there was any serious break in the unity of English Christianity. The framers of the rubric certainly never foresaw the fissiparous tendencies of American Christianity. The record is perfectly clear that until recent times no one questioned the right of dissenters to 'occasional conformity' in Anglican churches by the reception of the Holy Communion.

Permit me to give two illustrations of the question based upon personal experience. In a summer chapel where I was supplying there were a number of regular worshippers who were not Episcopalians, but who had no 'church of their own' nearby in their vacation-community. These people were professing and practicing Christians, diligent in their prayers both public and private, and sacrificial givers both to their own religious persuasion and to ours. What possible damage could be done by admitting them to the Lord's Table?

The other case is one involving a 'mixed marriage' of two Christians, who are thoroughly agreed regarding the fundamentals of the Faith, but one of whom cannot persuade the other about Apostolic Succession and all that. Each one cherishes and supports the parish of the other, and sees to it that the children are given a solid religious education in the principles of both their denominational affiliations—leaving it to them to make their own decision about the church of their choice when they reach an age of discretion. What possible harm is done by the occasional conformity of the non-Episcopalian husband or wife to the sacrament of the Lord's Table administered in an Episcopal church?

It is hard to believe that anyone can be disturbed about any violation of God, His Church, or His Sacraments, when devout persons of Christian, if not Episcopalian faith seek His grace among us. What is profoundly disturbing are the occasional conformists within our own fold—sometime confirmed, seldom seen except at Easter, unwilling to witness to the truth they have received, and contributing of their means considerably less than they spend on their own luxuries and amusements. These are the nominal Christians of whom the Presiding Bishop spoke at his installation last January, who "having been once inoculated by weak religion, seem to be impervious to the real thing." It is these shirkers of their God-given responsibilities who were never really "ready and desirous to be confirmed."

The Way Christ Chose

by Burke Rivers

Rector at Johnson City, New York

THERE was a time, some 300 years ago, when Protestant Christians and Catholic Christians burned and beat and butchered each other with the complete conviction that what they were doing was not only pleasing to God, but essential to his purpose for the world. They did what they did in good faith, but they have left a legacy of distrust and suspicion of Catholics toward Protestants, and Protestants toward Catholics, which persists to this day.

There are moments in every family, when the patience of parents wears thin, and words are said and things are done with the honest intention of helping the child, or even of saving him from some great danger, but in anger. Those moments if repeated often enough, can impair the love and destroy the respect of the child toward his family and change their relationship forever.

We have just lived through a time when anger and fear have swept across the whole world like fire in a pine forest and wrapped the peoples in the flames of war. Now the flames have subsided, but the peace they were kindled to bring is not with us. The nations are as far apart as ever, and already there are those who see the cloud of a new war hanging upon the horizon.

All of this is to say, "The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God."

The "wrath of men" we know, but what is this righteousness of God?

Wrath is the old-English word for anger, and it means the emotion of indignation and the deeds that are done under the spell of that emotion. A nation at war, an angry parent, a religious fanatic, the Ku-Kluxer in his hooded robe, the lynching party, the riots that go with racial and industrial strife—even, in a sense, the strike which paralyzes a factory, or an industry, or a nation—these are examples of the "wrath of man." We are familiar with them.

But the "righteousness of God" is less easily understood. Perhaps it suggests to us God in his righteousness enthroned on the seat of judgment, a heavenly characteristic. It ought to suggest, rather, God's purpose for the world and mankind: the righteousness among men for which we pray when we say "Thy Kingdom come, on earth as it is in heaven." The righteousness of God would be the nations at peace; it would be the classes and groups of men seeking not just their own advantage but the welfare of all mankind; it would be an unfailingly helpful family life which would reflect in all its aspects the love of God, "the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named." The righteousness of God is the righteousness among men which Christians believe it is in God's purpose and power to create.

That these two do not go together, that "the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God," that when idealistic men let their anger choose for them the means they will use to accomplish the good will of the good God, they defeat and destroy that will, it needs only a candid and honest view of the world today to show. This last war was the wrath of man on a titanic scale. The present state of affairs has nothing to do with the righteousness of God, except to show how dreadfully we need to find it. St. James was right, and all those who have said that "the ends justifies the means," forgetting that the means always determines what the end shall be, have been wrong. "The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God."

With this principle in mind, we turn now to some of the troubled areas of modern life.

Here is the problem of finding a homeland for the Jewish people of Europe. Certainly they need a refuge and a place of safety after the horrors of the Hitler years, and certainly Palestine would seem to be such a place. Historically and emotionally the Jews have strong links to it. And so the Zionists want to establish them there. They have worked for over twenty-five years with this goal in mind. What the Zionists do not understand now is why their aims are not more generally supported by Christians.

I think that Christians who have known about Zionism have in the past been usually sympathetic, but recently that sympathy has declined. And the reason is not only the complicated political situation in the Near East, but the action of the Zionists themselves in resorting to violence. Some of them are waging what amounts to outright war on the British and the Arabs. We can understand what they are doing and why. They are desperate, and there seems to be no other way. But few of us can see any hope in that direction, and we cannot support what they are doing. They are simply storing up more trouble for years to come. "The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God"—not even in Palestine.

There is the problem of communism in America. We are told that the communists are a threat to American democracy if they are a simple political party, and a threat to American security if they are the agents of a foreign power. We see no reason to doubt either statement, especially the latter. Few of us would want to be communists, or live under communism. We think the whole system rests on a tragic misreading of history, and misunderstanding of human nature.

But then we are told that communists must be rooted out by all possible means, and that we must prepare ourselves to fight Russia. And all sorts of agencies spring up to destroy communism. Some of them are preparing to use force, and all of them would use other pressures short of force. This seems to some of us to be an even graver threat to democracy than communism itself actually is, and to be turning our back on that peaceful way of living together which is part of "the righteousness of God."

Some of us remember the "Red scare" of the early nineteen-twenties, and the silly things that were said and done then. Some of us remember that Hitler and Mussolini rose to power in Germany and Italy on just such a wave of emotion and fear and anger as the one which is starting now, here among us. Some of us resent the loose way the term "communist" can be used and is being used by thoughtless or malicious people to condemn anybody or anything with which they do not agree, or about which they don't want to think. It seems to some of us that the best way to combat real communism and its evils is for all of us to be better Americans, and to develop and extend the benefits of the American way of life to more and more people. It seems to some of us that what is needed is not a negative program but a positive one. "The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God"—not even in America.

THERE is the problem of adjusting the tensions among groups in our industrial society. We used to be told that the employer enjoyed an unfair advantage over the workers, and treated them badly. And so he did, in many cases. Now we are told that the unions have gained for the employees an unfair advantage over the employer, and they are making the most of it. And so, in many cases, they are.

The employers used the militia and state police on the workers, and the workers used bricks and baseball bats and the strike against the employers, and lately against the general public. Laws have been framed and reframed to give the advantage first to one side and then to the other.

The goal is industrial peace, and the maximum advantages for all concerned in this industrial civilization. But the thing to remember is that that good goal must be sought by good and fair means. Bad and unfair means, whoever uses them, can only bring further strife and trouble. For here too, "the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God."

One of the temptations of Christ was to make use of men's wrath and indignation in order to bring in the Kingdom of God. "Bow down and worship me," said Satan during those days in the wilderness, "and all these things will I give thee," showing him the kingdom of the world and the glory of them. We must never forget the Lord's reply: "Get thee hence, Satan: for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve."

Here is one of those recurring temptations for every man of high ideals in this material world of men. The righteousness of God, the vision of what ought to be and what might be, and the sense that it lies only just beyond our grasp—this is wine which can turn the head of the idealist who drinks it. In his longing for it, in his anger that the stupidity of some men seems to deny it to all men, he is tempted to take up any weapon that lies close at hand. So the Church, in one dark hour, made use of the rack and the flame to save men's souls.

It is the temptation of the evil one, for when men take that course, the dream vanishes, the vision fades, and nothing is left but ashes and blood and tears, and bitter memories, and the righteousness which is of God is still further postponed.

The alternative is patience and labor and the cross of disappointment and misunderstanding, but this is the way the Lord Christ chose, and there is no other way for those who would follow him. Let me plead in these troubled days that you strive for a clear understanding of the principle involved as we try to travel from this world of men to the righteousness of God. The wrath of men will not advance us on our journey. Let me urge you as Christian disciples to be "wise as serpents and harmless as doves" whenever the summons to violence comes, and weapons are pressed into your hands. All your faith and all your experience have taught you that there is no hope in them.

Rather, give yourself to the works of peace and righteousness. Work for understanding among rivals. Work for mercy toward all who have suffered wrong. Work for a change of heart in those you believe to be mistaken. Above all, work for the love of God among all men, for he alone can "order the unruly wills and affections of sinful men." For in your dream of a better world remember, only the righteousness of men worketh the righteousness of God.

A Word With You

By
HUGH D. McCANDLESS

Salvation

THIS word has been abused. When a man tells me he is concerned for my salvation, I usually assume that he wants me to think, feel, and act precisely as he does or has done, and I look for the nearest exit, either conversational or geographical. I assume he wants to save me by making me safe in the Roman fold or any other fundamentalistic sect — and that does not attract me.

But I can be saved in another way, and I need that badly, and frequently. I need to be saved from wasting my life. When a ship is drifting, out of control, it should be salvaged, so that it can be useful and not a menace to other shipping. Even if my life is rotten with disuse or abuse, Christ can find something to redeem and make serviceable and lasting.

St. Francis Xavier prayed, not that God would keep him safe, but faithful. I think he found more active salvation in the second idea than in the first.

A Number of Important Books Are Briefly Reviewed

Spiritual Biographies by Dr. Rufus M. Jones Is One of the Notable Books of the Year

By R. M. Grant and W. B. Spofford Jr.

The Luminous Trail. By Rufus M. Jones. Macmillan, $2.00.

In this little collection of spiritual biographies the veteran leader among the Friends traces the "apostolic succession" of Christian mysticism from St. Paul to the present day. St. John, "the saint who formed our minds," Clement of Alexandria, Hugo of St. Victor, Francis, Catherine of Siena, Erasmus, six minor "spiritual reformers," William Law, Horace Bushnell, and Phillips Brooks are portrayed sympathetically and winningly. Like Dean Inge in his Personal Religion, Dr. Jones concludes his testimony of faith with the story of his delightful child who died young. Our age may come to stress a sterner faith, but we must never neglect the experience and the conviction that "where there is so much love, there must be more."

—R. M. G.

A Harmony of the Gospels.* By Ralph Daniel Heim. Muhlenberg Press, $3.50.

This is the first gospel harmony to use the new Revised Standard Version. It is convenient in size and contains all four gospels. Since John can rarely be coordinated with the synoptics, this treatment is not altogether satisfactory; but it is simpler for the reader who wants to use an English harmony. The lines and words are not as clearly coordinated as in Burton and Goodspeed. All in all, however, this harmony is well worth owning. It has convenient indices of parables, miracles, gospels of the church year, and gospel passages.

—R. M. G.

A Plain Man's Life of Christ.* By A. D. Martin. Macmillan, $2.00.

The most striking feature of this book is the attractiveness of its style and the simplicity of its exposition. Indeed, it may be felt that the author, a distinguished English Congregationalist who died in 1940, has made some of the rough places in New Testament criticism too smooth, that things are a little too "plain." And does a "plain man" like being reminded of his plainness? Nevertheless, for an imaginative, non-technical account of the life of Christ, Dr. Martin's work may be highly commended. He must have been a great preacher. Anyone can gain devotional insights and improve his own sermons by reading his book.

—R. M. G.

There Was Once A Slave.* By Shirley Graham. Julian Messner, Inc., $2.50.

A prize-winning biography of Frederick Douglass, the slave who became a leading fighter for the emancipation of a people. Comrade of John Brown, William Lloyd Garrison, Wendell Phillips, Gamaliel Bailey and other participants in one of the greatest social and Christian crusades in our nation's history, Frederick Douglass made a heroic witness in the struggle to emancipate the slaves. Miss Graham, with her first book, shows that she knows how to write both biography and history in a vital and interesting style and, at the same time, establish herself as one of the most promising of the post-war crop of American authors.

—W. B. S., Jr

The First Among the Unafraid. By Mercer G. Johnston. The Longwood Co., $2.00.

Written in colloquil English, this series of plays about the life of Christ seeks to present the same experimental approach adopted by Dorothy Sayers in her great book, The Man Born to Be King. In this case, however, the experiment is not successful since a good idea is ruined by bad writing. Although one may not be disturbed by the "slangy" conversation of the disciples, he will be definitely piqued by the verbosity of the characters and the lack of subtlety in character delineation. Obviously, Mr. Johnston has a vital interpretation of Christ to present but he defeats his own purpose in this book.

A Thrilling Missionary Story Comes From Okinawa

Lay Workers Are Commissioned Acting Pastors And Sent Out to Organize Cells of Activity

Edited by Sara Dill

New York:—A handful of native Christians on battle-scarred Okinawa has launched a program of religious infiltration that may eventually result in the conversion to Christianity of most of the island's 580,000 individuals, the Rev. Garland E. Hopkins told a meeting of the Okinawa committee of the Foreign Missions Conference. Recently returned from a four-month trip through the Far East in behalf of the Methodist Church and the Church committee on international affairs of the World Council of Churches and the International Missionary Council, Hopkins described the Okinawa enterprise as a "pattern of Christian advance which may well be an example for all post-war missionary endeavor."

Shortly after V-J day, he said, Toyama Seiken, lay leader of Okinawa's little pre-war Christian community, plus several score repatriates, organized the Okinawa Christian Association.

"Only six ordained ministers were available," he related, "but Toyama was undaunted. He called together several outstanding lay workers, commissioned them as 'acting pastors' and sent them out to organize cells of activity in strategic centers all over the island.

"Through the cooperation of some military government officials, he secured mimeographing facilities and published a hymnal and other tracts. Through an interested Seabee, hundreds of Japanese-language scriptures were received from the American Bible Society. Youth work, women's work, Sunday schools, have all been organized on an island-wide scale.

"The results speak for themselves," Hopkins continued. "Shortly after the war there were only ten Protestant congregations on the island. Today there are more than thirty, all united in the same association. The few hundred believers and sympathizers of pre-war days have been followed by thousands eager to learn about Christianity. Toyama estimates that at the present time half the population is seriously considering conversion.

"The Okinawans have accomplished this remarkable feat under unbelievably adverse conditions. For almost a year after the invasion they lived behind barbed wire enclosures. As late as May, 1947, fraternization with Americans was still forbidden. Chaplains stationed on the island have not been allowed to conduct religious services or activities of any type among the natives.

"Okinawa represents a special responsibility for Americans. Not only is it late in history for us to have conquered territory on our hands, but also this is territory hallowed by the sacrifice of thousands of American boys. Whatever is done for Okinawa is in a sense a memorial dedicated to preserving the ideals for which they gave their lives."

A Symbol of Cooperation

These joint advertisements, intended to bring the needs of all our Seminaries before the people of the Church, point up an important truth.

We are not competing, but rather complementary institutions, each offering special gifts from distinctive traditions to the rich life of our Church, and continually cross-fertilizing each other through the fellowship of Faculties, students and alumni.

Notable Service

Columbus, Ohio:—A notable ordination service was held here at Trinity Church on July 25th when the Rev. Gordon S. Price was ordained priest. Bishop Kirchhoffer of Indianapolis, acting for the Bishop of Western Massachusetts, ordained the candidate. But the service had added significance because the following clergymen joined in the laying on of hands: the Rev. Donald Timmerman, Methodist; the Rev. Newland C. Roy, Presbyterian; the Rev. Kenneth Clinton, Congregationalist; the Rev. Stephen Lavriotes, Greek Orthodox. The following Episcopal clergymen also took part in the service; the Rev. Almus M. Thorp; the Rev. Robert Lee Bull, Jr.; the Rev. John J. Weaver; the Rev. James W. Hyde and the rector of the parish, where Mr. Price is assistant, the Rev. Robert W. Fay.

Stop Grants to Churches

Calcutta (RNS):—The Indian government has decided to halt all official grants for the upkeep of churches on March 31, 1948. This action, it was indicated here by the Most Rev. George Clay Hubback, Metropolitan of the Church of India, Burma and Ceylon, will force dioceses to use their own funds for payment of clerical salaries and for the upkeep of churches. In addition, dioceses will have to depend upon donations from the laity abroad.

Meanwhile, Bishop Hubback announced that all chaplains appointed by the British government to serve in India will be withdrawn by Dec. 31, of this year. Ninety chaplains are affected. Bishops, however, are not included in the change and will continue in their ministry. Seventy-five of the chaplains are expected to leave on August 15 and the remainder by the end of the year. As the result of these developments leaders of the Church of India, Burma and Ceylon are holding talks which, it is expected, will lead to a reorganization of the Church.

Russia Criticized

Oslo (RNS):—The Rev. Rudolf Kiviranna, Lutheran pastor from Estonia who is now working with the YMCA in Stockholm, was given a prominent place in the program of the World Conference of Christian Youth, which ended its sessions here on July 31. Mr. Kiviranna in recent months has been sending anti-Soviet material to the editors of religious journals in the United States and other countries. His address here followed that line.

Another speaker was Alexandra Benchendorff, a worker for the YW CA in Hamburg, who told the conference that many Russians now in displaced persons camps in Europe "had lost their nationality and become stateless people at a time when the Russian nationality and former station in life had placed them in danger."

Gandhi Hits Disunity

Bombay:—Mahatma Gandhi declared at a prayer meeting here that "Christ came into the world to preach and spread the gospel of love and peace, but what his followers have brought about is tyranny and misery. Christians are taught in his name to 'love thy neighbor as thyself' but they are divided among themselves."

In reply to a question he stated that Christian foreign missionaries will be free to remain in India now that the country is an independent state, and also that Indian Christians will be at liberty "to occupy high official positions in the Indian Dominion."

Consecration Date Set

New York:—The Rev. Horace W. B. Donegan will be consecrated Suffragan Bishop of New York at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine on October 28th. Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill will be the consecrator, with Bishop Gilbert of New York and Bishop Manning, retired Bishop, the co-consecrators. Bishop Norman Nash of Massachusetts and Bishop Stephen F. Bayne of Olympia will present the newly elected Bishop. Bishop Hobson of Ohio will preach

Dr. Wood Dies

New York:—Dr. John W. Wood, who retired in 1941 after more than forty years as head of foreign missions of the National Council, died here on August 7th. He was 81 years old on August 4th. Besides being an authority on missions, he was a strong supporter of laymen's work. As a young man he was a layreader at St. George's, New York; was general secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, laymen's society, for a num- of years; was one of the organizers of the Laymen's Forward Movement; and was active in the Church Army.

Work In Liberia

New York,:—Shortly after his separation from the U. S. Army, Fenton B. Sands volunteered for work as an "agricultural missionary" and was sent to Liberia. After nearly ten months of work he has made a detailed report of progress to the Overseas Department of the National Council, which, the Department officers believe is illuminating to the Church people at home whose ideas about the service and duties of an agricultural missionary are decidedly vague.

Mr. Sands said that his work "has surpassed all my expectations. I find it extremely interesting and exciting. Every day brings new adventures and a firmer conviction that our work is going to be a success. The need for it is so great."

"After I arrived here," Mr. Sands continued, "I was amazed at the existing conditions. The absence of the necessities of life is manifested in a high percentage of undeveloped minds and bodies. One thing that is quickly noted is the need for nutritious food.

"The most difficult task has been getting organized and getting our farm into operation. We first had to clear the land, with nothing but hand labor. Using such primitive means as a cutlass and an axe, it was impossible to clear as much as I had hoped to. However, we managed to clear some 35 acres. We were able to plant several acres of corn, peanuts, cassava, eddoes and a five-acre vegetable garden with snap beans, lima beans, cucumbers, tomatoes, onions, cabbages, turnips, peppers, egg plant, radishes, cantaloupes and collard greens. I am trying several varieties of these vegetables, to determine the most suitable for the climatic conditions here. We are making progress in insect pest control.

"Our chicks are almost nine weeks old." (This refers to 400 baby chicks bought in the United States recently and flown to Liberia with the loss of only two.) "Since their arrival everyone has been following their progress. Most of the natives are interested because they have never seen chicks in such large numbers and without the mother hen.

"We are now in process of building pig houses for the pigs we expect shortly. The only cattle we now have is a heifer. It is our desire to produce a stock of cattle that is immune to the tsetse fly and the other diseases that cause severe losses to livestock here.

"At present I have two native boys whom I am giving special training in scientific agriculture and they are assisting me in the farm work. There are many other boys who are eager to come for this training, but at present I do not have the facilities nor the time to handle any more. As soon as the dormitory for boys is completed I hope to begin a full training program.

"The success of our program thus far cannot be measured in yields per acre or farm income, which is the usual means of determining how successful a farm may be. Instead, information gained as to what can be successfully grown in this area, insect and disease control measures, is our aim. This is of the greatest value because nothing at all has been done along these lines. This information is what I and the people have to have in order to obtain any measure of success in farming. My outlook for the future is very optimistic.

"My wife who has been acting principal for Julia C. Emery Hall, has found her work interesting and absorbing. The school is greatly in need of reorganization in order to come up to American standards, and that is what she is working at. She has been trying to inspire the girls with a sense of pride in themselves, their school and their scholastic achievements, and to foster the spirit of competition in order to encourage them to do their best. She has attempted also to make the girls aware of the important role that womanhood plays in society and in the development of their country. Results so far have been encouraging. We have been surprised at the interest the womenfolk are showing in the prospective home economics building that is to be erected.

"It is our intention to make Julia C. Emery Hall and the farm at Bromley second to none in the country. We feel that it can be done. We feel also that our greatest contribution, as Christians, is to show these people a better way to live. This will in turn enable them to become better Christians."

MRS. HELEN A. COOK
Churchwoman of Washington, D. C.

The evangelical trends of Time and Life magazines since the conversion of Mrs. Claire Booth Luce to Roman Catholicism is worth following. I call your attention to what seems to be an insidious attack by the Catholic hierarchy upon the scientific field of psychiatry. Last spring in her series of articles in McCall's, Mrs. Luce discussed her disappointing experiences with psychoanalysis. After reading these articles I heard several of my less discriminating friends make disparaging remarks about psychiatrists in general.

Three weeks ago Life carried an editorial entitled "Science and God." In it were several remarks directed against psychiatry.

Now comes the resignation of Dr. Frank Curran, chief psychiatrist at St. Vincent's Hospital, New York, because, to quote the Herald-Tribune, "of the failure of the hierarchy here to clarify or repudiate the recent reported attack on the whole field of psychiatry by Msgr. Fulton J. Sheen."

Being composed of human beings, the field of psychiatry is not above reproach and should be open to criticism the same as any other branch of science. However since the general public is not yet informed as to the value that lies in the mental hygiene movement, it would seem that such criticism is not of benefit to the public good. This series of incidents reminds me of the assertion of Philip Wylie in his book "Essay on Morals" to the effect that any power, either religious or political, that regiments the human mind away from its evolution in social betterment, should be removed.

To me the answer to this does not lie in religious intolerance or the ways of the Klan. Rather it lies in a more unified, militant Protestantism; a more modern and enlightened Christianity.

Congratulations to THE WITNESS for shaking off some of the mothballs and coming to grips with life. I refer in particular to such columns as "Religion and Health," "Strategy and Tactics" and the "Living Liturgy."

MR. WILLIAM E. HARRIS
Layman of Cambridge, Mass.

I always enjoy THE WITNESS. I like very much the contributions of Bishop Ludlow, which are always very sound. So, I want to congratulate you on publishing his "The Salaries of Clergy" (July 24). There is something exceedingly ridiculous about a Church which underpays its missionaries and overpays its fashionable rectors.

It does not seem right in a world where many persons are starving, for a rector in one parish to live in a rent-free house, enjoy a two months' vacation and draw an annual salary far in excess of the earnings of many of his parishioners, while in another parish another man struggles to hold body and soul together and lacks the material resources to carry Christ's message to the people surrounding him. Yet this is not an uncommon disparity in the Episcopal Church. In some parishes the rector's salary almost equals the total amount given in pledges to missions.

The only reservation I would make to Bishop Ludlow's thoughtful and fair article would be to point out that the cost of living does vary in many areas, and this should be taken into account. But this does not lessen Bishop Ludlow's point regarding the inequity of the present salary system.

MISS A. C. DUTTON
Churchwoman of Boston

The article by Mr. Herschel V. Johnson on The Ethical Foundations of the United Nations (WITNESS July 24) was excellent. His plea for the wide backing of the UN by the American people should be taken to heart, for it surely is true that it offers the one hope for peace in our day. I do not see how anyone could possibly disagree with Mr. Johnson's words. What does concern me however a great deal, as I follow the doings at Lake Success, is the determination of our own country to indulge in unilateral action. To act independently of UN in Greece and Turkey surely is not strengthening the United Nations. And for us to announce to the world that we are for peace in China when we send the nationalist government there millions and billions in arms, just doesn't make sense. Neither am I made proud of my country when I read that Dutch soldiers who are shooting the people of Indonesian were trained in the United States and are supplied largely by us. It is quite understandable under the circumstances if the people of Indonesia refuse to accept the U.S. as an arbitrator.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew A Vital Organization

From a Humble Beginning It Has Developed Into Effective Movement of Men and Boys

By William J. Haas

Baltimore:—On St. Andrew's Day, 1883, twelve young men, with the approval of their rector, the Rev. W. H. Vibbert, and inspired by Mr. James L. Houghteling, agreed to follow the example set by St. Andrew in bringing his brother, Peter, to Christ. In order to accomplish this purpose effectively they adopted two rules: the Rule of Prayer and the Rule of Service. Soon they became a spiritual force in the parish. Their action was emulated by groups of young men in other parishes of the Church and by 1886 the Brotherhood of St. Andrew became an organized dynamic force in the life of the Church. It was incorporated by an Act of Congress, and now functions as a national organization under a charter signed by the late President Theodore Roosevelt, dated May 30, 1908.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew is an association of organized groups of men and boys within the Church who have banded themselves together on the basis of the two Brotherhood Rules, and who desire to have fellowship with, and seek help from, one another as they face unitedly the urgency to "spread Christ's Kingdom among men, especially young men."

From its beginning the work of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew has been in, with, and for the Church. It does not exist to propagate itself as an organization, but rather to revitalize the spiritual life of the laity of the whole Church and arouse and mobilize them to greater personal effort for Christ and His Kingdom.

Typical of such efforts is the annual Advent Communion for men and boys. This service was first sponsored by the Brotherhood chapter of the Church of the Epiphany in Pittsburgh, Pa. in 1893. Recognized as a stimulant to the work and worship of the laymen in a parish, others followed the example. Today this service is observed throughout the Church with many thousands of men and boys joining in the corporate act of dedication of self at the beginning of our Church year.

The Washington's Birthday Communion, also held in many dioceses, and in Long Island the occasion of an impressive gathering of thousands, further develops the strength of the laity, while events such as the Jamestown-Williamsburg Pilgrimage to commemorate the first Eucharist held in America, renew appreciation to our great heritage.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew has participated actively in the Church's program. Its members have visited the stranger, the sick, the indifferent, the unfortunate in hospital or prison. Brotherhood men have labored to increase Church attendance and to bring men to Baptism, Confirmation and the Holy Communion. In its long life, the Brotherhood of St. Andrew has developed a veritable army of lay readers and candidates for the Christian ministry.

A structure is only as strong as the foundations upon which it rests. The Brotherhood of St. Andrew's program and work rest upon the twin foundation stones of personal prayer and personal service. While these rules make explicit the importance of the individual in the work of extending the Kingdom, the chapter unit is the normal basis of operation in the parish.

Any group of two or more baptized men or boys may band themselves together as a chapter, and affiliate with the national organization. Their program of work is determined by the needs of their parish and the direction of their clergy. The two Rules bring the Brotherhood ideal down to the level of the individual member's life by guiding him into the practice of daily prayer and using his personal influence wherever he can in leading other men and boys nearer to Christ through the Church.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew provides a working method for those men and boys of the Church who desire in and through their lives to reach out beyond the observance of a formal church relationship to touch other lives that they, too, might share in the work and blessings of the Church's life.

The many years of effective service given by the Brotherhood of St. Andrew to the Church have demonstrated that the two Rules of Prayer and Service are basically sound.

If Christianity is a way of life, then in practice we have not only chosen a particular way, but have accepted, in our choice, the requirement of Christian direction; that is we must move ourselves along the chosen way as against the many ways rejected. The degree to which we try to apply these Rules deliberately in our conscious actions largely determines our effectiveness as Christians.

Every time we apply these Rules they direct our thinking and action along specific Christian lines. Do this often enough and they become fixed habits in our nature. In using these Rules as "direction finders" every day, we not only acquire the habits of prayer, but actually find ourselves growing in Christian experience.

The Rule of Prayer is to pray daily for the spread of Christ's Kingdom among men, especially young men, and for God's blessing upon the labors of the Brotherhood.

Earnest prayer, individual and corporate, is the basis of all successful work for Christ and His Church. It is in prayer that a man or his chapter is being charged like a battery. At work (by the Rule of Service) the power is being transmitted.

The Rule of Service is to make at least one earnest effort each week to lead some man nearer to Christ through his Church.

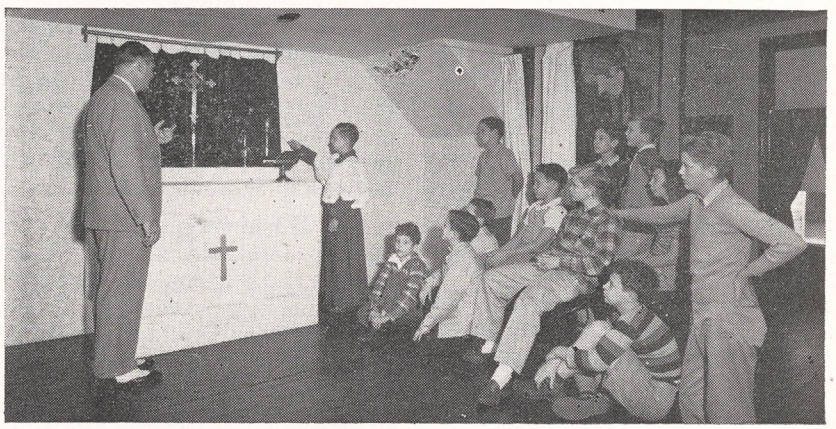
The Rule begins with us right where we are, Ours may be the opportunity of some simple, seemingly unimportant, bit of work. But whatever the job at hand, it takes on renewed significance for us when the doing of it is directed by the desire and intention to make that act count for something in bringing in the Kingdom of Christ. Applied to the individual, the Rule is very explicit —"to make at least one earnest effort each week to lead some man nearer to Christ through His Church." This means that the individual member is always keeping himself alert to opportunities to use his influence, persuasion, example, or whatever circumstances, to "lead some other man nearer to Christ." This is not restricted to any particular time or place but it is a daily and continuous urgency.

While the Brotherhood of St. Andrew is an organization for laymen, the full support and cooperation of the clergy in the area in which it operates is desired and sought after so that it might serve most effectively. A parish chapter may be organized only with the full approval of the rector.

No chapter runs on its own steam. The work of the Church, from the Brotherhood of St. Andrew angle, is a cooperative endeavor of the clergy and laity. There are distinct responsibilities that belong to each, but the work of the Kingdom is a joint obligation. The Brotherhood chapter in a parish cannot take the place of an ordained clergyman any more than an ordained clergyman can take the place of the laity. Praying lay workers working in close association with a consecrated clergyman is an unbeatable combination for extending the Kingdom of Christ.

The clergyman of any parish or mission in which the Brotherhood of St. Andrew is working should find in his Brotherhood chapter an organized body of men to supplement his personal pastoral duties, waiting and ready to assist in achieving the thing of prime importance, winning men to Christ through his Church.

Clergymen should give definite assignments to their chapters. Where wise lay leadership is chosen and diligent direction given by the rector, the Brotherhood of St. Andrew chapter, regardless of size or experience, can be a dynamic factor in the life of the parish in which it operates.



The Brotherhood of St. Andrew is a co-operating agency of the National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and the House of Bishops has appointed a committee of seven bishops to serve as a channel of communication, conference and cooperation between the Brotherhood and the general Church.

There are Brotherhood chapters and members in practically every diocese and missionary district in the United States, as well as in Canada, the British Isles, West Indies, Central America, Brazil, New Zealand, Australia, China and Japan.

Nationally, as well as locally, the Brotherhood of St. Andrew is a constitutional, representative democracy. Legislation is by vote of its National Convention. The Council is the administrative body, elected by the National Convention and by the Assemblies, as provided in the Constitution.

The Council elects its officers, consisting of a president, several vice-presidents and a treasurer (who are business and professional men serving without salary), and one or more secretaries who are part of its employed field and office staff. The Executive Committee, consisting of the National officers and other members selected from the Council, acts ad interim between meetings of the Council and the Convention.

The National Headquarters are located at 105 West Monument Street, Baltimore 1, Md.

OLD CONTROVERSY REVISED

Boston:—Gov. Bradford of Massachusetts has been petitioned by 150 Americans to approve the erection on Boston Common of a memorial bas-relief to Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti, who were executed twenty years ago for murder. Among those sponsoring the project are Bishop Scarlett of Missouri, former Governor Lehman of New York, Chancellor Robert M. Hutchins of the University of Chicago. The petition to the governor states that "thoughtful opinion" the world over regards that the two men were innocent of the crime for which they were electrocuted.

DR. A. W. TUCKER IS HONORED

Shanghai:—Thirty American and Chinese doctors shared in the celebration of the 64th birthday of Dr. A. W. Tucker who has been chief surgeon at St. Luke's and St. Elizabeth's hospitals here since 1906. He has also been professor of surgery at the medical school of St. John's University for the same length of time. The celebration took the form of a dinner and reception, with the announcement that 100,000,000 Chinese dollars ($5000 in U.S. money) was being raised to establish a chair of surgery in the medical school in Dr. Tucker's honor.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew Commended By Leaders

Number of Bishops Write of the Important Role Being Played by This Organization

Baltimore:—What a number of leaders of the Church think of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew may be gathered from the following letters received at the office of the organization here:

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew offers to the laymen of the Church a challenging and comprehensive program for the extension of the Kingdom of God. The emphasis is placed not primarily upon entertainment or recreation but upon the central truths and practices of the Christian faith. This emphasis meets the tragic need of our generation. The appeal will reach thoughtful men who will respond to the call of Christ and of the Church in the consecration of their lives.

—The Rt. Rev. Henry K. Sherrill
Presiding Bishop

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew deserves the enthusiastic support of everyone concerned with the progress of the Episcopal Church. During the short time in which I have been concerned with the administration of the missionary work of the diocese of Michigan I have become convinced that the fundamental problem of the Church is lack of man-power. If we had the men we would be able to grasp the great opportunities that are offered to us. We need desperately the ministry of the laity—hundreds of men who will teach, witness, and evangelize. The Brotherhood is concerned with the training and the organizing of these men. It leads them deeply into the life of prayer and then sends them forth in service.

I could give many examples of what the Brotherhood has accomplished, but I will confine myself to one. A mission church, closed for many years, was recently reopened. It now has a new organ and plans are being made for redecorating. It was dead and now it is alive again. Who is responsible? A young layman who is a member of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

—The Rt. Rev. Richard S. Emrich
Suffragan Bishop of Michigan

It gives me much pleasure to bear witness to the value of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in the life of the Church. I became a member in 1887 while I was still a student in the University of Pennsylvania and it gave me opportunity to attend meetings in Holy Trinity Church at which many important subjects were discussed relating to Christianity and its application to the everyday lives of people. Also, it was most helpful in giving me opportunity to speak to others about what I had found. It helped me to arrive at a conviction, which has been a lifelong one, that no one has any real religion until he is willing to share it with others. To pray daily for the spread of Christ's Kingdom and to ask other people to come to Church with you seem to me to be fundamental to the life of any members of the Church. It was the way that Christianity started in the early centuries and was the cause of the Church's rapid growth.

Times have changed and the Churches have drawn away from old types of evangelism; however, what we need today is evangelism of the personal type which carries the Gospel into every area of our complex social, political, and economic life. The Brotherhood should, in my judgment, recruit men who are leaders, have courage, and above all a deep loyalty to the Church and to her ways. Men's clubs are well enough, but we need an organization with the aims of the Brotherhood to be at work for Christ in God's world.

Suffragan Bishop of Pennsylvania

to reality in the spiritual calling of a disciple, its accomplishments are of lasting worth, and its opportunities dependent on our loyalty to the Master.

—The Rt. Rev. William L. Essex
Bishop of Quincy

The College of Preachers has had the privilege in recent years of entertaining the Brotherhood of St. Andrew on several occasions. It certainly constitutes a unique fellowship of laymen within the Church—loyal to its corporate life and eager to appropriate its riches of liturgy and doctrine. During the past Lenten season, a group of laymen gathered from the parishes of the local diocese, but sponsored by the Brotherhood, has met weekly at the College of Preachers, and, under the guidance of Bishop Dun, studied the fundamentals of the Christian faith. The experience, according to the testimony of the group, was richly rewarding. It could become a model for adult religious education groups among laymen over the entire Church. Certainly the Brotherhood deserves much credit in stimulating this type of evangelism.

—The Rev. Theodore O. Wedel
Canon, College of Preachers

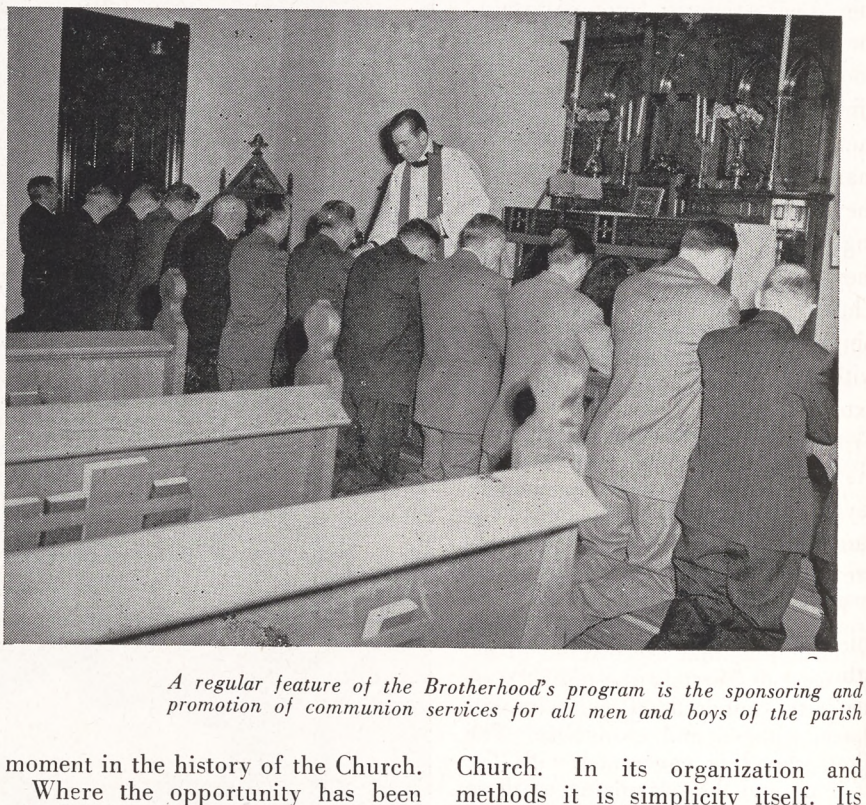
Forty-one years ago I was privileged to become a member of the Junior Brotherhood of St. Andrew, at Memorial Church, Baltimore, Maryland, and throughout all of these years I have always continued my membership and interest in the organization of men and boys.

I feel that great influence was brought to bear upon me by my association in this form of Church life as a young boy upon my decision to enter the priesthood of the Church. In the twenty-nine years I spent as rector of two parishes I was truly privileged to have groups of laymen, primarily young men, who accepted in a definite form the obligations of their confirmation and by their honest prayers and their sincere, regular efforts shared with me in the great privilege of bringing many boys and men to baptism, confirmation, church school and to church worship.

It is my hope that within my diocese of Louisiana many groups of laymen will accept the challenge of such definite prayer and work and worship and in each congregation will form a nucleus of consecrated men to share with their priest in revitalizing and evangelizing the lay power of this, our great Church. No other organization of men has such a definite program and such a clear cut plan for winning men to the Kingdom of God. I pray that God's blessing will be ever upon this great organization and that it will grow both in quality and quantity and continue strengthening the life of our great Church.

—The Rt. Rev. John L. Jackson
Bishop of Louisiana

During its long history the Brotherhood of St. Andrew has steadfastly held to its one great aim or objective, which is to win souls for God through his Church. The opportunity thus to serve has never been more urgent than at the present moment in the history of the Church.



Where the opportunity has been seized through the faithful and loyal efforts of the men and boys of the Brotherhood, the accomplishments of the Brotherhood speak for themselves.

—The Rt. Rev. John Thomas Heistand, Bishop of Harrisburg

The Episcopal Church is gaining a new awareness of its responsibility for the extension of the Christian fellowship. We are realizing that any program of real evangelism demands consecration and work on the part of every member of the Church. Laymen, speaking of the things in which they believe and inviting others to share the privileges of the fellowship, are a vital force in telling the good news. Members of the Brotherhood of St Andrew, consecrated and loyal, are a natural spearhead for any program for evangelism such as the Church is now undertaking. It is a challenge which calls for real men with real vision.

—The Rev. Arnold M. Lewis
Executive Director, Presiding Bishop's Committee on Laymen's Work.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew has had a long and honorable history of more than half a century in the Episcopal Church in this and in other countries. In China and Japan, the Brotherhood is one of the most useful agencies there is in leading men and boys to Christ and the Church. In its organization and methods it is simplicity itself. Its purposes are in line with the best apostolic and Christian tradition.

A regular feature of the Brotherhood's program is the sponsoring and promotion of communion services for all men and boys of the parish

A very small group of men in any parish can form a chapter. It is better that a chapter be on the small side, rather in the nature of a cell. The work of the members of the chapter is to pray daily that God's Kingdom may come and to make an honest effort each week to bring some man to Christian worship in the Church. This is in line with what St. Andrew did in bringing his greater brother St. Peter to Christ. It is truly an apostolic method.

Men's organizations have come and gone. Men's clubs have risen and fallen, but the Brotherhood has persisted and is working today.

Suffragan Bishop of Los Angeles

EDITORIALS

The Brotherhood Serves

THE Brotherhood of St. Andrew looks to the future. How can this organization of men and boys best serve the Church?

The answer is quite simple—by following the example of our patron saint. In St. John 1:41 we have the verse that is the basis of the work of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. "He first findeth his own brother Simon and saith unto him, 'We have found the Messiah' . . . and he brought him to Jesus."

Like Andrew, we seek out and try to bring to the Master others who may become the Peter of the Church of tomorrow. In this search the Brotherhood of St. Andrew employs all techniques. Beginning with the youth we urge them to attend summer camps sponsored and manned by our members where they may be exposed to the daring of true Christianity, where they may catch the vision of the Church's task and where we may bind them together in a force with a common objective—the extension of Christ's Kingdom. From these camps have come many of our bishops, priests and lay leaders who look upon their camping days as the time of their great decision.

In schools and colleges, in missions and parishes the Brotherhood of St. Andrew seeks to bring men and boys into a self-determined but closer relation with their Master. In our leadership conferences we afford the questioning young man a full opportunity for self-examination and analysis. The conferences, lead and guided by a consecrated priest, draw out the doubts and confusions of the searching mind and fuse the hesitancies into determination. The participants are no longer "ashamed to confess the faith of Christ crucified" and tend to become faithful soldiers and servants.

The Brotherhood chapter meetings further stimulate the members. Laymen, meeting with their rector, consider prayerfully the spiritual needs and opportunities about them, determine upon a solution and start to work. The director of the chapter assigns to each member a portion of the work to be done, for which he is responsible and on which he reports at the next chapter meeting. Progress results from this simple matter-of-fact procedure and those taking part realize that the Rules of Prayer and Service are not vague theories but dynamic forces.

Rules of The Brotherhood of St. Andrew

THE RULE OF PRAYER

The Rule of Prayer is to pray daily for the spread of Christ's Kingdom among men, especially young men, and for God's blessing upon the labors of the Brotherhood.

THE RULE OF SERVICE

The Rule of Service is to make at least one earnest effort each week to lead some man nearer to Christ through His Church.

In St. John 6:8, we have a further example set by St. Andrew. Here is the story of the feeding of the five thousand. It was Andrew who sought and found the small means of feeding the multitude. He presented to our Lord the lad with the five barley loaves and two small fishes. And the miracle took place. We of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew try to follow that example. We have little ourselves, but what we have found we bring to the Master for his blessing and use.

We heard of the heavy load that Bishop Harris carries in Liberia—how the natives found the results of their work at the church farm discouraging and difficult. The cause was inbreeding of stock and the need was new blood lines. So this spring we flew 400 baby chicks to Bishop Harris that his poultry might be reinvigorated. As additional contributions are received we will send young turkey poults and arrange for the purchase of new blood lines in their piggery and cattle farm. We believe this to be practical Christianity—to bring our little to the Master that he may bless and multiply it.

Again, we have sent vegetable seeds to Lt. Col. Paul Rusch in Japan that he may distribute them to the Japanese people that they might raise their own food. The amount we shipped this past winter will be expanded many times as thousands of our members and friends join in another expression of practical Christianity.

Another major emphasis is the support in Kumming, China of our beloved brother and Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Quentin K. Y. Huang. He has told thousands the thrilling story of his diocese, his need and his opportunities. The Brotherhood of St. Andrew has pledged him a church and school at a cost of $25,000. This fund has already grown to a sizeable amount. It is an expression of love for and faith in a man who faces almost impossible tasks with serene confidence in his Master.

We believe that our gifts to these projects will through the miracle of faith not only feed thousands but bring the stones with which the Church throughout the world must grow. The Brotherhood of St. Andrew follows the example of St. Andrew. Knowing our own weaknesses and shortcomings, we strive only to serve by bringing others to Christ that they may become greater and stronger members of the Church of tomorrow.

The Brotherhood Past and Present

by James L. Houghteling

Son of the Founder, past-president, and vice-president of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew

THE Brotherhood of St. Andrew was founded on St. Andrew's Day, 1883. For over sixty-three years it has been a recruiting agent for the lay manpower of the Church and has traveled far and wide in its chosen work of "Spreading Christ's Kingdom among men." The milestones of its journey have been its National Conventions, of which there have been fifty in all.

In the present article I have considered the Brotherhood, past and present, from the viewpoint of a few fond recollections of past National Conventions.

I was not invited to the first National Convention of the Brotherhood, because I was just fourteen days short of my third birthday on the afternoon of October 23, 1886, when eighty-five delegates, representing twenty-seven chapters from twelve dioceses, met in Apollo Hall, Chicago, on a truly historical occasion. But I often heard my father, the founder of the Brotherhood, tell about it.

The Convention was short and to the point, consisting of a business session on Saturday afternoon to adopt a national constitution, then a dinner at a convenient restaurant, and an inspirational meeting in a nearby assembly hall; with, of course, a Corporate Communion on Sunday morning. As the finances of the youthful organization were none too robust and as the General Convention of the Church was in session in Chicago at the same time, my father had arranged with the House of Bishops for an early adjournment on Saturday afternoon, so that the Brotherhood could use Apollo Hall free of charge.

Unfortunately the bishops became involved in a long debate and forgot to adjourn. So eighty-five eager young laymen were obliged to stand around the lobby of the hall, while the clock ticked off the precious minutes and the episcopal argument went on and on. Finally Bishop Potter of New York came out of the hall and stopped to ask who all these young men were. And when he was told he turned, hurried back into the hall and interrupted the debate to move that the House of Bishops adjourn and give the Brotherhood of St. Andrew a chance.

My own first experience of a Brotherhood convention was in 1892 at Boston. I was just short of nine years old at that time and with my older brother was appointed a convention page, whose duty it was to sit on the steps of the platform and carry messages from convention officers to various delegates. In this duty I was greatly helped by the fact that as my father's son I had had many home contacts with the convention leaders—such friendly souls as its chairman, Dr. Will Sturgis; our able general secretary, John W. Wood; Philadelphia's leading delegates, G. Harry Davis and George C. Thomas; such field workers as Arthur S. Lloyd (afterward a beloved bishop of the Church) and Harry Sill; and stalwarts of the National Council such as Charles James Wills, William R. Stirling, Hector Baxter, Frank Holmes, John Locke and a host of others.

A recent dinner of the chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew at the University of Florida

I wish that space would permit me to be reminiscent about other conventions which I attended at Philadelphia, Providence, Buffalo, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Milwaukee, St. Louis, Memphis, New Orleans, Nashville, Atlanta—to name only the cities which spring instantly into my memory; or about splendid country conventions at Sewanee, Hobart College, Howe School and other rural spots.

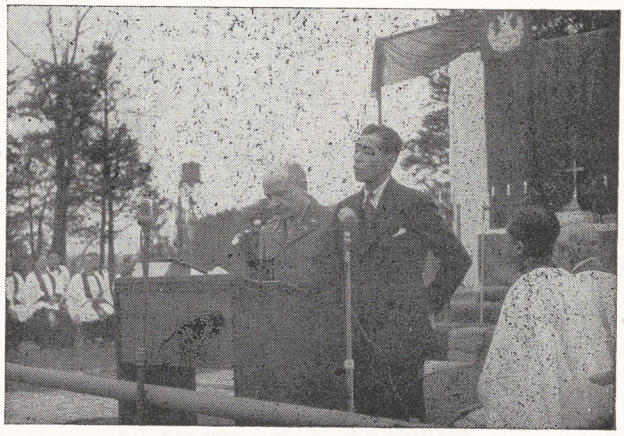
A Brotherhood convention, however, is only a Brotherhood by-product, not an end-product. It is a recording device for summing up and assessing the past and current work of the organization—a measuring device for calculating the impact of the Brotherhood's work and program on the young-man-power of the Church—and an exchange device for pooling the valuable experience of individual groups for the benefit of all. It is an occasion for Brotherhood members to consult together and ask themselves such vital questions as the following:

Why are we today numerically weaker than we were, say, in 1892, or 1907, or 1920? Why, on the other hand, have we survived some of the leaner and more difficult years between, in which other layman's organizations have silently folded their tents and disappeared?

ONE of the reasons for the Brotherhood's longevity is, I am convinced, the simplicity and soundness of its spirit and method. Its simple aims and methods are the sum and substance of the Brotherhood in 1947 as they were in 1887. We have never changed or diluted our rules of prayer and of continuous personal work and service in bringing men and boys nearer to Christ through his Church. Almighty God has blessed our efforts to the full extent by which we have been persistent and faithful in fulfilling our solemn commitments; and his blessing has not been limited by our limitations, but has reached far beyond them through the achievements of a host of men and boys whom we have succeeded in leading through the portals of his Church.

If we should go back through the records of the Brotherhood and from them should compile a statistician's graph of the effectiveness of our program, based on annual reports of chapter activities and membership, I believe we would find that the Brotherhood's progress—like a good many other things in life—can only be portrayed graphically as a series of wave-outlines of varying height.



Our history has undeniably been one of ups and downs, rather than a steady upward progress. For our first fifteen years the curve of such a graph would mount steadily, until it showed a body of approximately 1,500 active chapters and a membership somewhat in excess of 10,000. Then toward the turn of the century there was a slump which, I well remember, greatly worried the Brotherhood leadership of those days. Then the upswing of the curve was resumed fairly steadily until this country entered the first world war, when grave new problems confronted us.

The second half of the Brotherhood's history has in general followed the pattern of the first, although we have never recovered a part of the ground which we held at the top of our first tremendous upswing.

And now we have passed through the vast difficulties of the second world war—in which so many of our members were scattered to the uttermost parts of the earth in the service of their country. Our plotting statistician would have to use the lower dip of a descending curve to depict the valiant but none-too-successful efforts of our depleted chapters during the war—although a few chapters and the members of our field did outstandingly good jobs in the army camps and among the armed forces.

But those difficulties are now past and gone; and, to judge from the spirit of many of our veterans newly returned to civilian life, we have every reason to believe that the wave-curve of our progress is again rising.

Our problem is always a problem of leadership.

Tadao Kaneko, secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in Japan, summarizes Lt. Col. Paul Rusch's address at the St. Andrew's Day service on the grounds of bombed-out Central Theological College, Tokyo

When Jesus the Son of God came to earth to save mankind, his incarnation taught humanity many lessons; but none more vitally important than the great truth that, under most circumstances, men and women need human leadership to show them the path to God. The whole history of Christianity has been one long story of consecrated human leadership inspired by the acts and teachings and love of Christ Jesus.

The sixty years of the Brotherhood's existence have been a part of this pattern. We try to find and to bring to Jesus our brother or our familiar friend, as St. Andrew and his companion St. Philip did on Jordan's bank in the days of the Baptist; and if that brother chances to be Simon Peter, a natural leader or a trainable leader, then the wave of our progress rises.

The young men who first organized the Brotherhood in the 1880's and 1890's were far from being Biblical saints; but they had caught a true vision of the purpose of Jesus Christ and of the power of his grace, which turned them into real leaders of men. With time they were scattered; and then a new generation of leaders had to be found and trained—though not without some gaps—to take their places; and after the second generation, a third. In waves their achievements rose and receded and rose again.

In my younger days I used to worry about this ebb and flow of Brotherhood chapters. But, on the other hand, I was encouraged to notice that many of the principal activities of the dioceses and of the national Church were manned by devoted laymen whom I had first known as Brotherhood workers. And I found that most of these men who had answered the call: "Friend, go up higher!" were still practicing in their daily lives our simple Rule of Prayer and Service and consequently could still be numbered in all good faith, as Brotherhood workers.

Thus, by seeing and understanding, we can assure ourselves that the ebb and flow of chapter life is well nigh inevitable and in no way weakens our essential position in the Church or the useful future which is stretching away ahead of us. In the past the greatest periods of the Brotherhood's history have been those in which it has been confronted with the greatest and most compelling challenges. We fully recognize the tremendous challenges to which our religion is subject today. And we expect to meet them bravely and successfully.

Great China University Chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew

by Blake B. Hammond
Rector, St. Peter's Church, Niagara Falls, N. Y.

ANY organization or brotherhood established in and by the Church of God is the result of the effort first made by Jesus Christ, and carried on thereafter through the intervention and action of God's Holy Spirit.

The Church itself is a brotherhood of believers in God, as revealed by Jesus Christ. The Church is that fellowship caused and kept alive by the Holy Ghost, working in and through each and every member thereof. And, the effectiveness of the Church, or any group therein, is dependent upon the quality and quantity of the Spirit of God as is evidenced therein.

I am sincerely convinced that the preparation made in bringing about the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in our parish was labor not in vain; that the effort was well grounded; that the purpose of its being is in the very heart and core, the expression of God's will; that through his grace and blessing, we have reached the present point in our growth and development; that, in other words, what we have done so far, is due to God's wanting us to act in this direction; that it did not simply come about because, as rector, I wanted and needed more men to help in the work of this parish; nor as the result of the earnest desire by the men here to do a greater and better work for their God and his Church; but because first, last and always, it was the will of God that such be established and carried on in his name and with his perpetual care and guidance. If I did not feel this with all my heart, I would not look with such confidence upon this body of men, as I do. In other words, the trust in them, and in myself, as associated with them, does not stop with ourselves, as a man-made and man-directed organization, but the trust I have and, I pray, each of them has, is in God's goodness and mercy; that he will be with us 'til we meet again—and when we meet again—so that as we work together, we will never grow stale and dry-up because our roots are not deep enough to keep ourselves nourished and strong in the spirit of our God.

I feel confident about the future success of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in this parish and community, because of the quiet, but steady, way in which this group has functioned. We do not expect to convert the world; we are not consuming ourselves in a burning, glowing fire of fervor that too often wears itself out too quickly, because of an overdose of premature enthusiasm. It is much more promising, and far more preferable to start out on an up-hill journey, (and it is just that) by first conditioning ourself for the trip, and by learning what the purpose and destination is. These are the determining factors with which we are gradually, but progressively, acquainting ourselves. And this is the ground work, the solid structure upon which any organization must frame itself, if it is to carry on regularly and permanently.

THE Brotherhood of St. Andrew is one of the oldest men's fellowships in the Episcopal Church and the whole Christian Church. Its origin goes back to the very beginning of the Church itself. Jesus called unto himself a group of men, men of the world; men of the usual tasks; fishermen, tax collectors; men of the people; men of the earth and the great outdoors; good hearted, willing men, who were like you men reading this today. And when Jesus called them "O'er the tumult of life's restless sea"; they were called. They heard his voice, firm, but kind and appealing. A voice that rang with truth and conviction; a voice that spoke only words of "Follow me," but which penetrated to the quick and core of their being, and spoke to their hungry hearts. A voice they could not resist, because what he said was what they had always wanted, possibly subconsciously, to hear. Here was new hope and new life manifest unto them. Here was the release of themselves to something that meant more than anything they had previously dreamed of. Here was the beginning of real, significant, abundant living. And so they forsook all and followed him.

One of his first followers was Andrew, the brother of Simon, called Peter, "The Rock of Faith." Andrew first heard the call of Jesus and was so moved that he ran and found Simon his brother and brought him to Jesus. Isn't this a thrilling scene, in all its simplicity? A man so inspired and so joyful for what he had found and because he was found, that he was not content until he had shared this God given joy with some one else; with, at least, one other man. And think of the man he brought to Jesus, Simon who became Peter; the man who became a saint. And think what it meant to this man—Peter—who was brought to Jesus.

This was the beginning of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. The bringing of a man to Jesus was the purpose then, and remains the purpose today for this Brotherhood of believers; this fellowship of the Holy Spirit.

The two Rules of the Brotherhood work hand in hand. Prayer is talking to God and hearing him talk to you. And as this communion of spirit is established, then the natural reaction is to do what he tells you. Thus, a prayerful person will be a serviceful person. He will go forward because he is guided to go that way. And as our Brotherhood members draw their strength from that abundant source, they will never grow stale nor dry up for want of nourishment or a sense of direction and purpose.

I do not expect them to be transformed into full time evangelists or to become so holy that they will sprout wings, or become saints. But I do expect and believe they will become more akin to the spirit of their Lord Jesus, as they sincerely try to do his will. And I am sure that as they increase in his grace they will find more joy out of living than they ever imagined possible.

REVEREND

TELLING the readers of this intellectual magazine not to misuse the word "Reverend", is like scolding a congregation for not coming to church. Those who need it won't hear about it; and those who hear about it don't need it.

"Reverend" is an adjective, and should not be used as a proper noun in direct address. In the comic strips, characters do indeed address each other by the use of adjectives — Beautiful, Handsome, Good-Lookin', Stupid, and the like— but this is a hangover from early days when indifferent artists approached a dull or immature public through a crude medium, and it was better not to be too subtle.

Adding the clergyman's last name does not help the situation at all. It is the Honorable Harry S. Truman, or the Honorable Mr. Truman, not Honorable Truman. It is the beautiful Betty Grable, or the beautiful Miss Grable, not beautiful Grable.

Bishop Stevens of Los Angeles Dies After Operation

Had Planned to Represent Episcopal Church At Australia Church Celebration in Fall

Edited by Sara Dill

Los Angeles: — Bishop W. Bertrand Stevens of Los Angeles died on August 22 from complications following a throat operation. He was 62 and had been Bishop of the diocese since 1928. A graduate of Bates College and the Episcopal Theological Seminary, he served parishes in New York City before becoming the rector of St. Mark's, San Antonio, Texas, in 1917. He was a leader in the national affairs of the Church, being a member of a number of commissions of General Convention and served as a member of the National Council. He was prominently mentioned to succeed Bishop Tucker as Presiding Bishop at the last General Convention. Bishop Stevens had planned to visit Australia this fall as the representative of the Episcopal Church at the centennial celebration of the Church there.

Alliance in Germany

Berlin:—Pastor Martin Niemoeller, representing a wing of the Evangelical Church of Germany, and Kurt Schumacher, chairman of the Social Democrats, have formed a working alliance. Both men are violently anti-Soviet and anti-Communist. According to Delbert Clark, correspondent of the New York Times, "this remarkable alliance comes at a time when dissatisfaction with Pastor Niemoeller's role of anti-Nazi martyr is taking concrete form in Germany. His prestige has recently suffered considerably but there is no immediate evidence that he has lost much of his influence with his wing of the Evangelical Church. A short time ago, at the request of his own home-town chapter, the Association of Victims and Persecutees of Fascism ousted him from the organization. It was alleged that new evidence showed that during the Hitler regime he swore to his sympathy with Nazi aims, that he was anti-Semitic and that he had never vigorously opposed Nazi ideology."

The correspondent writes further that after world war one Niemoeller "took a leave of absence from the pulpit to organize one of the 'free corps' gangs that were fighting democratic forces in the Ruhr and that his opposition to the Nazi regime consisted entirely of trying to save part of the autonomy of the Evangelical Church. During the period of his internment in the Dachau concentration camp, according to fellow prisoners, he was in what was called 'honorable confinement.' This meant that he suffered nothing but confinement and was permitted to smoke, read and have other prisoners as servants. . . . Dr. Schumacher and Pastor Niemoeller will make good working partners, according to political observers here, since both are primarily Pan-Germans."

(This bit of information is called to the attention of the officers of the World Council of Churches and others who sponsored meetings for Martin Niemoeller in many American cities last winter).

the Security Council and to have the dispute between Holland and Indonesia settled outside the UN. This is utterly unacceptable to the Indonesian government and is completely satisfactory to the Dutch colonial regime and to the colonial powers in general. It is in line with the dangerously unilateral and UN-bipassing Truman Doctrine which has already so greatly endangered inclusive cooperation and peace. Circumventing the UN in the Indonesian case is utterly devoid of moral justification."

Lead for Peace

Grand Rapids, Mich.:—The Church must lead in the fight for peace, not merely follow secular leadership, Bishop Spencer of West Missouri told a large congregation at a service commemorating the fourth anniversary of the dedication of St. Mark's as the cathedral of the diocese of Western Michigan.

Loan Is Urged

Chautauqua, N. Y.:—A loan of ten billion dollars over a ten year period to Russia was advocated here by the Rev. Mark A. Dawber, head of the Home Missions Council. Declaring that "we are in the hands of propagandists provoking war with Russia," the speaker stated that "the money would be better used in this Christian way then in waging an un-Christian war."

Japanese Bishop Dies

Tokyo:—Bishop Todomu Sugai of South Tokyo and primate of the Holy Catholic Church in Japan, died on August 14th. He came into prominence during the war when he was imprisoned with five other clergymen for refusing to recognize the government-sponsored United Church of Christ in Japan.

Labor Sunday Message

New York:—Asserting that the Church has not adequately faced the problems of laymen, employers and labor leaders, the Federal Council of Churches, in its annual Labor Sunday message, called upon all denominations to "promote a true recognition of the inherent worth of each person, the right of each one to a place in society, however humble, in which he can contribute to the community while he supports himself and his family."

The message, issued through the Council's Department of the Church and Economic Life, declared that "we Christians cannot face with silence or inaction the prospect of recurrent business depressions in which unemployment rots the souls of men.

"We propose to the utmost of our ability to create a background of Christian principle in which the study, discussions, and plans for action to meet the situation will proceed."

The statement added that the Church must reject "both the idea that most employers are greedy conspirators who combine in soulless corporate entities and the idea that organizations of employees are usually a rabble led by demagogues.

"The Church recognizes that each individual is a part of many groups almost from the cradle to the grave. He is part of a family, a school, a lunch club, the round-house crowd. But the Church will always appeal to the conscience of the single person and call upon him to assert in his group what that conscience says, even in the face of hostility of that group."

Teamwork is lacking in industrial relations, the Federal Council asserted, largely because civilization has not learned how to adapt itself to constant change.

"The missing element in industry is the goal for the team work and is a more deeply satisfying companion when printed on genuine Oxford India Paper. This finest of all papers permits a thin, thin Bible . . . lighter, pleasanter in the hand. Oxford India Paper has a most agreeable tone, and it is extremely opaque: the words on one side never show through to the other. Oxford Bibles are delightfully "readable"; and the text is so accurate that the Press offers a reward of five dollars for the first discovery of a misprint. Bindings are wonderfully soft, yet so strong and durable that Oxford Bibles invariably become cherished family heirlooms. Many styles, variously priced.

for the adaptation. The goal is to serve God's purpose in the light of the Christian gospel.

"With a sound knowledge of actual relations between employers and employees, the Church can present the community with the demand that men shall go beyond expediency, or even bare justice, and shall work for a partnership based on Christian good will."

Moscow Reconciliation

New York (RNS):—Active negotiations have begun between Metropolitan Gregory of Leningrad and Novgorod and the Russian Orthodox Church in America for reconciliation of the American Church with the Moscow Patriarchate, it was learned here. Metropolitan Gregory arrived recently from Moscow as the personal representative of Patriarch Alexei, with full powers to establish a formal agreement with Russian Church leaders in this country.

Accompanied by Dr. Leon Parisky, secretary to Patriarch Alexei, Metropolitan Gregory held a conference with Bishop John, of the Brooklyn, N. Y., diocese of the American Church, and Bishop Anthony, newly consecrated Bishop of Montreal and Eastern Canada who was delegated by Metropolitan Theophilus, of San Francisco, head of the Russian Church in America, to act as his official representative.

At this meeting, it was disclosed, a seven-point declaration, setting forth the bases on which the American Church will agree to accept the spiritual jurisdiction of the Moscow Patriarchate, was presented to Metropolitan Gregory. The terms of the declaration were not revealed, but it is believed that the major demand was for full autonomy for the American Church.

The meeting was sponsored by the Metropolitan Council of New York, which was empowered to supervise the negotiations by the All-American Sobor of the Russian Orthodox Church in America which met at Cleveland, Ohio, last November.

It was announced that Metropolitan Gregory would study the seven-point statement and present his reply shortly. The next step will be for Metropolitan Theophilus and the Council of Bishops to issue their decision on the declaration as modified or amended by Metropolitan Gregory. Should both sides reach an agreement on the terms outlined, final reconciliation between the American Church and the Mother Church in Russia will then be formally announced.

Observers stressed that Metropolitan Gregory has been given full power by Patriarch Alexei to "liquidate any misunderstanding" between the two Church groups and that Patriarch Alexei has already gone on record as stating that "I have no objections against autonomy for our Orthodox Church in America." Both sides, they added, have agreed that the question of autonomy is the only vital issue at stake in the present negotiations.

Young Theologians

Medford, Mass. (RNS):—What is believed to be one of the youngest groups of students ever to attend a school of theology in the United States has just completed a course in religious instruction at Tufts College School of Religion here.

More than 25 ten to twelve-year-old boys and girls selected from Protestant inter-denominational classes in religion in Somerville and Medford, attended a religious workshop held this summer at Tufts, and demonstrated for the benefit of visiting teachers the child's capacity to receive and understand religious instruction.

A specific age group was chosen to enable observers to note the response of children at this age level to religious education. All of the students took part with enthusiasm in the activities of the course. A class entitled "Adventures in Discovering God," with pupil participation, proved one of the most popular offerings.

Alternating with religious instruction was creative work in which the youngsters designed altar cloths for Crane Chapel, on the campus, made relief maps of the Holy Land and wrote and produced religious plays.

Observing the experiment, held under the direction of Dean John M. Ratcliff of Tufts School of Religion, were visiting clergymen and teachers of religion from many parts of the country.

Condemns John Dewey

Boston:—Judge John E. Swift of the Massachusetts Superior Court told the convention of the Knights of Columbus, meeting here, that Prof. John Dewey, retired professor at Columbia, was responsible for an "anti-God campaign" that was started forty years ago in the American public schools. At the same convention Roman Catholic Bishop Brady of Manchester, N. H. called for a crusade against the "atheistic communi-

THE CHURCH TIMES

The Challenge of New Testament Ethics

By L. H. Marshall
Tutor in New Testament Interpretation, Rawdon College, Leeds

"Gentlemen, in this little book is all the wisdom of the world." This is a tribute once paid to the New Testament by the noted eighteenth-century theologian, Ewald. In that faith THE CHALLENGE OF NEW TESTAMENT ETHICS has been written, and it is that faith which it seeks to justify.

Under the following chapter headings, Mr. Marshall competently discusses the ethical teachings of the New Testament:

The Nature of the Ethics of Jesus
Jesus' View of Evil
Jesus' View of Good
The Chief Moral Imperatives of Jesus
Jesus and Society
The Validity of the Ethics of Jesus
Paul as an Ethical Teacher
The Ethical Approach to Pauline Thought
Paul's Ethical Terminology
The Ethics of Social Relations
The Ethical Approach to Christology

Mr. Marshall's book is well organized, has extensive and impressively thorough scholarship, with a wide range of learning held in easy grasp.

The treatment of the subject-matter is not purely academic, but seeks to relate the ethical message of the new Testament to the dominant problems and needs of the present day. $4.50.

ism that threatens the world." He stated that "only when the majority of men accept an uncompromising Christianity can we hope for that millenium of peace, freedom and security that we dream of and hope for."

Protection Rejected

Jerusalem (RNS):—The Anglican Bishop here, Weston H. Stewart, has declined an offer by Bishop authorities to erect barbed wire fences and carry out other security measures to protect Anglican churches from possible attacks by extremists. The offer was made following reports of anti-Jewish riots in England but the Bishop declared he is convinced that "no danger threatens our sanctuaries here."

Conference at Kenyon

T. Wade-Gery of Oxford.

Catholics Charge Bias

Chicago:—The Catholic Central Verein of America, meeting here for five days, adopted a statement in which members declared that "prejudice and hatred against the Catholic Church still persists." The statement cited the following as "proof" of the charge: opposition on the part of Protestants to having a representative of the President at the Vatican; insistence by Protestants on the separation of Church and state; released time for religious instruction in schools; opposition to the furnishing of buses from public funds for children attending parochial schools; meddling in the affairs of Spain; indifference to the fate of Archbishop Stepinac of Yugoslavia.

THE REV. JOSEPH D. C. WILSON
Rector at Foley, Alabama

I cannot agree with Bishop Moody's statement quoted in your issue of August 7th that his action in the Hanson-Winson divorce and remarriage "is in my diocese and nobody else's business." His authority as a Bishop comes from the Church, his actions represent the Church, and they affect the life of the Church. They are properly and rightly subject to the criticism and judgment of any member of the Church. The fact that the General Convention has a committee to collect and study decisions in such cases indicates that they are a matter for consideration by the whole Church. These two recent cases have brought scandal upon the Church throughout the country, and Bishop Moody's position expressed above seems to me to make each Bishop an infallible oracle; which position I believe is contrary to the mind of our Church.

DR. S. B. ALISON
Senior Warden, St. Paul's, Carlowville, Ala.

In the August 7th issue of THE WITNESS, Bishop Ludlow's article, "The Salaries of the Clergy," interested me deeply. Recently, my own thoughts have been centered on the Clergy Pension system because of a case near at hand. An elderly minister, retired on a small pension, has been serving a couple of rural churches that would otherwise be closed for lack of a minister. But now this man is told by the Pension Board that he must discontinue these services, or else lose his pension. With the so great need of workers in the field, this seems a pity. Especially since the minister in question has a rich store of Christian experience to pass on to others.

It seems to me that our Clergy Pension should be considered as a paid-up insurance policy, which automatically becomes the property of God's minister when he reaches the retirement age.

Then after retirement, if a chance comes where he can fill some vacant pulpit, I'd say let him serve . . . let him pass on to others the rich thoughts, the love, the Godliness he has been garnering in a long lifetime. Let him serve God and man without a threat of losing his pension.

THE REV. SAMUEL S. HARDY
Rector of St. Paul's, Medina, Ohio

Your story of the founding of Elizabeth City Parish, Hampton, Va., in THE WITNESS (Aug. 7) made interesting reading. But it is too bad that present day Church historians so often miss major motives and magnify much less important details. In this story you quote the historian as attributing the founding of Elizabeth City Parish to a desire on the part of the English to rob the Kecoughtan Indians of, "their rich cornfields and abundant supply of seafood." True, that motive may have entered, but it was not the major motive for founding Elizabeth City Parish on the site of the Indian village of Kecoughtan. The establishment of a white settlement at Kecoughtan in July, 1610, was for the primary purpose of securing the entrance to the James River against Spanish and other pirates. And that was done in accordance with the instructions of the Rev. Richard Hakluyt, one of the founders of the Virginia Company and the foremost authority of his day on the subject of British colonization in North America. He forewarned the first settlers in Virginia not to settle too near the coast lest they should be attacked by the Spaniards, and that is why they did not stay at Cape Henry but moved farther from danger of the Spaniards and settled first at James Town. Security against the Spaniards, not Indian corn and sea food, dictated the original settlement of Elizabeth City Parish.

It was heartening to read in THE WITNESS for July 24 that there is at least one conference of our Church at which the problems of sex and marriage are presented frankly by experts. I hope that those responsible for other Church conference for youth will read that excellent report by Mrs. George Ossman about the Southern Virginia conference.

Study Reveals That Clergymen Receive Low Incomes

Church Pension Fund Supplies Vestrymen With Figures to Aid in Setting Salaries

New York:—The 5,000 active clergy had an average stipend of $3,450 a year in 1946, according to a study just announced by the Church Pension Fund. The salary figure of $3,450 a year included an amount as rectory allowance. The actual cash stipend averaged slightly over $3,000. One-half of the clergy have stipends, including rectory allowances, of less than $3,000 and about three-quarters of the clergy draw less than $4,000.

The report states that one purpose of the study has been to call to the attention of wardens, vestrymen and other lay churchmen the fact that low salaries lead to inadequate pensions, whereas reasonable salaries result in reasonable pensions. "Clergy pensions are related to salary," states the report, "and the trustees of the Fund as they grant pensions from meeting to meeting are continually struck with the low level of so many clergy salaries. Since the Fund has the detailed record of salaries, it is felt that this analysis of them will supply a needed yardstick to vestries and others who have the responsibility of arranging for clergy compensation."

Most clergymen are under-compensated, according to the report, because the clergyman's concern is a spiritual one. His urge is to serve the Church, and to him the material return is secondary, even incidental.

Speaking comparatively of the earnings of other groups, the report states that railroad engine-drivers draw $5,400 a year on the average, conductors $4,900. New York City bus drivers get $3,600 a year, policy patrolmen $3,900. Skilled factory workers are in a $3,000-$3,500 range. Good bookkeepers are paid $2,600-$3,100. In contrast to those who engage in these occupations, the report brings out, clergymen have invested a considerable sum in preparation of their life work. They are college trained and they have had three years at theological seminary. They are expected to be leaders in their communities, and characteristically are such. And, far more important, they are the spearhead of true progress in civilization.

According to the data included, the average salary of the active clergy in 1919 was only $1,900. Over the next dozen years it rose steadily to a figure of $3,100 in 1930. During the depression of the '30's the figure dropped off to $2,650. In recent years it has been rising to the present level of $3,450 a year. Among the interesting points brought out is that married clergy average $800 a year higher in stipend than unmarried.

Copies of the study, appearing in the bulletin of the Church Pension Fund, "Protection Points," which is mailed periodically to the active clergy and parish treasurers, are available upon request to the Fund, 20 Exchange Place, New York 5, N. Y.

MANY TRIBUTES TO RUSSELL

Wilkes-Barre, Pa.:—Rarely does an Episcopal rector receive the tributes that have been heaped upon the Rev. William K. Russell, since he announced his resignation as rector of St. Stephen's Church, to take up work with the Friends Service Committee. Two of the groups honoring Bill Russell are particularly noteworthy. One was a committee composed of Negroes and whites who sponsored a reception at which he was presented with a watch. The affair was held to express appreciation for what the retiring rector has done for minority groups, particularly in working for the elimination of segregation and discrimination.

Even more significant was a testimonial dinner held September 3 which was staged jointly by CIO, A. F. of L. and Railroad Brotherhood unions. It was the first occasion since the Labor for Victory Committee days of the war that the various factions of organized labor have gotten together for a common project. The joint committee issued a statement that they had united in sponsoring the dinner "to pay homage to a man who, during his pastorate in our midst, worked zealously to bring better understanding among those in all walks of life. His liberal viewpoints were refreshing to the majority and the service he rendered to the labor movement in the war years was exceptional."

ANGLICAN YOUTH MEETS

Canterbury, England:—Youth representatives from the various Churches of the Anglican communion held a conference here following the Oslo youth conference. Princess Elizabeth, as president of the Church of England Youth Council, presiding at one of the sessions, said that "our common task is to be more fully the people God has meant us to be, to be in very truth the channels of God's love in a sad and sorrowing world, and the instruments of peace in a frightened and fearful world."

The Archbishop of Canterbury took an active part in the conference which was attended by delegates from England, the United States, West Indies, Australia, Canada, India, Burma, Ceylon, New Zealand, Scotland and Wales.

ANOTHER BUS CASE

Philadelphia (RNS):—It is now up to the United States Supreme Court to say whether a public school board is legally within its rights in refusing to carry students of a parochial school in public conveyances provided by taxpayers' funds.

Counsel for Paul Connell, living in nearby Kennett Township, has deposited with the nation's highest tribunal in Washington, D. C., an appeal from the Pennsylvania State Supreme Court upholding lower court decisions barring his daughter, Catherine, 10, from riding a public school bus to her classes at St. Patrick's parochial school, Kennett Square.

Connell's appeal is expected to eliminate a question unanswered by the U. S. Supreme Court in its 5-4 decision on the New Jersey school bus law last February.

The Supreme Court at that time threw out a New Jersey taxpayer's objection to payments by Ewing Township for transporting children to parochial schools. Such payments were authorized by the 1941 Act of the New Jersey Legislature. The Supreme Court found the payments legal, but it was not asked to rule whether they would be mandatory outside New Jersey.

CHARGES CATHOLICS AS INTOLERANT

Birmingham, England (RNS):—Religious liberty prevails in Portugal and authorities place no hindrances to Protestantism, although "in some towns and villages meeting places are sometimes stoned and pastors maltreated," Dr. Leopold de Figureiredo, of the Portuguese Sunday School Committee, told the World Council of the World's Sunday School Association meeting here.

Dr. de Figureiredo asserted that one of the "many great difficulties" Protestantism has to face in Portugal is "the unfavorable attitude of the dominant Roman Catholic Church, which designates us as Communists in an effort to discredit us."

He charged the Roman Church with being "intolerant and absolutist" and complained that "it is dishonest in its activities against us."

Describing the social work of Protestant churches in Portugal, Dr. de Figureiredo said they have always been to the fore in the fight against illiteracy. He estimated there is still sixty per cent of illiteracy among the Portuguese population.

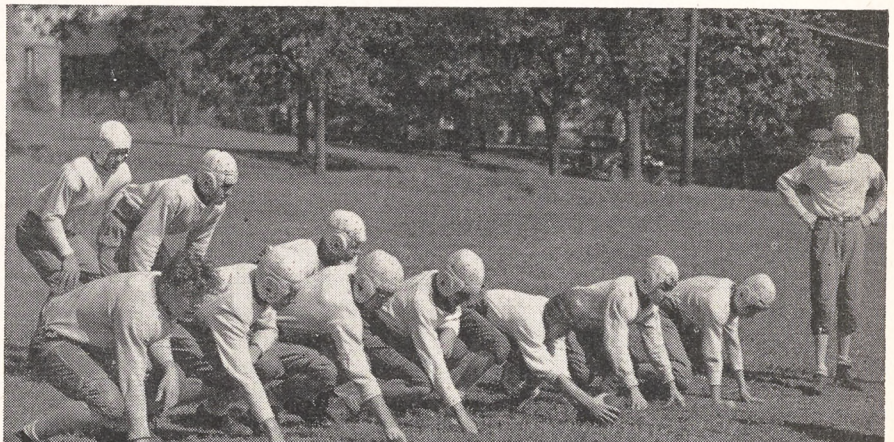
BAPTISTS HIT LETTERS

Rome (RNS):—Charges that the recent exchange of letters between President Truman and Pope Pius XII "violates our cherished American doctrine of separating Church and State" were made here by spokesmen for a group of American Baptists touring Europe.

A statement issued by Dr. Duke McCall, executive secretary of the executive committee of the Southern Baptist Convention, and Dr. Frank K. Means, educational secretary of the Convention's foreign missions board, asserted that the exchange of letters implies that the United States government is "an ally of clerical totalitarianism."

Declaring that the group represents both the Northern and Southern Baptist Conventions, the spokesmen said, "we Baptists resent, and we believe the American people will resent, this implication."

"We believe," they added, "that it is a disservice to the world's hope for peace to identify American aims with those of Roman clericalism. We oppose totalitaranism in every form from everywhere in the world by which human rights and liberties are suppressed."



The Baptist leaders described as a "tragedy" the return of Myron C. Taylor as Presidential representative at the Vatican, asserting that "we believe this action is as closely connected with the Presidential elections next year as it is connected with events in Europe."

ANTI-RUSSIAN WRITERS DO PAMPHLETS

New York:—Eugene Lyons, Isaac Don Levine, William Chamberlin and Suzanne LaFollette are among the half dozen or so most bitter anti-Soviet propagandists in the United States. The Catholic Information Service has just announced publication of a series of pamphlets on the subject of Communism, with several of them by these writers. Three million copies, all with the imprimatur of Cardinal Spellman, will be distributed through Roman Catholic churches, schools and colleges.

THE CONSECRATION IN SPRINGFIELD

Springfield, Ill.: — Bishop-elect Richard T. Loring is to be consecrated Bishop of Springfield on October 18th at St. Paul's Cathedral. The consecrator will be the Presiding Bishop with Bishop Conkling of Chicago and Bishop White, retired Bishop of Springfield, the co-consecrators. He will be presented by his brother, Bishop Loring of Maine and Bishop Spence Burton of Nassau. Bishop Noble Powell of Maryland will preach.

These lads of St. Andrew's School, West Barrington, Rhode Island, start early in order to have a winning football team this fall

NEW CANADIAN PRIMATE

Saskatoon, Canada (RNS):—Bishop George F. Kingston of Nova Scotia has been elected Primate of the Church of England in Canada at the electoral college of the General Synod, meeting here. The college consists of the House of Bishops and members of the Executive Council. Bishop Kingston, fifty-eight, succeeds Archbishop Derwyn T. Owen of Toronto, who died last April after serving for twelve years as Primate.

KINSOLVING GOES TO ST. JAMES

New York:—The Rev. Arthur Lee Kinsolving, rector of Trinity Church, Princeton, N. J., has accepted the rectorship of St. James Church, New York where he will succeed the Rev. Horace W. B. Donegan, who is to be consecrated Suffragan Bishop of New York next month. The announcement was made in both churches on September 14th.

Synod of the Church in China Sets Up Central Office

The Ordination of Women to the Priesthood To Be Presented by the Chinese at Lambeth

New York:—From Bishop William Payne Roberts, who acted as American secretary, a report of the general synod meeting of the Chinese Church has reached National Council. Bishop Roberts reported sixty-four members of the House of Delegates present and twenty bishops, of whom one was retired and without vote. Bishop Mao arrived during synod sessions. Visitors included Canon Warren and Canon Wittenbach of the Church Missionary Society; Bishop Cranswick of Tasmania; and the Rev. John DeF. Pettus of Santa Barbara, Calif. All of the visitors addressed the synod.

Sessions lasted a week, and Bishop Roberts commented upon the weather as "very hot and we attended all services and sessions in our shirt sleeves and without neckties."

The Rt. Rev. P. Lindel T'sen of Honan was elected chairman of the House of Bishops, to succeed Bishop Scott of North China. The House of Delegates elected Dr. Francis Wei as chairman.

It was voted to have a central office for the whole Chung Hua Sheng Kung Hui at Nanking. This is to be an executive office for the standing committee and is not a legislative council. The secretary of the office will be appointed by the standing committee. The office will continue at Nanking and probably in the same buildings the provisional office used last year. It will have to be enlarged in size by the addition of one or two secretaries, as much general Church business has been entrusted to the office.

Synod had a long argument about the permanent site of the Central Theological School. No decision was reached. The matter now stands that Central Theological School should continue in affiliation with St. John's University temporarily and the directors should study the matter carefully and propose to the standing committee the permanent site of the institution.

The diocese of Hong Kong is abnormally large and synod approved the separation of its western area into two new divisions, one a missionary district, and one a diocese. The Yun-Kwei area, formerly a missionary district of the diocese of Hong Kong, was officially separated into a new diocese to be known as the Yun-Kwei diocese, and a district around Nanning was separated into the Nanning missionary district of the Chung Hua Sheng Kung Hui, the financial support of which will be borne by the Bible Churchmen's Missionary Society of the English Church. It is hoped, Bishop Roberts said, that support for the Yun-Kwei diocese will come from contributions from the English, Canadian and American Churches through the central office. An appeal to the National Council in America is to be made.

Bishop Hall will remain Bishop of Hong Kong diocese, and it is believed that the synod of the new Yun-Kwei diocese will elect Bishop Quentin Huang to be its bishop. Bishop Hall will have oversight of the Nanning district for the present.

The House of Bishops appointed a new board of control for the Bawn Memorial Training School.

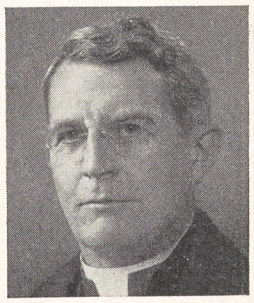
A new bishop for the Missionary District of Shensi was elected. The Rev. Newton Y. C. Liu, of the diocese of Hankow, now working in Changsha, was elected, but his acceptance had not been received up to the time Bishop Roberts wrote.

The Hong Kong diocese proposed a canon on the ordination of deaconesses to the priesthood. Synod voted to send this canon to Lambeth for advice of the Lambeth Conference.

It was voted to establish a pension fund for all clergy of all dioceses, and a committee is to inaugurate the plan, which can hardly be in effect before the next Synod in 1950.

Much time was spent by the House of Bishops considering the matter of Bishops' salaries. Decision was that they should be 100% more than the salary of the highest paid priest in the diocese for a bishop, and 75% for an assistant bishop, together with a 25% increase for full diocesan and 15% increase for assistants entertainment and discretionary use.

The Chung Hua Sheng Kung Hui accepted the invitation to join the World Council of Churches.



Committees reported, including one that is to prepare a draft of the Prayer Book for next synod meeting; one on religious education which urged the dioceses to keep their schools Christian and to stress the importance of Christian education in the schools. A committee of seven was appointed to inaugurate a forward movement among all the dioceses.

Ten of the Chinese bishops announced their intention to attend the Lambeth Conference next year. None of the American bishops in China expect to attend.

A letter was prepared to be sent to those provinces of the Anglican Communion which have aided the Chinese Church in the past. The letter is one of thanks and appreciation with a request for continued help, especially in the central work of the whole Chinese Church.

CHURCHMEN IN THE NEWS: Bishop Bennett of Rhode Island leads a lay conference in Connecticut; the Rev. G. Gardner Monks is now canon at Washington Cathedral; Bishop Powell of Maryland is to preach at consecration of the Rev. Richard T. Loring as Bishop of Springfield

FAITH AND ORDER MOVEMENT

Geneva (RNS):—Plans for integrating the work of the Faith and Order Movement with the World Council of Churches were discussed at a meeting held here, attended by fifty Protestant leaders from ten countries. The meeting agreed that the Council's general assembly, meeting next summer at Amsterdam, should create a department to continue the work of the movement which has two main tasks: to study and help overcome the obstacles to unity and to preach "the essential oneness of Christ and the Churches' obligations to manifest their unity."

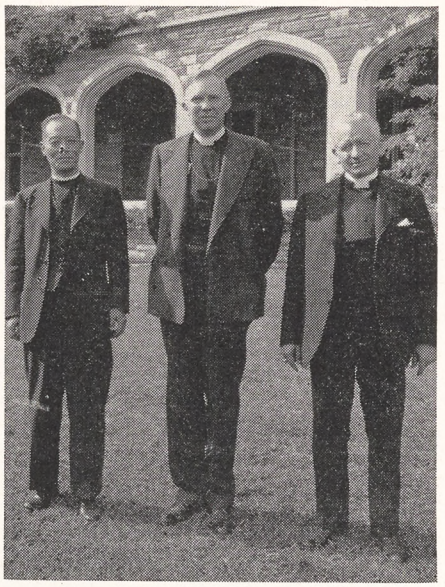
A notable feature of the conference was the celebration of an open communion service by leaders of the Anglican Churches.

KIMBER DEN DECLINES

Shanghai:—At the recent synod of the Church in China the Rev. Kimber Den declined nomination to be Bishop of Sian, missionary district in northwest China. He gave as his reason that he could not leave the relief work that he is carrying on among orphans and other refugees. Incidentally, THE WITNESS for July 24, in a plea for help for this work, stated that a letter from Kimber Den carried $1400 worth of Chinese stamps. An indication of the way inflation is spiralling in China is revealed by the fact that another letter, mailed less than a month later, carried $2271 worth of Chinese stamps.

Any caring to aid Mr. Den in his work may send checks payable to "Treasurer, CLID" and mail to Church League for Industrial Democracy, 155 Washington Street, New York 6, N. Y.



MERCHANT AIDS CHURCHES

Henderson, N. C. (RNS): — As executor of the will of the late Sigmund F. Teiser, retired Jewish merchant of Henderson, the Citizens Bank and Trust Company has mailed $100 to every church, white or Negro, regardless of denomination, in the county. One hundred twelve churches, of which 59 were white and 53 Negro, qualified for the bequests, one of them standing astride the North Carolina-Virginia line, with the pulpit in Virginia and the pews in North Carolina.

In making the bequests, Teiser stated in his will that the people of the county had helped him to accumulate his money and he wished to remember their interests, regardless of religious faith.

WOMEN WORKERS MEET

Washington:—Heads of various institutions which train women for the work of the Church met here at the College of Preachers, September 8-10. The seminaries were represented as well as such special training centers as Windham House, St. Margaret's and St. Faith's. Leaders included Bishop Dun of Washington, Bishop Haines of Iowa, Bishop Bayne of Olympia, Helen Turnbull of Windham House, Dean Alden D. Kelley of Seabury-Western, Katherine Grammer of St. Margaret's House, Mrs. Arthur Sherman, head of the Auxiliary and Prof. Simpson of General Seminary.

Three bishops meet at a conference in Delaware: Bishop Robin Chen of Anking; Bishop Carruthers of South Carolina; Bishop McKinstry of Delaware

LUTHERANS REFUSE TO PRAY

Rib Lake, Wis.:—A group of 25 members of the American Legion here have announced their intention of resigning unless a prayer used to open the post's meetings is eliminated. The statement was made by the Rev. R. A. Gurgel, pastor of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, who stated that the practice conflicts "with the synod confessional principle of not joining in prayer with members of other faiths."

Jack Spore of Milwaukee, head of the Legion in Wisconsin, said the prayer was written by the combined efforts of leading clergymen of many faiths and had been used by the Legion for 25 years. "The prayer will stay, of course," he announced.

LEADERS CRITICIZE THE PRESIDENT

New York (RNS):—Official Protestant circles here expressed the view that the exchange of messages on world peace between President Truman and Pope Pius constitutes an extension of the Myron Taylor mission to the Vatican. The exchange, during which Mr. Truman and the Pope pledged to work together for lasting peace, was effected through Mr. Taylor, the President's personal representative to the Vatican.

Protestant officials here recalled that Mr. Truman had promised to terminate the Taylor mission following the signing of the peace treaties. They commented that Taylor's role in the correspondence exchange indicates a strengthening rather than a weakening of the position of the presidential representative to the Holy See. Protestant leaders said they had no previous knowledge of the correspondence exchange and that the President had not taken any Protestant officials into his confidence. One leading Protestant executive expressed regret that Mr. Truman had ignored Protestants and Jews, addressing his appeal to the head of one faith only. This executive said the President gives the impression in his correspondence that he regards the Pope as the head of world Christianity.

OPPOSE BUS AID

Boston (RNS): — The American Federation of Teachers (A. F. of L.) voted at their convention here that federal appropriations to aid education should be limited to public schools. The Federation held that education was primarily a state responsibility and its operation and management must be explicitly reserved to the states. The action was condemned by the Rev. W. E. McManus, assistant director of the department of education of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, an observer at the convention, who declared that it was the work of a local in New York City. He stated that this local was apparently vitally interested in all minority groups except children who attend parochial schools. The president of the local, Mrs. Rebecca Simonson, replied that the clergyman's charge was unwarranted in the light of the fact that all members of the local, Catholics, Protestants and Jews, voted solidly for services except transportation.

VETERANS STUDY THEOLOGY

Washington:—About 9,000 veterans who have enrolled in educational institutions under the G. I. Bill of Rights are studying theology, according to an announcement by the Veterans Administration.

EDITORIALS

Social Rebirth

SHE will protest our use of the word, but it is nevertheless true that one of the Saints of our day is Beloved Vida Dutton Scudder, professor-emeritus of Wellesley College. For decades she has battled for social justice and for that peace which will come to our world only with its establishment. Her concern for justice springs, as it does with all too few, from profound religious insights and her deep devotion to Christ and His Church.

This summer one of our editors visited at her home in Wellesley and found her bubbling over with a plan for a series of articles. "Never did that stubborn old slogan 'You can't alter human nature' seem more justified than today. We watch our poor little planet, exhausted by war, torn by dissensions. The dark forces of fear and greed are currently invoked as offering the sole hope for international and industrial peace. Only power politics offer national security; only the profit motive ensures economic abundance. Must we accept that slogan, with its implied existential despair? History seems at first to say yes. No one can look at the contemporary scene without sadness and terror. Yet the further we penetrate below the surface of our disintegrating civilization, the more we note that refutes the old slogan. I shall write on Social Rebirth—about eight articles I think—with the central theme the relation of incentives under nature and under grace; about the conflicts and the harmonies; the functions of the Church, with lots of illustrations. Do you think WITNESS readers would be interested? If you think so I will block them out at once and write them this summer."

These articles—eight in all—are now in hand. We can assure you that they are penetrating and stimulating. It is our plan to start the series with the issue of October ninth. This will allow time for many individuals to subscribe to THE WITNESS for the limited period. It will also allow time for rectors and lay readers to place orders for Bundles so that the series may be used with discussion groups.

There is an order blank on page thirteen which we hope you will use at once.

We would add this: invariably when we feature a series of articles we receive requests for months afterwards for back copies. There is not a day, for instance, that we do not receive requests for the series on Christianity Takes a Stand that we ran last Spring. However it is impossible for us to print a supply of extra copies. So please get your order for this series by Miss Scudder in to us at once. It is something that you will not want to miss.

"Quotes"

THERE is altogether too much talk of the Russians as enemies and of initiating plans against the Russians—too much talk of war. It is not the Russians that are the enemy. It is materialism and selfishness and greed. We must realize selfishly that a third world war would destroy everything we hold dear. I wouldn't ask for appeasement because appeasement leads to aggression. The world needs patience, understanding and great wisdom. It needs looking at our times from the point of view of eternity. I long for people to realize the supreme importance of the Churches—all Churches. Because with all their limitations they are the best expression of the spiritual life.

—Henry Knox Sherrill
Presiding Bishop

Let's Finish It

IT DOESN'T speak very well for the Episcopal Church to have the National Council announce that we are considerable short of the million dollars sought for the Presiding Bishop's Fund. This sum, authorized a year ago by General Convention, is actually a piddling sum with which to relieve the suffering of peoples throughout the world. But apparently most of our people do not propose to do without a single bite in order that others may not starve.

The National Council is to meet next week when the promotion department hopes to be able to announce that the entire million has been raised. A genuine effort on the part of the whole Church would undoubtedly bring in considerably more. Certainly if the diocese of Pennsylvania can raise $100,000, as it has done, there is no excuse for other dioceses falling far behind in raising the quotas assigned to them. Yet there are but twenty-three dioceses that have contributed 100% or more of their quotas.

We are challenged to share our abundance or resign ourselves to the role of thoughtless gluttons.

No Wedding Directors

WE GIVE Bishop Dagwell of Oregon a pat on the back for an editorial on church weddings that appeared in the last number of his diocesan paper. It hit at the new fangled idea of hiring a wedding director to take charge of ceremonies. "We want no lock-step processions or operatic productions in the church," wrote the Bishop. "The note of simplicity and sincerity is desired. Suggestions from the bride or bridegroom or their families may be offered to the minister before they gather, but during the time of the ceremony (and it is called by the Prayer Book the Solemnization of Holy Matrimony) procedure is under the direction of the officiating clergyman." Referring to the "new profession" of wedding director, the editorial states that "this functionary apparently contracts to put on a wedding from costuming to reception. They operate either in their own parlors or will take over in a church or parish house. We have no desire to discourage this business but we do give notice officially that church weddings are religious ceremonies and not social functions."

We hope that Bishops throughout the Church will issue similar edicts.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

I HAVE been jotting down inquiries that have come to THE WITNESS which are passed on so that you may know that an editor's job, even on a comparatively small Church paper, is—what shall I say — diversified.

Some of these questions we have been able to answer by using an encyclopaedia, last year's almanac, a copy of Who's Who and the telephone. But in most cases we had to write as politely as possible that since we have to edit a paper each week; solicit ads; get out renewal notices; try to persuade new people to subscribe; keep stencils and filing cards in reasonable order, etc. etc. that we must beg off.

"I am a junior at . . . College and am writing a thesis on the Church and Labor. I will appreciate it if you will tell me of positions the Episcopal Church has taken in recent years and also of action taken by various rectors. I am particularly anxious to get this latter information since I believe it will make my thesis more interesting. I have been a little slow in getting to work on the thesis, what with the prom and everything, and since I have to turn it in next week I will be grateful if you will send me this information by return mail. I did ask my rector at home for this information but he wrote me that he didn't know but he said you would. Maybe you will also send me a copy of THE WITNESS. I've never heard of it before Father ..... mentioned it." (We receive about one a week like that.)

"Can you give me the name of the church John Jay attended in New York?" A phone call handled this: it was Trinity.

"When was Bravid Harris consecrated Bishop of Liberia and where?" That of course was easy: Church of Christ and St. Luke, Norfolk, Va., April 17, 1945.

"Please give me the names of the ten oldest parishes in the United States." Worked on this for awhile and quit.

"It is necessary for me to find a larger parish. My present salary is but $2,500 and rectory and it is inadequate now that I have two children approaching college age. I will be glad to have you send me a list of vacant parishes and also the names of the wardens if possible. Of course I am interested only in parishes that would pay me more than I am now receiving. I take the Living Church so am not a subscriber to THE WITNESS but Fr. ....., rector at ....., said he thought you could help me."

"Since I have to address the women's guild on missions will you please send me a few missionary stories that you think might be of interest to them."

"It was stated at our clericus that the Rev. ..... is the oldest clergyman in point of service in the Church. Can you tell me whether or not this is correct?"

"My little boy is saving stamps. I am sure you must receive a good many from foreign countries. If you could send me a few, without removing the stamps from the envelopes, I am sure he would be very pleased." We were able to send a half dozen, including three air mail stamped envelopes received from Kimber Den in China.

"There is enclosed a copy of the sermon I preached several weeks ago which received very favorable comment. I will be glad to allow you to print it in THE WITNESS providing you then make a pamphlet of it and send me 250 copies to distribute to the people of my parish and a few friends. I am enclosing my picture in case you care to use that also."

Maybe that's enough to give the idea, though there is a lot more—including "poetry."

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

Three Forward Steps

THERE are three specific objectives we can all plan for the improvement of our parish Eucharist. They will go a long way towards re-establishing in the minds of the people the primary meaning of the Holy Communion as a service of corporate action in offering. None of these objectives requires us to wait until our Prayer Book rite is revised. We can apply them now under our present rubrics.

1. The restoration of the liturgical altar. One could write a very illuminating account of the history of Christian worship in all its varied forms and meanings from the vantage point of the altar, its size and shape, position and ornamentation. Again and again the Church has found it necessary to return to the original type—a simple mensa or table for the thank-offering and fellowship meal of God's family. Such a table should stand free on all four sides, in plain view of all the people, free of all superfluous ornaments. Nothing should be allowed to detract from its essential purpose, to bear the sacrament of our Lord's Body and Blood. It was a great misfortune when the romanticism of the nineteenth century revived among us the medieval style of altar, which transformed the holy table into a tomb, overlaid it with cumbrous superstructures and furnishings, and removed it out of sight and hearing of many of the worshippers. It has exaggerated the priesthood of the clergy at the expense of the priesthood of all believers. The medieval altar must go. Its departure will open the way to a more creative effort in the designing and planning of our churches, in which the altar will retain its focal position without losing its basic significance.

2. The Gospel procession. There are probably very few people in our Sunday congregations who know that the shift from epistle to gospel side in the reading of the lessons at Holy Communion is the vestigial relic of what was once an impressive procession of the bringing of God's Word into the midst of the people. Why should they know? For generations we have been perpetuating a meaningless piece of ceremoniousness from the medieval low mass, forgetful of the fact that the Ante-Communion is not an altar service at all and that there is no reason whatsoever for dividing the altar into an epistle side and a gospel side. The Ante-Communion is a liturgy of the Word. Its point of reference is not the holy table, but the lectern or pulpit where the Bible is read and proclaimed. Our rubrics, to be sure, require that the celebrant begin the service 'standing reverently before the Holy Table,' but they do not say that he must remain there until the Offertory, which is the real beginning of the altar-service. One of the things which has puzzled me is the way our so-called Evangelical parishes have given in without a protest to the debased Romish ceremonial of Ante-Communion, and forgotten altogether the glorious symbolism of the Gospel procession.

3. The Offertory procession. Our 1928 Prayer Book revision restored to us all things needful for a true Offertory. After the alms have been received and humbly presented, 'the Priest shall then offer, and shall place upon the Holy Table, the Bread and the Wine.' Probably no rubric is so commonly ignored than this one about the oblations of bread and wine. Most people are utterly oblivious of their participation in the Offertory. Engrossed in singing a hymn or listening to an anthem they do not realize that the priest is offering for them a piece of bread and a drop of wine, representing themselves and all they have and are to be given to God for consecration as members incorporate in Christ's Body and Blood. This all important giving of themselves for sacrifice is obscured for lack of meaningful ceremonial. The revival of the Offertory procession is the best way to make this significant action real to the communicant. Next time we shall describe in detail how the Offertory procession can be performed.

New Books

Excellent Good *Fair

They Saw the Lord.* By Bonnell Spencer, O.H.C. Morehouse-Gorham, $3.00.

Simple, moving sermons for Easter and Eastertide, full of rich and earnest piety. With some of their emphases we must all agree heartily—at least all Anglicans: "The crucifix and 'the old rugged cross' are the commonest Christian symbols. Lent has replaced Eastertide as the major season of devotion. In short, salvation from sin instead of life in union with the Risen Christ is the goal toward which the average earnest Christian is striving. . . . The results of this shift of emphasis have been disastrous." In other passages we are somewhat repelled by the theological viewpoint and by the taste: God "wooed and won the heart of the Virgin Mary. He asked her to become the Spouse of the Holy Ghost and his Mother of God Incarnate. On behalf of the human race, she gave consent." That is just the sort of language that Anglicanism has been protesting against for four hundred years; and the type of piety it reflects is a far remove from that of the Book of Common Prayer. —F. C. The Plan of Evangelization

By Charles S. Martin

Rector of St. Paul's, Burlington, Vermont

ALTHOUGH as a contributing editor my name has graced the masthead of THE WITNESS for some years I have rarely attended a meeting of the editorial board. Not that I did not want to, but things worked out that way. Being in New York on a Monday, and that being the day of the board meeting, I made my way to it. For a while I was only an interested spectator but, after several invitations to comment, I laid aside the caution and taciturnity which comes naturally to one who lives in Vermont and allowed the normal instincts of a parson to come to the fore. I spoke, not once, but three times. The last occasion proved the wisdom of Vermont silence, for I was invited to do some work. Bill Spofford was reporting on a plan of evangelization that had engaged the National Council for a day and on which the Church, through its news-sheets, was invited to comment. My reaction to the plan I summed up as briefly as I could by saying that I felt much as the Christian News-Letter had toward the plan of the committee on evangelism of the Church of England "Towards the Conversion of England." Insidiously I was drawn out on both these documents and then, as a reward for my folly, I was asked to write a few notes developing the parallels between the English plan and the News-Letter reaction and our plan.

Being a dutiful soul, and also fully cognizant that parsons ought to do penance for the ease with which they open up and spill out, I went home, dug through the files, found Christian News-Letter No. 245 and reviewed it along with the plan to convert England. I commend them to you. The plan is very thorough and helpful but misses the bus. The Letter explains why. It also explains why we should look two or three times at any plan or scheme of evangelization of our own. Let me give you, not the gist of it, but its point of view applied to the proposal of the National Council.

First, however, I ought to air my prejudices. I am suspicious of all crusades, movements and win-the-world-for-Christ plans, inately so, congenitally so, experientially so. My life has not been too long, nor my priesthood too extended, yet have I numbered many efforts which are now but memories, laid to rest, and counted valuable as experiences that tend to prevent like errors in the future. I am not alone in this. Parsons of varying churchmanship, experience, and standing react similarly. I remember walking into the parish house of Holy Trinity Church, Philadelphia, with a group of clergy to have Forward in Service presented for the first time. My immediate neighbor said: "Another promotional scheme." I echoed his sentiments. "Yes, just another!" And the word went down the line: "Yes, another!", "Another," "Another," like a squad counting off. The Church is fed up on them. Yet I know it is true that we need some definite, simple plan to which we can give ourselves, that we do need a new baptism of the spirit, and that the Church must have some well-considered plan of strategy to meet the needs of the times. I know, too, that often it is the skepticism and the inertia of the clergy that are responsible for many a good plan being still-born. Perhaps it is for that reason that, after an initial hesitation, all the crusades of the past have found me marching. I felt the need, I had nothing better to offer, and I knew my obligation to play ball. I ought, also, to admit that often I found in the effort much that was beneficial. Forward in Service made, I believe, a real contribution to the life of the Church. Yet, even so, I look at the new proposals suspiciously if sometimes wistfully and hopefully.

That we need to evangelize goes without question. It is the fundamental duty of the Church. Mr. Jordan's analysis of the Church is all too true; we have not been going forward in any field; we have been failing in the work of evangelization. We can excuse it, or justify it, but it is true. The reasons are many and complex but, fundamentally, it must be that the life within us is weak. We used to talk of the missions field and mean the Far East, Africa, or some other foreign or perhaps a domestic field where the Church was not established. Now we speak of the whole of continental United States being our great mission field or else, the college field, the industrial opportunity, or the rural areas and—most significantly—of the Church itself. The Church, instead of being a power to evangelize, has become an area to be evangelized.

I think we would all agree that every possible method of reaching people should be used inside and outside of the Church—the radio, motion pictures, national advertising, and the rest. Yet we must be careful and not equate advertising with evangelism or, I would say, lay too heavy an emphasis on national advertising. Full page colored ads in the Saturday Evening Post leaves me a bit cold; as a matter of fact, gives me a few shivers. An Episcopal Church Hour, carrying a program that our Church could produce at its best, would be a real blessing among the religious inanities that we broadcast today. Yet, even here, we must recognize that radio itself is a field for evangelization. We must convert the producers, alter the purposes of radio, change the context, and method before it can become a generally effective instrument of religious propaganda.

Worthwhile as radio and motion pictures might be, I should hope that they would not be the major emphasis in the plan. Business seems to have proved that if you advertise sufficiently you can expect a sympathetic response proportionate to the money expended. We can assume that with a given effort we shall have a given response in terms of interest in the Church. Let us not assume that we shall have a given number of converted people. Individuals grow in Christ as they live in the family of Christ. If the family life is weak and if, as Louis Franklin says, "the apples in the barrel are rotten," then however many we interest we gain not much. Any plan of evangelization in these days depends fundamentally on first quickening the life of those presumably already evangelized, deepening the religious life of those of us who now make up the Church. That cannot be accomplished by any radio broadcasts, motion pictures, advertising plan, however good it might be.

BUT IT is easy enough to criticise, to caution, but—what on the constructive side? Before we can intelligently plan for evangelization, we must be sure of an understanding of the times in which we live. We must know that, in spite of the tremendous numbers who profess and call themselves Christians, Christ through his Church exercises relatively little influence on our nation and on our world. The world seems to have conquered the Church, and that, without the Church being aware of it. Business, education, politics, are conducted usually without benefit of the Church. Italy offers a good example at the moment. A nation, presumably committed to the Roman Church, finds itself in practice under the control of an avowedly anti-Christian group which is the major political party of the nation. Of course, we can say, that is the Church of Rome and its weaknesses, but let us not be deluded that our situation is potentially very different. There is a widespread disillusionment with the idea of inevitable progress, with the power of man to correct man's own weakness but, at the moment, there is little to indicate that man is looking for solution in the Christian way; it is still in the faith called education or in a solution through economics or politics.

When we begin to see the nature of the times, however dimly, we begin to understand the complexity of the problem and to realize there is no easy solution. There is no simple effective plan of evangelization. That is the first insight the Church must gather.

We usually think of campaigns of evangelization in terms of preaching, teaching, or good works. Actually, I believe, people will be won as they see the operation of the Holy Spirit in a community. When they see a group, however small, living together in the spirit, showing forth a quality of justice, mercy, wisdom, that is not of the world, they are attracted. When Dr. MacLeod talks of his Iona Movement and the Holy Spirit evidenced in the community as being the prime missionary force, he is very right to me. So has it always been in history. It was St. Francis and his friars, living the life that reformed his age; it was John Wesley and his few, living the life methodically who invigorated the Church of the eighteenth century; it was the Tractarians who, through the Holy Spirit, brought new life to the Anglican Church.

I know that the spirit bloweth where it listeth, and we cannot see whence it cometh or whither it goeth, but that does not mean we cannot plan; we can so order our lives that the Holy Spirit may work through them. Our hopes for evangelization must lie in the individual and in small groups. They must live "prayerfully, expectantly, perserveringly, to discover how in their own locality or sphere of responsibility they can follow and obey the will of God." As those groups reach out and make contacts with others, they may find themselves drawn into a wider movement, originated and inspired by the Holy Spirit, through which will come to the Church a new vision, and a power to fulfill it.

It is to our parishes that we must first look for those who are receptive to the working of the spirit. It is there that groups must be developed and our strategy for evangelization must take shape. The radio, the motion picture, will help, but teaching, preaching, prayer, sacraments, life must be the methods. I quote from memory, but I know that I am not far afield when I recall the words of Bishop Hobson at one of the very early meetings of the Forward Movement: "There is no great huzzah about this, no money to be raised, no preaching, but an attempt to go forward through prayer, through closer union with Jesus Christ Our Lord."

The Forward Movement was and is the greatest evangelizatic effort in my time in our Church. A new plan can learn from it and build on it.

It also seems to me that in any strategy it is not well to look exclusively or even chiefly to the clergy. The laity are those who can be our greatest missionary force. The priests are, as the late Archbishop of Canterbury, William Temple, suggests, those who witness before the congregation of the faithful. It is the congregation who witness before the outside world. The non-professional speaks to the world with an authority that the professional never can have. The clergy may minister the power, they may bind up and heal the wounds, even at times direct the battle, but it is the laity who must fight on the lines.

I wish that I might whole-heartedly fall in line with such of the plan as has been offered, but I can not. Moreover, I am sure that its most enthusiastic proponents may welcome criticism from even a very humble source for, it has been repeatedly said, any plan must come from the grass-roots. In these grass-roots I see the need for work and prayer and thought, and no easy quick plan of spreading the Kingdom.

Dramatic Arts and Religion

By

REV. WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD JR.

IT IS perhaps silly to discuss plays or motion pictures that one hasn't seen but the action of our Roman Catholic compatriots this last week make it mandatory. During that time, a) Max Sorenson, commander of the Catholic War Veterans, demanded that the State Department refuse to let the play, All My Sons, be produced in Germany and Japan; b) Robinson Jeffers' drama, Dear Judas, was banned in Boston, following pressure from the Roman Catholic Church; and c) the English film, Black Narcissus, based on Miss Rumer Gooden's fine novel, was condemned by the Legion of Decency which announced a drive to eliminate it from American screens.

I have seen neither the plays or the movie but, considering what competent critics, such as Bosley Crowther, Brooks Atkinson, James Agee and John McManus, have said, I believe that all three are worthy examples of art. All My Sons, dealing with the laudable theme of war-grafters, won the New York Critics' prize as the best play of the year; a prize which is even more coveted than the Pulitzer award among playwrights. Sorenson says it must be banned, however, because it is "communistic"—communism in this case being the thesis that persons who make faulty planes knowingly and deliberately are enemies of society.

Dear Judas, according to reports, shows Judas Iscariot in a somewhat favorable light as a confused and bewildered individual caught up in events much larger than himself. It was banned because, in the words of Francis W. Sullivan, Roman Catholic attorney who entered the protest, it is "offensive, dangerous and should not be performed as it would surely damage the faith of the people." The producer of the play, stating that Mr. Sullivan insisted that Judas be shown as a thief and a betraying informer, said "our approach to the subject matter is deeply religious and reverent, and we feel that the play will contribute greatly to a spiritual rebirth." There are many interpretations of Judas' character and role and the one chosen by Mr. Jeffers is certainly a valid one for presentation, whether one agrees with it or not.

Black Narcissus deals with a community of Anglican nuns in the Himalayas who strain at their religious vows due to the environment and the nature of the people they meet. From the book, which I have read, it presents a fine and honest picture of temptation. The Roman Catholics, however, are offended. First, they make the producer, J. Arthur Rank, introduce a prologue to the film stating that it deals with "Protestant nuns of the Anglican communion." Secondly, they condemn it because "it creates an impression that constitutes an affront to religion and religious life. It ignores the spiritual motivation which is the foundation and safe-guard of religious life and it offensively tends to characterize such life as an escape for the abnormal, the neurotic and the frustrated." And so they seek a ban.

This is larger than a religious issue. It is a medieval attack on real democracy. It is an attack on the civil rights of the theater exactly as the civil rights of individuals and groups are under attack in other areas of social life. The New Testament says "the truth will make you free." It is obvious that the Roman Catholic Church is intent on mocking that statement in the dramatic field, as elsewhere. This is one more area in which the Protestant churches must enter into opposition with the Roman Catholic dictatorial temperament.

Real Effort Made By Council To Complete Fund

Hope to Announce Million Dollar Relief Fund Completed When the Council Meets Next Week

Edited by Sara Dill

New York:—A special effort is being made by the promotion department of the National Council to have the million dollars sought for the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief completely in hand when the Council meets next week. Considerably over $100,000 will have to be paid in if this is to be done. It is believed that much of this is actually collected but has not yet been remitted by parishes and by dioceses. So letters have gone out from headquarters urging that every dollar received be forwarded immediately.

At the same time the department released figures showing that a large number of dioceses are far behind in raising their assigned quotas, including a number of large dioceses that so far have raised but a third or less of the amounts asked.

Union Objects

New Haven:—The building trades council of the A. F. of L. of this city has sent a protest to the Council of Churches against the awarding of painting contracts to open-shop firms by two Protestant churches. The churches are the Center Church and Trinity. The president of the labor council declared in the letter that "this has been done despite the fact that we have been led to believe that the Churches support organized labor."

Denounce Floggings

Birmingham, Ala.:—Recent floggings in Alabama prisons were vigorously denounced in a resolution passed unanimously here by the Birmingham Council of Church Women which is composed of 70 church groups representing all Protestant denominations. The resolution pointed out that it had been admitted publicly that such punishments have taken place in all Alabama prisons, "even in Julia Tutwiler Prison for Women."

Wippell Agent

Paterson, N. J.:—The export of church furnishings from England has been resumed with the appointment of an American representative by J. Wippell & Company, Ltd., of Exeter, England. Wippell has been famous since the early eighteenth century for the creation of stained-glass windows, hand-embroidered vestments, carved woodwork, and silver, brass, and bronze ware. Possibly the largest manufacturer of such work in the world, Wippell numbers over seven hundred employees, and has branches in Manchester and London. It is interesting to know that the custom of the crafts being followed by father and son in England indicates a thorough zeal for the work, resulting in the very finest craftsmanship.

Mr. George L. Payne, of One Lee Place, Paterson, New Jersey, who is well known in the church furnishings field here, has been appointed as the American representative, and will handle all distribution in this country. The introduction of the entire Wippell line will augment the American production and make available to our churches furnishings of note.

Wippell's work is noted for the fact that it is done almost completely by hand, a situation which has become unusual in this country.

Missionaries Appointed

New York:—Charlotte H. Hutchinson of Columbia, S. C., has sailed for China where she will serve as medical technician at St. Luke's and St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Shanghai. Elsie Jacobs of Pittsburgh, Pa., is to go to the Philippines in October to be the secretary of Bishop Binsted.

Bill of Rights

New York:—An appeal to the United Nations, signed by 429 persons, urges that the proposed International Bill of Rights include an article recognizing the right of conscientious objection to military service. Among those to sign were Bishop Gilbert of New York, Bishop Lawrence of Western Massachusetts and Bishop Walter Mitchell, retired bishop of Arizona.

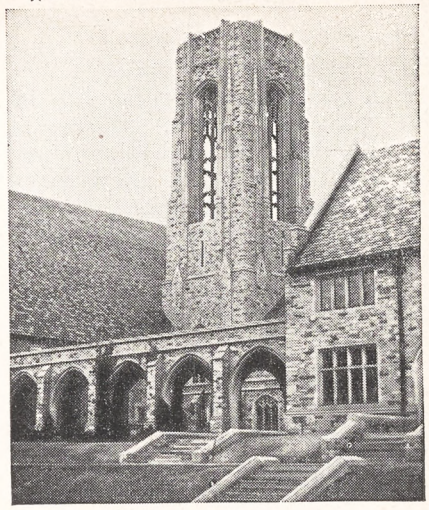
Religious Films

Birmingham, England (RNS):—A motion picture studio, "as fine as any in the world," is being built in the London suburb of Elstree for the production of religious films, J. Arthur Rank, British film leader, announced here at the meeting of the World Council of the World's Sunday School Association.

Rank, who is chairman of the Association's Visual Aids Committee, said the studio "will belong to me, but it will be available for any religious body of any denomination to use for making films of their own choice." The films, he added, will be made on a non-profit basis, and most of them will be 16 mm., suitable for church showings.

A Third Party

Chautauqua, N. Y.:—The Rev. Mark Dawber, head of the Home Missions Council, called for a third political party in the U. S. in addressing a missions conference here. Saying that the existing parties "are both as dead as dodos," the missions leader declared that "most of those boys in Washington, Republicans and Democrats, are neither Christian nor statesmen." He listed nationalism, imperialism, competitive capitalism, racism and militarism as the five "isms" which the U. S. must defeat at home.



Parish Celebrates

Alameda, Cal.:—Christ Church is to celebrate its 75th anniversary with a series of services and social functions, September 25-29. The rector, the Rev. Henry M. Shires, states that among those expected to take part are Bishop Block of California; Bishop Sumner Walters of San Joaquin, a former rector, and Dean Henry H. Shires of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, also a former rector and the father of the present rector.

CARILLONIC BELLS

Prove Themselves in Performance

Performance is the strictest test of quality. Through comments like the one below, you have proof in advance that, in your church as in hundreds of others, CARILLONIC BELLS will show their superior worth by superior performance.

"I have used the bells with the choir," writes Thomas H. Webber, Jr., of Idlewild Presbyterian Church, "and have obtained musical effects which were heretofore impossible. With your 'Carillonic Bells' playable from the organ, with the tone coming from the echo, solo or the tower, I have great flexibility. The mechanism has worked perfectly, and we never need worry about weather conditions affecting the bells. Quality of tone, plus any desired volume without loss of quality, makes this instrument a perfect addition. The congregation, as well as the community in general, have been most lavish in their praise of this fine musical instrument."

Forward Step

Pelotas, Brazil:—The recent granting of permanent government recognition marks a long-desired step in the progress of St. Margaret's School. Lack of recognition has hampered the school in several ways chiefly because diplomas from an unrecognized institution will not admit graduates to a university. All education is under a government ministry which sets standards and studies.

A few years ago recognition was withheld because the school's athletic field was not large enough for a sixty-meter track. Opportunity to buy adjoining property remedied this, and temporary recognition was granted. This year word went forth that the physical education department must have a skeleton for teaching purposes. An appropriation from the United Thank Offering provided this.

The school was opened in 1934 for 30 Brazilian girls whose parents wished to have them educated under the auspices of the Brazilian Episcopal Church. The building was a gift from the UTO of 1931, but otherwise St. Margaret's has been practically self-supporting from the start. Miss Candida Leao, one of the first graduates and daughter of one of the early Brazilian clergy has been headmistress since 1940. There are more than 200 students.

Youth Conference

Geneva:—European Christian youth leaders are to hold a conference here next month under the auspices of the World Council of Churches. The initiative for the meeting came from 100 young people of 42 countries who met in Sweden following the world conference of youth at Oslo. Later a similar Christian conference for youth will be held in the Balkans.

Little has been said in official reports, but apparently leaders of the World Council were not entirely pleased with the results of the Oslo Conference. Young people representing the European and Asiatic Churches were critical of U. S. imperialism and about one third of them are reported to have declared at the end of this Christian youth conference that they were undecided whether they wanted to be "Christian youth or Communist youth."

THE REV. CHARLES D. KEAN
Rector at Kirkwood, Missouri

The Protestant Episcopal Church is a constitutionally-governed Church. Its General Convention is the final authority on all questions of doctrine, discipline and worship. The laws laid down by General Convention govern the Church, whether or not everyone approves them, until they are amended.

The Protestant Episcopal Church also tries to be a Christian Church. Its underlying reason for existing at all is to help men and women find a Christian meaning for their lives in a world where tragedy and defeat are real factors to be faced.

Underlying all the storm and fury about the two recent marriages of clergymen to divorced women are these more important issues. Bishop Manning appears to have ignored both, while The Living Church tries in a smart-aleck way to commit this Protestant Episcopal Church to an obscurantist position which can neither be squared with its law nor conformed to its profession.

The facts underlying the decisions by the Bishops of Michigan and Lexington are not involved when the issues are considered on the most serious level. There is reason to believe that neither Bishop Manning nor The Living Church know those facts. But even more important than these questions, which are left by our Church law upon the consciences of the diocesan bishops concerned, are the understandings upon which judgment is based.

1. The Protestant Episcopal Church is constitutional. It is within the province of General Convention to revise the Church's law in any direction. We may not always agree. We may frequently feel that this body compromises where it should be forthright. Nevertheless as long as this Church remains a Protestant Episcopal Church, all bishops, presbyters and laymen are subject to its enactment.

The marriage canons, as they now exist, show that General Convention can revise the law, and also that it tends to compromise. Nevertheless the amended law plainly provides that diocesan bishops, within clearly stated limits, may authorize the remarriages of divorced persons. The chancellors of Michigan and Massachusetts have shown in their learned opinions that such decisions may be rendered on grounds which recognize the reality of the situations.

The present law is the will of the Church expressed in its duly constituted assembly, but it is a compromise as everybody knows. The desire of the majority of the clergy and laity were made known at Cleveland in 1943 where the Phister amendment failed of passage by General Convention only because of a parliamentary technicality, although it had an actual majority of votes. The bishops in an unofficial ballot likewise supported it. The 1946 compromise was possible only on the assurance to those desiring a more liberal and honest policy that such was provided for in the new law.

2. It is obviously the feeling of a majority of the members of the Protestant Episcopal Church that concern for the welfare of people is the basic consideration in its ministrations. We serve not abstract standards of ambiguous meaning but living souls. The only reason to consider a previous failure is to cast light upon the probabilities of a proposed new marriage. The Church desires to help all who in sincerity and faith are trying to live Christian lives and build Christian homes. Failure in marriage is not the one unforgiveable sin.

The support marshaled for the Phister amendment shows that this issue is recognized by the Church at large. The fact that for 21 years commissions of General Convention tried to modify and improve the archaic and cruel marriage canons of the Church shows that the problem was on many consciences. General Convention did not act in 1946 in order to "whip us with scorpions," but in order that considerations of justice and charity might prevail in this Church which claims allegiance to Christ.

Neither Bishop Manning nor The Living Church take these primary issues into account. Instead the Bishops of Michigan and Lexington have been publicly and cruelly attacked on grounds which are only the private opinions of the attackers and which actually contradict both the constitutional authority of Convention and the nature of Christian concern. Persons who have laid their cases before their bishops and who have received favorable judgments have been subjected to a notoriety which is to say the least uncharitable and which rests upon no known investigation of the facts.

The Girls' Friendly Society Gives Group Experience

It Provides Opportunities for Adventure In Friendship with Girls of Own Group

By Helen Gibson Hogue
Executive Secretary

New York: — As the Church's week-day, group-work organization for girls from seven or eight to fourteen, and from fourteen to twenty-one, GFS is concentrating its efforts in one direction—to develop girls physically, mentally, socially, and spiritually into the sort of women who can make their best contribution to the Church and to the community. The central core of all that we do, back of every program, every leaders' guide, every activity, is the effort to help our girls to translate religion into everyday living. The commandment of Jesus, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul and with all thy might; and thy neighbor as thyself," is the basis of all that we do. We know that the "capacity to care" for God and one's neighbor has to be developed and learned. It does not spring full-blown into action. There are laws that govern the growth of love. There are small children from privileged as well as from underprivileged families whose home experiences have been such as to build up in them a great deal of fear or hate or self-love, so that they have not learned how to love God or man. They need a group experience at the "gang stage" of their development. This begins at about the age of seven or eight years. It is the time when girls first want a group experience, a "club of our own"—which is the reason we put so much emphasis in GFS on juniors. At this time, they need an adult leader who helps to supply the security they may have missed at home and to insure its further growth if the home experience has been a good one.

The branch advisor, or leader of junior and teen-age GFS groups, tries to furnish the satisfying relationship of acceptance so necessary to healthy growth. She also knows the importance of earned recognition in a girl's development. She tries to provide a program that offers each girl an opportunity to build new skills in handicraft or some creative activity, or to take responsibility in the service project, or take part in some other activity that builds in self-confidence and a feeling of security. She leads the girl gradually to experience the satisfaction that comes to the socially growing person who sacrifices some of her own comfort and desires to the success of the group.

We all know that there can be much talk about "unselfishness" and little understanding of the fact that a little girl, a teen-ager, or an adult may be a "white-sepulchre" of hate encrusted in a mask of "unselfishness"—and that this situation is the result of things that have happened to the person in his or her past experience to build up both the mask and the hostility that lies underneath. We know that love has to grow and that there are laws that govern its development. It grows by building relationship with people, with ideas, with activities, and with materials. There are fine persons who often defeat the growth of love in a child by insisting that she must be "socialized," that she must "care for others" before she is capable of doing so. Her past experience may be such that her anxiety and fear prevent the growth of love—or such that she is full of hostility. If she can build a relationship in her natural medium of expression, the things she naturally "loves," whether it be in the area of materials, or sports, or some artistic endeavor, love will be growing in that particular area at least. Then, as confidence grows, this child begins to feel more "friendly" towards others. She begins to feel unconsciously that it is a "friendly world." Her sense of security grows, her capacity to accept and like others is increased.

GFS is constantly providing its girls with opportunities and incentives to "adventure in friendliness" (that is to learn how to care) with girls of their own group, with the parish, with the community, with other nations and races. We feel that in this age of atomic energy, it is mandatory, as never before, that the Christian ideal of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man be implemented. We must learn how to care for all human beings, and it has to be learned—if not in the Christian Church, then where?

We are living in an enemy-obsessed world. Even in America, there is increasing hate, fear, and ego-drive for power. GFS—and we know how inadequate our efforts are—is trying to provide the sort of group experience for girls that will implement the Christian gospel. Worship is the very heart and center of all that we do.

There is another most important phase of this development of love—of this capacity to care—which GFS considers in its program. Every little girl needs a fine relationship with her father. It is through this relationship that she builds up her inner image of "what men are like." It is upon this that so much of her future happiness in marriage depends. As she goes out from her home, she needs to have the experience outside of knowing other fine men who deepen her sense of security. Many a marriage has been wrecked because this early experience had been such as to build an unconscious hostility or "enemy-obsession" toward men. When she marries, the girl projects this feeling upon her husband. If the GFS group can feel that the rector is a genuine friend of each girl in the group, that he is interested, that he cares about them all; if he is the sort of person whom they can respect and look up to, then he is becoming a part of the unconscious attitude toward men that each of the girls is building.

Through this sort of acceptance and relationship, the rector is doing much more to insure a happy marriage for each girl than all of the counselling he may do just before the wedding (of course both are important). The Church with a grand rector who is fine and human and has, himself, the capacity to care is the ideal set-up for GFS groups.

In the past when it was social service rather than development of girls which was the main emphasis of GFS, the organization sometimes failed to provide a group experience for the younger girls. Consequently, in some parishes there was failure to feed into the adult women's work of the Church girls who were trained as churchwomen. At the present time, and for several years past, our girls are encouraged at 21 to go into the adult women's program. This rule has already been made mandatory for the GFS of the Church in England. Our problem is to have our policy known throughout the country. Our older groups support "girls' work in the Church" as part of their own activity.

We are most fortunate to have the backing at the national level of the Woman's Auxiliary board. We feel that our girls' work cannot possibly be successful unless it has the support of all churchwomen and of the clergy. We feel that we are having a larger and larger measure of this support. Our plea is that time is short. Girls group up quickly. They need complete acceptance and a good Church-centered program now. This we believe GFS provides.

a number of recommendations to the National Council when it meets this week in New York.

The first recommendations calls for the formation of an association of professional women church workers, similar to the National Association of Social Workers.

The second recommendation calls for the establishment of a committee to continue and extend study of the curriculum and training for women church workers, looking toward setting up a normal standard for all training centers.

In this connection, the group urged that such a committee consider the importance of training more intensively in devotional and moral theology for closer integration of educational, social and theological disciplines.

Particular stress was laid by the conference on the third recommendation—that the church actively promote the recruiting of women for church work and encourage study at present training centers as part of the church-wide program for evangelism, with the emphasis being placed on such recruiting at the parish level.

SOCIAL REBIRTH

We announced last week a series of eight articles entitled Social Rebirth by Prof. Vida D. Scudder of Wellesley. She deals with the relation of incentives under nature and under grace; the conflicts and harmonies of life; the functions of the Church. There are stimulating illustrations. The series will start with the October 9th number. We urge therefore that the Order Form on page thirteen be used at once. It will be necessary for us to receive orders not later than October 1 to send the October 9th number.

Friendly Trailer of the GFS Fills a Great Need

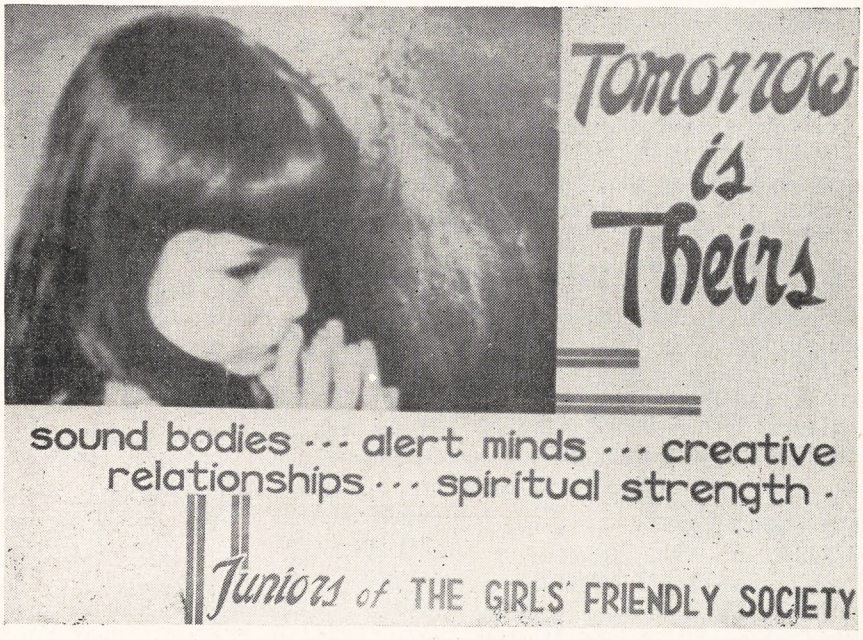
It Is a Part of the Missionary Program Which Has Important Place in Activities

By Margaret Ferreira

New York: — Many people who were at the General Convention in Philadelphia in 1946 had a chance to inspect the GFS Friendly Trailer. This is one tangible form by which the GFS has expressed its cooperation with the work of the Church. Since its purchase by the GFS in 1945, it has been sent into the areas of the greatest need as determined by the department of domestic missions of the Church in consultation with the GFS.

A compact well-equipped modern trailer, it has unique features that fit it for GFS service. A portable altar, motion picture equipment, loud speaker system for records or announcements, an awning that makes an outdoor meeting room, a toy library—these, and especially the "Trailer Lady," who lives in it and is one of the national staff of the GFS, would be standard equipment only for such a project. This is to carry the Church and its concern for adults, young people's groups, children, into communities where there is no formal established Church.

Three summers the GFS Friendly Trailer has participated in the National Town-Country Institute in the diocese of West Missouri. Here it has helped in the training of Church workers for the rural field and has been the base for daily vacation Church schools, community activities, children's play groups, etc., in rural areas isolated from the Church. One winter the Friendly Trailer was located in Horse Creek Valley in South Carolina, serving a small group of mill villages. Here a temporary "Play House" was built by the community to serve as headquarters when the Trailer must leave and before the h o p e d - for-Episcopal Church might be built.



From last fall until June, 1947, the GFS Friendly Trailer was in Pikeville, Kentucky, a coal mining center where the Episcopal Church had been closed. Working in close cooperation with Bishop Moody, it was able to rouse renewed interest in the Church. Now, with Miss Virginia Gesner as the new "Trailer Lady," or more formally as the rural field worker of the GFS, the Trailer is now serving again in West Missouri in cooperation with the National Town-Country Institute.

While this Friendly Trailer has been the national "Mission Object" for the past three years, the GFS has always considered cooperation with the missionary work of the Church one of its main activities. Every year by voluntary gifts, the members have contributed from $2,000 to over $3,000 for some missionary project. Among the many gifts have been scholarships for two Japanese American girls during the war, so permitting them to leave internment camps; support for a native field worker in India; a hot water system installed in St. Luke's Hospital in Ponce, Puerto Rico; a missionary teacher supported for four years in a girls' school in China; help to equip a chapel and provide a car in a coal mining district in Virginia; a scholarship for training a young Negro woman for work in the Church.

This training in missionary thinking and giving has long been accepted as a vital part of the study and service activities of the GFS. In this, as in its other activities, the GFS works in closest cooperation with the Church and trains its members to become the future leaders of the Church.

CHAPLAIN HITS RED BAITERS

Manila (RNS):—The only way to combat Communism is to remove social conditions which breed it, Col. Joseph Koch, chief of chaplains of the Philippine command, said in an address to the Rotary Club here.

"It is futile for us to expect to overthrow Communism by ranting and raving, and at the same time to remain blind to social conditions in our own community," Chaplain Koch said. "Low cost housing, sanitary and healthful living and working conditions, opportunities for fruitful employment, needed schools and recreational facilities, would do more to dispel the danger of Communism than all the aggressive exposures of this doctrine by silver-tongued orators."

Chaplain Koch asserted that "the weakness of our opposition to Communism is revealed by those who denounce Communism, but in the same breath condemn as socialistic and communistic the God-given right of workers to organize trade unions and the duty of the government to interfere when private enterprise fails to provide for workers' social rights."

CHURCH STARTS MARKET

South Orange, N. J.:—The Rev. A. B. Fitz-Gerald, Methodist minister here, is concerned about high prices and has done something about it besides talk. He has established a "church family market" where his people may buy fruit and vegetables at wholesale prices. He is doing the shopping at wholesale markets in Newark. Himself a part-time farmer, he states that cantaloupes raised on his farm bring $1.50 a bushel from the wholesaler but that they cost up to $9 on the retail market. Church members are urged to place orders with the secretary of the church during the week which they will then be able to pick up on Friday in his garage. He estimates that the saving will be from fifty to several hundred per cent, depending on the commodity.

NORMAL SCHOOLS IN CHICAGO

Chicago:—Schools for those connected with Sunday schools are being held in this diocese. The one for the Lake Shore deanery opened September 22 and will be held on six Monday evenings at Christ Church, Winnetka. The South deanery will meet at Christ Church, Woodlawn on the Tuesday evenings of October; the West deanery opened its school at Grace Church, Oak Park, on the 22nd; the Fox River Valley deanery is to hold three meetings at Trinity, Wheaton, and the Northern deanery school was opened last Sunday afternoon at St. Peter's, Grand Detour.

TWO CHAPELS BUILT

New York:—Philippine Island natives in the Upi area have built two chapels, at no cost to the Mission. They are first, St. Margaret's Chapel at Nelkan, an outstation of Upi. It is built of sawali with cogon and nepa roof, and cost $150 in U. S. currency. The second chapel is St. Catherine's at Sibutu, also a Upi outstation, and it too was constructed of sawali with cogon and nepa roof at a cost of $100.

Miss Elizabeth G. Griffin, Treasurer of the Philippine Mission, points to these chapels as indications of the interest in the Church on the part of the Filipinos, and their desire to do all that they can to help themselves.

HENRY SLOANE COFFIN GIVES ADDRESS

Southborough, Mass.: — The Rev. Henry Sloane Coffin, retired president of Union Seminary and former moderator of the Presbyterian Church, was the headliner at a conference of the clergy of Massachusetts, held here September 11-12. He spoke on the religious situation in the Far East. Also addressing the clergy was Bishop Norman B. Nash who outlined the plans and program of the diocese for the coming year.

On the 13th and 14th Bishop Oliver J. Hart of Pennsylvania was the leader at a conference of laymen, with Bishop Nash preaching at the Sunday service and also addressing the conference at the final session. There were 200 picked delegates attending.

NEW HAMPSHIRE FAILS TO ELECT

Concord, N. H.:—A special convention of the diocese of New Hampshire failed to elect a Bishop Coadjutor last week after five and a half hours of balloting. The two leading candidates were the Rev. Whitney Hale, rector of the Advent, Boston, and Canon Theodore O. Wedel of Washington Cathedral. The division was along churchmanship lines. It is expected that Bishop Dallas will call another convention within a month.

GEORGE PURNELL GUNN ELECTED BISHOP

Suffolk, Va.:—The Rev. George Purnell Gunn, rector of the Good Shepherd, Norfolk, was elected bishop coadjutor of Southern Virginia, on September 17th. There were five ballots, with sixteen nominees. On the final ballot, of the 26 clerical and 38 lay votes necessary to elect, Mr. Gunn received 27 clerical and 39½ lay votes.

Others to receive votes were F. Bland Tucker; David C. George; Samuel M. Shoemaker; F. H. Craighill Jr.; N. E. Wicker; Charles W. Carnan Jr.; H. W. Marten; E. R. Carter Jr.; Don Frank Fenn; Norman H. Taylor; Churchill J. Gibson; Moultrie Guerry; Robert A. Magill; James W. Kennedy; Theodore V. Morrison.

Handicrafts, not race, is important at the GFS diocesan conference under the supervision of Miss Doris Wilson

WE ALSO WANT THE VETO

Canton, N. Y.:—Miss Mabel Head, observer for the United Council of Church Women at the UN, told a church group here that the United States is as insistent as Russia in retaining the veto over UN proceedings. "None of the big powers with the possible exception of China," she declared, "would be willing to relinquish the veto at this time."

EDITORIALS

The Girls' Friendly

"JOIN the GFS and see the world," was said to me in jest once, as I started out on one of my GFS peregrinations. I have come to think this a very good slogan; for who does not want to get out of their own little local rut and feel themselves part of a world community. Any organization which is national in scope will do this for its members, but the GFS does a great deal more. It is more than an organization, it is a fellowship of girls and women with ties strengthened sometimes by many years' association. A girl can join the GFS as young as 7 years old, and long after she has outgrown the need of a young people's group, the friendships formed there remain. Because the GFS is organized in little missions and in city parishes across the whole country and in places as remote as Alaska, the Philippines, or Puerto Rico, the GFS member as she moves from one place of residence to another may often find a warm welcoming group to start her in her new life. This has meant much to me as I have moved from parish to parish and from one diocese to another; and has made me realize how necessary such a group is to cure that almost universal complaint of loneliness.

There is a world of ideas to which the GFS introduces its members—ideas about how people grow, the understanding of individuals, knowledge of how to get on with them, how best to serve them. How exciting it is to see a girl gradually take on responsibility in the group, shyly at first but with increasing confidence as she receives the encouragement of the others, till she grows to be one of those people to whom others always look for leadership. I have marvelled at what girls of ten or eleven could do—conducting a business meeting, leading a service of worship, and putting through projects of which some of their elders think themselves incapable.

In a group both members and leaders learn that every gift is needed and can be used—whether it is spiritual strength or capacity for friendship, creative imagination, athletic skill, or the ability to use one's hands, organizing people, or a dramatic sense. Think what this does to down that sense of inferiority to which we are all subject, and to give us courage as we move out into the larger groups in our community.

Although the GFS is a comparatively small organization, it has a brave world view and is not discouraged by its size from doing something about world problems. I have given thanks for young world citizens as I have heard a twelve year old president of juniors read a letter of thanks for $3.16 collected and sent to Chinese war orphans, or heard the report of a teen-age group of $200 raised for the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief and another $200 for Bishop Huang of China, or listened to a nineteen year old girl recount how her group led the way in her town in making friends with some Jewish refugees.

It's something to be proud of to belong to an organization, either as member or leader, which is honestly trying to help those in need—to work out race relations, to spread the gospel, to understand themselves and their neighbors. GFS methods are like those of other up - to - date group work organizations, but it has a plus-motive power derived from its acknowledged Lord, and a directive based on the two great commandments. It has possibilities such as no secular organization can have for the development of the individual into the kind of worshipping, loving, and serving person who is at home in her world and whom her world so badly needs.

That is what the GFS means to me.

—MARY E. PEABODY (Mrs. Malcolm E. Peabody)
National President of GFS

"QUOTES"

I AM CONFIDENT that the Girls' Friendly Society has a great contribution to make to the life of the Church; it has already made real strides forward, and I hope that in the years which lie ahead, the Society will grow greatly in strength, in interest, and in usefulness.

—Henry Knox Sherrill
The Presiding Bishop

One Family In Christ

A FUNDAMENTAL principle of the GFS is that it is open to girls of every race and faith, girls of every type and interest, groups in cities and in rural areas, groups from Maine to California, from Alaska to the Philippines, Puerto Rico and Japan.

There are interracial groups where Negro, Indian, Japanese girls are happily accepted as "just girls" with no question and no tension. In Texas and Southern California, there are GFS groups of Mexican parentage. A Brooklyn, New York, branch found Spanish speaking girls from Latin America needing friendship. Puerto Rico has a number of lively and growing GFS groups. Through diocesan conferences and interchurch activities, Negro and other racial groups share in the fellowship of GFS. Girls of all races within the GFS know that they are as the GFS prayer states, "members of one family in Christ."

All through the war, one GFS branch in Japan held together and is even now eagerly welcoming its American leader, Miss Hallie Williams, back to Kyoto. The members of another branch received their GFS pins in the infamous San Tomas concentration camp in the Philippines. Mrs. Quentin K. Y. Huang has just returned to China with the Bishop, promising to start GFS groups in their pioneer diocese of Kunming because she feels that the organization has so much to offer to girls of every race and color.

Over a year ago the national GFS pioneered interracially by appointing Miss Doris Wilson, a young Negro woman, to the national staff as field worker. Miss Wilson previously had been the recipient of a GFS scholarship for graduate study for work within the Church and had lived at Windham House while taking her M.A. degree. She has been signally successful in her work, and the GFS has been proud that she has been so well received by all groups, not just a segregated section of its membership.

Adventures in Friendliness

by Francis P. Arnold

National GFS Program Advisor

"LET'S adventure in friendliness" has become a GFS slogan which covers its many sided program. GFS programs are planned to help individual members grow and develop through participating in group activities. The national Society suggests program emphases for each year, but every local branch decides on the details of its own program within this framework, planning them on the basis of the needs and interests of the branch members.

For instance, every branch in the country shares in GFS Week. Once a year, during the week ending with All Saints Day, all GFS branches work to interpret GFS to parish and community, bring in new members and to raise the whole year's money for national support. Reports and contributions from all corners of the U.S.A., from parishes, missions and individuals, prove not only the power of this kind of "team-work," but also the amazing variety of ways in which these ideas are carried out.

"Let's adventure in Friendliness" interprets, too, all kinds of parish and community service projects, as well as a growing concern for and participation in world events. GFS gifts and contributions made it possible to maintain Friendly House near one of the huge bomber plants in the mid-west, during the war. This adventure in friendliness grew into the GFS Trailer to carry similar work into rural areas after the war need was over. Every parish where there is a GFS branch knows that its members are to be counted on for service in Church school, choir and many other ways.

In many communities, GFS carries its adventures in friendliness into interfaith projects. In Woodbridge, New Jersey, the GFS gave a pageant showing the significance of the Jewish Festival of Lights. Jewish people in town cooperated with the girls by providing authentic religious articles, and the local newspaper editorialized this undertaking by saying, "If more church groups would follow the example of the Girls' Friendly Society, there would be better understanding and respect among the various faiths of the world."

Inter-racial relations, as well as interfaith projects, play a large part in the total GFS program. GFS membership is interracial. Many branches include Indian, Mexican, Japanese or Negro members, and in some sections of the country, there are strong GFS branches of minority groups. Where this personal adventure in friendliness is not possible, many GFS groups have approximated it by work in their community, or by sharing in national GFS projects. For instance, Oswego, New York, GFS members took the lead in offering friendship to a large group of European Jewish refugees, brought into their town. They not only made friends with the boys and girls in school, invited them to GFS dances, but enlisted the help of three other community organizations to make and deliver Christmas sprays to each family. As one GFS member said, "They are grand girls—exactly like us except that their backgrounds are considerably more grim than ours." A far cry from the attitude openly expressed by the high school president when the refugees first came, "We don't want 'em here and neither does anybody else!"

GFS members adventure in friendliness with people of other nations. Relief projects have been high in the list of branch activities, during and since the war. Many branches have shared in the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief. Pen Pals have provided personal international understanding for many GFS members. In Seneca Falls, New York, when GFS members discovered that there was no community plan for collecting clothes for European relief, they established and manned a collection center from which, during the drive, 2,061 garments, 19 pairs of shoes and 12 blankets were sent out. (See front cover)

Adventures in friendliness happen, too, through the 16 GFS Holiday Houses in different parts of the country, which offer vacation programs and camp life to all girls. New ideas about outdoor fun, new skills in crafts or sports, and new friends are some of the tangible results which girls bring back from such a summer.

IN EACH individual branch, girls grow and develop as they plan for and take part in such activities. They "learn by doing"; they discover that their branch is part of a larger fellowship. Democratic planning, good committee work, under the guidance of a wise adult leader, make all of these growing experiences. Little girls (GFS Juniors) earn achievement awards in four different fields; health and recreation, creative activity, adventuring in friendliness and worship. These colored ribbons are awarded for individual achievement, effort, participation and growth in each field. They satisfy a girl's need for earned recognition and encourage her well-rounded development.

As a little girl is given opportunity to conduct a business meeting, or a teen-ager learns how to work with other girls on a committee, or a shy, retiring girl blossoms under the appreciation of the rest of the group for her poster-making ability, or as a ten-year-old achieves the dignity of being worship chairman for her branch—or as any girl realizes, perhaps for the first time, what "the Church" really is—she is growing. Through experiences like these, girls grow and develop into the kind of women who can make a real contribution to parish and community life.

GFS printed program pamphlets on such subjects as hobbies, recreation, worship, getting along with people, have been commended and used by many other groups, both within and outside of the Episcopal Church. The latest one, "Junior Girls Around the World" and "Teen-Age Girls Around the World," presents international relations in an entirely new way. A junior and a teen-ager from each of six countries talks about the things all girls are interested in—clothes, games, school, families and boy friends—so that a real sense of personal friendship is created. Through songs, games, discussion and worship, this is developed to emphasize the fact that girls are alike, in every country, and that all girls around the world, can help make it One World.

The success of any program of group work depends on the quality of the adult leadership. The national staff of the GFS keeps in constant touch with the leaders of parish branches. A quarterly program bulletin, "At Your Service," brings seasonal program ideas, book reviews and leadership helps to each GFS leader. The monthly news sheet, "Highlights," carries news of branch and national activities. Every program pamphlet which the GFS issues is sent at once to junior and teen-age leaders. In addition, staff members maintain personal contact with branch leaders through correspondence and branch visits.

Leadership training is stressed through workshops for leaders at diocesan and provincial conferences, and at the triennial meetings of the GFS national council. GFS leaders are known throughout the Church as women of vision and devotion. Through its program, the GFS tries to develop its girls of today into this same kind of women of tomorrow.

Cooperating with the GFS

By

MRS. STEPHEN K. MAHON
National GFS Representative on the Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary

LAST summer in a small Michigan town, the parents decided that their children needed a modern well-equipped playground. They needed healthy supervised play, to know how to get on in groups, to grow creatively with children of their own ages and with friendly adults. How would they finance this project? Somebody had an idea. Houses were needed. They would build a house cooperatively. Some of the materials and much of the labor would be donated by the townspeople, men and women. Then the house would be sold and the profits would make the town's playground possible. The idea worked. The house was built. Now $10,000 is in the bank ready for the 1948 playground project.

For over seventy years, the Protestant Episcopal Church in this country has been "building a house" for girls in America—a house of fellowship, of creative activity, of friendliness and spiritual values. Women of the Church, working through the Girls' Friendly Society, have built character in girls which has been reflected in Church and community. This task of building must go on. The national executive board of the Woman's Auxiliary strongly believes in and supports the GFS in its week-day, group-work program for girls. We must build with skill and devotion, in terms of the needs of today's girls. Much is being written today about the confusion of modern women—so many causes and organizations—and so much confusion about what is important. Here is a simple clear cause for women of the Church to believe in and support—to help girls to grow creatively with people, ideas, situations and materials—in the GFS. To give them a Church-centered group experience which will help them to love the Church and to grow into the kind of women who can make a real contribution to Church and community.

Specifically, how can leaders in the Woman's Auxiliary help the GFS? First, Churchwomen everywhere can help to interpret the new GFS. The GFS is an organization of the Protestant Episcopal Church for girls—Junior girls and Teen-age girls. We have older members who work to support this program for girls and maintain their own fellowship. We prepare girls for participation in the adult women's program of the Church. New emphasis is placed upon the juniors, beginning with the seven or eight-year-old girl. At this age, girls like to join a club and enter into a group experience. If they become a part of the Church at this time through happy experiences, they are more apt to be loyal to the Church in later years. Later the juniors graduate into teen-age groups. At twenty-one, all girls who have joined the GFS since 1944 expect to graduate into the adult woman's program of the Church. They sometimes form units of their own or they may join already-existing groups in the woman's program.

Having understood and interpreted the new GFS, leaders in the Woman's Auxiliary can promote the organization of junior groups in parishes. The diocesan board of the Woman's Auxiliary in one diocese has asked all parish presidents to work for the formation of junior GFS groups in every parish. Our organization cannot grow as it should without the backing of Churchwomen. You can talk with rectors about the value of the GFS week-day program for girls, as a valuable week-day activity for Church school classes; you can interest young married women and girls just out of college to train as GFS leaders. You can include GFS training in your training institutes and conferences as a natural part of the work of women in a parish. Of course you will plan to have an exchange of board members on diocesan and parish boards so that the work for women and girls will be closely dovetailed.

Another feature of the new GFS is the sponsoring or advisory committee in a parish. These churchwomen aid the rector in selecting the GFS branch advisor, and they aid the branch in every way possible. The advisor meets with the committee, keeping them in touch with what is being done in the branch. She also calls upon them for help and suggestions. Girls' work in the Church needs the backing and support of the women of the Church. The Woman's Auxiliary can furnish leadership for these sponsoring committees. Such a sponsoring committee in a diocesan Woman's Auxiliary might be helpful, too.

Another important item is that the women of the Woman's Auxiliary might well find ways of recognizing the contribution GFS leaders are making to parish life. Group work with girls is a demanding job—rewarding to be sure—but it helps to have someone say "thank you" now and then. One GFS leader did an outstanding piece of work in her parish with the GFS over a period of ten years. In all that time no one bothered to say "thank you." An industrial leader in America recently wrote that what people want most in life is recognition for work well done—to know that they have played their part well. We ought to learn that in the Church, as we seek to secure more and better leaders. Let your GFS leaders know that you appreciate the good work they are doing. It will help them to do a better job with the girls.

There is a joint committee of the W.A. and GFS, made up of representatives from the two national executive boards. They have found ways of working together on program and organization. One of the unfinished tasks is to find a way of graduating our members when they reach the age of twenty-one or so, into the adult women's program of the Church. It should be our job to see to it that before our GFS girls graduate, they be given a thorough orientation into the different aspects of the women's program so that they may choose what they can do best and where they most will enjoy the fellowship. In this way, we would not lose members and leaders. The Woman's Auxiliary in parishes would understand more clearly and appreciate the contribution of the GFS. We hope the joint national committee will soon give direction on how to accomplish this kind of graduation.

So we end as we began—with the thought of "building." We need your help in the building. The GFS is growing! With the strong support of the women of the Church, we can grow as we should and we can build a GFS fellowship that will be adequate for today.

As Mrs. Hogue, the national executive secretary said in her 1946 report: "Let's work so loyally and devotedly with our girls that to have been a member of the GFS marks a woman as one of the choice spirits of this earth—whether rich or poor—black or white—Indian or Chinese—Japanese or what not. There heritage is there. The soil is there. The seed is planted. Let's cultivate it diligently."

GFS and Community Councils

By

MRS. G. RUSSEL HARGATE

National Chairman of Publicity

A LITTLE girl wept. Anxious counsellors questioned her. "I'm just happy. It's the first time I ever had a bed all to myself," the child explained.

This incident suggests one of the many reasons why the summer camping program for girls at Michigan's GFS Holiday House first attracted community attention and led to its inclusion for a number of years in the Detroit community chest.

Although financial support from the chest has ceased to be necessary, the GFS, through its diocesan board, maintains membership on the community chest-sponsored Council of Social Agencies. Of particular value has been the close working relationship on a professional level between the diocesan GFS representative and the Council's division of group work agencies. Problems, mutual to all youth-serving organizations, such as health standards in summer camps, are discussed freely and solutions sought from the pooled experience of the trained leaders.

In large metropolitan centers like Detroit the correlation between GFS and other community groups is often more satisfactorily carried out on a neighborhood or district level where the parish branch, instead of the diocesan, is the participant. Unification and understanding of each other's activities leads to intelligent and happy program planning that can reach out and meet the needs of countless more children and young people.

During National GFS week a year ago in Elyria, Ohio, the Y-Teen director of the local W.Y.C.A. called together professional and trained volunteer leaders of the Boy and Girl Scouts, Y.M.C.A., Y.W.C.A., public and parochial schools, and GFS. These, together with the community chest executive secretary and representatives of P.T.A., council of Churches and other civic organizations interested in better recreational facilities for youth in their town, agreed to coordinate their activities and to share responsibility for future planning. The Elyria council of youth-serving agencies became a reality, with officers and a simple constitution.

With the cooperation of the public schools' administration and faculty, an intensive questionnaire on leisure-time interests and desires was given to all pupils from sixth grade through high school. Results of this are now being tabulated by members of the council's participating agencies. Evaluation of the findings will determine the real recreational needs of Elyria's youth and will form a sound basis for next steps by the new council.

In contrast to this long-range plan, the Elyria leaders have turned immediate attention to a Teen-age canteen program. A youth council, representative of the entire community, has been formed to function in complete cooperation with the adult group.

Not satisfied to think only in terms of "where can the crowd go tonight," the council is also at work soliciting the city-wide help of Elyrians in sponsoring an institute on human relations to be led by a noted leader of national repute.

Because the Girls' Friendly Society has never been limited by denominational, credal, national or racial boundary lines, its witness in a community may be like the leaven of scripture. Often its voice can be heard in a community council reiterating the query, "Do we mean a swimming pool for all children in our town?" or "Will this canteen welcome all our young people?" Though small in comparative numbers, GFS serves a unique and challenging purpose in community councils.

Senior Members' Clubs

By
MRS. NELSON L. BRANT
Former Diocesan President and Senior Members' Club, Rhode Island, Now President, Senior Members' Club for GFS

AS a member of the GFS for thirty-odd years, I deem it a privilege to write about the present trend of our organization—to develop girls.

I can think of no greater challenge for the older members than to bend every effort to back this new emphasis, even though it has taken me some time to come to realize this. The GFS should be, primarily, for the younger girls—juniors and teen-agers. We older members should step to the side-line and give our younger members the opportunity to have full sway in developing the GFS along modern lines—not forgetting that we had a very strong desire to do the same thing. Youth has always had and will continue to have its own way and ideas; and while we can and must continue to assist them, we can do it in the background as sponsors.

Having served as a branch president as well as diocesan president, I am convinced that we must make the GFS a girls' organization and keep it that way, by expecting our members at the age of twenty-one to graduate into the adult program of the Church. In that way, we can continue our fine work and friendships which have stood the test these many years, and get one hundred per cent behind the GFS—the girls' organization of our Church.

A Word With You

GREETINGS IN THE MARKET PLACE

THE scholarly rector of St. Paul's Church, Paterson, writes to say: "I am disappointed to think that you could write a whole column on the subject of addressing the clergy, without once alluding to our Lord's teaching in Matthew 23, which makes it perfectly clear that it is un-Christian to be called Doctor, Father, or Mister. The correct mode of address for any clergyman is Butch, or Stinky, or Peter or Hugh."

Of course I know he is joshing me, but for the benefit of readers of this column it might be well to state that our Lord was warning his disciples against seeking honor—against wearing clothing which exaggerated their religious superiority and so forth. It is certainly not seeking superiority to be called Mister since that is the common form of address today. As far as Doctor and Father are concerned, it seems to me that it is perfectly justifiable to ask to be called by those titles, provided it is one's office and not one's person that one wishes to have honored.

When I first started my ministry I earned about twenty-five cents an hour as a hospital chaplain. Most of the time I did not feel worth it because when I came into a situation where I hoped to be useful and introduced myself as the Protestant chaplain, many of the patients would look at me in disgust and say: "But you look so young!" One day I ran in to baptize a dying colored child; and the mother, who was a member of a holiness sect, looked at me and said: "Oh Elder, I am so glad you got here in time." Thank goodness she was thinking of the office and not of the officiant. The main point is not what these titles mean to people but what the clergy can make them really mean. Those who insist most are perhaps the ones who make them mean least. To my mind the proudest title that any clergyman ever arrogated to himself was the one used by an early pope: The Servant of the Servants of God.

Please address any correspondent about this column to the writer at 1393 York Avenue, New York 21.

Human Welfare Leader Refused Hearing By Clergymen

Speaking Informally He Declares Different Views Should Be Presented to Have Progress

Edited by Sara Dill

New Orleans (RNS):—The Ministerial Union of this city refused to listen "officially" to a scheduled talk by James A. Dombrowski, Southern Conference for Human Welfare editor, after one of those present accused him of being "identified with Communism in America." Dr. Dumbrowski is a graduate of Union Theological Seminary, is an ordained minister, and was one of the leaders of the Highlander Folk School in Tennessee before taking up his present work.

The clergymen voted 12-11 to adjourn rather than hear Dombrowski when the Rev. Harvey T. Whaley, pastor of St. Charles Avenue Baptist church, protested his proposed address.

Motion to adjourn was protested by the Rev. Dana Dawson, president of the Union, who sought to rule it out of order, and by the Rev. Warner Dubose, pastor of Third Presbyterian Church, who, as program chairman, had invited Dombrowski to speak.

"Their refusal," Dombrowski later stated, "violated some of the deepest principles of the American tradition—freedom of speech and independent inquiry. The ministers accepted a statement making very serious charges against me from one of their number. Yet, although I was present, I was not given an opportunity to answer these charges."

Mr. Whaley, asking for the floor on the basis of personal privilege, said the position represented by Dombrowski was one "of complete antipathy to America; a position which was the complete antithesis of Christianity, and it is an anomaly for anyone holding these views to speak in a Christian assembly. I have strongly protested Dombrowski's appearance before this union. His views are well known and he is clearly identified with Communism in America. There is, therefore, no justification in giving him a hearing in order to ascertain his position."

When permitted to speak "unofficially," Dombrowski said: "It was a very sobering experience we have just passed through. If this is representative of what people are thinking, we are in a very precarious position today. We should encourage rather than discourage the hearing of unorthodox views. I am not a Communist, but if I were one why should you not listen, at least, to what I have to say?

Mrs. Stephen K. Mahon of Toledo, Ohio, is the national chairman of the GFS activities department. She is also the GFS representative on the executive board of the Woman's Auxiliary

"This labeling of dissenters as 'Communists' is part of a witch hunt, which had its counterpart following World War I. Progress can only come when people of different points of view are willing to compare views. Ministers are teachers of youth; yet, obviously, they do not encourage listening to people with whom they do not agree."

Church Meeting

Grand Rapids, Mich.:—Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill will be the speaker at the annual meeting of the Episcopal Churchman's Association which will be held here on September 30th. It is expected that large delegations of men and women will come from every parish in the diocese since it is the Presiding Bishop's first visit to the diocese of Western Michigan.

Clergy Meet

Kent, Conn.:—The Rev. Albert T. Mollegan of Virginia Seminary and the Rev. W. Norman Pittenger of the General Seminary were the headliners at a conference of the clergy held here September 9-11. The conference was designed to help prepare the clergy for the program of evangelism initiated by Bishop Budlong in his address to the diocesan convention in May.

Active in Poland

Warsaw:—The Baptist Church in Poland has organized three health centers for children between the ages of four and twelve, in Radosc, Wisla and Malbork. The children are in the care of trained Polish, Swedish and Norwegian nurses and there is also competent medical supervision. They attend school in the vicinity. Food is obtained from the gardens and farms forming part of the health centers, supplemented by shipments from Denmark, Sweden and Norway.

Goes To Liberia

New York:—The Rev. Seth Carlyle Edwards of Brooklyn has been appointed for missionary service in Liberia. He will go to the field early in 1948, and will probably be on the teaching staff of the Seminary to be opened shortly at Cuttington College.

Mr. Edwards is 42 years old, ordained in 1941. He has a Bachelor's degree with chemistry major, from Morgan College, Baltimore. His degree in Divinity is from Union Theological Seminary, New York, with graduate work at Union, the General Seminary and Columbia University.

Mr. Edwards was for five years assistant director of Wilkogok School. He was curate at the Church of the Crucifixion, New York, for a year and a half, then vicar of the Church of the Redeemer, Oklahoma City, for four years. He was founder and director of Walnut Grove Neighborhood Center, which provides recreation, social case work and remedial and counselling services in an under-privileged area.

Oppose Nationalization

Sydney, Australia (RNS):—Roman Catholic members of the Labor Party in Parliament have been advised by the hierarchy to vote against a proposal to nationalize Australian banks. In a radio broadcast it was suggested that if Catholic members were expelled from the Labor Party for their action they should then form a Christian Democratic Party. Political observers indicated Catholics could influence a bloc of 32 out of 72 caucus votes against the nationalization move.

College Work

Washington:—Miss Hazel King has been appointed secretary of college work for the province of Washington and will work with the colleges and universities in the thirteen dioceses within the province. She has been a teacher in public schools in New York state; was on the staff of the dean of women at Syracuse and was director of admissions at Russell Sage College. She comes to Washington from Columbia, Mo., where she worked with students at the University of Missouri, Stephens Junior College and Christian Junior College.

Want More British

Saskatoon, Canada (RNS):—Adoption by the Dominion government of an immigration policy that would "ensure a well-balanced proportion of British people being brought to Canada," was urged in a resolution adopted by a joint session of the Executive Council and Council for Social Service of the Church of England here.

Bishop R. J. Renison, Moosonee, Ont., said Canada had "lots of room" for immigrants. For 25 years it has been "very difficult" for British people to come to Canada, he said, yet immigrants from other countries have been able to enter without much opposition.

The Church's Council for Social Service recommended that Japanese-Canadians be fairly reimbursed where enforced sale of their proper-

Student Training

New York:—"More than 60 future clergy and women leaders of the Church have recently completed ten weeks of rural field work in various sections of the United States, under the student field service program of the division of domestic missions of the National Council," stated the Rev. Clifford L. Samuelson, national director, in summarizing this newly developed phase of the advance program of rural work in the Church.

The student field service program is set up to provide supervised practical experience and training in town and country work for men and women of our seminaries and training centers. Under this plan, there are three institutes where students work and live in groups—the National Town-Country Church Institute, Roanridge, Parkville, Mo.; the Intercultural Institute, Good Shepherd Mission, Fort Defiance, Ariz.; and the Southern Rural Church Leadership School, Valle Crucis, N. C. There are also several diocesan student training projects which are financially aided through the student field service program. The New England dioceses of Maine, New Hampshire and Western Massachusetts had twenty-three students assigned to student field work. Nine students were placed on individual assignments in Nevada, Oregon, Utah, Montana and Los Angeles. In the diocese of Michigan, primarily under diocesan auspices, but following the general program of the student field service, twenty-five students served.

The summer's work began with general orientation sessions of lectures, directed reading and field trips. In Parkville, these were held in conjunction with the National Episcopal Rural Conference and were attended also by students assigned to the Intercultural Institute and individual assignments. At the Southern Rural Church Leadership School, the sessions were given in cooperation with Presbyterian seminarians at the Warren Wilson Jr.

College, Swannanoa, N. C. The daily schedule varied for each student each day. The general plan was that students would call on families and make a survey of the community for one week; the following week a daily vacation Bible school was conducted by the same students for the children of that area. In the evenings community "fun" nights were held, using both student and local talent. Preaching and assisting in services of churches within a hundred-mile radius, were the Sunday assignments. Each student also performed at least one week's manual labor, either at Roanridge Farm or elsewhere. The same general outline was used in each Institute with such variations as found necessary. For instance, at the Good Shepherd Mission, the students also were given responsibility for the supervision of the forty Navajo orphans living at the mission. Seminaries and Church training centers participating in the student field service program of the National Council included: The General Theological Seminary, New York; Berkeley Divinity School, New Haven, Conn.; Bexley Hall, Gambier, Ohio; Bishop Payne Divinity School, Petersburg, Va.; Church Divinity School of the Pacific, Berkeley, Calif.; Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Mass.; School of Theology of the University of the South; Seabury-Western Theological Seminary, Evanston, Ill.; Virginia Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Va.; St. Margaret's House, Berkeley, Calif.; and Windham House, New York City.

Charles K. Gilbert, followed by greetings from the retired bishop, the Rt. Rev. William T. Manning. The suffragan-bishop elect, Horace W. B. Donegan, will then speak on the evangelical program, followed by the secretary of social service, Leland B. Henry. That evening the retired dean of the General Seminary, H. E. W. Fosbroke, will speak on deepening the spiritual life. On the second day the addresses will be by Rev. Charles H. Cadigan, president of the Church Society for College work, and Mr. Theodor Oxholm who is to talk on the program of the Church.

Clergy Salaries

Saskatoon, Canada (RNS): — An increase in minimum stipends of married clergymen in missionary dioceses to $1,400 a year was urged in a resolution adopted by the general synod of the Church of England in Canada, meeting here. The synod also recommended that missionary dioceses adopt a progressive policy of self-support.

Synod to Meet

Albany, N. Y.:—The synod of the province of New York and New Jersey will be held October 21-22 at Syracuse. Bishop Oldham of Albany will preside as president.

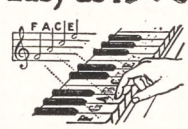
Hate Politicians

Gainesville, Ga.: — The Presbyterian Synod of Georgia has asked its members to repudiate any candidate for political office who employs racial incitement as a campaign issue.

The annual meeting here adopted, without dissent, a report of the Rev. S. A. Cartledge, chairman of the Committee on Social and Moral Welfare, which said:

"Our members oppose the election of any candidate who departs from the principles of our democratic traditions and Christian relations with our brothers in black."

The report stated further that "We believe it is our duty to try to make the teachings of the Word of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ rule in the affairs of men in every relationship of life to help make effective the petition of our Lord's Prayer 'Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven'."



Cartledge, a professor at Columbia Theological Seminary in Decatur, Ga., also urged a strenuous Christian effort in solving problems under the capitalistic system on the basis of Christian principles.

"We believe that abuses have developed on both sides," he said, referring to capital and labor, "and that they must be progressively eliminated so that it will not be necessary for our way of life to succub under a tax from some other competing system."

Gift to Mission

Windsor, Colo.:—The Rev. B. W. Bonell has made a gift of $1,500, and an added sum of $1,200 toward the endowment of St. Alban's mission here. The $1,500 is being used to renovate the rectory which now provides a three room apartment for the vicar and a large room which is being made into a museum for children. It will contain the many curios—coins, fans, hats, costumes—which Mr. Bonell has collected in his world travels.

Discuss Evangelism

Sellersville, Pa.:—About a third of the clergy of the diocese of Pennsylvania met here September 9-12 for a conference on evangelism. Bishop Hart, the leader, declared that any program by the national Church should not be a campaign type of effort but something deep; not a sporadic undertaking but something based on definite convictions and grounded in prayer. From the discussion it was clear that the diocese will do its part for evangelism. Among the various things discussed were house to house visitations; preaching missions; sermon topics.

A laymen's conference on the same topic was held September 12-14 at Quakertown, led by Bishop Remington, with the Rev. John Van der Horst and the Rev. Phillip Fifer assisting as group leaders. There were men present from 35 parishes and missions. The laymen decided that the Church is in need of more adventure and new techniques; that the work of the Church cannot be confined to the clergy; that there is need of more occasions for discussion of the layman's opportunities.

WANTED—Assistant for evangelical parish. Experienced young man preferred. Good salary and modern quarters. Address: Rev. Louis F. Martin, Rector. St. Andrew's Church, 911 Lamar Street, Forth Worth 2, Texas.

MRS. JAMES BOND
Churchwoman of New York

May I congratulate THE WITNESS for the excellent way the controversy over the marriage canons was handled. I had previously read the interpretation of the canons by Bishop Davis but naturally read it with greater care now because of the wide publicity given to the attack by Bishop Manning on two fellow bishops. I was grateful too for the report of the address by Mrs. Grace Overton on the subject of marriage which fit so well into this number of THE WITNESS. It does seem to me that you are doing an increasingly good job and I am constantly hearing good things about the paper.

MR. C. B. LUCAS
Layman of Atlanta, Ga.

Hearing recently of a rector whose parish income had increased 790% in four years—the news so intrigued me I thought you might like such a news item for your readers:

June 30, 1943, Bishop Walker placed a layreader, Mr. William J. Whitfield, in charge of the mission of the Holy Comforter, Atlanta, Ga. In 1944 Mr. Whitfield was ordained deacon and in 1946 advanced to the priesthood. He was then called as rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter. In four years' time—parish receipts have increased 790%—communicants have increased 200%; Sunday School increased 399%; church attendance increased 177%.

As Mr. Whitfield was 61 when he was ordained this record demonstrates the fact that an older man can do good work. Throughout his ministry Mr. Whitfield has adopted the latest ideas in building up his parish. His latest step in educating both adults and children has been to use moving pictures in doing so.

The above record ought to encourage older men to carry on actively for Christ and should inspire young men to press forward more actively in the Master's service.

MRS. JOHN S. MAYER
Churchwoman of Puerto Rico

Your editorial, Worthy of their Hire, dealing with teachers, brings home to a person how careless we are in protecting our children's choicest possession, their education. We spend a lifetime trying to accumulate an estate to leave them but do not watch closely enough the one thing that they never can replace. For sometime I have been trying to promote the idea of a secretary of education in the president's cabinet. Such an official would see to it that each state took the best possible care of its young citizens, whether white or black. He could be some one that the parent teachers association could go to for help and be assured of just treatment. There could be a more liberal use of scholarships. In fact the number of good things that could be accomplished are too numerous to mention; better health programs; regulating of grades so that children changing from one state to another would not lose a year or miss subjects; modernizing text books; supervising expenditures of federal funds so that each state accounts for the money.

For teachers I dream of the time when they will be able to return to their schools for higher degrees of learning without losing their pension status or pay.

DEAN LELAND W. F. STARK

May I commend you most heartily for your sensible and realistic editorials and observations and articles on the new marriage canon. Thev were splendid.

MR. JOHN A. LEWIS
Layman of Brooklyn

Some members of the household have had quite a time washing their disagreements in the secular papers. Who is dishonoring who, and by what methods? When outsiders behold all this whoopla, and read all the nasty remarks, is it any wonder that the Presbyterians and others fight shy of the Episcopal Church?

I have noticed that the former chief-pastor of New York sent his double barreled charges to the Anglo-Catholic mouthpiece and the Southern Churchman, but he refrained from sending your worthy paper a copy. Further on in the public press I read that Brother Manning claimed that there were only two Episcopal Church papers—those mentioned above. I am sure WITNESS editors do not take this slight seriously, taking into consideration the quarter from which it came. In any case I want you to know I am all for THE WITNESS.

Raising Million in Four Hours Approved by Council

A Budget of $3,560,000 Is Approved for 1948
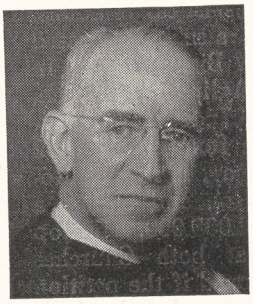
As Well as Plan Presented for Relief Fund

By W. B. Spofford

New York:—A budget of $3,560,000 for 1948 was approved by the National Council, meeting at Church Missions House, September 23-25. It represents an increase of about $173,000 over this year's budget, but is no greater than the budget authorized by General Convention. Of this sum $2,869,000 must come from the gifts of Church people, the balance of $690,000 coming from the United Thank Offering, trust funds and other sources. As required by General Convention, the Council will face the task of presenting a balanced budget at its meeting next February when they will have before them the "promises to pay" of the dioceses.

The sum of $968,105 had been paid in to the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief which is 97% of the $1,000,000 for 1947 authorized by General Convention. Bishop Sherrill expressed confidence that the full amount would be in hand by the end of the year. Of this sum, $686,364 has been disbursed through the Church World Service; $47,000 has been spent on education and promotion; $3,593 had been placed where designated by donors, there is a balance on hand of $203,038. The country to receive the largest amount of aid from Church World Service so far this year is Germany with $1,577,000; China received $917,000; Japan $700,000; Austria, $565,198. The total cash and commodity disbursement of the Service from January 1 to August 31 was $8,243,307.

Plans for next year's campaign for the World Relief Fund, likewise calling for a million dollars, were discussed in detail. Promotional Director Robert D. Jordan presented a plan, which was approved, whereby an attempt will be made to collect the entire million in four hours. A special service will be prepared for February 29th. Radio time will be bought on a nationwide network. Arrangements will be made to have the 11:30 to 11:45 time in each of the four time zones. Churches throughout the country will then have a radio and a loud speaker installed. "At exactly the right time, the switch would be turned on and the Presiding Bishop would talk to the people of the Episcopal Church while they are worshipping in their own churches all over the country," Mr. Jordan told the Council. "Following this talk, the rector immediately would make his short talk on local responsibility and then an offering would be taken." Mr. Jordon expressed the opinion that "it will startle and I believe it will thrill our people to know that we are going to do something which has never been done before."



There were reports from the various departments of the Council, with special stress on Christian Education where various plans were announced by the in-coming director, the Rev. John Heuss. Also the division of Social Relations, formerly a division of the Home Department, has been restored to departmental status. It is now preparing seven studies, principally of institutions, which will soon come out as a booklet. Bishop Oliver Hart of Pennsylvania reported as the chairman of the army and navy division and stressed the need for a suffragan bishop in charge of chaplains. This proposal was approved at last General Convention but cannot go into effect until it passes a second reading at the 1949 Convention. Bishop Hart pointed out that there will be a greatly increased need for chaplains if universal military training becomes law.

A permanent John W. Wood Memorial Fund has been set up, gifts to which will be used for missions.

The Presiding Bishop announced that he and his family are now in residence at Seabury House, new headquarters at Greenwich, Conn., and that Bishop Lawrence of Western Massachusetts and other members of the Lawrence family are giving the chapel as a memorial to the late Bishop William Lawrence. The entire staff of the Church Missions House are to have an outing at Seabury House this Saturday as guests of Bishop and Mrs. Sherrill. Also the December meeting of the National Council will be held there.

BISHOP GILBERT URGES REVISION OF OPA

New York:—Bishop Charles K. Gilbert of New York got six column headlines in New York newspapers last week for appearing before a committee of Congress which is holding hearings on the high cost of living. He declared that one-third of the city's infants are underfed and that "while I believe in a free economy, I feel compelled to advocate the restoration of OPA." He added that "a good deal could be said of the influence of the desire for high profits on production, which should be a matter of grave concern to Congress and the administration. We have to find a way to encourage full-scale production and if high profits interfere, I believe, in all fairness, that something should be done about it."

YOUTH SPONSOR WORKSHOP

Atlanta: — The Young People's Service League of the Incarnation, here, has put aside its regular Sunday meeting through October 12 in order to sponsor a youth workshop, led by members of the diocesan youth commission. They will learn how to stage panel discussions, debates, quiz programs, the showing of movies, worship services.

CLARENCE HORNER IS HONORED

Providence: — About a thousand parishioners of Grace Church attended a reception in honor of the Rev. and Mrs. Clarence H. Horner on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of his rectorship. Gratitude was expressed for the rector's outstanding leadership, with the senior warden, A. Livingston Kelley, stating that "the reception was a spontaneous expression of goodwill and affection for the 'team' which has guided and served Grace Church during the last ten years."

There were a number of fine presents, including a high-class automobile.

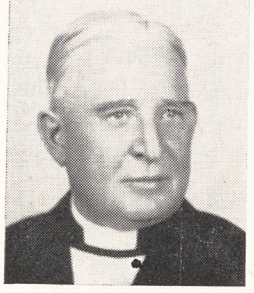
FILIPINO CHURCH SEEKS UNION

Manila:—The Filipino Aglipayan Church has petitioned the Episcopal Church for a limited form of union. Bishop Binstead states that the proposal provides for Episcopal consecration to Aglipayan bishops. The petition has been placed before Presiding Bishop Sherrill who has stated that it will first be submitted to the committee on ecclesiastical relations. The proposal will also be discussed when the House of Bishops meets in November. The Aglipayan Church, also known as the Independent Filipino Church, was founded in 1902 by Gregorio Aglipay, a former Roman Catholic priest, and claims a membership of 2,000,000. Bishop Binstead said that both Churches would be strengthened if the petition is granted but stresses that the Aglipayan Church would maintain its independence. "It is conceivable," he added, "that after some years such action as we take now may lead to complete union of the two Churches."

Difficulty over Episcopal consecrations was one reason which led the Aglipayan Church to seek union with the Episcopal Church, Bishop de Los Reyes told a congregation in the wooden Aglipayan cathedral located a few hundred yards behind the historic Santo Tomas concentration camp. Bishop de Los Reyes also said the supreme council of the Aglipayan Church had drawn up a declaration of faith in August setting forth its belief in the Holy Trinity, and clarifying the Church's teachings on other doctrinal matters. One reason for this declaration, he said, was the erroneous belief that the Church had swung toward Unitarianism. He asserted that "never at any time did more than five per cent of Aglipayans depart from the Trinitarian faith in which they had been grounded in youth by the Roman Catholic Church.

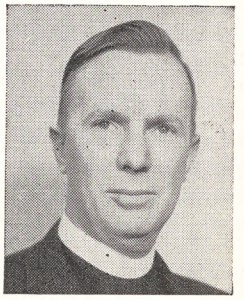
Bishop de Los Reyes declared the Church has a Book of Offices which would satisfy Episcopal Church requirements. However, he added, it is not satisfactory for use by both clergy and laity, and hence the Aglipayan bishops have asked permission to use the Episcopal Book of Common Prayer as their official Prayer Book, with some minor changes making it adaptable for use in the Philippines.

THE CHURCH TAKES A STAND



Ridley Park, Pa.:—There has been a bit of a tempest here because the rector and vestry of Christ Church allowed rooms adjoining the church to be used for voting in a recent election. They were attacked in the correspondents' columns of the local paper, the charge being that by so doing they were "dragging the House of God down into the filth and mire of Delaware County politics." This brought a reply from General William G. Price Jr., who stated that he voted in the rooms of the church "and I was particularly impressed by the quiet, dignified manner in which the members of all political parties present conducted their work." The attack also brought a vigorous letter to the editor from the rector, the Rev. Albert O. Judd, who stated that the church rooms were "the only public building in the precinct. Moreover it is our belief and practice that whatever is proper for decent-living Christian people to participate in, is proper to have a place in our social rooms adjoining the church. We have faith in democracy; we have faith in our community and its people and believe they know how to conduct themselves with Christian decency when they exercise their sacred right of franchise. We have faith in ourselves that neither we nor our house of worship will be sullied by people using our social rooms as the place to choose who will govern them."

It is reported that Bishop Hart of Pennsylvania also received letters suggesting that "possibly you may see fit to discipline the rector of Christ Church." Instead Bishop Hart wrote to the vestry of Ridley Park commending them for using their parish house for a voting place. When THE WITNESS asked him for further comment Bishop Hart merely stated that "It is a tempest in a teapot but it does indicate a very queer point of view that some people have about the relationship between the Church and public life."



HOUSE OF BISHOPS TO MEET

Winston-Salem, N. C.: — The House of Bishops will meet here at St. Paul's, November 4-7. Resignations of the bishops of Alaska, Hankow, New Hampshire, Western North Carolina and the suffragan bishop of Chicago will be acted upon, with an election likely for Alaska. Bishop Zeigler of Wyoming has also asked for a suffragan and if approved an election for that office will probably take place. There will be a report from a special committee on procedure under the marriage canons, and there will be discussion of the agenda of the Lambeth Conference of 1948; the proposed program of evangelism; recruiting for the ministry; the psychiatric examination of candidates for the ministry.

A highlight of the meeting will be two lectures by the Rev. Hughell E. W. Fosbroke, former dean of General Seminary, and an address by the Rev. Samuel M. Cavert, director of the Federal Council of Churches, on the World Council of Churches.

BISHOPS IN THE NEWS: Bishop Brown of Southern Virginia and Bishop Goodwin of Virginia will be leaders at the conference of Negro Churchmen in Richmond next week: Bishop Carruthers of South Carolina was a leader at a clergy conference of his clergy

Tried Methods of Education Presented By Rector

Adults Encouraged to Read Religious Books And Children Given Instruction by Prones

By William Paul Barnds
Rector of St. Matthew's Church

Lincoln, Neb.:—It is quite generally agreed throughout the Church that we need more and better religious education. There are few who would deny the fact that our church schools need to be much better than they are, and also that there are many adults in the Church who know pitifully little of the basic doctrines of the faith, the simple facts of Church history, and even of how to find their way through the Prayer Book in public worship. There is among many of our people a sad lack of knowledge of the Bible.

It is easy enough to analyze the situation and to bewail it. It is also important to set up commissions and committees to study the situation and devise definite methods for improving the situation. Meanwhile, we must try to make what improvement when and however we can.

The purpose of this report is to share with any interested persons a method which we have used with some apparent success at St. Matthew's. It is only a partial answer to the problem, but, at any rate it is that. Back of the method is the conviction that while we cannot solve the whole problem right now, and while some day a better solution may be found, yet for the present we must do something instead of just lamenting a situation.

We have in the parish a literature committee. It is composed of persons who are interested in Church literature and who wish others to be interested. Some of the members are themselves experienced and qualified educators. The committee meets monthly. At these meetings various pamphlets and books are discussed which might be of use to the parishioners generally. A small parish library is maintained, and an effort is made to keep the books live and moving. In other words, we do not welcome discarded books from private libraries unless the books fit our purpose. The parish library is not a dumping ground for cast-off books.

From time to time a brief book review of some book in the library appears in the parish bulletin. These reviews are written by members of the literature committee or by other members of the parish. This practice itself encourages reading, certainly on the part of the reviewers, and possibly on the part of some others. For example, the bulletin has recently carried reviews of "Jesus in the World's Literature," "An American Cloister," and "How To Read The Bible."

A short list of books for summer reading is publicized. There are fourteen in the list for this past summer. They are grouped under six headings. The purpose in keeping the list small is that a person is more apt to read from a short list than from a long one. I am confident that more people are reading Church books than would be reading them if we did not use these simple devices.

We have made some strides in Bible reading also. The rector and the literature committee make a Scripture assignment to the whole parish for a given period. Sometimes it is referred to as "The Bible Book-of-the-month." Usually I preach on the book assigned some time during the month, generally near the last of the month, so that those who really are reading the book will have some background for the sermon and that those who have not yet started to read it may be encouraged to do so before the month is over. For example, the people were asked to read Proverbs during February. In April they were asked to read the Johannine Epistles and Jude. During the summer they are asked to read the Psalms. Sometimes the rector prepares a simple outline of the book to read, with suggestions for understanding it. These are distributed to the parishioners. To some of the books we secure pocket editions from the American Bible Society. People are encouraged to carry these in their pockets or purses and read as they have opportunity. I am very sure that many parishioners do not read the assignments, but I feel equally sure that more people are reading the Bible because of these methods than if we did not use the plan.

Another device which we use is the prone. About two years ago I was asking the Church School children some simple questions about Whitsunday. Either they didn't know the answers or didn't think of them, or didn't speak up, or something! At any rate, I determined that something must be done, and right away. So I set about to prepare some prones. A prone is a brief instruction. The plan we use is as follows: I have mimeographed on a half sheet of paper a brief instruction of a few paragraphs on some Church teaching. On the back of the sheet there are questions based on the instruction. The answers are given. Families are asked to discuss these questions together. In addition to the questions and answers there are some thought questions. In the Church School I take a few minutes for a quick review of the questions on the previous week's prone before giving the new instruction. Then I take a few minutes and give the instruction extemporaneously which is on the mimeographed prone. At the end of the Church School the children are given the prone to take home with them. The prone is in addition to the regular Church School classes. Sometimes the subject matter of a prone is sent out in the parish paper. Again, this is just one simple device to meet a need. It does not work 100%, but it does help. Several of the clergy in the diocese use these prones. We simply mimeograph enough extra and mail them out to those who desire them, at a nominal cost. Samples of some of the subjects are: "The Church Colors," "What Is a Sacrament?", "The Church's Books," "Getting Ready For Lent," and "St. Paul."

The field of Christian education is a large one and holds a great challenge. We must not be so overwhelmed by the magnitude of the task that we omit to do certain simple things to meet actual parochial needs. Maybe these methods will fit the need of some other parishes. If so, I am glad.

be given by Mr. Choy, who is a member of the Bishop's council of advice, and a communicant of St. Stephen's. The Bishop points out that this gift is another evidence of the zeal and generosity of our Chinese Christians in Manila.

IRANIAN SOLDIERS STAND BY

Stockton, Calif.: — Practically every bishop of the Episcopal Church has signed a letter to President Truman, released on September 27 by Bishop Sumner Walters of San Joaquin, protesting against the slaughter of Christians in Assyria. The protest states that it went on under the eyes of the Iranian military forces. The protest was as follows:

"Mar Shimun, the Patriarch of the Church of the East and of the Assyrian Nation, together with the Assyrian National Federation, have proof that 14 Assyrian villages were looted and burned, many Christians tortured and killed in cold blood, and numbers of women, young girls and children assaulted and raped under the eyes of the Iranian Military Forces in the Azerbaijan District of Iran, December, 1946-February, 1947. We the undersigned, strongly urge your Excellency to bring this matter to the attention of the Department of State and our delegate to the United Nations, with a view of bringing pressure on the Iranian Government to stop atrocities against Christian Assyrians and to provide temporary relief measures until a final solution is found to their problem by the United Nations and that an impartial commission be appointed to investigate the matter."

PROTEST ABOUT GENERAL LEE

Chicago:—Clifford L. Terry, vestryman of St. Luke's, Evanston, and president of the Catholic Club of Chicago, has written to the Presiding Bishop protesting against the possible appointment of General C. H. Lee, former commander of American forces in Italy, as a lay worker of the Church. General Lee has been under fire for alleged mistreatment of enlisted men, and recently announced that he planned to offer his services to the Church. Mr. Terry's letter states: "General Lee, to my mind, is totally unfit for so important a work. He has shown himself not to know the meaning of the word humility and his actions toward all men below the rank of second lieutenant have denoted a class consciousness positively revolting to churchmen."

If You Remain Silent

HOWARD FAST, whose article is featured in this number, should need no introduction to WITNESS readers since he is one of America's foremost novelists, the author of Freedom Road, Citizen Tom Paine and other best sellers.

When sentence was about to be imposed upon him, he asked permission of Judge Richard Keech to read a statement in open court. This was denied. The statement was as follows: "My work with the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee has been, I think, the best kind of work men may aspire to, the highest kind—to alleviate suffering, to lessen distress, to make the sick well and the starving whole, and to save life. And the very fact that this work was directed toward those earliest of gallant fighters against fascism, the Spanish Republicans, should make it all the more precious in the sight of good men. If I have erred, it was in giving too little, not too much.

"I cannot conceive of this as a crime. I cannot find anything about our Committee that would make it un-American, that brings it into the scope of the Wood-Rankin Committee's investigation. Quite to the contrary, it seems to me that such work as we do expresses the best, the most generous and humanitarian qualities of the American people.

"I was asked by the Wood-Rankin Committee to present to them books and lists of names. Among those names were thousands of our contributors, people who had unselfishly given to our cause.

"Among those names were those of Spanish Republican fighters whom we had helped, some of them back in Spain now, some of them with families in Spain. I did not have custody of these records and lists, but, even if I had, how could I turn them over to a group with such a record for persecution and infamy?

"I am a writer. All my work, from the time I first set pen to paper, stands as a record of service and love for this country of mine. I am incapable—and I hope I may be incapable to the day I die—of taking any action against the United States of America which would harm her in the slightest way.

"I have been found guilty of contempt of Congress. But, in my conscience, I have violated no law of the United States. Rather have I acted in the only fashion that an American might have acted in such a situation. If the court feels that I have defied a Committee of our Congress, I can only repeat what the Washington Post said, editorially, of that Committee, that: 'Its antics have tended to weaken respect for the investigatory functions of the Congress and even the Congress itself. Indeed it has invited and provoked, if it has not justified, contempt as an expression of traditional American independence and self-respect.'"

A committee of citizens has been organized, under the chairmanship of another distinguished author, Vincent Sheean, to raise funds to carry this fight to higher courts. If there are those among our readers who desire to help these eleven anti-fascists any donations sent to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y. will be placed in the hands of this committee.

"QUOTES"

WE HAVE got to make not merely a peace but a peace that will last, and a peace in which the larger nations will work absolutely in unison in preventing war by force. But the four of us have to be friends, conferring all the time—getting to know each other. It is nothing new, this close relationship between the British Empire and the United States. This great friendship between the Russian people and the American people—that is new. Let's hang on to both friendships and by spreading that spirit around the world, we may have a peaceful period for our grandchildren to grow up in.

—The late President Roosevelt, speaking informally before the Dumbarton Oaks Conference, 1944

The Bible On Mr. Bevin

COMMENTATORS and editorial writers were given a rich feast by Ernest Bevin, Britain's foreign minister. They arose from it with great belchings. Mr. Bevin suggests that our gold, buried at Fort Knox, should be disinterred and distributed to the world. The humorist, Senator Ford, summarized the speech by saying that Bevin "wants our Knox to be his boost." From the outcries attending the whole matter, we would gather that Mr. Bevin is preaching economic heresy. We do not pretend to understand the whole economic aspects of gold, and take refuge in the quotation of an expert from South Africa, that the relation of gold to the world's economy is a great mystery which no one really can comprehend. But there are some factors in the situation that are not hidden. In a poker game when one person gets possession of all the chips, there are two alternatives. Either the game ends, or there is a redistribution of the chips, and play continues. There is some scriptural backing for the latter method. In the 25th chapter of Leviticus, there is commanded a year of Jubilee. At that time there was a levelling of economic possessions in accordance with need. It is true that such a system was for a simple agricultural society. But in One World, when one nation has managed to achieve possession of so large a proportion of the resources as this nation has, we might get some direction from the Bible. The burden of this particular chapter comes out of the faith that both freedom and all the good things of the earth have been given by God to the children of Israel, and that possession in perpetuity of these things by any man is contrary to the will of God (verses 23 and 38). It also states that "if thy brother be waxen poor, then thou shalt relieve him; yea though he be a stranger or a sojourner" (verse 35), and in doing this no usury nor increase shall be taken from him. A redistribution of means and resources in the simple way that Mr. Bevin proposes may be economic heresy. But before we start throwing around that adjective "godless," commentators and editorial writers could pause and meditate on what is the procedure to be followed by the "God-fearing" in the Book of Leviticus.

If You Remain Silent

American Novelist

WHEN eleven Board members of the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee were given prison sentences of from three to six months, there were verying reactions in this America of ours. Progressives seemed to have been stunned into silence; reactionaries gloated, and through their press—which means most of America's press—told the nation what they chose to tell.

Apart from myself, these eleven include Edward K. Barsky, internationally known surgeon, head of all volunteer hospitals in Spain during the Anti-Franco War; Louis Miller and Jacob Auslander, both physicians; Richard Lyman Bradley, professor of Teutonic languages and department head at New York University; Charlotte Stern, and James Lustig, labor leaders; Ruth Leider and Harry Justiz, lawyers; Manuel Maganna, business man; and Midge Chodorov, housewife.

The incident was unprecedented. Never before had eleven such well-known people — men and women whose work and record is known to thousands—been framed on so slim and shoddy a basis. These eleven people were sentenced to jail because they are anti-fascists; for that reason, and for no other reason.

As one of them, I would like to tell our story. It is not a complicated story, and it will not take much telling. But it is a very important story—one of the most important stories of these times for all Americans who believe in freedom and democracy.

The people I listed above are the Board of the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee. For five years we have been engaged in raising and dispensing funds for relief of Spanish Republicans, those first fighters against fascism, who have suffered so long and so grievously. It has been estimated that during this time we have saved thousands of lives; we are very proud of that.

During the war years, we were a licensed relief agency, under the supervision of the President's War Relief Board. Our books were examined by the Treasury Department, who extend to us a tax-exempt status.

Most of our funds are dispensed by the Unitarian Service Committee, who supervise our hospitals in Southern France. We have built hospitals and established orphanges; no Spaniard who came to us was turned away. Ours was, and is, a work of mercy, to shelter the homeless, to feed the hungry, and to make the sick whole.

But because we helped those who fought Franco, the Un-American Committee, the infamous Wood-Rankin Committee of the House of Representatives (now the Thomas-Rankin Committee), decided to smash us. They adopted a very simple method: they asked us to produce all our books, records, and lists of names.

We have two lists in our office. We have a list of our contributors, more than twenty thousand in number, and we have a list of Spaniards we have helped, some in France, some in Portugal, some in the Spanish Underground.

It is not difficult to guess what would have happened if we had turned over these lists to that shameful and unspeakable body, the House Un-American Committee. The twenty thousand contributors would have become their prey for future persecution. And, more importantly, we had good reason to believe that, if the Wood-Rankin Un-American Committee obtained the names of the Spaniards we had aided, those names might not remain unknown to the Franco Government.

It is plain, then, that they asked us an impossible thing. One cannot turn hangman and informer at the behest of a miserable group, of whom Henry A. Wallace said:

"I speak of only one source of shame to decent Americans who want their country to be admired by the world. I mean the group of bigots known as the Dies Committee—then the Rankin Committee, and now the Thomas Committee—three names for fascists the world over to roll on their tongues with pride."

WE ARE not heroes, not by any means. We simply did what any decent, self-respecting Americans would have done. We told the custodian of our records, Helen Reed Bryan, our executive secretary, to take all measures to protect our books within the limits of the law. Then we went to Washington in answer to the subpoenas served upon us by the Un-American Committee.

For a whole day, behind locked doors, we were grilled, threatened, insulted and vilified. We answered all questions. But we were firm on one matter—we would not be bludgeoned and threatened into surrendering our lists. Any fair-minded body of American citizens could come to our offices and see what they wished; we made that offer and we make it today. But not the Un-American Committee.

It surprise neither us nor anyone else that we were cited for contempt of Congress. A citation for contempt by the Un-American Committee has become a badge of honor for those who believe in America and American principles.

But we were not brought to trial at that time, a year and a half ago, when we were cited. We were brought to trial only when the anti-progressive witch-hunt reached its climax. A charge of criminal conspiracy was trumped up against us, but was dropped when no evidence could be presented. When we were found guilty of contempt, unprecedented prison sentences were handed out to us.

When the sentences were given, eight column heads splashed across every Washington, D.C., newspaper. Without exception, the headlines read:

11 ANTI-FASCISTS JAILED

So it was that in July of 1947, we tasted the special rewards our government reserves for those who are guilty of hating fascism, of hating injustice and wrong.

It is important for you to understand that we are neither heroes nor martyrs. We are eleven Americans who believe in the basic principles upon which America was built. Because we believe in these principles, we are going to jail.

It is not the first time that men and women who hate injustice and wrong are imprisoned. In Germany and Italy and Japan, this same thing happened to thousands and tens of thousands. But now it is happening here—in these United States of America.

Long ago, at a time when Americans had not yet forgotten 1776, a man called Henry Thoreau was sent to Concord Jail because he would not pay taxes to a government that engaged in an unjust war against Mexico. He was standing at the prison window, when Ralph Waldo Emerson came down the street.

"Henry, what are you doing in there?" Emerson asked.

"What are you doing out there?" Thoreau demanded.

Today, we can ask: "Why are you silent—you out there?"

It is later than you think. Already, you live in a country where anti-fascism is a crime. Must we go through hell again, see the last vestige of liberty outlawed, freedom exiled? Or will you turn this case of the eleven into the worst boomerang our native fascists ever loosed?

In this land of ours, there is nothing stronger than the voice of a free American. Use that voice while you still remain free. Washington, D.C., is not as far off as Berlin or Madrid. If you speak up, loud and clear, you will be heard.

If you remain silent, God help us all.

Are Missionaries People?

By

CHARLES A. HIGGINS
Rector of St. Alban's, Waco, Texas

NEW officers at national headquarters are expected to take over direction of the Church's overseas empire with the coming of the New Year. Since the new head, Bishop Bentley, has had many years of experience in a missionary district outside the continental United States we may confidently look for constructive changes in the policies of this important department of Church work. Bishop Bentley will certainly have a high regard for the individual overseas worker. The days when missionaries will be referred to by the highest officers of the Church as "Susie Q" and "Bishop Screwball" are numbered.

At the recent consecration of a bishop the preacher warned against a disease called "episcopitis." In its most virulent form, this disease has infected the minds of National Council officers who have not even received the benediction of Episcopal consecration. Signs of the contagion were even noticed recently in one of their typists who remarked to a friend, "Missionary Bishops? What of them? I have a dozen tied to my little finger!"

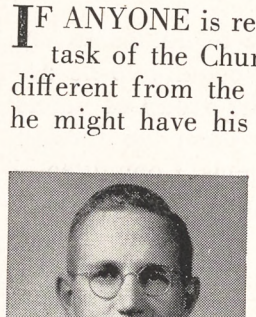
Recently a man who has been serving our nation overseas returned home on furlough. When he reported to national headquarters, in this case the Pentagon at Washington, he was greeted by an officer assigned to look after his needs and given a list of his appointments with some of the high ranking officers in the army. Why? They wanted his first-hand information about conditions in a small South American country.

Picture the Church's counterpart returning home on furlough. He too is brimful of information and he has the naive notion that someone at national headquarters will be interested. So he enters the building at 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City, and finds his way to the desk of a typist on the fourth floor. There he is told that the chief is much too busy, that the assistant is out of town, but that Joe will see him in a few minutes. (Joe is a sort of office boy who has no authority beyond the purchase of steamship and rail tickets.) In a little while Joe appears with the rail tickets in hand and another frustrated missionary is sent on his way with an affectionate slap on the back.

Of course, this is an exaggeration! It is not! It happens all the time. During the war period several missionaries known to the writer returned home from parts of the world that were more remote than ever because of curtailed communications. Before they left their ships some of them were asked to go to Washington to confer with officials in the government. One veteran missionary, who should have known better, stayed an extra day in New York in order to tell his story to someone in authority at "281." He had scarcely begun when the officer informed him that he already knew more about the matter under discussion than the missionary could possibly know and indicated his desire to end the conference.

This illustrates an attitude that has built up barriers between missionaries and their helpers at home. The party line was stated concisely by an officer at a recent meeting of the National Council when he asked: "Why let the people out there decide?" The idea is: Officers of the National Council, sitting in their New York offices, can make better judgments about conditions in distant lands than our representatives on the spot, partly because the officers have superior intelligence, but also because, in their opinion, missionaries are such nitwits.



Strategy and Tactics

by

FRANCIS O. AYRES
Rector of St. John's, Waterbury, Conn.

FOR THE PARISH

IF ANYONE is resting under the illusion that the task of the Church here in the United States is different from the task of the Church in Europe, he might have his eyes opened by reading a remarkable report to the World Council of Churches, written by Dr. W. A. Visser 't Hooft and entitled "The Nature and Scope of the Reconstruction Task." That Dr. Visser 't Hooft should have written an unusually shrewd analysis of the Church in Europe was to be expected: the surprising thing is that what he writes could have been written about our task here. It is, no doubt, true that the disintegration of human life is more marked in Europe than it is here but this fact is in large part responsible for our false sense of security.

Unfortunately the report, published by the World Council is now out-of-print. Obviously this column will not contain the full report. I do want, however, to quote some excerpts and I have a few mimeographed copies which I will mail on request while they last.

Dr. Visser 't Hooft analyses the task under four different heads:

"1. Christian reconstruction means to help the Churches to rebuild the parish

"a. The present situation

"In the Churches which have been engaged in the great struggle against the pagan forces the expression 'rebuilding the parish' (Gemeindeaufbau) has taken on very deep significance. They mean by it especially three things. First of all, to help each parish or congregation to overcome the spirit of bourgeois secularism and to rediscover its specific calling as part of the body of Christ. This is the most difficult and intangible part of the task. It means nothing less than helping the parishes to realize anew the fundamental difference between the Church of Christ and an association to promote the religious interests of its members. It means to help them to become confessing Churches which do not hide themselves behind their historic confessions of faith or cease altogether to make clear where they stand, but which confess their faith in terms of present-day decisions. In short, it means the liberation of the parishes from the routine in their spiritual life and from the worldliness in their organizational forms, and their transformation into vital centres of Christian faith and witness.

"In the second place, rebuilding the parish is to mobilize the lay-forces and to help them to take a full, active share in the life and tasks of the parish. The diversity of ministries is to be recognized and the so-called lay-ministries are to be given their fully recognized status in the Church. The various Christian movements which have grown up outside the parish are to find their home and centre in the parish itself.

"In the third place, rebuilding the parish means to create real fellowship among the parish members. The destructive individualism of our age is to be overcome and the parish is once more to become a real community which accompanies its members in all their activities and shapes their life in all its expressions.

"b. Our task

"To help in the rebuilding of parish life in the above-mentioned sense means to make the spiritual life of the parish the main objective of all reconstruction activities. It means to put the whole emphasis on the spiritual realities as they become incarnate in persons rather than on organization, on buildings, etc. It means to support those who are engaged in the patient, long-range task of rebuilding the Church rather than those who are working for quick visible results. It means to encourage plans which show Christian imagination and point toward the renewal of the Church rather than plans which aim only at the restoration of the pre-war situation.

"The specific help which can be given through the ecumenical reconstruction work is the creation of training centres for lay-workers. The process of mobilization can only succeed if the number of lay-workers who are to perform the various ministries in the parish can be vastly increased and if these workers get a thorough training in such subjects as knowledge of the Bible, Christian doctrine, modern thought, youth leadership, church organization, etc.

"2. Christian reconstruction means to help the Churches to fulfil their evangelistic task.

"3. Christian reconstruction means to help the Churches to rethink their message for the world.

"a. The present situation

"During the years of struggle the Churches have come to realize acutely that the secularization and indeed the paganization of society is not in the last place due to the fact that they had 'ceased to give form to life,' and particularly that they had ceased to exert creative influence in the realm of thought. Christian thinking had for so long been characterized by a purely defensive and apologetic attitude by attempts to adapt Christianity to secular norms or by an esoteric concentration on the problems which concern the faculty of theology that it had no longer a clear word for the life of culture, of the state, of society at large. And the attempts to elaborate the bases of a Christian critique of modern trends of thought and of a fundamentally Biblical ethic for modern conditions which were made in small groups here and there did not affect the life of the Church as a whole. The ecumenical conferences and the study work of the ecumenical movement never touched more than a relatively small number of Christian leaders.

"But now the Churches have been forced to take the dechristianization of the modern world and their own responsibility for that process seriously. They have seen that the fruits of the anarchy of thought is the anarchy of life. And they are at last getting ready to admit that it is no luxury to give time and energy to the thinking through of the bearing of Christian truth on all realms of human endeavour.

"There is today in the Continental Churches, particularly among the younger intellectuals, a remarkable demand for an integrated Christian outlook on life. They are no longer willing to accept a double life and a double truth—one for their religious life and one for their professional life. They are often inclined to underestimate the immense difficulties involved in restoring the broken unity between faith and culture, but their demand is fundamentally sound. The warning which these years of crisis have given us, namely that if the Church remains apart from the common life, the common life will be shaped according to un-Christian or anti-Christian principles, must not be forgotten and must be acted upon before it is too late.

"b. Our task

"The task of demonstrating the relevance of the Christian message to the whole of life cannot be accomplished in a short while. It is a task of many generations. Perhaps our generation can only make a very modest beginning. But that beginning should be made. And it should consist first of all in thorough common study.

"To promote common study means in this connection two things:—first of all, to get Christian thinkers to overcome their individualism, to bring them to the point where they are truly concerned about the working out of the message of the Christian community and not merely about the elaboration of their own distinctive and original points of view.

"To promote common study means, in the second place, to get theologians and lay-thinkers or lay-specialists to think and work together. No real impact of the Christian message on the scientific, political, or social realms is possible as long as the theologians remain out of touch with the present problems arising in these realms, and as long as Christians engaged in their respective callings are not helped in getting a solid and theologically sound foundation on which they can build. Small groups in many Churches and the study work of the ecumenical movement have made a promising beginning in this connection, but the main task is yet to be accomplished.

"4. Christian reconstruction means to help the Churches to become the Ecumenical Church."

The proposal with which Dr. Visser 't Hooft concludes his report is a most interesting one. I will discuss it in a later column.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

THE TRAIN on which I commute daily has a car on the tail end. There are red signs in a couple of the windows: "Business Men's Club." There are covers on the seats; little screens in the windows to keep out the bugs and cinders; electric fans at either end, and since this "club" is strictly a stag affair, the women's toilet now has an icebox so that the tired businessmen may refresh themselves on the way home with a bottle or two of beer. There is another advantage in belonging to this "club," membership, $5 a year: you are sure of a seat on these hot summer days when the train is apt to be crowded with people going to the shore for a holiday. Further, since a number of the resorts on the line are predominately Jewish, membership in the "club" saves you from riding with "the stinking Kikes"—at least so I was told when my membership was solicited.

I rode in the "club" the other day. The train was jammed so the conductor sent a couple of us back there where there were vacant seats. My fellow-traveller (no reference to ideology) took a seat beside one of the "club" members; I took another. Whereupon the president of the "club" whom I knew rather well, came to welcome me. "Reverend, it's nice to have you ride with us. Come in anytime." (Place under heading: Benefits of Clergy). "But is the other fellow a friend of yours? If he is it is OK, but you know we can't have any chisseling." I replied that the conductor had sent us back because there were no seats ahead, and I doubted if either of us would crash their "club" under normal circumstances.

ONE OF the members of the "club" is soon to be married. He has lived in his little community for about five years. During that time neither he nor any of his rather large family have attended even one service in the parish church. His bride has lived in the town even longer. She was baptised in the parish church as an infant. She hasn't been inside since. But they came to me the other day to say that they wanted their wedding to be in "the darling little church." Not only that. The bride had a relative—a Methodist, I think she said—who had a friend who was an Episcopalian and who knew the Bishop. "We think it would be nice to have the Bishop perform the wedding. Of course we would want you to assist. It would make the whole affair so much more impressive and pretty."

When I asked why they wanted to be married in church according to the Form of Solemnization of Matrimony of the Episcopal Church, they stared at me as though I had suddenly lost my mind. It was all so obvious: a beautiful white colonial church; candles; the altar banked with flowers; white ribbons reserving pews for the family; ushers in stripped pants and cutaways and carnations; a Bishop in his goreous vestments, assisted by the rector in his surplice and white stole—oh yes, and a long rug down the center aisle so the bride won't soil the train of her wedding gown—that is if the church has a long rug: if not perhaps the church will be kind enough to borrow or rent one somewhere.

I didn't use the word "chisselers" of course. I was polite. But I got it across I think that two people who never have attended church and never intend to do so, are making a mockery of the Church and its service of Holy Matrimony under such circumstances. "We are not exclusive in the sense that a club is—even one like the 'Business Men's Club' on the 5:18. But we do have certain standards for our members and we do not like to ask two people to vow to do their best to live up to standards which, by past performance, they obviously do not accept. So why not a wedding at the home of the bride. You can get a nice dignified justice-of-the-peace. Or if you like I will perform the ceremony, not as a priest, but as a civic servant."

They didn't take to the idea. I'm not sure, but I gathered that they are to see their Methodist relative, who has an Episcopal friend who knows the Bishop, to have her lodge a complaint against me with his Lordship.

As they say over the radio: "Any similarity to persons, either living or dead, is merely coincidental."

Council Declares That Fear Is Peril to Peace

We Are Urged to Eliminate Over-Indulgence And Waste as a Means of Aiding Starving

Edited by Sara Dill

New York (RNS): — Americans were urged to eliminate "waste and over-indulgence" as a means of meeting the "overseas food crisis this winter," in a statement released by the Federal Council of Churches.

The statement, on "The Churches and World Order," called for a renewed dedication to the purposes of the United Nations and appealed to the American people to be "willing to take far-sighted and sacrificial risks for peace, as they have been willing to take calculated risks in time of war."

Emphasizing that fear is perhaps the greatest peril to peace, the statement asserted that "the growing threats to security, heightened by the permanent military insecurity of this atomic age, lead more and more to a panic psychology."

"Times of insecurity and fear are crucial tests of character and make spiritual stability supremely important," the message added.

"The very lack of any adequate defense against the new weapons of destruction compels the world to rest its hope on the development of integrity, cooperation and mutual trust among the peoples. This hope is more surely grounded in the Christian faith and for its realization the Churches have a direct and clear responsibility."

The statement, issued through the Council's department of International Justice and Good Will, is intended for use by Churches on world order day, October 26. On that Sunday, which commemorates the second anniversary of the United Nations, the message will be used in special worship services throughout the country.

Condemn U. S. Policy

New York: — Opposition to the use of American economic superiority as a "political weapon to divide the world" was expressed here by the executive committee of the Methodist Federation for Social Action.

The resolution urged the United States to cooperate fully with the United Nations and to give "generous and non-discriminatory aid to all suffering and war-devastated countries." It also opposed the Marshall Plan on the ground that it was a unilateral action which ignored the United Nations.

"Americans have nothing to gain by policies which make for war," the resolution added. "We urge our leaders to concentrate their energies and attention on finding ways to build rather than bypass the United Nations, to unite rather than split its members, and to work with rather than against the Soviet Union."

In another resolution, the committee urged President Truman to call a special session of Congress "to reinaugurate the price controls and profiteering curbs which were so prematurely and wrongly abolished."

Repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act was demanded on the ground that it is "harmful legislation" which seeks to "abolish political freedom and to dictate to workers whom they shall and shall not elect as their officers."

Bishop Lewis O. Hartman of Boston presided at the meeting.

Urges More Relief

New York:—A proposal that the United States Government ship more supplies of food and clothing to the near-bankrupt nations overseas even if such action involves the re-establishment of controls on certain items, was adopted here by the executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches.

The Council also urged the American people to reduce by ten per cent their present consumption of food that can be shipped overseas.

Rare Old Bible

Plainfield, N. J.:—A large volume, printed in 1715 and containing the Book of Common Prayer and the Bible, including the Apocrypha and a metrical version of the Psalms by Sternold and Hopkins, was found this summer in the Church of the Holy Cross here. It was discovered by volunteer workers who were cleaning the property. The book, said the rector, the Rev. Robert B. Gribbon, is prefaced by two acts of uniformity passed by English Parliaments in the reigns of Queen Elizabeth and Charles II. On the blank pages at the beginning of the book is the record of two generations of the family of Bartholomew Noxon, born 1703, died 1785; and of Robert Noxon, whose death in 1833 at the age of 83, is the last date recorded in the book. It is not known how the book came into the possession of the parish, but it was found, along with an old communion set, in the attic of the Sunday school. Mr. Gribbon has announced that it will be exhibited, along with other copies of the Bible, on the 2nd Sunday in Advent.

Arab Anglicans

Jerusalem (RNS): — A resolution petitioning the Palestine government for recognition of the Arab Anglican community as one of the official religious communities of the country was adopted at the synod comprising 11 Arab ministers and 22 laymen, which met at Haifa. The synod declared that recognition should be accompanied by "all the privileges" which such recognition would entail.

Mass Meetings

Harrisburg, Pa.:—A series of regional mass meetings are being held this month at various centers of the diocese of Harrisburg at which the work of the diocese is presented by Bishop Heistand and the Rev. George H. Toadvine Jr., chairman of the diocesan department of promotion.

Clergy Conference

Charleston, S. C.:—The Rev. Otis Rice of New York was the headliner at the clergy conference in South Carolina, meeting September 16-18, with thirty-six present. He gave four lectures on personal and pastoral problems. Others to speak were Bishop Carruthers and the Rev. Edgar R. Neff who led a discussion on the proposed program of evangelism.

Support for Russia

New York:—Prof. C. W. Iglehart of Union Seminary, chairman of the national committee of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, issued a statement on Sept. 25 on behalf of the committee, stating that "American citizens and their leaders should face the fact that to an appalling extent the indictment which is being levelled against us by spokesmen for Russia is a valid one."

Churches Damaged

Hattiesburg, Miss.:—A number of churches were damaged in Mississippi by the recent hurrican. St. Peter's, Gulfport, had its tower blown off, the front damaged and the interior damaged by water. At Christ Church, Bay St. Louis, the organ is probably ruined by a tidal wave. Three stained glass windows were blown out at the Redeemer, Biloxi.

Two members of the Episcopal Church were reported drowned at Bay St. Louis and one at Gulfport. Another Episcopalian, Nathaniel B. Jones, visiting from Virginia but otherwise unidentified, was also drowned. All the Mississippi clergy are safe.

Freedom Train

Philadelphia (RNS):—Original documents relating to religious freedom in the American Colonies are part of an historical display on the Freedom Train, which came here to begin a monumental tour of the entire United States. Freedom Train, which contains the original of the Bill of Rights, with its guarantees of freedom of religion, speech and press, and other priceless documents, is sponsored by the American Heritage Foundation and will travel for one year, making stops in 306 of the nation's principal communities. The Train carries a total of 150 official American documents.

Train visitors will see Thomas Jefferson's Bill for Religious Freedom, dated 1784. This bill, passed and slightly modified by the Virginia Legislature, established freedom of worship in the Virginia Commonwealth. It set the precedent for the guarantee that went into the Bill of Rights.

Also on exhibition is the famed Bay Psalm Book, printed by Stephen Daye in 1640 and one of the few surviving copies of the first book printed in the North American colonies.

One of the mightiest first influences on American religious freedom was Roger Williams' Statement on Religious Freedom, in 1644. The founder of the Rhode Island colony here set forth his grounds for believing that all individuals and religious bodies were entitled to religious liberty as their natural right.

Another notable contribution to the traveling shrine's religious contents is the Maryland Toleration Act of 1649. This was one of the first acts passed by any of the colonies providing a measure of religious tolerance.

Freedom Train carries such other important documents as the Magna Carta, the Mayflower Compact, the Pennsylvania Charter of Privileges, the Declaration of Independence, the Treaty of Paris, Washington's Farewell Address, the Emancipation Proclamation, Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, the Declaration by the United Nations, and the United Nations Charter.

The tour of Freedom Train was arranged to dispel any existing apathy toward the ideals of the democratic form of government, to offset the perils engendered by the influence of foreign ideologies, and to arouse a more active participation by citizens in the affairs of their government.

Prayers for UN

New York (RNS):—Coincident with the re-opening of the United Nations General Assembly at Lake Success, N. Y., the Laymen's Movement for a Christian World here urged the 25,000 signers of the Laymen's Call to World Prayer to continue their prayers for the success of the UN.

In a letter to each signer, who had agreed to pray daily for the world leaders, Wallace C. Speers, chairman of the Laymen's Movement, pointed out that the General Assembly "faces many problems which the Security Council has been unable to solve: Palestine, Indonesia, Greece. The delegates have expert ability and technical skill, but to these must be added the spiritual power which is necessary if the best of plans are to operate."

The Laymen's Movement, an interdenominational religious group, began last September to obtain the backing of people with spiritual convictions for the United Nations. At that time, the Movement sent Dr. Frank Laubach, missionary and authority on literacy to the Paris Conference. He was later sent on a tour of the U. S. to urge people to support the UN, with the result that 25,000 people pledged themselves to pray for the UN's success.

Poland Needs

Philadelphia (RNS): — Discontinuance of American aid to Poland was protested here by the American Friends Service Committee. In a message addressed to President Truman and Secretary of State George C. Marshall, Clarence E. Pickett, executive secretary of the committee, declared that information from Quaker workers in Poland "indicates that dire need still prevails in that country."

Aid to Poland was halted recently after Col. R. L. Harrison, special assistant to Agriculture Secretary Clinton P. Anderson, reported that grain and other foods were available to meet Polish needs during the coming year. Col. Harrison's report was based on a food study mission in Europe.

Pickett's message added that the Polish crop outlook for the fall harvest is "exceedingly poor" and that devastation in some parts of the country is worse than that found elsewhere on the continent.

He also urged the government not to exclude Poland from the benefits of the general relief program and declared that "private relief agencies should not be considered as capable of shouldering any significant proportion of this tremendous burden of human need and suffering."

Appeasement Charge

Richmond, Va. (RNS):—Disclosure here that the appointment of the Rev. Charles C. Webber as Methodist chaplain to organized labor had been withdrawn has resulted in widespread comment in the secular press and among labor organizations, not only on this particular case but also on the general field of church-labor relations.

Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, of the New York East Conference, withdrew the appointment and placed Webber on the supernumerary list in May, but this fact was not generally known in the area where Mr. Webber works until a news story concerning the matter was published in the Richmond Times-Dispatch recently. The news met with wide and varying reaction in Virginia, where Webber has been the center of a storm of controversy among Methodists—a controversy which had repercussions throughout the entire denomination.

In the news story, the Times-Dispatch quoted Webber and other Methodists here as explaining that a minister on the supernumerary list retains his full prerogatives as a clergyman but whatever work he does is not through an official appointment of his Bishop. He is on his own, so to speak, and the church has no official connection with any position he accepts, the newspaper stated.

Webber, president of the State CIO Council and director of the Political Action Committee in Virginia, said the change in his status came about because Bishop Oxnam reached the conclusion that present church law does not give him authority to appoint chaplains to organized labor. He said further that the New York East Conference, of which he is a member, had voted overwhelmingly to petition the Methodist General Conference, which meets in 1948, to amend the law to give bishops the authority to appoint ministers to organized labor.

"Our guess would be that Bishop Bromley Oxnam regretfully withdrew the credentials of the Rev. Charles C. Webber as chaplain to organized labor," commented The Richmond News Leader. "Bishop Oxnam is much more convinced than most of his fellow-bishops are of the necessity of formal ministry to labor. . . . For our part, we regret to see this phase of the experiment ended, because it would have been interesting to see whether, after five or ten years of work, Mr. Webber had been regarded as a representative of the church, as an organizer of labor, or as a successful exemplar of liaison between the two.

"The experiment must go on in disassociated from religion. One great New England industrial concern has a vice president in charge of religious relations: why should not large labor organizations have their own chaplains?"

Taking an opposite view, the Newport News (Va.) Daily Press said that withdrawal of the appointment apparently marked the end of a Methodist experiment in spiritual ministration in the field of social service which has failed.

"In Mr. Webber's own individual case, we are of the opinion that it has failed and that, heavy-hearted as he must have been to take the step, Bishop Oxnam only recognized realities in making his decision.

"The difficulty in Mr. Webber's case was that he was put in a position of serving two masters, and as his Divine Master once observed while He was on earth, no man can make a success of that. . . . Mr. Webber, as clergyman, is supposed to be dedicated totally to representation of God to man. However, in his special assignment he also was employed, and paid a salary, as the spokesman for a special group of laboring men organized for their self-protection. The result has been unavoidably that the Methodist Church was placed in a false light. Through the liaison the Methodist Church has been forced into the spurious position of championing the business interests of one separate human group against another."

As Lynchburg, Va., Boyd E. Payton, Upper South director for CIO Textile Workers Union, charged that Bishop Oxnam's action was to appease certain elements of reactionary Methodists in the South.

"I am sorry the Bishop has seen fit to take that position," he declared. "It seems to me he is merely seeking a compromise position and that it is not the Christian or democratic thing to do."

Bishop Gray Praised

Hartford, Conn.: — The Daily Courant here devoted an editorial to Bishop Walter H. Gray, praising him for the work that he has done for more than four years as the chairman of the state's inter-racial commission. It states that "the steady and perceptible educational campaign against religious and racial intolerance that has gone forward in Connecticut these past four years may be credited in great measure to the personal efforts, the unswerving devotion to the cause of brotherhood of Bishop Gray. He has now resigned his post with the Commission because of the pressure of his diocesan duties. Although the Commission he headed had no police power, it did have the power of enlightened intelligence behind it. This worked with considerable effect. It laid the groundwork for the Commission as reconstituted at the last session of the Legislature.

"Bishop Gray's resignation is not as great a loss to the State as it would have been three or even two years ago, because so much progress has been made in the meantime under his guidance. From his work on this Commission and from his profound interest in social welfare, it is obvious that Bishop Gray believes in the deed as well as the word in the practical application of religious teaching. And anyone who knows him also knows that his resignation does not mean the end of his interest in the promotion of amity between men."

Church Union Progress

Saskatoon, Canada (RNS) :—Greater progress has been made with the United Church of Canada in conversations looking toward union than with any other denomination, the executive committee of the General Synod of the Church of England in Canada was told here by Bishop John Lyons of Ontario, chairman of the committee on union.

Bishop Lyons declared that the Anglican Church is not looking forward to union with any particular church or denomination, but rather to the "reunion of Christendom." Little or no progress has been made in conversations with Presbyterians and Baptist communions, the meeting was informed.

The committee set up by the Synod to establish a church paper was instructed to confer with the General Board of Religious Education on means of financing a publication which would be "national in scope and which would serve as a medium for the views of the Church and the information of its members." It was stated that neither of the existing periodicals, The Anglican Outlook and the Canadian Churchman, could be considered national in scope.

The executive committee denounced racial discrimination after presentation of a report by Canon W. W. Judd, secretary of the social service council, which declared that 22,000 Chinese in Canada "are deprived of normal married life" because Canadian law did not allow them to bring their wives to this country. The council urged that Chinese be permitted to become Canadian citizens and to bring their wives here.

Goodwill Industries

Boston: — "Helping the handicapped to help themselves" is an important slogan in the face of approximately 23,000,000 handicapped persons in the United States. The Goodwill Industries of America is really doing something about the problem, for at its 29th annual meeting held here last week it was reported by some 90 local industries throughout the country that during the past year 16,940 needy and handicapped persons were given 10,170,862 hours of employment and paid $6,909,193 in opportunity wages.

It was significant that this meeting was held in Boston because the movement was born here in 1902 under the inspiration of the Rev. Edgar J. Helms who lived to see the tiny germ of his idea develop into one of the city's largest philanthropic institutions known as Morgan Memorial with fourteen departments of social service effort and its widely known Church of All Nations.

London (RNS):—The Archbishop of Canterbury announced here that the new United Church of South India, which will come into existence this month and which will include four hitherto Anglican dioceses, will not be in communion with the Church of England.

The Archbishop declared that while there would be irregularities in the new Church for a time, there were "other features which are wholly to be welcomed and which give great ground for hope that, though the South India Church will not become a constituent part of the Anglican communion, it may at length be in full communion with us."

HENRY SMITH LEIPER
American Secretary of the World Council of Churches

The publication in your issue of September 4th of the article concerning Pastor Niemoeller concludes with the suggestion that the matter should be brought to the attention of the officers of the World Council of Churches.

May I call the attention of your staff and your readers to an article which appeared in the New York Times, September 8th, in which Mr. Kurt Schumacher, chairman of the Social Democratic Party, denied to the Times representatives that any working alliance had been reached with the group of churchmen led by Pastor Niemoeller. According to Dr. Schumacher's statement, the meeting took place between himself and the Church group, and that it was held at the request of the Church leaders, that it resulted in an agreement that "no political party should represent any Church, and that no Church should use any party as a political instrument."

The evident relish with which you pick up and disseminate any hostile reports with respect to Pastor Niemoeller is a matter of grief and shame to many of your Christian friends. When the facts are fully known and not distorted, as in your previous references to Niemoeller, he will continue to stand in the eyes of those of us who know him intimately as a very human person who is, nevertheless, one of the bravest and most consistent witnesses to the Christian faith.

Incidentally, I should like to observe that when a person writes "he suffered nothing but confinement" with respect to eight years in concentration camp, there is revealed a callousness and a lack of imagination which would be hard to exaggerate.

ANSWER: Apologists for Niemoeller should give more attention to the trials at Nuremburg. At the trials of leading men in Goebbel's former ministry of propaganda, a protocol was introduced as evidence which was the report of a Nazi official who was present as an observer during the secret trial of Niemoeller in February, 1938. The document states that Niemoeller spoke for over three hours in self-defense against the accusation of "resistance to the (Nazi) government," with his defense centering mainly on those of his actions and convictions that he claimed proved that he had always been an ardent nationalist; an early supporter of dictatorship in general and of Hitler in particular; a despiser of the League of Nations and an outspoken anti-Semite.

An affidavit by General von Watters was read, with Niemoeller enlarging upon it. He described his underground activities in one of the so-called free-corps which were supposed to clear Westphalia of what he called the "red mob." Commenting upon this, Aufbau, German language paper of New York, said: "Of course by today everyone knows the meaning of that: namely, the merciless murder of men and women who were pacifists and supporters of a democratic Germany." (May 16, 1947.)

Affidavits of two admirals were also read by the judge, both testifying that Niemoeller was "a good German" who would never do anything against his fatherland and as one "who has always been an ardent enemy of any kind of republic." At this point in the trial Niemoeller hastened to assure the court that he started to vote for the Nazi party as early as 1924 and had always done so thereafter; that the party had his full support during all those years although for tactical reasons he had thought it wiser for a clergyman not to join its membership directly. However, the court could be assured that he was not concerned about little things but rather was striving after big ones. As a National Socialist (Nazi) he had a good conscience.

He then read to the court a sermon he had preached about the Fuehrer principle in the year before Hitler came to power. He also told of how, in 1933, when in the middle of the night a friend from the Reich Chancellory informed him of Hitler's order to withdraw from the League of Nations, he had been overjoyed and "at once sent a wire of congratulations to the Fuehrer, probably the first one he received after this decisive demarche (step)."

As to the question of Jews (probably referring to "non-Aryan" Christians) in his congregation, Niemoeller spoke at length, declaring that he had a deep dislike for Jews "which should be obvious for a former imperial officer who was the descendant of families of preachers and peasants, an offspring of ancient Westphalian soil."

Niemoeller also stated his belief in the Lutheran rather than in the Reformed interpretations of Romans thirteen, according to which the (Nazi) government had to be obeyed in every case.

It was in the light of this evidence that the German Society for Victims of the Nazi Regime this summer expelled Niemoeller as a member, and the Philosophical Library, New York publishers, withdrew from distribution both of its publications by the pastor, God Is My Fuehrer and Of Guilt and Hope. Incidentally it is in this latter book that Niemoeller, after describing his contacts with the "representatives of foreign Churches" and of how he is accepted as "a brother" because of "our confession of guilt," says: "And thus, from a practical point of view, such a confession of guilt has political consequences."

I would be interested to know just what interpretation Dr. Leiper and other apologists for Niemoeller give to the pastor's reference to "political consequences."

As for me, I have expressed the opinion on other occasions that the World Council might be collaborating with a German fascist in bringing Niemoeller to lecture from one end of the United States to the other. This protocol, entered as evidence at Nuremburg trials, strengthens the conviction. So instead of apologizing for my remarks, I think the leaders of the World Council might well inform their constituency that they possibly made a mistake in parading Niemoeller from coast to coast as an example of "a good Christian and a good German."

The Church of South India Formally Inaugurated

Impressive Service Is Held at St. George's Cathedral When New Bishops are Consecrated

By Religious News Service

Madras:—A new experiment in Church unity began here with the formal inauguration of the Church of South India, which embraces all Protestant denominations in the area. The rites took place in St. George's Anglican Cathedral and were presided over by the Rt. Rev. Chirakarottu Korula Jacob, Bishop of Central Travancore.

The new Church, which will comprise a Christian community of about 1,200,000, unites the four Anglican dioceses of Madras, Travancore, Tinnevelly and Dornakal, the South India provincial synod of the Methodist Church, and the South India United Church. The latter body was itself a union of Presbyterian and Congregational Churches.

A packed congregation in the 130-year-old Madras cathedral, including 600 representatives of churches, missionary societies and Christian associations from all parts of the world, witnessed the solemn consecration of nine prelates who were named for episcopal sees in the United Church by a joint committee of Anglican, Presbyterian, Congregationalist, and Methodist churchmen.

Wearing white rockets with saffron, robes, the bishops were led in procession before Bishop Jacob and two co-consecrators. Solemnly laying hands upon the kneeling bishops, the consecrators repeated over them the formula, "Receive the Holy Spirit for the office and work of bishop in the Church of God now committed unto thee by the imposition of our hands." Each of the new bishops was then presented with a copy of the Bible and a pastoral staff.

The consecrated bishops and their dioceses were: Arnold Henry Legg, South Travancore; T. G. Stuart-Smith, Tinnevelly; James Edward Lesley Newbegin, Madura and Tramanad; Sabapathi Kulandran, Jaffna; Edgar Bentley Thorp, Trichinopoly and Tanjore; Premaka Gurushanta, Mysore; Frank Whitaker, Medak and Hyderabad; Bunyan Joseph, Anantapur and Kurnool; and Hospet Sumitra, Cuddapah.

Five bishops, in addition to Bishop Jacob, have already been consecrated to form the new bench of 14 bishops of the United Church. Their names and the dioceses to which they were appointed are: Anthony Blacker Elliott, Dornakal; Arthur Michael Hollis, Madras; George Theodore Selwyn, Tinnevelly; and Yeddu Muthyalu, Kistna and Godavari.

Of the 14 bishops, who include five native Indians, seven were formerly of the Anglican Church, three were Congregationalists, two Presbyterians and two Methodists. One of the outstanding Indian prelates is Bishop Joseph, who belongs to a well-known family of Telegu Christians, and has written several devotional books and a number of Telegu hymns.

In a special sermon preached at the inaugural rites, the Rev. J. S. M. Hooper declared that "it is not a mere coincidence that the South India United Church, free from all outside control, should take shape at a moment when India is entering the path of independent life, but instead is surely one of those workings of divine providence."

Asserting that in the past, the internal history of Christendom has been "marked by intolerance, mutual contempt, dislike and persecution," Mr. Hooper declared that "we who are here today wish to proclaim the reconciling grace of God to all men unable to agree among themselves."

DECLARES CHURCH FACES CRISIS

Fargo, N. D.:—Bishop Scarlett of Missouri told the convocation of the district of North Dakota, meeting here at the cathedral, September 22-23, that "the decline and fall of the Roman Empire pales in comparison with the great crisis the Christian Church is going through today."

"In the midst of all the conflicts of life today—social, racial and nationalistic — stands the Christian Church upholding the tradition of man's dignity, accountability, freedom, unity and brotherhood," the bishop declared. "The Church must take one more step for this is a time when generalities are of no value. The Church must be more specific about issues, national and international, than ever before. It is a moment of destiny when Christians must decide whether they are for Christ or against him, and must face fearlessly the prejudices and intolerance which govern society's thinking on racial, social and economic problems."

He stated that the typical, successful man was smug and complacent, with no vital religious experience; that failure three decades ago to control economic cycles and unemployment had caused world war two and that the depression in this country "gave Hitler and Mussolini their chances." He indicated that such a thing was again possible. "We are one world in all ways but the spirit. Christianity is the one compelling force that will permit us to have one world in spirit. We need a greater consciousness of the brotherhood of man."

pressed the opinion that the General Convention did not intend to alter the position that marriage is a life-long union when it adopted the new canons. "There are cases however in which circumstances and conditions have made impossible the fulfillment of the vows. I believe that the intention of the canon is that in such cases the bishop is to be guided not by a set legalistic provision but by spiritual discernment and that he may in such cases give his permission for the marriage of the applicant by a minister of this Church."

He stated that further action will doubtless be taken to clarify the meaning of some of the terms of the canon.

WILLIAM GRIME THE SPEAKER

Philadelphia:—The Rev. William Grime, rector of St. Paul's, Great Neck, N. Y., was the speaker at the supper meeting of the Church School Institute, held here October 6. He spoke of the place of the Bible in Church School programs. Mrs. Franklin Scheeder was the speaker at the evening meeting on visual aids as teaching tools.

PENNSYLVANIA SCHOOL

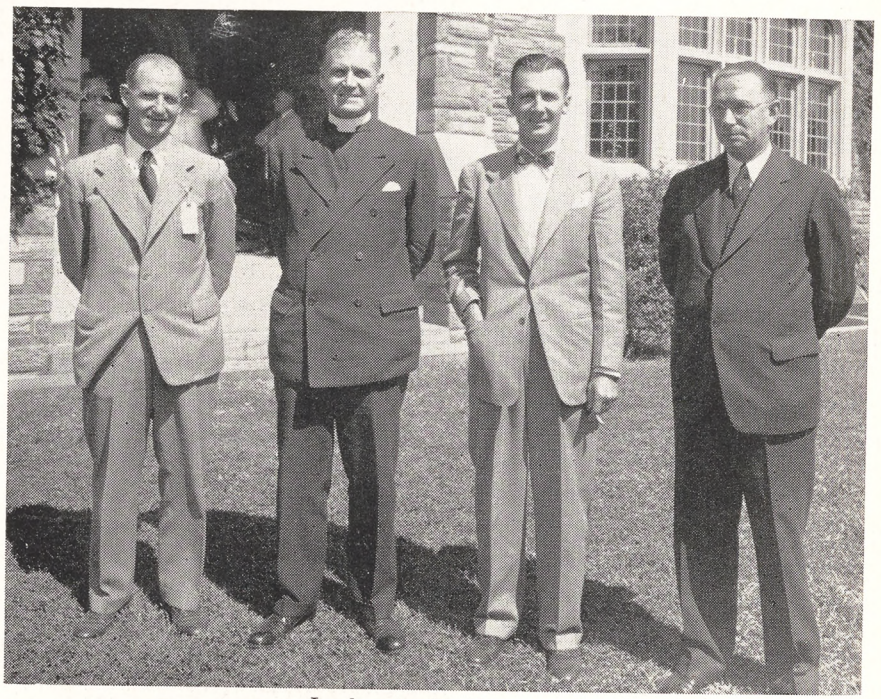
Philadelphia: — The diocese of Pennsylvania is having a school of Christian education on six successive Tuesday evenings, starting October 14. Class leaders are the Rev. John K. Shryock; the Rev. Frederic R. Murray, Miss Jane M. Welte, Mrs. Sumner H. Cross. Lecturer at the assembly period is the Rev. Stanley Brown-Seaman of Virginia Seminary who is to give a series on Worship. Teaching in the final period are Prof. Powel M. Dawley of General; Bishop Hart, the Rev. William H. Dunphy, the Rev. J. Wesley Twelves, Miss Ruth C. Kitchen, Miss Cornelia Van B. Harris and Mrs. J. Mack Nevergole.

DEAN CHARLES DEEMS RESIGNS

Minneapolis:—Charles Price Deems has resigned as dean of the Cathedral Church of St. Mark, effective July 31, 1948. He stated that "for some time I have been increasingly convinced of the advisability of my stepping aside in favor of a younger man." Bishop Keeler issued a statement paying tribute to the Dean, referring particularly to "a ministry of devoted pastoral significance" and of developing the cathedral program "to serve the entire diocese and to touch many phases of community life as evidenced by the large number of community, inter-denominational and inter-racial services held there each year."

WANT DEPARTMENT OF PEACE

Topeka, Kan.: — Establishment of a new department of peace was urged here by the Kansas conference of the Methodist Church. They ask for a secretary with full cabinet standing. The conference also went on record against peacetime conscription. "We see a swing away from adherence to the United Nations in this proposal," the resolution stated, "since the charter proposes an international police force which would make a national military force unnecessary."



Methodists of West Virginia likewise, by an overwhelming majority, voiced their opposition to military training.

CLINICAL TRAINING

New York:—The Rev. Otis R. Rice, Episcopalian of New York, reported at the meeting of the Council for Clinical Training meeting here, that there were 116 theological students and clergymen in training for minimum periods of one quarter each in the 17 active training centers of the Council during the year. The centers included nine mental hospitals, four general hospitals and four correctional institutions.

DORCHESTER PARISH CELEBRATES

Boston, Mass.:—The Rev. George Lyman Paine, rector of the parish from 1902 to 1911, was the preacher at the centennial celebration of St. Mary's, Dorchester, which began on September 28th. The parish has a proud history: Phillips Brooks was confirmed there; the present church, built in 1888, was designed by Henry Vaughan, noted architect. A series of minor observances will be held through this month, ending with a banquet at a hotel here at which Bishop Norman Nash will be the speaker. An honored guest of the opening service was the Rev. Henry E. Edenborg, rector for 27 years until his resignation a year ago. The present rector is the Rev. Frank E. Greene, Jr.

Leaders in the diocese of Delaware posed for this picture at a recent conference: Charles W. Wendt; the Rev. Walden Pell 2nd; W. Albert Haddock; John M. Stewart

SPECIAL SERVICE AT UNION

New York:—A special service marking the inauguration of the new United Church of South India, which was consummated September 27, was held September 28 at Union Seminary. The speakers included a number of religious leaders of India as well as an India delegate to the United Nations, Sir Maharaj Singh.

Attitude Toward Soviet Union Hysterical Says Bishop

Says That Christianity Must Grapple With Contemporary Injustice or Church Will Die

By W. B. Spofford

Springfield, Mass.: — The United States is facing the Russian question "hysterically" and if we continue to do so the inevitable end will be war. This was the opinion expressed by Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam at the nine-day ecumenical conference held here and attended by delegates from all over the world.

"It is easier," he stated, "to summon us to a holy war against Russia than to solve the problems involved in establishing economic justice and world order. If we were able to defeat Russia in a war, we would not by that fact eradicate a philosophy of materialism, solve economic problems or end atheism.

Bishop Oxnam made it clear that he is not pro-Communist, pro-Russia or pro any other totalitarian nation. He said: "We are opposed to the police state, whether left or right, and will not rest until all men are free, not only to vote but to enjoy the abundant life. Our policies must be positive. A negative defense may hold off an evil day, but it is only a positive attack upon economic injustice that will insure the tomorrow."

At another point he said:

"Communism can be defeated by a superior world view, a dynamic faith that freedom brings justice to men and brotherhood to society. I believe that dynamic faith is Christianity, but that it must be a Christianity prepared to grapple with contemporary injustice and to die, if need be, that Christ may live.

"Our present Russian policy is but blocking Russian imperialism by force. Such policy in the past has meant war. We are in danger of losing the good-will of the people of Europe by our failure to make it clear that it is the free state we stand for as against the police state.

"We have nearly convinced them that our bread is not for the starving but for the hungry who will accept our economic way of life."

Most men would refuse to bargain their freedom for a mess of pottage if convinced they could be free and secure, Bishop Oxnam continued.

"It is the very failure to solve the problems essential to full productivity and the security born of it that gives the Communist the chance to enlist the exploited."

Asserting that whether we will or no, a new order approaches in society, the Bishop continued:

"In the society that is passing, the driving force has been pursuit of self-interest. The chief rewards have gone to the owners of the means of production. The possessors of property looked upon the state as a tool to be used by them and for them, and the underlying philosophy was materialistic.

"In the society that is coming, the common good will be supreme. Reward will be based upon service to the group and greatness thus rests upon service. The necessities will be provided socially, and all socially controllable inequalities will be removed. Intelligent planning and freedom will strive for security. Rights will be balanced by duties, among them the universal obligation to work.

"Underlying all will be the concept that personality is of infinite worth. Fundamental to the good society is the fact of freedom. Liberty must be preserved, but it must be used to establish equality, and thereby open the way to fraternity."

FOREIGN POLICY ASSAILED

Springfield, Mass. (RNS) :—American foreign policy and our attitude toward displaced persons were assailed by the Rev. Paul Hutchinson of Chicago in an address before the Ecumenical Methodist Conference held here. He characterized the present period as one of "great spiritual tragedy" and stated that our governmental attitudes "cause whole peoples to lose hope." He recently returned from a 10 month trip around the world to survey conditions.

"In a day," he said, "in which the airplane has made surface navies obsolescent, if not obsolete, and atomic-mechanized warfare has made mass infantry armies as useless as the Macedonian phalanx, American foreign policy comes perilously close to being not much more than maintaining the largest navy the world ever saw, establishing a peacetime conscript army, hoping that the Russians are too battered to do more than talk truculently."

Stressing the physical destruction left by the war, Hutchinson criticized "the refusal of the United States, at a period of peak employment, to open its doors even to the 400,000 carefully screened refugees for whom the Stratton bill would provide." He also censured "our callous refusal to do more for the harried Jews than to tell the Arabs and the British that they should immediately make room for them in little Palestine."

"Who can read," he asked, "the reports of the terms in which organizations like the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars discussed and then turned thumbs down on the Stratton bill without perceiving that something morally precious has gone out of American life—something the ancients called magnanimity of soul?"

For the past fifty years, Dr. Hutchinson declared, men, as individuals, have not known for what they were dying. Today, he asserted, "they do not know for what they are living."

However, he added, all the factors in contemporary life are not destructive. There is "a re-awakening spiritual hunger among all kinds and conditions of men," and even the growth of Communism is a sign of man's eternal need for religion, since Communism itself is a secular religion, "the great modern rival of Christianity."

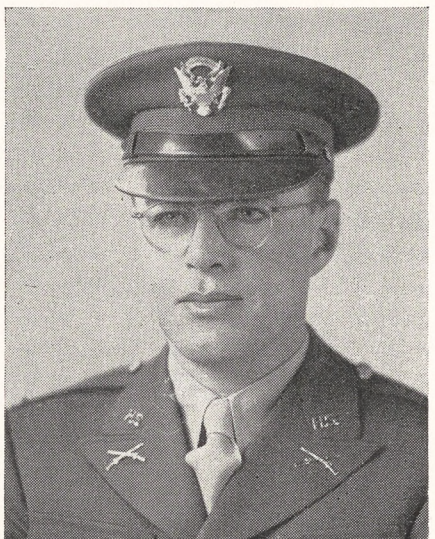
BISHOP PAGE LEADS CONFERENCE

Fortune Lake, Mich.:—Bishop Herman Page presided and led the discussions at a layman's conference held here. Layman S. A. Cushman of Chicago gave an address on the Every Member Canvass, and Prof. John Coe of North Central China College related experiences during the 24 years he was in the China missionary field. Preliminary steps were taken toward forming a laymen's diocesan organization to be known as "Bishop's Men."

CANON PRICHARD MEMORIAL

Mt. Kisco, N. Y.: — A memorial stone to former rector Canon Harold Adye Prichard was unveiled at a service held September 21 at St. Mark's here. The stone is laid in front of the altar and was given by the parish. The Rev. W. Colin Lee, present rector, conducted the service and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Horace W. B. Donegan who is to be consecrated suffragan bishop of New York on October 28th. A highlight of the service was an anthem written for the occasion by Lindley H. Varney who was organist at St. Mark's for all but a few months of the thirty years that Canon Prichard was rector.



NEW MISSION IN DETROIT

Grosse Pointe, Mich.:—Following the tradition of old Christ Church Parish, Detroit, which in past years was responsible for the establishment of several missions that have now become strong parishes, the newest mission of the mother parish has now launched a mission of its own. This "newest mission" is the strong and well established parish of Christ Church, here, which became a parish at the diocesan convention this year, after 20 years' existence as a parochial mission of old Christ Church. Its new mission is being established in Grosse Pointe Woods in a building which was formerly a golf club. Its interior has been converted into a main auditorium, small office, choir room. Many gifts of furnishings have been made—altar, cross, lights. The Rev. Edgar H. Yeoman, curate of Christ Church, is in charge of the new work under the direction of Rector Francis B. Creamer.

UNION PLAN COMPLETED IN CEYLON

Colombo, Ceylon (RNS):—A basis of union for non-Roman Churches in Ceylon has been completed here by a negotiating committee consisting of Anglicans, Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists and members of the South India United Church. Drawn up in the form of agreed resolutions, the report will now be considered by the various Churches involved in the union plan.

According to proposals in the report, elected bishops of the United Church, who have not already been consecrated, will be consecrated, by three bishops from outside Ceylon, "from differing Church traditions and acceptable to all the uniting Churches." Immediately afterwards, they will receive, by prayer and laying-on of hands by ministers of all the uniting Churches, "A wider commission to exercise their ministry in the United Church."

Col. B. B. Bouton, head of Howe School, Howe, Indiana, has announced that beautiful colored slides, fifty-five in all, entitled "Around the clock at Howe summer camp," will be sent to parishes and institutions on a loan basis

The union scheme provides that presbyters of the united Church will receive from the newly-consecrated and commissioned episcopate a form of "extended ordination." It sets forth a form of service for the "unification of ministries," the purpose of which is "to give to the ministers of each tradition such character, grace, gifts and authority as they may need."

Accepting baptism and holy communion as "ordained by Christ as a means of grace by which we are united to God and through which God works in us," the report stipulates that only those who have received baptism in the name of the Trinity may be members of the United Church.

It approves the Old and New Testaments as the standard of faith, and declares that former confessions of faith of the uniting bodies may be used where they do not conflict with the doctrinal standards of the United Church.

FREE ENTERPRISE CONDEMNED

Toronto (RNS): — Free enterprise was described as un-Christian in a statement issued by the National Council of the Canadian Student Christian Movement, meeting at Lake Couchiching, Ont.

The statement, adopted by 40 representatives at the meeting, declared: "Because we believe the land and means of production are ultimately God-given and men should hold this property in stewardship for God, we feel that free enterprise, with its emphasis on the complete right of the individual to do what he will with his property, is basically anti-Christian. We feel this system has depersonalized men by its emphasis on technology and production above the essential Christian regard for the worth of the individual. Therefore, we suggest a system of economic democracy in which the land and means of production are operated by the elected representatives of the people to meet the needs of all is potentially more Christian than the present one, and is therefore a goal toward which Christians ought to work. We nevertheless affirm no political blueprint is completely Christian, and Christians must stand within but above any given system."

CELEBRATIONS IN PARISHES

Syracuse, N. Y.:—The Good Shepherd, Onondaga Indian Reservation, celebrated the 80th anniversary of its founding on September 28th. St. Philip's, here, which is the only Negro parish in the diocese, is celebrating its 50th anniversary, October 8-12. One of the highlights is an address by Bishop Demby, retired Negro bishop. Christ Church, Oswego, is also to celebrate its 125th anniversary later in the month.

African Taft-Hartley

THERE HAS been developing unity of white and non-white workers in South Africa. So in order to prevent this the government, headed by General Smuts, has drafted the Conciliation (Natives) Bill which it is about to make law. Here are some of the things that will happen:

It will be a crime for African workers to go on strike. Any who do so may be fined 500 pounds ($2,000) and, in addition, be sent to jail for three years.

Anyone organizing or belonging to a trade union which includes both Africans and non-Africans may be punished by a maximum fine of 100 pounds plus one year's imprisonment.

Any African already belonging to a non-segregated trade union having collective bargaining rights would be compelled to cease membership, and within 30 days the secretary of any such union would have to delete the names of African members from the register or be found guilty of an offense.

A registrar representing the government would have authority to intervene in the affairs of any trade union regardless of the union's executive or its constitution, and could be empowered by the Minister of Labor to cancel the registration of any union regarded as "not in the public interest."

Workers in the mines, on the farms, and in government employment (these categories cover the vast majority of employed Africans) would be barred from trade union organization, and it would be a criminal offense for these workers to organize or for anyone to assist them to organize.

All disputes would be settled by compulsory arbitration, this authority being vested in a central mediation board of five members, none of them African and all government-appointed.

The labor minister could make any agreement binding on non-African workers if the mediation board so recommended. Thus the mediation board could fix wages and other conditions for European, Indian and other workers, as well as for Africans.

The bill thus menaces every South African worker. As one white labor leader described it, "The bill should be an exhibit in a museum, along with Hitler's Labor Front Law and Mussolini's Labor Corporation Laws to show the close relation among the three."

An all-out fight against the bill has been declared by all sections of African labor and many white trade unions in South Africa, and it has been brought to the notice of the World Federation of Trade Unions.

A good way, we think, for Church people to show their interest in missions is to join in the fight against the bill. It can be done by making your views known to H. T. Andrews, South African Minister to the United States, Washington, D. C.

Archbishop Takes a Stand

IT WAS rather startling, healthily so, to read in the newspapers recently that the Roman Catholic Archbishop of St. Louis had warned the members of his diocese that they would be subject to "automatic ex-communication" if they persisted in plans to bar Negroes from Catholic schools by civil action. We are not sure that this is the way to go about it—it smacks too much of fascistic methods—but we quote with approval Archbishop Ritter's pronouncement. "The policy of admitting Negro children to Catholic schools with white pupils is one which we consider our right and duty as chief pastor of this diocese, regardless of race or nationality." We say bravo! for such a forthright and Christian utterance even if it was based upon "the crime of trying to impede the authority of the Bishop in matters of faith and morals."

If professed Christians had really sensitive consciences they would feel themselves automatically excluded from the Lord's table when their souls were filled with racial bigotry unless, of course, they came as penitents.

Perhaps the point is that we are far too lenient in allowing anyone who presents a fairly respectable exterior to become a member of a Church—and call himself a Christian. Possibly we should apply the same rigorous tests for Church membership, based on faith and morals, that the early Christian did. Who should be the judge in this is another, and obviously an intricate, problem. But even if it meant the partial emptying of our churches and the retention of only a faithful minority the total result might be the strengthening of Christianity. At least the world would be in no doubt as to what it meant to be a Christian.

Hardly a Factor

JOHN GUNTHER in his book Inside U.S.A. speaks to the Episcopal Church by silence. The book is of great length. The theme which ties together many incidents and descriptions of the people and the countryside is that of "Who or what runs the community or state?" The powers in our country are many and varied. Gunther often speaks of the pressure exerted by many religious groups, such as Roman Catholics, Baptists, Methodists, Mormons. But not once is the Episcopal Church mentioned as a factor in the social scene. The Presbyterians rate several comments, but not our Church. The only reference to any of our clergy is rather an offhand remark about Bishop Manning, and that on practically the last page. Charles Taft comes in for a brief note as a Christian layman, not for what he does in the Episcopal Church, but for his leadership in the Federal Council. We just pass this bit of miscellaneous information along to any that feel that the Episcopal Church is alive to the issues of our day and doing something vital about them.

Seminaries and Segregation

by Othello D. Stanley

Former Member of the Executive Council of the Diocese of North Carolina

THINGS have come to a critical state indeed in our Church when one realizes that there are only about 160 Negro clergymen in the whole Church, and there is an immediate need for forty or more men to fill vacant churches. Within the next few years deaths and retirements will make the condition all the more alarming. Yet the Church does not seem to be seriously concerned.

The picture seems more gloomy when one considers that there are only eighteen Negroes enrolled in four of the seven seminaries contacted, and of these, three are from dioceses outside continental U. S. and presumably are to return to their own dioceses after graduation. The Church Divinity School of the Pacific was not contacted, nor were Sewanee and Virginia, the latter two for obvious reasons. There were only five Negro graduates in June; three from the Bishop Payne Divinity School and one each from General and Philadelphia. The prospects for 1948 do not seem any too bright either, with a maximum of seven Negro students in all our seminaries.

The Church is ably supporting missionary work abroad with all the resources at its command, but Negro work in many localities is languishing because of the lack of Negro leadership. The denominational Churches are wielding a great influence and are growing but many of our churches are leaderless. It is true that in many respects their educational requirements are not as exacting as ours, but that alone does not explain the matter.

A questionnaire was recently submitted to some students in two North Carolina Colleges, one of them being our own St. Augustine's. Among the questions was this: "Why is it that many young men avoid the ministry as a vocation?" Three replies stood out: (1) Inadequate salary; (2) Inadequate plants; (3) Segregation (at conventions and meetings).

These are reasons given by some who are out of college and are also my own. While some progress is being made in these categories and practically all of the dioceses have ceased having separate convocations for Negroes, yet there is still plenty of segregation remaining; at meals at conventions; at some diocesan conventions; at worship services. Most of our young men want to work, after graduation from seminary, where there is an adequate plant, since in many communities there are no social or recreational facilities for our people who are barred from places where white people go.

In the same questionnaire it was asked: "Are you interested in the ministry?" and "if interested would you prefer a segregated or non-segregated seminary?" and "if so, why?" Not one indicated his preference for a segregated seminary. One replied: "I do not believe I could very well manifest my desire to serve God under the auspices of a segregated system of learning. God does not intend this system to exist." Another gave a very pointed reply: "If clergymen of both races are expected to work together and understand each other they should be trained together for only by association may we understand each other."

One of the students informed me that his bishop (a mid-western diocese east of the Mississippi) had made it plain where he wanted him to go for seminary training and had offered him special inducements. But it was our segregated seminary and the student's choice is otherwise. This student would be sent to the segregated school while other candidates from this diocese would be sent to Alexandria, the bishop's school.

I had some correspondence with a former Presiding Bishop in which he stated that candidates have a tendency to work in the area where they are trained, in defending his position for a segregated school. This is not substantiated by the number of men from the Bishop Payne Divinity School working in the north and the west; as fast as vacancies occur in the north, and they are not filled with men trained there, they are filled by men from the south. Practically all of our vacancies, as a matter of fact, are in the south. The fact is that our Negro clergymen, as others, usually go where there are more advantages, and for the most part they think these advantages are in the north.

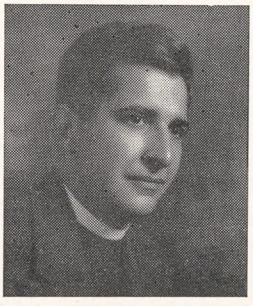
Candidates for the ministry should be allowed to go where they please. They go to the college of their choice. But if they are in the south and contemplate going into the ministry they are, as a rule, persuaded to go to the segregated seminary. They may accept the bishop's choice, but after working for him for a year or so, they invariably leave for a better position in the north if there is an opportunity. The dike is thus made secure in one place only to spring a leak elsewhere.

THE recent decision of the National Council to bow to the wishes and sentiments of the trustees of the Bishop Payne Divinity School, and the wishes of its faculty and alumni, in allowing the school to remain where it is was the easiest way out. The trustees won't send their sons or candidates (whites) there. The alumni would still be alumni wherever the school was located. The faculty could move with the school. Moving it in close proximity to St. Augustine's College would make the existence of the segregated seminary more plausible, if there has to be a segregated seminary. At least students could complete their college and seminary training in six years and there would be mutual benefits for both schools. The students of the college would be a proving ground and there might be a little more growth. It is a fact that being trained in the south does not give any guarantee that seminary graduates will remain there, especially if they are Negroes. It is also a fact that it costs about $2,000 or more annually to train a student in the segregated school and but $1,000 to do so in the other seminaries. It takes just as many instructors to train fifteen students in a segregated school as it does to train forty-five or more men in the other seminaries.

Let's put our Christianity first and place our prejudices, sectionalisms and antagonisms behind us. If we strive to do better perhaps within our lifetime we shall have not only students of the Negro race at Sewanee and Alexandria but also qualified Negroes on their faculties. Most of those who would be assets to the ministry could go to any seminary now and measure up to the standards. To say that Sewanee and Alexandria or any other seminary will never admit Negroes; to cry "human nature being what it is," or hiding behind some other screen, is to acknowledge defeat and manifest a lack of faith. "With God all things are possible" to those who believe and we can bring to pass the things we earnestly strive for by initiation, persistence, prayer and the practicing of the teachings of Jesus.

The North Carolina college students conference, composed of delegates from white and Negro colleges, earlier this year went on record for the abolition of our segregated seminary. A copy of their resolution was sent to every bishop of the Church and to many prominent clergymen. Some bishops viewed with alarm the challenging motion of this group, but many were for it. The time will come when Christians will be appreciated not because of the color of their faces but because they have souls, for we must realize that there can be no fatherhood of God without the corollary of the brotherhood of man.



When the Rev. John H. Johnson, rector of St. Martin's, New York, took Bishop Barnwell of Georgia to task several months ago he was branded as a northerner meddling in the affairs of the south. In the secular press northerners who attack southern customs are called "damyankees meddling in the traditions of the south." For the information of those who may think I am a northerner and a meddler, I would say that I have lived in the south all my life, with the exception of my last two years in college in Pennsylvania and three years at the Philadelphia Divinity School. Shortly after my graduation I was transferred from my original diocese to North Carolina where I have been for fourteen years. I am therefore a true son of the south and am speaking for many more of its Christian sons, both white and Negro.

A Word With You

By
HUGH D. McCANDLESS

BUT MY CLERGYMAN IS MY FRIEND!

THE problem of how to address a clergyman when you have begun to be pretty friendly with him is a difficult one. In this country last names are no longer used between equals; if you call a man "Smith" it sounds a big abrupt and overbearing. This is unfortunate and is not the case in England, nor was it in this country a generation ago. We have followed too much the advices and desires of Dale Carnegie and nowadays many people call each other by their first names because they have never even heard the other fellow's last name.

Pastor has a Lutheran tinge, Dominie has a Dutch Reformed flavor, and Padre does not seem to be used very much except by gilt-edged panhandlers who want to show you how well bred they are. Both Dominie and Padre are liable to be construed as having a facetious, almost overfamiliar undertone. Brother always smacks of a too much protested piety.

One word which can be applied to most of the clergy in this country is Rector: it is intimate without being chummy. While we all know that Rector (ruler) is not nearly as noble a word as Minister (servant), nevertheless semantically it is fine, even if one can object to it on the basis of its etymology.

Strategy and Tactics

by

FRANCIS O. AYRES
Rector of St. John's, Waterbury, Conn.

IN A PREVIOUS column, I spoke of and quoted from a report written by W. A. Visser 't Hooft and entitled The Nature and Scope of the Reconstruction Task. The proposal with which Visser 't Hooft concludes is as interesting as the analysis which precedes it is shrewd.

He says:

"The analysis of the present situation, of the needs and opportunities of the Continental Churches leads to two conclusions: First, that the Church should establish pioneering centres where the content and strategy of the witness to the modern world is worked out; and secondly, that the Churches should create adequate organs for the preparation of new types of ministries.

"With regard to the first, the different tasks described above necessitate the creation of a common headquarters for the planning of the mobilization of the Church and of the Christian attack on the world. Unless these various efforts are focussed, gathered up, and localized, they will come to nothing. To leave these immense tasks to overworked pastors as a spare-time occupation means to take neither the pastoral duties nor the new opportunities seriously. But if a group of men give full time to the new tasks, and if this group becomes a true community and an energizing centre for a large group of workers, we may hope that something will be changed in the life of the Church and that a concerted attack on the world becomes possible.

"And as to the preparation for new types of ministry, it is quite clear that the mobilizing of the parishes, the evangelizing of the dechristianized masses, the Christian occupation of the field of thought, the awakening of an ecumenical consciousness, are hopeless undertakings if the Christian ministry remains—as it has become in so many churches—an exclusive privilege and duty of the ordained pastors and if these pastors continue to be 'men of all work.' The churches will have to rediscover the full meaning of the diversity of gifts and the diversity of ministrations which St. Paul considers characteristic of the Christian community.

"We come then to the following proposal. It should be the policy of the ecumenical reconstruction work to help each Church or group of Churches to create an institute the general aim of which is to help the Churches in performing the new tasks which the Lord of the Church gives them to do in the new situation. The four specific aims of those institutes would be:

"a. To act as headquarters where the evangelistic work of the church is planned and coordinated.

"b. To serve as a study centre where in conference and study courses theologians and specialists elaborate together the Christian message concerning the various realms of life and where the results of this study work are passed on to the younger generation.

"c. To train such full-time workers for the Church as require a practical rather than an academic training (women workers, social workers, youth secretaries, evangelists) and to train (in short courses) the non-professional church workers (leaders for the parish activities, Sunday School teachers, etc.).

"d. To be the centre of ecumenical contact which passes on from the ecumenical movement to the Churches and vice versa what they have to give to each other."

This proposal is not the creation of Mr. Visser 't Hooft's imagination. As some of you will know, there are already in Europe seven centres which perform one or more of the functions listed above. Unfortunately, with the possible exception of the Iona Community in Scotland, none of them are well known in the United States. Those who are interested may learn about the centres through a report written by Walter M. Horton, entitled Centres of New Life in European Christendom, published by the World Council of Churches (American Committee) and obtainable from 297 Fourth Avenue, New York City, at fifteen cents a copy.

That the centres are well worth investigating is the opinion of other men who like Dr. Horton had the opportunity to visit one or more of them. Through conferences, various theological groups, and such institutions as Windham House we are in this country already realizing some of the possibilities inherent in the centres. It seems to me, however, that the establishment of centres similar to some of the European ones would be of great value in meeting three desperate needs of the Church.

1. Provide a place where men might experience and, at the same time, witness to true Christian fellowship and community. Under present circumstances, this goal is all but impossible to accomplish in parish life except on an extremely partial basis.

2. Provide a place where interested men and women could meet as part of an ongoing community life to work on the content and strategy of the Christian witness to the modern world.

3. Provide a place where laymen may come for training for specific ministries such as evangelists, teachers, and Christian witnesses and prophets within their own vocation. A good many of the courses should be geared to the vacation period of two weeks, and provision should be made for whole families to take part in the program.

Swivel Chair Dictator

By
CHARLES A. HIGGINS
Rector of St. Alban's, Waco, Texas

LESS THAN a decade ago seminary students at the Church's most "missionary minded" school were taught that missionary bishops are "little czars" who have almost absolute authority in their districts. Actually the professor knew better but he didn't see the use of cluttering up his lectures with asides on the missionary dictatorship at "281."

On paper the missionary bishop may be a little czar. Actually he is the most hamstrung administrator in the Church. His decisions are dictated by a man in New York who knows little or nothing about conditions in the bishop's district. This man is vice-president of the National Council. He is supposed to be guided by the Council but actually members of the Council, in their ignorance, rubber-stamp the vice-president's proposals.

This situation has been the subject of numerous protests. Bishop Brent wrote a memorial on the subject and presented it to General Convention. Bishop Roots constantly spoke and wrote against the practice. Now that a bishop, who has experienced the situation as an underdog, is coming to sit in the chair of the dictator there is some hope for reform.

The unwisdom of making a New York bureaucrat absolute ruler of our overseas missionary enterprise has been especially apparent since the end of hostilities. There is the matter of monetary inflation in China, for example. A missionary in the interior of China makes a contract for the reconstruction of a school building. The project has already been authorized by the National Council but the details must now have the official OK of the dictator. Before his approval can be received the bottom falls out of Chinese currency and the missionary must start again from the beginning.

The fact that judgments at "281" about conditions abroad are stupid and wrong is illustrated by a recent tilt one of our talented missionary bishops had with the secretary who has been running our department of missions. The bishop recommended acquisition of church property valued at $50,000 for the price of a five thousand dollar endowment to a cemetery adjoining the property. It was a perfectly legitimate and moral transaction but the man in the swivel chair, who knew nothing about the country under the bishop's jurisdiction, thought he detected some sort of fraud. He vetoed the bishop's proposal.

Contrast this with a system used by another Church with extensive work in China. This Church operated a school with one of the finest campuses in prewar China. The school property was damaged extensively during the war and finally occupied by Japanese troops. The first missionary sent back to this city after the Japanese surrender was authorized to spend U.S. $50,000 in repairing the school buildings. He was, therefore, able to let the first postwar contracts in that city before other building skyrocketed prices. The Church involved saved thousands of dollars because it entrusted authority to a man in the field.

The Episcopal Church should be proud of the leaders she has sent to missionary fields abroad. In their adopted countries they have been respected by the highest officials in government and business. In united endeavours of missionary groups our workers have been placed in positions of leadership. Seminaries report that their most talented graduates often volunteer for overseas service. The man in the New York office may admit all this is theory but his practice shows what he really believes. So far as he is concerned, missionaries are irresponsible children who need to be watched.

PSYCHOLOGICAL WORK

By Dr. William Eccker
Chief Psychologist at Philadelphia State Hospital

THERE is widespread ignorance about the services rendered by psychologists and the function of psychological tests. In addition there are all the misconceptions that grow up around poorly understood material. Herewith is an attempt to clear up some of the mystery with the hope that it may be of some assistance to the clergy and other professional Church workers who are turning in increasing numbers to psychologists to aid them in pastoral work. It will be appreciated, I am sure, that I am describing this field in a space that is far too limited.

The "I.Q." is the best known part of a psychologist's work. The publicity that followed the extensive intelligence testing during World War I made everybody I.Q. conscious (I.Q. means the ratio of one's intelligence to that of the average person). Later psychologists became identified with I.Q.'s so much that people, including even physicians, thought all psychological testing as being made up exclusively of I.Q.'s. Intelligence testing does still encompass a large portion of the work done by a psychologist. These tests are very numerous, falling into two types. Group tests or self-administering, and individual tests or the kind that require a well-trained psychologist to administer. The best examples of individual tests are the Terman-Merrill revision of the Stanford Binet, best used with children; and the Wechsler-Bellevue for use with adults. Intelligence testing needs no further elaboration since it is so well known.

Another function of the psychologist is the analysis of tests for diagnosis; that is, the search for relative differences in specific abilities which are characteristic of certain types of emotional disturbance, or organic defect. The presence of certain peculiarities in these test patterns aids the psychologist in determining what kind of psychosis or psychoneurosis is present. These patterns also aid in predicting what the outcome of the disturbance will be. Differences in relative ability in specific skills is also useful in vocational guidance work.

In vocational guidance the best work consists of personal interviews with counseling thruout the whole series of sessions. But the tests are essential aids. First of all intelligence measures determine what "class" of occupations the patient can best aspire to, so that a very bright individual will not end up in a job that is too simple and monotonous and non-satisfying for him. On the other hand, a child of average intelligence will not be doomed to failure because he hitched his wagon to a star as a result of lack of proper guidance, and later flunks out of medical school with all the resulting disillusionment, not to mention the waste in money and time.

In addition to the intelligence tests, vocational guidance requires vocational interest inventories to screen out some work fields and narrow down the choice of vocation to a few major groups of occupations. Later come aptitude tests to determine what specific innate (or acquired) talents and skills are present to fit the client for a particular life work. An additional aid to the counseling procedure is the personality test which reveals the individual's temperament and disposition so that one may more intelligently guide him into the environment which best fits him.

Personality tests, in addition to use in vocational guidance are aids to psychotherapy in psychiatric work. These techniques are great time savers. Often in one session they can reveal more about the personality than can many months of treatment by a competent psychiatrist. For this procedure the personality inventory (for example the Benreuter) has been very popular, but it is now being replaced by projective techniques like the Rorshach ("ink blot test"), which measures personality structure, and the Thematic Apperception Test, by means of which conscious and unconscious thought content is obtained. Armed with the results of these tests the psychotherapist is better able to chart a course of treatment in a short time by which to rehabilitate the person whose emotional troubles have made him a helpless and expensive ward of the State.

A further service performed by a well-trained psychologist is psychotherapy, though at present this work is considered by many psychiatrists to be their own special field. Competence in this work is of course logically determined not so much by what titles one has, as by what special training and experience one has and what temperament one is born with. Recently more and more psychologists have been entering the field of psychotherapy, especially in guidance clinics and hospitals.

Not all psychologists render all the above services, but most of them specialize in certain fields. Many limit their work to college teaching, industrial psychologists tend to their own field, some do nothing but psychotherapy, while others are limited to ramifications of the above fields which we have not here described because of lack of space.

Bishop Creighton Has Resigned As Bishop of Michigan

The Election of Successor Will Take Place At the Convention of Diocese in January

Edited by Sara Dill

Detroit, Mich.:—The intention of Bishop Frank W. Creighton to resign as Bishop of Michigan was announced at a meeting of the standing committee on September 23rd. He stated in his letter that a series of heart attacks made it necessary and said that he would present his resignation to the House of Bishops meeting next month at Winston-Salem. He asks that the resignation become effective March 31, 1948. Bishop Creighton indicated that he will give consent to the diocesan convention meeting January 28 to elect a Bishop Coadjutor, who would of course automatically become the diocesan on March 31.

Bishop Creighton, who is 67, was a business man for 14 years before he decided to study for the ministry. Following his ordination in 1915 he served parishes in Albany and Brooklyn, N. Y.

He was consecrated as missionary bishop of Mexico on January 12, 1926, and during the next eight years won wide praise for the diplomacy and efficiency of his administration in the face of stringent laws regarding religion. Although there is a provision in the constitution of Mexico requiring clergymen to be natives by birth, Bishop Creighton has a letter from President Callez, in which he gives consent to the Bishop's coming, and welcomes him. When Bishop Creighton returned from the Lambeth Conference in 1930, and reached New York, he was called into the Presiding Bishop's office and requested to come to this country to organize a department of domestic missions, which had previously been in the department of missions and church extension. This gave him charge of all the Indian work, Negro work, work in the southern mountains, work among the foreign born, and the rural work in all the missionary districts in the United States. When he returned to Mexico and told cabinet officers and Mexican officials what the Presiding Bishop had asked him to do, they begged the Bishop not to resign, but to continue as Bishop of Mexico. However, Bishop Creighton did accept the Presiding Bishop's request, and upon his leaving Mexico he was succeeded by his Suffragan Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Efrain Salinas y Velasco.

Bishop Creighton was elected as Suffragan Bishop of Long Island in 1933. In 1937 he was elected as Coadjutor to the late Bishop Herman Page of Michigan, whom he succeeded on January 1, 1940, upon Bishop Page's retirement.

No Watering Down

London: — The Archbishop of York, last week warned the Church against watering down its message to meet the temper of the day.

"The more such concessions are made," he said, "the greater will be the departure of the Church from historic Christianity. It will have been false to its creed. A reduced Christianity watered down in the hope that it may be more congenial to the spirit of the time will have no influence and will give no help.

"An age of crisis needs the help of the Word of God. Man knows he cannot save himself. Pious exhortations and moral precepts addressed to men in a world which is crashing round them are as useless as rose water sprinkled on a house on fire."

The Archbishop stressed, however, that uncompromising adherence to the Gospel must not prevent the Church from stating its faith in intelligible terms and adapting its organization to modern conditions. He said the Church's theological vocabulary is an unknown language to the man in the street, and that if its teaching is to be understood the Church must translate its technical vocabulary into popular language.

The Archbishop also sounded a warning against attracting people to church services with "stunts," sentimental solos by infant prodigies, blatant advertisements, and sensational sermons on the sins of the day.

On the other hand, Archbishop Garbett reprimanded "zealous church members who, finding the world disregarding their warnings and going on its way to destruction, withdraw to spiritual catacombs."

Leads Conferences

Detroit, Mich.:—Bishop Emrich, suffragan of Michigan, has been the leader at a number of conferences in the diocese this fall, preparatory to the Every Member Canvass. There were 80 clergymen at a conference held at Pontiac where the Rev. G. Paul Musselman, chairman of the department of promotion, and the Rev. Gordon Matthews, executive secretary, aided the Bishop. This was followed by a laymen's conference held at Lansing where the leaders were Bishop Emrich, Mr. Musselman, Mr. Robert J. Hutton of Detroit, Mr. W. Ross Baley, diocesan director of youth, and Mrs. Charles R. Dengler of St. Paul's, Jackson.

Divorce Issue

London (RNS):—By the narrow margin of one vote, 500 Anglican clergymen attending the Chelmsford Diocesan Synod went on record against permitting innocent parties in divorces granted on the ground of adultery from being remarried in the Church of England, even after a period of two years. The vote was 188 in favor and 189 against.

The voting took place in a secret ballot after a four-hour discussion of five questions related to divorce and remarriage. In each case, a number of clergymen refrained from expressing their views.

The other four questions, and the ballot results, were:

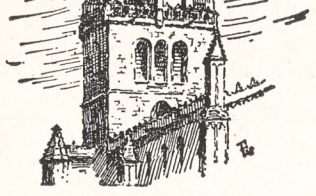
1. Should civil marriage in a registry office be, in every case, obligatory? Yes, 61; No, 407.

2. Should a tribunal, consisting of a bishop and assessors, be set up to consider applications for a (church) decree of nullity after divorce? Yes, 331; No, 121.

3. Is it desirable, in the meanwhile, that a parish priest should remarry one, who, in his judgment, is the innocent party? Yes, 81; No, 357.

4. Should the Church be more explicit as to the admittance to Holy Communion of persons divorced? Yes, 336; No, 96.

Primate on Unity



Toronto: — The newly installed Primate of the Church of England in Canada, Archbishop George F. Kingston of Halifax, declared in an interview last week that the Church in Canada will not enter into union with any other Church unless the Church of England does also.

"We are willing and anxious to continue conversations with other faiths toward the eventual goal of reunion," the Archbishop stated, "but I am opposed to any short-circuiting of it which might set back seriously the whole movement for reunion of world Christendom.

"We are perfectly willing to cooperate, as we have, in the Canadian Council of Churches, and, we hope, in the World Council of Churches."

Archbishop Kingston said the key problem of church reunion and the one most difficult to solve is the

"The whole process of reunion," he warned, "must not be precipitate. We must go slowly, and I feel it will be years before a world union will be possible."

Laymen Meet

Manlius, N. Y.:—Laymen of the diocese of Central New York met in conference here, September 13-14, and heard Bishop Peabody outline specific places where laymen's work is needed in the diocese. He stressed particularly lay-reading, part-time assistance to the clergy, support of missions.

Renounces White Race

Madison, Wis. (RNS):—The Rev. Kenneth L. Patton, youthful Unitarian minister who renounced his membership in the white race, explained here that his action was taken because of his "irritation and disgust" over discrimination against Madison Negroes who sought to buy or rent homes here. His action, he added, was something he expected any person of "religious and moral sensibilities" to understand.

Patton said he made his decision to identify himself hereafter as "a man of color" after reading Kingsblood Royal, a novel by Sinclair Lewis. The novel tells the story of a young banker who discovered he was part Negro and made the fact public.

The Madison minister said he believes he is part Indian, though he has not traced his family tree sufficiently to make it certain.

In a sermon announcing his intention to renounce the white race, Patton declared: "I have some Indian blood in me, and according to common prejudice, that makes me all Indian. So I think I will declare in favor of what color I have and join the Colored people. I'm going to do everything in my power to jam up machinery whereby this silly and vicious discrimination against the Colored people is allowed to continue."

Unique Church

Orleans, Mass. (RNS):—The Episcopal Church of the Holy Spirit here, unlike other churches, began with a congregation which erected the house of worship and then produced its own minister. Familiarly known as "The Church of the Open Door," it was built 12 years ago. Among the small band of laymen who started the church was the first minister. The worshipers couldn't afford to hire a clergyman, so the future minister went to the bishop to see if something couldn't be done. He came back a licensed lay reader, with permission to study for the ministry at home, reporting from time to time to the dean of the Episcopal Theological School. Four years later, at the age of 64, he took his canonical examinations and was ordained to the diaconate. Two years later, in his own little church, he was advanced to the priesthood.

Tourists and travellers through historic Cape Cod are usually impressed at the sight of the small church whose door, facing a country road, is open to worshipers at all hours of the day and night. They are eager to get a closer look at the church, fashioned by hand from driftwood and the timbers of an old, storm-wrecked inn. The church boasts many treasures contributed by friends and parishioners. There's a beautiful chalice made by Russian peasants long ago, a ciborium from Spain, a Della Robbia placque, and in its altar, wood from St. Peter's Church in the Forest of Arden, dating back to 1662.

Residents of Orleans once dubbed the edifice "The Church of the Holy Ginger Jar." The name grew out of the custom of setting up a ginger jar into which parishioners might drop money for special uses. The Rev. Richard D. Kimball, rector, has never once asked a parishioner for money. The little band of 35 persons who originally built the church passed a unanimous motion that no one would ever be approached for money gifts. Out of the "Holy Ginger Jars" has come a revolving fund from which parishioners in need borrow money to tide them over a personal financial crisis. No loan has ever gone unpaid.

"The Church of the Open Door" remains in good condition. If a parishioner chances to notice a loose shutter or a shingle that needs fixing, he attends to the repair job himself.

Doctors Meet

Geneva: — Thirty-five delegates from ten European countries met here under the auspices of the World Council of Churches. The conference was one of a series in which lay groups considered their vocations from the Christian standpoint. Previous meetings were held for teachers and for politicians.

Presbyterians Gain

Philadelphia: — Officials of the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. announced here that the past year was "one of the best" in the history of the denomination from the standpoint of gains in membership and finances. A statistical survey released by the office of the general assembly reported a net membership gain of 60,268, an increase exceeded only in 1929. Last year 111,952 new communicant members were added, setting "an all-time record." Total membership in the Church has risen to 2,234,798, largest in the 241 years of organized Presbyterianism in America, it was said.

Finances increased by $11,287,892 during the past year. Total contributions amounted to $78,567,368, exceeding those of the preceding year by $18,884,987 and breaking all records. Per capita giving, statistics showed, rose to $36.15, a gain over the previous year's $31.76. For benevolences alone, per capita giving went from $5.65 to $8.73 this past year.

Sunday school enrollment of the Church was reported at 1,312,034. This figure was said to be 50,000 greater than that of last year. In addition, there were 67,623 infant baptisms, representing an increase of more than 20.000.

Evangelism in England

London (RNS):—Plans for a nationwide "Lambeth Campaign" of evangelism and missionary education have been approved here by the missionary council of the Church of England assembly. The campaign, which will extend to Anglican parishes throughout England, Ireland and Wales, will begin on December 2. Climax of the campaign will come next year when bishops from Anglican communities throughout the world will make a tour of all the British dioceses. The bishops are coming here for the 1948 Lambeth Conference, first meeting of the Anglican consultative body to be held since 1930.

Conference Given Up

New York (RNS):—Hope that the Federal Council of Churches might sponsor an interdenominational conference to consider the possibility of closer unity among Protestant Churches faded here when reports from its constituent bodies were read before the Council's executive committee.

authorized by the agency's biennial meeting in Seattle last December to call such a conference if a sufficient number of denominations favored the proposal.)

Of the 25 denominations affiliated with the Council only six indicated approval of the plan, eleven failed to reply, three flatly declined to participate, two agreed to appoint observers, and three postponed action.

Affirmative replies were received from the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A.; the Evangelical and Reformed Church; the Moravian Church; the Congregational Christian Churches; the Disciples of Christ; and the United Presbyterian Church.

The United Lutheran Church, the Church of the Brethren, and the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. (Southern) declined to participate.

Action was postponed by the Methodist, Reformed, and Northern Baptist bodies.

The two Churches agreeing to appoint observers were the Protestant Episcopal and the United Church of Canada.

In the light of the replies the executive committee voted that "since it appears that less than half of the Churches associated with the Council desire to participate, the proposed conference should be a project of the interested Churches rather than of the Federal Council."

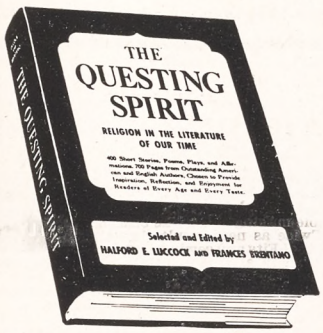
The Vatican Pleased

Rome (RNS):—A series of attractive booklets containing the recent messages on world peace exchanged between Pope Pius XII and President Truman has been printed by the Vatican for distribution among diplomatic representatives to the Holy See, it was announced here. The booklets are in English, Italian, French, German, Spanish and Portuguese.



Meanwhile, in a lengthy comment on the Pope's message, an anti-Communist Rome newspaper declared that the Pontiff "supported certain American initiatives on condition that they remain strictly within diplomatic spheres and receive the support of England and France."

Declaring that U. S.-Vatican relations are "daily becoming closer," the newspaper said this rapprochement "would undoubtedly have an effect on the general direction of Vatican policies, with American churchmen acquiring new and important positions in the government of the Catholic Church."

The newspaper added that in his message to President Truman, the Pope also stressed the importance of the campaign by Argentina and other Latin-American countries for revision of the Italian peace treaty. It said Latin-America is "the best guarantee for the future peace of the world."

Warns of Aid

New York (RNS):—Using American aid to Europe "as a club to beat Communism" will destroy the "whole moral basis of the Marshall approach," Henry Smith Leiper, associate general secretary of the World Council of Churches, warned in a statement issued here.

"Consideration of aid to Europe along the lines of the report of the Paris Conference on the Marshall Plan must be guided by the needs of Europeans as human beings and not as pawns in the present 'cold war' between the U. S. and the U.S.S.R.," Leiper said.

He scored the suggestion that aid be predicated on the restoration of private enterprise in Europe, declaring that "such qualifications, reasonable as they appear to us, will be considered by Europeans as a repugnant attempt at political domination, a type of domination which is now being tried by the U.S.S.R. in eastern Europe."

Leiper hailed evidences of European self-help as contained in the report of the Paris Conference. He said it had been the experience of World Council headquarters in Geneva that European nations "are notably willing to help each other out of their own meager supplies."

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

MR. B. A. SIDNEY
Layman of New York City

I have been surprised and not a little disappointed that THE WITNESS failed to comment on the exchange of letters between Mr. Truman and the Pope. Your position on the Truman Doctrine has been sound in my judgment. It is a very oily business with the US bolstering up a reactionary regime against, not Russian communists, but the people of Greece who fought on our side in the war. For the strongest Church in the world, numerically, to now be brought into the picture to give the whole messy policy religious sanction should call forth a vigorous protest from all right-thinking Christian people.

It means not only that we are backing a reactionary regime in Greece, but it also means that we are supporting a reactionary Church. This was made abundantly clear by the news story on page six of THE WITNESS for Sept. 25, reporting that the Vatican was so pleased with the exchange of letters that they have printed them in booklets in six different languages for distribution. This surely calls for editorial comment in THE WITNESS. I have come to expect straight thinking on social and international issues in THE WITNESS, something that is entirely rare in religious journals. Here is hoping that you will not disappoint your readers by failing to deal with this highly important matter.

MRS. J. B. BURNS
Churchwoman of Philadelphia

Thanks to THE WITNESS editors for giving us the fine number devoted to the Girls' Friendly Society. The articles in it gave us a clear picture of the work being done by this important society for young girls. The organization has a program which I am sure would be of the greatest help to all parishes, particularly in these days when we are reading so much in the papers about delinquency. I would add that I have enjoyed the other numbers of THE WITNESS that have been devoted to special agencies of the Church, but being the mother of two young daughters I was of course especially interested in this September 25th number.

MISS BETTY JONES
Laywoman of New York

I have wondered what the letters RNS mean at the beginning of some news items in THE WITNESS. I thought I might get the explanation in the masthead on page two but I find nothing there.

ANSWER: The letters stand for Religious News Service. This is an agency for the gathering of religious news throughout the world to which THE WITNESS, along with many religious journals, subscribes. THE WITNESS also has correspondents in all the dioceses of the Church so that we have, we believe, a complete news coverage. But it is our policy to present only news that in our judgment is of general interest, and to present all the facts briefly. We check our news pages constantly with those of other Church papers so that we are sure that our news coverage is not surpassed by any paper of the Church, regardless of subscription price.

MR. H. W. WEBB
Roman Catholic Layman of New York

I am fully aware that the so-called Vatican line is reactionary and against the cherished hopes of the ordinary people of this world. But I do think that THE WITNESS is frequently too severe with the Roman Catholic Church. It has to be remembered that there are many devout, practicing Catholics, who are as much opposed to reaction, from whatever source, as you are, and we are not disposed to allow our spiritual leaders to direct our political thinking.

This is illustrated, I think, by a case which is now receiving wide attention in this city. Mr. John Santo, a leader of the Transport Workers Union, is in trouble with the authorities, charged with being an alien communist—this in spite of the fact that he served for over three years in the U. S. army from which he was discharged honorably, and during which time he sought to become an American citizen, with the naive notion that a soldier was entitled to citizenship. The Catholic Church certainly is opposed to communists. Yet the Transport Workers Union, which I am told is predominantly Roman Catholic, not only is refusing to run out on Mr. Santo but is right now, under the leadership of Mr. Mike Quill, likewise Catholic, raising a fund of $100,000 to defend him.

You will find, I believe, many instances where Catholics take action like that; standing for justice and progress whatever may be the attitude of their spiritual leaders. It has to be remembered that Catholics are also, in large measure, working people and we have come through experience to know who are our friends and who are our enemies.

I might add that this is not criticism of THE WITNESS. I am not a regular subscriber but I do step into an Episcopal Church on Madison Avenue nearly every week and buy one of the copies for sale there.

Archbishop of York Condemns The Vatican Policy

Declares that Roman Catholicism in Europe Is the Rallying Ground for Reactionaries

London (RNS):—The Archbishop of York, Cyril Forster Garbett, has called upon the Church to "firmly refuse to accept the position that Europe must be divided into ideological camps." He said that if the European continent becomes permanently split into Communist and non-Communist countries another war will be inevitable. He issued his warning in preaching at Malton.

He said the Christian Church must work for peace in the face of "opposing ideologies which are the new religions of the 20th century to millions of people." He stressed, however, that Christians must be realists, pointing out that nowhere in the Bible is hope held out of perfect peace in the world. One of the Church's first obligations, said the Archbishop, is to help remove the fears and hatreds separating nations and to draw them close together.

"Always and at all times," he emphasized, "we must call the nations to repentance, since it is only a penitent Church which will make itself heard by an impenitent world.

"The Church must also," he added, "work towards banishing from the world the giants of hunger and want. It is its duty meanwhile to support the United Nations as the only organization through which the nations can continue to promote world peace and restrain would-be aggressors."

Archbishop Garbett noted that "heresy hunting" has been revived "on a scale dwarfing the Spanish Inquisition at its worst," with the charge of capitalism replacing that of fascism.

"As division deepens and smaller nations find that for their own safety they must take sides, the danger of future war deepens," he said.

The imminent danger, the Archbishop continued, is that Europe may be divided into two great groups, Western and Eastern, corresponding roughly to non-Communistic and Communistic countries, thus making war inevitable. Dr. Garbett charged that the separation of Europe into strongly contrasting camps is being encouraged by Vatican policy.

"Vatican policy," he said, "treats Russia as the chief enemy of Christian civilization and, wherever it has influence, supports opposition both to Communism and social democracy. Catholic parties on the continent are at present progressive in their program, but they are also the rallying ground for reactionaries, and there is danger that once again on the continent Catholicism will be identified with reaction."

"If this becomes the case again," Dr. Garbett declared, "Gambetta's cry will be heard: 'Clericalism is the enemy,' and in its hour of victory in every country, the Left will treat the Church, and possibly Christianity, as its political foe."

Declaring that materialistic Marxian Communism is logically interpreted as opposed to Christianity, Dr. Garbett contended, however, "it is untrue to say that within the Communist state there is no room for Christianity."

"An answer to this accusation," he said, "is the Orthodox Church of Russia, which has greater freedom than it ever had under the Tsars, and which, year by year, grows in devotion and members. The Church there is loyal both to the Christian faith and the Soviet state.

"We must hope and pray that closer friendship with the Russian Church may lead to better understanding with the Soviet state and people."

Dr. Garbett praised the ecumenical (world church cooperation) movement for its work in encouraging friendship between Christians of different nations, and said the movement "would be immensely strengthened if the Roman Catholic Church could see its way to take some part in it."

ANNUAL MEETING OF WORLD ALLIANCE

Boston:—What world religion can contribute in support and development of the UN will be discussed at the annual meeting and convention of the World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches, to be held here November 14-16. Cooperating agencies at this important meeting which will plan the World Congress next year (see back cover) include the American Association for the United Nations, the League for Fair Play, Council Against Intolerance, Friends of Democracy, Council for Democracy and other organizations.

One of the highlights of the convention will be the mass meeting and international broadcast over a national network in which a group of internationally known leaders will take part.

NO THREAT OF WAR SAYS SOCKMAN

Springfield, Mass.: — The Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, Methodist minister of New York and president of the Church Peace Union, told the world conference of Methodists here that "war is not inevitable." Stating that the Soviet Union is too poor to start a war, he declared that "we must check the hysteria of fear and hate which is now sweeping over the world and leading people to think that another war is inevitable and imminent."

Sockman, who spent the summer in Europe, said that great as may be the hunger for food in western Europe, "even greater is the hunger for faith in the future."

He said people there lack faith in the value of their currency, in the stability of their governments and in the security of Europe.

"Restoration of hope is more imperative than reconstruction of buildings," the clergyman asserted.

If the world can hold steady for the next ten years, thus giving the United Nations time to find itself and improve itself, Dr. Sockman said, "the truth about Communism will also have time to show itself. Its dangers and defects will be revealed."

"Russia's tactics," he continued, "are steadily costing her friends. Let the Christian nations like Britain and America so conduct their foreign and domestic policies that the harassed peoples of the earth will be converted to true democracy. It can be done.

"The hope of Communism lies in the economic and spiritual collapse of Christian countries. That is what the Kremlin is counting on. Our best defense, therefore, is to make democracy work. This will not be done by hysterical witch-hunting, but by hard work and clear thinking."

Referring to displaced persons, Dr. Sockman said the United States must take the responsibility which goes with strength and open its doors to thousands "who have no home."

CONFERENCE AT KENYON WELL ATTENDED

Gambier, Ohio:—Kenyon College was the scene of the second conference on the heritage of the English-speaking peoples and their responsibility, at which was gathered a notable company of distinguished leaders in the field of religion, philosophy, literature, science, economics, politics, labor. Subjects ranged widely from abstract theory to the immediate practical problems: UN trusteeships, third parties, reform measures of the present Labor government in England.

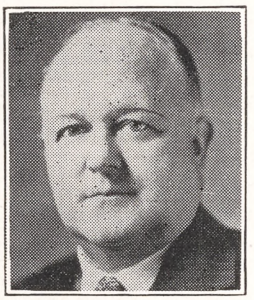
While the depth and lasting significance of the Conference may in the end be gauged by calmer discussions inquiring into such topics as the literary heritage, liberal tradition, manners and morals, or the spirit of the age, it is safe to say that the size and interest of the audience measurably increased when the session was reached in which Senator Joseph H. Ball of Minnesota locked horns with Victor Reuther, educational director of the United Auto Workers over labor-management issues raised by the Taft-Hartley Act.

"Senator Ball and Mr. Reuther were not trying to agree," Professor H. T. Wade-Gerry said in his summary of the discussions. "Each knew what the other would say and that it would be wrong; their discord was not exactly rehearsed, but they were clearly at home with each other. I felt that neither Mr. Reuther nor Senator Ball would quite recognize the American scene if the other voice were silent."

Another contrast was in the conservative economic theories of Professor William A. Orton of Smith College and the impassioned defense of the British Labor Party by Normal MacKenzie of The New Statesman and Nation. And another was in the talk by the romantic poet, Robert Hillyer, who appeared on the program with Eric Bentley, spokesman for "the new criticism."

The note of self-criticism which seems to mark each of these conferences was sounded straightforwardly by the Rev. Canon A. S. Walker, president of the University of King's College, Halifax, in the sermon at morning prayer. He said we have forgotten the real battle of right and wrong and that our religious heritage does not hold us when we base distinctions on money instead of real merit.

Louis Kronenberger, drama critic of Time and PM, criticized our culture incisively as "all signposts and no destination," commenting acridly on our pre-digested, pre-shrunk" passive approach to fundamental values.



An outside observer would have had some revealing insights into the democratic process if he had heard John Fischer on the heterogeneous programs of our political parties, which form a working basis for compromise, however illogical, and which temper the extremists of both right and left.

Herman Finer emphasized our responsibilities as a world power and warned us against the sins of omission. Our actions must be firm, he said, but they must be taken "in a spirit of liberty, and tend towards the making more abundant of liberties for other peoples, and not in a spirit of crabbing the democratic experiments which the free mind of other nations has soberly settled to be proper."

Arthur Murphy's analysis of our liberal heritage sought to re-define the fundamental tenets of our political philosophy by tracing its development from John Locke and by using as an example of our current misinterpretations the purge of federal employees by the loyalty tests.

After a rich and varied week-end, Professor H. T. Wade-Gerry remarked: "This conference has been like an orchestra tuning up. The instruments were not perhaps aiming at one uniform pitch; they were aim-rather at a certain precision of discord."

VISIT TO EUROPE BY PEPPER

New York:—The Rev. Almon R. Pepper, head of the department of social relations of the National Council, left for Europe on October 8 to participate in a conference on the relief program of the Churches. The conference will also consider the problem of displaced persons. Following this meeting to be held in Geneva, the secretary plans to visit DP camps near Frankfort and Munich and then spend several days in England. A large part of the million dollar Presiding Bishop's Fund is dispensed through Church World Service.

The Church Peace Union Gets Message From Japan

The Foreign Minister of Italy Also Sends A Message to the American Organization

New York:—A greeting and message from the All Japan Peace Conference through Religion, signed by its chairman, Masaharu Anesaki, has been received by the Church Peace Union and World Alliance for International Peace through the Churches. Translated from Japanese the message reads:

"It is indeed a genuine pleasure for us to extend to you our sincere greetings from the All Japan Peace Conference through Religions meeting in Tokyo, on the occasion of the enforcement of our new constitution. We are the religious workers and followers representing Buddhism, Shintoism, Christianity and other religions in Japan, meeting together for a conference on the common interests for peace through religion.

"It is with a deep sense of remorse and penitence that we come together to examine ourselves in the light of our religious conscience, reminding us of our inability to avert the mistaken national policy which helped induce such a terrible war tragedy among the nations. We pledge ourselves to make a new start, dedicating ourselves upon the altar of peace and humanity. We are grateful that our country has now come to promulgate the new constitution based upon peace and democracy, expressly abolishing war as a means of national policy; and thus to rebuild a civilized country capable and eager to join with all the peaceloving nations of the world. We are happy that our country, humiliated in defeat, may serve to bring about enduring peace on earth. Thus the great sacrifices of life and treasure spent in this war may not be in vain.

"It is our earnest desire that the organization of the United Nations should be developed into a strong peace machinery, thus eliminating the causes of war, and the establishment of permanent peace in the world. We hope the time will soon come when our country will be received into the family of nations, and cooperate in all enterprises that promote the welfare of mankind. Meanwhile, we shall endeavor, first of all, to cultivate the ideals of peace and democracy in the national life through religious education and prepare our people to share in international affairs.

"The world looks to religion to support every earnest effort for peace. So we feel it our supreme duty and responsibility to foster international friendship and goodwill among all nations. We firmly believe that all religions are one and the same in hope and love, and in seeking the welfare and salvation of all people, although they may differ widely in the doctrines they uphold. So we ask your support for this movement for peace through religions. We of this conference place ourselves at your disposal, hoping that we also may join in all movements to make this world better for the blessing of the whole mankind.

"May blessings from on High richly attend your very important work in promoting the welfare of all men!

The Rev. William P. Merrill was president of the Church Peace Union for thirty years and is now president-emeritus

Count Carlos Sforza, foreign minister of Italy, in an interview with the Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, Methodist minister of New York, held in Rome likewise sent a message to the Church Peace Union as follows:

"I still remember with deep respect the work of the Churches in America for peace and union among the nations. Only nations not sure of their future may think of war. But happily Italy is sure of her future because of the vitality of 46,000,000 of her people. I assure all my American friends that Italy will always be beside America for any action making sure Christian peace in the world."

WOLCOTT CUTLER ASKS QUESTION

Boston:—The Rev. Wolcott Cutler, mild mannered but fighting rector of St. John's, Charleston, has had this message printed on the face of his envelopes in red ink: "Many European and other nations fear the U.S.A. more than they do the U.S.S.R. Why don't we know all that they know?"

APPOINTING BISHOPS CRITICIZED

London (RNS):—The present method of appointing English bishops was criticized by the Archbishop of York in a speech at the Manchester diocesan centenary celebrations. The method, under which an appointee is nominated by the Archbishop of Canterbury and confirmed by Parliament, has "dangerous possibilities and is difficult to defend" he declared. He stated that each diocese should have some voice in the selection.

Archbishop Garbett also said that within the century Church of England parishes had experienced a welcome change in their relationships with non-conformist churches. "We find we can cooperate with them on many religious, moral and social grounds, without any betrayal of principle."

BISHOP COADJUTOR OF COLORADO

Denver:—The Rev. Harold L. Bowen was consecrated Bishop Coadjutor of Colorado on September 29th at a service that packed the Cathedral of St. John in the Wilderness. The consecrator was the Presiding Bishop and the co-consecrators, Bishop Ingley of Colorado and Bishop Conkling of Chicago. Other bishops taking part in the service were Bishop Brinker of Nebraska; Bishop Randall of Chicago; Bishop Pardue of Pittsburgh; Bishop Essex of Quincy; Bishop Zeigler of Wyoming; Bishop Moore of Dallas; Bishop Atwill of North Dakota. Other Bishops attending the service were Bishop Rhea of Idaho; Bishop Fenner of Kansas; Bishop Clark of Utah and Bishop Nichols of Salina.

The service was followed by a luncheon, attended by 450 people, where the speakers were Bishop Sherrill, Bishop Ingley and Bishop Bowen. There was also a tea in honor of Mrs. Bowen, attended by over a thousand women, which was given by the Auxiliary of the diocese.

PARISH HAS FESTIVAL

Savannah: — St. Michael's here celebrated its patronal festival and its 57th anniversary on September 29th. Dean Walthour of Atlanta was the guest preacher at the evening service. Taking part in the service were Bishop Barnwell and the Rev. Bland Tucker, rector of Christ Church here. The service was followed by a reception. The parish, now one of the strongest in the diocese, started as a sewing circle, became a mission and finally a parish.

FAIL TO ELECT IN COLOMBO

Colombo, Ceylon:—After ten hours of deliberation the diocesan council of the Church in India, Burma and Ceylon failed to elect a bishop for Colombo. Three men were nominated by the clergy and three by the laity. When nobody received the necessary two-thirds, the council unanimously passed a resolution requesting the Archbishops of Canterbury and York and the Bishops of London, Durham and Winchester to name a bishop.

WELLESLEY PLANS FOR 1948

Boston:—A program centered in parochial stimulation was enthusiastically adopted by the Wellesley Conference committee meeting at Trinity Church. Prof. Adelaide T. Case of the Episcopal Theological School will direct the division of Christian education. Courses will be offered for the trained director, the average Church school teacher and the neophyte. An experimental school will be conducted where methods and material will be tested; a course in audio-visual aids to implement and objectify the lessons will also be available. The division offers a three year course in adequate religious education for every parish.

The division of Christian worship will be directed by the Rev. Thaddeus Clapp of St. Mark's, Worcester. Courses in "The Living Liturgy," "Development of Church Art and Doctrine" and the "Purpose of Worship" will be offered. In these courses it is hoped the clergy, choirmaster and average communicant will get a deeper sense of cooperative responsibility.

The division of young adults will be directed by the Rev. Charles F. Hall and a staff of nationally known youth leaders. Courses considering, "Youth Faces a Materialistic Age," "Christian Ethics and Pagan Problems," "The Relevance of Christian Solutions in a Scientific Age" and "Choosing My Life Work" will be presented.

The Rev. Samuel A. Eliot is the chairman of the Boston committee of arrangements for the World Congress of Religion in Support of the United Nations

The School of Church Music will be under the direction of Mr. George Faxon, organist and choirmaster, Church of the Advent, Boston. Lecturers and instructors of international fame will conduct the courses. Choir training and organ repertory will be presented.

These spheres of parochial interest will find foundation in the general courses and in the key-note lecturer, who will meet the entire conference the first period of each day.

"Significant Christian Movements in Our Day" will be the theme of the evening forums. Here concrete examples of Christian activity now in operation will be presented. These forums will enable conference participants to return to parochial life inspired and implemented with modern processes of evangelism and Christian service.

The Conference will be held at Wellesley College, June 20 to 27. The Rev. A. Vincent Bennett of Christ Church, Fitchburg, Mass., was elected director of the Conference. The chairman of the program committee is the Rev. Theodore F. Ferris of Trinity Church, Boston.

GERMAN BISHOP TO VISIT

Berlin (RNS):—Otto Dibelius, Bishop of the Evangelical Church in Germany, left here on October 9th for an extended tour of the United States. He will lecture before church and seminary groups, the trip being sponsored by the Evangelical and Reformed Church and the Federal Council of Churches.

SOUTHERN RADIO BROADCASTS

Atlanta, Ga.:—The radio broadcasts of the Episcopal Hour will be resumed November 2, continuing each Sunday through December. They originate here and go over 60 stations of the Southern Religious Network. The cost of $25,000 was voted at the last meeting of the National Council. Broadcasters are the Rev. J. Milton Richardson of Atlanta; the Rev. James W. Kennedy of Lexington; the Rev. Ray Holder of Raleigh; Bishop Henry I. Louttit of South Florida; the Rev. James W. Brettmann of Montgomery, Ala.; Bishop John E. Hines of Texas; the Rev. Louis C. Melcher of Columbia, S. C.; the Presiding Bishop. The final broadcast of the series will be a special Christmas program on December 28.

BISHOPS TO HEAR JAMES F. BYRNES

Winston-Salem, N. C.:—James F. Byrnes, former secretary of state, has accepted an invitation to address the House of Bishops when it meets here in November. He will speak at a meeting on November 5 on world peace.

UN Must Not Fail

THE United Nations must not fail! This is the desperate cry of countless people in this bitterly frustrated and confused age, who see in this young world organization their only hope for salvation from quick death and total destruction.

The present outlook, however, is bleak. Relations between the East and the West continue to deteriorate. Many students of the contemporary international scene assume that the world is already irretrievably split, that furthermore the world cannot exist half "free enterprise" and half "communist." Others, some in places of responsibility, assert that World War III has already begun on the economic and political levels.

The United Nations has been busy setting up its machinery. Meanwhile it is inevitable that the nations should have difficulties in attempting to take joint action for the first time. For some, unilateral action is easier than action with the larger group. But the effort to meet the needs of war-ravaged countries for food, clothing, shelter, and reconstruction should draw the nations into closer harmony. The Marshall Plan, designed to meet these needs, in reality raises troublesome questions. Will the United States work for European economic recovery through the United Nations? Is it possible to reconstruct a viable European economy if the agricultural East and the industrial West do not cooperate? Will the Plan collapse because this country refuses to help areas in which a planned economy operates on a pattern different from the American economy?

We must not give up hope even if the world picture is ominously discouraging. The United Nations furnishes a sounding board and its warnings are being heard. The "give and take" in the Assembly, Councils, and Committees indicates a willingness to cooperate and an effectual method for united effort. The several Councils and their Commissions are devising ways of eliminating and at least focusing attention on the root causes of war: hunger, fear, ignorance, oppression. The greatest achievement of the UN is that it has established the machinery which, though undeniably in need of strengthening, can ensure, if used, the attainment of world community. Any nation that dares allow itself to revert to unilateral action does so at its own peril.

Specific steps must be taken now: (1) The budget of the United Nations (less than that of the Sanitation Department of New York City) must be vastly increased; (2) An effective atomic energy and conventional armament control must be devised; (3) The Food and Agricultural Organization must get special attention in its effort to relieve the world food crisis; (4) Economic relief for all needy peoples must continue under the supervision of the UN agencies; (5) Armed forces must be made available to the UN for the preservation of peace.

But what can "we, the people" do? We can remember that international organization has a brief history, hence needs steadfast and sturdy backing. We can study the United Nations, its primary divisions, its commissions, its specialized agencies; only informed personal judgment can give intelligent backing. We can constantly remind ourselves that the UN is an aggregation of nations, deriving its strength only from the power with which its members endow it. We can seek greater understanding of the USSR. We can make certain that democracy "works" in our community and nation, that civil liberties, racial equality, and socio-economic justice are ensured for each individual.

As the General Assembly meets in regular session stress is being placed on the individual's responsibility in making the UN succeed, particularly in building a mature public opinion in support of it. Churches, synagogues, and schools have a signal opportunity to educate their people for world community through preaching and programs of countless types.

The Jewish High Holy Days last month have meaning for all: Rosh Hashanah (New Year's Day), day of judgment; Ten Days of Penitence; Yom Kippur (the Day of Atonement). In view of the desperate plight of the world — hunger, profound suffering, confused groping — we may well ponder judgment, penitence, and atonement. Judgment on all peoples who are not yet ready to sacrifice for the sake of building one world now. Penitence for not alleviating humanity's suffering more forthrightly. Atonement, a new commitment to the Judaic-Christian ethic of righteousness, in the individual and in society.

"QUOTES"

WE HAVE enough knowledge today to create an effective world organization, and enough knowledge and "know-how" to establish permanent peace in the world. The problem is how can we create the will to peace. No one wants war and yet like blind men on a rough path we stumble ahead toward the abyss of another war. How can the moral forces of the world be aroused and enough goodwill generated to overcome the difficulties—selfish and ideological—that are now making our way so hard?

If the UN is to be empowered to build one world and effect lasting peace, churches and synagogues must develop a vast reservoir of moral and spiritual resources upon which international leaders can draw. To undergird the UN, to strengthen its machinery, and increasingly to use its facilities presents the cardinal challenge of our day. The United Nations must not fail.

World Congress of Religion

by A. William Loos

Educational Secretary of the Church Peace Union

THE Church Peace Union, in line with its record as a pioneer for world peace through religion has launched this new enterprise which promises great hope for a popular worldwide support of the United Nations and its work.

Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, president of the Church Peace Union, in announcing this Congress said: "In accepting responsibility for this World Congress of Religion, we realize fully what a difficult task we face. The unanimous vote of the trustees, approving the undertaking, indicates that these difficulties made the task even more appealing. The United Nations needs and merits the worldwide support of religion, which we have faith to believe this Congress will help to furnish."

The Congress will be held in Boston, Massachusetts, October 23-27, 1948. The preliminary plans and the direction of the enterprise are in the hands of Dr. Henry A. Atkinson who, for 30 years, has been General Secretary of the Church Peace Union and its affiliated organization, the World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches.

The World Congress of Religion in Support of the United Nations will be a worldwide religious peace conference in which men and women representing all countries and all religious faiths will participate. There is only one requirement for their participation: a knowledge of and interest in those questions which basically affect human brotherhood and international accord among the nations.

Some 650 persons in many parts of the world have accepted membership on the committee of 1000, which committee, when completed, will be recognized as the official constituency of the Congress.

"At the present time," as the executive committee points out, "governmental, scientific, educational, and business agencies are hard at work in gearing their programs for a world of peace, but all of these organizations and agencies — important and essential as they are—lack one thing: the basic, compelling power which only religion provides. In the conviction that the guidance and sustaining strength of religion are needed today as never before, the World Congress will discuss methods of pointing the minds and spirits of men toward the kind of world envisioned in the United Nations Charter."

The United Nations, Dr. Atkinson declares, "is the best instrument yet devised for the purpose of saving 'succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind.' It is committed to promote fundamental human rights; to establish justice; to promote social and economic progress and better standards of life for all peoples; to promote the practice of tolerance; to teach people the way to live in peace with one another as good neighbors; to unite our strength and the use of armed force only for the maintenance of international peace and security. The machinery of the United Nations, with its Assembly, Court and Councils designed to achieve these ends, is now in operation and has the formal support of most nations and the vast majority of their people. The United Nations is not an 'automatic device.' It is simply a tool. Imperfect as that tool may be, it is an implement to be used, for in the long run not machinery but people will determine the success of the organization. This Congress will seek to show that just as the scientific man has made the world into 'one neighborhood,' so religious man can by his cooperation in a practical program make the world into 'one brotherhood'."

The Congress of Religion will discuss the scope and measure of the UN. It will not engage in carping criticisms but will set forth a constructive program by which the peoples of the world may strengthen the UN and its constituent agencies.

The delegates to the World Congress will come to the meeting fully aware of the fact that the crisis in the world today is greater than any which the world has ever faced. The atomic bomb hovers over the world with its threat of complete annihilation of our civilization. Men of great distinction are questioning whether or not our intelligence and our will can save us. Physical ruins of proud nations, the dislocation of the world's economy, disillusioned people, and the stateless, homeless wanderers on the face of the earth create new and perplexing problems that have to be met immediately. Even greater than the physical ruin are the confusion in thought and the bankruptcy of men's emotions.

WHAT religious precepts must be accepted? Only these four points which are considered basic to the purpose and program of the Congress:

1) A belief in a Supreme Being.
2) A desire for fellowship, understanding, and the practice of human brotherhood.
3) Cooperation to help secure international justice, promote good will, and provide for all men everywhere the rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.
4) Acceptance of the over-all purpose of the Congress to unite men and women of all religious faiths in support of the United Nations.

The directors of the Congress realize that there will be difficulty in achieving agreement upon a common program, but they believe that effective action can be secured by high idealism and by a common purpose kindred to the various faiths represented in the Congress.

There are three specific things which the Congress plans to do:

1) The Congress will ask what each religion can contribute. How can the adherents of the religions effectively support the United Nations and its constituent agencies?
2) The World Congress will be a conference of individuals associated with, but not committing, the organized bodies of the different faiths. No one will be encouraged to boast either of the past or of the superiority of his particular faith. The Congress will not be used by any secular or religious group for self-advancement.
3) The Congress will not attempt to establish a formal league of religions; questions relating to doctrine, dogmas, and forms of faith and worship will not be discussed.

In brief, the Congress will consider how the forces of religion in all nations can be mobilized into a concerted action in support of the United Nations and its efforts to establish a peaceful, friendly world.

This is not a completely new venture on the part of the Church Peace Union. In 1925 a committee was set up to study the possibilities of holding a world conference of religious leaders. Preliminary meetings were held; and in 1928 a major conference was convened in Geneva, attended by 191 delegates who were adherents of eleven religious systems: Buddhism, Confucianism, Christianity, Islam, Shinto, Zoroastrianism, Bahaism, Theosophy, Ethical Culture, Judaism, and Hinduism. The tidal wave of reaction and repression that swept over the world in the 1930's submerged the work. Following Mussolini came Hitler, and many a lesser dictator in other nations, all of them committed to an anti-democratic campaign of hate, intolerance, and brutality. Then came World War II and all plans for a World Congress had to be cancelled.

Now, in this hectic period after World War II, we are faced with new symptoms of the old evils, which destroyed the League of Nations and threaten to make our century the bloodiest and most tragic in history. Our civilization can be saved, say the sponsors of this World Congress, if we are willing to use conscience and good sense. "We need not give way to despair," they say. "We can help to make our world 'One World'."

The hour has struck for the accomplishment of this supreme purpose. The time is short, but unfaltering and loyal support of the United Nations and its leadership can yet save us."

The Church Peace Union proposes to complete the task it undertook in 1928 by setting up a worldwide Committee of One Thousand, which will be recognized as the constituency of the Congress. (See page twenty.) When complete, this Committee will serve as the basic membership of the Congress, which will be a meeting of members of this worldwide Committee, with such others participating as may desire to join.

Conspiracy to Defraud

By
CHARLES A. HIGGINS
Rector of St. Alban's, Waco, Texas

ONE of the most amazing discoveries I made as an overseas missionary in China was the fact that native Christians usually wear shoes. My picture of missionary work had been drawn by the best authorities, published in book, pamphlet, and magazine form by our national Church. My last term at seminary had been devoted to a perusal of everything the Episcopal Church had published about China since the turn of the Century. Yet, a more naive missionary never set foot in a Chinese Church.

It is strange that articles published with the intention of inspiring confidence in the Church's missionary program should have been so misleading. I might have been led to believe that the Church was ashamed of her real work and wanted to keep it covered with a sheet of propaganda. Actually, what I found in China was so much more real, so much better than anything I had read about in the official tracts and magazine, that I was left meditating on the dictum about truth being stranger than fiction.

Now that I have served the Church at home for five years I am convinced of a conspiracy to hide the truth about our missionary program. At least that is the only way I can explain the discrepancy between what actually happens in our overseas fields and what is published about this work by the highest authorities of the Church.

The wife of one of our overseas missionaries is a talented writer. She has the rare capacity of describing a situation so that the reader gets an accurate picture. She no longer writes for Church publications because her articles are rewritten and garbled before publication. (She may not write for other publications without submitting her articles to "281" for censorship.)

Another writer wrote of the missionary work accomplished in his field during the war. To illustrate he had to mention the lack of forward movement during the decade preceding the war. His allusion to the prewar period was cut and the reader got the usual pointless propaganda.

Recently a devoted Church school worker in a large parish gave more than her usual energy to the Church school Lenten offering. She had more than the usual interest because her son had fought in the Philippines and she had been told, "Your offering goes to the Philippines." One evening her husband, a businessman who reads the budget published in the annual report, discovered the truth about the Lenten offering. I wonder if this woman will ever again believe anything that we publish about missions.

Even the man who studies the published budget will have difficulty learning the whole truth. For the budget is so cleverly arranged that certain expenditures appear to be less than is the case. Take the heading, "administrative expense," for example, which shows only part of the money spent for administration. Additional administrative expense is "charged" to each overseas district and neatly hidden in the budget of the district, which is not published.

Another part of my preparation to work amongst the Chinese was to read the book My Country and My People by Lin Yutang. This insight into Chinese character gave me great confidence as I approached my initial ministry in Mr. Lin's China. Shortly after my arrival in China I was shown through a university where I had the privilege of meeting a famous Chinese scholar. I asked him for his opinion of Lin's book and he answered: "Oh, yes, Lin Yutang. Very funny! But you mustn't take him seriously." Perhaps the American clergy would do well to preface all National Council propaganda used in their parishes with this warning. Or, perhaps, the new order at "281" will decide that our people will be more inspired by the undiluted truth.

You Do It

By

GEORGE I. HILLER
Rector of Trinity, Miami

"I HAVE nothing to do." Every mother of young children, past or present, knows that one. It is generally the forerunner of trouble, or at least a whining and crying spell if it is not answered.

Every once in a while in the Church, we hear that familiar cry. Our failure to answer it brings almost the same result, while if we do answer "There is the choir," we get, "Oh, I can't sing"—"there is the Church school, or the Auxiliary, or the men's club, or the young people's group"—"It is too far, or too early, or too late, or I don't like that" and so it goes.

Now, in the organization of the Church there is a place for almost everyone who wants to do, but I am out now to answer those who, for reasons of their own, cannot find the place.

Mrs. A. is sick in the hospital. You know it. Perhaps the rector does, but very likely he does not. Anyhow, you could call the office and tell the secretary.

John should perhaps be a server, or maybe he has a nice voice, and should be helping in the choir. You want to do something—all right, use your influence to get him there, you know him. Do not call the office expecting someone else to do that. You are the one who wants something do—"You do it."

There are plenty of people in every parish who should be attending the confirmation class. You perhaps could get them there, even if you have to bring them. Telling the rector is not enough—"You do it."

There are people who can, and would contribute to the parish house fund if someone told them of the need in a personal conversation rather than a written appeal—all right, "You do it."

There are a lot of empty pews in the church that would be filled at servicetime making the service more hearty and worshipful if only all our people were here to sit in them. "You do it."

Mrs. A. has a baby not yet baptized. Perhaps she is waiting for someone to urge her. Do not wait for someone else—"You do it."

Can you sew? The altar guild needs linen—"You do it."

Can you iron? The choir mothers need help—"You do it."

There are plenty of tasks. You cannot do all of them. I do not know what it is, but there is something you can do—"You do it."

Do not take someone else's energy to find a job for you—"You do it."

Social Rebirth

By

VIDA D. SCUDDER

"YOU can't alter human nature" . . . never did the stubborn old slogan seem more justified than today. We watch our poor little planet, exhausted by war, torn by dissensions; the dark forces of fear and greed are currently invoked as offering the sole hope for international and industrial peace. Only power politics offer national security; only the profit motive endures economic abundance. Must we accept that slogan with its implied existential despair?

History seems at first to say yes. Within fairly short perspective we see feudalism and aristocratic control yielding to capitalism with control by the middle class; today, the fact is commonly recognized, unless perhaps in the United States, that capitalism at least of the older type has also had its day. And as a new social order struggles before our bewildered eyes to emerge in tumult of conflicting aims, cross purposes, and revolutionary passion, we hear the grim refrain echoing down the centuries: "You can't change human nature." . . . But do we perhaps sing it a little less confidently? I think so.

No one can look at the contemporary scene without sadness and terror. Yet the further we penetrate below the surface of our disintegrating civilization, the more we note that refutes the old formula. The self-realization and self-defense which appear to determine human conduct have controlled sentient life since its beginning; but how various our reaction to them! One reason why we enjoy animals is because they follow those impulses tranquilly, untroubled by scruples. Innocence is theirs; we crave it. That is why the society of our pet cats refreshes us even when they pounce on birds or mice. We turn to the human scene; we are restless; the same impulses are rampant, but innocence has fled. An awful word haunts us, word irrelevant to kittens,—or tigers; it is the word sin. All through our human story, in paradoxical conflict with self-realization or self-protection, with fear or greed, appear impulses remorseful, yes and creative . . . (are animals creative?) . . . faint yet persistent, of self-fulfilment found in self-restraint, impulses, let us say boldly, of sacrificial love. Who can visit a graveyard where the bodies of our dead soldiers lie without knowing that some of these young men at least died willingly for a cause in which they believed?

Never, we are tempted to say, was humanity so vibrantly alive as today. Never certainly was it so global-conscious. We are soberly aware that we face a supreme historic crisis; imagination, that primary source of creative action, is aided by the techniques of science and quickened by its awesome discoveries, charged alike with promise and with menace. What next? Shall we wait trembling on events, or dedicate ourselves boldly to the astonishing idea of "controlling evolution"? Some thinkers are pessimistic, but others, scientists among them, press our initiative. Listen to J. B. S. Haldane, in an Atlantic Monthly article.* "Our immediate task," says he, "is the remodelling of human society. This can be done in a few generations. Let us begin to think about what sort of change we want, and criticize one another's ideas as democrats should." If, greatly daring, we make an act of faith and obey his injunctions, support comes from quite another quarter. The socialist writer Daniel Bell, teacher in the University of Chicago, has caught the scientist's point: Listen again: "Man in his animal origins and being is rooted in nature. Man as human transcends nature and begins history. . . . It is in Engels' phrase, the leap from the kingdom of necessity to the kingdom of freedom,"—a curious position for a Marxist, supposed to be hopelessly committed to determinism!

CONTROL EVOLUTION? If we ask why we should like to control it, we might point grimly to a starving world, and we are naturally led to consider first of all the practical economic situation. As we do so, we may discover irony from another angle in that quotation from Engels. Do we really inhabit "the kingdom of freedom"? Why of course we do, we heirs of the capitalist tradition, we fling the word around as a hard little bullet of a slogan; but a good many of us begin to murmur under our breath, "O liberty, what crimes are committed in thy name!" For at least a hundred years, ever since scientific insights into evolution, starting with Darwin, brought seeming support to faith in the Free Enterprise that dates from Adam Smith and the Industrial Revolution, motives aligned with those prevalent in the natural order have been given the right of way. Self-realization, unhampered competition inspired by the profit motive, such are the conditions of progress and prosperity, the only incentives through which man or nation can flourish or survive. These pious assumptions are as current as ever, but we grow a little dismayed.

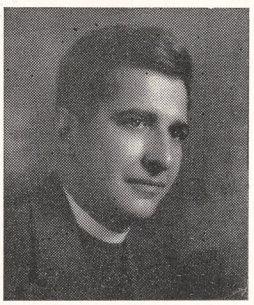
"It cannot be denied that the desire for equity in taxation will at times conflict with concern for incentives," says Harold M. Groves, member of the McGraw Hill committee for economic developments. There is grave danger, he continues, that to cut down the incomes of the rich to fifty thousand a year "would hardly leave the producer any enthusiasm for effort, initiative and venture." This although, as he satirically remarks, even an income of fifty thousand not only provides the necessities and amenities of life but offers opportunity for such power over others as might be actually considered dangerous.

Free Enterprise, as we may observe, results in what is no better than a prison for many working folk; while the profit motive, currently invoked as guardian of liberty, has developed its own type of totalitarian control through great monopolies till it has dominated the international scene and is busy as many feel surreptitiously strangling the feeble reach of the United Nations toward One World of fraternal peace. "We all declare for liberty but we do not mean the same thing. With some the word liberty may mean for each man to do as he pleases with himself and the product of his labor; while with others the same word may mean for some men to do as they please with other men and the product of other men's labor. Here are two incompatible things called by the same name, Liberty." That quotation is from Abraham Lincoln.

"You can't alter human nature?" Perhaps not. Obviously our industrial methods in western civilization conform serenely to the methods prevalent in the natural order as all the fascinating processes of evolution show. Are they not in harmony with universal law? . . . But how about liberty? Study of these questions will occupy the future articles of this series.

A Word With You



AL'S REAL NAME IS ISH

By

HUGH D. McCANDLESS

Rector of the Epiphany, New York

WHILE there are many things we can learn from our brethren in the Free Churches, such as how to give larger sums to missions, and how to enlist laymen, I hope we shall not fall into their habit of adding weakening suffixes to technical Church terms. When we make adjectives out of nouns by adding "en" or "al," that is all right; but when we add those adjectival endings onto helpless nouns, it is like stabbing them in the back.

Lent, for example, is a period of forty days lasting from Ash Wednesday to Easter Eve. The Lenten Season is a vague blob of time lasting from the first Sunday in Lent until the minister gets something else to preach about.

Devotions are acts of love to God. Devotionals are any old kinds of philosophizing, sentimentalizing, or rhapsodizing, which are meant to edify people under the pretense of explaining things to God.

Processions are technically and historically a mobile act of devotion. Usually, they are a Protestant Episcopal and city-Presbyterian peculiarity: a way of getting the paid and uniformed portion of the worshippers in and out of church. A Processional is about the same, only more self-conscious, and usually each participant is bearing something, like a lighted candle or a mothers' day rose.

Excuse this confessional of prejudice, but in early youth the writer was badly frightened by the home of some friends in the deep woods of Westchester. They doted on a highly modified and phony form of roughing it, and every day they would put on their new play clothes and dash out to split orange crates into kindling. Their shack, which had four baths, was known to their friends as "the loggish-cabinish."

Correspondence concerning this column should be addressed to the writer at The Church of the Epiphany, 1393 York Avenue, New York 21.

The Berkeley Divinity School Elects P. L. Urban Dean

Had Been Professor of Systematic Theology At the Divinity School a Number of Years

Edited by Sara Dill

New Haven:—The Rev. Percy L. Urban was elected dean of the Berkeley Divinity School at the meeting of the trustees held October 1. He succeeds Dean Lawrence Rose who is now head of the General Seminary. While rector of St. John's, North Haven, he served as a lecturer at Berkeley and in 1941 came into residence as full-time professor of systematic theology. When the announcement was made to the faculty and students by Bishop Budlong there was an enthusiastic ovation.

To Visit South

New York:—Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill is to visit a number of southern cities following the meeting of the House of Bishops which will close in Winston-Salem, November 7. Cities to be visited are Atlanta, Birmingham, Jacksonville, Savannah, Orlando, Tampa. Meetings and conferences with Church leaders have been planned.

Urge Relief Controls

New York:—Bishop Charles K. Gilbert of New York, as chairman of the human relations commission of the Protestant Council, released a statement last week on behalf of the commission supporting legislation to aid Europe and urged Church people to accept rationing and controls for an emergency assistance program.

Barr Leads Conference

Webster Groves, Mo.: — Rediscovering the premises which make Christian action possible was the topic of the annual three-day clergy conference of the diocese of Missouri, with Dr. Stringfellow Barr, former head of St. John's College, the leader. He said that modern culture has reversed the mediaeval category of economic values—agriculture, manufacturing, commerce, finance—with the result that it was unable to make sense out of its problems. Even more fundamentally it had reversed the relative importance of the three aspects of men's life—religion, politics, economics—and therefore was unable to come to terms with its economic problems. The speaker urged a new understanding of economic values in which man is regarded as being in the image of God rather than as a commodity; new understanding of political responsibility in which men seriously faced the alternative of one united world or destruction, and a deeper understanding of man's place in God's universe as the premise of all thought and action.

Bishop Norman B. Nash of Massachusetts is cooperating with the committee that is planning the World Congress of Religion in Support of the United Nations

The meeting was held at the home of Bishop Scarlett here.

Hits Clerical Collars

Sydney, Australia (RNS): — The Rev. D. A. Trathen in a radio broadcast charged that clerical collars are one of the "unreal" aspects of religious life that keep ordinary people away from church. He also declared that "there is an air of unreality about stained glass windows and black-bound Bibles of seeming antiquity." He pleaded for the "translation of the message of the Church into everyday life." "Reality would come," he said, "with a fresh language in place of theological terms, dramatic presentations from the Bible, more practical, relevant training of ministers and a greater use of church buildings for community activities."

Make a Gift

New York:—Two business men of the Pacific Coast have given $1,000 to promote Church work among young adults. In making the gift to an officer of the National Council they stated that "There can be no question of the importance of young adults having a more active Christian life. Anything that will help bring this about is good." The money will be used to encourage the formation of small groups of young adults for study and discussion in a number of western dioceses.

Notable Baptism

Williamstown, Mass.: — Madame Amy Fung Ssu-tu was recently baptized at St. John's, here, by the Rev. William Way, rector-emeritus of Grace Church, Charleston, S. C. She is professor of Chinese classics and art in the University of China, and is also an artist of international reputation.

Dean of Canterbury

Belgrade:—Dean Hewlett Johnson of Canterbury, England, is to visit the United States from November 7 to 21 for a series of mass meetings sponsored by the National Council for American-Soviet Friendship, he announced here. He is at present in Bulgaria where he will be for two or three weeks "to understand the country and the people as much as possible." He came here after a tour of Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and Hungary.

Bishop Kemerer Resigns

Minneapolis: — Bishop Benjamin T. Kemerer, suffragan of Minnesota, having reached the canonical retiring age, has resigned. It will be acted upon when the Bishops meet next month in Winston-Salem.

Program of Evangelism

Rochester, N. Y.:—A vigorous program of evangelism was launched in the diocese of Rochester at the fall meeting of the convention held here in St. Paul's Church. Inaugurating a new policy of having a second meeting of his convention, which would be for purposes of inspiration and fellowship, Bishop Reinheimer summoned diocesan leaders to a one day session to consider the membership growth of the Church. Prof.

Chad Walsh of Beloit College was the principal speaker.

Likening the present era to that of the end of Roman Civilization, Dr. Walsh asserted, "Then, the Christian Church was the only germ for a new civilization. . . . If we cannot avert a smash-up at this time, we can strengthen the Church and history may repeat itself." Dr. Walsh emphasized the opportunity of the Church to work with agnostics at this time as they are beginning to see the shallowness of what he termed "secular optimism."

In approaching the modern man, Dr. Walsh called attention to the advantage the Episcopal Church has in that it is neither fundamentalist nor modernist. He also expressed the belief that our firm core of belief in the creeds plus our overall unity in which we permit wide diversity of expression are great advantages.

When questioned as to what is wrong with the Episcopal Church Walsh characterized it as being a "sleeping beauty," further, he said, "We are thought of as a rich man's Church, we are too Anglo-Saxon and not sufficiently inter-racial, we have not reached the workers, and we quarrel too much among ourselves."

Following two addresses by Walsh the convocation was divided into discussion groups with the Rev. Arthur R. Cowdery, chairman of evangelism leading the clergy; Richard Ryniker, chairman of the Bishops' Men, in charge of the laymen; and Mrs. Leo Dwyer, Woman's Auxiliary head, leading the women. Findings of these groups were reported at an evening session and referred to the departments of evangelism and missions.

School of Religion

Brooklyn:—The various agencies of the diocese of Long Island are to have a school of religion on six consecutive Mondays at St. Ann's. Various leaders offer courses in religious education, social service, youth work, music, promotion, liturgics, and other Church-related subjects.

Laymen Meet

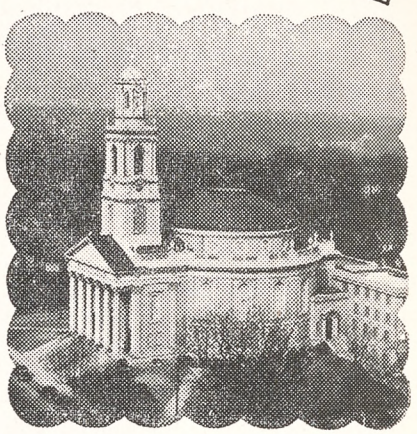
Tecumseh, Mich.:—Mr. Samuel S. Schmidt, national president of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, and Mr. John Wehmhoff, of Elyria, Ohio, were the principal speakers at a conference for men and boys sponsored by the Brotherhood at St. Peter's Church, Tecumseh, Michigan, the week-end of September 27-28. Approximately 50 were in attendance. Mr. Schmidt, who is also a member of the National Council, spoke of the layman's place in the Church today, and the necessity for conserving rather than dissipating the gains of the past. He urged a strong lay evangelism, and mentioned the holding of such conferences as this, as one important means of bringing this about.

Mr. Wehmhoff outlined the work done by the men and boys of his parish during the past year and a half, explaining how they had laid out a program and carried it through, including the recruiting of members for the confirmation class, from lapsed communicants and newcomers to the city.

Among the leaders in the boys' section were the Rev. James O. Carson of Trinity Church, St. Clair Shores, who spoke of the layman's Sunday duty, and the Rev. Edgar A. Lucas, assistant minister in St. John's, Royal Oak, who talked on the layman's duty between Sundays.

Sermon Prizes

Birmingham, Ala.: — The Rev. William H. Marmion, rector of St. Mary's here, won the first award for the sermon of the year, offered by the laymen's league of the diocese. The second award went to the Rev. Edgar M. Parkman of Gadsden, and the third to the Rev. Randolph R. Clairborne 2nd of Huntsville.



Training Center

Cincinnati:—The fall term of the Church Army Training Center opened here on October 6, with women admitted for the first time. They are Miss Daisy Kitchens of San Diego, Cal., and Miss Edna Brooks of Nelsonville, Ohio, who are training to be Church Army Sisters. Entered as cadets are Ernest Andrews of Munising, Mich., Robert Smalling of Flushing, N. Y., William Johnson of North Hollywood, Calif., and Jack Viggers of Willard, Missouri.

Stanley Jones Honored

Boston: — The Rev. E. Stanley Jones, now conducting a nationwide crusade for a United Church of America, was the guest of honor at a luncheon here on October 3 given by a group of laymen. Trinity Church was the scene of the evening meeting where Dr. Jones emphasized the plan of federal union in which the various denominations, without giving up their cherished beliefs and forms of worship, would be to the United Church what the states are to the United States. Three prominent Episcopalians were on the com-

CARILLONIC BELLS

"A source of continual delight"

. . . writes the Rev. Mr. Herring, pastor of this magnificent church, in praising CARILLONIC BELLS. His letter continues . . .

"I have been most pleased with their tonal qualities and musical appeal, and I am convinced that they have definitely contributed to attendance.

"During our last revival meeting there were two professions of faith made by young men whose only explanation of their presence at the services lay in the fact that they had been attracted by our 'Carillonic Bells'."

Hundreds of pastors have written us of their satisfaction with CARILLONIC BELLS. This modern electronic carillon, they find, attains finer accuracy and richer tone than are possible with ordinary chimes or bells.

It can be played inside as a solo instrument or with your organ; and you'll find that the messages of beauty it sends from your tower come back to you in greater community appreciation of your church. Ask us about CARILLONIC BELLS; write Dept. W.26

A New Chapel

Nashville:—The Rev. Peyton R. Williams, rector of Christ Church here has announced plans for the building of a chapel in another part of the city to serve the 239 families of the parish who live there. A fine site has already been given to the parish and funds for the chapel are now being raised.

Discuss Missions

Boston: — Why-I-Believe-in-Missions was the theme of an all day program held at St. Paul's Cathedral here on October 15, with Mrs. Norman E. Chaplin of South Weymouth in charge. Speakers were Miss Laura Brown of Honolulu, Miss Mary Vita Beltran of the Philippines, Rudolph Grimes of Liberia and the Rev. H. I. Wang of China. There was also a missionary play presented to the delegates from about 100 parishes.

Mission Is Planned

Newport, News, Va.:—The Rev. James W. Kennedy, rector of Christ Church, Lexington, Ky., is to conduct a "spiritual growth mission" at St. Paul's here during the week of November 3rd. It is designed as a pre-Advent launching of an intensive program of evangelism which will last until Trinity Sunday. Announcement of the mission is being carried into the homes of the parish by teams of men and women organized by a vestry committee. The rector of the parish is the Rev. Theodore V. Morrison.

Quiet Day

Evanston, Ill.:—The Rev. John Heuss, rector of St. Matthew's here, who becomes director of the national department of religious education on November 1, is to lead a quiet day at Seabury House, Greenwich, Conn., on November 5th. He has also written all bishops asking that the work of Christian education, the department and the new director and his staff, be remembered in prayer at services on November 2nd.

Race Relations Clinic

Wichita, Kan.:—The local Council of Churches, in cooperation with representatives of 60 local agencies and institutions, held a race relations clinic on October 2-3. It was a successful attempt at an inter-racial, inter-religious process of community self-analysis. There were reports on housing, employment, community resources. The general chairman was Mr. C. H. Morris, layman of St. James' Church. The Rev. Samuel E. West, rector of the parish, took part in the organization and was a member of the committee on summary and recommendations. Dean John W. Day of Topeka was a consultant and gave an address on brotherhood to the men of St. James' parish. Various organizations of the city have been requested to follow definite plans recommended by the clinic for the improvement of race relations in the city.

Religious Classes

Boston:—Religious classes for school children began here on September 29 when a program of week-day religious education, one hour in length, opened on a city-wide basis in the elementary grades. There are 24,000 pupils enrolled this year as against but a few hundred in 1942 when the plan started. In addition to the combined Protestant churches, others holding these classes at varying times during each week include the Roman Catholic, Jewish, Greek Orthodox, Lutheran and Christian Science.

To Reach Migrants

Riverside, N. Y.: — The Eastern Harvester, first of a fleet of station wagons equipped to provide religious and recreational services for migrant farm workers across the nation, was dedicated here. They will be operated by the Home Missions Council, which is headed by the Rev. Mark Dauber. Each unit is to be equipped with a portable organ, folding altar, motion picture projector, record player, reading material, first aid supplies. Recreational facilities will include quoits, table games and soft-ball equipment.

Because the migrants follow the crops from north to south and back again every year, the Council's staff travel with them, setting up child care centers, recreational and religious programs and working with local church and civic groups to interest them in the plight of agricultural migrants. A nursery was operated at the camp here this summer for young children whose parents and older brothers and sisters worked in the fields harvesting potatoes, cauliflower and lima beans.

Now that most of the crops in New York state are in, families are packing their few possessions—pots, dishes, clothing, perhaps bedding—into old cars or trucks to start the journey south to the orange groves in Florida, and when they go the mobile unit Eastern Harvester will not be far behind.

Intolerance Condemned

Springfield, Mass. (RNS): — The ecumenical Methodist conference wound up its sessions here by adopting a statement scoring racial intolerance. The conference's condemnation was embodied in a "message" to the Methodists of the world which also called for a spirit of penitence, stressed the need for more cordial labor-industry relations and deplored the growth of moral vices in personal and business life.

An amendment specifically condemning lynching was put forward by Bishop W. J. Walls, of Chicago, a delegate from the African Methodist Church, who protested that the message was inadequate. It was announced that when the final text of the message is prepared, the authors would take Bishop Walls' remarks into consideration.

Other parts of the message assailed the "insidious idea that all religions are alike, which is held by too many moderns," and pointed to the high divorce rate, the wide use of alcohol, gambling and the "lack of honor" which exists among men in personal and business life.

The conference appointed a committee on international affairs "to cooperate with the committee of the same name in the World Council of Churches, to bring Methodist influence to bear for world peace," and "to work for the new world order." Separate committees were set up to bring about cooperation by Methodist women and youth.

Church and Labor

New York (RNS):—Four conferences aimed at reaching a better understanding of economic relationships and a continuing church program in this field, are scheduled to be held in Boston, New York, Baltimore, and Buffalo this fall, according to the Rev. Cameron P. Hall, executive secretary of the department of the Church and economic life of the Federal Council of Churches.

The meetings, designed as "little Pittsburgh" conferences, are part of a follow-up plan to bring the program outlined at the Pittsburgh study conference, sponsored by the Federal Council last spring, down to the level of individual community problems.

The Boston meeting, Oct. 24-26, will discuss the responsibility of the Churches to economic life in general, and specifically to collective bargaining in the life of the Taft-Hartley Act and the report of a special committee set up by the Massachusetts state legislature. Participating denominations are expected to name 120 delegates, mostly lay men and women, to the meeting, which will have Bishop Lewis O. Hartman of the Methodist Church, as its chairman.

On Nov. 7-8 the Protestant Council of New York, through its human relations commission, will hold a conference to be highlighted by a mass-meeting which will be addressed by Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of the Methodist church, and Charles P. Taft, president of the Federal Council.

Mr. Taft will also address the Baltimore meeting, scheduled for Dec. 2-4. Among speakers at the Buffalo sessions, set for Dec. 12-14, will be Arthur S. Flemming, member of the civil service commission and new chairman of the department on the Church and economic life.

Important School

Fort Defiance, Ariz.:—During the past summer the division of rural work of the National Council set up an Intercultural Institute at Good Shepherd Mission here. Twelve graduate students with Miss Elizabeth P. Clark as director carried out a program of study, teaching, care of children, community visiting, evangelism and recreation in this Navajo area. from six states and have returned to work in eight graduate schools including seminaries and Windham House, as well as universities. The Rev. Peter C. C. Yu of Shanghai joined the group upon his return from the World Conference of Christian Youth at Oslo.

The objectives of the school as stated by the Rev. David W. Clark were to demonstrate to these students methods of identifying Christ's teachings with the language and customs of people of other cultures; to show how Christianity can give release at those places where oppression results from cultural misunderstandings between races of men; and to indicate ways of pioneering in isolated rural areas to set up a social order which brings individual and group satisfaction. To attain these objectives the students studied the Navajo in his life . . . the tribal council, the ceremonials, the sheep dipping, the health problems, the political set-up, the economic situations. Field work was done in teaching in vacation Bible schools, sometimes in remote areas, sparsely settled with isolated hogans; in recreation; in visiting distant families; and through church services, often using visual aids and working with interpreters.

Lecturers to the Institute included Mr. John Adair of the University of New Mexico, on Navajo history and social structure; the Rev. Robert McNair, Tarboro, N. C., on Navajo religion; Mr. James B. Stewart, superintendent of the Navajo Reservation, on the relationship between the Navajo and the government; Dr. George A. Boyce, director of Navajo schools, on education; Mr. Robert Young and Miss Irene Hoskins, on Navajo linguistics, and Miss Elizabeth Rhea of the division of rural work.

Bishop Kinsolving, during his summer visitation, in noting the tremendous interest of these students and the moving forward of the Church, says of the Navajo, "These people with their terribly harsh environment and their sheep economy are religiously ready for David's words, 'The Lord is my Shepherd.' and for the words of Our Lord, 'I am the Good Shepherd.' It is our responsibility to see that they are taught the Christian answer to their problems. It is with a sense of thanksgiving to God that I have observed this important work in Arizona, and I believe that this summer study of Navajo life and the opportunity to teach Christian truths will give these students real insight into the problems that the entire Church faces today."

THE REV. J. LEON MALONE
Murfreesboro, Tennessee

I was very much impressed with Bishop Ludlow's article, in the August 7 issue, on the salaries of the clergy. He is certainly writing on a subject that is vital to the life of the Church. It is hard to blame a clergyman for going to another parish that offers more income and at the same time equal opportunities for doing an effective work. The present policy, to which Bishop Ludlow refers, is certainly a handicap to the work of the Churches and is unfair to the clergymen and the "weaker" parishes. It is more serious than is generally realized.

Help for the situation must come from the leadership of the Church. It is hardly to be expected that these clergymen with unlimited "Financial receptivity" and the so-called stronger parishes will initiate the needed adjustments. A man's family looks to him as head of the household for certain leadership and support. If he fails them, he is held responsible by them and society.

Bishop Charles K. Gilbert is to be congratulated for appearing before the committee of Congress to urge that the Office of Price Administration be restored. But we haven't much time—prices are already so high that many families can hardly get enough to eat.

THE REV. ROBERT B. GRIBBON
Rector of the Holy Cross,
North Plainfield, N. J.

The sketch of "wedding chiselers" in Talking It Over (Oct. 2) expresses just what we all feel I am sure. And yet, to refuse completely, I don't know. In fact, as on too many subjects I fear, I seem to possess two minds each completely made up on the subject, while I am of that mind. Or is the second mind just a rationalization of the desire for more and more to be in any slight way attached to the Church.

Be that as it may, this is the second mind:

1. When these careless and indifferent people come for the sacraments or ceremonies of the Church, and one accepts them after due cautions, interviews or what not, then one has at least a foothold for further work. There comes the baptism, then the font roll, an occasional visit by the rector who regards this family rightly as part of his charge, however they may regard themselves.

2. At the age of Church school the follow-up from the font roll is automatic and, thanks to good methods and teachers, we often capture the younger generation so wholly that they demand of their parents to be taken to Sunday school.

3. If the child's interest is won and developed, the family is often intrigued to find out what this means and so, sometimes, an adult class, a discussion group, or confirmation instructions follow.

This does not always happen of course, but it does happen. How much drawing, winning, converting power would the flat turn-down accomplish?

DR. CHARLES E. VESTLE
Layman of Humboldt, Kansas

The recent bit of tommyrot from the pen of the Rev. Mr. Charles D. Kean, defending the actions of the Bishops of Michigan and Lexington needs answering. It would be well for Mr. Kean in particular and the Protestant Episcopal Church in general to realize that it is very true that the Church is constitutionally governed and does have the power to legislate. It is equally true that she does not possess the power to legislate out of existence Christian doctrine.

All of this hub-bub only goes to show that mother Church is sick, nigh unto death. She, like her gallant, erring Knight, the Defender of the Faith, has become rich, powerful and cultured. Also, like her erring Knight, she is cursed by being without heir. Also, like her erring Knight, she is be-deviled by two sterile spinster daughters. One, Angelacathlica, is touched in the head. She lives upstairs alone, aloof from the other members of the household, dresses up in Roman rags, and spends her time engaged in making silly gestictulations and uttering foolish ejaculations. The other daughter, Evangelica, is also a wee bit touched in the head. She sits in a dark corner of the kitchen, dressed as a fish-wife. She spends her time bewailing her lack of courage to follow her passions. She curses the day when she failed, because of timidity, to run off with those two lovely quack doctors—Calvin and Knox!

Yes, the Old Lady is sick. From where I sit she looks somewhat like historians say her erring Knight looked just before he died.

The end is closer than you realize! She too, like her erring Knight, is breaking out with the Pox. If you look closely you will discover that there are two chancres present—Michigan and Lexington.

Christian General of China Raps Chiang Kai-shek

General Feng Tells New York Group Chiang Is Personally Responsible for China Chaos

New York:—Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek was charged with being ninety per cent responsible personally for the present chaos in China by General Feng Yu-hsiang, speaking before a group here last week. The Generalissimo also was compared with Hitler by the speaker who is known as the "Christian General" in his own country. He urged the American people to raise their voices so that a loan will not be granted to the Chiang Kai-shek government. Although he said the Chinese would need American assistance, both to become a democracy and for reconstruction, he declared that "under the present Government there is no hope that a loan could be used for China's reconstruction."

Referring to official statements by members of the Chinese Government that China, unless she received a loan from the United States, will move closer to Russia, General Feng said:

"It is a shameless attitude. It is blackmail to say if we get no help from the United States we shall go over to the Russians."

The civil war in China, he said, can be stopped if the United States ceases furnishing China with munitions and sends "hundreds of reporters to the fronts to find whether United States ammunition is used."

The General reiterated many of his afternoon assertions in somewhat milder form last night at the "Double Ten" dinner commemorating the thirty-sixth anniversary of China's independence. The dinner was given in the Columbia Men's Faculty Club, by the Chinese Students' Christian Association in North America and was attended by 200 Chinese students and American friends. "Double Ten" signifies the tenth day of the tenth month, Oct. 10, 1910, when the revolution against the Manchu dynasty began.

General Feng, who was one of the military leaders in that revolt, said that a few autocrats in China have sacrificed the ideals for which the revolution was fought. He said America always has been China's best friend, and he felt an oligation to tell Americans the true state of affairs in his country.

Terming China's present situation "desperate," the General said the "reactionaries" in the Kuomintang, of which he is still a member, had sabotaged the plan for a coalition government drawn up with the aid of the then Gen. George C. Marshall when in China.

Nationalist troops, he said, will bomb a city three days, put artillery on it for three and finally send infantry in to capture it. When they arrive they may learn that the Communists had departed two weeks before. So, to explain the devastation they have caused, the Nationalists, he said, spread leaflets asserting that the United States Government has ordered the attack and cite the fact that they are armed with American weapons.

General Feng also stated that many people, in desperation because of the acts of Chiang Kai-shek's government, go over to the Communists although they are not themselves Communists. He stated also that the Chiang forces will never defeat the Communists through war.

CLID HEADQUARTERS MOVED TO DETROIT

New York:—In order to intensify its work away from the eastern seaboard and to be in the industrial center of the United States, the offices of the Church League for Industrial Democracy have been moved to Detroit, it was announced by the national committee of the organization at its fall meeting on October 10th. At the same time, committee members, acting on the motion of the Rev. J. Brooke Mosley, voted that a referendum should be held on the question of changing the name of the organization to the Episcopal League for Social Action. Mr. Mosley said that for many years the work of the organization had not been exclusively in the field of industry and that, as a result, many persons were confused about the exact area of concern of the League. Likewise, he said, since all of the social action groups of the other denominations had the name of the Church in their title, it might prevent much confusion and unnecessary explanation to do the same with the League's title.

The committee, likewise, voted to have a new field of concentration each year so that a continuing and specific program could be developed although such a program was not to prevent the organization from speaking out and acting upon the great social problems and conflicts of our era. For the coming year the general field of racial relations was adopted as the area of concentration because, as the Rev. Wm. B. Spofford, Jr.,

SUBSCRIPTION FUND

Letters are received frequently from subscribers informing THE WITNESS that lack of funds make it impossible for them to renew. Many of these are clergymen who have retired on a greatly reduced income: some are missionaries feeling the pinch of inflation. "When you reach 69 years, money gets scarcer. I want THE WITNESS but cannot afford it now," one writes. Another: "Owing to hard times, with a pension of only $50 a month, I am forced to give up your fine paper. I regret this for I have always taken THE WITNESS and have admired its straight thinking and honesty." If there are those who care to contribute to a Subscription Fund to enable us to continue sending the paper to people such as these, we will be grateful. Gifts will be acknowledged at regular intervals with initials only:

executive secretary, explained, it is the area of greatest obvious guilt on our part. "Not only does the sin of segregation and discrimination smother our culture," he said, "but it likewise has eaten its way into the heart of the Church. As always, it is justified in the name of expediency and realism. The C.L.I.D. believes it's just plain, dishonest hypocrisy." Pointing out the fact that the colonial peoples of the world are universally rebelling against exploitation and discrimination, Mr. Spofford said that part of the League's job would be to acquaint Church people with the facts in this significant historical struggle.

The committee, also, voted to establish a publications committee to prepare and edit sound and vigorous material on the social message and responsibility of the Church. The Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher announced that, in his last trip to England, arrangements had been made with various British groups, such as the Industrial Christian Fellowship, to use their pamphlets and to re-write them for American consumption where necessary. Mr. Spofford announced that several pamphlets were now prepared for publication and expressed hope that another book, such as the recent C.L.I.D. work, Christianity and Property, could be prepared during the coming year.

It was voted that a pamphlet explaining the similarities and differences between social Christianity and social communism should be prepared. "Too many persons get their ideas of both Christianity and communism from the pages of the daily paper and Luce magazines," Mr. Spofford said, "and thus we find that people are becoming increasingly fearful and hysterical. As Prof. John MacMurray has pointed out, we too often compare Christianity in theory with communism in practice. The C.L.I.D. recognizes fundamental differences in the doctrines and dogma of Christianity and communism but the recognition of such differences does not mean that we become soulmates with the members of the Thomas-Rankin committee."

Mr. Spofford also stated that the League had not been interested enough in the Church's social message in the rural field and, thus, we find a reactionary Congress attacking cooperatives with impunity. It was suggested that the executive secretary explore this area and acquaint members with the work being done by the cooperative movement and such organizations as the National Farmers' Union.

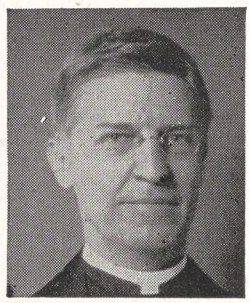
The new address of the League's national office is 412 West Grand Blvd., Detroit 16, Michigan.

SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE

Washington: — An interdenominational organization to maintain the separation of Church and state in the United States was formally launched here last week. Those leading the movement see the encroachment of the Roman Church through efforts to have busses and text books paid for out of state funds. Leaders of the movement are Bishop Oxnam of the Methodist Church, the Rev. Louie Newton, head of the Southern Baptists and Bishop William Scarlett of Missouri (see candid camera picture with Bishop Pardue of Pittsburgh on our cover). A spokesman for the group also stated that the group would "demand immediate discontinuance of Myron Taylor as the President's personal representative to the Pope."

PACIFISTS URGE RATIONING

Springfield, Mass.:—The Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship meeting here October 12-13, supported the food conservation program of the government and urged its members to go even further by omitting at least one meal a week and to give the money saved to overseas relief. The annual convention also urged the return of food rationing.



Disturbed by the war talk, the organization decided to organize committees on international relations in parishes as a means of bringing the witness of the gospel to bear on the solution of world problems. The society will also continue to work for the granting of amnesty to conscientious objectors and against military training.

The acceptance of the position of general secretary by the Rev. Sydney Temple was announced. His office will be in Essex, Conn. Officers elected were the Rev. Lawson Willard of New Haven, President; Prof. Adelaide Case of Cambridge Seminary, and the Rev. Philip Steinmetz of Ashfield, Mass., vice-chairman; Winslow Ames, treasurer; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, secretary. Bishop W. Appleton Lawrence of Western Massachusetts continues as honorary chairman.

BISHOP LOUTTIT ELECTED FOR WESTERN NEW YORK

Buffalo:—Bishop Henry I. Louttit, suffragan of South Florida, was elected Bishop of Western New York on October 14th. He was elected on the second ballot after none of the three leading candidates on the first ballot received a sufficient number of votes to elect. Bishop Louttit received 33 clergy votes, two more than needed, and 31 2/3 lay votes which was 5/6 of one vote more than required. This was the third convention to elect a successor to Bishop Cameron J. Davis, retired, the other two failing to give any candidate the required majority.

CHURCHMEN IN THE NEWS: Episcopalian Beverley M. Boyd was the fraternal delegate representing the Federal Council of Churches at the annual meeting of the Canadian Council of Churches; Bishop Theodore R. Ludlow of Newark asks questions of politicians; Bishop Clingman of Kentucky was a leader at the synod of the Province of Sewanee

POPE WANTS FORCE AT TIMES

Rome:—Pope Pius told members of a Congressional committee, here investigating the armed services, that only force could bring to terms some enemies of justice. He compared the present world situation with that of the Crusade of 1571 when "powers representing Christian civilization united to defeat the colossal threat from the East."

The same day a writer in a Moscow paper accused the Pope of "entirely and openly calling for war against the Soviet Union."

A New Book About the Bible Highly Recommended

Study of Postwar Czechoslovakia by Hindus Has Information Rarely Found in Newspapers

Reviews by W. B. Spofford Jr.

Journey Through the Bible by Walter D. Ferguson. Harper Bros. $3.00.

A layman has written one of the most enjoyable and stimulating books about the Bible to appear in a long time. Livening up the standard commentary with good-humored spice, Mr. Ferguson, professor in the English department at Temple, shows that he knows the significance and power of the Bible and, at the same time, steers his readers through the traditional sloughs of dullness. For instance, his chapter titles run like this: The Baker Takes a Wife (Hosea); A Skeleton at the Feast (Amos); The Little Farmer on Route One (Micah) and After Me, the Deluge (Jeremiah). For layman or cleric, this is a good book for study, meditation and just downright enjoyment.

The Bright Passage.* By Maurice Hindus. Doubleday and Co., $3.00

A penetrating analysis of postwar Czechoslovakia showing how the leaders of that new country are seeking to fulfill that promise of democracy which was kindled by John Hus. Mr. Hindus shows a picture of a country which is definitely orientated towards socialism and the Soviet Union and yet which maintains its freedom. Most interested Church people will be intrigued with the interviews with Catholic and Protestant priests who, daily, work cooperatively with communists and socialists in order to build a richer life for the people. This is material which does not get into our regular information channels and therefore is all the more valuable.

Christ In the Drama.* By Fred Eastman. Macmillan. $2.50.

A stimulating book tracing the influence that Christianity has had on the dramatic art through the years, with particular reference to the writings of Shakespeare, Bernard Shaw, Eugene O'Neill, Thornton Wilder, Dorothy Sayers and Marc Connelly. Mr. Eastman, professor of drama at the Chicago Seminary, knows the field and presents interesting history combined with constructive dramatic criticism. The only fault with the book is that it leaves so many "religious" plays untouched but the area covered is first-rate.

Stop Looking and Listen.* By Chad Walsh. Harper Bros., $1.50.

A light little book for laymen which is sub-titled, An Invitation to the Christian Life. Mr. Walsh, a professor at Beloit College, became a Churchman in recent years due to the influence of B. I. Bell, G. K. Chesterton and Reinhold Neibuhr, plus a dash of the late William Temple. Everything that Mr. Walsh says here has been said more adequately in recent years by those same persons.

No Peace for Asia* by Harold R. Isaacs. The Macmillan Co. $3.50.

Hadji Salim, an ancient, learned Javanese, told the author: "The difference between you and me, my friend, is that you will die a hopeless man in a disintegrating world and I shall die a hopeful man in a disintegrating world." From the tone of this book, that was a correct characterization of the author who, through Asia's terrible thirties and fearful forties, was Newsweek's Far East correspondent. This book, which does not carry through the events of the past year, sees human survival as almost hopeless unless both the United States and the Soviet Union make a 180 degree turn in their foreign policies and Mr. Isaacs doesn't express much faith in that possibility. He castigates what he calls the Scylla of American capitalism and the Charybdis of Soviet statism. The former he sees as anarchic and anachronistic while the latter, he maintains, has deserted Asia's people, such as the Annamites, the Indonesians and Chinese, too often in their struggles to eliminate western colonial rule for the purpose of strengthening the national power of Russia. Great Britain, France and the Dutch are written off as exploiters, pure and simple, who now depend on American power for any place in the sun. The book's great strength lies in its fine picture of the native groups in India, Viet Nam and Indonesia who are struggling against overwhelming odds to earn their freedom. But, because of its pessimism worthy of a modern Schopenhauer, I suggest that you read this book only on a sunny, cloudless day.

Black Hamlet* by Wulf Sachs. Little, Brown & Co. $3.00.

An extended psychological study of a South African witch doctor, John Chavafambira, victimized by a pestilential environment and Caucasian discrimination and segregation. Wulf Sachs, an accredited doctor, has delved deeply into the colonial mind. It is a mind that all of us should know since it has been our actions and policies that have led to its frustration, turmoil and, praise be to God, its inevitable revolt.

SURVEY SURPRISES CHURCHMEN

San Diego, Calif.:—Results of this city's city-wide fellowship evangelism program were so surprising that churchmen in charge decided to stop half way through the undertaking to make use of information already assembled. One objective of the program was to learn how many persons residing here belong to churches but do not attend religious services. Names of such persons were assembled in a "responsibility list," and this list was so great at the half-way point in the program that it seemed inadvisable to proceed until churches have had a chance to catch up with their responsibilities.

The program was directed by

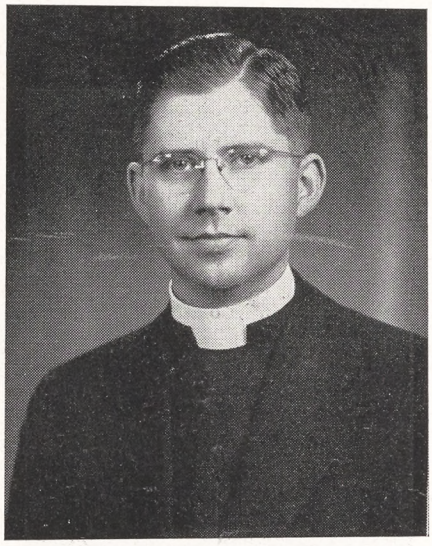
Harry C. Munro of Chicago, representing the National Christian Teaching Mission, an organization jointly sponsored by the International Council of Religious Education and the Department of Evangelism, Federal Council of Churches. It entailed months of advance preparation by 79 churches representing 19 denominations, a one-day census of the city conducted by 3,500 volunteers, and the processing of cards which reflect the religious history of individuals in each home visited.

Although the census was taken by Protestant churches, it assembled information on the entire spiritual life of the city. Cards for non-Protestant church affiliates are being forwarded to their religious organizations.

"We found so many nonparticipating church members that we have had to recommend a church expansion program for many groups," Munro said. "In a few cases this may mean actual building of new plants or plant additions; in others it will mean better utilization of plants now in use. We are favoring this latter plan wherever possible, even though it may mean the holding of two identical preaching services each Sunday morning. It also may mean the holding of two Sunday school services."



As soon as information now available has been processed and made use of, the churches will complete the survey, Munro said. They have set Nov. 30 as the day for the remainder of the census.

DIOCESAN SCHOOL IN BOSTON

Boston: — A diocesan school opened at the cathedral here on October 16 and will meet on Thursday evening through December 11, except on Thanksgiving. One of the features is a course based upon the book, Christianity Takes A Stand, upon which the WITNESS series for last Lent was based. Those to lecture in this course are Bishop Nash; the Rev. Robert G. Metters, rector of Emmanuel, Boston; Mr. Edwin H. B. Pratt, state chairman of the American Veterans' Committee; Mr. Raymond Dennett, director of World Peace Foundation; the Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher of the faculty of the Episcopal Theological School; the Rev. David R. Hunter, head of religious education in the diocese; the Rev. Thomas A. Bridges of Wollaston; Mr. Byron T. Atwood, manufacturer; the Rev. Kenneth deP. Hughes, rector of St. Bartholomew's, Cambridge; the Rev. Gardiner M. Day, rector of Christ Church, Cambridge; Prof. Adelaide T. Case of the faculty of the Episcopal Theological School.

CHURCH PROFESSORS HAVE CONFERENCE

Oberlin, O.: — Episcopal laymen who are professors in colleges of the fifth province held a conference here under the leadership of the Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell. The meeting was arranged by the Rev. John Heuss of Evanston, Ill., who becomes head of the national department of religious education on November 1. Others to speak at the conference were Prof. Milton Percival of Ohio State; Prof. Chat Walsh of Beloit;

The Rev. J. Milton Richardson of St. Luke's, Atlanta, was the host to the synod of the Province of Sewanee

Prof. W. C. Martin of Ohio University; Dean Katz of the University of Chicago law school; the Rev. Wood B. Carper Jr., rector of the Holy Spirit, Lake Forest, Ill.; Prof. Marcus Goldman of the University of Illinois; Prof. Edwin W. Webster of Ripon. There were 23 professors from 12 institutions attending.

This experimental conference demonstrated the possibilities of such meetings as a means of making and maintaining contact between churchmen in the teaching profession, and it is hoped that similar conferences may be held in other parts of the country, either on a diocesan or provincial basis. The host of this meeting was the Rev. Robert F. McGregor, rector of Christ Church in Oberlin.

BISHOPS MEN MEET IN ROCHESTER

Rochester, N. Y.:—Bishop Sawyer of Erie was a headliner at the annual Mass meeting of the Bishops Men of the diocese of Rochester, meeting here on October 5 with 800 present. He declared that "qualified, learned laymen can accomplish things no priest can as they are not handicapped by 'professional status'." He complimented Bishop Reinheimer and his men on the attendance and spirit of this meeting.

Emphasizing the value of lay participation in the life of the Church, Bishop Sawyer illustrated his point by referring to a vestry which, in the absence of a rector, recruited children and adults for baptism and confirmation, training the candidates themselves. When it was impossible to secure a priest the vestrymen conducted the services themselves.

Bishops Man's Keys were awarded to the following: Bishop Sawyer, Dexter Wilson of Syracuse, representing the Presiding Bishop's committee on laymen work; Lewellyn Marsden of St. Mark's and St. John's, Rochester, for bringing the largest delegation for the past two years; Dr. Clarence P. Thomas of Christ Church, Rochester, for wartime service; Prof. Frechette of Alfred University for his work as lay reader at the mission at Bolivar; and for their three years of work on the central committee of the organization: Richard Ryniker of Bath; William Manss of Geneva; William Corwin of Pittsford; James D. Jones of Corning.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH BURNS MORTGAGE

New York:—St. James' Church, 190th Street, held a service of thanksgiving on October 19th at which a mortgage of $35,000 was burned. It was incurred when the parish built the St. James' apartment in 1923 in order to provide moderately priced homes for members of the church. Rector Arthur V. Litchfield provided the leadership which has resulted in the full payment of the mortgage through the sale of the apartment and the contributions of parishioners. Plans are now being made to extend the facilities of the parish for community service.

BISHOP WING RECEIVES A GIFT

Orlando:—Bishop John D. Wing of South Florida was presented $3,500 by the laymen of his diocese on September 29th, the 22nd anniversary of his consecration. The gift was made to enable him and Mrs. Wing to attend the Lambeth Conference next summer in London.

Potential Saints

THIS year, with All Saints' Day falling on a Saturday, it is likely that it will be largely celebrated on the Sunday that follows—All Souls' Day. It is no accident that All Saints' and All Souls' Days have, generally, become merged in observance in the Church as we remember all the departed on the former day. For as we come to understand human motivation and behaviour better, we realize that the line between a saint and an ordinary soul is not as clear-cut as men were wont to think. Not only has there been many a saint who has not been officially canonized but also, without cynicism, we see that the motives of many a calendar saint were not as pure as their contemporaries imagined. Whoever selected the Gospel for All Saints' Day unconsciously acknowledged this, for the "blessed" designation is broad enough to encompass all human beings at some time or other in their lives.

This is very much to the good; it should help us to greater understanding of and sympathy for our fellows. We learn that all men have the same innate urges and desires which, through circumstance or environment, are forced into higher or lower paths. So there is the potential saint in every soul; nay, in every sinner. Jesus saw this more clearly than we and demonstrated it by spending a large part of his time with the sinner-saints.

When does a soul become saint; who would be so rash as to say? If we are healthy-minded Christians, however, we shall not look upon saints as sharply different from everyday mortals; mystical "sports," using the word in the biological sense. Rather, inspired by the best that is in them, we shall turn our attention to the nurturing ground where we "feebly struggle." Our present social environment needs drastic overhauling in order to offer greater opportunities than it does now for the development of sainthood in all men. Only thus, with the grace of God, shall we finally attain that "blessed communion, fellowship divine" on earth as it is in heaven.

Fat Like Jeshurun

WHEN we read what happened in a good many restaurants on a Thursday morning recently we remembered Jeshurun. He was the man, you recall, who waxed fat and kicked. What he kicked about we have no idea. But apparently it is what we can expect from well-fed, complacent people who take delight in their own fatness. In England people are limited to one egg a week and in Europe and Asia there are thousands who have no eggs at all. But in New York City Americans who can get eggs any time they want walked out of restaurants in a huff because eggs were off the menu on Thursday at the President's request. Result of such public pressure: eggs were served. Congressmen come back from Europe and proclaim loudly that we have been taken in. We saw no signs of hunger, they say, let's keep our food for ourselves. A leading candidate for the presidency declares we must make an honest effort to feed the hungry of the world, but then for fear he may lose the votes of the Old Guard by such a radical pronouncement, cautions that we must not do so at the expense of the health of the American people. As though we would!

One meatless day a week, one day out of seven without eggs or fowl, a little less bread. You would think no one would kick at that. Particularly after all the talk against O.P.A. and government regulations and how we can trust the American people to do the right thing. We hope we can. But right now many of us having grown fat like Jeshurun are acting like him. And Jeshurun not only kicked; he lost his soul. "Then he forsook God which made him, and lightly regarded the Rock of his salvation." The people of the world need food and we can help supply it. If we fail to do so we shall not only increase human suffering, we shall do ourselves incalculable harm.

ments as "You can be married after divorce in the Episcopal Church—if you find a broadminded fellow who will do it." The clergy are meeting more and more affable strangers who claim to have been only very slightly married before; and whose divorces, consequently, were extremely minor operations.

The canon, however, not only requires that a year shall have elapsed since the little unpleasantness, but also that the parties be in good standing in the Church and therefore presumably members of a parish. Strangers are obviously applying to the wrong men. If they are long lapsed members, they should apply to a former rector. If, as they often baldly claim, they are members of some other parish where "the rector is too conservative to marry us" their application is most unflattering. Even the most liberal clergy are not running wedding parlors. When other parishes have certain disciplines or prejudices, they do not wish to circumvent them. If a person's own rector cannot recommend his application to the bishop, he should not be advised to try to establish a back-door connection with some other priest. He will usually meet with a second disappointment.

New Centers of Life

by Vida D. Scudder

Second of a Series on Social Rebirth

HALDANE must be quoted again: "Looking at the Jurassic and most of the Cretaceous mammals, one might be inclined to summarize the evolutionary story as 'Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth,' and perhaps to suggest that peoples such as the British in the nineteenth century and the American in the twentieth, who have been successful in war, are dead ends from the evolutionary point of view."

"Said the little Eohippus, 'I am going to be a horse'." He succeeded. He was the only non-combatant of his species, and the only one that survived. . . . In human history, especially since the Christian epoch began, we can at least say that the meek have been persistent, even if they generally consider that you can only inherit the earth by renouncing it. But before glancing at history, let us concern ourselves with the present. Are there any signs in the industrial scene that human nature can be altered in the direction of meekness? And is any dynamic perceptible that could aid them in the adventure?

Yes, to both questions. Let us begin with the first. The Federal Council has issued a pamphlet to the point: "Non-Profit Incentives in our Economic Life." It is the story of sundry enterprises delightfully successful in discarding the old dynamic dominant on the natural level. The analysis is keen, suggestive. The profit-motive, it claims, "becomes more and more negligible as an energizing force in industry." Two magnates say: "I know it is popular to smile at the notion that the ideal of service, of a job well done, is an adequate substitute for mere acquisitiveness, but it is becoming daily more evident that this is really so." The impulses recognized are not all lofty; desire for security, for prestige; impulse to self expression; above all pure pleasure in one's work. The enumeration is not in dream-land, nor are all these impulses meek. But they are all free from what we dare to call the irrelevant vulgarity of the mere desire for profit: a vulgarity latent whenever pure joy in work is interfered with by anxiety or greed. Vocations differ; but disinterested pleasure in achievement can suffice the business man, the technician, yes and the factory worker, just as surely as it can the artist, and the intrusion of the profit-motive is often sheer mortifying annoyance. I read an article lately by Charles Walker, "Do You Hate Your Job?", defiantly insisting that enforced emphasis on quest for profit is plain boredom for all normal people.

The Federal Council pamphlet gives plenty of examples of enterprises free from that vulgar taint. Boulder Dam and T.V.A.; such public services as those of General Goethals, builder of the Panama Canal; and of course, the surprising spread of consumers' cooperatives. Such examples release us from the opinion pressed by defenders of free enterprise that the only alternative to fear or to acquisitive lust would be a languid and stagnant world. "The basic idea beneath the laissez faire order for which some Americans still contend, the idea that an enlightened self-interest leads to increasing the general welfare, is no longer accepted by a majority of educated men." So writes Paul

Hutchinson, editor of The Christian Century. . . . The pamphlet agrees with him; but it is disconcerting as well as cheering, for it calls attention to the prevalence of those two ominous incentives, fear and acquisitive lust, inevitable under the present order, and it stresses at least by implication the consequent deadening quality of current civilization. But the conclusion strikes the note of hope:

"The remarkable thing under our present set-up is not that many people will work only for profit but that great numbers under a profit system are working with intelligence and imagination without hope of a profit reward. This situation . . . should stir us to a deeper study of the motives that lead to constructive activity . . . and exploration of the type of economic institution that will inspire men with motives that will lead wholly to the good life for all."

It has been suggested that the progressive Christian attitude toward poverty since the awakening of the Christian social conscience about a century and a half ago might be summed up under three heads: Charity, Reform, Revolution. Not all Church members will accept the last stage. But revolution is here whether we accept it or not. And it certainly needs to be Christianized.

SOCIAL thought is on the move. It is a far cry back from this pamphlet to the complacent stress on philanthropy current in the days of Hannah More, or to the allied ideal of "stewardship," . . . lately dubbed sub-Christian, so all-satisfying during capitalism's long hey-day. Evasions both; conscientiously scrupulous as to expenditure, cheerfully oblivious of predatory methods in acquisition. Diagnosis is in order; its scalpel cuts deep. "You can't alter human nature?" We are not quite so sure. And we quote with comfort the firm statement made by that great leader in advancing Christian social thought, the late archbishop of Canterbury:

"To many it appears evident that we have allowed the making of profits . . . to get into the first place which properly belongs to the supply of human needs, — the true end of industry. . . . We must find some way of recognizing that each individual citizen is no tool to be made use of for the attainment of some prosperity in which he will not share, still less mere cannon fodder, for he is a living personality, with mind and heart and will, who can only be himself so far as he freely thinks and feels and plans. The root of democracy is respect for individual personality. . . . The essence of slavery is this, that men are regarded as means of production and not as ends in themselves: that their economic value as productive agents is considered, and that their welfare as spiritual beings is not."

We in the Anglican Communion feel that William Temple, more than any other one man, has given us our marching orders, and there are tentative stirrings among us. Not of course among us only; they pervade the Christian world. Many uneasy men and women seek in private life to reject that natural law of self-concern. Some escape into the ivory tower of unrelieved other-worldliness; many sadly take refuge in platitudes, rendering verbal allegiance to ideals quite opposite to those sustaining their practical lives. Others, and may their tribe increase, seek satisfaction in promoting specific reforms. And how many small community adventures are defiantly exploring the undiscovered country where new motivation shall control corporate life! Sixty-four such are described in a recent report from England under my hand. The Federal Council, again, in an April '47 article entitled "Europe's New Centres of Life," describes "aggressive centres of an awakened Christian movement which dot the map of Europe like glowing beacons in the midst of gathering darkness." The Sigtuna Foundation in Sweden; Iona, where "ministers and artisans in equal numbers" give two hours a day to manual labor; an Institute at Driebergen in the Netherlands, with a sociological branch founded by a man who died at Buchenwald, which "sprang out of a sense of the awful peril in modern society." There is nothing new in such adventures. Looking back through history, to list groups and men deliberately inspired by effort to contradict every law discernible in the natural order would be to compile an encyclopedia of saints and their followers. As we face the challenge of communism just now, the most important of such groups, those probing deepest, may well seem to us those who resist the lure of private property. Notable among them are the followers of St. Francis: "He rendered to our epoch an inestimable service," said Paul Sabatier, "by showing the birth in strictly Christian soil of ideas which Christians of our day often won't recognize." Moving is the record of the stubborn struggle in his Order, ever defeated, ever renewed. Christian authorities, Popes and Councils, often honestly try to help the friars; now by endorsement, now by clever evasions; but, aided by the very structure of civilization, checkmate is called to the Order at every turn in the game. . . . All these rebel groups are defeated for that matter. In proportion to the depth of their probing is their failure. Relentless have been the imprisoning walls of the old self-seeking incentives; and as we have seen, ever since the mid-nineteenth century, the complacent attitude of unregenerate man has deemed itself to be powerfully reinforced by the insights and assumptions of evolutionary science.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

The Offertory

LAST time I promised to describe in some detail the mechanics of the Offertory procession. On second thought, it occurred to me that it would be useless to do this without saying something in general, even at the risk of repeating myself, about the meaning of the Offertory itself. There is absolutely no point, indeed there is real danger, in introducing ceremonials without a clear understanding of what these ceremonials are designed to express and to teach. I sincerely hope that no parson will attempt to stage an offertory procession, simply because it is novel and hence diverting, or because it would seem the thing to do because others are doing it, without a very careful preparation for it by every means of teaching at his command.

The Offertory is the first and necessary step in making the sacrifice of the Eucharist. It is, in essence, the preparation of the holy table at which the sacrifice of praise and of memorial is to be presented to God. It consists of two things: the bringing of the sacrificial gifts, and the statement of the intention of the offering, in commending them to God. The gifts are the alms and oblations of bread and wine; the statement of intention is the Prayer for the Whole (i.e., healthy) State of Christ's Church, that it 'may agree in the truth of thy holy Word, and live in unity and godly love.' This is certainly the intention of every bringing of the eucharistic gifts to God, however large or small the congregation of offerers, and whatever particular or special intentions may be associated with the offering. The Eucharist is always the peculiar and distinctive action of the Church as over against the world, and its peculiar and distinctive intent is that the Church may realize that which it is called and sanctified of God to be—the Body of Christ, 'the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth' set in the midst of the world's dirty 'leaven of malice and wickedness.'

Now the offering of the alms and oblations is the Church's act in bringing to God its own stewardship in the world's life of God's created gifts. We know perfectly well what the world has done with God's creation, given unto us for man's benefit and God's glory. Every hungry child, every ill-clothed and homeless person in both hemispheres of God's globe is a living witness of the selfish greed and hate which nailed the Son of God to a cross. But the Church's offering of its use of God's gifts should be a living testimony to a life of love and reconciliation, of just and generous sharing, of sacrificial giving, of giving no offense. Unless the Church makes this kind of offering back to God of what is His own, that He may take it into the redemptive oblation of His only Son, it is enacting not merely a show of vain hypocrisy, but the utmost blasphemy. The Offertory lays us all under a terrible judgment. For we are asking God to take back and consecrate anew for us what is His very own, and that too, not simply in the form in which He has given His gifts to us, but in the forms into which we have manufactured them. Bread and wine, and money also, are what we make of God's bounty. They represent our work and labor, and all the political, social and economic organization of our lives.

What the Eucharist demands of us, therefore, is that we make a gift which is a sacrifice, a very real representation before God of a life of labor and a use of property which is devoted and costly according to His will. If the gifts offered are only a convenience, only a token easily spared, they will not be accepted for the high purpose of consecration. Without getting into theological niceties and arguments, I think it may be fair to say that too many of our Eucharists are invalid and ineffectual because no proper gifts and creatures of bread and wine are really offered. God is not mocked. When He looks at the way so many of us Episcopalians have so much of this world's goods, and see our brothers in need, and shut up the heart of our compassion from them, He will not be pleased 'to accept our oblations and to receive our prayers.' The Offertory is not an incidental, nor is it merely the necessary payment for the heat and lights and the choir. It is the Church bringing itself to God, penitently, devotedly, entirely for sacrifice. No ceremonial which can enhance the conscious response of all the worshippers in that act of self-giving is to be despised.

Yardsticks for the Canvass

By
GEORGE W. EDWARDS
Vicar, St. Andrew's Episcopal Church, Hartsdale, New York and Professor of Economics at City College of New York

THIS fall, as the minister and his vestry or board prepare for their every member campaign, they are faced with serious problems of financial management. Since last year at this time the general level of prices has soared to record levels, and with it church expenses have reached all time highs. At the same time income on investments—if a church is fortunate to have this source of income—has remained low. The average return on high-grade bonds is now about half what it was a decade ago. The church must therefore look for higher income from the contributions of its members. The every-member campaign this fall therefore takes on an added significance.

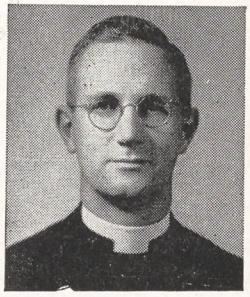
How much revenue should be expected from the average church member? What specific yardsticks can we suggest when asked how much shall a member pledge for the coming year? One yardstick is the average amount contributed by Episcopalian communicants over past years. For 1945—which is the last available report—the average contribution to the Episcopal Church was $33.50 per communicant. This average varies according to each diocese and a church finance committee can compute the average for its own locality.

The average contribution for 1948 should be at least ten percent higher than that of last year. This added amount is justified by the rise in national income for the United States. For 1945 national income was $182 billion, in 1946 it was $178 billion and is now running at the rate of $200 billion or about ten percent higher than in the two previous years. Based on an income of ten percent higher, the average contribution for this year should be about $37 per communicant.

This increase in contributions is more than justified when the rise in church costs is considered. According to the statistics compiled by the United States department of labor, the level of wholesale commodity prices today is 15 percent higher than last year and almost 50 per cent above 1945. Fuel, maintenance, supplies and other expenses are much higher than last year and a sound management of church finances requires a revision of the budget so as to meet these additional costs with the anticipation of an increase from members' pledges.



Over the years the Episcopal Church has had better proportionate support in time of depression than in time of prosperity. In the depth of the last depression it received ten cents on every $100 of the national income of the United States. After that year the proportion dropped almost continually. In the late nineteen thirties it fell to below four cents, and in the nineteen forties it has averaged below three cents. Let us hope that the Episcopal Church does not have to wait for the next depression to obtain a justifiable income from its communicants.

Strategy and Tactics

by

FRANCIS O. AYRES
Rector of St. John's, Waterbury, Conn.

"THE task of the Church is to do a hundred and one things and to do them all well," is a favorite saying of a friend of mine. The point is well taken. The greater our sense of urgency the more we tend to ride our own particular hobby with such enthusiasm as to imply that it is the one sure way to end our troubles and to bring in the Kingdom. Neither preaching nor teaching, nor a daily Eucharist, nor a plan of evangelism, nor anything else can by itself reverse the present disintegration of parish life. Only a general revolution all along the line, and that, needless to say, empowered and guided by the Holy Spirit, can accomplish the task.

Although the point needs to be restated in times such as these, few will disagree with it as a matter of general strategy. It is in the tactics of the matter, in the carrying out of the strategy that we are hopelessly confused and, therefore, fail miserably. We are, in effect, trying to win a war by calling up only the chaplains' corps and ignoring all the other branches of service. We put a clergyman in a parish and demand that he do the hundred and one things and do them all well—an utterly impossible task. Again the point needs no belaboring. The wonderman who can do all the jobs an average parish demands of him has yet to be ordained. No man, for instance, can instruct parents of children to be baptized, couples to be married, confirmation candidates, classes in Lent, young people's classes, Sunday School classes, Sunday School teachers, parents classes and all the other individuals and groups to whom he is expected to give adequate instruction. I for one am quite willing to admit that I end by failing to give adequate instruction to any of them.

There are, however, in almost every parish laymen who are potentially better teachers than the clergyman. By mental capacity, by training, and by native teaching ability they are more qualified to instruct their fellow-Christians or prospective converts than the rector. Our Church makes absolutely no provision for the training of such laymen. There are, it is true, summer conferences, but for a number of reasons they are not meeting this need. As far as the average parish goes, the best that is offered to laymen in the teaching line is a job in the Sunday School and a few teachers training courses geared to the High School or, often, to a lower level. In short, we fail to offer any real opportunity to or make any real demands on laymen in this area of parish life. As a result all except the few with the loyalty of Ruth and the patience of Job seek elsewhere for work that will satisfy them.

If you would realize the full importance of the matter, ask a clergyman what he would give for one or two laymen whom he could send, with confidence, to teach a prospective candidate for confirmation, to mention only one job, unless he has already sunk into the depths, he will clutch at the mere possibility as a drowning man grasps at a straw. What can be said for teaching can be said for all the one hundred and one other things of which the task of the Church consists—excepting only the specific duties for which ordination is required.

Dramatic Arts and Religion

REV. WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD JR.

FROM battle and murder, and from sudden death. . . . There is proof enough that American producers have the technical ability to make mature and artistic pictures. On rare occasions they do so, although 98 per cent of the time they operate on the theory that they are catering to adolescent mentalities nurtured on narcotic comic strips. The fact that over 60,000,000 United States citizens flock to local theaters to see their wares each week is certainly a powerful argument against any change in production criteria.

In the past few years the best technical skill has been used in making pictures of the "realistic blood-and-thunder" school. These are not the old style murder mysteries or westerns. Instead they feature cold-blooded sadism, perpetrated by grim, youthful monsters operating either inside the law (known as "private eyes," "dicks," "shamus" or, old-fashioned private investigator) or outside of it (known as "gunsels," finger men," torpedoes" or old-fashioned gangster). The stock in trade of these pictures is to have some helpless individual tortured coldly, brutally and scientifically by an unemotional hired-hand who views this sort of thing as a part of his day's work. The movie-going public, from the income reports of the producing companies, have liked this fare.

Most of these pictures have been, from a technical point of view, of a superior caliber, receiving A-1 directing, acting and camera-work. A case in point is the recent Kiss of Death, filmed in New York, dealing with the hunting of an informer by a pathological youth who kills as easily as most men light their cigarettes. In this film, the killer, admirably played by Richard Widmark in his first screen role, delights in torturing his victims and throwing paralyzed old ladies in wheel chairs down tenement house steps. Technically, it is so well-done that there is a horrible fascination about it, sort of like watching a cobra weave before he strikes.

Another of the same school is Mark Hellinger's Brute Force dealing artificially with life in a prison and, as always, the subsequent break-attempt. In this one, everybody gets killed . . . period.

The same thing is to be noted on the radio where fictional characters such as Richard Rogue, John J. Malone, Ross Dolan and their cohorts torture, maim and kill with a quip on their lips. And any devotee of the pocket-book murders knows that Dorothy Sayers and her genteel Peter Wimsey have been replaced by the speedy styles of James Cain and Raymond Chandler.

Recently a study, entitled From Caligari to Hitler, sought to show that the film fare, as well as the radio programs, in Germany were symptomatic of the moral and political collapse which led to the Third Reich and the systematized slaughter of Dachau. The study made a strong case for that thesis.

The Churches should be deeply concerned over this popularization of sadistic brutality which is dinned into the senses of our people every day around the clock. Exactly what can be done about it is difficult to say. Violence on the screen or on the radio are exciting and, done with technical skill, attractive. A few realistic sermons on the subject, showing the relationship between our contemporary art and moral decadence, might do some good. Your continued strong letters to producers might have their effect. A real effort on the part of official bodies such as the Protestant Film Council might change the trend.

Recently, various Churches and Church organs became excited over the movie Black Narcissus, saying that it gave a false view of religious life. They might do better to get upset about the present popular trend. The battle, murder and sudden death contained therein are infinitely more dangerous to true religion and social life. ". . . Good Lord, deliver us."

Anglo-Catholics Hold Service At Washington Cathedral

Bishop Sawyer Says Complete Catholicity Is the Only Solution for World Problems

Edited by Sara Dill

Washington (RNS): — More than 700 clerical and lay delegates from all parts of the United States and five foreign countries registered here for the Washington Catholic Congress of the American Church Union, which held business, theological and worship sessions at various churches. The Union represents the extreme Anglo-Catholic group in the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Most impressive of the formal worship sessions was the communion service, accompanied by elaborate ceremonies, held in Washington Cathedral. The rites were preceded by a procession of more than 350 persons and were witnessed by a congregation of 3,000, including many high in U.S. Government affairs and diplomatic representatives from other nations.

There were three significant absences—two prelates of the Russian Orthodox Church, whose contemplated presence at the service had been widely advertised, and the representative of the primate of the Polish National Church.

A telegram from Metropolitan Gregory of Leningrad and Novgorod, and Archbishop Adam, of the Patriarchal Russian Orthodox Church in America, explained they had been obliged to appear as witnesses in a New York Supreme Court case involving rival claims to ownership of St. Nicholas Russian Orthdox Cathedral in New York City. The metropolitan's message sent "brotherly felicitations and God's blessings for realization of Christian unity."

Archbishop John Jasinski, who was to represent the Polish National Church, also wired expressing his regrets at not being able to attend.

The colorful procession opening the worship service took more than 30 minutes to move from its starting point to the Cathedral entrance. Among those in the procession were Archimandrite Gearmanos Psallidakis, Athens, of the Greek Orthodox Church, and Bishop J. Wei, Shanghai, China, bishop of the Holy Catholic Church (Anglican).

Bishops of the Episcopal Church in the procession included Bishop Angus Dun of Washington; Bishop Littell, retired Bishop of Honolulu; Bishop Jenkins, retired Bishop of Nevada, and Bishop Harold M. Sawyer of Erie.

Bishop Sawyer, the speaker, declared that only through the return to a complete Catholicity may the troubles of the world be solved.

The communion service here was one of six similar ones to be held this month in different parts of the country.

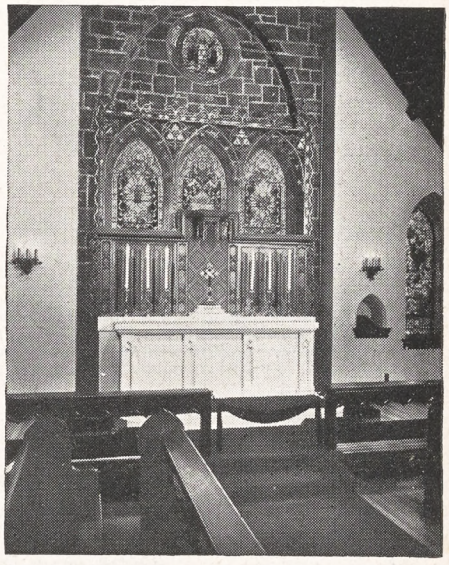
This was the American Church Union's first Catholic Congress since 1938, and the first solemn liturgy with Anglo-Catholic ceremonials ever held in the 40-year-old Washington Cathedral.

Sewanee Synod

Atlanta: — The synod of the province of Sewanee met here at St. Luke's, October 13-16, with an extended program covering all fields of Church activity. The Auxiliary and the Daughters of the King held meetings at the same time. A highlight was a banquet on the evening of the 13th which was attended by many churchmen and women in addition to the delegates to the synod. Bishop John Moore Walker of Atlanta was the honorary chairman of the committees arranging the synod and the Rev. J. Milton Richardson, rector of St. Luke's, was the host.

Church Censors Movies

Madrid (RNS):—All films shown in Spain, either privately or publicly, must be approved by a censorship board in which representatives of the Roman Catholic Church will have complete veto powers, according to a decree of the Franco government.



Questions Asked

Newark:—The New Jersey Council of Churches, of which Suffragan Bishop Theodore R. Ludlow is president, have embarked on a campaign to elect candidates to the 1948 legislature who will support a constitutional amendment prohibiting the use of public funds for parochial schools, "including the cost of transporting children to and from such schools." They also seek to elect candidates who pledge to back anti-gambling legislation, including "gambling by bingo playing for the benefit of churches and charitable institutions, and pari-mutuel betting at horse races."

Questionnaires are being sent to all candidates and their replies will be tabulated and distributed to all Protestant ministers, who will also be offered enough copies to distribute to every voter in his church.

A Problem for the Seminaries

The Cost of Living helps bridge the gaps in conversation, but causes some chasms of its own.

The Seminarians have begun another year still holding the line (spelt b-a-g) because they cannot increase their charges to students who are preparing for the ministry. Their problem belongs to the whole Church and ought to be upon the conscience of every member.

Millions Spent For C. O'S

Washington (RNS):—Nearly $12,000,000 was paid by religious groups and the government to maintain 12,000 conscientious objectors from 1941 to March 31, 1947, according to the national service board for religious objectors here. The Brethren, Friends and Mennonites paid out a total of $7,202,249 for the operation of Civilian Public Service during the six-year period, the board said. The government's contribution was $4,731,558 for the cost of CPS camps and the camp operations division of selective service.

Of the 12,000 conscientious objectors, nearly 7,000 were from the Brethren, Friends and Mennonite Churches. In addition to maintaining their own men in CPS, these Churches, prior to 1944, shared equally the cost of assignees from other Churches and organizations and of those who were unaffiliated.

After Jan. 1, 1944, each operating agency maintained all the men in its own camps and units. A few Churches have reimbursed the historic peace Churches in full, and others in part, for their own conscientious objectors in CPS. Cost of the program to agencies of the three churches was: Mennonites, $3,188,578; Friends, $2,332,176; and Brethren, $1,681,495.

Church and Communism

Boston:—It is possible to belong to a Church and be a Communist, but not a "Marxist," for Marxism denies all religion, according to Earl Browder, former chairman of the American Communist Party.

cle in The Christian Register, Unitarian magazine.

He asserted that "the conflict between Marxism and religion exists entirely upon the plane of philosophy." Browder wrote that "there is no necessary conflict between the church organization and the Communist program" where the church "has fully renounced its ancient claims to secular authority."

"The Communist program," he continued, "touches upon religion only in its demand for unconditional separation of Church and State, and in its demand for religious freedom."

Quiet Day

Millbrook, N. Y.:—Bishop-Suffragan-elect Horace W. B. Donegan conducted the annual quiet day for the clergy of the convocation of Dutchess County, held at Grace Church here on October 7. He gave two meditations following the Holy Communion, which was celebrated by Rector H. Ross Greer, and a third meditation following luncheon.

Services for Peace

New York:—The social relations department of the National Council urges that October 26 be observed as world order Sunday. A similar plea has been sent out by the Federal Council of Churches.

Fifth Province

Milwaukee: — Rural work was stressed at the synod of the fifth province held here October 2. Speakers on the subject were Bishop Horstick of Eau Claire, Bishop Ivins of Milwaukee, Bishop Page of Northern Michigan. A provincial commission on town and country work was set up with $500 put in the budget for its work.

Thirty-Three Millions

New York (RNS):—One hundred Protestant mission boards and agencies in the U. S. and Canada spent a total of $32,829,804 on overseas mission work in 1946, according to Wynn C. Fairfield, general secretary of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America here.

In a report to the committee of reference and counsel, executive body of the Conference, Fairfield announced that $19,754,976 was sent to foreign fields by mission boards representing seven denominations. These seven, he said, were:

General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists, $4,570,096; Southern Baptist Convention, $4,498,413; Methodist Church, $3,858,553; Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., $3,334,934; Assemblies of God, $1,351,318; Episcopal Church, $1,204,144; and the Congregational Christian Churches, $937,518.

Appeal for Seminaries

New York: — Theological Education Sunday for 1946 will be on January 25. The date is fixed by the Presiding Bishop with the approval of the joint commission on theological education.

Bishop Pardue Honored

Pittsburgh:—Bishop Bionisiji of the Serbian Eastern Orthodox Church has presented a diploma and a silver cross commemorating the 600th anniversary of the Serbian patriarchare to Bishop Pardue of Pittsburgh. The citation declares that the Serbian Church "has long considered you among its staunchest friends."

Behind the Plot

London:—According to the Czechoslovak embassy here the Czech police have the names of all or most of the members of the organizations that conspired to assassinate President Eduard Benes. They include students, teachers, priests and nuns. A clandestine radio transmitter was found in a convent. Many of the arrested men were former members of the Hlinka Guards, patterned after Hitler's Elite Guard.

An important confession is said to have been obtained from the Ukrainian Hruntovsky. Hruntovsky belonged to the German "S.S. Division Galicia" and fought with the Germans in the bloody crushing of the 1944 Slovak uprising.

It appears that when the German Army withdrew in the spring of 1945 it left behind 42 agents who attended a school for sabotage in Sekule, near the Hungarian border. This group later began recruiting a larger organization.

The Czech police have found stores of weapons and illegal printing presses, as well as secret radio transmitters through which the plotters are stated to have kept in touch with Ferdinan Durcansky, ex-foreign minister of the pro-Nazi Slovak wartime government. Durcansky is believed to be in the U.S.A. and his office address is given as in Cleveland.

One of the conspirators, M. Skovarga, was caught while fleeing from Eger to the U.S. zone of Germany. He was carrying a letter of recommendation to a U.S. general whose name the Czech authorities have not yet divulged. The letter was written by his brother Jan Skovarga, secretary of the local branch of the Democratic Party in Namestova, who has been jailed.

Satisfactory Status

Berlin (RNS):—Relations between the Protestant Church in Russian-occupied Germany and occupation authorities are reported to be "satisfactory," in an article published by Neue Zeitung, a newspaper which operates under an American license.

The newspaper declared that Russian officials have not thus far deprived churches of property in the course of an agrarian reform movement. It said that the Russians have ordered that, in carrying out the reform, land is to be left to the churches and in cases where that is

The Social-Communist Party was described by the publication as having respect for church leadership and that plans were being worked out for satisfactory collaboration with the churches.

In actual practice, the newspaper said, relationships between the church and occupation authorities hinge largely on local officials, pointing out that some branches of the Social-Communist Party put out strong propaganda against the Protestant Church.

New Chapel Started

Houghton Lake, Mich.:—In the heart of Michigan's vacation land, and close to the shores of one of its largest inland lakes, — Houghton Lake,—church services were held for the first time this summer. During July and August the community building in the lake shore town of Prudenville was the center of Church activities. Mr. Bruce Cooke, one of 25 seminarians working during the summer in the diocese of Michigan, was assigned to this pioneer area.

With a population in the county of 6,000 as recorded in 1940, there has been a steady growth until at the present time it is estimated at least 8,000 persons have made their permanent home in this popular resort area. The summer months see this figure at least doubled with tourists who vacation for a week to a month at one of the hundreds of cabins and cottages which dot the shores of the lake. In addition, hundreds of people motor from cities in the southern part of Michigan and enjoy a weekend of fishing, swimming and sunbathing. With such a concentration of people, it seemed obvious that the Church had a place in the community.

One of the first things to be done was the purchase of a suitable piece of land. Some excellent property with 100 foot frontage and depth of 193 feet was purchased from the largest resort in the Houghton Lake area. A corner lot, situated close to the resort, it occupies a most strategic place. A quarter of a mile away lies the Roman Catholic Church with its facilities taxed to the limit during the summer months. Half a mile in the other direction is the Lutheran Chapel with a considerable following in vacation time. When an attractive chapel is built on the new lot, it may become the mecca of many members of the Church who regularly resort in this area.

Situated 22 miles from the city of West Branch, the new mission is close enough so that regular Sunday services were conducted by the Rev. Eric J. Whiting, rector of Trinity Church in that city. It is hoped that such services may be maintained during the winter, and that by next summer there will be a strong nucleus to start the summer work.

A Woman's Guild has been formed, and already considerable work has been done. More than $1,000 has been raised towards a building fund. At present a movement is under way to build a small Chapel which would cost approximately $2,600. In future such a building could be used as a parish house.

Mountain Work

Richmond, Va.:—Bishop W. Roy Mason, suffragan of Virginia, who marked his 40th anniversary in the Archdeaconry of the Blue Ridge during the summer, recently immersed 32 adults and confirmed 39 persons. Thus was begun a brand new work on High Top Mountain in Greene County. Only one young girl of the community had been confirmed prior to this time.

The work on High Top grew out of a similar venture—a revived work—at St. David's Chapel on Wyatt Mountain nearby. When the corner stone of the new building was laid recently at St. David's, and Bishop Mason confirmed a large class in a beautiful outdoor service there, some High Top people came over to see and hear. Not long afterward a delegation of a dozen men and women, young and middle-aged, visited the Bishop.

"We want you to come up to our mountain and start a mission," they said. "We have here a paper with the names of those who want you to come. Most everyone on the mountain is on this list. We want what they have on Wyatt's Mountain, and we stand ready to back you up and help all we can."

The result was the large class and the unusual immersing ceremony, purchase by the Archdeaconry of 45 acres of land for the erection of a chapel and a mission home, and a whole new work in a virgin field. The men will help construct the buildings without pay.

Bishop Mason had not baptized by immersion for about 20 years, but he did a lot of that in his early days in the mountains. Many of the mountain people believe this to be the only proper form.

The work on Wyatt and High Top reads like a page from old-time missionary annals. "Big Jim" Walton, staunch mountain Churchman, is the father of a whole family of girls who are giving their lives to teaching and religious work in their own Virginia hills. One of them, Nellie, married Joseph Ford and left her work and her people for a time. But she and her husband soon came back. She had been helped through school and Church training by the Woman's Auxiliary, and she obeyed the strong impulse to return.

Soon she had the old work on Wyatt Mountain revived, and this summer, Bishop Mason confirmed 12 persons at a temporary outdoor sanctuary. The wooden chapel is being replaced with one of cinder-block.

Purge Is Urged

Toyko (RNS):—A purge of Japanese leaders in the field of religion was urged here in an article released by the Jiji Press, Tokyo news service.

"From political, economic, government, educational and publicity circles most of the wartime leaders and pro-militarists have already been purged," the article stated. "But in religious circles no attempt has yet been made to purge undesirable persons who took every advantage under the militarist regime."

"Voices demanding a similar purge as that enforced in all important circles in this country among religious leaders have been raised among younger men and women in the religious circles themselves," the article added.

"It has been pointed out by these groups of younger men and women that with the completion of the purge movement in all other circles, it is high time that similar measures were enforced among religious leaders in this country."

Referring to the Religious Peace Conference held last May, when religious leaders published a "penitential confession," the Jiji article contended this does not "white wash these wartime religious leaders of their sins."

THE REV. BENJAMIN MINIFIE
Rector of Grace Church, Orange, N. J.

It seems to some of us that there has been all too much self-righteousness and judgment of fellow priests and bishops in connection with the two marriages in the Dioceses of Lexington and Michigan. The latest outburst is from twelve clergymen petitioning the House of Bishops for such an application of the new marriage canons as would forbid the marriage of a priest of the Church to a divorced person.

All of us are in agreement with their argument that the clergy should be examples to their flocks. If anybody is to uphold the Christian view of marriage, certainly it is the parish priest himself. But do these petitioners of the House of Bishops seriously doubt that this is not happening now? They seem to have little faith in their brethren and demand a law applicable solely to the clergy. Actually, our need is for more grace, rather than laws.

We would like to take issue with them on three counts at least. Firstly, why not give the Church a little more time to test the new canons before clamoring for revisions? They are not perfect laws—perfect laws will never be written, because the subject is above the legal level. But let us see how these work. There has been altogether too much ado about the two recent clerical marriages, and most of it, we daresay, without much knowledge of the facts or the persons.

Secondly, despite the arguments of the twelve petitioners, some of us will always insist on a single standard in the Church for laity and clergy alike. To have it otherwise is a Roman not a Christian position. We do not anticipate a series of marriages between priests and divorced persons: there is not the slightest danger of that. But we see all believers, whether in the sacred ministry or some other ministry, under the same law and grace.

Thirdly, we see this position of the twelve as a possible first step by those who would take us back to the almost absolute prohibition of the former canon. Not that all the signers are of that persuasion, but there is a minority group in the Church which is wholly out of sympathy with any and all attempts to vest discretion in the bishops or other clergy. To this group the door should be tight shut, whatever the injustice and cruelty it works on the individual. They would have it that a marriage ceremony once performed binds both parties forever, whatever the utter wrongness of it or the complete failure of one of them to conform to its demands. We hope and pray the Church will never go back to that. Some of us will oppose all such attempts, however they are phrased or on whatever grounds. If it is a Christian act to bless the marriage of a faithful person who has been the victim of a tragic mistake, and we believe it is, then it is a Christian act to bless such a marriage, whether or not a minister of this Church is also to receive it.

MRS. HOWARD MOORE
Secretary, Army and Navy Commission, Honolulu

Would you help me to remind the churches on the Mainland that the Army and Navy Commission is still alive in Hawaii? The Commission maintains a Service Center on the grounds of St. Andrew's Cathedral, in the heart of Honolulu.

Of the many service men who daily enjoy its hospitality, not one had ever heard of the Center before leaving his home.

Could the parish priests tell any of their men stationed near Honolulu—or passing through—that they will receive a hearty welcome here?

ARTHUR LICHTENBERGER
Dean of Trinity Cathedral, Newark

I enjoyed the piece by Bill Spofford in which he listed some of the weird requests received. But do not suppose THE WITNESS is the only one to get them. I just received the following requests from a young lady in Pittsburgh: "I would like to get acquainted with someone outside of Newark who lives on a chicken farm. I am 26 years old and would like a girl Pen Pal. I hope someday to own a chicken farm along the New Jersey coast."

Do you suppose THE WITNESS has an extra chicken farm or a female Pen Pal?

Layman of Philadelphia

I was delighted to read that fine article by Howard Fast in a Church paper. The actions of the so-called Un-American Committee is a disgrace to all liberty loving Americans and the time has come for all people, and particularly for Church people, to denounce it for the fascist agency that it is. Those who made a study of Hitler's methods are well aware that the same tricks are being tried now in the United States, and with equal success. It is nice to find at least one Church paper that has courage.

MR. EUGENE P. WHITTIER
Layman of Winthrop, Mass.

I want to congratulate THE WITNESS for the two contributions in the October 2 number. The article on weddings in Talking It Over was most amusing and constituted a deserving rebuke. The reply to Dr. Leiper on the subject of Martin Niemoeller I think completely demolished the position he took. I support THE WITNESS for the sole reason that you stoutly uphold a consistently radical-liberal position, ably and sincerely.

CHURCH KALENDAR

The Kalendar has served a unique purpose of informing and inspiring Episcopal Churchmen of many important aspects of correct ritual. It contains 112 pages of information for all Church workers.

Although this Kalendar has followed the same general format for 72 years, it has been revised frequently, while the general style and character have been retained.

The Dictionary and Encyclopedia will be found both interesting and informative.

There are many occasions when you wish to verify your liturgical correctness as to ritual or date. You may be at home or in Church, so we suggest two copies of the Kalendar, one for home and the other for Church, hung in a position which would be readily accessible.

The type is clear and easily read, the arrangement is practical and attractive, the contents inspirational and helpful.

Here is the most complete and useful Kalendar published, containing material not available in any other one publication.

A colorful spiral binding with heavy twisted cord for hanging permits a convenient change from week to week.

Between the beautiful red and gold covers you will find:

Canadian Church Report Lists Disorders in Society

Use of Men As Means to an End Is Named One of Disturbing Factors of Our Day

Hamilton, Ont. (RNS):—Misconceptions of freedom, and the moral irresponsibility of commercial interests were among eight factors condemned for causing disorder in modern society in a report presented to the Canadian Council of Churches by a study commission on the Church and disorder in society. The report also assailed the partisan spirit, an emphasis on quantity over quality, replacement of recreation by entertainment, the impersonality of urban culture, the use of men as a means to an end, and the general pace of life as disturbing factors on the social scene.

Asserting that there are "some portents of good," the report closed on a note of optimism: "Wherever a social structure is undergoing change there is likely to be temporary dislocation, even when the change is in the direction of a better order. For example, the economic development of society has been productive of a higher material standard for all. This development has been and still is attended by strife between masters and men. But this strife is not evidence of mere disorder. It is conflict produced in an old order by the emergence of a new one having better promise."

The report said that freedom is too often interpreted as "freedom from restraint or responsibility" and declared that defense of private enterprise is often a defense of "an individual privilege or 'vested interest,' or a cover under which to escape social responsibility."

Scoring the "moral irresponsibility of commercial interests," the report said advertisers of beauty aids, for example, "tend to substitute ideals of 'glamor' for ideals of virtue, and unnecessarily stimulate the selfish, vain and sensuous sides of human nature."

"Commercial interests," it continued, "including the press, radio, and movies, claim the right to give the public what it wants. They conceal the truth that in the equivocal word 'wants' they are referring to illicit desires which public opinion itself traditionally condemns."

The partisan spirit was attacked because it gives expression to "bitter, heated, intolerant attitudes." In this connnection, the report cited newspaper editorials and industrial, political and religious disputes. "The concern to win a case, protect an interest, or sell goods," it was said, "overshadows a duty to be fair and reasonably 'objective'."

Emphasis on quantity over quality was condemned because by it mass suggestion and opinion are allowed to overrule the convictions of the individual.

Replacing recreation with entertainment, the report said, makes for more spectators than participants in sports, drama or community welfare work.

"Modern cities have no true community of persons and interests," the report said in its reference to the impersonality of urban culture. "Denominational divisiveness in the Church has sorely aggravated the trouble. The Church fellowship should be the source of the true neighborhood, yet the inhabitants of a street are divided by their church loyalties."

Commenting on the pace of life, the report declared the "jaded person often flies for relief to avocations whose immediate and passing enjoyment does nothing to enrich the mind. The general level of life is becoming increasingly trivial. In general, there is a lessened inclination to follow any pursuit which demands a sustained effort of intellect or spirit."

Chairman of the commission which submitted the report was Prof. David W. Hay of Knox College, Toronto. The commission was set up a year ago.

NEW ST. ANDREW'S DEDICATED

Louisville, Ky.:—The new Church of St. Andrew, a beautiful modern church of Georgian design, was dedicated here by Bishop Clingman. The cover picture shows acolytes and clergy entering the church for the service. The foundations for the plant were laid in 1940 but building was interrupted by the war. Work was begun in the summer of 1946 and completed this year at a cost, including furnishing, of about $355,000. At the time of the dedication but $11,000 remained to be pledged to cover the complete cost of the plant.

The church can seat 500 and is authentic in design. The sanctuary is marked by a solid blue dossal, a hanging cross, a holy table. The chancel furniture has been made especially for the church in Chippendale design. Free use was made of colonial colors in decorations.

In addition to the church there is a parish hall seating over 400 persons, two kitchens, a crypt hall, twenty-two class rooms, parish offices and studies for the clergy. The rector is the Rev. Andrew E. F. Anderson.

SUBSCRIPTION FUND

A letter: "Because I admire the WITNESS you put me on a complimentary list. I wish I might pay for it but when I tell you that after all my years of service, mostly missionary, my pension is only $71.74 a month and I have to pay $50 a month rent, you can see how taking a Church paper is out of the question. A bishop once scolded me several times for turning down calls to large parishes in order to stay with little mission stations where I got small financial remuneration. But I did receive the love, esteem, respect and affection of the people of those poor, little towns."

It is for people that write such letters that we ask those who are able to contribute to our Subscription Fund. Make checks "THE WITNESS" and send to 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

BISHOP H. W. B. DONEGAN IS CONSECRATED

New York:—The Rev. Horace W. B. Donegan, formerly rector of St. James' Church here, was consecrated Bishop Suffragan of New York on October 28th at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. Before a packed congregation, with many distinguished Churchmen present, he was made a bishop by the laying on of hands by the Presiding Bishop, Henry Knox Sherrill. The co-consecrators were Bishop Gilbert of New York and Bishop Manning, the retired bishop of New York. An international touch was introduced when Archbishop Philip Carrington of Quebec and Bishop John Misiaszek, Old Catholic Church, joined in the laying on of hands.

Two processions, made up of officers of the diocese, both clerical and lay; clergymen and laymen representing all parts of the diocese, together with many clergymen from neighboring dioceses, entered the great cathedral shortly before 10:30 and took their places in the sanctuary, the choir and the nave.

The sermon was preached by Bishop Henry W. Hobson of Southern Ohio.

Bishop Donegan is to make his home at 8 Avon Road, Larchmont, N. Y. It was understood at the time of his election that he would reside in the northern part of the diocese.

BISHOP R. T. LORING IS CONSECRATED

Springfield, Ill.:—The Rev. Richard T. Loring was consecrated as the fifth bishop of the diocese of Springfield in St. Paul's Cathedral here on October 18th. Climax of the service came when thirteen bishops laid their hands on the head of the candidate and the consecrator, Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill, said: "Receive the Holy Ghost for the office and work of a bishop in the Church of God, now committed unto thee by the imposition of our hands."

The comprehensive nature of the Episcopal Church was illustrated by the vestments worn by the bishops: six wore the simple black and white of rochet and chimere; seven were attired in colored copes and mitres.

Bishop Powell of Maryland spoke of his affection for Bishop Loring and reminded the large congregation that Loring, as a Baltimore rector, had presented Bishop Powell's two sons to him for confirmation. He went on to say that "Our religion is the most practical thing in the world. It begins with a fact, the Incarnation. Christ's life was a fact. He met the power of Rome head on. It is the fact of his power that gives us hope for the future. He deals with the human heart where sin is. Out of the heart of man proceeds the issues of his life."

Bishop White, the retired bishop of Springfield, and Bishop Conkling of Chicago were the co-consecrators. Bishop Spence Burton of Nassau was a presenting bishop, along with Bishop Oliver Loring of Maine, brother of the newly-made bishop. Bishop Mallett of Northern Indiana read the Gospel; Bishop Essex of Quincy the Epistle; Bishop Scarlett of Missouri the consents and Bishop Ivins of Milwaukee the Litany. Other bishops present were Bishop Randall of Chicago; Bishop Clark of Utah; Bishop Kirchoffer of Indianapolis; Bishop Whittemore of Western Michigan.

More than 500 persons taxed the capacity of a local hotel following the service where a luncheon was given in honor of the new bishop.

FUNDAMENTALISTS HAVE RIVAL SERVICE

Buffalo:—The western New York region of the American Council of Christian Churches, a fundamentalist group, sponsored a Reformation Day service here on October 26. The purpose was to rival a service sponsored by the local Council of Churches at which Methodist Bishop Oxnam was the speaker. The fundamentalists charged Oxnam with being "at various times a member or sponsor of a number of pro-communist organizations" and said he "should not be regarded as a true representative of Protestantism."

CHURCH FAVORS HOUSING PROGRAM

New York: — The commission on social relations of the diocese of New York last week re-affirmed its stand in favor of a bond issue for low-rent public housing, which will be voted upon November 4. It also approved a proposed constitutional amendment which will make possible the retirement of unfit judges.

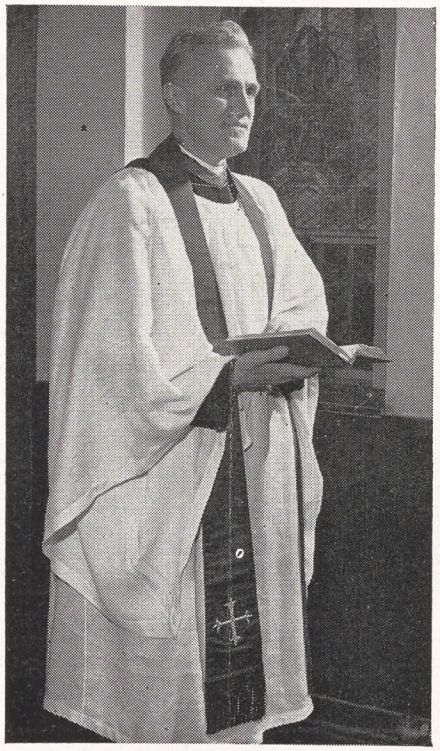
Rector Deals With Skepticism In Interesting Book

Albert Schweitzer Dealt With as Christian Revolutionary in Another New Harper Book

Reviews by Frederick C. Grant



New York:—The rector of Grace Church, Charleston, S. C., formerly rector of All Angels', New York, is well known as a radio preacher. His sermons are clear and forceful, deal with the situations in which people find themselves today, face up squarely to modern problems, and always have something worthwhile for the listener to take away with him. To my mind he is one of the best radio preachers in America.

In this interesting new book, Postlude to Skepticism* (Cloister Press), Ralph S. Meadowcroft deals with the "skeptical mind" and traces its origin not only back to a half century ago but all the way back to ancient Greek philosophy. Then he comes on down the centuries and shows how the modern mind, "the mind of today" has been affected by the interplay of various movements of thought — psychology, physical science, pragmatism, psychoanalysis, theological modernism, etc. He thinks we stand at the crossroads, and that there is a possibility of a new era opening for religion, since materialism and rationalism have about run their course. This is not to say that the new era will surely arise—it is only a possibility, but it is a possibility that holds out a tremendous challenge to the church. Only the church will have to do some things a lot better than it has done in the past. We have reached the "postlude" to skepticism, and, following the "mind of yesterday" and the "mind of today," there is a possibility that "the mind of yesterday, today, and forever" may be achieved.

Here is a book which I hope will be widely read by our laymen as well as by the clergy. It ought to be very useful in the program of Evangelism. The great need of today is the recovery of both the sense and the concept of the personality of God. The Anglican bishops insisted on this as long ago as the last Lambeth Conference (in 1930); it is still the problem before us and the world's greatest religious need in the present day.

Albert Schweitzer: Christian Revolutionary. By George Seaver. Harpers. $2.00.

This little introduction to Albert Schweitzer—to his life and especially to his writings—will be of wider interest in view of the fact that Dr. Schweitzer is coming to America next year. The magazine Life recently published a group of photographs of the famous missionary and a brief article about his career. Without doubt, Schweitzer is one of the greatest men of our time. For those who have only a slight acquaintance with his thought and writing, this book will be a most welcome guide to further acquaintance.

The Rev. Henry Lewis, rector of St. Andrew's, Ann Arbor, Michigan, is celebrating the 25th anniversary of his coming to the parish, during which time he has had an active and successful ministry in a busy university community. His career has included a variety of diocesan and community interests as well as service to the Church at large Jacob Boehme's The Way to Christ in a New Translation by John Joseph Stoudt. Harpers. $3.00.

This is one of the great Christian classics, and is interestingly introduced by Rufus M. Jones. Like many of us, Professor Jones first ran across Boehme in the course of reading Emerson's essays. Mr. Stoudt has been a student of Dr. Jones'—and that is enough to indicate its quality, since the teacher recommends it in his foreword. The book is a fitting companion to the modern translation of Eckhart, recently published at Harper and Brothers.

The Soul of Frederick W. Robertson. By James R. Blackwood. Harpers. $2.00.

A brief biography of the great Anglican preacher of one hundred years ago. People have always wondered at the marvelous influence Robertson exerted — his sermons (which are really nothing more than expanded sermon notes) are simple and clear, but do not convey the magnetism of the man. This biography helps us to understand how Robertson influenced people—for instance: "The peaks of his intensity came when he spoke about the love of God in Christ, but he ventured also into the dark aspects of faith" (p. 123).

PRIMATE ASSAILS BISHOP BARNES

London:—An attack on The Rise of Christianity, new book by Bishop Barnes of Birmingham, was made by the Archbishop of Canterbury in his address to the Convocation of Canterbury. Declaring he was "shocked" by the book, Archbishop Fisher stated that the author "discards or omits to include much which holds a central place in generally accepted Christian doctrine and belief. If his views were mine I would feel I could not still hold episcopal office in the Church."

The book is said to contain statements denying the possibility of miracles, rejects the doctrine of the Incarnation and dismisses the Virgin Birth as a crude semi-pagan story. It also denies the physical resurrection of Jesus.

At the conclusion of the Archbishop's address, Bishop Barnes asked permission to make a statement, but the Primate refused on the ground that it was improper for the convocation president's address to be the subject of discussion. He did indicate however that it would be in order for the Bishop of Birmingham to reply in the upper house of the convocation if he so desired.

The following day therefore Bishop Barnes told his fellow bishops that his views were "entirely compatible with my position as a bishop of the Church of England" and made it clear that he had no intention of resigning. Reasserting his stand that "belief in miracles has gone from the scientific world," the 73-year-old bishop declared that "there have been many conflicts in the last two centuries between religion and science. In every case science has won the battle and Christianity has gained a purifying by defeat. Religion, like a man, must from time to time, shed old garments. It seems to me that as a Church we must come to terms with science and scholarship or face disaster."

FAVOR THE RETURN OF BINGO

Newark, N. J.:—Candidates for the legislature of New Jersey generally favor the return of bingo; approve legislation to prohibit all forms of gambling; are against the use of public funds for parochial schools, according to an incomplete tabulation of returns in a poll conducted by the state Council of Churches, of which Bishop Ludlow of Newark is president (WITNESS, Oct. 23).

Out of 160 questionnaires mailed only 65 were returned. Some candidates declined to give a yes or no answer. They wrote instead that the poll procedure does not allow for reasons or principles underlying an answer, that the poll stirs up interfaith antagonism; and that a member of the legislature must reserve decision on such questions until they are introduced.

The questionnaire submitted to the candidates asked how they would vote if resolutions calling for referenda on the following were introduced in the 1948 legislature:

1. Allowing bingo playing for the benefit of churches, charitable institutions and/or veterans' organizations.

2. Prohibiting all forms of gambling, including pari-mutuel betting at horse races.

3. Prohibiting use of public school monies or other funds for the direct or contributory support of religious or sectarian schools, including the cost of transporting children to and from such schools.

Thirty-three favored, 21 opposed and 11 were listed with an indefinite stand on the bingo question. A ban against all gambling was approved by 33, opposed by eight with 24 undecided. On the third question 36 candidates indicated they opposed use of school monies for religious purposes, 18 were in favor and 11 undecided.

The church council has taken a stand opposing bingo and favoring legislation against gambling and use of public funds for support of sectarian schools, including transportation.

SCHEDULE OF DEAN OF CANTERBURY

New York:—The schedule of the Dean of Canterbury, whose visit to the United States was announced in THE WITNESS last week, is as follows: November 9, New York City; 10th, Toronto; 11th, Boston; 12th, Philadelphia; 13th, Newark; 14th, Detroit; 15th, Montreal; 18th, Cleveland; 19th, Denver; 20th, San Francisco; 21st, Los Angeles; 23rd, Chicago. Between his Montreal and Cleveland appearances he will return to New York to speak at a dinner on Sunday, the 16th. All the meetings are sponsored by the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship to emphasize the need for mutual cooperation and understanding between the world's two largest nations.

Keeping their minds on prayer is rather hard for these children while someone takes a picture. It is but part of a large primary department at Trinity, New Orleans

FEDERAL COUNCIL ACCUSED

Detroit:—The American Council of Christian Churches, meeting here in convention, accused the Federal Council of Churches of "peddling" Marxian doctrine. The resolution stated that "We decry the Marxian ideas—a planned and controlled economy, class strife and color conflict—which are actually being peddled in the United States by representatives of the Federal Council of Churches."

Another resolution denounced the Soviet Union; urged the support of the Nationalist government in China in order to save that country from communism; urged that American troops be kept in Greece to save that country "from the threat of communist occupation."

The American Council claims to represent about 3,000 churches having a membership of 1,200,000 persons. The convention declared that evangelism is the paramount task of the Church and called upon airlines to grant reduced fares to clergymen so they could get around faster in their work of converting the nation.

IOWA COURT BARS BUSES

Des Moines, Ia.:—Children attending parochial or other private schools in Iowa cannot be transported in public school buses, the supreme court of the state ruled unanimously last week. It added that no United States constitutional issue was involved. The decision held that public schools which do furnish transportation for private or parochial schools would not be eligible under Iowa law to receive any funds from the state's two million dollar school bus aid program.

Speaking Frankly

SINCE James F. Byrnes, former secretary of state, has been invited to address the House of Bishops next week on the subject of World Peace, we think it is in order to remind the people of the Church, and perhaps the Bishops themselves, that the Church also has made solemn commitments on this subject. The Bishops Pastoral of 1934 states that "The Christian Church can not and will not deny loyalty and fealty to its Lord by being partner in any scheme, national or international, that contemplates the wholesale destruction of human life. It refuses to respond to that form of cheap patriotism that has as its slogan, 'In times of peace prepare for war.' It regards as wicked the waste of the nations' wealth in the building of vast armaments and the maintenance of greatly augumented forces on land and sea."

A few years before, in 1928, the Bishops declared in a Pastoral: "War is destructive of what Christ stands for. War is degrading, brutal, like the devil, the father of lies and hatred. It assaults all that dignifies and beautifies human life. It violates the sanctities of the soul. It hurls defiance at the Christian faith that men are the family of God. It challenges the Church of Christ to action."

And the Anglican Bishops throughout the world, at the last Lambeth Conference in 1930, declared that "War, as a method of settling international disputes, is incompatible with the teaching and example of our Lord Jesus Christ. We believe that as the Christian conscience has condemned infanticide and slavery and torture, it is now called to condemn war as an outrage on the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of all mankind."

If our Bishops are really determined not to be "partners in any scheme that contemplates the wholesale destruction of human life" they will do well to take every possible means to make it clear that Mr. Byrnes speaks only for himself. For whether he plans it that way or not, the fact that he speaks to the House of Bishops is going to be generally interpreted as giving "religious sanction" to what he says. His program of "bigger and better atom bombs" hardly offers a Christian solution to the impasse the world seems to be in, but is rather, in these days of atoms and germs, a solution to end all solutions.

It will be tragic, we think, for the House of Bishops to allow themselves to be the sounding-board for more front-page hysteria.

It is a fact of course that Mr. Byrnes was invited to address the Bishops before the publication of his book, Speaking Frankly. It is also true that one cannot extend an invitation to a former secretary of state and then withdraw it. But in introductory remarks, and in official press releases before the address, at least the record can be kept straight: namely, that as an invited guest Mr. Byrnes has been asked to say whatever is on his mind, but that the invitation did not carry with it an unqualified endorsement of his address by the Bishops of the Episcopal Church.

"QUOTES"

THE Church of Christ is international and interracial. Its flag rises above the flag of every nation. It offers the world the one and only hope for universal brotherhood. The increased emphasis upon nationalism is a factor to be reckoned with in the promotion of rivalries and misunderstandings that inevitably provoke hatreds, disorders and strife. Loyalty to one's nation or adopted country may be consistently maintained without magnifying national superiority or attempting to control and dominate world trade at the expense of other nations.

Give the Canon Fair Trial

ELEVEN clergymen have written a letter to the Church papers in which they contend that "No bishop of this Church can, with loyalty to the doctrine and teaching of the Prayer Book, sanction the marriage of a priest to a divorced woman." Their contention is that irrespective of what is legally allowed by our present marriage canon, it is not possible for a bishop to sanction the marriage of a priest to a divorced person or for a priest to enter upon such a marriage because at his ordination a priest promises to "be diligent to frame and fashion your own self and your family according to the doctrine of Christ; and to make both yourself and them as much as in you lieth wholesome examples and patterns to the flock of Christ."

Let us consider a few actual examples. Ethel is a good Church girl. She marries a young Episcopalian who graduated from a college and was one of the most popular men in his class. They have two children. Then, all of a sudden her husband runs away with another woman, gets a Mexican divorce and marries. She is left with no choice but to get a divorce legally recognized by the state in which she lives.

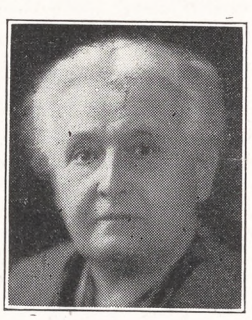
of a good prep school and college but who takes to drinking and more than once beats her and their child. She endures it for many years, trying her best to reform him, but is finally left with no choice but to secure a divorce.

Thus we might enumerate actual instances in which the marriage relationship was such a travesty of true Christian marriage that it could not possibly be continued, and in which the girl was the victim of a mistake in marrying which could not possibly have been determined in advance because the man in question appeared to be extraordinarily fine. These are not imaginary but actual life situations, and the number of similar cases is unfortunately numerous, as any parson who knows his people must be aware.

Is it not to be hoped that these young girls with their children should marry again, provided they have the happy fortune of finding a man who bears promise of being a good husband and father?

If a young unmarried priest of our Church happens to fall in love with such a girl, is the Church to declare, as these eleven clergymen urge, that because he is a clergyman he must not be allowed to marry this girl? Is the Church to declare this despite the fact that on her part she has sincerely tried to live a Christian life under most harrowing circumstances? Should the fact that she was not able to reform her first husband prevent this clergyman from framing and fashioning his life and their lives together according to the doctrine of Christ? Must the girl suffer for the rest of her life because of a mistake which, so far as the human mind can tell, could not have been avoided?

Let us stand against divorce. Let us do everything we can to make Christian marriages vital and successful. But let us exercise the greatest Christian charity toward those particularly whose marriages are broken through no fault of their own. And by no means let us hastily adopt a rigid interpretation of our new canon which aims to allow the Church to make a closer approximation of the demands of Christian justice and charity, simply because from an external view (for few, if any, of the critics of the publicized cases know the actual facts) we disagree with a bishop's decision in certain instances.



We earnestly hope that the House of Bishops will not circumscribe the canon with new rules at their meeting next week but allow the canon to be tried, as the General Convention intended, for at least a triennium. Then, on the basis of the report of the special committee of bishops on procedure under marriage legislation, the bishops should be in a position out of their combined experience to suggest to General Convention such revisions or modifications as they deem advisable.

Between Two Worlds

by Vida D. Scudder

THIRD OF A SERIES ON SOCIAL REBIRTH

WRITES Paul Hutchinson: "Christian history is studded with the mysterious blazing forth of unexpected saving fires." These gleams, which we would fain think prophetic, differ in character from the lovely foreshadowing of "meekness" which we have watched in nature; for the tiny beings which have to our surprise survived the more powerful and militant have had no initiative of their own, they have been purely passive, though also prophetic, if you will. But the "saving fires," examples of other-regarding dynamic shining through the human story, result from conscious choice. They belong to Engel's Kingdom of Freedom. And that Kingdom when its promise is fulfilled, is the Kingdom of the Grace of God. We see in them His power "to stir to life spiritual forces yet hidden from our myopic eyes." Here is the subject that invites our study.

Through what gathering gloom do these "saving fires" gleam! Is it perhaps the darkness before dawn? Wistful are we, as those who watch for the morning. Earth heaves beneath our feet; not only in Europe but in the Orient storm sweeps over the volcanic soil. Challenge to our whole economic order confronts our shaken generation. "The socialist era of history is begun, nations all over the world are moving in that direction," says an article in THE WITNESS. Yes, all over the world, except in America, who, forgetting her old role of pioneer, sits like Canute sternly bidding the rising tide retreat. Yet even here, clear-sighted men see that the past is doomed; those flickering lights we have noted penetrate the stormy dawn. As moribund capitalism slowly retreats, will their prophecy be fulfilled?

Diverse movements surge around us. They often conflict, but one is their informing purpose. The aim in all of them is escape from the prison where private profit is accepted as chief incentive to progress and necessary condition of industrial prosperity and social health. Russian Communism: the democratic socialism spreading from its contemporary centre in England: yes, and the social ideology, "personalist" if you will, or Distributist, of mediaeval and scholastic type, presented by Papal Encyclicals and promoted by the Roman Catholic Church at its best: . . . these have seen the same vision. Whether they look from the political or the industrial angle, they are passionately convinced that a new motivation, based on no quest for individual advantage but on concern for the welfare of the whole social body, is essential if civilization is to be saved from disaster. True, we find the Encyclicals, like their offspring,—Guild Socialism et al—stressing with jealous concern for freedom their conviction that private property is essential as a necessary safeguard of personality; and we may parenthetically be a little surprised, as we realize how emphasis on that fact has faded all down the centuries whenever holiness appeared; those most intense personalities, the saints, being curiously immune to it. But nowhere are the tragic results of the profit-incentive in its driving force more powerfully arraigned, nor the necessity for corporate well-being more stressed than in those very Encyclicals. The outstanding and amazing fact in the contemporary situation is the agreement of many contending groups that human nature must change its basic assumptions and that it is changing them under our eyes.

Do we rejoice? Yes: for a moment.

But we are disconcerted. We look at Europe; France, Italy, Germany, Spain, Greece. We look at Asia; India, China, Korea, Japan. We look at Russia, then perhaps we turn and look at ourselves. . . . And it does seem as if those old forces, the search for power, for self-protection, were hardly routed yet. Two insistent questions haunt us. First: if other-regarding forces affect only our aims while our ancient means persist, what is our vision of the future "One World" but a mirage? Complacency is not for us. Second: Can the new dynamic, which we recognize as sometimes authentic in individuals, ever control corporate action? Means and ends! Corporate control! These two topics summon us to the most incisive thinking of which we are capable. And the more we think the more bewildered we become, till in our helplessness we murmur two Victorian lines, even more relevant now, for in very truth we feel ourselves to be "Wandering between two worlds, one dead,

The other powerless to be born."

LET us face the situation with honest courage.

First, let us consider the problem of means and ends. The outstanding example of disparity between them to occur to everyone just now is the behaviour of Soviet Russia. She is the chief rival or, we fear, opponent of our United States, which is usually cited as leading defender of "Free Enterprise" and the old economic order; with breathless alarm we watch the developing tension between them. Now Communism, mightiest among forces of social upheaval, avows its aim to supplant incentives of private profit by concern for the welfare of the social whole. But Marxist ideology always used the old methods. True, Russia uses them with more enlightenment, no longer audibly calling Proletarians of all lands to unite, but averring insistently her conception of a New Order for all society, released from our frustrations. Many people, welcoming the epoch-making hope of "One World," have thought to find in Communism the clearest promise of its fulfillment. When they look at Russia in action, silence befits them. Aiming at a social system free from selfish incentives, she seeks to further her end by arbitrary use of the very methods she seeks to discredit, and we see the public at large, guided by a far from impartial press, angrily identifying her ends and her means. We want to be impartial; but peering behind the Iron Curtain, we hardly see the Soviets meeting successfully the test offered by the old slogan of Revolution: "Liberty! Fraternity!" But why talk about Russia? She is not alone, either in use of totalitarian methods or in contradicting ends by means. Pot should not call kettle black. Struggle for oil fields is not confined to the Soviets; and is not our own beloved nation today solemnly asserting that to threaten is the only safe way to live and that increase in military resources is the only sure protection of world peace?

If we watch the contrast between the way people, or nations behave, and the thing they say they want, ironic sadness besets us and we are tempted to say that a sense of humour is our only refuge. May we reverently suggest that such a sense can hardly be unknown to the Almighty as He surveys the human scene?

But yet more challenging than the question of means and ends, where some of us think that we see more clearly than we act, is that other question of the ethics of group behaviour. Corporate action! Can the finer dynamic, sometimes, as we must never forget, authentic with individuals, ever pervade it? Can a corporate body reject exclusive control by the normal processes of natural life? Can a group lose its life to save it? . . . Assertion falters; we are lost in bewilderment; there is no area of thought so invaded by the mocking devils of incertitude. How about the behaviour of nations?

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Courteous discussion prevails, and we hear pleasant hints on limitation of national sovereignty! But facts are facts. And how about the great monopolies, which so insidiously contradict the "Free Enterprise" they profess to serve? The more intimately we face the problems of corporate action the more insoluble they become. I can think of no topic more challenging to psychologist or philosopher; for unless corporate as well as individual action can be transformed, civilization is bound to perish; we hardly need the atom bomb or bacteriological poisons to remind us of that fact. And has any philosopher or psychologist yet illumined us?

So terrible is our plight that we must pause. One psychologist named St. Paul did know all about it. He describes our impotence precisely: "My own actions bewilder me," says he. "What I do is not what I wish to do, but something which I hate. . . . Praiseworthy intentions are always ready to hand, but I cannot find my way to the performance of them." . . . "Pitiable creature that I am . . . who is to set me free? . . . . Nothing else than the grace of God through Jesus Christ our Lord." (Romans Vii, 15-25. Tr. by Monsignor R. A. Knox). Let us then further explore that Kingdom of Grace which is the Kingdom of true freedom. There, we must note at the outset, as in the Kingdom of Nature, development goes on.

Grace is not a stationary thing; it is only found in a Becoming," says Meister Eckhart. We know that religious history, reinforced in the privacies of holy faith, offers conclusive evidence of new dynamic diametrically opposed to that in the natural order. Can such dynamic conceivably control our corporate life? If so, how? And whither will it lead us? To answer, we must look straight at the teachings of Our Lord and probe their deepest implications.

Religion and Health

Edited by HAL M. WELLS
Chaplain at Philadelphia State Hospital

BISHOP DeWOLFE of Long Island has attempted to give us in A Marriage Manual (Morehouse-Gorham, $1.25) a simple, concise statement and interpretation of the administration of the marriage and family canons. As he states in his introduction, "The contents of this book are meant to assist in clarifying and implementing the new canons."

Those who accept the Anglo-Catholic point of view will not be disappointed when they read this manual. They will find in the introductory chapter the following: "The spiritual preparation for marriage should culminate in the reception of Holy Communion by the parties . . . our Church makes clear that such a celebration is to be desired." It is further interesting to note that the bishop maintains that "a pastor will not officiate at a marriage which some other priest has refused to perform."

Chapters two through seven present the marriage canons in their entirety with comments. This is a very readable presentation as the comments follow directly after each section of the canon.

In the eighth chapter entitled premarital instructions there is an attempt to give detailed ways as to how the priest should conduct such a series of talks. One commendable portion is the insistence on at least three hours of personal conferences. It seems to me that the clergy as a whole have neglected this phase of their obligation in performing marriages and the bishop's admonition brings their duties into sharp focus. I think, however, that the bishop goes a little far in his second instruction where he states "working wives should stop as soon as possible because it is too heavy an undertaking to go to business and also to create and maintain a true home." I wonder if the bishop is falling back on the more dubious sections of St. Paul, and on Adolph Hitler, who stated that the only place for a woman is in the home. It certainly is in direct contrast to the growing importance of the place of women in our society today.

The final chapter deals with the Church and the family. The bishop advises people to have children as soon as possible because they develop the highest virtues in parents. We wonder if the bishop could have said a word about the possible difficulties children can create in the family and how those difficulties could be avoided. There seemed to be a great emphasis on the raising of children to be obedient and conforming to society rather than the challenging personalities that our times seem to call for.

One questions seriously the statement: "More and more one is compelled to recognize that nothing short of our own parochial schools will stem the paganism enveloping us."

There is an alarming leaning on the teaching of the outward symbols of religious life rather than the inward meaning: "As soon as the child can lisp he should be taught a prayer . . . he should memorize the Beatitudes . . . the fact that they will understand little is of no importance . . . the earlier they are soaked in Christian doctrine the more surely they will be practicing Christians when adults." The bishop goes further: "The lack of family prayers is probably at the bottom of most of the religious indifference and moral deterioration of our day." He states that the child should be taught to make his communion once a month, then twice each month, and then weekly. Daily Communion is the Christian ideal.

It is distressing to notice the disparaging attitude toward the field of psychiatry although it was stated in the preface of the book that a psychiatrist was consulted in the formulation of the book. "What is the use of spending a number of hours and much money going to a psychiatrist when one can go to his pastor and dispel guilt. . . ." He also states, "It is well for us to bear in mind that it is a well-established fact that regular and prepared penitents do not have to visit psychiatrists." This seems to be a highly questionable statement and far from being a "well established fact." It is a little difficult to see how the priest is to dispel guilt if he is to follow Bishop DeWolfe's advice that he is "to work to convict men of their sins."

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

ONE wonders how long people will continue to shrug off the witch hunt. There are times when I do. Then I recall a remark made by a German in the days of Hitler: "Stand by while other people lose their freedom and you may be perfectly sure the day will come when you will lose your own." That's worth tacking over your desk.

Nobody cared much when Eugene Dennis was found guilty of contempt of Congress for refusing to answer all the questions put to him by Parnell Thomas. After all he's a Communist so probably ought to be in jail. Gerhart Eisler we didn't get excited about. Even if he did risk his life fighting the Nazis, he still is a Communist. And Hanns Eisler, while he seemed to be guilty of nothing more than being a great musician and composer, is after all the brother of Gerhart so doubtless is guilty of something. So it has been with a lot of people—Howard Fast, Dr. Barsky, Professor Bradley—we've shrugged our shoulders and gone our way, quite indifferent to their loss of freedom.

But now that a successful beginning has been made by knocking off a few Communists and anti-fascists, the peddlers of red herrings are getting bolder. So in New York cards were hung on lamp-posts and posters decorated the sides of delivery trucks announcing a series of articles in one of the papers on "Communism Invades Your Churches," and the executive editor of the paper, Lee B. Wood, with an eye to circulation, sent letters to parsons asking then to announce the series from their pulpits.

So we read the articles and those listed as "Communists" and "fellow-travelers" were those we expected to find: Professor Harry F. Ward, the Rev. William H. Melish, the Rev. Richard Morford, the Rev. Jack McMichael, the Rev. Guy Emery Shipler, the Rev. John Darr. Rabbi Benjamin Schultz, the author of the articles, also included me. And he said that church people should pay more attention to the Federal Council of Churches which "is fighting Red infiltration" and he gave the Rev. Karl Chworowsky a pat on the back for saying: "I bend over backwards to escape participation in Commie fronts. I am heartily tired of unwittingly playing bellhop to Joe Stalin."

Some of the "fellow travelers" named by the witch-hunting Rabbi came somewhat as a surprise I guess to most people: Boston's Methodist Bishop Lewis O. Hartman, for instance, and Rabbi Stephen Wise, who is surely one of America's great Jewish leaders. Then there was Prof. Abraham Cronbach of Hebrew Union College, Cincinnati, described by his fellow Rabbi as a saintly man but who had refused to withdraw as a sponsor for some organization when told to do so by this New York paper, and so was put down as a "fellow traveler."

My thesis that the witch hunters are apt to get around to you eventually if "you stand by while other people lose their freedom" is borne out by later news. Thus this same newspaper a few days later "exposed" a plot to whitewash Tito. It seems that a committee headed by the Rev. W. Russell Bowie, former rector of Grace Church, New York, and now a professor at Union, is urging that the seven Protestant ministers who visited Yugoslavia last summer be given a fair hearing. So Fred Woltman, the paper's ace exposer of red plots, writes that Dr. Bowie is "a Communist fellow traveler himself." And of course the ministers who go along with Dr. Bowie in this "plot" are either fellow travelers or stupid pawns. Woltman names a few: Bishop Henry St. G. Tucker, former Presiding Bishop; Bishop Edward L. Parsons, retired bishop of California; Bishop Harrington Littell, retired bishop of Honolulu; the Rev. Henry Sloane Coffin, former president of Union Seminary and once moderator of the Presbyterian Church; the Rev. John Paul Jones, leading Presbyterian of Brooklyn; the Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, pastor of the largest Methodist Church in New York, and, rather amusingly, this same Rev. Karl Chworowsky of Brooklyn, who apparently wasn't clever enough "to escape participation in Commie fronts" even though he did get his back all out of shape leaning over backwards trying to do so.

And don't for a minute think that is all. The Federal Council of Churches, praised one week for "fighting Red infiltration," is accused a few days later at a convention in Detroit of "peddling Marxian ideas," and Methodist Bishop Bromley

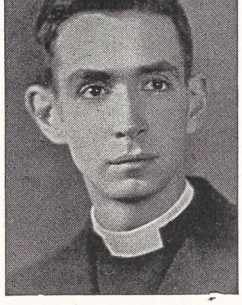
Oxnam, the president of the Council until a year ago and still active in its affairs, is charged with being "at various times a member or sponsor of a number of pro-Communist organizations."

The fact is of course that anyone with a brain, unless he is very successful in hiding the fact, is pretty apt sooner or later to be accused of being a "Communist." Adolphe Menjou, the Hollywood player of bit parts, made this clear in his testimony before the Un-American Committee the other day. He was asked if he had any tests for spotting Communists. He replied: "Well, any who attend meetings to hear Paul Robeson and applaud him."



I attended such a meeting a while back in horsey Monmouth County, New Jersey, held at the estate of a millionaire. Paul Robeson spoke and the five hundred or so nicely-dressed people who were there applauded him vigorously. So, if Mr. Menjou's definition holds, I hazard the guess that there are more Communists in the United States, proportionately, that there are in Russia.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

All Saints or All Souls

THE Reformers who compiled the Prayer Book worked rather persistently to conform the doctrine of the Church's common prayer to the teaching of Holy Scripture. In no instance did they succeed in carrying through this principle with better effect than in their treatment of what, for want of a better phrase, we shall call 'the cultus of the dead.' To pass from the medieval Latin offices for the departed to the Prayer Book rite for the Burial of the Dead is like going out of a dark and fearsome chamber into the clear sunlight of open day.

Hell was very real to the medieval mind, but its torments were the province of the unbaptized and the infidel. Far more terrifying to the ordinary Christian was the prospect of the fires of Purgatory. I would not suggest for a moment that the medieval Christian was lacking in hope. Indeed the medieval man had a much livelier hope, I fear, than does his modern descendent. The cruelties and tragedies of his world drove him to a surer reliance upon the virtues of His Lord's own passion, and the chivalric spirit of his ideals gave him a steadier confidence in the prevailing power of love through the intercessions of Our Lady and the saints. Nonetheless we instinctively feel that St. Francis' Canticle of the Sun is nearer to the religion of the New Testament than the Sequence of his disciple, Thomas of Celano—the Dies irae, which is surely the most representative flower of medieval hymnody. Significantly, the Dies irae was taken up into the liturgy, but not the canticle of the Poverello.

The Middle Ages have taught us to make a distinction between the saints and the rest of us undistinguished believers. The classification is certainly not without its usefulness. But if you will pick up a concordance of the Bible and look through the passages of the New Testament which speak of 'saints' you will find that the term is used not of a special class of Christians who have earned the title, but of all who have been called and chosen of God and sanctified by His grace. The word 'saints' encompasses all those disorderly members at Corinth, those dabblers in the occult at Colosse, those improvident bigots at Jerusalem, as well as those generous converts at Philippi, or those sturdy believers at Rome whose "faith is spoken of throughout the whole world." In short, it describes all those whom God has knit together in one communion and fellowship in the mystical Body of His Son.

I rather think that it was this New Testament conception of sainthood that Cranmer and his associates were seeking to recover when they kept in the Calendar the Feast of All Saints, but eliminated, even from the Black Letter Days, the Commemoration of All Souls which had established itself during the Middle Ages on the day following. Professor Easton has rightly said that "in Anglican tradition 'All Saints' is 'All Souls' as well" (The Eternal Word in the Modern World, p. 297). Both the Epistle and the Gospel for All Saints are pictures of all the redeemed—the Epistle describing their triumph and worship in heaven, the Gospel their tribulation and service upon earth.

Anglicanism has wisely refrained from overmuch speculation about the state of those who have "departed this life in thy faith and fear." We have no cultus of the dead designed to relieve the pains of purgatory and to give a quicker entrance into the realms of light and perfect service. We remember gratefully the good examples of all who have entered into this inheritance, we pray for their increase in knowledge and love and for our ultimate participation in their unspeakable joy. The propers for a Requiem in our Prayer Book are pitched upon the same key of lively hope and blessed assurance. We sing Alleluias rather than Misereres at our services for the departed. It is not congenial to the Anglican tradition to pass from the white festivity of All Saints to the black gloom of All Souls. With us 'All Saints is All Souls as well.'

Reformation Sunday Is Widely Observed By Churches

Union Services Will Be Held This Sunday In Cities Throughout the United States

Edited by Sara Dill

New York:—The 430th anniversary of the Reformation will be observed in churches throughout the country on November 2, commemorating the day when Martin Luther nailed the Theses on the door of Wittenberg Cathedral. In New York, Governor Luther W. Youngdahl of Minnesota will speak at an evening service at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. The Federation of Churches of Washington will hold a joint service at National City Christian Church.

In Pittsburgh the speaker at a union service will be Bishop Otto Dibelius of Germany, while in Buffalo, N. Y., more than 200 churches affiliated with the Council of Churches held their Reformation Day service last Sunday with Methodist Bishop Bromley Oxnam as the speaker.

As in former years, one of the great services will be in St. Louis, sponsored by the Metropolitan Church Federation and held at Kiel Auditorium. The speaker will be Bishop Angus Dun of Washington and it is expected that 20,000 people will attend. A choir of 2,000 voices, accompanied by eighteen members of the St. Louis symphony, two organs and a piano, under the direction of David McK. Williams, formerly organist and choir director of St. Bartholomew's, New York, will lead the music. And as a demonstration of united Protestantism all of the clergymen of greater St. Louis have been asked to march in a procession before the service and to sit upon the platform. For the first time the young people of the city will participate and it is expected that 4,000 will occupy one section of the large opera house.

Hit Discrimination

New York (RNS):—The national board of the United Council of Church Women adopted a series of resolutions at its meeting here calling upon American women to combat racial segregation within the church, to oppose inequality in education and employment, and to "discourage and wipe out anti-Semitism in any form."

At the same time the board urged its members throughout the country to send an "avalanche" of letters and telegrams to Washington asking President Truman and Congress to alleviate the European food crisis, even if it means a return to rationing.

Calling for an end to segregation in the church, the Council termed Protestanism "one of the major institutions in which there is the most racial discrimination and segregation."

In addition to asking united opposition to anti-Jewish feeling, the women's group urged increased "understanding, justice and cooperation among all the peoples of our land—beginning with our own communities."

The Council approved a report of its legislative committee which called for the establishment of a national housing program, removal of the poll tax as a requirement for voting, and the outlawing of lynching.

Following discussion of the government's loyalty check, the Council agreed that the United States has a legitimate right to determine the loyalty of its employees but warned that such procedure must be exercised with the greatest concern for the protection of the individual's civil rights.

Youth Meeting

Lancaster, Pa.:—The Rev. William C. Crittenden, secretary of the youth division of the National Council, was the speaker at the conference of young people of the diocese of Harrisburg, held here at St. James' on October 24-25.

Arizona Clergy Meet

Phoenix, Ariz.:—All the active clergy in the district of Arizona met with Bishop Kinsolving in a two day conference, held at Trinity Cathedral here. Prof. Charles Whiston of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific gave three meditations; the every member canvass was presented by Dean W. F. Carman; the missionary quota objective of the district was considerably increased to enable the district to take on some of its own missionary work.

Schools of Religion

Harrisburg, Pa.:—Schools of religion for Church school teachers and other interested persons over eighteen, are being held for six Monday evenings in three centers in the diocese of Harrisburg.

Newspapers Condemned

Washington (RNS): — Misleading headlines in many American newspapers are producing the kind of thinking which leads to war, A. Allan Bates, former scientific expert for the technical commission of the armies of the United Nations, told a meeting of the Unitarian commission on world order here. The meeting was part of the general conference of the American Unitarian Association held here.

Bates said these headlines may be labeled "war-mongering." He emphasized that many of them were written unintentionally, but nevertheless the effect was just as pernicious. The speaker also said that headline treatment of the carefully-worded statements in former Secretary of State Byrnes' book. Frankly Speaking, about American relations with Russia, indicated a potentiality of war between the two nations.

In the question period following the symposium, the problem of how to regulate some papers which a few speakers said were "irresponsible," and still maintain the American tradition of a free press was discussed at length without general agreement on any solution.

Urges United Front

London (RNS):—The Archbishop of York in an address to the synod of the convocation of York pleaded for a united front in order that England might not become a third-rate power. Predicting a "long, severe and monotonous" struggle for economic security, Archbishop Garbett cautioned that larger profits and higher wages would bring inflation and general ruin, and urged unselfishness and fellowship on the part of all classes.

Wants Negroes Admitted

St. Louis (RNS):—An end to racial discrimination in churches, and institutions supported or sponsored by churches, was demanded by the interracial committee of the Metropolitan Church Federation here. A resolution adopted by the commitee proposed that "all races and nationalities be urged and welcomed to church worship, fellowship and membership in all Protestant churches."

Granting of full civil rights to Negroes in St. Louis was also requested including use of hotels, service in eating establishments, admission to theatres, right to work, right to equal educational opportunities without segregation, and admission of Negroes to all hospitals.

Negro Delegates

Charleston, S. C.: — The convention of the diocese of South Carolina has approved a plan whereby five Negro clergymen and four Negro laymen, to be elected by the Council of Negro churchmen, will be seated in diocesan conventions. The plan has to be passed a second time to become law.

Havana Cathedral

Havana, Cuba: — Bishop Blankingship formerly opened the new Holy Trinity Cathedral here on October 5 with a service of Holy Communion, which was followed by the baptism of seven children. Other services were held during the day for the Cuban and West Indian congregations.

Pass Million Mark

New York:—The sum of $1,006,571 has been received since January 1 by the Presiding Bishop's Fund for world relief, thus passing the million dollar goal for 1947 which was set by General Convention.

Dedicates Mural

New York:—A war mural by Edmond James FitzGerald, a tribute to the men of the merchant marine in world war two, was dedicated on October 23 at the Seamen's Church Institute here. Presiding was Clarence G. Michalis, president of the board of managers; the dedication was by the Rev. Roelif H. Brooks, rector of St. Thomas' Church and the address was by Prof. Greenhalgh Albion of Princeton, authority on marine history.

Hits the Laity

Syracuse, N. Y.:—Claiming that many Episcopalians do not even know the service of Evening Prayer, Bishop Edward T. Demby, retired, told members of St. Philip's, here, that Episcopalians do not spend enough time in church. He was preaching at a service marking the 50th anniversary of the parish.

"They think that if they spend one hour a week in church that they are good churchmen," said the bishop. "If any Protestant church is closed Sunday night you may be sure it is the Episcopal Church."

Bishop Demby, the only living Negro Episcopal bishop in the United States, told of increased work among the Negro people and pointed out specific needs for further work. "Right now we need two well-trained missionaries on the Pacific coast to bring the word of God to the thousands of Negroes there who have never heard of it," he said.

St. Philip's is the only all-Negro parish in the diocese of Central New York. Its rector, the Rev. Victor E. Holly, is the grandson of the first Episcopal bishop of Haiti.

Provincial Synod

Roanoke, Va.:—The synod of the province of Washington, meeting here at St. John's October 21-22, was told of the need for intensive evangelism by the Rev. George A. Wieland, director of the home department of the National Council. Pleading for a just, sound and lasting peace, he said that it will never come until fundamental values are clearly seen and honestly pursued. "If humanity persists in suicidal strife it is doomed to extinction," he declared.

He stated that one hopeful thing is that the Church is becoming aware of its failures, among which he included a shortage of ordained men; narrowness of program; weakness of Sunday Schools; lack of strength in rural areas.

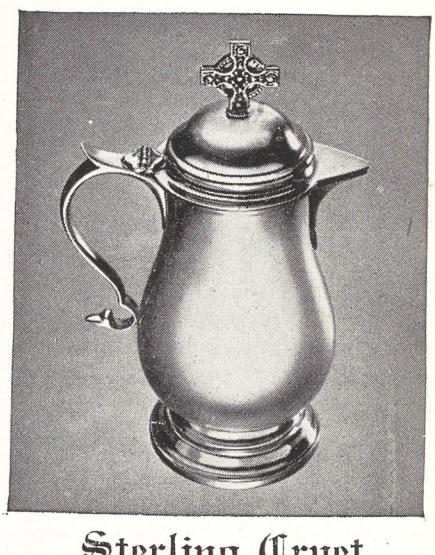
Goes to Italy

Rome:—The Rev. Sturgis L. Riddle, formerly on the staff of St. Thomas' Church New York, has been appointed rector of the American Church of St. James', Florence, Italy. The church is under the jurisdiction of Bishop I. Blair Larned.

Bishop Gives "Musts"

Atlanta, Ga.:—Bishop Thomas N. Carruthers of South Carolina told the 1,200 persons who attended the service held here in connection with the synod of the province of Sewanee, that there are three "musts" if Christianity is to be effective.

"We are not different enough from the world," he explained. "Effectiveness of Christianity in the first century was due largely to the fact that it was amazingly different, vital, and strong. We must recover that distinctiveness."



Secondly, he said, Christianity must become explicit and concrete. "Instead of talking in generalities," he asserted, "we must become specific. We must not merely condemn sin, we must attack particular, concrete sin. . . . We must take definite steps to combat divorce, juvenile delinquency, and religious illiteracy."

Bishop Carruthers' third "must" for the Christian Church was that it must leave no area untouched.

"The results of splitting the world into secular and sacred sections have become disastrous," he declared. "We have fenced off a nice little area of life and labeled it religion. That is not enough. We must take Christ into our factories, schools, newspaper offices, businesses, homes, everywhere."

Questions Asked

London (RNS):—A novel form of service, intended to rid congregations of "the frustration of never being able to talk back," was introduced here by the Rev. Leslie D. Weatherhead, minister of war-bombed City Temple, whose congregation now meets in Marylebone Presbyterian church. Mr. Weatherhead's initial "talk back" service was divided into three sections. The first two were given over to devotions and preaching, and the third to questions and answers. Worshipers were told they need not attend any portion of the service which did not appeal to them, but nearly all the 2,000 persons present stayed until the end.

Fifty written questions were handed to stewards, but because of time limitations, only seven were answered.

The Long View

Rome (RNS):—The official newspaper of the Vatican, in calling for more missionaries, estimates that there are about a billion and a half non-Christians yet to be converted, and that at the present rate it will take 3,000 years to do the job.

Laymen Urge Evangelism

Cleveland:—Men of the diocese of Ohio are so enthusiastic over the National Council's plans for a national Episcopal hour on the radio that they voted to designate their Advent offering to this purpose. The offering will be received on November 30, the day of the annual men's corporate communion.

Negroes Admitted

Atlanta, Ga.:—The synod of the province of Sewanee, meeting here, passed a resolution providing that at all future synods there shall be no discrimination against Negroes. It was introduced by Bishop Walker of Atlanta who pointed out that Negroes had not been allowed to attend dinner conferences in hotels because of state laws.

Services Allowed

New York:—Bishop Otto Dibelius of Germany, in the United States for a lecture tour under the auspices of the Federal Council of Churches, speaking at a meeting at Union Seminary, declared that the Church in the Russian Zone "is to a certain degree better off than it was under the Nazis." He said that Moscow's official policy is to avoid trouble with the Church so that regular worship services are allowed "even though they may not be fond of our sermons."

"The trouble begins with other church organizations, such as foreign mission societies, women's groups and youth activities," he said, "because the Russians are not accustomed to the social work of the Church. Knowing nothing about the program, they distrust everything They are always afraid that political things are going on. They cannot understand how clever, thinking people can be above politics, because they devote their life to it."

Bishop Dibelius said that no Russian commandant would ever believe that a pastor brings ten or twelve boys and girls together for Bible study; he is convinced that they must be discussing political propaganda against Russia.

Bishop Hart Celebrates

Philadelphia: — The fifth anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Oliver J. Hart as Bishop of Pennsylvania was observed October 16th at the Church of the Advocate, where he was consecrated. He celebrated, assisted by Suffragan Bishop Remington, and the two men who were the attending presbyters at his consecration, the Rev. S. Tagart Steete and the Rev. Frank Williamson Jr. The service was followed by a clergy conference and in the evening. Bishop and Mrs. Hart were the guests at a dinner given by the Church Club. Purses were presented for personal use and for defraying expenses in attending the Lambeth Conference next summer.

Ad for a Cook

Winthrop, Mass.:—"Cook wanted. Loyal Catholic or loyal Protestant preferred. Character preferred to cooking but no objection if cooking improves."

The rector of St. John's Church here who placed the foregoing ad in a local paper got from it a talented cook who served his family for many years. That her creed differed from his had "no effect upon her cooking," he told his congregation, or upon their "excellent mutual relations."

But the ad did considerably more than get the Rev. Ralph M. Harper a good cook. It set in motion forces of religious toleration which have thrived with the years until Winthrop today is considered a model city in interfaith good will. When

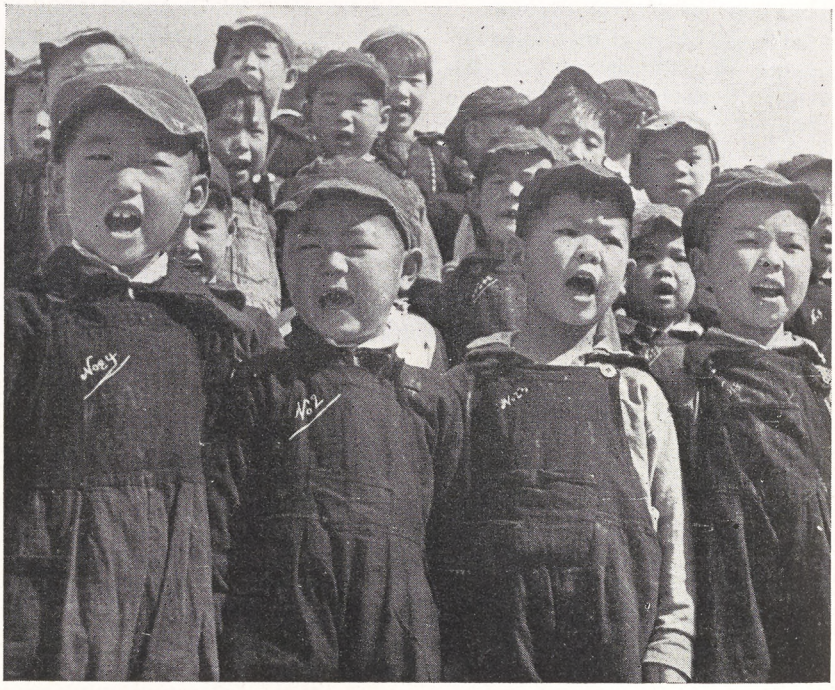
Mr. Harper, who pioneered in this development, celebrated his 33rd anniversary recently as rector here, laymen and clergymen of the Roman Catholic and Jewish faiths, as well as of the Protestant denominations, were on hand to congratulate him upon an effort which has bred extensive interfaith cooperation. Protestant, Catholic and Jew have joined forces not merely in worthy civic enterprises but frequently to give one another moral and material support in purely religious activities.

Not often has a Baptist clergyman appeared in Episcopal vestments but it happened here when the Baptist minister donned them at Protestant union services in Mr. Harper's church. It was the Baptist clergyman's return gesture for Mr. Harper's willingness, at a previous union service, to forego robes out of courtesy to his Baptist guests.



Need Is Great

New York:—Women of the Church are urged by the Woman's Auxiliary to cooperate fully in the special projects for European relief offered by Church World Service and the United Council of Church Women. Mrs. A. M. Sherman, executive secretary of the Auxiliary, said recently: "Reports from Europe point to the urgent need for school outfits for European children. Almost every country has said it could use the whole 500,000, the number set to be collected by Churchwomen on World Community Day, November 7. Therefore it is suggested that women's groups continue to work on this project through the fall months."

The school outfits which are being prepared by Churchwomen contain complete clothing outfits, including shoes, and school classroom supplies which are almost entirely lacking in many countries. Each box will contain also some schoolyard toy, such as a ball or jump rope, and a card of greeting from the person or group packing the box. The boxes are for children between the ages of six and twelve.

Mrs. Ruth Worrell, national president of the United Council of Church Women, said upon her return from Europe this month, "Last winter was the worst Europe had seen. This next winter will be even worse because of a poor harvest and there will be an even greater lack of fuel. I could not understand how people lived when I saw the ruins where many of them were without any fuel rationing whatsoever. I cannot put it into words because we have no words to express such a situation.

The Work of the Rev. Kimber Den

Over the years readers of THE WITNESS have contributed generously to the great work of relief being carried on in China under the direction of the Rev. Kimber Den. In the days of war everyone was fully aware of the importance of supporting an ally. But the need is no less today—in fact it is greater due to the tremendous inflation in China. It is our hope that many individuals and church societies will send in donations at once so that we may get a sizable check in the mails in time to reach China for Thanksgiving.

a fresh approach to Bible study

WHO AM I?

By John B. Walthour

Who Am I? is a series of Bible quizzes which are sure to lend new vividness and appeal to a study of the Scriptures. Twenty quizzes are each devoted to a description of a character in the Bible—Nehemiah, Deborah, Andrew, Thomas. A clue is given at the end of the first few paragraphs, and the question asked: "Who am I?" If the group does not know, further clues are given as the talk progresses until the name of the character is discovered.

The talks are fresh and original, animated and interesting. They are well told and, aside from the quiz feature, they are excellent expository sermons. Their reading in adult Bible classes will add new interest to these meetings. $2.00

Radio Commission

New York (RNS):—Formation of a Protestant Radio Commission to help American churches develop and administer a "unified religious radio ministry" was urged here following a special meeting of 50 prominent church council executives and denominational leaders.

Major functions of the proposed Commission, it was said, will be to act on behalf of Protestant churches in maintaining Christian standards of public decency and good taste in commercial programs, to represent Protestantism in interfaith broadcasts, and to speak for Protestant churches before the Federal Communications Commission.

Other functions include encouraging a wider and more adequate use of religious radio, developing intelligent radio listening on the part of church people, providing professional radio services and consultation for state and local councils of churches, and furthering cordial relations with the radio industry.

One of the first projects of the proposed Commission will be to institute a "broadly envisaged and carefully formulated research study of the field of religious radio and the church's relation thereto."

Condemn Prejudice

Durban, Natal (RNS):—A resolution condemning color prejudice and calling for more Christian attitudes toward non-Europeans was unanimously adopted by the Natal Diocesan Synod of the Anglican Church which met at Pietermaritzburg.

Declaring that "differences of race give rise to problems of a political, social and economic nature which will only be solved if approached in a spirit wholly devoid of color prejudice," the resolution warned that "the Christian way of life practiced in all our dealings with non-Europeans alone can prevent serious racial trouble in our country."

The resolution stressed "the urgent need for all Christian people of European stock to consider their behavior and attitude toward servants and employees, with a view to giving them opportunities to benefit by Christian example and teaching."

Several speakers suggested that non-European clergymen should minister to European congregations when European clergy are temporarily not available. Canon W. H.

World Missions

Seattle, Wash.: — Unification and specialization are the two outstanding trends in missionary work today, it was indicated at the second annual World Missions Conference held at Seattle Pacific College here.

The conference, attended by 115 delegates, featured 38 booths, including a palm-thatched hut. A number of the booths represented service organizations cooperating with many missions, such as the American Mission to Lepers, which serves 24 denominations; the Wycliffe Bible Translators, who have trained missionaries of 58 societies this year; and the Child Evangelism Fellowship, which aids in a ministry to children in cooperation with societies in 67 countries.

Technological advances in mission work highlighted the conference. A 1947 station wagon marked "Africa Inland Mission, Congo Belge," was driven around the college campus by a missionary who contended that he now can cover two-thirds of his field with it. A booth sponsored by "Gospel Recordings, Inc.," showed how this agency offered missionaries records of music and messages in 109 languages.

Parochial Schools

Burlington, Vt.:—The Rev. Thomas B. Keehn, legislative secretary of the Congregational Council for Social Action, with headquarters in Washington, told the regional meeting of the Congregational-Christian Church, meeting here, that Protestants need to take an active stand on the matter of "taxing the public for parochial schools." The issue in pending legislation, he said, is whether "parochial and private schools shall ride on the coat-tails of the public treasury."

THE REV. F. K. HOWARD
Clergyman of Berkeley, Calif.

THE WITNESS editorial and the article by Howard Fast (Oct. 2) certainly rang the bell. There are many others who are not happy over the retreat by the powers-that-be from the advanced line marked out by the great president who has been gathered to his fathers. The present hysteria over communism was well rebuked in a previous WITNESS by Chaplain Kock of Manila, to whom I also send a pat on the back. The delightful portrayal of the group in the special car and the persons who patronize the Church by turning weddings into social functions also was fine.

Howard Fast demands that "all who love the Lord" no longer keep silent, but try to do something about the betrayal of freedom's heritage. Why does not our national social service department, and the diocesan departments as well, do something? If it must be done by individuals who "count not their life dear unto themselves" please let me know and I shall be glad to give such energy as I still possess to help organize out here on the Pacific slope, so that the real defenders of freedom may not find the Church shrinking in the rear when it should be in the vanguard in bringing in the Kingdom of God on earth.

LANE W. BARTON
The Bishop of Eastern Oregon

Having read the articles by the Rev. Mr. Higgins I wonder if he knows what he is doing. Presumably he is interested in the missionary work of the Church but the sort of sniping in which he indulges does untold harm to the missionary cause.

One would be utterly naive to suppose that anyone at 281 is perfect. People there make mistakes because, like the rest of us, they are human beings and subject to error. One would gather from what Mr. Higgins has to say that parish priests never err—just the secretaries and the typists at 281. There is no doubt that among the hundreds of missionaries sent out by our Church there is an occasional "Susie Q" and possibly even a "Bishop Screwball," and human nature being what it is there is a strong possibility that someone at 281 has, in a weak moment, so referred to them. Has Mr. Higgins never in his ministry spoken disrespectfully even in jest of the "Susie Q's," of whom there are a few in every parish, and has he never in an unguarded moment referred to his pet peeve in the episcopate as "Bishop Screwball?"

Undoubtedly returned missionaries have from time to time been given the brush-off by busy executives at 281, but has Mr. Higgins never been compelled during his busy periods to give the brush-off to members of his parish anxious to speak with him? Undoubtedly the secretaries and executives at 281 have made errors in judgment which might have been avoided had they listened to returned missionaries from the field, but has Mr. Higgins never made an error in judgment in the administration of his parish, or has he always had time to listen to the advice of his lay people "in the field"!

It seems to me quite unfortunate that we persist in washing our dirty linen, peeves, etc. in public. I cherish freedom of the press and rejoice that in THE WITNESS we have such freedom. I could wish however that our free press, secular as well as religious, were as responsible as it is free. These articles by Mr. Higgins are biased and unfair and do more harm than good. Having had close contact with 281 during the nine years of my ministry in Grace Church, Orange, N. J., and being one of the "hamstrung" missionary bishops to whom Mr. Higgins has referred, I know from first hand experience that the staff at 281 is doing a very good job, and I could ask for no finer support than they have given me. I know also as a Church we are unspeakably ungrateful for what these workers at 281 are doing. Their's is a thankless job. They are deserving of our loyal and encouraging support. When they make mistakes it is only fair to them to tell them, but let's not make Mr. Higgins' mistake of assuming that because one executive or typist makes a mistake that everyone at 281 makes nothing but mistakes, is a bureaucrat, and the victim of a closed mind.

Finally may I express the hope that THE WITNESS will match its freedom with a high sense of responsibility for what it publishes.

MR. BASIL FRANCIS
Layman of Stanton, California

In your issue of Sept. 4th there is a letter from a Dr. Alison that I would like to express approval of. For a long while I have thought that there is something radically wrong with the clergy pension system: instead of following Christian principles it seems to be completely a cold-blooded business proposition. Take an elderly married man with about $50 a month pension. It is hopelessly inadequate for a single man, yet if he is physically able to undertake regular supply work—which is mostly abominably paid—he dare not do so unless he is prepared to risk the loss of his pitiful pension.

Until the Fund is able to pay a living pension to every man it has no moral right to interfere with the earning possibilities of any pensioner, no matter what their "rules." If necessary those "rules" should be changed promptly. The only alternative would seem to be the very kind of thing the Fund was supposed to eliminate, viz. "relief" of some kind or other.

Another thing occurs to me. There are some clergy so deeply attached to their priesthood that their devotion to God requires them to celebrate the Holy Eucharist regularly. Which is more edifying, for such a man to celebrate privately in his own home perhaps with only his wife present, or to celebrate in some available church where his services would be appreciated?

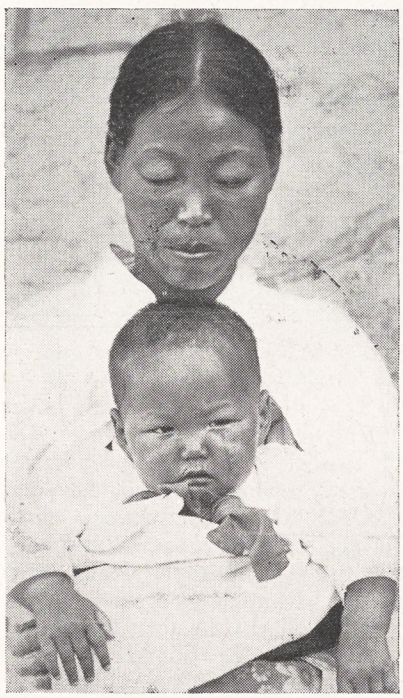
American Mission to Lepers Reports Great Progress

Fortieth Annual Convention Hears Reports From Leaders in All Parts of the World

By W. B. Spofford

New York:—"This year our Mission has done a larger work, and spent more money around the world than ever before in its history," Dr. Eugene R. Kellersberger, general secretary of the American Mission to Lepers, reported to the annual convention of the society meeting in New York.

"We work with 40 societies in 125 aided projects in 29 countries. The exhaustive studies undertaken in last year's extensive trip by Mrs. Kellersberger and myself have already resulted in the opening of at least 15 more pieces of new work and have brought about a closer cooperation among existing projects that is constantly bearing fruit.



"We have told our story over 500 times in many parts of the United States by radio, by picture, by voice, by interview, and by many other ways. As a result, there is greater interest in and knowledge of leprosy than ever before. There is less ignorance and fear of the disease."

From Dr. Kellersberger's report, reports of missionaries attending the convention, and from volunteer workers in the educational program of the society came evidence of the expansion and intensification of the Christian struggle against leprosy in our country and around the world.

Most heartening was the report of Dr. R. C. Williams, assistant surgeon general, chief of the bureau of medical services, reporting successful use of sulfa drugs in the treatment of leprosy.

"For the first time in the history of mankind, we feel we can now say to the person who has leprosy, 'There is hope'," he said. Two sulfa derivatives, diasone and promin, have now been in use over a five year period with patients at the U. S. Leprosarium at Carville, La. Where from ten to twelve patients were hitherto released annually as symptom free, he reported, between 30 and 35 are now being discharged. Beneficial results in the treatment of sulfa drugs are now being confirmed in other countries, Dr. Williams reported further.

That Christian missions are benefiting from advances in medical research was revealed in the report of Dr. William Jay Schieffelin, president of the American Mission to Lepers, who reported that sulfa drugs valued at $66,405 have been sent to 53 mission stations in 21 countries, to government colonies in Greece, the Philippine Islands, Ethiopia, Congo Belge, and Brazil.

Detected early, leprosy can be arrested. So Christian leprosy missions pay particular attention to the needs of their child patients

In his report Dr. Schieffelin also announced a four point program for world-wide leprosy control. The program comprises first, the development of existing leprosy units into well-rounded social and economic units; second, wider use of modern medicines; third, greater emphasis on work with children; fourth, continued public education in leprosy.

Bishop Gilbert of New York joined members and friends of the American Mission in honoring Dr. Schieffelin for his 40 years service as president of the society. In his talk he called work among persons with leprosy as "the most Christ-like undertaking that is possible for the mind of man to conceive.

"I like to feel there's light shining through the darkness for these people," he said. "Missionaries are doing in his name what he would be doing himself in he were here."

Bishop Gilbert pointed out that besides extending a much-needed ministry to persons with leprosy, missionaries in the work are acting as emissaries of good will abroad. "When we hear of growing hatred toward our nation and our way of life, we are troubled. By this work, however, we have a chance to let people know that we're trying to be good neighbors, that we aren't the selfish, ruthless, dominating nation that others think we are."

President of Soochow University, Dr. Y. C. Yang, also had words of praise for leprosy missions "giving the light of medicine, spiritual relief, and the eternal hope of God" to victims of the disease.

"People of any country to which missionaries have gone," he said,

WAITERS SHARE TIPS WITH LEPROSY VICTIMS

Members of the Hotel and Club Employees Union, local No. 6 (AFL) who served at the annual dinner of the American Mission to Lepers, donated half their tips to leprosy missions when they learned that the Mission recently sent 2500 Promin and 50,000 Diasone tablets to leprosy colonies in Greece, homeland of many of the local's members.

"appreciate their work and remember it with gratitude."

"I like to think of missionaries traveling back and forth across the seas, as a shuttle on a great loom, weaving between two countries a web of Christian friendship and fellowship." He said further that the spreading of the Christian spirit was essential to realization of the golden dream of a peaceful world. "In spreading Christian ideals and teaching men how to observe the principles of Christian love," he said, "the work of missionaries has a wider significance."

Speaking out of his experience as director of one of the finest leprosy institutions of India, at Chanokhuri, Dr. H. H. Gass stressed the need for breaking down ignorance and prejudice regarding leprosy. "What mental and physical agony have been the lot of folks suffering from leprosy just because of the baseless horror associated in men's minds with this disease. We have let our emotions and prejudices rather than intelligence and understanding govern our attitude and actions. It is only in recent years that we have begun to face the issue scientifically."

"To a large extent, Dr. Gass said further, "the Mission to Lepers institutions have served the folk who exhibit the effects of extensive physical and mental injury; the cases with mutilating deformities due to inadequate care; the homeless, friendless, and ostracized. Had it not been for Christian agencies, who were the pioneers in this work in many lands, an intelligent and sympathetic approach to this disease would have been deferred for a long time."

How his institution attempts to deal with the mental healing of patients who have suffered from the disease was answered by Dr. Gass thus: "In our institution at Chanokhuri, occupational therapy plays an important role. Practically all the nursing is done by patients who have been given a three year course by our nursing superintendent. Other patients spin, weave, cultivate, learn animal husbandry, keep records, teach in our schools, tend the library. Some become lay teachers and preachers, giving comfort and instruction to shut-ins and illiterates."

Finally, Dr. Clifton E. Rash, Protestant chaplain at the U. S. Leprosarium at Carville, La. outlined the responsibilities of Christian missions in leprosy as embracing a ministry on two levels. "We must provide for them the things of life and we must get them to look beyond this life into eternity," he said. "Our ministry is and must continue to be on a physical plane," comprising medical care, physical services, and comforts otherwise denied them. "But when we do all these things and leave out the spiritual things, we are not doing well by people with leprosy."

NEW HAMPSHIRE ELECTS HALL

Concord, N. H.:—The Rev. Charles F. Hall, rector of St. Paul's Church here was elected Bishop Coadjutor of New Hampshire on October 24. He was elected on the sixth ballot. Others to receive large votes were the two clergymen who deadlocked at the previous election: the Rev. Theodore O. Wedel, warden of the College of Preachers, Washington, and the Rev. Whitney Hale, rector of the Advent, Boston.

Mr. Hall, in the thirties, was the rector of Grace Church, Medford, Mass., before coming to Concord. He has been a leader of young people's work and was on the faculty of the Wellesley Conference this year and is a member of the committee planning the 1948 conference.

DR. KELLERSBERGER STARTS TOUR

New York:—General Secretary of the American Mission to Lepers, Dr. Eugene R. Kellersberger, left New York on October 22nd for a five months' tour of leprosy stations in the Orient. The journey, to enable the American Mission to gather detailed up-to-date information on land, buildings, medical practices, administrative policies, and personnel, will take him to Hawaii, the Philippines, China, Siam, and India. Accompanying him was Mr. A. Donald Miller, secretary of the Mission to Lepers of London, and Dr. Neil Fraser, medical secretary of the two mission bodies for China.

In China their visit will lay foundations for a great extension of work of the Chinese Mission to Lepers, for greater coordination of existing leprosy missions, and increased cooperation of the Chinese government in an anti-leprosy program.

In India, between January 19th and March 9th, he will visit leprosy units at Allahabad, Fyzabad, Chandag, Ambala, Chandkhuri, Vellore, and others.

In Hawaii he will study work at the Kalaupapa Settlement in Molokai, and at Kalihi; in the Philippines, stations in Culion, Cebu, Tala, Iloilo, and others.

Occupational therapy plays an important part in the care of leprosy patients

CALLS VATICAN WARMONGER

Moscow:—Charges that Pope Pius XII and the Roman Catholic Church are "warmongers, who are trying to push humanity toward a new catastrophe," were made here by the Journal of the Moscow Patriarchate, official bulletin of the Russian Orthodox Church. The publication asserted that the Vatican is "alienating all true and sincere Christians" by a political course, which, "whether the Pope wishes it or not, serves to spread that same atheism it appears to be fighting."

Unity Commission Has Hearing On Presbyterian Union

Different Points of View Are Presented With Laymen Urging More Church Teaching

Washington:—The first open hearing on unity with the Presbyterian Church was held here at the College of Preachers by the unity commission, as provided by General Convention. It was marked by lengthly discussion of Episcopal recognition of the equality of Presbyterian ordination vows, said by several to be the chief stumbling block to unity.

The Rev. Albert J. M. Wilson of Greenwich, Conn., declared that the times call for unity, and he expressed the opinion that there would be general agreement between members of both Churches on most beliefs, but that "it is in the doctrine of the ministry we shall find debate, discussion and difference."

The Rev. Francis J. Moore of Cincinnati told the commission that Episcopalians should be prepared to recognize the equality of Presbyterian ordination vows or "the commission should pack up and go home."

Opposing union with the Presbyterians but favoring closer cooperation with Eastern Orthodox Churches were the Rev. Francis J. Bloodgood of Milwaukee and others representing the Anglo-Catholics.

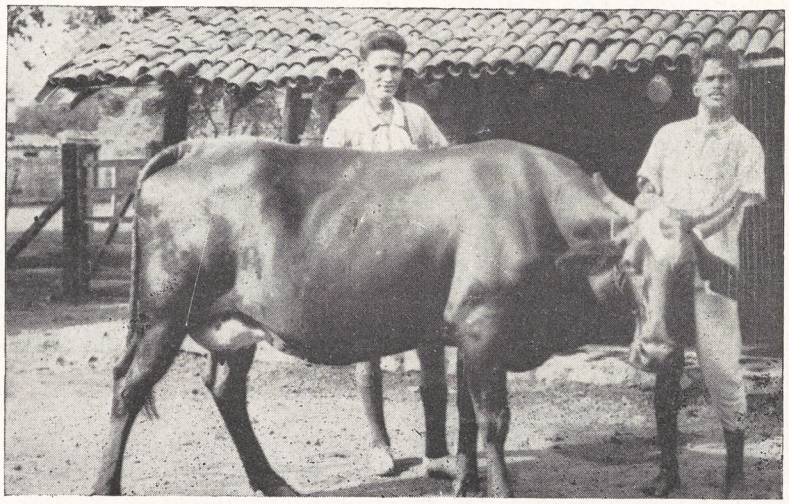
Layman Frank M. Blandon of Elkton, Maryland, asked the commission to adopt a report "the laymen can clearly understand," setting forth the present structure and practices of the Episcopal Church.

Also appearing at the hearing was the Rev. Charles D. Kean, president of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship, and the Rev. Gardiner M. Day, former president, who presented a statement on the subject that had the approval of the executive board of the organization. It stated that the resolution of the 1937 General Convention which declared it to be the intention of the Episcopal Church to achieve organic unity with the Presbyterians "is still the official policy of the Church" and that the representatives of our Church at the coming Lambeth Conference "should be very clear on this point." The EEF board stated that "there may be differences of opinion on ways and means" but that "the objective still stands and is not a subject for debate."

The EEF spokesmen said that "it appears to be the duty of the commission on approaches to unity to propose a scheme of intercommunion between this Church and the Presbyterian Church which can be presented to Lambeth for its opinion, which can be studied by the Church at large and which can be acted on by the next General Convention. It would also appear to be the duty of the commission to consult with the Presbyterian negotiators about this proposal for inter-communion, if possible before Lambeth, and certainly to keep them informed as to the nature of our proposals."

"In preparing such a proposed basis for intercommunion," the statement continued, "the commission should be guided by the Lambeth Quadrilateral and the resolutions on the South India Scheme. These latter documents provide unequivocal warrant for a true intercommunion with complete mutual respect for the orders and sacraments of the two negotiating Churches."

John Lord Obrian, former U. S. solicitor general, presided at the sessions of the hearing. Bishop Strider of West Virginia is the chairman of the commission and Dean Zabriskie of Virginia Seminary is the secretary.



PROVINCIAL SET-UP DEALT WITH

Syracuse, N. Y.: — Affirming that the administrative duties of the province have been satisfactorily assumed by the department of the National Council, and their counterparts in the dioceses, the synod of the second province, meeting here, passed a series of resolutions designed to "enable the synod to provide in its meetings intellectual and spiritual stimuli, a greater feeling of fellowship among the clergy and laity of the various dioceses, and an opportunity for thinking and discussion on the problems facing the Church and the world."

It virtually makes the synod an inter-diocesan conference rather than a legislative and administrative body, though the new plan does provide for a provincial council whose function will be to carry on such work in the province as is committed to it by the National Council. It is expected that other provinces will follow a similar plan.

As an example of what future synods will be like, the meeting here devoted much of its time to a study of the problem of evangelism, in line with the radio-movie-advertising proposals that have been proposed by the promotion department of the National Council, and approved by the Council.

Bishop Reinheimer of Rochester was elected president of the synod, succeeding Bishop Oldham of Albany, and Dr. W. Freeman Galpin of Central New York was elected chairman of the house of deputies, succeeding Mr. Harrison Deyo of New York. Others to serve on the council are Bishop Gardner of New Jersey,

Many leprosy units are "happy villages" with enough farm lands and industries to make the villagers self supporting and psychologically fulfilled

Bishop Barry of Albany, Bishop Ludlow of Newark, the Rev. James A. Rockwell of Central New York, the Rev. Lynde E. May of New York, the Rev. Harry J. Stretch of Long Island, Prof. Theodore T. Odell of Rochester, Mr. Theodor Oxholm of New York, Mr. Henry A. Bull of Western New York.

The president and the secretary of the Auxiliary of the province and the woman representing the province on the national committee of the Auxiliary will also serve on this provincial council.

Speaking at the dinner held in connection with the meetings were Prof. Earl L. Koos of the University of Rochester and Dean Percy Urban of the Berkeley Divinity School.

INSTALLED DEAN OF GENERAL

New York:—The Very Rev. Lawrence Rose was installed dean of the General Seminary on October 20 by Bishop Washburn of Newark, the chairman of the board of trustees. Others attending the service were Bishop Hart of Pennsylvania; Bishop Jenkins, retired bishop of Nevada; Dean Gifford of Philadelphia Divinity School; Dean Urban of Berkeley; the Rev. W. Russell Bowie, representing Virginia Seminary; the Rev. Howard H. Hassinger, representing Seabury-Western; the Rev. Ralph H. Hayden, representing the commission on theological education; the Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, representing the National Council; the Rev. Henry Pitney Van Dusen, president of Union Seminary; Dean Frank G. Lankard of Drew University; Chaplain Gordon Hutchins, representing army chaplains; Chaplain Frank R. Hamilton, representing navy chaplains; Prof. Frederick H. Pottle of Yale and Frank D. Fackenthal, acting-president of Columbia University.

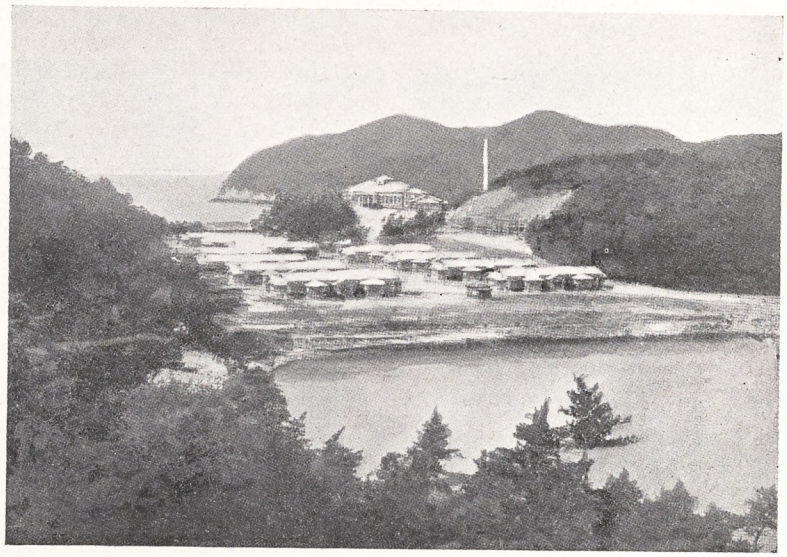
Attending the service were sixteen students of the Berkeley Divinity School where Dean Rose was formerly the dean.

URGE LEADERSHIP ON RACISM

Atlantic City, N. J.:—The clericus of Philadelphia and vicinity, meeting here, unanimously adopted a resolution calling for forthright statements and actions on the part of the leadership of the Episcopal Church on racial issues. "The Presiding Bishop," the statement said, "has issued an appeal for evangelism. It is our firm belief that there is no more fertile field from which to garner souls for Christ than from the Negroes of America. However, whereas our National Council has stated certain propositions concerning the integration of the Negro into our general Church life, we find actually that the greatest stumbling block to our progress is the indecisive and timid racial attitude of too great a portion of our leadership, as contrasted with the growing liberality and positivity of the Roman Catholic program and that of other Churches, for the evangelization of the Negro."

The statement condemned an article on the subject of segregation by Bishop Barnwell of Georgia and also a statement on the subject made at a National Council meeting by Cyril E. Bentley, director of the American Church Institute for Negroes. "We cannot but contrast the Roman Catholic program of intergration with the fact that our Church, by and large, has expended, and is expending a great deal of time, energy, argument, and worst of all, plenty of money, to keep in existence a segregated seminary (The Bishop Payne Divinity School)."

BISHOP HARRIS HAS NEW LAUNCH



Liberia:—Bishop Harris' new launch made its maiden voyage recently, Monrovia to Cape Mount. It is an Army M. T. boat, 30 feet long, with a new Chrysler motor. The Bishop has named it the Margretta Ridgely, in honor of the missionary whose name is so closely associated with the development of the House of Bethany.

Bishop Harris is proceeding with his plans for reopening Cuttington College, where teachers and clergy can receive special training for the future development of the work.

DEAN JOHN DAY HONORED

Topeka, Kan.:—Dean John W. Day received high tribute from Bishop Fenner on October 19, which marked the 20th anniversary of his deanship at Grace Cathedral here. The nave was filled with friends and members of many congregations throughout the city. Bishop Fenner said: "He has given his gifts of self and spirit and never has he been called upon that he has not responded with his best. He has won the high affection and esteem of the diocese as a careful and foresighted administrator. He conceives of liberty, justice and truth as coming from God and he battles for them."

Following the service Dean and Mrs. Day were guests at a tea and reception.

COOPERATION WITH SOVIET UNION

Sydney: — Church leaders "must spare no effort" to bring about understanding between the Soviet Union and the United States and Great Britain, Bishop Oldham of Albany declared here at celebrations marking the centenary of the Church of England in Australia. He stated that "although there is a strong anti-Russian feeling in America, the majority of Americans have not yet reached the stage where they believe there must be either civilization or annihilation" and went on to say that understanding with Russia "is as much for our own welfare as it is for Russia's."

Do We Dare to Lead?

THE Archbishop of York said recently that if the Church comes to be identified with reaction then "in its hour of victory in every country the Left will treat the Church, and possibly Christianity, as its political foe."

It is a pat remark for Bishops and other Church leaders to read at this moment. The Dean of Canterbury is visiting this country this month. He is of course one of the highest ranking ecclesiastics in the Church of England. He also has the rare distinction of being a Churchman who is loved by millions of common people throughout the world. Only a few weeks ago Life gave several pages to pictures of him being lionized by the people of Hungary. And if we are inclined to say, "Hungary, so what?," the answer is that he has been similarly treated in other countries where people have hailed him as a champion of justice.

He will be so treated here—by the common people. St. Nicholas Arena in New York will be packed with a cheering throng to greet him. Meetings equally enthusiastic will be held in ten other cities.

Yet we have been reliably informed that a number of bishops of the Dean's own Church have refused to have anything whatever to do with these meetings, declaring that "it will split things wide open." What about (1) the honor due a visiting dignitary; (2) our boasted desire "to hear all sides of a question"; (3) our insistence that the Episcopal Church is not a "class Church" but ministers to all, irrespective of class or economic position?

Further, what about that "Iron Curtain" that we complain so much about? The Dean of Canterbury has been behind it, not once but several times, and for extended stays. And nobody has accused him of being a dishonest man who will give us a distorted picture

The answer is simple: we are a class Church, with our top leaders catering to reaction. If further evidence is needed than this treatment of the Dean of Canterbury, we can go back a few years and give you the story of another noted Britisher. George Lansbury, a devout member of the Church of England and the head of the Labor Party was to visit the United States—George Lansbury who, it is generally recognized, would have been the Prime Minister of England had he lived. A group of Episcopalians arranged to honor him as soon as he arrived in New York. Being a Churchman as well as a distinguished visitor, they asked the then Presiding Bishop to chair the meeting. He politely declined but referred the committee to the Assistant Presiding Bishop. He asked for time to think it over. He then offered the same reason for declining as we now hear in the case of the Dean of Canterbury: "It would split things wide open," a statement which he supported by bringing from his top drawer letters from two distinguished —and rich—Episcopalians who virtually ordered him to "have nothing to do with meetings where the head of the British Labor Party is to speak." Other bishops were invited. All refused except one. Bishop Robert L. Paddock presided. He was a retired bishop and he was economically independent and was therefore beyond the reach of distinguished — and rich — Episcopalians. Though we hasten to add that Bob Paddock, being first of all a man, would have presided in spite of threats and intimidations.

Here we are, crying about the "unchurched" and the "wayward," with the National Council requesting an extra million and a half with the plea that we must decide "how far the Church shall go toward affecting attitudes of the millions we are not touching in any way." Well, putting this whole thing on the lowest possible level, here is a chance to affect the attitude of millions without spending a dime. Let bishops preside at these meetings of the Dean of Canterbury. Let them cheerfully and sincerely invite him to preach in their cathedrals. Many thousands will attend these meetings; many thousands also would attend these services who seldom enter Episcopal Churches. And millions will read of these meetings in the secular press. Are we so fearful of reaction . . . has the Church so far succumbed to the anti-Russian hysteria . . . that it not only passes up this opportunity but, worse, actually snubs one of its own leading dignitaries?

If so then we repeat the solemn warning of the Archbishop of York: "If the Church comes to be identified with reaction, then in its hour of victory in every country the Left will treat the Church, and possible Christianity, as its political foe."

American Mission to Lepers

AMONG the various ministries carried on by missionaries of the Episcopal Church is one to people who have leprosy. The best known mission of this kind was St. Barnabas at Kusatsu, Japan, which was in charge of Miss Irene M. Nettleton of the Church of England. In 1940 the institution was closed and the patients moved to a Japanese hospital, though Miss Nettleton, virtually a prisoner of war, was allowed to care for a household of children. She was a visitor in New York only last week, on her way to her home in England.

In the Canal Zone there is a leprosarium maintained by the U. S. government where the Rev. A. F. Nightengale, an Episcopal missionary, renders a quiet and effective spiritual ministry. In Liberia, on an island called Maasateen, missionaries at Cape Mount, particularly those attached to St. Timothy's Hospital, work in a colony that belongs technically to the government but actually relied on the mission for management and all services until fairly recently when the U. S. government lent a hand.

In China, among the numerous projects directed by the Rev. Kimber Den, there is the Nanchang Leprosarium, and it was to this institution that a supply of sulfa drugs was sent by the American Mission to Lepers some months ago. THE WITNESS for November 21, 1946, featured articles about this great humanitarian organization, with one of the articles written by Mr. Raymond P. Currier, its executive secretary. In it he wrote of the effective use of promin as a cure for the disease. Bishop Craighill of Anking read this with excitement since the institution's superintendent, Mr. Tong, had contracted leprosy while giving selfless devotion to the care of patients during the difficulties of Japanese occupation. The Bishop wrote THE WITNESS; we relayed the story to the American Mission to Lepers; a supply of sulfa drugs was immediately dispatched to Nanchang.

The articles this week by Mr. Currier and the president of the Mission, William Jay Schieffelin, again present the story of this great work so that there is hardly anything for us to add. But Church people should know that the funds needed to maintain these institutions are provided, not by missionary boards for the most part, but by this specialized body, the American Mission to lepers. Thus it recently voted $4,000 for the support of Dr. Den's work at Nanchang, the grant being retroactive so as to cover the costs of maintaining the work from July, 1947 to July, 1948.

That contributions, large and small, are needed to carry on such an extensive program goes without saying. That the work has the full approval of the National Council of our Church is attested by the statement of the former vice-president of the Council, the Rev. James Thayer Addison, who wrote: "The National Council is deeply indebted to the American Mission to Lepers for the constant and generous aid which they have given to our work for lepers—aid on which we rely for maintaining that work."

"Ye Are the Body of Christ"

by William Jay Schieffelin

President, American Mission to Lepers

THIS Mission has chosen, from 1907, not to be an administrative organization; to be, instead, an auxiliary of the Christian Church, always deferring to the mission boards of the Church in America and to the national leaders of the Church overseas; always aiding, never owning. We have no wish to repudiate this historically chosen place. Nevertheless, our forty years of growth have brought us to the point where we must accept responsibility for more initiative and more planning.

Well, then, what kind of planning? What plans do we now wish to initiate and to press the missionaries to carry out?

First, to develop every unit of leprosy work into a village—a "Happy Village"; a village with enough farm land and indigenous industries to make the villagers self-supporting and psychologically fulfilled; with mutual service, a communal spirit, a living church. Garkida, Nigeria, directed by the Church of the Brethren, is an example of such a village. A thousand patients from twenty tribes live on 2500 acres, with a full-time medical and a full-time agricultural superintendent. Tribal friction is circumvented by maximum diversity within maximum unity: each tribe has its own subvillage; all join in common fields, a single government, central schooling, recreation and worship. Our Mission so thoroughly approves of Garkida that it has added to an annual grant of $5000 for manitenance, $5000 a year for a five-year building and equipment program: a shop and industrial building, two schools, a water system, a surgical ward, a church to seat 1000 people, a residence for nurses, a tractor, a moving picture projector.

A similar village is just beginning under the Sudan Interior Mission, also in Nigeria, at a place called Oyi River. It has received 3000 acres of land from the government and $18,000 from us. The same mission is negotiating with the government of Ethiopia for 400 acres each for three colonies and is asking us for $5000 for each colony, for initial buildings and one year's maintenance.

Second, to establish in every unit of leprosy work the most effective use of medicines. Today that entails accurate trials of one or more of the sulfa drugs which have been tested and brought beyond the experimental period at the United States Leprosarium. To this end we have distributed

Children with leprosy are like any other children. In Christian leprosy missions they go to school, play games, grow up into happy Christian citizens $66,400.00 worth of these drugs to 53 mission stations in 21 countries, and to government colonies in Greece, the Philippine Islands, Ethiopia, Congo Belge and Brazil.

Third, to carry out more effective care and treatment of children. I refer not only to children already in the colonies, but those even more critically situated in the villages, where some are daily exposed to contagion in their own homes. This, as you will remember, is the object of our postwar plan, laid down in 1944, which is still in the process of maturing in the mission fields.

By the terms of this plan training centers are to be attached to certain mission hospitals and leprosy colonies in eight countries, and to these centers the local churches are to send volunteer laymen for a short period of training. Pastors, teachers, practical nurses and others are to be taught the elementary facts about leprosy: how to recognize it, how to treat it in the home, how to separate endangered children, and where to send them for protection and care. The first fund for this purpose was released to a Methodist Colony at Ganta, Liberia; the second to a British one at Yakusu, Congo Belge; the third is likely to go to Vellore Christian Medical College, India. Three universities in China have submitted, or will shortly submit, plans to qualify for the reception of such funds, and the Evangelical Alliance of Angola will do so when they have secured land for a central colony.

Fourth, to promote public education about leprosy. I am not now referring to this country, although I shall do so in a moment. I refer now to the heavily infested parts of the world, like some parts of China, where people with leprosy either hide in their homes or lurk in wretched squatter villages on public land. The kind of plan we wish to press is already being carried out in the Methodist and Anglican Missions of Fukien Province, where we have provided half the salary of a Chinese doctor, and a truck for itinerant work, and also in a Baptist mission of Kwangtung Province, where we have given $4000 for the following program: To re-establish clinics for ambulatory patients; to establish village treatment units; to cooperate with the English Presbyterian Mission and public health officials in a program of survey and control; to enlist Chinese privately practicing doctors in the survey and treatment of leprosy.

It is a strange fact that public education in leprosy is nowhere more needed than in the United States. This is not, of course, to inform leprosy patients how and where they may be treated, although, in fact, some of them have needed that information very badly, but to dispel the American superstitions about leprosy, so that American patients, both before and after they are treated, need not be desperately afraid of being feared. At present the public attitude toward them is little short of tragic. We are taking our share in dissolving that attitude, and we regard doing so as one of our main functions.

Such are the four principal plans we are initiating, and even pressing upon the missions we cooperate with. In doing so, we have found ourselves required by the logic of these plans to grow in another direction. The principal obstacle to efficiency and expansion in missionary leprosy work is personnel. A missionary doctor already taxed with the conduct of a general hospital cannot give leprosy work an adequate amount of time. We are, therefore, for the first time, accepting responsibility for supporting jointly with the Mission to Lepers of London, Dr. Neil Fraser as our medical secretary for China. We are also at different stages of agreements to support leprosy specialists in three fields: the Presbyterian Cameroun field, the American Baptist Congo field, and the British Baptist Congo field. These men will remain full members of their respective missions, though assigned to this special work.

Now let me turn to the poignantly human and spiritual meaning of these policies and plans. After my last year's report had just been written, a letter came from a China missionary telling of the butchering of six men with leprosy. These men had just gone from their mountain cave to a Home which this missionary was opening, and were awaiting his arrival from the city. Unknown assailants, presumably neighboring villagers, decoyed them into the open and hacked them to pieces. Such a terrible action alone is enough to give our Mission a reason for existence. But its unique ministry is fully seen only in the sequel. Because the Home was there as a social force and Christian focus in the county, the death of the six did not disintegrate the morale of the other leprosy victims. Instead it increased that morale. Within a few days there were 54 residents in the Home, and the local government had given the missionary legal papers of possession for the whole mountainside. At Christmas these patients wrote a touching letter of thanks to you who are the American Mission to Lepers. "We ten parts thank you," said the letter, (that is, we thank you 100%), "for the gifts. We, your brothers and sisters, extend our warmest greetings to you, and tell you we have had a very joyful Christmas. May the Lord bless your Society richly." A very simple letter! We don't even know how many of those who signed it had yet become "brothers and sisters in Christ" as well as in the human family. But we know that every one of them might now be hacked to pieces like the six pioneers if it were not for the Home, behind the Home our Mission, and behind both, the compassionate Christ.

While we grow into more organic relations to the work we aid and into more responsibility for that work, we shall never forget the highest organic responsibility in the world: "For as the body is one and hath many members . . . so also is Christ.

Children with leprosy are being cared for in most of the 125 leprosy stations aided by the American Mission to Lepers in 29 countries

. . . Now ye are the body of Christ and members in particular."

It is in this organism, this Body, that the friends in 125 places, we on the Board and staff, and you volunteers all over America are one!

Churches and Leprosy

by Raymond P. Currier

Executive Secretary of the American Mission to Lepers

THE compassionate arm of the Church is extended to all kinds of people in all kinds of trouble, but nowhere in the world are there people who need the healing ministry of Christ's love more desperately than do the ten million men, women, and children who have leprosy.

Their lot is the saddest in the world. This was so in Biblical times, and in many places things have not changed much. They are still, for the most part, "without the camp," living by beggary, hungry often, homeless always.

The concern of the Churches for victims of leprosy began somewhat less than 100 years ago. It is only in the last 50 that any real strides against the disease have been made. The growing effort to wipe out leprosy—or at least to check its spread—is one of the most fascinating chapters in modern missionary history.

Take the colony at Champa carried on by the Mennonites in collaboration with the American Mission to Lepers. It was founded in 1902 when two young men came daily to the home of Rev. P. A. Penner and begged for food. After a while Mr. Penner gave them each a simple hut by the riverside and accepted responsibility for their support.

From these two huts in 1902 has grown one of the largest leprosaria in India. It is a modern village of 500 people with well laid out roads lined with shrubs and flowers. It has 55 brick buildings and a church.

There is also the leprosarium at Allahabad, also in India. In 1903 it was a pitiful place. Fifty of the most decrepid human beings ever seen were living among snake-infested weeds, in quarters not fit to live in. Today in Allahabad there is a hospital and church, buildings for nearly 800 people, food and grain land, fruit trees, dairy cattle, a garden for each person. Church life, music, and recreation are richly developed.

Similarly the leprosarium at Miraj, also in India, was a human rubbish heap in 1903. The twenty inmates had come there only because they were indescribably crippled and had been driven out of their homes. Today they come there to be cured and some 200 have been discharged with certificates of health.

I could give you illustration after illustration to show how Churches and their missionaries during the past 50 years have opened their doors to mankind's most forsaken and lonely people, and with increasing devotion offered them a physical and spiritual ministry.

AT THE present time there are approximately 125 hospitals, clinics, and leprosaria in 29 countries maintained by Protestant church bodies in collaboration with the American Mission to Lepers. And there will be others, for of the ten million persons with leprosy, only one per cent are being ministered to at the present time.

Let me tell you how the churches and the American Mission to Lepers are carrying on this unusual ministry, exactly how the man with leprosy is being helped.

First of all, he is welcomed. In the Christian community he is no longer an outcast, feared, despised. He is a man once again—a sick man perhaps, but still a man. He has a little cottage of his own and perhaps a garden plot. He has neighbors and friends. He is part of a community—with all its privileges and responsibilities.

Second, he is under medical care. The Christian doctor and his assistants watch over his sick body, give him injections of chaulmoogra oil or the newer sulfa drugs. He learns how important to his recovery are good food, rest, exercise, and proper hygiene.

Third, he works. This is as important, sometimes, as the chaulmoogra oil. It keeps his body vigorous, his mind free from brooding and self pity. Together with other residents of the colony he works on the community farm lands, he helps build buildings, cares for the cattle, nurtures the fruit trees. He may teach in the community school, preach in the community church, work in the hospital office, or nurse patients less fortunate than he. Or he may be a farmer in his own right on his own plot of land, and bring his produce to market just as if he were a healthy farmer in the world beyond the colony.

Finally he has the gift of Jesus Christ. Missionary colonies are Christian communities. Church life is at the center of all of them. To find the love of God through the love of man is his privilege. And the full churches in the colonies are proof beyond doubt that men with leprosy are finding life made whole again, life in God himself.

What To Do, Before You Call Him "Doctor"

A CORRESPONDENT has written that my remarks on the use of the title "Doctor" are not as definite and helpful as they might be. She says she has been told that it is not strictly correct to call anyone but a medical man "Doctor" except when he is definitely at his job, and that that takes care of a college professor off campus, but what does it do for a clergyman who is a Ph.D. but not a D.D.; and is a D.D. "Doctor" when shaking hands with his parishioners at the church door and plain "Mister" when he meets them on the street?

I think the best rule is to ask a man what he wants to be called and abide by that. The etiquette of calling a man "Doctor" only when he is "on the job" seems to me to be a trifle complicated as most college professors will tell you they work all their waking hours, and clergymen's wives insist that their husbands work twenty-four hours a day! Such etiquette may be all right for European countries where the rules are pretty carefully fixed and you know that you must refer to even your women acquaintances as Mrs. Second-Assistant-Postmaster-General Svenson, but these customs vary from country to country, and in our melting pot I think it is safer to go by the victim's preference rather than by any rules. In the South titles like "Doctor," "Professor" and "Colonel" are used rather gracefully to permit a dignified, but immediate, semi-intimacy with the person addressed, but in some of our port cities of the East I have known members of college faculties who did not like to be called "Perfessor" because in their minds that title had become the exclusive property of the tattoo virtuosos, phrenologists, and teachers of zither playing.

Unfortunately at present one cannot use the word "Sir" when one is in doubt as it seems to imply great age on the part of the addressee, or great humility on the part of the person speaking. What I usually do is ask the person how he prefers to be spoken of or spoken to. (Communications re-

Redeem the Natural Order

Fourth in the Series on Social Rebirth

By

VIDA D. SCUDDER

JESUS said abruptly to Nicodemus: "Ye must be born again." That earnest timid man, who came by night, was a hesitant seeker. He made the obvious retort. Jesus' cryptic reply summons us into a world of mystery, but it is a world where winds that we have felt are stirring. Jesus' intention was, as often, to startle. He seldom explained himself. His disciples, being simple working folk, understood him better than the intellectuals. But to others he spoke deliberately, as he frankly said, in parables. His hearers were baffled, for the implications of his teaching challenged at the base the normal processes of life in the natural order. The central fact in it is the reconciliation of opposites; no Hegelian dialectic ever used that method so boldly, and the fact so troubled one-sided dogmatists that conventional religion crucified him.

The Christian religion is not smoothly consoling. Men have tried so to treat it, as vibrating experience has hardened into acceptance of formulae; but humanistic optimism, which not long ago was posing as religion's last word, is vanishing under the shock of crisis. Reinforced as we thought by science, we have been hard put to it if we wished to discredit economic methods seemingly consonant with natural laws of life. For we inevitably encourage urgency to live, at whatever cost. And rightly, since we want to share the vital harmony manifest in beauty and abundance on our beloved home, the earth; true Christianity rejects the ascetic and false other-worldliness into which the enemy has sometimes inveigled. The task of our sacramental faith is not to reject but to redeem the natural order. But redemption comes at cost, as those who are born of the spirit discover. Today, unless the natural life is redeemed, the prospect is dark. Evolution on the old lines is hardly a success when we turn to the human story. It is the kingdom of grace where the wind of the spirit blows and where they who are born of the spirit enter. That as we have seen is the only true kingdom of freedom. But those born in it are taken aback, for they have to realize that their faith is revolutionary. It contradicts all natural laws of survival, of development, since life on our old planet first began.

At this point it may comfort us a bit to reflect that we are not very old. Man is an adolescent if not a baby. The earliest date in human history is 2283 B.C. "The first human relics biology gives us, those of the so-called Pekin man, date from about half a million years back; lower forms of organic life lead us back at least thirty million." Be careful how you deny those scientists who tell us that we can "control evolution."* History at first sight is rather discouraging, and remembering the atom bomb we may yearn to retreat into pristine ignorance; but we do better to remember the fact of a dynamic unknown to our predecessors. That man can be "born again" is assuredly the most tremendous crisis that evolution, human or other, has ever known.

How startling is St. Paul's understanding of our situation! Listen to him again in the 8th chapter of Romans:

> "If creation is full of expectancy, that is because it is waiting for the sons of God to be made known. Created nature has been condemned to frustration; not for some deliberate fault of its own, but . . . with a hope to look forward to; namely, that nature in its turn will be set free from the tyranny of corruption to share in the glorious freedom of God's sons. The whole of nature, as we know, groans in a common travail all the while. And . . . we ourselves do the same; we ourselves, although we have already begun to reap our spiritual harvest, groan in our hearts, waiting for that adoption which is the ransoming of our bodies from their slavery. . . . And if we are hoping for something yet unseen, then we need endurance to wait for it. Only, as before, the Spirit comes to the aid of our weakness."

Romans VIII, 19-26. Tr. by Monsignor R. A. Knox.

We certainly "groan in our hearts" when we see ourselves only from the natural level; and observation of the contemporary scene makes us sadly afraid that the rebirth our anguished generation craves can never occur successfully there. At best, the new social order would be stillborn. We have been talking about two of our most pressing social problems, where the contrast between what we profess and what we do tempts most to cynical discouragement: the problem of disparity between means and ends, and the yet more desperately complex problem of corporate behaviour. Let us continue our study, with Christian imagination, looking at each in turn from the high level where the wind of the spirit is blowing.

FIRST, means and ends; and the question there is comparatively simple. Unless our methods can be brought into harmony with our aims, there is small hope that those aims can be permanently reached. Again we look at Russia,—though we might just as well look at ourselves. Social forms or systems imposed by totalitarian methods are sure to be transient. They face ultimate disaster. Arnold Toynbee's Internal Proletariat sooner or later rises to destroy them; and more often by "the way of violence" than by "the way of gentleness." But so insidious, so irresistible, in matters large or small, personal or collective, is the impulse to use the pressure of force to get what we want that if we are to be free from the "frustration" to which created nature is condemned, we have no recourse but the aid of the spirit:

"Him, only him, the shield of Jove defends

says Wordsworth in Dion. That shield is the grace of God; and we know with an assurance not to be shaken, from evidence without us and within, that we can invoke its protection.

When we come to our second question, the situation is far more intricate. The problem of corporate action at home and abroad, in issues political, racial, economic, is the most crucial and the most perplexing we face. Sober thought sees more and more clearly that the survival of our civilization depends on its solution. And first, we recognize a fact which may either cheer us or depress us, as we choose, but which we ignore at our peril: the selfless devotion put at the service of corporate action of whatever type and of whatever aim. At our peril: for recognition of purity of motive, yes, of the grace of God, present in the behaviour of our enemies, is the very best help enabling us to obey the command to love them. What pathetic idealism possessed many young Nazis! How often soldiers on what we think the wrong side fight with heroic faith and courage! Not all soldiers by any means are merely drilled automatons. How genuine, how rich in disciplinary values, the loyalty of working men to their unions! There is more restiveness in unions than we know; it is checked often by intimidation but also often by conscious self-surrender. And a sympathetic strike while very annoying offers similar suggestions. For that matter, any militant policy stubbornly pursued by manufacturers or employers depends for success on sacrificial ardor. We should be wiser men as well as better Christians if we remembered this. The fact may, as we said, feed either optimism or pessimism. The cynic may easily invoke it; for the clever devils do like to mix us up.

But more challenging by far is our recognition of the divided responsibilities in corporate bodies. What dilemmas modern statesmen face! In the patient bickerings at peace conferences, so distressing to watch, men are thinking not of themselves but of their country; and again they are caught in the tangle of means and ends. Corporate assertion to be effective demands, as we just said, tremendous self-effacement, but it is one thing to be ready to sacrifice oneself, and another to penalize one's nation! Slowly and painfully do we learn that to punish an enemy will surely be to punish ourselves. Imagination is at least perforce slowly awakening to that fact as it is goaded by experience; social consciousness is internationalized as never before. But contemporary statesmanship, whether its sympathies lean to the right or the left, is constantly confronted by that problem of divided responsibilities. Meanwhile, fiercely and irresistibly, forces inspired by mingled terror and greed surge in our national life like a rising tide. Out in the open, the demon of fear makes sanctimonious appeal, urging armaments and peacetime conscription in the name of national security. In the background, decorously concealed, we discern the more alluring if more candid devils lurking, for example, beside oil fields or deposits of uranium. How plausible are these devils! At every point, they invoke some noble if not holy formula; for it is perfectly true that corporate selfishness may be the only protection for your brother if not your neighbor, and it is easy to forget the figure of Jesus, pointing to the crowd of the unknown and saying, "These are my mother and my brethren." Truly a man's foes may be those of his own household. We have no space to seek examples apart from the political field. They are everywhere we look. And desperately we repeat our question: Can corporate life be reborn?

The only alternative is a humanity at odds with itself forever: perhaps an escapist philosophy which must lead the twice-born to the desert or the convent, or,—better goal . . . to the hill of Calvary. No! We will not believe that the social order, economic and political, must remain static at the core, forever actuated in all collective ways by the old motives operative on the natural level, self-protection and power. We want to see our corporate as well as our personal life increasingly controlled by forces diametrically opposed to such incentives. Is profound corporate change conceivable? Here is the question of the ages: it is in a peculiar sense the question of this historic hour.

We cannot answer it. Nor should we regret the fact. Assurance of victory robs conflict of its most rewarding qualities. Good soldiers are seldom if ever assured of the outcome of the battle, though if they are not to be automatons they must understand why they fight. For the rest, they trust their leader. And Christians know that he is . . .

"God, whose laws
Judge not the event of battle, but the cause."

Breathlessly we watch, we share, the struggle.

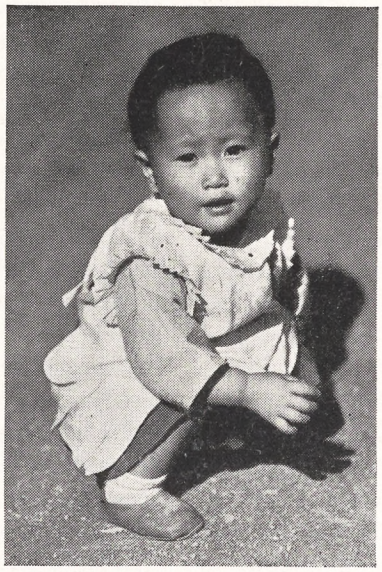
Conferences of Church Workers Among Negroes Held

Bishop Goodwin Leader in Third Province and Bishop Gardner at Asbury Park Meeting

Edited by Sara Dill

Richmond, Va.:—The Conference of Church Workers among Negroes in the 3rd province held its fall meeting here at St. Philip's, with Bishop Goodwin of Virginia outlining the theme, "Integration through Christian Action" in his opening sermon. He defined integration as bringing together into an organic whole, separate parts that belong to that whole.

A few days later a similar conference was held for the 1st and 2nd provinces at Asbury Park where Bishop Gardner of New Jersey gave the opening address, and where the speakers were in a number of instances the same as those who led the Richmond conference.



Mrs. C. Leslie Glenn, Washington, D. C., spoke on "Integration through national administration." She outlined means whereby fuller integration might be accomplished through (1) education, (2) legal means, and (3) pressure. She pointed out that there was a conflict between national standards set by the Church, especially the guiding principles designed to govern the Church's Negro work; (also the constitution and canons of the Church), and local practice in dioceses and parishes. She challenged the Negroes to be interested in all fields of endeavor in the Church with the same zeal and interest as they have for problems primarily pertaining to Negroes.

Mrs. Ethel Copper of Philadelphia spoke on "Integration through conferences," telling of the example set by the youth division of the National Council in its conferences, literature and practice.

Lt. Lawrence Oxley of the department of labor, Washington, in speaking of the responsibility of laymen in an integrated Church, emphasized the need for a greater knowledge of the Church and her ways, and fuller participation in the full program of the Church.

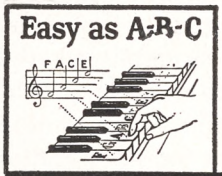
Others to speak were Mrs. Lewis D. Pilcher of the national board of the Auxiliary; Mrs. E. T. Wilhoit of Norfolk, Va.; Miss Lillian Clark of St. Philip's.

At Asbury Park, in addition to Mrs. Glenn and Lt. Oxley, there were addresses by Helen Turnbull of Windham House; the Rev. Shelton H. Bishop of New York; Mrs. William McKay of Camden; Mrs. George Trowbridge of Philadelphia; Mrs. George M. Plasket of Orange, N. J.

Healthy children of parents with leprosy are protected from almost certain infection in separate homes maintained by the American Mission to Lepers

Both conferences restated its purpose as follows: 1. The survey and study of the Work among Negroes of the Episcopal Church with relation to its problems and opportunities. 2. The focusing of the attention of the Church at large to the obstacles which might deter the progress of the work of evangelization of the Negro. 3. The mapping of strategy and development of techniques to take advantage of opportunities for such progress. 4. The development of ways and means of obtaining active participation of all groups dealing with Negroes or the problems facing Negroes in the work and sessions of the Conference.

New Church Center



London (RNS):—A plan for regrouping scattered offices of the Anglican diocese here in a new church center near St. Paul's Cathedral was outlined by Bishop John W. C. Wand in his presidential address to the London diocesan conference. It is also proposed to transfer the episcopal residence from Fulham Palace to the new center.

Bishop Wand announced that plans are being made for a long period of prayer and preparation during 1948 and 1949 for a diocesan mission which will be held during October, 1949.

In the course of his address, the bishop appealed for "simple hospitality and friendliness" toward prisoners of war in the London diocese. In addition, he urged that special steps be taken in regard to British soldiers in Germany to help them "meet the temptations which beset them."

"It would be logical," he said, "to extend into the armed services the principle of religious instruction and guidance which is provided in schools, and to bring the matter within the scope of the King's regulations so far as immature lads are concerned."

Has Centennial

New Orleans:—This city has many outstanding churches, among them Trinity which is now celebrating its centennial, but it is not years but accomplishment that make it noteworthy. Kingsley House was started as a day nursery and grew to such proportions that in 1904 it became interdenominational. The child's welfare association, started by the Rev. Robert S. Coupland, is one of the most effective agencies for mothers and children.

The parish also has given the Church a number of bishops: Henry N. Pierce became Bishop of Arkansas; John W. Beckwith became Bishop of Georgia; John N. Galleher became Bishop of Louisiana; Samuel S. Harris became Bishop of Michigan; Hugh Miller Thompson became Bishop of Mississippi; Thomas F. Gailor became Bishop of Tennessee, and the parish even had a bishop as rector, Bishop Leonidas Polk.

Trinity has had many outstanding laymen in its long history, but none has given greater service than the present senior warden, Warren Kearny, who will be remembered by many church people as the chairman of the committee that arranged for the General Convention held in New Orleans.

Today the parish is going forward under the able leadership of the Rev. William S. Turner, assisted by the Rev. A. S. Lawrence Jr. Rector Turner has so organized the parish that every member has a definite part in the program.

A United Church

Cleveland (RNS):—The Rev. Henry Sloane Coffin, former moderator of the Presbyterian Church, told 10,000 worshipers at the annual Protestant festival of faith service that "we must recover a united Church in order to draw together and hold in one the peoples and races of mankind." He added that the "most urgent need of the world at this unhappy time is the recovery of a world community where all nations and races share a common loyalty to God in Christ and are ruled by the Christian conscience." The Protestant heritage must be maintained, he said, "if democracy and its liberties are to continue in our land."

Goes to China

Boston:—The Rev. Ralph L. Tucker, with Mrs. Tucker and their three months' old son, left here on November 2, with Changshu in Kiangsu Province their ultimate destination. They will work under Bishop William P. Roberts.

New Secretary

New York:—The Rev. Frederick A. McDonald, rector of St. David's, Portland, Ore., has been appointed associate director of laymen's work. He is the son of a judge of the supreme court in the state of Washington, and is 39 years old. He is a graduate of the University of Washington and the General Seminary.

Bishop Honored

New York:—Suffragan Bishop Horace W. B. Donegan was the guest at a dinner given by the Church Club of New York, held the evening of his consecration, October 28th. The speakers were Bishop Charles K. Gilbert, Bishop Donegan and the president of the club, Judge Robert McC. Marsh.

Non-Catholics Recognized

Warsaw:—The Polish government has given full legal status and recognition to three non-Roman Churches which in the past have either been discriminated against or had occupied minor status: Evangelical Reformed Church; the Marianiten Church; the Old Catholic Church. In pre-war Poland the country was virtually dominated by the Roman hierarchy. Leaders of that Church have so far issued no official comment on the new law, but the opinion among them appears to be that its purpose is to weaken the prestige and influence of the Roman Church by encouraging proselytizing activities by other Churches. In a recent pastoral the hierarchy of the country warned Catholics against "sectarian activities breaking up the nation. We are struck by the great audacity and obvious feeling of impunity shown by the sectarians, especially in the press."

The Marianiten Church, established at the beginning of this century by former Roman priests and nuns, was for years forbidden to carry on any activities outside Plock and a few other towns. The Old Catholics, formed by former Romanists who refused to accept the dogma of papal infallibility, likewise were persecuted in pre-war Poland.

Last year these two Churches pooled their resources under a common Church government, with each maintaining its internal organization and doctrinal teaching. Roman Catholic circles declared that the move was for the purpose of undermining respect for the Vatican and what it considers its international spiritual authority.

Urge Labor Code

Hamilton, Ont.:—Establishment of a Canadian labor code was approved by an overwhelming vote of the Canadian Council of Churches at its sessions here. The Council went on record as favoring the right of labor to organize in "democratically chosen and conducted unions," prohibition of unfair practices by both labor and industry, federal provisions to hear grievances and take effective action to prevent strikes and lockouts, and uniform procedure in all provinces for the settlement of strikes.

The Council also gave unanimous approval to a resolution calling upon Prime Minister Mackenzie King to set up a committee of members of Parliament which would study the cost of living in Canada. It asked the Prime Minister further to call Parliament to meet in regular session "at the earliest possible date to deal with this urgent matter."

The cost of living resolution was carried after J. R. Mutchmor, secretary of the United Church department of evangelism and social service, declared that "there is a definite threat to world peace in high prices."

A resolution calling for a federal housing program was approved by the Council as was a proposal for social security and more help for aged people.

Windham House Visitors

New York:—What amounts to a who's-who in the Church, at least as far as New York is concerned, has been lined up to celebrate once a week at Windham House, the hostel for women workers of the Church doing graduate work. Here's the list: Frederick C. Grant of Union; Dean Rose of General; Canon West of the Cathedral; Shelton Bishop, rector of St. Philip's; George Wieland of 281; Canon Green of the Cathedral; Cyril Richardson of Union; Powel M. Dawley of General; Bishop Gilbert of New York; C. K. Myers of General; Richard Harbour of Union; Shunji Nishi of Columbia; Clifford Samuelson of 281.

The Canal Zone

Ancon, Canal Zone:—Bishop Gooden of the Canal Zone has received the Rev. Antonio Ochoa, former Roman Catholic priest, who has been placed in charge of work at Barranquilla, Colombia. Mrs. Roger Greene, formerly on the staff of the children's home at Bella Vista, has been appointed director of religious education for the district. Archdeacon Jack Townsend, after 23 years of service in Cuba, has been appointed archdeacon of Columbia and has made several trips by air to visit scattered Church groups. There are 12 congregations, with several thousand British, Canadian and American groups, but no church buildings and no property whatever.

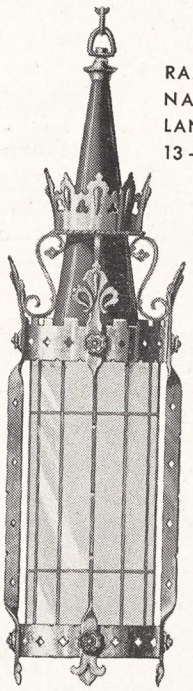
Widow Wins Suit

Olympia, Wash.: — The supreme court of Washington ruled on October 24 that Christ Church, Seattle, owed the estate of the late Rev. Paul B. James an annual salary of $3,000, less amounts already paid, from 1936 to 1942. Mrs. Grace E. James, administratrix of the estate, contended successfully that the sum of $18,566 is due.

Priests Decorated

Moscow (RNS):—Twenty-three priests and nuns of the Russian Orthodox Church were recently decorated by the Soviet government for valor during the war, according to the Journal of the Moscow Patriarchate.

Girls at General



New York:—There is something new at General Seminary: the girls from Windham House, hostel for graduate students preparing for Church work, are taking courses twice a week at General Seminary. It is the first time that women have taken courses at the General. The work is supplementary to courses they take at Columbia University and Union Seminary. They are taking courses with Prof. Cuthbert A. Simpson on Old Testament; Prof. Powel M. Dawley in Church history; Prof. Norman Pittenger in doctrine.

The seminarians are said to be pleased with the arrangement, and the Windham House girls even more so.

Wants Discussion

Buffalo: — Repeating a proposal he made earlier in Charlotte, N. C., Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of New York suggested here that Roman Catholic and Protestant leaders meet jointly to discuss the subject of religious liberty. He made the recommendation before nearly 3,000 persons attending the largest Reformation Day service ever held in this city. It was sponsored by the Council of Churches of Buffalo and Eire County. The Methodist leader deplored tension between Protestants and Catholics but declared this could not be remedied "by refusing to face the causes that produce them."

"Protestants," he said, "desire the same religious liberty for Roman Catholics and for every religious group that they desire for themselves. They are gravely concerned, however, over the Roman Catholic position on religious liberty, which denies that the state should treat all religions with equal favor and which affirms that where the population is overwhelmingly Roman Catholic the state may properly restrict the religious liberty of non-Roman Catholics."

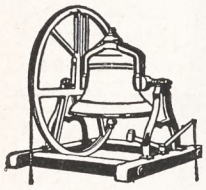
Students Riot

Durban (RNS):—Police used tear gas to subdue rioting students at St. John's College, a Church of England institution for African natives located at Umtata. Two hundred and fifty of the students were subsequently brought to court on charges of creating a public disturbance, but hearings were postponed until October 30.

The Rev. J. W. Wilson, warden of the college, who has spent 35 years as a missionary in South Africa, testified he was awakened near midnight when the rioting students rang the college bell. During the disturbance, 44 windows and a wooden door were smashed.

The incident climaxed several similar outbreaks in native schools and colleges during the past few years. The last occurred at Adams Mission College near Durban when students went on strike and would not sit for an examination, as a protest against conditions at the college. The Adams College was founded by an American missionary board, but is now controlled by a local committee.



Clothing Drive

Louisville:—The diocese of Kentucky is conducting a highly successful clothing drive for relief. Church schools are gathering good used clothing, shoes, bedding, etc., in impressive quantities. G. Edgar Straeffer, chairman of the Church School Offering Division of the diocesan department of Christian education reported that one Church school alone has contributed a thousand garments. Additional clothing and toys for children will be purchased with money contributed, so that the Christmas boxes will be both useful and joyful. The boxes will go to the Mountain province in the Philippine Islands.

MR. R. H. DAVIS
Layman of Philadelphia

As a reader for many years of THE WITNESS I must speak up to say that I disagree with Mr. A. C. George on his remarks about Bishop Gilbert of New York appearing before the committee of Congress to urge the restoration of the OPA. When will the bishops of our Church and other Church leaders remember that they are the "Chosen-Men-of-God" and stop trying to interfere and set themselves up as economists.

Being the vestryman of one of the larger churches of our diocese I know from experience that I have never seen a clergyman yet who was qualified to talk about economics or business or politics, and that every time that I have ever seen them leave their Chosen Field they only make themselves look childish and silly and bring ridicule down upon our dear Church.

I have been a Republican ever since I started to vote, not because of the politics of our forebears but because I try to Think Out the problems that confront our country. But I thank God that we have a man in the Presidency now who is just a Plain Thinker.

I am a member of numerous Patriotic Societies from the Colonial Society, Founders and Patriots, etc. down to the Loyal Legion (descendants of officers of the Civil War) and I often wonder what our forefathers would think of the Present State of Thinking that is abroad in our country today—These forebears who fought for Liberty, Freedom of Speech and Freedom of Free Assembly. What would they think of our bishops and leaders fostering such a thought as a Police State, after all the misery and suffering that they went through to get us this Liberty.

No, OPA will not solve High Prices. The old Law of Supply and Demand still Rules. The American People still have the weapon in their Hands to Control High Prices.

Better Stick to your Knitting, Bishop Gilbert. Look at the Records of our Church. What a Heritage they were given and what have you done with it. Are you so Proud of the Record for Progress that our Church has made? Not such a good Job.

My advice to all our bishops and leaders is: Stay in your own Field; Think and Live the Church and I'll promise you that you will see more Progress in the future than in the past. I don't remember Bishop Johnson or your predecessor in New York ever invading the Field of Economics. No they kept in the Church and tried to administer to their Flocks and Churches. Our Bishop in Pennsylvania has just come up with a very important thought. His only thought now is Prayer and Evangelism for his Diocese and that sits well with me, a Catholic and a High Churchman.

ANSWER: Mr. Davis' letter hardly needs an answer but we do want to say: General Conventions and Pastorals of the House of Bishops have repeatedly stated that "Our discipleship relates us to the just and Christian solution of economic, social and political problems. Nothing that is of human intetrest can be foreign to us." (Pastoral, 1934). "Business and religion are intimately related; to divorce them issues confusion and chaos. The Master's concern for the under-privileged and neglected folk was repeatedly manifested in his habit and teaching. That millions of the people of our country are denied the common necessities of life—make evident the lamentable inadequacy of existing economic systems. With these conditions the Church is immediately and vitally concerned." (Pastoral, 1933).

The General Convention of 1943 was so strongly of the opinion that the Church should concern itself with economic and political questions that it created the joint commission on social reconstruction, headed by Bishop William Scarlett, and the General Convention of 1946 approved the publication by this commission of Christianity Takes A Stand which deals with various international, political and economic problems.

Bishop Gilbert, in appearing before the committee of Congress that has been investigating the high cost of living was, in our judgment, simply carrying out the instructions of General Convention. We honor him for it and wish more Church leaders would follow his example.

MISS JANE ALLEN SAXTON
Churchwoman of New York

Neither Miss Robison nor I like to be controversial in print but we felt that we could not permit the article, Are Missionaries People? by Charles A. Higgins, to stand without comment. Both Miss Robison and I went to Liberia in 1945 under the auspices of the National Council. Dr. Addison, Father Swift and Mr. Fowler and their assistants were indefatigable in making our trip comfortable. Furthermore, after we saw the very difficult situations to be faced, we reported our problems. Not only did financial help come but personal help from all of those mentioned.

When we returned we faced the problem of illness and no stone was left unturned to see that we had every comfort. Our survey of the situation in Liberia received the closest attention during long interviews. Many of our suggestions were acted upon. As a matter of fact, we often say jokingly that going to 281 is like old home week.

Neither Miss Robison nor I are working for the National Council at present but most pleasant relations are kept up. Not only have we been treated as people but as friends, a relationship we both deeply appreciate.

Will you not let the readers of WITNESS know that we resent the implication that we were treated as nitwits and would consider it a privilege to work on an assignment with the National Council Officers.

How Much Is He Worth?

If he were yours, all that you had would be his.

That is how we feel about him too. Whether he is healthy or sick, we want to give him an opportunity to live like other boys: to go to school, play games, sing in church, grow up to healthy, happy, Christian manhood.

We want to protect him from leprosy if he is in danger of infection. If he already has leprosy, we want to do all we can to arrest the disease early—to spare him the pain, the disfigurement that may come later. All that we have is his.

What we have to give for his care—in St. Timothy's Colony in Liberia and Kimber Den's Leprosarium in Nanchang and in 125 other leprosy units in 29 countries—depends upon you and your gifts to this mission of mercy.

Search your heart and let us know: HOW MUCH IS HE WORTH?

Marriage Canons Cause Debate In House of Bishops

Former Secretary of State Byrnes Addresses The Bishops on American Foreign Politics

By W. B. Spofford

Winston-Salem: — Interpretation of the marriage canons, as was expected, caused a flurry of excitement when the House of Bishops met here, November 4-7, at St. Paul's Church. Bishops are required, by the canons adopted at the last General Convention, to determine, with or without a council of advisors, whether or not a divorced churchman is to be remarried by a minister of the Church. The House of Bishops of course cannot change the laws of the Church; only General Convention can do that. However they can issue an "interpretation" for the benefit of their own members, and there were those clamoring for a more strict interpretation at this time.

The subject was brought before the Bishops when Bishop Cameron Davis of Western New York reported for the special committee set up by the 1946 General Convention, charged with the responsibility of studying the judgments of the bishops and reporting to the House annually, with any advice the committee felt called upon to give. He stated that 54 bishops had replied to a questionnaire, and that all but three declared that the present canons are workable and an improvement on the old canons. He also stated that the committee has received 75 reports of judgments from 16 dioceses.

Following this report about a dozen bishops spoke, some defending the new canons, others asking for a more conservative interpretation of them. Finally Bishop Conkling of Chicago, who is a leader of those who favor a strict interpretation, brought applause by saying that the new canons should be given a chance.

"Here in this House we represent two shades of opinion," Bishop Conkling declared. "We should represent the Church as it is. We put this law on our books with a good deal of unanimity, after many years of working on it. We have washed our dirty linen in public over the interpretation of this canon. I believe we should leave it as it is and work it out on a pastoral basis. I'd like to see us go and make a further test of these canons and make our judgments on the cases as they are brought before us in accordance with our conscience, and resolve not to go to the public press with our stories."

A resolution was then passed merely reaffirming what the canons require: that each bishop, within his own jurisdiction, decides on the basis of the canons, whether or not a divorced churchman should be remarried by the Church. The matter will, of course, come before the 1949 General Convention when the committee headed by Bishop Davis is required to report and may recommend amendments to the present canons based upon their three years' study of judgments.

James F. Byrnes, former secretary of state, addressed the bishops on November 5, appealing for tolerance toward Russia and expressing his concern for the state of near-hysteria which ascribes all of the world's ills to "our former ally." He said that aid to Europe, China and Korea is essential in order to assure "the survival of our way of life in the world." But he added that if a choice has to be made "between providing long-term economic aid to Europe and providing funds for the national defense, there must be no question that our first duty is to provide for our armed forces."

He also declared that "we cannot agree to jointly participate with the Soviets in the management of the Ruhr industries. There are many reasons but it is enough to say we have been unable to administer jointly with them any project in Germany, Austria, the Balkans or Korea. Certainly we could not successfully administer German industries when such administration would demand daily decisions as to the allocation of products of such industries and relations with employees. There would be constant disagreement and constant irritation that would endanger the peace."

It is well to remember that Mr. Byrnes spoke as an individual and was not on the agenda of the meeting of the House of Bishops. An inquiry by THE WITNESS to the Presiding Bishop brought the reply that Mr. Byrnes "was asked to speak as representing the south in a welcome to the House of Bishops. It is a hospitality feature rather than on the agenda of the House of Bishops."

The Rev. Samuel M. Cavert, general secretary of the Federal Council of Churches, addressed the House on the first day, stressing the need for a greater Christian unity. He said that the World Council "gets its significance from being the best even though a partial expression of the unity that is possible now." He declared that the World Council "is not so much an attempt to create unity as to practice such unity as we already have," and he expressed gratification at the marked progress of the movement toward cooperation among the Churches, both nationally through the Federal Council, and internationally through the World Council.

SUBSCRIPTION FUND

"After many years of reading THE WITNESS I have to ask you to stop the paper. I live on a civil service pension which was fixed in 1920 as covering bare subsistence. I cannot stretch it to cover present prices. I regret to cancel since no one else here in our little mission takes a Church paper, so without the gleanings from my WITNESS we shall know nothing of the progress of the Church. However I realize your increased costs of production so like a disciplined soldier I must bow and say of the denial 'It is the luck of war'."

It is to take care of subscriptions such as these that the Subscription Fund exists. Any who care to contribute to it should send donations to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

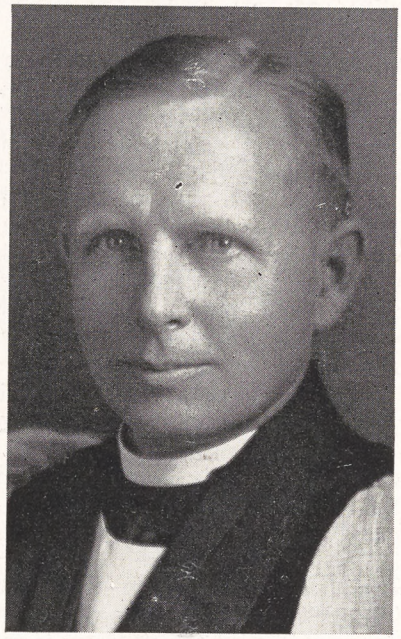
Presiding Bishop Sherrill presented the plan for evangelism, saying that "we must make a move to reach the great mass of people." He proposed that in Advent clergy conferences be held to consider the proposals; that in Epiphany each rector train lay people of his parish to make calls in the community; that in these visits people be urged to attend a communion service the first Sunday in Lent. He stated that the program is to be flexible, adaptable to local circumstances and needs, but expressed the opinion that the simplicity of the plan will produce results that will be invaluable in developing further plans for future programs.

As one bishop after another pledged cooperation, the House rose and joined in singing: "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

A committee headed by Bishop Ivins of Milwaukee, after study of documents submitted by Bishop Binstead of the Philippines relative to the Filipino Independent Church, unanimously recommended that the Presiding Bishop should proceed to work out details for the conveying of valid orders to that Church, and the House so voted.

Missionary bishops were elected at an executive session held the morning of Nov. 7. The Rev. William J. Gordon Jr., of Point Hope, Alaska, was elected to succeed Bishop Bentley as Bishop of Alaska. The latter becomes vice-president of the National Council on January 1st. The Rev. James W. Hunter, rector of St. Mark's, San Antonio, Texas, was elected coadjutor of Wyoming, and the Rev. Louis C. Melcher, rector of Trinity, Columbia, S. C., was chosen to be coadjutor of Southern Brazil.



Resolutions condemning the Congressional committee on Un-American Activities, and urging "generous and adventurous leadership in helping to create a better world for all people" were unanimously passed and will be reported in detail in our November 20th number.

SYNOD MEETS IN VERMONT

Burlington, Vt.:—The synod of the first province met here at St. Paul's, October 30-31. A committee was appointed to study the needs in the rural fields of the province of New England with the possibility of appointing a full time secretary. There was also an increased appropriation for college work and also for Lenox School. Bishop Budlong of Connecticut was elected president.

ARCHBISHOP VISITS YUGOSLAVIA

Belgrade:—The Archbishop of York spent four days last week in Yugoslavia for a visit with his personal friend, British Ambassador Charles B. Peake. While it was stated to be a "purely personal and non-official" visit, Archbishop Garbett did nevertheless have a long conference with Patriarch Gavrilo, head of the Serbian Orthodox Church. Also the day of his departure by plane for England he conferred with Marshal Tito and General Vladimir Velebit, acting Yugoslav foreign minister. Neither British nor Yugoslav sources would reveal the nature of their conversations.

Bishop Penick was the host of the House of Bishops which met last week at St. Paul's, Winston-Salem

Newspapers here, commenting on the visit, recalled his official visit to Moscow in 1944 and cited British press reports which quoted the Archbishop as having recently declared that Christianity is not incompatible with communism.

RUSSIAN RECONCILIATION IS FAILURE

New York (RNS): — Influences "antagonistic to the Soviet Union" have caused a stalemate in negotiations for reconciliation between the Russian Orthodox Church in America and the Moscow Patriarchate, Metropolitan Gregory of Leningrad and Novgorod stated here. He left by boat last week after more than three months here as the personal envoy of Patriarch Alexei.

"The Patriarch is willing to grant the American Church autonomy," Metropolitan Gregory declared, "but the American bishops have laid down terms that would, in practice, sever connections with the Church in Russia, and make the American group a totally independent unit in the family of Orthdox Churches."

Metropolitan Gregory said he had submitted to Metropolitan Theophilus of San Francisco, head of the American Church, proposals which would recognize a decree of autonomy permitting the Church to appoint a ruling bishop, provided Patriarch Alexei's right to approve all Episcopal nominations was recognized and the Patriarch was accepted as the final authority in all matters of dispute.

"However," he said, "the American bishops want complete freedom in the matter of appointing bishops and also demand that their Council of Bishops should constitute a supreme tribunal. This is clearly contrary to Orthodox canons, and cannot be approved by Patriarch Alexei."

Metropolitan Gregory added, however, that he had been "courteously received" not only by Russian bishops but also by American Protestant leaders with whom he had discussed problems of church union. He said he had repeatedly sought to emphasize that the Russian Church is "absolutely free, insofar as it does not interfere in political matters."

"It has grieved me," he said, "to find some bishops in the American Russian Orthodox Church who are evidently under the influence of forces strongly antagonistic to the Soviet Union. We can only hope that false impressions regarding the liberty of the Church in Russia will in time disappear and that the Russian Church here will once more be linked in submission and loyalty to the Moscow jurisdiction."

EPISCOPAL MEN HAVE MEETING

Des Moines, Ia.:—President Clark Kuebler of Ripon College was the principal speaker at the annual meeting of the Episcopal Men of Iowa, held here October 25-26. Mr. Earl Seeger of Oskaloosa was elected president. Objectives adopted were: each layman to bring to confirmation one other man during the year; provision of 20 scholarships for mission churches to the conferences at Bishop Morrison Lodge, the diocesan conference center; support of the diocesan advancement program.

Major Powers All Lack Policy Promoting One World

James P. Warburg Writes an Important Book About Germany and the Post-War Situation

Reviews by W. B. Spofford Jr.

Detroit:—The new book by James P. Warburg is a rational, informative and thoroughly documented book on the primary and most symbolic international problem in our contemporary world (Germany: Bridge or Battleground by James P. Warburg. Harcourt, Brace & Co. $3.50). The author claims that all of the major powers have been guilty of loose-thinking and lack of clear policy with a One World base, "Russia by thinking almost solely of extracting reparations, France by an almost exclusive emphasis on permanent partition, Britain by preoccupation with restoring the prewar map of the world, and the United States by concern over preserving the world's prewar economic order." Mr. Warburg has a thorough understanding of the conflict of our time which, necessarily, means a full amount of solid thinking. He says: "The world in which we live is torn by two conflicting forces: the revolt of the underprivileged masses of humanity against injustice and exploitation; and the determination of the privileged few to maintain their positions of advantage. The trend towards various forms and degrees of socialism is the product of mass insecurity, mass unhappiness and mass determination to seek a better world. The counter-trend towards various forms and degrees of authoritarianism (fascism) is the product of the fear of the privileged few. If Marx had never been born, and if there were no Soviet Union, the trend toward socialism would exist just the same. And if neither Hitler nor Mussolini had ever existed—if there were no Franco and no Peron in the world today—the trend toward fascism would exist." It is well for Americans—and especially Christians—to understand which of these two conflicting forces we are backing. Mr. Warburg, in a 100 page appendix, gives a valuable summary of all the important documents and statements made about Germany since the signing of the Atlantic Charter. This should be a must book for anyone who is serious about preventing World War III.

Missouri Compromise* by Tris Coffin. Little, Brown & Co. $3.50.

This is a book which should be read with care by all persons concerned with the fate of the world. Mr. Coffin is the head of C.B.S.'s Washington bureau and, from his intimate acquaintance with the national powers-that-be, he has a fountain of resources with which to analyze contemporary Washington and the actors on the stage. It is not a pretty drama since it portrays a frightened and morally bankrupt leadership dominated by bankers, interested only in the status quo ante, and the military, interested only in "The Enemy." Under the Truman regime, Mr. Coffin shows, these two interests are perfectly complementary. The men that come out with dignity and some kind of moral stature are, primarily, Henry Wallace, Harold Ickes, Chester Bowles and assorted atomic scientists. Mr. Truman is shown to be as great a president as Warren G. Harding, which is as devastating a compliment as one can pay to the chief executive, and his sundry appointees appear to have been chosen on the strength of their commitment to the old idea that history is static. The book is both frank and depressing and, after reading it, you will probably come to my conclusion: if there is no third party in '48, it would be better to have a true conservative like Taft than a dishonest attempt at liberalism. Which, as you can see, is a very sorry state of affairs, indeed.

A service for unions was held recently at St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit. Taking part, l. to r. standing: Prof. Joseph G. Moore of Seabury-Western, who preached; Malcolm G. Dade; Robert D. Bohaker; W. B. Spofford Jr.; W. B. Sperry. Seated: Hoy Traylor of the AFL; G. Paul Musselman; William H. Oliver of the CIO

All the King's Men* by Robert Penn Warren. Harcourt, Brace & Co. $3.50.

This novel, which won this year's Pulitzer Prize, deals with the court intrigue surrounding a southern demagogue who, using patronage and brutality as a twin hammer, controls the destiny of his state. The author successfully delineates the characters who, satellite fashion, revolve around the state capital but fails to adequately explain the motivating dynamics for the boss, Willie Stark. The plot of the book, which is based on the career and death of Huey Long, is certainly a theme for our day. Mr. Warren's style seems to be a strange mixture of James Cain and Thomas Wolfe and is not hard to take. This is a good novel but, if I had been voting, I would rather have given the Pulitzer Prize to something like The Folded Leaf or The Left Hand Is The Dreamer.

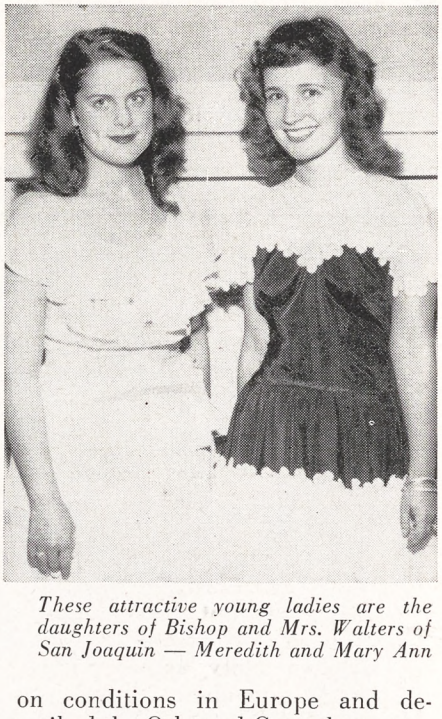
Kaputt* by Curzio Malaparte. E.P. Dutton & Co. $3.50.



In the moral sense this work of an Italian journalist who found it expedient to work with Fascism wherever he found it is the most obscene piece of writing to come along in a good while. The author says that Kaputt, which means "broken, gone to pieces," is a horribly gay and gruesome book. It's gruesome all right, but it would appear gay only to those who have decided to share completely and willingly in the sickness of our culture. Written in a florid, saccharine style, the book should have some value as a portrait of a collaborator who, despising (he says) the horrors of Fascism, nevertheless eats roast venison at the table of Hans Frank and jokes with Himmler's Gestapo and discusses theology with Max Schmeling. "O God, how long shall the adversary do this dishonour? Shall the enemy blaspheme thy name for ever?"

The Harder They Fall* by Budd Schulberg. Random House. $3.00.

In 1941, Budd Schulberg wrote a novel of Hollywood decadence and the social pathology that is our race problem called What Makes Sammy Run? This new book, written in the same tough and immoral style, deals with the decadence of America's professional sport, boxing in particular, and the multitudinous pathalogues who make and break the champions. The central plot is a little disguised analysis of the rise and fall of that fictitious champion, Primo Carnera, although here he is called El Toro Molina. It is an interesting study of one phase of contemporary American culture.

CONFERENCES ON EVANGELISM

San Francisco, Cal.:—Encouraged by a successful, well-prepared provincial conference on evangelism, active committees in most of the twelve dioceses and missionary districts in the eighth province are carrying out a series of significant experiments. Parish conferences on Christian faith, life and work at Portland, Oregon (Nov. 2-7), Boise, Idaho (Oct. 19-24), and Salt Lake City (Oct. 12-16), followed a two-day conference at San Francisco earlier in October, when thirteen priests and a visiting bishop met at the School of the Prophets, here. The Rev. Clarence H. Parlour, Glendale, Cal., is chairman, and the Rev. George Foster Pratt, Stockton, Cal., secretary of the provincial committee on evangelism, under whose auspices the conference was held. The program was arranged by the Rev. R. Ronald Merrix, National Council field officer, with the aid of two faculty members of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, Prof. Pierson Parker and Prof. Charles F. Whiston, who gave addresses, Dr. Parker speaking on the Gospel and its demands and Pro. Whiston on our response. The Rev. Peter Boes spoke on conditions in Europe and described the Oslo and Canterbury conferences for youth and their leaders. Conferences on Christian faith, life and work at Portland, Boise, and Salt Lake City, were intended to prepare for a parish program in evangelism, while at the same time training laymen, women and young people to participate in a thorough every member canvass following this year's emphases and literature of the National Council.

These attractive young ladies are the daughters of Bishop and Mrs. Walters of San Joaquin — Meredith and Mary Ann

REFORMATION SERVICE AT CATHEDRAL

New York: — A Reformation Day service was held November 2nd at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, at the invitation of Bishop Gilbert and under the auspices of the Protestant Council. The address was by Governor Luther W. Youngdahl of Minnesota who, before his election was a justice of the Minnesota supreme court. The Rev. John S. Bonnell, Presbyterian, gave the invocation; John Wood, a student delegate to the youth conference held this summer at Oslo, read the lesson; the Rev. Russell F. Auman, Lutheran, read the prayers and Bishop Gilbert pronounced the blessing.

Governor Youngdahl declared that "fellowship is central in the teaching of the gospel" and "the weaknesses of division do not allow for the perfect attainment of fellowship." He said that young men and women had learned to worship together in the war and that "in this profound experience the truth was brought home to them that denominational differences are not as important as the fact that all have the Christian faith and the teachings of Jesus as the center. They saw that there are more things upon which the Protestant Churches agree than upon which they disagree. They have returned to civilian life with the firm conviction that the Church can succeed only if it continues to carry out this spirit of cooperation in all activities."

CANTERBURY DEAN IS ILL

London:—It was announced here just twenty-four hours before he was to take a plane for a lecture tour in the United States that the Dean of Canterbury was compelled, because of illness, to cancel the trip. He is suffering from a severe attack of sciatica. The National Council for American-Soviet Friendship, the sponsors of the meetings for the Dean, are going ahead with plans for all meetings, with substitute speakers.

CLID NOW HAS NEW NAME

Detroit:—The Church League for Industrial Democracy is now the Episcopal League for Social Action, it was announced here by the secretary, the Rev. William B. Spofford Jr. Declaring that the new name more adequately characterized the nature and function of this unofficial Church organization, he said that a referendum on the proposed changes showed 656 favoring such a move, with but 84 opposed, within a week after the ballots had been sent out.

He also announced that a new publications committee has been set up, consisting of Dean Alden D. Kelley of Seabury-Western; Prof. Robert Dentan of Berkeley; Prof. Adelaide Case of Cambridge Seminary; Canon Richard Lief of Los Angeles and the Rev. Arthur C. Moore of New York.

EDITORIALS

Loyal Freedom

A RECENT scientific survey of the editors of this magazine revealed the fact that none of them knew the tune of the "Internationale." One claimed he did, but he is very tone deaf, and after considerable effort the investigators concluded that what he really had in mind was The Horst Wessel song, or possibly Lilli Marlene. This may relieve some of the worried friends of the editors. They may not believe it, however, as this is one of the few publications in the country that has not yet declared war on Russia.

This lack of belligerency is a most suspicious sign. Take the papers that have already declared war, for example. They are dependable. Their editors know their own minds. In one, every woman who makes page three is invariably of a beauty that drives men mad. That's dependability for you. And what does she throw on when the jewel-thief, the peeper, the policeman, or her husband's attorney arrives? A black filmy thing, always. Life is shown in all its crystalline simplicity to the readers, and they see things clearly.

Another paper knows Who Is To Blame For Everything (That man who used to be in the White House). There is no confusion, no wavering, in its columns.

But THE WITNESS believes in freedom of speech. Its editors are unaware that that means something different now. It now means: Don't say anything un-American. Since that last word is hard to define, it will soon mean: Keep your mouth shut. And we will then be just like the Russia we fear so: a police state, with "thought-control." And the more we become like her, the more we will hate her; like two girls arriving at the same dance in exactly similar dresses.

It really isn't very funny. If you think so, you should read a reprint of "Who Is Loyal to America?" by Professor Commager of Columbia. Harper's Magazine will send it to you for fifteen cents. You should read it anyway. Perhaps then you can forgive the editors of THE WITNESS for allowing each other full freedom of expression, and for the occasional discord which results.

Close or Merge Them

THERE is probably not a diocese in the entire Church that does not have missions and parishes that exist only with diocesan aid. In one town we know there is a church for every hundred people in the community. The claimed membership of the Episcopal Church is sixty. It would be closed tomorrow if the diocese stopped paying the minister's salary. In another eastern diocese there are Episcopal Churches, all aided by the diocesan treasury, in six communities that are within fifteen to twenty minutes of each other by car. These six communities are also within a few minutes' drive from self-supporting parishes. It is safe to say that except for Easter and Christmas none of these churches, whether parishes or missions, have crowded congregations. Why are they not combined, with a capable clergyman on a decent salary placed in charge?

Generally it is sentimental attachment on the part of a tiny handful; "mother worshipped here"; "dad is buried in the Church yard." So they expect the diocese to chip in, supplementing what they are able to raise for self-preservation, with nothing of course going to missions since their own existence comes first. They not only do not observe the command, "Go ye," but they take funds which were actually given by others for that purpose.

Every aided parish and mission ought to face this squarely. They need to ask themselves if they are guilty of the misappropriation of missionary funds. It is impossible for the bishop to solve the problem alone. He may be well aware of the facts. But this missionary board, as likely as not, has persons on it from parasitic congregations who oppose any lopping off for fear it will be their turn next. It should be a matter of conscience for the people in those churches that receive diocesan aid.

"QUOTES"

A SUCCESSFUL parish Church does not depend upon extraordinary talents on the part of people or clergy; it depends upon the utter devotion of the talents we have to the service of God.

The service of God means all the service we render shot through with consciousness of relationship and obligation to God. Church work includes not merely the jobs we do in connection with Church worship and parish activities, but all the work that a person does for himself, his family, his community and the world, under the compulsion of doing it for glory of God rather than for his own glory or the glory of any sectarian interest.

As a man grows in a true consciousness of relationship to God he is progressively freed from sentimentalism (self-glory) and sectarianism.

There is another strategy peculiarly Episcopalian. A few of our people move into a community where there is no Episcopal Church within walking distance. So they petition the bishop for a mission. There are usually enough churches in the community; or if they must have an Episcopal Church there doubtless is one within a few miles—certainly in our more populated dioceses. But the record looks better if the bishop can report new work started in new areas. So another tiny, subsidized mission gets underway and more often than not will be a liability for years.

In many dioceses, particularly in the east, the standard for judging the Church's work could well be reversed and a year counted successful when a number of churches were merged or closed, and none opened. It approaches a scandal the way in most dioceses money is thrown away, particularly in these days when it is so badly needed for work in vast unchurched parts of the world and for the relief of starving millions.

Corporate Life and Action

by Vida D. Scudder

THE FIFTH ARTICLE OF SERIES ON SOCIAL REBIRTH

FROM now on we shall be concerned only with Christians, and their social responsibilities; that is, with corporate life and action in that kingdom of grace where men may enjoy the "glorious freedom" of God's sons.

Jesus, when He said, "Ye must be born again," spoke to an individual. Such was his custom. His teaching, dealing profoundly with eternal principles, sharply summoned every single man to be reborn, and,—probably to the regret of Judas, — he talked little about local or temporary applications to contemporary life. He was no Zealot. Citizens of the kingdom of God are separate persons. And that kingdom is not of this world, so he assumed that they would not fight for it. The early Church, as presented in the New Testament, was so obsessed by expectation of his swift return in judgment that they naturally accepted the Roman Empire much as they found it. True, the Pauline Epistles are delightfully busy expounding the standards for individuals in their corporate life, with relentless clarity in both rebuke and praise. But St. Paul was a strong conservative, very loyal to the empire; and it is also true that the Christians of the New Testament are not occupied with the effort to discover the shape or structure, political or economic, of the kingdom of God on earth.

But let us never forget that patient evolution, speeded up now and then by swift transitions, and revolutionary crises, to which we constantly recur. It obtains just as much in the higher altitudes where grace abounds as on the level of nature. And we receive with grateful reverence the wonderful promise that the Holy Spirit shall lead us into all truth. Does not that promise sum up succinctly the real life of the Church Catholic? So the history of Christendom suggests. Today, the application of the Christian faith to secular corporate life forces itself into the foreground of all religious thinking. It has distinct primacy and importance. This may well mark one of those moments of great transition, for since the Reformation, Protestantism has largely ignored the matter, being obsessed by an individualism consonant with what was happening in the secular world; while the Roman Catholic Church, as we may say gently with all courtesy, has yielded to the temptation of confusing means and ends. Now, as democracy matures, the imperious summons to thought and action on this matter vibrates as never before through the whole Christian body: how could our holy faith control our secular and corporate behaviour? Whither will our effort to follow that summons lead us Christians? We do not know; perhaps to Calvary. But one thing we do know. As we survey the tragic spectacle presented today by Europe and Asia, and watch with quivering sympathy the futile efforts of our statesmen to bring harmony to the world, we are much in the same situation as St. Paul. Nothing can be more pertinent to our efforts for international peace in the world today than his lament.

So let us turn to noting the possible stages in a Christianized world, in a world where grace abounds. For as we have said and must never forget, gradual advance is quite as marked in that world as on the levels controlled exclusively by natural law. Evolution does not stop when man has made the great transition. Progress, involving ever new conflicts, ever new rewards, is inherent in the plan of God. So we must not be impatient. Let us respect his commands on whatever level they find us.

I had an interesting discussion awhile ago. I was in a cynical mood. I said I was glad the second commandment given by Jesus to the rich young man merely told me to love my neighbor as myself, not to love him any better. But I was reminded that the young man went away sorrowful; and that the summary of the law and the prophets did not exhaust Jesus' injunctions. For there was a remark at the last supper: "A new commandment, I give unto you, that ye love one another even as I have loved you." And, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." . . . I have since understood that an attempt has been made in our liturgical commission to add the new commandment to the summary of the law and the prophets in our Communion Service, as an appropriate prelude to the Eucharist. But the attempt came to nothing.

David Lubin, precursor of international plans from the League of Nations on, through his Agricultural Institute, was certainly of the prophetic lineage. He liked to say that the Christian function was to achieve individual holiness, but the establishment of social righteousness was the special vocation of the Hebrew people, dispersed among the nations in order that they might serve this end. Are the amazing corporate achievements of the Jews in Palestine today perhaps to the point? Past Jewish statesmanship in sundry countries, moreover, is not to be despised. We Christians feel pretty grim when we think of our treatment of the Jews; far are we from obedience to that second commandment, to that law of equality which is the law of justice. . . . Perhaps only Christians can be expected to follow the long path leading to a certain hill, which is the way of the greater love. But how often, in our corporate behaviour, we fail to obey even the law and the prophets!

LET us consider our problem of corporate action in the light of these two codes: justice, equality; and the law of the greater love. Both codes depend on love, for that matter, since we Christians must never forget that either can prevail only through obedience to the first commandment, to love the Lord our God. Even the equality demanded by the law and the prophets results not from balancing but from loving. Now certainly the desire is astir among us as never before to shape behaviour in accord with that idea. And, at least in the political field on which our eyes are fixed, the nations mean to try. They give the principle lip-homage, more perhaps than was done even in the Roman Empire, which never invoked love as its basis. And as that principle is distinctly paradoxical, from the point of view of natural impulse, perhaps we should not be surprised at inconsistencies; at the collapse of the League of Nations and the staggering difficulties encountered by the UN. Adepts in what we may call social psychology are both fascinated and depressed, watching the precarious situation of the sundry bodies organized under that title. But what can we expect? Life always grows more difficult as it advances,—to use the old formula,—from homogeneous to heterogeneous, from simple to complex. The law and the prophets! They echo the voice of God rather than the most illumined insights of the natural man. Meanwhile, fiercely and irresistibly, forces of mingled terror and greed surge in our national consciousness like a rising tide.

So much for our efforts to attain the first level in corporate life reborn. We are cast down but not destroyed; for the stubborn will to achieve justice is reinforced even among statesmen by the imaginative sympathy which is another name for love; and the unsolved dilemma of responsibility has comforting, if disconcerting, factors in it. What shall we say now if we look at collective behaviour, other than political, from the height of the new commandment? Again, silence befits us. We retreat for comfort to the attested reality that the grace of God can transform individuals; and we point not only to saints but to the countless lives of humble folk illumined and guided more than cynicism likes to admit by selfless love. But again we recall that groups have generally been defeated in one way or another; hardening into conformity or evaporating in heresy. And what is true of adventurers in the religious field is equally true of all social adventurers, unless like More's Utopians they dwell in fantasy, justifying the title of their country, the Land of Nowhere. More, though he died a Catholic martyr, did not invoke Christianity. That the practical demand for social transformation on a scale never before contemplated should have arisen in recent times beyond the confines of the Church and in conscious opposition to her, is our disgrace and disaster; and we see with sadness but without surprise that the means employed for establishing a new social order and the corporate life of those committed to that end are far from being twice-born. For one thing we know: if corporate activity on scale large or small, in Russia or in America, is to be imbued with grace, the individuals involved must receive the message offered to Nicodemus. Never must we forget that personal transformation is the necessary root of all enduring social change and that no system imposed on the unconverted can endure. No! "From within, proceeds a nation's health." Even Confucius knew that. "From the emperor down to the common man," said he, "all must regard the personal life as the root or foundation. There is never an orderly shoot or superstructure when the root or foundation is disorderly."

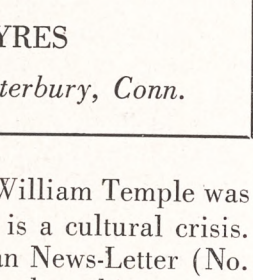
As for the behaviour of nations, perhaps we should not expect them to aim higher than the law and the prophets. Let us quote from a beautiful article in THE WITNESS of June 26, 1947, by Shelton Hale Bishop. He takes us back to the attitude of Lubin:

> "One recognizes that it is one thing for an individual to practice in a way called extreme, the fullest measure of redemptive love, and quite another thing for a nation. But that, it seems to me, has never been an issue in Christian history. In the Hebrew tradition, it was. . . . It is a question whether the genius of a nation can be conceived of as any higher agent of God than the arbiter of justice."

But let us pursue our inquiry. Suppose enough "reborn" people in a community, or a nation, were to control corporate policy and behaviour; what, oh what, would happen then? Before we dare to say we must probe deeper into study of the dialectical opposition between the law of nature and the law of grace.



Strategy and Tactics

by

FRANCIS O. AYRES

Rector of St. John's, Waterbury, Conn.

ONE of the great insights of William Temple was that the crisis of our time is a cultural crisis. In a supplement to the Christian News-Letter (No. 198, December 29, 1943) he has this to say: "There are two major points at which failure to recognize that man's life is rooted in nature and natural associations leads to mistaken and vain attempts to solve the problem of society. The first grave error characteristic of our time is a too exclusive occupation with politics to the neglect of other equally important spheres of human life and activity. It is assumed that the ills from which society is suffering can be cured, if only we have the will and the right aims. It is forgotten that man is not a being ruled wholly by his reason and conscious aims. His life is inextricably intertwined with nature and with the natural associations of family and livelihood, tradition and culture. When the connection with these sources from which the individual life derives nourishment and strength is broken, the whole life of society becomes enfeebled.

"Recognition of the vital importance of centres of human life and activity that underlie and precede the sphere of politics must not be made an excuse for evading the political decisions which have to be made in the near future. It is not a way of escape from political responsibility. Far-reaching decisions in the political sphere may be the only means of creating the conditions in which the non-political spheres can regain vitality and health; but the recovery of health in those spheres is in its turn an indispensable preliminary to political sanity and vigour.

"The present plight of our society arises in large part from the break-down of these natural forms of association and of a cultural pattern formed to a great extent under Christian influences. New dogmas and assumptions about the nature of reality have taken the place of the old. New rituals of various kinds are giving shape to men's emotional life. The consequence is that while their aims still remain to a large extent Christian, their souls are moulded by alien influences. The real crisis of our time is thus not primarily a moral, but a cultural crisis. In so far as this is true, the remedy is not to be found in what the Church is at present principally doing—insisting on ideals—or in efforts to intensify the will to pursue them. The cure has to be sought in the quite different direction of seeking to re-establish a unity between men's ultimate beliefs and habits and their conscious aims.

"Christians must free their minds from illusions and become aware of the impotence of moral advice and instruction when it is divorced from the social structures which by their perpetual suggestion form the soul. It must be remembered that when exhortation and suggestion are at variance, suggestion always wins. Christians must take their part in recreating a sound social and cultural life and thereby healing the modern divided consciousness, in which head and heart have become divorced and men's conscious purposes are no longer in harmony with the forces which give direction and tone to their emotional life.

"But, secondly, if Christians are to have a substantial influence on the temporal order, it is not only necessary that they should have a clearer and deeper understanding of the positive, character-forming function of the non-political forms of human association, but their whole approach to social and political questions needs to be much more realistic that it has commonly been in the past. The Christian social witness must be radically disassociated from the idealism which assumes men to be so free spiritually that aims alone are decisive. There is need of a much clearer recognition of the part played in human behaviour by subconscious egoisms, interests, deceptions and determinisms imposed by man's place in nature and history, by his cultural patterns and by his sinfulness."

By now, Temple's analysis has been widely accepted as a profound truth. Although he was following the lead given by Reinhold Niebuhr, his development of the theme gave the whole approach great impetus and in the last few years others have carried it still further. As far as I know, however, no one has done much work on discovering ways in which a parish may throw its weight on the right side.

Some parishes, of course, give no indication of being aware that any crisis exists let alone a cultural one. Still others (fortunately, their numbers are rapidly dwindling) pursue the old "culture vulture"—book reviews, travelogues, "understanding our fair city"—method of approach, which is far worse than nothing at all. The great majority of parishes, however, see the situation to some degree of clarity but do not know what to do or how to do it. As a result, non-Christians can only arrive at the conclusion that the Church has neither any light to throw on nor any weight to throw into the conflict.

I would appreciate word as to what a parish can do from anyone who has experimented along these lines, whether the experiment has been successful or not. I have heard of two projects which seem to me to hold promise. One is the formation of a film club (in collaboration with the film library of the Museum of Modern Art) to study the history and development of the movies and then to proceed to a study and analysis of modern films. The other project is the formation of a radio club. In this case transcriptions are made of popular radio programs and the group meets to discuss the ideas, assumptions, ends and means implicit as well as explicit in the program.

It seems to me that both of these projects approach the whole problem in a way which can be shared by any parishioner. Nevertheless, at best, they are just a beginning. Moreover, there must be other and better ways to get at those for whom lectures (when a competent lecturer is available) are too difficult. I would appreciate hearing any comments or suggestions you might have to make on this whole problem.

Let's Be Accurate

By

KATHARINE C. PIERCE

A "CONSPIRACY to defraud" is a very serious charge to bring against any person or group and one that should never be made unless one is sure of the facts. The article by Rev. Charles Higgins (Oct. 16) is carefully written and avoids making the direct charge though it is implied.

He tells of the woman who had been told (by whom?) that all of her Church School Lenten Offering would go to the Philippines. Every diocesan treasurer was sent a copy of a statement about the 1947 Offering, which I quote:

"The Church School Lenten Offering is one of the greatest missionary offerings in the Church. The yearly total is now about $475,000, and has gone as high as $550,000. For many years the fund was a 'special,' that is, is was not a part of the quota or expectation but was given over and above the expectation. Some dioceses still follow this practice. The entire offering is designated for the missionary work of the Church in all parts of the world and should be sent to the national treasurer —Lewis B. Franklin—as received by the diocesan treasurers. When quota credit is taken the division of funds can be adjusted in later payments. The Church School Lenten Offering helps maintain the general Church budget. Specific items in the budget will be assigned as educational projects upon request. Boxes, envelopes and literature are sent to each parish and mission."

The Lent 1947 number of Forth contains an article entitled

> "Go Forth Christian Soldier
> A message for boys and girls of > the church school on the day the > offering boxes are distributed."

the relevant paragraph of which says

"What does this money do? It carries help to people all over the world who need it. It sends missionaries with the gospel of Christ to China where millions of Chinese have never heard the good news of God's love and who live in fear all their lives. It sends messengers of Christ to the Indians and Eskimos of snowy Alaska and to the peoples of tropical Liberia. It makes possible the work of the Church in Latin America and in the Islands of the Pacific and the Atlantic." This message was also distributed to the parishes as a poster.

It is true that the special subject for study last Lent was the Philippines and in the study books there "was a list of objects for which the offering may be used in the missionary district of the Philippines": followed by the statement: "Before making public announcement of a selection from these items, be sure to obtain the approval of the National Council's finance department, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, New York."

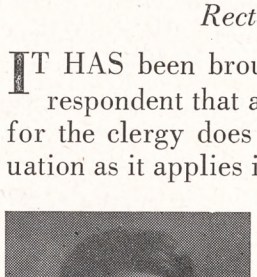
Mr. Higgins tells of another woman without giving her name who "may not write for other publications without submitting her articles to 281 for censorship." 281 far from censoring articles sent them for transmission to other publications does not even read them in order that there may be no suspicion of censorship on their part. They do from time to time rewrite articles sent them for Forth in the interest of readability. If anyone is interested enough in the subject the department of promotion will show them the original articles in the files and the rewritten articles. Some of the missionary bishops insist on seeing articles written by missionaries in their districts before they are submitted to anyone for publication but that is quite a different thing from censorship at 281.

Mr. Higgins also says that "the budget is so cleverly arranged that certain expenditures appear to be less than is the case"—particularly administrative expense. During my last term on the National Council, from 1940 to 1943, I served in the department of finance and am therefore familiar with the way the budget is made up. But in case my memory was faulty I went to the department and looked over the budgets of the missionary districts as anyone can do who wishes to see them. They are prepared in great detail and there are no items hidden or otherwise for administration at 281.

Mr. Higgins was mistaken in his article "Swivel Chair Dictator" about the action taken in regard to the cemetery property. The Rev. A. E. Swift of the overseas department presented the matter to the National Council saying in effect: The Church of the Good Shephard, San Jose, Costa Rica, is an independent congregation, served by an Episcopal priest at the invitation of Bishop Gooden, of Panama. He wants it to become a part of his jurisdiction.

It was then referred to the finance department as all matters must be that involve appropriations. The department recommended the endowment to the National Council which approved the recommendation with the following action taken April 25, 1947:

> "Resolved that the sum of $5,000 be appropriated to buy the properties, with the understanding that the sum will be used to set up a trust fund for the perpetual endowment of the two cemeteries now owned by the congregation, and with the understanding that this appropriation will release the National Council from any further responsibility for the cemeteries."



281 has become a name which means the Presiding Bishop, the members of the National Council and the entire staff at Church Missions House, none of whom are either knaves or fools and all of whom are high minded men and women who are serving the Church with ability and devotion.

A Word With You

"Fadda" versus "Revener"

By
HUGH D. McCANDLESS
Rector of the Epiphany, New York

IT HAS been brought to my attention by a correspondent that an appeal to the history of titles for the clergy does not give due weight to the situation as it applies in the various parts of the country. Many clergy in the East are conditioned against the use of the word Father, because it is so often applied to them by people who take them for Roman Catholics. On the other hand, west of the Appalachians there are many people who insist on calling the clergy Reverend "out of respect" and cannot bring themselves to call a clergyman Mister. In some places these people feel that the Episcopal Church is just the same as the Roman Catholic Church (by which they mean just as awful), and it is as easy to teach them to say Father as it is to say Mister.

My correspondent suggests the word "Pastor" which we have left to the Lutherans. Well, historically they are entitled to it, and while it is a wonderful word, I think it would be very difficult to put across to our people. Please address all correspondence concerning this column to the writer at The Church of the Epiphany, York Avenue and 74th Street, New York 21.

Charges Misuse of Religion In Anti-Soviet Drive

Church Council Condemns Undemocratic Acts Whether in United States or Soviet Union

Edited by Sara Dill

Westfield, Mass. (RNS): — The Council of Churches here adopted a statement calling for "Christian action to remove the things that are wrong" in American policy towards Russia, and to foster better understanding between the two nations on the basis of Christian objectives. Condemning "all non-Christian and undemocratic acts and attitudes of Russia and of the United States," the statement asserted it sought "to present a constructive approach to the entire situation, particularly as regards American policy toward the Soviet Union."

It said the first step "should be to examine American policy in the light of Christian insight. This must be our first step because we are America, and Christian insight seems to us to reveal our current policy towards Russia at fault on these three scores: (1) it is self-righteous; (2) it misuses religion; (3) it violates Christian liberty." The statement declared the inevitable end of American policy would "lead us forward on the road to war."

In place of the present policy, the Church council offered the following suggestions: (1) American relief abroad should be "for all who are in need. Let us feed the hungry and clothe the naked without regard for their political opinions." (2) American policy at home and abroad should "uphold the Bill of Rights and the civil liberties guaranteed in the Bill of Rights." (3) The American government should take positive action now to solve the problems "that are really a threat to the democratic way of life." Among these problems, it said, were: the housing shortage, race tensions, disabilities suffered by some minority groups, bad labor conditions among such groups as migrant workers, and the high cost of living. (4) Americans should "loyally support and strenghten the United Nations."

Asserting that anti-Soviet propaganda often charges that Russia is godless and atheistic, the Council declared such an accusation "is a misuse of religion."

"We are not impressed," it continued, "by the godliness or religion of many who make this charge. On the contrary, often they are people who both in their personal lives and in their occupations ignore God, religion and the moral law. When they complain of Communist atheism, the pot is calling the kettle black; we feel that they are not genuinely concerned about the religious values at stake; they are using religion for their own purposes, and that is a misuse. It is a prostitution of Christianity and we protest against it. Against the misuse of our religion we call all Christians to be on guard. We must not be taken in by those who would use religion for their own purposes. Admittedly, Marxist atheism is a cause of concern to Christians. But the Christian way of dealing with this is the way of love which seeks to convert the Communist, not the way of hate which simply denounces him. Christians have no ground religiously to fear Communism, for the Church is not a human institution dependent upon the favor of men but a divine organism instituted by God and secure in his protection."

The statement declared that Christians who fear Communist atheism "are failing to put their trust in God . . . and when Christians are without confidence in God, they approach in themselves the very atheism which they profess to fear."

The Council stated that American-Soviet relations "need the steadying, calming influence of Christian understanding, not the tension-raising, war-breeding stimulus of religious prejudice. We therefore call upon all Christians," the statement said, "to repudiate the approach of hate and fear and to accept the way of confidence and trust in God."

Hudson to Lecture

Philadelphia: — Canon Cyril E. Hudson of St. Alban's, England, is to give a series of lectures on the Christian doctrine of man between January 20 and April 12 at the Philadelphia Divinity School. He is also to give lectures at Berkeley; Trinity Church, New York; General; Cambridge Seminary and the College of Preachers, Washington. His preaching engagements include Holy Trinity, Philadelphia; Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York; Trinity, New York; St. John's, Norristown, Pa., and Washington Cathedral.

Children's Offering

Savannah, Ga.: — The children's Advent offering for the diocese of Georgia is to go toward the building fund of St. Matthew's Church, Negro parish of this city. The executive council of the diocese also voted that if there should be an increase in the pledges made in the every member canvass that the total increase should go for this purpose. St. Matthew's is planning to build a new church and has priority over all other diocesan projects.

Summer School

Sewanee, Tenn.: — The summer graduate school of theology will continue next year, according to an announcement made by Dean Gibson of the Sewanee Seminary. Prof. Boyer Stewart of General Seminary will be the director.

The present enrollment at the seminary is 45 students, and it is expected to reach 60 in another year. Additions to the faculty, besides the new dean, are the Rev. D. A. McGregor and the Rev. E. H. Merriman. It was also announced that a new professorship is to be established with Dean Gibson now looking for the best possible man for the position.

Large Enrollment

Philadelphia:—There are 55 students this year at the Philadelphia Divinity School. Also two full time members have been added to the faculty: the Rev. Nelson W. Rightmyer in history and liturgics and Maude Cutler in religious education. St. Mary's House has been opened for the department of women, with Miss Cutler as director, and the degree of master of religious education will be given to college graduates who complete a two year course at the divinity school and the University of Pennsylvania.

Parish Clinic

Owensboro, Ky.:—A parish clinic was held here at Trinity on October 20th, conducted by Dean Norville Wicker, Rev. Thomas Rodda, Rev. Thomas Hastings and Mr. Jack Rogers, all of Louisville. Following supper they split into four groups and held two hour conferences on men's work, the choir, the Sunday school and youth work, each led by one of the above who are specialists in these fields. Those attending told Rector Ben W. Tinsley following the sessions that the clinic had been not only instructive but constructive in that branch of church work in which they were particularly interested.

New Diocesan Office

Des Moines, Ia.:—The diocese of Iowa has moved its offices from Davenport to 208 Flynn Building in this city. A residence for the bishop has been leased for one year at 545 39th Street. What disposition will be made of the bishop's house and the diocesan house in Davenport has not yet been determined. The last convention ruled that they could be leased by the trustees but not sold at this time. The cathedral remains in Davenport.

General Matriculation

New York: — Bishop Stephen Clark of Utah preached at the matriculation service held at General Seminary on October 31st. Forty-one new students signed the matriculation book, promising loyal adherence to the rules governing the life and work of the seminary and pledging themselves to strive for the attainment of dedicated lives.

Visits Honolulu

Honolulu: — Bishop and Mrs. G. Ashton Oldham had a three day visit here on their way to Australia where he is representing the Episcopal Church at the centennial celebration of the Anglican Church. The time of his visit here coincided with the 25th anniversary of his consecration so that he and Mrs. Oldham were the guests at breakfast of the Rev. and Mrs. E. Tanner Brown. Also present were Dr. and Mrs. Wasdell (of The Story of Dr. Wasdell movie fame) who were on their way to the Orient where they are to serve as missionaries. All of the clergy of the city and their wives were present.

Urge Cooperation

Swampscott, Mass.: — A conference on the church and economic life, convened by the Massachusetts Council of Churches, declared that the sphere of economic democracy and general social justice provides an excellent opportunity for joint action by all religions. Attention was called to several instances of interfaith cooperation in labor-management relations in Massachusetts as illustrative of further possible united religious efforts.

It was pointed out that since workers in New England industries are drawn from many religious backgrounds it is necessary that both labor-management groups and religious institutions adopt programs with a broad interfaith approach.

The conference expressed its concern over the need to accelerate improvement of the economic relations of all social groups. While it was stressed that much has been accomplished recently in overcoming discrimination and segregation, it was held imperative that the Church make a better demonstration in its own life and practices on the issue.

In the field of economic power, the conference reviewed with alarm the growth of great concentrations of power both on the part of labor and management. It called for church support of the need to examine diffusion of economic power together with greater participation of the people in industrial decisions involving the public welfare.

Local groups of businessmen, workers and clergy were urged to carry on a continuing series of conferences to the end that mutual faith and good will "will be encouraged in these days of mounting tension and misunderstanding."

The conference went on record favoring extension of social security benefits to all lay workers in religious, charitable, and other philanthropic organizations.

Opposition was expressed to the provision requiring officers of unions to declare they are not Communists. "We believe it unwise and undemocratic to try to suppress minority groups instead of meeting them in open discussion and settling issues by majority vote," the group declared.

social service organization in Budapest, demanded that the government order removal from the schools of a textbook on Darwinism, which, she said, "imbues juvenile minds with monkey stories."

Nationalism Develops

Sydney (RNS):—A four-year plan for expansion of Anglican missionary work among Australian aboriginals and in new territories of the Southern Pacific was outlined here by Bishop G. H. Cranswick at a meeting of the Australian board of missions. The board is the authorized missionary organization of the Church of England in Australia. Projects call for the establishment of community centers, technical educational courses, and religious facilities, Bishop Cranswick, who is chairman of the board, disclosed.

"The aboriginals," he said, "must be prevented from becoming parasites and must be encouraged to work for wages. Missionaries, on the other hand, should adopt practical methods designed to better the natives' health, economic welfare, education and faith."

The bishop chided the board for not having attained the standards of other denominations in the majority of their mission stations and said "we must abandon a number of these stations if we don't improve the situation by providing staffs and suitable and adequate services."

Discussing problems in the South West Pacific, Bishop Cranswick warned that the challenge of national consciousness among the colored races calls for a readjustment of "our whole interracial outlook, otherwise our apparent unwillingness to re-interpret the White Australia policy will be regarded by these people with suspicion."

He also urged "there is no time to lose if we are going to answer the tremendous challenge of the literacy movement in the East."

Hit Warmongering

Washington (RNS): — "Public utterances in any nation which give the people a sense of insecurity and which even suggest war" were deplored in a statement issued here by 12 Protestant Church leaders.

They called upon church people in this country "to maintain a calm faith, and to refuse to be disturbed by statements tending to foment hatred and to create an atmosphere of militarism."

The 12 leaders, representing different denominations, urged support of the United Nations. Postwar tensions and misunderstandings, they added, are to be expected, but they can be relieved "as Christian insights are brought to bear upon the problems confronting the nations."

"This can be done with patience and forbearance," the statement said, "without surrendering any of the principles vital to a Christian democracy."

Declaring that the world needs "food, healing and faith," the group declared it was necessary "to be reasonably prepared against possible emergencies in a chaotic world, but it is quite another thing to incite fear and hatred."

They said utterances in any nation which tend to foster militarism "should be discouraged."

Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill was one of those to sign the statement, which was released here by Wilbur La Roe, Jr., moderator of the Presbyterian Church.

day on the 5th anniversary of his ordination as priest. He was given a purse of $1,000 and the first volume of The Church Fathers, a new publication. There are to be 72 volumes in the set and he is to be given each one as they are published—enough reading for quite a spell.

Church Acts

Hamilton, Ont.:—An attitude of "don't ask the government, let's do it ourselves," prevailed here when the Canadian Council of Churches rejected a recommendation urging the Federal government to arrange a national clothing drive for needy war-sufferers in Europe.

The Council decided to launch a church-sponsored campaign after Dean G. H. Luxon, Anglican, of London, Ontario, asked: "Why should we call on the government to do this? Why not have the churches themselves do it?"

"This is not the way they did it in the time of the early Church," Dean Luxton chided. "We don't read about the Apostles putting it up to the government. Let us go out into the highways and the byways and gather the clothing—from the people who don't come to church as well as those who do."

The Council announced it will also appeal to the people of Canada to save goods so that more material can be sent overseas. Donations of money for food to Britain, it was stated, will be accepted by churches throughout the country.

It was agreed to call on the government for a generous immigration policy in regard to European refugees and displaced persons, "not so much on economic and industrial grounds as for moral and humanitarian reasons." In addition, the Council urged that the government adopt measures to meet the social, educational, and other needs of refugees when they arrive in Canada.

Marriage Clinics

Durban (RNS):—A proposal that the Anglican Church cooperate with the Free Churches in conducting marriage guidance clinics was made by Bishop A. H. Howe Browne, in his address to the Anglican synod in Bloemfontein. He said that clinics are now being established in various South African cities and "have great possibilities."

"The question is bound to arise," Bishop Browne declared, "whether we of the Church, and, especially its ordained ministers, are doing all we can to try to prevent young people entering marriage with distorted and inadequate ideas about the sacredness of the marriage bond."

Asserting that "all too many people today marry with one eye on the marriage officer and one on the divorce court judge," the bishop asserted that "to start life with such a pronounced squint is not likely to bring out the best in either party. It is, in fact, a trial trip, which can be abandoned at any time, even by mutual agreement."

increasing segregation of white and colored troops in Germany.

Bishop Walls toured Europe under war department auspices last summer as a member of a commission of fourteen clergymen.

His report generally praised top army personnel overseas and their handling of morale and racial problems, but criticized several instances of "discrimination" against Negro troops:

1. White and Negro troops must use the swimming pool at Andrew Barracks in Berlin on separate days. The pool is drained after being used by the colored troops before the white soldiers will swim.

2. An enlisted man's club in front of American headquarters is "Jim-Crowed by permitting all enlisted men except Negroes." This is a departure, the Bishop said, from wartime days and during the first year of peace, when the clubs were interracial.

3. Negro units have been concentrated in separate billets in Berlin, Frankfurt, Giesen, Grafenwehr and Manheim, by moving most of the colored units to different stations. This has meant setting up separate recreation facilities.

4. There are no Negroes in the constabulary, and most of the 8,000 colored soldiers in Germany, Austria and Italy are engaged in driving and maintaining trucks and in "other menial work."

Racket Letters

New York (RNS):—Church World Service announced here that it is warning Protestant leaders in this country against heeding "begging" letters sent to Americans by writers in war-stricken European areas.

Such letters, the relief agency said, are a "racket" to get food and clothing parcels from generous individuals in the U.S.

"Unless the recipient of the letter knows the writer," Church World Service cautioned, "the appeal should be turned over to one of the regular relief agencies for investigation."

The agency said it had referred to it "many identical letters, 13 in one instance from the same writer. Obviously, if even a fraction of the letters bring returns, the writer will be disproportionately helped, or perhaps even set up with a stock of goods for black market operations."

Protestant leaders were informed that church relief distributions in every country "are on the basis of need in the light of careful observation on the spot, and if the writers are found to be worthy and not otherwise supplied, they will be cared for to the extent of available allocations."

Rationing Urged

Elmira, N. Y. (RNS):—The synod of New York, Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., at its annual meeting here called upon Congress to resist private pressure groups and to reinstate rationing. The synod also reaffirmed its opposition to compulsory military training, urged more serious action on the housing shortage.

In asking for the return of rationing the Synod urged Congress "to present more courageous resistance to private pressure groups and to give serious consideration to the reinstatement of domestic controls designed to keep down the cost of living; to raise the level of production and to increase the quantities of food and other materials for overseas relief."

The synod expressed its opposition to peacetime military training because "the greatness and safety of the nation lies not in its industrial and military power, but in its readiness to 'do justly, love kindness, and walk humbly with God'."

Another resolution asserted that "one of the serious dangers that threatens Christian home life is the shortage of suitable houses. Overcrowding robs of privacy, delays marriages, imposes unwholesome birth controls, stimulates illicit intimacies and fosters illegitimacy."

Theatre Group Formed

New York (RNS):—Formation of the Protestant Actors Theatre, to bring more professional dramatics to churches, has been announced here by a group of church members. The organization will also contact actors with a view to interesting them in church activities. Operating on a non-profit basis, P.A.T. (as it will be called) will present plays to raise funds for charitable organizations. Besides acting in churches, the group will perform in hospitals. Free dramatic classes will be instituted for clergymen "who desire more personal self-expression," and an audition service will be inaugurated for those seeking advice on their dramatic abilities. P.A.T. will also operate a registry-clearing house to place young actors and dramatic students, coming to New York, in Protestant homes.

Director of the theatre is Harrison Lewis, veteran New York actor. Mr. Lewis is a Quaker, educated at the Quaker academy affiliated with William Penn College, at Oklaloosa, Iowa. His parents, before settling in the Middle West, were members of the Society of Friends in England.

"In a great city like New York, the center of theatrical activities," Mr. Lewis said, "fine work can be accomplished for the church and people of the entertainment world by bringing the two together for their mutual benefit."

During his acting career of 25 years, says Mr. Lewis, he has never relinquished his interest in religion. Among the plays in which he has appeared are Three's a Family, Women Go On Forever, The Front Page, All God's Chillun Got Wings, and Old Fashioned Girl.

For the last 15 years he has conducted an acting school in this city. Recently a youth group at Marble Collegiate church here invited Mr. Lewis' students to put on a series of plays motivated for young people. So enthusiastically were the plays received by church people that Mr. Lewis saw his chance for realizing a repertory theatre.

"After the theatre has actually produced some plays," he said, "we will seek specific church sponsorship. We hope to make P.A.T. the Protestant counterpart of the Catholic Actors' Guild, although persons of all faiths may participate in its activities," he added. "Too many groups in this country are using the drama to spread undemocratic and anti-religious ideologies. The Protestant Actors' Theatre will make an entertaining, wholesome appeal to youth. We hope to make it a significant force in attracting young people to the church."

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

THE REV. H. M. RICHARDSON
Rector of Epiphany, Baltimore

Obviously Spofford Jr. is the fair haired boy of the social action section of our Church. Obviously too he is well educated and can sling a mean pen when he is so inclined. But why in the name of all that he is seeking to accomplish does he lambaste one of the few books of our present day which makes understandable why it is impossible for a Christian to stand still in our culture?

Certainly Chad Walsh's Stop Looking and Listen is no thick theological tome but it says it is a book for laymen, and it is supremely so. If the reviewer thinks that most congregations can read, mark, learn and inwardly digest Temple, Bell, Niebuhr and Chesterton, he had better begin doing his parish calling in that new church of his.

THE REV. MASSEY H. SHEPHERD JR.
Prof. at Episcopal Theological Seminary

Benjamin Minifie's letter to Backfire (WITNESS, October 23rd), expresses so simply and charitably what I have felt needed to be said about the unhappy controversy raging over our administration of the new Marriage Canon—not yet given even a full year's trial so that its imperfections might be reviewed candidly and soberly in the light of what must be a most difficult and heart-breaking problem for our bishops.

Despite my high regard for the opinion of the twelve priests petitioning the House of Bishops, I cannot but view their principle of a double standard of morality for clergy and laity as contrary to the teaching of Scripture and the doctrine of the Church as our Church has received it. What is wrong for a layman is wrong for a clergyman, and vice versa. On this principle Anglicanism has stood consistently against both Romanism and Protestantism in its teaching and practice.

THE REV. JOHN H. OWENS
of the United Israel Fellowship

I am a lay member of the Episcopal Church, and a regular reader of THE WITNESS. First permit me to sincerely commend you for the quality of the material appearing in the paper. Much of it is liberal; all of the material is quite scholarly and informative without obscurantism.

The article which I consider particularly outstanding in the issue for Oct. 9th, is reported by writer W. B. Spofford concerning Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam's speech on our attitude toward the Soviet Union. As the good Bishop points out perhaps a more thorough and honest attempt to solve our own pressing domestic problems might be a more profitable substitute for drumming up a holy crusade against Russia and might prove less costly and painful in the long run and more beneficial to American citizenry.

Perhaps by inculcating increased faith in the ability of the United Nations to prevent aggressive war and to commit no official act which would smack of either bypassing the U.N. or lacking faith in our ability to "get what we want through this organization," the United States would need less war hysteria anyway. If the average American citizen feels that he has the best system of equity and justice and national morality under our present form of government, this is our most potent weapon against the encroachments of communism or any other foreign ism.

THE REV. JOHN S. HIGGINS
Rector of Gethsemane, Minneapolis

In Bishop Barton's letter in Backfire (Oct. 30) there is no identification of the particular Higgins who criticized the National Council. It might incorrectly be assumed that I am the author of the articles, and as a member of the National Council I regret the fact that Bishop Barton's letter contains no specific identification of the author and no explanatory footnote by the editor. Does THE WITNESS ever "back-track" as well as "backfire"?

ANSWER: Author was the Rev. Charles A. Higgins of Waco, Texas.

Churchwoman of Boston

THE WITNESS is to be congratulated for running the articles by Miss Scudder. Everything she writes of course is fine but these on Social Rebirth are particularly stimulating and scholarly. I hope that they are being widely used in discussion groups.

* * *

THE REV. V. L. LIVINGSTON
Rector at Toledo and Newport, Ore.

Your editorial that "UN Must Not Fail" (WITNESS, Oct. 16) was read with interest. Our church in Newport is sponsoring a "Friends of United Nations" organization which meets in the city hall. We have found that a good many people are interested in promoting world government. Anyone interested in a similar organization can write me.

Talking It Over for September 18 was a delight. The "thesis," the "salary" and the "sermon" are jewels. Save things like these and share them later with us.

Columbus, Ohio

I wish to commend you for the fine articles in THE WITNESS. This is a magazine which we clergy and lay-people cannot be without. There is meat in your editorials. More power to you.

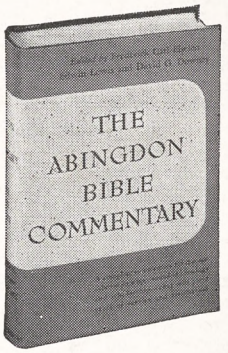
$18,000 Worth of Stamps

Nanchang, China
October 22, 1947

Dear Brother:

The September 18 WITNESS came last night. I noticed with much interest your mentioning the terrible inflation in China as revealed by my last air mail letter to you carrying $3,200 worth of Chinese stamps. Since October 13, only ten days ago, the postage for foreign mails have raised to five times. So this letter is carrying $18,000 worth of Chinese stamps. But it is still less than 50 cents in U.S. currency.

Affectionately yours,
Kimber Den.



Your donations in U. S. dollars are essential for the maintenance of the great work of reconstruction being done in China under the direction of the Rev. Kimber H. K. Den.

The Bishops Warn of Hysteria On Communism Issue

Resolution Assails Inquisitorial Inquiry Into Men's Personal Beliefs As Offensive

By W. B. Spofford

Winston-Salem, N. C.:—As reported in THE WITNESS last week, the House of Bishops at their final session here unanimously adopted a resolution declaring that "an inquisitorial investigation of men's personal beliefs is a threat to freedom of conscience." They also warned against "an hysterical fear of Communism" that would "lead us to fight that danger with weapons destructive of the treasures we seek to guard." This resolution, introduced by Bishop Angus Dun of Washington, and one on the Marshall Plan introduced by Bishop Scarlett of Missouri, which also passed unanimously, constituted the only pronouncements coming from the meeting on national and international issues. Ordinarily these matters are set forth in a Pastoral Letter, which is required to be read in all the churches, but no Pastoral was forthcoming from this session.

The resolution introduced by Bishop Dun did not name the Congressional Committee on Un-American Activities but it was clearly a vigorous slap at the committee headed by Congressman Parnell Thomas of New Jersey. The full text was as follows:

"Resolved, As bishops in the Church of God we call upon the people of our churches to be on their guard lest an hysterical fear of Communism shall lead us to fight that danger with weapons destructive of the treasures we seek to guard. The surest way to fight Communism is to work unceasingly at home and abroad for a society in which justice and the dignity of free men are in truth guaranteed to men of every race and condition.

"An inquisitorial investigation of men's personal beliefs is a threat to freedom of conscience. The casting of public suspicion on fellow citizens under the protection of Congressional immunity can readily become an offense against God's commandment: Thou shall not bear false witness against thy neighbor.

"We have no defense for those who, while sharing the privileges of our imperfectly democratic society, seek to undermine its fabric. But we hold it to be the duty of every Christian citizen to guard for others the freedom of conscience we treasure for oureslves."

Meanwhile a group of sixteen Church leaders, including Bishop Charles K. Gilbert of New York, issued a statement expressing concern at "the shocking amount of suspicion, hatred and hysteria which has arisen between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R." and calling upon all Christians to join in "a great spiritual crusade" for peaceful cooperation between the two countries.

"We maintain that war is not inevitable," the statement declares. "Despite wide differences of opinion, attitudes, habits and philosophies between the cultures of the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R., peaceful cooperation between the two countries is possible. The peoples of the United States and the Soviet Union want peace. The governments of the United States and the Soviet Union have officially voiced their desires for peace and their abhorrence of war. The participation of the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. as leading and vital powers in the United Nations is an accepted fact by the people of the world and their governments. We must recognize that the United Nations is our only present instrument for implementing the desires of the nations to live together in peace. Criticism of the present organization of the UN should not destroy the faith and hope which the peoples of the world have placed in it. Let us do our part to increase the prestige and power of this international organization."

Others to sign the statement were the Rev. Louie D. Newton, president of the Southern Baptists; the Rev. W. E. Lampe, secretary of the Evangelical and Reformed Church; Mrs. Ruth M. Worrell, executive secretary of the United Council of Church Women; the Rev. Samuel G. Trexler, former president of the United Lutheran Synod of New York; the Rev. G. P. Warfield, head of overseas relief of the Methodist Church; the Rev. Robert W. Searle of the human relations commission of the New York Protestant Council; the Rev. Beverley M. Boyd of the Federal Council; the Rev. Ralph Sockman, prominent Methodist pastor.

The resolution expressing the hope that Congress will immediately act that "this great nation give generous and adventurous leadership in helping to create a better world for all peoples," was introduced in the House of Bishops by Bishop Scarlett who is the chairman of the joint commission of General Convention on social reconstruction. The text:

"Our nation is now called upon to make decisions which, we believe, will be recorded as among the most momentous in the history of its people.

"As we sacrificed for war, so now an unparalleled opportunity is ours to contribute magnificently to the cause of peace.

"That Europe desperately needs our assistance is, as the Secretary of State has said, no longer a matter of debate. The economics of the nations devastated by war must be rebuilt if deeper descent into misery and chaos is to be prevented.

"This nation alone has the power and wealth adequately to meet this situation.

"Before God, we bear a heavy responsibility to do all in our power to build a stable, prosperous, peaceful world.

"To live up to the full level of our present opportunity will also lessen the possibility of an infinitely greater cost to us in the future.

"Therefore, be it resolved that the House of Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church expresses the earnest hope that Congress will act swiftly and affirmatively on the Marshall plan;

"And further, that we urge our people to make known at once to their elected representatives their determination that this great nation give generous and adventurous leadership in helping to create a better world for all peoples."

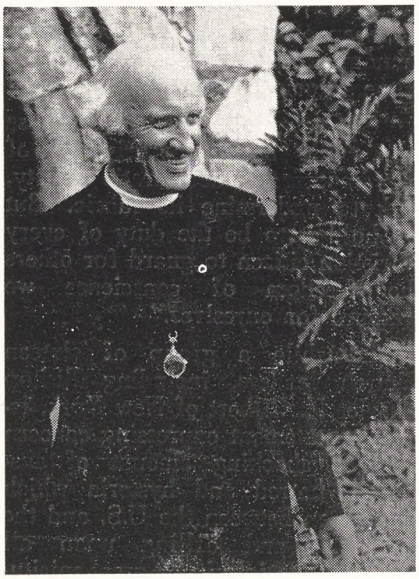
CHURCH CONFERENCE ON ECONOMICS

New York:—Speakers at the first conference to be held in this city on the Church and economic life declared that the Church has the responsibility of establishing better human relations in industry and in judging economic activity according to moral law. The meeting was sponsored by the human relations commission of the Protestant Council of which Bishop Charles K. Gilbert is chairman and the sessions were held, at his invitation, in the synod house of the diocese of New York.

Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of the Methodist Church said the Church envisions a social order "in which the sacredness of every personality is recognized and everyone finds opportunity for the fullest expression of which he is capable."

Charles P. Taft, Episcopal layman, urged that local groups holding similar conferences come to grips with issues and decide, for instance, "whether they support the free enterprise system, or whether we should have production for use rather than for profit."

Kermit Eby, a minister in the Church of the Brethren and director of research and education for the CIO, asserted that the Church must develop "sensitivity of attitude" in awakening people to human needs, the significance of wages to the people receiving them, and the effect of modern "gadgets" on the people making them.



William L. Munger, executive secretary of the United Hatters, Cap and Millinery Workers International Union, said the Church "has shied away from a willingness to come to grips with the basic struggle."

"For that reason," he added, "the great movements that we have seen developed in the world for the past decade or two have been basically negative in spiritual values, partly because of the shortcomings of their philosophies and of the churches."

Other speakers included Dr. F. Ernest Johnson, director of the department of research and education of the Federal Council; the Rev. Leland B. Henry, director of Christian social relations of the diocese of New York; Halford E. Luccock of Yale Divinity School; and Frank W. Herriott of Union Theological Seminary.

ARCHBISHOP PRAISES SOVIET UNION

London:—The Archbishop of York, addressing a luncheon here on Armistice Day, gave his impressions of a recent visit to the Soviet Union and Germany. "I came away more convinced than ever that we in this country ought to take no part or give any support to those appeals which are sometimes made to us from the other side of the Atlantic by lining up against Russia and against Communism," Archbishop Garbett declared. He said that he hoped that British statesmen would do their utmost to prevent a split between the east and the west. "If there is a real gulf between east and west we are making preparations for another war in the future," he warned.

Dean Hewlett Johnson of Canterbury whose new book on the Soviet Union is reviewed this week in Talking It Over

TEN NOMINATED FOR LOS ANGELES

Los Angeles:—A special committee of this diocese has suggested the names of ten clergymen who have the unanimous approval as possible successors to the late Bishop Stevens. The report, signed by a committee of six clergymen and five laymen, headed by the Rev. John F. Scott of Pasadena, stresses that they are a committee on information and not a nominating committee. Also they present only the names of men outside the diocese since "clergy of the diocese who might be nominated are already sufficiently well known." The men named are: the Rev. John S. Higgins of Minneapolis; the Rev. Clarence H. Horner of Providence; the Rev. Girault M. Jones of New Orleans; the Rev. E. Victor Kennan of Baltimore; Dean Arthur C. Lichtenberger of Newark; the Rev. Robert A. Magill of Lynchburg; the Rev. Charles S. Martin of Burlington, Vt.; the Rev. Louis C. Melcher of Columbia, S. C. (who was elected a missionary bishop at the recent meeting of the House of Bishops); the Rev. Thorne Sparkman of Chattanooga; Dean Anson Phelps Stokes of Honolulu.

BISHOP SHERRILL VISITS SOUTH

Atlanta, Ga.:—Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill made his first visit to this city on November 10th, the first of a number of Southern cities he visited following the meeting of the House of Bishops in Atlanta. He celebrated at St. Luke's, following which he addressed the Auxiliary. He held a conference with the clergy of the diocese in the afternoon and in the evening preached at the Cathedral of St. Philip.

SEGREGATION MUST END

Nashville, Tenn. (RNS):—"If Southern Protestantism tries to hold to its position of segregation, they will be so outflanked that moral initiative will be taken away from this hemisphere for the next 100 years." Such was the prediction of President Mordecai W. Johnson of Howard University, Washington, D. C., in a principal address at inauguration ceremonies for Dr. Charles S. Johnson, first Negro president of Fisk University.

Dr. Johnson predicted that racial segregation in universities of the South will be breached "in principle and in fact" within the next 10 years as Negro students "knock on the door of all the professional schools of the South maintained by public funds."

"Southern Protestantism is already outflanked," he asserted. "Outflanked on the right by the Roman Catholic Church and on the left by Communism, both of which have crossed the line to establish brotherhood—Communism, the brotherhood of labor and the flesh, and the Roman Catholic Church, the brotherhood of the spirit."

Arguments For Return to Faith Offered in New Books

Four Two-Starred Books Are Particularly Suitable for Laymen Seeking Foundations

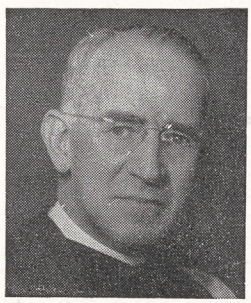
Reviews by Sydney A. Temple Jr.

Four new books offer for lay readers the current arguments for a return to faith. It makes one think of Alec Templeton playing the same tune as it would have been produced by four different composers. Whatever may be the particular "sin of our age" certainly the "sign of our age" is this grasping for a lost foundation for the spiritual life. Each of these is well done from its particular point of view.

The Sin of Our Age* by D. R. Davies, Macmillan, $2.00. The author of Down Peacock's Feathers continues to write interestingly and convincingly of the need for the orthodox faith. Characterizing science as short-term magic and decrying the loss of the concept of the person in modern doctrines of man in the mass, he contends that, "western civilized man is reproducing primitive mentality on a higher level."

While many will agree with his thesis that Compte and the Positivists have been responsible for much of the loss of faith in the western world, some will find his conclusions weak. The answer must be something better than a return to Medievalism, which Davies seems to revere and to a "prerational ideal." It smacks a bit too much of what a prominent American philosopher has called "lack of nerve."

Preface to Ethical Living* by Robert E. Fitch, Associated Press, $1.25. Haddom House Books, of which this is the fourth are published in an attempt to provide readable religious literature for students and employed young people. In this case the experiment is a success for the simple straightforward style should appeal to young people. The short sections keep the going from becoming heavy and provide a basis for group discussion.



Like the first book reviewed, the author fears the prevailing mode of relativism in morals as well as in science. Nihilism and the philosophy of Nietzshe are the particular targets for attack. Unlike Davies, however, Dr. Fitch does not depart from the rational approach nor deride science. "Our belief in the existence of the moral law," he holds, "is a question of evidence, like our belief in the existence of any other law. It is coherent with the teachings of science." This approach, following the Lockian tradition, is more compatible with the approach of American Protestantism. It runs the danger however of landing in Deism because it may neglect the person of God in its emphasis upon the moral law.

The Invisible Encounter* by Igor I. Sikorsky. Chas. Scribner's Sons. $2.00. Of the four, Sikorsky's short book is by far the most readable. The encounter from which the book takes its title is the meeting of our Lord and Satan in the temptation. Satan speaks again. The early chapters consist of long imagined quotes from the arguments propounded by Beelzebub in the three temptations. As usual the devil's words are interesting, even intriguing.

A deep inner dislocation of the moral and spiritual sphere of existence is cited as the main cause of the impending doom of our faustian civilization. While the problem is more interestingly presented than in the other two books included in this series of reviews, the solution is proportionately more vague. The book opens with a condemnation of the total wars we have known but concludes with nothing more definite than a general appeal for the return of something religious. Or perhaps the conclusion is that this return will not come until a more total darkness descends on the world.

Whereon to Stand* by John G. Brunini. Harper & Brothers. $3.00. If you're looking for something definite, here it is. This book for the Roman Catholic laymen is intended to be a modern parallel to Faith of Our Fathers. It begins with the assumption of an accepted faith and expounds the various phases of that faith.

Written in response to a request by a major on an army post for a book about the Roman Catholic Church, it will doubtless serve a useful purpose in that communion. There will probably be few readers of THE WITNESS who will want to have this book for circulation among their parishioners. However if any laymen are considering conversion to that communion the volume may be helpful.

CHURCHMEN IN THE NEWS: Bishop Gilbert of New York is one of sixteen Churchmen to urge better US-USSR relations; the Rev. Rollin J. Fairbanks of Boston is honored by the National Committee for Mental Hygiene; the Rev. W. P. Witsell is to retire as rector of Christ Church, Little Rock, Arkansas, after a most successful rectorship

IGNORANCE OF FARMER IS ASSAILED

Rochester, N. Y. (RNS):—Ignorance of the American farmer on international issues will lead the U. S. into world war three, Prof. William G. Mather of Pennsylvania State College told the 700 delegates attending the convention on the Church in town and country, meeting here. Farmers, he declared, "constitute the poorest informed group on international issues of any group in this country. The farmer has amazingly little concern for what happens to people beyond the local parish, and he is developing a strongly self-centered and self-satisfied point of view."

Quoting reports of the national opinion research center, Mather said that "a larger minority of the farmers than any other occupational group believe that our disputes with Russia warrant war."

The farmer's attitude, he said, compares most closely with those "of the poor, the less-than-eighth-grade-education group, and domestic and personal service employees."

The farmer is "unconcerned or negative" over the welfare of other American groups, Mather added. He quoted research center figures showing only 32 per cent of them favored a rise in pay for civil service employees, and only 25 per cent were for a law against discrimination in employment on grounds of race or religion.

"Those attitudes of the American farmer," he said, "give us considerable pause to think when we learn that in Germany the strongest support for the Nazi movement came from the Protestant, middle-class rural people—in other words from the German equivalent of the American farmer. If the farmer merely increases his traditional suspicion of the stranger and enlarges his unwillingness to take the time and trouble to understand, he will find himself and this country wallowing in the germ-ridden, radio active slaughter of the third world war. This time it may not leave his fields and his barns untouched. This time it may not bring him the false and fleeting prosperity it did twice before."

Emergence of the businessman-farmer has resulted in the adoption of the urban code of ethics in rural life, Mather said, adding: "The rural church must bestir itself or it will shortly be like King Canute, in the old legend, frantically and uselessly trying to sweep back a rising tide of immorality with a broom."

Mather said he doubted the validity of the assumption that the rural church is the farmer's church. There are more non-farmers attending rural churches than farmers, he said, adding: "The rural church just doesn't contain enough farmers. It has not reached the people it was established to reach."

He said the rural church is also missing "the growing number of people moving out from the city to the villages and open country of the suburban fringe."

Current change in the social and economic status of farmers had added an additional complication to the matter of the rural church as an all-inclusive fellowship, he added.

The rural church, he concluded, "must dare to say that God sent His Son to die for the Russian, and the Jew, and the member of the C.I.O. as well as for the Patron of Husbandry."

At the closing session of the conference the delegates approved a petition calling for the establishment of an agency with a large and diversified staff to strengthen the work of the rural church on a nationwide and interdenominational basis. Problems named for study were: overchurching and local church competition; the need for the reconstruction of rural parishes on an efficient basis in thousands of communities; the recruiting of adequate ministerial and lay leadership. Also listed were the provision of adequate salaries for ministers; the promotion of public relations with secular forces which are concerned with the development of rural life, such as agricultural colleges, agricultural extension services and farm organizations.

COOPERATION IS URGED

Boston:—Bishop Norman Nash, in a series of dinner-conferences with laymen at various cities of the diocese, has hailed the establishment of local and state councils of churches as a fine achievement. He declared that it is high time for strong churchmen of all denominations to work together in the present day of attempts to found nations based on ideals other than Christian.

"The role of the Church of Christ is worldwide," he said, "knowing no bar for color, race or language, and it is the most nearly universal peace society in the world today. Today's problems are too tremendous and the perils too awful to be met by any nominal profession of faith. We must have one world or none; one world that is God's world and in which all men are brothers."

In Church life the laymen were urged to play high part in the spiritual life of the Church, as well as on the business side. With regard to the current Church year's campaign of evangelism, Bishop Nash cited the co-operation of laymen with their rectors as essential for success: they it will be who can point out the focal points within the parish, reach the men who have lost touch with the church and win them back. "The Church must make known to a world in despair, what it is to live in confidence within the love of God as a 'colony of heaven'."

The annual autumn series of dinner conferences which bring the bishop into intimate, inspiring relationship with his laymen, is always sponsored by the men's division of the diocesan Church Service League.

INTER-SEMINARY CONFERENCE

Webster Groves, Mo.:—The ecumenical movement at the seminary level has been steadily gaining momentum in the central region during the past year. This fact was particularly evident at the annual fall regional conference of the Interseminary Movement, held here at Eden Seminary, October 30 and 31. The conference brought together some ninety students from nine seminaries of as many communions in Ohio, Indiana, and Missouri. Bexley Hall, where an active interseminary group meets bi-weekly, was represented by four students and a member of its faculty. Harry W. Vere, senior student at Bexley, who as president of the Interseminary Movement in this region has been instrumental in promoting its current growth, was continued in office until the spring meeting. Professor Joseph Haroutunian, McCormick Seminary, Chicago, the principal speaker at the conference, gave addresses on each of the three subjects under discussion. Additional papers were given on the nature of the Church by Prof. Oscar J. F. Seitz of Bexley; on the function of the Church in world order, by Prof. Carl E. Schneider of Eden Seminary, and on the function of the Church in the local community, by the Rev. Ervine P. Inglis, president of the Metropolitan Church Federation of St. Louis. Each of the three panels was followed by frank and vigorous discussion by the seminarians who probed into the underlying theological differences and areas of agreement among the groups represented at the conference.

EDITORIALS

Advent Season

THE Christian Church year, endeavoring to teach timeless subjects begins with a season which is to focus the attention of the faithful on the awful inevitability of a day when things as they now are will disappear and the reign of Jesus Christ will begin. Such a prospect seems at first hand to be just what everybody is ordering — no more worrying, peace at last, all carried away by that mystical feeling of "Christmas spirit."

But the Advent season does not strike the note of joy for many of us. It is rather a tragic spectacle of thousands about to be caught unaware with no darkness to cover their nakedness, and their armour of light dimmed by worldly short circuits. Suddenly "important" pastimes are useless. The tycoon is unable to buy and sell a thing; the busy matron has no one to pick apart at her bridge game; the "thriving" parish has no one to whom they can sell a raffle ticket; the nations have no more plans to be sold by diplomacy; the expanding business has no more people and foreign resources to exploit; the "Christian" has no more Jews, Negroes, and "communists" to bait. This just will not be enjoyed.

Advent is tragic because we Church people prepare for Christmas in the department stores. In worship or in social action we are not remembering the time in this mortal life "in which—Jesus Christ came to visit us in great humility." Actually the possibility of the Kingdom of God is so far from our ken that the Advent heralding of it is most like the sound of a bus horn through the window of a tenth floor toy department.

This "Christian New Year" requires some Christian resolutions. Men in their national Advent Communion might make such resolutions with the possibility of the Kingdom of God in mind.

"QUOTES"

THE evils which increasingly hold sway are spiritual in character. Probably fear is the strongest. We fear and mistrust Russia. The Russians undoubtedly are motivated by the same fear and mistrust of us. They do not understand us, nor we them. They do not trust us, nor we them. They believe we are strengthening ourselves by Pacific bases, oil pipe lines and atomic weapons—all because we intend to dominate the world, including them. Our creed of them is much the same. How can such powerful spiritual evils be fought and overcome? Certainly not by building up more and more upon them. Only by the spiritual forces of good can we achieve the defeat of such fear, mistrust and self righteousness. We must, in prayer, come to see more clearly our own fault in the sorry mess. We must not only pray for self illumination but for the increase in those virtues that may make it possible for others to believe in us, to trust us, nay even to love us. We must pray also for the Russian leaders and people that they, with us, may be instruments of God's good purposes.

The Bishop of Chicago

John Gilbert Winant

BISHOP Dallas of New Hampshire thanked God for "our neighbor and friend" at the funeral service for John G. Winant. He also in the same prayer gave gratitude to God for Winant's "great heartedness and for his broken heartedness," and added that "we praise thee that one so near to us has shown us the depth of the needs of the world." Winant's despair has caused much comment. Howard K. Smith, in a radio broadcast from London, wove the whole of the news from Europe around Mr. Winant's act. He said that many liberals, in that most liberal of all countries, shared in the frustration of the former ambassador. They, with him, were seeing all their stupendous efforts to achieve a world at unity with itself coming to naught. It had almost reached the point where even to suggest that the great powers get along amicably was just short of criminal.

Mr. Winant in his last public speech stated that "the amassing of profits by the few, and the soaring prices for the many, is the greatest threat to our domestic private enterprise system and the peace of the world."

In a sense John Winant dramatized the awful predicament of our world. He was an Episcopalian, filled with Christian idealism, and yet he beheld that idealism betrayed all along the line. One is sorry that the dreariness of disappointment so completely unnerved a man so needed in public affairs. But if his brokenheartedness can arouse a clearer vision of the issues of our day then his death will not have been without value. We thank God for his life and may he "go from strength to strength in the life of perfect service."

Life Comes From Within

by Vida D. Scudder

Sixth Article of a Series on Social Rebirth

THE law and the prophets must precede the gospel; we are ruefully assured that corporate life does not obey either yet, and our conviction deepens that only the grace of God can ever enable it to do so. Meanwhile, let us pay our respects to law on whatever level, for are not the principles controlling natural life before man appeared and persistent through history also ordained of God? Surely. Christians have a right to rejoice in the glories and harmony of nature; men need not be labeled Pantheists because they feel a divine spirit from elsewhere quivering through every manifestation of created life . . . only they should not call it the Holy Spirit.

It is hard not to be annoyed by what happened in Eden; do we not sometimes recall with regret the refreshing innocence of our predatory cats? But Newman said something to the effect that animals are as much a mystery to us as archangels, and I'd rather be a man, because man has freedom, while they have not. Of course man has abused his freedom. So sin has entered the world. . . . As a child I used to be resentfully puzzled by the judgment on Eve. For it wasn't greed that betrayed her and made her eat that apple, — the serpent was too clever to offer so gross a temptation. No, it was her wish for knowledge of good and evil; and isn't knowledge of any kind a good thing? I didn't see, and don't to this day, why it should be a sin. But as time went on I realized what the gist of the temptation was; not knowledge, but its use as power. "Ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." That was the lure to which she and Adam succumbed; not knowledge, but the way it is used. Power is a snare and knowledge is therefore dangerous, as the history of our poor race shows. Nobody noting how we have used knowledge down the ages can escape the word, sin.

Freedom had come; but man had misused it. For he allowed it to imply desire not only to express himself but to dominate other people. Knowledge and freedom both have their points, but we are brought up short, we are scared, in these days of the atom bomb. We will not sneer at either. But shall we not say that they need to be baptized?

And so do all the dynamic forces in the natural world. Let us never deny that they are God-given, though the moment freedom appears they can be abused. The upspringing tree, defying gravitation, the impulse of a man or nation for complete self-fulfilment,—what about them? In man such impulse has caused sin, but is it in itself sinful? Yes, says false asceticism, eastern or western. No, says our sacramental faith. Ours, as we said, is not to reject but to redeem the natural order. Christianity from early days has too often betrayed its votaries by inviting them into the false way of rejection. It is easier in a sense, it is certainly less complicated, if not less demanding, to reject than to redeem. The Catholic faith in its purity, with its profound and unique insights, has never succumbed to that temptation. Every Eucharist refutes it.

But redemption is a solemn word, in life individual or corporate. Individual salvation, yes; it can be, it is. Corporate? We question. Wheat, grape—the Bread, the Wine. The wheat must be ground, the grape crushed, before they nourish and quicken us. And if the natural order is to enter into the control of grace, it must be marked like every baby with the sign of the Cross. Only so can it escape the serpent's lure, only so expiate the arrogance which avidly ate the apple, desiring knowledge, yes, but knowledge to the end of power. For power belongs only to God; and with what self control, what acceptance of apparent defeat, he often refrains from using it!

As for freedom, it certainly needs to be baptized; under the control of grace, it no longer insists on acting defiantly after the natural law of doing precisely what one likes, but sings with exultation, "I will walk the way of thy commandments when thou hast set my heart at liberty." But no word is more cheaply and casually used than freedom today, and never were we in more need of semantics. The word has hardened into a slogan, a hard little bullet with which to pelt our opponents. If we wish to realize the predicament into which our carelessness has betrayed us, we cannot do better than to quote from Ian Crombie in The Christian News Letter of March 1947; for we seek current applications of what we say even when we've been talking about the Garden of Eden:

"The gravest danger to social health and harmony comes from the belief of the workers that opposition to their demands is clothed in sanctimonious phrases about freedom. No matter how you protest the sincerity of your belief in freedom, you will not be believed until those who profess moral standards preach the necessity of a more equal distribution of wealth at least as fervently as they preach liberty. . . . You will never convince the bulk of the population of the importance of liberty . . . until you convince them, by espousing their claim for equity, that you are not using 'liberty' as a catch-word for reaction."

"Liberty requires new definitions"; was it Burke who said that? We cannot read the newspapers or listen to the radio without echoing the statement: "The preaching of individual liberty is at the moment bound to be misunderstood by most people in this country," continues Ian Crombie. But never shall we urge or countenance the return of man into that kingdom of necessity which, as Engels said, preceded his advent. And we know how Eve's blunder can be retrieved:

> "Dare I trust you, Freedom?
> Hearten me with a sign.
> 'Dare you make the Sign of the Cross
> On your heart, and mine?' "[1]

AS FOR corporate action, we have seen how hard put to it the nations are to obey even law and prophets. We watch our own country forced, by sheer terrified apprehension, to such illogical pressure for increase in armaments and military preparation as weakens faith in our national common-sense. We certainly might as well shrug our shoulders at any idea of its listening to Gandhi; or indeed at its possible heeding of a new commandment, which demands chivalric abandonment of self-protecting fear. But wait! Obedience to that commandment is conceivably our only hope: for history tells those who have ears to hear or sight to see that without redeeming love, pure justice can never be secure. Slowly, very slowly, that relentless and interesting fact dawns on thinking minds. It might form an excellent theme for exposition in a Ph.D. thesis. But stern and as yet unmet is the challenge to discover how love can be translated into deeds.

We are in suspense. But while we wait, and seek, let us not be cast down. "Mixed, man's existence," and we have a right to dwell on some elements of comfort in our situation. Eagerly we note once more the selfless personal attitude which must sustain every vital corporate enterprise. To achieve mass pressure, not to mention mass revolt, or to carry out any constructive work, as we have said, men must learn self-effacement. Intelligent working men, chafing as they often do against the tyranny or even the disciplines of their unions, have to find that out, as do members of the Communist party. And how often they illustrate in their sacrificial zeal, often so touching, our reiterated theme . . . that life comes from within! For we were not sorry to notice that leaders who content themselves by enforcing disciplines always defeat themselves in the long run. Selfless aims, moreover, often govern self-regarding movements. Proletarians, summoned to unite that they may lose their chains, are assured that the world's future for all men depends on that abolition of class for which they fight and die. What pathos, what tragedy, are here! What themes for the dramatist of the future! And surely, even if the Communist and proletarian aim be pure illusion, the fact that it is entertained holds cheer for all lovers of their fellow-men.

There comes a crisis in any birth-hour. We are in one now. We must question, as men have never questioned yet, the possible advance in corporate life from control by justice . . . which we haven't by any means reached . . . to control by love. Can the life of nations, like all life in the natural order, be not only accepted, but redeemed? Frankly, we repeat, we do not know. Still we "groan and travail," waiting for our redemption. Turn optimist or pessimist as you will.

Let us be bold. . . . You have to "be bold" in order to say "Thy Kingdom come on earth." Only a Christian nation, a nation of men and women "born from within" can achieve social rebirth. No change imposed from without, by totalitarian methods, can produce more than temporary travesty of our ideals. But unless rebirth coming from within reach out to control social as well as personal conduct, civilization is doomed. Listen to General McArthur speaking at the surrender ceremonies in Japan:

> "Men since the beginning of time have sought peace . . . but the mechanics of an instrumentality of larger international scope have never been successful. . . . Balances of power, leagues of nations, all in turn failed, leaving the only path to be by way of the crucible of war. The utter destructiveness of war now blots out this alternative. We have had our last chance. If we do not now devise some greater and more equitable system, Armageddon will be at our door.
> "The problem basically is theological and involves a spiritual recrudescence. . . . It must be of the spirit if we are to save the flesh."

Basically theological! What an amazing, what a reassuring statement from a military leader! He knows what spiritual democracy means. We Americans have a right to think that we know a good deal about democracy as it functions in the political sphere; cooperatives et al help us realize how it could apply in the economic. But neither political nor economic democracy is worth much unless it spring from some deep source. It depends on persons; it finds its true being only in the Christian conception of personality. A Christian nation is one where this conception governs the majority of citizens; and of course, as we repeat, there is no such thing as a Christian nation today. So perhaps we should not be in too much of a hurry, as we remember that the new commandment of the greater love was given at the last supper only to the avowed followers of Jesus.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

The Offertory Procession I

IN THE early days of the Church it was customary for each individual communicant to bring to the Eucharist his own offering of bread and wine. At the beginning of the Offertory, after the catechumens had been dismissed, the faithful came up, one by one, to the Holy Table to give their oblations to the deacons, who in turn presented the offerings all together to the celebrant. The ceremony was quite similar in many ways to the custom of 'taking a collection' in Negro churches down South today. Instead of a collection plate being passed from pew to pew, the offering is received at the communion table by each member of the congregation coming up individually to deposit his own gift in the presence of all the worshippers.

In the latter part of the fourth century the old custom of the people bringing up their gifts began to disappear rather generally throughout the Church. People made their communions less frequently, so there was no good reason why the congregation should bring to the Eucharist their individual oblations if there was no intention of receiving them back in holy communion. The Eastern Churches substituted for the ancient offering by the people themselves a ceremonial procession of the gifts, which has come to be known as the Great Entrance. The bread and the wine are prepared for consecration before the liturgy begins, and at the time of the Offertory the prepared paten and chalice are brought in solemn procession from the sacristy through the body of the church to the altar by the officiating clergy. The Great Entrance was adopted also by the Gallican (i.e., non-Roman) Churches of the West, and survived in many of them during the Middle Ages, even after the Roman rite had superceded the local Gallican rites. Ceremonies die harder than ritual texts. The Roman form of the liturgy might be accepted, but older accompanying ceremonies linger on.

From France the Offertory procession or Great Entrance was taken to England, after the Norman Conquest, and became a feature of the usages of the church of Sarum (Salisbury), whence it spread to many dioceses of medieval England and Scotland. The Offertory rubrics of the Prayer Book made no clear-cut alteration in the medieval ceremonies, as they said nothing about when or where the elements were to be prepared, but only that they were to be placed upon the Holy Table just before the Prayer for the Church. The Sarum usage of a Great Entrance is therefore still perfectly legal in Anglican churches, and not a few parishes retain this beautiful and impressive ceremony. The details of it can be readily studied in Dearmer's well-known The Parson's Handbook.

The Roman Church with characteristic conservatism resisted the innovation of a Great Entrance, and kept the preparation of the oblations in its original, logical place, at the Offertory itself, even after the people ceased to bring with them their oblations. But the Offertory action came to be confined entirely to the sanctuary—the bread and wine being brought to the celebrant by his assistants from a credence table placed only a short distance from the altar. It is the Roman custom which is to be found in most Anglican parishes, and it is, like the Sarum usage, perfectly permissible under our Prayer Book rubrics. The difficulty with it, however, is that it has virtually eliminated the people from any direct and conscious participation in what is, after all, their offering. Of course, we know that the server or assistant to the celebrant in the sanctuary represents the people. But this is not always obvious, as the people are more often than not engrossed in private devotions or edified by the choir instead of being attentive to the essential Offertory action. In some parishes where I have had the privilege of being celebrant I have actually been served by acolytes who have not been confirmed—strange representatives surely of faithful communicants!

The modern Liturgical Movement, with its strong emphasis upon the importance of the Offertory, has attempted to develop an Offertory ceremonial which combines the salient features of both Eastern and Western traditions. These are: 1) the preparation of the Holy Table should be the essential action of the Offertory itself, and not anticipated by preparing the paten and chalice before the liturgy begins; 2) the congregation who offers the oblations should be actively involved in the bringing of the gifts to the Holy Table, if not by the offering of each one severally, at least through appropriate representatives of their own body.

A Word With You

By

HUGH D. McCANDLESS

Rector of the Epiphany, New York

"A Rose By Any Other Name"

I HAVE received a letter from the Reverend A. W. Farnum which brings up two practical matters with regard to the use of the word Father.

"In my last two parishes (I am now retired) it was the practice to use the term Father. So far as adults are concerned I noticed no appreciable difference, but with the children I felt that there was a decided gain. My influence over them was far greater; it surprised me to what an extent they looked up to me as their guide and friend, and how infinitely more approachable they were. I despise ecclesiasticism and professionalism of any sort and would have resented anything of an artificial nature. On the contrary, the fact that they addressed me as Father seemed to make for wholesomeness, kindliness, and courtesy.

"The following is for what it may be worth. Since my retirement I have been living temporarily in a rural neighborhood overwhelmingly Baptist, which is the only place of worship in this valley. I came fully prepared to be addressed as "Preacher" and not to resent it. To my surprise, practically everyone calls me Father and does it in such a way that my reaction is that they feel honored to have not Farnum, but a clergyman of the Episcopal Church, as their friend and neighbor.

"The point that I have tried to make is that the term Father, when divorced from bumptiousness and pride, makes for wholesomeness and the right sort of respect, and is for practical purposes better than any other."

It seems to me that Father Farnum himself proves his point; since he is a "friend and neighbor" to the sturdy, courteous people in his vicinity they will naturally call him by the title they feel does him the most honor. But if he despied them simply because they were Baptists—if he referred to their meeting house as a "conventicle," they would not use the word Father in this friendly way. As I walk around the streets of New York I am greeted as "Father" by many little Roman Catholic children; sometimes with joy, in which case I know that their priest is indeed a Father; sometimes with an awe that is unwholesomely close to fear, in which case I know that their pastor has surrounded himself with too much pomp and authority.

Dramatic Arts and Religion

By

REV. WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD JR.

COMPARISON of two recent pictures clearly shows the different principles of motion picture art employed by European and American producers. Both films, in their own way, are first-rate, although the European picture is much more significant. It is the Italian film, Shoe-Shine, which has been hailed by all critics as the best picture of the year. It deals with two gamins of Rome's street who, desirous of owning a horse, get trapped in a black-market operation and are sent to the reformatory. There, one is tricked into betraying the confidence of his confederates and becomes an outcast. In a tragic ending, one of the gamins is murdered by the other in a fit of rage while their choicest possession, the horse, wanders off into the night.

Like The Open City, this picture is acted by amateurs and directed against the bleak exteriors and interiors of post-war Rome. As a result the whole chaotic pattern that is Europe today is set forth with real understanding and sensitivity. Without dealing with philosophies or faiths, the picture boldly portrays the morally degenerate culture in which the people, largely against their wishes, are trapped. Thus, we find the reformatory guards acting with brutality and accepting bribes not because they are sadistic or crooked by nature but for the pragmatic reason that, only thus, can they earn a living and get their supply of cigarettes.

A word should be said for the acting in the film because, by and large, it is the best that you will see in any film this year. Undoubtedly most of the performers are re-living some parts of their own lives in recent years and, thus, they don't have to make-believe. Like its predecessor, Shoe-Shine is very grim but its honest impact, while not providing entertainment, certainly is educational.

The American film is of another sort—polished, rich and glittering. It is the comedy, The Secret Life of Walter Mitty, starring Danny Kaye and based on James Thurber's classic. As an admirer of Mr. Thurber's writing and satirical ability, I am sorry that Hollywood saw fit to change the script but, nevertheless, the result is enjoyable. Danny Kaye seems to be our only contemporary comedian in the old-line of good comics like Buster Keaton, Harold Lloyd and Charlie Chaplin and, like his pictorial forebears, he knows how to "mugg" without being obnoxious.

The precision of the directing, the acting and the production of this picture compare with those of Shoe-Shine as a new Cadillac compares with a Model T. Both, however, show motion pictures at their best, although for different reasons.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

ON JUNE 30, 1941, eight days after the Nazis invaded Russia, Hewlett Johnson, the Dean of Canterbury, wrote this to an American friend: "Final victory can never be in doubt. I do not believe that the Nazi military machine, despite all the ruthless efficiency and perfection it has shown, will sweep away the Red Army as the French and British, Polish, Dutch, Yugo-Slav and Greek armies were swept away. Arms and equipment are more nearly equal. I believe eventually it will be the Nazi army that will be sent reeling back, broken and defeated, to Germany."

He made that prediction at a time when ninety percent of the American people believed Hitler would crush the Soviet Union in six weeks. But the Dean had spend a good deal of time in Russia and his confidence was based upon what he had seen. He visited that country again recently. His findings are now presented in another book, Soviet Russia Since the War (Boni & Gaer, $3). It also is a report of what he has seen and he reffirms what he said earlier that "Russia stands for all that is progressive; for justice and equality between classes and races; for the ending of exploitation of man by man; for a juster and nobler economic order." Many Americans—perhaps most—will not like that conclusion. Unceasingly it is being drummed into us by press, radio, speeches, sermons, that Russia is to be feared and hated. And the campaign has been so successful that many hurl "traitor" at a man who says, "Not so," even when he marshals evidence that cannot be disputed. So we do well to recall the Dean's prediction of 1941. He was so right then that the chances are that such a keen observer is also correct in his appraisal of post-war Russia.

The book is based upon three months of long journeys; meetings with innumerable people, from Stalin and Molotov to the humblest peasant. "I traveled where I wished, saw what I wished, met whom I wished," he writes. And I believe he did, because when I was in the Soviet Union ten years ago I also traveled where I wished, saw what I wished, talked with whom I wished. The only time I was stopped from going where I wished was one day in Leningrad when I started unwittingly to walk into a mint. But no matter what evidence I presented to American audiences when I returned someone inevitably came up with the statement: "You saw only what they wanted you to see." These same people will say the same thing of this book by the Dean of Canterbury. They hate Russia for the same reason that Hitler hated her, and attacked her—because, as he says, there "freedom" means "primarily the right to food, to work, to education, to medical assistance and to a direct and responsible voice in the organization of daily industrial productive life and the conduct of local and social affairs."

However the millions who do not hate; who are persuaded that cooperation between our country and the Soviet Union is essential for survival, will find in this book the answers to the many questions being honestly raised. Is she recovering from the war? Is its economy socialism, communism or state capitalism? What progress is being made in science, education, culture? Is there religious freedom? What is her attitude toward her neighbors and toward us? Can we live in the same world with Russia?

Here are the answers, based upon first hand information, of any honest Christian man who believes "it is Russia's responsibility to understand us; it is our responsibility to understand Russia." No better beginning can be made in meeting our part of the responsibility than the reading of this vitally important book.

The Church-State Issue Starts Various Controversies

The Church Council of Syracuse Hits Back At Francis Cardinal Spellman of New York

Edited by Sara Dill

New York:—The Rev. F. Earnest Johnson, director of research of the Federal Council of Churches; Dean Luther Weigle of Yale Divinity School, and Tom Keehn of the Congregational social action council, have called upon Protestants to make a "fresh and sober" approach to the question of separation of Church and state. In articles which appeared in a Congregational magazine they deal also with such related subjects as U. S. representation at the Vatican and aid to parochial schools from public funds. Mr. Johnson, in dealing with the former controversy, said the important question was whether "it is deemed important in the new world situation that the U. S. should have sustained contact with the Vatican," and on tax-fund aid to parochial schools he declared that "the primary question concerns the adequacy of the secular public school program as an instrumentality of general education." He asserted that it was "unreasonable and harshly discriminatory" to carry the idea of Church-state separation to the point of denying free bus transportation to Roman Catholic school children.

Mr. Johnson also appealed to the Roman Catholic hierarchy to make "an explicit and convincing disavowal of any intention to alter the structure of religious freedom embedded in the constitution." He said such a statement would "enormously improve" a situation which saw non-Catholics "suspicious and fearful" of the Church's assertion of supremacy in the moral sphere and its insistence on the existence of but "one true Church."

Dean Weigle and Mr. Keehn took similar positions, the former declaring that "the separation of Church and state is not in itself enough. Experience has shown that a high degree of religious freedom can be secured without the separation of Church and state, as in Great Britain; and, on the other hand, that the separation of Church and state does not of itself ensure the full religious freedom of citizens or churches, as in Russia."

Meanwhile from Madrid, Religious News Service sent a report that a group of Roman Catholics in Spain have protested the opening of 34 Protestant chapels, denouncing the inauguration of the non-Catholic worship centers as "a violation of the constitution." The protest, copies of which were sent to all members of the Spanish hierarchy, asserted that while the Spanish constitution guarantees that nobody will be persecuted for his religious beliefs, "it prohibits proselytizing by non-Catholic religions, so that the religious unity of Spain may be preserved."

Also the same service released a report from Syracuse, N. Y. where Cardinal Spellman of New York denounced Protestant leaders by making reference to "the inferno of hatreds and bigotries of peace fomented by men in the clothing of shepherds," describing them as seeming "to have one principal dogma—discrimination against Catholic children, depriving them of public welfare services made available to other American children."

The address by the Cardinal prompted the Council of Churches of Syracuse to issue a public statement declaring that "we are not aware of such fomenters of hatred and bigotry of any faith in our friendly city. There are respected Protestant leaders who are opposed to use of public tax funds for private and sectarian purposes, including bus transportation for thousands of private and sectarian schools. The Cardinal's words inevitably could not fail to be construed as an attack on these men. The Cardinal appears to call men 'bigots' whom we know to be men of good will.

"Our forefathers sacrificed much that any child, no matter what his faith, might have the right to an education. To that end they devoted themselves to the establisment of the free public school system. Multitudes of the earth's oppressed have come to America; and their children, through the advantages of the public school, have been enabled to rise to the highest positions open to free Americans. If, then, Protestant leaders oppose the use of public funds for sectarian and private school purposes, it is because they believe that our American democracy and national unity would be impaired by any weakening of the public school."

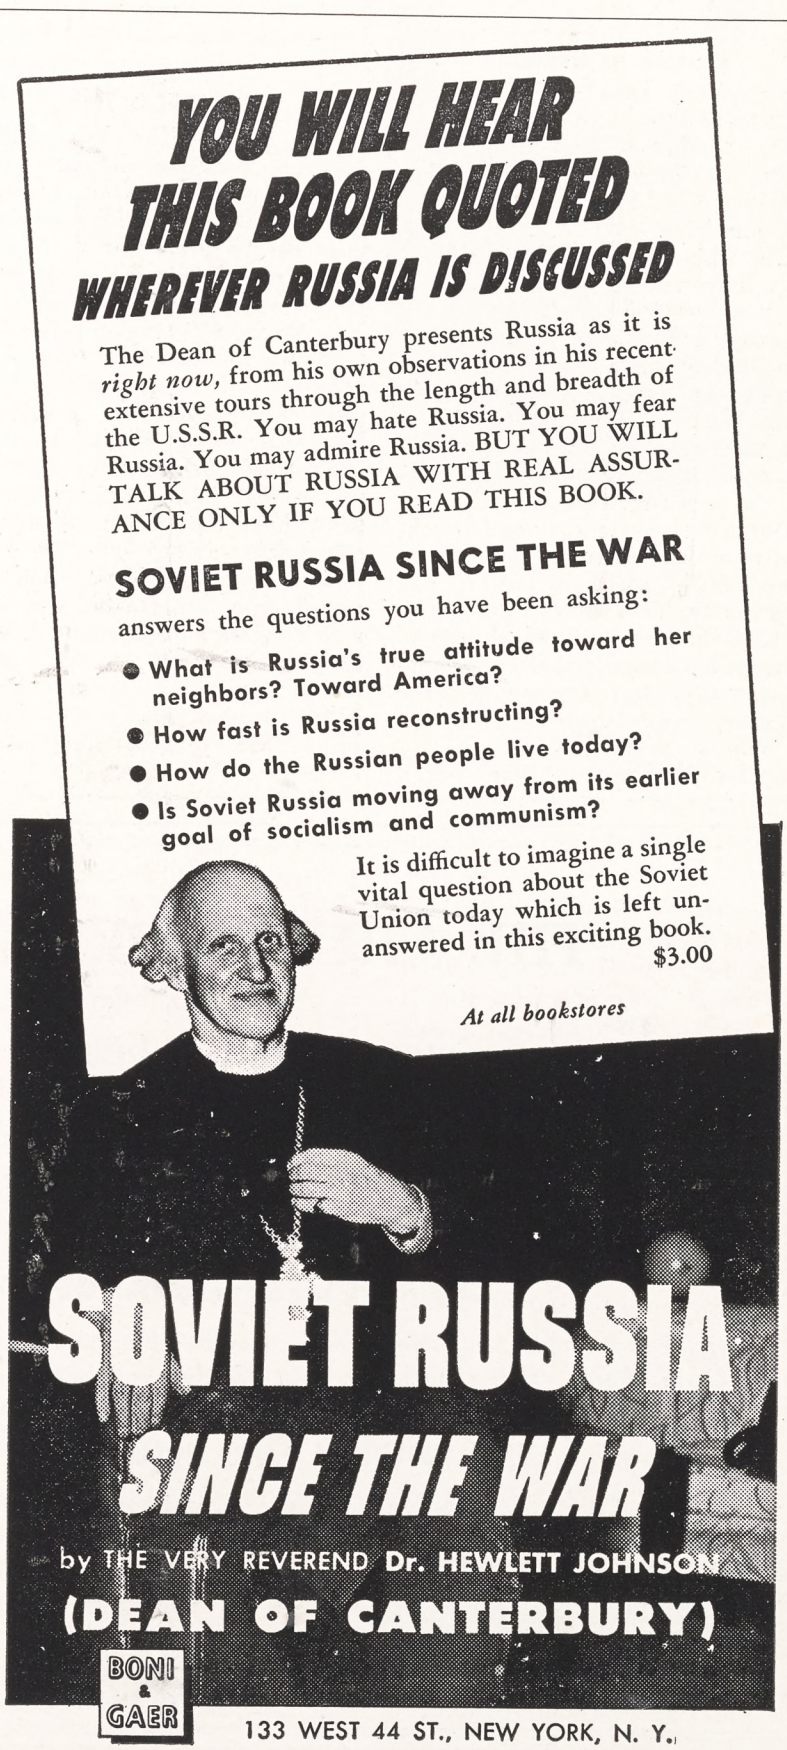
Service for Colleges

Washington: — Four Church related colleges, Hobart, Kenyon, Sewanee and Trinity are to hold a service at Washington Cathedral on November 30. The sermon is to be by Dean Robert M. Hatch of Wilmington, and the presidents of the four institutions are to have parts of the service.

New Professor

New Haven, Conn.:—The Rev. Elmer Jay Cook of the Hartford Theological Seminary has been elected professor of New Testament at the Berkeley Divinity School and will take up residence here July 1. The announcement was made last week by Dean Percy L. Urban. Prof. Cook has been a member of the Hartford Seminary faculty since 1936. Since his ordination to the ministry of the Episcopal Church he has served on the staff of Christ Church Cathedral, Hartford, and more recently as assistant at St. John's, West Hartford.



Hails Our Action

Manila: — The Philippine Independent Church is "determined to follow the more dynamic American standards of religion," Supreme Bishop Isabelo de los Reyes declared here in a statement hailing the vote of the House of Bishops approving Episcopal consecration for bishops of the denomination. Bishop de los Reyes admitted that his Church, also known as the Aglipayan Church, had been "stagnant and decadent," and said he expected that the decision of the Episcopal bishops would "bring a new era." The Aglipayan Church was founded 45 years ago by a dissident Roman Catholic priest, and is said to embrace 2,000,000 members.

Parish Celebrates

Yorktown, Va.: — The congregation of Grace Church here commemorated the 250th anniversary of the present church building on October 19th, when the vicar, the Rev. R. S. S. Whitman presented a class to Bishop William E. Brown for confirmation. The parish dates from 1630, with the present church erected in 1697. It is said to be one of the oldest, if not the oldest, Episcopal church buildings in the country. The church has been desecrated by use for many other purposes than that for which it was built. During the Revolution, Lord Cornwallis used it as a powder magazine; during the war of 1812 the British used it as a stable; and in the Civil War ("War Between the States" to local people) the belfry was used as a lookout tower while the building proper became a hospital.

According to the records of Bishop Meade, it appears that Bishop Madison held the first confirmation service in the United States in this church.

It is now a part of Bruton Parish Church, Williamsburg, Va., where the Rev. Francis H. Craighill Jr. is rector.

Guests in Harlem

New York (RNS):—Eight Negro families in Harlem played host to 14 white youngsters and four white adults who came here for a two-day week-end visit in a reversal of the Vermont Plan.

The white visitors, all from Newport, Barre and St. Albans, Vermont, attended services conducted at the Abyssinian Baptist church in Harlem during their stay which saw them living "normally" together with their hosts.

During the church services the white visitors, who have been hosts for the past four summers to Negro children from New York and Brooklyn, were thanked by the Rev. Daniel N. Licorish, assistant pastor. He said the kindness shown by the Vermonters had made a deep impression on his congregation by demonstrating that large numbers of white persons were willing to give true meaning to democracy.

Under the Vermont Plan, begun three years ago by the Rev. A. Ritchie Low, now associate director of the committee on church and race of the Congregational Christian Churches here, white Vermont families act as hosts to children from Harlem during the summer. The plan has since been adopted in several other states.

Bowie Hits Back

New York:—The Rev. Willard Johnson, program director of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, who refused to sign a statement calling for a fair hearing of a report planned by the seven Protestant clergymen who recently toured Yugoslavia, was scored here for attempting to "discredit" the report. Johnson, a Protestant minister, was rebuked by the Rev. W. Russell Bowie of Union Theological Seminary, New York, member of a committee that is requesting ministers throughout the nation to sign the statement.

In a letter to Johnson, Bowie declared "you fall into the same error which others have committed, namely, you are trying to judge a report before it is presented and to discredit it in advance because of opinions which you yourself have already formed."

Johnson had earlier declared the planned report to be "wrong in principle and deserves no support." He had also stated that the report "cannot possibly be objective" since the background of some members of the delegation, the nature of their trip, and the way in which they issued statements, "guarantee its partisan nature."

Dr. Bowie asserting that "I do not at all know how far the report will be convincing, and neither I nor other signers of a recent statement are giving advance endorsement to its conclusions." He added his committee contends "that these men certainly have as much right to be heard as those Roman Catholic spokesmen who have rushed into print with vehement and sometimes almost slanderous personal denunciations."

Students to Meet

Lawrence, Kan. (RNS): — More than 2,500 students and faculty members from U. S. and Canadian colleges are expected to attend the student conference on Christian frontiers at the University of Kansas here, Dec. 27 to Jan. 1. Several hundred mission leaders from 60 foreign countries and staff representatives of foreign and home mission boards will also attend the sessions, according to Winburn T. Thomas, general secretary of the Student Volunteer Movement here. The conference is planned as "the most representative gathering of Christian youth since the war."

Conference delegates will evaluate the program of the Church and attempt to find an effective answer to the growing challenge of secularism and cynicism in the world today, Thomas said. Church leaders will explain the opportunities for Christian youth to serve as evangelists, teachers and technicians in many fields and as clerical workers in mission projects.

Speakers will include John R. Mott, Nobel prize winner; the Rev. Roswell Barnes of the Federal Council; Malcolm Adiseshiah of the International Student Service at Geneva, Switzerland; Prof. Kenneth S. Latourette of Yale; Ellis Marshburn of the Home Missions Council. Congressman Walter H. Judd of Minnesota, a former missionary to China, and a militant crusader against the so-called Communists of that country, will be the conference chairman.

Pamphlet on Migrants

New York:—Well meaning efforts of charitably inclined persons who, when confronted with needy individuals in transit, merely help them to go on their way to some other place, are "socially destructive," according to a report called Service to Migrants, now being issued by the casework council of national agencies. The report is endorsed by the national board of directors of Episcopal Service for Youth (Church Mission of Help) and may be obtained free from the E.S.Y. office, 118 East 22nd St., New York 10, N.Y. Service to Migrants refers to three groups, the board explains in its statement commending the report. "It refers to (1) those who become stranded or ill in a community en route to a planned destination, (2) those who arrive in a community with a job or other expected resources but need temporary help, and (3) those who arrive after a period of wandering or are in danger of establishing a pattern of wandering. "The importance of free movement as basic to the agricultural and industrial economy of the United States is affirmed by the report, which also recognizes the desire of the moving person to better his condition. It stresses the fact that many are in need of help and counsel, and urges skilled counseling and consideration of each individual's problems and plans."

Nothing can better express the joy of Christmas than the music of beautiful bells. Borne through the skies on golden wings, it soars straight to our hearts and makes even more ecstatic the happiness that dwells there.

Christmastime is the time of all the year when we know happiness for what it truly is—when love and kindness and the pleasure of giving are the guideposts of our lives. That has been true down through the centuries: the darkness of doubt and selfishness has ever vanished before the brilliance of the Spirit of Christmas.

Down through the centuries, too, multitudes have hearkened to bells, and to carillons—and this love of bell music has never waned. Why not plan to thrill your community with the sweetest bell music ever heard—the music of CARILLONIC BELLS. Inquiry about this modern carillon should be made now if installation by Christmas is desired. Write Dept. W-28.

Russian Church

Damascus, Syria (RNS):—A plea for closer relations between the Russian Orthodox Church and other Greek Orthodox Churches was made here by Patriarch Alexandros Tahan, supreme leader of the Syrian-Antiochan Orthodox Church, in an interview. The patriarch exercises jurisdiction over 250,000 Syrian Orthodox in Syria and Lebanon and another 300,000 in North and South America.

Patriarch Alexandros said he was strongly in favor of all Orthodox patriarchates sending representatives to the meeting of Orthodox leaders scheduled to be held in Moscow next spring. The Moscow meeeting was originally planned for this fall but was postponed.

He himself had accepted an invitation from Patriarch Alexei of the Russian Church to attend the meeting, Patriarch Alexandros disclosed, but pointed out that the patriarchates of Istanbul and Alexandria have declined invitations, while other patriarchates so far have not replied.

DEAN ROBERT F. GIBSON
The Seminary, Sewanee, Tenn.

I am late in replying to the Higgins articles on 281 and therefore also guilty of our common human weakness which it seems to me has been spotlighted unfairly and unwisely in our national offices.

Since 1921 I have been in and out of the doors there; in 1928 officially, when I was prepared and sent to the Philippine Islands; and, more recently over the last two years, when I have had the most intimate and intricate relationship on my missionary appointment to Mexico. In all this time I have seen a steady improvement in a tremendously difficult task by men and women devoted to the highest of Christian responsibility. There have been errors and failures and human weaknesses, of course, and at 281 they would be the first to admit that such criticisms are not groundless. But my total experience has been almost the exact opposite of the impression given in the Higgins articles. Christian charity and humility are there in abundance, and money is not being wasted.

Finally, it is my earnest prayer that anyone tempted by the recent exposé to withhold his missionary dollar will note that I, at least, believe that nowhere in this needy world will a dollar given render a higher percentage of Christian good than at 281.

THE REV. CHARLES A. HIGGINS
Rector of St. Alban's, Waco, Texas

Bishop Barton's answer to my articles in THE WITNESS leaves me unmoved and unrepentant. But my articles are certainly at fault in leaving him with the impression that my criticisms refer to isolated instances such as those which frequently appeared in print before the National Council began holding so many "executive sessions." I trust that most of my readers realized my intent to criticize policy.

Perhaps you will agree that it is policy to deny to overseas bishops and missionaries the right to make judgments about the expenditure of monies which have already been allotted to them by action of the National Council. It is likewise policy to conceal from churchmen at home the budgets of overseas districts. Among other things, this conceals from us the true amounts spent for administration. It is also policy to restrain our missionaries from working in districts where missionaries of the Church of England are also at work.

I believe such policies as these are wrong and that, as a loyal Churchman, I have the right to express my opinions in speech and in print. I deplore the attitude that our overseas program is so complex that only a few experts are qualified to express an opinion. I am sorry that we cannot have at least one Church journal in loyal opposition to the policies and attitudes of our national Church administration.

I shall be deeply sorry if anything I say or write brings injury to the missionary work of the Church. But for the past twenty years the administrative policies I criticize have done incalculable damage to this program. I hope to be forgiven if my sniping should help to bring about a reexamination of these policies under the leadership of Bishop Bentley.

JOHN F. RUSSELL
J. F. SLEE
Students at Berkeley Divinity School

It was an excellent editorial on the Dean of Canterbury (WITNESS, Nov. 6). But you are too easy on our Church. It is not just a politic move to bow gracefully occasionally to the "left." Rome does that "just in case." The real argument is deep and a matter of belief at the center of the meaning of Christianity. We either believe the Church has a radical attack on the world or not. There is no reason to apologize to our conservatives for our taking the correct view. They are in the wrong Church.

THE REV. ERIC TASMAN
Rector of Holy Communion, South Orange, N. J.

The editorial Do We Dare to Lead? (Nov. 6) is splendid. I say a loud amen to all of it. Why our bishops and clergy are so timid in a simple matter of free speech is a mystery to me. Let's have more of these straight-forward editorials. We need them.

THE REV. ROLLIN J. FAIRBANKS
Director Institute of Pastoral Care, Boston

Bill Spofford's rebuke to the young couple desiring to be married (WITNESS, Oct. 2) is an unfortunate demonstration of how the desire to "tell people off" can effectively block an excellent opportunity for genuine pastoral care. Marriage is an opportunity to enlist, not dismiss, potential members of the Christian fellowship, to lay the foundation for a Christian family, and to consecrate a new home. It may have been satisfying at the time but it is a sad reflection of the deep compassion your sclerotic heart really contains. As penance I prescribe Matthew 5:46-47.

MR. D. C. JOHNSON
Layman of Chicago

I am grateful for the article by Mr. Spofford in the October 30 number devoted to the witch hunt. It is time certainly for the people of this country to wake up to the fact that they are losing their freedom with all of this nonsense in Washington and elsewhere. It would be a very timely thing if our Bishops would speak out on this whole matter when they meet in Winston-Salem, but perhaps that is too much to hope for.

The Federal Council Reaffirms Stand On Conscription

Accelerating Economic and Social Recovery Is Best Way to Avoid War Committee Affirms

New York (RNS):—Reaffirming its opposition to compulsory universal military training, the Federal Council of Churches declared here that "the fear of war can best be allayed and the risk of war can best be diminished by accelerating the economic and social recovery of Europe and Asia."

"The European recovery program now before Congress," said a resolution adopted by the council's executive committee here, "offers the United States an unexcelled opportunity to strengthen the foundations of democracy in the west and to improve the economic and social well-being of the western world."

The vote on the resolution was 24 to 18.

"We believe that substantial and adequate aid to Asia is a necessary corollary to aid to Europe," the committee added. "We are convinced, therefore, that the European recovery program and the implementing of a like program for Asia constitute a priority in American foreign policy. The resources and energies of our nation should not now be diverted from this primary task of reconstruction."

The committee pointed out that ten national religious assemblies have taken action opposing compulsory military training, and that no constituent communions of the Federal Council have supported the proposed program. Despite differences of opinion "both within the churches and among ourselves," and despite "our full recognition of the need for adequate military defense," the committee warned that "any effort to establish now a system of compulsory universal military training will meet with widespread opposition both within our churches and among a majority of the members of the Federal Council's executive committee for religious and moral reasons and on deep-seated grounds of Americanism."

The committee said constituent bodies of the Federal Council which have opposed compulsory universal military training "deplore the determination of this issue as a gesture of military power in the midst of the present tensions in international relations."

"It is believed," the statement said, "that to depart from traditional American policy by inaugurating at this time a system of compulsory universal military training would contribute to the further deterioration of the present situation."

The committee stated further that there is opposition among the churches to "the government assuming responsibility for indoctrination and discipline in the matter of citizenship since it has been the genius of our democracy to rely upon the home, the church and the school for such training."

It said there are also "grave doubts with regard to the moral consequences of taking immature youths from their normal relationships in family, church and community and putting them into an abnormal community."

The statement concluded with the reminder that the Federal Council at its biennial meeting in Seattle last December supported "the announced purpose of our government to work for a comprehensive system of disarmament."

"Little, if any progress has been achieved in implementing the provisions of the General Assembly's resolution on principles governing the general regulation and reduction of armaments," the committee observed. "We wish to foster no illusions regarding the early likelihood of accomplishing the ends embodied in this resolution. We believe, however, that if our nation were now to reverse the military policy to which, in peace time, it has adhered from the days of its foundation in favor of a system of compulsory universal military training, the effect would be further to jeopardize the possibility of regulating and reducing armaments by international agreement."

The committee also called upon Congress to give "quick and generous response" to emergency relief needs in the war-devastated and drought-ridden areas of the world. "Christian precept, humanitarian impulse, and sound public policy all call for prompt and generous assistance by the United States to the peoples in great need."

It said first-hand reports from churchmen who have visited or worked abroad testify to the urgent necessity of providing food, clothing, and coal this winter to the peoples of war-torn countries. The committee noted that the longer-range recovery program "requires careful consideration by the Congress and our people, if it is to be most effective," but stressed that "any unnecessary delay or timidity in the arrangement of emergency aid might permit hunger, cold, disease and despair so to ravage the peoples in peril as to foreclose the possibilities of an effective reconstruction program."

tary training in peacetime and all public grants in aid of private schools.

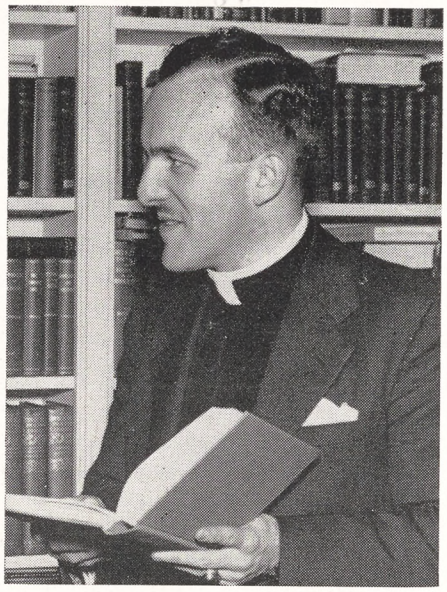
In other resolutions, the Council favored. 1. Recognition of the public school as "indispensible to the maintenance and strengthening of our democratic form of government and to the preservation of that basic constitutional principle of separation of Church and state," and adequate support for public schools at all governmental levels; 2. Passage of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner Housing bill as well as a state law empowering local communities to undertake housing projects of their own; 3. Planned parenthood; 4. Admission of displaced persons to the U. S.; and 5. Support of European relief projects, specifically CARE and Church World Service.

The need for Church unity was stressed by Bishop Norman B. Nash of Massachusetts; Bishop Lewis O. Hartman of Boston, head of the Methodist Church in the New England area; and the Rev. Isaac Higginbotham, executive secretary of the Massachusetts Baptist Convention and newly-elected president of the Council.

At the meeting of the Rhode Island Council of Churches, meeting in Providence, the vote on military training resulted in a 42-42 vote. The matter was therefore referred back to a committee for more study.

ANGLICAN CHAPEL ATTACKED

Madrid:—A mob raided an Anglican chapel in this city recently, smashing furniture and scribbling on the walls warnings against Protestant activities. Representatives of Roman Catholic organizations have denied that members of their groups were implicated.



RELIGION'S PART IN PEACE

Boston:—Religion's part in achieving peace was stressed at the annual meeting here of the Church Peace Union. Canon W. W. Judd, head of social service in the Church of England in Canada and president of the Canadian Council of the World Alliance, said that social justice was dependent on the recognition of human rights, which in turn were dependent on "our acceptance of the concept of man as the child of God."

"Human rights and dignities," he continued, "spring ultimately from the religious conception of man. Our conception of them therefore should be more basic than political, class, racial or narrowly interpreted religious sanctions ever seem to warrant.

"Indeed, the denial of basic human rights to individuals or groups springs from racial, national, religious and economic discriminations and this on the national level in all countries and certainly on the international level."

Canon Judd said dominant groups must strive to improve social conditions and must help the economically underprivileged so they "may recognize their own rights and prove worthy of them."

The Rev. H. F. Wienbauer is the director of pastoral counseling of the Institute of Pastoral Care in Boston, with headquarters at St. Paul's Cathedral

Elizabeth A. Dexter, who recently returned to this country after spending 18 months abroad as representative of the Church Peace Union, told the meeting: "Everywhere I went in Europe I met leaders to whom the hope of a peace based on the principles of religion has been and still is a shining light in the midst of the darkness around them."

Mrs. Ruth Cranston of New York urged the religions of the world to get "solidly behind" the United Nations, because the UN expresses "the ideal human unity and cooperation taught by our religious masters. It is that or annihilation."

Canadian Senator Cairine R. Wilson of Ottawa advocated that more attention be paid to building a good-neighbor policy among nations.

"In the golden rule," she said, "the basic principle of many of the great religious faiths, we have the solution of the problem of human rights and the assurance of social justice, for if we follow this precept we shall do injustice to none."

Asserting that it is now more important than ever to be good-neighbors, she said: "Religions have crossed national boundaries and thus established a strong bond between people of different countries and races. As we set an example of mutual tolerance in our own community, we may form a living relationship with other communities and through this move closer to that world where men may dwell in peace."

A NOTABLE GIFT

St. Louis:—Christ Church Cathedral stands in the minds of residents of the metropolis as a "house of prayer for all people" rising above distinctions of race and language and creed. Its ministry of friendship has been recognized before by gifts from people of other faiths. Recently Dean Sidney E. Sweet received a letter from one of his parishioners enclosing a check for $1500 given by an anonymous donor of Jewish faith.

Dean Sweet released the letter as follows: "I am deeply moved by the generosity and splendid civic, ethical and religious spirit demonstrated by this gift. The donor, who, incidentally, is of the Jewish faith, has indicated to me that he was motivated in making this gift by the knowledge that the Bishop Tuttle Memorial Building (the cathedral parish house) is used by many charitable, religious and civic organizations, dedicated to the administration of aid to the sick and needy, to the bringing of intellectual and cultural opportunity to the underprivileged, and to the creation of understanding and good relations between men of all races and creeds. He also knows and is grateful for the tremendous religious, civic and charitable contribution that you and Bishop Scarlett have made to this community and to the nation, and the splendid work which each of you has done to bring about good will and understanding among all races and creeds. It is for these reasons that this gift has been made."

Christ Church Cathedral, the first Episcopal parish west of the Mississippi, observed its 128th anniversary on All Saints' Day. It is today the furthest downtown of all the Protestant churches in St. Louis.

A Southern Clergyman Writes Of His Many Troubles

His Latest Difficulty Is Getting a Chapel Bought From the War Assets Administration

By C. B. Lucas
Rector of St. Timothy's, Atlanta

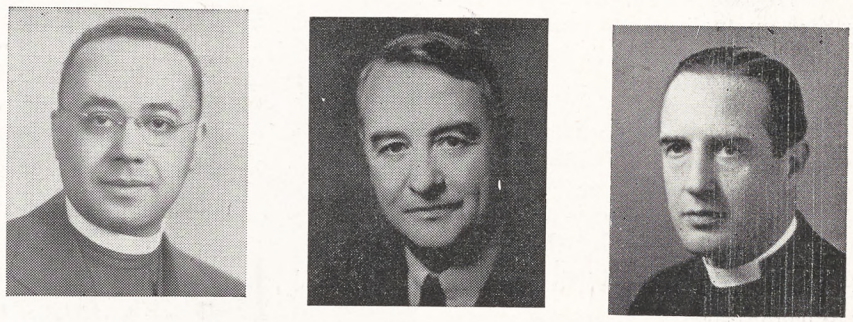
Atlanta, Ga.:—During the war the section of this city which we serve, Kirkwood, grew tremendously and since the war ended large areas of new housing have sprung up in this section.

Methodists, Baptists and Presbyterians and other groups have built to take care of the growth and reaped the harvest. St. Timothy's is still worshipping in a little frame chapel erected by the diocese 46 years ago. In winter it is a real air-conditioned building and on a cold day the congregation never gets warm.

St. Timothy's drew plans for a new church but they raised only about $3,000. At least that was the building fund when I took charge May 1946.

In August 1946 a Lutheran Church, most of whose members lived in Decatur, Ga., purchased property there and offered to sell their Kirkwood property to us, for $10,000. Our people were enthusiastic and promptly agreed to purchase the property. The bishop gave us $3,000. And we soon had enough promised to pay in full. But in the meantime another congregation offered the Lutherans $15,000. We raised our bid to $15,150 and were told we could take possession in September 1946. In September the Decatur zoning board refused to zone the Lutheran property for church purposes and the Lutherans refused to deliver their property to us. In January 1947 the Decatur zoning board finally zoned the Lutheran property for church purposes. But the Church which previously bid against us raised their offer to $20,000 and they got the property. So St. Timothy's lost a great opportunity for expansion.

For fourteen years our children have attended a community Sunday school in the East Lake public school. It is true we use the Prayer Book and our members run the Sunday School but it is 1½ miles from our church. One Sunday in September 1947 I had the entire Sunday School in the church and was told this was the first time the entire Sunday school were ever in church together.



At present children who should and would attend our Sunday school if we had one at the church are going to Baptist, Methodist, and Presbyterian churches. Our present chapel seats only 60. It is impossible to have a graded Sunday school in the chapel. It is impossible to provide a nursery school so young mothers can attend church. It is impossible to have anything for the youth of our church during the week.

Anxious to correct this situation our vestry went ahead to build a basement but building costs were too high and nothing was done. In July, 1947, the WAA advertised 11 army chapels which had been declared "surplus." We immediately filed application for one of these. Our application was in due course approved by the chief of chaplains of the army as required by law and he awarded a chapel located at Spence Field, near Moultrie, Ga. to St. Timothy's Church. We promptly paid the price set by the WAA and were authorized to take possession. When our contractor went to move it to Atlanta he was stopped by officers of the law who said the chapel belonged to Moultrie and they would not let any one move it.

The WAA said it did not belong to Moultrie, that it did belong to us and told our contractor to go ahead. He was again stopped by officers of the law. And again St. Timothy's opportunity to grow is defeated—this time by a controversy between the WAA and Moultrie. The WAA then referred the matter to Washington and they have ruled that Moultrie has no legal claim that the chapel does belong to us. However, in the meantime, St. Timothy's is suffering and put to additional expense.

In September the city school at East Lake asked us to vacate due to their very, very crowded condition. As the SS has been there for 14 years we ought by all means to get out—but we have no place to go.

St. Timothy's is an aided parish. Our income does not support a minister full time. With adequate facilities I think we soon would be able to support ourselves for the people are here. "The fields are white unto the harvest"—but we cannot, at present, gather in the sheaves due to lack of facilities. I have tried diligently to do so—but without success. The diocese pays over half my salary so I can give full time to building up St. Timothy's but until we get a larger church I cannot accomplish a great deal. I can get adults—but it's the youth I need to have better facilities for.

SUPPORT FREE SPEECH FIGHT

Newark, N. J.:—At a meeting of the board of Christian social relations of the diocese of Newark held November 17, the following resolution was passed following a discussion of the Action of the Civil Liberties Union concerning recent attempts to break up public meetings in New Jersey: "In accordance with the spirit of the resolution passed by the House of Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church at its recent meeting in Winston-Salem, N. C., in which they declared 'it to be the duty of every Christian citizen to guard for others the freedom of conscience we treasure for ourselves,' Therefore, be it resolved that the board of Christian social relations of the diocese of Newark commends the action of the Civil Liberties Union in arranging for the meeting at the Mosque Theater on Thursday evening, November 20, 1947, under the auspices of the Union as a protest against the violation of the constitutional right of free assembly as represented by the denial of a place of meeting to the American Veterans' Committee and other similar occurrences throughout the state."

GIRLS FRIENDLY HAS RURAL WORKER

New York:—The appointment of Miss Virginia Gesner as rural field worker on the national staff of the Girls' Friendly Society emphasizes the cooperation of the GFS with the increased concern of the Church for the rural field. Miss Gesner will live in the GFS Friendly Trailer and so become the "Trailer Lady" to GFS girls all over the country who have a proprietary concern for the trailer purchased and maintained through their mission gifts.

By means of the trailer, the GFS makes a unique contribution to the domestic missionary work of the Church. The trailer is sent where it can best serve, at the recommendation of the division of domestic missions. Miss Gesner and the trailer are now stationed in West Missouri as part of the Church's national town and country institute. The trailer will be used both as living quarters and as a mobile base of activity and training ground for rural church workers. Miss Virginia Gesner comes to the GFS with a rich and varied background of religious experience.

ORTHODOX BISHOPS REJECT MOSCOW TIE

San Francisco (RNS):—The Council of Bishops of the Russian Orthodox Church in America announced here it has rejected proposals by Patriarch Alexei of Moscow aimed at bringing the American body under the spiritual jurisdiction of the Moscow Patriarchate. The decision was made public following an all-day session presided over by Metropolitan Theophilus of San Francisco, leader of the autonomous American Church, who declared that "under present conditions, it is not probable that we will be able to meet the terms of the Mother Church in Moscow."

The bishops' verdict came twelve days after Metropolitan Gregory of Leningrad and Novgorod had left New York for the Soviet Union after having spent more than three months in the United States as the personal envoy of Patriarch Alexei. He had been empowered to effect a reconciliation with the American Church provided agreement could be reached on the crucial question of autonomy.

According to the bishop's council here, Patriarch Alexei is not prepared to accept the degree of autonomy demanded by the American Church. It was said the Patriarch seeks not only the Church's spiritual allegiance, but control over the appointment of its metropolitan, or ruling bishop, and over its material possessions.

Bishop Norman B. Nash of Massachusetts urged great Church unity at the annual meeting of the Massachusetts Council of Churches

Meeting with Archbishop Leonty of Chicago, Bishop John of Sitka, Alaska, Bishop John of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Bishop Nikon of South Canaan, Pa., Metropolitan Theophilus asserted that "the Mother Church wants too much authority, and we must do nothing to jeopardize the American citizenship of our people."

The metropolitan made it clear that what might appear to be essentially an ecclesiastical problem was "complicated by delicate overtones of international relations." He said he and his fellow prelates "fear that the influence of the Communist Party dominates the Moscow Patriarchate."

Speaking to reporters after the bishops' meeting, Metropolitan Theophilus, who is 74 and is recuperating from a serious illness, recalled that the Russian Orthodox Church, which first came to America in 1763, broke away from the Church in Russia after the Revolution of 1917.

"Since 1932, however, when American public opinion toward Russia began to soften," he said, "the hope of returning to the fold has flared again and again, but we are still unable to reunite under the terms offered us."

BUS BILLS PASSED IN MARYLAND

Annapolis, Md. (RNS):—A bill permitting transportation on public school busses of children attending parochial schools in Anne Arundel County, Md., was passed at a special session of the Maryland legislature here. The bill, introduced in the General Assembly by the Anne Arundel county delegation as an emergency measure, did not refer to parochial schools as such, but simply as "non-profit schools." It was passed by a three-fifths majority of the two houses and promptly signed by Governor William Preston Lane, Jr.

The bill authorized the county commissioners to levy and appropriate annually sufficient funds to defray the costs incurred by carrying into effect its provisions and for establishing new bus routes if, in their discretion, they were deemed desirable, and for the purchase of additional busses if needed.

PRESBYTERIANS ALSO HIT HYSTERIA

Washington: — The Washington City Presbytery, in a resolution passed unanimously in its annual meeting here, warned the American people "to be on their guard lest an hysterical fear of Communism shall lead us to fight that danger with weapons destructive of the treasures we seek to guard."

The resolution, obviously aimed at the House Committee on Un-American Activities, which has been conducting hearings here, was adopted at the same time the presbytery supported a similar pronouncement recently made by the Episcopal House of Bishops.

Appraisal of the Marshall Plan

by Paul M. Sweezy

Formerly of the Department of Economics at Harvard

I AM no expert on the Marshall Plan. In fact, I am so far from being an expert on the subject that I am not even sure what the Marshall Plan is. I do know that the secretary of state made a speech here at Harvard last June in which he suggested that it would be a good idea if the countries of Europe would get together and see what they could do for each other and then calculate how much help they would need from the U. S. That was a suggestion, but it can hardly be called a 'plan.'

Following the Harvard speech a series of events took place during the summer with which we are all more or less familiar. I will only remind you of some of the highlights. The Soviet Union refused to participate in a conference designed to follow up the Marshall suggestion; so also did the countries of eastern Europe, acting under Soviet advice and in some cases Soviet pressure. The countries of western Europe, including the Scandinavian countries, then proceeded to get together in Paris and to work out some sort of prospectus of what they hoped they could do for themselves over the next four years and how much they would require from the U. S. The exact figure of needed dollar assistance varies somewhat according as certain items are included or excluded, but the whole I believe is of the order of twenty billion dollars, or an average of around five billion dollars per annum. While this was going on, the U. S. made clear that in its view a substantial recovery of German industry would be essential to European recovery. Hence the German level-of-industry figures were revised upward by the U. S. and Britain, and at the same time the U. S., presumably for supposed reasons of industrial efficiency, vetoed the British intention to nationalize the heavy industries of the Ruhr.

If we take this background into account, what is now discussed as the Marshall Plan would seem to amount to a policy on the part of the U. S. administration—which may or may not receive the necessary backing of Congress—to provide substantial economic assistance to western Europe, including the western zones of Germany, over the period of the next few years. In short, whatever the original intention, the Marshall Plan now seems to be the policy of building up through economic assistance of a western European bloc which will include western Germany.

The Marshall Plan in this sense can be discussed from several points of view. For example, we can ask the following questions: (a) if the USSR and the eastern European countries had participated in the Paris conference, might the whole thing have turned out differently? (b) what are the chances of building a viable western bloc? (c) what are the likely consequences of the Marshall Plan, assuming that Congress grants the necessary funds? (d) what alternative line of policy might the U. S. pursue? I should like to comment briefly on each of these questions. I do not pretend to have final answers; all I want to do is raise certain issues for discussion.

If the USSR and the eastern European countries had participated in the Paris conference, might things have turned out differently? Many people, of course, are saying that they would have; but we may wonder, especially since they seem to be the very people who have all along been strongest for a western-bloc policy. Personally, I doubt it very much; my reasons are briefly as follows. If the intention of the U. S. government had really been to help all of Europe economically, as is usually maintained, it is hard to see why UNRRA was discontinued last year; why the recommendations of the UN special technical committee on relief needs after the termination of UNRRA were disregarded so far as they concerned the eastern countries: why the machinery of UNESCO's economic commission for Europe, representing countries of both halves of the continent, was not pressed into service. It seems to me that a valuable precedent of general economic aid had already been established and that machinery for carrying it on and developing it existed. I can only assume that the U. S. and Britain, by the way one put forward and the other took up the Marshall suggestion, were indicating that they did not want to continue along this line but wanted to start out on a new line. Secondly, reliable American newspapermen reported at the very time of the initial Anglo-French-Soviet meeting in Paris that the British and French were convinced that if any aid were to be forthcoming the Russians would have to be forced out. Here is what Frederick Kuh, a very well-connected correspondent wrote from London:

> "According to top-flight American, French, and British authorities in Europe, Bevin and Bidault knew that the American Congress would refuse money to finance any European recovery program in which Russia played a major part. Therefore, the same officials said, Bevin and Bidault had to await the best opportunity Molotov offered them to exclude Russia and go ahead without her. We are all assembled here."

That sounds quite genuine and realistic to me, and it fits in with everything else I know about international affairs in the last couple of years. It may be said, of course, that the Russians made it very easy for Bevin and Bidault. That is certainly so. Personally, I wish they had not. I think they could have put not only Bevin and Bidault but perhaps also some people in this country into a very uncomfortable position, and I would have been more than glad to see them do it. But that is altogether different from arguing that things would have turned out differently, or from blaming everything that has happened since on the Russians.

What are the chances of building a viable western bloc? Very small, I think. The countries of western Europe are mostly industrial countries. They have to export heavily in order to secure their food and raw materials, or else they have to have credits from the U. S. If they are not integrated with eastern Europe, they will have to get their imports from overseas and export to the same markets. Their exports will be competitive with those of the U. S., and I do not believe they can meet the competition or that the U. S. will help them to. In short, it seems to me that a western bloc can live only on a more or less permanent dole from the U. S. If we are preparing for war, that might make sense. But if we are preparing for peace it certainly does not. From this, I am inclined to conclude that the western bloc-ers are either criminally ignorant in their prescription for American policy or else that they are deliberately preparing for war under a smokescreen of talk about peace and economic rehabilitation.

What are the likely consequences of the Marshall Plan, assuming that Congress grants the necessary funds? What I think about this has already been hinted in the answer to the previous question. I think we will build up an unstable and unnatural western European combination which will only be held together as long as large-scale American funds are forthcoming. It will be a repetition, only on a larger scale, of what happened in the so-called cordon sanitaire region after the first world war. The area will stagnate both economically and morally; blackmailing the U. S. will become the standard occupation of statesmen; eventually, the whole thing will blow up in a series of civil wars, or the region will be the battleground of an American-Soviet conflict.

WHAT alternative line of policy might the U. S. pursue? The answer, I think, is simple; return to the line which was abandoned when UNRRA was scrapped. Use the machinery of the UN to work out an overall program of economic assistance for Europe as a whole, including the eastern countries and the USSR. As Oscar Lange told the Economic and Financial Committee of the General Assembly on 27, September,

> "We are all assembled here. We all participate in the organs of our organization. No special invitations are needed. There is no problem as to whether or not a country should be invited nor is there the problem for any country whether or not on such other political grounds it should accept an invitation."

Some people say that such an approach would not work. Well, the answer is that UNRRA worked reasonably well, and that since UNRRA was scrapped by the U. S. it has not been tried. I think the people who argue this way do not really want to see economic rehabilitation generally and regardless of the political orientation of the states concerned. They want to see only capitalist states rebuilt; and the UN, because it is not by any means an exclusively capitalist organization, does not suit their purposes very well. That brings me to the last point I want to make; it is, I think, the central point which underlies this whole problem and which it would be well to get out into the open more frequently and more forcefully.

If I am right, the overriding aim of American policy at the present time is to restore the world as far as possible to the status quo ante. The motto of American policy ought to be Professor Schuman's little ditty:

> Come weal, come woe,
> My status is quo.

But you may ask, 'Ante what?' Here American policy-makers seem to have several demands ranging from a minimum to a maximum. The maximum, I suppose, would be ante 1914—a veritable golden age in the eyes of our harassed rulers. A medium demand would be ante 1929—before the depression and before Hitler. And the minimum seems to be just ante world war II, with an accompanying calculation that next time we would be able to use Hitler & Co. for our own purposes. Or, to put it otherwise, our government would like it best if all countries would become capitalist democracies; but, since that is patently impossible, it will take capitalism anyway whether it happens to be democratic, dictatorial, or outright fascist. You may say that this is not so, and I hope you are right. But for my part I can not interpret the facts of American policy in any other way—the Truman Doctrine, Greece, Turkey, China, etc.

The Marshall Plan, of course, is a part of this status-quo-ante policy. If it were not, our leaders would be much greater fools than I am prepared to believe. That is the real meaning of the Marshall Plan. The Marshall Plan has become the leading weapon in the U.S. "arsenal of capitalism" just as lend-lease was once the leading weapon in the "arsenal of democracy."

There are probably liberals, and perhaps even socialists among you who will say that the Marshall Plan is not designed to protect capitalism but only to defend democracy and civil liberties. You have certainly been told that enough times, and if you are determined to believe it in spite of perfectly obvious and overwhelming evidence to the contrary I am afraid there is little I can do to disillusion you.

Others will say, "Certainly. We have capitalism in this country, and a capitalist U. S. needs a capitalist world to live in." That makes good sense; it does not fly in the face of the plain facts of the case. It is at least an intellectually honest and defensible position. But there is one thing I should like to say about it tonight before opening the meeting for general discussion. The world has been capitalist for quite a long time now, and in our own generation capitalism must bear the full responsibility for two world wars, for a devastating economic depression, for fascism and fascist crimes as revolting and senseless as any that history records. When you set out on a crusade with Mr. Marshall to preserve this system, please at any rate remember what it is you are fighting for.

Editor's Note:—It is our conviction that there is no issue before the world as important as the Marshall Plan. We have therefore invited a Bishop and a Professor at one of our theological seminaries, both of whom champion the Plan, to contribute to this discussion. We hope both will accept in which case their articles will follow. Brief letters to Backfire will also be welcomed and will be printed as far as limited space permits.

The Growing Demand for Change

by Vida D. Scudder

Seventh Article of a Series on Social Rebirth

SHALL we pause and seek a little reassurance? Let us look briefly at certain electric vibrations quivering along the nerves of the world; hints barely discernible of that new dynamic dialectically opposed to the natural order, clearly potent in the kingdom of grace, which we would fain see not only in private but in corporate life. We may appreciate anything we find the more as we reflect how tiny, how all but beyond mortal power to apprehend, are the mysterious hints of unguessed power discovered by our scientists today, for our joy or our undoing. One thing is clear; from whatever angle we explore this earth-home of ours which we take so casually, whether we move within nature or beyond it, there is nothing we can take for granted. It behooves us to live in perpetual excitement, in expectation of discoveries yet to be. How dull we are, what earthy clods, what adventure we perpetually miss, and shrink from when offered!

The adventure to which we are summoned by the grace of God is the most thrilling man can know. So let us ask what traces of it civilization presents in its collective functioning.

We have been seeking for evidence of motives other-regarding, in corporate life. And certainly if we look not at special groups but at the general situation, evidence of change is widespread. Speaking of democracy, we might pause for a minute over the evolution of manners. Isn't the type of courtesy we now effect a good instance of reversal of old standards and assumptions? The history of manners is a fascinating topic; it shows the haughty self-assertion decorously marking the etiquette of courts, the etiquette based on precedence and rank so anxiously worked out in feudal times, yielding to gracious self-subordination, which insists that good breeding always takes the lower seat and that greedy little boys must be trained never to take the best piece on the plate. A paradoxical change! An amusing magazine illustration lately displayed the older code in perfection; it showed a high-rank Brahmin scornfully dropping wages into the outstretched palms of humbly kneeling Untouchables. There is only apparent difference between such Brahmin dignity, polished and suave, and the impudent manners of street-boys; we perceive more and more clearly the inherent vulgarity in all forms of domination and all claims to precedence. . . . Are we saying that everybody with good manners is reborn and moves in obedience to the motives inspired by grace? Hardly; though it might be claimed that democracy has gone further in the field of manners than of morals. But life controlled by grace is really so exquisite, so lovely, that influences from that sphere steal abroad and effect changes not to be denied though fraught with danger in many ranges of outward behaviour; and courtesy is a pale reflection of profound realities. Are animals ever courteous? Can they be trained to good manners, other than forms of mimesis and docility? We could write a nice little essay on that subject, but we refrain. The foregoing paragraphs are a parenthesis in our treatment of social rebirth. We turn to more important matters. We must search more deeply.

For, in truth, evidence abounds of the continuous struggle of the law of love to control corporate as well as personal life. Looking at Christian history, at the small recurrent groups from the first communal experiment in Jerusalem who have sought to obey it, we have to be sure noted their recurrent defeat. . . . But why not? Is not the greater love in action always marked with the sign of the cross? Have we not said that the natural order, marked by urgency for self-realization, must be redeemed, even though it be of divine ordaining? Christianity alone surely among world religions, finds the triumphant fulfilment of life in life's defeat; its consummation on the cross. Must not a Christian group, like a man, be crucified? . . . But beyond the cross there was a garden where an awesome fact was met. No creedal affirmation, unless it be the Virgin birth, excites such scepticism today as the resurrection of the body; but surely that difficult article of the creed is our supreme assertion of faith in the redemption of the natural order. We have here no result of speculation, but the record of encountered reality. Like all triumphant dogma of the Church, it has deeper application than we know. It is relevant to our social theme.

Are we yielding to mystical broodings? Let us return to historic fact,—though the garden too is historic,—and realize several things. First, the indomitable recurrent effort to escape control by selfish motivation in communal life; then, the amazing increase of groups with that objective in our own day, or, we may say if we want a date, from the time of Fourier. Whether avowedly religious or not, such groups are inspired by defiant protest against civilization as it is. We mentioned awhile ago sundry significant ones reported by Mr. Orton; in The Commonweal (July 25, '47) comes a stirring account of another—the "Workers' Community" called Boimondau, in France, the Dauphiné. Founded by Marcel Barbu, who served a term in Buchenwald, it comprises Catholics, Communists, Protestants, united in a common ideal which "cuts across ownership" and has most interesting features. Not only in England, in Europe, in our own country, too, such groups abound, increase. Outstanding among them are those inspired by the Distributist ideal of return to the land, or, still more wide-spread and significant, the varied forms of the cooperative movement. Surely we should mention the Houses of Hospitality and Farm Communes directed by Dorothy Day and Peter Maurin, which report their moving vicissitudes in that valiant little organ, The Catholic Worker. All over the world are such silently developed centers, from Sweden and Denmark to Japan, to China. They hold their own often against secret stubborn opposition, their constructive power feeds not on ideological vagaries but practical wisdom born of experience continuous from the old days of the Rochdale pioneers. It is heartening as it is unusual to note that the Methodist Church has recently decided to put much of its business affairs under cooperative control.

But apart from practical movements, how wide the diversity among radical groups! Pacifist centers, educational colonies, Christian (or Buddhist) Ashrams, what you will. They agree, through all their contrasts, in revolt, direct or indirect, against accredited economic dynamics. Will the more fantastic among them, like all their numerous predecessors, fade and disappear?

PROBABLY. But in the slow cyclical movement of racial experience, faith may discern spiral ascent into the upper air. Already we feel a change in the very atmosphere in which we live. Silent, invisible, the advance in corporate life from the still inoperative law of justice to the waiting control by love. And far more important than these conceivably prophetic though often cranky adventures is the growing demand rising to the surface all over the world for fundamental change in the basis of our economic life. Noteworthy above all is the diffusion of demand for the social application of Christianity. Such demand has never been wholly absent; but it has been exceptional, sporadic, thwarted, ever since the industrial age began. Now it is universal and reaches us from the most unexpected quarters; a manifesto, for instance, comes from a distinguished secular group in Greece; one is romantically pleased that this group should have met in Athens.

"The series of failures and disappointments which is typical of modern times has made it clear that the urgent demand for complete social and economic reconstruction . . . can achieve realization only when the life of individuals and the life of society is saturated with the faith whereon Christianity is built."

What shall that "social application" be? Ah, there we enter a region of passionate controversy. To some of us the horizontal divisions in the Churches, left-wing, right-wing, center, with innumerable daring special flights of men or groups, seem as noteworthy and perhaps as important as the vertical ecumenical divisions we lament and debate. Perhaps the very fact of these cross-divisions has a unifying as well as a separating power. In any case the pattern offered is fascinating to study. And after all some of us find controversy more exhilarating than stagnant peace of mind; for to the twice-born, though not to others, it is perfectly compatible with love.

Social rebirth? We dare not say. Obviously "we are not going to be able to persuade our nation to take the path of crucifixion when even Christian leaders and Churches will not take that path. But should they not take it? What else can they do if the choice is between that and participating in atomic war. . . .? And if Christian leaders and Churches were now to take this path, is it so certain that war-weary multitudes would not respond? What right have we to say that they would not answer the call when it has never been sounded?" So writes A. J. Muste, leader in the Christian pacifist movement to Prof. Horton of Oberlin.

Birth is an awful process. We are passing through one of the most acute crises in human history. We prate of one world, but we are tossed about in welter of all the divisive forces which we trusted that through the grace of God we had outgrown. Terror, leading to self-protection; greed, driven underground, these have the nations in their grip. It is a crisis demanding that we love the Lord our God with all our mind as never before, as well as with our heart and will. Never was the necessity so great for keen, brave, penetrating thinking on the part of statesmen, clergy, scientists, labor-leaders, manufacturers . . . on the part of democracy at large. Well, we are all really trying hard to think, though our partisan press and our own lazy addiction to slogan-bullets impedes us a good deal. But thought grows no easier as it proceeds, only with that prayer dare we pursue our inquiry.

> "Enable with perpetual light
> The dulness of our blinded sight" . . .

Can corporate bodies ever invoke the new commandment, can they, with due regard to their responsibilities, follow the way of love? We are honestly not sure; as we wait breathlessly on contemporary events, we wonder. So many contradictions are involved! And when we plunge into those weltering waters we find, as Luther warned us, that the devil too knows how to swim. Bewildered UN! It has at least a disconcerting vision, of equal justice, inspired surely by the grace of God; but the code it professes to obey must as we see more and more clearly always be thwarted unless it lead to allegiance to a higher law; limitations on national sovereignty for instance are, while we watch, as stubbornly and increasingly resisted as they are imperative. Nor should we be surprised when we note that our political authorities with hardly an exception contradict in their procedure the aim which in desperation, shot through, we hope, by enlightenment born of grace, they have begun to profess. How otherwise? Until they realize, in some degree at least, the equal justice to which they are nominally pledged, they can not be expected to explore that way of the cross of sacrifice known to every Christian soul as the only way of life. There is a dilemma here. Let us not be in too much of a hurry. May we not profitably turn from arraignment of collective failure to inward contrition? Let us be driven by our social shame to scrutinize corporate action, in every issue it faces, by the tests thought can draw from the depths of personal Christian experience, illumined in the relentless light shining from Pentecost. So shall our "blinded sight" be "enabled" and our national path be clear.

But there is one corporate body which we cannot excuse from full allegiance to the sacrificial law of grace. Why? For the obvious reason that we Christians are in the long run responsible for its behaviour. That body is the Christian Church. The Church, if we may quote Shelton Bishop once more, is "the protagonist of redemptive love . . . that primary and essential element in salvation . . . with justice only secondary."

We must look at her before this series ends.

A Word With You

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

Brother: Sometimes used by people who are not really very brotherly, which spoils it for some others.

Doctor: (Latin—"teacher"). Fine, if he has the degree.

Father: One who is a member of no family so that he can belong to every family in the parish.

Member of the Cloth: Sounds rather limp.

Minister: (Latin—"servant"). If one really deserved this one, none of the others would be too good for him.

Parson: (Old English—"the person," i.e. the person who could read and write, and so forth). A tribute to the ancient pastoral ideal of social service. Favored especially in the South as a dignified but intimate form of address.

Pastor: (Latin—"shepherd," possibly from a root which means "feeder," and thus suitable enough for the poor fellow who has to eat his way into the affections of his flock). This should be a humbling title, as it imitates one the Good Shepherd chose for Himself. In order to live up—if it were possible—to this name, it is not necessary to consider people as sheep. Nor need one growl at the flock—a shepherd is not a sheep dog.

Rector: (Latin—"ruler"). It is a tribute to the clergy of our church that this word, which was originally a refined way of saying "Boss," has so much finer a connotation now.

Vicar: (Latin—"in place of"). One who does another's work; originally a substitute, sub-contracted clergyman. Is your Vicar doing what you should be doing?

Enough: Is what we have had of this subject, in my opinion. If you want to know what to call any particular clergyman, ask him. He will answer a civil question without offense. If he is the kind that thinks his ministry will be invalidated by your not using the proper "handle," or if you are that kind, perhaps you can compromise. All these names are good—none is insisted on, or forbidden, by any Church law or custom. It's what the clergy and laity make them mean that counts.

A Missionary Writes His Senator

By
PAUL B. DENLINGER
Episcopal Missionary in China

I AM a missionary of the Protestant Episcopal Church studying Chinese in Peiping, North China. Since my home is in New Jersey, I have taken the liberty to write to you about some influence U. S. Congressional activity has in China.

I live in a Chinese home, with a family that has 8 children, 4 of them now in the university. I have many conversations with them, and thus I am able to learn not only what university students think about China, but what they think about America. These recent student strikes have been very fertile times for the exchange of viewpoints and ideas.

These students, as almost everyone else in China, feel there is one absolute and immediate need in China, and that is an end to the Civil War. They say there are 5,000,000 soldiers under arms in China, exerting a tremendous drain on the dissipated wealth of this country. The lot of the lower, and what used to be the middle class gets lower and more wretched with each inflationary spurt. This country needs peace as much as it desires it. They also universally dislike the Kuomintang. The Kuomintang has become more and more terroristic in its one-party control of everything. American newspapers may be able to persuade Americans that the Kuomintang is not totalitarian, but Chinese who live under it know otherwise. They earnestly and hopefully look forward to the fall of the Kuomintang. But they also are universally afraid of the Communists. Very few students would be Communist were it not for the fact that the tightening grip of the Kuomintang leads them to what they consider desperate measures. Most all are afraid of the absolute power of the Communist leaders, and the possibility of Russian domination.

They are almost all embittered at the United States. They want neither right nor left, neither Kuomintang nor Communist — but a peaceful, democratic government. Yet every move the U. S. makes strengthens the Kuomintang and puts them further from their goal. They feel the U. S. has no real interest in China, but is merely trying to perpetuate resistance to the Communists, no matter what this costs the Chinese people. They feel the U. S. government is using the Kuomintang as a tool in its anti-Russian campaign, and they resent with bitterness the suffering this causes China.

Thus all this talk of American aid, loans, credit, etc. merely deepens a bitterness. It seems an anomaly to me, yet it is none the less true, that these vast sums of American money are creating large reservoirs of ill-will with which the coming generations will have to deal. Visits like the recent one of Rep. Walter Judd have created sores which will take a long time to heal, as the sarcasm and cartoons of the Chinese press clearly evidence.

This whole Chinese reaction to present American congressional attitudes is of more than academic or patriotic interest to me. I am in China attempting to associate with Chinese students in such a fashion that they may learn of Jesus Christ and become Christians. The bitterness that present American attitudes cause is a considerable barrier.

I have written to you because I do not appreciate Congressional actions that lead to bitterness between Chinese and Americans, especially when it is questionable whether these actions are really for the best interest of the U. S.

This letter was written to Senator H. Alexander Smith of New Jersey on November 10, a copy being sent by air to THE WITNESS for publication.

Conference Held To Consider Lack of Negro Clergy

There Are But Seventeen Negroes Training At Present for Ministry of Entire Church

Edited by Sara Dill

Washington:—The Rev. Tollie L. Caution, National Council secretary for Negro work, called a biracial group together here to confer on the "serious lack of Negro clergymen to fill the many vacant pulpits throughout the Church." It was stated that there can be no hope for an early solution of the problem when there are but seventeen Negro candidates enrolled in all the theological seminaries of the Church. Of these, eight are studying at the Bishop Payne Divinity School, a segregated seminary.

The conference included the Rev. Messrs. Jesse Anderson, Lloyd M. Alexander, J. Clemens Kolb, Cedric E. Mills, J. Alvin Russell, Shelton Hale Bishop, John M. Burgess, Matthew W. Davis, Kenneth DeP. Hughes, Richard B. Martin; also Joseph W. Nicholson, Miss Dorothy Wilson and Miss Ellen Gammack.

The conference recognized "an alarming situation arising from the suspicion in many places, that there is a lack of quality in many of the men and women who are now being attracted to the ministry and work of the Episcopal Church." The problem as stated was "not merely to get men and women, but to get the best men and women for the Church's work." The group urged that high standards shall be maintained and that only men and women of the highest moral and intellectual fitness be accepted as candidates for holy orders and for educational work.

The conference reaffirmed a resolution adopted last April by the biracial subcommittee which defined a policy offering "opportunities to all, irrespective of race, wherever the missionary enterprise is carried on," and urging that there be brought before Negro youth the many opportunities for service and employment within the Church.

Problems complicating the present situation were discussed including the poor stipends of mission clergy. Suggestions for recruiting were made, these including bringing the claims of the Church before young people before they reach college age; the use of high school vocational conferences; establishment of a norm to aid selection of people for the ministry or for other work in the Church; a job analysis setting forth the specific work of the ministry; a similar job analysis for women workers; greater care in selection of students to attend the life and work vocational conference at Fort Valley, Ga.; summer conferences to be separated, youth from adults, and Church work presented forcefully to the youth groups; training of key faculty members in schools and colleges to aid in recruiting; use of teams of speakers; extension of Canterbury Clubs to more Negro colleges.

Social Workers Meet

Denver:—About fifty social workers who are Episcopalians attended a celebration of the holy communion, held at St. John's Cathedral in connection with the state conference of social work. Bishop Ingley was celebrant. A breakfast was held following the service at which the Rev. J. Arnold Purdie, of the national Church social service staff, was the speaker. He spent nine days in the state studying and making recommendations on a number of diocesan problems.

Rector Broadcasts

New York:—The Rev. Wendell Phillips, rector of Christ Church, Rye, N. Y., is now giving a series of broadcasts over WJZ and affiliated stations each Tuesday at 8:45 a.m. and 11:30 p.m. They continue through March.

Students Offer Play

New York:—Students at the General Seminary are to present T. S. Eliot's Murder in the Cathedral, December 3, 5, and 6. The play is linked with the whole missionary program of the student body, the proceeds being devoted to an annual missionary budget of nearly $4,000, more than half of which is raised through pledges of students and faculty. These missionary funds are expended partly in overseas work and partly at home. By arrangement with the National Council, the missionary society provides the salary of the priest-in-charge at St. Francis' Mission, Upi, in the Philippine Islands, a mission staffed by three graduates of the Seminary. At home, the students, using the gymnasium and other facilities of the Seminary, have formed five group of boys of New York's Chelsea area in boys' clubs. One of these groups constitutes the "released-time" Church School of the neighborhood which students manage in co-operation with St. Peter's Church, Chelsea.

These ventures are closely related to the regular weekly meeting of the student missionary society, one of the aims of which is to present to men the differing missionary vocations within that of the ministry itself. Speakers discuss rural missions, college and other educational work, problems of the Church's clerical and institutional responsibilities, special opportunities overseas, and other tasks before the missionary Church today. A curriculum background for the whole program is provided in the required missions course. Here lectures by members of the faculty are supplemented by those of guest lecturers on aspects of the work of our own Church. Recent speakers on these special fields have included the Bishops of Honolulu, Anking, Haiti, Puerto Rico, the Presiding Bishop, the Bishop of Maine, Mrs. Sherman, Dr. Wieland and other departmental officers of the National Council, and a number of missionaries on furlough.

Consecrate New Church

Chicago:—St. Paul's-by-the-Lake, Roger Park, was consecrated on November 2 by Bishop Conkling, having wiped out a debt of $55,000. The rector of this most northerly of Chicago's parishes is the Rev. Charles T. Hull whose fine leadership over a long period of years is largely responsible for its growth.

Film Library

Detroit:—For some years, it has been the custom in the diocese of Michigan for the children of the Church schools to make an offering during the season of Advent, for the use of the bishop of the diocese in any way he may see fit to designate. For 1947, the bishop's Advent offering will be used to purchase projectors and a film library for use throughout the diocese.

of visual education equipment in the training of the children and youth of the Church. In a note to parents and teachers the Church school service program committee (which sponsors the bishop's Advent offering) states, "Many small parishes and missions which cannot afford their own visual education equipment and materials would make good use of them if they were available close by. Therefore the diocese proposes, through the bishop's Advent offering, greatly to expand its library of film strips and slides, to place slide projectors at several points in the diocese and a sound projector at the most strategic point outside Detroit."

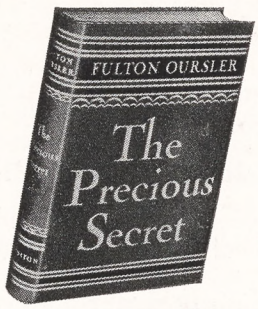
Day of Prayer

London: — Churches in England and in India will observe a special day of prayer this Saturday for the peaceful settlement of India's problems. The appeal in England was signed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Archbishop of York, the Moderator of the Church of Scotland and the Moderator of the Free Church Council.

Bishop Walters Awarded

Chicago:—The head of the Church of the East and of the Assyrians, Patriarch Mar Shimun, announced last week that the Cross of St. Thomas had been awarded to Bishop Sumner Walters of San Joaquin for his championship of the Assyrian people. Bishop Walters recently obtained the signatures of most of the bishops of the Episcopal Church to a protest, addressed to the state department in Washington, against abandonment of the Assyrians to the mercy of the Moslems in Iraq.

Long Way to Church



Bage, Brazil: — Seventy-nine-year-old Mrs. Benigna Asso made a 300-mile plane flight to attend the celebration of the 49th anniversary of the founding of Christ Church, Jaguarao, Brazil. She is the widow of the donor of the church property. Though she now lives in the State capital of Porto Alegre, she determined to be present for the ceremonies of the parish anniversary observance, and made the flight on her own initiative. She was the honored guest at all functions, including the unveiling of a picture of the first rector, the Rev. Vincent Brandi, which now hangs in the parish house.

Joseph Fletcher of the Episcopal Theological School declared in an address at the Old South Church here. He said "More than two-thirds of the membership of this Church are in the low income brackets, while only 10 per cent are in the upper salary brackets and earn more than $6,900 per year.

"Members of the Protestant churches on the other hand are largely in the white collar classes with only one-third of their membership in the lower income group. One-third of the Protestant Church members can be classified among the higher income brackets and one-third are among the so-called middle group and earn incomes of from $2,500 to $6,900 per year. It is no secret that Roman Catholic bishops boast that none among the hierarchy of the Church had a father who was a college graduate."

Prof. Fletcher said the Roman Church is the real Church of the workers in the United States because more of its members are workers and it shows more interest in the problems of workers and does more about solving their problems.

"We have reached a high degree of democracy in our political life and in our religious life, but we have not achieved an equally high degree of democracy in our economic life," the professor said.

On the Books

Columbus, O. (RNS):—Only five per cent of Columbus residents admit having no religious affiliation or preference, and 74 per cent of the area's residents are either members of or prefer Protestant churches, a partial report on a religious census taken in the metropolitan area discloses.

Reports based on a canvas of 68,512 homes show that:

82,771 persons have a Protestant membership or preference in the city.

21,640 persons have a Protestant membership or preference elsewhere.

26,962 persons have a non-Protestant membership or preference, of whom approximately nine-tenths are Roman Catholic and one-tenth are Jews.

7,056 have no religious preference.

The volunteer census workers, representing most of the city's Protestant denominations, were declined information at only 1,309 homes, Donald Timerman, executive secretary of the Franklin County Council of Churches, reported.

He estimated more than 100,000 homes will be included in the final report on the census, which was undertaken to locate those who have no church affiliation and bring them into the church under a fellowship-evangelism program.

THE NEW BOOKS

SYDNEY A. TEMPLE, Book Editor
Excellent Good *Fair

So many books are reviewed which are just all right that one begins to wonder whether three stars are ever used, then all at once the column begins to look like the milky way. Unfortunately such a state cannot last, nor even recur very often with the number of religious books which are being ground out of the mill. Any one of these volumes can be heartily recommended for Advent reading:

_The Pastoral Epistles_ by Burton Scott Easton, Scribners, $3.00. Presented in a form which makes for easy reference if this volume is to be used occasionally to enlighten certain passages, the commentary is presented with such lucidity and easy flow that it reads like one essay. You will want to take it up and read through from the introduction to the word studies without break. The pastor becomes real to the reader as does the opposition teaching and practices of the Gnostics, the personality and problems of Timothy and Titus, and the general picture of the early Church against which these practical words of religion were written. Lacking the mysticism of Paul the Pastor has practical words which, as Dr. Easton says, concern tasks which are in large measure those of all pastors everywhere and are applicable to congregations at any time or in any place.

When W. F. Howard set out to write on the theology of the fourth gospel he found that it was necessary to establish a position on the authorship of the work before he could consider fairly the importance of the teaching. The same case holds in the study of the pastoral epistles. In addition to a simple but complete introductory essay on authorship Dr. Easton has a double commentary on each section of the text, the first being a straight explanation, the second a discussion from the point of view of the question of authorship. Rather than making for confusion this actually improves the commentary by throwing a double light on every text.

This is a book to be bought, read, used in sermon preparation, and reused time and time again.

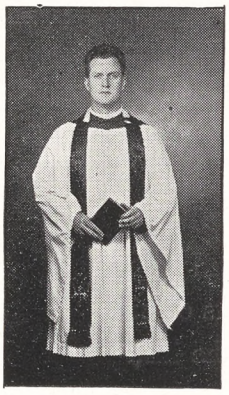
No one is better qualified than the president of Hua Chung University, one of the many institutions that moved thousands of miles into the interior to escape the Japanese. He knows well the Orient and the Occident and is both an authority on Chinese philosophy and a devout Christian.

Dr. Wei is sure that Christianity has nothing to fear from close contact with Eastern cultures but has everything to gain. He is positive that there is much that is congenial in Chinese culture for the Christian Gospel and that the East needs the very best that we can share with them.



In five chapters the author covers a vast field, dealing with Christianity and Chinese culture, and gives a clear analysis of Confucianism, Buddhism and Taoism in relation to Chinese history and culture. Because of the author's thorough knowledge of his subject and his mastery of interesting, readable English, there is no recent book of comparable value.

In his final chapter there are many practical suggestions for effective missionary work in China. Since the social genius of the Chinese is found in "the small compact community of intimate personal relationships," Dr. Wei advocates the formation of small "church cells" of thirty to fifty families. These should worship in a house like the early Christians, and should have no paid ministers although volunteers should be ordained after proper

The Reverend
Frederick W. Kates

MORNING, NOON, AND NIGHT

By Frederick Ward Kates

Here is a beautiful devotional book that men and women from all walks of life will want to read. It has no other purpose, than to teach us how to spend each Morning, Noon, and Night as Christians.

The book consists of seven short meditations three for MORNING, three for NOON, and one for NIGHT. After each meditation are fitting prayers to sum up the message of each meditation.

"What is ours to do is only this: to do the best and the wisest and the highest that we can, according to our understanding of the mind of Christ and the will of God at the moment, and then to leave all the rest, and to commit all the rest to Him." — Frederick Ward Kates training and experience.

In addition to the local cells, there should be centers of Christian social service and schools and colleges. Since pilgrimage is a great religious institution in the East, Dr. Wei would like to have appropriate places selected to become Christian shrines, where beautiful cathedrals might be erected, not in the city, but out in the country where pilgrims might come for worship and quiet retreats. On great festivals there should be "religious plays, story-telling, exhibits, fairs, torch-light processions."

Documents of the Christian Church selected and edited by Henry Bettenson. Oxford $1.75. Just when a new series of The Fathers of the Church is being issued at $4.00 per volume the Oxford Press brings out a compendium covering selections from the Church documents from Tacitus in the first century to Orthodox encyclicals on Anglican Orders issued in 1922. And all for $1.75. The most enthusiastic comment that your reviewer can give is to mark it a 3-star book. If the policy would allow more it should certainly be marked 5-stars.

This little volume is worth a small library of source volumes, giving the pertinent sections of original documents from Pelagius on Human Freedom to Aquinas' defense of the Inquisition. All the creeds are here which led up to our two creeds as are the pertinent quotations from the opposition and heretical parties. The Reformation on the continent and in England is well represented and John Keble's Assize Sermon is there. There seems to be no reason why any interested Anglican, priest or layman, should be without this little jewel of a volume. And all for $1.75.

Physicians of the Soul, A History of Pastoral Counseling. By Charles F. Kemp, Macmillan, $2.75.

Believing that a knowledge of the history and backgrounds of pastoral counseling will give perspective, inspiration and guidance to the counselor, Charles Kemp has made this survey of the movements, personalities and literature in the field of pastoral counseling. In rapid narrative style, Mr. Kemp has written this story of "man's humanity to man" to support his thesis that this helpful ministry is of first rate importance in the work of the minister. After a brief reference to religious leadership in the pre-Christian era, the author examines the records of some leaders in the Christian Church pointing out their significance as pastors. Even such men as Paul, Chrysostom, Luther, Wesley, Brooks, Beecher, Bushnell, Drummond, Moody, and Gladden were pastors first, preachers second.

The rise of psychology, and its related sciences, is traced briefly in order to show its heavy influence upon pastoral counseling. A history of the Roman Catholic confessional, and the accounts of Faith healing, Christian Science, and similar cults are admirable for their brevity and comprehensiveness. In addition to abundant references throughout the work to the important books on pastoral counseling there is a chapter containing short reviews of the significant books that have appeared in the field since World War I. Mr. Kemp's book will undoubtedly receive a hearty welcome from everybody who has opportunity to exercise the helpful ministry of pastoral counseling.

MISS GERTRUDE ROBERTS
Churchwoman of Long Island

Ordinarily I enjoy THE WITNESS and profit by reading it. But the issue of October 30 was spoiled for me by the unfriendly review of Bishop DeWolfe's book on marriage, written by Mr. Wells. If it was impossible to say good things about the book I think it would have been better to say nothing at all. Our Bishop of Long Island is a sincere and good man and deserves better treatment.

* * *

MR. L. C. PYLE
Churchman of New York

The Bishops are surely to be congratulated on the excellent statement directed at the Congressional Committee on Un-American Activities. Every decent American I am sure was thoroughly ashamed of the antics of this investigation of the Hollywood people. But what we need to know is that the committee must be discontinued at once or we will find that all of us will soon lose our cherished freedoms.

MISS C. M. JUDGE
Churchwoman of Cincinnati

I like the policy of THE WITNESS in most things but it does seem to me that you lean over backwards to defend the Negro. Those of us who were brought up in the South understand this problem far better than you northerners. I think you would be wise to let us handle it in our own way. We have a high regard for our Negroes and I can assure you that most Southerners will see that they are properly treated.

THE REV. SYDNEY A. TEMPLE JR.
Secretary, Episcopal Pacifist

As one of the editors of THE WITNESS who agreed completely with the editorial of October 30, I should like to correct my position in the light of Mr. Byrnes' remarks on November 5 at Winston-Salem. The statement that the American people given facts—not propaganda—will reach an intelligent conclusion, rings true. Certainly in this day the people are not willing to follow Decatur's word "My country right or wrong" but will make their views known and influence the decisions of government when the path followed seems wrong rather than right. This is the basis for conviction of many of us that the people will not readily be led into war by partisan propaganda.

Those who are working earnestly for world peace applaud Mr. Byrnes' words: "I think of nothing more unfortunate than our foreign policies being made a partisan issue and the two great political parties competing for the very doubtful honor of having urged the most belligerent policy toward a foreign government." His illustration of our action toward a recalcitrant neighbor is pertinent to the present world situation and he might have added that to take a rifle to the neighbor, rather than to use the peaceful and legal ways of settlement, would aggravate rather than solve the difficulty.

Words which need to be often quoted and reread in order that we may keep our balance are these, spoken by one who knows the situation well: "I am deeply concerned with the state of mind at times bordering on hysteria that ascribes to our former ally, the Soviet Republic, all the ill and errors which two world wars have brought. No country has suffered more from the wars of our generation than have the Russian people. . . . The Soviets are not the first or the only people who have thought that suffering gives the right to make others suffer. . . . We should not forget what their people have been through and not lightly assume that the Soviet leaders despite their blustering, bad manners and abuse want war."

Since he raised the issue of the management of the Ruhr industries in a final German settlement it is unfortunate that he didn't consider more fully the problems involved. Why, for instance, should we have a hand in the control with England and France when Russia, much closer and in more imminent danger from the war potential of those industries is ruled out? Certainly he is correct in his more general contention that our strength lies in our support of international law, not in competing with the Soviets nor in seeking world domination.

Many will agree with this distinguished churchman that we should be as willing to submit to modified controls to win the peace as we were to the furtherance of the prosecution of the war. Some of us will feel, however, that he drew a conclusion contrary to his given propositions in regard to the relative importance of relief to win the peace and preparation for the next war. Having argued that without the restoration of economic health to the world, "there will be ever increasing danger of aggression and totalitarianism" and that, "in helping to restore the shattered economic life of Europe we are helping to restore what is vital in our own way of life," the natural conclusion would have been that the battle for peace in helping reconstruction was even more important than snowballing billions in preparation for another war. Unfortunately he made a remark which seemed to carry the opposite implications.

We rejoice that in addressing our Bishops he concluded with the insistence on leaving open the gates of understanding between ourselves and the Soviets so that by tolerance and the return of economic health to the world our fundamental differences can be reconciled. Is it too much to say that he was a good pacifist (i.e. peacemaker) when he said:

"By the grace of God we are the strongest power on earth.
That strength we must use to restore health in the world."

Young Adults List Questions For Discussion Groups

A Great Variety of Problems Are Presented In Frank Appraisal of Their Various Needs

Portland, Ore.: — Young adults have two organizations of their own in St. Stephen's Cathedral. One for young unmarried persons is called the Seabury Society; the other consisting of husbands and wives is the Church Service League. When ten members of the Seabury Society met recently with the Dean and Mrs. Guilbert to discuss a program based on their own concerns or problems, they mentioned the following: cultivating friendly relations with minority groups; security in life, including readjustment after wartime conditions; family relationships; mature unmarried persons living with parents, preparing for marriage, problems arising after marriage, religion in the family, a family relationship with the Church, mixed marriages; personal relations: getting along with others in daily life and work, "being on the square with your fellow-man"; Church unity: understanding Christians of other bodies, promoting unity within the Church, studying the movement toward Christian unity, including the World Council of Churches; the world mission of Christianity, particularly as concerns introducing Christian religion into primitive cultures where existing practices involve cruelty and exploitation (young veterans with war experience raised these questions); the wisest, most Christian attitude to Russia and the Russians; develop Christian vocations in the work of the world and within the Church; personal evangelism: witnessing to Christ before one's fellows; skepticism and disillusionment among returned veterans and others; the menace of materialism and secularism; developing an effective program of Christian education for parents, children, youth and adults.

The next evening, twenty members of The Church Service League met in the deanery to consider a program for their group. They offered these suggestions: To find out how we can bring Christianity into our own life and home and government (local, county, state and national); How can we overcome intolerance?; "My greatest need," said one of the men, "is to learn enough about Christ and the Christian religion so that I feel I have it within me. I must have it myself before I can give it to others. How can I know that I have Christ within me?"

Another said: "I would like to have courses on the Bible"; "Could reviews of religious books be brought to our attention? Could we form a book club of those interested, with a fee of 'one book', either the donor or someone else agreeing to give a review to the group, the book then to be available to others as desired?"

Still another said: "I would like to see a great emphasis on plain, wholesome recreation, good entertainment for entertainment's sake, without having to go to the devil to get it!"; "Should we make the church our home away from home?"; "How can we have family worship?"; "Could we have speakers on civic problems—such as juvenile delinquency, and find out the answers to them?" Each question started a lively discussion.

When the proposals of both these groups are reviewed, a need for more attention to a continuing religious education for, and by, adults in every parish is apparent. It is noteworthy that each group met in the home of their rector. A modern writer with experience of this type of work has said: "Christianity began in houses and went to Church; it has to be rediscovered in houses before it can go to church again."

CORNERSTONE IS LAID

Albany, Cal.:—An unusual feature of the laying of the cornerstone of the parish house at St. Alban's here was that Walter Kees, first treasurer of the mission, tapped the cornerstone with the traditional trowel and repeated the words of dedication usually said by the bishop. There were a number of other lay people taking part in the service: Warden William Reasoner read the lesson; Ruth Miller, representing the young people, led in the creed and prayers; Treasurer Walter Gilchrist read the responses; Auxiliary President Mrs. Frank Sibilia recited the list of articles deposited in the stone. Vicar Randolph Crump Miller told of the founding of the mission in 1935, with services held for ten years in a store. At present there are 160 communicants; 90 in the church school; a budget for 1948 of $8,000; a new parish house which is expected to be occupied by Christmas.

KENTUCKY CHILDREN SEND GIFTS

Louisville, Ky.:—Over 1,000 toys and 3,500 garments left here last month for the 1,000 children of St. Benedict's, Bessao, Philippines, where the Rev. Leopold Damrosch is in charge. They are the gifts of the children of the Sunday schools of the diocese of Kentucky, one of the largest missionary projects ever undertaken by the children of the diocese. Mr. Damrosch wrote in the summer that there were 1,000 children at the mission "but if Kentucky will take care of 400 of them we will manage." But the Kentucky committee, headed by G. Edgar Straeffer, accepted the challenge. A "bring a garment Sunday" was named with the goal of 1,000 cotton garments and sweaters far exceeded. Then the Advent offering is to be used for shipping expenses and for the purchase of 1,000 toys. The shipment will arrive on December 10 and Bishop Binsted's committee will get the shipment to the Mountain Province by Christmas Eve.

FOR CHRISTMAS

Space limitations prevent us from repeating the announcement that appeared on page 20 of our November 27th number. May we ask therefore that you turn to that if you have not already acted upon the suggestion. Or if the November 27th issue is no longer on hand, send us a list of those to whom you would like to have THE WITNESS sent for a year as a Christmas gift, and mail it, with $4 for each one, to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y. We will then enter the orders so that your friends will receive our Christmas number, and we will send a Christmas Card announcing the gift as from you.

We want also to urge the clergy, even this early, to plan to use THE WITNESS this coming Lent in study groups. The series of articles being planned we are sure will enlist their enthusiasm. Announcement will be made in plenty of time—this is merely to suggest that you make no other plans until you see what THE WITNESS has to offer.

One of the interesting side lights on this project is that the children of Kentucky are taking an unusual interest in studying all about the Philippines and the work of the Church there.

CHURCH COMPLACENT SAYS BISHOP

Boston:—Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill told those attending the annual dinner of Trinity Church, where he was formerly rector, that the Episcopal Church is "too much an urban Church, too little a rural Church and ought to be stirred out of its complacency."

"We comfort ourselves with the fact that we are influential, yet more than one-half the people in this country are not connected with any Church at all," Bishop Sherrill declared. "We have been playing with our opportunities and our responsibilities." He urged that families and homes be "so Christian" that "hundreds and thousands of young men will go into the service of the Church as clergy and Christian workers."

A NOTABLE CANVASS

Boise, Idaho:—Incomplete returns of the every member canvass at St. Michael's Cathedral show the following results: 110 new prospective members of Parish Organizations; 205 confirmation prospects — 90 of whom are adults (this in spite of the fact that last year the parish had 108 confirmed, 85 of whom were adults, and this year during the first ten months there were 89 confirmations, 80 of whom were adults); 115 baptismal prospects (in spite of the fact that in the first ten months of this year there have been 144 baptisms); 82 new pledges; 85 increases of old pledges (total amount of new pledges and increases, $5,600).

On a budget asking of $36,500 there is now in sight approximately $40,000 with 108 non-pledgers still to be heard from, many of whom have promised pledges.

Dean Herald G. Gardner, comments: "We had 100 canvassers, and they showed much greater willingness and better preparation than ever before."

LOS ANGELES ELECTS ROBERT MAGILL

Los Angeles:—The Rev. Robert A. Magill, rector of St. John's, Lynchburg, Va., was elected Bishop of Los Angeles at a special diocesan convention held at St. Paul's Cathedral on November 19. The runner-up was the Rev. John Higgins, rector of Gethsemane, Minneapolis.

A unique feature of the meeting was that the first ballot was considered a nominating ballot, regardless of the number of votes received by any one man. Following this ballot, while the vote was being counted, a memorial plaque was dedicated to the memory of the late Bishop W. Bertrand Stevens.

The Rev. Robert A. Magill of Lynchburg, Va. elected Bishop of Los Angeles

Mr. Magill is a member of the National Council and was one of the group to visit the Orient about a year ago to appraise the needs of the Church in the eastern missionary fields.

NEW MISSIONARIES APPOINTED

New York:—Mr. H. Neville Colthurst sails this month for China to assist Charles P. Gibson, treasurer of the China mission. He has had wide experience as an accountant, both here and in England.

Mrs. H. N. Newbert of Belfast, Me., is to go to Alaska to fill the long-vacant position as cook at the Hudson Stuck Memorial Hospital.

DIOCESAN PROGRAM FOR EEF

Albany:—The Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship of the diocese of Albany has announced four meetings "for increasing our knowledge of the Christian faith and for making our membership in the Church more effective." The first was held on November 24 at St. John's, Troy, when the guest speaker was the Rev. Harold B. Sedwick of Brookline, Mass. Following his address there were four discussions groups, led by the Rev. R. Lloyd Hackwell of Albany; the Rev. John Gass of Troy; the Rev. Bradford H. Burnham of Troy and the Rev. Erville B. Maynard of Albany.

Other meetings are to be held at St. Peter's, Albany on January 26th; at St. Andrew's, Albany, on February 23rd; at St. Paul's, Troy, on April 26th.

NEW HEADQUARTERS FOR DIOCESE

Roanoke, Va.:—A brick building is to be erected here for a new diocesan headquarters. The building, with adequate offices and meeting places, is the donation of Mrs. Arthur K. Evans of Hot Springs, and is to be erected on a lot given by her two sisters, Mrs. George S. Shackelford Jr. and Mrs. Louis F. Fowlkes.

HOUSE COMMITTEE CONDEMNED

New York: — Condemnation of "the present investigations and continued existence" of the Congressional Committee on Un-American Activities was voiced in a statement released November 24 and signed by 20 local clergymen. They declared that the committee is "not an instrument to protect and advance American democracy but is itself a threat to those institutions and principles of freedom which are essential for the building of a free society."

Episcopalians to sign the declaration were Bishop S. H. Littell, retired bishop of Honolulu; the Rev. John L. Zacker of Brooklyn; the Rev. W. Russell Bowie, professor at the Union Seminary.

Bishop Payne Divinity School Blasted By Newspaper

Influential Weekly Declares That the Policy Of Our Church in Education Is Reactionary

Norfolk, Va.:—One of the most influential and widely circulated newspapers for Negroes in the United States, Journal and Guide, published here but distributed nationally, devoted its leading editorial November 22 to a blast at the Episcopal Church for allowing segregation in theological education.

The editorial was headed High Cost of Segregation and states that "The Protestant Episcopal Church furnishes one of the most conspicuous examples of the high cost of racial segregation in the field of higher education. The Church supports a divinity school at Petersburg, Virginia, which is attended by young men in training for the ministry. As most of these students require financial aid, they naturally take advantage of this Church-supported divinity school where a considerable amount of their training expenses is paid.

"If a young man who wishes to enter the ministry cannot take care of his own expenses or procure financial aid elsewhere he must go to Bishop Payne Divinity School because he is not admitted to any of the other divinity schools of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the South, nor will the southern bishops as a rule find a scholarship for him in one of the accredited schools for religious education in the North.

"There is a scarcity of trained men in the ministry for all denominations, and the Protestant Episcopal Church, particularly, suffers a scarcity in this field—especially for colored congregations. But the Protestant Episcopal Church in the South finds itself in a rather awkward position in not having a first-year class at its divinity school in Petersburg. We do not know whether there is a drying up of interest or of aspiration or inspiration on the part of men who are inclined to enter the ministry in the P. E. Church, but we believe that the situation in which the Episcopal Church's divinity school for colored students finds itself at the present time is unique.

"The Protestant Episcopal Church has made plans to spend $192,000 for the erection of a new building or buildings to expand such plant as it has for its divinity school at Petersburg. The total enrollment now consists of eight students, all above the first-year level. There are five full-time instructors, all of whom enjoy the professorial rank and the lowest paid of whom receives a salary of $4,500, plus living accommodations. There is, therefore, almost one professor to each student enrolled.

"This makes the cost of educating a clergyman for the Protestant Episcopal Church in its colored or segregated churches extraordinarily high. We cannot imagine any such costs being related to the education of any other students anywhere in the United States. But this is, no doubt, the price which the Protestant Episcopal Church is willing to pay to maintain racial segregation. We submit that it is a staggering price and that it does not do credit to the religion which members of this Church profess to practice.

The Rev. John Gass, rector of St. Paul's, Troy, was a leader at the conference last week of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship of the diocese of Albany

"The Church might much better accomplish its aims for the training of competent clergymen by spending the money—or a portion of what is now spent in maintaining the school at Petersburg—in giving scholarships to the young candidates for the ministry in accredited Episcopal divinity schools in Philadelphia and New York.

"The old notion expressed in the past by some of the southern bishops and laymen that it would be undesirable to give these men training in religious education in northern seminaries is outmoded. It simply is absurd. Unfortunately the American Church Institute, which has a good deal to say about Negro education under the auspices of the Protestant Episcopal Church, takes the most reactionary southern viewpoint. One of its current spokesmen said not so long ago that the aim of the American Church Institute is to keep Negroes Negroes. That is an amazing position for a Church of Christ's followers. Recent developments indicate that the pews are getting ahead of the bishops, clergy and bureau heads of the Church on the question of race relations.

"From the no-first-year students situation at Bishop Payne Divinity School it appears that the ministerial aspirants have decided for themselves the question how, where and whether they shall prepare to preach the gospel."

BISHOP MANNING HONORED

New York:—The statue of St. John the Divine, erected outside the main entrance of the Cathedral here, was unveiled on Thanksgiving Day. It is a token of appreciation of the 25 years during which Bishop Manning was diocesan. Bishop Gilbert dedicated the statue in the presence of his predecessor.

MRS. HARPER SIBLEY GIVES REPORT

Boston:—Mrs. Harper Sibley of Rochester, N. Y. was the speaker at the meeting of the Auxiliary, held here Nov. 19th to mark the 70th anniversary of the founding of the diocesan branch. She called for full time volunteer workers in Church and relief work, saying that "our young people were expendable during the war, now we must spend ourselves, and particularly we women who are free to do so."

She described conditions in England and in Europe where she recently visited and called upon the women of the Church to be "an island of self-discipline"; to war upon self-indulgence in the face of the tremendous need abroad; to realize that the issues facing us today are moral rather than economic. She urged support of UN and of the Stratton bill for the admittance to the U. S. of displaced persons.

CONFERENCES BRING CONFIRMATIONS

Portland, Ore.:—Prospective candidates for confirmation totalling 166 were reported on parish information cards in the first few days of the Every Member Canvass at St. Michael's Cathedral, Boise. Of 100 canvassers, many had received the intensive training provided by a five-day conference on Christian faith, life and work, conducted by the Rev. A. Ronald Merrix, National Council field officer. Similar conferences were held in St. Stephen's Cathedral, Portland, and St. Paul's parish, Salt Lake City. The general plan was for an opening sermon on Sunday on "Evangelism: The Church's message, mission and opportunity." Evening topics, given in the parish hall to facilitate Bible study and discussion, were "What is the Gospel?", "Enjoying the Christian life," "What is the Church doing for the world?", "Fellowship and team-work for a new humanity."

Daily morning services were held with intercessions and a meditation on "The Lord's Prayer in the life of the world today." Other meetings were planned for groups of young adults. Attendance increased during the week. As one result, the every member canvass in each parish was undertaken with fresh confidence and assurance. Details of the conference program were worked out in cooperation with the Very Rev. Charles M. Guilbert, Portland, the Very Rev. Herald G. Gardner, Boise, and the Rev. Mortimer Chester, Salt Lake City.

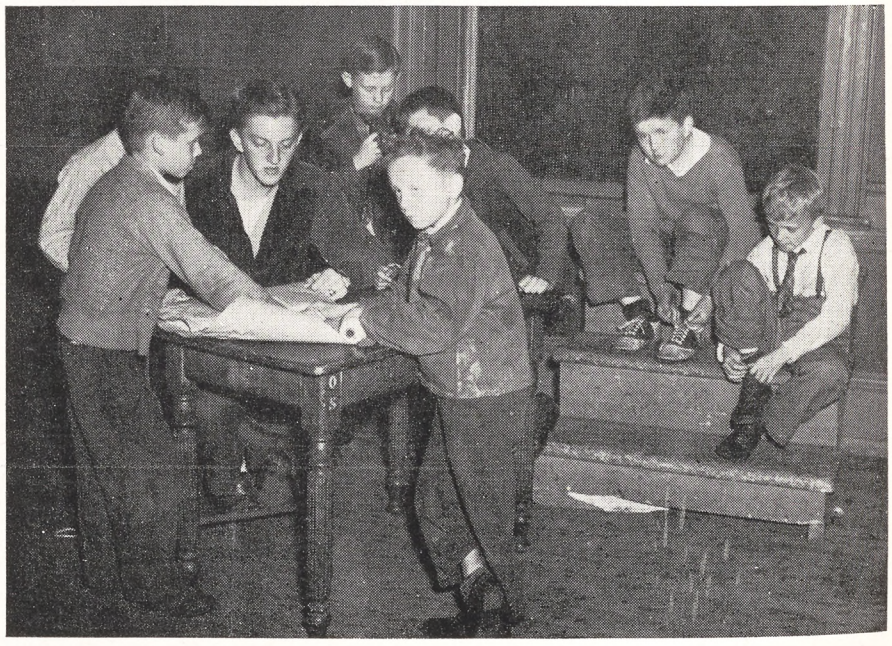
CHURCH-STATE GROUP MEETS

Chicago (RNS):—More than forty national religious, fraternal, educational and civic leaders, all of them Protestant, met here and elected Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of New York City, president of state. John A. Mackay of Princeton Theological Seminary was elected an interim committee on Church and vice president and J. M. Dawson, director of the Baptist joint conference committee on public relations, Washington, D. C., was named recording secretary. The group also approved the preparation of a manifesto on separation of Church and State to be released at a meeting in Washington, D. C., January 12.

Dawson, on behalf of the meeting, announced that the organization was formed with the express purpose of "maintaining the American principle of separation of Church and state upon which the federal constitution guarantees religious liberty to all the people of this republic.

"The organization was called into existence," he said, "because the principle has been and is being violated, and is threatened with further violation in certain areas and by certain acts of both government and Church."

Although members of the group privately said they were primarily concerned over what they term inroads of the Roman Catholic hierarchy into political activity, no reference to the hierarchy was contained in the formal statement.



VESTMENTS PUT ON DISPLAY

Seattle, Wash.: — Vestments and hangings made by talented needleworkers in the altar guild of the diocese of Olympia, are considered such works of religious art that they will be on display at the Seattle Art Museum during the pre-holiday season. The treasures were brought in from the surrounding parishes in Kent, Kirkland, Tacoma, Aberdeen and Olympia and first placed on display in the parish hall of the Church of the Epiphany.

Originally the altar guild women were delegated to do only the mending of the diocese's vestments and hangings. The rich vestments all came from England. But in 1934, Mrs. Josiah Collins of Seattle made a trip to England and became so interested in the work that she studied there and then went to Philadelphia for further study, before bringing her idea back to Seattle.

The Christina Community Center at Old Swedes Church, Wilmington, is a recreation project which last year served 680 boys and girls. Now a non-denominational institution, its purpose is to educate youth on the requirements of good citizenship. Charles I. Davis, Jr., known as "C.I.," is the full-time director. He is shown below planning the next meeting with a group of boys, while the other picture shows a lad having fun in the workshop

Advent and Evangelism

WHAT are the most important emphases for priests and laymen to bear in mind in our current use of the word "evangelism"? We should pray daily for our own complete conversion to God and his Christ, and for growth in "newness of life" in Christ, praying with the boldness of faith and decisiveness inspired by that tremendous saying attributed to Jesus in St. Mark 11:24.

We should studiously re-read the New Testament to understand anew, more fully and more vividly, the content of "the gospel" as "the power of God for salvation to every one who has faith." We could then expose ourselves afresh to its converting power. St. Mark's gospel can be read aloud in an hour and a half, and to oneself in half that time. We might read the twenty-seven writings of the New Testament in the order in which scholars believe they were composed. Then, as Dr. Goodspeed suggests, "their great ideas and their religious discoveries emerge before the reader in the order in which they first burst upon mankind."

We should, as frequently as possible, add to the number of our personal experiences in leading others to Christ, and to the point of decision for him. How else can we carry out the acknowledged aim of evangelism, as being to present "the good news of God in Jesus Christ so that men are brought, through the power of the Holy Spirit, to put their trust in God; to accept Jesus Christ as their Saviour from the guilt and power of sin; and to follow and serve him as the Lord of the world, within the fellowship of the Church, in the vocations of the common life?"

We should encourage the formation of small groups (Christian cells, some call them) of clergy, as well as of laymen, women and young people, who are willing to be trained as evangelists. These could begin to seek winning some among the large number of lapsed communicants and unchurched persons in the local community. The Church in the first century had its apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers, besides administrators, healers and helpers. At a time when it has been estimated that there are 26,000,000 more unchurched persons than there were forty years ago, we cannot do without evangelists to supplement the ministry of pastors and teachers. The method of training used by Jesus appears to be that of the small group.

We ought also to keep vividly before ourselves, and others, appeals which have come recently from every mission area, reiterating the observation that "the immediate future offers unparalleled opportunities for the expansion of the Church's work." Bishop Bravid Harris spoke for other territories besides Liberia when he said that "the opportunities are unlimited, and the people most responsive, but we shall not be able to take full advantage of these opportunities until we have leadership properly trained to assume and carry out the responsibilities involved." Such pleas call for more of the spirit of the compassionate Christ who urged his followers to pray the Lord of the harvest to send out laborers into his harvest. They call also for more knowledge on the part of Church people of actual conditions and needs in other lands. Plans designed to provide this knowledge, and an adequate response, have a definite place in every parish program of evangelism. Using modern means of transportation and communication, it is possible in this generation to reach the world's total population with the message of the Gospel.

Dr. Willis Lamott reminds us in this year's study-text, Committed Unto Us, that because of the phenomenal number of births in the war years, our Sunday schools should soon be crowded as seldom before. "Unless Christ can be brought to the new families of North America," he pleads, "millions of children will be deprived of the ministry of this foremost agency of evangelization." Concentrated and consecrated pastoral attention to families, to religion in the family and the family's relationship with the Church, as well

THERE are men among us who would defend democracy by infringing its liberties. There are some who think that the democratic faith depends for defense upon military force rather than the steady fulfilment of its promise for plenty and freedom together and everywhere.

We need not be the captives of our fears.

Only the already lost can think of our future as besieged.

We have more to give than to guard.

Our powers are not weapons but tools with which to build the promise of democracy into the purposes of mankind.

Sometimes that faith is hard to hold. Even to one who has seen many years, these times seem dark. But this place is lit with courage. Indeed, it is illumined with faith.

as to a more careful selection and thorough preparation of prospective Church school teachers, should also be among the essentials in parish programs of evangelism.

At last summer's conference of the International Missionary Council at Whitby, Ontario, Dr. John Baillie gave his own rendering of the familiar Advent sentence (Mark 1:14, 15). "After John was arrested, Jesus came into Galilee, proclaiming the glad tidings of God, and saying, 'The decisive hour has come, and the reign of God is at hand. Change your hearts and trust the glad tidings'." It is trite to say that present events and the world situation mark a decisive hour in history. Human need everywhere and the Gospel's demands alike call for the most drastic and radical decisions of repentance, trust and action on the part of all sincere Christians.

"Now it is high time to awake out of sleep." Much of our Church work lies still in the ruts of pre-war inadequacy and ineffectiveness. Life today requires a greatly enlarged conception of Church work, new ministries and new methods. How can we stir ourselves, and be stirred, except as we are willing to repent, show our repentance by accepting "the good news," and "practice the presence of God in his gracious gift of Christ and in the fellowship of his Spirit," through a wholehearted response to God's call in the events and needs of this very hour?

In a letter to a friend, Canon Max Warren included this pointed observation among his impressions of the Whitby Conference: "The gospel has a profound social significance. The Church is part of her own gospel. Yet the acceptance of the Gospel, identification with the Church, remains an inescapable individual decision and action. It cannot be done by proxy. At some point in the life of the individual God visits that individual. The demand there made and the nature of the response, however gradual the process of recognition, is determinative for that individual. We are living in a day when it is reasonable to expect that the normal method of conversion will again come to be, what it still is in most so-called mission lands, and was in the first two or three centuries, in the ninth and in the sixteenth,—crisis conversion. Crisis conversion does not imply a highly emotional experience, indeed that is the exception not the rule. Crisis conversion means that the individual at a decisive moment knows that he has to face a judgment—to identify himself with one of two courses of action which are diametrically opposed. That decision if for the right is what we mean by a crisis conversion."

On every count, our prayers and studies, our services and sermons, our repeated acts of self-giving, in Advent, 1947—and after—can become startlingly real and decisive. They will determine the effectiveness of our personal contribution to the Church's program in evangelism. "Repent, and believe in the gospel."

The Living Liturgy

The Offertory Procession II

THE following suggestions may be considered, if you like, as a sort of Directorium caeremoniale for an Offertory Procession. If you think that I am being overly punctilious, I ask you to consider the fact that whatever is done in worship must be done one way or another, and that what we all strive for in ceremonial is to do things in such a way that God is glorified and man is edified. Criticisms of these suggestions will be most welcome. Obviously we must experiment for a while before a commonly accepted usage of the clearest meaning can be effected. Also parishes differ a great deal not only in their tastes, but in their resources for elaborations of ceremonial. Putting too many people to work in a narrow, cramped sanctuary is neither efficient nor dignified. Processions need to be scaled to the space available for their effective operation.

1) Near the entrance where the people come into the church should be placed a credence table. On it are placed a box with the breads and the cruets of wine and water, and also, if it seems desirable, the plates for collecting the alms. A parishioner presides over this table, to take note of those who come in and receive from each one an indication of their purpose to 'make an oblation.' In some places the people may not wish to be counted, so to speak, in which case the person presiding over the table will have to estimate to the best of his or her ability how much bread will need to be offered. But ideally considered, each one who comes to the Eucharist with the intention of offering an oblation for consecration and communion should be prepared to give due notice, so that the requisite number of oblations, neither more nor less, can be offered at the altar.

2) At the beginning of the Offertory, the celebrant will read one or more of the Offertory sentences, after which those appointed to receive the alms will begin to collect them, unless the people have preferred to deposit their alms in the plates when they come in. During the collection of the alms an anthem or hymn may be sung. The celebrant (or deacon, if there is one) spreads the corporal or linen cloth on the Holy Table, and, if he so desires, washes his hands. But the lavabo may be taken after the gifts are received. The custom of the lavabo is ancient and full of symbolism; but it is not necessary nor is it required by our rubrics.

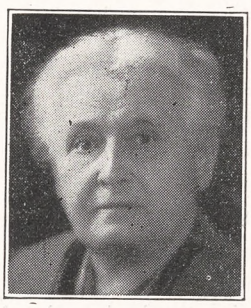
3) When the collection of the alms is almost finished, a group of servers form a procession at the altar steps to go to the rear of the church to escort the laymen who are to bring up the gifts. This is, of course, not absolutely necessary, but it seems like the courteous thing to do, and it suggests the participation of both those in the nave and those in the sanctuary in a common offering. The group will include the crucifer, taperers (if desired), and a server or subdeacon. When hymn or anthem is over, or nearly so, the procession moves down the broad aisle of the church towards the altar rail or sanctuary entrance. Behind the crucifer and servers come those bearing the alms, and behind them those bringing the bread-box and cruets. Since it is not practicable to revert to ancient custom and have each individual communicant bring up his own gift, it is best to view these laymen as representatives of the whole congregation. They do not have to be wardens and vestrymen, or for that matter men only. Let each one in the parish who has been confirmed, man and woman, adult and young person, have a turn at representing his parish in its solemn offering to God.

4) The celebrant and his assistant, whether deacon or server, will meet the procession at the altar rail—the assistant carrying the paten and chalice, preferably from the credence, since there is no reason for the vessels being placed on the altar before the Offertory. First, the alms are received and presented at the altar. Then the celebrant prepares the paten and chalice from the offered gifts before all the people, standing silent and attentive. He then takes up the oblations to the altar and proceeds with the service. If he wishes to do so, he may say as he offers the gifts the sentence: "Thine, O Lord, is the greatness, etc." It might also be fitting and expedient for the deacon to receive and prepare the gifts and bring them to the celebrant, who stands throughout at the altar. This will depend on local circumstance.



One more point—where space permits, do not be afraid to have as many people as possible taking part in the ceremony. The more the merrier.

The Church and Social Rebirth

by Vida D. Scudder

THE FINAL ARTICLE OF A SERIES

A HUNDRED years ago Thomas Carlyle wrote: "The world asks of its Church in these times more passionately than of any other institution, Canst thou teach us or not?", and the question echoes down the decades. Those seeking personal guidance at her altars are rarely disappointed, nor are we as we look away from ourselves, at her glorious missions, at her many activities charged with sacrificial devotion. From within the Church as from no other source comes "a deep-seated dynamic normalizing tendency working through the course of history itself" (Casserly, Christendom, March, '47). Well may we rejoice in her, conscious with awe of the grace of God supernaturally working within and through her.

Yet activities are one thing, politics another. In corporate as in personal life, means as well as ends must be reborn. As we watch ecclesiastical policies, we realize that one corporate body behaves much like another. An English archbishop protests against nationalizing railroads on the ground that Church revenues will suffer. Needless to recall the steady pressure, often subterranean, for status and power, on the part of a larger communion, more powerful than the Anglican. Devastating as serene is the analysis, in Toynbee's History, of the process by which from the time of Gregory VII on, "the mediaeval Church became the slave of its own tools and allowed itself to be betrayed, by its use of material means, into being diverted from the spiritual ends to which those means had been intended to minister." (p. 355.) Effective is the quotation he gives from Bridges' "Testament of Beauty":

> "Nay even the Church, with hierarchy in conclave compassing to install St. Peter in Caesar's chair, and thereby win for men the promises for which they had loved and worshipped Christ relax'd his heavenly code to stretch her temporal rule."

Toynbee ends his scathing chapter with an appeal to the "unique institution": "At this hour of decision at which we now live it is meet and right that all men and women in the Western world who 'have been baptized into Christ' . . . should call upon the Vicar of Christ to vindicate his tremendous title."

Is the present Vicar perhaps responding to this appeal? A report comes from the Vatican City to the New York Times: "The Pope has issued an encyclical letter . . . 'Fulgens Radiatur,' in which he urges the peoples of the Christian world to pattern their life after the principles of their religion, without which, he said, human society collapses." The encyclical is on the fourteenth centenary of the life and work of St. Benedict; nowhere is historic perspective so clear, so awesomely suggestive, as in the Catholic Church. And the inference is drawn:

"All earthly institutions begun and built solely on human wisdom and human power in the course of time succeed one another, flourish and then naturally fail, weaken and crumble away . . . while the Church comes out victorious through the hostile fortunes of time and circumstance. Amid their ruins and failures it is capable of moulding a new and happier age and with Christian doctrine and spirit it can build and erect a new society of citizens, peoples and nations."

Surely every Christian Church should hear, and give a similar challenge. But alas! Here is the old confusion, the old dilemma, dating from long before Gregory VII, dating if you will from Constantine: "Ahi, Constantine!" sighs Dante. As a monopoly seeks to protect its stockholders by increasing its resources, or a nation its own citizens by making them competent to kill, so a Church considers the stipends of its clergy and jealously tries from the best of motives to ensure through material means its status in the community. Responsibility as we have seen incites any collective life to self-protection; and the Churches have learned no more than any other corporate body how to follow the way that leads to Calvary. Their ultimate ends are righteous; their official methods are unregenerate still.

No wonder that from England, France, Germany, Italy, sad reports reach us of disillusion and discouragement on the part of outstanding religious leaders. Nor can we be surprised as we note with shame and sorrow the defiant atheism and the suspicious scorn of the Church which marks the rise of that Communist movement, which, say what you will, dramatize, as no other movement has done, demand for release of the social order from private motivation. Toynbee is not alone in pointing out with acute and informed analysis how deep are the Christian roots of Communism, and how strong the affiliations. But conservative forces in the Church have down the centuries dominated her official conduct and precluded any sympathy with revolution. Her reasons for support of the status quo have often been chivalric and even sacrificial, her sympathy with established régimes has sometimes sprung from profound and patient wisdom. Yet has not the result been rather pathetic to contemplate? Loyalty to her has sometimes involved sharp discipline for pure and ardent souls like St. Catherine of Siena. Do we not look back with sardonic wistfulness to the impassioned ardor of those first disciples accused with some justice of turning the world upside down? No one present at an ordinary parish meeting would be tempted to say "These men are filled with new wine." The Church, the Mystical Body of Christ, does not in her collective behaviour, as related to her status in the secular world, manifest that transformation silently and gloriously potent through the power of grace in private lives. She does not follow that way of life which passes through defeat and death. Perhaps as a corporate body she can hardly claim to be reborn.

WE LONG to see her cast down yet not destroyed, regaining in her collective life as in the lives of all her children the awed excitement of her earliest years. Nor are we wholly disappointed. Every communion is divided against itself, radicals and conservatives equally confident that they are not disobedient to the heavenly vision. Echoes come from every European country of groups within her sensitive to the call to aid in social rebirth, and, as we have said, perhaps this horizontal cleavage is more significant than any vertical divisions. And we repeat that never was the challenge to all us Christians so urgent to serve the Lord our God with all our mind. If thought lures us into exploring revolutionary vistas, as it well may, let us recall the solemn warning of our Leader. Official religion may disavow us. Nay, whosoever killeth us may feel that he doeth God service. How diverse as always are the attitudes encouraged by Christ's words, how rich their implications! This warning holds consolation as well as dread; for does it not greatly facilitate the difficult task of tolerating our enemy because we love him? Christian radicals today do not pay as much attention as they might to those words of both warning and comfort.

But of all forces at play in this supreme moment of history, the Church is our best hope. She at least suggests, to her every member signed at baptism with the sign of the cross, the acid test to apply to human conduct whether personal or corporate. If we are often dissatisfied with her behaviour as she meets the baffling problems of corporate life, we know that the power of grace is within her as nowhere else and that its collective application will be more and more clearly revealed to her if she listens. No humanist approach can ever achieve the social transformation we desire; this hard lesson, taught by all history, is pressed on us today as we realize that only within the sphere of grace can true freedom be found. Laws chosen from within not imposed from without must control our nascent social system if we are not to be betrayed into new bondage. Chaos; or slavery; these are the only alternatives to freedom signed with the holy sign. The Church is responsible as no other body for bearing this witness, and she does not wholly fail albeit her witness still disappoints us. Perhaps we may be allowed to remember, looking back to that natural order which we are called to transcend, that the process of issuing new life into the world becomes more and more painful as evolution goes on.

When shall we Christians recover the transforming sacrificial ardor of the early Church? Only when we awaken to the power within us to achieve a social as well as a personal rebirth. Is there life within the embryo of the new social order? Or will that embryo be still-born? It may well be that decision rests with us. If a higher motivation cannot control social as well as personal life, civilization is doomed. Militarism will overcome us; and the atom bomb is waiting.

Not that the Christian will turn pessimist on that account. He has always been inwardly sure, just as science is now informing him, that a day of judgment may be the end of mortal life on this planet, but that would not necessarily imply the end of the human story. Yet he does love this old earth, and he sees more and more clearly that the human race, made in the image of God, can triumph gloriously though never completely, in further and further phases of development. "Here we have no continuing city; but we seek one to come." Or, according to Monsignor Knox's translation: "We have an everlasting city, but not here; our goal is the city that is one day to be." Hebrews: 13-14. So he will dedicate mind, heart and conscience as never before to his stupendous task: to stop the discord between means and ends: to release activity from exclusive control by lower incentives becoming more and more irrelevant; to place all his powers at the service of the new instruments which under his eyes are seeking to create international harmony; and to realize in corporate activity of every type, political and economic, that our race through the grace of God has experienced redemption.

Social Rebirth need not be still-born. O Crux Ave, Spes Unica!

Christianity and Property

Reviewed by
W. M. WEBER

FOR every Churchman who has true concern for the world's course, this book is necessary reading. Against all distaste for adding to the pile of ephemeral "must books," this must be said; no superlative is too great to say it. Christianity and Property goes to the core of the world's trouble, with Christian tools.

Its plan is avowedly a historical, developmental account of Christian thought on property. The work of eight persons has been remarkably well unified by its editor, and yet preserves the freshness of diverse approach. There is not one dud among its chapters.

The style and approach are sober. In true Anglican fashion, it follows the tradition of austere scholarship (though not the exhaustiveness) of books like N. P. Williams' on Original Sin. The writers tell at length what Christians have thought about property. They also tell something of how Christians have handled property.

Their fundamental intention is to strengthen an attitude towards contemporary problems which is far too much neglected. Prof. Fletcher states the obvious in his preface: "this is an era of social disintegration and change." Thereby we are thrown into seemingly interminable discussion of social matters. Questions about property always turn up; among realistic people they take the center of the stage. Much of the futility in our arguing springs from an ignoring both of principles and the source of principles unconsciously used.

The purpose of this book is to furnish churchmen with their own Christian principles. "It is necessary for Christians to have a fairly coherent grasp of their own peculiar vantage-point in the debate. This is not a day for 'spectator theology'!" The faithful should be able to talk and contend about property primarily as Christians.

In purpose Christianity and Property follows the path laid down by the late Archbishop Temple, especially in his little book, Christianity and Social Order. It dissolves the mists of temper and prejudice, so that the solid ground of Christian teaching might be reached. It is neither a panorama of discouraging problems nor a manual of easy answers. Although implications for the present are drawn, the emphasis is on the thinking of Christians up to the time of the Reformation, and how thinking on property flows naturally and necessarily from essential Christianity and theology. Almost every page brings this reaction from the reader: "If I am to be a Christian, I must think this way about property." If Churchmen are to keep their sanity in the welter of contemporary economic and political problems, they must school themselves in this attitude. They must approach all problems from the Christian vantage-point.

At least three characteristics of Christian teaching on property emerge from a reading of the book. First, it appears that the Fathers and the theologians did their thinking on the subject when they were dealing with immediate practical affairs. We find their teaching in letters and tracts which are directional or controversial, in sermons, and later, in manuals which tell how to deal with sins. No one, in those less systematic centuries, sat down to write a treatise on property. Least of all did our Lord deal directly with the matter; Bishop Emerich makes this very clear. Sometimes there is an overemphasis on this derivative character in some of the chapters. The word "derivative" is unfortunate. "Sacramental" is better; the Incarnation drove men to relate property sacramentally to God. Until three hundred years ago, a tremendous amount of practical activity went into attempts to Christianize property, which left little time for writing.

Secondly, the teaching all through the centuries is based on the doctrine of creation found first of all in the Old Testament. Dean Taylor expounds five Old Testament principles which could well be used to classify almost all the doctrines described in the other chapters. God the Creator—which means he is both author and sustainer—is the true owner of all his gifts. Among his gifts are property values. The true end or purpose of property is man's use or enjoyment. Man is the steward of property—not just individual men, but mankind, the community. Very seldom does a Christian regard property as a natural right, under natural law. The great consensus of opinion is that specific property rights are purely of positive law, to be modified as the community sees fit. All these ideas spring straight from the Old Testament emphasis on the order of creation.

THE third characteristic of this teaching concerns the principle of universal human equities. No Christian writer ever denied that all men have an inalienable share in the Father's gifts, since God is the father of all men. The application of this principle was formulated in times when consumers' goods and land were the important forms of property. In our day, when producers' goods or capital are the crucial property forms, it seems inevitable that the principle of social equity be extended to capital. The doctrine of creation covers not only "the earth" but also "the fulness thereof." Certainly our technological inheritance is a part of that fulness.

The contradictions between this teaching and much of present-day economic teaching can be left to the reader. Mr. Kean's essay on capitalism makes the contrast very clear. The importance of the book lies in the coherent grasp it gives of Christian tradition. Besides that, there is a wealth of directions in which the book leads the future development of thought. Dr. Lehmann's idea that the attack on the misuse of property should spring from the Kingship of Christ rather than from the doctrine of creation deserves more than the page he was able to devote to it.

Although it reads easily, Prof. Fletcher's theological illumination of a sociological definition of property is a seed-bed of ideas which deserves continued study. For instance, it contains a concise statement of Personalism, a philosophy which is appearing in many communions, and which is the true rationalization of the Christian approach to economics and politics. Prof. Hardy suggests that the monasteries deserve study as successful experiments in collective ownership. Fr. Smyth's derivation of medieval doctrines from the concrete property relationships is a model for future Christian writing, which must make past history effective in the contemporary situation.

The most haunting of these stimuli to future thought are found throughout Miss Scudder's chapter. In one place she speaks of "the never-ceasing unrest in the attitude toward private ownership in Christian history ever since the early days of the Church in Jerusalem." If "that social compunction," which she calls "the most Christian dynamic in social change," is truly astir within the Church today, Christianity and Property may become what it deserves to be.

Each chapter was read first as a paper at the second annual conference on Christian social teaching, held in 1945 at the Episcopal Theological School, sponsored by the Church League for Industrial Democracy (now the Episcopal League for Social Action).

The book merits historical significance—a deep social response from readers whom it will help make socially informed, sane and courageous.

Civil Rights Report Praised By Federal Council

Says the United States Has to Demonstrate Its Belief in Civil Liberties and Freedom

Edited by Sara Dill

New York:—The recent report of the President's committee on Civil Rights is "a notable contribution to our progress toward a working democracy," the executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches declared here in commending the statement to all Church people as "a document worthy of study." Noting that "the Christian concern of the Churches for every individual in society is central in the committee's report," the interdenominational agency voiced its approval that the President's committee "was sensitive not only to the rights of our largest minority group, the Negro, but also to other racial and religious minority groups within our society."

"It is now the especial responsibility and opportunity of the Churches," the Federal Council committee stressed, "to promote discussion of the committee's report within the framework of the Christian understanding of our faith in God as revealed through Jesus Christ, as it is related to our social living."

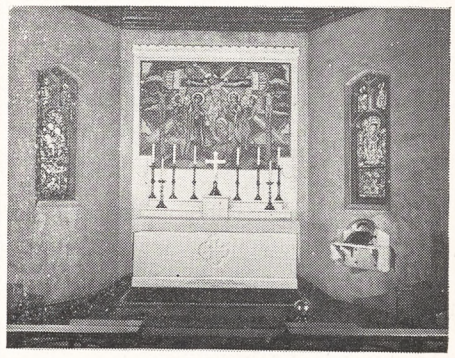
Four objectives contained in the report were singled out as meriting special attention "in view of the Christian principles involved." These objectives, it said, are the protection of human life against mob violence; equal opportunity for employment, regardless of race, religion or national origin; elimination of segregation in all of its aspects, including the outlawing of restrictive covenants in real estate contracts; and the right of every adult citizen to vote.

"The concern for civil rights in our own country is particularly important from the standpoint of our leadership in the world," the executive committee stated. "Our national struggle toward true democracy cannot be isolated from the world scene. We cannot hope to influence other peoples to accept the Christian way of life, or other nations to accept the democratic principles we proclaim unless we can demonstrate in our own community living that we take them seriously and are striving to translate them into effective practice."

Crack at Parsons

Boston (RNS):—Concrete suggestions for improving the influence of the Episcopal Church, including the "weeding out of unfit ministers" and greater participation of women members in official affairs, were made by Gov. Ernest W. Gibson of Vermont at a special meeting of the Episcopalian Club. Gov. Gibson said "too many ministers in the Episcopal Church lack the qualities of leadership required in these critical times." The Church has been "too lax," he contended, in not forcing these ministers to retire. "We are too prone to keep ministers, once we get them, until they retire," he charged.

The governor said some clergymen preach sermons "pulled out of the barrel and written 20 to 30 years ago," and "they are not able to drive home the real lessons of the day. Too many of our churchmen frown on movies, dancing and other forms of recreation, now recognized as important to community life in America."



As for the Church's women members "they sometimes appear to be just the dishwashers of the Church," he said.

Governor Gibson said it is the "no. 1 business for Americans to go to church," and that their "no. 1 club" should be a church instead of a fraternal organization.

Doing Poor Job

Pittsburgh, Pa. (RNS):—The influence of American Churches is bound to decline in coming decades because of their failure to revamp traditional programs to meet today's urgent needs, according to a poll of college students here. Sponsored by the Jefferson Club, a student group at the First Unitarian Church, the poll was conducted among 500 students attending the University of Pittsburgh, Carnegie Tech, and Pennsylvania College for Women. Eighty-one per cent of the students agreed that the Churches should depart from traditional programs to meet individual and social problems more effectively, but 91 per cent said they did not think the Church would make any important modifications in the near future.

For this reason, the great majority of the students—84 per cent—predicted that the Churches would decline in influence during the next ten or twenty years. Asked how they rated the importance of the Churches in determining the day-to-day moral conduct of the people in general, and of business and government, 26.6 per cent replied "insignificant," 69.1 per cent, "significant, but less so than such secular agencies as the press,

To questions as to what issues should be given more attention by the Churches the replies were: problems of the individual, on the thesis that social reform can come only from individual reform (35.9 per cent); problems of society as a whole, by exerting influence on the government, the press, etc. (17.9 per cent); and integration of the individual with society (46.2 per cent).

Sex Education

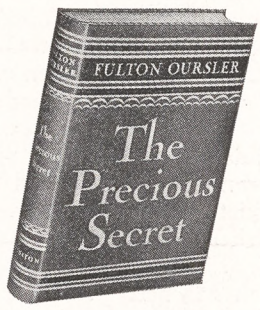
Sydney (RNS):—An experiment in sex education was launched here by the Christian Social Order Movement, a Protestant group, when 300 young men and women attended a lecture held under its auspices. The lecture was the first of a series to be given to mixed classes by experienced local authorities. In a recent poll conducted by the movement among Australian youth between 17 and 28, it was disclosed that 33 per cent of the men and 11 per cent of the women had received no sex instruction from their parents. A large number admitted their knowledge had been inadequate prior to marriage. The poll also revealed that pre-marriage instruction "barely exists" among Australian churches.

Unique Church

Melbourne (RNS):—A unique Australian Anglican church is St. John's here, which is run by a committee of six men and women, all under 30. They conduct their own services, including two each year by women members. The church was founded in 1936 by J. R. Darling, a school principal, to provide a "follow-up" religious interest to young men leaving public school for jobs in the city. Within a year the fellowship had grown to 200. Worshippers at St. John's include ministers, a Rhodes scholar, and professional men who like to run their own church and to have a hand in community service.

Missionary Honored

Wusih, China:—To date, only three Americans in China have been made honorary citizens of that country. One is General Marshall, and one is Ambassador Leighton Stuart. The third is Dr. Claude M. Lee, now retiring after more than forty years in China, as founder and director of St. Andrew's Hospital, Wusih.



Bestowing the citizenship of the city and county upon him, before a gathering of notables of every kind, Mayor Chien of Wusih said, in part: "Today the whole city of Wusih is saying farewell . . . Since Dr. Lee arrived in our country he has spent all his energy in helping the sick and suffering among our people. As we look at his white hairs, which are many, now appearing on his head, we realize that each white hair is symbolic of one life saved.

"We welcomed him from thousands of miles away, and now we no longer recognize him as a foreigner but from our inmost hearts we feel that he is a Chinese citizen. As the representative of 1,200,000 people of Wusih and the county, who now wish to express their deep affection, I hand him a certificate that he is an honorary citizen of Wusih."

Friends of Dr. and Mrs. Lee, the North China Daily News reports, have demonstrated their good will to the hospital by presenting a new residence, containing a library, dining room, dormitory and baths. The

Make No Claims

New York: — Protestant foreign mission boards with work in the Philippines were urged to file no claims for indemnification for wartime property losses to be paid out of confiscated assets of Japanese firms and individuals, nor the supplementary appropriation of $400,000,000 U. S. funds appropriated by Congress, in an action passed unanimously by the Philippine committee of the Foreign Missions Conference.

The committee also recommended that individual missionaries who suffered property losses be advised by their boards to forego the filing of claims under the Philippine rehabilitation act of 1946, and that boards undertake to recompense individual missionaries insofar as their available funds will allow.

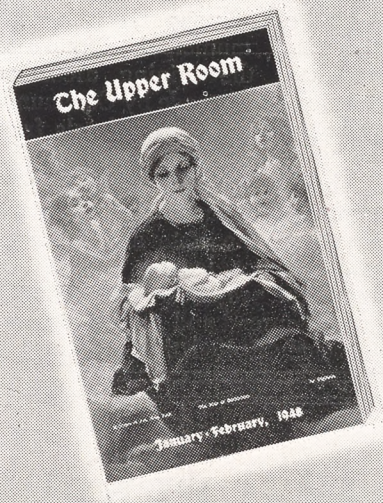
The action was announced by the committee chairman, Elmer A. Fridell, of New York, far eastern secretary of the Baptist foreign mission society, who, explaining the conviction behind this self-denying action, stated that the membership of the committee was united in feeling that Christian agencies which are deeply concerned for the economic as well as the spiritual rehabilitation of Japan should not benefit by depriving of their assets individual Japanese who had no part in deciding national policy.

The overseas division of the Episcopal Church was among the boards to approve this action.

Church Row

Belgrade (RNS): — Demand for "immediate removal" of the Rt. Rev. Bishop Dionisije, of New York, head of the Serbian Orthodox Church in the United States and Canada, has been made in a letter received by Patriarch Gavrilo, supreme leader of the Church, from the American Serb Congress, a recently-formed group with headquarters in Pittsburgh. The letter was widely publicized in the Yugoslav press.

The organization's demand was based on charges that Bishop Dionisije had "obstructed" a campaign to aid Serbian war orphans and "publicly attacked" American Serbs engaged in relief efforts for Yugoslavia.



The group also charged that Bishop Dionisije had used "threats" to dissuade priests and laymen in his diocese from attending the recent convention of the Congress in Pittsburgh.

An official of the Serbian Orthodox Church here was quoted as stating that "it is most probable that action of some sort will be taken against Bishop Dionisije, because I believe Patriarch Cavrilo already has several times brought such matters to the attention of the bishop."

At Libertyville, Illinois, Bishop Dionisiji told a reporter for Religious News Service that the demand for his removal by the American Serb Congress was inspired by Communist opponents "who are constantly attacking me."

He said the Congress was a minority group opposed to "the true American Serbian Congress of which I am honorary president, and which met in Chicago last June, passing resolutions condemning the American Serb Congress and supporting the national policy of our President and Congress."

"On November 2," Bishop Dionisije declared, "a meeting was held in Pittsburgh by order of Tito's Embassy in Washington, D. C. This meeting, which proclaimed itself as an American Serb Congress, was held with the support of the Communist newspaper, Free Expression, published in Pittsburgh, and of the dissident Serbian Orthodox Church of St. George (Pittsburgh), and its deposed priest, the Rev. Vojislav Gachinovich.

"Summoned without proper authority, this communistic meeting was attended by less than five per cent of American Serbs, all those attending being followers of the Communist ideology and supporters of Tito's regime in Yugoslavia.

"Because I am a supporter of the American Constitution, Christian ideals and real democracy, Communists are constantly attacking me and placing false accusations against me before the Serbian Patriarch and the Tito government in Belgrade.

"Furthermore, Father Gachinovich, who was deprived of his priestly privileges because of his communistic activities, has sent many telegrams denouncing me, and recently requested Patriarch Alexei of the Russian Orthodox Church to receive him under his jurisdiction."

Anti-Church Conflicts

Paris (RNS):—Nationalization of mines and mining properties in this country has led to widespread conflict between Roman Catholics and anti-clerical municipal authorities. Throughout the mining areas attempts are being made by Communist mayors to evict church schools from mine premises. The Communists base their action on the ground that nationalization made the mines the property of the state and non-state schools cannot legally operate on government property. The agitation is so widespread and acts of violence have so multiplied that the Government has decided to state the legal position of Church schools in the next few weeks.

Meanwhile, in many sections of the nation, parents of Catholic school children form a continuous guard outside the schools to prevent them being taken over by municipal officials. In some cases, it was reported, local authorities forced entry into the school buildings, replaced the locks and took away the keys.

Spearhead of Evangelism

by the Rev. GILBERT P. SYMONS

OUR Presiding Bishop is calling the whole Church to a nation-wide program of Evangelism. One of the means he wants to use is the radio. He proposes a weekly radio program, The Episcopal Hour, to go over a nation-wide network reaching into every part of the land. The Episcopal Hour will begin in 1948 just as soon as the cost is underwritten by the whole Church.

No sooner had some good people heard of this than they sounded off with a very catchy but ill-considered epigram: "It will take more than the radio to save the world. What we need is a spiritual revival."

Of course we need a spiritual revival. That is the very end the Church is driving at in her program of Evangelism. And what do these epigram makers think we are going to do it with? With our aroused and reconsecrated spirits, of course. But as soon as a Christian's spirit is aroused to work for God, he seizes upon any good tool near at hand to work with. That is exactly the sacramental principle which is the historic Church's well-proved method.

Did you ever puzzle over that strange thing our Lord said to His disciples? Truly, truly, I say to you, he who believes in me will do the works that I do; and greater works will he do. What did Jesus mean? Didn't He mean, for one thing, that when the Apostles obeyed Him and went out on their mission they would win thousands to His one? They broadcast the Gospel to the known world. Where He says, The Gospel must be published to all nations, He was not thinking of a piece of printed paper or even a sermon in a quiet church, but of a herald with his attention-getting trumpet. By the radio, God has trumpets in twenty million American homes and the Church proposes to preach the Gospel through them.

Our Lord said another startling thing. We seem to forget how original and startling He was. He said, You shall catch men.

Catch men, and women and children! There is a lot to do after they are caught, but first we've got to catch them. Sunday afternoon in the living room and the children all over the floor with the funnies. Father in slacks and slippers twirls the radio knob and says, "Hullo! Listen! Here's a fine choir singing." A man in a hospital recovering from a critical operation and living on borrowed time tunes in his bedside set. The shut-ins. The people who live fifty miles from nowhere. The wife in the kitchen. The salesman on a train or in his car. We're going to use their trumpets!

We're not going to leave this miracle of the radio all to soap operas. What would we say when the Lord asks us how we've used our talents? It won't be enough to have put up "You are welcome" on the church door. Our Lord will say, "You could have bought radio time."

So it costs something. There is a simple plan recommended by the Presiding Bishop: Each Church add three per cent of the combined parish and Church's Program goals, as set up in the 1948 budgets, to the parish budget for next year for the Evangelism program. Explain to Church members the reasons for increase and enlist their help through larger pledges to the parish budget.

Give the Church a chance to speak through the trumpets!

St. Bede Lectures

New York:—The St. Bede Lectures will be given in January and February in the guild hall of St. Thomas Church. The Rev. Shirley C. Hughson of the Order of Holy Cross will give three on the religious life; Mrs. Frances Perkins will give three dealing with social questions; the Rev. P. M. Dawley of the General Seminary will give three on Church unity.

Church Doing Well

London (RNS):—More than 71% of the people in the British Isles believe the churches are doing their job "well" or "fairly well," according to a survey conducted by the News Review National Poll. The survey showed that 26.7 per cent consider the churches are carrying out their task badly. Only two per cent expressed no opinion.

Twenty-one per cent of those interviewed said they are less interested in religion at present than formerly. Over 13 per cent declared they now have a greater interest, while 65.8 per cent reported they are unchanged.

Men are more critical of the churches than women. The middle age groups of both sexes (those between 25 and 54) are most convinced that the churches are performing their tasks poorly. Young people and old people (those between 18 and 24 and those over 54), on the other hand, hold the view that the churches are doing well.

People in the upper and middle classes are more critical than the working classes, the survey indicated. Housewives take a more favorable outlook on the work of the churches than any other class of women.

Asked what should be the principal activity of the Church, 15.7 per cent replied "looking after young people," 12.9 per cent said, "teaching Christianity." Ten and one-half per cent felt the answer should be "social welfare work." Young people were found to be at least definite about the function of the churches.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

THE REV. CHARLES A. HIGGINS,
St. Alban's, Waco, Texas

Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce in her article (Nov. 13) shows a gratifying ability to recognize illustrations that I tried to clothe with anonymity. For the information of readers may I say that the woman who thought the Church School Lenten Offering for 1947 would be used entirely in the Philippines had been so informed by her rector (a member of the National Council) and by a prominent poster proclaiming "Your Offering Goes to the Philippines."

Mrs. Pierce admits that articles written by missionaries for FORTH are "from time to time" rewritten in the interest of readability. Personally, I find such articles more readable before the editing and my criticism of this policy stands. I stand corrected in the matter of articles submitted for publication in other than "281" publications. The rules in this regard were changed in 1942—a step in the right direction. However, missionaries must still "refrain from criticism either of the people of the country or of the work of the mission." (RULES, April 1942, p. 19.) One wonders why so few articles written by overseas missionaries are seen in the Church press.

It may seem presumptuous for me to give anyone so well informed as Mrs. Pierce the facts about the budgets. However, here are the facts: The 1946 Budget shows administrative expense of $346,621. This is but a fraction of the total cost of administering our National Church program. The rest of the amounts spent for administration are, as I wrote, "neatly hidden in the budget(s) of the district(s), which is not published."

If Mrs. Pierce can tell her version of the Costa Rica cemetery appropriation with a clear conscience I can only add my thanks to her for setting the record straight. Actually, she takes up the story where I left off and my version should be used as a preface. But I would remind readers of THE WITNESS that I used the story as an illustration of how decisions are made by the bureaucrat. Does not Mrs. Pierce concede my point when she admits that all matters involving appropriations must be referred to the finance department? Most matters of importance involve appropriations. This makes the "yea" or "nay" of an officer in this department the vital factor in most decisions concerning overseas work.

Finally, may I say that I have a high regard for the personal integrity and devotion of church officials at "281" and that I have every confidence in the new administrator of our overseas work. However, I am convinced that our missionary work will be put forward if certain policies inherited from past administrations are reconsidered in the light of present conditions.

THE REV. CHARLES E. CRAIK JR.
Rector of Emmanuel, Louisville, Ky.

Old Dr. Shipman of Christ Church, Lexington, Ky. (father of the late Bishop Shipman of New York) and my grandfather, Dr. James Craik of Christ Church, Louisville, waded right into politics during the Civil War period. Working jointly to keep Kentucky in the Union, they frequently addressed sessions of the Kentucky State Legislature, arguing their cause and debating the issue.

In later years the late Justice Harlan of the United States Supreme Court met my father on a golf course somewhere and recognized him as the Dean of Christ Church Cathedral, successor to his own father in that venerable parish. "My boy," he said to my dad, "your country owes a great debt to your father. He kept Kentucky in the Union."

So here were two parsons who did not hesitate to get into the thick of politics in a critical period. Judging from the results of their efforts, they neither made themselves childish and silly nor brought ridicule on their dear Church, as the layman from Philadelphia claims the clergy always do when they leave "their chosen field" to try to apply Christianity to life.

Many who claim to "think out the problems that confront our country," and other problems that concern human welfare, seem to do their thinking entirely on the basis of their one-sided point of view and their crytalized prejudices. Bishop Gilbert must be absolved from the charge inferred in the editorial "Do We Dare to Lead." But in taking a stand contrary to the interests of reaction, he has brought on his head the self-righteous indignation of a voice plainly representing reaction and "Big Business."

THE REV. J. FRED HAMBLIN
Rector of St. John's, Newark, N. J.

The language of the editorial Close or Merge Them (WITNESS, Nov. 13) has a familiar ring. The advice I would venture to offer to the writer and others who think along the same lines is 'get busy.' Many, perhaps including the writer of the editorial are members of a Diocesan Mission Board charged with the duty to evangelize the communities of the Diocese with vigor and wisdom. Where the conditions prevail which the writer complains about let's put action behind words, and do something about it.

THE REV. HENRY H. WIESBAUER,
Director, Pastoral Counseling Center, Boston

Allow me to express my appreciation for the two splendid editorials in your issue of November 20. The one concerning John Gilbert Winant is, in my opinion, one of the finest examples of Christian interpretation I have ever read anywhere. It reminds me of the full title of our weekly—THE WITNESS for Christ and His Church.

Council Gathers at Seabury House for First Time

Meeting Marked by Fellowship as Members Devote All the Time to Routine Business

By W. B. Spofford

Greenwich, Conn.: — Business at the meeting of the National Council, December 2-4, was largely routine but the fact that it met for the first time at Seabury House is newsworthy. For it meant far more than comfortable accommodations. It meant that the Council members and staff officers of 281 were together for the full time, night and day, without the diversions of New York City with its theatres, athletic contests and other spots that attract visitors. Meeting at Seabury House engendered fellowship so that various members said "the best Council meeting I have attended."

Treasurer Lewis B. Franklin reported that collections were exceptionally good, amounting to 101% of amounts due. It means that but $360,000 has to be collected in December, whereas in some years it has been necessary to collect a million. The Rev. Almon R. Pepper, who devotes himself almost exclusively these days to running the Presiding Bishops Relief Fund, told the Council that the million dollar objective has already been exceeded by $93,312. He reported that the money is used for barracks churches, Bibles and other literature, food, clothing, drugs, vitamins, and that expenditures were about equally divided between Europe and Asia.

There will be a 1948-49 edition of Parish Helps, the first of which appeared earlier this year. It will cost $10,000 and the money was voted. The sum of $7,500 for special material needed for the campaign of evangelism, mostly literature, was also voted.

The matter of "budget strategy" was introduced by Mr. Franklin and prompted a good deal of discussion, and was then referred to departments and divisions for study. The point made by the Treasurer was that some emergency always prevented "planning" and he strongly indicated that in his judgment the Council should adopt, subject to action by General Convention, "a general plan of missionary strategy looking forward for ten or twenty years."

Questions that he raised, and asked the Church to consider, were: "In case of increased income in the years ahead shall each district receive its proportionate share of the increase or shall certain more strategic areas receive the major part?"

"Should we notify the bishops of certain areas that they should not look for increased appropriations even if more money is available?"

"What is a strategic area? What are the criteria by which missionary work should be judged?"

"Is growth in Church membership the most important test? What other tests are of equal or greater importance?"

There were, naturally, conflicting answers to all of these questions, with varying opinions as to what constituted a "strategic area" and the difficulties that would be encountered if the National Council informed a bishop that his area was not strategic, but that the area of his next door neighbor was. So Mr. Franklin's questions are likely to cause some lively debates in the days ahead.

Presiding Bishop Sherrill got a puff from Council member Champion Davis, who is also president of the Atlantic Coast Line, who told of the good accomplished by the Presiding Bishop's trip, following the meeting of the House of Bishops at Winston-Salem, through eight southern dioceses. Mr. Davis, who was himself largely responsible for the trip, said that Bishop Sherrill had made a splendid impression; that fine hospitality was extended by the Southern bishops and their families; that he was sure the trip had strengthened the Church enormously.

The Rev. John Heuss addressed the Council for the first time as head of the department of Christian education and asked for extended time at the February 17-19 meeting when he will be prepared to offer a report on curriculum material and other pertinent data. He did say that one preliminary study reveals that of the 5078 Church schools in the country 1446 have less than 25 pupils; 1212 have less than 50; 1250 between 50 and 100; 844 have 100 to 200; 346 have over 200; 241 have 200 to 300; 85 have 300 to 400; 28 have 400 to 500; 17 have 500 to 700 and five schools have 700 to 1,000 pupils. He gave as his opinion that there are in the neighborhood of a half million children in our Church schools.

The Rev. George Wieland, home missions director, told the Council that more men, money and evangelistic effort is needed in rural areas "if America is to be made really Christian." The opinion, he stressed, was based upon surveys made recently in Idaho, Montana and Eau Claire. He said that he was impressed with the interest of lay people in all plans of advance.

FOR CHRISTMAS

Space limitations prevent us from repeating the announcement that appeared on page 20 of our November 27th number. May we ask therefore that you turn to that if you have not already acted upon the suggestion. Or if the November 27th issue is no longer on hand, send us a list of those to whom you would like to have THE WITNESS sent for a year as a Christmas gift, and mail it, with $4 for each one, to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y. We will then enter the orders so that your friends will receive our Christmas number, and we will send a Christmas Card announcing the gift as from you.

We want also to urge the clergy, even this early, to plan to use THE WITNESS this coming Lent in study groups. The series of articles being planned we are sure will enlist their enthusiasm. Announcement will be made in plenty of time—this is merely to suggest that you make no other plans until you see what THE WITNESS has to offer.

Provision was made for a salary bonus of $30,000 in 1948 for workers in the Philippines, who have been receiving such aid since 1945, to enable them more adequately to meet the high cost of living. This is a procedure similar to that followed in China.

The sum of $2,500 was voted to enable the Presiding Bishop of the Church in Japan to attend the Lambeth Conference. The Presiding Bishop also announced that the Rev. Kenneth Viall of the Cowley Fathers, who has been the liaison officer in Japan, has been elected suffragan bishop of Tokyo, so that it will be necessary to appoint another officer to represent the American Church in that country. However no action was taken at this meeting of the Council.

The Good Friday Offering budget, it was announced, is based on an expected $45,000. Of this about $20,000 is for the Jerusalem mission; about $26,000 for the work of the American chaplain, the Rev. Walter C. Kline; 15% for the Russian Seminary in Paris, by order of General Convention.

Bishop Binsted of the Philippines, is was stated, is to visit some of the South Pacific Islands and will report to the Council on what he thinks the future care and policies of the Church should be in that area.

The Rev. Roger W. Blanchard of Columbia, Mo., was appointed secretary for college work for the seventh province; the Rev. Ervine Swift got a pat on the back for having carried on the work of the overseas department as acting director. He plans to return to China soon after Bishop Bentley takes over as director on January 1.

Guess that about covers it, except if you are a parson and can meet the requirements, you can have a job as a chaplain. The Rev. Percy G. Hall, head of the army and navy division, said there was a continuing need, especially for veterans hospitals.

INTERDENOMINATIONAL SERVICES

Montreal: — Services are being held at Christ Church Cathedral here during Advent, sponsored jointly by the Anglican, Baptist, United Church and Presbyterian Churches. Declaring the purpose "to bring Christ back into our Christmas celebrations," the daily noonday services feature a 15 minute sermon by ministers of the several churches.

LOUIS C. MELCHER ACCEPTS

by Mrs. G. A. Buchanan Jr.
Witness Correspondent

Columbia, S. C.:—"Mr. Melcher has gone to Orangeburg to the football game," the Trinity parish secretary said to the inquiring voice over the telephone.

"Well, this is the Record newspaper, we've just received a bulletin that he has been elected Bishop Coadjutor (with the accent on the wrong syllable) of Southern Brazil."

Attending the meeting of the National Council for the first time as director of Christian education was the Rev. John Heuss

It was as sudden and unexpected as that. The Rev. Louis C. Melcher's associate rector, the Rev. E. L. Nixon got in his car and drove forty miles to Orangeburg where the annual classic between the University of South Carolina, where Mr. Melcher has done an outstanding work with the students, and the Citadel, where his son is a sophomore, was in full swing.

In the pouring rain on the little fairgrounds Mr. Melcher first heard of his election. Two weeks of conferences with bishops and physical examinations, serious thought and fervent prayers followed before Mr. Melcher announced to his vestry: "I have decided to accept my election as Bishop Coadjutor of Southern Brazil. As much as I love my work at Trinity, as happy as my family and I are here, it is a clarion call, a challenge I cannot turn down."

The new missionary Bishop, in his late forties, is a vivid and dynamic personality, a splendid administrator, with an outstanding record in parish work, and one of the really great preachers in the Church today. One of the objections voiced by those reluctant to see him leave Columbia is "That wonderful oratory will just be wasted. He can't speak Portuguese and says he is very poor at languages." The answer, of course, is "his beautiful speaking voice will be just as beautiful in any language and think how he can tell about Brazil when he comes back on visits!" And, poor at languages or not, he'll learn Portuguese. Mrs. Melcher says he's planning to have a short speech written out and taught him syllable by syllable immediately, so that when he begins to visit his Brazillian parishes he can at least say something to them in their own language.

Personal problems to be considered in the move to Brazil have been weighty for the Melchers, but have not been allowed to outweigh the call to service in the Church. Mr. Melcher's father, eighty-five years old, came to Columbia recently to make his home with his son. Mrs. Melcher, the former Mary Curry, is the only child of her parents, Dr. and Mrs. C. P. Curry, who upon Dr. Curry's retirement after several years in government service in Panama, settled in Columbia to be near their daughter and grandchildren. The interruption of the education of their son, Louis C. Melcher, Jr., already in college and their daughter, Katherine, in high school has been a matter of concern—in fact about the only member of the family for whom the drastic move has not presented problems is the youngest daughter, Mary, aged one and a half years. The Melchers, though, are the kind of family that will carry their happiness with them wherever they go.

Louis, Jr., himself planning to study for the ministry, and now to work under his father in Brazil, said when told that the decision was definitely made: "Well, Daddy, I knew you just couldn't do anything else!"

Those who know Mr. Melcher's ability, those who have worked with him, are agreed that a great deal will be heard about the Church in Brazil in the years to come. The Bishop-Coadjutor-elect is the kind of Bishop who will make news—news of growth and progress in any language, in any hemisphere.

Active Interest in Education Urged By Auxiliary

National Board Meets for the First Time At Seabury House and Deals with Problems

Greenwich, Conn.: — The contact which the women of the Church have with the current life of the world, and their concern about it, appeared at many points in the meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary national executive board at Seabury House November 28 to December 1. Plans for next year's evangelistic movement were discussed by the Presiding Bishop; the plight of displaced persons and other needs in Europe were described by the Rev. Almon R. Pepper, head of the National Council's social relations department and secretary of the Presiding Bishop's fund for world relief, who had just returned from Europe; national affairs as they appear to the Federal Council's Washington bureau were presented by Benson Landis, head of the bureau; the threatened sale of Alaskan timber lands belonging to the Indian people of Alaska was reported to the board by a letter from the Home Missions Council.

A request to take some action about religious education in public schools had come to the board from the last Triennial Meeting and had been under consideration. The board adopted the following resolution, brought in by the committee on Triennial Preparation and Follow-up, of which Mrs. William T. Heath of Buffalo, N. Y., is the new chairman:

"We are agreed that there is an urgent need for more effective religious education, and that the women of the Church have a responsibility to do everything in their power to promote such training. Since public schools are locally administered, and there is no national agency which could establish a program of religious education in the schools, we call upon the women of the Church to carry out the spirit of the resolution by taking any or all of the following steps in their own communities: a). Take an active part in providing better religious instruction in the home and in the Church. b). Cooperate with other groups in the community in plans for released time religious education. c). Study the subject of religious education in the public schools, using such materials as The New Education and Religion by Williams; Religion and Education by Sperry and Public Education and Religion by Weigle."

Other new committee chairmen taking office for the coming year are Mrs. David R. West, Minneapolis, United Thank Offering committee; Mrs. Roy Hoffman, Oklahoma City, Personnel; Mrs. Lewis Pilcher, Petersburg, Va., Finance.

As an aid in facing current high living costs, the board appropriated from the discretionary item in the United Thank Offering approximately $7,000 in special gifts this year to women workers in the United States. Other appropriations were for scholarships, for equipment of missionaries, and for equipment of mission buildings, including such things as indoor and outdoor games to provide some recreation for nurses at St. Luke's Hospital, Manila, laboratory material for St. James' Hospital, Anking, China, aid to a Cuban churchwoman who is translating a number of Woman's Auxiliary publications into Spanish for the use of the Cuban branch of the Auxiliary. Also two or three refrigerators since modern developments in refrigeration are making possible marked improvement in missionary diets.

The Rev. Alan R. Chalmers is the popular and energetic rector of All Saints, Jacksonville, Florida

This was the board's first meeting at Seabury House. They were enthusiastic about every aspect of it and sent formal expressions of appreciation to Bishop and Mrs. Sherrill and to the staff.

Mrs. Derrill D. Taber met with the board for the last time as a staff member; she is now retiring. She has been a national field secretary for twenty-five years. Previously, she had been on the South Carolina diocesan executive board of the Auxiliary for ten years, and before that, she said, she had been "a violent parish president." She reviewed and summarized her experience and her convictions about field work. The board's statement concerning her said she had been "a friend to women throughout the Church."

FIRST PRESIDENT OF COUNCIL

Orlando, Fla.:—Bishop Henry I. Louttit, suffragan of South Florida, was elected the first president of the newly organized Florida Council of Churches. The purpose of the organization is to study ways and means of making the Protestant witness felt more strongly in the state; to unite resources for a more adequate service; to bring about a closer fellowship among the Churches.

ASSAIL AGLIPAYAN RELATIONS

Manila (RNS):—A rival faction in the Philippine Independent (Aglipayan) Church has again assailed the majority Church group headed by Bishop Isabelo De Los Reyes Jr., for seeking inter-communion with the Episcopal Church in the United States. The Filipino petition for inter-communion was recommended by Bishop Binsted of the Philippines at the meeting of the House of Bishops, meeting in November at Winston-Salem, and approved.

In a statement to the press, L. A. Ruiz, secretary to Archbishop Juan Jamais, leader of the dissident group, branded a recent assertion by Bishop De Los Reyes that inter-communion does not mean fusion or subordination as "quite far-fetched and misleading."

"It is an incontrovertible fact," Ruiz declared, "that as a sine qua non for union, the Des Los Reyes Church is required to discard the doctrine and constitution of the old Philippine Independent Church and adopt in its place another patterned exactly after the constitution of the Protestant Episcopal Church."

Ruiz asserted that the step taken by the Philippine Church "will necessitate the submission of Bishop De Los Reyes and other bishops and priests to re-consecration and re-ordination."

The spokesman for the dissidents challenged Bishop De Los Reyes to "tell the truth" that he has "repudiated the creed, doctrines, rites, teachings, and constitution of his Church and embraced those of the Episcopal Church." He charged that Bishop De Los Reyes has "jettisoned" the Aglipayan divine office and is now using the Book of Common Prayer of the Episcopal Church.

"The true Philippine Independent Church, which was founded by Monsignor Gregorio Aglipay and which seceded from the Des Los Reyes group, refusing to fuse with the Episcopalian Church," Ruiz declared, "will continue to be the nationalistic Church of the Flipinos."

The faction headed by Archbishop Jamais includes a third of the Philippine Church bishops, together with a few score priests who seceded from the majority body following a conference in Manila at the end of the war.

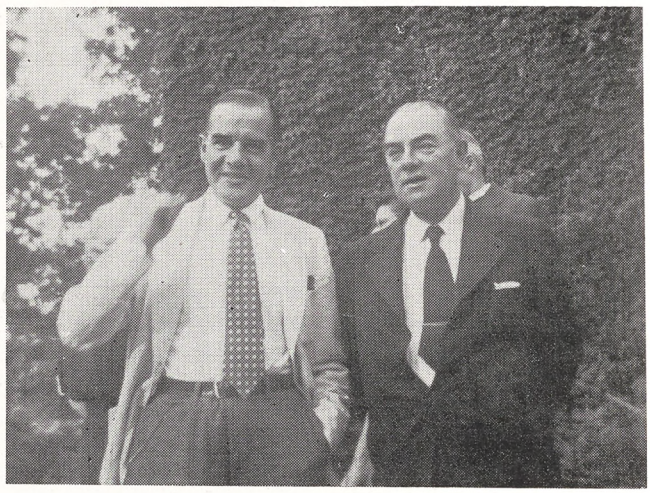
BIRACIAL COMMITTEE HAS MEETING

New York:—The biracial committee on Negro work held a meeting at the Church Missions House and was assured that the policy of the National Council is to accept any qualified person who applies for an opening in any part of the mission field. It was pointed out however that the responsibility rests upon the bishop in charge of the mission field to accept or reject persons proposed for the field. A report on the recent conference held in Washington on recruiting and training Negroes for the ministry and other Church work was presented and the Rev. Tollie Caution, secretary of Negro work, was urged to see that the findings were implemented.

CHURCH AND STATE IN YUGOSLAVIA

Belgrade (RNS):—Patriarch Gavrilo, supreme leader of the Orthodox Church in Yugoslavia, has called upon Orthodox clergy throughout the country to support educational, social and other postwar reconstruction projects sponsored by the government. His appeal was made in a 1,000-word pastoral letter sent to all Orthodox bishops for reading in churches.

"All activities for the benefit of the people and of the people's institutions," the patriarch declared, "should be supported with all their strength by our Orthodox clergy, which, by its very nature, constitutes a continuous, unbreakable link with the life of the people. Its duty is to help the people and become initiators in every undertaking which is for the benefit of the Church and the State."



The patriarch's letter contained a number of recommendations which he asked the bishops to submit to priests in their dioceses. These called for cooperation with educational authorities in literacy campaigns, and with the Yugoslav Red Cross and other institutions conducting public health programs. They also urged practical support of programs for general economic improvement, of efforts to stimulate greater interest in legislative matters, and of local measures designed to strengthen both the Church and the community.

"These talks," Patriarch Gavrilo declared, "can and should be carried out without interfering with priestly duties or affecting the reputation of the Church.

NEGRO CHURCHES DESTROYED

Loganville, Ga.: — Two churches and a school used by Negroes in this community of Walton County — where four Negroes were lynched last year — have been destroyed by fires of incendiary origin in recent weeks. First of the structures to burn was the Negro Methodist church. Then flames destroyed the Negro Baptist church. After the fires local Negroes began using the Loganville Negro School as a place of worship and for community gatherings. The school was destroyed by fire soon after.

Mayor C. H. Byrd said there was no doubt the fires were of incendiary origin, and added that the city council had offered a reward of $100 for the arrest and conviction of those responsible. The mayor added, however, that he did not believe white persons, or racism, were responsible. He said it was his belief that there was a feud between sections of the Negro population which resulted in the fires, or that possibly the Negroes were attempting to "attract nation-wide sympathy" by firing their own churches and schools. Last year an armed and masked band of white men took four Negroes from a car in Walton County and shot them to death.

Two of the most popular rectors in the diocese of Western New York are the Rev. W. Thomas Heath of Trinity, Buffalo, and the Rev. Edgar Tiffany of the Transfiguration, Buffalo

COUNSELING CENTER IS PLANNED

Columbus, Ga. (RNS):—Immediate establishment of a counseling center here—the first in Georgia—is foreseen by the Rev. Frank T. Woodward, president of the Columbus-Phenix City ministerial alliance. Purpose of the center will be to combat frustration and attendant juvenile deliquency, broken homes and alcoholism.

Mr. Woodward's prediction came at the conclusion of a two-day counseling school at the First Presbyterian church after ministers attending had heard Dr. C. S. Forrester, minister and veteran counselor of LaGrange, Ga., speak on "Counseling with the alcoholic and the alcoholic's family."

EDITORIALS

Together in Unity

RECENTLY the American Bible Society, through Dr. C. L. Hsia, member of the board of managers of the Bible Society and alternate delegate to the Security Council of the Chinese delegation to the United Nations, presented the Honorable Trygve Lie, Secretary General of the United Nations, with an English Bible and a Testament in his own native language of Norwegian. Mr. Lie held the books very carefully as he told the officers of the Society that he had read the Bible many times. As a child in Norway he had been given a Bible, a custom that is prevalent there, so that when he learned to read, he read in the Bible. The Bible is one of the first books the children of Norway come to know.

And then as he stood in his office at Lake Success, with the bright, colorful flags of the different countries belonging to the United Nations blowing in the breeze outside the building, he opened the English Bible and sat down at the table. The Bible had been opened by chance. "Gentlemen," he said, "look at this." There in the clear print of the Bible was the 133rd Psalm. Dr. Hsia leaned over his shoulder and pointed to the first verse which reads, "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!"

There is one book that teaches the way in which we may live together in friendliness and peace. But if we keep it a closed book it cannot possibly speak to us. As the Book becomes a part of us its influence will radiate into the farthest corners of the globe, and the day of "One World" will be brightened by the light that streams from the "One Book."

"QUOTES"

OUR worship of God is God's opportunity to raise our consciousness of him to its highest power. The fact that true worship is the most exacting and difficult of all human activities and the fact that it usually makes us exceedingly uncomfortable, until we give way to God in our lives, are not good reasons for avoiding regular worship of God. Training for a football team is very exacting and very uncomfortable, but it is essential to the making of a successful and happy football player. True worship is the exacting and uncomfortable discipline essential to developing our response in body, mind and spirit to the Highest in life.

Esteem the Office

THE anonymity of an editorial sometimes makes it possible to say things no clergyman could say from a pulpit. The personal element is too strong there. As the Ember Days arrive again, we would like to point to the ordination of priests, and particularly to that part which suggests that "the people ought to esteem the office." There is no profession or vocation that does not have a few screwballs, and the order of priests in the Church is no exception. But by and large most of the priests we know are intelligent. They ought to be, —there has been quite an amount of time and money spent on their education. Most of them do wide reading, nearly all of them more than any of their parishioners. They have grown up in the various environments of our national life. They meet more of "all sorts and conditions of men" every week than the average layman. If "the people" would just think about these things, they could arrive reasonably at the conclusion that the priest is probably better equipped mentally to deal with economic and social problems than they are. Oh, maybe that's going a bit too far, and it does not show proper humility on the part of a priest in the Church of God. For, after all, the priest must be a spiritual person, according to his ordination vows.

This being a spiritual person means that he is endeavoring to learn and know more of God, the creator of heaven and earth; of God, who has worked in and through history in Jesus Christ; of God, who gives his guiding spirit of power to those who seek him. His spirituality is developed in order that he may the better "feed the flock committed to his charge." This very spirituality forces him to be concerned about economic conditions which make it impossible for some children to have milk and other essentials. His spirituality requires him to seek an economic pattern in which there shall be more justice. His very spirituality makes him extremely sensitive to certain kinds of cursing which really hurt. Some of his people have a way of damning other children of God because of their race, color or nationality. Some of his people delight in confessing some one else's sins (gossip is the technical term), and these kinds of cursing sear his soul. His spirituality makes him jealous for a real family of nations, and so he is impelled to suggest ways that all nations may work together, regardless of the seemingly insurmountable difficulties raised by certain materialistic groups.

Yes, the people ought to esteem the office of priesthood. So don't call your rector a red, or a stupe, or a political meddler, or an impractical idealist, but try to find out why he comes to certain conclusions on social and economic matters.

How to Read the Gospels

by Francis Stifler

Of the Staff of the American Bible Society

PEOPLE often speak to me about the difficulty they have in reading the Bible. Sometimes they are frank enough to say that they just can't find it interesting. I do not wonder at this for most of us have never been taught how to read the Bible. Since the most important part of the Bible is the New Testament and the most important books in the New Testament are the four Gospels, let us start our Bible reading with the lives of Jesus. How shall one read the Gospels?

First, where shall we begin? No, not with Matthew which comes first in the New Testament. Begin with Mark, not because Mark is the shortest of the Gospels and the oldest, but rather, because it is the basis of Matthew and Luke, and is more full of action, simpler, and more straightforward than the others.

How much shall we read at the first sitting? Right here is where most of the difficulty with Bible reading comes in. Our Bible reading consists too often of a chapter, or a verse or a few verses, which may be useful on many occasions, and none of which I am ruling out, but the way to really know Jesus Christ is to read the Gospels each at a sitting. It takes about one hour and a quarter to read the Gospel of Mark out loud—considerably less when read to oneself. We never hesitate to read that long or longer when we start in on a fast-moving short story in a magazine.

When you read Mark thoughtfully through at one sitting you will get a conception of Jesus you never got before. Never again will you doubt that he was wholly human and wholly and uniquely divine. Never again will you have any question about the trustworthiness of Mark's record. You catch the spirit of a humble conscientious writer determined to preserve the testimony of eyewitnesses to a great miracle, a great tragedy, a great new beginning of something that can never stop—a light shining in darkness.

If you read Mark through at one sitting, you will want to read more about Jesus. You have three more records. I suggest you read Matthew next, but read it at one sitting. Matthew repeats practically every line of Mark but adds much of what Jesus said in his sermons to the people. The greatest sermon ever preached is found in Matthew 5, 6 and 7, and another in Chapter 10 and there are at least four others. Sit down some evening and read the whole of the book of Matthew. It will take you possibly an hour and a half. Its teachings have been gradually remaking the world. Your very experience in the reading of the book cannot help but transform your spirit.

If you read Mark and Matthew as I have suggested, you will be profoundly grateful that there is another sketch of Jesus' life for you to read. Luke, also based on Mark, has been called the most beautiful book ever written. Because Luke wrote for Gentiles rather than for Jews, you will feel you are getting a little closer to Jesus than even Matthew led you. Furthermore Luke's practical humanitarianism will appeal to you. Luke is the American's Gospel. Read Luke through at one sitting. It is almost exactly the same length as Matthew.

You have one crowning experience awaiting you. John's Gospel was written much later than the others. All over the Roman world people persecuted for their faith had found Christ as Saviour, and John reads these experiences back into his story of Jesus' life. If you have read the other three Gospels, as I suggest, John will become almost a personal experience as you read it. Jesus will be to you the Bread of Life and The Light of the World. He will be the Way, the Truth and the Life. You will be born again.

I beg of you take four evenings and in the manner I have suggested, read the Gospels.

A Word With You

By

HUGH D. McCANDLESS

Rector of the Epiphany, New York

(This week's column is part of a letter from the Rev. M. G. Nicola, vicar of St. David's, Pittsburgh, California.)

I REMEMBER a lady I knew several years ago. She was one of those powerful blondes, a little-theatre-in-every-home kind of female. But with all her potent Mayflower manner she had a cuteness. She called her middle-aged boy friends Smithie or Jonesey. It was a sort of caressing call. My own rector said that she caused the depression. He explained that she got to calling Le Bon Dieu by one of those cutie names in her prayers, and He smacked down on all of us. However, my rector knows very little about economics.

My point is to explain that I do not care for people who kiss titles and caress names so my complaint will have all the more weight. I refer to your attacks on the "Rev. Smith" locution. I appeal to you to look at this matter not in the spirit of the English department but in the friendly mood of humane letters.

The Lutherans call their ministers by the friendly term of Pastor Smith. The Catholics use the intimate title, Father Smith. The large denominations very sensibly give their parsons a D.D. degree and call them Doctor. But the smaller denominations, our own included, are not liberal with D.D.'s, frown on "Father," and refuse to say "Pastor." So thousands of clerics are nothing but plain Mr. The ordinary man has an instinctive urge to call his parson something more distinctive. He will call him "Reverend" in spite of the English department. And when he comes to die, he will take his last pill from "Doc"; call "Jedge" to draw up his will; and then with his last breath whisper: "Well, good-bye, the Reverend Mr. Smith!" and die. And it will be the extra wordage that croaks him.

Talking It Over

By
W. B. SPOFFORD

LETTERS have been coming lately, from friends mostly, asking if I want revolution. There are times, as I scan the human scene, both here and elsewhere, when I think it might be a good idea. But then I flex my flabby muscles and hop on the scale to watch the indicator register 120 pounds and I'm forced to the conclusion that the opposition would be too much for me.

Besides what I really want is something quite different. After my lunch of milk and crackers and a handful of nuts, I like to walk around my neighborhood. I visit Washington Market and gaze at the venison, pheasants and partridges displayed at the stand of Mr. Joseph. Nearby bright shiny pompano from the Gulf are laid out on chipped ice; in a huge case live Maine lobsters can be had at $1.50 a pound, and scallops too—not the deep sea variety but the bays, which are twice as good and so cost twice as much. On my way back I stop to gaze in a big show window at imported champagne in frosted bottles at $9 each.

Nobody knows what another really wants; not even those of his own household. But insofar as I know myself, I want luxuries. Three months or so in the country in the summer where, surrounded by family and friends, I can lay in the sun and broil steaks on an outdoor fireplace. I was intrigued too by the big ad in the paper this morning, urging me, for $2300, to get aboard the President Cleveland that will leave San Francisco on February 20th and sail in tropical waters for 39 days "thus avoiding the rigors of a northern winter."

Since these things take money, it is cash that I want, not revolution—twenty thousand a year, let's say—or if this is too high for my services then I'll settle for fifteen.

My trouble is that what I want conflicts with my intelligence and what moral sense I possess. At the time of Malvern some of us met here in the U. S. to consider the Manifesto that came out of that Church gathering. One of the speakers was to have been Prof. A. T. Mollegen of Virginia Seminary but he got down with a bad cold. But he wrote a message while in bed with a fever of 102 which was read for him by the Rev. Ernest deBordenave of Richmond. Whether the heat engendered by fever had anything to do with it I do not know. But his brief analysis of what is wrong with our world has always seemed to me a masterpiece of succinct wisdom.

"Our economic order," wrote Mollegen, "has defied God and stands beneath his judgments. It has denied the divine end of man and has enslaved him to its own end, monetary gain. This is idolatry and the consequences of idolatry are upon us. Under God, the economic system is a means to a divine end for man. It is created to give men the opportunity to serve one another in love by satisfying their common human needs with the fruits of a cooperative and significant labor.

"Contrary to its divinely appointed purpose, our economic system defrauds millions into monotonous drudgery with no meaning save the maintenance of poverty level existence. It robs still other millions of the meaning of their creative work because they know that the fruit of their labor is not dedicated to God or to the satisfaction of human need but instead serves the profit of the few. Thousands of Christian business men are forced daily to violate the teaching of Christ and the dictates of their consciences because they are enslaved themselves to a system more powerful than they. Profit is God in the economic sphere of our common life. This idol must be served before men may work, before machines may turn, before men may eat and clothe themselves, before the will of the true God be done.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

"Furthermore, the present form of our economic life makes for war. First, it makes for war because every economic crisis of a system which can no longer function tempts pump-priming and social service states into spending for armaments. It is inevitable that the harder pressed nations shall use armaments for the expansion of their spheres of domination. Secondly, the economic system makes for war because there is not room in a finite world for several expanding centers of national profit-taking systems. Collision inevitably produces war or a victory without war which sows the seeds of a future war.

"When the very shape of the system by which man creates wealth and satisfies his physical needs leads him into war, it makes very little difference that man seeks peace.

"Nor will our present economy provide an adequate basis for the maintenance of democracy. It proletarianizes large masses of men by impoverishing agricultural communities and accumulating large surpluses of labor subject to seasonal unemployment, lay-offs, continual unemployment and transiency. If these turn to democracy to transform the economy they tempt the secure classes to protect their immediate interests by destroying democracy. If they become the victims of demagogic propaganda they join their power to other powers who seek the destruction of democracy.

"Finally, a system which has exploited human labor has been no kinder to the physical nature upon which our common life depends. In the words of Malvern, section 12, 'This system also tends to recklessness and sacrilege in the treatment of natural resources.'

"There is nothing new in this indictment of our economic order. Much more elaborate and detailed analyses have been heard in CLID meetings for years. What is new is constituted by two elements:

"1. We are in the midst of evils which we have long prophesied. If we have time to avert complete disaster, it is a short time.

"2. Many Christians are awake to the dangers now where they were not before. This is the great opportunity."

A lot has happened of course since Prof. Mollegen wrote that, so I asked him the other day if he considers it still sound. He replied: "It is still sound in principle although it is out of date. Our economic crisis is held in abeyance for a few years by reconversion, a bumper consumption demand and high exports. Then we'll crack and go into another struggle like that of the thirties—maybe the last."

What he wrote at the time of Malvern, and his comments now, I believe to be sound. Hence the conflict between my creature desires and my other self has been resolved, at least for a time, by merely gazing at the partridges and reading the ads about the cruises. And it would be healthier, I think, for the friendly critics to figure out for themselves whether Mollegen's analysis is sound—and to give us the benefit of their wisdom if they think not—rather than to pin labels on those of us who do accept it. But give plenty of time to your thinking, for Mollegen's statement digs pretty deep and it would be embarrassing to have it all wind up with people calling you the very names you are now hurling at others.

The statement in full, What's Wrong, can be had for five cents from the Episcopal League for Social Action (formerly CLID), 412 W. Grand Blvd., Detroit 16, Michigan.

Episcopalians and Class

By

WALTER H. CLARK

Professor at Middlebury College

IN A realistic mood any clear-sighted Episcopalian must admit that the average Churchman is more powerfully motivated by the ideals of his class than the teachings of his Church. We are certainly not peculiar in this respect as compared with other Christian bodies, but, like anyone who finds himself near the top of the social heap, the Episcopalian finds dearer the symbols of his class status. Among these is his church membership. With one person this may be cherished along with his household heirlooms and family tree; another, with a keen eye for social stepping stones, may have acquired it himself.

To assert that this is the only source of Episcopalian motivation would be to caricature the Church if not calumniate it. But class pride dwells among us to no small degree, and in this brief article I intend to consider some of its manifestations, unflattering though the topic may be.

Since it is by our fruits that we know ourselves, my thesis may be tested by examining several areas of behavior. For example, it is to be doubted that the divorce rate among Episcopal communicants departs very far from the average of their class in the direction of the Church's teaching. Again, an informal study of the moral behavior of a group of college students I have recently seen is hardly flattering to the Episcopalians.

Or, to turn to the area of economics, Episcopalians do not seem to be as greatly influenced by Christian teachings as by that self-interest in which they mirror their class. Perhaps the existence of the Episcopal League for Social Action (formerly CLID) would seem to give the lie to such a statement, and certainly we would not want to pass over this point without paying tribute to many liberal and social-minded members of our Church. But their numbers are comparatively small. Though we have reason to be proud of the fact that Franklin Roosevelt was a Churchman whose religion was a dynamic force behind his vision of the New Deal, we must recall the fact that the average Episcopal business man of the time was more likely to deliver an apoplectic denunciation of the administration's supposed attempt to ruin the country than to appreciate the religious implication of a concern for "the forgotten man."

Again, one of the chief assets of the Church is the Church preparatory schools. Among them are some of the most respected academic institutions in the country, and here we have one of the best evidences of the vigor of the Church. But even here—perhaps especially here—the influence of class is a factor which goes far toward nullifying a potentially effective Christian program. Candid headmasters must admit that they have been far more successful in keeping up academic standards and inculcating manners—though many a schoolmaster might lift an eyebrow at the latter statement—than they have been in conveying the spirit of the gospels to be translated into life. Many boys attend whose parents see social as well as economic advantage as the chief fruits to be obtained. Still others, with fortune and social position secure, look on a Church School as a haven for their sons, safe from the children of self-made men and families "on the make." Then perhaps also, among the many devoted teachers in these schools, there is too large a minority whose ideals seem to run nearer those of the country gentleman than of Jesus Christ; whose visits to the neighboring estates of wealthy women and whose fashionable wine bottles on their study side boards symbolize aspirations more determined by class than they are by Christianity. The fact that certain schools, especially those featuring self-help and lower tuition, have to some extent escaped these characteristics should not blind all our schools to the dangers of reality. Judged by the objective test of the proportion of their graduates who enter the more altruistic professions of teaching, social service, the ministry, or, especially, missionary work, how few of our schools would show that the call of the gospel message had prevailed over such class-hallowed pursuits as brokerage, banking, advertising, business administration, and the lucrative professions.

IT WOULD seem in bad taste as well as somewhat temerarious for a layman to throw anything but bouquets in the direction of the clergy. Certainly nothing more is needed than a comparison of their inadequate salaries with their large families for one to appreciate the heroism and devotion of the typical Episcopal parson. And yet there are more cases than there should be of rectors with easy livings, whose luxurious libraries and ample board hardly suggest spiritual travail and mortification of the flesh. Perhaps they spend so much more time at the tea tables of their wealthy parishioners rather than in the kitchen chairs of the poor because the former predominate in their parishes—or because, as Frank Buchman would say, it is the "up-and-outs" who have the most need of religion. On the other hand, perhaps there is a more basic reason. The caricatured, pampered, tea-drinking clergyman of literature and the stage often turns out to be an Episcopalian. This can be traced to class. So also does class explain the relative feebleness of our preaching tradition. But here the laity must take its share of the blame. After all, how long would the accents of an Amos or an Isaiah be tolerated within the walls of churches founded on dividends, coupons, and free enterprise?

Then what is the conclusion of this gloomy Jeremiad? That the Church has failed? By no means! Merely that the pull of class is stronger than that of religion for the average individual. This always has been in the past and will probably always continue to be, though we must always hope for and work for improvement. Christianity at its best, as Toynbee points out, has always functioned as a "creative minority" meaning much to the few and little to the many. That there are a few Episcopalians to whom Jesus Christ means everything is enough in itself to justify the Church's existence. In addition, we have no way of appraising God's valuation of that feeble spark of spirituality that lies in the hearts of the many. But it is our duty to recognize how pitifully little it is. If we clearly see that in our Church the devil most often gets in his good work through class consciousness, class pride, and social ambition, we will best be able to combat him where he works most subtly. It is for our clergy to capture more keenly the prophetic note and show us that not only the kingdom of heaven but also the kingdom of evil lies within us. For the laity, it is our duty to sift our motives more carefully and set our hearts more freshly toward the gospel message and the accents of Jesus, even when he chides. It is not so much that the Church has been ineffective in the past as that it could be much more effective in the future. But if it is to be, we must first recognize, then counteract the denial of Christianity inherent in the predominance of the influence of class.

The Offertory Sentences

AMONG the changes made by Archbishop Cranmer and his associates in their reform of the medieval service books was the elimination of the old offertories or anthems sung at the Eucharist during the Offertory. In their place were substituted the Offertory Sentences to be sung or said before and during the time when the peopls offered 'unto the poor men's box every one according to his ability and charitable mind.' The old offertories had been selections proper to the seasons of the Church Year. The new Sentences were all designed to stimulate generosity among the worshippers for the poor and needy.

The impoverishment in the poetry of the Eucharistic service by the loss of the old offertories was more than compensated for by the definite return to primitive Christian practice of associating the Eucharistic worship with positive, material acts of charity. So it has remained in the Anglican tradition. Alms no less than oblations are a part of the Eucharistic Offertory, and Cranmer's Sentences have remained with slight changes the substance of the Offertory ritual in all the Anglican Prayer Books. It is true that the Scottish Book has added several sentences which speak of sacrifice and offering without suggesting money; and the South African Book has added a series of Sentences which are purely seasonal, such as the old medieval offertories. Here in America, however, we still associate the Sentences primarily with money offerings, rather than with the oblations of bread and wine, probably because these Sentences are used not only at the Eucharist, but as the Rubric directs, 'on any other occasion of Public Worship when the Offerings of the People are to be received.'

There is no good reason why we should continue to limit the association of our Offertory Sentences with money. A little imagination in their use can adapt them both to the seasonal theme and to the larger context of offerings, whether of oblations or of ourselves in sacrificial living. We should take full advantage of all that the Prayer Book gives us in these Sentences, and not limit ourselves to using one or two Sentences year in and year out. The following notes suggest times and seasons when the Offertory Sentences may be used to best advantage.

Advent: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth"; "How then shall they call on him,"—the latter especially for Advent III and its accompanying Ember Days, as well as for the other Ember seasons.

Christmas: None better than the first and most popular Sentence, "Remember the words of the Lord Jesus." Christmas is the time for giving rather than for receiving, in remembrance of the supreme Gift.

Epiphany: The thought of Christian witness and mission is uppermost; hence use, "Let your light so shine," or "How then shall they call on him," etc.

Pre-Lent: Professor B. H. Jones has aptly described this season's theme as "to arms and to labor." Appropriate therefore are: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord," and "He that soweth little shall reap little," and "The harvest truly is plenteous."

Lent: "To do good, and to distribute." The word 'distribute' is much better translated 'communicate' for it involves the idea of mutual sharing.

Easter, Ascension, and Feasts of our Lord generally: "Thine, O Lord, is the greatness," etc.

Rogation: "Be merciful after thy power." This Sentence is not of the best, and may be easily misunderstood. But the context of the Rogation season saves it from any spirit of self-regard.

Whitsuntide: Same as Epiphany.

Post-Trinity Sundays: "Not everyone that saith unto me, Lord, Lord"; "Whoso hath this world's good"; "And the King shall answer." All of these stress the note of Christian service and charitable work.

Saints' Days: "Let your light so shine"; "God is not unrighteous"; "And the King shall answer." For a Requiem there is none better than: "While we have time, let us do good unto all men."

Thanksgiving and Harvest season: "Whoso hath this world's good"; "The harvest truly is plenteous"; "Ye shall not appear before the Lord empty." The last Sentence—so much over-worked—is particularly apt at the Thanksgiving season.

Bishop Denounces Secularism At Midwest Conference

Declares We Do Not Consider God's Will When United States Makes Foreign Policy

Edited by Sara Dill

Grand Rapids, Mich. (RNS):—Declaring two cultures—secularism and Christianity — are struggling for world domination, Bishop Charles W. Brashares of Des Moines, Ia., told 500 delegates to the Methodist conference on Christian education here that "war and ruin" is the inevitable result unless Christians rise to meet the challenge. "World chaos increases when men cease to discipline themselves to do the will of God," the bishop asserted. "Is Christianity just a huddling together of comfortable souls or is it a crusade of those who dare to bear the cross with Christ?"

Bishop Brashares charged secularism had brought an increase in personal vice, gambling, drunkenness and divorce. "Our social conscience has been dulled so that we do not organize as efficiently to feed men as we do to kill them," he charged. "We do not consider God's will when we make our foreign policy. Having conquered our enemies, we begin to fear Russia. In reality her troops are not on our borders in Mexico, and Canada, but our troops are on her borders in Korea, Japan, China, Germany and Alaska. Can it be that an outraged conscience has made us afraid?"

Today's crisis, according to the bishop, is that God is "heroically struggling to redeem the world but is opposed by almost the solid phalanx of the human race."

The meeting passed a resolution opposing universal military training "because it tends to undermine the democratic way of life" and would "stimulate the race for armaments, costs money that might better be used for world relief and regiments the youth of the nation in questionable moral surroundings." The conference also requested the president's amnesty board to grant amnesty to conscientious objectors and passed a resolution commending the president's commission on civil rights. Another resolution recommended that Methodist theological schools and colleges employ faculty members "on the basis of merit, without regard to race."

Vet Certificates

New York:—A certificate of appreciation for men and women who served in the armed forces has been printed by the army and navy division of the National Council. Bearing the crossed flag of Church and country, it is to be supplied free to dioceses, signed by bishops, and given to veterans as a token of the gratitude of the Church to those who served during the war.

Visits Cuba

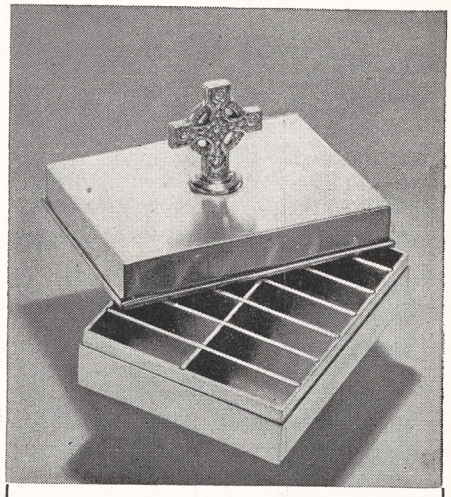
New York:—J. Earl Fowler of the overseas department of the National Council left here by plane on November 26 to visit Cuba. He is to attend the convocation of the district, be present at the consecration of the cathedral in Havana and the dedication of the new Sarah Ashurst Girls' School. He is to inspect as much of the Church's work in Cuba as possible, traveling on an itinerary arranged by Bishop Blankingship.

Stress Unity

Evanston, Ill.: — The need for Christian unity was emphasized at the regional conference of the Interseminary Movement, meeting here with 450 seminary students attending. They represented 26 theological schools and 25 Protestant denominations.

Asks Better Care

Toronto (RNS): — The Dominion government was urged by the Canadian Council of Churches here to take greater care of children whose home-life has been affected by the divorce or separation of their parents, and of youngsters in "underprivileged or neglectful" families.



"The Council is of the opinion that in some provinces greater care should be taken to observe and search out such cases," the Council declared, "that more competency should be given to child-care agencies to provide for the protection of such children; and that in all cases in all provinces, the courts, where separations or divorces are pending, should be urged to review all the circumstances which have affected the children concerned and to make even closer examination than heretofore into arrangements for their future placement and care."

At the same time, the Council praised the government for instituting its policy of family allowances, which has cost Canada more than $250,000,000 a year. These allowances, the Council said, "have on the whole worked out for the betterment of the children within the lower wage brackets."

A plea for aged persons with meager resources was also made by the Council. It asserted that many of these persons now have nothing more to live on than their old-age pensions.

Clergy Meet

East Aurora, N. Y.:—Bishop Austin Pardue of Pittsburgh is the leader at a quiet day for the clergy of Western New York, held here at St. Mathias today, December 11. He is to speak at the morning session on the program of evangelism, with Bishop Cameron Davis the leader in the afternoon. A second meeting will be held at the diocesan house in Buffalo on December 16 to deal with techniques for puttting the program into effect in parishes.

Report of Fund

Brooklyn:—The Church Building Fund, meeting last week, reported that during the past six months it has made loans aggregating $160,449 and gifts amounting to $13,800. Commitments for loans promised but not yet taken amount to $186,000 and promised gifts exceed $16,000. Since January 1, 1947 the commission has received inquiries from more than 185 congregations which want to finance their building programs through loans which total more than two million dollars and from 53 others desiring gifts in excess of $18,000. The permanent building fund now amounts to $893,796 of which more than a half million is represented by current loans.

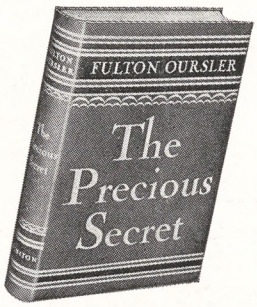
Mr. Richard N. Crockett and Mr. A. Elliott Bates, both of New York City, were elected trustees of the Fund.

New Primate

Sydney (RNS):—Archbishop Howard W. K. Mowll of Sydney has been elected Primate of the Church of England in Australia, succeeding the late Archbishop Le Fanu of Perth. Formerly Bishop of Western China, Archbishop Mowll was named for the Sydney see in 1933 and will continue to hold that position.

The election as Primate is regarded in Anglican circles here as likely to compose long-standing differences between the Australian bishoprics and to aid the establishment of a self-governing Australian Anglican Church.

The fact that Archbishop Mowll is high church is expected to end resentment created among parishes in the senior diocese of Sydney when the late low church Archbishop Le Fanu was appointed. Now that the Sydney diocese is headed by a high churchman a closer rapprochement will be possible with other high church bishoprics, hitherto estranged by the low church character of the diocese.



Meanwhile, the fate of the proposed new draft constitution which would make the Australian Church independent and unite it under one General Synod is said to depend on the decision of the Sydney diocese. Three metropolitan dioceses have approved the proposed charter—Melbourne, Perth and Brisbane — but much hinges on the attitude Sydney, oldest and largest diocese, will adopt.

No More Pew Rents

Baltimore, Md.: — For the first time since Emmanuel Church was founded, 93 years ago, the pews and sittings in the church are free of the pew rent system. Members of the congregation, holding pews or sittings, have voluntarily given them up and are contributing what they formerly gave as pew rents with their pledges through the duplex envelopes. Congregations already show an increase in attendance in this downtown parish, ministering to a scattered congregation and to many visitors and strangers.

Stop Gambling

Syracuse, N. Y.:—Bishop Malcolm Peabody of Central New York has sent a letter to the clergy of the diocese urging them to end all forms of gambling in raising church funds.

"The first reason that gambling, from the Christian standpoint, is wrong hinges on the fact that as stewards of his bounty we are committed to account to God for every minute and every cent. When the Church encourages gambling it deliberately breaks with this principle. Gambling, however apparently harmless, leads almost inevitably to habitual indulgence and often to play for larger stakes. Once undertaken it is hard to control.

"Bingo, where money is paid to enter the game or is received for winning, is in fact gambling and like all games of chance, is prohibited by law in the state of New York. The police may overlook such lawbreaking, but is it not thoroughly improper for the Church to use her position of privilege to break the law at all, and particularly in her own interest? For these reasons it seems obvious to me that by permitting gambling on church property (or wherever games may be held in the church's interest) we are permitting a practice that will tend to break down the moral standards which as Christ's followers we are trying to build up.

"Accordingly I appeal to you to put an end to gambling of all kinds in your congregation, either as a means of entertainment or as a device for raising money for the Church, on the ground that this is incompatible with our position as stewards of Christ in the world. This applies to Bingo or to games of similar nature by any name, to raffles, to "door prizes" so-called, and to every game of chance for which rewards are offered or received and for which corresponding services are not rendered."

THE NEW BOOKS

SYDNEY A. TEMPLE, Book Editor
Excellent Good *Fair

God Confronts Man in History by Henry Sloan Coffin, Scribners, $2.50. Dynamite and Dogma might be the subtitle of these lectures first delivered in the Orient by the recently retired president of Union Seminary. Courage as well as conviction is evidenced as Dr. Coffin evaluates the effects of our current foreign policy upon the people of the east in his first chapter. Read his reactions to the attitude of the Moslem world and his evaluation of the "utter frustration" found among thoughtful Chinese as related to the actions of our government. It is no radical reformer but a former Moderator of the Presbyterian Church who writes in regard to the American loan to the Philippines, "The morals of a great nation exercising such coercion upon a small one in dire poverty were abominable."

Church dogma is approached no less frankly in the remainder of the book as Dr. Coffin sees in the great fundamental beliefs of Christianity a natural and reasonable interpretation of God as he confronts man in history. The book is written for those who come from the religions of the Orient but the same weaknesses and idolatries are to be found in the unbelievers and seekers of the Occident. This is a book to be put in the hand of laymen who wish to find an understandable approach to doctrines which often seem beyond them. The empirical method carries the reader along known ground and the conclusions arrived at contain all the major precepts of catholic dogma, using catholic in the best and truest sense of that term. Christian dogma may be best understood by this inductive method because, as the author reminds his readers, Christianity is the only religion which derives the understanding of the person of God from an event in history.

The Church has every reason to thank the trustees of the Joseph Cook Lectureship for refusing to allow Dr. Coffin to enjoy his retirement in "restful tasks within diminishing strength." For these lectures are of service to Christianity both in the conversion of Orientals who heard them

Skeptic's Search for God* by Barbara S. Morgan, Harpers, $3.00. This is a book which will appeal to many persons troubled with questions of faith. Mrs. Morgan is a thorough scholar, but her scholarship has not destroyed her ability to state things with sharp clarity. For example: "It is also time that the Protestant Churches made up their minds whether church attendance is a duty or an entertainment. I wish that churchgoing might be squarely recognized as a duty, with the incidental shortcomings of the clergyman submerged in the common longing he represents: man's search for the unknowable."

Or take this: "Hard as it is to give an all-over definition of evil in existence, the attempt to account for it metaphysically is hopeless. Some theologians try to show that, in the long view, evil is all for the best. This line recalls Rasputin's famous argument that one must sin in order to know the purification of remorse. Other theologians conceive evil as part of the will of God, a thought which entrenches the idea of the arbitrary ruler. The profoundest theological thinkers, however, have recognized that the infinite being of God must include essences of evil as well as essences of good. Eckhart spoke of 'that in God which is not God.' May it not be that the assumption of an intelligible universe will help us here?"

The approach to God outlined in this book is threefold: intellectual, mystic, and moral, and the author has many good things to say about each one of these. The opening chapter, on "The Barrier of Words," is one to be read and reread.

Seeds of Redemption* by Bernard Eugene Meland. Macmillan. $2.50.

Dr. Meland is known to theologians as the author of a number of books in which what might be called a "naturalistic theism" is presented. In this volume, he argues for a point of view which builds on "the gentleness of the creative spirit," which finds evidences of that creativity in every area of our experience, and which believes that man's salvation is to be found as he gives himself to be a "channel through which creativity can work" in promoting "gentleness." He discerns in the world an anabolic as well as a katabolic movement, and affirms that the former—which builds up and integrates—is the working of God, while the latter—manifested in war and in the destructive and negative forces in history and nature—does not have behind it the enormous reserve power of God, despite all appearances to the contrary. Our task is to join ourselves to the upbuilding, rather than the destructive, forces; in this way, we can be "fellow-workers with God" in the creation of a new world.

There is much in this book which seems inadequate to those of us who hold to the tradition of historic Christianity in its grander and more affirmative aspect. Yet we shall profit by reading this simply written volume, because it will have at least this result: we shall be obliged to recognize the "secular" and "hidden" operation of God in the whole creation and in this way widen our conception of the meaning of that credal phrase which describes the eternal word of God as him "by whom all things were made."

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

VERY REV. THOMAS H. CHAPPELL
Dean of St. Stephen's Cathedral, Harrisburg, Pa.

I have just read the letter of Mr. R. H. Davis in Backfire, (WITNESS, Nov. 6). Since I like and respect American business men, and know that they have an important and vital part to play in our national life, I have been more and more concerned lately because so very few of them understand or can talk intelligently about economics, politics, and international affairs. They talk fascinatingly and intelligently about their own businesses, but beyond that small field they are almost always out of their depth, especially in foreign affairs, but also in politics and economics. In support of Mr. Davis, it is true that there are some clergymen who do not understand the subjects he mentions, but of so many more business men it is equally true.

Mr. Davis' letter is a case in point. I presume that he is a business man; it is unfortunate that, with all his obvious good will and his devotion to the Church, he should exhibit such vagueness about the history of the country and so complete an ignorance about the place in life of the Church of which he is so sincere a member.

MRS. JAMES POWERS
Churchwoman of Columbus

I was extremely interested in the news story in the Nov. 20 WITNESS about the controversies over the Church and state issue. Granted, it is a difficult and complicated question. But I was surprised to read that one of the leading officers of the Federal Council of Churches, F. Ernest Johnson, should state that free bus transportation should be provided out of public funds for children attending parochial schools. These schools are private schools, just as the many diocesan schools of our Church are private. And if parents wish to have their children attend such schools, of whatever Church, I think they should provide their own transportation. Our public schools are open to everyone, regardless of religious affiliation. Roman Catholic children can attend them as well as Protestant children, and children of other faiths, or no faith at all. These schools are free—including in most states, transportation to and from school. If parents of any Church believe that "something is added" by having their offspring attend a Church school then, it seems to me, they should pay for it and not expect the rest of us to pay for this advantage through taxes.

MISS M. G. GRAHAM
Churchwoman of Brooklyn

Thank you for printing the picture of Mr. and Mrs. Harper Sibley on the cover (Nov. 27). I have heard Mrs. Sibley speak on a number of occasions and agree with you that she is one of our most distinguished Church women. I am sure it is equally true that Mr. Sibley has made great contributions to the life of the Church. I wish that we might have more such pictures in THE WITNESS. We read constantly of lay men and women who are leaders of the Church, and if you could give us informal pictures, like this one of the Sibleys, it would help break down the idea so many people have that the clergy do all the work in the Church, with lay people merely paying the bills.

ANSWER: We will be glad to receive such informal photographs from which halftones can be made. Send them to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty St., New York 6, with a brief note giving your reason for thinking the person (or persons) rate a cover picture.

MR. S. P. PETERS
Churchman of New York

I fail to see what is gained by printing in THE WITNESS (Nov. 27) the letter that Missionary Paul B. Denlinger of China wrote to Senator Smith. It is perfectly clear to everyone that if our American way of life is to be maintained then we have to defeat the communists in China as well as in Europe. Capitalism and communism cannot exist side by side in this world. I am therefore for making it "one world" in fact, not merely in name, by stamping out the menace of communism while we are still in a position to do so. Mr. Denlinger is obviously a young man who has a great deal to learn, and we will do well to follow the advice of Congressman Walter Judd who is a recognized authority on China.

MR. E. C. ENGLISH
Churchman of New York

The article by Prof. Paul Sweezy in THE WITNESS for November 27 certainly presented a side of the Marshall Plan that was entirely new to me. There undoubtedly is another side to the question and I hope that it will be as effectively presented in your excellent paper. In discussing foreign policy with many friends, both inside and outside the Church, I find that most of them want the U. S. to tackle the colossal job of feeding the hungry wherever they are. But these friends are equally sure that we should not use our economic resources to impose our will upon other peoples. I had rather naively thought that relief was the heart of the Plan but Prof. Sweezy's appraisal certainly has raised serious doubts in my mind. I hope that my faith may be restored by the articles you say are to follow. We cannot have too much discussion of such a vital matter.

Carry On Extensive Projects In Diversified Fields

Work With Blind, in Rural Service Centers And With Lepers in Addition to a Parish

By Kimber H. K. Den

Nanchang, China (Nov. 18 by air):—Plans are under way for the strengthening and widening of the Kiangsi Christian Rural Service Union. The service commission of the Church of the Brethren in America is now cooperating with the Union, with a number of workers now in the field. This commission of the Brethren did wonderful work in rural rehabilitation through its tractor project, in cooperation with UNRRA in China. With the closing of UNRRA, its field director, Mr. Wendell Flory, proposed cooperating with us in the same rehabilitation work, thus fulfilling one of my long cherished hopes.

The plans are elaborate, with projects proposed in the fields of agriculture; industry; social welfare; medical aid; education; religion. In agriculture the plan calls for the use of power machinery which can go from farm to farm as required. Work will be started on the eradication of the rice-borer; families will be settled on small farms which will eventually become self-supporting if the Union can supply part of the food, clothing and tools at the start.

In industry, the plan calls for central power plants and blacksmith shops and also plants for the manufacturing of fertilizer. Home industries are being encouraged on a cooperative basis.

In social welfare various clubs have been organized; an agency for family counselling and case work; education of women in nutrition, child care, disease prevention. Aid is provided for orphans, the blind and the crippled. A trade school is being established for the training of the unskilled.

In medical care, an out-patient clinic is to be set up; a mobile medical team established; education carried on in public sanitation and disease prevention; and aid given to the leper colony and the sanitarium for the tubercular. In education, support is given to local teachers; a university center is planned, with an exchange student plan proposed. Education is also carried on through the theatre, motion pictures, community activities. A rural newspaper is also planned.

In religion there are the usual worship services, a Bible study hour, week-day vespers and a morning watch.

After careful study and many personal visits we have finally decided on So-pu-tan as the new field service center for this rural rehabilitation project. It is a most devastated area, only 20 miles from Nanchang, and only 10 miles from Lotus Pond Village and Nan-Don-Chen where we already have rural service centers, the one at Lotus Pond Village named in memory of Marcia Spofford Russell. With the whole-hearted cooperation of the Nanchang magistrate a plan is under way to open all the country roads connecting all of our centers so that a jeep could make a round trip in half a day.

Meanwhile at St. Matthew's Church here in Nanchang we have opened a school for blind children which already has its full enrollment of 50 children, and we plan to increase the enrollment to 100 as soon as resources permit. The addition this autumn of Miss Hsu, a blind teacher from Wuchang, has opened a new field of industrial work by teaching the children cross-stitch and needle work. This work needs some working capital at the initial period, but it is expected to be a going concern in course of time.

For the first time after the war, the board of directors for the Lepers Colony met. I presented a report on the condition of the Leprosarium as a result of Japanese occupation and outlined the need for improvements so as to carry on the work during this postwar period. Most of the discussion was on financial support, and it was most encouraging to all present to learn that the American Mission to Lepers is making a grant of US $4,000 for the coming year. Dr. Ernest Weiss of the Nanchang General Hospital was elected to be head and director of all medical work for the Leprosarium. The former leper doctor, Dr. Chang Chih Yun, now declared symptom free, was again appointed resident doctor of the colony.

(THE WITNESS played its small part in the cure of Dr. Chang. The issue of Nov. 21, 1946 reported that a new sulfa drug was proving effective in the treatment of leprosy. Bishop Craighill read this report and wrote THE WITNESS about it. His letter was sent by us to Raymond P. Currier, executive secretary of the American Mission to Lepers, who dispatched 1,000 tablets of the new drug to China.)

As I write, an invitation comes from Dr. Neil Fraser, the representative of the American Mission to

FOR CHRISTMAS

Space limitations prevent us from repeating the announcement that appeared on page 20 of our November 27th number. May we ask therefore that you turn to that if you have not already acted upon the suggestion. Or if the November 27th issue is no longer on hand, send us a list of those to whom you would like to have THE WITNESS sent for a year as a Christmas gift, and mail it, with $4 for each one, to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y. We will then enter the orders so that your friends will receive our Christmas number, and we will send a Christmas Card announcing the gift as from you.

We want also to urge the clergy, even this early, to plan to use THE WITNESS this coming Lent in study groups. The series of articles being planned we are sure will enlist their enthusiasm. Announcement will be made in plenty of time—this is merely to suggest that you make no other plans until you see what THE WITNESS has to offer.

Lepers in China, for me to fly to Foochow for a meeting with Dr. Eugene R. Kellersberger who is the head of the American Mission to Lepers, now in China for a short visit. In view of the urgent need in improving the condition and work of the Nanchang Leprosarium it is quite essential that I seize this opportunity to have a good talk with Dr. Kellersberger.

At St. Matthew's, where I am rector, we have a plan for self-support. The idea is not to raise an endowment as is done in so many parishes, but to build up the life of the parish by increasing the membership twofold each year. This can be done only by urging every parishioner, both young and old, to dedicate themselves with deeper devotion and loyalty to the cause of our Lord, Jesus Christ.

On the day of our annual parish meeting, which was our mid-autumn festival, a thanksgiving service was held. Some of our rural members, who had no cash for thanksgiving offerings, presented to the church a part of their farming products, such as peanuts, lotus-roots, soy-beans and moon cakes. This farm product was sold and the sum of a half million dollars realized. But I hardly need to tell my American friends that a half million Chinese dollars is a very small sum indeed in these days of tremendous inflation. In our every member canvass we started out for six million dollars. At the close of the campaign a sum of twelve million dollars was reported. In addition one member, formerly on the lapsed list, made a special gift of three million dollars for the buying of 100 Bibles and 100 copies of the new Hymnal for use in the church. As a symbolic expression of our deepest gratitude for the remarkable success of our financial campaign this year, the congregation voted to triple our quota to the diocese by paying a million and a half, instead of our regular quota of half a million dollars.

It is about the right time for me to send my Christmas greetings to all of my good Christian friends in America. Owing to the pressure of my heavy duties I cannot write to each one of them. Will you be kind enough to convey my best Christmas greetings to all of them through THE WITNESS, with the following message:

TRUE CONCEPTION OF HAPPINESS

Happiness goes out from the heart before it comes in. It never by any chance stays at home. You can harvest for the common good, but you cannot store it for your individual use. One must contribute to the stock of human joys before he can participate in its profits. Happiness was never any good in this world but to give away.

PREPARING CAREERS AS PARSON'S WIVES

Sewanee, Tenn.: — The Seminary at the University of the South has enrolled a score of young women in classes where they will be prepared for careers as clergymen's wives. It is the first three-year curriculum offered by any seminary to increase the effectiveness of the woman in her husband's work. The program is directed by Mrs. Robert F. Gibson Jr., wife of the new dean, and subjects include church activities and organizations; religious education; churchmanship; preparation for confirmation; pastoral counseling. Other courses will be added in an attempt to deal with all the problems and opportunities confronting the wife of a parson — including, we hope, how to manage a household on a small salary.

COOPERATION IN SPAIN

Geneva:—Apart from what has already appeared in the press concerning the hostility toward Protestants in Spain, the World Council of Churches now reports that at Barcelona the Methodist church, which belongs to an English mission, has been completely ransacked. Those responsible destroyed the furniture, the pulpit, the organ, doors, pews, windows, Bibles and hymn books. The pulpit Bible was torn into bits and the fragments scattered on the floor.

At Granollers in Catalonia a gang broke into the church during a service. They forced the minister to come from the pulpit and beat him and also beat members of the congregation. The police were informed and arrested the intruders, but held them only a few hours.

From Villafranca the World Council reports hostility to Protestants which is expressed in a general way by breaking the windows of churches during services.

This picture was taken at the opening of the new Service Center at So-pu-tan, under the auspices of the Kiangsi Christian Rural Service Center. The American in the center is Mr. Joe Mour, representative of the American Brethren Service Commission. Kimber Den will be recognized by his many American friends. The others are community leaders and government officials

Church Women of New England Support College Work

Plan Makes It Possible For Every Parish To Put Itself Squarely Back of Chaplains

By Mrs. Leigh Urban
President, New England Council of Episcopal Church Women

Longmeadow, Mass.:—Something is happening in Province I. At the annual meeting of the women of the province held this fall in Burlington, Vermont, a plan was adopted and is even now being put into effect to meet one of the great challenges facing the Church today; the need for widespread and effective work in the colleges. Through this plan every parish in the province will be enabled to put itself squarely back of this college work. The plan is simple and effective. It is administered through the existing organization of the Women's Auxiliary. It is called "Church Scholarships for College Work." It keeps the student knit closely to his home parish and ensures an effective ministry of the Church for him when he is away.

For the home parish, it means giving for each of its young people in college, three things: regular prayer, intelligent concern and care, funds to further the Church's work in that particular college.

For the college parish it means financial support enabling it to provide the sacraments, adequate pastoral care and effective student religious instruction groups. One example gives the reason for this need of support. One state university with 250 Episcopal students is served by a parish of 85 communicants. They cannot support a full time rector, and the students themselves can contribute very little. Five dollars for each of them from their individual home parishes would make it possible to keep a full time clergyman in that parish.

For the students it means that there will be a real parish home away from home, that by every possible means the Christian faith will be made relevant as the student's horizons widen, that they will be helped to meet the non-Christian world with an abiding faith and zealous and intelligent commitment.

This is the way it works: In each parish a secretary for college work will secure the names and addresses of all young people in that parish who are going to college. For them she will secure the prayers of the parish by praying for them herself, by asking the rector to bid the prayers of the parish for them, or by forming intercessory groups. She will keep them in touch with the home parish by personal acquaintance, letters, or by welcome home parties for them at the holidays. She will attempt to secure a scholarship of five dollars for each student from parents, from parish groups, or interested individuals, each year. In each diocese a secretary for college work will receive the money with the names and college addresses and forward them to the provincial college work commission. She will also set the plan forward by personal counsel, by stimulating interest and by eliciting cooperation, particularly in the appointment of parish secretaries. The first such appointment has been made, that of Mrs. W. H. Wills of Bennington as secretary of Vermont. Mrs. J. R. V. McKenzie of Worcester, Mass., represents college work on the provincial board.

The funds will be allocated by the commission after consultation with each bishop giving first preference to the college designated, and when the work is already being cared for in that particular area, to further the Church's ministry to students wherever the need is greatest. If the money is given for students studying outside of the province, it will be forwarded to the college work commission of the other province for similar application.

This plan will supplement and strengthen the work already being done by the Church Society for College Work, enabling them to concentrate their efforts on strategic campuses.

The Plan will keep the Church with your sons and daughters.

BETHLEHEM PREPARES FOR CHRISTMAS

Bethlehem, Pa. (RNS):—This city, named for Christ's birthplace in the Holy Land, is the mecca of thousands who come to view the elaborate decorations which have made it known as the "Christmas City of America." The bells of more than 70 churches in the city pealed and thousands of persons bowed their heads in prayers as the lights were lighted officially. This is the 11th year for such decorations, which become more elaborate each year. The lights stretch for seven miles, with a 100-foot electric star on top of South Mountain visible for a radius of 20 miles. In all, there are 28,000 colored lights and 240 fluorescent star and bell lights.

A 52-foot Christmas tree made up of more than 150 small trees and illuminated by 1,200 lights, has been erected in the center of the city. When the lights were turned on Protestant and Catholic choral groups toured the city, singing carols.

Bethlehem was founded by persons who fled religious persecution abroad. Just 206 years ago, a band of Moravians came here from Germany and established the community. They sang "Not Jerusalem, Lowly Bethlehem," and that song inspired Count Nicholas Zinzendorf and his followers to name the community "Bethlehem," in honor of the birthplace of Christ. Now there are approximately 80 churches of all creeds in the city.

There is a charm to the city at present not found elsewhere. Pure beeswax candles are seen everywhere. Housewives are busy making Christmas cookies from centuries-old family recipes — especially ginger cookies fashioned into quaint little animals and white cookies formed to represent angels, stars and trees.

The Christmas Eve celebration conducted by the Moravians has been unchanged in centuries. The Moravian churches are decked with evergreen and each of the thousands of participants in the Christmas Eve vigil holds a lighted candle during the soft singing of carols.

At dawn, a trombone choir heralds Christmas morning from the tower of Old Moravian Church. Rounds of "putz-visiting" follow.

DETROIT RECTOR IS HONORED

Detroit: — Two silver-haired men sat side by side, on December 1, and recalled again a blustery December day thirty years ago when a new rector came to the "little tin church" known as Grace Church, Detroit. One was the Rev. Bertram W. Pullinger, known far better as "Cap," still rector of the parish. The other was Dr. Claude M. Stafford, who was instrumental in bringing Mr. Pullinger to Detroit, who met him at the train when he arrived in town and acted as his host on that occasion.

More than two hundred joined the two men at a parish dinner in the church auditorium to honor Mr. Pullinger on his anniversary, the group being nearly the capacity of the room. The little tin church, which accommodated a handful of worshippers thirty years ago, has been replaced long since by a convenient parish building; the main church building is still to be erected.

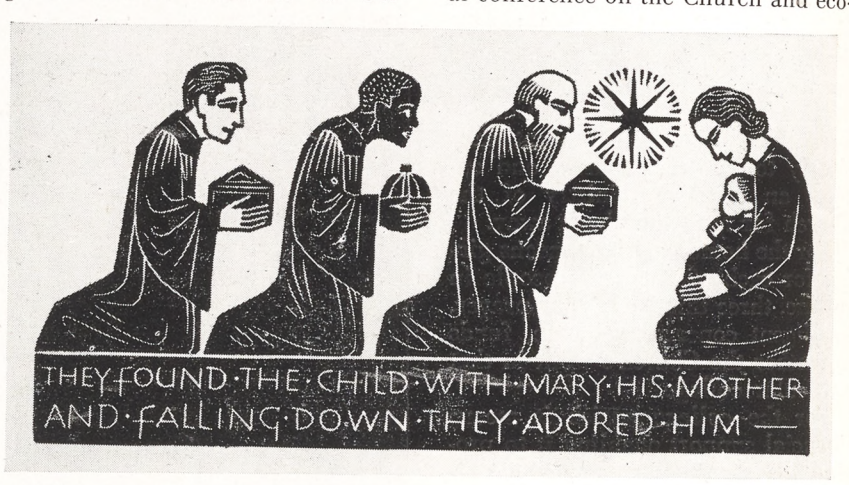
Mr. Pullinger's career was reviewed in an address by Bishop Richard S. Emrich, suffragan of the diocese. The toastmaster and master of ceremonies at the dinner was Mr. Fred T. Williams, junior warden of the parish.

One of the noteworthy features of Mr. Pullinger's rectorship has been his practice of making thousands of visits to homes every year in addition to his very active participation in every other department of the Church's work.

GERMAN LEADERS HIT COMMUNISM

New York (RNS):—Fear that Russia may attempt to set Protestants against Roman Catholics in Germany by a conciliatory approach to Protestants was voiced here by the Rev. Hans Asmussen, executive secretary of the Evangelical Church in Germany. He is in this country for two months, lecturing in various centers. He said that the differences between Christianity and Communism and Christianity and Nazism "are so great that the difference between the Evangelical Church and Roman Catholicism is not so great, for you will find Jesus Christ in both."

He expressed his views before the executive committee of the National Lutheran Council when asked about the possibility of a united front of Protestants and Roman Catholics to combat Communism. He said the Russians may try to convince leaders of the Evangelical faith that their Church and Communism can cooperate with each other, while they stress that Communism and Roman Catholicism are completely incompatible. "I hope that the Evangelical Church in Germany will not live through Stalin at the expense of the Roman Catholic Church," he declared, "because I know that five years later we will pay the bill."



Another speaker, Bishop F. Otto Dibelius of Berlin, also a Lutheran, asserted that "the only two spiritual powers in Germany today are Christianity and Communism. You will never stop Communism by doing 50 per cent of what it wishes done, because it won't be long before Communism asks for the other 50 per cent."

SEE LACK OF EXPERTS

Baltimore:—Episcopalian Charles P. Taft, president of the Federal Council of Churches, told the regional conference on the Church and economic life here that discussion should be opened by experts.

The Cincinnati lawyer, referring to similar conferences held last year in Pittsburgh and Philadelphia, remarked that "the principal lesson learned from these two meetings is the necessity of beginning any national, local or personal study of the problem of the Church and economic life with basic economic groundwork."

"With preliminary discussions by qualified persons in labor, business and finance," Taft said, "you may not get far in one day in your conference on the problem of how Christian principles may be applied to business and economic life. But, you certainly are going to be miles ahead of a quick and appealing presentation to a resolutions committee, followed by a unanimous vote of a convention for the free-enterprise system, or the alternative in favor of production for use instead of profit."

How Far Is An Hour?

NOT so very long ago the proper and expected answer to the question as to the distance of a certain place from where the questioner was standing was: so many miles—few or many as the case might be. With that information the prospective traveller would make his plans according to the length of the journey, and in due time, at the rate of so many modest miles per hour arrive at the haven where he would be. We speak not only of the horse and buggy days, but also of the days of automobile and train and ocean liner—those convenient carriers which conveyed the traveller to his destination no matter how long it might take. "How far" we asked, and made preparation for a journey of so many miles that would take so long. The miles were greater than the minutes, and had to be reckoned with.

But that was yesterday. Today the true nature of the situation is revealed by a recent striking advertisement which displayed a four-motored, many-passengered, streamlined airliner streaking toward a far and beckoning horizon, at several hundred miles per hour—while on the ground beneath is a horse-drawn carriage patiently rolling along between one town and the next. The caption under the picture asks "How far is an hour?" With the speed of travel made possible by the modern airplane, the minutes have become of more importance than the miles. Distance is almost of no consequence; we may if we choose, be anywhere we want to be in this world in a few hours. The question is no longer "How far" but "How long are you willing to travel to get there?" If a lifetime, you may walk. If even now you should be there, wherever it may be, you may soon be able to travel faster than sound, and at least overtake a few of the hours that have already passed if you travel with the sun. It's how you travel that matters—not how far.

This has become true in the realm of physical travel so recently that we still talk of it with wonder. Imagine, we say, having an early breakfast in New York and a late dinner in San Francisco! California isn't 3,000 miles from New York at all, it's just a few hours!

Yet in the realm of the spirit man has known for a long time that it isn't how far he must journey on his spiritual pilgrimage that really matters, but how! If he chooses the right way to travel, the miles are as nothing and the distance disappears. In a moment of time he may, if he will, leave the distractions of this world far behind and step into the very presence of God. Or he may set out on a long tiresome journey and never finally arrive at the throne of God at all. It depends on the way he travels.

Think for a moment of the world of that first Christmas night as we are told about it in gospel and song. The question on the lips of all who heard the wondrous story was the same "How far is it to Bethlehem?" Mighty things were happening there, things which men must see and hear if ever again their restless quest for life's most precious meaning was to be satisfied.

But here is the paradox—the ones who were nearest were farthest away from the true Bethlehem, and ones farthest away were nearest. The tax-paying throngs, the profit-taking merchants and the busy innkeepers had no time to reach out and touch the hand of God—they were too busy resenting their hard lot that they had to pay taxes at all—or had to make the most of those abnormally busy seasons when people come to town so that they might live through the longer leaner months. None was content with his lot, yet each was determined that none other should get the advantage over him. Each for himself, including the unfortunate Mother and her Babe who must be content to give way to the demands of more profitable customers. Here, incarnate, was the love they sought, but because they had no time for love they chose to walk the long, loveless way to the Bethlehem of the soul their tired feet would never reach. Yet had they but forgotten themselves, even for a moment, they would have found themselves the "first to look upon the face of God." Bethlehem is that near and that far.

AND then there were others—far away as men measure miles, Wise Men from the East with deserts and mountains to cross by slow moving

"QUOTES"

SOME of us were born long enough ago to remember the lamplighter. He came, good man, a little shabby like our darkened lanes and alleys, to do his little miracle in the absence of Master Sun. And we made our ways along his twinkling course, the little ones marveling at his magic, the elders blessing him for his benevolence.

Our present naughty world has pulled down night upon us, but it is not wholly dark. The Lamplighter still goes his rounds touching here and there little lamps to shine with good deeds. Though they are not the Sun, we see by them, do we not?—enough to go our trusting way until the Sun shall rise with healing in His wings.

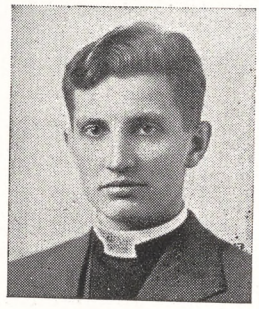
caravan if ever they were to reach Bethlehem of Judea. But they were so wise they knew that true wisdom came from above, so they looked up, and lifted up their hearts, and were rewarded by a star which while it led them to far off Bethlehem assured them that in their hearts they had already reached their destination. The truly wise are always the truly humble, and the poor in spirit are never very far from the stable where Christ is born.

The shepherds too, those who never pretend to be very wise, but who were contendedly busy with their appointed tasks, were not in Bethlehem when Christ was born. They were watching their flocks out on the hillsides, but they might as well have been there, for in their single-hearted devotion to duty they saw the heavens open and heard the music of angels. It didn't take them long to get to Bethlehem when they were told the good news that the Saviour of the world was born, but they knew already in their hearts that it was true. It is always so with the truly simple people who never pretend to be very wise. God may and does speak to them and finds them ready to believe and follow in faith where he may lead the way. It's never far to Bethlehem for those who will trust themselves to the wings of the spirit. With light and with song they are carried into the very presence of Christ the Lord on the breath of a prayer wherever they may be.

So may it be with us this Christmas Season. Whether we are far from Bethlehem or not is determined solely by the way we choose to travel. We may be very close indeed, and yet never quite get there because we vex with argument the angel's song. Or we may be restless and impatient to get on with making our way in the world—making our fortunes and postponing living until we can afford to retire, too late. Or we may be proud and fearful people—like Herod was, afraid to go to Bethlehem at all lest our little crowns seem pretty tawdry, in the light and presence of a real King.

But if we are simple people, honest people, hard-working people, earnestly eager to get to Bethlehem, we may pause for a moment of prayer beside the weary road, and hear the angels sing that Christ is born in us to share our load and lift up our hearts. Bethlehem is that near.

Or if we are honestly trying to follow the truth wherever it may lead, and are not afraid to look up from our books or our test tubes, or our microscopes, we may see a light to guide us to him who is the way, the truth and the life, and take our proper place beside the wisemen of old who saw a star which did not confound and confuse their carefully devised schemes of truth but led them rather into all truth. When we cease to be afraid that God may somehow undo all that we have done if we seek him too closely, we shall really reach Bethlehem. It may take a moment, or a day, a year, or a life-time. God is not impatient, but how foolish are we, if Bethlehem be only an hour away, to take the long, hard road and the means of travel which will delay our arrival for days or years? The fear—and the love, of the Lord is the beginning and the end of wisdom. We may fall on our knees before him now, and find ourselves in Bethlehem, it is that near.



The Christmas carol asks "How far is it to Bethlehem" and answers, "Not very far." It isn't a matter of miles, it isn't even a matter of time, really. It's just being willing to be there. "Where meek souls will receive him, still the dear Christ enters in."

Dramatic Arts and Religion

By

REV. WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD JR.

HOLLYWOOD the Golden is following T. S. Eliot's precept: it is dying "not with a bang but a whimper." J. Parnell Thomas for the majority and John Rankin for the minority called ten assorted writers, directors and producers subversive (of course, without defining terms), added a generous dose of anti-semitism, and let the broth simmer. The boys of Hollywood (I call them boys because they seem so seldom to act like men) who control the money took one sip of the brew and gagged. The ten were fired without further ado and held up as examples. In Greece, according to the most recent reports, the use of such "examples" always sends ten more people into the hills fighting mad. It's too early to tell what the Hollywood reaction will be.

Personally, I must have seen many of the works of these ten men. I can only remember one. It was a short subject written by Albert Maltz back in the days when we prayed for the defenders of Madrid every night. The short was a simple one, dealing with a man, with a sick wife, who chose to drive a T.N.T. truck in return for ready cash, although the odds were 10 to 1 that he would be killed before a week was out. More than this,

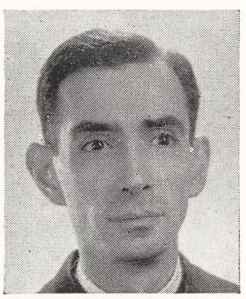
I don't recall but I remember thinking at the time that the whole picture featured very good humanity and something closely akin to a message from the 8th century prophets. Now Messrs. Thomas and Rankin inform me that I was taken in—"duped," I think, is the correct word.



Although it won't have any counter-effect on the works of the Legion of Decency and the Catholic War Vets in the drama fields, only those theaters which show foreign films will see the color of our money from now on. Our relationship to Hollywood isn't exactly defined in Jimmy Durante's great song, "I can do without Broadway but can Broadway do without me." But, even though Eric Johnston and Co. don't particularly miss our $1.10 (movie prices inflate, too, you know), it should make us feel better.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

The Christmas Eucharist

SECULARISM in the modern world has corroded all areas of the Church's life, including its liturgical observance. In no instance has it been more devastating than in the transformation of Holy Days into holidays. Ascension Day and All Saints are almost reduced to the level of St. Matthias or St. Bartholomew in the attention paid to them by many communicants. We are all painfully aware of the way in which Easter Day has become remarked upon chiefly in the society columns of the newspapers. Christmas Day bids fair to suffer the same fate.

For generations our Church in this fair land stood as a voice crying in the wilderness for the due observance of Christmas as a high and holy day of religious obligation against the distorted perversions of Puritanism and Dissent. What Puritanism could not overwhelm, modern materialism has come near to accomplishing. Our churches are sparsely attended on Christmas Day now — too many Episcopalians are playing Santa Claus or making eggnog.

Oh, yes, there is the midnight service Christmas Eve, when the church is packed to the doors. But a late evening communion on the vigil of Christmas is a poor substitute for a Christmas Eucharist on the day of the Nativity itself. Why? One reason, and I think the main reason, is that the children are not there. What is Christmas without the children? Have they no part in the Christmas mysteries? The one time in the year when the parish celebrates the birth of the heaven-sent Child and sings its joyous carols about the Holy Family, we put our principal efforts into establishing a 'midnight Eucharist' when it is impossible for us to worship as families because it is inconvenient for the children to be present at so late an hour.

I know that the midnight service is usually justified as a return to ancient tradition of beginning the Christmas observances with a Eucharist at the legendary time of our Lord's birth. But for most of our people the midnight service is not the beginning of their Christmas devotions, but the end; and sometimes, alas, it is the end of a rather convivial Christmas Eve. Let me quote a passage from the late Bishop of Truro, W. H. Frere, a Catholic Christian of unimpeachable scholarship and good sense:

> "The midnight Mass is, however, a matter of doubtful expediency. It was never intended to be a late evening service, after which people went home to bed; it was the beginning of Christmas Day. If it were likely to be observed according to this intention, there would be something to be said for its recovery. But there seems no tendency for worshippers to show such Christmas devotion as to begin their Christmas at midnight and continue it right ahead; and failing that, the decadent substitute of a Christmas Mass, which is only a misplaced Evening Communion, is much to be deprecated." (The Liturgical Gospels, p. 8.)

There is always, of course, the argument from expediency. If 11:00 P.M. Christmas Eve is the only time we can get many people out, then let us have our service then. All right. I am not one to discourage any service of worship to which people will come. I hope, though, that the parson will not neglect his opportunity at that time to preach the Gospel. With so many seldom-to-be-seen churchmen out that night it would be a shame to let them get away without getting a word in; for the sweet music they could just as well hear at home on the radio, but they are less likely to tune in on a sermon. What I am pleading for is this: let us not encourage the midnight service Christmas Eve at the expense of the normative celebration Christmas Day when all the family can be present, children as well as grown-ups. We must keep Christmas Day as a Holy Day. I know of one bishop who has informed his clergy that he will not approve the midnight service if it is used as a substitute for a regular service on Christmas Day itself. More power to him! I hope there are many more bishops like him.

The Christ of the Carols

by Randolph Crump Miller

Of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific

IT WOULD surprise many singers of Christmas carols if they stopped to consider what they were singing. The carols are sung in department stores, at schools, and on the radio with reckless abandon — and this is good, for it is right to praise God and his Christ even in ignorance.

At the heart of the Christian religion is the belief that Jesus Christ is Lord and Savior. God of God and Light of Light. He is the eternal word of the Father, sent to redeem us from our social and individual sins. The adoration of the God of Jesus Christ is the basis for Christian worship.

This is obvious enough to those who attend church with any degree of regularity, but the surprise comes when it is seen that this Christian faith is uncompromisingly expressed in the most popular of our carols. The Christology of the carols is high indeed.

The sheer adoration of the refrains is enough to make any pagan stop, look, and listen:

O come, let us adore him,
Christ the Lord.
Nowel,
Born is the King of Israel.
Venite adoremus, Dominum.
Gloria in excelsis Deo.
O come, let us adore him—
Glory to God in the highest.

This adoration points to Jesus as Lord and King, strong words in any language. They recur again and again.

We hear the Christmas angels
The great glad tidings tell;
O come to us, abide with us,
Our Lord Emmanuel.

"Emmanuel" means "God with us."

The second stanza of Hark! the herald angels sing strikes to the heart of our faith:

Christ, by highest heav'n adored;
Christ, the everlasting Lord;
Late in time behold him come,
Offspring of the Virgin's womb.
Veiled in flesh the Godhead see;
Hail the incarnate Deity,
Pleased as man with man to dwell;
Jesus, our Emmanuel.

Here we have the claim that Jesus, who was born as other men, was at the same time of the same nature as the Godhead. It says that Jesus is both God and man — and because it is expressed in poetry and in imagination, it finds acceptance in the minds and hearts of Christians everywhere.

Silent Night builds to the same climax:

Christ the Savior is born. . . .
Son of God, love's pure light. . . .
Jesus, Lord at thy birth."

And the children's carol, Away in a Manger, refers to Little Lord Jesus.

The most Christ-centered of all the carols is the 18th century Latin Adeste Fidelis. Its second stanza is not always sung, but it is uncompromising in its faith:

God of God,
Light of Light,
Lo! he abhors not the virgin's womb:
Very God,
Begotten, not created. . . .

reflecting the words of the Nicene Creed:

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Begotten of the Father before all worlds,
God of God,
Light of Light,
Very God of very God,
Begotten, not made.

The carols do not stop with their exultation of faith, great as it is. This faith is expressed in works, for no one can be saved simply by confessing that Jesus Christ is Lord and Savior. We believe that Jesus Christ was sent by God for a purpose, and that purpose was the salvation of mankind, and we need to do our part. "If anyone says, 'I love God,' and hates his brother, he is a liar; for he who does not love his brother whom he has seen, cannot love God whom he has not seen" (I John 4:20).

The bright and rollicking carol, It Came upon a Midnight Clear, has within it the seeds of the social gospel. It describes the miseries and woes which the sins of men have brought upon the world. The Christchild was born in a country which was suffering from war and strife and want; it was overcrowded and there was no room for them at the inn. The world was suffering then, and it is longing still for the peace and security and salvation which God was to bring.

Yet with the woes of sin and strife
The world has suffered long;
Beneath the heav'nly strain have rolled
Two thousand years of wrong;
And man, at war with man, hears not
The tidings which they bring;
O hush the noise, ye men of strife,
And hear the angels sing!

We wonder if this is the faith behind the singing of the carols on the radio and in the stores. The great hopes and fears of all the years are written into these great carols. When we listen to the song of the angels, this is what we hear:

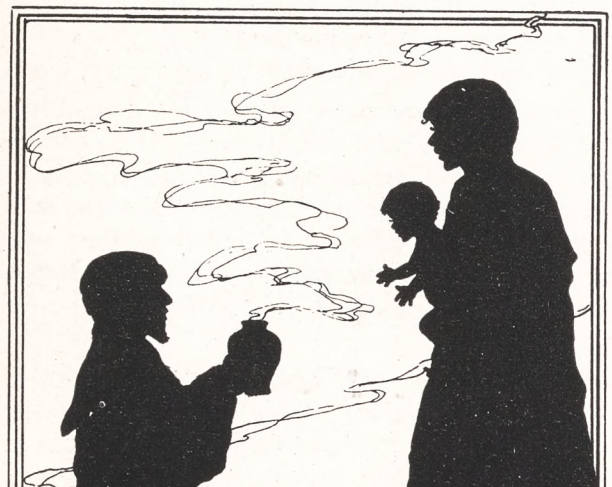
O ye, beneath life's crushing load,
Whose forms are bending low,
Who toil along the climbing way
With painful steps and slow,
Look now! for glad and golden hours
Come swiftly on the wing;
O rest beside the weary road
And hear the angels sing.

Christmas is the story of social redemption as well as of individual forgiveness. It is not simply a matter of worshipping a child who is our spiritual king; it points beyond Christmas to all of the events of Jesus' life and what they mean for us. In one of the stanzas of Phillips Brooks' carol, there is more of this calling to those in misery:

Where children pure and happy
Pray to the blessed child,
Where misery cries out to thee,
Son of the mother mild;
Where charity stands watching
And faith holds wide the door,
The dark night wakes, the glory breaks,
And Christmas comes once more.

Christmas, then, has a social meaning and points to peace and security in the social order; but there can be no peace within society until there is peace in the hearts of individuals, and there can be no eradication of social sins without at the same time wiping out the sins of individuals. Again, a carol points clearly to this faith:

O holy Child of Bethlehem!
Descend to us, we pray;
Cast out our sin, and enter in,
Be born in us today.



Above all, Christmas calls our attention away from the troubles of a sophisticated and pseudo-mature environment, and reminds us of the great virtue of child-likeness. Jesus said: "Except ye become as a child, ye shall not enter the Kingdom of God." The imagery of Christmas, with its angels and shepherds and astrologers and family surroundings, reminds us of this.

Jesus was born into a home, and it is in the home that Christmas rituals find their greatest meaning. Parents experience the thrilling and awe-inspiring and humbling trust shown them by their children. The Church tried to show how Mary and Joseph deserved their precious gift, and the Christmas stories were wrapped up in poetry and imagery which arouses wonder and faith in all men.

'Twas Mary, virgin pure,
Of holy Anne,
That brought into this world
The God made man.
She laid him in a stall
At Bethlehem;
The ass and oxen shared
The roof with them.

Saint Joseph, too, was by
To tend the child;
To guard him, and protect
His mother mild;
The angels hovered 'round
And sung this song,
Venite adoremus Dominum.

The beauty and glory and wonder of Christmas lie in these stories centering in the parents of the Christ-child. It calls all of us to have trust in God, a simple and child-like trust; and it also calls us to be deserving of the trust put to us by God, as parents and citizens in a Christian community.

It is right that these great carols should be sung in stores and on the streets and in homes and on the air. The Lord is come to all men everywhere. Let us be sure, however, that we know what the carols say and mean; for they give us nothing less than the good news of salvation through Jesus Christ.

Joy to the world! The Lord is come;
Let earth receive her King;
Let every heart prepare him room,
And heaven and nature sing.

A Word With You

Mass

WHAT you call things is most important to some people. Some good churchmen consider a Communion service a hollow mockery if you call it Mass, and others think so if you don't. A friend of mine, a convinced and earnest Anglo-Catholic, once took a parish near mine. He tried to reassure the people by saying that the usual Sunday service would be "Matins." Several came over to me to protest such a Romish innovation. They hadn't the faintest idea what he meant, but it sounded to them like "Mass."

The word Mass was used in the first Prayer Book of Edward VI, if you are looking for precedents. It has not been used since in official Prayer Books, if you are looking for arguments on the other side.

It is an abbreviation of the phrase Missa Est which is difficult to translate. "Go, it has been sent" is the literal translation, and it seems somewhat meaningless at first, but a command to go out into life after the service of strengthening refreshing is far from meaningless. It can keep us from making an ivory tower, an escape mechanism, of our worship.

After the Last Supper, if the disciples wished to remain in the presence of Christ, they had to follow him through the streets of the city, to the agony of decision in the garden, to the judgment halls, to the cross.

"Mass" usually means a service with extra-rubrical (not necessarily anti-rubrical) ceremonial, and this is a useful bit of precision. Those of us who don't care for ceremonial perhaps will be most benefited if the word reminds us of the terrific driving force of the sacrament working against our spiritual inertia—"Go!"

"Come, and I will refresh you," is one aspect of Holy Communion. "Go ye into all the world" is another, and equally important.

Threats To Religious Liberty Are Seen in Europe

Methodist Bishop in Charge of Church There Says Threat Comes from Reactionary Regimes

Edited by Sara Dill

Atlantic City, N. J.:—Bishop Paul N. Garber, of the Geneva, Switzerland, area told the Methodist Council of Bishops here that the real threat to religious freedom in Europe is from reactionary political regimes such as that of Francisco Franco in Spain "where Protestantism is not granted religious freedom." Bishop Garber for three years has supervised Methodist activities in twelve European countries, seven of which are behind the "Iron Curtain." He reported to the Council that "there has been on intereference with our Methodist work" in the seven Russian-dominated areas.

Urging the bishops to continue their support of the "free Churches" of Europe, he said there was little hope that the Protestant state Churches of Europe, because of their close connection with the state, could be free.

"A state Church which receives financial aid from the government cannot be absolutely free," he declared, adding that the low spiritual life of countries dominated by state Churches made possible the rise of Hitlerism.

"The recent record of the state Churches in Europe does not justify the contention of some Americans that the free Churches of Europe, like the Methodists and Baptists, should be absorbed into the state Churches," he said. "American Methodists, who have always championed the free Church position, should not put pressure upon European Methodists to accept the state-Church system when we would not accept it in America."

His jurisdiction embraces Poland, Czechoslovakia, Belgium, North Africa, Switzerland, Bulgaria, Hungary, Italy, Yugoslavia, the Madeira Island, Spain and Austria, territories where there are 1,200 Methodist churches and more than 125,000 members.

He stated that anti-Semitism was still widespread in Europe, and that many privileged people "have the false belief that a new war will restore to them their former possessions, privileges and prestige." He added however that "despite many discouraging features of postwar Europe I am optimistic as to the future of religion and culture there. We must take the historical perspective. The world is not going to end because we have a major catastrophe in Europe. There have been other dark periods in world history."

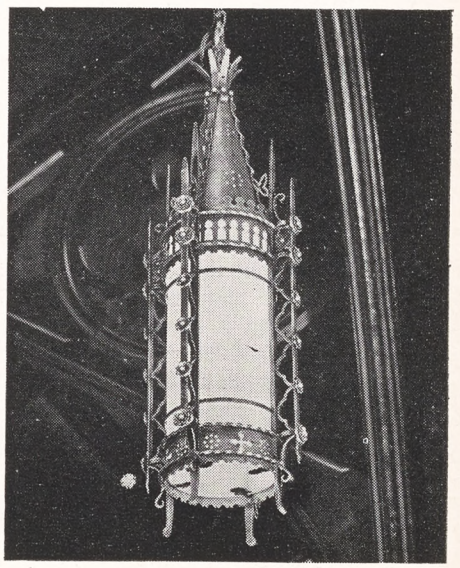
The Council protested against the dismissal of government employees charged with subversive views when they were judged on "vague and unsubstantiated assertions or of associating with so-called suspicious characters."

In its resolution, the Council conceded the right of government agencies to scrutinize carefully the fitness of applicants for public posts, but held that "examination of employees already chosen by the government should itself not be conducted in un-American ways."

"By such means," the Council explained, "we mean the dismissal of employees without informing them of the charges against them and without granting them the opportunity to face their accusers."

The bishops declared they were "greatly disturbed" by reports of un-American and unconstitutional practices by government authorities in attempts to rid public offices of employees supposedly engaged in subversive efforts against the nation.

"These reports," they said, "are so numerous in the press and so freely admitted and defended by government agencies, that we cannot doubt that while the reports of each governmental procedure may be exaggerated, there is enough of fact in them to warrant serious alarm among our citizens."



The bishops said methods being used to examine public employees with alleged subversive leanings are "not calculated to secure high type public servants," and "in our judgment, the methods are themselves violations of Constitutional guarantees and are therefore un-American."

is chairman. Its five points are: (1) Informal district conferences, preferably before the new year, to bring together young men whom their rectors deem qualified and in whom at least some interest in the ministry has been found. (2) Sermons on the ministry given on Dec. 14, with emphasis on the need for higher quality and greater quantity of candidates. (3) Diocesan conference on the ministry, Feb. 6-8, Farrington House, Lincoln, for which the Rev. F. B. Kellogg is registrar. (4) Student rally in Trinity Church on Feb. 29, when Bishop Nash will preach on the subject. (5) Assistance by Dean Taylor of the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge who will send students to conferences and also welcome the men named by their rectors to visit the school and its faculty and student body.

Against Locking Church

Seattle:—Bishop Stephen F. Bayne Jr., of Olympia is against the locking of churches. Writing in his diocesan paper he asks: "Why are so many churches shut and locked as if we were afraid somebody might get in? If I had my way I would break the lock and throw the key away of every church in this diocese. In one town not a million miles from here I tried the door of every church in town, nine altogether. They were all locked. And then people say reproachfully to me that only 21 per cent of the residents of Washington belong to any church. Fat chance you'd have of joining one if they're locked up all the time."

Evangelism Discussed

Boston:—As part of the nationwide program initiated by Presiding Bishop Sherrill and the National Council, the clergy of the Diocese met in St. Paul's Cathedral for a morning of meditations and devotions led by the Rev. Frederick W. Dillistone of the Episcopal Theological School faculty; a noon-day address by the Rev. Philip B. Clayton of All Hallows' Church, London, a luncheon, followed by addresses on "Evangelism in the Diocese of Massachusetts," given by the Rev. Theodore P. Ferris of Trinity Church, the Rev. George Keirstead of North Easton, and the Rev. Paul Wessinger, S.S.J.E., representatives of urban and rural parishes. The Massachusetts Clericus Association, whose luncheon meeting it was, cooperated in this effort, a preliminary to the training of the laity in Epiphany and the corporate communion of the whole Church on the first Sunday in Lent.

U. S. Attitude Hit

Findlay, O. (RNS): — About 250 young people from the United States and foreign lands attended an "Oslo in Ohio" youth conference conducted here to spread the spirit and experience of the Oslo world conference of Christian youth held last summer in Norway. The sessions were sponsored by the Ohio Christian youth council.

Hoover Rupert, national director of the Methodist youth fellowship, told the conference, which attracted representatives from China, Greece, Switzerland, France, Africa and the Philippines, that if another war comes "it will be because America fumbled the ball." Rupert, who recently returned from a tour of 13 European countries, declared that no one wants war and that he found there was ample basis of hope for peace. Charging the American press with grossly exaggerating the influence of Communism abroad, Rupert asserted that "you can't build peace by talking war." He said American attitudes and policies would determine whether there would be another conflict in five years.

Bishop on Plane

Sydney:—Bishop and Mrs. Oldham of Albany, in Australia to attend the centenary celebration of the Church of England in that country, were on the crippled plane that landed here safely after flying 380 miles across the Tasman Sea with one of its four motors dead. The plane was on the way to New Zealand but turned back. Mrs. Oldham told reporters that she and her husband lost all their possessions when the crew jettisoned about 2,000 pounds of baggage so that the plane could gain altitude. The craft was flying through a squall at about 500 feet when the engine trouble began. "Of course it was the only thing to do," Mrs. Oldham said. "We were very close to the water and they had to lighten the load."

Bishop Oldham said there was no formal prayer "but you can take it from me that we were all thankful to the Lord that we got out of it."

Confused Americans

Philadelphia (RNS): — A large proportion of Americans do not know the difference between Liberal-

Nothing can better express the joy of Christmas than the music of beautiful bells. Borne through the skies on golden wings, it soars straight to our hearts and makes even more ecstatic the happiness that dwells there.

Christmastime is the time of all the year when we know happiness for what it truly is —when love and kindness and the pleasure of giving are the guideposts of our lives. That has been true down through the centuries: the darkness of doubt and selfishness has ever vanished before the brillance of the Spirit of Christmas.

Down through the centuries, too, multitudes have hearkened to bells, and to carillons—and this love of bell music has never waned. Why not plan to thrill your community through the years to come with the sweetest bell music ever heard—the music of CARILLONIC BELLS. For complete details, write Dept. W-29.

ism, Conservatism, Communism, and Socialism, according to Victor Yates, member of the British Parliament, who has been on a speaking tour of the United States under auspices of the American Friends Service Committee. Yates told the Quaker staff here that he had been amazed at the political confusion in America.

He said he has been impressed and freightened by the widespread feeling in America that war with Russia is inevitable. "There is nothing in England comparable to the 'Red-hunt' here," he said, "and no giving in to the idea of war."

Students to Meet

London (RNS):—Nearly 3,000 young people of England and from abroad are expected to attend a conference here at Westminster, January 5-10, sponsored by the Student Christian Movement. The Archbishop of Canterbury is to address the opening session and other speakers on the program include Prof. Reinhold Niebuhr of the United States; the Rev. W. A. Visser 't Hooft; Bishop Hans Lilje of Germany and Prof. H. A. Hodges of the University of Reading. About 700 students from outside England are expected.

End Segregation

St. Louis (RNS):—Three hundred member churches of the Metropolitan Church Federation of St. Louis have been asked by the Federation's executive board to put an end to racial segregation in religious services, institutions and activities. In a letter to the member churches, the board urged that they "open the doors of fellowship and service regardless of race or color." The board is composed of 60 ministers and laymen, many of them Negroes.

The Rev. Ervine Inglis, pastor of First Congregational church in Webster Groves and president of the Federation, declared that action on the proposal was now up to the individual Protestant churches. "Some of them are ready to take it," he said.

Two new books and one in its twentieth printing, reissued with a new preface, throw varied lights on the event that centers in the Incarnation of God. As the Christmas story draws attention again to the central event of man's history we are reminded of the words of the philosopher, Hugh Miller, "Either Jesus Christ was God or the story of western civilization is a tale told by an idiot." As long as men live and think and write there will be new interpretations of the fact that came into history at Christmas.

recent developments in Biblical scholarship, to find the professor of sacred literature at Union Seminary holding that the fact of Christ is shown by the fact of the Church, an easily recognized spiritual movement in our total historical life. The emphasis in this book turns from man's quest to God's initiative as the spiritual movement is used to verify the proposition that "at a given moment in history God revealed himself in a supremely authentic way." Dr. Knox is not trying to avoid emphasis on the person of Christ in his pursuit of the "total event" but does attempt to show that it is only through the event which happened around and in connection with that person that the person can be truly known.

The event is more than the birth, more than the teaching, more than the sacrifice on Calvary—it includes the work of the Holy Spirit, the understanding of Christ by his followers, the development of the early Church. The problems of the "nature" of Jesus, the historicity of the gospels and the miracles of the New Testament are considered in this light leading to the conclusion that, "The Church becomes immeasurably the most significant of human communities."

An Introduction to Jesus for the Twentieth Century* by R. W. Stewart, Macmillan, $1.75. Though Dr. Stewart, minister of Killermont Parish Church, Glasgow, had no intention of documenting the doctrine of the total event, his presentation certainly harmonizes with that of Dr. Scott when he begins with the proposition that "the interest will be in the life of Jesus, not as a display of ideas or personality, but as a career." His little book is an attempt to understand that career, especially in relation to the political and social movements of "the people of the land."

New insight is gained by the reader into the position of John Baptist as a leader of a sort of "popular front" in Palestine in opposition to Phariseeism. Overemphasis seems to be given to the twentieth century fixation of profit motive in the explanation of why the Crucifixion should result from the Cleansing of the Temple, but the ideas are interesting. The argument for the anti-liturgical character of Christ's sacrifice will not be accepted by all, but is, perhaps for that reason, worthy of consideration.

Toward an Understanding of Jesus* by Vladimir G. Simkhovitch, Macmillan. $2.75. Just why this scholarly treatise should have gone through twenty printings, I really can't understand. It is a valuable study and throws new light on the political movements of the Zealots in Palestine, showing the practicality of Jesus' teaching for the people of His own time, for people who were putting their faith in armed force as the solution of all their evils. But it is hardly a popular religious work or one which could have much value for the average pastor, except on the Sunday when he preaches on Simon, the Zealot. The chief value of the essay is to be found in its exposition of the political background of the event of Christ, based largely (perhaps too trustingly) on Josephus and the Pseudopigrapha of the Old Testament.

Nor can one easily understand why this essay on Jesus should be bound up with two other essays on an entirely different subject. The last half of the volume is concerned with agriculture as a cause for the fall of Rome and the hay crop in the Middle Ages, with no reference whatever to religion in any form. The first essay is scholarly and valuable in a limited way; the combination of essays is curious.

FRANK W. STERRETT,
The Bishop of Bethlehem

I am sure you won't mind my telling you that I am disturbed by this article in THE WITNESS of November 27th by Paul M. Sweezy. It may be because I am an old-fashioned conservative and am looking for trouble where it doesn't exist, but it seems to me that at a time when support of the Marshall Plan seems so gravely urgent for the sake of suffering people all over the world, it hardly seems necessary to present an article that seems to me at least to ignore the main reason why so many of us believe in the Marshall Plan.

It is true that I believe in the capitalistic system, though frankly recognizing its shortcomings and its faults, but my reason for believing in the Marshall Plan is tied up first to my conviction that it holds the greatest promise of saving lives and enabling the nations, especially of Europe, to get back on their feet. My concern is not bringing relief to people who will support capitalism, but to support human beings in need. Furthermore, it seems to me that the fundamental issue is not primarily that between capitalism and communism, but between states where the control still remains in the people and those where the people have no voice. With that line of reasoning, our help would readily go to a nation that had a different economy from ours where the people remain free to change the government or the economic policies of an administration. All the evidence that I can get convinces me that the policy of our own government is aimed primarily at relieving distress and not at the preservation of a capitalist economy.

What disturbs me more, however, is the statement in the editor's note at the end of the article which seems to indicate that there is uncertainty as to whether the other side of this argument is to be adequately presented. It seems to me that before a magazine like THE WITNESS proceeds with the publication of an article of this kind it should have made sure that the other side of this argument was to be adequately presented. Again I may have read too much into the phrase "We hope both will accept, in which case their articles will follow." There are strong and powerful arguments that in my judgment could show convincingly the fallacy of the point of view taken by Mr. Sweezy, and it would be certainly tragically too bad if this side of the argument were not adequately presented. These are days when so much hangs in the balance involving the fate of human beings that I can't help feeling concerned.

REV. RANDOLPH C. MILLER
Professor at Pacific Divinity School

I hope you are going to give us the full story of the United Church of South India. It is probably the biggest event in the ecumenical reformation, equal in its way to the formation of the World Council of Churches which will take place in 1948. When Anglicans, Presbyterians, Methodists, and Congregationalists can actually find a way of achieving organic union without compromising any one tradition it shows what can be done when intentions are fully Christian. Think what would happen to American Christianity (including the Presbyterians and Episcopalians) if we had the devotion to the one Body of Christ which has been demonstrated in India. It is important to know, also, that the Archbishop of Canterbury made this union financially possible by insisting that missionary funds be continued to support missions of the new church.

MRS. JAMES P. DEAN
Churchwoman of New York

I was very interested in the list of questions which young adult Church men and women wished to have discussed. (WITNESS, Dec. 4). I am struck constantly by the real division in our Church, and I presume in all Churches, between the young and the old. The young people laid most stress upon facing their world as Christians and were not afraid apparently of such matters as marriage relations, unity, and even getting along with the Russians. It is encouraging to find that this younger generation wants to apply Christian principles to the problems of today. I am sure THE WITNESS will help them do it.

MR. HIRAM G. CARVER
Churchman of Washington

Is THE WITNESS so lacking in material that it has to reprint an editorial from a Negro paper? I refer of course to the story that you featured in your issue of December 4 and which was merely a reprint of a vicious and unfair attack upon the Bishop Payne Divinity School. Those of us who have been brought up in the South are quite familiar with these attacks, and we are concerned to discover that they are on the increase. Negroes will never be satisfied until they have full equality and their insistent demands are merely heading them for trouble for I can assure you, sir, that they will never obtain their objective. Let Negroes who desire to become ministers of the Protestant Episcopal Church go to the seminary that is provided for them. Otherwise let them join one of those churches where they will feel more at home such as the Baptist or the Methodist.

PROF. HENRY ADAMS
Layman of Memphis, Tenn.

Certainly the House of Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church ought to know that Mr. Byrnes is obnoxious to Negroes. The Church will never make any progress with our race when it invites such men to speak. It never invited Mr. Willkie or Mr. Roosevelt but they were our friends.

PHILLIPS BROOKS wrote a carol, Everywhere, Everywhere Christmas Tonight. This year though December twenty-fifth will come everywhere, there will be many hearts and places where the Christmas Spirit will be absent as a result of human failure and sin. The Lambeth Conference Agenda Announced By Archbishop

The Witness Series for Lent Will Be Based Upon It With Articles by American Bishops

New York:—Word was received here on December 10th that the Archbishop of Canterbury announced that day the Agenda for the Lambeth Conference, which will meet in London this coming summer. The Agenda was sent some weeks ago to all American bishops by Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill, acting on behalf of Archbishop Fischer. But since it was marked "Confidential" it was impossible to reveal it until released by the Archbishop. However it can be stated that the editorial board of THE WITNESS had decided even before then to base the series of articles during Lent, which is an annual WITNESS feature, upon the subjects to be discussed by the Anglican Bishops from all parts of the world when they meet for the first time in eighteen years. It met last in 1930, with war causing the postponement of the 1940 conference. There were 307 Bishops present at the 1930 meeting, and it is expected that a considerably larger number will attend this coming conference.

The Agenda, as released by the Archbishop, is divided into five main sections, each with sub-divisions.

One, The Christian Doctrine of Man in Society and History. General: Men's dependence on God; Man's need of redemption; modern secular doctrines of man; the Christian Gospel. Particular: (a) International Order and problems arising therein. (b) The relation of the state to: 1. Personal and communal life. 2. Education. 3. Religious liberty.

Two, The nature of the Church and its unity. General: The historic faith and order of the Church; causes of disunity; the approach to reunion: the scope and direction of the Ecumenical Movement. Particular: (a) Relations between the Anglican Churches and other Episcopal Churches. (b) Proposals for reunion discussed with non-episcopal communions.

Three, The Anglican Churches. General: Their common tradition: Unity and diversity in order and worship; organs of correlation including proposals for (1) a central staff college. (2) an Anglican conference midway between Lambeth Conferences.

—Ade Bethune

Particular: (a) Ideals and forms of worship: particular questions relating to (1) Baptism and Confirmation. (2) Commemoration of local saints. (3) The common chalice and intinction.

(b) Reports presented on dispensation and on the Table of Kindred and Affinity.

Four, The Growth of the Anglican Churches. General: A conspectus of provincial and diocesan organization. Particular: (a) A program for development. (b) Financing of the Episcopate in missionary dioceses.

Five, The Ethical Standards of the Church. General: The requirements of the Christian moral law and their application to modern life: The Christian Discipline. The Church's duty to witness. Particular: (a) Problems concerning sex behaviour, the family and the birth-rate. (b) The Church's discipline in marriage question.

Details of the WITNESS series for Lent will be announced in detail right after the New Year. But we can say that each of the numbers during Lent will feature articles by authorities, with their subjects based upon this Agenda of the Lambeth Conference. It is our hope that the articles will be used in parish discussion groups so that Church people generally may be well informed on the many important matters to come before the Anglican Bishops next summer.

confirmed a class presented by Rector Alvin B. Potter, and another at the county workhouse where Mr. Potter is chaplain. That same evening he confirmed a class at St. Mary's, Bridgeville, presented by Rector P. Malcolm Ferne, who also brought a class from St. Luke's, Seaford, where he is also in charge.

The next day Bishop Darst conducted a clergy conference at Calvary, Hillcrest. Then he confirmed at St. Philip's, Laurel, the class being presented by the Rev. Robert Y. Barber, who retires January 1, and ended his week by confirming a class presented by the Rev. William C. Munds at Christ Church, Greenville.

MISSIONARY TO PUERTO RICO

New York:—Nurse Melba R. Love is to go to Puerto Rico as a missionary where she will succeed Miss Sarah G. White as superintendent of the school of nurses at St. Luke's Hospital, Ponce. Miss Love's home is in Los Angeles, where she was a nurse at the Hospital of the Good Samaritan. Miss White, formerly a missionary in Japan, is to return to that field following a vacation.

BISHOP LEWIS LEADS QUIET DAY

Alameda, Cal.:—Bishop Lewis of Nevada led a quiet day recently in connection with the presenting of the fall United Thank Offering at Christ Church here. His subject was "Evangelism" and he stressed that Christians must believe that the purpose of God is for one kingdom of free men. As long as we are divided peoples there can never be one kingdom because there can be no such thing as a "balance of power."

The total offering for this year to the U.T.O. in the diocese of California was $12,727.

STUDENTS DISCUSS PEACE

New Haven, Conn.:—The first of a series of seminary conferences on peace was held December 11 at the Berkeley Divinity School. After a sermon on "The New Pacifism" by the Rev. Sydney Temple, secretary of the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship, there was a panel discussion led by the Rev. Nevin Sayre of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, the Rev. Lawson Willard, rector of Trinity Church, and Prof. Roland Bainton of the Yale Divinity School.

The large majority of the students were veterans and many expressed themselves as opposed to negative pacifism which emphasizes passivity, and favored peace-making on the international level. The dicussion was lively, with disagreement on technique. The one conclusion reached was that Christian leaders could not be content to follow unthinkingly the "realistic" direction of force as the only answer but must give practical expression to the Christian belief in the power of redemptive love for all mankind.

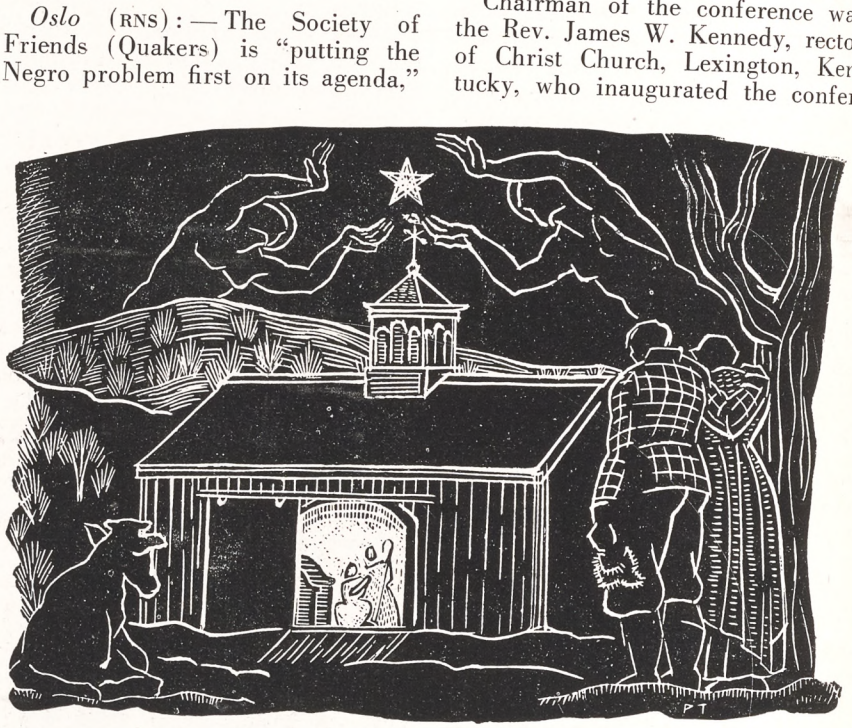
Other meetings are planned for Cambridge, General, Bexley and Seabury-Western.

NEGRO PROBLEM STRESSED

Oslo (RNS): — The Society of Friends (Quakers) is "putting the Negro problem first on its agenda," Henry J. Cadbury of Cambridge, Mass., declared here on his arrival to accept the 1947 Nobel Peace Prize co-awarded to the American Friends Service Committee. He was accompanied by Miss Margaret Backhouse of the London Friends' Service Council, which shared in the award.

"We have 100,000 Quakers in America, and all over the world we count only 150,000," Dr. Cadbury declared in an interview, "but behind us stand thousands of non-Quakers, supporting us with money because they sympathize with our ideals." Dr. Cadbury estimated that 90 per cent of the Society of Friends' funds comes from non-Quaker sources.

"Today," he said, "British and American Quakers have 500 representatives working for peace in former enemy countries. Money collected by American churches is now being distributed through Quakers."



He said no decision had been made as to how the Nobel Prize money, amounting to $38,990, would be expended, but intimated it would be devoted to some special purpose.

LEADERS DISCUSS EDUCATION

Washington:—"Closing the gap between historic theology and the current content of much Christian education" became the unannounced topic of discussion at a meeting of religious educators from the province of Washington held during the first week in December at the College of Preachers here.

Chairman of the conference was the Rev. James W. Kennedy, rector of Christ Church, Lexington, Kentucky, who inaugurated the conference four years ago. Mrs. C. Stanley Rogers, executive secretary for Christian education of the diocese of Southwestern Virginia, arranged the program which included addresses by Rev. Albert T. Mollegen and Rev. Reuel L. Howe, professors at Virginia Seminary, and T. E. McMullin, assistant professor of education at the University of Pennsylvania. Dr. T. O. Wedel, warden of the College of Preachers, also shared in the leadership of the conference. Mrs. Edward H. Jones told the conference about her experiments with the Ligon Plan for Christian education in Christ Church, Georgetown.

The announced topic for the conference was "Christian Education for Adolescents." Twenty-five educational leaders representing all but two of the thirteen dioceses in the third province were present.

Policy Towards Russia Offered By Diocesan Commission

A Committee of Christian Social Relations Proposes the Statement Be Read in Churches

Springfield, Mass.: — The department of Christian social relations of the diocese of Western Massachusetts has sent to all the clergy of the diocese, through Chairman Paul T. Schultz of Westfield, a statement headed "A Christian Statement on American Policy Toward Russia." With it went the suggestion that it be read from the pulpit on some Sunday; that it be used in part in parish leaflets; that it be used as a basis of discussion with parish groups. The commission stated that "it is part of an endeavor to stop a third world war" and it carried the full endorsement of Bishop W. Appleton Lawrence.

The statement follows:

The problem of American relations with Russia is a problem in human fear. On both sides, fear begets fear; increasingly, hysteria aggravates the tensions between the two nations. Fear leads to war.

The casting out of fear is part of the work of the Christian religion. The diocesan department of Christian social relations therefore feels an obligation to speak out on this issue.

We would have it plainly understood from the first that we utterly and absolutely condemn all the un-Christian and undemocratic acts and attitudes of Russia—and of the United States. We seek, however, not merely to condemn, but rather to present a constructive and Christian approach to the entire situation, particularly as regards American policy toward the Soviet Union.

Because we are Christians as well as Americans, we should first examine American policy in the light of Christian insight. Christian insight seems to us to reveal our current policy towards Russia at fault on these three scores: (1) it is self-righteous; (2) it misuses religion; (3) it violates Christian liberty.

(1) Our Current American Policy is Self-Righteous.

Too often we assume the self-righteous attitude that we are 100% right and Russia 100% wrong. Right and wrong are very rarely quite as white or black as that. Experience should compel us to acknowledge that there is almost always fault on both sides. Indeed, we often criticize Russia for doing things which we ourselves do in slightly different guise. Russia dominates satellite states to her west. We absorb bases in the Pacific and by devious means woo Latin-America. We criticize Russia for controlled elections, yet powerful interests deny the franchise to millions of Americans on the ground of race. We dislike Russia's recurring use of the veto in the Security Council, yet we were among those who insisted that the veto be written into the Charter of UN, and, if outvoted, would probably still use it ourselves. Our own sin should prevent us from casting stones.

(2) Our Present Policy Misuses Religion.

Over and over again in anti-Soviet propaganda we hear the charge made that Communist Russia is godless and atheistic, but many who make this charge seem to be people who, in their personal lives and occupations, completely ignore God, religion, and the moral law. They do not seem to be as genuinely concerned about religion, as they are to use religion for their own ends. This is a prostitution of Christianity against which we protest.

Admittedly, Marxist atheism is a cause of concern to Christians. But the Christian way of dealing with this is not the way of hate which simply denounces, but the way of love which seeks to convert. To Christians, who, on religious grounds, sincerely fear Communism, we cite our Lord's statement that the gates of hell shall not prevail against his Church. (Matthew 16:18) Christians have no ground religiously to fear Communism, for the Church is not a human institution dependent upon the favor of men, but a divine organism instituted of God and secure in his protection. When Christians as Christians fear Communist atheism, they are failing to put their trust in God, they are questioning God's sovereignty and power, and are exhibiting a lack of confidence in God,—which opens them to the criticism of yielding to the very atheism which they profess to fear. Besides, the indiscriminate charge of atheism is both unfair and untrue, when we know that many Russians are Christians. It is a needless insult to these our Christian brethren.

Abroad, our policy tends to withhold relief from all who are tinged with Communism. This policy further alienates those whom we would convert, and is rapidly drying up the great reservoir of good will which once was ours. At home, inquisitive and restrictive measures are passed which penalize Communists above other citizens. As Christianity is real only in those lives who, free to accept or reject the grace of God, have chosen to accept it; so democracy rests upon free consent and not upon compulsion. Political toleration of dissent is essential to the health of democratic institutions; it stems from the principle of Christian liberty. Many aspects of our current policy violate this principle.

Summary — The Road to War

The present American policy seems to us to be vitiated by the sin of self-righteousness, to misuse religion, to violate Christian liberty, and will, we believe, in the long run, lead us forward on the road to war —a war utterly needless and indescribable and unimaginable in its full horror. In the name of the Prince of Peace, we deplore it—we protest against it—we repudiate it.

A Christian Policy

In the place of the present policy, we offer these suggestions:

(1) That, in the name of justice, the American government, instead of wasting time and energy in criticizing the Communists, take positive action now to solve the problems that are really a threat to the democratic way of life here at home,—such problems as the housing shortage, race tensions, disabilities suffered by minority groups, bad labor conditions among some groups such as the migratory workers, and the high cost of living. It is incredible that a country which achieved such efficient mass production in airplanes, ships, guns, and all the implements of war, is not able to build houses for men who fought that war, to live in. As American policy solves these problems, the Communist danger, we believe, will disappear.

(2) Second, in the name of religion, which has been defined as "visiting the fatherless and widows in their affliction," let American policy provide relief abroad for all those who are in need. Let us feed the hungry and clothe the naked, without regard for their political opinions. Let the only requirement be that of need, and let those who criticize Russia for its agnostic and atheistic tendencies, be sure to support those religious influences and organizations which are here in America.

(3) In the name of Christian liberty, let American policy protect and restore those rights which are provided in the Bill of Rights, and those civil liberties for which the United States has become noted, but which, in recent years, have been definitely infringed upon because some of us have not been sufficiently wide-awake to realize that "The price of liberty is eternal vigilance."

(4) In the name of the unity of mankind, implied in the Christian doctrine of the fatherhood of God, let America loyally support and strengthen the United Nations, seeking thereby to build a limited World Government able to gain for all peoples and nations those principles and practices which our constitution sets forth for our own country—"to establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defence, promote general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and posterity."

These things are all our responsibility as Christian citizens, but as members of Christ's Church, we each have an additional responsibility—to shape our own lives according to the will of God. These are days in which, by the very gravity of the occasion, we are called to pray in agony of spirit for a world full of sin and suffering; called to pray with an urgency that grows out of the recognition that for the first time in history, man has acquired the power to destroy himself and all civilization as we know it; called to pray prayers which are offered not in an endeavor to bend God's will to our selfish ends, or even in abject resignation to fate, but, with penitence and humility, with courage and determination, to pray "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done, on earth as it is in heaven."

ARCHBISHOP CUSHING HITS EPISCOPALIANS

New York:—The Roman Catholic Archbishop of Boston, Richard J. Cushing, took a crack at the Episcopal Church in an address here before 800 persons attending a dinner for the benefit of the Jesuits. After speaking of "one of the greatest spiritual revivals in the history of civilization" because of the "yearning on the part of many peoples for the unity, sanctity and universality which were and are the marks of Catholicism," he turned to the Philippines. He described the Islands as the "spiritual responsibility of Catholic America" and said that the people there are eager to play their part in a revival of Catholicism.

Then he charged that the House of Bishops of the Episcopal Church, in authorizing mutual ordination between their Church and the Aglipayan Church of the Philippines, was attempting to "seduce" Filipinos, who were originally Catholics, away from the Church of Rome. He declared that the Aglipayan Church was founded in 1902 as a national Church by a "renegade" priest and since then had been successively approached by the Unitarian Church and now by the Epicopal Church.

WANTS NO PEACE WITH STALIN

Philadelphia:—The Rev. Hans Asmussen, executive director of the Evangelical Church in Germany, now lecturing in the United States, told a conference here that "It is impossible for a Christian to wage war with Adolf Hitler to the death and to make peace with Stalin."

EDITORIALS

Meaning of the Nativity

WE CELEBRATE at Christmas not alone the birth of Christ, but what that birth means. We call this miraculous fact of the word, or mind of God, becoming flesh, the Incarnation. Before this mighty fact, we bow in veneration and amazement. But we are not realizing to the full our celebration of this fact if we pause merely to bow in veneration and amazement. God does not work miracles to induce in us attitudes of awe; he works miracles very often to startle us into learning things we need to know. We shall not want this Christmastide to pass without appropriating certain truths God is revealing to us through the Incarnation. Some words of the late Archbishop Temple come to mind in connection with the Incarnation, "Christianity is the most materialistic of all great religions . . . Christianity, based as it is on the Incarnation, regards matter as destined to be the vehicle and instrument of spirit, and spirit as fully actual so far as it controls and directs matter."

The word became flesh because God wanted to redeem man from sin and to win man to a right relationship to him. Since much of man's difficulty both from the standpoint of sin and also from the standpoint of alienating him from God is rooted in a false attitude toward the material world in which he lives, the significance of the Incarnation, as Archbishop Temple has pointed out, dare not be glossed over.

If one were to seek a cause for much of the world's present disorder one would find it difficult to decide whether more blame should be ascribed to materialism,—living on a bare physical basis,—or to secularism,—divorcing the physical from the spiritual. The Incarnation is God's answer to both of these heresies. Man cannot live by bread alone. Man cannot live without bread,—for very long. Nor can man live,—for very long, as we are beginning to learn in these tragic days,—by being indifferent to bread. Man can live only by using bread, and every other element in the physical world, as God intended it to be used, or to borrow Archbishop Temple's words, "as the vehicle and instrument of spirit."

We seem to be rather far afield from the spirit of Christmas and the message of the angels and the scene in the manger in Bethlehem and the shepherd lad offering his little lamb to the new born Saviour. If we are far afield, it is because we have let our minds be occupied with these incidentals rather than with the real purpose God was seeking to accomplish in sending his son into this bewildered and disjointed world. God sent his Son to live with us that we might live the life of the kingdom, that the hungry might be fed and the naked clothed and the homeless housed and the sick restored and the poor have the gospel preached unto them. And all this can be accomplished once men come to see the proper relationship between the word and the flesh. Christ came that men might learn how to make the flesh the vehicle and instrument of the spirit, and thus serve the purposes of God.

So as we celebrate this Christmas we shall express our veneration and awe at the miracle of the Incarnation by having a care for the hungry. A CARE package to a hungry fellow Christian in Europe or Asia will help. A generous Christmas check to the Presiding Bishop's Fund for world relief will help. Concerted action to battle the rising cost of food will help. But we shall not be satisfied with these measures. We shall not rest until our society is converted from the worship of crass materialism to a stewardship which regards every element in our physical world,—our bread, our industrial machine, our atomic energy, and the processes of government, as vehicles and instruments of spirit in realizing the kingdom of God on earth. The word was made flesh. Even so come, Lord Jesus.

"QUOTES"

LET us at all costs avoid the temptation to make our Christmas worship a withdrawal from the stress and sorrow of life into a realm of unreal beauty. It was into the real world that Christ came, into the city where there was no room for him and into a country where Herod, murderer of the innocents, was king. He comes to us, not to shield us from the harshness of the world, but to give us the courage and strength to bear it; not to snatch us away by some miracle from the conflict of life, but to give us peace—his peace—in our hearts, by which we may be calmly steadfast while the conflict rages, and be able to bring to the torn world the healing that is peace.
—William Temple,
The late Archbishop of Canterbury

Let the Stranger In

THE MAIN purpose of Christmas is to restore our sanity. Phillips Brooks once reminded us that the truth which underlies the Incarnation is that man belongs to God. "The human nature belongs to the divine. It can come to its best only by entrance and possession of it by divinity." Christianity maintains that man cannot be integrated, whole—and so holy—without this. He needs all the integration he can find to meet with sanity a world which is in a psychopathic state.

The fact that man is failing to use his whole nature accounts for this latter.

Of the essence of divinity is giving, and insofar as man is unable to give fully he fails to be his real self; he falls into disastrously confused ways of thinking and acting. We acknowledge this, partly unconsciously, when we strive symbolically to carry out the process of giving in feeble fashion during this season. The slight and temporary gestures we make often do not extend far beyond our family and our friends, and we endeavor to make up for our lack of real giving by an artificial frivolity that helps us to forget.

Moreover, ours is a giving only of our substance; we need the quality that God had when he so loved the world that he gave. His self-given leaps over the constricted areas of race and creed, color and condition; it involves the deep motivations of the spirit. Joyce Kilmer expressed this well in his carol when he wrote, "Unbar your heart this evening, and keep no stranger out."

It is not too difficult to measure our spiritual sanity. Christmas gives us not only the opportunity to assess it but to strengthen it and increase it.

The Word Was Made Flesh

IT IS an apartment in a section of the city which once was fashionable. Now the population is mixed, middle class whites and professional-type Negroes. It is a pleasant apartment. Over the group gathered there, a mixed one, hangs an ominous gloom. They have been talking for some time. The case of Ann has been thoroughly discussed. Even though she had highest honors in high school, that woman's college was so cagey in its denial of her application that you can't prove discrimination. Ben probably won't be able to get a job anywhere that will be up to his capabilities as a student and practitioner in foreign affairs since the government released him, "without prejudice," presumably for his activities on behalf of Soviet-American friendship. Charles has been duly sympathized with for his cuts and bruises incurred in sponsoring that meeting where the accused communist was trying to state his case. Dave has certainly made clear that he needs financial assistance after Beth Shipbuilding applied the Taft-Hartley bill. Edward, representative in Congress, has discoursed at length on the utter impossibility of making the conservatives face the fact that prices are having a deleterious effect on the health of many, and that the old law of supply and demand is going to pauperize millions in the nation. Frank has reported that there is truth in the statement that staff officers feel that communists achieving power in either France or Italy will be considered by our government to be acts of aggression by the Soviets, and we will take drastic measures immediately.

The electric candles at the window throw a contrasting warming light. On the mantle there is a crèche. Above the manger another light glows. "The Light shineth in darkness and the darkness comprehendeth it not."

A Christmas Meditation

By
STEPHEN F. BAYNE JR.
The Bishop of Olympia

THERE is a good deal to be said, we have decided, for the commercial Christmas. (Not for its vulgar arrogance, but whose fault is that?) This gay interlude between the first frost and the January White Sales is not to be sneezed at. It brightens up the stores immeasurably; it supplies the remnants of our Puritan consciences with an excuse to adorn the streets; it redeems the city, thanks to the late Prince Consort, with blessed reminders of the country, if only for a week or two; it is a needed admonition to friendship; it gives our poor, dry, bedraggled, beanpole spirits at least a few warm, pagan, smells and sounds and tastes to remind us of what we have lost in our insane and insatiable thirst for respectability. Most of all, it is an excellent invitation to self-examination and a rearrangement of our values—it is in fact an involuntary invitation to Advent, that lesser Lent, which we are foolish not to accept.

The mechanics of it are quite simple. You walk through a store or two, meditating on your Christmas shopping. Almost at once you detect a curious little strain in your spirit. Perhaps the question arises as to what you would like for Christmas, and gruffly you mutter to yourself something about a kiss and a cup of coffee—you really don't want anything for yourself. But that is not quite true. If by some miracle time could be unwound and you could recapture the magic of a childhood Christmas . . . and you slow down for a second and take another look at the toy trains or the model airplanes . . . you wish they could bring you what they once did, and you wish you did not have to leave so much behind in life.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

That is the strain we mean. We still hanker after the old loveliness, yet we know better. We wish the stores were as big as they used to be, and that we wanted what they have as eagerly, yet we are wiser than to hope for it. Homesickness is the best price we can find for freedom, and we are not fools enough to repent our bargain.

We are led, in life, from small joys to greater, from the bondage of "me" and "mine" to the wide liberty of "thee" and "thine." In the process stores get smaller, red paper less glamorous, electric trains less exciting, a fat pocketbook less glorious, a sleek mind less imposing, national sovereignty less magnificent, our rights less transcendent, and fences between men less absolute. The world shrinks as well as a department store, and the things of the world fall into their proper perspective as things, not to be confused with people.

It does not happen easily, nor without a good deal of itching for the old days. But somehow man has got to be made ready to see the world as God sees it—pretty small and not very satisfying except for its one superb privilege of being a birthplace for the children of God. It's about at that point that you remember the Stable and the Child, and wonder at the patience of God.

The Peace of Christmas

An Editorial

by Irving P. Johnson

The Late Bishop of Colorado and Editor of The Witness

IN HIS little book on The Psychology of Insanity, Dr. Hart relates an incident. A certain man complained bitterly that a certain peal of chimes was discordant and irritating. As a matter of fact, the chimes were in perfect tune and were particularly sweet. The man had a complex which perverted him so that he called good, evil, and harmony discord. Why was that? Because he disliked the clergyman in whose church the chimes were hung; therefore, he disliked the chimes. A little root of bitterness had so spread that it enveloped his whole being and everything was colored by this prejudice.

So, you will find a large proportion of the human race infected with incipient madness. Their judgment is perverted by their complexes of human prejudice. You will find Republicans and Democrats alike who refuse to acknowledge that any one in the opposite party has any virtue. You will find financiers and laborers who have a similar complex. So, Protestant and Catholic are unable to see good in any act pertaining to the other faction. Such complexes are substitutes for reason and destitute of charity. Those who hold them frequently think that they do so in the name of the Lord, but there is nothing to justify this assumption.

It was the Pharisee and not the Christ who was the victim of these complexes. It was the Pharisee who felt such contempt for the Samaritan, who was the heretic of his day. Christ saw whatever was good in the Samaritan without compromising his heresy. "Ye worship ye know not what," was his declaration about the religion of the Samaritan, but in several instances he spoke approvingly of good Samaritans. To the Pharisee there were no good Samaritans. His complex would not admit it. To the Pharisee there were no good publicans; Christ found some. To the Pharisee the woman of the town was hopelessly outcast; Christ found some that he could forgive. In fact, it was such a complex that prevented the Pharisee from seeing any good in Christ. He wished to crucify Christ, not because Christ was evil, but because Christ ruthlessly violated all of his favorite complexes. The Pharisee lived on these complexes. They saved him the necessity of thinking about that which he disliked and of forgiving those whom he detested. Christ could make no impression on such natures. He only irritated them. They hated him because he refused to be a party to their unreasonable prejudices.

The spirit of Christmas is the spirit of good will. It is hostile to inveterate prejudice. It breaks down the barriers of caste and makes of one blood all nations, sects, cults, and complexes.

To Scrooge, who had a money complex, it was not Merry Christmas but merry humbug. Any merriment that cost him money was incomprehensible to him because it cost money. To the bitter radical, Christmas is an irritation, because it rebukes hatred and condemns bitterness. To the one-compartment mind, Christmas is incomprehensible because the spirit of Christmas cannot be reduced to a syllogism or confined to one idea.

The world has taken kindly to Christmas for several reasons: Christmas helps trade, promotes jollity, is different from the rest of the year. But Christmas sentiment is very different from Christian principle, just as far as the sentiment produced by an actor is from the sentiment produced by real poverty. It is luxurious to shed tears over a mythical orphan on the stage, but dreadfully dull to help the real orphan in the alley. How often it is that the luxury costs much more than the reality!

So, Christmas as an incident in life is very different from a Christian spirit as the controlling principle of a life.

HOW shall we observe Christmas? We will knock off work and give the day up to enjoyment. Fine. We will give expensive presents to our family who have much, and something to the poor who have little. Very good! We will have a good dinner and some merry games, and see that the children have a good time. Excellent!

But yet, Christmas is Christ's birthday — the day on which we should remember him. How? By giving something to somebody in his name. Good! if we really give it in his name. But, lest we forget! He said, "Do this in remembrance of me." Surely we have not celebrated his festal day unless we have given him that which he most desires. And what does he most desire? That we shall give him "ourselves, our souls and bodies, to be a reasonable, holy and living sacrifice."

It is not enough that we give him things, or that we give things to others; he wants us to give him ourselves. And this does not mean merely that we think of him, or sing about him, or even listen to a sermon. It means that we lay ourselves on the altar of his sacrifice. It means that we join the offering of ourselves to his offering of himself, and this we do when we present ourselves to him in the service that he commanded us to observe.

You may get something of the spirit of Christmas and leave him out, but you cannot observe the day and forget him. And what is involved in your Christmas Eucharist? Is it not that you are in love and charity with your neighbors? That whatever they have done or failed to do for you, that you put on Christ's spirit of forgiveness. That you smash your complexes. That you try to find the good in those whom you do not like and an excuse for those who have injured you. That you put on the spirit of Christ, not for a holiday season, but for all the year. That you clothe yourself in his spirit of "peace on earth and good will to men."

Hard! Of course it is hard. Whoever said that it was easy to get the mind of Christ? But it is important. I can assure you that it is most important for this mad world that we get rid of our complexes and put away our bitterness. It is important that we do not add to the chaos of human selfishness, but become a force for forgiveness in order that we may experience forgiveness.

I am sure that God never attempted to create anything as difficult as the kingdom of heaven. He can speak the word and things obey him—but he speaks the word to men and they curse him. He can so order things that they follow the immutable law which he gave them. But he asks men to love one another and they fill the whole world with the clamor of their complexes. It is true that there is a limit to God's omnipotence, and that limit is that he cannot force men to love him or to forgive one another.

Even when he so loved us that he gave his Son, we so loved ourselves that we slew his love. Greater love can no man show than to give his life, unless it be when a father or mother gives the life of a beloved son for a cause. God so loved us because there was no other way that we could learn to love him. He gave us his best that it might bring out the best in us. And that best we find in opening the doors of our hearts that Christ may be born therein, and then opening those doors again that Christ in us may go out into the world to do Christ's work among men.

You may find it hard to get rid of your bitterness, but you will never find it easier than it is now, and if you do not get rid of that bitterness you will find it exceedingly hard to meet your Lord when he comes again.

The world needs Christ, but clings to its bitterness, and so the world finds chaos.

We cannot do much, each one of us, but we can add to the world's peace by eliminating all bitterness from our own hearts, and this we can do only at the shrine of Jesus Christ.

Christmas Reflections

By
A. RONALD MERRIX
Of the National Council Staff

WHEN some among the first Christians looked back over their past experiences, the coming of Jesus Christ into their consciousness was seen to have meant so much to them that they could only describe his actual birth most worthily as having been heralded by a divine messenger who sang: "Be not afraid, for behold, I bring you good news of a great joy which will come to all the people; for to you is born this day a Saviour, who is Christ the Lord."

When others — more serious-minded, perhaps — considered what his coming had meant to them, they too pictured the original event as having been accompanied by a divine pronouncement: "You shall call his name Jesus, for he will save his people from their sins."

Still others — older maybe, in years as in Christian experience — when they thought of him as a teacher, intended that to mean, "a teacher come from God." For them to become as he was and to look at life as he saw it, demanded a radical transformation so complete that it was like being born again. "You must be born anew," Jesus told Nicodemus.

Yet another, reviewing his personal experiences in relation to the event of Christ's birth, described it in this way: "When the time had fully come, God sent forth his Son, born of woman, born under the law, to redeem those who were under the law, so that we might receive adoption as sons."

Nor was that all. The same Holy Spirit who had come upon the virgin of Nazareth and by whose power she conceived and bore her first-born son, would operate also in those who were born anew. "Because you are sons, God has sent the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying, 'Abba! Father!' " Thus, through God's own action all re-born sons became also heirs, heirs of God and fellow heirs with Christ. St. Paul felt constrained to add, "provided we suffer with him in order that we may also be glorified with him."

What light do these reflections cast on our response to the message and mission of the gospel, which we call evangelism? Our preaching, teaching and personal witnessing, while being entirely relevant to human life and needs today, should convey also unmistakable "good news of a great joy," which is intended for all people. It is the Christian way of salvation, leading to positive, joyous spiritual health, to wholeness of life and living. It brings deliverance from all that keeps us from joyous fellowship with God and our fellowmen. All of us need to be "born anew"; we cannot save ourselves. As Christ became one with us, we can become one with him and with our fellow-men "in him." Through this dual process of self-identification God, by his Spirit, can do in us and through us what we cannot do for ourselves.

Evangelism calls us to become "new creatures" for a new age. We cannot make ourselves new persons. But God can. We believe he is ready and willing to do it. We can say with Mary: "Let it be to me according to your word." Our first birth was largely passive, as far as we were concerned. Our new birth demands our willing cooperation. "We must suffer with him in order that we may also be glorified with him." We must ardently desire it, fervently pray for it, trustfully appropriate it, and still be content to wait in childlike, expectant faith, for God's own time to fully come to us.

O holy Child of Bethlehem!
Descend to us, we pray;
Cast out our sin and enter in,
Be born in us today.

Baptized churchmen find further grounds for confident, affirmative faith in Burton Scott Easton's fine translation of Titus 3: 4-7: "When the kindness of God our Saviour and his love of men appeared—not because of the righteous acts that we performed but out of his own mercy—he saved us

'By a washing that gave us a new birth
And by making us new through the Holy Spirit,
Which he poured on us richly
Through Jesus Christ our Saviour;
That being justified by his grace
We might await with firm hope
An inheritance of eternal life,' "

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, JR.
Professor at Episcopal Theological School

More About The Offertory

WE HAVE not yet finished with the subject of the Offertory. Recently I was asked if I thought it liturgically 'proper' to attach an Offertory to the services of Morning and Evening Prayer. Certainly it is. There is no occasion when Christians meet together for corporate worship and prayer that it is not fitting for them to make an offering. Our Methodist friends have an old saying among them which is 'worthy of all men to be received'; namely, "When two or three are gathered together in thy Name, there is always a collection!" Unless the worship of Christians moves them to a response of sacrificial giving it is a farce, not to say indecent. God so loved the world that He gave . . . How much do we love in return? The offering is part of the answer to this question.

Morning and Evening Prayer end on the eucharistic note of the General Thanksgiving—'that we show forth thy praise, not only with our lips, but in our lives, by giving up our selves to thy service.' Surely there is no better way to begin the giving up of ourselves to God's service than by emptying our pockets with a generous and cheerful spirit. We might as well begin the work of Christian sacrifice where it hurts the most. Our money is a real part of ourselves because it represents hours of our time and labor. And if we happened not to earn it there is all the more reason why we should be ready to give it up.

The idea of 'offering' is the only justification for the Church or its ministers receiving gifts of money for the occasional services of baptism and burial —yes, and of weddings also. These gifts should not be thought of by those who offer them as fees to cover expenses or as personal gratuities to the officiating parson; for both the Church and the Ministry exist in this world 'to spend and be spent.' But there is no reason why people should not be ready and desirous of making a thank-offering and devotion of sacrifice to the cause of Christ in return for the added blessings brought to them by the ministries of the Church. Unless, however, they make their offerings with this intent, it is better for the clergy not to receive them.

Another point occurs to me in this connection. When people make a sacrificial gift for the Church's work their offering should be duly presented at the altar with the other corporate offerings of God's people. It is unnecessary, of course, to call out names of individual offerers. But every offering by an individual should be related to the larger whole of which it is a part. And any gift which is in any sense a sacrifice ought to be dignified by a solemn presentation of it in the context of the Church's corporate worship. It has always seemed to me very unseemly, for example, not to collect and offer at the proper time the gifts of the people at a 'low' celebration of the Eucharist, but instead to leave an offering plate in a convenient place for people to put in it what they will when they come up to receive communion. Their gifts should be received and presented in association with the oblations of bread and wine that they may be offered unto God for 'the whole state of Christ's Church.'

Even more unseemly is the caricature of presenting the alms in some churches—probably motivated by an exaggerated desire to lean over backwards lest they disobey the rubric about 'humbly' presenting them—by having the server whisk them away out of sight as rapidly as possible, without ever letting the 'filthy lucre' come to rest on the Holy Table. Possibly such churches are ashamed of their meager gifts. But if there is among the alms some sacrificial gift, it is holy and acceptable unto God, and I rather think that He is pleased to have it placed alongside the oblations which are the memorials of His own sacrifice in the offering of His only-begotten Son.

Modern Science Brought To Aid Of Church in Kentucky

A Wire Recorder Brings the Reproduction Of Church Services to Shut-Ins and Others

Edited by Sara Dill

Louisville, Ky.:—St. Mark's services complete to music and prayer, are provided by wire recorder. Although it still may be argued in some quarters that science is the enemy of religion, at St. Mark's in Crescent Hill, a suburb, the Rev. William H. Langley, Jr., is putting science to work for religion. With one of the latest developments in radio and electronics, the wire recorder, Mr. Langley is able for the first time to bring to shut-ins the church services they love and miss—complete with sermon, choir music, responses of the congregation and even the sound of the shuffling of feet as the worshipers rise or kneel in prayer.

It all began when two live wire ex-G.I.'s of the congregation got the bright idea of recording a wedding at St. Mark's. They stuck a microphone on the floor of the chancel, retired backstage and recorded every sound on a small spool of wire. When Mr. Langley heard how faithful the reproduction was, he became interested in the possibilities of using the recording machine in church work. One parishioner who suffered a broken hip said, "People who can walk on both legs just can't appreciate what it means."

Also at St. Mark's they're finding the wire recorder useful in the operation of the church, too. It is a convenient and lasting way to keep records.

To William Pilcher, the organist and choirmaster, the wire recorder is an extremely useful new tool. He can record and play back rehearsals or actual services, study them and use them to demonstrate to the singers any sections he'd like changed or pointed up.

For some months the Diocese has been purchasing recording equipment whereby full services will be recorded and sent by mail to the rural areas of the diocese for use of radio stations. Also any sponsored program of the diocesan departments is recorded and sent out in the diocese to be used in their parish meetings, such as the missionary meeting for the promotion of the every member canvass, the annual Lent offering presentation service, etc.

The diocese has invested heavily in visual aids library, owning two projectors for slides and filmstrips for use in the program of religious education for the Church schools, young people and the Woman's Auxiliary.

Council of Churches

Camden, N. J. (RNS):—About 300 Protestant churches have joined in formation of a Council of Churches of Greater Camden. A preamble to the council's constitution sets forth that "the Church of Christ is confronted by unprecedented need and opportunity" in the world of today, and that "the magnitude and urgency of the task before the Church are too great to be met by a divided body." The call to service emphasizes "fellowship and unity of action in this hour."

Five departments will be organized to carry out the new federation's program. They include Christian education and stewardship, co-operation in evangelism and church extension, utilization of the press and radio, better family and community relationships, and better inter-faith and inter-race relationships.

Co-operation is now possible with the Council of Churches in Philadelphia, directly across the Delaware River, with the result that the entire metropolitan area of the nation's third largest population center is completely organized for inter-denominational unity of purpose and action.

Good Old Days

Yonkers, N. Y.:—St. John's, Colonial Heights, will celebrate its 150th anniversary throughout 1948, according to an announcement by the rector, the Rev. Osborne Budd. The first unit of the present church was completed in 1798, one of the first to be constructed in the country after the Revolution. According to the records, ten men were required to build it. Of these, Joseph O'Dell worked a total of 75 days for about $1.70 a day. The total cost of the building, including labor and materials, was about $1,000. This included the cost of three gallons of rum, at a cost of $5, which was furnished the workers in addition to their wages. Since that time the building has been added to at least twice, but the old part is still intact and can be easily distinguished in the modern structure.

Plans for the celebration include the restoration of the church; a pageant based on its history; special services.

Get Cold Shoulder

Washington:—Fifty church leaders, representing seven Protestant Churches, held a seminar on legislative measures here. They went to the Capital and to the White House to find out what they could about the Marshall plan, displaced persons, wages and hours, price control and universal military training. One delegation was sharply rebuked by Congressman Frank Fellows of Maine, who told them that ministers ought to stay home attending to their parishes instead of invading Washington. Another churchman, who did not want his name used, said that he sensed a mild rebuke from President Truman during an informal conference on universal military training.

New Missionaries

New York:—Miss Gertrude E. Eby, now employed in the finance department of the National Council, is to go to China to work in the office of the treasurer of the China Mission. Mrs. Ethel Rhodes Murray, a nurse, is to go to Liberia where she will be stationed at St. Timothy's Hospital, Cape Mount. At present a public health nurse for the city of New York, she is a graduate in public health nursing from New York University and has continued her studies for a master's degree. She is a communicant of the Crucifixion, Harlem, New York City.

Oppose Conscription

Columbus, O. (RNS):—Church, youth, farm and college representatives have organized a "Columbus Committee Against Peacetime Conscription" and announced they will carry a campaign into opposition territory, "using insofar as possible the observable technique the opposition uses."

The Rev. Donald Timerman, secretary of the Franklin County Council of Churches and chairman of the new group, said the committee would attempt to inform the public of the true picture of universal training and carry on a campaign against the UMT bill pending in Congress.

"We are being pushed by war department hysteria into psuedo-preparation for war, into the building of a vast partially trained army of foot soldiers in an atomic age," he asserted.

"Peacetime conscription," he added, "has never proved effective for national defense. It always creates a false sense of security. Modern wars are won by industrial organization and mechanical preparation."

The local committee is the third in Ohio created by a state committee formed under the direction of Dr. Roy Burkhart, pastor of First Community church, here. The other committees are in Cleveland and Toledo.

Aid to Jews

Jerusalem (RNS):—An Anglican bishop and a Roman Catholic monk have won the praise of the Jewish community here for their efforts in saving Jewish lives and property menaced by Arab rioters. Informed that danger threatened some Jewish families living in the Arab quarter near the Swedish mission school, the Rt. Rev. Weston H. Stewart, Anglican Bishop of Jerusalem, personally intervened to effect their rescue. Meanwhile, Father Placidus, a German Benedictine belonging to the Church of the Dormitio, pushed his way to the center of a mob which started a fire in the commercial district. At first the rioters attacked the priest, but then gave way in deference to his age and dignified appearance. Besides prevailing upon the rioters to disband, Father Placidus helped to extinguish the flames.

A number of Arab Moslems and Christians sheltered Jewish neighbors and in several Arab villages offered to organize joint anti-riot squads. Haganah, the Zionist defense organization, has generally succeeded in preventing Jewish mobs from damaging Arab life and property, sometimes at personal risk to Haganah men themselves.

Priests Cooperate

Belgrade (RNS):—Three hundred Orthodox priests from Serbia and the autonomous regions of Kosovo, Metohija and Vojvodina, met here to form an organization which will cooperate with the government in social, economic and educational projects. The group is similar to other associations reportedly set up by Orthodox clergymen in Bosnia-Hercegovina and Croatia. Inaugurated in response to recommendations by the holy synod last spring which called for "cooperation between priests and state officials," the new association announced that its purpose is to join with state authorities and people's organizations in promoting "social and cultural projects and the fulfillment of Yugoslavia's five-year plan."

Formation of the association followed shortly after Patriarch Gavrilo, supreme leader of the Orthodox Church in Yugoslavia, had called upon Orthodox clergy throughout the country to support "all activities for the benefit of the people" sponsored by the government.

First business of the new group was the election of working committees and the adoption of regulations to govern its activities. A lengthy resolution approved by the meeting declared that "we must unite our forces with other professions and sections of the population," because "only in this way will we achieve improvement in the standard of living of our whole people, and even of us priests."

An unusual feature of the resolution was its attack on "clericalism," which it condemned for "having brought much evil to the world, and even to us."

"We want friendly cooperation with state authorities," the resolution said. "We do not want to work for those who have never been inside a church, but who are now allegedly extremely pious and beating their breasts because of the reputed loss of the churches' prestige."

Present at the meeting was a delegation of Roman Catholic priests from Slovenia, who presumably attended as observers.

Get Out of Schools

San Antonio, Texas (RNS):—Mrs. Eugene Meyer, wife of the Washington, D. C., publisher, told the annual convention of the Texas State Teachers Association here that some method satisfactory to all citizens should be devised immediately to halt the growing domination of public schools by sectarian religions. She declared, "we should persuade the churches to withdraw from the public school system if we are convinced the public school system is worth saving."

Mrs. Meyer warned that the churches would sacrifice their own freedom, prestige and influence over the lives of the people if they depend upon public support and let themselves become mere adjuncts or rivals of the state.

"We find both Protestant and Catholic clerics battering down the public school doors in order to get a hearing from children whom they cannot attract to their churches," she asserted. "In some communities they enter the schoolroom to teach sectarian religions while the public school teacher stands by; in others they fall back upon the discipline of the school to herd the children into church class rooms.

"I, too," she continued, "believe that the child is robbed of its full development if it receives no guidance in early years toward a recognition of the religious aspects of life. But sectarian religious teaching, to be effective, must remain the province of the church, the family and the home. The churches have ample time to carry out this responsibility without sectarianizing the common schools."

of the public school system, Mrs. Meyer said, "we have the right to ask what proof the religious groups have to offer that their influence has been ethically more effective. What example are the sectarian groups giving at this very moment of moral leadership in our own country? Their undignified quarrels are due to rival ambitions, mutual intolerance and lack of confidence in the power of spirit, mind and idea. The repercussions of these dissensions are already felt in the nation's schoolrooms. If we are convinced that our public school system is worth preserving, we should persuade the churches to withdraw voluntarily from the public school system. If they will not see reason, public opinion must be mobilized to hasten this retreat. For the school system is the one broad area left in our country where religious intolerance could be overcome. It is the one place where the child is not yet primarily a Protestant, a Catholic or a Jew, but an American among Americans."

Parish Aids Mission

Detroit:—St. Martin's, a mission, has been assured of additional assistance by St. Paul's Memorial parish. The mission, not far from St. Paul's, was established in 1928 and has never had a full time minister. It has been operated with diocesan aid, with lay readers taking the services, with occasional visits by clergymen. The Rev. James G. Widdifield, rector of St. Paul's, recently announced that his parish would aid St. Martin's in its program and in its efforts to become a parish. Part of the program is to move the mission to a more promising site in the city.

Citizens Protest

Wichita, Kan. (RNS): — Public protests are mounting here against a new $100,000 printing plant decorated with the Christian cross and scheduled to house the Defender Publishing Company operated by the "Rev." Gerald Winrod whom the government indicted for sedition during World War II.

"From this Wichita edifice," declared a front-page editorial in The Wichita Beacon, "will pour all the seditious, race-hating literature of this individual who calls himself a preacher of the gospel. To the everlasting shame of Wichita, the name of this city will be printed on the vicious, slanderous Defender which Winrod and his race-baiting henchmen circulate throughout the world under the guise of a religious publication."

Charging that Winrod is using the Christian cross to "advertise" what the newspaper believes to be "vicious smears," The Beacon said that the "self-styled preacher" has released a four-page "Personal Letter to the Defender Family" asking for additional funds with which to complete the edifice.

The new structure, located on Wichita's widest thoroughfare and in the city's fashionable district, is a modern building, apparently well on the way to completion. The Beacon reports that its construction is to cost a total of $50,000 and equipment

The Example of Modern Science

THE devotion and earnestness of its leaders, the marvelous equipment with which they work, the enormous funds available for education and research, go far to explain the solid achievements of modern science.

If the Church with its Gospel of Peace is to take front rank among the forces that are changing our world we could find no better model. The camel's hump of ancient endowments will not enable the Seminaries to do their necessary share.

Winrod was indicted by the government, along with a group of others, for allegedly seditious activities in connection with America First groups. At the end of the war the Justice Department dropped its charges. Recently Winrod was visited here by Gerald L. K. Smith who has been identified with similar writings as are to be found in Winrod's Defender.

Spiritualism Approved

London (RNS: — Approval of spiritualism as a religious force is contained in a Church of England report published here after being suppressed for a number of years.

The report, signed by seven of ten members of a special committee appointed by the late Dr. Cosmo Lang, then Archbishop of Canterbury, was suppressed by the House of Bishops when it was submitted secretly in 1938. Its publication here by Psychic News has created a minor sensation.

"It is clearly true," the report stated, "that recognition of the nearness of our friends who have died and of their progress in spiritual life and of their continuing concern for us cannot do otherwise for those who have experienced it than add a new immediacy and richness to their belief in the communion of Saints."

While the minority report of the committee still remains secret, the majority report asserted that "certain outstanding psychic experiences of individuals, including certain experiences with mediums, make a strong prima facie case for survival and for the possibility of spirit communications.

"We think it probable," the majority report continued, "that the hypothesis that they proceed in some cases from discarnate spirits is a true one."

Declaring that belief in angelic guardians or guides has been general in Christianity, the Committee said the Church of England "for reasons of past controversy, has been altogether too cautious in its references to the departed.

"Anglican prayers for the departed do not satisfy peoples' needs because the prayers are so careful in their language that it is not always evident that the departed are being prayed for.

"If spiritualism contains a truth, it is important to see that truth not as a new religion, but only as filling up certain gaps in our knowledge. It is important, in our opinion, that representatives of the Church keep in touch with groups of intelligent persons who believe in spiritualism."

The majority report asserted, however, that a great deal of spiritualism has its center in man rather than in God and is "indeed materialistic" in its character.

A. W. Austen, editor of Psychic News, said the seven signers of the majority report were the late Bishop Francis Underhill of Bath and Wells; Dean W. R. Matthews of St. Paul's; Canon Harold Anson, master of the Temple; Canon L. W. Grensted of Oxford; Dr. William Brown, psychologist; P. E. Sandilands, attorney; and Lady Gwendolen Stephenson.

Austen said publication of the report had been suppressed largely at the request of the late Dr. William Temple, then Archbishop of York.

Austen added that he considered it his duty "to publish this report in defiance of the bishops who banned it, not so much to satisfy the natural curiosity of spiritualists but to give the Anglican parsons and laymen the lead that was denied them by their own leaders."

tist general association here. Many Catholic educational institutions are "richly endowed" and adequately staffed, but some 400 other Christian colleges in the United States are substandard, despite the fact that "the Church is the mother of education," Blanton declared.

Christmas Service

Boston:—The Christmas service of the Church Service League Women's Division was held in St. Paul's Cathedral on Dec. 17, when Dean van Etten gave the address. Around the lovely manger scene in the chancel, gifts were heaped for distribution later by our chaplains to the hospitals and prisons. Missionaries on furlough from Alaska, the Philippine Islands and Haiti, were guests of honor at the tea in the cathedral undercroft.

Stop Name Calling

Cleveland (RNS): — A resolution calling upon the United States and Russia to quit name calling and "behave toward one another as gentlemen" was approved by delegates to the mid-year meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention here. In another resolution the delegates praised the President's Commission on Civil Rights as "another important milestone in the slow but steady march toward the emancipation of minority groups in America."

The resolution on United States-Russian relations was drawn up by the council on Christian social progress. It read: "Whereas the peoples of the United States and Russia with their differences of opinion will continue to live in the same world and their contacts with one another will increase; And whereas this will be intolerable unless they behave toward one another as gentlemen do under the same circumstances; Therefore we ask an end to the fostering of suspicion, fear and hatred, to the calling of names and exchanges of recriminations and ask for tolerance, the encouragement of mutual understanding and action in expectation of and in promotion of peace."

Please Help Kimber Den

Mr. Den and a group of workers at the opening of a new center

Those who read the report by the Rev. Kimber Den of his many-sided work in China (WITNESS, Dec. 18) will surely want to aid his great work. It covers work with lepers, the blind, orphans, refugees, cooperatives, and we believe that there is no Christian minister today carrying on such tasks. It is being done in the face of wild inflation which makes the American dollar all the more necessary. Church organizations and individuals are urged to do all that they can to help.

the World's Classics is listed as No. 2 in the series. No clergyman or layman interested in the history of the Church will want to be without this handy reference of excerpts from the chief documents and writings of the Church's life from New Testament times down to our own day. Helpful introductory notes to each document add to the usefulness of the volume. Space given to Anglican material is most generous and comprehensive. Unfortunately, however, American Christianity and the mission Churches outside of Europe are entirely ignored.

Miracles: a Preliminary Study.* By C. S. Lewis. Macmillan, $2.50. Pp. 220.

Like all C. S. Lewis writes, this treatise repays careful study. It is brilliantly phrased and should convince the imaginary impartial agnostic of the possibility of miracle, if he is willing to accept Lewis' two-story universe in which the landlord from upstairs occasionally reminds the tenant below of his presence. Not all Christians have so interpreted miracle; St. Augustine is a conspicuous exception. And Lewis' handling of the gospel miracles (he explicitly refrains from examining the Old Testament) will cause sadness to many modern New Testament scholars. They will be grateful that he denies that (as he was "once tempted to suspect") they are "disguised apostates." They will not criticize his philosophical arguments, with which they will often be in accord, so much as his apparent ignorance not only of historical investigations but also of many previous writers on miracles.

But his work is a valuable antidote to nineteenth-century naturalism, and no one should refrain from seeing for himself the many profound and clever interpretations of theological thought which Lewis makes. It is no accident that he is the leading lay theologian of our day. His chapter characteristically entitled "Horrid Red Things" is a wonderful example of dialectic.

The Heart of the Yale Lectures.* By Batsell Barrett Baxter. Macmillan. $2.50.

This volume might be better titled, An Introduction to the Homiletical Principles in the Yale Lectures. Many of the lectures have nothing to do with homiletics, and others deal with the principles of preaching only in relation to some theological subjects. The author has given us a survey of the principal topics covered by various lecturers and grouped these under standard homiletical headings. The limitations of the book lie principally in the nature of the material. Of what significance is the date, for example, of Dean Brown's comment on church architecture, (p. 204)? Are David Greer (p. 22) and P. T. Forsyth (p. 25) using the term "personality" in the same sense? Any one who reads the entire Yale series may conclude that the lectureship is held together by only two points of identity: all the lectures have been delivered on the Yale campus; and all the lecturers have had to find something new, or a new way of saying something old, about preaching,—or to ignore homiletics altogether. Any attempt, therefore, to bring together a compendium of homiletical instruction out of the lectures must have more of the character of a sampling than a synthesis.

REV. R. A. GOODWIN
Dean of Bishop Payne Divinity School

In THE WITNESS for Dec. 4, 1947, there is a long quotation from an editorial of the Norfolk "Journal and Guide" about the high cost of theological education at the Bishop Payne Divinity School. Will you please print these three corrections of misstatements in this article? (1) According to the last report published by the joint commission on theological education, 1946, (based on the previous years 42-45), the cost per capita for educating a student at Bishop Payne was much less than the per capita cost at Philadelphia, or at the General Seminary, or at Cambridge Divinity School. (2) Unfortunately we cannot pay such salaries as this article gives us! You quote the editorial as saying "There are five full time instructors . . . the lowest paid of whom receives a salary of $4500, plus living accommodations." The fact is that the highest amount paid any member of the staff is $4000; and there are no living accommodations for any of the staff. (3) The editorial states that there are 8 students. We have 5 seniors; 3 in the middle class; 2 special students; 3 women students in the junior class and 2 men have enrolled in the junior class for the second semester. We have 13 students now, and expect 15 in January.

RT. REV. WALTER MITCHELL
Retired Bishop of Arizona

I do not know who wrote the editorial urging the closing of churches but the argument needs very definite qualifying. If a church finds itself surrounded by warehouses and the like, no doubt it should be closed and, let us hope, reopened in some new area where people live. And that is sometimes the case. But it is frequently the fact that this is not the case. Time was when the fine brown stone front houses were occupied by single families, but they were THE people. With the coming of the automobile, these families moved away, died off and their children went elsewhere to church. In the meantime, however, the old brown stone front houses have become tenements. Instead of one family with a few children, these houses are swarming with several families and lots of children. So there are not fewer people to serve but many more!

However, they are not THE people. They have nothing to give to the church except themselves; they are like our Lord in that respect. But the Church—God save the mark—too frequently, is chiefly interested in people who have money and, as it appears, are interested because they have money.

One of our hymns should be revised to fit the facts. "Onward Christian soldiers, marching as to war" (against the devil for people, like those in the tenements) let us substitute, "Onward Christian club members, marching to the suburbs" or something like that. Or, better, keep such churches open and go after the people!

May I say further that I hope THE WITNESS will give readers what you feel certain they ought to have. That led to his crucifixion in our Lord's case and plenty of extinct Church papers lie along the road the Church has travelled. But as I see it there is no other way, whether for the Church, a Church paper or a Churchman.

MR. M. S. WRIGHT
Churchman of Washington

I have no doubt that THE WITNESS receives a great deal of criticism these days. Our Church is, after all, composed for the most part of conservative people and I have no doubt you hear from them. So I would like to have you know that I admire you for taking the forthright stand that you do on various social issues; justice for the Negro; friendship with the Russians; the threat to our rights through the activities of the Committee on Un-American Activities.

I was especially glad that you featured that article by Prof. Sweezy of Harvard. To me it was unanswerable. But I have lived long enough to know that when an argument is unanswerable that those unwilling to accept it because of their prejudices take it out in anger and abuse. Just the same I believe there are more people in the Episcopal Church with you than you realize, and I hope that you will continue to deal with these vital issues courageously. The pressure on the other side, I can imagine, is strong. But take comfort in the fact that from the beginning of time it has been those who have not succumbed that have lead the human race forward.

MISS EDITH M. TUTTLE
Churchwoman of Paterson, N. J.

I sent THE WITNESS for November 20 to a non-church going friend who now writes me: "I am glad to know that the clergy are taking a stand against Parnell Thomas and his malicious program. It is going to take more than just condemnation to save us from fascism."

That number was eloquent. Vida Scudder's articles are an inspiration always.
