The council passed a resolution which states that "in the interest of separation of Church and state, this council favors an amendment to the federal school aid bill, now pending in Congress, to exclude from appropriations all non-public schools."

Bishop Gets Gift

Scranton, Pa.: — A purse for $5,000 was presented to Bishop Sterrett at the convention of the diocese of Bethlehem, meeting here at the Good Shepherd. The occasion was the 25th anniversary of his episcopate, and the money is to enable him to attend the Lambeth Conference this summer.

The convention unanimously passed a resolution that religious education is "the concern of the churches and has no place in public school buildings nor should it be supported by public taxation."

Bishop Sterrett in his address stressed the opportunities offered by the Lambeth Conference and the assembly of the World Council of Churches to further Church unity.

Following the convention a branch of the Rural Worker's Fellowship was organized, with the Rev. William B. Schmidgall of Tunkhannock, Pa., the chairman pro-tem. The branch is composed of 11 clergy and 4 laymen, with 6 of the clergy representing urban parishes in which the relation of town and country work to city parishes is considered in its proper perspective.

Delaware Convention

Hillcrest, Del.: — Bishop Oldham of Albany was the guest speaker at the dinner of the diocese of Delaware, held in connection with the convention. He said that "hope in God, in man, and in the future is the greatest need of men today, and the business of the Church is to give them that hope."

Bishop McKinstry reported progress throughout the diocese and offered plans for further expansion.

Negroes on Council

Charlotte, N. C.:—The diocese of North Carolina at its convention adopted by a more than two-thirds vote a recommendation that not less than two Negroes, a layman and a clergyman, should be members of the executive committee of the diocese. The clergyman elected is the Rev. Robert J. Johnson of Rocky Mount and the layman, Dr. J. W. Clack of this city.

whose behalf the appeal was made by Dr. E. R. Kellersberger who recently spent two months in China visiting leprosy missions and addressing hospital staffs in the interest of winning recruits to a friend of service sadly lacking in professional leadership.

Before beginning his new task, Dr. Chang will spend 18 months in observation and study at Christian leprosy colonies in China; at the School of Tropical Medicine in Calcutta, and at Vellore Medical College, India, under the eminent leprologist, Dr. Robert G. Cochrane.

Albany Awards

Albany, N. Y.:—Bishop Oldham conferred awards for service to the Church over a long period, at the convention meeting here. They were illuminated certificates with the seal of the diocese and a brief recitation of the service performed. Mr. Samuel Coffin was awarded for serving 56 as a vestryman at Christ Church, Hudson, and 33 as a member of the standing committee and 16 as chancellor.

Mr. Luther H. Tucker likewise was honored for service as a vestryman—44 years at St. Peter's, Albany, and also 50 years as a member of the Bible and Common Prayer Book Society. Mrs. John S. Conover was granted a certificate for 33 years as president of the Auxiliary at St. George's, Schenectady, and 25 years as diocesan custodian of the U.T.O.

The Rev. Mother Alice, now in her 90th year, was honored for 54 years a member and 27 as Superior of the Sisterhood of the Holy Child Jesus. The Bishop also presented a certificate to her secretary, Miss Emily B. Gnagey, who has held the position since Bishop Oldham took office twenty-five years ago.

Bishop Oldham, in his address, spoke of the Lambeth Conference and the Assembly of the World Council and also told of his recent visit to Australia. Bishop Barry, coadjutor, dealt with the missionary work in the diocese, with the convention giving enthusiastic approval to his proposed program of reorganization and expansion. It calls for consolidation, centralization, enlarged staff and more liberal support.

Bishop Oldham was presented with a check at a dinner given in his honor to help toward his expenses in attending the conferences abroad this summer.

Scaife Consecration

Buffalo, N. Y.:—Now it is Bishop Lauriston L. Scaife of Western New York, since the former rector of Calvary, Pittsburgh, was consecrated at St. Paul's Cathedral here on May 13. The service was broadcast over four stations, with local clergy as the commentators. The service was also televised, and a sound movie was made which will later be distributed by the department of promotion of the diocese.

Work for Students

New York: — Bishop Gilbert, addressing the convention of the diocese of New York meeting at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine on May 11, urged the expansion of work with students. He stated that there are more than 175,000 college students in the metropolitan area of New York. He said that the Church was failing these young people and in so doing was missing an opportunity for service that could have a far-reaching effect upon the future of civilization. He asked for a committee "to search out ways and means whereby our Church in this diocese may meet the need before us."

Bishop Gilbert also announced

plans for a series of missions throughout the diocese, culminating in a week of great meetings at the Cathedral. "We are living in anxious and critical times," he declared. "Changes are under way in the life of our world the significance and consequences of which few of us can comprehend. Strong currents are moving that cannot fail to have far-reaching effect upon the life and structure of human society. And beneath those currents we are made to feel an undertow that spells danger not only for our Church and the cause our Lord has committed to it, but to the institutions of government upon which our freedom depends. . . . The alarming thing is that men are so careless of the religion by which those rights are undergirded — that religion which provides the only sure foundation for our democratic institutions. . . . Our task is clear. In the face of the world's desperate need we must find the way to challenge the allegiance of the careless and indifferent and bring them into the fellowship and service of the Church."

As for resolutions, the old technique of "I move it be laid on the table" was used to cut off debate and to defeat two or three; notably one deprecating talk of another world war and urging the U.S. to find a basis for agreement with Russia. Resolutions condemning gambling in churches and one allowing women to serve on vestries were killed the same way.

Australians Protest

Sydney (RNS):—Protestant leaders here have protested a statement attributed to Msgr. Fulton J. Sheen, visiting American, that "in the future there will be only two governments in the world—Rome and Moscow." The objection was contained in a letter written on behalf of United Church Action by Bishop W. G. Hilliard, Anglican, and the Rev. S. W. McKibbin, Presbyterian.

"We can assure our distinguished visitor, Monsignor Sheen," the letter said, "that Australians generally will decline to choose either alternative suggested by him. As citizens they will prefer the British Commonwealth of Nations, and in the realm of religion will continue to identify themselves with those groups within the Christian Church which command their convictions."

"It would appear," the letter added, "that Monsignor Sheen has temporarily forgotten that he is a guest in a country predominantly British, the great majority of whose people espouse a religious tradition other than his own."

Monsignor Sheen arrived in Australia recently with a group of American prelates, headed by Francis Cardinal Spellman, Archbishop of New York. They will take part in observances commemorating the centenary of the Melbourne Catholic archdiocese.

Bishop of Alaska

Raleigh, N. C.:—The Rev. William J. Gordon, Jr., was consecrated Bishop of Alaska at the Church of the Good Shepherd here on May 18th. He was elected by the House of Bishops last November but could not be consecrated until his 30th birthday, which was on May 6. He is the youngest man ever to be consecrated a bishop in the Episcopal Church in the United States.

One of the interesting sidelights of the service was the fact that the young bishop was led in the procession by Crucifer Jimmy Aheran of St. Luke's, Spray, N. C., carrying a wooden processional cross which the bishop had himself carried as a lad in the church where his father was rector for 37 years. Bishop Gordon paid a moving tribute to his late father at the luncheon which followed the service.

There were 13 bishops and about 80 other clergy attending the service.

Miltiarism Opposed

Buffalo, N. Y.:—Christians should oppose the tendency of the government to "propagandize our citizenry into believing that our nation can be made secure by increasing armies and armaments," according to a report adopted by the West New York synod of the Evangelical and Reformed Church.

"We give lip service to freedom of speech and thought, but we suspect the patriotism of all who in the search for truth listen to Henry Wallace, Charles Beard or opposition voices heard in Washington against the draft or the universal military training program," said the report.

The Synod, representing about 70 churches, said that too little money is spent "to make democracy work so well that our people would never even give a thought to a godless, materialistic philosophy of government."

Scores Pessimism

Chicago (RNS): — Christians must outclass Communists in the relevancy of their approach to the state of society, and the Christian Church must keep alive "apocalyptic hope" or succumb to the world-wide despair, John A. Mackay, president of Princeton Theological Seminary, told 400 Presbyterian laymen who met here to form a National Council of Presbyterian men. A "freezing pessimism" is benumbing many leaders, not only of the state and society at large but also of the Church, Mackay warned.

"In Christian circles," he said, "disillusionment has become so complete and faith has grown so faint that the exultant note is absent from Church councils and assemblies. Some have become Christian Stoics who, facing the possibility that history may come to an end, believe that the most we may expect from now onward is the development of Christian personality within history and the hope of immortality beyond history."

Contemporary realism, both secular and religious, no longer believes in man, he said, adding that at the same time faith in God has dwindled.

Lambeth Conference

London (RNS):—It is expected that 323 bishops, with about 200 of them from outside Great Britain, will attend the Lambeth Conference in July.

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

THE REV. OLIVER SHAW NEWELL
Rector of St. John's, Yonkers, N. Y.

Under the title Travels of a Gargoyle (WITNESS, April 8) Mr. Barrett scornfully ridicules Personal Evangelism. Again in We Were Thinking (April 29) by two seminarians you print that which declares Personal Evangelism to be unnecessary. Are you willfully setting yourself against that which the Presiding Bishop and Council has asked the whole Church to emphasize this year, namely, Personal Evangelism?

Do you really feel that for one Christion to speak of God, of Christ and his faith in God to one who is not a Christian really is objectionable? If I am not mistaken one of the reasons of the great development of the early Church was that individual Christians spoke of Christ to those who knew him not. I am sorry to see THE WITNESS decrying Personal Evangelism.

ANSWER: Opinions of the editorial board are expressed only in editorials. Authors of signed articles do not necessarily express the opinions of our editors. Mr. Barrett has been dealing with types found in the Church — Buchmanites, Anglo-Catholics, Go-Getters, Evangelicals, Social-Gospellers, etc. The series has received much favorable comment, with criticisms coming generally from those who couldn't take it when their own particular group was dealt with.

As for THE WITNESS position on Evangelism, our purpose, adopted officially by our Advisory Board which includes all members of our editorial board in addition to several hundred other Church men and women, states that "We believe that God wills the Church to be Catholic in its inclusiveness, Liberal in its essential spirit, Evangelical to the Gospel of Christ. We believe in the interpretation of the Christian religion in contemporary terms: in the rigorous application of the principles of Christ to our social life."

MISS EDITH M. TUTTLE
Churchwoman of Paterson, N. J.

Commenting on the letter of Miss Margaret James of Montgomery, Alabama, (April 22) in which she quite properly reminds us that we should practice what we profess, I will tell the history of the block in Paterson where I have lived with my family for a long time.

This block has in it about three dozen houses, all two and a half stories, about a third one family dwelling and two-thirds two family.

Forty years ago these were occupied by Americans descended from the Colonial settlers, most of them owners of the houses where they lived. About 1920 many of the old residents moved out into the country, selling to foreigners. We stayed. As we became acquainted with our new neighbors we found them to be, in the main, self respecting, industrious and friendly. We could get along with them.

In 1941 one of our more recent neighbors asked me, as a property owner, to sign a petition to the board of adjustment which would prevent a Negro woman from buying a house on our block. This appeared so manifestly unfair that two of the old-time American property owners, of whom I was one, went to the meeting of the board of adjustment and spoke in her favor. She was let alone and has proved a good neighbor.

During the last war many Negroes were employed in the aircraft works here, some of whom had come up from the South. By their skill and thrift they saved enough to buy homes at the close of the war. A number did so in our block. They have improved the old houses they bought, keep their sidewalks clean, and are good neighbors, so that the prejudice against them is gradually breaking down.

If this can be in our block, why not everywhere in America? Why not everywhere in the world?

REV. J. L. MALONE
Chaplain Veterans Administration, Murfreesboro, Tenn.

Your editorial on Our Rural Work, (April 29) is the best presentation of the rural work problem that I have read. You have hit the nail on the head. I agree that the solution is a basic salary schedule on a diocesan scale. Merit in both rural and urban work is due recognition. We believe the diocesan system to be a divine institution, the communicants in the individual diocese to be members of a diocesan family. Why should the Church treat some members of the family, speaking in the proverbial sense, like step children?

Bishops and other diocesan leaders are the only ones who can remedy the unfortunate conditions you so aptly describe. No doubt many city rectors and vestries will be happy to cooperate when these conditions and an adequate program are impressed upon them.

The Parish Auxiliary Tackles Problem of Reformatory

Preventive Work in Many Other Localities Is Stimulated by Job Done by Small Group

By Alice S. D. Boyd

Boonville, Mo.: — The deplorable conditions at the Boys' Training School here (state reformatory for boys) was uncovered this past year after a series of escapes and one or two attempted murders of inmates by other boys were reported. Resignations were asked for by the governor and the whole shocking situation was pretty thoroughly aired by the press and by the badly frightened citizens of this town.

Lack of recreational facilities of any kind was one of several serious drawbacks to the boys' rehabilitation.

The women of St. Mary's Guild of Grace Church, Jefferson City, heard of this and decided that it was something they could help to remedy. Under the leadership of their rector, the Rev. David T. Eaton, and the president of the Guild, Mrs. Albert Happy, Jr., they gathered together books, magazines, games and other play material that the boys could use. But their interest being aroused by visits to the school, they decided that they must do more.

A committee, with Mrs. Hume Duval acting as chairman, made an informal survey of the situation and found that 95% of the boys came from broken homes; that some of the children were sent there simply because there seemed to be no other place to put them — they were homeless or not wanted at home; that many boys paroled from the school were recommitted within six months just because their home life was not properly helpful and not conducive to straight living.

So the women of Grace Church devised a plan that was recently approved by the Missouri training school board. They agreed to sponsor one of the "companies" at the school, consisting of about 34 of the younger boys. They do not plan to pamper delinquent boys but by personal visits they aim to get to know these boys, supply them with hobby material, books, games, etc. and make them feel that someone outside the walls cares for them.

They plan too to help the proper authorities to find homes for unwanted children working through state welfare department and the county officials who handle such cases. They hope to interest other groups of women in finding foster homes for children of their localities who are not really bad and have no proper homes of their own.

Mrs. Happy says too that the most important phase of the work is to prevent delinquency and they hope to interest other women's groups, Church and secular, in the whole problem. They want to enlist their help for those boys who are paroled and sent back to their home counties. Cooperating organizations would be notified of the paroled boys' release and members would be expected to see that every possible opportunity be given the boys to go in the right direction and every obstacle to their leading normal lives should be removed.

At the recent meeting of the state federation of Women's Clubs in Kansas City, the federation voted to make the Boonville Boy's School their project for the coming year. This action was received thankfully by St. Mary's Guild as a big step toward their goal of enlisting the interest of women all over the state.

Though these good plans may seem to be starting at the wrong end there is no doubt that the whole subject of juvenile delinquency will be brought home to many of our Church women through the contacts made by St. Mary's Guild and preventive work in all localities should be greatly stimulated. St. Mary's women found a terrible problem almost on their doorsteps and did something about it.

MYRON TAYLOR TURNED DOWN

Geneva, Switzerland (RNS):—The general secretariat of the World Council of Churches announced here that Council officials had declined an offer by Myron C. Taylor to cooperate in making the agency's forthcoming Assembly in Amsterdam "serve the interests of peace."

Mr. Taylor, President Truman's personal representative to the Vatican, recently called upon several officers of the World Council in connection with the Assembly. He was told that the Churches which will be represented at the meeting "desire to accomplish this (peace) task in complete independence."

"The Churches consider," the secretariat announcement stated, "that it belongs to the very nature of their mission that they should not be identified with any secular power or policies, and believe that they serve the interests of peace best when they speak exclusively in the name of the Lord of all nations.

"That is why no invitations have been sent to any governments to be represented at the Assembly. But the problems of the present international situation will be fully discussed at Amsterdam in the light of Christian faith and principle."

VACATIONS

THE WITNESS is published every other week from June 15 to September 15. One of the headaches that all publishers have is making address changes for summer vacations, particularly these days of shortages of both materials and workers. We ask therefore that those who are to be away but a short time arrange to have their copies forwarded. If however you are to be away for an extended time send the change to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty St., New York 6, N. Y., giving both your old and your new address, and kindly indicate whether it is a permanent change or only for a vacation period. Many thanks for the cooperation.

WOMEN PRIESTS PROPOSED

London (RNS):—The general synod of the Church in China will refer to the Lambeth Conference a proposal that deaconesses may be ordained. The proposed canon would lapse 20 years after its adoption by the synod unless reenacted. According to the proposal a woman candidate would be required to have the same theological, spiritual and pastoral qualifications as a deacon before his ordination. She would have to be 30 years old, unmarried and have the intention of remaining unmarried.

The Church in China has taken no action on the proposal but is referring to Lambeth the question "whether or not such liberty to experiment within the framework of the Anglican Communion would be in accordance with Anglican tradition and order."

CONVENTION OF IOWA

Cedar Rapids, Ia.:—The convention of the diocese of Iowa, meeting here, voted to conduct this year a campaign for one million dollars for student centers, diocesan institutions, and an expansion program which contemplates ten new churches, improvements at the Negro Church in Keokuk and at the conference center, and assisting men preparing for the ministry. Authorization was also given for the purchase of a new residence for the bishop in Des Moines.

Speakers at the convention were Bishop Hunter of Wyoming, the Rev. Stanley M. Fullwood of the National Council and Mrs Theodore Wedel of Washington.

ARTLEY PARSON TO STAY

New York:—The Rev. Artley Parson, whose resignation from the staff of St. George's Church, here, was announced in clergy notes last week, has been persuaded by the vestry to remain in his present position.

BISHOP WALTERS DECORATED

Chicago:—Bishop Walters of San Joaquin and the Rev. John Timothy Stone, Presbyterian of this city, received golden crosses from the patriarch of the Church of the East, Mar Eshai Shimun XXIII, at an Assyrian banquet held here May 23. The crosses, never before conferred on anyone outside of Mesopotamia, were given in recognition of aid extended to the Christians of Assyria by these two Church leaders. Bishop Walters obtained the signatures of most of the bishops of the Episcopal Church, protesting against massacres, while Dr. Stone was instrumental in raising large sums for relief. The Rev. Irwin St. John Tucker, pastor of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, was the chief speaker at the dinner.

Peanuts, the pony, was a popular attraction at the bazaar held at St. James Cathedral at Fresno, California

COUNCIL CONDEMNS MUNDT BILL

New York:—A "more judicially minded" group than the House Committee on Un-American Activities should investigate Communism and red-front activities, according to the human relations commission of the Protestant Council of New York, of which Bishop Gilbert is chairman. The commission also expressed opposition to the Mundt-Nixon Bill as endangering "basic civil rights" in a letter sent to President Truman and various Congressmen.

"We believe it is necessary," the commission declared, "to make provision for enabling citizens to identify totalitarian movements whether Communist or fascist, and that there is need to throw light on organizations which are directed for purposes adverse to the interests of our democracy, but we think that the Mundt-Nixon bill has important defects and we are convinced that it should be defeated."

According to the commission, the measure's defects include the imposition of guilt by association, whereby each member of a defaulting organization would be considered guilty of a crime; undue and arbitrary authority given the Attorney General; and vagueness in definition of terms.

The commission expressed agreement with the report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights which urged that "essential information" on totalitarians be made available to the people, but decried what it described as a "spirit of hysteria" existing in the U. S. which prevents wise consideration of such measures.

REESTABLISH RELATIONS

Warsaw (RNS):—Reestablishment of relations between the Orthodox Church of Poland and the Russian Orthodox Church was predicted here by Archbishop Timoteus Szretter. Relations between the two Churches were broken off more than 30 years ago.

PRO-WALLACE PASTOR RESIGNS

Atlanta, Ga. (RNS):—The Rev. Isiah J. Domas, pastor of the Unitarian Church here, has resigned after proposing a Negro college professor for church membership and after declaring himself to be for Henry Wallace for president. The resignation was accepted by a 33-32 vote of the congregation.

EDITORIALS

You Too Are Guilty

HAVE you expressed doubt about the value of the Taft-Hartley law, or maybe approved the report of the President's committee on civil rights, on which our Presiding Bishop served? Or perhaps you have been even more "radical" and advocated racial equality, public housing or an extension of social security. You may even have joined with others in singing the Magnificat in both a worshipful and meaningful manner. If so then you undoubtedly are guilty of "subversive activity" as defined in the Mundt-Nixon Bill (H.R. 5852) which has already passed the House and conceivably will pass the Senate and become the law of the land.

You may think it is fantastic for us to make any such statement. But if you will examine the Bill you will find that it is not. You will be "subversive," if this Bill becomes law, because the Communist Party also dislikes the Taft-Hartley law; it too approves the civil rights report; it too stands for racial equality; public housing; social security. The Communists of course don't sing the Magnificat but they do talk about putting the mighty from their seats, exalting the humble and meek, filling the hungry with good things and sending the rich empty away. And that's close enough under the terms of this Mundt Bill, with its new doctrine of "guilt by association."

The text of the new National Council pamphlet, The Bishops Say on Social Problems, according to this proposed law, is enough to bring F.B.I. agents to the next meeting of the House of Bishops. Why our Bishops even had the traitorous nerve to suggest that the House Committee on Un-American Activities was not acting in the best interests of the American people. And it is this committee, of course, which is back of the Mundt Bill, with Representative Parnell Thomas sending communications to the clergy, under franked postage, advocating its passage.

Who, under the proposed Bill, is to determine what is a "Communist organization?" Just one man —the Attorney General of the United States—at the moment Texas Tom Clark. All this power, under the broad language of the statute, is vested in just one person who has the power to subpoena any person or organization, books and records, and decide whether the person or organization is, or is not, "loyal."

And if he decides that the organization is not "loyal" what happens? Let's illustrate: the Church League for Industrial Democracy (now the Episcopal League for Social Action) urged members to contribute money to aid the victims of Franco's terrorism. To aid anti-fascists is to be "communist" in the mind of Tom Clark. That isn't a guess for he has already declared that the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee, of which Bishop Arthur Moulton, retired bishop of Utah is chairman, is a "communist front organization." This Church organization would therefore probably be also branded as a "communist front" and so required to file with the Attorney General the names of all members; reveal who paid dues and made contributions. These members would first of all be sent a communication by the Attorney General informing them that they are members of a "communist front organization." These members would be barred from federal employment and they would be denied passports. And, believe it or not, whenever thereafter they received literature from their Church organization it would be stamped, both on the literature and the envelope, "Disseminated by the Episcopal League for Social Action, a Communist organization."

Don't think that this is far-fetched. It is not. Recently a lawyer, who studied Nazi laws closely so as to do a good job as a prosecutor of leading Nazis at Nuremberg, said that even Hitler in the early days of his regime, didn't have the nerve to introduce such a drastic "toe-the-mark-or-else" bill in the Reichstag. Yet this Bill has already passed the House and the fact that the judiciary committee of the Senate immediately called for hearings—and very limited hearing at that—indicates that there is grave danger of speedy passage of the Bill by the Senate, thanks to psychotic fear and hysteria.

"QUOTES"

AS BISHOPS of the Church of God we call upon the people of our churches to be on their guard lest an hysterical fear of Communism shall lead us to fight that danger with weapons destructive of the treasures we seek to guard. The surest way to fight Communism is to work unceasingly at home and abroad for a society in which justice and the dignity of free men are in truth guaranteed to men of every race and condition. An inquisitorial investigation of men's personal beliefs is a threat to freedom of conscience. The casting of public suspicion on fellow citizens under the protection of Congressional immunity can readily become the offense against God's commandment, Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor.

—Pronouncement of the House of Bishops, 1947

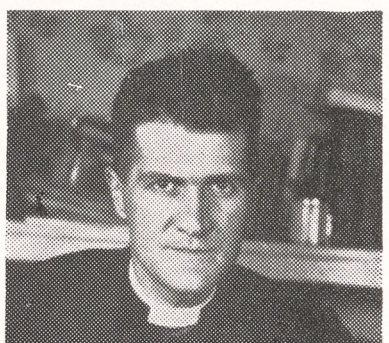
Our complacency is the great danger. This Bill is so bad that people sit back and say "it can't happen here." But it will happen here if we do not immediately arouse ourselves and our neighbors. There is one simple and easy thing to do: write to your Senators asking them to vote against it. Send a copy of your letter to President Truman. You are being urged to do this by many organizations, which in itself is a significant thing. For this Bill is so terrible that organizations as far apart politically as the Americans for Democratic Action (ADA), the Progressive Citizens of America (PCA), the Civil Rights Congress, the American Civil Liberties Union—to say nothing of countless individuals of widely divergent views—agree that the Mundt Bill must not become law.



But we suggest that you act in the name of the Church, following the fine example of the human relations commission of the Protestant Council of New York, headed by Bishop Gilbert. For this Bill hits the Church, and hard. It says in effect that "My country, right or wrong" is now the be-all and end-all of value judgments. It eliminates any pretense of favoring free dispute and discussion. And without the right of prophecy the Church is doomed and the nation is dragged into the mud of bestial stagnation.

No man can serve two masters. In America, 1948, this gospel injunction means that no man can simultaneously serve God Almighty and the House Committee on Un-American Activities with its infamous Mundt-Nixon Bill.

A Program for Today

by Paul T. Shultz, Jr.

Rector of the Atonement, Westfield, Massachusetts

DO YOU know what happened in Spain? They had a republic there, a real republic, a young republic, a republic like ours with civil rights for all, civil liberties, separation of Church and state. But the Roman hierarchy did not like it. They don't like republics anywhere. They don't like civil rights or civil liberties for any people — except themselves. And they don't like the separation of Church and state. They don't like these things anywhere. They especially disliked them in Spain — because for so many hundred years they had been in the saddle in Spain. The Roman Church owned a third of Spain.

So they decided to get rid of the republic—and civil rights—and civil liberties. And this is how they did it: First, they began a smear campaign against the republic. They said it wasn't a real republic. They said it was Communist-dominated. This was a lie but because the Church officials said it, it was believed by many people.

They worked their propaganda especially hard on the army. Presently they had soldiers and generals convinced that it was their "Catholic" duty to rebel against the republic, to seek by force to overthrow their country's government.

And so the Spanish civil war got under way. Hitler and Mussolini helped Franco. Roman influence kept France, Britain and America from helping Republican Spain. And so Spain was crucified.

Today in Spain there is no republic. There are no civil rights, no civil liberties, no separation of Church and state. Instead there is tyranny, dictatorship, persecution of Protestants, fascist collectivism — and Rome is in the saddle.

What Rome has done in Spain, she'd like to do everywhere if she could. And wherever she sees a chance to succeed, she tries it. Rome is trying it here in the United States of America.

How is Rome doing this? By the same ways and methods she used so successfully in Spain: First, by tacking the "Communist" label on everyone the hierarchy doesn't like. Second, by using the fear of Communism as a means for a comprehensive attack on American liberties and civil rights, including the separation of Church and state.

Bishop Oxnam is a great Methodist leader and Protestant statesman. He is a past president of the Federal Council of Churches—to which our Church belongs. He has served American Protestantism ably and well. But because he sees through the Roman game and has the courage to name it for what it is, the hierarchy call him a "Communist" . . . and they call the Federal Council "Communist," which means they are calling you and me "Communist" too. The answer to this charge is simple. We are not Communist. They lie!

Along with this vicious name-calling, Rome is capitalizing to the full on American distrust of Russia. The fear of Communism is being used to abolish civil rights. It began fifteen or twenty years ago with the drive for "teacher's oath" laws. These laws don't keep Communists from teaching; they can lie just as convincingly as Romans; but the laws do put teachers under state thought-control—to the end that when Rome gets political power she will be able to dominate education. Roman disregard for civil rights and personal liberties is shown in the way in which in Massachusetts the hierarchy have been able to smash medical freedom by outlawing planned parenthood. The same technique used in the "teacher's oath" campaign has now been successfully used in the "labor leader's affidavit" requirement which was written into the Taft-Hartley law. And in the incredible tactics of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, we have seen group after group which Rome does not like smeared and libelled and labelled as "Communist" by men who enjoy Congressional immunity—while native fascists, and groups whom Rome likes, and un-American Rome itself, continue on unchallenged. If Congress needs a committee to investigate un-American activities, the place to begin is with the Roman Catholic hierarchy, every member of which is an open agent of a self-styled foreign power, the Vatican.

In addition to all of this, Rome playing on American distrust of Russia is fanning the flames of prejudice and hate and inciting war. Rome would like nothing better than to see America involved in war with Russia. Rome hopes by this to accomplish two things: first to overthrow Russia; second to seize power in America. Rome hopes American power will smash Russia. Rome knows that for America to do this, internal discipline will have to be carried to a length never before known in America. Our civil rights and liberties will have to be abrogated for the duration. And once they are abrogated, Rome will see we never get them back.

This is the real danger that is facing America, this is the danger we must ward off, the danger of Roman Catholic domination. Our very fear of Communism makes the Roman danger all the more real. In our effort to resist Communist totalitarianism, we are in peril of succumbing to Roman totalitarianism. We must do neither. Neither the tyranny of Moscow nor the tyranny of Rome but "liberty and justice for all" is the American and Christian answer.

WHAT can we do about it? A number of things including these:

One, we can stop playing Rome's anti-communist game. We can stop being taken in by Rome's smear campaign. We can be resolute not to add fuel to the fires of American-Soviet misunderstanding. We can stand firm against all silly, irresponsible talk about war with Russia. As individuals we can stand firm and use our influence for calm discussion of problems in American-Russian relations—not for hysterical diatribe.

Two, we can seek to strengthen the United Nations into an adequate instrument of world government. To this end we must give UN more than lip-service. We must be aggressive salesmen in our personal contacts.

Three, we can use our influence as citizens by getting behind this program:

1; Dissolution of American diplomatic relations with the Vatican.

2; Dissolution of the present House Committee on un-American activities.

3; Appointment of a joint Senate-House Committee to investigate un-American activities on the part of Roman Catholicism.

4; Repeal of "teacher's oath," "labor leader's affidavit" and all other thought-control legislation, both state and federal.

5; Support of planned parenthood legislation on the ground that "medical freedom is in accordance with God's will."

6; Support of the recommendations of the President's Committee on Civil Rights and of legislation both state and federal to translate these recommendations into law.

7; Opposition to the enactment of universal military training.

8; Ousting of Franco and reestablishment of Spanish Republic by UN.

We can write our Senators and Representatives, both state and federal, telling them that we stand for this eight-point program. If everyone who reads these lines will do this, the effect will be far-reaching.

Four, as Christians and church-members we can support and strengthen the Federal Council of Churches. This body is at present chiefly consultative. It can be developed into an instrument of united Protestant action. That development waits on our articulate, active pressure in that direction. In the face of the Roman threat to our liberties, the time for such action is now.

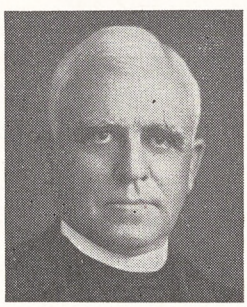
Five, most important of all, is the participation of every individual one of us in the life, the work and the worship of the local parish to which we belong. It is secularism which has in America opened the way for Rome, created the vaccum which the forces of the hierarchy are now attempting to fill. Against both secularism and Romanism—and hence against fascism and recrudescent tyranny, the first line of defense is the parish that is really a Christian fellowship, the body of Christ in its community. Recognition of this is implicit in the efforts now being made by many of the denominations to deepen their impact on American life; witness the Methodist crusade for Christ and the Episcopal stress on evangelism. The most important thing that each of us can do is to be an active member of our own parish, doing our part in the Church-wide effort to make Christ known to others.

All of these five avenues of action are important. Besides them, there are other imperatives which God will lay upon us. It is regrettable that exigencies of the situation make it necessary for Protestants vigorously to oppose the political program of Rome. It is important that in all our opposition we constantly make it clear that it is the politics of Rome, not its religion, against which we protest. If the Roman Church were willing to accept the place in American life which the Constitution gives it, we would have no quarrel with it. We would still regard it as a false misrepresentation of the Christian religion but we would respect its liberty to hold and teach what it maintains. But this is not the present situation. What we are up against is the effort on the part of hierarchy to do in America what they have done in Spain, what they are trying to do in Italy, what they seek to do wherever they see a chance of success: to capture and dominate. Against this we must stand.



As we thus stand, we must constantly ask God for grace that we may stand firm and yet in our standing be inspired by Christian love. This is not easy. We are in constant danger of succumbing to the poison of hate. Only the grace of God can enable us both to do what needs to be done and to do it in the spirit of Christ.

The Retired Bishop of Arizona

THE reformation of the Episcopate should be completed. General Convention only took the first steps. It set the time for the retirement of the Presiding Bishop at 68. Experience had shown that this was a better age than the 72 set before. If that be true for the Presiding Bishop, I am sure it will be recognized that it should apply to all bishops, but only General Convention can do that. And there are some other things which only General Convention can correct but it is too early to discuss these things now. Probably dioceses could set 68 for their own bishops but that would not be a wise procedure. However (and that is why this is written now), there are other things which only the dioceses can do.

There are two which should be fairly obvious. Why any one should want to be Corporation Sole is not clear; in many cases, probably because that was the situation when the man became bishop and he did not want to raise any question about it. But surely, here is a case where several heads would be better than one and more than one diocese has had serious financial troubles which might have been avoided had there been trustees, elected by the diocese, in charge of its financial operations. Recent examples will occur to any one who keeps up with such matters. Moreover, as we like to tell outsiders, ours is a democratic Church. It is also, a constitutional Church, despite all the talk about its ministry being a hierarchical one, with bishops in the apostolic succession (whatever that may mean).

In this particular matter I practiced what I now preach. When I went to Arizona, I found the directors of the Church corporation consisted of the treasurer, elected by convocation, the chancellor, appointed by the bishop, and the bishop, ex officio. That really gave the bishop control as he could easily dismiss one chancellor and find another who would do what the bishop wanted. At my suggestion convocation amended the canon so that, in addition to the chancellor and the bishop, three directors of whom one was the treasurer, were elected by convocation which put control in the hands of the representatives of the people. That is where the control belongs in a democratic Church. I suspect no parish would consent to the rector's being corporation sole. More than once I would have done something had I had control which the other directors of the Church corporation declined to do and in some few cases the discussion was not exactly placid. No doubt their view was wiser than mine; anyhow, it was that of the representatives of the people.

Another reform, which diocesan conventions should make, is as to who should have the decision as to when a bishop should have a coadjutor or a suffragan or which. Here again, as a rule, that now rests with the diocesan. Yet everybody knows that the nearer a bishop comes to the time when he should have assistance the less capable he is of recognizing that fact. One of the best speeches in the House of Bishops during the last General Convention, in favor of requiring the retirement of bishops at 72, was by one who was dead opposed to the idea and whose diocese had done all it could as its canons stand, to persuade him to have a coadjutor. The man's condition was the strongest possible argument for the proposed legislation.

When we begin to slip rapidly toward the sunset, it is natural to grasp at any and every thing which might bolster up the idea that, while this is true of others, it is not of ourselves; and to resent any intimation that we are mistaken in this respect. I remember an incident which happened when I was working in the Senate. A very elderly Senator started to board a street car. The conductor kindly tried to help him up the steps. It made the old Senator furious and he had the man discharged. That is very human and we bishops are very human. Furthermore, like others, we are apt to love power. "Power corrupts and absolute power corrupts absolutely." Was Lord Acton thinking perhaps of men who were "Corporation Sole" or had like power?

I was once in a diocese where the question was up as to whether we should divide, have a coadjutor or a suffragan. I was for division. The bishop was for things as they were, but because I was very close to him, during the convention, I went up to him and said, in effect, that, while, as he knew, I was for division, still, since he was not, if he wanted to postpone the matter it might be done if he would ask for a suffragan or a coadjutor. He said he would not have a suffragan, which pleased me because when a diocese becomes too large for one active man to handle properly, it should be divided. I then proposed a coadjutor. He did not want one. I returned to the floor and moved that we proceed to the consideration of the election of a coadjutor. The bishop ruled the motion out of order because that could only originate with the bishop. Not being much interested in canons I accepted the ruling; but another called the bishop's attention to the fact that the diocesan canon was otherwise, whereupon the bishop reversed his ruling and said that the convention could consider the matter whenever it chose. I suspect that that is very exceptional in our Church but it ought to be the rule and in the light of all that has been said on the subject of late, it should be unnecessary to lengthen this article to prove it.

After all, whose is this Church? I know some clergy like to talk about "My parish," "My vestry" and the like, as do some bishops about "My Diocese," "My Clergy" and the like; but it is all hocum. They have got the facts wrong end to. Clergy belong to the parishes and bishops to the dioceses and every time the general canons are amended it is in the direction of making these facts clear. We should finish the job.

If there were ever a time when old men could really function effectively as bishops surely that time has gone. We live at a tempo never before heard of. New and unchurched people are moving into every jurisdiction and, in general, our world seems to be going to hell. It does not require a pessimist to see that the moral break-down is terrible. Social drinking beyond anything ever known before among otherwise thoughtful people, with the result that our hospitals are said to be over-crowded with youngish people, whose livers could not take it. It is reported that eight billion was spent for hard liquor last year. Divorce rampant; the age of the criminal down to 17 with an increase of 198% in crime. During the war the explanation given for the great increase in venereal disease was that it was not due to professional prostitutes but was largely contracted in homes. This situation calls for the most aggressive, energetic leadership the Church can find.

There is a place for old men. I know from my own experience since I retired that this is so. Indeed, one friend, observing my activities, remarked that I had not been retired but "retreaded." But the responsibility for the extension of the Kingdom of God through the Church is not for old bishops, with no younger ones to help them. And if some of them cannot see it now is the time for diocesan conventions to correct the situation.

Want Taxes to Provide Health Services for Children

Church Women Express Views in Nationwide Poll Which Is Sponsored by United Council

New York: — Protestant Church women believe taxes should be used to provide adequate health services for children, and would like to see Church members take a public stand on issues affecting equality of opportunity for children. These were some of the views tabulated recently in a nation-wide poll conducted by the United Council of Church Women, an interdenominational Protestant body. The poll was made in connection with the organization's May fellowship observance featuring the theme, "every child is my child—in the fabric of fellowship."

Approximately 37,000 women in 43 states participated in the poll. Results showed that more than three-quarters favored use of public funds for health service. An overwhelming majority urged church members to take an active part in championing equal opportunities for children. No significant regional or state difference of opinion was noted on these issues.

The poll also revealed that two-thirds of the church women believe their community school systems provide fair treatment for children, regardless of race, creed, or color. However, the majority of women in southern states did not reflect national opinion on this question. Majority of church women in Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana, Florida, Alabama, and Delaware, believed local schools did discriminate, although the majority of women in Georgia, Tennessee, and Virginia felt otherwise.

Local housing codes were condemned by the majority of women as being unjust to children. There was no regional difference of opinion on this question, since such widely scattered states as Iowa, Nebraska, Tennessee, and Nevada registered majorities believing local housing codes fair.

The questions used on the poll plus accumulated totals based on approximately 37,000 ballots from 43 states, including Hawaii, are shown as follows:

1. Do you believe the school system in your community gives justice to children of every economic, racial and national group? Yes, 37,903; No, 8,931.

2. Do you believe the housing code in your community gives justice to all children? Yes, 13,943; No, 19,165.

3. Do you believe that members of the Christian Church should take a public stand in behalf of equality of opportunity for all children? Yes, 34,558; No, 2,277.

4. Do you believe that the public should be taxed to provide adequate health services for all children? Yes, 29,176; No, 6,671.

Prof. Lichtenberger

New York:—Dean Arthur Lichtenberger of Trinity Cathedral, Newark, a WITNESS editor, becomes professor of pastoral theology at General Seminary on August 1, 1948. The announcement was made at the commencement on May 25 when 20 men were graduated from the institution. It was also announced that the Rev. Pierson Parker, associate professor at the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, will become professor of New Testament at the General, effective July 1, 1949. Associate Professor Donald F. Forrester becomes full professor in the New Testament department on August 1, 1948, and Prof. Burton Scott Easton becomes professor emeritus. The Rev. R. Norman Whybray was elected an instructor in Old Testament and the Rev. Charles P. Berger, Jr., and Mr. Edward Chandler were elected fellows and tutors.

Honorary degrees of Doctor of Sacred Theology were conferred on Bishop Bentley, vice-president of the National Council; Bishop Timothy S. Nakamura of Japan; Bishop Lauriston Scaife of Western New York; Dean Hubert S. Wood of Garden City, and the Rev. William Way, retired rector of Grace Church, Charleston, S. C.

The task which will be undertaken by Dean Lichtenberger will be largely clinical training of men in family case-work, social welfare, education, and institutional care. As described by Dean Lawrence Rose in his report: "There would be great gain to the Church and to society if the ranks of the clergy contained a certain number of experts, with the best training the country offers, in such techniques as those of education, social service, sociology and penology, to name but a few."

The commencement address was by Prof. Frederick A. Pottle of Yale, a trustee of the General, and the baccalaureate sermon was by Bishop Bentley.

Clough Elected

Springfield, Ill.: — The Rev. Charles A. Clough was elected bishop of the diocese of Springfield at the synod held here May 26. He is the rector of St. Mark's, Augusta, Maine. He was elected on the first ballot when he received 57 of the 84 lay votes and 11 of the 18 clergy votes. Suffragan Bishop Alfred L. Banyard of New Jersey received 24 lay and 7 clergy votes. Mr. Clough is a graduate of Yale and the Episcopal Theological Seminary and was an assistant at Trinity, New York, from 1930 to 1942. He is to visit the diocese before deciding whether or not to accept.

Protest Mundt Bill

Philadelphia: — A mass meeting to demand the defeat of the Mundt-Nixon Bill is being held this evening, June 3, at the Arena in this city. It is expected that there will be upward of 6,000 people present. The speakers are Senator Elbert Thomas of Utah, Mr. Arthur Garfield Hays, attorney for the American Civil Liberties Union and the managing editor of THE WITNESS, the Rev. William B. Spofford. The meeting is sponsored by the Committee to Oppose the Mundt-Nixon Bill whose chairman is the Rev. Kenneth R. Forbes, Episcopalian. One of the vice-chairmen is the Rev. W. Hamilton Aulenbach, the rector of Christ and St. Michael's, Germantown.

Province Proposed

New York:—One of the many matters to come before the Lambeth Conference is a proposal to set up a province of the English Church in West Africa. This was discussed at a meeting of bishops of that area in January. Bishop Harris of Liberia attended but this district of the American Church is not involved in the proposed organization.

Continue Evangelism

Hartford: — Bishop Budlong of Connecticut called for continued support of the evangelistic endeavor which was initiated a year ago following his address to the diocesan convention. He declared at the convention meeting here May 18 that the campaign had "really amazing results where the program was undertaken seriously."

Bishop Gray announced the inauguration of an advance work program whereby a fund is being created for the building of new missions and provision made for a diocesan missionary. The Rev. Donald W. Greene, rector at Wallingford, has been appointed to the position. In connection with this program a number of candidates for the ministry will make surveys in certain sections of the state this summer to determine whether and where new missions should be established.

A pension plan for lay employees was voted which will provide a pension for men at the age of 65 and for women at the age of 62, or may be payable at the end of 25 years of service.

Schools Increase

Springfield, Mass.:—Bishop Lawrence reported to the convention of the diocese of Western Massachusetts, meeting here at Christ Church Cathedral, May 19, that there had been a 10% increase in enrollment in the Sunday Schools of the diocese, in contrast to the downward trend of the past few years. He gave credit for the increases to the work of the education department of the diocese and to a new system of supplying material to families with children of pre-school age. He also noted an increase in baptisms during the past year.

A resolution was adopted favoring "federal union now of all nations which favor this action" and for modifying the veto power of the members of the Security Council of the United Nations. Also a resolution was passed, reaffirming one of a year ago, favoring the admitting of displaced persons. Planned Parenthood was approved and priests and laity both were urged to study the program of the organization promoting it. No action was taken on the Mundt Bill and the House Committee on Un-American Activities, since delegates were lacking in sufficient information. The matter therefore was referred to the social service committee of the diocese.

Negro Honored

Cleveland:—For the first time in the history of Schauffler College of Religion and Social Work a Negro girl was elected queen of the May by the students. She is Gloria Connolly of Milford, Conn., an honor student and an outstanding athlete. The college is interracial with a student body that is about 20% Negro.

No Repentance

Geneva, Switzerland: — Bishop Stephen Neill of England reported to the World Council of Churches, following a visit to many countries in Asia, that he was unable to find any real repentance on the part of the Japanese. He did say however that Japan is "completely open to the proclamation of the gospel" and he believes that it had "genuinely turned its back on the past." He also declared that when he placed the ecumenical movement before Church leaders they showed "a real response and desire to be linked to the world-wide Christian fellowship. The smaller the Church, the greater the keenness," he said.

Organ Dedicated

Cedar Falls, Ia.:—There were 275 persons in St. Luke's Church here on May 16, even though the church has a seating capacity of 175. The occasion was the dedication of a new organ as a memorial to two former vestrymen.

Social Workers Meet

Detroit:—A conference of social workers, with ninety present, was held here May 11, sponsored by the department of social relations of the diocese of Michigan. A service in Christ Church, a supper in the parish house, and a conference at which Bishop Emrich spoke on social work and the nature of man made up the program.

On the 13th the department held the second of a series of town meetings in St. Paul's Cathedral. The subject, partially inspired by the sermon preached by Bishop Whittemore of Western Michigan at the time of the installation of Bishop Emrich, was "Released time for religious education." There was a panel on the subject, with Mr. Robert G. Waldron as mediator, and with the following taking part: G. Leslie Field, an attorney who is a member of a local committee for the separation of Church and state; the Rev. G. Merrill Lenox, executive secretary of the local Council of Churches; Miss Florence Sweeney, president of the Detroit Federation of Teachers; Prof. J. J. Sherman of Wayne University. Arrangements for the meeting were made by the Rev. W. B. Spofford Jr., executive secretary of the Episcopal League for Social Action and rector of St. Thomas' Church.

New Church

Dearborn, Mich.: — Construction of a new church has been started for Christ Church here on a five and a half acre site donated by Mrs. Henry Ford and the late Mr. Ford. The site is about a half mile from the present church which has served the parish for 78 years. The entire project, which will include church, fellowship hall and Sunday school rooms, will cost in the neighborhood of $260,000. It will be completed in about a year. The first sod was turned by Mrs. Ford at a brief ceremony conducted by the rector, the Rev. Hedley G. Stacey.

Not a Super-Church

New York: — Archbishop Erling Eidem of Upsala, the Primate of Sweden, told a group of 100 Church officials and delegates to the World Council meeting this summer, that no super-Church will be created at Amsterdam. Nothing will be done, he declared, to deprive Churches of freedom and self-rule. "The primary objective is to serve as an instrument of fellowship through which Christians of the world might grow to love and know one another. It does not aim to hide or ignore existing theological differences or various historical traditions."

Mrs. McNulty Dies

Rye, N. Y.:—Mrs. Henry A. McNulty died here on May 18th. She was the wife of the Rev. Henry A. McNulty and was for many years a missionary in China. Since leaving China the family has lived in Rye where Mr. McNulty is the assistant at Christ Church.

Southwestern Virginia

Bristol, Va.:—The Council of the diocese of Southwestern Virginia held here May 18-19, with Bishop Phillips stressing the great problems that face the world and the nation. He declared that these problems gave the Church its greatest opportunity since they can be solved only with a recognition of "the sacredness and dignity of the individual and the freedom of man."

The Council revived the convocation system and made four divisions of the diocese, convinced that it will help in many ways in promoting the work of the diocese.

Taft on Unity

Springfield, Mass. (RNS):— Charles P. Taft, Episcopalian lawyer of Cincinnati and president of the Federal Council of Churches, predicted closer unity among Protestant denominations, in an address before the annual meeting of the Greater Springfield Council of Churches here. But he termed as "poppycock" the idea that Churches should throw off their theological differences immediately and unite into one super-Church.

"We cannot overlook religious differences so lightly and force the Churches together," he said. "This confusing world needs the stability of a sound, basic religion, as it moves toward the kingdom of the Master.

"I wish I could say that laymen are becoming more active in the churches," he stated, "but in most cases the ministers still fill the church chairman posts, except on the budget and finance committees."

Churches, he charged, have failed in the fields of Christian education and expression. "Few Americans can stand up and clearly say why they believe anything. What do we do about prejudice? We say we are against it, but we haven't studied what to do when we hear cracks about the Jews, Catholics, Negroes, or other groups."

Addressing a YMCA earlier, Taft said the "Y" has done a much more effective job than the church in applying religion to life.

"What is needed greatly is the technic of the YMCA of putting laymen to work, which ministers, by and large, have not learned to do," he said.

Parish Anniversary

Woodside, N. Y.:—St. Paul's Church here observed its 75th anniversary recently with a family corporate communion, with a dinner dance a few days later that was attended by 330 people. The church was founded on its present site in 1874. The present rector is the Rev. Victor H. Loope.

Mission to London

London (RNS):—About 9,000 clergymen and laymen heard the Archbishop of York describe a "mission to London" which will get under way next May. He said that fear and hate were to be found almost everywhere today and that "it is useless to speak for world-wide brotherhood of the Church of God if in our own parish there are no signs of brotherhood." The mission will be held in 60 centers in London, will last two weeks and will be in charge of Bishop Wand of London.

Mixed Marriages

Providence, R. I.:—The "gravity of the problems which attend upon mixed marriages" was stressed in a resolution adopted at the convention of the diocese of Rhode Island. It pointed to "the fact of the invalidity of the teachings of the Roman Catholic Church with respect to such marriages, the significance of the challenge which such teachings constitute to the Church, and the position of the Church as herein expressed."

A number of speakers opposed the resolution who objected to the singling out of one Church for criticism. The Rev. Paul Thompson of St. Stephen's, Providence, said the same "problems" were raised in marriages between Episcopalians and Lutherans, Seven-Day Adventists, and other Protestant Churches. The resolution however passed after being somewhat modified.

left on May 21 for England to attend the Lambeth Conference which opens the last part of July. They stated that the opportunities in Japan are great and stressed the need for missionaries from the United States.

Study Communism

Boston: — Missionaries of the Methodist Church will be educated in Communism and then sent abroad to counteract it, according to a plan adopted at the general conference meeting here. The plan was advocated by the Rev. Ralph Diffendorfer, head of the Church's division of foreign missions. He told the delegates that his department planned to send 200 married couples into every area now threatened by Communist infiltration, and that they would be well versed in Communist ideology and propaganda methods.

"I want them to know enough about Communism so they can talk about it," he declared. "I'm not afraid in the least how much they know about it because the more they know the more they can do about it."

The work is expected to cost $4,500,000 and voluntary contributions will be sought.

Agencies Studied

Boston (RNS):—All of the agencies of the Methodist Church are to be studied as to their efficiency, it was voted at the general conference meeting here. The report setting up the commission calls for a budget of $60,000 a year with a maximum expenditure of $240,000 by the time the next conference is held in 1952. Professional efficiency experts will be employed to make the study.

The conference also raised the budget of the public information commission from $26,500 to $75,000 a year.

Efforts to set up an official organization for social action, aimed at supplanting the unofficial Methodist Federation for Social Action, failed to materialize.

THE REV. DWIGHT A. PARCE
Clergyman of Boston, Mass.

It seems to me that this pacifist propaganda is seriously misleading. Our Lord was speaking to individuals whom he was training in the sacrificial life; to whom he would impart the grace requisite for martyrdom. This is a grace imparted to individuals one by one. It cannot be imparted to a nation, the majority of whose citizens are non-believers, neither desiring nor understanding the sacrificial life.

I hope never to be without THE WITNESS. It has been my parents' annual Christmas present for the past five years. It has followed me to Japan and back. When I finish reading my copy I send it to a missionary. When I return to Japan as a missionary it is my hope that I will find THE WITNESS arriving regularly so that I may keep abreast of the Church news. I thank God for THE WITNESS.

THE WITNESS should not be surprised at the unfair statement of Justice Roberts about universal military training. A magazine given out at the last General Convention stated: "From the outset he proved a painful disappointment to the pink fringe. He cast his balance against the Railroad Retirement act and later it was his vote that killed the AAA."

In the latter decision he held that Congress could not help agriculture, which Justice Stone said, "Hardly runs to the dignity of an argument." The lawyer against the triple A was George Wharton Pepper who had gotten Hoover to appoint Roberts to the Supreme Court. Justice Roberts opposed the railroad pension act as "invading the rights of property, taking the property of one and giving it to another, and destroying the loyalty of employees."

In 1923 he told the trust division of the American Bankers Association: "Are we to go into a state of socialism, or are you and men like you, prepared to get out and take off your coats and root for good old fashioned Anglo-Saxon individualism?"

Clergymen Tell of Experiences At Senate Hearing

They State That No Church Representatives Are Allowed to Oppose the Mundt-Nixon Bill

Washington:—Three clergymen of the Episcopal Church got their lesson in American democracy, 1948 style, at hearings on the Mundt-Nixon Bill held last week by the judiciary committee of the Senate. The Rev. Andrew Van Dyke of the diocese of Newark presented himself as the authorized spokesman for over 50 Princeton professors and a large group of ministers, including Bishop Ludlow, Dean Lichtenberger and Canon Robert Smith. The Rev. Robert Hampshire was here to testify against the Bill on behalf of the department of social relations of the diocese of Long Island. The Rev. W. B. Spofford Jr. was here as the executive secretary of the Episcopal League for Social Action. All had previously sent telegrams to Senator Alexander Wiley, chairman of the committee, requesting to be heard.

On May 27 the proponents of the Bill has testified in the commodious Senate caucus room. But the following day, when the opponents of the bill were to be heard, the hearing was transferred to a tiny room that could accommodate about twelve of the general public. So the three parsons found themselves a part of a huge crowd of over 1,000 citizens who had come here to register their opposition to the Bill.

"We were told in the office of Senator Smith of New Jersey," reported Van Dyke, "that so many had telegraphed requesting to be heard in opposition, that it was necessary for the committee to be 'selective' in its choice of witnesses. It certainly was. They were selected so that it was made to appear that only avowed communists and communist sympathizers opposed the bill. In the spotlight was William Foster, chairman of the Communist Party, who was on the stand for over two hours. One of the clerks told me that he was 'an interesting witness.' A number of us churchmen, for instance, had previously wired Senator Wiley and others of the committee, requesting them to call well known jurists to appraise the Bill. We even suggested the name of Dean Lloyd Garrison, formerly head of the law school of the University of Wisconsin, since we had previously been assured that Dean Garrison could come to Washington to testify if invited. But the committee apparently did not want witnesses of his type and prominence.

"As soon as I arrived here," Van Dyke continued, "I went to the capitol and found myself a part of a crowd of over 1000 who were being kept from the hearing room by the capitol police. They cleared the corridor the moment any citizen paused in his walk along it. Finally two of us representing the New Jersey group got permission to enter the ante-room of the judiciary committee. We tried to get a sub-clerk to have the clerk hand to Senator Wiley the statement we had prepared. It contained a letter of protest signed by the Princeton professors; another signed by a large number of ministers; a letter from Bishop Ludlow; a protest against the Bill by President MacKay of Princeton Theological Seminary, and a copy of a telegram of protest from Dean Lichtenberger. But the police kept telling us to clear out, while we kept saying that we were waiting for a message. Finally we were 'ushered out' where we again joined the throng of protestors within a roped area.

"It was a quiet crowd. There were no raised voices except when the constabulary warned against loitering, or demanded that the ranks be closed, or insisted that a group of weary women who had sat on the floor, get up and start moving. The door of the hearing room was closed, but a couple of times a person came out. Then, almost in whispers, we would learn something of what went on. The full committee was supposed to be present at the hearing, but of the 13 members the largest number reported to be there was 3, and much of the time Senator Wiley was the sole representative. At 1:30 a rumor spread that the proceedings were closed for the day and the large throng began to disperse. Soon I found myself with a small group at the door of the hearing room. When it opened once it was plain to see and hear that adjournment had not taken place, and there were a few empty chairs. In my most pleasant and reverential voice I asked the guard if there was any chance to get in. He replied 'no seats.' I tried again a bit later: again 'no seats.' Which caused the man beside me to remark, 'My God, even a clerical collar won't work.' That's the story, as far as I was concerned —except that the story went around that Senator Wiley had turned over to Robert Stripling, investigator for the Committee on Un-American Activities, over 2,000 telegrams from people opposing the Mundt Bill. Apparently they are to be checked for their 'subversive activities'."

The other two ministers, Spofford and Hampshire, tell a similar story. "The witnesses against the Bill were obviously carefully picked to create the impression that opposition to it is entirely 'red'," Spofford reported. "The three of us saw the secretaries of various Senators—never getting to them personally—to complain that no representatives of the churches were being allowed to testify against the Bill. But it was clear that they were not going to allow any churchman to speak against it, even though they had allowed a Roman Catholic priest to testify for it the previous day. They are out to make the opposition a 'red maneuver'—that's where we are in this country apparently. Anyhow my experience as an American citizen at this hearing was expressed by a student of Columbia law school who said to me: 'I learned more about political science today that I have in any college or law school yet.'

The Witness is published every other week from June 15 to September 15. One of the headaches that all publishers have is making address changes for summer vacations, particularly these days of shortages of both materials and workers. We ask therefore that those who are to be away but a short time arrange to have their copies forwarded. If however you are to be away for an extended time send the change to The Witness, 135 Liberty St., New York 6, N. Y., giving both your old and your new address, and kindly indicate whether it is a permanent change or only for a vacation period. Many thanks for the cooperation.

"Anyhow, in just the one day we were there, the judiciary committee received over 2,000 telegrams from representatives of organizations who wanted to testify against the Bill. Maybe if a few more thousands pour in to them they will be somewhat impressed."

Lexington, Ky.:—Bishop William R. Moody of Lexington preached a mission at St. Andrew's Church here at which Mr. Richard O. Mitchell was converted. He was baptized during the mission by the rector of the parish, the Rev. William H. Brown Jr. A year later Mr. Brown presented the convert to his bishop for confirmation.

URBAN WORKERS FELLOWSHIP

Greenwich, Conn.: — The Rev. Joseph G. Moore Jr., on the staff of Seabury-Western Seminary, and the Rev. Ross Sanderson of the intercouncil committee on field research, were the headliners when 34 clergy from 17 dioceses met at Seabury House, May 25-27, to consider the Church and urban America. Discussion pointed up the fact that hundreds of thousands of people in urban industrial communities are unchurched and present a great missionary opportunity. Some of these areas include all the moral, social and racial problems in exaggerated form. Those attending also recognized the fact that the new housing areas had developed with total lack of religious facilities.

In specific terms the conference urged that surveys be made in every metropolitan area to determine the needs of the community; that plans be made to meet these needs; that clergy be trained for this work; that sociologists, social workers, nurses and recreational leaders make their skills available for this work.

At the final session a committee consisting of the Rev. Messrs. Howard P. Kellett of Boston; Joseph G. Moore; Leland B. Henry of New York; W. B. Spofford Jr., secretary of the Episcopal League for Social Action, and H. A. Berngen of New York led in discussions which eventuated in the organization of the Episcopal Urban Workers Fellowship. Plans for a two-week conference to be held in the summer of 1949 at Seabury-Western Seminary are under way.

COMMENCEMENT AT ST. AUGUSTINE'S

Raleigh, N. C.:—There were 46 graduates, representing 15 states, who received their degrees at the commencement at St. Augustine's College on May 26. Clyde A. Erwin, superintendent of public instruction in the state of North Carolina, told the graduates and a capacity audience that education, a square deal for minority groups, the development of a strong world government, and religion were the ways toward a better world.

Degrees and prizes were conferred by President Harold L. Trigg; Bishop Penick delivered a short address in introducing Mr. Erwin; the Rev. Stephen B. Mackey of the class of 1927, who is archdeacon of South Carolina and rector of Calvary Church, Charleston, was the preacher at the baccalaureate service.

NEW HEADQUARTERS FOR OLYMPIA

Seattle, Wash.:—The decision to buy a historic mansion for diocesan and cathedral headquarters was the most significant step taken at the convention of the diocese of Olympia, meeting at St. Mark's Cathedral, May 23-24. The site is on a bluff overlooking Lake Union with a view also of Puget Sound and the snowcapped Olympic Mountains. The grounds adjoin those of the cathedral and round out the site of the diocesan center. Bishop Bayne, in announcing a drive for funds for the purchase, said that he hoped the house would not be paid for by a few large gifts but that it would be "bought and owned by every loyal man, woman and child in the diocese."

Bishop Coadjutor Bowen of Colorado whispers his amusing secret into the ear of Bishop Brinker of Nebraska. The latter, speaking recently on the observation next year of the 400th anniversary of the Prayer Book, said that he hoped "it will take us all back to its doctrines, discipline and worship." He said further that we need to be loyal to the Prayer Book "rather than try to copy or imitate any foreign usage which at best will always be artificial and unreal to Anglicans"

BIG ENROLLMENT INDICATED

Boston:—The Rev. A. Vincent Bennett, director of the Wellesley Conference, announced last week that registrations are piling in, with the committee making provision for additional accommodations at the college to take care of the crowd. He also states that over 50% of those who have so far registered have never before attended a Wellesley Conference. It opens June 20th.

Quakers Lead the Way

THE head of the American Friends Service Committee, Clarence Pickett, announced recently that the money won by the Nobel Peace Prize in 1947 is to be used to improve American-Soviet relations. He said further that his committee "in consultation with American and Russian officials was searching earnestly for the most effective contribution" it could make. Whether the full page advertisement that appeared in a number of newspapers was paid for out of the Nobel Prize money we do not know. In any case we commend it to our readers, at the same time congratulating this great organization for such a wise and noble declaration.

The advertisement, which is headed "Not by Might, nor by Power, but by My Spirit" presents the following statement: "The world is aghast at the dread prospect of the United States and Russia competing for military supremacy. This need not be; this must not be. War, or militarism to forestall war, means ultimate ruin for all. The American Friends Service Committee believes peaceful relations are possible between the United States and Russia. We do not minimize the issues that now exist between the two countries, but neither do we believe that war would settle these issues. It would only intensify them. We call for a faith that other means can be found which could lift us to a new level of life in which war is outmoded.

"The world is ready to be quickened by a new spirit. It begs to be assured by reconciling deeds rather than words that under God there is one humanity. The hearts of men can still be kindled by a new vision of man's common and unfinished task—the building, under law, of a true parliament of nations. The people of the world want peace. Freedom from fear and from violence, freedom from threat and counter-threat, freedom to test the validity of ideas in daily life rather than on the battlefield, are what all nations want. Quaker workers in Europe and Asia tell us with one voice that people everywhere want to draw on America's faith in the future—not on our arsenal of weapons. This yearning of all people for a new approach to international affairs is the solid rock upon which the peace of the world can yet be built. If America has tried and failed to gain peace, now is the time to try again. Let us be infused with new faith. From the ashes of our frustration and despair, let us rise with new determination to solve our differences with Russia in peaceful ways and in terms that will build a truly united world.

"Here are three steps which we believe are a beginning in this new direction: One: Begin Peace Talks Now. Let a group of leading American citizens meet this spring to formulate proposals for a general settlement of outstanding issues between the United States and the Soviet Union. Let these proposals be widely debated and then laid before the American and Russian heads of government, urging that they meet again in new faith and with a fresh spirit.

"Two Strengthen the United Nations. Let the United States demonstrate now, in action, its loyalty to the United Nations and its determination to strengthen it as an instrument of world law and order. We believe Russia would respond to such a move. Let the United States join at once the World Health Organization and put adequate financial resources behind the International Refugee Organization. With a new burst of faith let us begin to put substantial funds into the instruments of peace instead of into vast military expenditures in preparation for war.

"Three: Promote Personal Contacts. Let American private organizations with experience in international affairs unite in undertaking a large-scale program to promote intercultural understanding between the United States and Russia. Let us make a new effort to arrange the exchange of students, writers, religious leaders, and industrial workers. Americans and Russians need to see themselves as they are seen by each other."

The advertisement requests readers to indicate whether or not they agree. We hope that WITNESS readers, by postal or otherwise, will send their

"QUOTES"

THERE is a false emphasis in the household of faith in which the fellowship of the spirit is sanctified to other ideals and the one great objective of the master is set aside for other considerations. The Church as it exists, so often consists of little coteries of the best families, or such strata of the earth's social soil as contain pay dirt. Too often the only point of contact is that of the church treasurer, an annual visit of the pastor, and an urgent invitation to attend a sale at the parish house. As an institution in which all are members one of another, such contacts are neither refreshing nor inspiring.

vote to us at 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y. A mere "I agree with the Quaker statement" or "I disagree" will be sufficient, with your signature. We will forward the replies to Mr. Pickett and thus, we hope, make a small contribution to peace.

Dramatic Arts and Religion

By
WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD, JR.

NOTES by the way: The film presentation of Eugene O'Neill's Mourning Becomes Electra is truly a picture for our times. Dealing with murder, insanity, suicide and implied incest, it explodes human sin all over the screen and pictures chaos in definite terms. As acted by Rosalind Russell, Michael Redgrave, Katina Patixnou and Raymond Massey, it is given worthy treatment. Unfortunately, I saw it one rainy afternoon, immediately after our government reversed its position on Palestine partition, and I was in no mood for a Greek tragedy minus any hint of redemption.

In attempting to translate a stage play literally to the screen, Mourning Becomes Electra uses the static sets of the legitimate theater. The experiment was not as successful as Laurence Olivier's Henry Vth.

A fine actor, Ronald Colman, has finally been honored with the Academy Award for his role in A Double Life. This too is a tragedy dealing with a sensitive actor who so deeply lives the character that he portrays on the stage that he confuses it with his own personal life. While playing Othello, he becomes victimized by jealousy and "slays with a kiss." Featuring Signe Hasso, Edmund O'Brien and Ray Collins, the picture is particularly notable for its enactment of scenes from Othello. These portions of the picture were directed by Walter Hampden who can still be considered one of Shakespeare's better friends.

I find that I have favored such pictures as Action in the North Atlantic, Body and Soul, Woman of the Year, Sahara, Our Vines Have Tender Grapes, Brotherhood of Man, The House I Live In, Blockade and Pride of the Marines. I liked them because they seemed to portray man as a dignified animal. Now I learn, to my horror, that they were the products of the Unfriendly Ten who disagreed with J. Parnell Thomas and John Rankin. According to the new creed for loyalty, expressed by the term "guilt by association," I believe I am out on a limb. Mea culpa! (To know just how absurd this Un-American Committee can get, read Hollywood on Trial by Gordon Kahn, who himself is scheduled to be dragged into Mr. Thomas' klieglighted inquisition chamber.)

We Were Thinking

WE WERE thinking about ordinations, this being the season for it. Many of our dioceses have acquired the habit or custom, call it what you may, of ordaining candidates to the diaconate en masse. We know of two who, in the next few weeks, will ordain nine men in two large services, and there are probably other cases of these "mass ordinations" that we are not acquainted with. We feel that a bit of re-thinking is in order.

We can think of two reasons why services such as these should be held. First, we are ordaining so many men to the ministry that to split the ordinations up into single services would greatly hamper the efficiency of the diocese. This obviously does not square with the facts of the case. Secondly, such ordinations would be a striking show of strength, that would be lost in single services. If they are meant to impress the concerned pagan (or even Christian) with the fact that the ranks of the Church are ever being refilled, then a shock is in store for him once he gets a look at the facts and figures on the status of the clergy today. Quite obviously, mass ordinations do not serve either of these purposes, although there might be other reasons (such as Lambeth) which would make single ordinations impractical, but let's look at the other side.

The man in seminary spends three intensive years (nowadays, summers included) in preparation for the Christian ministry. In this task, he is aided and strengthened by the prayers and general concern of his home parish which has, with great interest, followed the course of his career. To deny the parish the privilege of witnessing to this final stage is, we feel, a great injustice. Now this is a personal, perhaps selfish, line of reasoning, so let's look at another.

The greatest concern of the Church today is recruitment for the ministry. We have, in the seminaries of the Church, spent a good bit of our time sending deputations into our colleges and universities for this purpose. The area where the least work has been done is in the local parish; it is in the local parish that the vocation of the Christian ministry demands its greatest witness, and this can best be accomplished through ordination into that ministry. Thus, the single ordination serves a much needed teaching function that is lost through mass ordinations.

We ask for a rethinking of this problem on the part of those dioceses now disposed to joint ordinations. We hope that it is only insurmountable obstacles that keep the witness of the ordination service from reaching down to the parish level.

A Missionary Looks at His World

THE end of the war gave place to a popular demand for the relaxation of war time controls, and a return to the normalcy which was an American ideal. Clearly middle class support, which had made the Roosevelt regime so impregnable, shifted to the right as Republican majorities gained control of Congress. At the same time Southern Democratic control of the old Roosevelt party cut off progressive Democratic leadership, so that the two parties were very close in aims and policies. Bi-partisan cooperation was more easily achieved than at any time in the past, as both parties sought to undue the damage of the New Deal. The O.P.A. was repealed (in spite of liberal protests that this would, as it did, encourage inflation); the Taft-Hartley labor law was passed to cripple the effectiveness of labor strikes; the fair employment act was defeated, and pressure was brought to reduce tax obligations—particularly those of the higher income groups. The easy identification of laissez-faire, ruggedly-individualistic capitalism with American democracy, most particularly by the middle class in America under careful coaching by such pressure groups as the National Association of Manufacturers, gave conservatives the first big chance on the ballot they had had since F.D.R.

The situation in Europe was very different. Europeans bristled with the conviction that it was not only fascism that was politically and economically insufferable, but also unchecked capitalism. For one thing, Europe had never been as rich in resources as America, and for another the great majority of her capital goods had been destroyed in the war. It might very well be true that America could tolerate the vast inequalities in wealth made possible by an uncontrolled capitalism and still maintain the lowest class of workers safely above the starvation level, but Europe could afford no such luxury. Most European countries realized clearly there could be no return to the status quo in terms of the usual American dream, but that the future necessarily involved checks on capitalism which would tend to narrow the gap between the largest and the smallest incomes in the country. England is perhaps the outstanding example of those who sought a new future as she voted out the conservatives who had so ably directed the country in the war, and gave control to an outspokenly liberal labor government. The great hope was for a middle path between the U. S. and Russia, with friendship for both countries.

But in spite of sympathies with the Marxist critique of capitalism, most European countries, at least those in the West, were thwarted in their efforts to achieve a modus vivendi with Russian communism. For subsequent history has served to illustrate more vividly the significance of the Lenin-Trotsky split. When Russia championed Lenin, she chose the Russian citizen as over against the international proletariat. Russian nationalism clearly controls world Communism in the present world situation. But still countries are impressed with the impotence of capitalism at the place where Marxist theory confidently proclaims an answer, and depressed by the reactionary nature of American leadership.

As the tension of this cold-war rivalry has continued, U. S. leaders have increased their agitation for a positive foreign policy. The unchecked growth of Russian nationalism as it gobbled up Eastern Europe and then disgracefully stamped out democracy in Czechoslovakia, has been given prominence as the threat and challenge it really is. But still Western Europe is caught between a Scylla and Charybda—unless the U. S. really provides sizeable financial aid. Provided the U. S. is willing to subsidize it, Europe will be able to give some form of capitalism another chance—and that is the significance of the Marshall plan. The U. S. public is being carefully coached that considerable economic aid is a necessity to keep Western Europe from going Communist.

It is paradoxical, and generally not evident in the U. S. press, but it is the U. S. domestic policy that drives people to Communism. It is people who see clearly the unworkability of laissez-faire, ruggedly-individualistic capitalist-democracy that are finally forced to Communism in a desperate attempt to escape reaction. It is Russian foreign policy that drives people to America. People see the impossibility of protecting themselves against Communist betrayal to Russian nationalism apart from U. S. support. It is surely a sad commentary on our present world when people are forced to make political choices not on the basis of what they believe in, but on the basis of the opposite of what they hate or fear the most. There is also an element of irony in the type of pleas for an "aggressive" foreign policy for which Henry Luce is rightly notorious: pleas for a strong foreign policy to stop Russia, are at least a partial cover for the type of reactionary domestic policies that nullify that foreign policy by driving people to Communism.

FROM an American viewpoint, in this jockeying for position in American-Russian rivalry, there is only one absolutely crucial point of reference, and that is America itself. A healthy, virile, American democracy is the only fool-proof defense against Communism. If our former type of laissez-faire capitalism threatens our democracy, then we shall be forced to consider an overt and intelligent choice between them. Thus the spotlight should be on American domestic policies. Military bases supported by reactionary anti-Communist regimes around the world are of questionable value even from a military point of view; and politically they only ensure the ultimate success of a Communism that comes preaching a sorely needed social justice. Nothing is more indispensible than a strong, progressive, successfully-democratic America.

Unfortunately, however, domestically America has just been growing, like Topsy, without very much thought or control. And that growth has immeasurably strengthened Marxist prestige by conforming almost to a "t" to the predictions made on the basis of Marxist dogma. According to orthodox Communism, America must grow increasingly conservative, with greater class inequalities, until finally the suffering is so unbearable that the masses will rise and join the Communist revolt. No one can question that America, since the war, has grown increasingly conservative (a two-party system, both conservative). Also an unchecked capitalism has already created, and will continue to create, greater class inequalities, and greater injustices arising from these inequalities. There are also indications that domestically America is moving farther from democracy and closer to a fascism in an effort to better protect American capitalism—certainly she has without apology or embarrassment accepted foreign fascist regimes as partners in an anti-Soviet bloc.

When we speak of fascism we mean a state absolutism which surrenders normal democratic processes in order more successfully to defend a crumbling status quo against Communism. Germany became Nazi because the middle class was so afraid of Communism that it delegated extra-democratic powers to a radical minority party that did stop Communism—but saddled the country with an insufferable tyranny that led to a crushing defeat. There is something pathetically naive about the way most Americans visualize the rise of a native fascism. They think that all the traditional values of American democracy such as free speech, right to trial, etc. will be blatantly denounced by a group of emotional fanatics. This may be a Hollywood picture of a fascist regime, but it hardly squares with the facts. Freedom of speech will not be denounced openly and rescinded —rather, intelligent, cultured demogogues will movingly ask for its surrender (probably something like the type of thing we see in the Un-American activity investigating committee in Congress), pointing out that the safety, or even the existence of the nation, in the face of the present Communist threat, demands it. One can expect labor checks to be supported by a middle-class economically straightened by inflation, resenting the unreasonable wage-demands of labor, and limiting the right to strike in order to protect the national welfare. Absolutism will seek power in a war-like emergency, and then, when it is safely entrenched, it can disregard its initial emergency appeal. An American fascism will not come waving a black swastika, it will be dressed in a business suit, and it will present a forceful and coherent appeal.

WHERE has Christianity stood in this developing tragedy? Ideally one would hope that there would be enough leaders with the understanding and religious insight of Amos and Jermiah, and the courageous faith to speak the unpalatable truth. It is an old familiar question of repentance. We have tried to protect our sins by our virtues. We have tried to disguise the mechanical selfishness of an uncontrolled capitalism by completely identifying it with American democracy. When questions of color are involved, we blithely sacrifice democracy in the name of a social status quo. We have excused and hidden our gross infidelity by concentrating attention on the obvious sins of Russian nationalism. Like the Pharisee we have continually praised our own generosity and our powerful position. But it is not the sins of Russia which threaten the existence of America, so much as the sins of America. God is just, and a faithless nation dies. Were it not for Russia, there would be another antagonist. Evidently the U. S., unlike the ancient Jewish kingdoms of Palestine, has not a deep enough and sincere enough faith in God to produce such prophets; at any rate they are conspicuous by their absence.

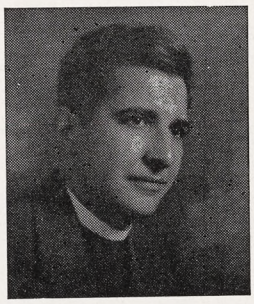
Worse than this, the Church has generally allied itself with those who hide their own sins behind the anti-Russian smoke-screen. Of course Marxist materialism is Godless, and the nation who follows it shall die. Of course Russian nationalism is ruthlessly selfish, and the nation who pursues such shall meet its end. It takes no insight to see this, no wisdom nor faith to denounce it. The more essential question is, must two faithless nations destroy each other in their fleeing from God? The Church has generally joined in the great pharisaical pastime of denouncing others' sins, and by that act feeling less suspect for their own. Emotional slogans and blanket statements have created a war-like atmosphere in which confession, repentance, and faithful new beginnings seem foolishly irrelevant. Pride goeth before a fall; and how American Christianity has fed and nourished American pride. The heated denunciations of Communism have often served to further identify capitalism-democracy-Christianity, and to insure that all shall fall together in the same debacle.

The House of Bishops' denunciation of irresponsible attacks on Communism, and the increasingly difficult and courageous stand of THE WITNESS seem like a light shining in the darkness. For the majority of American Christians, Protestant as well as Roman, seem to follow the call of political and religious demagogues to a holy crusade against the Godless Soviet. The last crusade of a "faithful" Christendom was held in the sixteenth century. It was the most unsuccessful missionary venture ever conceived. It so alienated the unfortunate infidels that to this day they are more impervious to the preaching of the gospel than any other people in the world. It failed in its primary purpose of placing the Holy Lands under European control. It caused only suffering and death, and contributed to the popular disrespect of the Church to the point that the schisms of the Reformation were made more easily possible.

Once again there is a call to crusade against an infidel enemy. This time both Roman Catholicism and Protestantism are so much a part of the American scene, and so interested in their own position, that they both respond with enthusiasm.

Perhaps Russian nationalism shall in God's providence be destroyed by American military might. But the same judgment that waits for them, waits also for us. For God is a just God. He has promised, and verily it is so: "the unGodly is trapped in the work of his own hands."



A Word With You

By

HUGH D. McCANDLESS
Rector of the Epiphany, New York

ONLY EDITORS NEED HAVE A FLAIR FOR WRITING

SAMUEL JOHNSON felt that there were, should continue to be, separate words in English to express the rather different ideas 1) of smelling something, and 2) of being smelly or being smelt.

A fastidious young woman, seated beside the great Doctor at dinner, said petulantly, "Dr. Johnson, you smell!" "Madam," rumbled the mephistic lexicographer, "you smell, I stink."

Her rule won out, however. Now the verb to smell is both "active and passive!" ("My goat has no nose." "Amazing! How does he smell?" "Terrible.") No one has bothered to say which sense is active and which is passive. When I smell a rose or a roast, I feel as if I am active in the matter. When I am practically "smelled out" of my office by a visiting stranger (usually a member of what we refer to as "another Communion") who wants to borrow two dollars so that he can give up drink forever, I feel furiously passive, since I am not equipped with noselids.

Most well bred young people think stink is a word only to be written on back fences, so the matter is closed. But I wonder if it is not a menace to international friendship when we take a good precise French word like flair and make it work overtime as we now do to smell?

Flair means to have a good nose for things. If you have a flair for preaching it means you know where to go to hear a good preacher. It does not mean you are a good preacher. Except for breathing, the nose's chief use is as an organ of discovery. You can have a flair for odd people, but you cannot have a flair for making them like each other. That is a gift, a knack, an art.

We have done the same with scent. It derives from senses, and it means to be aware of what is not seen. But we have always used the word, as though it derived from essence, as a refined term for odor. Odor has lost its fragrance (except in Hymn 46, verse 2, 1940 Hymnal), "Banish kitchen odors" means cabbage, not coffee.

Soon, if you remark that a dog has a poor scent, people will suggest that you bathe him.

The Church's Responsibility In World Affairs

Synod of the Pacific Adopts a Statement That Is Very Timely for All Christians

Santa Barbara, Cal.:—The synod of the province of the Pacific, meeting here, unanimously adopted a statement on the responsibility of the Church and of Christians generally in the present world situation. The statement follows:

"Twice in a generation the moral and spiritual influence of the Christian Church has been mobilized in behalf of war with the promise that out of war would come a just and durable peace. It was fondly hoped that victory would make the world safe for democracy and that the peace settlement would be based upon open covenants openly arrived at. The League of Nations and a World Court were set up. More recently the Four Freedoms were proclaimed and the United Nations Organization established.

"Three years after the end of hostilities none of these promises has been realized. The League of Nations died in its impotence, the Four Freedoms are forgotten and the U.N. is bypassed whenever it suits national convenience.

For too long we have trusted the promises of our statesmen instead of the promises of our Lord. For too long we have relied upon the resources and ingenuity of human beings instead of the omnipotence of a sovereign God. For too long we have depended upon frail, unregenerate man, instead of the God of righteousness.

"The sad result has been our present discouragement, disillusionment, and cynicism. The sad result has been the break-up of the American home, the paralysis of the industrial world, and an international scene characterized by reckless name calling and preparation for an atomic war. The sad result has been that we have taken counsel of our fears and phobias. Put not your trust in the atomic bomb nor in any device of man 'for there is no help in them.'

"Man alone can do nothing when his concern is with his own security and his own well being. Only as we have concern for the economic and social well being of other nations can we obtain the kingdom for which we pray. We are promised peace and security only as we seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness.

"Man by himself is helpless and hopeless; man in the hand of God becomes an instrument through whom God realizes his purpose. The last word, therefore, is not with man, his atomic bombs and supersonic planes but with his Creator working through responsive hearts.

Therefore, with penitence for our past failures and with confidence in the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ,—we call upon our fellow Christians to put themselves humbly and with confident hope into the hands of God to be used according to his will.

Entry in recent flower arrangement show of the St. James' Cathedral Club, Fresno, Cal., is given last-minute touch by Mrs. James M. Malloch and Mrs. Elmer Oehlschlager

"Man left to his own devices has shattered the body of Christ; man as an instrument in the hands of God can reunite the Church.

"Man left to his own devices has broken up the American home; man as an instrument in the hands of God can build a Christian home upon enduring foundations.

Man left to his own devices can release an atomic bomb and chain reactions which will blast us and God's creation into the cosmic rays; man as an instrument in the hands of God can make atomic energy serve the purposes of God's kingdom.

"Man left to his own devices can lose himself in darkness, doubt and despair; man committing himself to God, can rise to his full status as a child of God and an inheritor of the kingdom of heaven.

"'God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world but that the world through him might be saved.' Christ's command is,—'As my Father hath sent me even so send I you.' Our function is to bring to all mankind this salvation of security by proclaiming to our generation the Gospel. Its simple precepts need reiteration and acceptance. 'Blessed are the peace makers.' 'Blessed are the merciful.' 'If your enemy hunger, feed him.' 'Be not overcome of evil but overcome evil with good'."

To Visit England

Madison, Wis.:—The Rev. Francis J. Bloodgood is to fly to England on June 22nd to take part in discussions with the heads of the Orthodox Churches, the Eastern National Churches and the Scandinavian Churches, June 26 to July 6. He is to take part at the invitation of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

REINHOLD NIEBUHR: PROPHET FROM AMERICA

By D. R. Davies

Reinhold Niebuhr, the greatest theologian in America today, is called by Mr. Davies "the leading theorist in the contemporary revolution in Christian thought." In this clear and stimulating interpretation of Niebuhr's philosophy and theology, Davies presents the man in his paradoxical position as a conservative theologian and a left-wing politician. Niebuhr, he states, unites the exact fact-finding mind of the social scientist with the passionate spirit and religious insight of the prophet; his theology comes straight from the furnace of social conflict and tragedy.

The author writes with acute understanding and knowledge of Niebuhr, presenting his subject in a clear journalistic style.

To Attend Lambeth

New York:—Bishop and Mrs. Sherrill sail from here tomorrow, June 11, to attend the Lambeth Conference and the assembly of the World Council of Churches in Amsterdam. They are to leave Europe on September 4th. Sailing on the same boat with Bishop Sherrill are Bishop and Mrs. Hobson of Southern Ohio; Bishop and Mrs. Lawrence of Western Massachusetts and Bishop and Mrs. Malcolm Peabody of Central New York.

Bishop Tucker Honored

Cleveland:—The tenth anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Beverley D. Tucker was observed here on May 24 with a service followed by a luncheon. He was handed a check for $4,500 by Mr. W. G. Mather, treasurer of the diocese, on behalf of the clergy and laity, the gift to make it possible for Bishop and Mrs. Tucker to go to England this summer where the Bishop will attend the Lambeth Conference.

Bishop Improves

Ayden, N. C.:—There is room for improvement even in bishops according to a headline in the Mission Herald, organ of the diocese of East Carolina. It states: "Bishop Wright's Address Shows Much Improvement." A reading of the dispatch under the heading reveals however that it was about new churches, new parish houses etc. rather than about the Bishop's ability as a speaker.

Indian Priest Dies

Rosebud, S. D.:—The Rev. J. H. Driving Hawk, Indian priest, died at Yankton, S. D. on May 22. He served at Okreek until 1945 and the last two years on the Yankton Reservation.

World Council Assailed

Bucharest (RNS):—Following the election of Patriarch Justinian as the head of the Romanian Orthodox Church, the minister of cults of the government declared that both the Roman Church and the ecumenical movement (World Council of Churches) are "inspired by imperialism." He stated that "we have only respect and consideration for other faiths. It is a question of making these institutions fighting arms against people seeking liberty and peace."

Church Consecrated

Tulsa, Okla.:—Trinity Church here was consecrated on Trinity Sunday by Bishop Casady and in the evening St. Luke's Chapel was consecrated. The services marked a high point in the rectorship of the Rev. E. H. Eckel who has served the parish for over eighteen years, for it has been during this time that the debt of the parish has been paid, the chapel organized with a chapel and a hall erected, and the membership of the parish doubled.

Marriage Instruction

New York:—The committee on marriage instruction of the National Council is in the process of preparing literature on the subject and has requested bibliographies and other material on the subject. The secretary is the Rev. Arnold Purdie at national headquarters.

Laymen Meet

Martinsville, Va.:—Prof. Stanley R. Hopper of Drew Seminary and the Rev. Paul Scherer of Union Seminary were the lecturers at a conference on evangelism held here at Christ Church, May 3-9. It was sponsored by the laymen's league of Christ Church, with men of the other churches invited to attend.

Lonesome People

Daytona Beach, Fla.:—Bishop Louttit, coadjutor of South Florida, told the assembly of the diocesan Daughters of the King, meeting here at St. Mary's Church, that "some of the most lonesome people in the world are in Florida." He stated that the women of this Church society could do a great service by "visiting them and enfolding them as part of the parish life." He spoke also of plans for new work among the Indians in the diocese and the delegates voted financial aid.

Hit Mundt Bill

Boston (RNS):—Opposition to all forms of totalitarianism was expressed here by the American Unitarian Association in adopting a resolution that condemned the Mundt-Nixon anti-Communist bill. A resolution denouncing Communism was tabled at the Association's annual sessions after a debate in which the word Communism was changed to "totalitarianism."

In a general resolution dealing with separation of Church and State, the group demanded the recall of Myron C. Taylor from the Vatican and called for the repeal of any law in any state which sanctioned grants of public aid to church schools.

Declaring "no single current system of ownership" meets the test that property is a trusteeship under God, the Association urged that "encouragement should be given to further experimentation in the forms of private cooperative and public ownership." The resolution stated that men in the future "must be more largely activated by a service motive than by a profit motive."

CALVARY CHURCH, Wilmington, Delaware
Reverend Henry N. Herndon, Rector

The problem of designing a suitable Reredos for the existing white marble Altar was complicated by the limited available space behind the Altar. Hence, a mosaic panel set in a white marble frame was decided upon. In keeping with the best traditions of mosaic art, the Calvary Group is rendered in a somewhat archaic manner, yet each figure and each detail clearly expresses its significant part in the great drama. In the Sanctuary window on the left is represented the Nativity and on the right, the Resurrection. For correct interior renovation, write

An end to racial discrimination, segregation and quotas of admission in colleges and universities was also demanded by the Association. The group asked adjustment of the claims of Japanese in California and in Canada.

Opposition to universal military training was voiced in another resolution.

World Council

Washington: — Protestant congregations throughout this city united here May 16 to pray for the success of the first assembly of the World Council of Churches, meeting this summer in Amsterdam. The preacher was the Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, Methodist of New York.

Auxiliary Meets

Roanoke, Va.:—The Auxiliary of the diocese of Southwestern Virginia met here at Christ Church, May 11-12, with the Rev. Edgar T. Ferrell Jr. of Marion speaking on evangelism at the opening session. Miss Hazel King, secretary of college work of the province of Washington, was also a speaker.

Barnwell Brothers

Savannah, Ga.:—Bishop Barnwell left here last week for New York where he was joined by his brother, the Rev. Carlton Barnwell, rector of St. Paul's, Lynchburg, Va., and together they proceeded to Rotterdam. They are to travel in Holland and Normandy for a couple of weeks, after which Rector Barnwell will return home. Bishop Barnwell however will go to England for the Lambeth Conference, then to Amsterdam to take in the World Council of Churches meeting, and then back to England where he will be the preacher at the 250th anniversary of the founding of the Society for Christian Knowledge. He will sail for home in September.

Hits Lawlessness

Detroit:—Bishop Emrich of Michigan hit vigorously at lawlessness at the annual Empire Day service held at St. Paul's Cathedral here, which was attended by Canadian troops. He said that the presence of the troops representing the British Empire spoke of the guidance, power, judgment and hope of a great tradition. "But it is not easy to have a great tradition," he said; "it demands things of you. To illustrate, let me ask some questions. I have read in the papers recently of the mobs in Ohio and Windsor having attacked the local offices of the Communist Party. Behind us there stands the tradition of the provisions of law, of a right to fair trial, of parliament and the bill of rights. There is the other tradition of the Nazi bully-boys of beating up those with whom they disagree. What would Jefferson, Lincoln, Lord Tweedsmuir, have said? What would the Mother of Parliaments say? What think ye?"

Bishop on Way

New York:—Bishop Y. Y. Tsu, general secretary of the national council of the Church in China, was the preacher May 30 at St. George's here. He is on his way to London to attend the Lambeth Conference. Previously he had stopped over in Detroit where he filled a number of speaking engagements, including preaching at St. Paul's Cathedral on May 23rd. He also visited Ann Arbor where he addressed a group of Episcopal students at the University of Michigan.

Secretary Resigns

New York:—The Rev. Charles E. Fish, assistant secretary in the division of youth of the National Council since 1946, has resigned to take charge of the Good Shepherd, San Jose, Costa Rica.

Bishop Honored

Detroit:—Bishop and Mrs. Emrich were the guests of honor at a reception given by the diocese of Michigan on May 23rd. It was attended by a large number of officials of various organizations in the city, in addition to the clergy and people of the 125 parishes and missions in the diocese.

Offering Presented

Newark, N. J.:—The United Thank Offering of the diocese of Newark was presented on May 21 at a service held at Trinity Cathedral. The preacher was Bishop Donald Aldrich, dean of the chapel at Princeton, and there were about 650 women present. In the afternoon there was an address by Bishop William J. Gordon of Alaska who talked of the work in that field.

Wants Positive Program

New York:—Dr. H. Y. Chang, professor at Yenching University, now doing graduate work at Hartford Seminary, told a meeting of the Foreign Missions Conference that the Church needs to develop a "positive program" in China. Churches should tackle the problems of illiteracy, disease, superstition, poverty and he declared that "important battles yet remain to be fought with the major reactionary forces of corrupted politicians and barbarous warlords hampering the route of science and democracy." He appealed for a Church program that would serve the needs of the underprivileged and oppressed masses of China, and he warned that the lack of such a program would help to strengthen communism there.

Visit Republic

Royal Oak, Mich.:—Members of the Junior Brotherhood of St. Andrew at St. John's here, including the high school group, make regular visits to the Boys' Republic at Farmington for a recreational and social program. The Republic is a correctional institution where 80 boys are receiving training for useful citizenship. The Rev. Edgar A. Lucas, assistant at St. John's, developed the Episcopal chaplaincy work there while he was a member of the staff of the Detroit City Mission Society, and he is continuing this service with the enthusiastic approval of the rector, the Rev. C. C. Jatho, and the vestry of St. John's. The boys of the parish go to the Republic each week for dinner and afterward play basketball or other games.

The Rev. G. Paul Musselman, superintendent of the City Mission Society, is a trustee of the Republic and Mr. Clyde Read, communicant of St. Joseph's, Detroit, is its director.

Unemployed Migrants

New York:—Four area supervisors for migrant work of the Home Missions Council told those attending a conference here that the welfare of this "essential economic group" will deteriorate noticeably in the coming months. The reasons given were withdrawal of federal welfare programs; droughts in California; severe cold in Florida and Arizona, all contributing to widespread unemployment.

Noting the need for private agencies to help fill the vacuum left by the federal government, the Council announced plans to expand social and religious work to migrants, particularly in Virginia and North Carolina. Also plans were announced for the raising of funds for additional "Harvesters" — a multi-purpose station wagon equipped with altars, medicines, radio-phonographs and recreational equipment. Three of these are now in service, moving with migratory workers on both coasts and through the farm areas of the midwest.

More Get Bible

New York:—Ten new languages and dialects were added last year to the list of Bible translations, bringing the total to 1,090, according to a survey by the American Bible Society here. New languages are Aztec, Chol, Mixteco, Tarahumara, Tzeltal and Tzotil, spoken in Mexico; Naga; Chang and Naga; Mao, used in Assam; Nantcheri, prevalent in French Equatorial Africa; and Palau, found in Micronesia.

The Gospel of Luke in the Palau dialect was printed in Tokyo during the war from a manuscript of the New Testament left there by German missionaries, who had translated the Testament.

The entire Bible has been published in 185 languages. A complete New Testament has appeared in 241 more, and a Gospel, or other whole book, or part of a book, in 664 additional languages.

To Push Merger

New York:—The Rev. Earl F. Adams has resigned as director of the Protestant Council here in order to be the executive head of the planning committee of the proposed National Council of Churches. He said that it would take two or three years to work out plans and secure the necessary approval for the merger of eight existing national inter-Church agencies: the Federal Council; the International Council of Religious Education; the Home Missions Council; the Foreign Missions Conference; the Missionary Education Movement; the United Council of Church Women; the Protestant Council of Higher Education and the United Stewardship Council.

Visit Seminary

Baltimore, Md.:—A large number of communicants of Holy Nativity here — three men and thirty-three women to be exact—made a pilgrimage to the Virginia Seminary recently. Accompanied by their rector, the Rev. Hugh W. S. Powers, an alumnus, they were escorted about by the Rev. William Kirk, the man in charge of the fund raising at the school. They were guests at lunch in the new government-erected refectory, scattered about so that they could meet students and faculty.

The women of Holy Nativity gave $300 to the building fund from their Lent offering, and recently a man of the parish handed Rector Powers another $200 for Virginia.

The immediate goal of the campaign is for $660,000 by commencement next month, with about $460,000 in hand.

MR. EDWARD MAJOR CAMPBELL
Layman of New York City

In Talking It Over, May 27, Spofford writes about the Mundt-Nixon Bill. You say "it is conceivable that it could be used to restrict the activities of others besides Communists." True, it might even restrict the Vatican which is a sovereign state. Of course it is conceivable. Anything that can do things for you can do things to you. Virtue can become a vice. The right of labor to strike can, and has been misused. Would you abolish the right of labor to strike? The Christian religion itself has been twisted, prostituted and exploited by certain elements of our society to the detriment of innocent and decent people. Would you abolish all Christian effort? If you would, don't be afraid, come out in the sunlight and say so.

In my opinion the good solid American citizen has much less to fear from the Mundt-Nixon Bill than he has from the class of individuals who, for some obscure reason, oppose the Bill. Of course it is not quite clear from your article whether you are for the Bill or against it. Why not take a forthright position? Let your readers know where THE WITNESS stands on this Bill. As far as your readers know you are neither cold nor hot. Read Revelations, chapter 3, verse 16. ("So then because thou art luke warm and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth.")

ANSWER: The position of the editors on the Mundt Bill was determined at a meeting following full discussion and appeared June 3 issue. Mr. Campbell should not limit his reading to one verse in Revelation but should read the verse that follows for the reason for the spueing. Also we think a good bit depends on the definition of his "good, solid American citizen." In any case the one this paper tried to represent (not too well of course) was definitely not considered "a good, solid citizen of Palestine" and was hung between two thieves because he was not.

THE REV. ROLAND MONCURE
Rector at Hot Springs, Arkansas

Talking It Over (May 27) is particularly fine and true. Loyal Roman Catholics are just as subservient to a foreign, absolute power as loyal Communists. A little cynicism could suggest that the Master is a "foreign" power and include all Christians. The same cynicism would find it difficult however to find where he does reign in this world.

Orthodox Churches Not To Be At World Assembly

Roman Catholic Church Also Warns Members Against Attending Inter-Church Congresses

By W. B. Spofford

New York:—The Vatican and Roman Catholic leaders generally are having a hard time making up their minds about the World Council of Churches. The announcement was made at the Vatican on June 8th that Roman Catholics are not to participate in "mixed" congresses where matters of faith are discussed. It was stated also that only an observer would attend the assembly of the World Council this summer, and "a few priests" who have been given special permission to "listen in" at the international Church gathering.

However America, weekly of the Roman Church, recently praised the World Council for its efforts to combat "anti-Christian philosophies," meaning of course, Communism. So there are those, both in the Roman Church and in the Protestant Churches which will be represented at Amsterdam, who believe that the Vatican and the World Council's leaders will find common ground at least in the political area.

Meanwhile word is received from Geneva that a total of 142 Church bodies in 42 countries will be represented at the Assembly which opens August 22 and closes September 5. Churches in Japan, Siam and Formosa are among the latest to accept membership. The only major nation still unrepresented is Russia. Council leaders point out that the Russian Orthodox Church has been invited to membership but that no final decision has yet been taken by the Moscow Patriarchate. Likewise no definite word about their eventual participation has yet been receeived at World Council headquarters from the Orthodox Churches in Bulgaria, Yugoslavia and Romania, though a Sofia dispatch to Religious News Service states that the synod of the Church in Bulgaria has definitely decided not to participate. Every effort is being made for World Council officials to have the Orthodox Churches represented, the last move being to urge them to send "observers" if they are not ready to send official delegates.

Churches other than Orthodox in several of the eastern European countries are to send delegates. From Poland names of two delegates have been received who will represent the Evangelical Church of the Augsburgian Confession (Lutheran), but the Polish National Church, a Council member, has not yet sent in the names of the two delegates it is entitled to have. Three Churches of Czechoslovakia have reported the names of their delegates: the Evangelical Church in Slovakia, Augsburgian Confession, with three delegates; Evangelical Church of Czech Brethren, with three; the Reformed Church in Slovia, with two delegates. The Lutheran Church of Hungary and the Reformed Church of Hungary also have enrolled their delegates. Of the three Romanian Churches which are members, only one, the Transylvanian Reformed Church, has sent in the names of delegates. The Reformed Church of Yugoslavia has furnished the name of its delegate and the Evangelical Lutheran Church of Finland is planning to send its full delegation of five representatives. Also the Russian-occupation zone of Germany is expected to be represented in the deputation of 23 delegates which the German Churches will send to Amsterdam.

The member-Churches which have so far announced their intention of sending delegates to the Amsterdam assembly are from the following countries: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, China, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Egypt, Finland, Formosa, France, Germany, Greece, Holland, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Italy, Korea, Japan, Malaya, Mexico, New Zealand, Norway, Palestine, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Siam, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Syria, Turkey, United Kingdom and Eire, Uruguay, United States, British West Indies and Yugoslavia.

In addition, there will be representatives from some Churches in emigration or in exile, and non-voting delegates, observers or visitors from a number of other Churches (particularly in Africa) which do not yet hold membership in the World Council.

Approximately 1,400 persons are expected to attend the Amsterdam assembly, including 450 delegates; 350 alternate delegates; 100 youth delegates, and 500 consultants, accredited visitors, press representatives, fraternal delegates, staff members and observers.

San Francisco:—The Chapel of the Nativity, the second of Grace Cathedral's beautiful chapels, was recently dedicated. Bishop Karl M. Block gave the prayers of dedication and made a short address. He was assisted in the service by Dean Bernard N. Lovgren.

The chapel furnishings include the mural "The Adoration of the Virgin," painted by Jan Henrik De Rosen, and four large Gobelin tapestries.

VACATIONS

THE WITNESS is published every other week from June 15 to September 15. One of the headaches that all publishers have is making address changes for summer vacations, particularly these davs of shortages of both materials and workers. We ask therefore that those who are to be away but a short time arrange to have their copies forwarded. If however you are to be away for an extended time send the change to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty St., New York 6, N. Y., giving both your old and your new address, and kindly indicate whether it is a permanent change or only for a vacation period. Many thanks for the cooperation.

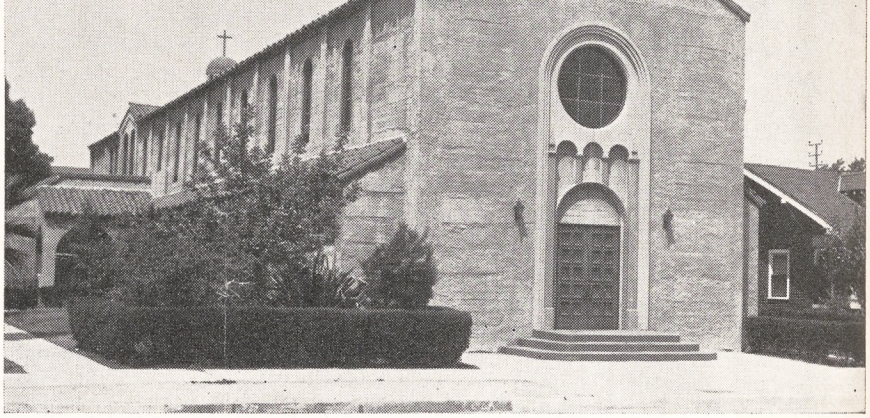
HONORARY DEGREES TO EDITORS

New York: — Honorary degrees were conferred on three of the WITNESS editors at commencements this month. The Rev. Roscoe T. Foust, rector of the Ascension, New York, and Dean Arthur Lichtenberger of Newark received the degree of Doctor of Divinity from Kenyon College on June 14th. The Rev. William B. Spofford, managing editor and rector of Christ Church, Middletown, N. J., received the degree of Doctor of Sacred Theology from Berkeley Divinity School at its commencement on June 4th.

LARGE NUMBER CONFIRMED

Detroit:—About 150 persons from 30 parishes in the diocese of Michigan were confirmed at a special "catch-up confirmation" service held at the cathedral on June 10. The service, an annual affair, is for the convenience of persons who for some reason missed being confirmed when the bishop visited their parish churches.



COMMENCEMENT AT BERKELEY

New Haven:—Prof. John D. Wild of Harvard was the headliner at the commencement of the Berkeley Divinity School, held here June 4th. He declared that the chief source of human slavery is the identification of the end with instruments such as money, power or the state. Religion is the greatest of liberating forces, he declared, but it must be freed from two grave distortions; extricationism which aims merely to secure escape from an abandoned world, and absolutism which aims at a static order instead of spontaneous activity. Both are irreconcilable with Christianity, he asserted.

There are twelve men in the graduating class. The degree of master of sacred theology, awarded by the school for the first time, went to the Rev. J. P. McGarvey of Collingdale, Pa., and Panayiotis Christou of Greece. The degree of doctor of sacred theology was conferred on the Rev. Henry DeWold deMauriac, rector at Trinity, Tarriffville, Conn.; the Rev. Samuel M. Shoemaker, rector of Calvary, New York, and the Rev. W. B. Spofford, rector of Christ Church, Middletown, N. J. and managing editor of THE WITNESS.

Faculty appointments for next academic year were the Rev. Elmer J. Cook as professor of New Testament; the Rev. A. Gabriel Hebert of the Society of the Sacred Mission as visiting English lecturer; Prof. Wilbur M. Urban, recently retired as professor of philosophy at Yale, as visiting professor in apologetics and philosophy of religion; the Rev. Thomas S. Cline as lecturer in moral theology and the Rev. Lemuel J. Winterbottom as supervisor of religious education.

Dean Percy Urban announced at the alumni dinner that the enrollment for next year will be the largest in the history of the seminary.

Church of St. Philip the Evangelist, Los Angeles, recently observed fortieth anniversary when the Rev. H. Randolph Moore, rector, was celebrant at Feast of Dedication service

CLERGY PENSIONS INCREASED

New York:—The pensions of a large group of retired clergy have been increased effective May 1, 1948, according to a statement just issued by the Rt. Rev. Cameron J. Davis, D.D., President of The Church Pension Fund. The increase has brought this group of pensions up to a level 23 per cent higher on the average than the amounts guaranteed in the Rules.

The clergy affected by this step are those who had a period of ministry before the Fund started in 1917, who have reached age sixty-eight after May 1942, and whose pensions as guaranteed by the Rules are under $1,000 a year. The Board of Trustees at its recent annual meeting, at which twenty of the twenty-three members were present, felt this forward step was justified in the light of the financial status of the Fund and the outlook for the future. The pensions of those who reached age sixty-eight prior to May 1942 had already been placed on the correspondingly higher basis as they retired. The Trustees authorized the setting up of the necessary reserves to guarantee the increased pensions so long as the beneficiaries live.

The step contemplates also that clergy in this same category who have not yet retired will benefit by the same higher pension bases when they do retire.

Pensions which figure under the guaranteed Rules to more than $1,000 a year are not affected by this step. The funds available have been used entirely for the benefit of those whose ecclesiastical income during active ministry has been in the lower brackets.

ANNOUNCE CHANGE IN PROGRAM

Orkney Springs, Va.:—An important change has been announced in the program for the Shrine Mont Clergy Seminar which meets here July 26-August 6. The Rev. William H. Dunphy of Philadelphia will give five lectures the second week on "Basic concepts of the Christian faith," with the Rev. George J. Cleaveland of Washington Cathedral, giving only five lectures on "Personalities of the Reformation of the Church of England," instead of ten as previously announced.

EDITORIALS

Let's Have Discussion

THE season for diocesan conventions is over. Most of them had a single pattern. There were numerous reports, the budget was discussed and passed, there were one or more inspirational addresses, and adjournment came after certain resolutions of thanks were adopted. In many places the convention is so rushed that there isn't even time for delegates to become slightly acquainted. There almost seems, in some dioceses, to be an effort to qualify for an award for the shortest convention on record.

What could a diocesan convention be? It could be a representative group of Episcopalians who come together, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, to think through the applications of their faith to the life of the world. It could be a time when we chart the course for bringing the gospel of Christ to "those who are far off and to those who are nigh." But it is not these things. Haste is the watchword. Motions are tabled, or debate is given a time limit. It does not seem important that we should devote over a few minutes instead of hours to trying to discover what our attitude as churchmen should be in the matter of, let us say, Christian unity. What is important is that we close the convention at the customary hour so that everybody can get home in good season. The presiding officer and a number of the clergy seem to be in mortal fear that there might be some discussion of issues affecting the Church's life, so that the sooner the convention is over, the better.

It is said that you couldn't get laymen to attend a longer convention. What nonsense! Americans are inveterate convention attenders. No respectable grand lodge of a state would think of having an annual conclave that lasted the small part of a day. Present diocesan conventions do not appeal to most delegates, clerical and lay, because they offer so little opportunity for any participation. They are cut, dried and dull. A convention that really attempted to reach decisions after prayerful witness on the part of many, even if it lasted several days, would merit the interest of most delegates.

Next year will be General Convention year. Elected deputies from dioceses and missionary districts ought to go to that fully aware of the considered Christian judgment of those they represent. It will not be possible for most of them to do this unless diocesan convention procedure undergoes a drastic overhauling. We pray that those committees or individuals who plan for diocesan conventions next year, make sure that the many matters which deserve the attention of the Church be included on the agenda and that ample time be provided for full discussion of them. Further, we point out to delegates that motions to table or limit debate are often the act of a coward who does not want to have another viewpoint expressed, even though it be prompted by the Holy Spirit.

"QUOTES"

IF A PROSPEROUS man desires to make his religion real let him give much and ask little. My experience is that our wealthy members have been in the habit of giving little comparatively and demanding much relatively, to their spiritual vision. That is why the Episcopal Church has such well-appointed parish churches and such poorly supported charitable institutions. Better have wicker chairs and well-equipped hospitals than cushioned pews and poorly supported institutions.

—the late BISHOP JOHNSON
First Witness Editor

Your Turn Will Come

AMERICAN Churchmen for the most part expressed no concern when delegates of international unions residing in Canada were turned back at the border, and so prevented from attending the convention of the CIO meeting at Atlantic City. "No concern of the Church," some said. Others went even further by declaring: "Good thing: they are a threat, these labor leaders, to free enterprise." The pattern of their thinking followed closely that of German pastors a decade ago who actually approved when the Nazis persecuted Jews and trade unionists as "threats to the state." They woke up only when they themselves were cracked down upon, with hundreds of them thrown into concentration camps. It finally prompted one of them to tell a small delegation of American churchmen: "If you stand by while others lose their freedom you may be perfectly sure that the time will come when you will lose your own."

On June 11th, the Rev. G. Harvey Forster, an official delegate of the United Church of Canada to the forthcoming assembly of the World Council of Churches, was removed from a train at Niagara Falls and refused permission to enter the United States. He subsequently went to Montreal where he took a plane for London.

Mr. Forster is superintendent of All Peoples Missions for the United Church in the Niagara district. His work brings him into contact with people who came to Canada from Hungary, Romania, Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, Italy, Russia. He planned to visit these countries before returning home. He had a visa to Russia; he carried a letter of greeting to the patriarch of the Orthodox Church from the United Church. He had similar messages addressed to the heads of Protestant Churches in other eastern European countries. All of which prompted S. J. McDonnell, acting district director of the U. S. immigration and national service at Buffalo to state that Forster had been "temporarily excluded because his entry might be deemed prejudicial to the interests of the United States." The same stock reason that was given when elected delegates from Canada were forbidden to attend the CIO convention.

Some of the minister's Canadian friends think the United States authorities are silly. The Rev. J. M. Finlay of one of the United Church parishes in Toronto said: "Harvey Forster is not a Communist. He has a fine, philosophical mind, has done some fine writing, and no Communist would pull the wool over his eyes. But the incident just shows how ridiculous this Red-hunting can become when anybody who is a humanitarian can be labelled as Red."

The Rev. J. Lavell Smith, superintendent of the Church of All Nations, Toronto, declared: "This is an example of the hysterical suspicion that seems to be spreading in the U. S. and even in Canada."

It was G. Bernard Shaw who said years ago: "Following a war the belligerents swap characteristics." And so today in the United States young men are drafted for the army in peace-time; thought control is instituted by various agencies of government; a foreign legion composed of 25,000 aliens, selected for their fascist sympathies, are to be incorporated into the army; kings and queens migrate to our land to get away from the common people, just as a hundred years ago the common people of Europe fled to our shores to get away from the kings and queens.

Well, if American churchmen stand by while others lose their freedom they may be perfectly sure that the time will soon come when they will lose their own. Fascists, at least in this respect, do not discriminate.

Excellent Good *Fair

*_High Wind at Noon_: a Case for a Daring Christianity, by Allan Knight Chalmers. Scribner's, $2.50.

A recent English visitor reported that the theme of the average American sermon was "Let me suggest that you be good." Dr. Chalmers, now leaving his distinguished pulpit in New York for a chair at Boston University, provides evidence against this; his general theme is more like "Let me assure you that by God's grace you can be good in this exciting age." Preachers and listeners alike will find much to stimulate in this report of a pastor's practical faith. Honestly, though, they mustn't look for many ideas. Chalmers leaves off where Niebuhr begins—or do I mean that like so many of us he tries to carry on where Niebuhr leaves us? —E. R. Hardy, Jr.

*_From Failure to Fulfilment_, by John Martin. The Macmillan Company. $2.00.

This is a small book, described as "A Minister's Notebook on Psychological Method." The author is an English Free Church minister. In this book he is, apparently, not greatly concerned with the deeper implications of the newer psychology, stressing rather the conviction that the psychological explanation of the person's difficulty cannot be regarded as the final solution. This fulfilment lies in the realm of spiritual life. Such an emphasis, we realize, is needed.

One has the feeling however that the author has a rich experience in helping individuals, but that he is too reticent in writing in a more explicit manner about the individuals he uses as illustrations. His propriety, while revealing a real respect for human personality, has kept most of his illustrations from being very helpful. Although soundly written, one fears this book will not have a wide circulation nor prove a very great contribution to the field. —Ernest W. Churchill.

*_Freedom and Order_, by Eduard Heimann. Scribner's. $3.00.

This book is a definitive statement of the dialectical Socialist position. It is cool towards Russia, calm toward Germany, and hopeful about America. It abounds in well-digested consideration of a great many philosophies and statements, and thus is useful. —H. McC.

Main Issues Confronting Christendom, by Harold A. Bosley. Harper's, $2.50.

A man with the imposing and somewhat restricting title of "Preacher to the University" at Duke, could not be expected to write a very incautious or dashing book. Indeed, Dr. Bosley has not done so. He says that the book is the product of group thinking and he leans heavily on the cautious manifestos of official Church groups. However the book is valuable for a splendid undaunted chapter entitled "Religious Liberalism Points the Way." In days when Liberals are considered lazy, hazy, or crazy, statements like this are needed before we all go down in a welter of ideologies which have been so sharpened by precision that they are useful only as weapons against other philosophies.

Alternative to Futility by Elton Trueblood. Harper Bros., New York. $1.00.

Dr. Trueblood finishes his trilogy for modern times in the manner in which he began it—which is to say, on a high, simple and thoroughly sensible and prophetic level. While recognizing the contemporary impotence of the churches, he maintains that a redemptive fellowship, operating and expanding on the cellular principle, might save the world. This is a must book to give to your laymen—that is, after each priest has read it himself.

Faith, Not Fear....

By

SYDNEY BARR

Vicar of Grace Church, Newington, Connecticut

I SHALL never forget V-J Day 1945. I was in China when the news came in. At first there was a paralyzing numbness. Then an almost delirious joy. Very soon now I would be home. And there was reasonable hope that in my lifetime at least there would not be another war.

During the succeeding months much of that joy has faded away. Because, incredible though it seems, after all the destruction and suffering of the past years, the world still continues in a pattern which points toward a third world war as a distinct possibility; points, as a matter of fact, to the possible recurrence of wars to the ultimate destruction of mankind.

For all this we have a tremendous responsibility here in this country. Our mood and framework of reference are becoming increasingly dangerous. For we are being victimized by fear. A kind of frenzied and panicky worry has swept the nation, a fear which, we are told by objective observers, far exceeds the normal and understandable apprehension held by countries in Europe and the Near East. Dr. Carl Hermann Voss, speaking at the annual meeting of the World Alliance for International Friendship Through the Churches, declared recently: "Nowhere did I encounter such fear of Soviet Russia and Marxist Communism as that which I found in the United States on my return." The fact that we are being swept along by this current is the most convincing proof I know that our nation is still far from being thoroughly Christian.

This prevailing apprehension is our greatest peril. It puts us in the position where American democracy may lose its greatness and move toward reaction on the right. Our fright could destroy our way of living from the inside. We see the results of this negativism all around us. A recent example has been cries of havoc by the press because of the so-called "red menace" in the film industry. The state of our country is indeed at a low ebb if we must indulge in Red hunts, loyalty purges, and even star chamber proceedings for state employees. I strongly question the proceedings of a Thomas Committee and the provisions of a Mundt-Nixon Bill. For these come perilously close to being outright travesties of democratic procedure and violations of the Bill of Rights. Whatever may be your individual opinion on these matters, one thing is certain—none of these so-called remedies gets at the root of the problem. And equally certain is this—all of these so-called remedies are grave threats to democratic civil rights and liberties. We grudgingly grant some of our surplus wealth and food to revive Europe—not in the minds of many people as an act of Christian charity and mercy, but primarily as a means to stop the Red tide—and at the same time we are reluctant to discipline an unruly inflation-ridden economy with rationing and price controls.

We all deplore communism and its extravagant propaganda, its distrust and misunderstanding of Western nations, its repression of civil liberties, its police state and prison camps. But our counteracting measures, thus far, have been controlled, primarily, by panic and fear.

"The issue is not what any possible enemy may do to the country which owns the atom bomb," said Dr. Voss. "The issue is whether a frightened government in America may not destroy democracy from the inside."

THE Christian is realistic, but optimistic. Realism demands that we recognize the situation for what it is, and on the purely materialistic level maintain our national defenses. But optimism goes farther, and offers something more fundamental and constructive. Optimism demands an attitude of positive faith—faith in God, whose creation is good because he is good; and faith in our own democratic way of life. Fear will never get us anywhere. Whatever can be done to remedy our present situation will be done only on the positive basis of faith. What, then, are some of the positive steps to be taken? There are three.

First of all, we must bend our utmost energies toward improving and developing the democratic way of life which we already have. This means, just to mention a few things, clean government, strong control of our inflationary economy, improved housing facilities, adequate recreation, the elimination of hunger, disease, illiteracy, want and fear. Above all, it means guaranteeing these things, and civil rights and liberties to everyone, regardless of race, creed or color.

Secondly, we must be constant in prayer. As Christians we, of all peoples, should know the effectiveness of intercession, whereby God's power is released and becomes infused through the world. Prayer is a very specific way whereby we can cooperate with the working of God's will in the world. We might well go on a prayer campaign. Intercession groups, in and out of the Church, would be a powerful influence in our troubled world. Christians and the Christian Church will best serve God and man when they immunize themselves by prayer against hysteria and despair.

Thirdly, we must all have and evidence that faith which alone results in positive measures for good. Faith in God—that he is good, that he has created his world for good, that good will ultimately prevail. Faith in his dear Son, through whom and by whom the whole world, with all its trouble and distress, is continuously presented to the Father and can yet, as a whole, become reconciled to him. And faith in God the Holy Ghost, who still works in our midst, softening hearts, sharpening perceptions, inspiring, sanctifying.

Faith gives the Christian composure even in the midst of the most extreme stress and strain. He who has faith is quiet and confident. He who has faith is the best source of counsel and strength to all in distress. He who has faith is reliable, because steady in judgment and prompt, but not impetuous, in action.

This is God's world, and God still rules his world. This is the ground for our hope. Faith, not fear, must move us.

Travels of a Gargoyle

By

THOMAS V. BARRETT

Director of College Work of the National Council

AFTER I left Dr. Greatvoice I journeyed on to Cloytown arriving on Saturday afternoon in the midst of a tempest. The Rev. Harold Honneydo was at the station to meet me. He had a sweet smile and a lovely green tie. He looked like a chief Chaplain of a Hunt Club. He was a pleasant fellow and did his best to give me a kindly welcome. He came on the train before I could get off, and took my suitcases. He had also brought me a raincoat, some rubbers, and an umbrella; in case I had no garments for wet weather. He had me stand at the door of the station while he went to get his car; so my feet wouldn't get muddy. I found myself wondering if a person could be too kind, and then pinched myself for not having the proper psychology for local level observation.

In the car, Harold glanced at my clerical collar.

"If you wish to dress in mufti while you're here, it's all right with us," he said pleasantly.

"I haven't got a clean shirt," I said. "My rabat covers this one."

"I'm sure one of mine will fit you," he said.

"This is all right, thank you. I don't mind at all. In fact I'm quite used to it. Kind of like the custom."

Honneydo smiled sweetly. "Don't you find it a barrier between you and laymen?"

"No, I don't," I answered with an inner desire to leave the subject and be off elsewhere. "In fact when I wear my collar everybody talks to me. People tell me all their problems. When I want to be alone I wear a tie."

Honneydo smiled courteously, "I always prefer plain clothes. Clericals make one look so professional."

"I thought we were professionals," I grouched, ignoring my local level resolutions. "After three years in Seminary I'd hate to be taken for an amateur."

Honneydo looked hurt and I was contrite at once.

"Have you read Human Destiny?", I asked as cheerfully as I could while lightning struck the bridge we were crossing.

"No, I haven't," said Honneydo, looking like a sunrise. "As a matter of fact I think reading theology is rather an escape from life, don't you? It often becomes a substitute for living experience."

"Perhaps," I said, wondering what a dead experience would be like, "but a man has to get ideas somewhere."

"I find," said Honneydo, "that people aren't interested in ideas. They're interested in life, and spiritual values . . . and . . . well . . . living experience."

Between the rain and the grass-root sunbeam beside me I began to feel humid, on the intellectual level.

"Seems to me," I ventured, "men have to have some sort of framework for living experience—perhaps just a buttress or two here and there."

"Yes, but it ought to be very elastic; one that can be adjusted to changing life-situations, and developing values. You see I believe the Holy Spirit is still operating in the world."

"I'm sure of it," I said, flinching as a bolt of lightning brought down an elm tree just behind us.

"The Church must accept new values, and reject the old superstitions and outworn theology," Honneydo went on pleasantly. "It's the spirit that counts, and men's living experience."

We reached the Church and Honneydo offered to run in and get the sexton who could carry me over the puddles, but I assured him I didn't mind dampness here and there. We went inside and I saw there was a sanctuary light burning.

"I see you reserve the Sacrament?" I said.

"Oh no," smiled Honneydo. "But we think the light gives a religious feeling to the church. We believe in the continual spiritual presence of Christ in the world."

In the sacristy there was a framed picture of the Boy Jesus painted by Hoofmun. Honneydo beamed. "Don't you think that picture has a good deal of spiritual vitality?" he asked eagerly. I was beginning to feel so spiritual I hardly noticed my body at all. I kept dropping my hat. Guess I was getting religious feelings right down to my fingertips.

"We're having Communion tomorrow," Honneydo informed me. "You may notice some little differences in the service. We try to make the service spiritually meaningful in terms of modern experience. For instance, I leave out the phrase 'wrath and indignation.' I believe we should tell people about the love of God."

A terrific clap of thunder came down the steeple, rolled around the nave, and went out by the sacristy door.

"I wish you'd put the phrase back in again," I mumbled.

"What?"

"Nothing. Go on."

"We also omit 'the punishment of wickedness and vice,' and we shorten the prayer of consecration, and spiritualize the prayer of humble access; it's pretty cannibalistic the way it is."

"Do you use the same creed? I mean the one I do? We do?"

"We generally leave out the creed," Honneydo said, "and sing 'Breathe on me Breath of God.' It's more meaningful, spiritually, to people of our time."

I began to get onto the living experience technique.

"We could have a poem in place of the Epistle," I said. "I know one that's practically all spiritual values."

Honneydo said that would be very helpful. We went to his study and worked out a good spiritual communion service and had a dandy discussion on creative prayer. I wasn't quite sure what the term meant at first, but evidently it meant not bothering with the old out-of-date prayers; it meant making prayer a vital, meaningful creative thing. I tried to pray creatively about original sin, but Honneydo discouraged the attempt, and said people were interested in spiritual values and kindliness to others. He said we were evolving away from animals anyway and getting pretty creatively good.

Sunday morning we had a churchly service. The choir wore bright green cassocks and the crucifer wore a blue alb. Honneydo said the colors had no ecclesiastical significance, but they gave a nice spiritual tone to the service. He preached a sermon that wasn't out of any old books either. Right off the griddle of living experience.

That night I talked to the Blueberry Club on Creative Meditation and showed them that philosophy and history and intellectual things were not as important as the things of the heart in terms of everyday living experience.

When I got on the train next day I could hardly feel the sway of the cars. I was really half out of this world. Living creatively I guess. It was a relief not to have to bother about thinking anymore, and I was glad I'd never have to tax my brain again in my top-policy planning, trying to find exact words, and clear cut statements. After all it is the spirit that counts, so what difference do words make?

Before I went to sleep that night I read my Bible trying to find some creative experience. I didn't have much luck. In Bible days men pretty much believed in superstitions and outworn theology. I opened to Ecclesiastes. "I applied mine heart to wisdom, and to search, and to seek out wisdom and the reason of things, and to know the wickedness of folly, even of foolishness. . . ." What's the use, I said to myself. There isn't a good old grass root spiritual value in the whole passage. Religion was too intellectual in those days. I turned over and put out the light.

World Religious Leaders Confer On the United Nations

Representatives of Eight Major Religions Discuss Moral Support of United Nations

New York: — Representatives of eight of the major religions of the world, together with representatives of seven of the numerically smaller religious groups, gathered here June 16-18, under the sponsorship of the Church Peace Union, to discuss the moral and spiritual support of the United Nations.

Meeting at Town Hall, men and women from India, China, Lebanon, Great Britain, France, Turkey, Canada, and other nations of the world, gathered under the auspices of the Church Peace Union but with the cooperation of the American Association for the United Nations, the World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches, and 48 national and international cooperating organizations, to consider how the forces of religion in all nations can be mobilized into concerted action to support the United Nations and its efforts for the establishment of a peaceful, free world.

From the time that Ambassador Carlos P. Romulo, chief of the Philippine mission to the United Nations, opened the conference until Sir Carl A. Berendsen, New Zealand delegate to the United Nations, addressed the closing session of the meetings, the more than a thousand delegates considered such subjects as: "The United Nations and Its Task," "The Moral and Spiritual Resources of Mankind," "Religion and Human Rights," and "A Practical Program of Action."

The speakers for the three-day conference included General A. G. L. McNaughton, chief of the Canadian Mission to the United Nations; Prof. Lewis Mumford, philosopher and author; Mr. James P. Warburg, economist and author; W. E. B. DuBois of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Mrs. Helen Gahagan Douglas, Congresswoman from California; Mr. Henry James Forman, author and editor; Dr. Jal Pavry, Parsee representative from India; Mr. Enrique Losada, United Nations delegate from Bolivia; Dr. Edmund Sinnott, president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science; Dr. C. L. Hsia, minister plenipotentiary, Chinese Delegation to the United Nations; Mr. Martin Hill, British member of United Nations secretariat; Miss Freda Kirchwey, Editor of The Nation; M. Hamdullah Suphi Tanriover, Depute d'Istamboul, Grande National Assembly, Turkey; and Dr.

Mrs. J. Maver Feehan is the chairman of the children's division of the department of education of the diocese of Missouri

William Pierson Merrill, pastor emeritus of the Brick Presbyterian Church.

Henry A. Atkinson, general secretary of the Church Peace Union, said of the conference: "Religion has the answer to the world's problems. As a unifying, creative, dynamic force in the midst of stagnation, failure of nerve and disunity, religion provides an alternative to world chaos."

He noted: "It is true that religion can be, and often is, a source of divisiveness. Witness the dissension among Protestant denominations and sects; the tensions between Roman Catholics and Protestants; the internecine warfare among Moslem, Hindu and Sikh in India; the strife between the conflicting nationalisms of Jew and Arab in the Middle East. There is, however, another side to the coin. In the aspirations of the vast masses of millions of people throughout the earth, there is one common denominator, an inexorable drive for a just and peaceful world."

Among the religions represented at the conference was Buddhism, Judaism, Christianity, Zoroastrianism, Hinduism, Jainism, Confucianism, Islam, and Sikhism, as well as Christian Science, Ethical Culture, Theosophy, Baha'ism, Mormonism, New Thought, Vedantism, and Brahmu Samaj.

Speak Freely

Newark, N. J.:—The board of social relations of the diocese of Newark recently passed two significant resolutions. The first, passed unanimously, states that "Whereas the citizens of our country are under considerable emotional pressure at the present time due to conflicting ideas in the social and economic aspects of our lives, and whereas one of the duties of a pastor is to speak the truth, in love, to his people, as God gives him power to see that truth, to the intent that his people may be helped in the better shaping of their lives for the carrying out of God's purpose; therefore be it resolved that we, the members of the board of Christian social relations, hereby remind ourselves and our fellow churchmen, of the right and duty of every clergyman to speak freely concerning that which his conscience dictates, and of the corresponding duty of laymen to afford our clergy this full opportunity, without hindrance or interference, direct or indirect."

The resolution was sent to the clergy and vestries of the diocese for "their thoughtful consideration."

Then acting upon their own advice the board passed a resolution opposing the Mundt-Nixon Bill. Pointing out that the House of Bishops last November called upon Church people "to be on their guard lest an hysterical fear of Communism shall lead us to fight that danger with weapons destructive of the treasures we seek to guard" the board informed the two Senators from New Jersey that "We oppose this Bill in the spirit of the statement of our Bishops."

Hits Mundt Bill

Salem, Ore.:—Episcopalian Henry A. Wallace warned in a speech here that the Mundt-Nixon Bill (see WITNESS editorial, June 3) would get Churches into trouble. In an address made on the campus of Williamette University, a Methodist institution, Wallace asserted that the "vicious" Mundt proposal might, however, take into consideration the Methodists' record of church-going.

"If the Russians want peace, the Communists want peace, and if the Methodists want peace, then the Methodists too would be in serious danger, because they would be put in jail and fined $10,000," Wallace declared.

He said that many laymen would find themselves liable to prosecution if they followed the tenets set down by the founder and early members of the Methodist Church.

Wallace added that the Friends Church might also be in danger, since it had inserted advertisements in New York newspapers urging the need for a conference between the United States and Russia at the time such a proposal was being rejected by this country.

Orthodox Congress

Belgrade (RNS):—Patriarch Gavrilo of the Serbian Orthodox Church, accompanied by three other bishops, will attend the Congress which will open in Moscow on July 7, called by Patriarch Alexei of the Russian Orthodox Church. Matters to be discussed are the conditions under which a closer relationship may be established between the Anglican and Orthodox Churches and also the attitude the Orthodox Churches should take toward the World Council of Churches.

Condemns "Holy War"

London:—A warning that the Church must not take part in a "holy war" against Communism was sounded here by the Archbishop of York in addressing the convocation of York.

"Confronted with atheistic teaching and non-ethical practice of modern Communism, many are now calling upon the Church to join a 'holy war' against Communism, employing every spiritual weapon and indiscriminately excommunicating all Communists," Dr. Garbett declared. "This line has already been taken by the Roman Catholic Church, and many British churchmen are advocating that we follow it. However, the Church of England must oppose Communism, not by political action or mere denunciation, but by its teaching and its life."

The Archbishop said one result of using political and spiritual weapons indiscriminately against all who called themselves Communists would be to make a breach with millions of Orthodox and other Christians.

"It might also," he warned, "prejudice our position with the Communist rulers of these people, and give militant atheists an excuse for demanding resumption of religious persecution."

Repair Program

New York:—Continued use of St. George's Church here is seriously threatened unless $185,000 can be immediately secured to start major repairs, it was announced on June 11 by Rector Edward O. Miller and Senior Warden Charles C. Burlingham. The side galleries of the 100 year old church have already been closed as unsafe.

Issue Warning

Seattle, Wash.:—Endorsement of the European Recovery Program was coupled with a warning against minimizing the program's effectiveness by "turning it into a political weapon" in a report adopted by the

A MATTER OF TIMING

"When" a thing happens is often as important as "what" happens.
People in America are, at long last, becoming genuinely aroused about the peril of Freedom in our country and worldwide.

Clergy are joining this Crusade, presently, at the rate of nearly a thousand per month. Mail from interested miscellaneous persons has increased thirty fold in the last six months.

Whether the people will become enough aroused SOON ENOUGH is the real problem. Too many things happen too late. To lock the barn after the horse is stolen is stupid enough—but to realize the priceless-ness of Freedom after it is lost is tragic. People in other countries have learned that lesson too late.

What the timing is to be in America remains to be determined. Assuredly the preachers are now accelerating the rising tides against communism, fascism, stateism and all collectivisms. It is later however than many realize, especially in view of feverish war-rumoring and the new implications of war in the atomic era.

Spiritual Mobilization invites every pastor of a church, of whatever denomination or theological views, to make common cause with us on behalf of Spiritual Freedom. We presently seek 5 million new voters to bolster the democratic process in America this year. We have many tracts and brochures available for distribution to your parishioners. Our Traveling Representative in your territory will be glad to call on you. We will be happy to send someone to tell our Story at the ministers' meeting in your town. May we?

Seminary Graduations

In recent weeks about 150 men have graduated from the institutions listed below and been ordained to the Ministry of the Church.

The Seminaries have done their best to train these men "to serve God for the promoting of his glory, and the edifying of his people." Sometimes it has seemed like the old story of having to make bricks without straw; for the Church's provision of funds for maintaining and operating efficient centers of theological education has fallen far behind the demands of the times.

The Seminaries all depend upon current gifts for the essential work they are doing.

Christianity today. We believe that Anglican participation in the formation of this new sister-Church is a real glory to the Anglican communion."

Also signing the petition was Mr. John C. Spaulding, chancellor of the diocese, and Mrs. Spaulding, an officer of the provincial Auxiliary.

Boys' School

Austin, Texas:—A new boarding school for boys of high school age will be opened sometime next year by the diocese of Texas, it was announced last week by Bishop Coadjutor John E. Hines. The headmaster of St. Stephen's School is the Rev. William Brewster who recently resigned as the headmaster of St. Mark's School at Southborough, Mass.

Large Class

Sioux Falls, S. D.:—Dean Leland Stark of Calvary Cathedral here presented a third class this year for confirmation on June 6th, so that 78 have been added to the parish rolls this year by confirmation, with 58 of them adults. It represents the largest number of confirmations in the 60 years of the parish, and in the past 8 years the communicant strength has nearly doubled—from 540 to about 1,000.

Old Debt Paid

Chicago:—The Church of the Atonement here has raised the money to pay off the 30 year-old debt on the church and parish house. It amounted to $55,000 when the Rev. James M. Duncan became rector four and a half years ago and he has raised the final $32,000 in the past two months. The consecration of the church is expected to take place in October.

Z. C. Patten Dies

Chattanooga, Tenn.:—Zeboim C. Patten, one of the leading laymen of the Church, died at his home here on June 7th. He was a member of the National Council for 12 years; was active in the affairs of the diocese of Tennessee which he represented at a number of General Conventions, and was from the beginning a member of the WITNESS Advisory Board and an enthusiastic backer of the magazine.

MRS. ALFRED BOYD
Churchwoman of Middlebrook, Mo.

I feel very grateful to THE WITNESS for the courageous address by Bishop Gooden on our national and international policies, and for the news story of the peace train going from the west to Washington to protest our government's preparations for war.

I am intrigued also by the stories of the work of the Home Missions Council among agricultural migrants as I saw some of that excellent work in western Minnesota when we were living in Grand Forks, N. D. There was a neighborhood house established in a school in a nearby Minnesota town where trained workers cared for little Mexican children too young to work with their parents in the beet fields.

We are proud of the liberal, progressive Christian work of our Bishop Scarlett here in the Diocese of Missouri and feel grateful for the news you give of what he and Dean Sweet and the clergy they have gathered around them here are doing.

The women of the Auxiliary are forward-looking too. I was intensely interested in the meeting of the Diocesan Auxiliary last year held in a Negro Church in St. Louis for the first time. It turned out to be a great success, the largest meeting of the Auxiliary on record.

MR. C. C. BURLINGHAM
Layman of New York City

I should like to add to the reforms in the Episcopate suggested by Bishop Mitchell in your issue of June 3, the translation of Bishops from one See to another. The present prohibition rests on a resolution of General Convention adopted many years ago. At the last Convention in Philadelphia the House of Bishops adopted an amendment to the Constitution permitting translation, but it failed of passage in the Lower House. The prohibition was intended to prevent political maneuvering. I would not venture to say whether it has been successful. It seems clear, however, that a large diocese should be free to elect a Bishop of another diocese who has acquired experience and has proved his capacity.

REV. FRANK M. THORBURN

The seminarians responsible for We Were Thinking (April 15) said that the Church needed specialists. I would like to call attention to a more serious situation. In the rural and missionary fields there is such a lack of priests that if our seminarians are not recruited for those fields all the psychologists, philosophers, educationalists, etc., will have no Christian group to make their work necessary. The attack on the "pagan world" ought to begin among men and women where they live.

It would be much more valuable if the Presiding Bishop and the Council were granted the right to select 50% of the graduating classes of our seminaries and sent them into the mission fields. In 1946 we had 246 candidates and 167 ordinations to the priesthood. If 80 men had been sent in to the 28 missionary districts it would make a great difference.

I can only speak from my experience in the Pine Ridge Mission, but I am quite sure from that experience that if our seminarians were sent so that we could have a steady supply of men, even if they only stayed three years and then went to parishes or other fields, it would be a strengthening of our work. A man is not confined to "small parish activities" any more than St. Paul was. He could salute "the house of Onsiphorus" and bawl out the "parishes of Corinth," and his concern was to see that men were placed in areas where they were needed, and his seminarians were not allocated to the imperial court of Rome to combat the pagan world of that day. I do not know how Timothy, Titus, and the others felt and talked about their various appointments, nor whether their "small parishes" adequately supported them, but at least they gave service in the grass roots and the fruits of their labors is evidenced by the history of the early Church.

The Students of China Strike Against U. S. Policies

Episcopal Church's St. John's University Is the Place the Demonstrations Started

By Paul B. Denlinger
Episcopal Missionary in China

Peiping, China (by air mail):—"Oppose American Support of Japan" has been the rallying cry of the latest outburst in the student movement, occurring roughly from the end of May to the middle of June. There has been sharp and bitter criticisms of America, and especially American policy in Japan.

The situation developed out of an art exhibition in St. John's University, Episcopal school in Shanghai. It is reported that several of the cartoons pictured America as a militaristic nation. Similar cartoons in Peiping which I saw showed a materialistic Uncle Sam encouraging barbarous Japanese soldiers to attack Chinese, or Americans lapping up the blood of the Chinese people. When it became known that the exhibit was intentionally unfair in representations of America, the school authorities ordered the exhibit closed. At least a group of the students opposed the university oppression of free speech, accused them of being foreign imperialists, and in general denounced university authorities. They called for nationalization of the university and an end to all foreign domination in noisy and heated demonstrations.

Dr. Tu, the president, because of friction and non-cooperation from several of the Chinese members of the faculty, and because his health had been shaken by the continuous strain, resigned from office. The board of directors announced a 10-day recess, at the end of which time final examinations would be given. This action made a group of about 220 students (out of 1500) furious. They demanded the immediate resumption of classes in the midst of their bitter denunciations of the university. Another smaller group of students voiced their opinion that this whole incident was purposely caused by political elements who were more interested in political reverberations than the pursuance of their studies. They said they appreciated the opportunity to study at St. John's and intended to obey university authorities, and did not appreciate the fact that all St. John's students were blamed for the hostility and irresponsibility of a small minority. There was a clash between these two groups of students, but the university remained closed.

The closing of St. John's made it difficult for the students to continue political agitation, so the student government of Chaotung University took over the responsibility. Demonstrations, which were suppressed by soldiers and police were attempted; posters and hand-bills were prepared, speeches and wall-boards were utilized. During this time the U.S. consulate was provided with an armed guard. Consul-General John M. Cabot took cognizance of the movement and rebuked the students for the way they jeopardized Chinese-American friendship. He denied that the U.S. had any intention of reviving Japanese militarism, and asked in veiled tones whether this movement was not inspired by forces that had much to gain in a rupture between the U.S. and China. The students were much provoked by his "interference in Chinese affairs," and burned with indignation.

On May 30, the movement officially reached Peiping. The student governments of the local universities planned a large meeting on the "Democratic Plaza" at Peiping University. Approximately 2,000 attended. They listened carefully to student speakers and read speeches. They rehearsed the hardships they had endured under the Japanese, and argued that now that America supported Japanese militarism they could look for a repetition of the same situation, unless they, by their intelligence and patriotism, awoke their countrymen to the danger of American policy in Japan, and organized a vigorous denunciation of it. Posters denounced an imperialistic or militaristic America profiting from the exploitation of China. A skit pictured a proud and haughty Uncle Sam disdainfully ignoring the subservient petitions of the Chinese and Japanese governments for more money. I was present at the whole demonstration, and was not insulted or molested in any way. Some of the students whom I recognized, explained that it was not the American people they did not like, but the American government.

When the meeting was finished the students sent telegrams to the World Student Federation in Prague (a Soviet-controlled organization with whom they are very friendly) announcing their movement, and to MacArthur and President Truman, denouncing American policy in Japan.

Ambassador Leighton Stuart finally took cognizance of continuing agitation, and issued a careful statement. He insisted that America had no intention of supporting Japanese imperialism, but that Japan could not survive only as an agricultural nation. Therefore, he maintained, unless we are prepared to see her driven to Communism by poverty, or to imperialism by despair, we

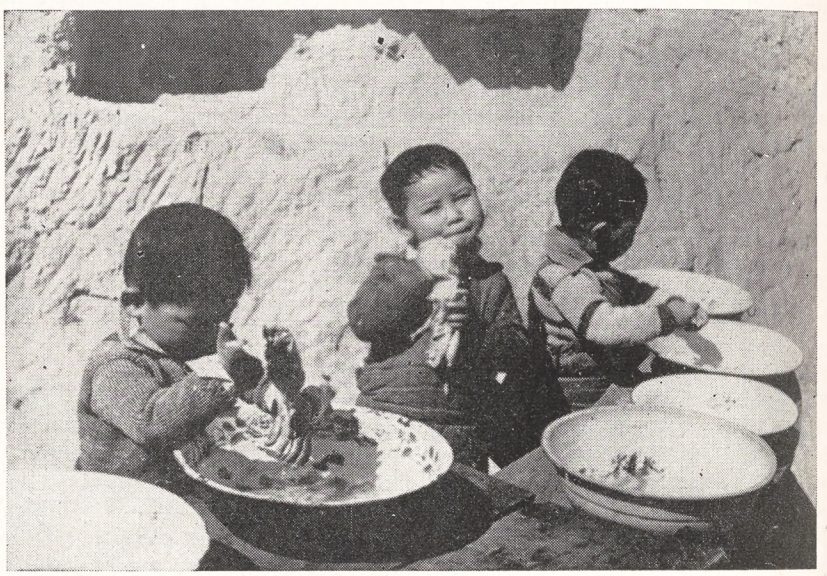
One of the headaches that all publishers have is making address changes for summer vacations, particularly these days of shortages of both materials and workers. We ask therefore that those who are to be away but a short time arrange to have their copies forwarded. If however you are to be away for an extended time send the change to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty St., New York 6, N. must be prepared to permit somewhere near the level of industrialization Japan enjoyed in 1935. He reiterated his friendship for the Chinese students, and said he did not like to see them driven by an artificially-created panic, and used by other elements in the nation.

The students were very indignant that the American ambassador should propose to tell Chinese students what they should do. Here were further clear-cut violations of Chinese sovereignty! After such continuous prodding, they had no choice but to strike. By order of the student authorities, universities were closed June 9-10. The students sent a telegram to Stuart demanding his resignation.

Secret preparations were made for a student demonstration to take place, probably before the American consulate on June 9. The students got to the center of the city, carrying their banners and shouting their slogans. At this point they were stopped by soldiers with drawn bayonets, wooden clubs, and shots fired over their heads. The soldiers refused to let them pass, the students refused to return to their school. A stalemate continued for 4 hours. Three-cornered negotiations were carried on by the dean of Peiping University, the head of the Kuomintang secret service, and the student leaders. The student leaders insisted they could not give the order to return to Peita as the students would then get completely out of control, and they could not be responsible for what happened. The Kuomintang troops continued to insist they could not pass. Early in the afternoon a second large group of students from the universities outside the city appeared in the distance and to the right of the soldiers barricade. The Peita students joyously surged forward. The soldiers swung clubs and heavy leather belts, stray bullets sprayed the air over their heads. Then as the student groups merged into one, the soldiers barricade melted away and they withdrew. Three students had been injured in the melee. The student groups enthused together for a while, and then marched back to Peita for a large meeting. Early in the evening, the guest students left. The Kuomintang brought up thugs to patrol the university, and everything evaporated into peace and quiet.



The next day was a very quiet strike, there was no "movement" or action of any kind. Classes resumed as normal on June 11.

The Chinese press, especially liberal papers like the Ta Kung Pao played a large part in the underlying agitation. They were evidently immediately concerned over the Draper report, which proposed Japanese industrialization as of 1935 as a basic necessity, and encouraged foreign trade. But from this basis in fact they printed incredible distortions and amazing falsehoods. They carried stories, "The U.S. is training in America 10,000 Kamikaze pilots for the Japanese air-force." They printed U.S. revival of the Japanese coast guard to break up intensive smuggling as, "The U.S. is rebuilding the Japanese navy." They reported that "the U.S. has just given the Japanese navy 27 destroyers." For two weeks the newspapers and magazines carried on this barrage of distortion and falsehood. And this was, and probably today still is, believed not only by the Chinese students, but even by university professors and so-called intellectuals. The lack of critical understanding and intellectual honesty on the part of students and their teachers, was very disheartening to watch.

Even men like Dr. Hu Shih, former American ambassador to Washington and present president of Peiping University, did not attack head-on the false-malice involved in many of the distortions, but dismissed it as the "natural exhuberance of youth." One can hardly, however, help but notice that most of the university professors, who laid the foundation, and the irresponsible newspaper editors who encouraged the flames, were hardly youths.

America's bi-partisan foreign policy in China, the program demanded so continuously and insistently by men like Walter Judd, Henry Luce, and William Bullitt, is beginning to pay dividends sooner than its designers expected. At the end of the war there were three sources of power in China: the Kuomintang, the liberals, and the Communists. Some of the liberals even hoped that it might be possible to move toward democracy through the Kuomintang, but most hoped for political democracy through a 2 or 3-party system. But the Kuomintang resisted every effort at any real restriction of its own arbitrary power, which was of course the first essential of democracy. The U.S. gave the Kuomintang support in return for some democratic window-dressing and an intensification of the anti Communist drives. This unprincipled use of fascist allies in order to gain strategic or military advantage, so disgusted Chinese liberals that they turned to Communism in despair. Communism has presented contemporary America in a convincing fashion as the peak of reactionary capitalism. The Chinese press has made very careful notes of Red witch-hunting in America, American treatment of Negroes, anti-labor legislation, etc. What the Chinese press does not say, and what the Communists, by their own presuppositions cannot understand, is that, granted, the U.S. has a bad government now. Still the U.S. still has a very good way to change that government, and that is to educate its people how bad it really is and

Impressions of World Assembly Of Moral Re-Armament

People of Many Countries Fly to Riverside To Meet Under Leadership of Frank Buchman

By Henry Clark Smith
Rector of All Saints, Riverside

Riverside, Calif.: — Beside the beautiful new swimming pool in the front patio of the Mission Inn, I had stopped for a moment to express my praise of it to DeWitt Hutchings, master of the Inn. It was Monday morning, June 7, the first day of the world assembly of Moral Re-armament. Three hundred visitors had gathered from 21 countries. I had stopped to give them a quick "once-over" and get out. Then I spied Helen Moreland, dean of women at University of Southern California and daughter of our late Bishop of Sacramento. I must pay my respects to her and move on. The outcome proved not so simple as that.

"We've been trying to get you by phone," was her answer to my greeting. She introduced me to Mrs. Charles Lewis Slattery, Mr. and Mrs. Garrett Stearly and others. WITNESS readers will recognize Mrs. Slattery as the daughter of the late Bishop William Lawrence and widow of Bishop Slattery. She has given full time to MRA for the past five years. Stearly, son of the late Bishop of Newark, is a travelling representative of MRA having his office in Los Angeles. These two kept me posted throughout the week on backgrounds of people present and what they are trying to achieve.

As I sat down they began pointing out distinguished visitors all around us. In a corner of the patio sat four men having a "quiet time." One of them was Umberto Calosso, secretary of the Saragat-Socialist Workers Party, member of Parliament and editor of Umanita. Next to him was Fausto Pecorari, Christian Democrat Representative from Trieste in the Italian Constituent Assembly. These two men had often seen each other in Italy, but met for the first time when they took the same plane to attend this meeting. Here they were, a Socialist, estranged from Church since the age of 14, "listening to God" in company with a loyal Catholic. In a public speech that afternoon Calosso referred to this as a miracle. He said: "I believe a miracle will come out of this week . . . I suggest proposing to the Italian Parliament a moment of quiet before decisive votes. A Catholic and a Socialist together making such a suggestion to the speaker of the House would be something all Italy would talk about. I see the miracle of how an answering revolution will make its way in Italy. It must start with Pecorari and myself. This morning we took the first step by listening to God together . . . That in itself was a miracle. I have seen another miracle happen this morning when Peter Howard spoke with humility of England. That is the way to the greatness of England."

Mrs. Alicelee Caulfield is the new college worker for Province of the Pacific

At a Rotary meeting on Wednesday I sat with Sir Charles Mander, British Industrialist, past President Rotary International for Great Britain and Ireland. He told the Rotary meeting he had come as an observer of Moral Rearmament to see what it had to offer for management-labor relationships. He spoke of promising meetings he was having with 40 industrialists and a dozen labor men present at MRA. At the end of his visit he made the statement that the MRA way of bringing people together was the "one way to unite management and labor in England."

Throughout the week morning, afternoon and evening programs were put on in the music room of the inn. A different group was responsible for each meeting. From Finland and Scandinavia, from Greece, from Switzerland in the heart of Europe, from the coal fields of Britain, from the key areas of France, Belgium, Italy, Germany and Austria; from the Netherlands, from Indonesia, from Asia and the Americas came people who spoke with great conviction of their faith that wherever free men clarify their ideology and live it out, democracy is re-inforced and the most subborn political, social and industrial problems begin to get solved.

Among the most convincing speakers from England were Lt. Gen. Sir Alexander Hood, director general of medical services of the British army for the past eight years, and A.R.K. Mackenzie, member of the British delegation to United Nations. Said Mackenzie: "The future of the world goes to those who are willing to listen to God and have the courage to obey." From Denmark, Col. H.A.V. Hansen, in charge of orientation for the Danish army, told of his plans for making the army an instrument for supplying moral and spiritual strength for the nation. He told of how army officers trained in the MRA way are going out giving moral and spiritual instruction in communities of the nation.

Klaus and Pauli Snellman, brothers from Finland said: "If we have nothing bigger to offer than Russia has, they will take us over. Our destiny is to bring this ideology to Russia."

Dr. Chen Lifu, minister of organization of the Kuomintang, secretary-general of the Central Political Council, and vice-president of the legislative Yuan, said: "In the spirit of MRA — change, unite, fight — China is standing in the front battle line and waging a life and death struggle with totalitarianism. Whether she succeeds or fails in her efforts will profoundly influence world peace in the future. Many today would try to impose their idea of peace on others, by use of money or by force. But money cannot make people equal, nor can force make them harmonious. Peace can never be attained in that way. If we wish to avert another world catastrophe we must proceed from the bottom up." Other delegates from China were Dr. S. F. Chen, dean of political science, University of Nanking; C. C. Hu, publisher of Southeastern Daily, Shanghai; Dr. Catherine Woo, principal of St. Paul's College, Hongkong.

From all countries came people in conspicuous and key positions in the fields of labor, management, political and economic relations, the army, navy, the Church. These people were not just names. They came because they had something to say. What they had to say was based on personal experience. They spoke with hope and with conviction.

The kinds of experiences from which these people spoke have been dramatized and put on the stage in a play called "The Forgotten Factor" and in a revue entitled "The Good Road." The play is based on an industrial strike situation which is resolved through the young son of the company president learning the meaning of "listening to God" and carrying the idea both to the strike organizer and to his own father. "The Good Road" is a series of scenes carrying the idea of "God-guided life" through families, communities, the world, in the battle against materialism and selfishness. I saw the revue put on at the Redlands Bowl, and "The Forgotten Factor" played in Riverside. Both are done with all the skill of professionals plus the joy of convinced evangelists.

"The Forgotten Factor" had an eight months run in London a year ago, and this past winter has been taken to all the main mining areas of Great Britain. A French caste has shown it in the capitals and leading industrial centers of France and Switzerland. A Finnish caste has been operating in Finland for the past two months. "The Good Road" has had runs in Switzerland, Burma and in the U.S.A. and Canada.

After the final curtain at the Riverside showing of the "Forgotten Factor," Mr. Roy Pinsent, a corporation lawyer from England, made a speech from the stage saying that the two plays must be filmed so that everyone in the world may have the chance to see them. He said that upon his return to England he would make the effort to raise a million dollars to film "The Forgotten Factor" and would make a 10% levy upon his own capital as a contribution to this cause.

I believe the two plays preach powerful sermons for the cause of peace—peace beginning in one's own heart, peace in family relationships, peace in industry, peace in international relations, peace in racial relations. They exhibit actual experiences of what is meant by God-guided living. They dramatize what the delegates to the world assembly of Moral Rearmament were saying to us in their speeches. AIMS TO BECOME A DIOCESE

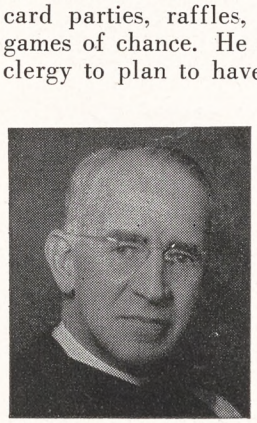
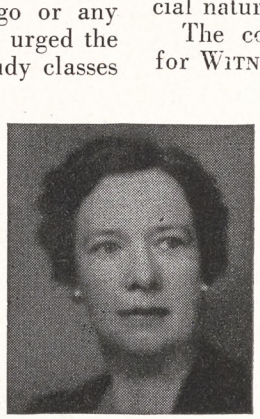
Laramie, Wyo.:—The recently consecrated Bishop Hunter of Wyoming, addressing the convocation held at St. Matthew's Cathedral here, June 15-16, said that it was his hope "to see the district advance from missionary district status to aided diocese to diocese status." He also asked that no Church Fund be raised through card parties, raffles, bingo or any games of chance. He also urged the clergy to plan to have study classes on the Prayer Book in 1949 when "the 400th anniversary of the translation of the Book of Common Prayer into the English language will be celebrated throughout the Anglican communion." He also stated that "as we study the Prayer Book we should realize that tampering with the services is sacrilege. We should never indulge in or allow any deletions or additions. A book which has stood the test of 400 years deserves to be read, studied and used exactly as it is."

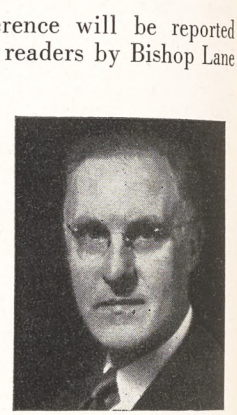
Wyoming, as far as we know, is the first to elect deputies to the 1949 General Convention to be held in San Francisco. The Rev. Henry H. Heard was elected clerical deputy and Mr. A. D. Watson the lay deputy.



LAMBETH CONFERENCE GETS UNDER WAY



London:—Bishops of the Anglican Communion from all over the world are now in London for the first Lambeth Conference since 1930. About 400 are attending. It began with a service at the cathedral at Canterbury on July 1 when the Archbishop of Canterbury preached. The regular sessions of the Conference began immediately after the service.



On July 4 a great service was held in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, at which the Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church, U.S.A., Bishop Henry K. Sherrill, was the preacher.

War-torn London is planning many events of great interest for the visitors, including a reception by the King and Queen, the Prime Minister and the Lord Mayor. However the working schedule of the Conference does not permit many events of a social nature.

The conference will be reported for WITNESS readers by Bishop Lane W. Barton of Eastern Oregon, a WITNESS editor and the chairman of the Advisory Board. Bishop Barton sailed from New York on June 24th. His reports will appear in the issues of July 22, August 5 and 19. Reports of the world assembly of the World Council of Churches will be featured in the September numbers.

BISHOP GILBERT of New York found the pressure of work at home so great that he gave up going to Lambeth; the Church lost one of its great leaders in the death of PROF. ADELAIDE CASE; member of our Editorial Board, FREDERICK C. GRANT, is again honored with a doctorate, this time Doctor of Canon Law from Bishop's University, Lennoxville, Canada

AID FLOOD VICTIMS

Portland, Ore.:—A number of Episcopal Churches here gave shelter to the victims of the recent floods. St. Helen's Hall was a clothing depot for 1800 Vanport College students and faculty. Other refugees here housed in the parish houses of Trinity Church, St. David's, St. Stephen's Cathedral, St. Philip's and All Saints. Other churches in the Portland area gathered clothing, bedding and other necessities for the refugees.

EDITORIALS

Moral Re-Armament

WE ARE glad to present in this number a report of the recent world assembly of Moral Re-Armament, written at our request by the rector at Riverside, California, the Rev. Henry Clark Smith. We have given our opinion of this movement, led by Frank Buchman, on other occasions and find nothing in Mr. Smith's report to make us change our minds. Buchman has for years been successful in getting people prominent in various fields to rally against what he used to call "materialism." Now however, capitalizing upon the prevailing hysteria, his crusade is against "totalitarianism" and the "sinister forces behind the Iron Curtain." His daily conversations with God have given him strange directions in the past. He told newspaper men ten years ago: "I thank God for a man like Adolf Hitler. He built a first line of defense against the anti-Christ of Communism." In 1940 A. P. Herbert in the British Parliament charged that the Buchmanites were Nazi agents. He stated that he had in his possession many letters which supported his accusation, several of which he read to Parliament. One was written by an elderly clergyman who wrote: "Two members of the Group (as MRA was then called—Ed. Note) called on me with what seemed to be a harmful leaflet on what they called Moral Re-armament, demanding that I, as a clergyman, should give it my blessing. I at once refused. One of them said to me in a cow-eyed, mooing fashion, 'If it was God's will that Hitler should conquer, would you not submit?'" Another letter was from a Scottish clergyman: "It was my unhappy lot to have among the members of my church a millowner who claims to be the person who brought Dr. Buchman to Scotland. This local Fuehrer of the Oxford Group demanded that I should refrain from any criticism of Hitler in my church or from the use of any language in my public affairs which might call for his defeat or destruction. Unless I gave an understanding to refrain from such language and unless I would clarify my attitude toward Hitler, he would find it necessary to interrupt public worship if criticism of Hitler was made and, second, he would leave the church, which, thank God, he did." These were but two of several letters that Herbert produced to support his charge that "some sort of relationship exists between the Group and the Nazi leadership."

That Buchman and his followers—some innocently no doubt—continue along the same line is revealed in Mr. Smith's report. A top leader of the Kuomintang, Chen Li-fu, considered this meeting of sufficient importance to leave the struggle at home in order to win allies by telling the assembled Buchmanites that "China is standing in the front battle line and waging a life and death struggle with totalitarianism." Dr. Chen, we think, spoke the truth. But he, as minister of organization of the Kuomintang and as vice-president of the Yuan, is on the side of totalitarianism, waging ruthless war against the democratic forces of his country, as Christian Chinese students in the U.S. recently stated (see page ten).

A "loyal Catholic" and a secretary of the "workers party" of Italy have little difficulty in persuading themselves that God has made them brothers in the war against "totalitarianism"; the Brothers Snellman from Finland can use the occasion to denounce Russia and to declare that it is only MRA that can save their country from being gobbled up.

It is the same old story: retired generals and admirals, government officials and their ladies, the social elite and the wealthy, serving as window-dressing for a world organization which now, as in the past, stands, in the name of God, for fascism.

"QUOTES"

HUMAN problems are not economic. They are moral. They cannot be solved through immoral measures. They could be solved through a God-Controlled Democracy, or perhaps I should say a Theocracy. And these problems could be solved through a God-Controlled fascist dictatorship. Think what it would mean if men like Hitler surrendered to God. Or Mussolini. Or any dictator. Through such a man, God could control a nation over night, and solve every last bewildering problem. Spain has taught us what Godless Communism brings. Who would have imagined that nuns would be running naked in the streets? I thank God for a man like Adolf Hitler. He built a first line of defense against the anti-Christ of Communism.

many things; a top expert—perhaps the top expert—in the field of religious education; the first woman to be a full professor at an Episcopal seminary; a champion of equality and justice, inside the Church and out. But it was her rare ability to be a friend to a multitude of people, of all stations and ranks, that set her apart. She loved people—all sorts of people—and she loved them for their faults as well as their virtues, since she knew that anyone genuinely human has both. Hundreds of people, young and old, when faced with a problem said: "I'll talk it over with Adelaide" and no one ever did so without being refreshed and strengthened.

May we always remember, with thankfulness, the comforts we have received from our friendship with Adelaide Case. Look upon her, O Lord, with mercy and prepare us to die with her confidence and hope.

China Correspondent

THERE are many hot-spots on the earth's surface these days. But of them all there is none more important, in our judgment, than China. Yet the drama now being staged there is hardly mentioned in American newspapers. What reports we are allowed to read picture the United States as an ally of the Chinese people, pouring out our billions to aid them in their struggle for democracy. We are therefore happy to announce the appointment of Mr. Paul B. Denlinger, a missionary of the Episcopal Church who is now living in Peiping, as our China correspondent. A reading of his story on page three of this number, and other reports that will follow, will we hope help to correct the misconceptions of the situation in China held by most Americans, largely because they are not allowed the facts.

Is Moderation the Answer?

by Edmund F. Souder

Rector of St. Mark's, Honolulu

IT WAS a conference on Christian sociology at which clergy and laity were to consider how the spirit of our master might better be embodied in American social relations. As three of the conferees, all priests, were unpacking their bags, one of them produced a quart of whiskey, a drink of which he proffered his brethren. As an introduction to serious study by Christians as to how to elevate the moral tone of the community it seemed to suggest the words, "Physician, heal thy self!"

Anyone who has spent his life as a member of the Episcopal Church is well aware that many of our people pride themselves on a liberal attitude towards the use of alcoholic liquor, and are likely to condemn as narrow the position of the total abstainer. During prohibition days some of us were offered homebrew even in rectories!

As, however, one ponders the prevalence and power of drinking in contemporary American society, the question arises whether it does not present to the Christian conscience a problem in moral theology worthy of serious reflection. Here in Honolulu liquor stores seem ever on the increase: we now have two of them within a stone's-throw of St. Mark's, and that despite protests. How seldom one sees a moving picture in which alcoholic drinks are not consumed somewhere on the way through! Apparently to movie directors a picture is not a picture without drinks!

Many of our periodicals are flooded with expensive and expansive liquor ads. Not so long ago one nationally-known magazine, showing pictures of a prominent wedding, considered that its million readers would be interested to know that, among the bride's presents, were "a glass martini mixer," though, unfortunately, "no real cocktail shaker." In preparation for holy matrimony these young Americans of culture had a party at which guests "drank Scotch with champagne chasers," and at the wedding thirty cases of champagne were consumed until, finally, those present were "reduced to Rhine wine." Later, the bride and groom, "tired and thirsty" (sic!), ducked out and "split a bottle of champagne."

To be sure, this was a "society wedding," but drinking by "the upper crust" would hardly account for the 190,000,000 gallons of hard liquor consumed by Americans in 1945 (see John Gunther, Inside the U.S.A.). It appears that we spend seven times as much on liquor as we do on religion, which indicates a strange conception of relative values. Drinking must be pretty widespread among us to explain the disturbing words of Dr. Selden D. Bacon, director of the Connecticut State Clinic for Alcoholics, who has declared that "alcoholics require more police time than any other duty except caring for parks and traffic." That such conditions are in no way peculiar to Connecticut was indicated in a recent Honolulu newspaper story which revealed that "excessive drinking is called a major factor in nearly half the traffic deaths in Honolulu, in many divorces granted here, and in the placing of children in institutions and foster homes."

Such facts, which can be multiplied, present the thoughtful Christian with some ugly questions, though some among us tend to shrug them off with the impatient comment—"Alcoholics ought to be cured or shot! Why don't they learn to drink like gentlemen." Yet, the fact is that nobody starts as an alcoholic. Everyone starts as a "social drinker," like the young woman in this city, who began taking her cocktails with friends, but now brings her whiskey home and consumes it alone. Furthermore, many of the tragedies which are constantly happening, often come to those who are only "moderate" drinkers. The young mother coming home from a party may have been quite sober, but the man at the wheel had drunk just enough to wrap the car around a telegraph pole, and two little children were left without a mother. The GI who got into a shop at night and wantonly smashed $1000 worth of property was no "alcoholic" but only a "social" drinker having a jolly evening! Such, also, was the undergraduate who ended his college (and earthly) career when he returned to his dormitory a bit foggy, and contrived to fall out of his fourth-story window.

SOME time ago I picked up two hitch-hiking sailor boys. One was sober, but the other said rather thickly, "I'm ashamed of myself, Father, but I am homesick, and this is an escape." The parson tried to suggest gently that there are other more satisfactory "escapes" from homesickness for lonely sailors, such as a church dance, a good movie or a book, none of which would necessitate that subsequent alkalizer, so assiduously recommended for those who "over-indulge."

As a priest of the Church, my mind recalls through the years an unbroken stream of God's dear children whose lives have been blighted or broken by liquor. One remembers the young husband who, though loving his wife and children, nevertheless pawned her wedding ring for another drink, and the attractive English girl, raised in a convent school, whose husband, under the influence of "one more drink" became so jealous at a dance that he choked her fiercely. Finally, heart-broken, she died in child-birth. She had hoped that a child would change him, but within a week of her death he had the audacity to say, "I don't believe in abstinence: a man should learn how to drink."

If we are honest with ourselves we know, too, that "social" drinking does not make any easier the discipline of our "inordinate affections," and many a young woman from a Christian home has found that she has a baby on the way because her normal moral principles had been insensitized by a cocktail or two or three. Such things in America today are not isolated happenings.

The question, therefore, presents itself unbidden to the Christian conscience—wherein is "moderate" drinking to be preferred to total abstinence? I may feel that I can take a drink and stop. Well and good, but how many thousands cannot and do not! Drinking, some say, does them no harm. That is the most anyone can claim, but untold numbers of people are immeasurably harmed. I have yet to meet a man or woman whose Christian character has been improved by liquor!

If, at this point, any brother in the Lord wishes to quote Scripture, and remind me that our Lord at Cana changed water into wine, and in the blessed sacrament has made wine the channel of his life to us, may one who has been privileged almost daily through the years to offer the Church's eucharist, reply that the sipping of the sour country wine of Galilee is not the problem of our social drinker in a cocktail lounge, nor does a thankful love of the sacrament of the altar seem logically to commit an American Christian even to "moderate" drinking of hard liquor, if he feels, as his brother's keeper, that such drinking causes his brother to stumble.

As one ponders the billions spent by Americans on intoxicating liquor in this day of world revolution and human misery, there seems to be an unpleasant parallel between our situation and that in the late Roman Empire. What Roman patrician, as he feasted at parties on the Palatine Hill, and lay around the magnificent Baths of Caracalla, could have imagined that barbarian Goths would bring that glory to an end. Similarly, the protagonists of American "free enterprise" cannot conceive that what appears to be the American century of world power, may prove to have been an age of decadence.

In any case, we know as Christians that "God is not dead," and his moral order is still in operation. It should, therefore, be clear to us that "security" in this very insecure world must lie, not in atom bombs buried, with our gold, in caves of the earth, but in a more humble effort to grow into the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ.

"Blessed are they that keep his testimonies, and seek him with their whole heart."

According to the National Temperance and Prohibition Council, the three magazines, Fortune, Time and Life, owned largely by Henry Luce, son of a Presbyterian missionary, receive a total of about $8,000,000 a year for the advertising of liquor.

Chinese Students in America Condemn Kuomintang

Meeting in a Conference They Affirm that U. S. Is Giving Support to Reaction and Corruption

Medford, N. J.:—Chinese students from colleges all over the United States and eastern Canada attended a week-long conference here, June 14-20, under the auspices of the Chinese Students' Christian Association, and at the close roundly condemned the Kuomintang government and the United States for prolonging the civil war in their country by supporting it.

The resolutions declare that "the present struggle in China is not a mere war between two political parties but the continuation of the people's struggle against agricultural serfdom, bureaucratic monopoly and foreign control" and since "the present government (Kuomintang) represents essentially the small minority forces against this people's struggle" therefore "we believe that only by a concerted effort of all classes through a coalition government can the struggle of the Chinese people be successful."

As for the part being played by the United States in the China civil war, the students declare that: "whereas American military, financial and economic aid has encouraged the corrupt and reactionary elements in the government in Nanking to renew the civil war, and whereas the U. S. government has recently further intervened on behalf of these elements to prolong the civil war against the interests and desires of the Chinese people; therefore be it resolved that we are firmly against any foreign intervention and any foreign aid during the civil war period except those which can surely and directly benefit the people."

They also warn Americans that the U. S. policy toward Japan is leading toward another world war, in which China will be the battlefield, by "reviving the strength of Japanese monopoly industrialists and thereby directly blocks the industrial development of China and other Far Eastern nations."

As for the role played by Churches, these Chinese students declare that some leaders of the Church are "using the Church as a tool of political forces blocking the inevitable social change in China" and they call upon mission boards and all Christian forces in China "to orientate their role in the emerging China in accordance with the aspirations and needs of the people, dissociating themselves from forces of internal and external repression."

Orthodox Churches

Moscow (RNS): — Full relations have been reestablished between the Russian Orthodox Church and the Orthodox Church of Poland, with the latter given complete autonomy. The announcement came after a delegation of Polish leaders called upon Patriarch Alexei here. It heals a breach of 30 years standing.

Lambeth Conference

London:—The Archbishop of Canterbury announced on June 28th that all sessions of the Lambeth Conference, except the opening and closing services, will be private with no statements issued until the close of the conference. It opened at Lambeth Palace on July 1 and is expected to close on August 8th.

The Archbishop was asked by reporters if the conference would issue a statement on Communism and he replied that the subject would doubtless be considered under the heading of the Christian doctrine of man, but he declined to comment further. He also stated that the newly-created Church of South India was not invited to take part in the conference since it does not belong to the Anglican communion.

John Yamazaki Honored

Los Angeles:—The Rev. John M. Yamazaki was honored on June 27th at St. Mary's Church here upon the 35th anniversary of his ordination. The sermon was preached by Bishop Robert B. Gooden, close friend and staunch supporter of Dr. Yamazaki, and another life-long friend, Bishop Reifsnider read the service. Since his graduation from the Berkeley Divinity School in Connecticut in 1913, Dr. Yamazaki has served at St. Mary's, developing a flourishing congregation, church school and youth organization. In the community he has served and helped organize many institutions. He has labored unceasingly for the Americanization of his people and has been one of the best mediums to interpret American ideals. During the wartime evacuation, resettlement and the return home, his work has been outstanding.

Working with him faithfully these many years has been his wife, Mary Tsune Yamazaki. They have four children: the Rev. John H. M. Yamazaki, now vicar of St. Mary's who also is a chaplain in the army reserve; Dr. James N. Yamazaki, resident doctor at Children's Hospital, Cincinnati, who was a captain in the army during the war and was taken prisoner in Belgium; Peter T. Yamazaki, who was an officer in the military intelligence during the war and continued to serve as a war department civilian in Japan, and Louise H. Yamazaki, who is a social case worker in this city.

Dr. Yamazaki was presented with a new automobile following the anniversary service.

Oberlin, O. (RNS) :—Hope that the United Church of Christ may be organized in 1949 from the merger of the Evangelical and Reformed and the Congregational Christian Churches was freely expressed here by delegates to the General Council of the Congregationalists. A GREATER GENERATION

By Ernest M. Ligon

Two great truths are set forth in this significant book; first, that human nature has potentials far beyond its present stature, and second, that the philosophy of Jesus—plus the method of science—can achieve a far greater proportion of that potential.

There is abundant evidence, writes Dr. Ligon, that human nature is not more than one-third efficient. If all the principles now known to science were used, a far greater generation could be developed in terms of strength of character, spiritual depth, etc.

The Role of Science

The first part of the book describes the role of science in human betterment as carried out by Dr. Ligon in the Union College Character Research Project. This book is based on the outstanding work done by this project.

The Role of Religion

Part II takes up the indispensable role of religion in achieving man's potential in a greater generation. There are chapters on the need for a truly Christian philosophy if a strong character is to be achieved; on the value of worship as a source of power. The methods now in use throughout the country which lead to the cooperation of church, home and school in character education are outlined.

Ernest M. Ligon is Professor of Psychology at Union College, Schenectady, New York, and the author of THE PSYCHOLOGY OF CHRISTIAN PERSONALITY and THEIR FUTURE IS NOW. $2.50 approved by a vast majority. However a new basis for union has been approved and it is hoped that a 75% approval will be reached by January, 1949.

Miss Helen Kenyon, newly-elected moderator, said, "It is far more important that I be the last moderator of the Congregational Christian Churches than that I am the first woman moderator."

Mundt Bill Backed

Chicago (RNS):—Support of the Mundt-Nixon Bill, which was passed by the House of Representatives but did not reach the Senate, was supported by the Catholic War Veterans, meeting here in national convention. One delegate, Sigismund Sendlak of this city, declared that "in urging enactment of this bill our organization is presenting itself to the country as a Red-baiting outfit. Our attitude is as negative as that of the House Un-American Activities Committee. This bill is potentially destructive of our civil rights."

Richard McTigue, New York County commander, said that the bill was so loosely phrased that Catholics themselves might be placed under surveillance because of their spiritual allegiance to the Pope.

Nevertheless the bill was approved by a decided majority of the delegates. Also Anthony Forbes, New York attorney who was a champion of the Mundt Bill during the convention, was elected national commander of the organization.

Radio Audition

New York:—An audition before invited guests of the first radio program under National Council auspices was given at the Mutual station on June 29th. The program will be launched over a nationwide hookup on Friday, October 1, at 8 p.m. eastern standard time. A very handsomely printed portfolio has been sent to vestrymen explaining the plan for the first 13 weeks of broadcasting and urging their support so that it may be extended following this initial period. Cyrano de Bergerac is to be the first of the "Great Scenes from Great Plays," which is the title of the half-hour program. Walter Hampden will play Cyrano and Basil Rathbone is another famous actor in the cast.

Laymen Meet

Avon Park, Fla.:—Bishop Louttit, Layman W. Ted Gannaway of Charleston, S. C. and Mr. Morton O. Nace, executive secretary of the diocese were the leaders at a laymen's conference of the diocese of South Florida, held here June 12-13. About 100 men representing 42 congregations attended.

International Affair

Watertown, N. Y.: — Trinity Church here was the host recently to the annual international clericus, with 19 clergy from the Canadian diocese of Ontario the guests of the first district clergy of the diocese of Central New York. The address was by the Rev. Eric Veal, curate at St. John's, Ogdensburg, N. Y., who was until two months ago a priest in the diocese of Monmouth, Wales. He told of the training received by an English clergyman and gave a summary of conditions in the Church in the British Isles.

Hubbard Consecration

New York:—The Presiding Bishop has set August 24 as the date for the consecration of the Rev. Russell S. Hubbard to be the suffragan bishop of Michigan. The service will take place at St. Saviour's, Bar Harbor, Maine, where Mr. Hubbard is rector. Care of Aged

New York: — Thirty superintendents, board members and others interested in the care of older people met for a two-day conference on "life within homes for the aged" at Seabury House, June 15-16. It was sponsored by the department of social relations of the National Council and was attended by representatives of 19 homes for the aged in 10 dioceses.

Gift to Mission

Warfield, Va.:—Since the National Council closed the Bishop Tuttle School in Raleigh, N. C., the chapel in the building has not been needed. However the memorials with which it was furnished have been given to the mission here. The archdeacon, the Ven. Odell G. Harris, is assembling them to duplicate as near as possible the chapel at the school.

Oppose Conscription

Philadelphia:—The Friends Service Committee has sent a statement to all Congressmen declaring that they are irrevocably opposing conscription. The committee also said that it stood ready to offer "ministry and aid" to any person who objects to conscription and war on religious or conscientious grounds even though the objection might take the form of non-compliance with the law.

Goes to Germany

Rochester, N. Y.:—Mrs. Harper Sibley, Episcopalian of this city, has been appointed by the war department to serve for 90 days as an advisor to the U.S. military government in Germany. With other educators and social workers, she leaves Washington on July 14 where she will serve as a member of a team to aid in restoration of cultural, religious and social institutions.

New Property

Hannibal, Mo.:—Trinity Church here has bought two apartment houses to provide for expansion and continued development. It gives the parish the most desirable and convenient location for church work in the city. During the rectorship of the Rev. Lee W. Heaton the church has been renovated and redecorated; a heating system bought; new windows and a new reredos have been installed. With it all the membership has increased; support for extra parochial objects greatly increased and also funds added to the parish endowment.

then change it at the polls. Aside from a political democracy, the only way to change a bad government is revolution. It is certainly hard to educate people, but how much harder and more costly is a revolution! At this point all Communists are blind.

years at the outset, but that the government that replaces it shall surely be Communist. And this government will really be Communist. It will not be liberal or socialist. It will be Communist. It will interpret the U.S. entirely in terms of its own presuppositions. It will be both critically and uncritically opposed to the U.S. and unfriendly. It shall be filled with admiration and affection for Soviet Russia, perhaps even to the point of not criticizing her incursions on Chinese territory. This school term 1947-1948 saw the conversion of large blocks of teachers and intellectuals to support of the Communist program; and the students have likewise vociferously followed suit. Loose talk in America about America's need for bases and strategic areas, regardless of other considerations, and frantic attempts to back the Kuomintang with money and military supplies, have only speeded the disintegration. American money is being shamelessly wasted in order to obtain exactly opposite results.

Europe has a democratic foundation. If America could ever divorce herself from her capitalistic preferences enough to support the genuinely democratic movements in these countries, both America and Europe could profit by the experience, for political democracy could be preserved. There is a place for U.S. money in Western Europe; but America has no future in China. China, without any basis for a real democracy, and driven to despair by American duplicity has chosen to become a Communist country, and surely no one could stop her. For that reason, America's place in China is limited to the very near future. After that comes another iron curtain which American stupidity has surely helped to build.

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

MR. P. L. GEORGE
Layman of New York

The reasons given by officials of the World Council of Churches for turning down Mr. Myron Taylor as a consultant at the Amsterdam meeting are a bit amusing. The statement as printed in the June 3 WITNESS states that Churches "desire to accomplish this (peace) task in complete independence" and further that they "should not be identified with any secular power or policies."

Yet I understand that Mr. John Foster Dulles, who is consultant on foreign affairs for the Republican party, is to be a leader at Amsterdam. Do officers of the World Council contend that he is "not identified with any secular power or policies"?

Yes indeed I most emphatically agree with the Quaker statement with reference to American-Russian Relations (WITNESS, June 10). Let us leave no stones unturned in this endeavor. Let us have peace and let us work to this end.

ANSWER: Thirty-two similar endorsements of the Quaker statement have been received. We will be glad to receive others after which we will sent the notes and cards to the American Friends Service Committee.

I hope you will accept $2 for my renewal. I am a widow of a priest on a pension of $25 a month for myself and $23.56 for my boys. I want to have the WITNESS and trust you can continue to send it. I have no steady job but earn a bit on the side. There is no need to tell you of the high cost of living today. Your article in the April 29th issue tells the story.

THE REV. KENNETH FORBES
Clergyman of Philadelphia

Sing a Te Deum for the demise of the Mundt-Nixon Bill! The forces that accomplished this now ought to begin organized work and get into high gear after the elections to kill and bury the "Un-american Activities Committee," which has been the fountain-head of outrage even without a Mundt Bill. Isn't this especially urgent since the Supreme Court has apparently given them the green light in its decision on Barsky et al?

Our Communion

"Our communion is no longer English or British or Anglo-Saxon . . . But it is still called the Anglican, the English Communion; and though the word is no longer altogether appropriate for this diverse family of autonomous Churches, yet it bears witness to a truth of the past and to a truth of the present . . . Every one of the Churches here represented traces its ancestry back to the Church of these islands, and so to Canterbury and to St. Augustine . . . To that tradition of Christian experience which by the circumstances of history has come to bear the name of Anglican, we are united in a common loyalty of gratitude and devotion . . . By its nature it looks beyond itself to seek that visible unity of the Church of Christ which has been lost and is to be re-won."

Bishops at Lambeth at Work Behind Closed Doors

Equal Status for Women in the Ministry One of the Petitions Being Considered

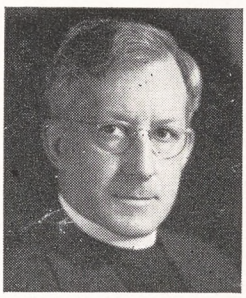
London: — Three hundred and thirty bishops of the Anglican Communion from all over the world are hard at work behind closed doors at the Lambeth Conference, with no word of their deliberations expected before the second week in August. The Archbishop of Canterbury, at the opening session laid great stress on secrecy, and emphasized that he expected no leaks to the press. There has been but one public affair, the opening service held at the Cathedral at Canterbury. The garden party at Lambeth Palace here the following day, attended by the bishops and their wives, and the welcoming ceremonies, both said to be colorful affairs, were strictly private.

The secrecy, coupled with a severe shortage of newsprint here, have resulted in a lack of interest in the Conference as far as the general public is concerned. However Church people are fully aware of its significance because of the wide publicity given to it by the Church press of all denominations. English secular journalists, as a matter of fact, have expressed surprise at the demand for Conference news on the part of American newspapers.

Most of the more than 300 bishops in the procession at the opening service at Canterbury wore crimson convocation robes and academic hoods. The world-wide nature of the affair was brought out by the presence in the procession of three Japanese bishops, several Chinese, a half dozen from India and about the same number of Negroes from Africa and Jamaica.

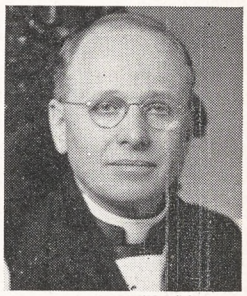
The music was beyond description, especially the fanfare of trumpets which our correspondent declares was "the best I ever hope to hear; the kind that makes you expect the seraphim any moment."

The Archbishop, preceded by the tanned and white-haired Dean of Canterbury, as usual sat on Augustine's stone chair before the high altar to read his message of welcome. It was an impressive occasion. He opened with a very lovely tribute to Archbishop Temple who undoubtedly would have dominated this Conference had he lived. (See Editorial.)



It is significant that very few of the bishops here have ever attended a Lambeth Conference before—not even Archbishop Fisher. There are but three of the 78 bishops from the U. S. who were present when the last Conference met in 1930, and there are hardly more than 20 or 25 in the entire Conference who were present then. And it is true also that the great men who led previous conferences are nearly all gone—Headlam, Gore, Temple, to mention perhaps the three greatest.

Despite the Conference's essentially Anglican character, its relevance to the cause of church unity is recognized on all sides. The Church of England has for decades taken the lead in seeking Christian unity. It considers itself to be carrying on the early Catholic traditions and doctrines but also regards itself as Protestant. Hence Anglicans have long cherished the hope of healing divisions in Christendom and this Lambeth Conference will spend much time in discussing the subject.



Commenting on the Conference the London Times declared: "A commission appointed by Archbishop of Canterbury has frankly admitted that the Church of England's task is now nothing less than the conversion of England. There could be no better preparation for this enterprise than contact with leaders of those sister Churches which are daily engaged in a tough but extraordinarily successful struggle amid hostile surroundings. . . . Anglicans have always hoped to contribute to healing divisions of Christendom and the imminence of the First Assembly of the World Council of Churches at Amsterdam in August makes this perennial question particularly pressing."

Church people of all denominations were eagerly watching the Conference's attitude towards the United Church of South India. In wider circles, the Conference's findings on Communism are likely to create the greatest public interest.

A minor sensation was caused by a circular sent to all attending bishops by the Anglo-Catholic Council protesting against participation in the Conference of Bishop Ernest Barnes of Birmingham. Bishop Barnes was the author of a controversial book entitled "The Rise of Christianity," which was severely criticized by the Archbishop of Canterbury as containing heretical doctrines. However, it was certain that the circular would have no effect in disqualifying Barnes from attending the Conference.

A service of Holy Communion at St. Paul's Cathedral illustrated the international character of the Conference. Bishop Henry K. Sherrill, Presiding Bishop of the Church in the U. S., preached the sermon. The Archbishop of Canterbury was assisted in the service by Bishop Michel Hinsuke Yashiro of Japan and Bishop Philip Lindel Tsen of China.

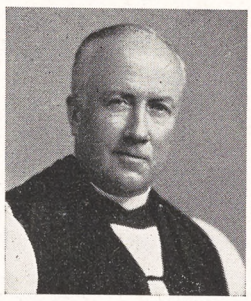
In his sermon, Bishop Sherrill said: "Our world can be redeemed under guidance of God only by the most clearsighted sacrificial thought and action. Not since the disintegration of the Roman Empire has the Christian Church faced such a world situation as today. There can be no peace based on justice until men and nations understand there is universal moral law."

Appealing for freedom from "pride and prejudice" within the Church, Bishop Sherrill asked: "Why say we believe in one Church when the Christian Church is as broken as our modern world?"

The Conference was asked to give women equal status with men in the ministry of the Church. Although no news came out of the Conference hall, various lobbying groups made known what requests they were sending in. A memorial on equal status for women, including their admission to the priesthood, was submitted by the Anglican Group for the Ordination of Women to the Ministry.

The group proposed "that the diaconate of women be given the same scope, functions, and status as that of men, including recognition of it as ministry to the whole Church rather than mainly to women and children; that it be regarded equally with the diaconate of men as a stepping-stone to higher orders of the ministry; and that full ministry be declared open to women on the same terms as men—the ministry of men and women being merged into a common priesthood and a common diaconate."

It was argued in the memorial that "the strength of opposition to women in the ministry lies less in theology than in psychological prejudice inherited from primitive times. Those most opposed to the admission of women to the ministry are frequently most enthusiastic regarding the inspiration that women afford to men from behind the scenes. But why should not women be permitted to inspire the world openly and directly?"



The memorial asserted it was "scarcely creditable" that a purely male ministry, "elderly and overburdened," was likely to produce "fire and spiritual revival that alone will save the present generation."

Referring to the large number of women who have drifted away from the Church, the memorial stated: "It is hard to believe that the bulk of numerous sections of women that have drifted completely away from the Church can ever be recalled save by other women."

Meanwhile 82 of the wives of bishops attending the Conference are holding a meeting of their own—quite as private and "off the record" as those of the bishops. They are being held at High Leigh, Hoddesdon, Hertfordshire on the theme "The Church in the modern world and our contribution to it as women."

"Women are campaigning, ringing doorbells, trying to stir the whole Church, and in so doing, their own communities. They are saying that war is not the answer, and that succeeding generations must be saved from it. Therefore, the United Nations must go on to success. This is the voice of women from all over our country speaking to you as it will speak to the leaders of the United States."

It was disclosed that members of every major Protestant denomination, as well as Roman Catholics and Jews, have signed cards indicating support of the peace campaign, and that plans are being studied for similar campaigns by women's groups in Argentina, England, Canada, India, Mexico, Norway and Turkey. The peace pledge cards call for support of the United Nations and Christian movements for world order, establishment of civil rights and brotherhood, extension of human rights and economic justice, and "renewed dedication to peace through prayer and church work."

Also attending the Lambeth Conference are Bishop Keeler of Minnesota; Bishop Dandridge of Tennessee and Bishop Tucker of Ohio

WOMEN ENROLL FOR PEACE

Lake Success, N. Y. (RNS):—Close to 400,000 women have enrolled to date in a nation-wide peace campaign launched last April by the United Council of Church Women, it was announced here. The campaign is intended to mobilize 1,000,000 women for peace.

The announcement was made by Mrs. Harper Sibley, president of the Council, who headed a delegation which called upon Andrew Cordier, Executive Assistant to the General Secretary of the United Nations.

"The crusade for peace under the caption, 'Act Now — Mobilize for Peace,' has not been undertaken lightly," Mrs. Sibley declared.

PROTESTANT RUNS LEPER COLONY

Paris (RNS):—The only leper colony in France is run by a Protestant clergyman in what was once a Roman Catholic monastery located south of Lyons in the Rhone Valley. Thirty lepers are patients at Chartreuse de Valbonne, as the colony is known, and they live in what were formerly monks' cells which have been rearranged as bedroom-studies. Pastor Albert Delord, 35 years old, runs the colony with the assistance of his wife. He is the son of the late Pastor Phillippe Delord, who founded Chartreuse in 1926, after serving for many years as a missionary in Indo-China.

Major Denominations To Unite In a National Body

National Council of Churches Will Merge Major National Interdenominational Bodies

By Lemuel Petersen

Lake Geneva, Wis.:—Organization of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in American has been set for the spring of 1950, it was reported here at the annual meeting of the Association of Council Secretaries. Some 200 executives and staff members of national, state, and city councils of churches from 31 states, District of Columbia, and Hawaii met here for a six-day conference on the theme "Man's Disorder and God's Design in the Community."

In addition to addresses and discussions they heard reports on developments in interchurch work throughout the nation. The National Council of Churches will merge the major national interdenominational bodies, including the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, International Council of Religious Education, the Home Missions Council of North America, National Protestant Council on Higher Education, and United Stewardship Council. The new body will include the major denominations of the United States in one interdenominational organization.

A national church conference on family life is scheduled to be held in Cincinnati, Ohio, Nov. 29-30, it was reported. The conference will precede the biennial meeting of the Federal Council. It will use the findings of the National Conference on Family Life held recently at the White House.

A plan to hold 600 one-day, county-wide conferences on the "family farm" within three years was discussed. The purpose will be to develop a Protestant program for the family farm.

Dr. H. Paul Douglass, director of the committee for cooperative field research, New York, was the major speaker. He gave four lectures on the conference theme.

Douglass pointed out that neighboring churches are usually competitive. He urged each local church to act toward other congregations in a Christian manner as individuals are expected to behave. This means, he said, "Thou shalt not harm thy neighbor church. Thou shalt love thy neighbor church as thy own."

Giving local application to the theme of the first Assembly of the World Council of Churches which will be held next month at Amsterdam, Douglass declared that Church cooperation "across the street is fully as significant as any of the movements for the unification of the Christian Church on a world scale. Here the Church can begin immediately to practice ecumenicity; here it can do something about its division. To fail here is to fail everywhere."

Douglass advocated that neighboring churches work together in certain common projects and events, such as social action, civic betterment, religious education of children, union services, house-to-house religious surveys, common public relations policy and programs of publicity, adult education, youth work, women's work, and recreation.

"The churches belong to the community," declared Roswell P. Barnes, associate general secretary of the Federal Council, in an address. "The churches are concerned with the welfare of the community as a whole and of every group in it. Therefore, where there is tension between groups the churches should be bridges. Where the interests of any group involve considerations of justice the churches must declare the facts and take their stand."

One million American church laymen and lay women have been trained in recent years in evangelistic methods and "have gone out to carry the message of Christ into the unchurched homes of the community," according to Rev. H. H. McConnell, field secretary of the Department of Evangelism of the Federal Council.

"The preaching of the word of God, the Christian home, the church school, preaching missions, the press, the radio, the printed word, advertising—all should be employed to make known to the hearts of men the redeeming grace of God in Jesus Christ," he said in describing the methods which can be used for evangelism.

UNIQUE CONFIRMATION IN MICHIGAN

Otter Lake, Mich.:—It is not uncommon for friends to be baptized at the same time and later confirmed at the same service, but it is seldom that 45 years elapses between the two ceremonies. Walter Berridge, aged 79, and Bert Hemingway, aged 77, were presented to Bishop Emrich for confirmation on June 20, together with nine other persons, by the Rev. Charles D. Braidwood, in charge of St. John's here. These two pioneers of the community were baptized in 1903 by the Rev. W. S. Sayres, then general missionary of the diocese. Mr. Sayre had come for the funeral of Mrs. Bert Hemingway and the two men, brothers-in-law, together with five other members of the family were baptized before he left.

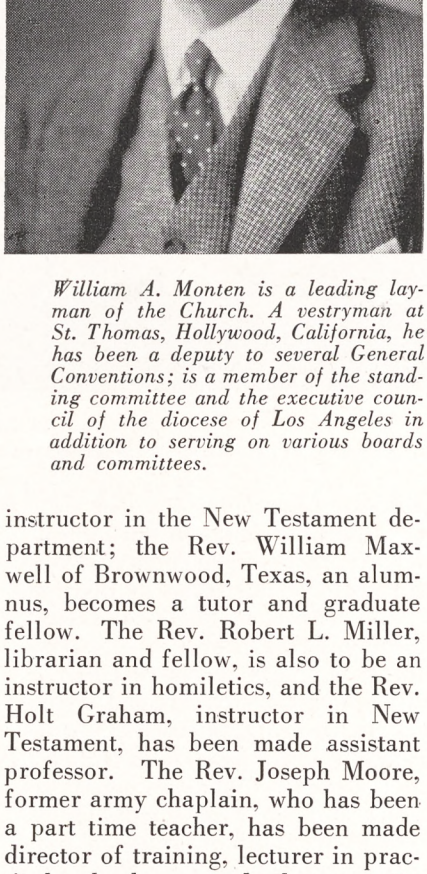
For years, Mr. Hemingway and Mr. Berridge have intended to be confirmed, but something always seemed to prevent their joining the class for instruction. This year they shook hands on a mutual promise to attend the instructions together and be confirmed.

During the instruction period, Mr. Braidwood and the class learned much from the two gentlemen. They could well remember when the church was built, and told many stories of its beginnings. They reported, among other things, that St. John's very nearly was organized under another Communion. The pioneers were of many denominations and therefore took a vote as to which Communion to join. Another denomination had strong support, but the Episcopalians won the vote and all the others helped to establish St. John's.

Bishop Emrich commented that he thought this was one case where Confirmation was not "rushed into," but was "the result of mature judgment."



SCHOLARSHIP AWARD

New York:—The department of social relations of the National Council has awarded a scholarship to the Rev. William B. Spofford Jr., executive secretary of the Episcopal League for Social Action. He plans to enter the Institute of Social Work of the University of Michigan, located in Detroit, to commence two years' study of social work leading to a master's degree. It is the first scholarship granted by the department to a clergyman. The award was made by a committee consisting of Dean Walter Pettit of the Social Work School of New York, the Rev. Arthur Lichtenberger of the General Seminary faculty, the Rev. Thomas Bigham Jr. of the General Seminary and the Rev. Arnold Purdie of the staff of the department. Accompanying the announcement was a statement that "some dioceses are seeking trained clergy for their departments of Christian social relations. . . . In diversified fields the demand for such priests is greater than the supply."

Mr. Spofford will attend for the most part evening classes and will continue as secretary of the E.L.S.A.

SEABURY-WESTERN CHANGES

Evanston, Ill.:—A number of additions and promotions on the teaching staff of Seabury-Western Seminary was announced last week by President Alden Drew Kelley. The Rev. Jules Moreau, graduate student at General Seminary, has been made instructor in the New Testament department; the Rev. William Maxwell of Brownwood, Texas, an alumnus, becomes a tutor and graduate fellow. The Rev. Robert L. Miller, librarian and fellow, is also to be an instructor in homiletics, and the Rev. Holt Graham, instructor in New Testament, has been made assistant professor. The Rev. Joseph Moore, former army chaplain, who has been a part time teacher, has been made director of training, lecturer in practical theology and lecturer in social work, with the rank of assistant professor. The rural emphasis has been strengthened by the appointment of the Rev. Dargan Butt as instructor in town and country Church work.

William A. Monten is a leading layman of the Church. A vestryman at St. Thomas, Hollywood, California, he has been a deputy to several General Conventions; is a member of the standing committee and the executive council of the diocese of Los Angeles in addition to serving on various boards and committees.

QUAKERS SEND DRUGS

Philadelphia: — The American Friends Service Committee is sending $25,000 worth of streptomycin to the people of the Soviet Union as a testimony of good will and for promotion of good health. Following conferences between Russian and Quaker officials it was decided to purchase this drug with funds contributed especially for building better relations. A spokesman for the Quakers stated that "this is only the beginning of reciprocal gestures in an effort to promote friendship and understanding between the two countries."

STAINED GLASS WINDOW

Ann Arbor, Mich.: — A stained glass window in memory of the late Prof. Joseph R. Hayden of the University of Michigan was dedicated by Rector Henry Lewis at St. Andrew's on June 20th. The central figure is that of the late Bishop Charles Henry Brent, who was bishop in the Philippines for many years. He was chosen since Prof. Hayden was exchange professor at the University of the Philippines and later vice-governor and secretary of public instruction. Prof. Hayden was also a vestryman of St. Andrew's for many years.

CANTERBURY COLLEGE RECEIVES GIFT

Danville, Ind.:—Women of Trinity Church, Michigan City, Indiana, made a pilgrimage to Canterbury College on June 22 to participate in the dedication of a plaque given as a memorial to the 132 men and women of the college who served in the armed forces. With it went $1,000 as a fund for the purchase of books for the college library.

PRESIDENT OF THE GIRLS' FRIENDLY

Estes Park, Colo.:—Mrs. Stephen K. Mahon of Toledo, Ohio, was elected president of the Girls' Friendly Society by the delegates of 45 dioceses who met here in a national council that extended through a week. One of the features of the meeting was the presentation of The Friendly Trailer and its equipment to the home missions division of the National Council.

Temple and Lambeth

THOSE attending the service at Canterbury Cathedral that opened the Lambeth Conference were impressed by the large number of bishops who made a pilgrimage before the service to the grave of Archbishop William Temple in the cloister garth. Had Temple lived he would so completely have dominated the gathering that it would have been his conference. It would have insured a great, brilliant and forward-looking conference, but it is probable that the other bishops would have allowed the late Archbishop to do most of the thinking. As it is the bishops at Lambeth may not do anything nearly as outstanding as they would have done had this great leader lived. But it is sure that they will develop their own leadership and it will be more of a conference of all the Anglican bishops throughout the world than it otherwise would have been. As one bishop attending the conference put it: "I think I know now the meaning of the words, 'It is expedient for you that I go away.' "

The Basic Realities

THE first Sunday in July must have been a heart-searching day for all loyal Churchmen who believe in letting the collects, epistles and gospels guide and stimulate their thinking and praying about the basic realities of life, week by week. For it was Independence Day and the collect led us to pray "that we and all the people of this land may have grace to maintain these liberties in righteousness and peace." And when we came to the gospel on this Fourth of July festival we were bidden to "love your enemies, bless them that curse you and pray for them that despitefully use you." A curious and embarrassing combination of prayer and exhortation for patriotic Americans in this summer of hysterical fear, with the government calling its young men to forced service in the army, preparing for the "inevitable" war.

For, if our Church is right, the only effective way for us to "maintain our liberties in righteousness and peace" is to love our enemies and do good to them, no matter what you may believe they are trying to do to you. And, for the past three years we have been doing nothing of the sort. We have been getting tough with Russia and priding ourselves on it. And we have been getting tough too with our own citizens who presume to protest against this policy and so, inevitably, as the Church so well understands, losing more and more of the liberties of old which our fathers won. Organized friendship for Russia is declared "subversive" and Good Samaritans, ministering to the suffering victims of Franco tyranny, are sentenced to jail.

We should like to point out to the government of a nominally Christian America that the master and lord of all Christians was — and is — an eminently practical leader who knew the hearts of men and the ways of nations. He knew and declared over and over again that the one and only way to righteousness and peace is the way of forgiveness—that is a determined and sacrificial drive for fellowship. And the first step toward fellowship, either with individuals or nations, is sitting down with your potential enemy and getting each the other's points of view, with the understanding that each must sacrifice something for the sake of the world's peace and prosperity. Russia has already agreed to this first step, but the American government—as of this writing—is still sulking in its tent. Could it be for the ineffably stupid political motive that some credit might accrue to the New Party whose leader's initiative brought forth the renewed Russian offer of a bilateral conference? Whatever the motive or motives, we call upon President Truman to accept the Russian offer for a conference and to halt meanwhile the "cold war" against anti-Fascists, whether they be Communists or others, both in Europe and in America, until the two greatest world powers have explored afresh their differences with a sacrificial determination to create anew that fellowship which worked effectively in war and will work infinitely more effectively in peace.

"QUOTES"

AMERICANS have a final choice to make in 1948. If they choose to perpetuate the reign of fear, hatred, ignorance, greed and stupidity, they will in all likelihood pass a death sentence upon themselves and all mankind. If they choose to begin anew to grapple with the problems of the atomic age by entrusting authority to those who still have some capacity for faith, love, wisdom, generosity, and intelligence, there will be bright hope for a better life for all in days to come. The choice is grim, inescapable, infinitely fruitful if rightly made, and, if wrong, completely fatal. America's capacity to make it sanely will not be unrelated to America's capacity to evaluate correctly the work of its own department of state in the Truman era.

Falsifiers of History

THE quotation on the editorial page is the concluding paragraph of the introduction which Professor Schuman wrote for a recently published pamphlet with the above title. It is sub-titled "An Historical Document on the Origins of World War Two" and is issued by the Committee for Promotion of Peace, 241 West 97th Street, New York 25, N. Y. Those of our readers who agree that "Americans have a final choice to make in 1948" and wish to base their judgments on facts would do well to send 25c for this well documented study.

Those So-Called "Comics"

By

JOHN E. LARGE

Rector of St. Andrew's, Wilmington

A FEW of the uncounted thousands of so-called "comic" books are still comic. Thank God for that! Whether the comedy stems from an unwary character caught in a ludicrous situation—or whether the comedy is in the slapstick tradition of Mack Sennett and his old Keystone Kops—doesn't matter, as long as the amused smile, chuckle, or belly-laugh is called forth.

But the vast majority of these "comic" books are no longer on speaking terms with the idea of comedy. Devoted as I am to such comic-relief as "L'il Abner," "Barnaby," and "Bringing up Father," I was blissfully unaware of this amazing trend of comics away from what is comic. Then came the day when I began having to buy comic books for eager-eyed moppets. They looked with undisguised scorn at my favorites in the field of comics. And I'm sure they were scornful of me personally, for I obviously had no sense of humor. But they fell into a glassy-eyed trance at the sight of "Superman," "Captain Midnight," and "Smilin' Jack" — to mention three of their less vicious favorites (and they're bad enough!).

The great church fathers who, hundreds of years ago, composed The Litany in our Book of Common Prayer couldn't reasonably have foreseen the advent of the 20th century "comic" book. But after dipping into a few of the more lurid ones which the children leave lying around, the Litany seems most appropriate. "From all inordinate and sinful affections . . . from all the deceits of the world, the flesh, and the devil . . . from plague and pestilence . . . from battle, murder, and sudden death—Good Lord, deliver us." Which, considering their contents, is another way of saying, "Good Lord, deliver us from comic books that aren't comical!" Even so, I'm sure the Litany never thought of including the mayhem, the nauseous tortures, and the never-ending threats of what used to be called "a fate worse than death," to which "comic" characters are pervertedly exposed.

There are alleged educators who insist that all this stuff is just jolly and fine and dandy for our children. It's their safety valve, they say. They blow off excess steam that way. (The ones I deal with in my professional work don't blow off any steam that way. In fact, the "comics" just serve to generate more excess steam!). These educators go on to insist that a child needs Superman's "fantasy world."

Well, maybe. But it strikes me that modern life is peppered with souls who've never learned to adjust themselves to reality. They prefer the unreality of the "fantasy world," and so they become dyed-in-the-wool neurotics. They are miserable because life is not like the marijuana magic of Superman's mumbo-jumbo. Sure, the well-balanced child won't be permanently affected. But the more *un*balanced the world gets, the fewer well-balanced children we'll be producing. Isn't it time, perhaps, that Christian families began to lay plans to boycott that abortive monstrosity which hides behind the innocent comic book?

A Word With You

By

HUGH D. McCANDLESS

Rector of the Epiphany, New York

ON MAKING WORDS SERVE YOU

ONE way of making words serve you is a form of forced labor of the most humiliating kind, which cheapens both the words and the thing to which they are applied. It is the use of romantic adventurous words to invest honest useful things with unnecessary glamor. I wonder if laymen, setting out on an every member canvass, are really bucked up when they are told they are "God's Commandos," or something of the sort.

Another abuse is to take nice clean technical words and use them as doorsteps or dust-catching ornamental trophies in our verbal gun-racks. Imagine yourself on the way home from a Church conference where an earnest Neo-Something has held forth. One of your companions is sure to remark "Excuse my existentialist statement, but there is a dichotomy between your hot dog and the mustard." His motive is self-improvement, and this pedantic humor is a bit of practice, but the result of his efforts will be another serious contribution to the delinquency of his new-found words.

When you open a paint can with your fountain pen, the pen is damaged. To vulgarize should simply mean "to tell everybody," which is a good enough thing in itself. But alas, familiarity breeds contempt, and the word loses shape, and sometimes usefulness, and sometimes its former decency. To say a man speaks in the vulgar tongue should means he is easy to understand, not that his words are coarse.

Vulgar became cheapened by snobbishness long before it passed into English from the Latin. Propaganda changed from meaning "what should be spread abroad" to "what should not be spread abroad"—a sad commentary on the inertia of those who have the truth, the zeal of those who hate it, and the resultant suspicion of all of us.

Suspicion also gave prevent ("go before") its present sinister and restrictive meaning. And probably it was hypocrisy that changed bead from meaning "prayer" to meaning a bit of wood or glass with a hole in it.

*The Meaning of Man. By Jean Mouroux. Translated by A. H. G. Downes. Sheed and Ward. $4.00.

This is a noble essay by a French Roman Catholic scholar, in which orthodox theology and the modern understanding of human nature are brought into relation. Those who have been "fed up" with the dismal and one-sided view of human nature associated with "Neo-orthodoxy," and are sure that there is something to be said on the other side; and who are convinced that the Christian doctrine of man is not the skeptical, cynical, post-war, psychiatrical travesty that is paraded before us again and again—but who do not quite know how to answer the neo-Paulinists and neo-Calvinists who set forth that view: Come hither, come hither, this is the book for you! Of course man is a creature "called to surpass himself"; of course he cannot, in his fallen state, love God perfectly, i.e. supernaturally; all this the author recognizes. But he does not capsize the boat by rushing to the opposite extreme, as the tendency is today, and insist that man is hopelessly alienated from God, opposed to him, and incapable of any good thing, while his natural religion or theology or ethics is all filthy rags! The Catholic religion (Anglican, Roman, Orthodox, and other—for the ancient view survives in some areas of Protestantism) has a far saner and truer view of man's nature. It faces facts, and does not blind itself to the starkest realities in the actual world. But it at the same time does not call good evil, nor evil good, in the interest of a supposed consistency or logic. It is realistic in both directions.

Martin and Judy Songs. Compiled by Edith Lovell Thomas. Beacon Press. $2.50.

Like the Martin and Judy series of stories for little children, this collection of songs is "built upon a new philosophy of religious development." It is intended "to keep a child sensitive to the wonder of his own world, and to the mystery in his own living, and to the challenge that both of these can bring to him." The format and colored illustrations are superb, the songs simple and easy to learn—it is a book that a little child will simply love! But one wishes that the Christian tradition were recognized more fully—not Christian theology, but the whole atmosphere of Christian worship and thought. There is one reference to God in the book, and one to Jesus—and one to Santa Claus! There is no suggestion of the Christian motive of thankfulness, and no provision for thanksgiving and gratitude. This is a serious lack.

Familiarity Breeds Respect

By
PHILIP H. STEINMETZ

THERE is a proverb which runs "familiarity breeds contempt." I do not believe it. I have found that the more I know of a person the more I realize that there is a lot to be said for him. Much of the grief and tragedy of life arises through misunderstandings and ignorance. All healthy people wish to do what is right. Very often the clashes which arise between them could be settled peacefully and far more permanently by a humble exploration of the situation together. Face to face acquaintance is a great force for peace, both domestic and international. Therefore I urge you to take advantage of every chance to get better acquainted with others, especially those with whom you are not in full agreement. In fact I hope you will make opportunities when they do not arise of themselves. You will be better and so will the world.

Summer Work in Michigan Done By Young People

Program Started Last Year by Bishop Emrich Worked So Well That It Is Expanded This Year

Detroit:—Thirty young men and women arrived in the diocese of Michigan this month to begin summer work in the various parishes and missions of the diocese which have requested their assistance. Through the financial support of the Bishop Page Foundation, set up recently, these young people will have the opportunity to obtain practical experience in Church work, and the parishes in which they serve will profit by their endeavors.

This summer program was instituted last year by Bishop Richard S. Emrich. He realized that the clergy often become submerged in extensive parish work and cannot find time to expand into fields which should be explored. Also he felt that young people need the opportunity to learn first-hand about the life of the Church. He therefore tried the plan as an experiment, sending 27 young folks into various fields in the diocese last summer. The result of their work was amazing. Many parishes in Michigan's vacation areas reported that their attendance at services was doubled because of the intensified calling done by these summer helpers. New church signs were made and painted, lawns were improved and buildings were redecorated. In one parish the summer helper had been an electrician in the navy, and the antiquated wiring of the church was re-installed with modern equipment. In addition to all this, there were progressive steps in youth activities and church school programs. Vacation schools were conducted by the helpers. The mutual gains were tremendous.

Of the thirty young men and women going into the summer work this year, twenty will serve in out-state churches and ten will be in the city of Detroit or its immediate suburbs. Eight of the workers are students in theological schools, thirteen served in the armed forces of the country during the war. Five are young women, two of these being wives of theological students. Five of the workers are to supervise the work in parishes, conducting services and doing all other parish work, during the absence of the clergy.

The workers will give much the same type of service as that given by the group of helpers last year. The emphasis in the rural areas will be on calling, and on serving vacationers in the vicinity, who often find no Church home while on holiday.

The Rev. Charles D. Braidwood, of Grace Church, Lapeer, and St. John's Church, Otter Lake, and Deaconess Olive M. Robinson, field worker for the diocesan department of missions, are in charge of the program this year.

Orthodox Conference

Moscow: — A conference of Church leaders of the Eastern Orthodox Churches opened here July 8th. One of the chief matters under consideration is the relationship of the Russian Orthodox Church and other eastern Churches to the World Council of Churches. At the moment none of the Churches close to the Russian Orthodox Church has accredited representatives to the Amsterdam Assembly of the World Council, in spite of repeated invitations. There is a widespread feeling among the Orthodox apparently that the Council is an "agent of the western imperialists" in the "cold war."

No Interference

New York (RNS): — Mrs. Hilda Epstein, Lutheran relief worker in the Russian zone in Germany, reported here that Church periodicals are published in the zone with "absolutely no interference" by Soviet authorities and that the churches conduct a full program of activities without hindrance.

Oppose South India

London (RNS): — Anglicans who have entered the Church of South India "have voluntarily placed themselves in schism and are in no sense in communion with the Anglican Churches," according to a resolution adopted at the international convention of the Church Union, which is composed of Anglo-Catholics. "The former Anglicans," the resolution declared, "ought not to be allowed to receive or celebrate at Anglican altars. Freedom of movement from the altars of the Church of South India to the altars of Anglican Churches would ipso facto establish an inter-communion which does not exist."

Block Unity

Belfast, Ireland (RNS): — The Church of Ireland (Anglican) is the "big difficulty" in the way of unity between the Protestant Churches in Ireland, according to Dr. A. W. Neill, newly-elected moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly. Dr. Neill, who spoke at Assembly sessions here, said committees set up by the Presbyterian and Methodist Churches have "achieved a considerable measure of agreement" on unity, but negotiations have broken down because the Church of Ireland "cannot see its way to fall in on certain matters of doctrine and ritual."

Stressing that failure to reach an understanding is "not the fault of the Presbyterians," Dr. Neill pledged he will continue efforts to bring about agreement between the Churches. He recalled that the former primate of the Church of Ireland, the late Dr. D'Arcy, had devoted the latter part of his life to creating unity between the Churches, and expressed regret that this policy "has not been continued after his death."

Dr. Bryant

Berkeley, Cal.:—The degree of doctor of divinity was conferred upon the Rev. John Bryant, rector of St. Alban's, Los Angeles, at the commencement on June 11th of the Pacific School of Religion.

VACATIONS

THE WITNESS is published every other week from June 15 to September 15. One of the headaches that all publishers have is making address changes for summer vacations, particularly these days of shortages of both materials and workers. We ask therefore that those who are to be away but a short time arrange to have their copies forwarded. If however you are to be away for an extended time send the change to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty St., New York 6, N. Y., giving both your old and your new address, and kindly indicate whether it is a permanent change or only for a vacation period. Many thanks for the cooperation.

Important Announcement

TO ALL VESTRYMEN!

THE CHURCH is going on the air over a national network Friday evening, October 1st. The value of this program to your parish or mission and to the Church nationally will depend to a very great extent on your understanding and support.

The booklet pictured below has been mailed to you either direct or in care of your clergyman.* Please read it carefully because as its title indicates it will give you a clear understanding of why the Church has turned to the great medium of radio—why the Church will use the kind of program that has been selected and how this program can help you build and strengthen your local Church.

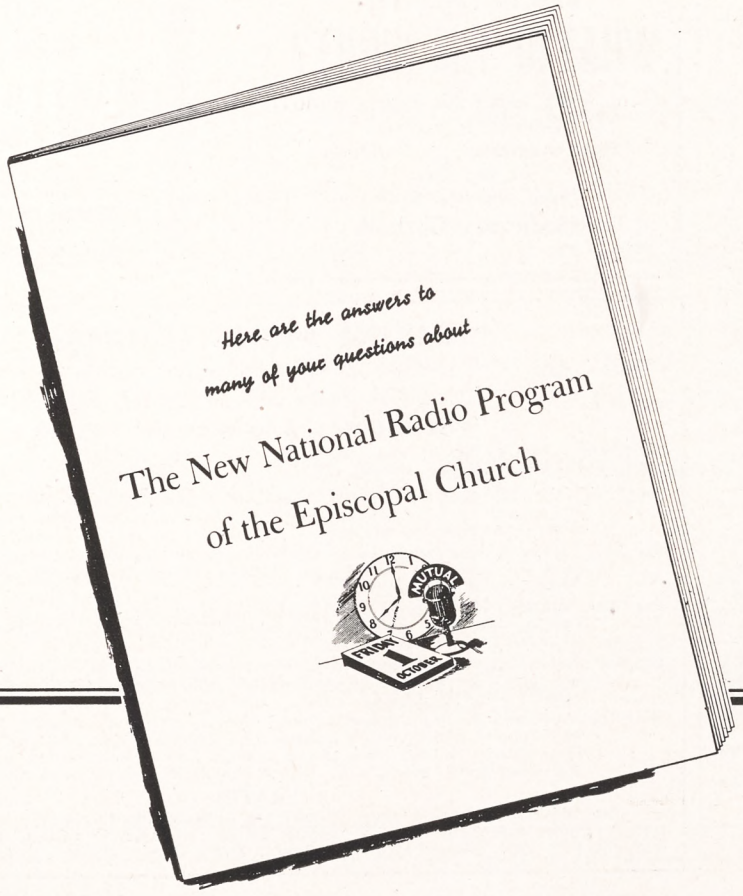
On the first page of this booklet you will find the following message from your Presiding Bishop, The Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill.

If for some reason you have not received a copy of this important booklet, will you please send a post card or letter with your name and address to The National Council, 281 Fourth Ave., New York 10, N. Y. as soon as possible

• • • •

Dear Friends,

With great earnestness I urge your serious attention to the message contained in this booklet.



We all know that in this country there are millions of men and women who have no connection with any communion of the Christian Church. If this is to be a truly Christian nation they must be reached and interested and this must be done where they are and in a language at the initial approach they can understand. The radio gives us such a medium.

I urge your support of this new, to some daring and yet essentially sound evangelistic plan.

Faithfully yours,

Henry K. Sherrill

PRESIDING BISHOP

Urge Settlement

New York:—More than 100 leading Americans signed a statement issued by the American-Soviet Friendship organization, calling upon the government to take immediate action that would lead toward the peaceful settlement of outstanding differences between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. Episcopalians to sign were Bishop Lane Barton of Eastern Oregon; Dean John W. Day of Topeka, Kansas; Prof. Joseph F. Fletcher of the Episcopal Theological School; the Rev. Kenneth deP. Hughes of Cambridge, Mass.; Prof. Fleming James of New Haven; Bishop Edward L. Parsons, retired bishop of California; Prof. Vida D. Scudder of Wellesley; Bishop James M. Stoney of New Mexico.

Deny Liberty

Madrid (RNS):—The Spanish hierarchy has issued a statement declaring that religious freedom does not exist in Franco's Spain. It is signed by Enrique Cardinal Pla y Deniel, primate, on behalf of all the Spanish archbishops and bishops. It declares that "there is no justification, as some Protestants have done, for calling Article 6 of the law of 1945 a law of liberty of cults, or, what is worse, carrying on proselytizing and acts of public worship as if liberty of cults had been implanted in Spain. This has resulted in disagreeable incidents which have evoked comment outside Spain."

The hierarchy stresses that the question of the liberty and toleration of cults in Spain is not merely a political question, but one of dogma and ecclesiastical right, which has been resolved by papal encyclicals and are of "concrete application to each nation, according to existing circumstances." Quoting from the encyclical on human liberty issues by Pope Leo XIII in 1893, the bishops say that "the faithful are not free to adhere to any Church" but "have a most sacred duty to belong to the only true Church founded by Christ." The statement further says that "it is impossible to have faith in the Catholic Church without desiring Catholic unity as an ideal for all nations and states."

Relief as Weapon

Boston (RNS):—Use of relief supplies as a weapon in a "cold war" was scored here by Dr. Henry Joel Cadbury, chairman of the American Friends Service Committee. Speaking at the annual convention of the Unitarian Church, Dr. Cadbury, a Quaker, said the action of Christians in raising the conduct of the state to a moral level is far more useful than the "common sterile" slogan of separation of Church and state.

He stressed the need for fellowship and relief throughout the world saying that "one of the most heartbreaking tragedies is the way in which beneficent relief to the needy is used as a tool against someone perhaps equally in need."

Food is becoming merely a weapon in a cold war, Dr. Cadbury declared, "so we half starve our former enemies and even our former friends and try to bribe the 'good' to be good. We alternately appease Communist against fascist and fascist against Communist and likewise Zionist with Arab."

"Service and fellowship," he continued, "may not be the direct approach to the elimination of war, but perhaps indirect approaches are fully as good. They must rest on a sense of man's dignity and obligations and conversely on penitence and a sense of guilt for man's inhumanity to man."

Christian Action Units

London (RNS):—Plans for a nation-wide campaign to build up strong local units of "Christian Action," newly-organized movement to inject Christian principles into national and international life, were adopted at a meeting of supporters here presided over by Sir Stafford Cripps, chancellor of the exchequer. First meeting of the movement took place recently when 6,000 persons of all communions gathered in the Royal Albert Hall to hear lay and religious leaders of Western Europe urge a mobilization of Christian action in the present European crisis.

The "Christian Action" plans were outlined by the Rev. L. John Collins, dean of Oriel College, Oxford University, who was responsible for launching a young people's movement late in 1946, intended to bring more Christians into public life.

Dean Collins announced that besides forming "Christian Action" units all over the country, the movement will set up panels of speakers and writers, and inaugurate a monthly bulletin to promote a "theology for Christian action." He said that only a minimum of organization and administration will be necessary to achieve the aims of the movement.

According to Dean Collins, plans are going ahead in Paris for Christian Action meetings in support of a Union of Western Europe and for similar meetings in Brussels, Belgium.

Want Arms Embargo

Montreal (RNS):—A ban on the shipment of arms "to any nation in which a civil war is being waged, except at the request of the United Nations" was requested of the Canadian government by the Montreal and Ottawa conference of the United Church of Canada here. The committee on evangelism and social service, which proposed the resolution, made particular reference to the civil war in China. The motion was similar to one recently passed by the synod of the Montreal Anglican diocese which asked the government "to take an open stand against intervention in the war in China."

The conference adopted a statement by the Committee which viewed "with deep concern the present relationships between the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R., and deplores the attitude that methods of dealing with the differences between them must inevitably lead to war."

Delegates affirmed the Church's duty to strengthen the United Nations and to take a leading role in providing relief for Europe. They agreed, also, that it is the duty of the Church "to repent, and to call others to repentance for that injustice, envy, covetousness and ignorance which have lead certain of our citizens to espouse Communism as a means to obtain redress."

Boycott Church

Boston (RNS):—An action taken by the Unitarian Universalist church in Atlanta, Ga., denying fellowship in the church to a Negro professor was scored here by the Unitarian Ministers Association. The Negro was proposed for membership by pastor Isiah J. Domas, who subsequently resigned because of the "ultra-race conscious" element in his congregation. A church official said that Mr. Domas' pro-Henry A. Wallace activities had a "great deal" to do with the acceptance of his resignation.

A Big Backlog for the Seminaries

Last year's reports showed a record total (898) of Postulants* for the Ministry—more than twice the number reported in 1938 (427). It looks as though the Seminaries will be crowded for some years to come.

The Seminaries, however, have no such back-log of financial resources; and if they are to do justice to these men in preparing them for an effective ministry, constant and increased support from the Church is essential.

Churches Urge Peace

Stockholm (RNS): — Leaders of the state Lutheran Church and other major religious groups in Sweden have sent a joint message to the heads of the American, British and Russian governments urging negotiations "to prevent the catastrophe which a new world war would bring." Besides the state Church, the appeal was signed on behalf of the Swedish Baptist churches, the Mission Covenant Church, the Methodist Church, the Salvation Army, the Society of Friends (Quakers), and the Pentecostals. Copies were sent simultaneously to President Truman, Prime Minister Attlee, and Marshal Stalin.

"We, the undersigned, representing different Christian groups," the message said, "appeal to you to do your utmost to bring about mutual negotiations to eliminate lack of world confidence and to prevent the catastrophe which a new world war would bring. The peoples want peace. Their leaders want peace. Successful united action for world peace would be greeted by the world as a liberation and be blessed by coming generations. We appeal to you in the name of mankind and spirit of Christendom."

Copies of the appeal have been sent to all Swedish churches with a recommendation for special peace prayers. Meanwhile, a monster peace rally is to be held here on May 23rd.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

THE REV. IRWIN HULBERT, JR.
Vicar of St. Paul's, Jesup, Ga.

It seems to be fashionable these days for churchmen to entertain and amuse their readers by caricaturing sinful humanity, clerical and lay alike. Specifically, I refer to the Gargoyle letters in which the Rev. Mr. Barrett is cast in the role of entertaining readers of a serious church magazine by lampooning the clergy.

It may be granted that Mr. Barrett has cleverly typed us. But are we constructively helped and informed? Apply one of the stated official purposes of the WITNESS Advisory Board: Are the letters "Evangelical to the Gospel of Christ," or, do they help us "in the rigorous application of the principles of Christ to our social life"? The letters are plainly out of place, unseemly in a magazine that stands for such progressive principles. It is a betrayal of the generous spirits of Hooker, Maurice, and Temple.

Many folk write about sins of other folk and find it a lucrative source of income. There are a few folk, like Paul and Augustine, who generally write about sin in the first person singular, at least about that person, and show the way out through redeeming faith. Such writing does not always elicit favorable comment nor is it designed to get laughs. Rather it provokes thoughful action.

Why cannot Mr. Barrett and our college chaplains write about what they are doing in the golden field of college work? If this field is our number one missionary opportunity, as some believe, Mr. Barrett certainly could be urged to do a series on college needs in each province and how we can help. Or he could tell us in detail what are the plans of the National Council for college work. He could put his mind to work in a constructively productive manner by informing us of what needs to be done in our college work and show us what we can do to help him.

MR. W. R. WATTS
Layman of New York City

I want to congratulate THE WITNESS for the excellent article by Paul Denlinger on the situation in China. You are correct in stating that the situation there is of the utmost importance to the peace of the world and I shall read THE WITNESS with renewed interest now that you have such an able correspondent there.

MR. L. B. LINDSAY
Layman of Philadelphia

Layman P. L. George does well in calling attention to the fact that John Foster Dulles is just as unqualified to be a leader at the World Council meeting as is Mr. Myron Taylor. Dulles certainly is identified with "secular power or policies" since he is the acknowledged advisor on foreign affairs to the Republican candidate for president. It seems to be generally believed that should Mr. Dewey be elected Mr. Dulles will be Secretary of State, a position which he will undoubtedly use to further his pro-fascist activities which have been repeatedly exposed by liberal journals and newspapers.

World Council Assembly Is About to Meet

Nearly 150 Churches From Forty Countries Represented Among 1400 to Attend

Geneva—Churches in countries from victor and defeated nations alike in the last war will send delegates to the first assembly of the World Council of Churches. The assembly, to be held from August 22 to September 5 in Amsterdam, Holland, promises to be the most representative gathering of Christian churches in history, according to officials at World Council headquarters here. One hundred forty-eight Church bodies in about 40 countries have joined the World Council, which is intended to give the Churches an official and permanent instrument for co-operative witness and action on a world-wide basis. Some of the member bodies are in exile or immigration or organized on a non-national basis. In addition, a number of other Churches which do not yet hold membership in the Council, including several from Africa, will be represented at Amsterdam by non-voting delegates, observers and visitors.

In all, approximately 1,400 persons are expected to attend the Amsterdam assembly, which will formally constitute the World Council after 10 years as a provisional body. They will include 450 official delegates; 350 alternate delegates; 100 youth delegates; and 500 fraternal delegates, accredited visitors, observers, consultants, press and radio representatives and staff members. THE WITNESS is to be represented by Bishop Lane Barton, Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce and the Rev. Raymond Maxwell.

Addition of Japan to the list of countries whose Churches have joined leaves only Russia among the major nations of the world still unrepresented by Churches in the World Council. The World Council has made it clear to the Church of Russia that its participation is urgently desired, but no final decision has yet been reached by the Moscow patriarchate concerning membership, according to W. A. Visser 't Hooft, general secretary of the World Council. Neither has definite word been received from the Orthodox Churches in Bulgaria, Yugoslavia and Roumania concerning their eventual participation.

The Amsterdam assembly will be devoted to future planning for the World Council and to addresses, study and discussion on the assembly theme, "Man's Disorder and God's Design." Opportunities for prayer and fellowship will be provided in more than a score of worship and communion services and confessional meetings.

All the delegates will be divided into four study sections and four assembly committees, which will hold separate meetings for five days of the assembly. Following this, each section and committee will report at plenary sessions for the entire assembly's consideration and action.

The study sections will deal with four aspects of the assembly theme: No. I. "The Universal Church in God's Design," (the nature of the Church); No. II. "God's Design and Man's Witness" (evangelism); No. III. "The Church and the Disorder of Society;" and No. IV. "The Church and International Disorder." Four book-length reports, prepared by international commissions in which more than 200 theologians and lay leaders participated, will aid the study sections in their work.

Committees will recommend future policy of the Council; deal with its administration; study four "concerns" of the churches: the Christian attitude to the Jews, the place of women in the Church, lay training, reconstruction, inter-church aid.

The five provisional presidents of the Council will alternate in presiding at the plenary sessions. They are Pastor Marc Boegner, president of the Protestant Federation of France; Archbishop Erling Eidem, primate of the Church of Sweden; Archbishop Geoffrey Fisher of Canterbury; Archbishop D. Germanos of Thyateira, with see in London; and Dr. John R. Mott, former president of the International Missionary Council.

Dr. Mott and the Rev. Daniel T. Niles, a district evangelist of the Methodist Church of Ceylon and a leader in student Christian Movements in India and Ceylon, will speak at the opening worship service Sunday, August 22, in Amsterdam's New Church.

The development of the ecumenical movement will be traced at the opening day's evening meeting at the Concert Hall, under the theme, "How God Has Led Us." Speakers will be Bishop G. K. A. Bell of Chichester, England; Bishop Yngve Brilioth of Vaxjo, Sweden; the Rev. John Mackay, president of Princeton Theological Seminary, and Pastor Boegner.

The assembly program will be outlined at the morning session Monday, August 23, by the Rev. Samuel M. Cavert, general secretary of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, and chairman of the committee on arrangements for the assembly. Pastor Boegner will present resolutions and W. A. Visser 't Hooft, general secretary of the World Council, will give the policy report.

At the afternoon session, Prof. Karl Barth of the University of Basle, Switzerland, will speak on the assembly theme and Prof. C. H. Dodd of Cambridge University, England, will discuss the Biblical basis of the subjects to be considered by the four sections.

One of the ministers of the Netherlands Government will greet the delegates at a state reception in the hall of the Rijks museum in the evening.

The morning session on August 24 will feature presentation of the subjects for sections Nos. I and II. The speakers will be Prof. Clarence T. Craig of the Yale Divinity School; Prof. Georges Florovsky of the Russian Orthodox Seminary, Paris; Prof. Regin Prenter of the University of Aarhus, Denmark; Bishop Stephen Neill of the Church of England and co-director of the Council's Study department, and Prof. T. C. Chao of Yenching University, China. Presentation of the subjects by Mrs. Kathleen Bliss, editor of the Christian Newsletter, London; Mr. John Foster Dulles, New York politician, and Prof. Joseph L. Hromadka of University of Prague, Czechoslovakia.

A boat ride through Amsterdam, which will be illuminated for Queen Wilhelmina's 50th anniversary celebration, will be taken by the delegates in the evening.

Meetings of the study sections and assembly committees will occupy the delegates in the mornings and afternoons of August 25, 26, 27 and 28 and the mornings of August 30 and 31. First reports will be given the afternoon of August 30, and these will continue through September 3.

A public meeting on the subject, "Christian Witness in the World" will be held the evening of Thursday, August 26. The speakers will be the Rev. Martin Niemoller, president of the Evangelical Church in Hesse and Nassau, Germany; Mr. Philippe Maury of France, secretary of the World Student Christian Federation; Prof. John Baillie of the University of Edinburgh, Scotland, and an additional person from India.

The municipal authorities of Amsterdam will give a reception for the delegates Friday evening, August 27. Dutch Reformed Church communion services, open to all the delegates, will be held Sunday morning, August 29. Clergymen of other Church bodies will assist in this service.

"Christian Witness in Social and National Order" will be the subject of a public meeting Monday evening, August 30. The speakers will be Prof. Emil Brunner of the University of Zurich, Switzerland; Mr. Ernest Brown, a privy councillor in the British government, a former cabinet minister and president of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland; Prof. Reinhold Niebuhr, Union Theological Seminary, and a speaker from Greece.

The Archbishop of Canterbury and Dr. Visser 't Hooft will discuss "The World Council and the Future" at a visitors' conference program Thursday evening, September 2.

A public meeting on "Christian Witness in the International Order" is scheduled Friday evening, September 3. Heard will be Bishop Eivind Berggrav, primate of Church of Norway; Mildred McAfee Horton, president of Wellesley College, and the Rev. C. H. Dovlo, divinity student from Africa at the University of Edinburgh, Scotland.

The closing service of the assembly will be held Saturday afternoon, September 4, in West Church.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, Geoffrey Fisher, and Pastor Martin Niemoeller of Germany will be among the outstanding leaders at the meeting of the World Council of Churches in Amsterdam.

Minority in Philippines Recognized by Court

Bishop of Major Faction Plans to Introduce Letter of Bishop Binsted in His Appeal

Manila, (RNS) — Bishop Juan Jamais, leader of the minority faction of the Philippine Independent (the Aglipayan) Church, is the "actual and legitimate Supreme Bishop of the Church," according to a ruling here by the Manila Court of the First Instance.

The court denied a request by Supreme Bishop Isabelo De Los Reyes, Jr., head of the majority faction, and his predecessor, Bishop Gerardo M. Bayaca, plaintiffs, that Bishop Santiago Fonacier, predecessor of Bishop Jamais, deliver church properties and funds to them.

Judge Conrado Barrios ruled that Bishops De Los Reyes and Bayaca do not have a legal right to the name and properties of the Church because "they are no longer members of the Aglipayan Church as they have abjured the doctrine of this Church by embracing that of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States."

The court also held that the election of Bishops Bayaca and De Los Reyes successively as Supreme Bishop was null and void, having been held contrary to the constitutional rules of the Church. The court ruling is expected to bring about a reversal of a former decision of the department of public instruction temporarily recognizing the majority faction as the true Church and De Los Reyes as its legitimate Bishop.

The department's decision was valid only pending action by the Court of the First Instance which has had the matter under consideration for more than two years.

However, Bishop Isabelo De Los Reyes, Jr., whose consecration along with two others came as the result of action taken at the 1947 meeting of the House of Bishops of the Episcopal Church, has declared that he will appeal the action taken by the court. He said the court's finding that the majority faction were "no longer members of the Aglipayan Church as they have abjured the doctrine of this Church by embracing that of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States," was not based on canon law.

The court failed to consider, Bishop De Los Reyes said, a recent statement made by Suffragan Bishop Robert F. Wilner of the Philippine Missionary District of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the U. S. This statement, he explained, declared the Aglipayan Church to be distinct and separate from the Protestant Episcopal Church. Bishop De Los Reyes said that if he failed in his attempt for a reconsideration of the verdict of the Manila Court of the First Instance, he would take the case to the Court of Appeals.

At the new trial, Bishop De Los Reyes said he would introduce a statement made by Protestant Episcopal Bishop Norman Spencer Binsted of the Missionary District of the Philippines. This statement asserts that in conveying apostolic consecration to Bishop De Los Reyes and two others, the American Church did not grant them the authority or the jurisdiction to exercise their offices as bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church, nor did their consecration mean that they were received as members of the Episcopal Church.

"The Philippine Church is as independent today of the Protestant Episcopal Church as before the consecration of Bishop De Los Reyes and the two other bishops," the Binsted statement said. "The two Churches aren't even in communion. Before such an intercommunion could be recognized a concordat would have to be concluded with the approval of the governing bodies of the two distinct Churches. The present relationship is therefore simply one of mutual friendship which makes closer cooperation possible."

The Rev. William B. Sperry, rector of Christ Church, Detroit, and a contributing editor of The Witness, chats with newsboys at a tea which followed their basketball victory in the parish's gymnasium.

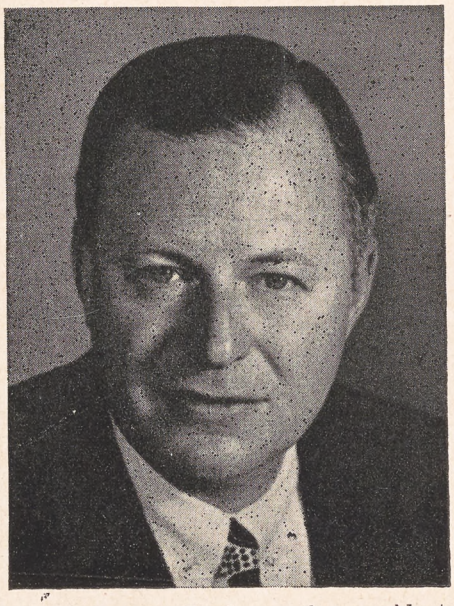
Temple Letters Stir Up Heated Controversy

London (RNS)—Two hitherto unpublished letters by William Temple, late Archbishop of Canterbury, to the Roman Catholic apostolic delegate in England have been printed in the Church Times and stirred a considerable controversy. They were sent to the magazine by Canon J. A. Douglas, formerly general secretary of the Church of England council on foreign relations, with a note stating that the late Archbishop hoped they would lead the way for official cooperation between the Vatican and non-Roman Christians "on all matters not involving dogma and historical conflicts which divide Christendom." The first letter, sent in October, 1943, sympathetically referred to restrictions imposed on the Pope by the German occupation in Rome. The second, written on Good Friday, 1944, asked the representative of the Vatican to forward another message of sympathy to the Pope, and included a prayer for early peace that "the whole fellowship of Christ's disciples may be so guided by the Holy Ghost that we may together declare the Christian principles for ordering of human life."



Canon Douglas, called to task for the delay in making the letters public, accepted full responsibility for the delay. He stated that some weeks after the Archbishop's death the Vatican intimated there was no objection to immediate publication. However vacancy of the Canterbury see and other circumstances, he said, caused him to withhold the letters. He explained further that he decided to make the letters public at this time because the Lambeth Conference is in session and the assembly of the World Council of Churches is about to meet at Amsterdam. It was apparent that he believed they would have considerable influence on their deliberations.

That the letters have been "wishfully misread" was the opinion expressed editorially by the Catholic Herald. According to this journal the letters were nothing more "than a warm expression of commiseration at a time when the scales were heavily weighed against Christendom."

"There was absolutely no question of negotiations of any kind," the Herald stated. "Nevertheless, the release of the full texts of both letters while the Lambeth Conference is in session gave rise to several unwarranted assumptions.

"The unfounded reunion notion, which is strongly deplored in Anglican circles, owes its persistence partly to press deductions and partly to the suggestion that the Lambeth Conference might be a convenient platform for renewed talks on the question.

"Undoubtedly, many Anglicans believe that in the present state of the world, joint Christion action is obviously necessary and ideal. That is why the best informed regret the wild hopes that have been resurrected without good reason in the last few days."

Robert E. Gross, the president of Lockheed Aircraft Company, is one of the most active laymen in the diocese of Los Angeles, where he is the senior warden of St. Alban's.

On the other hand a Church of England group in South Africa has issued a statement denouncing what they call "secret negotiations." The statement charged that the secrecy surrounding these negotiations and the fact that they are to be discussed at a closed session of the Lambeth Conference of Anglican bishops in London are in line with a century-old attempt to destroy the Protestant reformed character of the Church of England.

"The Church of England in South Africa is convinced," the statement declared, "that reunion with Rome is neither desirable nor possible while she remains unreformed according to New Testament standards and denies the right of full religious liberty to all but Roman Catholics."

Signers of the statement were the Rev. R. F. Pearce, vicar general of the Church of England in South Africa; the Rev. S. C. Bradley, deputy vicar general, and Mr. Gordon Mills, registrar.

He was elected Bishop of Haiti in 1923, retiring in 1943. During part of the time he was also Bishop of the Dominican Republic and the Panama Canal Zone.

EDITORIALS

The Thing to Watch

THE first assembly of the World Council of Churches, described by officials as "the most representative gathering of Christian Churches in history", is about to meet. Its program is presented in a news story in this number. There will be reports in numbers to follow by three representatives of THE WITNESS attending the assembly: Bishop Lane W. Barton of Eastern Oregon; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce of New York; the Rev. Raymond Maxwell who, for the past two years, has been doing relief work in Europe.

There is no journal of the Episcopal Church which has been more vigorous in supporting Church unity than we have. We shall continue to support it, and hope that events at Amsterdam will be such as to enlist our enthusiasm. But it is well to be forewarned that there will be influential people there whose main aim will be to make the World Council a propaganda tool for reaction. They will dress it up with fine phrases like "preserving Christian civilization in the western world" but what they will actually mean is that the Churches should line up in the drive to crush the democratic people's movements, which threaten their cartel business monopolies. If these forces are victorious at Amsterdam, the World Council will be still-born. If on the other hand the delegates formulate genuinely Christian principles and then set up a world organization that will boldly and constructively seek to apply them in concrete situations, then there will have been created a powerful agency for exhibiting afresh to the world the character and unity of the Christian Church.

"QUOTES"

FREE and untrammeled inquiry is not merely a privilege. It is an obligation that lies on all educated men in a democracy; upon its safeguarding and its active persecution the strength of a democracy will depend.—We shall prosecute our scientific research eagerly and enthusiastically and accept the implications of the answers to our questions as we achieve them. —Men of Christian faith will not be afraid to have their faith tested as new facts are proved by competent scientific inquiry.

—CHARLES SEYMOUR
President of Yale

Why We Do It

ONE of our readers recently wrote us the following criticism: "Why do you write so much about social and political problems and so little, comparatively, about theological problems and religious activities? (I mean editorially; you do pretty well in your news columns.) Surely the Christian religion is an intensely personal thing and its concern is with human souls, regardless of the social milieu in which they happen to live. Of course, all of us ought to be concerned, as citizens, with social, economic and even political life. But a paper which is a religious publication and represents, though unofficially, the Episcopal Church, ought to be much more concerned with religion than with politics. You might even deal with theology! "

We have pondered our critic's question and we believe that the answer to it is two-fold. First, the reason for our frequent editorializing on social and economic problems is that we have an ardent belief in democracy and that we see it seriously threatened today on many fronts. As a Christian religious paper we are concerned with the fate of democracy as a parent for his child. For the Christian Church is in history the creator of democracy. A profound working belief in the Incarnation empowered the early Church to create out of the collapsed oligarchy of the Roman Empire a new faith and order in Europe which, with all its many faults, was a real democracy, that is, a new spirit and method of organizing fellowship on the basis of freedom for the common man. There are rampant in the world today all the old enemies of Christianity and her offspring, democracy. The old tyrannies and oligarchies of the early Christian centuries have new names today but their principles are the same and the Church's duty to fight them is the same.

Second, we agree with our critic that the Christian Church's first duty and privilege is to minister intensively to individual human souls and that she is bound to do this devotedly and persistently no matter what sort of civilization—or lack of civilization—her children may be immersed in. But we also believe—as we presume our critic does too—that the Church has the duty of trying to build the Kingdom of God on earth,—a fellowship of all God's children, rather than a machine with human cogs. In an atmosphere of fascism—democracy's evil antithesis—the teaching and practicing of Christian faith and life languishes inevitably, because we are members one of another, for evil as for good. We share a common humanity with the sinners, the violent, the greedy, and we cannot but be affected by the noxious atmosphere which they generate. Only true saints and heroes are immune from the benumbing effects of the prevailing climate. So we feel it our duty to fight the enemies of democracy wherever we see them, if for no better reason than to help give our faithful priests and teachers a better break for fruitful teaching of the Christian faith and life. If we fail in this fight and the next few generations are forced to live in a regime of fascism—under one name or another—we, or our successors, will continue to teach and try hard to practice the essentials of Christian faith and life. And under such possible evil and sad conditions, the inculcation of sound Christian doctrine will be more vitally necessary for our children's children than ever before.

But, we repeat, the immediate challenge is to rally for a fight without quarter against the enemies of Christianity's child, democracy, whether in the shape of a Mundt Bill (now happily defunct), racial hatreds or the blind reliance on suicidal war to right the wrongs of a desperately sick world which needs nothing so much as the militant preaching of the doctrine of the Incarnation,—God present in his world ready to recreate and reorganize human fellowship.

A New Printer

FOR thirty years THE WITNESS has been published in Chicago in a shop owned and managed by Mr. Frank M. Clarke. Over such a long period close friendships have been made, so that it is with genuine regret that we leave. However conditions, beyond the control of both Mr. Clarke and THE WITNESS management, are such that a move became necessary. This number is printed and mailed from the shop in Tunkhannock, Pennsylvania, owned and managed by Mr. Bert Van Dyke and his son, Vernon. We look forward to a long and pleasant relationship.

No effort has been made in this number to make any changes whatever in style or format. There are two remaining summer numbers, both of which will be similar in make-up. With the issue of September 16 we return to an every-week basis, and with that number there will be changes which we believe will bring an enthusiastic response from our readers.

Sunday Supplement

BY

PHILIP H. STEINMETZ

NEARLY everyone looks forward to Sunday. It is the one day we choose what we shall do; the day we show our real nature. If our lives center in our bodies we look forward to extra food and sleep. If we live for our family we spend Sunday in family reunions and visiting. If we are devoted to God, worship is the main feature of the day. We tell the world a lot about ourselves by the way we spend Sunday.

But Sunday is not separate from the rest of the week. It is the full flowering of what is living deep in us every day, as the great Sunday supplements are the full outpouring of daily newspapers.

Church worship is genuine only when it comes out of daily acts of thoughtful admiration of the works of God, frequent reading of the Bible and private acts of prayer. It is the Sunday supplement, full, elaborate and beautiful, bringing food for daily life and thought.

And Sunday school is but the Sunday supplement of home training in religion. It cannot replace what parents do by word and deed each day nor can an hour on Sunday counteract a week of exposure to worldly wisdom or bad tempered selfishness at home.

Sometimes we forget this simple fact to our great loss. Suppose we think of our own life and check up to make sure our editorial policy is steady throughout the week and in our Sunday supplement.

* * The Byzantine Patriarchate by George Every, Macmillian (S. P. C. K.) $3.00

The early Christian Church here comes to life. Few scholars have been able to so successfully place the controversies of "Heresy and Church Order" of the first five centuries of the Christian era in their proper historical and social setting. Conflicting doctrines which are often but names to be learned by theological students, become in the hands of Brother Every living realities, springing from the heritage of the Oriental, Greek and Latin cultures.

the Eastern and Western churches is given in the second part of the book, while the closing chapters are devoted to the author's own evaluation of the Byzantine Patriarchate. The wholesome doctrine of the Church in the heirs of Byzantia is reflected in the statement by the Eastern Patriarchs in 1848, "For us the guardianship of religion rests with the whole body of the Church, that is, with the people itself."

* * The Jesus of the Parables, by Charles W. F. Smith. Westminster Press, $3.00

The author, now rector of St. Andrew's Church, Wellesley, Mass., was formerly associated with the College of Preachers in Washington. There he had wide experience in sampling and criticizing current homiletical interpretations of scripture. In a sense this new book on the parables is a continuation of that work, likely to prove at first disturbing but ultimately constructively helpful to the average preacher in his treatment of these most popular but often widely misunderstood sayings of Jesus.

The method employed by the author is to trace first the historical background which gave rise to the parables as the chief offensive weapon in the historic mission of Jesus to his people. Against this background Mr. Smith goes on to present a detailed exegesis of about forty parables, consistently applying to each the principles laid down in the earlier portions of the book. In a closing chapter he emphasizes the important point that the relevance of the parables to the Church today is not obscured but rather clarified by such an historical approach.

When we approach the parables in this way, "we find the Church faced with the solemn responsibilities of Israel and subject to the judgments which fall in greater and not less measure on 'the household of God'. It is first of all a missionary obligation. Truth cherished is truth lost until it is shared. No exclusiveness can narrow the field, nor any considerations, dogmatic, ecclesiastical, social or personal be allowed to keep us from whatever will implement the Church's God-given purpose." This is a book which it is to be hoped not only the clergy but laymen seeking fresh insight into the mind of Christ will study and ponder.

—OSCAR J. F. SEITZ

* * Youth After Conflict by Goodwin Watson. Association Press, $3.00

Mr. Watson, through dipping into the periodicals, school papers, speeches and analyzing the dramatic arts of America's post-war periods, shows what happens to our youth after hostilities. His thesis is that the increase in delinquency, relaxing of moral standards, etc., is not so much due to the war excitement itself but induced by the basic (r)evolutionary crises which make wars necessary. Most of the findings will not be new to many people. However, all should find the author's, and others', guesses of what our youthful element will be like in the 1950s of interest. A decidedly bad feature of the book is the deplorable lack of conscientious proof-reading. Typographical errors abound and both slow the reader's tempo and awaken his temper.

A Word With You

BY

HUGH D. McCANDLESS

Rector of the Epiphany, New York

ON MAKING WORDS SERVE OTHERS

SKILL with words is said to be acquired, not innate, and if this is so it is a shame that more of us are not adept at using words to build up the morale of others. Perhaps we are too busy seeking ways to build up our own. Our awkwardness is due to lack of the frequent practice associated with real interest.

(You will recall the classic story by W. W. Jacobs about the unhandsome sailor who was ordered to stay below decks, lest he frighten away the Captain's sea serpent. One of his friends said, "Cheer up, many an ugly face 'ides an honest 'eart," and was profoundly shocked by the ingratitude of the unfortunate one.)

It has been my lot to know a half dozen people in whom the gift of saying the right thing in the right way was developed beyond mere skill or art. Their gift was so lovely it shone with a special grace. One of these people could clothe another's work with importance by the use of a single word. Something glowingly incomplete this person would call a "fragment"—and somehow it was made to seem better without unnecessary or overdone completeness. Something rather small would be called "tiny", and thus charged with patient delicacy, like a carved cherry pit.

To describe such people is impossible; to quote them is usually unimpressive. To envy them is not wrong, if we remember that to imitate them is always, and immediately, rewarding.

Orthodox to Establish Close Relations

Moscow Conference Declares That the Roman Church Is Both Incompatible and Hostile

Moscow, (RNS) — A decision to establish close relations with Anglican and Protestant Church throughout the world was made here by leaders of a group of Eastern Orthodox Churches, most of them affiliated with the Moscow Patriarchate.

The patriarchs and exarchs, attending a Pan-Orthodox Conference called by Moscow Patriarch Alexei, agreed that the Protestant Churches—especially the Anglican—follow canons and rites similar to those of Orthodoxy, which establish a basis for understanding between them.

At the same time the Conference decided against participation in the Assembly of the World Council on the ground that the ecumenical movement pursues mostly political, antidemocratic, and not religious aims. (See page 3 & 7, this week).

The Orthodox leaders decided not to approach the Roman Catholic Church, which they said was incompatible and hostile.

They agreed to establish a closer union among Orthodox Churches and named Patriarch Alexei to assume the leading role in this movement. Representatives of the Orthodox Churches of Romania and Bulgaria lent enthusiastic support to Alexei's nomination. The Moscow Patriarch was acclaimed by them as a leading force among Orthodox Churches.

The Pan-Orthodox Conference was held during celebrations marking the 500th anniversary of the independence of the Russian Orthodox Church. Patriarchs, exarchs, and lesser prelates from Yugoslavia, Romania, Bulgaria, Turkey, Lebanon, Albania, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Austria, Holland, China and the United States attended the anniversary celebrations, which were concluded with a two-hour liturgy in Troitsky (Trinity) Cathedral at Zagorsk, a village 45 miles from Moscow.

After the service, the ecclesiastics attended a dinner in the Cathedral's dining hall, built in the 17th century to serve czars who visited the patriarch.

Before returning to their own countries, the prelates attended a memorial service at the grave of Patriarch Tikhon, who died in 1925, and is buried in Donskoy Cemetery here. Patriarch Tikhon was imprisoned by the Soviet authorities in the early 1920s for opposing the Communist regime.

During their stay in Moscow, the visiting churchmen rode about in new Zis luxury automobiles. The cars, which resemble Cadillacs, were made at the Stalin automobile plant.

Glenn Honored

Carlisle, Pa. — The Rev. C. Leslie Glenn, rector of St. John's, Washington, D. C. received the honorary degree of doctor of sacred theology at the convocation of Dickinson College. He was cited as clergyman and author, the president stating that Glenn's "busy pen has supplied trenchant and stimulating articles to the religious press."

Kuling School

New York — News from Kuling School has been infrequent in the past ten years. The China Inland Mission now reports continued good use made of the plant. Kuling is a summer resort in the mountains of central China, in the province of Kiangsi, where many missionaries and other foreigners had summer homes and where a school for foreign children, especially from missionary families, was opened in 1919 under Presbyterian and Episcopal Church auspices. During the war the buildings were used by some isolated missionaries to care for Chinese refugee children.

The Kuling School board in China has felt that not enough children were available as yet to warrant reopening but the China Inland Mission with a large staff in western China has needed such a school. With the consent of the managers in China and the trustees in the United States, the school property was leased to the CIM in 1947 for three years at a nominal rental. The headmaster writes that "the children are very happy, and another fifty are expected in September."

Ground Breaking

Savannah, Ga. — Senior and junior choirs of the new St. Mathew's Church here led guest ministers and parish officials in a procession to the four corners of the lot where ground was broken and blessed where a new church is soon to be built. Ground was broken first by Mrs. Eliza P. DeVeaux, 92, the oldest member of the parish, and she was followed by Iverness Dukes, one of the youngest. The Rev. Gustave H. Caution is the rector of the parish which is the result of the merger of St. Stephen's and St. Augustine's. The preacher at the service was the Rev. Henry W. Murph, pastor of St. Philip's, and American Methodist Episcopal congregation of this city.

Laboratory School

Des Moines, Iowa — International relations was a children's theme in East Des Moines. Quietly and without fanfare, some 100 youngsters who live in the area were taught the fundamentals of "one world"—kindliness and tolerance, knowledge and understanding of other people and other races. The children attended a laboratory school for Iowa church teachers sponsored by the Iowa Interchurch Council. The school was called a laboratory because student teachers spent three hours each morning watching trained instructors conduct a vacation school for the children.

In the afternoons, the student teachers from all over the state attended lecture courses. "The Local Church and the Global Gospel" was the theme. Evenings, the church school instructors and prospective teachers availed themselves of "enrichment" programs, learning more about helps to teaching such as movie projectors, puppets and other visual aid techniques.

With the nursery and kindergarten children, the emphasis was on supervised play and thoughtfulness among themselves. The nursery youngsters, from 3 to 5, learned to share their blocks and dolls. They also had their own simple worship program. Kindergarteners, 5 to 7, were given opportunities for self-expression in such things as finger painting and clay molding. They sat in a group and listened to stories—training their powers of concentration. In the primary department, children 8 to 10 gave close attention to stories about children across the sea. Their handwork and worship was coordinated with the missionary theme. Junior and junior high groups (11 through 16) directed study, activities and worship on China. There were exhibits of Chinese handcraft and art, maps and clay models of villages to illustrate stories. One group built a miniature Chinese scene, with pagoda and bridges. The junior high group made Chinese letters, using them on posters proclaiming a Chinese Christian slogan. This group also learned to sing—in Chinese—the Chinese national anthem.

NEW BISHOP FOR JAPAN

Tokyo: — The Rev. Paul Ichiro Ueda, rector of Mejiro Church here and chairman of the Japanese Church's department of evangelism, was elected bishop for the diocese of Hokkaido on June 17 at a synod of that diocese. Subject to the consents of the bishops and dioceses, his consecration is planned either for the Feast of the Transfiguration, August 6, or St. Bartholomew's Day, August 24, Bishop Maekawa of South Tokyo acting for Presiding Bishop Yashiro who is at the Lambeth Conference. Mr. Ueda attended the Virginia Theological Seminary.

The diocese of Hokkaido, which includes all the northern island of Japan, was organized in 1896, with missionaries from the English Church Missionary Society. The area of 45,000 square miles has a population of some three million, including several thousand Ainus, the aborigines of Japan, among whom the Japanese Church' missionary society hopes to do some work when recovery from present postwar destitution is farther along.

The Hokkaido bishopric has been vacant since Bishop Maekawa was transferred to South Tokyo in 1947. It is not yet up to pre-war strength but the figures for 1946 and 1947 show progress. Eleven clergy, caring for fifteen churches, have 1,546 Church members, including 327 communicants. The 1941 report showed 1,989 members.

Recognition Urged

Detroit, Mich. — Bishop Emrich was joined by 32 of his clergy in a petition to the Lambeth Conference asking that steps be taken for "immediate full communion" with the United Church of South India.

Similar action was also taken by a group of clergymen of Pennsylvania and also of the diocese of Missouri, led by Bishop Scarlett.

Rector Loses Son

Auburn, N. Y.—Frederick L. Perkins, 14 year old son of the Rev. and Mrs. Louis L. Perkins of this city, died on June 28th of a defective thymus gland. The lad had just finished his first year of high school with high honors and had written the prize essay on "The work of a clergyman". He was looking ahead to the ministry.

To Visit Chaplains

Philadelphia — Bishop Oliver Hart, now at the Lambeth Conference, is to visit chaplains of the Episcopal Church in the European theatre at the request of the general commission on chaplains. He is to confirm a number of classes prepared by the chaplains. His visits will include Frankfurt, Wiesbaden, Heidelberg, American zone of Berlin, Munich, Salzburg or Vienna and Stuttgart.

LAMBETH SENDS GREETINGS

London — A message of "heartfelt greetings" was sent by the Anglical Bishops meeting at Lambeth to Patriarch Alexei of Moscow, head of the Russian Orthodox Church. Conveyed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, as spokesman for the 330 bishops at the conference, the message expressed good will to the Russian Church on the occasion of the 500th anniversary of its administrative independence.

Episcopal Church. It's like the battle of Hampshire Grants all over again, 175 years after the indomitable Ethan Allen and his Green Mountain Boys sallied into the land dispute between New York and New Hampshire. For the question of land titles has again come out into the open.

Armed with legal documents, instead of muskets, as weapons, the men of Cavendish, owners under the New York charter, are prepared to fight in court for their acres, which are covered by a recent claim of the Diocese of Vermont under an earlier New Hampshire grant. Word that the farms which have been in their families for generations may be Church land, granted long before Vermont became a state, came as a surprise to the owners of some 314 acres including valuable timberland. The Town of Cavendish, which has collected taxes on this tract for a century and a half, and now owns about half the acreage claimed by the diocese, is likewise prepared to defend the property which officials believe is theirs.

Through a lumberman, Clarence Barlow of Mount Holly, who has leased the land from the Church, with rights to cut timber "as long as grass grows and water flows," a surveying will soon be undertaken.

Task of the surveyors will be to determine the exact location of the boundaries of Church lots under the New Hampshire charter of 1761. Work of the courts will be to decide which has the more valid claim, the Church under the 1761 grant or the present owners under the New York patent of 1772.

Getting Them to Church

Jonesville, Mich. — Grace Church here is using the movies to tell people that it is an active force in the community. A film short has been made showing pictures of the church and of the lay-minister, Jack E. Warner, which contains an invitation to attend. It is shown Saturday evenings in the local theatre for a year without cost.

No More Ivy

Savannah, Ga. — Historic Christ Church, where the Rev. Bland Tucker is rector, had a quaint touch of antiquity, covered as it was with ivy. But when a hurricane blew it off two years ago it exposed the shabbiness of the building. So now it has been painted, with the massive columns with the hitherto unseen carved capitals that support the roof of the large porch giving it a majestic appearance.

Community Center

Kiyosato, Japan — Further construction is under way for the camp, conference, community center and rural mission being sponsored here by the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. The latest development is a clinic for which Bishop Maekawa of South Tokyo broke ground on June 13. The center will give health education and public health measures to benefit farm people and school children, and give emergency care to serious cases. It will be staffed by doctors, nurses and technicians from St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, for year-round service, in cooperation with the governmental health authorities.

Backfire

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

THE REV. GEORGE HANDISYDE
In charge of Grace Church,
Manchester, N. H.

Mr. Shultz is of course entitled to hold and to express his anti-Roman views, though I doubt whether a Church paper is the best place to foment antagonism between Christians. But he has no justification for such a sweeping generalization as his first paragraph contains. I agree that in Spain the Roman Church has lent its support to fascism, but Eire is a republic; in Eire civil rights and liberties are respected and yet Eire is, I suppose, a more completely Catholic country, in the sense of Church and state being officially linked, than any other today.

It is impossible to assert that Rome universally dislikes republics. I do not like the separation of Church and state. We find in England that the two can live together quite well. But that does not make me a papist, or a fascist either. I do not like Franco's government, but how would Mr. Shultz like it if the socialist governments of western Europe tried to oust Mr. Truman (or whoever the next president of the U. S. A. will be), and establish a non-capitalist government? If he really thinks the Vatican blameworthy for interferring in other people's affairs he might consider twice about urging American Christians to put Spain's house in order.

If he urges us to support the Federal Council of Churches, with its various beliefs and unbeliefs, it must be for a better reason than forming an anti-Roman front. Surely the purpose of a Federal Council of Churches is to work towards the ultimate unity of all Christendom, not to seek to destroy half of it.

H. G. ANDERSON
Layman of Washington, D. C.

Thanks for the editorial (July 8) about Moral Rearmament. I have had some contacts with the group and I am sure you sized them up correctly.

MRS. B. G. GODFREY
Churchwoman of Philadelphia

The editorial on Archbishop Temple and Lambeth (July 22) was I imagine a difficult one to write. The leadership of this great man, I am sure, is greatly missed at the Conference. But your point that his absence will in all probability result in the development of new leadership is well taken. I for one await the report from the Conference with great interest.

Lambeth Conference Hits At All Ideologies

The Report to be Made Public This Week Is Going to Assail All Tyranny

New York—The thick silence that has surrounded the Lambeth Conference since it opened on July 1st was broken by two American bishops on August 5th. The Archbishop of Canterbury had stated at the opening session that the deliberations were strictly private and that he hoped there would be no leaks to the press. As a result Witness correspondent Bishop Lane W. Barton has airmailed interesting bits about attending a reception given the Anglican bishops by the King and Queen; about attending a Church Army dinner; about going to various church services. But he has been discreetly silent about anything that has taken place within the walls of the Lambeth palace.

However Bishop Frank A. Juhan of Florida and Bishop Dandridge of Tennessee gave interviews to the press on the 5th, the day the conference came to a close, although the official report of the conference, with its various findings and decisions, will not be released to the press until August 18th—not in time of course for this number of The Witness.

Bishop Juhan told the reporters that the report will condemn communism but that there will be little effort in that fact for the ultra-conservative since it will also condemn capitalism "that is equally aggressive."

"The conference is coming out very definitely not only against nationalism, but communism, totalitarianism and other 'isms', including capitalism that is equally aggressive and tyrannical," declared Bishop Juhan in his interview, observing further that "the conference is tremendously concerned with great social problems that break down a stable home." He declined to say anything further about what transpired at Lambeth Palace.

Bishop Dandridge, at an earlier interview, declared that intense nationalism is promoting international anarchy and constitutes "the greatest menace in the world today."

"Ultimately," stated the Bishop, "we have got to have a federation of nations if we are going to live in peace."

One of the events that can be reported without violating any pledges to silence was the communion service and breakfast-conference which was sponsored by the Industrial Christian Fellowship. It was held in the Church House of Westminster Abbey and was attended by about 200 bishops. The chief speaker was Sir Stafford Cripps, one of the top ministers in the British government, and an active and devout Churchman. He told the bishops that "we are confronted by something deeper than an economic crisis. The economic condition of the world is critical but it is a symptom of something deeper, just as an organic disease may be the outcome of a psychological or psychic condition. It is a moral condition which has landed us in this difficulty."

He went on to say that "the discovery of atomic power as the flower of our technological development ought to delight us. Instead we fear it. With this development has come a sharpening of the conflict over the control of these powers. Shall it be the individual or the community? This is a moral question. The absolute power of men to build or destroy has increased. Has moral power kept pace with the growth of physical power?"

Speaking of the immense and widespread suffering endured by many people throughout the world Sir Stafford said: "Suffering can refine a faith but it is a poor instrument of conversion. Furthermore, if reason and Christian commonsense are to have a chance, the suffering and privation of people must be relieved. Nor can we hope to win to our Christian faith the vast numbers of the unchurched by reciting archaic prayers. We must demonstrate the vital power of our faith and assert that the power of the spirit is such that it can control and direct our actions. We are judged by our fruits, not by the flowers of our words. The passing of monastic foundations and of the episcopal palaces marks the passing, I hope, of the identification of the Christian religion with privilege. There is a lot of past history which we have to live down; a past history of the Church's indifference to the poor and the depressed. Ill-health, slums, injustice are enemies of God. We are God's partners in ridding the world of these enemies.

"We do not want a single political party to become the exponent of our faith but we want that all parties may be permeated with the Christian faith. It is my hope that the Church of Christ may nail Christian action to its banner and go forth to attack every evil in the world, not fearing any consequences; strengthened by communion with God and fellowship with Christians of all denominations in all parts of the world."

Also speaking at this meeting, which was described by our correspondent as "really great with everyone present enthusiastic", was Bishop Sherrill, Presiding Bishop of the Church in the United States. He declared that "it is not enough to go into the slums passing out leaflets; we have to find the causes which make these tragic diseases possible."

He offered three suggestions: more study by clergy and laity alike of the social problems that face mankind; more conferences under religious auspices of industrial leaders, both management and labor; tackling contemporary problems with more courage and reality.

POLISH YOUTH OPPOSE REACTIONARY CLERGY

Warsaw (RNS)—A pledge to stand against Roman Catholic Clergymen "who are using religion for political purposes" was made by thousands of Polish youth attending a congress at Wroclaw (Breslau). The congress, which met to form a new union of Polish young people, adopted a constitution which bound members to "counteract the activity of reactionary clergymen who misuse their religious convictions and who act against the interest of the people's state". The constitution also declared for tolerance of true religion and guaranteed religious freedom to members. The new union combines the youth organizations of the Polish Communists, the Socialists, Peasants and Democrats.

CANTERBURY COLLEGE OFFERS NEW COURSES

Young people of college age of the Polish National Catholic Church were offered the opportunity to attend Canterbury College, Danville, Indiana, in a letter sent recently by the Rev. Douglas R. MacLaury, president of Canterbury College, to all bishops of the Polish National Catholic Church. Father MacLaury said that if enough Polish-American students applied for admission that he would make an immediate appointment from among the displaced faculties in Europe now resident in England, to teach courses dealing with Polish culture and religion, such as Polish Literature, Polish History, and the Polish Language.

Since the Anglican Church and the Polish National Catholic Church are in communion with each other the daily celebration of the Holy Communion, Matins and Vespers, also would provide for the religious life of Polish-American students.

At the same time it has been announced that a doctor and a priest, both well known in the field of marriage counseling, will join to offer a newly accredited course entitled "Marriage Relations" at Canterbury this fall. The appointment of Floyd Boys, M. D. of Indianapolis, as assistant professor in sociology will enable offering this course on a level heretofore impossible. As taught by Dr. Boys, the course will include lecture and study material on physical, emotional, spiritual, and psycho-sexual maturity; the problems of the temporarily and permanently unmarried; instructions in the anatomy, physiology and pathology of sex, as well as illustrated lectures on conception, pregnancy and childbirth.

Father MacLaury will supplement the lectures of Dr. Boys with instructions on the religious basis of marriage, the principle of justice in marriage; reasons for marriage failure, and the Christian doctrine of marriage.

Canterbury College is a co-educational college sponsored and financed by members of the Episcopal Church all over the United States. It is a four-year, liberal arts, pre-professional and teacher educational college offering the B.A. degree. Episcopalian students from more than 20 states have enrolled for the fall semester.

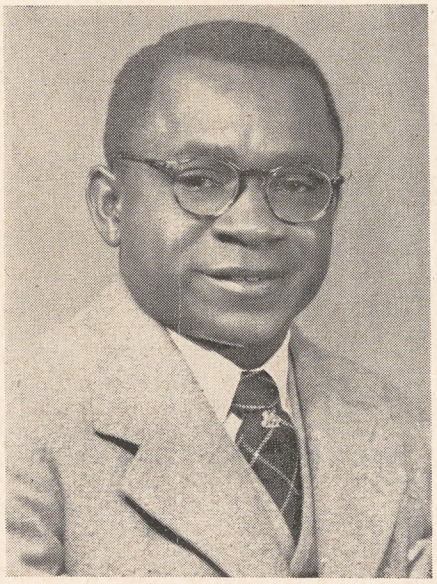
Pleads With Christians To Prevent A War



Native African Says White Race Is Again Preparing to Plunge World in War

St. Louis—Benjamin Y. Owusu, native of Africa now studying agriculture in the United States, told those attending a dinner-meeting of the Church School League of the diocese of Missouri, that the people of his continent are "coming to resent what they feel is unfair exploitation by western nations." He said that the population of his country consists of four million persons with black skins and only three million whites who are mainly government officials, traders and missionaries. He is a member of the Ashanti tribe which comprises nearly a quarter of the total population. It has its own tribal council with representatives in the government body of the Colony, elected by the democratic process.

Slight of stature, and with a twinkle in his eye and a broad smile, Mr. Owusu told of his boyhood in the Gold Coast and how he had been given a high school education by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel at a school in Accra. For a time he served his bishop, the Rt. Rev. John O. Aglionby, as house boy and servant. He is now attending Lincoln University in Jefferson City and is attending Grace Church there. Later he plans to do graduate work at the University of Wisconsin "and then return to the Gold Coast to help my people."

"To most Americans," he said, "Africa spells jungles, heathenism and savagery. There is a very large number of people, not only in this country but even in Europe where Africa has all her masters, whose minds go back to these words as soon as one mentions Africa. It is true that Africa has not reached civilization as measured by Western standards: there are not as many roads there as there are in this country; the standard of living is nowhere to be compared to what obtains in this country; there are no educational facilities as there are here, but there is one thing at least which Africa has learned: Africa has learned Christ, and Him crucified.

"Nearly 500 years ago the white man used the Bible as a spearhead for exploiting Africa. Before this time Africa was the boiling point in the world for tribal wars, slavery, and human sacrifice. Not that these vices were peculiar to Africa; the history of every nation at one time or another is tainted with one, two, or all of these vices; but in the case of Africa they were printed in block letters and proclaimed on housetops as a pretext for land acquisition, exploitation, and slavery of the soul, if not the body. But by the untiring efforts of missionary men and women of all lands and all denominations, Africa at last has, so to speak, learned the meaning of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man; tribal wars have ceased and so have slavery and human sacrifices.

"Today Africa is the only peaceful spot in the world; the influence of Christianity has so dominated the entire continent that the sword has been sheathed for the plough. Tribes that a century ago waged incessant wars against each other today meet and worship the Christ under the roof of one Church and receive his precious body and blood at the hands of a minister who belongs to another tribe which took no small part in these wars and struggles of a century or two ago.

"But while even Africa, heathen Africa, the dark continent, has learned this elementary but highly ethical lesson of life, it is sad that her masters and teachers should still practice hatred in one form or another.

"If there is anything that sometimes threatens the faith of an African Christian, even of an educated one for that matter, it is the fact that the white man who taught him to love not only his friends, neighbors, and relatives but even his enemies, still practices hatred and lives by war and slaughter.

"A little over 30 years ago, the world was plunged into what was then considered the greatest war in history, because of the white man's failure to love his neighbor. After four years of massacre and slaughter which brought in its train untold waste, misery, and suffering this struggle came to an end. The white man breathed a sigh of relief and vowed to himself that war shall be no more.

"Barely 25 years passed and this solemn vow was violated; the white man was again at the throat of his brother; the world saw savagery and slaughter as it had never before been witnessed in its long and chequered history. During the six years of this gigantic struggle the Greek was a friend and worthy ally of the Yugoslavian, the American of the Russian, the British of the Pole. But as soon as that struggle ceased one white man after the other began to sow the very seeds that yielded them two great harvests of destruction: the American is no longer an American but a Capitalist, the Russian a Communist, the English a Socialist, and so on and so forth.

"Once again the whole of the white race is feverishly preparing, waiting only for the time when each side will be strong enough to jump once again at somebody's throat.

"Is it impossible for the white man to live and practice the lesson which he took to Africa nearly 500 years ago? Is the Christian teaching manufactured in two different forms: one half for home and the other half for African consumption? Or are we to accept what a minister of a rather questionable morality once told his congregation: 'Do what I say but don't do what I do'?

"To you all, Christian men and women of this wonderful land of the free and the brave, Africa appeals to you for brotherly love and understanding; Africa bids you live by what you preach; let brotherly love prevail everywhere so that we all: white, black, yellow, can have peace in our time."

DISASTER HITS JAPANESE MISSION

The Rev. John J. Lloyd of Kyoto writes of the severe earthquake in Japan on June 28. He managed to get through to Fukui, the center of the disturbance, near the west coast, 200 miles west of Tokyo, and found a scene of devastation, a mile-long area of houses shaken to rubble or leaning against each other, roofs resting on the ground, a bridge lifted out of place, old house-furnishings from homes and new wares from shops shaken out in heaps, a five-story concrete structure sagging in the middle, crevices in the concrete pavement, and the street blocked by the twisted rails of a car line. The people were still dazed, staring blankly at what had been their homes or working stolidly, without any of the usual smiles of greeting.

Mr. Lloyd went out to a community on the edge of the city where the diocese of Kyoto has a mission, Trinity Church, with a kindergarten. He was hoping to find one of the leading laymen of the diocese, Mr. Sakamoto, whose home was near the kindergarten. He found him working among ruins, still almost incoherent from shock, and heard his story. Mr. Sakamoto was stepping out of his house when the ground began to shudder. He rushed back to help his wife get their three small children out of the house. While he was doing this, the kindergarten building crashed to the ground, and he realized that his oldest son was there, and also the priest in charge of the parish, the Rev. Umetaro Uda. Grown-ups and children were trapped, the children screaming frantically. Mr. Sakamoto "yelled back for them to start praying hard," and for two long nightmare hours he and a few others struggled to move heavy fallen beams and clear holes through the wreckage so that people could emerge. They began coming out one by one; some had to be lifted out. His son, covered with blood, came crawling up through a hole. "Mr. Sakamoto told him sharply to take off his shirt and wipe his face before he terrified his mother."

The last person was Mr. Uda, lifted out, half paralyzed. Then they counted and were amazed to find every person saved alive. The boy's wounds were not serious, and Mr. Uda's paralysis disappeared after a few days.

Trinity Church tower, which remained standing during the war, also survived the earthquake, its cross rising high above the surrounding wreckage. Mr. Uda and his family live on the ground floor of the tower and the second floor serves as parish chapel until the church can be rebuilt on the concrete foundations, which are still usable.

Mr. Sakamoto is a teacher. Single-handed, he takes care of the salaries of the priest in charge and two kindergarten teachers, besides supporting his own family. During the past two years he raised all the money to erect the new kindergarten building, which he has just seen destroyed by the earthquake. Today, the amount of money needed to replace it will be twice as much but Mr. Lloyd says Mr. Sakamoto is determined to do so, and eventually they mean to rebuild the church.

Religion in America

IF ANY of our readers has an ambition to wear a hair-shirt for the good of his soul, we recommend that he proceed to read that chapter in Harold J. Laski's latest book, "American Democracy" which is called "Religion in America." It's a weird combination of obvious truths and odd assumptions that come from a sad ignorance of what the Christian religion actually is. After a long survey of the place of organized religion in American history, he gives this as his verdict:

"I doubt very much whether the institutional religions of the United States, wherever they are based on some dogmatic interpretation of the universe, are likely to be able to evade decay. * * * They have been one of the outstanding influences for securing the acquiescence of citizens in the existing social order of any particular time. * * * The American Churches, as a mass expression in American life, produce religiosity and not religion."

What this verdict actually means is, of course, that, by and large, the institutional churches in America have consistently acted in every community as handmaids of the state power, rather than as critics in any effective fashion. As part of his evidence the writer quotes an extraordinary statement of the late Bishop William Lawrence from his "Fifty Years," published in 1923: "In the long run it is only to the man of morality that wealth comes. We believe in the harmony of God's universe. We believe that it is only by working along his laws, natural and spiritual, that we can work with efficiency. Only by working along the lines of right thinking and right living can the secrets and wealth of nature be revealed. * * * Godliness is in league with riches.—Material prosperity is helping to make the national character sweeter, more joyous, more unselfish, more Christlike. That is my answer to the question as to the relation of material prosperity to morality."

This verdict and the quotation which the writer uses to illustrate its pertinency is embarrassing to loyal Christians and devout Churchmen. But we are inclined to think that no Christian who is well informed on the history of organized religion in America and who can think objectively will find it possible to dispute the verdict. The more he lets himself meditate on it the more "mea culpas" he will be apt to intone.

But there is much in this remarkable chapter of Professor Laski's with which we are in very definite and very ardent disagreement. In the field of New Testament criticism we find him way out of bounds, for he blithely assumes that the basic facts of the gospel story related there are simply myth. There is no piece of literature in the world's history that has had the long and searching criticism that has been the lot of the gospel narratives and the net result of it all to reasonable men not preconditioned by philosophical assumptions is that the basic facts recorded there cannot be convincingly denied. The Christian stands on very solid ground in pointing out that it takes facts and not myths to transform ordinary men and women in the Apostolic age and to carry enough dynamite to turn the ancient world upside down and set it on the path of democracy.

Another curious error constantly cropping up in this chapter is the assumed division of all American churches into fundamentalist or liberal categories. The Roman Church he places in the former class and considers that all the major Protestant bodies have their membership divided between the two classes. It may be inevitable, with even so acute an observer as Professor Laski, that any complete outsider from all organized religion should go far astray in trying to assess religious qualities and principles. That a Catholic Church or communion has a distinct quality and cannot properly be classified either as fundamentalist or liberal, as such, never occurs to him and yet it is a truth the vital importance of which is hard to overestimate; in fact much of the hope for a reunited Christian Church depends on that reality as the essential nucleus for this particular fulfilling of our Lord's will. The historic Catholic communions never felt the conflict between religion and modern science which has so plagued most of the other Christian bodies and which Professor Laski lays so much stress on. Their distinctive attitude to the Bible—so different from the original Protestant point of view ("The Bible and the Bible only the religion of Protestants")—that it was in fact the actual creation of the primitive Church, is probably the basic reason why they never felt the full impact of the religion versus science problem. They have instead been content to base their faith upon the facts witnessed to by the gospels and upon the sacramental fellowship which grew out of them. And so they have no excuse—we have no excuse—for letting their Christian witness appear to the community to be watered down to social service activities. Mere social service as such is trifling; at its best it is a palliative, at its worst it is an alibi for failure to go to the root of the world's sickness. And the root of the present desperate illness of the world is the fact that the average man today, in all countries, possesses no belief nor cherishes even a hope that God is effectively in his world to work his will, both in the individual soul and in the wider sweep of history. It is, in fact, the "sin against the Holy Ghost."

WE have to realize that preaching to small congregations of the converted or the repetition of archaic prayers the language of which is little understood by the less-educated, or the singing of hymns whose words are often strangely inappropriate to our present circumstances, is not going to win over those who never attend church and who are absorbed in their own very practical and immediate needs and concerned primarily with their own material difficulties and frustrations. My hope therefore is that the Church of Christ militant here on earth will lead its forces to attack every evil thing that exists in our world and national society, not fearing the consequences but bold in the conviction of its own power for good.

We submit that all Episcopalians have a challenge before us here in America to stand four-square for the "faith once delivered to the saints" as the dynamic power to transform individual lives into the likeness of Jesus and to shake the community, as the Apostles did, by the power of the Holy Ghost, into a recognition of fellowship with the Incarnate Lord. And we presume to offer three specific procedures which are both logical and essential if we are to fulfill our vocation as a Christian communion in America.

1. To preach basic Christian doctrine frankly and emphatically.
2. To apply this doctrine as the revolutionary dynamic for a new world, for which no text could be better than Mary's hymn, The Magnificat.
3. To give the Sacrament of the Incarnate Lord constantly to our people, with confidence that it is God's channel for growing spiritual bodies in individuals that shall fit them to live the eternal life here and hereafter and for strengthening them for their privilege of fighting to get our Lord's will done on earth.

Ethics and Religion

BY

PHILIP H. STEINMETZ

PEOPLE often say to me, "I am as good as lots of people who go to church." My reply is that I certainly hope and believe they are. For we who go to church are no better and do not claim to be better than those who don't go. In fact, one reason for our going is that we know we are bad sinners and need God's repeated forgiveness. We go to church to ask for it and to listen to his directions for our improvement. The church is more like a hospital for sick souls than a convention of successful livers.

You see religion is the cure for bad conduct. It is something like the sunshine which restores the damage done by our mistakes in agriculture. God's love pours upon us like sunshine. Religion is concerned to keep us exposed to that love as nearly all the time as possible.

Ethics deals with the results of such exposure. It has to do with right and wrong conduct. Religion is concerned with the exposure, the inner life behind the conduct.

Christianity is a matter both of religion and ethics. As long as we are partly shielded by selfishness from God's outpouring of himself in Christ and are not moved to our very soul by his spirit and as long as we are not perfect in conduct, we need what the church offers us and are wise if we come looking for it.

A Word With You

BY

HUGH D. McCANDLESS

Rector of the Epiphany, New York

ORIENTATION BY OCCIDENTALIZATION

THE use of the words front and back with relation to churches and other gathering places is frequently confusing. The front pews are nearest the back door, and vice versa.

Churches, however, usually are headed toward the east, and thus in all of them we have a handy way of describing directions. One can refer to the direction of the altar in any church, however situated, as "eastward". This is orientation—"determining one's position in relation to the east".

Mohammedans do not pray toward the east, necessarily, but toward Mecca, which is not east from everywhere. A young G.I. during the war, announced solemnly to headquarters that he was a Mohammedan. He wished his "dog-tag" marked accordingly, and said that it was the duty of the army to furnish him with an accurate compass and a sturdy prayer-rug. A chaplain was called to rescue the furious and helpless officers from their tormentor. He discovered that the Muslim was a bored young Episcopalian, who cheerfully consented to relieve his frustration in other channels when he learned that all Mohammedans go by the sun, and that many do not possess prayer-rugs.

It is common, in these days of ever more definitive spheres of influence, to read in newspapers of nations being "oriented toward the west". Thus a word which first meant "to head toward the east", and then meant "to determine one's position with reference to the east" now simply means "to determine one's position". In the original and precise meaning of the word, it would be impossible to orient anything westward, even with all the money the Marshall Plan calls for.

Church Manners

BY

GEORGE I. HILLER
Rector of Trinity, Miami

REALLY, there are such things. Good manners are based on the consciousness that there are some other people in the world. The well-mannered person is the one who so conducts himself as not to abridge the rights of others. Church manners are based on the consciousness that "God is in his holy temple", and the well-mannered person will not forget that fact, and will so conduct himself as in the presence of God. It is that which is the basis of reverence, the foundation of worship. To emphasize that, our churches are arranged and our worship is planned.

That which is permissible in a theatre or auditorium may not be good manners in church. Silence is an expression of reverence and necessary, not only as an aid to worship, but in consideration for others.

Lateness, always undesirable, is especially so when it interrupts worship. Never enter during the lessons or while the congregation is kneeling; wait until the congregation is standing. (It would be more considerate to use the side aisles when late.)

Participation in unison, rather than "rugged individualism", is to be desired. There is no place in worship for the "star", either in the pulpit, choir or congregation. Worship is a united expression of our attitude toward God. We are gathered, not to hear a sermon or solo, these are incidental and should contribute to our purpose, namely, to praise God. A good sermon, excellent music, beautiful surroundings can help us to realize the presence of God, and if they do, they are truly in harmony with the whole. If they only serve to make us realize the presence of the preacher or the soloist, they have failed in their purpose and belong in the concert program, not in worship.

The congregation too, must cooperate to make the work of the preacher and musician their own. The Lord's Prayer, The Creed, The General Confession are printed with a capital letter at the beginning of each phrase, regardless of whether it be the beginning of a sentence or not, thus making it easy to read them in unison. Individualism asserts itself here, when one thoroughly familiar with the words, fails to use a book and as a result ignores the phrasing. Clergy, as well as congregation, often offend in this.

To refuse to stand or kneel with the rest of the congregation at the appropriate places is to refuse to enter into the worship, and is treating it as an entertainment feature when it should be a united exercise.

New Books

Excellent Good *Fair

* * China Awake by Robert Payne. Dodd, Mead and Co., $3.00

In the shape of a highly-concentrated and civilized diary, Mr. Payne tells the story of the "middle-ground" in China—the professors, students and urban shop-keepers who made up the now-outlawed Democratic League. In terms of personal contacts and conversations, he traces the events whereby the liberal wing of the Kuomintang, along with the independent group, was forced into do-or-die opposition to the Chen clique surrounding Chiang Kai Shek. When these pages were written, these professors and students were still Secretary Marshall's hope for China. Now they are outlawed and have joined the Communists, been imprisoned or slain by the secret police, creating a political vacuum in the center of China's political thought. It would appear from this book, which adds up to but one more indictment, that the elimination of this hope is the direct result of the foreign policy of the United States in China based, not on reconstruction, but on the containment of Communism. Since this middle-ground seems to be on the way out throughout the world—and since liberal Christians generally are the bulwark of this group—it would be well for American church people to read this book with care. Episcopal League Fights Ban on "The Nation"

Detroit, Mich.—The Episcopal League for Social Action has affiliated with the ad hoc committee formed to fight the decision to ban "The Nation", liberal weekly, from the libraries of New York City schools. The ban, imposed by the board of superintendents, was because of the periodical's alleged 'anti-Catholicism' as found in a series of articles by Paul Blanshard, expert on Caribbean affairs and student of the Roman Catholic Church's roles in medicine, economics, politics and sociology.

Representing the League on the committee, which is headed by Mr. Archibald MacLeish, are the Rev. Joseph H. Titus, rector of Grace Church, Jamaica, L. I., and Mrs. Muriel Webb, administrative assistant in the National Council's department of social relations. The League has sent letters to the clergy in metropolitan New York asking that they take an interest in the issue and, also, a letter to Mayor William O'Dwyer asking for open hearings on the case. The letter to the mayor said in part:

"As Christians, we are shocked by the attitude taken by the Board of Superintendents in this case and we believe, in the name of democratic freedom, that a public hearing on this issue must be held at once before the evil, already done in the name of 'religion', is compounded. Dr. Blanshard, in his articles, was making no claim to infallibility. Rather he was presenting facts dealing with the role played by the Roman Catholic Church in politics and economics in this country—facts which any student of political economy, sociology or religion has been aware of for a long time. If religion can't stand up to justifiable criticism and meet the challenge (as the banning of The Nation would seem to indicate) then there is little sense in further discussion about democracy. We believe that democracy is dependent upon true religion and, when in the name of self-security, religion demands the use of undemocratic means in this country (as it has done in Spain and elsewhere), we are confronted with a serious threat to all freedom."

Quakers and the Draft

Philadelphia, Pa. — The American Friends Service Committee will not set up any alternative service programs for men of draft age. However, the Quaker organization said that it will welcome men eligible for the draft into their regular relief, rehabilitation, and educational projects, which are carried on in thirteen different countries, including the United States.

This decision was made as a result of a conference on conscription and war which was recently held at Earlham College, Richmond, Indiana, and attended by representatives of 19 Yearly Meetings of Friends in the United States, as well as the Service Committee and the Friends Committee on National Legislation.

During World War II the Quaker Committee, together with the Mennonites and the Church of the Brethren, sponsored Civilian Public Service Camps for conscientious objectors.

At the Earlham conference the attending Friends adopted a statement giving advices to Friends on conscription and war. The statement urged Friends to adhere faithfully to the peace testimony against "all wars and fighting, and in no way to unite with any warlike measure such as a Selective Service Draft or Universal Military Training, to the end that we may convincingly demonstrate a more excellent way of settling conflicts."

The statement encouraged members of the Society to support Young Friends and others who express their opposition to conscription either by non-registration, or by registration as conscientious objectors. "We warmly approve civil disobedience under Divine Compulsion as an honorable testimony fully in keeping with the history and practices of Friends," the statement said.

It also asked Friends to avoid engaging in any trade, business or profession directly contributing to the military system, and not to purchase government war bonds or stock certificates in war industries.

Friends should ask Quaker schools and colleges to refuse to accept military training units or contracts, or military subsidies for scientific research, and should advise Young Friends not to accept military training in other institutions, according to the statement.

Finally, members of the Society of Friends were urged to create a home and family atmosphere in which the "ways of love and reconciliation are so central that the resort to violence in any relationship is impossible."

Friends should "help develop the institutions, methods, and attitudes necessary to a harmonious and peaceful world," the statement said, " . . . to press for world disarmament beginning unilaterally with the United States, . . . to work for the repeal of draft legislation, and to share willingly and sacrificially our resources for the rebuilding of the world . . . "

"Proxy Parents" Banned

London (RNS)—Artificial insemination of women in cases where a donor is used should be made a criminal offense, according to a special commission appointed by Dr. Geoffrey Francis Fisher, Archbishop of Canterbury.

The commission, composed of men and women, declared that assisted insemination between husband and wife might be justified, and added that where this was inapplicable or ineffective other methods of artificial insemination by husband and wife might be employed.

Use of a donor, however, the commission said, "involves a breach of the marriage, violates the exclusive union set up between husband and wife, defrauds the child thus begotten and deceives both putative kinsmen and society at large."

In a preface to the commission's report, Dr. Fisher said that artificial insemination was practiced on "a very small scale" in England. He explained the report was not to be considered an official Church document, but added he would have no hesitation in subscribing to its conclusions.

Protect Missionaries

Shanghai (RNS) — Warnings that American missionaries engaged in hospital work must not be molested were posted by Communists soon after Nationalistic forces withdrew from Fengchow, it was disclosed by a reliable informant who arrived here from the occupied area.

Meanwhile, four Congregationalist women missionaries, previously reported isolated by the Communist offensive at Fengchow, have sent word of their safety to the American Board of Foreign Missions in Peiping.

The Quest of the Historical Jesus

By Albert Schweitzer

This book is a study of the struggle which the best-equipped intellects of the modern world have waged in trying to realise for themselves the historical personality of Our Lord. Albert Schweitzer's first important work in Biblical criticism, it was written some 40 years ago and rocked the theological world with the force of its greatness. Now brought out in a new printing, the book is still considered one of the most important contributions to modern Biblical thought.

It considers the various views on the life of Christ from the time of Reimarus (1694-1768) to the work of Wrede (1859-1907). In the closing chapter Schweitzer urges Christians to drop all the reconstructed Christologies and to follow instead the spiritual example of Jesus Himself.

Theologian, musician, doctor, Schweitzer is now at the age of seventy-two carrying on heroic work as medical missionary in Equatorial Africa. Since it was first published, THE QUEST OF THE HISTORICAL JESUS has gone into printing after printing, and has been widely read throughout the entire civilized world. $5.00

250th ANNIVERSARY IS OBSERVED

Newport, R. I. — A setting of the Magnificat, written by Carl Theodorus Pachelbel, first organist of Trinity Church, was sung as a feature of the parish's week-long observance of its 250th anniversary. The only existing copy of the composition was copied by J. Raymond Parker, present organist, and photostated for the choir. The Magnificat was presented at a thanksgiving service. Pachelbel came to Newport in 1733 from Boston to assist in installing an organ presented to the church by Dean George Berkeley after the community of Berkeley, Mass., named for the dean, refused to accept it on the ground that organs were sacrilegious.

Berkeley was dean of Derry and later a bishop, and had lived for two years in nearby Middletown. His gift was the second organ to be shipped to the colonies from England. The present organ contains some pipes from the original. One of the few men on this side of the Atlantic with knowledge of the complicated instrument, Pachelbel remained at Trinity as organist for a year after its installation.

The original edifice for Trinity Church was built in 1702. What became of it is not known. The present church building, a simple, stately white structure still containing George Washington's pew, was erected in 1726, 28 years after the founding of the parish and 59 years after the founding of Newport.

Another feature of the church's anniversary was an exhibition of its old silver, altar cloths and other historical articles. Books and old records of the parish were on display all week at the Newport Historical Society. During the celebration Dr. Albert C. Thomas, pastor of the First Baptist church in Providence, oldest Baptist congregation in the country, was a guest preacher at Trinity.

St. Patrick Re-enrolled

Belfast (RNS) — St. Patrick was a Protestant. That's a claim being advanced here by Prof. D. L. Savory, M. P., of Queen's University, a member of the Church of Ireland (Anglican). According to Prof. Savory, the writings of St. Patrick make it "clear that we Protestants are the sole inheritors of the pure and undefiled religion which he preached." The educator asserts that the Vatican never appointed any archbishop or primate in Ireland before the 12th century, and since St. Patrick died in 493 A. D., he could never have been named Archbishop or Primate of Armagh by Pope Celestine, as Catholic writers maintain. "We Protestants maintain the doctrines which were held by the ancient Celtic Church for seven centuries after St. Patrick," Prof. Savory says. "There was a Church in Ireland independent of Papal control up to the 12th century, and it was then only through the conquest of Ireland by the Anglo-Norman Roman Catholics that for the first time it became subject to the Pope."

Vatican Issue Excluded

Philadelphia (RNS) — Delegates to the convention of the new Progressive Party here rejected a proposal that the party platform include a declaration against sending a personal representative of the President to the Vatican.

The proposal was offered as an addition to the platform plank favoring continued separation of Church and State. The New York delegation to the convention suggested the addition, which had previously been discarded by the platform committee.

LAMBETH CONFERENCE - 1980

The moral authority of Lambeth Conferences and their value to the Anglican Communion have been very great in the past. The need for inspired guidance in the future will be critical.

Thirty or so years hence, responsibility for spiritual and moral leadership in our Church will rest upon men who are testing their vocation and training for it now in one of the Seminaries listed below. All of these institutions need greater support and financial help to bring that training to the highest pitch of effectiveness.

CLOSING SERVICE OF LAMBETH

At the service which closed the Lambeth Conference, held at Westminster Abbey, Archbishop Garbett of York stated that only a united Christendom can expect nations to take seriously its appeal for international peace. The service, held August 8th, was attended by about 600 bishops from all parts of the world, many of whom left following the service for their dioceses, while others plan a holiday on the continent before returning home, or are to go to the world assembly of the World Council of Churches which opens on August 22nd at Amsterdam.

The Archbishop stated that many who make no claim to be Christians are experiencing the bankruptcy of materialistic secularism and are "now ready to listen to and welcome the word of God spoken with authority."

"With the discovery and use of the atomic bomb we live more nearly in the spiritual atmosphere of the first Christians who expected at any time the end of the world," declared the Archbishop. "Within a few years our civilization may pass away. Now therefore is the hour of crisis; before it is too late we must preach the gospel and bear our witness; now we must repent and call others to repentance before the door of opportunity is shut.—This is an age of storm and strife. It has been truly said that the recent rate of change has been so great that it is an age of revolution. The demons of hate and suspicion are at large, and the air is full of rumors of war. And over mankind there hangs the menace of the atomic bomb which, with other weapons almost as deadly, may finally destroy our civilization."

CHINESE STUDENT

I was disturbed by the article on student strikes in China written by Paul Denlinger (WITNESS, July 8). Do you think it is a very good article? Do you really agree with what he said? I want to raise a few points.

(1) He is against American aid because he thinks that "American money is being shamefully wasted." It is much better to spend the same in western Europe than in China which has not "any basis for a real democracy." Of course American aid should be discontinued but it is because aid at present is against the welfare of the Chinese people, not because of the hopelessness of the situation. The Chinese people think we are moving towards democracy.

(2) His emphasis of China becoming definitely communistic is very likely going to mislead people. "It will not be liberal or socialist," he says. This is contrary to facts. The Chinese Communists will have a deciding voice in China later but their program now is not communistic. The emphasis is on agrarian reform.

(3) He thinks that the students strikes against American revival of Japan is based on "distortion and falsehood". "The lack of critical understanding and intellectual honesty on the part of students and their teachers was very disheartening to watch." Yet this is precisely one of the points raised by the Chinese students here in their summer conference, which you reported in the same number. With which side do you agree?

ANSWER: Ordinarily we do not print unsigned letters. We do so in this case because the writer, who is known to our editors, believes it would mean trouble when returning to China if the letter was signed. As for the questions, we repeat what we constantly have to do, that editorial opinion is expressed on the editorial page. We believe in a free press and when we ask a person to write an article for us he may say exactly what he pleases, taking the responsibility for it over his own signature.

How Much Are Children Worth?

Their value to others may be measured by their training; their worth to you by the value you place upon Christian training.

Would you endow the nation's only Episcopal co-educational liberal arts college to the extent of $1,000—if it cost you only $25?

You can!

Vast fortunes are vanishing and, with them, the endowments of Church-affiliated colleges. But a $25 gift equals an annual 2½% return from a $1,000 endowment!

And only by such a "Living Endowment" of many currently-expendable gifts can the vital influence of Canterbury College be safeguarded at a time when the permeating truth and ethic of Christianity are being pushed into eclipse by so many publicly-endowed institutions of lower "higher learning." Canterbury offers liberal arts, teacher education and pre-professional training for Law, Medicine, Journalism, Science, Business, Nursing, etc.; but it is determined to educate not part of a person, but the whole human being!

Canterbury needs your help, and you need Canterbury's help. Together, we can keep "the faith once delivered to the Saints."

Your gift (deductible for Federal Income Tax purposes, and payable to the Canterbury College Laymen's Foundation, Inc.) will be acknowledged by a Living Endowment Certificate dramatizing an amount 40 times that of the gift itself—e.g., $2,000 for a gift of $50, its assumed invested-endowment value.

For your help, and for names of other potential friends, we shall be deeply and everlastingly grateful.

The Lambeth Conference Issues Its Report

Bishops Are Split on South India Church With Majority Favoring Recognition

London — A new and deep sense of unity within the world-wide Anglican Communion, and a new vision of increasing duty with other Churches through schemes for progressive mutual recognition and inter-communion leading on to organic unity, were among the outstanding achievements of the Lambeth Conference, 1948, as revealed in its encyclical letter and resolutions and the reports of its committees, which are published August 18 by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.

Other important pronouncements and decisions included: approval of a declaration of human rights; a condemnation of Marxian Communism; a plea for international control of atomic energy, so as to prevent its use in war; an appeal for active evangelism by all members of the Church; a scheme for a larger episcopal conference to include bishops from Churches now outside the Anglican Communion; a scheme for a Pan-Anglican Congress representative of the whole Anglican Communion including clergy and laity, the first meeting to be in 1953. It is understood that this is likely to be held in the United States; a proposal for the setting up on a Pan-Anglican basis of an advisory council on missionary strategy and of a central college for the Anglican Communion, if possible at St. Augustine's College, Canterbury; encouragement of the steps being taken in East, West and Central Africa, and in the Pacific, towards the formation of new provinces or other regional groupings; an interim pronouncement on the South India Church; a re-affirmation that "the marriage of one whose former partner is still living may not be celebrated according to the rites of the Church, unless it has been established that there exists no marriage bond recognized by the Church," together with a strong recommendation "that provincial and regional Churches should consider how best their pastoral responsibility towards those who do not conform to our Lord's standard can be discharged"; and a rejection of a Chinese proposal for the ordination of women to the priesthood for an experimental period of twenty years.

Unity

The sense of unity in the conference appears to have been extraordinary and finds expression again and again in the encyclical, the resolution, and the reports of the committees. It was a revelation to the bishops to discover how much they shared in common and how great was their unity of mind and spirit. In the opinion of the senior bishops there was no question, as compared with the Lambeth Conference of 1930 (when many of the English and American bishops seemed to have different interests), that on this occasion they had all been considering much the same issues and were far more equally well informed on the range of subjects coming before the conference.

Even where there was agreement to differ on some aspects of the South India scheme, the difference seemed less important owing to the range of agreement and the growth of a worldwide ecumenical outlook. The bishops went away immensely encouraged and feeling that they were backed by worldwide prayer and understanding.

Reunion

Current schemes for reunion or intercommunion were shown as of two main types, namely: schemes for organic or corporate union, examples of which are the schemes projected in North India, Ceylon, Nigeria, and Iran; and schemes for intercommunion between churches in the same area on the basis of provision for a mutually recognised ministry. Such schemes have been proposed in Canada and Australia, and a similar scheme is under consideration in the United States. A scheme for intercommunion between Churches in the same area on the basis of provision for parallel but mutually acceptable episcopates is classed as of the second type. The disadvantages of this type are enumerated in the committee's report and a warning is issued against proposals "for mutually recognized ministries without the satisfactory adjustment of terms of union." The same committee's report, which receives a general endorsement in the resolutions of the conference, records two views regarding the Church of South India, namely that of the majority who held that its bishops, presbyters and deacons should be encouraged and accepted (subject to local provincial regulations) throughout the Anglican communion; and that of "a substantial minority" who held that it was "not possible to pass any definite judgment upon the precise status" of such bishops, presbyters and deacons. But in the sphere of immediate and practical action the conference was able to recommend a general policy for relations with members of the Church of South India.

The essential decision on South India is contained in Resolutions 52 and 53:

52. "We (a) endorse generally the paragraphs in the report of our committee on unity which refer to South India; (b) give thanks to God for the measure of unity locally achieved by the inauguration of the Church of South India, and we pledge ourselves to pray and work for its development into an ever more perfect fulfilment of the will of God for his Church; and we (c) look forward hopefully and with longing to the day when there shall be full communion between the Church of South India and the Churches of the Anglican Communion.

53. "The conference expresses the hope that, so soon as it may appear to the authorities of the Church of South India to be expedient to take up the matter, such provisions of the constitution of that Church and such statements contained therein as are known to have given rise either to uncertainty or to grave anxiety in the minds of many, may be reconsidered with a view to their amendment. The conference would call special attention to the six points specified in the report of its committee on unity."

The conference welcomed the development of friendly relations with the Orthodox Churches and the lesser Churches of the East. It has assigned a new importance to reunion with certain Protestant Churches and has approved various exploratory steps.

The American Bishops in procession at the Lambeth Conference: leading are Hall and Bloy, followed by Bayne and Donegan; Barton and Nash; Sawyer and Moody; then Wright, Rhea, Conklin, Gray, Jackson, Brinker, Daniels, Gravatt, Blankingship, McKinstry, Kirchhoffer, Mitchell, Block, Peabody. Lawrence and Carpenter are easily spotted and readers will doubtless identify others.

A passage in the Encyclical Letter states: " . . . We feel more and more keenly the rift between the different parts of the Anglican Communion and the Protestant Churches; and we have a great desire to find a way forward to closer unity with them. In the United States, in Canada, in Australia, in the British Isles, there are projects and schemes of various kinds, some for organic union, some for a mutually recognized ministry. In our report we mention certain guiding principles which should be borne in mind in all approaches to reunion. We bid Godspeed to all those who are doing their utmost in different ways to set forward this work.

"We also keep in mind our strong desire for a closer fellowship of Episcopal Churches. With some we are already in partial communion. Full intercommunion has been achieved with the Old Catholics since the last conference, upon terms which should provide a model for such agreements. Each Communion recognizes the catholicity and independence of the other and maintains its own, and while each believes the other to hold all the essentials of the Christian faith, neither requires from the other the acceptance of all doctrinal opinion, or liturgical practice, characteristic of it.

"Here we desire to set before our people a view of what, if it be the will of God, may come to pass. As Anglicans we believe that God has entrusted to us in our communion not only the Catholic faith, but a special service to render to the whole Church. Reunion of any part of our communion with other denominations in its own area must make the resulting Church no longer simply Anglican, but something more comprehensive. There would be, in every country where there now exists the Anglican Church and others separated from it, a united Church, Catholic and Evangelical, but no longer in the limiting sense of the word Anglican. The Anglican Communion would be merged in a much larger communion of national or regional Churches, in full communion

Federal Council Issues A Labor Message

Statement Urges Christians to Re-examine Their Economic Relationships

New York—Christians are urged to consider the means of attaining "a more Christian economic life than now exists" in a Labor Sunday message issued here by the Federal Council of Churches. The statement, intended to be read in churches throughout the country, called on Christians to reexamine their relationships as employers or employees and to consider their own positions with respect to "the grave economic issues that have emerged upon the field of political action."

Asserting that the improvement of economic arrangements is "the obligation of all Christians who share in the control of economic power, whether in management or as representatives of organized labor, have a special responsibility to direct economic forces toward service to the whole society."

A number of principles and objectives were proposed in the message to "guide Christians in their judgment upon economic institutions and in the personal decisions which they make in their various occupations." These were:

(1) There should be a minimum standard of living sufficient for health, cultural growth and protection against hardships beyond one's control.

(2) All persons have the moral right to equal opportunities to develop their capacities.

(3) Every able-bodied man and woman has the moral right and duty to serve the community through work under conditions that assure fair compensation, and in voluntary community service.

(4) All persons have the moral right to take a vigorous part in political and economic activities which hold the greatest promise for the realization of Christian objectives.

(5) The Churches have been right in giving encouragement to the development of the labor movement, both as an instrument for the securing of greater economic justice and as a source of both dignity and morale for workers. Yet, in specific issues that may today separate labor and management, the Church should not prejudice the rightness of either group. While making judgments in particular cases, it should concentrate on the encouragement of all those processes which are in harmony with its ministry of reconciliation.

(6) Every national policy must be judged by its consequences for the lives of people in all lands and by its effect upon the economic basis for a peaceful world. There should be tolerance toward the economic experiments and institutions of other peoples, though these must be judged by the same moral principles as our own.

"The Church," the message said, "is under a divine imperative to call all men—but first its own members—to recognize God's lordship over individual souls and the whole of life—the home, the farm, the factory, the market place, the banking house, and every form of associated activity in the community, nation and world. It is his will that his kingdom come on earth among men."

Labor Sunday, it continued, is a time when a Christian should ask himself and give answer—"after rigid self-analysis"—concerning his economic activities: "Am I right or wrong? Am I selfish or generous? Am I loving my neighbor as myself, or am I taking unfair advantage over him? How truly Christian am I in my part of the economic life of this nation and of the world?"

Among those who helped prepare the message, the 24th annual statement issued by the Council, were Walter P. Reuther, Paul G. Hoffman, Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam and Charles P. Taft.

Bishop Biswas of Assam, India; Bishop Dandridge of Tennessee and Bishop Tucker of Ohio leaving Buckingham Palace after the Bishops at Lambeth had been received by the King and Queen.

First World Council Assembly Opens

Four Hundred and Fifty Accredited Delegates Meet for Formal Constitution

Amsterdam, The Netherlands —The first Constituent Assembly of the World Council opened with appropriate processional and worship in Amsterdam's Nieuwe Kerk. Practically all Christian churches in the world were represented with the exception of the Roman Catholic and Russian Orthodox Churches. This assembly is the result of the ecumenical movement begun in 1938 when an international group of church leaders met in Utrecht, the Netherlands.

At the opening service three thousand people were present in the Nieuwe Kerk and fifteen thousand persons filled the square outside. The service began with a call to worship by the Rev. K. H. E. Gravemeyer, delegate of the Dutch Reformed Church, followed by a recitation of the Apostles' Creed led by Archbishop Fisher. The scripture lessons were read by the Rev. Marc Boegner of France and Archbishop Erling Eidem of Sweden. Sermons were delivered by the Rev. John R. Mott of the United States and the Rev. Daniel T. Niles, a Methodist from Ceylon. The service closed with prayer and benediction by Archbishop Germanos, Metropolitan of Thyateira and Exarch of the Ecumenical Patriarch for western and central Europe.

In his sermon Mr. Mott paid tribute to other movements which ante-dated the formation of the World Council, namely, the International Missionary Council, the Y.M.C.A., the Y.W.C.A., and the World Student Christian Federation. He said the contemporary church is facing the greatest concentration of major unsolved problems in history.

Mr. Niles said that the world "has set the church to the task of building peace without providing it with the material of either repentance or faith." He also said, "the Christian witness recognizes no barrier and allows no partiality. We are witnesses to the Negro in the same way as to the white. We are witnesses within the Western democracies as well as within the Eastern republics. We are witnesses among all the peoples of all religions and no religion."

At the first evening session Bishop Yngve Brilioth of Sweden warned the new council that it needed a constant reminder that mere cooperation is not unity. Bishop G. K. A. Bell of Chichester reviewed the work of cooperating churches in such areas of concern as treaty revision, war guilt and the special situation created by the Nazi domination of Germany. In another address, John A. Mackay said "There are powers, both secular and religious which confine the Christian Church to the exercise of strictly localized worship. By doing so they raise afresh the crucial issue of the meaning and right of religious freedom".

Of political interest to the world will be the Council's attitude toward the new State of Israel. Another problem is indicated by the absence of the Russian Orthodox Churches.

Particularly disturbed over the absence of the Russian churches was John Foster Dulles, a delegate to the Council as well as foreign affairs advisor to Republican Presidential candidate Thomas E. Dewey. Dulles, it is reported, profoundly regretted the absence of the Russian ecclesiastics.

CHURCH WORKERS GET INSURANCE

Porto Alegre, Brazil — The Church in Southern Brazil by action of its Council has decided to secure group insurance for all clergy, and all lay people who are teachers and employees of the schools operated by the District. This was done in spite of the fact that insurance costs more in Brazil than in the United States.

EDITORIALS

Lambeth's Closing Service

WE SHARE with you two letters from London about the closing service of the Lambeth Conference, in place of the usual editorials. The first is from Bishop Lane W. Barton of Eastern Oregon:

The closing service in Westminster Abbey was one of the most significant and inspiring I've ever experienced, deeply moving and colorful throughout, for the English certainly know how to arrange something of that sort. There was of course the setting in the historic Abbey. The dean and his numerous retinue added much in color, both in the matter of vestments and in the observance of ancient bits of custom and tradition. For instance, the dean, being something of an ecclesiastical potentate, "received" the archbishops, primates, presiding bishops and metropolitans in the Jerusalem Chamber "between the hours of 9:40 and 10 a. m."; that is, the notables did not just come and get into their vestments. They were "received". And when I speak of a retinue I mean just that. There was a beadle who led the procession with his mace; then the Brotherhood of St. Edward the Confessor with their banner; the bearer of the book and the precentors; the choristers; lay vicars; vergers; minor canons and canons; the chapter clerk in his cute little wig and finally the king's almsmen. The canons all wore copes, the minor canons red brocade and the major canons, green brocade.

In addition to the superb organ music at the hands of William McKie and the equally superb choristers, they used the trumpeters and band of the Royal Horse Guards. Their handling of the brass was as spectacular as the uniforms they wore. The trumpeters sounded a fanfare at 10:15 and the procession of bishops entered the Abbey. Then another fanfare and the procession of the Church of Westminster entered, made up of the dean and the retinue mentioned above. Then another fanfare and the procession of primates, metropolitans and presiding bishops entered, followed by the Archbishop of Canterbury and those taking part in the service. During each of these processions the choir chanted Psalms 122 and 43. Then some versicles were chanted and the Archbishop began the Holy Communion. Only there was this difference: where in other churches the celebrant stands before the altar, in the Abbey he stands before "God's Board."

Another significant and quite impressive element in the service was "the great entrance" in which a considerable company of canons of Westminster brought the bread and wine from the Chapel of the Holy Name to the high altar. For once in my life I have seen the offering of cash overshadowed, as is quite proper, by the presentation or offering of bread and wine.

At the conclusion of the Communion service and the Archbishop's blessing, and just before the dean dismissed us, the choir and band rendered the Te Deum—Stanford's in B flat. It was breathtaking in its magnificence.

I said that the dean of Westminster is by nature of his office something of an ecclesiastical potentate. After the Archbishop had pronounced the benediction, the dean took over. It was as if to say: "Very well, you have held this great service here in the Abbey, and I am very glad as dean to have placed the Abbey at your disposal. You are most welcome but now I shall take over." He and his canons assembled at the altar and he dismissed us:

Dean: "The Lord be with you."
Response: "And with thy spirit."
Dean: "The Lord preserve your going out and your coming in, from this time forth for evermore: Amen."

We then left the Abbey to attend a separate, concluding service in the chapter house. Here the Archbishop said farewell, the concluding versicles of which were, most fittingly:

Archbishop: "Let us depart in peace."
Response: "In the name of the Lord: Amen."

The other letter is from Miss Alice Pratt, churchwoman of New York, who sat in the congregation at this great service and gives her impressions from that vantage point:

I wish I could give you some idea of how very impressive and moving the closing service in the Abbey was. All during the service I kept thinking of all my friends in the Church and how we all despair of it because it seems to do so little, and that little so slowly, to bring the Kingdom of God on earth. But to sit in that great and very old building was reassuring. The very stones looked down calmly on us all. From where I sat I could see, beyond the high altar, all the new masonry that has recently been installed to form the Royal Air Force chapel in the ambulatory. This part of the Abbey was bombed and destroyed. In the arch above the high altar some new stones have had to be set in to take the place of stones that were loosened or chipped in the blast. And of course all the replaced stone is so very glaringly white and new. But somehow it does not stand out and look wrong. It is almost as if the old stone welcomed the new to stand shoulder to shoulder with it.

Maybe we should think of the Church in that way. When some of its customs are chipped and blasted by the passing of years we must take them out and replace them. In time the new customs will become venerated traditions.

A real spirit moved in the Abbey at this service as the last of the bishops went forward to receive. Dead and gone bishops, looking down on them from that special place that must be reserved for them in heaven, must have been highly gratified in their successors. They were an imposing sight: all shapes and sizes and colors, with all of them consecrated and humble looking men.

Just as the bells in the tower rang out the hour of noon, the Archbishop, who had underestimated the number and had to re-consecrate, said: "For in the night on which he was betrayed he took bread" and the bells made one think of time and how little it matters. The Church will keep on. We must do the best we are capable of as we see the light and not be too discouraged when the powers of darkness crowd us out. All in all I feel lots better about the world, having seen what I did at this great service. Truly the spirit moved with a real force and the powers of darkness are not going to prevail against it with any ease.

New Books

Excellent Good *Fair

* * * Christian Apologetics. By Alan Richardson. Harper and Brothers, $3.00.

A new voice is raised to proclaim again that Christian apologetics need not consist of apologetic excuses for our faith. After distinguishing between the "abstract" natural sciences (physics and chemistry) and the "concrete" human sciences (sociology, theology), he explores the proper fields for the concrete sciences. Canon Richardson of Durham reminds the modern churchman, as he needs sorely to be reminded, that theology is neither contained in the philosophy of religion nor in the psychology of religiosity. This is not an esoteric study which tries to dignify itself by borrowing the scientific method, but a solid science which stands on its own basic categories and methods.

John C. Bennett, professor of moral theology at Union Seminary, can write that "this is the most satisfactory statement that has yet come out of the present confusion concerning faith, revelation and reason" because the author makes no attempt to follow any of the current vogues in religious thought nor to line up with any popular "schools". He merely establishes the categories of his science, then takes the evidence of general and special revelation, to arrive at a solution which restores theology as a truly empirical science. —S. A. LABELS

EVERYONE agrees that it is wicked to put labels on other people. They are often wildly inaccurate and the unconscious victim makes no defense. They are like the placards "I am a dunce" or "Kick me" that sportive fifth-graders love to pin on the backs of their friends.

Even if a label is not entirely wrong, it is always unjust. Each of us is a unique combination of leftist-rightist, liberal-conservative, intellectual-emotional elements in his politics or churchmanship. Generalizations about people or groups always result in some distortion.

There is however, a protection against really false labeling, and that is for a man to pick his own and wear it unashamed, even though no label can fit any man exactly. It is true that others may use the label as an epithet, or as an excuse for dismissing him from their thoughts. But they are the people who would dismiss him, anyway, with a label of their own choosing, if he chose none himself.

In an election year, one sees many devices of human ambition, of which the dullest and most commonplace (and often successful) is the bannerless, causeless, pleasant handsome blankness system. It is sad to see candidates with the manners and methods of movie stars—simply wanting to be "popular"—and sadder to see an election become a popularity contest. Are we electing public servants, or courtiers?

There are "leaders" (in many other fields besides that of government) about whose convictions one knows nothing, except that they are uncompromising in their practice of affability, fearless in their love of nature, unswerving in their respect for motherhood, and adamant against the detestable enormities of the other party, if any.

What leaders are these? They will take us anywhere, like taxi drivers, as long as it pays them. They have studied how to get places, not how to do things.

What a self-labeled man says, means something. But if I am so "international-minded" that I do not wish to be known as an American, my "internationalism" may merely be a lack of interest in any country, or group of countries. If I am so "church-minded" that I refuse to be a party man, it may be that none of the facets of the Church appeals to me at all. If I am so "unity-minded" that I cannot bear being identified as an Episcopalian, my "tolerance" means nothing, for I have proved that I am being tolerant in matters which mean nothing to me.

The Lambeth Report

BY

LANE W. BARTON
Bishop of Eastern Oregon

London:—Since the Report has now been released I think I can make a few observations without in any way violating the confidence to which we agreed at the opening of the conference. My guess is that the report will be disappointing, though it will be a matter of years before anyone can really assess its value. Having said this I think it should be stated that all with whom I have talked have been quite happy about it, not that it is all they would like it to be, but that it goes much further in the right direction than they expected this Lambeth Conference to go. In times like these the Church should be bold and aggressive, but these are also times when people are bewildered and perplexed. So it is to be expected that churchmen shall be cautious, because churchmen—even bishops at Lambeth—are bewildered and perplexed people in addition to being bishops. Therefore I am delighted that we were as bold as we were.

Our report on the Church and the modern state has in it a section on Communism. Looked at from one point of view it is rather mild, but when one considers that Lambeth resisted the popular pastime of indulging in anti-Communist diatribes or of joining forces with the Roman Church in a holy war against Communism, it represents, I think, something worthy of note. While it does take a stand against atheistic materialism, it reminds the blind and bigoted reactionary that the challenge of Communism must be met by something more constructive than looking under the bed for Communists or passing hysterical anti-Communist laws and imprisoning leaders of the Communist party. The social and economic conditions which foster Communism must be corrected.

So also the report on South India; while it does not go as far as many of us—the majority—would like to have gone, it does thank God that South India is an accomplished fact. The majority favored an outright approval and blessing of the South India scheme. Had Archbishop Temple lived, I am sure we should have gone further. But it seems to me significant that a majority went as far as it did—not in approval of an ideal but in endorsing a definite forward step and achievement in the field of unity.

Probably the least encouraging aspect of the report is that having to do with marriage. The new canon of the Episcopal Church on marriage, while it excited the interest of the conference, did not succeed in moving Lambeth forward to any appreciable extent.

Perhaps it will be of interest to explain how these reports were formulated. The first week of the conference was spent in a general discussion of the subjects dealt with by the five sections of the report. Then the conference broke up into five committees to carry forward the discussions and to present reports. Generally some one person especially qualified was assigned the drafting of a certain section. This section was then gone over by the committee or a sub-committee and modified and amended. It was then submitted to the larger committee for suggestions and alterations, until finally the committee approved the report. Very often the spice and punch of the original draft was lost by the addition of a phrase here, or the deletion of a phrase or sentence there. So from the standpoint of smooth reading and incisiveness the approved report leaves much to be desired.

Next the report of each committee was submitted to the entire conference and the final two weeks was spent in going over these reports and adopting such resolutions as each committee thought fit to recommend. Each report was, in some minor details, slightly amended but on the whole the conference passed them, without necessarily approving of them. In other words, the various reports represent the approval only of the committees which drew them up, and not of the conference as a whole. Only the resolutions represent the approval of Lambeth itself.

EDITOR'S NOTE: A news story presenting the main points of the Report and the Encyclical Letter is on page three of this issue. The Encyclical is not presented in full because of its length and also because it has been sent to all of the clergy by the National Council, with a covering letter from the Presiding Bishop asking that it be read in all Episcopal Churches on October 10. Lay people will hear it then—if they go to church. The Report, which is a book of 173 pages, will eventually be available in the U. S. and will be announced in these pages.

with one another, united in all the terms of what is known as the Lambeth Quadrilateral.

"It is well to keep this vision before us; but we are still far from its attainment, and until this large communion begins to take firmer shape, it would be only a weakening of the present strength and service of the Anglican Communion if parts of it were severed from it prematurely. If we were slow to advance the larger cause, it would be a betrayal of what be believe to be our special calling. It would be equally a betrayal of our trust before God if the Anglican communion were to allow itself to be dispersed before its particular work was done.

"In our resolution, we recommend that, in further schemes for reunion, care should be taken to see that they do not, unless for a brief time, put any member of our family of Churches out of communion with it and that they are not put into force unless after consultation with the rest of our family. That is a right and wise precaution. Yet we look to, and work for, the larger family, and we are thankful that in so many parts of the world other Churches are joined with us in working for it."

Communism and Human Rights

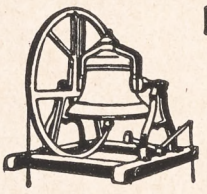
The subjects of communism and human rights are dealt with very clearly in the encyclical:

"Mankind has only recently escaped conquest by totalitarian states which defied their own power. It now finds itself threatened by the new menace of Marxian Communism which exalts atheism, puts supreme confidence in material progress, and proclaims its gospel with a militant enthusiasm which expects to conquer the world.

"Christians must repudiate this form of Communism and must condemn the cruelties, injustice, and lying propaganda which are inherent in it. But they cannot ignore certain lessons which are to be learnt from the unquestionable fact that Communism has awakened a disciplined response in the minds of many, both in the west and in the east, who do not necessarily share its atheism or its doctrine of man. To them Communism appears as a protest against social injustice. It seems to them to have inherited a concern for the depressed and downtrodden which is—wherever it is true to its vocation—a glory of the Church. In a very real sense there is here a judgment on Church and on society.

"We do not suggest that Communism is the only influence in our political and economic world against which the Christian conscience must take its stand. There are other forms of economic domination, characteristic of our western society, which show something of the same ruthlessness, and, whatever their outward profession, do not in their practice exhibit any clearer recognition of moral law. Against all these forms of secularism the Church must proclaim that man is a being created by God and is under his sovereignty, and that, apart from God, he can neither master his nature nor find his true self. That is God's world and man's appointed training ground for eternity. Christ alone can deliver man from the conflict in his own nature, lift him from the bondage of evil, and set his feet upon the way which leads to true freedom in God.

"God has given man responsibility. To exercise it, he must have freedom. The Christian Church therefore demands essential human rights for all, irrespective of race or color. There are, unhappily, countries in the world today where such rights are denied. We are grateful for the work which is being done by the commission of the United Nations on human rights. We pledge ourselves to work for the removal of injustice and oppression, and, in particular, to stand by those whose right to religious liberty is threatened.



"But the Church must not insist only on rights. For rights imply duties, and duties today are often forgotten in the assertion of rights. To insist only on rights turns them to wrongs, unless the insistence is matched with the faithful discharge of the duties which men owe—to God by unrightness of life, to society by honest work, and to each other by bearing one another's burdens."

Some Other Subjects

Among the many other subjects dealt with in pronouncements or decisions of the conference were missionary recruiting; the training of ordinands; baptism and confirmation; education; the christian way of life; and the administration of holy communion. In connection with the last the conference held that "administration from a common chalice, being scriptural and having a symbolic meaning of great value, should continue to be the normal method of administration in the Anglican Communion," but was of opinion that "there is no objection to administration of both kinds by the method of intinction where conditions require it" under provincial regulation.

China Student Federation Petitions World Council

National Student Federation Protests Missionary Support of U. S. Policy on China

Hongkong, China—In a letter to the Amsterdam Conference National Student Federation of China petitions the World Council to give its disapproval "to the dangerous, national and political designs of those American interventionists who go about in religious garbs". Citing the fact that the Federation is the only national student body in China and that its membership includes ninety per cent of Chinest university students and professors, the letter points out persecution of Christian intellectuals by the Kuomintang regime. It states, "A considerable section of the active members and faculty advisers of our Federation is composed of Christians. During the Japanese aggression their loyalty to the cause of national freedom was recognized by many. Today, in our struggle for democracy, national independence and peace, their long-suffering and perseverance under the sword of Chiang Kaishek's gestapo is also evident. Their moral earnestness and their wisdom in counselling have earned for themselves and for the religion they profess a new and wide respect."

The letter goes on to condemn the present American China policy for giving military and financial aid to "the most fascist regime in the world," in the name of combatting communism. This "is an insult to the 450,000,000 people in China . . . and we refuse to be treated as a means to an American end, or to the end of any other country, and thereby help push the world into another war."

The Federation also reports the cloaking of religious freedom in combination with the maneuvering of questionable leadership in the American missionary churches. "Contrary to what the Kuomintang and its missionary spokesman like you to believe there is no religious freedom in the Koumintang area. We appeal to your sense of justice and your Christian love with respect to the words and deeds of certain politically ambitious or politically motivated leaders in the American Churches. In gearing their thinking and policies about China to the interests of the United States and to the fate of the unpopular and hopeless Kuomintang regime, they are inviting the enmity of our people towards Christianity and western culture. Because of what these American mission leaders outspokenly stand for, those of our colleagues who are Christians feel that they have been put in a very embarassing position."

Service for Assembly Opening

Norwich, N. Y. — (RNS) — Five local congregations united to sponsor an ecumenical service of praise and worship on August 22, in which Eastern Orthodox, Episcopalian, Lutheran, and Congregationalist churchmen participated. Coinciding with the opening of the first assembly of the World Council of Churches at Amsterdam, the service was the first of its kind to be held here. It took place at Emmanuel Episcopal Church.

Father Athanase Devedjakis of the Greek Orthodox church of Endicott was the guest of honor, reading the Gospel and singing a part of the Liturgy of St. Chrysostom in Greek. He also brought a few words of greeting from the Eastern Orthodox Churches.

The Rev. Lloyd S. Charters, rector of Emmanuel Church, escorted the honored guest and brought a welcome from the host church, the Rev. David Jensen, pastor of Christ Evangelical Lutheran Church, was the liturgist. The Rev. Lawrence L. Durgin, minister of the First Congregational Church, preached.

Statement Approved

London— (RNS) —The Episcopal Church's statement on faith and order was approved by the Lambeth Conference of 1948 for use in negotiations toward organic union with the Presbyterian Church or with any other interested church body.

It was agreed by the conference that the statement was in "complete harmony" with the Lambeth Quadrilateral, which contains the four foundations of Anglican faith and order; Scriptures, Nicene and Apostles Creeds, baptism and holy communion, and the three-fold ministry of bishops, priests and deacons.

The statement on faith and order was prepared by the joint commission on approaches to unity of the Episcopal Church at the request of the General convention of 1946, to be used as a basis for current negotiations with the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A.

Talking It Over

By W. B. Spofford

THE Anglican Bishops throughout the world, who released the report of their deliberations at Lambeth on August 18th, probably did not realize that they would be given an opportunity to act upon several of their own resolutions in less than a week. On the 23rd of August Dean Hewlett Johnson of Canterbury announced that he had been denied a visa to enter the U. S. for a lecture tour. In announcing the fact to the press in London the Dean stated that he had lectured in America two years ago under the auspices of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, the organization that had extended the invitation this time. He was well received then, speaking before large audiences throughout the country. One of the meetings he addressed was held in Calvary Church, New York, which was jammed with churchmen of high and low degree and from conversations I had with many who attended I gathered that there were none present who were not impressed with the Dean's honesty, integrity and charm. He also on that visit was invited to the White House by Mr. Truman; he spent an hour and a half closeted with Mayor LaGuardia and he conferred with many other public figures. All of which now prompts the Dean to say that "America has changed tremendously. The country was not hostile to Russia then. Now there seems to be a deliberate antagonism. There seems to be no desire whatever for friendly relations or friendly understanding with Russia. England and the United States and Russia all have a lot to learn from one another. Contributions to liberty of all three powers are complementary. Amercia has been proud of maintaining freedom of the press and freedom of speech. Now I am not so sure."

Which prompts a suggestion. From a careful reading of the Report of the Lambeth Conference, I find that the Conference as a whole is responsible for the formal resolutions contained therein, agreed to after discussion. Resolution six states:

"The Conference declares that all men, irrespective of race or colour, are equally the objects of God's love and are called to love and serve Him. All men are made in His image; for all Christ died; and to all there is made the offer of eternal life. Every individual is therefore bound by duties towards God and towards other men, and has certain rights without the enjoyment of which he cannot freely perform those duties. These rights should be declared by the Church, recognized by the State, and safeguarded by international law."

Resolution seven states: "The Conference declares that among such rights are security of life and person; the right to work, to bring up a family, and to possess personal property; the right to freedom of speech, of discussion and association, and to accurate information; and to full freedom of religious life and practice, and that these rights belong to all men irrespective of race and colour."

Resolution twenty states: "The Conference affirms that the Church must be free to order its worship and fellowship, to teach and to evangelize. In view of a tendency of the State to encroach on the freedom of individuals and voluntary associations, it urges Christians in all lands to guard such freedoms with vigilance and to convince public opinion that their preservation is essential to the maintenance of true democracy and personal and national well being."

THE U. S. government, in less than a week after this statement was officially made on behalf of the Anglican Bishops throughout the world by the Archbishop of Canterbury, encroached on the freedom of an individual, Dean Hewlett Johnson, and of a voluntary association, the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship.

for these resolutions, and from the Report I take it that all present at Lambeth did, are therefore, I think, morally bound to write or wire immediately to the President of the United States and to the Secretary of State, demanding that Dean Johnson, the individual, be granted a visa, and that he be allowed to lecture under the auspices of a voluntary association, the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship.

Our Bishops have directed that the Encyclical Letter of the Conference shall be read in all the churches. It says, among many fine things, that "Security and peace have still to be won in the face of national selfishness and the menace of war. The peace of the world is threatened by suspicion, fear and hatred."

Well Dean Johnson states (and I am sure nobody is prepared to say that he is anything but an honest man) that "the only reason I travel to any country is to try to increase understanding. When I go to Eastern Europe or Russia I try to get them to understand the West. The only reason I wanted to make this tour of America was to tell the people about my eight weeks' trip last autumn in Eastern Europe. I just travel to create understanding."

Just one further Lambeth quote. The committee on the Church and the Modern World states that "there are the rights of freedom of speech, discussion, and association. This group includes freedom of the Press and of information from different points of view. It is important that the organs of publicity should be free and that the people should have access to reliable information, for they cannot reach a right judgment on current problems if they are left in ignorance by a rigorous censorship or unscrupulous propaganda."

The case of Dean Hewlett Johnson vs. the U. S. Government presents the American Bishops with an unprecedented opportunity to back up their own fine words. To ask them to picket the White House and the State Department would perhaps be asking too much. But it would be nice if they would write letters and telegrams, releasing them also to the public so that all may know that they meant exactly what they said at Lambeth.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Americans Meet Indians At World Assembly

The Bishops Declare Union Has Conserved Contributions of All the Churches

BY
KATHERINE C. PIERCE

Bishop Cherakarotta Korula Jacob of Central Travancore and Bishop James Edward Lesslie Newbiggin of Madura, the United Church of South India, were the guests of honor at a small luncheon given at Amsterdam by Bishop Lane W. Barton of Eastern Oregon, Witness correspondent at Lambeth and the World Council Assembly. Bishop Jacob is the Deputy Moderator of the Church, in effect the Presiding Bishop and an Anglican.

He has been interested in the plan since it was first suggested by the American traveller and lecturer, Sherwood Eddy. He told us that the plan was put before the Anglicans in Calcutta in 1920. They approved it and referred it to the Lambeth Conference which met that year. Lambeth told them to go forward and repeated that encouragement ten years later, since the plan was based on the Lambeth Quadrilateral.

The major issue was the ministry. They recognized that the Holy Spirit had blessed the ministry of all Churches and, as Bishop Jacob said: "Who are we to set ourselves apart?" They prayed constantly for God's guidance and moved as they received it. In 1944 the Methodists accepted the plan, followed the next year by the Episcopalians and then the Congregationalists and Presbyterians. They were sure then that the United Church of South India could come into being in September, 1947.

An inaugural service was held that seemed to be a second Pentecost. People went into the service belonging to Churches and came out belonging to the Church. They believe that the union of the Churches and the freeing of India, occurring about the same time, is part of the wonderful plan of God.

Bishop C. K. Jacobs came from the Mar Thomas Church founded certainly as early as the 4th century and possibly earlier. For 1700 years God waited to work, then in 1860 a chaplain made a survey of the Syrian people, as they were called, though they are really Indians. This survey began a revival of the Church that had merely continued to exist during all these centuries. The Bible was translated and people began to come in. There are now 45,000 people in Bishop Jacob's Church and 1,000,000 in the United Church of South India.

Bishop Newbiggin of Madura before the union was a Scotch Presbyterian. He said that the union had conserved the great contribution of each Church. He went on to say that it is a temptation to treat bishops as great administrators but as the constitution of the Church leaves all financial and administrative matters to the council of each diocese, he is able to give most of his time to pastoral work which is of the greatest importance—pastoral work with lay people and not only the clergy. He tours around the diocese and always holds open air meetings, preaching on the power of Christ to reconcile differences. He too believes that God guided the Churches in forming the Church.

When the constitution was written no votes were taken. It is the result of agreements reached after full and long discussions. It is never to be used to override the conscience of anyone. There are now 14 dioceses each with a bishop of whom 7 were formerly Anglicans and 7 from the other Churches.

Their great need is for ministers, doctors and teachers. There are theological seminaries in South India where the clergy can be trained, but the people are poor and financial help is needed for scholarships. There was discussion about whether missionaries should go to India as a life work or for some fixed term. Both are useful but those who go for a fixed term should stay long enough to learn the languages in addition to the time they plan to work.

Bishop Barton's other guests were Mrs. Harper Sibley, Mrs. Charles Taft, Mr. Samuel Thorne, Miss Mary Gowan, Mr. Philip Zabriskie, Mr. William Parsons and myself. We were agreed in the hope that Bishop Jacob and Bishop Newbiggin should be invited to our 1949 General Convention in San Francisco to tell of the history and of the work of the United Church of South India.

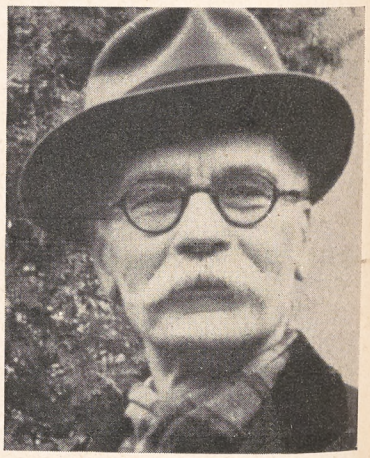
World Council Assembly Hears Many Notables

Famous Churchmen from Various Countries Speak on the Crisis Facing World

By LANE W. BARTON
Bishop of Eastern Oregon

Probably the biggest thing to happen at Amsterdam took place at the first business session of the Council — the unanimous adoption of the resolution formally creating the World Council of Churches. It represented the culmination of years of labor. It was made all the more impressive by the fact that the Council has, due to the war, operated on a provisional basis. This action, or rather the emotional quality attached to it, was all the more remarkable because it might have been an anti-climax, a sort of delayed-action bomb. But the Archbishop of Canterbury who was in the chair at the time rose to new heights as a presiding officer in his handling of this deeply stirring event. Instead of letting the delegates and visitors show their feelings of joy and relief and gratitude in a burst of applause, or in singing the doxology, he called for a period of silence. All arose and stood for one minute. There was a general consensus of opinion that the silence was as potent an expression of gratitude to God as could have been expressed, and that it was one of the high points in this gathering to be remembered long after other actions have been forgotten.



The Nieuwe Kerk where the opening service of the World Council of Churches was held. It is the heart of religious life in the Netherlands and was built in 1648.

The visit of Princess Juliana, who occupied a seat on the dais for most of one of the opening sessions, was a highlight. She was escorted to the dais by Dr. Marc Boegner of France who also commented upon the interest the royal family has taken in every Christian work. She is very attractive and charmed the Assembly quite as completely as the English royal family charmed the members of the Lambeth Conference. For the benefit of the women members of The Witness family it should be recorded that she wore a light grey suit. For the benefit of the male members I report that her eyes are very blue and her complexion just what one would expect of the Netherland's reigning house—fair! Interest in her and her visit was heightened by the fact that she is about to be made queen at the retirement of her mother.

★ Secretary W. A. Visser 't Hooft and Karl Barth gave notable addresses. The former was a report of the provisional committee, a lengthy document, dealing with the function of the World Council; its membership; its structure; its specific tasks, such as Reconstruction and Interchurch Aid; the training of leaders; the commission on International Affairs; the work of the department of evangelism, and the relationship of the Council to other organizations. It was a masterful report but hardly one to interest any but those concerned with the technicalities of the Council's set-up.

Dr. Karl Barth presented an interpretative address on the theme of the Assembly "Man's Disorder and God's Design" and it was about what one would expect from Barth. So far as I can gather it was not well received and not at all in the spirit of the Assembly. He said in effect that we were presumptuous in trying to effect the unity of the Church. God will do it in his own good time and, specifically, we should thank God that Rome and Moscow are not with us, because it indicates "that it pleases God to stand so clearly in the way of our plans." I wish I could accept his theology. If I could I should cease all my exertions and give myself completely to fishing in Eastern Oregon. For his theology would simplify even fishing —if God wants me to catch fish it will be unnecessary for me so much as to dig worms—just dangle a naked hook in the stream. Indeed, even a hook would be superfluous — just hold an open creel at the bank and let the fish jump in.

No more now. Why do I bother to write you news of Amsterdam: if God wants you to have the news he will get it to The Witness without all this bother on my part.

listened, but as if they were in a college lecture hall. When the theological professor from behind the iron curtain (He is a Czech and a professor at Jan Hus Theological School) began the audience took to the edges of their chairs.

I am not saying that the audience gave approval to what he said. But they were aware that they were listening to a great address—certainly one of the finest to be delivered at this historic conference, as Witness readers may see from reading it in this number. A press conference followed after the session and it was clear then that violent exception was taken to some things he said. But I can say this: he got the keenest of attention.

★ Mrs. Kathleen Bliss and Bishop Neill also ought to get special flowers for their addresses, both of which created favorable impressions. The latter, who is I am sure a comer in the Church of England, spoke on evangelism as the co-chairman of the study department of the World Council. Mrs. Bliss, also of the Church of England, deplored the modern tendency to blame all of our troubles on modern technology. She pointed out that a technical society has many benefits and that the Church's main failure is its failure to understand that society and apply its message to it. She asserted that the Church has failed to see that the fundamental problem of the technical society is power and the control of power.

She also asserted that an even more subtle and pervasive division exists in the churches than that between denominations, namely that between professional clergy who may know theology but not have a complete understanding of society, and laymen who know something of society but have an inadequate understanding of Christian doctrine. These lay people have a desire to live in the world as servants of Christ but few regard themselves as the spearhead of the Church's activity in society because their conception of the Christian battle within society is so vague and ill-defined. "If with the blinkers off we could look anew at the tragedy of our society, which is going to live in disorder perhaps for decades, we might see that the renewal of society come from one source, from the healing power of the love of God operating through men in open and courageous encounter with the world."

★ Prof. Jacques Ellul of the school of law at the University of Bordeaux criticized Church leaders for too easily diagnosing society's ills in general spiritual terms, such as sin, pride, separation from God, and not giving a definition of the disorder of this present world. The answer to the question must also be sought, he said, in the realms of the intellect, economics, psychology, politics, and other fields. He challenged the Church to reach into society in its work without becoming identified with a particular type of secular order. He outlined the Church's tasks as that of making an inventory of the present world and its values and to create out of her resources factors necessary for the new civilization. The Church, he declared, must initiate new institutions and pioneer the way.

★ Prof. Georges Florovsky of the Russian Orthodox Seminary in Paris, a veteran of ecumenical meetings and joint studies, deplored the divisions of Christendom that exist despite all the recent developments toward ecumenical fellowship, and the handicap that such disunity gives Christian forces in their efforts to combat modern problems. But he said that unity should not be sought just in order to make a united front in social and political statements. The main failure in this effort at applied Christianity, he said, is "that we face the challenge of the world instead of challenging the world ourselves.—What we miss here is the spirit of the true Christian initiative."

He went on to say that no

NEWS OF THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH

FIFTIETH NATIONAL CONVENTION

★ The largest gathering in 1948 of Episcopal laymen was called to order by President Samuel S. Schmidt of York, Pa., as the fiftieth national convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew met in Oxford, Ohio. Mr. Schmidt, who had just returned from visiting European chapters of the Brotherhood addressed the meeting on the importance of world-wide evangelism. The keynote speaker, Bishop Tucker, reported on the proceedings and decision of the Lambeth Conference. Other church leaders who spoke were Bishops Clingman of Kentucky, Barry of Albany, and Heistand of Harrisburg, the Rev. Frederick McDonald, the Rev. John Heuss, and the Rev. Francis B. Sayre, Jr. The convention was also addressed by C. A. W. Brocklebank, coordinator of economic education in the religious field for the American Economic Foundation. After explaining that the Foundation had managed to spend ten years and $2,000,000 in locating economic causes of national disunity, Mr. Brocklebank said that we can't logically hate capitalists since they supply the tools of production and tools do "nine-tenths of the work and make the workers' prosperity possible. Tools," said Mr. Brocklebank in a play upon the Bible, "are worthy of their hire. There should not be hatred of men who make a fair profit." The laborer was apparently not discussed.

U. C. Y. M. CONVENTION ATTENDED BY 5,000

★ Over eighty delegates from the Episcopal church between the ages of fifteen and twenty-five attended the Christian Youth Conference of North America, held recently in Grand Rapids, Michigan. About five thousand young people attended to discuss the problems of inter-church cooperation. John Booty, chairman of the National Youth Commission, was a member of the planning committee. Robert Taylor of Brockton, Mass., also a member of the Commission, served on the general committee.

A special feature of the conference was a debate broadcast on the Town Meeting of the Air. Gil Dodds, "the Flying Parson," a minister as well as one of America's outstanding track heroes, participated. The UCYM is a cooperative agency of 40 denominations. It represents 10,000,000 youth in the United States and Canada.

BISHOP SANFORD DIES IN CALIFORNIA

★ After a short illness Bishop Louis Childs Sanford died on August 10, two weeks after his 81st birthday. The funeral was held in Trinity Church, San Jose, California. Bishop of San Joaquin since 1910 he was succeeded by Bishop Walters in 1944. He was President of the Province of the Pacific for fourteen years. His contributions to the life of the church on the Pacific coast cannot be measured.

COLLEGE OF PREACHERS SESSIONS LISTED

★ The Fall schedule as announced will include the following sessions: September 20, Bishop Moyes of Armidale, N. S. W.. Australia, "The Church and Its Educational Task"; Sept. 27, "Preaching the Old Testament," The Very Rev. H. E. Fosbroke; Oct. 4, "Pastoral Ministry and Preaching," The Rev. Rollin J. Fairbanks; Oct. 25, "The Bible Within," The Rev. A. G. Hebert, S. S. M.; Nov. 8, "Problems in Systematic Theology," Dr. Paul Tillich; and Nov. 15, "The Great Controversy About the New Testament," The Very Rev. William H. Nes, Dean of Nashotah House.

YOUTH SUNDAY OBSERVATION

★ October 17th is Youth Sunday this year. Young people of the Church will share in services dramatically showing youth's part in the life of the Church. The Youth Offering which will be presented has been designated for aid to AUJE—Acion Unida de la Juventud Episcopal—infant youth movement in Puerto Rico. It will help provide a Church School and recreational center for the young people.

YOUNG PEOPLE DO SURVEY

★ Prison, hospital and labor union Chaplaincies were the subjects of an intensive survey conducted by thirty young people of the Diocese of Michigan in a summer work project. Under the supervision of the diocesan department of Christian social relations, it was found that spiritual needs of people in health and correctional institutions are not being met. The response of union heads also indicated the advisability of a full-time labor chaplain for the Detroit area, and it was suggested that another clergyman be added to the staff of historic Mariners' Church for that purpose. The summer project was undertaken as a joint project by the Bishop Page Foundation and the Detroit Episcopal City Mission Society.

EPISCOPALIAN PARENT ENTERS SUIT

★ The Released-time controversy is being entered by a parent whose child is enrolled in an Episcopal Sunday School. In cooperation with another whose child receives Hebrew education, the suit has been entered in Brooklyn supreme court against released-time religious instruction. Both are being supported by many groups, among them, the American Civil Liberties Union, the United Parents Association, and the American Jewish Congress. The strategy of this move apparently is to take the issue out of the "freethinker" or "agnostic" category by having a suit brought by religious parents.

LIBERIAN SCHOOL TO OPEN

★ Good progress is being made on construction of Cuttington College and Divinity School. It is planned to open next February. Bishop Harris says there will be no courses below college level nor will students be accepted in the Divinity School who "are not prepared to do the work."

BISHOP ON OVERSEAS INSPECTION TOUR

★ Bishop Bentley, vice-president of the National Council and director of the Overseas Department, plans to spend most of the winter visiting the church's work in Japan, the three districts in China, the Philippines and the Hawaiian Islands. Mrs. Bentley will accompany the bishop on the trip.

LAYMEN'S RETREAT IN VIRGINIA

★ Conducted by laymen alone a retreat for the Men's club of St. Augustine's, Newport News, Va., was held at the Bishop Payne Divinity School, Petersburg. Lieut. Lawrence A. Oxley, of the Department of Labor, and a member of St. Luke's, Washington, conducted the retreat and guided the meditations on church activities and private devotional life.

EPISCOPALIAN TAFT PROTESTS

★ Communion was condemned, and as first reported by the World Council's section dealing with the disorder of society, so was capitalism. This original report said "The Christian Churches should reject the ideologies of both communism and capitalism." However Episcopal Charles P. Taft, president of the Federal Council of Churches, led a fight on the floor of the Assembly for an amended version qualifying the sort of capitalism being condemned as "laissez-faire capitalism." This revision was rushed through in the last minutes before adjournment, with the tired delegates raising no objections when the amendment was presented by the Rev. Pit Van Dusen, U. S. delegate. However word from Amsterdam is that a number of delegates were heard to remark: "We condemn communism, a current ideology, and then very courageously condemn laissez-faire capitalism which has not existed for fifty years."

N. Y. CATHEDRAL HONORS QUEEN

★ The Golden Jubilee Celebration of Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands was observed at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine on September 5 at the 11 A. M. service. The Consul General of the Netherlands in New York was present together with diplomatic figures and other members of the consular corps. Canon Edward N. West, Sacrist of the Cathedral, made the address, and the Service music included the national anthems of the United States and the Netherlands. Labor Day Sunday was observed later in the day at the 4 P. M. Service when the Rev. Leland B. Henry, executive director of the diocesan commission on Christian social relations preached the sermon.

DUTCH YOUNGSTERS GET GOSPEL

★ Charles P. Taft, Episcopalian president of the Federal Council presented 10,000 copies of the Gospel of John to 1,000 children representing students of Amsterdam's Sunday School children. The gospels were a gift from 10,000 American children of the daily vacation Bible schools conducted by the Protestant Council of the City of New York.

Two notable leaders at the Amsterdam Conference are Prof. Georges Florovsky of the Orthodox Seminary in Paris, and Archbishop Germanos of Thyateira. There is concern among leaders of the World Council over the absence of most of the Orthodox leaders.

ECUMENICAL NEWS

CONDUCTS CRUSADE FOR UNITY

E. Stanley Jones, president of the Association for the United Church of America, is conducting a coast to coast crusade for a united church. He aims "to bring out the latent desire for union on the part of the people in the pews. We met a hesitancy on the part of some of the strong denominationalists . . . but their fears were dispelled after Mr. Jones had presented plans for church unity without sacrificing any of the contributions of the denominations to the development of Christianity in America." Mr. Jones is urging a federal union of denominations.—(RNS)

RELEASED-TIME OUTLAWED

It is illegal to use public school buildings or time for religious training in the state of Kansas, according to a ruling by Attorney General Edward F. Arn. The attorney for the state held two practices to be violations of the U. S. Constitution: (1) religious instruction held within a public school building; and (2) religious training given outside school premises where children are released from the regular school routine for given periods. His opinion was expected to have a wide effect, since released-time schools are an established custom in most Kansas communities. School officials said the issue would probably be reopened at an official meeting of the state board of education.—(RNS)

STUDENT FAITH REVIEWED

Seven out of every ten students at two Eastern Colleges "regard themselves as actually or potentially religious." This conclusion was reached after a research group questioned 412 students at Harvard and 85 students at Radcliffe. In reply to the question: "Do you feel that you require some form of religious orientation or belief in order to achieve a fully mature philosophy of life?" 68 percent of the Harvard men answered yes. Nineteen percent replied in the negative and 13 percent said they were doubtful. Radcliffe percentages were 82 yes, 12 no, and six doubtful. One part of the questionnaire showed considerable dissatisfaction with present-day organized religion.—(RNS)

URGES PERMANENT COMMISSION

The Civil Rights Report of President Truman was called a landmark in American history by Henry J. McCarthy, speaking at the first anniversary of the dedication of Touro Synagogue, Newport, R. I., as a national shrine. At the ceremony, which also commemorated Geo. Washington's letter on religious freedom to the Hebrew community of Newport in 1790, Mr. Carthy declared, "we need the continuing scrutiny by a responsible government body of the status for civil rights and an annual re-appraisal of what has and has not been accomplished."—(RNS)

Ecumenical leaders, all playing an important role at Amsterdam, are Bishop Arne Fjelibu (center) of the Church of Norway, Bishop Andrey of the Bulgarian Orthodox Church (left) and Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of New York who was elected one of the six presidents.

FILM PREVIEWED BY CHURCHMEN

"Mary Reed," a motion picture sponsored by the American Mission to Lepers, Inc., was given a special preview in New York before a group of churchmen and film technicians. The movie is based on the life of Mary Reed, famed Methodist missionary, whose work among lepers in India was often compared with the efforts of Father Damien, noted R. C. leper missioner. Premiere showing of the film will be given in Chicago on Oct. 22 during the annual convention of the American Mission to Lepers.—(RNS)

AID FOR CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS

To help conscientious objectors under the new Selective Service Law two committees have been formed in Philadelphia and Seattle. Both are preparing to help anyone who registers as an objector or who by principle refuses to register.

NEWS OF OTHER CHURCHES

UNITED CHURCH REPORTS MEMBERSHIP GAINS

United Church of Canada now has a membership of 780,334, representing a gain of about 180,000 over 1925 when the Church was formed. The yearbook of the denomination stated however that there are 1,839,895 persons "under pastoral oversight", which makes it the largest Protestant Church in Canada. The Church has 3,215 ministers whose salaries last year totalled $4,376,418.

APPROVE ORDINATION OF WOMEN

A recommendation that the United Church of Canada continue to ordain women for the ministry has been made to the Church's general council by a commission appointed two years ago. "Women are the equal of men," the report states, "but equality of status is too often confused with identity of function. A man may be the father of children, yet fulfill his duties as a minister. A woman minister who marries and becomes a mother must ordinarily make the duties of home her chief concern." The United Church is a pioneer in the ordination of women, the report points out, adding that other churches are watching to see how the experiment works out. A total of 15 women have so far been ordained, with 8 settled in pastoral charges with satisfactory results.

CATHOLICS HEAR PLEA FOR STEPINAC

Archbishop Stepinac of Yugoslavia is again in the news: this time through an appeal made at the convention of the Catholic Women's Union, held in Milwaukee. His former secretary, Rev. Steven Lackovic, now of Gary, Ind., told the women that the archbishop was in jail for opposing the attempt of Communists to "destroy religion and take freedom from the people." He thinks the U.N. ought to investigate the case. About 600 R.C. women from 22 states attended the conference.

URGE BOYCOTT OF NEWSPAPERS

Sensational news calls for a boycott of newspapers by all Christians, it was decided at the general conference of Seventh Day Baptist meeting in Nebraska. Such news was described as "stories of divorce, sex abuse and abnormalities, and general domestic discord." They said that reporting such incidents "serves no useful purpose but actually tends to encourage the things reported." The conference also described intolerance, prejudice and bigotry as sins and urged members to demonstrate Christian brotherhood interracially "by sharing fully in fellowship, worship and service."

LUTHERAN CHURCH REPORTS GAINS

The total membership of the United Lutheran Church is now 1,880,628 through the addition of 41,144 last year. About a third of the additions are people who previously had no church affiliation.

WIVES SHOULD STAY HOME

Women who don't believe their place is in the home should not marry. So stated a resolution condemning the employment of married women passed by the National Catholic Women's Union, meeting at Milwaukee. "A wife's place is in the home and preparing for the prime purpose of marriage, sacred motherhood," the resolution said. "The man whose wife continues her work gets only half a wife, if that. Manhood, and the dignity of a husband, suffer in most cases where men allow or even desire their wives to continue work to increase family finances."

CHILDREN MUST ATTEND PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS

Ex-communication of parents who fail to send their children to parochial schools is the warning given all Romanists in the Mobile diocese, which includes Alabama and a part of Florida. The letter, read in all churches, states: "All Catholic parents who do not send their children to Catholic schools are denied the sacraments and the priests of the parish have no power to absolve them or permit them to approach the altar rail. Excuse from this law is in the hands of the bishop only."

EDITORIALS

This Is It

WHEN we jumped the price of The Witness from three to four dollars a little over a year ago we stated that we did so regretfully and we hoped in time to do something about it. A few more months of our inflationary spiral rolled by and we got another stiff increase from the printer. This required us to reduce the number of pages from twenty to sixteen, and again we said we hoped to do something about it.

Well, this is it. We have added eight pages, making it a twenty-four page magazine; we have a new layout which has had the OK of experts; we have new departments which we hope will prove interesting and serviceable; we are using more pictures. It is done without increasing the price.

Whether this "new" Witness will bring a response from people of the Church remains to be seen. We have long since stopped kidding ourselves about the constituency of the Protestant Episcopal Church. The bishops meeting at Lambeth can say piously that "the Church should be the central fact in the lives of Church people" but it is anything but with all but a tiny handful. We do know some—one out of a hundred maybe. The fact is reflected in the circulation of all of our Church papers. There is not one of our national Episcopal papers that has a decent circulation for a Church with a million and a half communicants. This in spite of the fact that experts in the field of journalism declare that the quality of our magazines, both in content and format, is tops in the religious field. There are magazines devoted to stamp collecting with several hundred thousand circulation; the same goes for those devoted to the breeding of dogs and other special interests. The reason, obviously, is because people who collect stamps or breed dogs take these hobbies seriously. They also, many of them, hope to make money out of it and of course there is nothing more important to the average American than making money. They are not going to make any out of the Church. Rather they are going to be taught that "it is more blessed to give than to receive" — no comfortable words those, even for most church-going Episcopalians.

All of which is by way of saying that we are not expecting too much in the way of circulation increase. We do think that there are a few people in each parish who are glad to have the news of the Church and who will read serious articles about the life and teaching of the Church. It is our hope that rectors will therefore have a few copies on hand to supply this demand. Some time back, when we planned this "new" magazine, we sent a letter to a considerable number of rectors asking if they would not "cooperate with the plan by taking a bundle of ten copies at 7c a copy, payable quarterly." Many kindly did so. Others perhaps will, so we print an order form on page nine for their convenience — or just send us a postal.

In any case we hope you like this number, and we ask too that you help make it better. Circulation is but one way to help. It is important because the larger the circulation, the more money we have for halftones, articles, news coverage, etc. But we also want your ideas on how to improve the paper, both in content and format; we want pictures, and particularly candid shots; we want you to tell us about some idea that has been put to work in your parish with good results so that we can pass it on; we want news from your diocese and parish; we want the cooperation of everyone in making a go of the Lend-Lease and Get-Together departments; also bits of information about people — not merely clergy changes, but also the sort of information about lay people that you will find this week on pages 21 and 22.

We have had a lot of fun planning this number.

"QUOTES"

THE most violent and savage breach of God's order in the relationship of nations today is war. War is sin. The world has suffered from the cruel effects of the second world war, unparalleled for its cruelty and destruction through use of modern weapons of indiscriminate warfare. A third world war is by no means impossible, and the suffering and destruction caused thereby would bring still greater catastrophe, unpredictable in its scale and extent.

Challenge to the West

An Address at the Amsterdam Conference

By JOSEF L. HROMADKA
Professor at Jan Hus Seminary, Prague, and formerly on the faculty of Princeton Seminary, U.S.A.

NO kind of curtain, be it gold or silk or iron, must separate us one from another; all national and class obsessions must be removed; all treasures of culture and civilization must disappear, until we see nothing "save Jesus alone". Let us ardently pray, at this very moment, that, standing at the foot of the Cross and close to the empty tomb of the Risen, we see, by faith, the reality as precisely as possible.

What we are witnessing is—speaking in secular and political terms—the end of Western supremacy within the realm of the international order. It is in itself something new in the history of our civilization. The repercussions of this appalling upheaval are noticeable everywhere: in politics as well as in trade and business, in literature as well as in spiritual and moral life. I am not speaking about the fall or decline of the West. What I have in mind is simply the fact that the Western nations have ceased to be the exclusive masters and architects of the world. The era of the Western man is approaching its end under a terrific storm which is sweeping through all humanity. For several decades many a deep and responsible observer has been pointing to the portentous omens of the forthcoming crisis. At the peak of the political and economic prevalence of the West, many indications of moral, spiritual and political decay had been observed: a malady of spirit, a growing lack of self-commitment and self-dedication, a mood of sceptical indifference and pessimistic frustration, and absence of strong faith and convictions. All that could hardly be counterbalanced by the increase of wealth, comfort, prosperity and technical achievements. Somewhere deep under the ground one could hear a resounding echo of the millions of the underprivileged, the under-dogs of society, marching, and claiming a full share in the material and cultural goods of modern society. The many forebodings and apprehensions about the days to come, expressed by some prophetic and spiritually sensitive minds, were either ignored or minimized. The prosperity and the relative political and international security under the flags of the Western nations had made the leaders and the rank-and-file citizens of the West either self-complacent or reliant increasingly on material power, either economic or military, rather than on moral and spiritual resources. The last ascendancy of Western prestige came after World War I, when the Western democracies appeared to be, for a moment, the unchallenged, unrivalled masters of the world's politics, and when what we call liberal democracy seemed to have become the universal pattern of social and political organization.

Alas, this ascendancy was rapidly followed by a terrific breakdown and failure. The Western nations, victors in the war, lost, in a depressing and lamentable way, the peace. The grave and perilous nature of this calamity was for some years camouflaged by the prestige of the victory of 1918. Nevertheless, the situation was growing worse and worse. The Western intelligentsia had succumbed to a mood of defeatism and scepticism, the Western statesmen and politicians were either crippled by the old diplomatic routine, and the status quo way of thinking, or paralyzed by the horror and fear of the great social revolutionary process which had started in Russia in 1917 and which was irresistibly breaking through the walls of the liberal, bourgeois Western society. By 1930, it became obvious that the West was incapable of performing the enormous task of reorganizing peace, let alone saving and re-invigorating the precious heritage of Western civilization. The failure of the German intelligentsia, and also of German Church members, to understand the signs of the times and to offer a constructive scheme for incorporating Germany into the European family of nations, had only made the situation more dangerous, and, in the end, catastrophic. The convulsive efforts of the European bourgeoisie to turn the clock of historical development back by organizing, or at least conniving at, the fascistic social and political remedies, brought Europe and her civilisation to the edge of an abyss, if not to the abyss itself.

Situation More Serious Now

AT this moment, three years after World War II the situation is, in many ways, more serious than it was ten years ago. Western man has not yet recovered, and is losing more and more the last remnants of his world leadership. Even the enormous wealth, the military and atomic power of the American nation must not deceive us. I am not saying that the West is irrevocably and incurably condemned to a final collapse or decay. What I have in mind is Western man's apparent fear, frustration and helplessness in dealing with the great issues of our times. The anxiety about the advancing social transformation under the leadership of the Soviet Union is depriving the average Western citizen of a real grasp of the situation, of an adequate understanding of what is actually going on. What he has taken for granted is slipping out of his hands; and that makes him confused, restless, scared, nervous—or disillusioned and apathetic. He has not much to offer along the lines of moral, philosophical or spiritual leadership. His political decisions are not free of cramps and uncertainty. He is losing the trust and confidence of the former colonial nations which—rightly or wrongly—are looking to Soviet Communism and the Soviet brand of democracy as being a more reliable and trustworthy guide through the labyrinth of this world. To make the situation worse, the official Western policy is inclined to rely on those elements and groups within what we call the "Eastern orbit" which are politically dead or moribund and which lack any capacity to be creative architects of the future.

It is not my contention that the Western nations have lost all chance of saving and remoulding the great heritage of European civilization, (e.g. the subordination of man and society to the God-Creator and Saviour; the subordination of human instincts and passions to the clarity of intellect and to the majesty of an awakened conscience; the norm of justice being superior to power; the commandment of love being the transforming force of justice and social life; the freedom of a responsible personality as against the claims of any human authority to rule the human soul). My contention is that the enormous challenge of the present historical situation has found the Western nations either morally and politically exhausted, weakened or misguided as to a right understanding both of the state of affairs and of the adequate remedies. There are groups and movements within the West that are aware of the existing perils and maladies. They have yet, however, to break through the wall erected by the status quo elements, conservative die-hards and disillusioned liberals, and thus to liberate and rejuvenate the very substance of the Western heritage. Much of the Western weakness is due to a social or class greediness, but also to an almost metaphysical horror before the new approaching world—and to the enervating decay of social and family morals.

The German Problem

HERE we have again to touch upon the problem of Germany. Nobody can deal with the present international issues unless he takes the German situation into his most serious consideration. Germany is like an open bleeding wound on the body of Europe. Her catastrophe is beyond our grasp. We are tempted to describe it in apocalyptical or metaphysical terms. Let us, however, confine ourselves to some few remarks. The German problem is without question a German problem. Only the Germans can carry through the enormous task of de-nazification and the spiritual re-incorporation into the living family of Europe. . . . Germany is lying prostrate on the ruins and debris with a sore soul and shaken to the deepest depth of her moral heritage and political responsibility. She is undergoing an agony and helplessness surpassing our moral imagination. Without her genuine willingness to cooperate in the comprehensive regeneration and restoration of the European family of nations (and of the whole world) we are, humanly speaking, doomed to perish as a civilized community of nations.

Great and untransferable as the responsibility of Germany for the days to come may be, the rest of the world in general, and Europe in particular, is even more responsible. Have the victors any constructive scheme to offer into which German people might be induced to fit themselves? Are we morally and politically capable of understanding the German issue and of helping the German people on to their path to recovery and soundness? Let us not forget our negative, but also positive, failures during the critical period between the two wars.

"The German issue" reminds us, again, of what we had to say a moment ago. The crisis of the world is serious, it goes far beyond the realm of politics and economics. What have we to offer to overcome the confusion and chaos of our times? Who is our Lord? What have we to offer against the often denounced "atheism"? A liberal without convictions? A freedom without faith? A tolerance without self-commitment? Political rights without a social substance? A nostalgia for the old decaying order of political and economic privileges? An economic welfare without a soul? Freedom—for what, to what end?

The international crisis in which we find ourselves cannot be overcome and solved by material means and military weapons. There are politicians, military men, statesmen, and even ordinary citizens who predict, and perhaps even hope for, a new clash of arms as the only possible way out. Everywhere in the world you may find here and there an atmosphere of a killing fatalism. Now, what would be achieved if a new war broke out? Let us not deceive ourselves. The victory of the West must not be taken for granted. The horror of destruction would be unspeakable. And even if the West, in the end, militarily prevailed, the Western powers would be morally and politically unable to cope with the area now under the Soviet government—for thirty years shaped and integrated by the Communist Party on the basis of a socialistic order—that area would defy any effort of the present Western rulers to bring it back to the pre-Soviet state of affairs. The world cannot be organized on an anti-Communistic, anti-Soviet basis. I do not believe, just using my commonsense and sober judgment, that the bourgeoisie which for more than 100 years was the master of Western and Central Europe possesses at present political skill, wisdom and strength of convictions to rule our countries and to overcome the terrific chaos that would follow the breakdown of the Soviets. Individually the bourgeois people may be decent and honest, but as a class (excuse the term "class"!) they lost their prestige and forfeited, in the era of 1918-1938, their chance to be the political architects of the world. If the history of the last 30 years teaches anything it is exactly that. What would happen if the Soviet regime and the present governments in the so-called people's democracies were crushed? All the elements responsible for the catastrophe of 1939-45 would revive; and, on the other hand, the most ruthless, destructive revolutionary groups, both in the East and in the West, might overrule and destroy what would remain of the old civilization. Even a stalemate would cause a situation beyond our imagination and capacity to cope with.

Dangers in Communism

IT is here that you may stop me and ask: "Very well, but how can we hope for a restoration of the world order and peace if the East rejects any overtures and offers of a reasonable compromise? If it is committed to a permanent revolutionary crusade or even to an expansionistic drive? It is not the socialistic and communistic enterprize that we are opposed to—you may say—it is rather the power of expansion and domination, the combination of both, the revolutionary dynamism of the masses and the political imperialism of the East that we feel we must oppose, if necessary even with the prospect of a new war."

I am ready to listen to what is being said. It is, to be sure, distressing and depressing that radical socialism, long regarded as a dream of all freedom-loving people, has been, by the unprecedented international tension, driven into a military camp, and is absorbing so much of the old, pre-revolutionary nature of the Russian empire. Moreover, dialectical or historical materialism, established as an official philosophy of the state, of culture and education, although in many ways a salutory antidote to modern subjectivism and morbid ego-centrism, carries in itself many perils for the sacredness of human personality and for the majesty of justice and love. A tendency to totalitarianism, a certain disregard for the individual life of man, is inherent in the philosophy that to a great extent has reduced man to a by-product of the historical process and deprived him of his responsible freedom. Equally, the peril of the lust for power may grow without inward inhibition and moral restriction.

And yet, one must not forget that Communism in its nature, activity and ultimate goals, cannot be understood without the background of Christian history, of its dynamic progress from slavery to feudalism, bourgeois capitalism and so on. It lacks culture of heart, it has destroyed very much of liberal tolerance and refinement. The masses organized and integrated under the leadership of Marxian philosophy show much rudeness, crudity and primitivism. Moreover, vast sections of the area now under Communist leadership have never enjoyed a political democracy such as has for many centuries been growing under specific Western circumstances. Hence it cannot be expected that they should possess the same forms and institutions of civil rights and freedoms as we know them from the history of some Western nations.

Nevertheless, Communism represents, although under an atheistic form, much of the social impetus of the living Church, from the Apostolic age down through the days of the monastic orders to the Reformation and liberal humanism. Many barbarians are, through the Communist movement, coming of age and aspiring to a place in the sun. The perils of Communism cannot be overcome by equating it exclusively with totalitarianism and by marshalling all the possible and impossible groups against it. It is our great task to understand our own failures, omissions and intangible selfish motives, to acknowledge the right of the new barbarians "to become the co-builders and heirs" of the treasures that were accumulated through the centuries and enjoyed only by some few nations of Europe and America. Let us, again, remind ourselves of our possibility: what appears as a ruthless imperialism may be —at least in measure—a precaution and self-defense against efforts to deprive the Soviet people of the fruits of victory and to bring the great socialistic experiment to its fall.

The Task of the Church

THE perils of the East can be mastered only if the West will live by what has been the glory of its civilization, if it lets the dead bury their dead. And the Church of Christ, standing on the ruins of the old international, social and political order, has to come down where her place is: to the bottom of the human abyss and there, by proclaiming the judgment, forgiveness and redemption, start to bring the nations together, patiently, to show them their wounds, failures, blunders, crimes and disease, but also what has been "true, honest, just, pure, lovely, of good report" in their history, in the history of their neighbors and of their real or potential enemies.

The Church of Christ has got to go beyond the present national, political and "block" divisions. She cannot, if she be loyal to her mission, identify herself with any group of people. She sees more clearly (or ought to see more clearly) than any statesman, politician or philosopher where present humanity finds itself. Without illusions and self-deception she is aware of the terrific dangers present at the bottom of the Western and the Eastern heart. All has become fluid, all categories of justice, freedom and political rights have to be rethought, redefined and reinterpreted, all institutions of political and international life reconstructed. The very terms of "liberty," democracy," justice" have become vague, uncertain and dubious. There are people who in the name of freedom and democracy are backing groups and parties which are responsible for the breakdown of freedom and democracy; there exists movements and tendencies which understand under liberty and justice something very different from what we understand by them. There are also people who—imprinted with the terrible destruction of everything they had possessed, and standing with empty hands on the ruins of yesterday—have no use for our freedom of wealth, comfort and luxury. The confusion of minds, hearts and tongues goes beyond anything the preceding eras of history have witnessed. The Church realizes and fully understands the gravity of the moment.

However, the Church of Christ, being free of illusion and of cheap optimism, is equally free of hysteria, panic and despair. She summons all of her members, and, indirectly, the people beyond her boundaries, to "the work of faith, and labor of love, and patience of hope" (yes, patience of hope!). (I Thess. 1, 3), to make a new beginning, to start from the bottom and to work for a new society, a new order, that will stand in some continuity with the past, but which, however, will in a more adequate way respond to the real needs of the present moment and reflect more genuinely the invisible glory and majesty of the Crucified and Risen. There is no real freedom, no real justice without a total submission to Him who has come to give us life and give it more abundantly. In Him may the West and the East understand one another better, in the spirit of humility and repentance. To Him, with God the Father and God the Holy Spirit, be glory for ever!

ED. NOTE: A number of people attending the Assembly at Amsterdam have informed us that this address was the highlight of the conference, and urged that we print as much of it as possible. We are glad to print the entire speech, in spite of its length, except for minor deletions.

A Good Book on Marriage

This Man and This Woman by Frederick W. Brink. Association Press, $1.50

Too many of our books on marriage preparation are lop-sided. Their writers approach the subject with a strong, dominating bias. Although they may touch upon most of the issues at stake they neglect many of them in an effort to stress their own particular interests. As a result, one is driven to recommend as many as three books to couples planning for marriage. "Try these," he says. "This first book will give you a Christian interpretation of Holy Matrimony. This next booklet carries a sound account of premarital and marital relations. The third books deals with the fundamentals of a Christian home." A very conscientious couple may study all three books, but more often than not they will read one carefully, page through another and forget the third.

All of which is a preface to Dr. Brink's recent book entitled, This Man and This Woman. It is a brief, comprehensive study on preparation for Christian marriage. You will find some opinions expressed that will provoke discussions, and some will even call out downright disagreements. But apart from such objections the book is a healthy guide to marriage.

Certain sections of this book are particularly helpful simply because they are so obvious as to be generally omitted from such studies. Dr. Brink deals with the engagement period as a time for practical preparation rather than a testing-time to be endured. "It is the time when last misgivings are removed," he says, "or when those misgivings are allowed to halt the consummation of the marriage. It is the safety valve between the first infatuation and the marriage itself." This is a time, the author suggests, to study together such practical considerations as budgets, household essentials, in-law relationships. Courtship is also a time to clear up misunderstandings about sex life; to eliminate thoughts of shame and indecency which have confused such issues and overclouded this gift of God to his married creatures.

The chapter on "The Marriage Ceremony" may sound strange to Episcopalian ears because the phrases used in this chapter are taken from the Presbyterian marriage service. But this does not detract from the essential value of the chapter; it casts new light upon the considered subject.

The chapter on mixed marriages was written for Christian and Hebrew as well as for Protestant and Roman Catholic. This particular section belongs in every book on marriage preparation. Every couple planning for marriage should have the information this chapter provides whether they encounter its problem or not. They should be able to share its contents with their friends who may be up against it. If more Episcopalians understood the obstacles and sacrifices involved in mixed marriages there would be fewer marriages and divorces between Protestants and Roman Catholics.

Don't Suppose

BY

GEORGE I. HILLER
Rector of Trinity, Miami

IN ALL the relationships of life there is the ever recurrent danger that we do not possess what we have taken for granted. The valuable things have a habit of slipping away. We suppose that what we once possessed is still ours, but sometimes it is not.

Mary and Joseph as they journey back from Jerusalem suppossed that the Christ was still with them, but he was not—rather he was in the temple with the doctors "both hearing and asking them questions."

The necessity of checking up on our possessions is ever present in every sphere of life. We cannot take it for granted that we still possess the love that was once ours. We cannot accept, as a matter of fact, that the relationship of the individual soul with God is the same as it once was.

We cannot take for granted that what we once had we still have, either in religion or any other sphere of life. Only as with care we treasure the love, enthusiasm, or attachment we have for Christ, or other individuals, can we hope to continue that relationship for long.

We can take nothing for granted. Only what we continually nurture can be ours.

EVENTS make easier reading than arguments. The gospels are crowded with events and so is the Acts of the Apostles written about the year 61 by St. Luke as a continuation of his gospel.

Events are more convincing than arguments too. There is not much you can do but reckon with accomplished facts. Jesus appeared. Scared and scattered men were bound together in a strong fellowship, fearless in the face of persecution. Agents travelled about the world and aroused interest and made converts. Here and there people were healed. Organized but unsuccessful attempts were made to stamp out this new fellowship of believers now called Christians.

These and other events are historic facts. What are we to make of them? Are they to be explained as the acts of visionary and impractical idealists? Are they the work of radicals, trouble-makers, rabble-rousers out to advance their own interests? Or is this the record of the finger of God directing mankind into the only way of life?

Read the book and decide what you think about it. Remember that if you find it is true, you must reckon with these facts in your life today.

WORLD COUNCIL ASSEMBLY

real Christian reunion will be fully achieved until Rome is included. "I don't mean the present Rome," he said, "but the truth and heritage for which Rome stood and is still standing, in spite of all that should be said against it."

★ Reinhold Niebuhr, delegate of the Evangelical and Reformed Church, warned the allied powers against regarding their triumph in war as "proof of their virtue." He cautioned them against plunging the world into a new conflict by their vindictiveness in victory, which he characterized as "nothing but the fury of self-righteousness." Stating that "there is no social evil, no form of injustice of the feudal or capitalist order which has not been sanctified in some way by religious sentiment and thereby rendered more impervious to change," the American theologian stated that "the Church must, by prayer and fasting, extricate itself in some degree from its embarassing alliance with this or that class, race or nation so that it may speak the word of God more purely and more forthrightly to each man and nation and also to each generation, according to the peculiar needs of the person or the hour."

★ Emil Brunner, noted Swiss theologian, charged that the Western nations, notwithstanding their democratic institutions and convictions, "are on the way to totalitarianism." He said that this trend prevails because "wherever social evil is to be cured, people in the Western nations appeal to the state for help instead of mobilizing non-state institutions and associations." He described the totalitarian state as "the real social evil of our time, by far overreaching in perniciousness any other social evils, not omitting capitalism." He contended that nationalization of any part of economy is legitimate only in those spheres which by their very nature are monopolistic and said that "once economy is nationalized the totalitarian state is there whether wanted or not."

★ Karl Barth seems to be causing most of the sensations here. His opening address certainly did, but it was mild compared with the sensation caused by his paper on "Women in the Bible" which he prepared in order to give the committee on Life and Work of Women in the Church something to chew on. The paper has all the women here thoroughly aroused and ready to do battle, and by the time the women of the various branches of the Christian Church learn what he deducted from the Bible he will be involved in controversy as he has never been before. No sooner had he finished his paper than the deluge began. The chairman of the committee, Miss Saroe Chakko, Methodist of India, a bright and attractive woman, said with a twinkle in her eye but with a tone of voice which every married man has learned to be aware of, "Professor Barth does not seem to like women." The final outcome of this Barth-Women-of-the-World controversy has yet to be decided but I am betting on the women.

★ Elections: John R. Mott of the U. S. was elected honorary president of the World Council, and another American, Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, was elected one of the six presidents. The others elected are Marc Boegner of France; the Archbishop of Canterbury; Archbishop Germanos of Thyateria; Archbishop Erling Eidem of Sweden; Dean Tsu Chen Chao of China. Bishop Angus Dun of Washington and Mr. Charles P. Taft, Episcopalian and president of the Federal Council of Churches, were elected to the central committee. Mr. Taft was also made chairman of the permanent press committee.

★ Youth delegates, with about 100 delegates from many countries, are holding their own conference at Amsterdam, and the other day came up with the charge of "muddled thinking" on the part of their elders next door. Specifically they say that the Church has degenerated into a middle-class institution; that the elders do not know what they are talking about usually when they deal with communism, and said the Church better do something about the evils communism seeks to eradicate: economic injustice, racial inequality, social prejudices. There is too much "country club" atmosphere in churches and not enough attention paid to the working classes, these young people state in resolutions.

★ Women in the Church are to be made the subjects of further study by the formation of a commission, composed of both men and women; this in spite of the fact that this assembly had before it a lengthy report based on reports gathered by committees set up in 50 countries and collated over the past two and a half years. It seems to be agreed here however that improvement in the standards of women's training is called for; better pay, more dignified status, security of employment. The committee stated that the Churches are not agreed on the admission of women to full ministry and so suggested that "this whole subject requires careful and objective study."

★ Organization of 12 Council departments was approved, consisting of general secretariat, faith and order, study, reconstruction and interchurch aid which will include a refugee division, youth, ecumenical institute, international affairs, finance and business, prison-of-war, promotion and publicity, women's work, evangelism. On the matter of jobs, the general secretary is to nominate for staff positions to the 90-man central committe, the Council's policy-forming body.

THE NEW BOOKS

Excellent Good *Fair

* * Saint Francis of Assisi, The Legends and Lauds, edited by Otto Karrer, translated by N. Wydenbruck. Sheed & Ward. $3

Everyone loves and admires St. Francis, even those who would find it utterly impossible to live his kind of a life, or who think they would find it so. This scholarly and beautifully translated volume of selections from the earliest sources makes St. Francis stand out before us as an individual, a man completely and utterly devoted to religion. The work is really scholarly and the notes and bibliography are very useful. A word should be added in praise of the format, printing and price.

A Greater Generation. By Ernest M. Ligon. MacMillan Co. $2.50

The experiments in character education made at the Union College research project will doubtless throw light on the learning mechanism and may even give some guide to those who would teach character training at the YMCA. As far as the Churches are concerned, there seems to be little to learn here, though fourteen years of study were needed, we are told, to state the precepts of the Sermon on the Mount in modern psychological terms in order to deal with them scientifically. The philosophers would have a religion without a truth content, so it is not surprising that the educators are suggesting religious teaching without any content.

* * * Religion and the Rise of Capitalism by R. H. Tawney. Penguin Press. 35c

This classic, first presented as the Holland Lectures in 1922, is here made available for every reference shelf. Discussing the Reformation and the shift from a feudalistic to a capitalistic economy, Prof. Tawney produced what has now become a standard, but still brilliant, historical work. The book is mandatory for anyone truly interested in religion as a social force and institution today. The big news here is, of course, the price. You might write a letter of appreciation to the publishers for printing this cheap edition.

CHURCH AND DRAMATIC ARTS

BY
W. B. SPOFFORD, JR.

LEO McCAREY, who has made a good box-office thing out of "Going My Way" and "The Bells of St. Mary's", is facing a dilemma. His new projected film is "Adam and Eve". The dilemma? Well, the Bible says that the two main characters didn't wear clothes and the Hollywood censors say they had better.

Having received reasonable assurance that Ingrid Bergman will be willing to play Eve, McCarey is going ahead with the picture anyhow, confident that the sartorial problem will be ironed out. He states that he is attempting to be authentic in the plot but is handicapped because the fundamental script, the Bible, only gives the barest details. Therefore imagination is being used to fill in the gaps. He states that representatives of all faiths will get a look at the shooting script but is sure that none will totally approve of it.

As far as we know the folk-myths and parables of the Old Testament have been dealt with in only one picture, "Green Pastures," and they were compounded with the folk-lore of the southern Negro as interpreted by a Caucasian writer. It was of course a great and sensitive drama but, actually, it was not an attempt to play the Old Testament straight.

There is no doubt that McCarey is both pioneering and sticking his neck out. The Bible is crammed with dramatic material which can be treated with both sensitivity and power in the movies. The drama of the prophets, as Dorothy Wilson presents Amos in her novel, "The Herdsman," could be a great movie (that is, if the Un-American Committee could countenance its social virility). But the stories of the Book of Genesis bring the producer into the realm of higher Biblical criticism. Are Adam and Eve to be real, historical characters; are they to be prototypes or are they to be attempts of Hebrew historians and theologians to explain certain realistic facts about human nature through the realm of poetic simile? Whichever way is chosen by McCarey, he is certain to win condemnation.

Since McCarey is a Roman Catholic who has stuck close to Roman Catholic interpretations in the past, it is a reasonable assumption that higher criticism will be ignored in this film. In which case a lot of faulty and unscientific teaching is going to be spread through the theatres in the guise of entertainment. The Protestant Film Commission had best be as concerned with this venture as the Legion of Decency is certain to be. Otherwise an awful lot of good Sunday School teaching will go out of the window in eighty minutes of appreciation of Miss Bergman.

THE PRESS

The Record (C. of E.): It would be fair to say that the Report of the Lambeth Conference is, on the whole, a conservative document: the bishops were not in an adventurous frame of mind. The policy of "holding tensions" is likely to lead to maintaining the status quo at all costs.

Living Church (P. E.): Such witch-hunting as the Thomas committee is now engaged in is, accordingly, a subsersive activity in the most direct and specific meaning of the word. It strikes at the very foundation of American life by providing a channel for unsupported accusation to instill the poison of suspicion into men's minds. If Congress continues to permit it to operate as it is doing now, the committee will pave the way for the psychology of the police state in which every man is guilty until he is proved innocent.

Christian Evangelist (Disciples): There is no such thing as a cold war any more than there is such a thing as a hot iceberg. The more we talk about wars at any time, the likelier we are to make them incarnate in actual experience. . . . The term "cold war" should be erased from our vocabularies and in its place should be inserted some expression like "partial" or "approaching" peace which would anticipate what we want instead of attempting to make real the thing we all especially dread. To talk about the cold war is the worst kind of psychology on the part of those who really desire that the world shall remain at peace."

Christian Century (Un-Denom.): There are many churches which desperately need the support of a World Council of Churches, but they do not need it more desperately than the World Council needs the full support of all its constituent churches. The Council is the Churches.

Churchman (P. E.): What alarm clock did it? The fact that last year the Methodist Church took in over 1,000,000 new members, while the Protestant Episcopal took in 15,000? We have no inside information, but the Church has waked up to the fact that there are millions of un-churched people in America. . . . We refer to the radio program which will be launched October 1 of this year. And if Americans don't rub their eyes with amazement at the professional program they will hear, and enquire, "Can a church do this?" we're admitting that we are no foretellers.

Watchman Examiner (N. Baptist): When the editor of a Nevada newspaper was hard up for matter with which to fill his columns, he had his compositor set up the Ten Commandments and ran them without editorial comment. After the paper was published he received a letter: "Cancel my subscription. You're getting too personal."

GOOD IDEA

Episcopal School of Savannah is the name of a day school for kindergartners and first-graders at St. Michael's Church in that city. Rector Theodore Patton states that religious training is a vital part of the program with chapel services daily. The school is housed in a fine new two-story brick parish house and accommodates 30 kindergartners and 16 of their seniors. Dorothy Rayburn, assisted by Mary Paschal, is in charge of the younger children and Jeanne Morrel, a graduate of Sweet Briar, is the first grade teacher. All of them are Episcopalians. Parents are naturally enthusiastic with a considerable number of them attracted to St. Michael's by this service to children.

LEND LEASE: An eastern parish has 25 copies of the old hymnal with music which it will be glad to donate to a mission that can use them.—A New England rector writes that he has a lectern Bible in fairly good condition that his parish will be glad to send to a parish or mission.—A small mission is anxious to receive an altar Prayer Book to replace one that is badly worn.

GET TOGETHER: A downtown midwestern city parish seeks a rector. He must be a moderate churchman, middle age, preferably married. The parish offers $3,500 and rectory.—Clergyman now serving a thriving parish in a mid-west city seeks a parish in the east of importance. The reason for the change is because physicians say that one of his children needs a change of climate because of a bronchial condition. The clergyman, in his forties, has served a number of parishes well and can supply the best of references. Moderate churchman, good preacher, civic minded, a believer in parish calls. Salary must be minimum of $5,000 and rectory.

HELP WANTED: Cooperation is asked in the conduct of this department. We will be glad to receive "Good Ideas" that work in parishes; information about church goods, no longer used, but which might be welcomed by a parish or mission; also word from parishes and missions that would be glad to receive discarded supplies. We want also to be of service to clergymen seeking positions, and bishops and vestries having positions to fill. We ask that all communications be sent to THE WITNESS, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y. We further ask that personal calls at the office not be made and that those writing do not ask for unnecessary correspondence. We promise to serve to the best of our ability by mail. We are too busy to promise more.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

MRS. FRANCIS B. RIGGS
Churchwoman of Cambridge, Mass.

I have been told that chaplains are so much under the thumb of the military that they would not refuse to wear a uniform nor insist on serving the wounded under any organization separated from the army. Can we think of Christ wearing a military uniform and kowtowing to superior officers? If not, why should not his followers also show moral courage?

MRS. JOHN HAMILTON MOORE
Churchwoman of San Antonio, Texas

I am writing to comment, not on an editorial or article, but on the letter of Mr. C. C. Burlingham in the issue of June 24th. Mr. Burlingham refers to an article appearing in June third number on the reforms in the Episcopate. He suggests that the author does not include the matter of translation of bishops from one see to another. Some may argue that this might be a "reform" but any who have been members of a large parish where rectors hold short pastorates know that the Bishop's permanence is the only tie in the church family.

I am a member of St. Mark's, San Antonio, and Mr. Wright left to become Bishop of East Carolina after only two years; Mr. Hunter to become Bishop Coadjutor of Wyoming after a little more than two years and now we are having another new rector. The membership is something over 2500, and it is almost impossible for a rector to know his congregation in so short a time. However, since the change of rectors is inevitable there is consolation in the fact that our bishop will not leave us.

MR. PERCY HAMILTON
Churchman of Newark

Don't tell me that Bill Spofford has gone humble on us? Why the small type in Talking It Over of Sept. 2 when he usually blasts with the largest type the paper owns? In any case since he is still telling the bishops how to run the Church—and by defending the notorious Red Dean of all people—I take it that the small type was merely an oversight on the part of the printer.

Amsterdam Report Hits World Divisions

World Council Puts Blame Upon Both East And West for Threat of World War

★ Mutually suspicious and antagonistic blocs are the greatest threat to world peace according to the report presented to the World Council by the committee on international affairs.

"There are elements in all systems," the report said, "which we must condemn when they contravene the first commandment, infringe upon basic human rights, and contain a potential threat to peace.

"We denounce all forms of tyranny, economic, political, or religious, which deny liberty to men. We utterly oppose totalitarianism wherever found, in which the state arrogates to itself the right of determining men's thoughts and actions instead of recognizing the right of each individual to do God's will according to conscience. We resist all endeavors to spread a system of thought or economics by unscrupulous intolerance, suppression, or persecution.

"Similarly, we oppose aggressive imperialism, political, economic or cultural, whereby a nation seeks to use other nations or peoples for its own ends. Therefore, we protest against the exploitation of non-self-governing peoples for selfish purposes, the retarding of their progress toward self-government or discrimination against any race."

The report called for "a positive attempt" to "ensure that the competing systems of Communism, Socialism, or free enterprise, may co-exist without leading to war." Meanwhile, it said, Christians must critically examine all actions of governments which increase tension or arouse misunderstanding, even unintentionally.

At the same time, the report urged, unless nations surrender a greater measure of national sovereignty in the interest of the common good, "they will be tempted to have recourse to war to enforce their claims."

The section on the disorder of society presented a report which strongly condemned both Communism and Capitalism. It stated that the points of conflict between Christianity and atheistic Marxian Communism were: the promise by Communists to bring about complete redemption of man in history; stress of the virtue of one class; materialistic and determinist teachings which do not jibe with the Church's teaching that man is made in God's image and is responsible to him; methods used by Communists in gaining their ends.

As for capitalism, the report stated that it conflicts in the following ways with Christianity: produces serious inequalities; developed a practical form of materialism in western nations, with its greatest emphasis upon success in making money; periodic social catastrophes, such as mass unemployment.

The report stressed that men are often disillusioned when they find that changing a particular system does not bring unqualified good, but often fresh evils.

"New temptations, greed, and power arise even in systems more just than those they have replaced because sin is ever present in the human heart," the report declared. "Many therefore lapse into apathy, irresponsibility and despair.

"To find ways of realizing personal responsibility for collective action in large aggregations of power in modern society is a task not yet undertaken seriously."

"In the light of Christian understanding of man we must say to advocates of socialization that the institution of property is not the root of corruption of human nature," the report said.

"We must equally say to defenders of existing property relations that ownership is not an unconditional right. It must be preserved, curtailed, or distributed in accordance with the requirements of justice.

"The coherent and purposeful ordering of society has not become a major necessity, but centers of initiative in economic life must be encouraged to avoid placing too great a burden upon centralized judgment and decision."

As to the Church, the report asserted that the greatest contribution it can make to the renewal of society is to be "renewed in its own life in faith and obedience to the Lord."

LIVELY PROGRAM FOR BOSTON STUDENTS

BY

THEODORE P. FERRIS
Rector of Trinity Church, Boston

★ There are more students per square mile in Boston than in any other place on the face of the earth. They are registered in world famous schools like the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and in schools of varying degrees of obscurity, right down the line to the New England Institute of Embalming. Fifteen thousand of them live within walking distance of Trinity Church. They are in themselves a young, mobile and responsive congregation to which it is the privilege of the church to minister.

During the war, the student work at Trinity Church sagged. The reasons for it were obvious —accelerated programs, unusually heavy schedules and the constant movement of the men in the armed forces. When the war came to an end three years ago, our ministry to the student congregation began in earnest. There were two principles which we set before ourselves from the beginning. The first was that whatever we did must be done on a big scale, on a scale at least comparable to the number of students involved. The second principle was that our ministry to students was primarily and basically a religious one. We made it clear from the beginning that we were not an extension of the U. S. O. While we recognized the validity of social relationships and recreational activities as a by-product of Christian life and worship, we put these things in a secondary place.

To put these principles into practice we moved from the small room in the rectory where the meetings had been held to the largest room we had in the parish house. We started with sixteen at the first meeting and now the attendance is somewhere between two and three hundred every Sunday night. We then made the evening service the center of the evening's activity. Each year at the opening meeting we have stressed the fact that the church's object in ministering to students is not to make them comfortable, but to make them better and more active Christians by incorporating them into the life and fellowship of a parish church. The program gradually evolved is the same Sunday after Sunday. It begins at six o'clock with supper consisting of sandwiches, coffee, ice cream and cake, for which the students pay a quarter. Meals had never been served in Trinity Church on Sunday inasmuch as the dietician has Sunday off. It was not hard, however, to find a group of women who were glad to do this important work as a part of our ministry to students. The number of sandwiches they have made in the last three years is somewhere up in the millions!

After supper there is a speaker who begins at quarter before seven and stops at seven-twenty. The subject of the talk is some aspect of the Christian religion or related to some field in which Christian principles are involved. The whole group then attends the evening service in a body. Incidentally, they have revived the evening service which was steadily declining in attendance and morale to such a degree that it had almost reached a complete quietus. They have learned the congregational responses in choral evensong so that the service is no longer a duet between the clergy and the choir.

After the evening service they all go back into the parish house an divide into groups. One group goes downstairs to the kitchen and washes the dishes and leaves the kitchen clean for the next day's work. One hundred and ten go to the choir room for an hour's choir rehearsal under the direction of a volunteer, Samuel Walter, the organist at Trinity Church, Newton Center, and director of the choir of Boston University. A large group goes into the library for the discussion period. A seminarian from the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge, Bruce Cooke, has been largely responsible for the increased interest in the discussion group. Another group goes upstairs and prepares one-act plays which are presented at the monthly dances. The dances are the sole social activity of the students. We find them extremely important inasmuch as most of the students we deal with are from schools and colleges which do not have the normal campus facilities for social intercourse.

On Tuesday there is a tea at the rectory which is small enough to make it possible for new-comers to be personally welcomed and introduced to the group. The most recent undertaking is the appointment of a students vestry made up of young men and women who will have the responsibility for keeping the activities of the group before the attention of their various schools and colleges. A four-page newspaper called Canterbury News is published every two or three months and mailed not only to our contemporary members but also to those who have been associated with us in previous years.

The fruits of the work are great. There are, of course, many baptisms and confirmations. Young people from all parts of the country are introduced to our particular form of worship and to all the unique contributions of the Anglican communion. Already there have been several good marriages contracted between men and women who have met at the church.

Last year there were a considerable number of students who were graduated from college and who chose to settle in Boston. They did not want to give up their Sunday night activity in Trinity Church, so another group, called the Phillips Brooks Club, for all such people, was started. It meets at the same time and follows the same general program, with its own speakers. They, like the students, attend the evening service, after which the two groups unite for the various activities in the parish house.

The credit for whatever success we have had with students goes entirely to the Rev. Norman Spicer who is in charge of the work. The rector has always been on hand and has supported the work, but he can claim no share in its success. All he can say is that it is one of the most exciting and encouraging aspects of the total ministry of the church in Trinity Church, Boston.

★ One of the chief jobs of Chaplain Nat Acton at the University of Maryland, College Park, is counselling with students in his study. In this instance it is Bill Holbrook, president of the student government association, who came to the chaplain with a problem that had him badly baffled. He was soon put straight by the smiling Nat Acton.

HARVARD STUDENT PRESENTS VIEWS

BY

HUNTINGTON WILLIAMS, JR.

A Junior at Harvard University

★ I answered the knock on the door and found myself facing the last person in the world I expected to see, the minister. During the last two weeks since I had come to Harvard, the Church had not entered my mind, so absorbed was I with the business of being a college man. I invited him in, and he told me that he was Mr. Kellogg, the chaplain to Episcopal students. I asked myself why I had not gone to Church since I had been in Cambridge and, what seemed more to the point, why I had felt no particular incentive to do so. Before the answer could reach my somewhat guilty consciousness, I heard it come from Mr. Kellogg when he implied in a genial way how many students get so wrapped up in the newness of college life that the habit of going to church seems just one more thing that the freshman has left at home. He seemed to take this as a matter of course, no frowns of disapproval or insistence that I must turn up next Sunday. Here was a regular guy; I was going to like him.

The following Tuesday, I found a postcard in my mailbox from the Bishop Rhinelander Foundation, the Episcopal student organization at Harvard and Radcliffe, inviting me to tea that afternoon over at the chaplain's house. When I showed up I was introduced to the group and immediately I felt at home. Here were people just like myself who were willing to share their thoughts and interests, so different from the people I had passed on the street a few minutes before who had made such a point of being impersonal.

During the several months that elapsed before I went into the army, I spent a lot of time over at the chaplain's house. The student communion service on Sunday was always followed by breakfast there, with a good chance to get to know some of the other students. On Sunday night there was a speaker who came in to the Canterbury Club. He was usually stimulating, but the discussion that followed was really the interesting part for me. However, these provoking thoughts were forced into a rest area during my two-and-a-half years in the army. In combat especially there was little time and no inclination to think at all.

When I got back to college I was challenged to find a meaning for the life which, before the war, I had taken for granted. That challenge, I think, is responsible for my share of the widely publicized "post-war seriousness among students." The challenge extends to people like Mr. Kellogg and to all who call themselves Christians. My interest in religion, dormant on the intellectual level during the war, was revived. I saw Mr. Kellogg when I returned and found him trying to do the tremendous job of being chaplain to some 2500 Episcopal students at Harvard University and Radcliffe College. His program had grown since 1943 when there was a fraction of that number. The Tuesday teas and the Sunday breakfasts seemed the same. But in the discussions following the Canterbury Club speakers, questions were asked which showed a new urgency. These men, like me, were searching — some for justification, some for apology, and some for the very substance of belief in God.

The chaplain approached me one day, asking me if I would be interested in attending a conference on the ministry sponsored by the New England commission for college work. Before I had a chance to tell him that I knew practically nothing about the life and that I really believed myself quite unqualified for whatever it entailed, he explained that the purpose of the conference was not to convince anyone that he should become a minister, but instead, merely to present the vocation objectively. I was dubious about the value of spending a whole week-end finding out about the ministry, but I said I would go. The conference was fun. Besides finding out the objective facts of the job, I got a hint of the real meaning of Christianity from being a part of a community of men whose chief interest was learning about God through prayer and thinking out the possibilities of entering the ministry of his Church. I received a spur at the conference that has been continually reinforced and augmented since then by my increasing activity in the student council of the Bishop Rhinelander Foundation.

The chaplain and his staff has guided the council's work. The staff includes two theological students, Samuel M. Garrett and Ward McCabe, and the wife of a third student, Mrs. Tom T. Edwards. Their friendly interest and mature suggestions have proven invaluable in our ever-recurring problems of organization and technique.

Working with individual students and with the council has, as much as anything else, given me the understanding of the meaning and purpose of my faith.

STATE UNIVERSITY WORK PRESENTS PROBLEMS

BY

DAVID R. COCHRAN

Episcopal Chaplain at University of Washington

The University of Washington, Seattle, is a good example—perhaps "horrible" example would be better—of a current pattern in large state universities. With an enrollment of 16,000, nearly double the prewar figure, it is planning for an eventual enrollment, after the present G. I. influx has been digested and spewed out, of 25,000. Physically, it is blessed with a campus spacious enough to expand in, and is currently engaged in putting up $200,000,000 worth of new buildings—University Gothic, replete with the latest in ceramic gargoyles. It is a metropolitan university, in that two-thirds of the students live in Seattle or the immediate vicinity, but it also draws extensively from the northwest at large. Academically, it is in tune with the times, with its intense specialization and departmental autonomies. The anthropologists do not speak to the psychologists, and the psychologists do not speak to the sociologists, and the engineers, not talking the same language, do not speak to any of them. In fact, this swarming anthill on close inspection loses all semblance of a real community of thought and purpose. It has ceased to be a university, and has become, instead, a diversity.

At least, that is how it looks from the outside, and outside is precisely where all religious workers are and must be. We have to operate under laws separating religion from public education as stringent as the laws of any state in the union. Which means that the university administration, which is now sympathetic towards religious agencies, has it hands tied in giving those agencies any real assistance. and that fewer courses related to religion are offered than in any comparable university that I know of. And what is more to the point, it means that non-religious philosophies have complete freedom in the university, while religion has no freedom.

What is the mission of the Church under these conditions? At a minimum level, it means operating on the outer fringes of the university, ministering to students who have an "Episcopal preference" and who can be interested in the Canterbury Club, offering them a "Church home away from home," and guidance when troubled. This is what the Church's program has been in the past at the University of Washington, and, to a large extnt, what it still is.

What is accomplished? Probably more than we realize. Some students do find in the Canterbury Club a fellowship that gives their academic life meaning and real zest. Some students are challenged to look beyond the suppositions of the accepted student mores and the professional quips into the deeper strata of life and their purpose within it. Some students do find a unity and comprehensiveness at the altar that gives the lie to the university's diversity. Some students do succeed in finding a moment of quiet in the chaplain's office to air a troubled mind or conscience. And all that is vastly better than nothing at all.

But how much more could be done with more help and better facilities! A place where students can drop in for a talk or study, a place they can call their own, a center for the very real corporate life that a Canterbury Club develops. And above all, the chapel—again, not large and certainly not pretentious, for it should not compete with the regular services of neighboring parishes. But a chapel where the liturgy can be practiced fully and freely, which is open day and night for prayer. A chapel which looks like it has something to say to the modern world, whose simple structural unity stands as a challenge to the diversity and confusion of the campus beyond. But again, I'll settle for almost anything —as long as it doesn't have gargoyles!

The point is, with additional personnel and adequate facilities, I think we can begin to tackle the Church's mission to the university on a deeper level. And that mission is to challenge, transform, convert the university itself. An impossible task? It is no more impossible than converting the world, a task to which we are all committed.

COUNCIL WARNED ABOUT POLITICAL PARTIES

★ Condemning Church ties with any one political group the World Council's committee on the Disorder of Society pointed out the dangers of Christianity confused "with the inherent compromises of politics" and Christians "cut off from other parties which need the leaven of Christianity". The report defined the hazards of 'Christian' political parties now existing in several countries. "They tend to consolidate all who do not share the political principles of the 'Christian party', not only against that party but against Christianity itself". (RNS)

HAIRCUT STIRS UP CONTROVERSY

★ Refusal of YMCA barbers and other tonsorialists in Grand Rapids to take care of John Akar, young West African delegate to a recent U.C.Y.M. Conference, was termed "a regretful incident" in a resolution adopted by the Conference's steering committee. City manager Frank H. Goebel said Akar's experience was "an isolated case" and pointed out that the city's hotels, restaurants and amusement places make no racial discrimination. The local YMCA secretary protested that it "could not force barbers to cut anyone's hair, white or Negro, against their will". The Conference, in its resolution, regretted "the embarassment which our fellow delegate experienced."

RANK'S "OLIVER TWIST" DRAWS CRITICISM

★ As a vehicle of race-hate this film is being denounced by the New York Board of Rabbis, who have urged Eric Johnston, president of the Motion Picture Producers Association of America to keep the movie out of the U. S. The Board specifically objected to the characterization of the Jew, 'Fagin', as a horrid sterotype certain to stir up in the public mind hatred and prejudices. The showing of this film in one American theater", they said, "will undo all the splendid work of such American films as 'Gentlemen's Agreement', 'Crossfire', and others. We respectfully urge that you do everything possible to keep "Oliver Twist" and its patent prejudices out of this country". (RNS)

COUNCIL HEARS PLEA ON LAYMEN

★ The laity are disappointed by the church. It is not a "source of strength and light, but a place for the satisfaction of a religious need which is isolated from everyday realities. This is in flat contradiction of the fact that Jesus Christ claims the whole of life." In a report to the first assembly of the World Council a committee on lay responsibilities asserted that the church must see the "great significance" of giving guidance to the laity on how to apply the Christian faith to economic, social, political and cultural realities. The committee commended the proposal of lay leaders of the Ecumenical Institute in Bossey, Switzerland, for the convening of at least three area meetings to enlist internationally the full lay power of the Church. It proposed that the policy-making Central Committee of the Council. now headed by the Bishop of Chichester, approve and make plans for the meetings. (RNS)

YOUNG PROGRESSIVES PICKET CONFERENCE

★ Many pro-Wallace youth were also present at the U.C.Y.M. cenference held recently in Grand Rapids. They handed out Progressive party literature and invited Conference delegates to their rallies and to "get on the band-wagon". Street corner speeches and heated discussions were heard by most of the Conference delegates. Unworried by the political developments officials of the Youth Conference received a letter from the Young Progressives to be circulated at the meeting. One official said, "A Christian must be democratic about these things, whether one agrees with the Wallace movement or not". (RNS)

RELIEF CONTRIBUTIONS BEING HINDERED

★ "Putting too many strings" on their contributions of goods and money, some denominations participating in Church World Service relief and reconstruction have actually hampered the flow of goods to needy countries. According to Kenneth Wentzel, CWS representative, denominations which specify certain areas as destinations for their relief contributions are tending to create a problem of oversupply for some recipients and undersupply for others. (RNS)

SCHOOL FACILITIES DENIED CHURCHES

★ Prohibiting religious groups from using school buildings or fields has been established as permanent policy by the Grand Rapids, Michigan, Board of Education. John F. Livingston, school board attorney, ruled the school code provides for community and recreational use only of school facilities, at the discretion of the board. He said that, consistent with state law, the buildings cannot be used for holding religious meetings or for purposes of teaching religion and that religious groups cannot use school buildings when the organizations will directly benefit from such use. NEWS OF OTHER CHURCHES

ASK RECALL OF MYRON TAYLOR

A demand that the President recall Myron C. Taylor (Episcopalian) from the Vatican was made at the annual meeting of the National Baptist Convention, meeting in Texas. The demand came from the Rev. J. M. Dawson of Washington, D. C., who is the executive secretary of the committee on public relations of the Church. He stated that Taylor's presence in Rome was a special advantage for a single Church. Mr. Dawson also denounced the application of public tax funds to sectarian and Church schools.

METHODIST CHURCH MAKES GAINS

The Methodist Church reports an upward trend in membership and finances, according to their director of statistics, Rev. Albert C. Hoover. Fifty-four conferences reported a gain of 65,737 members; world service rose from $5,770,000 to $6,152,000 and other benevolences increased from $8,969,000. Church school enrollment showed an increase of about 125,000.

LAY TEACHERS STAFF DIXON SCHOOLS

Laymen have been hired as teachers in the two public grade schools and the public high school in Dixon, N. M., which has been in the news since the filing of a suit to ban garbed Catholic clergymen and nuns from teaching there. Announcement of the employment of lay teachers for the current term was made by Henry H. Kramer, president of the Rio Arriba County board of education.

The high school building, owned by a Roman Catholic order, was loaned to the board of education rent-free. This action followed the refusal of five nuns —all teachers in the school—to sign 1948-49 contracts. Meanwhile, J. T. Reece, state school bus transportation director, said that public school buses would carry all students into Dixon, whether they attend the public schools or the new Catholic parochial grade school which has been opened there. The new school is staffed by Dominican nuns.

RACE RELATIONS CONSIDERED

Southern Baptist social service commission is to call a meeting of outstanding leaders of Negroes and whites to explore the field of race relations. "The commission feels that the problem of race relations is being treated too much as a political football and that the time is ripe for a thorough and vital Christian analysis of the problem," said the Rev. Hugh A. Brimm, executive secretary of the commission.

URGES CHRISTIANITY IN DAILY LIVING

Sunday teachings should be put to work during the week, according to Findley B. Edge, member of the faculty of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville. Setting forth what he called "an experiential philosophy of religious education," Edge called for a vital connection between "what goes on in the church on Sunday and what takes place in the lives of the people during the week."

"We reject the liberal theological view which holds that there is no need for a conversion experience," Edge said, "but the weakness in the traditional approach of our churches lies in an emphasis on the conversion experience almost to the exclusion of the development of Christian personality and character. True evangelism includes both the initial experience with Christ and the development of Christian character. A drunkard who is won by the church will readily understand that he must give up drink, but he must also be led to see that embracing Christianity means giving up shady business deals, the paying of starvation wages, and everything else not in harmony with the teachings and the spirit of Christ.

"It is the responsibility of the church to make clear the meaning of the conversion experience and also to help converts to develop into active and aggressive Christians."

BODILY ASSUMPTION OF THE VIRGIN

Archbishops, bishops and theologians of Ontario and Quebec, together with the mayor of Montreal, have sent a petition to the Vatican asking the Pope to proclaim as dogma the bodily assumption of the Virgin Mary into heaven.

ITALIAN PROTESTANTS ISSUE PROTEST

Reconstruction of war-damaged non-Catholic churches in Italy have had limitations imposed upon them by the government, according to the Federal Council of Italian Evangelical Churches. A protest has been sent to Premier De Gasperi which states that it is the "first clear violation" of the new constitution's guarantee of equal rights for all faiths. EUROPEAN CHRISTIANS URGED TO UNITE

Enslavement will be the lot of Christians of Western Europe unless they are on their guard. The warning was given at Cologne by the Rev. The German politician spoke of the need for Christians to unite in order to be more effective in what he called the struggle "for democratic, human and Christian liberties."

DEAN INGE VIGOROUS AT NINETY

The retired dean of St. Paul's, London, Dean Inge, now over 90, told the conference of Modern Churchmen that "The few who still go to church do not want changes and would resent them because they feel an affection for symbols which are really dead. Some of them have petrified, others have evaporated; either process is fatal. Christianity is cluttered up with these dead symbols, which yet cannot be abandoned. Preaching is at best unsatisfactory business. It is like throwing a bucketful of water over a row of narrow necked vessels. A drop or two may find its way in here and there."

WORLD CONGRESS OF OLD CATHOLICS

Friendly relations between Old Catholics and Anglicans was stressed when 140 delegates of 5 European countries met at an international congress of Old Catholics, held at Hilversum, Holland. The delegates urged an intensification of ecumenical efforts on the part of Old Catholics and asked that further material and spiritual reconstruction work be accomplished in Europe.

CZECH PROTESTANT TO VISIT U.S.

President Joseph Krenek of the Church of Czech Brethren will soon visit the U.S. and Canada on invitation of several Protestant groups. He was at the Amsterdam Conference, accompanied by Prof. Joseph Hromadka, whose address at the World Council Assembly stirred the delegates with his charge that "the convulsive efforts of the European bourgeoisie to turn back the clock of historical development by conniving at fascistic social and political remedies has brought European civilization to the edge of an abyss."

INDIA UNITY ESSENTIAL

The Christian Church in India, faced with a clash between resurgent Hinduism and Islam on the one hand and Christianity on the other, must heal its "unhappy divisions" if it is to give an effective witness, according to Rajah B. Manikam, secretary of the National Christian Council of India, Burma and Ceylon.

ROUEN CATHEDRAL BEING REBUILT

The war-devastated cathedral at Rouen is being rebuilt and repaired slowly and with infinite care and pride. It will take thirty years before the ancient structure is completely restored. It is being rebuilt exactly in the same way that its medieval designers made the original; of the same stone, with the same tools, and by hand.

CHRISTIAN ENCYCLOPEDIA IN CHINESE

The Christian Writers Fellowship, meeting at Kuling in conference, planned two projects. One is the revision of a "Chinese Dictionary of Religious Terms", now 15 years old, and the other is the production of a comprehensive Christian encyclopedia in Chinese. This is expected to take five years, though the dictionary is expected to be ready next year. Both projects will be directed by William R. Leete of Nanking Seminary, a missionary in China for 40 years.

Put First Things First

THE active season for parishes has begun. Clergy and lay folk are home from summer holidays, the Episcopal wanderers have returned from Lambeth. Plans of many sorts are being made, some of Church-wide scope, some diocesan, some parochial. Organizations will be foraging for new members; every member canvass preliminaries will be in action. In not a few parishes schemes are already being worked out for money-raising drives to supplement the always-inadequate income from weekly pledges. It is all part of the familiar picture of the Episcopal Church at work. As we look at it again this year it impresses us with no thrill of admiration, but rather with a deep feeling of sadness. We wonder whether the Protestant Episcopal Church in the U. S. A. isn't being well nigh organized to death. We have come to take all our societies, guilds, drives, bazaars and "movements" quite for granted as something that is of the essence of ecclesiastical life. Even a spiritual objective like evangelism takes on an outward semblance of machinery.

We are, presumably, bold to the point of rashness in suggesting that most of our national, diocesan and parish machinery is a hindrance rather than a help to the cultivation of the spiritual and moral life in individuals and groups on every level of our ecclesiastical fellowship. But we happen to know, here and there, of parishes which have more or less set themselves apart from the prevailing machinery of our Church life and whose priests have devoted themselves almost exclusively to teaching the Church's faith; to showing its applicability to contemporary problems, personal and social; to giving intensive pastoral care to individuals and taking the Prayer Book at its face value, using all—not just some—of its offices and sticking heroically to its varied directions. And we know enough about these parishes and missions to say quite confidently that they are among the strongest, happiest and most useful in the Church.

Some thirty years ago there was a little book published which depicted in fictional form an extraordinary transformation of the whole Church of England because a young, revolutionary archbishop insisted that all parochial organizations be suspended in their activities for a period of two years and that the Church confine its parish activities to living up to the spirit and letter of the Prayer Book. At the end of the two years test, nobody, high or low, was willing to go back to the old ways. Parish organizations remained suspended, congregations increased in number and the moral and spiritual tone of the entire Church was raised almost incredibly. A romance, of course; a rosy dream and nothing more. The fact that we actually picked up a copy of this book in a second-hand shop a few months ago for just ten cents would indicate plainly enough how much stock the rank and file of Church folk took in the notion. So it is not our intention to suggest any such Church-wide revolution, but the much more modest purpose of urging such parish clergy as have felt keenly the burden and the fruitlessness of much of their parish machinery to have a try this year at really putting first things first. Why not look with critical and skeptical eye at every existing organization you have before the season gets underway? What ones, if any, are worth the effort that goes into them, from the standpoint of helping to produce Christian character? How many of them are definitely working to extend the Christian fellowship in the town and in the world? We venture to guess that in many parishes the Women's Auxiliary will prove to be the only outfit that passes muster by either of these standards and that in not a few branches of this excellent organization, raising money for "missions" is about as far as they get and the actual nature of the fellowship they are working to extend is little known and still less made an integral part of the members' daily life and character.

CHRISTIANITY has not failed. It is we who have failed to put it into practice in daily life because we have been unwilling to pay the price. We have failed to practice it in our homes, that is why we have one divorce in three marriages and why juvenile delinquency is such a problem. We have failed to practice it in our churches, that's why there is disunity and ineffectiveness. We have failed to practice it in politics and government and that is why we have dishonesty and corruption. We have failed to practice it in our treatment of minority groups and we have reaped the harvest of race riots, intolerance and bigotry. We have failed to practice it in our international relations and that is why we have war.

Old-fashioned Churchmanship

SO WE would like to suggest, to those parish priests who feel that the burden of "serving tables" is an intolerable one, that the spiritually unproductive parish organizations be ruthlessly suspended for one season and that a program of religious teaching and worship be the one emphasis for this season of parish life. There will be no need to look to "281" for such a program; the Prayer Book has it all, ready for use. For religious study and prayer groups the Prayer Book catechism is an all-sufficient basis for any spiritually-minded teacher to use for the enlightening and inspiring of his people in Christian principles and practices "as this Church hath received the same". And the offices of the Prayer Book are our challenge to make common worship a vital part of the daily experience of our people,—not the Sunday experience only. The Holy Communion, the daily offices of Morning and Evening Prayer, the offices of Instruction,—all these might easily be made the warp and woof of a parish's daily religious life. There was a time when a little group of Anglo-Catholic parishes had a monopoly of daily services, but one of the happier signs of the times is that today this is by no means the case. In most of the larger cities, parishes of every sort of churchmanship are providing daily services for their people and for the community. This custom ought to spread into every city and town in the land where the Episcopal Church has an established parish. There are difficulties, of course, just as there were difficulties a couple of generations ago in getting our generally locked-up houses of worship finally opened seven days a week. But daily services can be provided wherever there is a full-time priest on the job.

We are just old-fashioned enough to believe that the slogan "a house-going parson makes a church-going people" expresses a profound truth. This truth is not that mere systematic door-bell ringing and a continual round of social visits has any important spiritual value. But a "house-going parson" who makes every pastoral visit a religious event is something else again. This doesn't mean necessarily formal prayer and exhortation, but it does mean bringing intimately to the attention of each household at every visit the vital reality and practical importance of the Church's basic doctrine and common worship for the solving of the manifold personal and social problems of today's bewildered and desperate world. We are even inclined to feel that without this kind of pastoral ministry all the daily services and all the systematic teaching that we can manage to provide will be futile, so far as any transforming of the spiritual quality of the parish and the community is concerned.

So we repeat, at the risk of boring even those clergy who are longing to escape some of the tyranny of parish machinery: Time and energy invested in patient, systematic teaching of the Church's basic doctrine, in providing daily services of worship and in the kind of pastoral visiting that sets forth simply the meaning of such doctrine and worship to every household, will pay dividends of spiritual renewal of parish life which his efforts in running or supervising most parish organizations can never succeed in producing.

WHAT IS COLLEGE FOR?

EDUCATORS should know the answer to this question. The fact is, they don't. The report of the Harvard committee, entitled "General Education in a Free Society" admits that the variety of aim and method among colleges, and within any one college, has robbed liberal education of any meaning. They speak wistfully of the Incarnation as a source of ultimates, of the Summary of the Law as a basis for democracy; but they say that such bases are not for them, and therefore they cannot inculcate general agreement on ultimate realities.

Parents have an answer to the question: College gives Junior four more years of not-entirely-wasted growing up before he makes his decision about his job. In my opinion that's a good enough answer. College did something for me.

I cannot say that my attitude was entirely serious. I took biology because it entitled me to the permission to maintain an ancient car in New Haven for scientific purposes. However, biology converted me from agnosticism.

By the most amazing luck, I came to know George Trowbridge, Jack Crocker, Elmore McKee, and Grant Noble. Through them I met men like Tui Kinsolving and Les Glenn. These men were college chaplains, mere extra-curricular excrescenses on the noble structure of higher education; but for the subsequent happiness of my life they were the most important of all my educators. They converted me to Christianity of the thinking sort. A child can be incurably attracted to Christianity by his parents and pastors, no doubt; but a young man needs the testimony of thoughtful strangers to justify the attraction intellectually.

A casual conversation with an assistant professor of English resulted in the train of thought I feel was my call to the ministry. It was more than a train of thought; someone was speaking to me. This man was not a full professor; he never lectured to crowded halls about how frightfully important the study of Smollet's novels would prove. From the point of view of the university authorities, my religion was probably none of this man's business, and certainly not part of his job. Without the chaplains, I wonder if any conversation would have borne such fruit in my happiness.

If this column seems too autobiographical to be in quite good taste, please excuse me for using a bit of personal testimony to blurt out my gratitude.

Correspondence regarding this column may be addressed to the writer at The Church of the Epiphany, York Avenue and 74th Street, New York 21. Do not waste postage telling me that one purpose of college is to keep people from ending sentences with a preposition. "For What is College?" seems to me like a question by Hitler: rather disapproving and very gutteral.

Church Cooperation

By GEORGE A. WORKMAN

Episcopal Chaplain at Duke University

A VERY important and somewhat unique feature of the work at Duke University is the close relationship of the Church with other denominations. Though often referred to as a "Methodist school", the Duke University Church (Interdenominational) is actually governed by a church board consisting of faculty members, student representatives and the student workers. All denominational and religious groups are represented. Thus we have delegates on this church board, and our students participate in the endeavor to make a united presentation of the Christian faith to our student body. Episcopal students are members of the magnificent Duke University choir; our lay-readers take part in the weekly vesper services and other special observances. They work with the campus YMCA and YWCA and participate in interdenominational as well as denominational conferences. In such manifold ways, our young people are thereby induced not only to loyalty as Episcopalians but also to harmonious action with the whole of Christ's Church.

The Living Liturgy

By MASSEY H. SHEPHERD, Jr.

CHURCH WORSHIP FOR COLLEGE STUDENTS

IT IS sometimes assumed that in the work of a specialized ministry to limited, specific groups of common backgrounds and interests, such as the ministry to college students, a well-rounded program requires some special type of corporate worship adapted to the needs and tastes of the particular constituency. Such an assumption is, I believe, a snare and a delusion. There is not one liturgy suitable for the educated and another for the uneducated, anymore than there is one Prayer Book for the white man and another for the colored, or one for the business man, another for the housewife, another for the industrial worker, and still another for the farmer. The liturgy is the Church's greatest instrument of unity, the bond of all sorts and conditions of men and women within its fold.

We do assume that the college student is sufficiently mature to be confirmed and a regular communicant of the Church. The question then is not so much one of adapting the liturgy to his particular taste, as it is of adapting the student himself to a normal and full participation in the wholeness of life afforded by the Church's liturgy. At the least, the student's education should enhance his appreciation of the historic and artistic richness of the Church's liturgical heritage. At best, he should find the liturgy a wide portal through which he leaves the protected isolation and selective experience of the campus for the broad arena of human life aspiring and struggling to make sacrament of God's world.

For this reason it is my own conviction that the student should normally find his participation in the liturgy in the context and framework of a parish church rather than in chapels reserved primarily for student services. I am well aware that the lack of vitality in many of our parishes deters and repels many youth of lofty idealism and sweet romanticism. They would prefer to worship with "their own kind," if not in their own chapels, at least at some "student corporate communion" at an hour other than that of the regular parish worship. But right here is the rub. The spirit of exclusiveness, of segregation, of distaste for rubbing shoulders with "all sorts and conditions" in common acts of offering and communion is the very negation of the true meaning of liturgical worship. It is sectarian. No, it is worse,—an exhibition of snobbish pride. The student should learn in college, if not before, that discipline of Sunday as a holy day of obligation when all the faithful of the community, irrespective of age, status or culture, assemble together in the give and take of sacrifice.

In many instances, of course, the college campus is not located in a parish neighborhood. But the college itself is a community, embracing more than students and faculty. Perhaps not many of the workmen and maids are Episcopalians—but so many as there are, they too have an offering to make with the learned at the Sunday assembly, a contribution to make to that worldwide mission of the Church of which the liturgy is the celebration. In other words, we should be on our guard lest the full inclusiveness of the liturgy degenerate into a club affair, an extra-curricular "appreciation course," or a conventional appendage to those interminable discussion groups of religion which some students, I fear, use as a substitute for the real thing. By all means the liturgy should stir students out of their inveterate absorption in their personal problems, whether intellectual or moral, and evoke a sense of responsibility to society and to the missionary work of the Church in all its various spheres.

Frankly I do not know where other than in the liturgy the modern college student will find that which he desperately seeks—a whole view of man and of the world in which he lives. Certainly he does not find it in the departmentalized, specialized collections of facts and theories amassed in his college courses. Even the rage now for "general education" courses for a "free society" is devoid of a unifying common philosophy. It is certainly not founded on a living, Christian faith. If the Bible is taught at all in the college, it is surveyed as history or literature, as folklore or a source of iconography in art. Its theological meaning is passed over, presumably since that is "private opinion" and not science. The students' minds are not opened to see the awful depths of human sin, the mystery of our creation and redemption, or that vision of "the glory which shall be revealed in us." The chaplain should constantly bear in mind this fact if the liturgical offices are not to become for the student one more academic exercise. For the liturgy, through the ordering of its lectionary according to the mysteries of the Christian Year, exposes the particular, historical facts of the Bible in the light of their universal, theological significance.

Travels of a Gargoyle

By THOMAS V. BARRETT
Director of College Work, National Council

ON my way home to the Cathedral of Bureaucrats I made one more stop at Plumbline to see the Rev. John Goodman. I might as well not have stopped because Goodman was really behind the eight-ball when it comes to operating on the grass-root level. He hadn't even thought of a new wing for his parish house. He said there were so many human needs the parish house would have to wait. I asked him if he had a radio program so that he could meet people where they were, and he said he met them "at the post office, the drug store, and the super-market. That was where they were most of the time anyway if they weren't at the movies." I found out he'd never marched in a picket line, he thought parsons ought to spend half their mornings studying books, and that he figured Sorengard would have been better off if he'd seen the Dodgers play the Giants more often.

The fellow was pretty impossible. I asked him why he didn't install a shower in the sacristy for after-sermon use, and he said he took his showers on Saturday night, and most preachers didn't need a shower as much as they needed a bolt of lightning. After that our local-level planning went from bad to worse. I told Goodman about sauerkraut juice but he replied he wouldn't drink it while he was conscious; and when I saw the old pipe organ he had in his church, I suggested he should get a Fakyorgan like the one Van Shyster had. Goodman said he'd heard one once and it sounded like a duet between a harmonica and a calliope, and he'd rather wait a hundred and fifty years for a real pipe organ than to buy something that looked like an organ and wasn't. He said it was a matter of honesty.

I could see Goodman wasn't well oriented to modern life. Something wrong with his motivations I guess. I asked him how about an hour of prayer and meditation with his sexton, but he said his sexton had a mind of his own, and never had anything to do with a church service except on Thanksgiving Day.

"I'll pray for him", said Goodman, "but I'm not going to pray with him until I know he wants me to. And right now I'd hate to interrupt him anyway. He's doing a good job of washing those steps."

After a day and a half of bumping my head against a blank wall I decided to leave Plumbline and wait until Goodman caught up on some real living experience before I ever visited him again. So far as I could find out all he did was to preach, and visit people in hospitals, and take small children fishing and big children to baseball games, and conduct two small mission stations in the country. The man had no organized play, or planned summer projects, and hadn't urged any of his Sunday School tots to come to confession since he'd been in the ministry. I was pretty disgusted and had him drive me to the airport. I wanted to get back as soon as possible to other levels where things were really channeled and integrated into living experience. Goodman was way below the grass-root level.

ON the plane I started to open my Bible to find out what they did about people like Goodman

On the plane I started to open my Bible to find out what they did about people like Goodman back in the old days. But I was tired and my head began to nod before I got the right passage. It was about then, I think, that we crashed. There was a period of wonderful silence and then a fearful whirling, screaming confusion.

"This is it", I hollered as we plunged toward the grass-roots. Then there was a crash and a time of nothingness.

After that I was astounded to find myself sitting upon the ground in a curious land. I was surrounded by other clergymen, though I did not remember seeing them on the plane. They looked apprehensive.

"We must be in hell", quavered one with a broken chest-tone. I looked and saw Greatvoice clutching a gallon jug of sauerkraut juice.

"It is only purgatory", said a thin man who seemed to be choking on a clerical collar. I recognized him as Father Chancel-Bell. "You must all confess to me immediately", he piped.

"Nonsense. There is no such place", said Honneydo sweetly. "This is only part of living experience".

Hardway appeared from behind a neo-rock. "It's all a paradox", he began. "We crashed existentially, but the nominalism of. . ."

"Pardon the interruption", growled Fermenting, "I knew this was coming. It's part of a capitalist plot . . . or else it's the first impact of the revolution. We're obviously in a crisis."

"If you don't mind my saying so", said Sitwell who was perched comfortably behind a flat rock which he was using as a desk. "It's more than a crisis. It's damned uncomfortable too. The unions have had too much freedom. I hate to say this, but I think its these Jews. Of course some of my best friends are Jews but . . ."

"There must be a way out of this place", remarked Van Shyster crawling out from under a stone. "If we only knew the right people we could sell them on the idea that we're not as bad as we look."

I was myself writing down some notes for later Gargoyles when Wangelist interrupted me.

"This is no time for writing", he said bouncing a fist off my back. "Let us have a quiet hour, and witness together". He backed me up against a rock. "When you were adolescent did you ever become curious about the birds and the bees?"

It was at that moment that a man appeared, followed by a small boy carrying a fish pole. I saw the man was Goodman. The small boy I did not know, by name that is. But I remembered once seeing him kicking a tin can around paradoxically.

We were all silent as they stopped in the midst of us. Then Greatvoice banked a deep chest-tone off a mountain into a ravine. "What are you doing here, my good man? This is private property, and while we do not mind . . ."

"Shush", snorted Van Shyster. "Let's sell him on the idea of getting us out of this mess."

"We were about to go fishing", smiled Goodman interrupting Van Shyster, "but I guess we must change our plans. Maybe we can help".

He nodded to the small boy who opened a fat black book and began to read: "Wherefore the Lord said, for as much as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men; therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvellous work among this people . . . for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid. . . . Now will I rise, saith the Lord; now will I be exalted; now will I lift up myself. Ye shall conceive chaff, ye shall bring forth stubble . . . and the people shall be as the burnings of lime; as thorns cut up shall they be burned in the fire . . ."

The whole reading didn't make much sense. But immediately the sky darkened to an ugly red, and a terrible wind rose among the barren canyons. A bolt of lightning shattered the jug of sauerkraut juice. Greatvoice opened his mouth, choked, and began to perspire. No shower bath was around.

"I can't speak. My preaching", he exclaimed in a light natural voice.

Van Shyster stood with his hands full of advertisements, a stricken look upon his face as a wind ruffled through the papers. Then they disintegrated in his hands. The small boy continued to read through the confusion. "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd . . ."

Poor Honneydo stood up, spun around twice, and sat down with his back to us. A book of theology appeared as if by magic in his hands, and in a moment he was surrounded by book shelves, so that he could not possibly escape. Sitwell got up to flee but before he had run ten feet a Negro appeared from behind a bush, caught him and led him off in the opposite direction—gently but firmly. They passed the wing of a parish house jutting out of the rock. As they did so it crumbled to the ground.

Goodman walked over to Fermenting, took his pamphlets away and smiling a little satirically, led him over to Wangelist. "Here, you two; you must get to know each other. But not in front of everybody."

The little boy put down his book and fish pole, and going over to Chancel-Bell took away his clerical collar and his maniple. Chancel-Bell objected until Goodman said, "You were stifling yourself. You can have them back after you're humanized a little".

Then the boy went to Hardway and said, "Come with me". Hardway frowned and resisted, but Goodman said, "It's a paradox", whereupon Hardway followed the little boy off over the barren landscape. As for me Goodman shook his head and took away my pen.

At that moment I woke up. The plane seemed to be coming down over La Guardia, and as far as I could tell my spirit was still incarnate. The voice of a small boy persisted in my ears as though he were still reading from the black book.

"Finally brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

The plane bumped along the runway. The travels of a Gargoyle were over.

Children Do Listen

By KATHERINE C. PIERCE

ONE day during a recent visit to their grandmother the two cousins Bess (five..... and Kitty (eight), marched in carrying a forked stick and singing Onward Christian Soldiers and announced that we were to have "church".

The service was conducted entirely by the little girls without suggestions from the two adults who composed the congregation. They were however asked to join in the Lord's Prayer and the hymns which were limited to two repeated several times as the children had only Onward Christian Soldiers and Silent Night in common.

The service was well arranged with prayers, several short spontaneous prayers as well as the Lord's Prayer, hymns and "sermons". They apparently did not distinguish between sermons and notices. These were the most interesting part of the service.

Bess' first sermon was a declaration of her love for God and Jesus and an exhortation that we should love them too. Her second expressed her pleasure that there were so many children in church this morning. Then she asked that all the children give their names to her as they went out and that any parents who were present should give the names of their other children or children of their friends "because we want all children to come to Sunday School."

Kitty's first sermon was the Christmas story beginning" "An angel came to a lovely lady named Mary" and ending with explaining the word Christmas "Christ-mass." Her second was an appeal for money "We need money for this church but beside that there are lots of places where there is no church and the people need them—we must have money for them too. And don't forget the people in Europe need clothes. Bring them and leave the min the back of the church at any time. The clothes must be clean and not have any holes. Remember that they need everything."

The children had included prayer, praise, teaching, preaching, concern for the education of children, support of the parish, missions and relief in "church" which lasted an hour and a half and concluded because supper was ready.

Rectors and parish organizations are urged to order a Bundle so that THE WITNESS may be available each Sunday at the church. Send your order to 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y.

DON'T FORGET YOU HAVE AN IMPORTANT DATE

Friday Evening — October 1st* to listen to the first program in The Episcopal Church's new radio series

"Great Scenes from Great Plays"

THE PLAY: "Cyrano de Bergerac" by Edmond Rostand
THE STARS: Walter Hampden with Ann Seymour
THE TIME: 8 pm [EST] 7 pm [CST] 8 pm [MST] 7 pm [PST]
THE NETWORK: Over 500 Stations of the Mutual Broadcasting System

Your Relations and Friends Will Enjoy This Program!

Be sure to tell them about it so they can tune in . . .

Of course, all Episcopalians who know about this program will want to listen to it. But it is important for you to remember that the most important objective of the program is to reach the millions in the United States who are completely unchurched. That is why the efforts of each of us are vitally important in making sure that the opening program and all subsequent programs reach the widest possible audience. That is why you will be doing a very great good when you do everything in your power to encourage others to listen to the program.

When you listen to this first program you will be hearing far more than the first production in a great new radio series. You will be on hand for a significant moment in the history of the Episcopal Church. You will share in what your Presiding Bishop calls a "daring yet ecclesiastically sound evangelistic plan."

Edmond Rostand's great play "Cyrano de Bergerac" has been selected to dramatize the vitally important Church message in this broadcast which concerns the importance of self-denial. Certainly this a fitting subject for the first program since self-denial along with love of God is a vital principle in the Christian faith.

Special Note to Clergymen . . .

The value of this program to your parish or mission will depend to a very great extent on YOUR understanding and support. That is why you received, well in advance, a folder containing suggestions and written materials to help you understand and promote the program in your parish.

IMPORTANT NOTE. In spite of the large number of stations in the Mutual Broadcasting System's national network there are parishes not covered by Mutual stations. Most of these parishes are being specially covered through local stations not part of the Mutual System. In some cases this may mean the "Great Scenes from Great Plays" program will be heard on Thursday or Saturday evening rather than Friday—or at a time other than the times shown above. All clergymen will receive a complete list of stations and times well in advance of this program.

YOUNG PEOPLE OF THE CHURCH

By WALTER N. WELSH

PARSHAD awards are college scholarships given to Christian young people annually by the United Christian Youth Movement. The awards are made by this interdenominational youth agency to those who can prove active Christian leadership in school study interests, and in parish and wider Church activities. There is a 1500 word essay also required. This year the subject of the essay was, "Youth in the Community; Our Christian Responsibility." Out of hundreds of young people, thirty-five from twenty states and Canada received scholarships. None of them were Episcopalians.

Episcopal young people were invited to take part. Our own united movement of the Church's Youth sponsored it through literature sent to thousands of parishes. Even if the degree of participation were small, the record cannot be changed. Our batting average was .000. There is some possibility that our youth are not in need of scholarships. We also have a right to suspect that the information about this Parshad contest was distributed among the pipe ashes of many clergy waste baskets. Then too there is some reason to believe that the requirements for leadership were too extensive to permit our youth to qualify. But most of all the subject itself must have presented a major barrier to countless numbers who belong to the "All-American Guild of Acolytes", or who "fellowship" all over the parish and diocese with the "right set".

There is paltry evidence of any activity among our Episcopal youth which would demonstrate that they might know what the wording of the essay subject implied. If there is any one who knows of an Episcopal group of young people so engaged in taking Christian responsibility in the community, this correspondent would like to know about it any time. Reports to date seem to indicate that even a little harmless "service" in a youth fellowship is a chore only a few will engage in. Fellowship, rather than having anything to do with "community" working together, is just a word which sanctifies cake, soda and recreation. Who would expect them to write an essay on "Youth in the Community; Our Christian Responsibility?"

Somehow, youth of the Protestant Episcopal Church ought to be especially aware of "Community". Their whole catholic heritage is quite in contrast to the do-well individualism being practiced today by the large majority of all present day Churches-in-good-standing, Romanism not excepted. Unfortunately the Church is not revealed to them apart from the symbol of an edifice of brick, stone, or wood. The action within that building doesn't make sense. They are scene shifters in a mystery drama that apparently has no practical application.

How can our young people write on "Youth in the Community; Our Christian Responsibility" when sin for them is some personal peccadillo. Sixty young people at a conference this last summer almost without variation said that sin was lying, stealing, and swearing. They further avowed that even these by and large did not apply to them. Granted that these are anti-social acts, yet youth has been led to see them only as a few things the Ten Commandments tell them not to do.

THE PRESS

United Presbyterian:—We live in an hour when the oft-quoted lines of Kipling are no longer true—East is East and West is West and never the twain shall meet! Modern discoveries and inventions have limited space. What happens anywhere is quickly known everywhere. Irrespective of race, creed, language, customs, religions there is a oneness not hitherto known. Mankind is now destined to rise or fall together. The need of one is the need of all. Co-operative fellowship must prevail or discord and disaster are inevitable.

Watchman Examiner (Bapt.): As in the days of Noah "the earth is corrupt before God and filled with violence." Brazen corruption is in the political realm. Our children have to breathe a licentious social atmosphere. There is the unmitigated villainy of Communism—and nations are falling within the orbit of Moscow. Moreover, there is an undisciplined liberalism that goes nowhere so fast it arrives out of breath—having talked more and more of less and less. In some places, church forums and discussion groups are replacing the preaching of the gospel under the illusion that they are ministering to the needs of the world. Never before in human history has the earth been so crammed with menace as now.

Christian Evangelist (Disciples): The desolations of two world wars call for reformation or, failing reformation, for revolution which shall go to the center of the maladjustment which make the cruel chasms between the over-rich and the over-poor; between the privileged few and the under-privileged many; between the happy and the hopeless. It is already clear that atheistic communism roots and thrives on human misery, fear and despair but that it does not bear the fruits of personal security, happiness and worth. Christian democracy decays and dies in conditions which are favorable to communism.

Federal Council Bulletin (Inter-Church): It is high time to challenge the prevailing indifference to what people do on the Sabbath Day. Basic values are at stake for individuals and communities. Pride in what is called broad-mindedness may distort our perspective and confuse our judgment. Commercialization of the Sabbath is to be deplored and opposed a disregard of the law of God and as a dangerous undermining of the foundations of American community life. It is an aspect of secularism to which many people—some of them in churches—have yielded out of a misguided inclination to "tolerance".

Christian Union Herald (Pres.): In America we have glorified success until it has become almost a god. The world has come to think of our country as a place where a boy can raise from errand boy to president of a company or of the United States and a girl can go from poverty of the slums to the glamorous (?) life of a rich film star. Just that has happened. But we are likely to get so obsessed with the idea of success that we try to get it at any price. Many have found it only to let it defeat them for they could not take it. The reason was that in the purpose of their life there was only personal ambition. They had won success according to men's standards, but they had not learned how to live.

Christian Century (Unden.): Marx is not Marxism and Marxism is not Stalinism. Only dishonest propaganda can identify them. We must approach Marx as he is, free from the connotations that have distorted his picture. Thus we shall find truth in him—scientific truth, situational truth, ultimate truth.

THE SYMBOL OF THE FAITH

By George Hedley

Dr. Hedley has written an interpretation of the Apostle's Creed in terms both of its history and of modern thought. It will help both those who have accepted the creed without much pondering, and those who have rejected it because it seems incompatible with modern thought. The author drives his point home with vivid illustrations from history and from present-day life.

NAVE WINDOW
St. John's Church, Barrington, Rhode Island
The Rev. W. Owings Stone, Rector

The flowing lines and varied blues of the figure of the Virgin, the random placing of her monograms, the delicately drawn Child and attendant angels, recalls the tapestry-like quality of windows of the later middle-ages. This window, of richly textured quiet coloration, with its playfully irregular canopy framework, creates a pleasant, intimate atmosphere most harmonious in the smaller church.

GOOD IDEA

St. Michael's, China Lake, California, combines pleasure with business by holding a parish meeting at the time of the annual picnic. This year there were over 100 persons attending. The ladies' guild prepared a swell meal and after everyone had enjoyed that, two of the young people took the children aside to play and the Rev. Paul E. Langpaap, in charge of the mission, presided at the parish meeting. He first gave a brief outline of the history and place of parish meetings in the life of the Church, and then related the achievements of the mission during the past year. This included a new vicarage; a growing Sunday School; fifty members pledging over $3,000 to the budget whereas there had been but sixteen the previous year. Not the least achievement was the pledging of $500 for missions. Addresses were also given by the treasurer, Maurice Clifton; the superintendent of the Sunday School, Arthur Pfeiffer; the head of the altar guild, now called the Guild of St. Michael's, Mrs. Amy Griffen. It was a great picnic and the best parish meeting the mission ever had.

LEND LEASE: Apparently there are a lot of unused lectern Bibles in existence. In any case the first week of the revived Lend-Lease department has brought in letters from four rectors informing us that they have Bibles they will be glad to send to a mission or parish in need of one. —There is still listed on our books the need for an Altar Prayer Book. —Likewise nobody has yet asked for those 25 copies of the old hymnal with music.

GET TOGETHER: A large parish of middle class and poor people, in the east, wants an assistant priest, single preferred. He is to be a Prayer Book Catholic, and a man who prefers to be an assistant and who will stay over a period of years if everything is satisfactory. In writing give experience, age and salary required.— A middlewest clergyman, about 50, is anxious to return east, preferably either New York or New Engand. He is interested in administrative work as well as in a parish. His salary before the war, in which he served, was $4900 and a rectory, but the matter is open. He states that he can adapt himself in churchmanship to the standards of the parish. He gives two bishops as references; a dean; an army officer; wardens of two parishes he served.—An eastern clergyman, with an enviable record as a hardworking assistant, is looking for a parish of his own. His present bishop gives him the highest of references.

HELP WANTED: We do need your help to make this department useful. If you have supplies that you want to give to some parish or mission in need, write us. If you have needs of your own, without the funds to buy them, write us.

Is there a plan in your parish or mission that has proved successful? Let us know about it for Good Idea.

If a vestry is looking for a rector, or a rector is looking for a parish, write us.

And, please, write, do not call. We will do the best we can by mail but we are so limited with staff workers, and there is so much work to be done, that we have no time for interviews. But if you write The Witness, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y., we promise to do the best we can by mail.

★ In making changes of address please send both the old and the new address. We ask also that changes be not made unless they are for an extended period.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

MRS. PETER W. SQUIBB
Churchwoman of Boston

The story of the student strikes in China by Paul Denlinger was excellent and I am delighted that THE WITNESS is to give us stories regularly from this country. I have a number of Chinese friends, mostly students in Boston, who read Mr. Denlinger's account and it caused rather lively discussion. Generally speaking I got the impression that they thought he was too kind to the Kuomintang, rather than the reverse.

MR. G. H. JONES
Churchman of New York

It is a great satisfaction to me to be receiving the lively WITNESS regularly once again. The last few numbers have arrived on Tuesday whereas previously it was sometimes even the following week when I got my copy.

ANSWER: We are making every effort to get the newsmagazine to readers the day it is dated, or before. We will be glad to hear from any who may be receiving their copy late.

REV. JAMES A. MITCHELL
Rector of St. Paul's, Englewood, N. J.

To amuse your readers this hot weather, I though I might send you two rich selections from last year's Confirmation examination which I happened to run across today. On the other hand, they may not be so amusing to parents and teachers who are concerned about the poor spelling of modern 13-year-olds.

"The religion of Jeuses was a fath spred by his Jeausish apolicels after he was cursuphied. They were very spicharl peupul like the men of the vesorie in a Eposal church today which you join by severce calld babtisumn."

"A sacrament is an act or courtecy you preform that signifies something underneath that you are trying to put across, such as kissing. When you do this act you are trying to show deep afection."

STORY OF THE WEEK

Church Going on the Air With Plays Tomorrow

Great Scenes from Great Plays Launched October First With Notable Casts

You have a date with yourself and your friends. That is the message of the National Council to all of the people of the country, and particularly to Episcopalians. For tomorrow evening, at eight o'clock, the first of a series of half-hour broadcasts will go on the air over the more than 500 stations of the Mutual Broadcasting system, plus. It will present scenes from "Cyrano de Bergerac" with Walter Hampden and Ann Seymour the stars.

The "story of the week" angle lies in the fact that it is the first time in radio history that any Church has presented such an array of stars in a series of broadcasts; and also in the fact that there will be no sermon, no hymn, no Bible reading, no prayer.

The second play, October 8th, will be "The Corn is Green," with Jane Cowl; that of October 15th will be "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" with Basil Rathbone. Other stars who will appear in subsequent programs are Celeste Holm, Joan Caulfield, Brian Ahearne; also the famed actor of horror roles, Boris Karloff, who plays the part of "Death" in the play "On Borrowed Time." Our cover this week pictures Mr. Karloff before the mike in a preview of that broadcast.

The plan for the series originated with Mr. Robert D. Jordan, the director of promotion of the National Council, following the extremely successful nation-wide broadcast earlier this year when considerably more than a million dollars were raised in four hours for world relief.

The "no conventional religion" angle of these programs is explained by Mr. Jordan by his remark that "the people we want to reach would be scared away by religion." The broadcast aims to reach the 70,000,000 Americans who do not attend church regularly, but they are definitely not designed to win people away from other churches.

This does not mean, however, that there will be no message from the Church. At the conclusion of twenty-two minutes of scenes from great plays, a voice will ask the radio audience: "How can we make sense out of this troubled and confused world?" The voice will refer to Cyrano's "lifelong self-denying love for Roxanne." Cyrano achieved this self-abnegation, the voice will continue, "by making something out of himself." The voice will then suggest to listeners that they may win the battle with themselves if they have the encouragement and guidance provided by the Church "through an experienced clergyman."

The voice will invite those who don't belong to a church "to discover just how much richer your life can be" when you "receive that which only a church can give." Listeners will be asked to write for a booklet called "Finding Your Way" which tells what the Protestant Episcopal Church stands for and how it offers a faith to live by.

On stations in comparatively small communities containing no more than two or three Protestant Episcopal Churches, a local clergyman will add a personal message like this: "I am the Rev. John Williams, of Christ Church, on West Elm Street. Speaking for all the members of my parish, may I welcome you as a listener to the program you have just heard. And may I extend to you a very friendly invitation to be with us at our 11 o'clock morning service next Sunday.

Some bishops and clergy within the Church, Mr. Jordan said, were opposed at first to the idea of a radio program almost bare of the usual religious accompaniments, but withdrew their objections when they heard transcriptions of the first program.

Mr. Jordan explained that exhaustive surveys were made before deciding upon the type of program to be offered. The most popular programs were found to be those of the comedy-revue type. "But obviously we couldn't sponsor somebody like Bob Hope," Mr. Jordan said. Dramatic presentations were found to be the second most popular type, he added.

CLACQUEURS

Nobody in the Church has been hired to applaud the actors who are performing in the Episcopal radio broadcasts. We can be certain that the quality of the drama as well as the talent of the distinguished actors will need no involuntary applause. But, on the other hand, the whole purpose of the program is to atttract non-church members.

If your local Church is a clique, turn it into a clacque by letting others outside the church hear your applause.

NEWS OF THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH

'LITTLE CHURCH' MARKS 100TH ANNIVERSARY

★ The first Episcopal Church in this country to be named the Church of the Transfiguration, New York City's famous Little Church Around the Corner will observe its 100th anniversary on Sunday, October 10. It got its nickname from an incident concerning George Holland, an English actor who died in 1870. When Holland died, a close friend asked the minister of a Madison Avenue church to conduct the funeral, but because he shared the prejudice of the day against the theatre, the minister refused. Then he added, "There's a little church around the corner where they do that kind of thing." Holland's friend, elated, said, "Thank God for the 'little church' around the corner", and hurried off to be met by the Rev. George Hendric Houghton, founder and first rector who agreed to hold the service. Newspapers took up the story and soon popular songs were written on the theme, as was the operetta "Sally". The present rector, and for the past twenty five years, is the Rev. Randolph Ray. During his tenure 50,000 ceremonies have been performed at the Little Church. Active contact with the theatrical profession is maintained by the church through the Episcopal Actors' Guild which has headquarters in the raftered Guild Hall of the church. Mr. Ray is also the author of "Marriage Is a Serious Business".

DUN'S COMMITTEE HELPS JEWS

★ Churches must denounce anti-Semitism as "absolutely irreconcilable with the profession and practice of the Christian faith", according to the World Council committee on the Christian Approach to the Jews. Headed by Bishop Dun of Washington, the committee said: "Churches in the past have helped foster the image of Jews as sole enemies of Christ, which has contributed to anti-Semitism in the secular world". As regards mission work among Jews, the report proposed that all unworthy pressures or inducements be scrupulously avoided. Bishop Dun's committee also recommended that churches provide relief for war victims in Palestine and to work and pray for a just order there.

CATHEDRAL BUILDING RESUMED

★ The Patriot's Transept of the Washington Cathedral is now again in the process of construction. The first stone was swung into place during a brief outdoor service on September 29 conducted by Bishop Dun and Dean Suter. The date marks the forty-first anniversary of the laying of the foundation stone of the cathedral in 1907. Within the transept will be the War Memorial Chapel where the national Roll of Honor, recording names and service records of thousands of men and women who served their country in wartime.

SEEK TO CHANGE SEX RATIO

★ Women are ahead, as usual, and the Diocese of Southern Virginia is trying to remedy the situation. The sex ratio of church participation in America is 65-35 in favor of women, and Episcopal laymen of Southern Virginia have a feeling that the same condition may exist around home. At a recent meeting 125 male representatives of 30 counties decided to modernize parish educational methods; encourage revival of family devotions; organize physical participation for men in church repair and renovation; further the work of lay readers; and hold a corporate communion for men on Advent Sunday. In church circles this is said to mark the first inroad of the streamlined age on Southern chivalry.

SISTERS CELEBRATE FOUNDING

★ The Sisters of St. Margaret celebrated the 75th anniversary of establishment of their American House in Boston. On September 12, a solemn votive mass was sung for them by the Rev. Oliver D. Dale and the Rev. Granville M. Williams preached. The sisters have occupied their present house in Louisburg Square since 1881. They pioneered in district nursing, and particularly in the care of sick negro women and children. For the latter purpose they still maintain St. Monica's Home in Roxbury, in the old homestead of William Lloyd Garrison, the "Liberator". One of their major industries is making altar bread which is used in Episcopal churches the length of America, in South America, Liberia, and in many other places.

SCHOOL OF RELIGION IN PITTSBURGH

★ "The Good News of God" is the general theme of a school of religion sponsored by Calvary Church of Pittsburgh, through the months of October and November. The list of speakers: October 4, The Rev. M. Bowyer Stewart; October 11, The Very Rev. H. E. W. Fosbroke; October 18, Professor John S. Marshall; October 25, The Rev. Norman Pittenger; November 8, the Rev. Alan W. Watts; November 15, The Rt. Rev. Austin Pardue.

ST. BARNABAS GUILD TO MEET

★ The Biennial Council meeting of the Guild of Saint Barnabas for nurses will be held in Boston, Mass., on Saturday and Sunday, October 30 and 31, 1948. The group will be addressed by Bishop Nash on Saturday and on Sunday at the evening Florence Nightingale Service will hear a sermon delivered by the Rev. Theodore P. Ferris.

PARSON MARCHES WITH LABOR

★ Rev. W. B. Spofford, Jr., who is rector of St. Thomas' church, Detroit, as well as executive secretary of the Episcopal League for Social Action, marched in the Labor Day parade in that city. He did so on the invitation of a vestryman of the parish who is a member of the United Automobile Workers, a C.I.O. affiliate. The young rector reports that "as far as I could tell I was the only representative of religion in the day's doings. After the parade I went to the union party while they fought over Truman vs. Wallace.

JAPANESE BISHOP ON RADIO

★ Japan's Bishop Yashiro, presiding bishop of the Episcopal church in that country, discussed "Christian Fellowship" on CBS "Church of the Air," Sunday, September 26. He was in New York on his way home after attending the Lambeth Conference.

St. Peter's School, Peekskill, N. Y., recently celebrated its tenth anniversary. The school, founded by the Rev. Frank C. Leeming in 1938, has grown to the place where it has a campus of 70 acres and buildings to house 75 boys. Graduates of the school are in 19 colleges where they are all doing well. A graduate of St. Peter's is also at the Cambridge Seminary and another enters General this month. The Founder is still the headmaster and conducts services daily in this beautiful chapel.

MRS. SIBLEY ON AIR

★ The radio guest of Ted Malone, Mrs. Harper Sibley, Rochester church woman, will speak on World Community Day, November 5. In cooperation with the United Council of Church Women, Malone will devote his broadcast that day to prayers for peace. His program is heard daily over the ABC network. The United Council of Church Women will ask all who are able to listen to the program and join the prayer. Mrs. Sibley will lead the prayer for world peace. Organized seven years ago and with ten million members in the U. S., the council is now building on the principle that "ten million women working together can change the world." Women members are sponsoring a "Pack-a-Towel" campaign in which cloth, socks, soap and toothbrush will be sent to teen-age DP's in Europe. Bundles will be collected in churches on November 5th.

LEADS CLERGY RETREAT

★ The Rev. Bonnell Spencer, Order of the Holy Cross, conducted the annual clergy retreat in South Florida during the last week of September. His meditations concerned the "Spiritual Life." The Diocese of South Florida is also planning the annual convention of the Young People's Service League for October. A special feature of the conference will be the dedication of a chapel diocesan conference center, Camp Wingmann. The chapel is a memorial to diocesan youth who died in World War II.

URBAN WORKERS UNITE

★ "Great urban and industrial areas are not being served adequately by our or any other church, and there is little coordinated effort in the planning, staffing and financing of work in such areas . . ." So runs the plan of action of the recently formed Episcopal Fellowship for Urban Workers, a group open to any clergyman or lay worker who is serving in the urban field. The purpose of the group is to inform the church of its urban opportunities; provide exchange for information; and to arrange means of increasing knowledge and skill of personnel in the urban field. The steering committee is composed of the following clergy: Howard P. Kellett, H. A. Berngen, Leland B. Henry, W. B. Spofford, Jr., Joseph G. Moore and Almon Pepper. With an Urban Workers group as well as a Rural Workers Fellowship, the church now lacks only for a fellowship of Suburban Workers. Or perhaps they don't need to unite.

JORDAN AND FOSBROKE ADDRESS CLERGY

★ Promotion and Doctrine, as well as Bishop Nash's report on Lambeth were the main topics at the annual clergy conference of the Diocese of Massachusetts. At an afternoon session Robert D. Jordan of the National Council explained the plan for the series of national broadcasts beginning October 1st. The final session was devoted to "The Doctrine of God in the Old Testament" under the leadership of the Very Rev. Hughell E. Fosbroke, dean emeritus of the General Theological Seminary.

Brinkley Snowden, an agricultural missionary to India for some time, is now in the United States to study medicine. He is much in demand by Church groups as a speaker on the work of the Church in the diocese of Dornakal.

PARISH SENDS OUT FIVE WORKERS

★ Trinity parish, San Jose, California, has sent during the last few years five women into the work of the Church. Olive Meecham, first sent to Cape Mount School in Liberia, is now working in Oregon and San Joaquin Valley. Wanda Porter went to Buffalo, N. Y., as secretary to the Dean of the Cathedral. In interdenomination work, Frances Tuttle assisted in Student Christan work at San Jose College. Alicelee Caulfield is secretary for the Provincial College Commission (Southern area). And Donaldine Bridges is at present secretary for the Cathedral parish of St. Michael's, Boise, Idaho.

ENROLLMENT LARGEST IN HISTORY

★ The Church Divinity School of the Pacific opened its Fall session with the highest number of students in its history, according to Dean Henry Shires. Some students are forced to live off-campus, the school's dormitories being too small. Additions to the staff are Mr. George Daunton, from England, tutor in Greek, and Ann Elizabeth Shields, assistant librarian.

CHICAGO CHURCH TO BE CONSECRATED

★ The Church of the Atonement, Chicago, which completed payment last June of the final $32,000 of its original $75,000 debt, will be consecrated October 3rd.

PENNSYLVANIA DIOCESE TO HEAR HEUSS

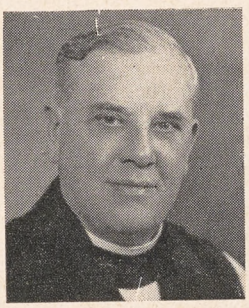
★ "Our Church Schools Today —Tomorrow" will be the subject of the National Council's Christian Education Director, the Rev. John Heuss, as he addresses the 78th Annual Church School Institute of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, meeting October 4. The Institute precedes the opening of six weekly sessions of the Diocesan School of Christian Education, held October 12th - November 16th. The school's roster not only includes courses on Church doctrine, teacher-training, the Bible and the Liturgy, but also reports on the Lambeth and Amsterdam Conferences. On the Lambeth Conference Bishops Hart and Ludlow will be heard, as well as the Rev. Louis A. Haselmayer. The Rev. Erwin E. Aubrey, President of Crozier Theological Seminary, will speak on Amsterdam.

PRESIDING BISHOP HONORED

★ "For worldwide service to the Bible Cause and with deep appreciation" Presiding Bishop Sherrill learned upon his return from Europe that he had been elected an Honorary Life Member of the American Bible Society. The certificate of election recalls that Bishop Sherrill was sometime vice-president of the Massachusetts Bible Society and refers to him as "a friend of the cause of effective circulation of the Scriptures."

FINDS EPISCOPAL CHURCH MORE DEMOCRATIC

★ At least one parson says so. Said the Rev. Frederick W. Kates, of Oswego, N. Y., "the Episcopal Church is becoming progressively more democratic, that it is becoming more and more American and that it is rapidly getting over its fear and reluctance of fraternizing with other churches." He added that its leadership, alertness, and its passion to do the Church's job in this generation are stirring it out of complacent lethargy and that it is on the march. Which no doubt sounds good to those who can figure out where the Episcopal church is marching. But it must be reported, Mr. Kates began with a very big "if." "If," he said, "we can link up our lot with the fortunes of all mankind and make their interests our own . . ."



LAYMEN GIVE DINNER FOR BISHOP BLOY

★ Episcopal Laymen of Los Angeles sponsored a dinner on September 15 to welcome home their bishop, the Rt. Rev. F. Eric Bloy, from the Lambeth Conference. A reception was held prior to the dinner which was attended by approximately 400 clergy and laymen from the diocese. The Los Angeles Diocese runs from Santa Maria and Santa Paula in the North, to the Mexican Border and across the state of California.

MARK DAWBER HITS MILITARISM

★ "People who claim military training offers a chance to build character are either propagandists for military or political interests, or are just ignorant of the facts." As one of four church leaders conducting classes at the annual Institute of World Missions, Dr. Mark A. Dawber, secretary of the Home Missions Council of North America, said that immorality, demoralization, and social degeneracy always have been the consequences of militarism and military activity. In another speech at the Institute, Dawber said the pressure of underfed, over-crowded populations is one of the major causes of war. That same pressure is also one of the major causes of the depletion of natural resources. Hungry and ignorant peoples destroy their own lands.

Dean John W. Suter of Washington Cathedral conducts service as first stone is placed in the Patriots Transept; Bishop Wallace leads in a series of conferences with clergy and key laymen in preparation for a vigorous year in New Jersey; Bishop Eric Bloy is honored by diocese of Los Angeles on his return from the Lambeth Conference.

HOW TO ADDRESS THE CLERGY

★ The innocent, untold suffering of thousands of clergymen subjected daily to the improper title, "Reverend," was recently decried in his diocesan paper by Bishop Stephen F. Bayne. "Reverend" as title is wrong. "It is sinful. It is against Emily Post. It is ungrammatical. It is an adjective always prefixed by 'the', and never used with the last name alone."

NEW YORK STUDIES CARE OF AGED

★ Under professional guidance a study is being planned in the Diocese of New York for a more competent ministry to the aged. Under the direction of the Rev. Leland B. Henry, head of the Diocesan Commission on Social Relations, needs of aged parishioners will be studied as well as new techniques to meet those needs. He looks forward to the formation of an Episcopal Service to the Aged, with counselling and psychiatric service, a foster home division, a cooperative apartment with housekeeping and nursing service, and one or more institutions in the upper end of the Diocese.

ECUMENICAL NEWS

OVERSEAS RELIEF GOODS STILL NEEDED

Clothing, food and soap are still urgently needed for the war-devastated peoples in Asia and Europe, according to Benjamin G. Bushong, director of material aid for the Church World Service center at New Windsor, Md. Clothing most needed is for men and boys—heavy clothing which can be worn for outside work; next, clothing for women and girls; and followed by blankets, sheets, shoes, yard goods, plain and colored feed sacks, sewing kits. Food stuffs needed: canned meat, fats, dried fruit, powdered and canned milk, flour, rice, sugar.

AFTER-SCHOOL PROGRAM IN ST. LOUIS

Religious education for public school students will be conducted in St. Louis after school hours, 3:35 until 4:35, at church centers. This is in accordance with a court decision here last spring banning released-time education. The religious program is conducted by an inter-faith committee, and last year some 22,000 children were enrolled. (RNS)

CANDIDATES' OPINIONS OF VATICAN ENVOY

Dewey, Truman and Wallace have given their official pre-election views on the appointment of Myron C. Taylor as diplomatic representative to the Vatican, in response to a query by Associated Church Press. Truman's secretary, Charles G. Ross, said that Taylor's mission "would be terminated when peace is made," and that this would "remain the President's policy, and will be strictly adhered to so long as he is in office." Gov. Dewey's reply stated "there are many questions of administrative policy which an incoming President cannot and should not decide until after he takes office." Henry Wallace said he opposed the appointment of a personal ambassador to the Vatican. "It seems to me," he said, "that a country like the United States, which has taken a very special stand with regard to the separation of the church and state, should hardly give this kind of recognition to one church without giving similar recognition to all churches." (RNS)

MOVIE ON WORLD COUNCIL AVAILABLE

A 20-minute sound movie showing the activities of the First Assembly of the World Council of Churches will be available for distribution to American churches in October. The 16mm motion picture includes the opening service of the Assembly, the principal speeches, summaries of Assembly actions and the closing service. It was made by Religious Films Limited, a subsidiary of J. Arthur Rank, British producer. (RNS)

CITY MANAGER CHIDES CHARITY GAMES

Gambling in the name of charity was called to a halt by Miami's city manager, O. P. Hart. Hart and the city's Police Chief warned that racket elements were infiltrating the bingo and slot machine games, and even though the games were conducted by reputable groups, they tended to create the gambling instinct among young and old. Hart suggested the staging of entertainment in place of gambling and offered the use of the city's football stadium and other municipal centers. (RNS)

VILLAGE BANS CHURCH BUILDING

Refusal to issue a building permit for an Evangelical United Brethren Church has brought a storm of protest over the heads of the village council of Robbinsdale, Minneapolis suburb. Minnesota state Protestant leaders took the action "as a dangerous precedent which, if allowed to stand, might place the missionary activities of the Christian Church under political control. If Robbinsdale can ban an Evangelical United Brethren church today, why can't some other community ban a Roman Catholic church or a synagogue tomorrow?" The matter will be brought before the courts. (RNS)

MINNEAPOLIS SHOWS INCREASE

★ Church membership in relation to the population of Minneapolis has increased 18 per cent over what it was 22 years ago.

A recent survey revealed that 303,191 persons are members of some church body. This figure represents more than 53.5 per cent of the area's residents. A 1925 canvass, made for the Minneapolis Church Federation by two New York church sociologists, placed church membership at 188,538 or 35 per cent of the area's population.

Lutheran churches are most numerous. The 11 divisions of Lutheranism have 109 churches with 91,801 members. In second place is the Roman Catholic Church, with 52 churches and 104,360 members. There are 40 Methodist, 32 Presbyterian, 31 Baptists, 21 Congregational churches, and nine Jewish congregations.

HORSE MEAT USED FOR RELIEF

Idle horses and mules into food is a campaign project of the Christian Rural Overseas Program (CROP), sponsored by Church World Service, Lutheran World Relief, and the Catholic Rural Life Conference. Horse meat has high food value and its use is accepted in Europe. Processing will be done in the U. S. under strict government inspection. Only the best grade animals will be used.

NEWS OF OTHER CHURCHES

SPAIN PROTESTANTS PERSECUTED

John Sunderland Bonnell, noted Presbyterian of New York, declared that "the saddest spot in Europe with respect to religious freedom is Spain." He made the remark when he arrived in London following a tour of ten European countries. He said that in Spain, where there is a tiny minority of about 30,000 Protestants in a population of some 25,000,000, he talked with a score of Protestant clergymen, and in a single Sunday attended services at six Protestant churches and visited churches both in Madrid and outside the capital.

Bonnell said that he had obtained photographs of destruction wrought in two churches by groups of Catholic Action youth and copies of literature left by the attackers, warning the Protestants to close their churches and Protestant ministers to leave Spain. These pamphlets, Dr. Bonnell said, quoted the pastoral letters of two Archbishops in which Protestant ministers were branded as "fomenters of atheism, and disloyal to Spain." Protestant clergymen told him, he said, that the persecution of Protestants was inspired by the Roman Catholic Church and that the government itself is somewhat friendlier to the Protestants.

Two government policemen were posted at every Protestant church he visited during the services, Bonnell reported. The policemen were ostensibly there to protect the worshippers, he said, but their presence marked the churches and intimidated some Protestants.

The New York clergyman also reported that Protestants have been obliged to close their schools and to take down the nameplates from their churches. They often were forbidden to hold public funeral services, except as a "dumb show" under police supervision, and were barred from printing new hymn books, although some had been published secretly.

On July 25, he reported, 11 Protestants who, meeting for prayers and Bible study in a Catholic home in Medina del Campo, were arrested and fined a total of 13,000 pesetas on a charge of holding a clandestine meeting.

The Spanish Protestant ministers, he said, thought that the only hope of easing persecution was for "liberal-minded Roman Catholics and Protestants outside the country to bring pressure on the government."

METHODIST BROTHERHOOD OF ST. LUKE

Methodist ministers have their Brotherhood of St. Luke which is modeled on the Holy Club of Wesley's day. There are seven "rules of life and service" — (1) to magnify the place of the sacraments in worship; (2) to discourage the use of home-made and sometimes over-dressed orders of worship and to encourage the use of time-honored forms; (3) to make church membership meaningful; (4) to stress the pastoral office of the minister; (5) to encourage a systematic prayer life among the clergy; (6) to encourage the use of distinctive garb in the worship service and on the street; (7) to be intensely loyal to the Methodist Church with an outreach to all other Protestant denominations.

REMEMBER MAN'S STOMACH

The Roman Catholic Archbishop of San Antonio told the national convention of Catholic Women, meeting at New Orleans, that "the pastor who ponders man's blessed immortality and forgets his stomach is doomed to failure. Even the Son of God needed food and clothing and a place to lay his head. Some Catholics find it easier to accept the doctrines of the Blessed Trinity and the Immaculate Conception than the doctrine of the living wage."

PUBLIC SERVANTS ARE HONORED

Municipal public servants, headed by Atlanta's Mayor Hartsfield, were honored recently at a special service held at the Druid Hills Baptist Church, presided over by the Rev. Louie D. Newton. It was attended by several hundred city employees with the school department having the largest number of representatives. The cops were there in uniform. The heads of a number of the city's departments gave addresses in addition to Pastor Newton. (RNS)

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

INTER-RACIAL HARMONY URGED IN AFRICA

Inter-racial cooperation is needed in the South African churches and educational institutions, it was agreed by 125 Christian leaders who represented a large number of denominations at a non-European Christian conference at Johannesburg. At the same time, the conference declared that non-Europeans should attempt to change the opinions of others toward them by a convincing demonstration of Christian love.

Dr. A. B. Xuma, president of the African National Congress, declared that the Church had lost much support because it did not have the "courage of its convictions and had compromised with power." He said that non-Europeans in South Africa were disgruntled and frustrated because they felt they were being denied opportunities on account of their color. He urged the Church to function according to the spirit of Christ and to assume a leading role in the social and economic spheres. (RNS)

NATIVE PRIEST OFFICIATES

A native priest officiated at a wedding of two Europeans recently held in Johannesburg. It is the first time in the history of South Africa. The clergyman was Anglican William Duiker of the Koster mission. All races were represented at the reception which followed the ceremony.

BULGARIAN EXARCH RESIGNS

Exarch Stefan has resigned as Bishop of Sofia and head of the Bulgarian Orthodox Church. The churchman, 71, gave "difficult health conditions" and "important reasons of a purely Church character" as his reasons. Well-known for his outspoken pro-allied stand during the Nazi occupation of his country, Stefan got headlines last fall when he sent a pastoral to the clergy expressing approval of communism. Later he praised the constitution adopted by the new Bulgarian regime as "a vital political necessity for our people, liberated from a fascist regime, and free to choose a new form of state government." He also described Georgi Dimitrov, communist premier, as "a worthy and untiring leader of the Bulgarian people."

SCHOOLS REOPENED IN HUNGARY

Parochial schools of the Roman Church have been reopened in Hungary as state schools. Parents are being urged by Church leaders to strengthen the religious faith of children by creating the "right atmosphere" in the home and by making life "more impregnated with Christian devotion."

The Reformed Church is being allowed to retain four of its oldest boys' high schools and two high schools for girls. The Lutherans also continued to operate two high schools, and an exemption has also been granted the Jewish community to retain a high school and a technical school. However these exemptions have been accorded only to high schools, the state claiming exclusive rights over elementary and grammar schools, made up of children between the ages of 6 and 14.

COMMUNISM CONDEMNED BY CYPRUS CHURCH

Communism was condemned as "the most deadly enemy" of the Christian Church in an encyclical issued by the synod of the Church of Cyprus. The letter was read in Cyprus churches which has a membership of 320,000 Orthodox, about four-fifths of the population. The letter urged members to avoid any cooperation with communism.

SEMINAR ON CHURCH AND ISRAEL

Forty-five Protestant pastors, missionaries and students from ten countries attended a two-week seminar on "The Church and Israel" at Boldern, near Zurich, in Switzerland. New developments in an understanding between the German churches and the Jews were described by Prof. K. H. Rengstorf, from Muenster Germany. He told of the opening of an institute on Christian-Jewish relations, known as the "Delitzshianum", which had been liquidated by the Nazis. Participants in the conference urged a permanent institute with a program correlated with the Ecumenical Institute of the World Council. (RNS)

PALESTINE CHURCH PROPERTY

All Soviet citizens in Palestine are being required to register by order of the newly-opened Russian legation at Tel-Aviv. It is considered to be the first step toward taking over extensive landholdings of the Russian Orthodox Church in Palestine, formerly controlled by the Czarist government. Estimated to be worth about four million dollars, the properties include the Russian compound in Jerusalem and large monasteries on Mount Olivet and at Ain Kerem.

ITALIAN WALDENSIANS MOVE OUT

Emigration has caused an alarming decrease in the Waldensian population, it was disclosed at the annual synod held at Torre Pellice, Alpine capital of Italian Protestantism. The Waldensians are the oldest Protestant sect in the world. Pastors attending the synod said that a real estate agency had been set up in Torre Pellice "with the special assignment of selling to Roman Catholics the properties of emigrating Waldensians."

EDITORIALS

Mr. Burlingham Writes a Letter

THERE are not many men singled out by metropolitan newspapers as subjects for laudatory editorials. But this has happened a number of times to Mr. Charles C. Burlingham, the last being a few weeks ago when he celebrated his 90th birthday. That he should be so honored is not strange to those who know him for this noted churchman has spent his long life battling for justice and human betterment, and the fact that the fight was often for an unpopular cause has never prevented him from entering it.

We are therefore particularly pleased, though of course not surprised, to find Mr. Burlingham filing his protest in the form of a letter to the New York Times over the State Department's refusal of a visa to the Dean of Canterbury. This distinguished lawyer declares it to be a "flagrant and fooling violation by our government of the constitutional right of freedom of speech."

He writes: "An elderly clergyman, who holds one of the most distinguished ecclesiastical posts in the world, who loves peace and ensues it, is forbidden to enter the Land of the Free and the Home of the Brave to tell us what he saw on a recent visit to Russia and to urge us, as he has urged his own countrymen, to do all in our power to maintain good relations with the Soviet Union!

"Who is responsible for this fantastic business? Certainly not the American Consul in London. It is incredible that he would refuse a visa for a peace-loving cleric without first consulting his superiors.

"A year and a half ago the President issued an executive order directing the Attorney General to prepare and publish a list of subversive organizations. This list was to be used, although without finality, in considering suitability for federal employment. That was its sole purpose.

"The National Council of American-Soviet Friendship is on this list, and that body is one of those which invited the Dean to visit the United States and took part in arranging his lecture tour. Why the Council is listed does not appear. It received no notice and was given no opportunity to show that it is not subversive. However, it may be on some other list—the Attorney General, like Koko in The Mikado, has a list of his own, I am told. Thus the poor Dean must suffer for the sin of subversiveness on the part of some of his American friends.

"So it comes to this—the ultimate authority to exclude or admit is vested in one man, the Hon. Tom Clark, Attorney General of the United States. Does he know what is dangerous and what is safe for the American people to hear? Perhaps he consults officials of the State Department if he is ever in doubt. Where do they get the right in time of peace to tell the citizens of the most powerful nation in the world what is or is not 'in the public interest'?

"What is most shocking is the fact that there is scarcely a voice raised in protest. One important New York newspaper had a severely critical editorial on Aug. 25. That is the only one I have seen or heard of. The press, the bar, the church all are silent. In 1735 Peter Zenger, publisher of The New York Weekly Journal, was prosecuted for criminal libel by the Colonial Government of New York. The Chief Justice refused to allow his lawyers to plead his cause, holding them in contempt of court. They secretly retained Andrew Hamilton of Pennsylvania, the most eminent lawyer in the Colonies, and Hamilton faced the judges down, insisting that a jury was the sole judge of the facts. Zenger was acquitted and Hamilton established freedom of the press in New York.

"Is there no modern Hamilton to defend freedom of speech now? From Andrew Hamilton we have descended through A. Mitchell Palmer to

"QUOTES"

THE main reason for going to Church, I suppose, is because of personal need. But why go to Church for reasons of personal need? Because the preacher is there? Yes, partly. Because the sacraments may be there? Yes, partly. And what else? Why because other people are there. It is because other people are there that we seem to touch, we do touch, the hem of His garment. Christ can be everywhere — in every solitude. But nowhere is Christ more likely to be seen by you and me than where other people are—other people with the same needs and yet other needs. And this is the inexpressible truth of our faith—that the more of "otherness" there is in Christ's flock, the more all the "others" and you and I become one in Him.

Tom Clark and from Thomas Jefferson to Harry Truman. God save the State!"

We are informed that a citizens' committee is now in the process of being organized which will request the Department of State to grant the visa to the Dean of Canterbury. We hope that this silence on the part of the Church, referred to by Mr. Burlingham, will at least to some degree be corrected by the acceptance of many churchmen to membership on this committee. Also you can do your part by urging the State Department to allow the Dean to visit this country once again.

Many Thanks

WE'VE had some nice letters about the added pages, new format and features, for which we are grateful. The Christian religion, we believe, is the most exciting thing in life and should be represented by journals that are lively, enjoyable and serviceable. We are not satisfied with The Witness and we hope we never will be. We know it can be made better and we again ask your help in making it so. We want news; good pictures; help in making the departments serve you and the Church.

We hope too that you will pardon us for again asking for help in building circulation. There are people in every parish who would want the magazine if they were once made familiar with it. We do what we can to reach these people, but, like every other promotional job in the Church, we have to count mainly on the clergy for their help. There are two plans that are practical: one is for parishes to take Bundles. So we again print the form on page nine with the hope that it will be used.

The other is to ask your key people to enter a trial subscription for ten weeks. These we will enter for a ten week period for $1. And to each of these subscribers we will send free a copy of the Resolutions of the Lambeth Conference which sells for fifty cents. Merely send names and addresses, with $1 for each person, and we will send the pamphlet the day the order is received and we will start the subscription just as soon as we can cut and file the stencil.

Your help, all along the line, is solicited and we assure you will be appreciated.

Forerunners of the Faith

By Robert Hatch

Rector of St. John's, Waterbury, Connecticut

IN THE history of the far west there was a group of men who formed the vanguard of the frontier. Known as "mountain men", they were beaver trappers who struck west of the Missouri River long before the wagon trains assembled. Travelling in small bands, they ranged from the Platte to the Sacramento, explored the mountains, crossed the deserts, and opened the trails and passes which became the arteries of immigration. They were the trail blazers, the first pioneers. Others followed. Farmers, miners, missionaries and army personnel all took part in subduing the frontier. But the forerunners were the "mountain men".

In the outreach of the Church's mission there are both followers and forerunners. Every genuine Christian is a follower. He promises to follow Jesus Christ as his Lord and Saviour. But it is also true that certain Christian workers must be forerunners, going to places where our Lord is either not known or not understood and preparing men's hearts for his redemptive power. It is a ministry of preparation. It means going beyond the ordinary, well-traveled paths into areas that require both vision and resourcefulness. It opens a field of operation to which there are no boundaries.

In every field of the Church's work there is a ministry of preparation, but it is greatly intensified in certain special fields. The work of our foreign and domestic missionaries, of our hospital and prison chaplains, and of our chaplains in the armed forces is to a large extent a ministry of preparation. Some of this work, to be sure, is with convinced members of the Church. But much of it is with unchurched people or with people whose affiliation is very tenuous. It is pioneer work, out on the frontier of the Church's life where the land must be plowed before the seed can grow.

College work is in this category. The college chaplain can usually count on a nucleus of strong churchmen—young men and women who were brought up in the Church, who took an active part in parish life before going to college, and whose interest continues during the college years. But on most campuses such young people are in the minority. The work cannot stop with them; it can only begin with them.

A large part of the work must be with those who do not know the first thing about the Church, with those who cannot square their understanding of the Christian faith with what they learn at college, and with those who regard the Church as outmoded and irrelevant. To work effectively in this field a chaplain must be resourceful to a marked degree. He must avoid hackneyed answers. He must be something more than a mere official. He must be spiritually persuasive as well as intellectually alert. He must reveal the strength of his position in the quality of his life as well as in the substance of his teaching. In a word, he must be as gifted a representative as the Church can find. No work is more important in its implications for the future. No work makes a greater demand on the quality of its leadership.

THE task of the college chaplain is so varied and extensive that it has no boundaries. Sometimes he must begin by correcting wrong ideas of Christianity. Although perhaps not as numerous as a generation ago, there are still many young people who are confused about the relation of science and religion. They need to be shown that the latest discoveries of science are not incompatible with a religious understanding of the universe and that scientific knowledge can fortify and not weaken a man's faith in his creator. There are also students whose conception of Christianity is limited to a system of moral platitudes. They think of Jesus as nothing more than an ethical teacher and of present-day Christians as people who live by hackneyed phrases. They need to be shown the immensity of the Christian faith, its place in the highest realms of thought, and the fact that Christianity is not a set of rules at all but a relationship to God.

Often the college chaplain must show how some of the things which Americans cherish are undergirded by the Christian faith and how they are in danger of collapse when they are separated from the faith. Many people today are engaged in the precarious experiment of trying to keep alive the moral and social teachings of Christianity without retaining any active religious faith. They believe in the golden rule. They are anxious to preserve such Christian teachings as the value of the individual human being, the sacredness of the human soul, the right of all men to be free, the need for justice, and the desirability of world brotherhood and lasting peace. But they forget that these teachings are rooted in Christian doctrine and that they have meaning only when related to a religious understanding of man's fate. Take away the Christian faith, and the golden rule is empty. Take away the Christian conception of human destiny, and the social teachings of the New Testament lose their final meaning.

Frequently the college chaplain must counteract some of the thinking which has become widespread in our time. He meets young people who have forsaken the organized Church for what they call their "private religion". They may talk about finding God in nature, while hiking or skiing or gazing at a sunset. They are apt to think of God as an easy-going friend to whom they can turn when they feel the mood and on whom they can count in time of crisis. They are not apt to think of him as one who makes a serious claim on the quality of their lives and who requires disciplined worship if they are to deepen their understanding of him. The college chaplain must show that it is in Christ that we see God's nature, through Christ that we know the reality of God's companionship, and by means of Christ that we are enabled to see the signs of God's love in the highest mountains and the most distant stars.

Finally, the college chaplain must stand for the affirmations of the Christian faith at a time when great numbers of men have abandoned all hope for humanity and all faith in God. Today's despair has left its impact on many phases of our national life, but nowhere is it more important to combat this despair than in the places where tomorrow's leaders are being trained. At a time when one of America's foremost writers has called Ecclesiastes "the truest of all books" our college work has a significance that transcends all of its immediate objectives. It crosses the frontier of the future and makes its imprint on the shape of things to come.

Bringing Others to Church

By WILLIAM B. BARNDS

Rector of St. Matthew's, Lincoln, Nebraska

WHEN we like something very much we are apt to tell other people about it. If we see a picture show which impresses us we tell our friends about it, sometimes at great length. If we have a favorite radio program we are apt to tell our friends about it and urge them to listen to it too.

Now we ought to tell people about our church. Some of us do, and we all should. The church means much in our lives. It would be hard for us to imagine what life would be like without the church. Suppose you had never heard of Jesus; that you had never seen the symbol of the cross; that you had never heard any of the carols and hymns of the church; that you had never in your life said a prayer. We are inclined, sometimes, to take the church for granted without stopping to think about how much it really means to us.

But when we do think about the joys that are associated with our church, it makes us want to tell other people about the church. Our Lord sent people out to tell others the good news of the Christian religion. We can tell people about our religion and the church.

We send missionaries to other countries and that is fine, but there are people right in our own neighborhood who do not go to church. They do not appreciate what the church can really mean in their lives. They need the church as much as some people in distant lands. You can be a missionary, in a way by inviting them to go to church with you. Why not do that?

A Layman Views His Prayer Book

By Earl Bowen

Vestryman of St. Paul's-by-the-Lake, Chicago

LIKE the Bible, the Book of Common Prayer has grown from age to age. It was not written by a single author nor by a given group but is instead our heritage from the host of reverent souls who have preceded us. Through this medium they share with us their faith—their understanding—their experience—and their expression of that faith and understanding. Unlike the Bible however the Prayer Book is not a finished book in the sense that it will not have changes made in it from time to time. For instance, after the Revolutionary War the Prayer Book of the Church of England was no longer wholly appropriate to the Church in the United States. As a result of the independence of the States certain changes became necessary particularly in the prayers for our civil rulers. Such changes are not made lightly nor at the whim or instance of any individual or group, be they clergy or laymen. Changes must be ratified by the General Convention of the Church which is composed of the bishops, the clergy and the laity. If you have not read the preface and the ratification of your Book of Common Prayer you will find them interesting.

The Book of Common Prayer is, as its name implies, a Prayer Book common to all—it is a people's Prayer Book in which the rector leads but in no sense worships for the people. It dramatizes man's responses to God's love. These responses are magnificient in their order—their beauty—their reality. They serve to unify us in our public worship of God. As good churchmen and women we ought to learn how to use our Prayer Book—not simply to find and follow the service but to recognize ourselves as sharers in the loftiest of human acts—the worship of God. Its praise is your praise—its prayers are your prayers and its instructions are your instructions.

The Prayer Book is definitely not a style book of ceremonial. It does not teach nor prescribe the use of any particular vestments or any of the other embellishments by which reverence, love of beauty or a sense of fitness has sought to make the worship of God glorious. Such things may be classed as "pious opinions"—helpful, satisfying and inspiring to many and supported and sanctified by age long usage.

The simplicity of its service fits the Prayer Book for use in cottage, castle, church or cathedral or as the Rev. Joseph Moore described to us on the battlefield or in army camps. A remarkable feature of the Prayer Book is that every order of service teaches the essential truths of the Christian religion—the fatherhood of God—the saviourhood of Christ—the work of the Holy Spirit and the brotherhood of man in Christ.

In the twenty-three orders of service the prayers, scripture readings and ceremonial all witness plainly to the plan of redemption. When God became man in the person of his son Jesus Christ lost humanity was found. When Christ died upon the cross humanity was brought to justice. When he arose from the dead dying humanity was given back the eternal life it had forfeited. When he ascended into heaven degraded humanity was restored to its divine destiny. These are the essential truths of the Christian religion—the plan of redemption—which is so beautifully expressed in each of the orders of service.

There is perhaps some slight danger that we may at times become so absorbed in the beauty of the service that we lose sight of these essential truths. In that connection I am reminded of an incident that is supposed to have happened on the Pennsylvania railroad. When one of their deluxe trains stopped at a station for a few minutes a traveller got off for a bit of exercise. As he strolled on the platform he noticed an elderly man tap each car wheel with a small hammer. He asked the old man why he did that. The old fellow replied "Man and boy I've been doing this for forty years and, do you know, I've often wondered." Let us not be like that old man—let us not just go through the motions and repeat the responses parrotlike but let us participate in each service with our whole heart and mind.

Our Prayer Book is not only an outline for our public worship of God but in the Psalms and lessons for the Christian year it provides a splendid outline for our daily and private devotions. If faithfully followed they afford us the strength and courage that are so essential in these troublous times. In the days of a simpler mode of life the Church was the social, cultural and spiritual center of the community. The people could and did come to the Church for daily morning and evening prayer. Today with the many demands upon our time most of us would find that custom very difficult. In a material sense perhaps we have come a long way since those early days when the spiritual welfare of the community and of their family was the major concern of our forefathers but it is debatable as to whether our spiritual progress has kept pace. And yet the human need for divine guidance and the sustaining power of prayer was never greater.

The terrific tensions created by two world wars, the ten year depression and the dread of a possible depression or war to come are too great for us to cope with unaided. No thinking person who has lived through this period and who intelligently observes the trend of world affairs can fail to feel the need for divine help and guidance both for himself and for the world.

Not long ago I had the pleasure of reading a book entitled "On Being A Real Person" by Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick. Dr. Fosdick in addition to being a clergyman whose influence is nationwide is also noted for his success in personal counselling. He has written a number of books each one dealing with a facet of the true Christian mode of life interpreted in terms of contemporary living. This particular book was written after twenty years experience in personal counselling during which period he had the opportunity of observing at first hand the maladjustments and neuroses which are largely the result of our present so called civilization. Dr. Fosdick quotes an unnamed modern Quaker: "Strained by the very mad pace of our daily burdens we are further strained by an inward uneasiness, because we have hints that there is a way of life that is vastly richer and deeper than all this hurried existence—a life of unhurried serenity, peace and power. If only we could slip over into that center! If only we could find the silence which is the source of sound! We have seen and known some people who seem to have found this deep center of living—where the fretful calls of life are integrated—where 'no' as well as 'yes' can be said with confidence. We've seen such lives—integrated—unworried by the tangles of decisions—unhurried—cheery—fresh—positive. These are not people of dallying idleness nor of obviously mooning meditation—they are busy carrying their full load as well as we, but without any chafing of the shoulders with the burden—with quiet joy and springing step. Surrounding the trifles of their daily life is an aura of infinite peace and power and joy. We are so strained and tense with our burdened lives—they are so poised and at peace."

HOW does it happen that people such as these enjoy such peace of mind? Peace of mind is fundamentally a matter of power. Plenty of people who do not need to worry about finances do worry about them. Plenty of people with average health are hypochondriacs, worrying over imaginary illnesses. Such people constantly suffer from a feeling of skating over thin ice and expecting to go through. The real reason is within themselves. They have no interior resources of power —no margin or reserve around their daily needs —no sense of available backing that sends them into each day's tasks and difficulties sure that what they ought to do they can do and that what they must endure they can endure. They have never learned the day-by-day secret of interior reinforcement concerning which Dr. Alexis Carrel said: "When we pray we link ourselves with the inexhaustible motive power that spins the universe. We ask that a part of this power be apportioned to our needs. Even in asking our human deficiences are filled and we arise strengthened and repaired." As St. Paul said "In him who strengthens me I am ready for anything."

To again quote Dr. Carrel, "As a physician, I have seen men after all other therapy had failed lifted out of disease and melancholy by the serene effort of prayer. It is the only power in the world that seems to overcome the so-called laws of nature. The occasions on which prayer has dramatically done this have been termed 'miracles' but a constant, quieter miracle takes place hourly in the hearts of men and women who have discovered that prayer supplies them with a steady flow of sustaining power in their daily lives."

And that, in the judgment of brilliant men who have had ample opportunity to observe, is the secret of peace of mind which is so sadly lacking in the world today. The disciples said to Jesus "Lord teach us to pray." His reply was the Lord's Prayer. Every prayer in our Prayer Book is modeled on the Lord's Prayer but varied according to individual needs. In any prayer you may take you will find every petition growing out of some phrase of the Lord's Prayer. Thus following the perfect model the Book's prayers teach us how and what to pray for according to the will of our Lord and the Prayer Book becomes a perfect manual for our private devotions.

It only remains for us to dedicate a very small portion of our day to prayer—and who will deny that the rewards are great? Peace of mind—the very phrase itself conjures up a vision of a goal well worth striving for. There is no peace—no serenity—except in the grace of our Lord.

Sometimes in the arrogance of their seeming material success men lose sight of that fact and incline to the belief that their will alone is sufficient to supply the strength that they need. We have all seen many examples of the fallacy of that belief. It is not a question of performing our duty in our daily private devotions—it is a question of our not being able to afford not to do so. We all need that inward feeling that can only come as a result of knowing that we are the children of God and that if we will do our part and rely upon him we will be supplied with the power to meet our daily problems.

Back-Road Religion

By PHILIP H. STEINMETZ

WE all know and love back road routes by which we avoid the pressure of heavy traffic and often gain the beauty of fine views or shady woods. They are quiet and restful, but they cannot take the place of the main highways for the important traffic of buses and trucks.

There are back roads in our lives where we retreat for rest and recreation before returning to our main work. We treasure them.

For some of us religion belongs on these back roads. It is an enrichment of life rather than the foundation of it. We think of God and make an effort to catch and reflect his love when we are not busy doing something else. But we are startled when we hear of someone like Stephen making a real stand on religious conviction. Why be a martyr?

Martyrs are main-road Christians. For them nothing matters so much as being true to the will of God. They have found the great joy of being utterly without fear even in the face of death. They are really alive. They show us religion no longer only on the back roads but also in the thick of the heavy traffic of life. Thank God for martyrs and be ready and willing to be one, unless you wish to be a back-road Christian.

Watch Out for Yammer

By GEORGE I. HILLER
Rector of Trinity, Miami

A YAMMER (says Webster) "is one who querulously complains; to peevishly cry aloud; whine." A yammer in the Church or any of its organizations has about the same effect as a termite in a building. Perhaps not so quietly but with the equal and regular persistence of that animal. Your yammer gnaws away at the very vital support and frame work of your organization.

"We have done that before and it did not work," says the yammer. "It will cost too much money, our people can't afford it" - "Let us quit" - "Why should we do that, no body else does it" - "We do all the work and they take all the credit" - "I know they cannot come" - "Our people just won't be sociable" - "No body supports me" - "It is always an appeal for money" - "It's too hot" - "It's too cold" - "I am not well and cannot do that," etc. We could go on for another page.

The only thing the yammer says with which I agree entirely, is "I can't accept office." When you elect a yammer to office you have a major repair job, or your building will fall down.

I do not know the cure but I do know we must be careful. We need the spirit of faith, hope and militant effort. We need to be thoughtful in our efforts and to see to it, that pessimistic individuals, and those whose feelings are continually ruffled, do not by the power of their yamming, kill the enthusiasm of others. Energy, inconvenience and some disappointment, must go into anything we would accomplish, don't let the yammer tell you otherwise.

THE NEW BOOKS

Excellent Good *Fair

* * Church, Law and Society, by Gustaf Aulen. Charles Scribners. $2.00.

The Bishop of Strangas, Sweden, sends a work in the spirit of Visser t'Hoof's "The Kingship of Christ." The two introductions which begin respectively, with the words, "Unquestionably" and "There can be no doubt" show a confidence in answering "The question about . . . the devastation of the European Church which is the presupposition of all such books. The Bishops of the Lutheran and state Churches are best able to rise in these times to a positive doctrine of reconstruction at a time when individualistic Protestantism has been struck so destructive a blow.

Justice, which is sought by all who must find some meaning to life in a period in which such meaning is not evident, must be based upon "the law of God as a dynamic, creative force in all of history." Bishop Aulen speaks not of a law of justice which can be assumed from a recognition of the dignity of man, nor which can be arrived at by some sort of value judgment. It is a law which makes history real, as a drama where God's agape fights against the evil forces opposed to the will of God. Men who have tasted the bitter reality of history in the making can warn the Church (in words that need to be heard especially in America) against two temptations: "The first is a temptation to passivity and indifference, the second to false presentations and to embracing Utopian and illusionary ideals."

The growth of the emphasis on the Church idea in Europe is turned "as well against an isolating and self-sufficient individualism as against an enslaving collectivism." The Church as the divine society is the only place in which the value of personality can be kept, while the universality of God's law for society is recognized. The Church is the means by which Christians can make the move from concentration on distant supernaturalism, to an appreciation for the law of God in immediate supernationalism.

* * Hollywood on Trial by Gordon Kahn. Boni & Gaer. $2.

The story of Mr. J. Parnell Thomas' expose of Hollywood which resulted in the citation of the men responsible for such pictures as Crossfire, Gentleman's Agreement, None Shall Escape, Kitty Foyle, Our Vines Have Tender Grapes, etc. A story of confusion, character assassination and Congressional posturing. If this kind of shenanigans is not unconstitutional it very well should be, since it represents a stiletto-stab at democracy. Christians should read it because it has a direct reference to our sacred subject, "freedom of the pulpit."

THE PRESS

Church News (Anglican, Australia): —The job of an editor is never easy. It is very hard to be High, Low and Broad at one and the same time. If the editor puts in much teaching, he is reminded that 'we don't want sermons'; if he prints articles of general interest, he is told that his tone is too secular. If he includes long accounts of parish strawberry fetes and debutante balls—with full lists of names — the general reader is bored; if he leaves them out, parish subscriptions drop off. If he fails to publish all the angry letters he receives, he is accused of stifling public opinion; if he does publish some of them he is accused of indiscretion by those who have never seen the letters he didn't print. All the budding poetesses of the diocese send him their verses, sometimes with a covering letter from the rector. And all the time he knows that the Episcopal axe may fall and another editor will have joined his too outspoken predecessors in oblivion.

America (R. C.): (Commenting on the report of The Church and the Disorder of Society at the World Council Assembly) — While the authors probably had no such intention it is possible to interpret their text as equally condemnatory, from a Christian viewpoint, of both Communism and Capitalism. Most Catholics, while heartily concurring with Papal strictures on capitalism, would stress Communism as by far the greater evil. The Church cannot resolve the debate between those who feel that the primary solution is to socialize the means of production and those who fear that such a course will merely lead to new and inordinate combinations of political and economic power. Catholic social thinkers feel that the Church has already resolved this debate.

Advance (P. E., Chicago)—Amid all the seriousness of the Lambeth Conference there were the usual amusing incidents, which sometimes broke the tension. There was the bishop, who as guest at a London house, went up to bed to find his chimere laid out for him to sleep in. The maid who unpacked, not finding pajamas, thought it was a night-dress. And there was another Bishop, who having no hair at all on the top of his head, just a smattering around the edges, like the surrey with the fringe on top, went to a London barber for a hair trim. When asked if he should remove his coat the barber eyeing his shining pate replied: "No, milord and you may leave your hat on too."

Anglican Outlook (C. of E., Canada) —Christians are often puzzled as to how they can love their neighbors as themselves in any real way. The practical solution of this problem is the primary concern of the Christian, not for his own welfare, but for the welfare of all people. The Christian must fight for an order of society in which his neighbor has the opportunity of getting a standard of living which he would consider satisfactory for himself. Money rights must no longer dominate human rights. We must fight for an order of society wherein a man's ability to outdo his neighbor no longer decides the education of his children, the extent of his medical care, whether he will live in a shack or a mansion.

THE RESOLUTIONS
OF THE 1948 LAMBETH CONFERENCE

The Encyclical Letter of the Lambeth Conference has been sent by the Presiding Bishop to all of the clergy, to be read in churches October 10th. Of equal, or greater interest and importance are the Resolutions which were passed by the entire Conference. There are 118 Resolutions, dealing with (1) Christian Doctrine of Man; (2) Church in the Modern World; (3) The Unity of the Church; (4) The Anglican Communion; (5) The Church's Discipline in Marriage; (6) Baptism and Confirmation; (7) Ordination of Women; (8) Administration of Holy Communion (Intinction).

The SECRET of INWARD PEACE

By A. HERBERT GRAY

This fine book deals with the immediate and relevant problems which face men and women who are trying to stand the strain of modern life and to deal efficiently with its challenge without becoming hard or nervous or irritable. There is a tremendous need for such people today, believes Dr. Gray. His book is filled with chapters touching the genuine concerns which innumerable people are feeling today; the adjustment of their inner lives, the meaning religion can have for their problems, individual, social or international.

The author writes with a style extraordinary in its simplicity, and consequently of great beauty. The reader feels that he is in touch with a rare and vital spirit who has actually found the inward peace of which he writes. Dr. Gray writes from years of experience with people — parishoners, chance acquaintances, and young people's groups in universities and colleges. $2.50

Friday Evening---October 8 *
Tune in the second program in

THE PLAY: "THE CORN IS GREEN" by Emlyn Williams

THE STARS: Jane Cowl with Richard Waring and a large cast

THE TIME: 8 pm [EST] 7 pm [CST] 8 pm [MST] 7 pm [PST]

THE NETWORK: Over 500 Stations of the Mutual Broadcasting System

AS a loyal Church member it is important that you hear each radio program in the series "Great Scenes from Great Plays." It is doubly important that you invite non-church members to hear each program. Many are arranging listening-in parties in their homes. Others are going through their personal address books and systematically telephoning friends to be sure to tune-in the Episcopalian programs broadcast every Friday evening.

On Friday evening, October 8, the beloved American star of "Smilin' Through" and "Lilac Time"—Miss Jane Cowl—will play the difficult role of Miss Moffatt in Emlyn Williams famous drama "The Corn Is Green." A good woman's courageous thought conquers stubbornness and bigotry, overcoming all obstables so that she is enabled to bring the light of learning to a little coal mining town in North Wales.

The play was selected to dramatize the importance of teachers and teaching, and how, going a step further, teaching the simple truths of Christianity is one of the most important functions of the Church.

IMPORTANT NOTE: There are still some Parishes not covered by the 500 stations of the Mutual Broadcasting System's coast-to-coast network. Most of these Parishes are being specially covered through local stations not affiliated with the Mutual System. In some cases this may mean that "Great Scenes From Great Plays" program will be heard on Thursday or Saturday or at a different time than that shown above. All Clergymen will receive a complete list of stations and times of broadcast well in advance.

GOOD IDEA

LEND LEASE: A midwest parish has two large gas candlesticks; eight feet high and they burn gas. They will be glad to give them to any church that can use them. — St. Stephen's, Wyandotte, Mich., needs 12 or 15 second-hand pews. The church has made extensive repairs, including a new addition to the seating capacity that requires more pews. — A number of used lectern Bibles are available but to date no mission or parish has asked for one. — Copies of the old Hymnal, with music, in fair condition, are also offered to a church that will pay the express.

THE PARISH PENCE PLAN was started a year ago at St. Matthew's, Seat Pleasant, diocese of Washington, with the young people of the parish placed in charge by the vestry. It has the two-fold purpose of re-establishing grace before meals and the giving of thanks after meals in the homes of parishoners; also the raising of added income for the church in a painless way. "Three times each day these prayers I say; three times each day my pence I pay." The committee recently reported $331.80 received so far from this graceful way of giving thanks for the county of our tables.

An organization for boys called Trail Blazers has been started in Grand Rapids, Michigan. Canon Pink, in charge, says that "for years I have wanted to link the interest which all small boys have in cowboys and Indians and western lore generally with the work of our western Episcopal missionaries." The program offers a western program, with weekly meetings, and donations for the work of our Church in the west.

GET-TOGETHER: A large eastern city parish is looking for an assistant minister. — A young evangelical clergyman, studying in New York, would welcome opportunities to do supply work. — A midwestern city parish seeks a rector; a man who will build the congregation to the size the vestry thinks is possible. The Sunday School also needs to be built up. There are 100 active pledges. The pay is $3,000 and a five room apartment with all utilities. — A small suburban parish in the east seeks a rector; Prayer Book churchman; young man, preferably unmarried, who wants to grow with a church which has real possibilities. Salary to start, $3,000 and living quarters, with increases as growth justifies it. — A clergyman, evangelical, who has served ably as an assistant, seeks a parish of his own, preferably in the east. In the early fifties and in sound health. Minimum, $3,500 and house.

HELP WANTED: We are anxious to receive plans that have worked successfully in parishes and dioceses so that we may pass them on to others. Also believing that there is a real need in the Church for a bureau that can help in bringing clergymen seeking positions and parishes seeking rectors, we propose to do what we can in that capacity. We merely ask, please, that everything be done by correspondence. The staff of The Witness is extremely limited and we simply haven't the time to give interviews..

First Things First

The main function of the Seminaries is effective Theological Education of Candidates for Holy Orders. The Church needs Clergy—both in quality and quantity.

But each Seminary is also a center of intellectual growth and stimulation for the Church in its environs and a fountain source for future Christian scholarship. Honest research and straight, hard thinking are required if the Church is to command the attention of future generations.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO OUR SEMINARIES MEAN SOUND INVESTMENT IN THE PROGRESS OF THE GOSPEL.

BACKFIRE

REV. CHARLES D. KEAN

Pres. Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship

"Those of us who reject the doctrine of the Church and the ministry set forth in 'The Apostolic Ministry' reject it, not on grounds of minute difference on points of archaeological interpretation, but because we cannot recognize as Christian the doctrine of God, which seems to underline this imposing theological edifice." The above statement was written by Bishop Stephen Neill, assistant to the Archbishop of Canterbury, in the little book he edited, "The Ministry of the Church."

Because the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship shares Bishop Neill's convictions, our reaction to the recent recommendation by the retired Bishop of New York that everyone study "The Apostolic Ministry", edited by Dr. Kirk, the Bishop of Oxford, is to point behind these alleged issues of scholarship to the area of religious convictions. In a recent letter, Bishop Manning suggested that everyone read "The Apostolic Ministry" and Dr. Cirlot's "The Apostolic Succession—Is it True," as a means of understanding the ecumenical issue. We believe these volumes confuse the issue, not just because of differences in theory about the early Church but because they misunderstand the issue of faith. It so happens that the authors of the books concerned and Bishop Manning were in general agreement in this area before the books were written. One cannot separate between presuppositions and findings.

In order that Episcopalian readers may realize that there is a wide variety of literature available today on this subject of the Church and the ministry, and that not all scholarship comes out at the same place, no matter how able and conscientious it may be, the EEF would counter Bishop Manning's recommendation by suggesting three other books, all of them written by competent authorities: "The Ministry of the Church," edited by Bishop Neill, and including an article by the Rev. Frederick W. Dillistone of the Episcopal Theological School; "The Reunion of the Church," by the Rt. Rev. Lesslie Newbiggin, Bishop of Madura, the United Church of South India; and "The Coming Great Church," by Canon Theodore O. Wedel. The presuppositions of these volumes on the nature of the encounter of God and man are thoroughly evangelical, and in the Anglican tradition. They are also works of great and recognized scholarship.

The Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship believes these three books to state pretty well what we believe to be the real tradition of our Anglican Communion in the area of Church and ministry with particular reference to our relationships with other churches.

WILLIAM R. HUNTINGTON

Formerly of THE WITNESS editorial board and now commissioner of the American Friends Service Committee in Europe

From the perspective of Europe the refusal of an American visitor's visa to Dean Hewlett Johnson of Canterbury on the apparent grounds that he and the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, who invited him for a lecture tour, are in fact interested in making Americans more friendly to the U. S. S. R. appears as one of the stupidest blunders our government has yet made. It appears as a flagrant denial of our profession of belief in freedom of speech. It appears as a deplorable use of the visa as a means of restricting freedom of ideas as well as personal freedom — a use Americans find shocking when employed by countries over here.

It appears as bitter disillusionment to those who want to believe in America's faith in democracy, and most unfortunately, as confirmation to those already cynical about our practice of freedom. As propaganda it will do incalculable harm to the reputation of the United States and to its relations with other countries.

MISS EDITH M. TUTTLE

Churchwoman of Paterson, N. J.

Congratulations, Mr. Spofford, on Talking It Over for Sept. 2. Dean Johnson travels to create understanding, of which we are sadly in need. For nothing less would this fine old gentleman leave the comfort of Canterbury.

MISS RUTH BISHOP

Churchwoman of Brooklyn

From your report in the Sept. 2 number I cannot agree with Bishop Barton that the Lambeth Report is "bold". Bold in what? It seems to me that our Anglican bishops straddled every question to come before them—and this at a time, certainly, when forthright speaking is called for.

Diocese of Michigan Opens A Unique Community

Clergymen and Families Launch Parishfield Similar to European Centers

By FRANCIS O. AYRES, Jr.

Brighton, Mich.—Parishfield, recently established here, is a place at the service of people who are concerned with the Christian task in the world today. It has been founded in a deep conviction, shared by all those who have had a part in its founding, that the Church is, at present "unequal to her task" and that if men of God are to "rise up and make her great" something more than goodwill is needed—the power of the Holy Spirit working through new men and new channels. In general then the purpose of Parishfield is to provide a center as one new channel through which the Holy Spirit may work toward the redemption of men and women, our society, our culture. More specifically its purpose is threefold—each aspect, of course, dependent on the other two and each designed to meet a deep-felt need in the Church.

First, the purpose of Parishfield is to increase the manpower of the Church—that is on the one hand to increase the number of men who offer their lives to God that he may work through them and, on the other, to help develop the abilities and deepen the consecration of men who are already working in the Church. Laymen are, today, constantly urged to become more active in the Church. From the Presiding Bishop's committee on laymen's work down through the dioceses to the programs of specific parishes, laymen are told they ought to take a larger part in the life of the Church. The point is well taken, for laymen will become increasingly active—or the Church will perish. Yet the Church has not, by and large, given laymen an adequate opportunity to deepen their faith and to prepare themselves for the work they are urged to do. A job that is worth doing demands serious preparation equal to its demands. Parishfield is designed to provide laymen (this term is meant always to include laywomen) with an opportunity to go deeper into the knowledge and love of God and to help prepare them for specific jobs in their own parishes such as parish-callers, teachers, and Christian witnesses and prophets within their own vocations.

Second, the purpose of Parishfield is to serve as a center through which various individuals and groups may unite to work on the meaning and strategy of the the Christian gospel in the modern world. Or, to put it another way, the purpose of Parishfield is to help sharpen and strengthen the cutting edge of the Church and to aid in developing her knowledge and skill so that every blow will strike directly against some manifestation of evil. Dissatisfaction with the Church as it is only abets the evil around us and within us unless its leads to constructive thinking and action. How is the Church to reach those who remain indifferent to the Christian message? How is the parish life to be revitalized so that the very nature of that life makes it impossible for men and women to continue to ignore it? How is a man along with other Christians in his particular vocation to give a living witness to Christ? How can the Christian fellowship redeem the culture in which we live? These and many other questions must be answered before laymen or clergymen can perform adequately their Christian task. Parishfield is a place to which various groups of laymen and clergymen may come to discuss, correlate and develop their ideas along some such lines and from which the permanent staff may go to aid these groups in their work.

Third—and most important—the purpose of Parishfield is to provide the means whereby men can share a life of worship, work, study, and recreation thus experiencing and at the same time giving witness to the reality and true foundation of the Christian fellowship. The best witness to Christ is a group of Christians whose fellowship one with another is grounded in a common faith and a common task. Indeed there can be no true witness to Christ apart from such fellowship, nor can there be, nor has there been, any great advance in Christianity apart from one. The main reason why the Church is failing to win converts today in any appreciable numbers is because of the failure to establish truly Christian fellowships. Those who come to Parishfield will already share a common faith and a common will to serve

God. By sharing in a life of worship, work, study, and recreation, they may enter into a real Christian community. Therefore when they return to their own parishes it is hoped that they will have experienced and be ready to help create a true Christian fellowship wherever it does not exist and to deepen and strengthen it wherever it is found.

Before the program can be fully developed a good deal of work needs to be done on the place and much equipment must be obtained. There are at present a large house, a small one and five good-sized farm buildings, all of them completely unequipped. Immediate needs consist of beds and bedding, farm tools, kitchen equipment and housing for the permanent members of the community. In time it is hoped that a large dormitory, accommodation for married couples, a library, a chapel and other possibilities may be developed. In the interim, the program will be started in so far as is possible.

Although the program at Parishfield will differ somewhat with each group that meets there the general outline will remain the same and will consist of worship, study, and recreation. The worship will be of such a type that it can be continued in home and parish. There will be morning and evening prayers with hymn and psalm singing. These will be along the lines of informal family services rather than the more formal kind spelled with capital letters. Holy Communion will be celebrated on Sunday mornings and occasionally on other days with some special intention. There will be a ten-minute period of intercession at noon with each person pausing where he is to offer prayers for "the whole state of Christ's Church." As a rule, there will be silence from the close of evening service until the opening of the morning service.

Work at Parishfield cannot claim the hours that it does in everyday life. On the other hand no full Christian life nor any real Christian fellowship is possible without it, and so a part of each day will be spent in doing the tasks necessary for the running, upkeep and development of a place like Parishfield. These will run from weeding a garden to painting a barn or from washing dishes to building a chapel. Study is the part of the daily life which will differ most from week to week. The subject and method will depend entirely on the purpose for which the group has gathered. In general however it will have to do with the Christian faith in thought or in action and it will demand a share of the time of all those who stay at Parishfield. A good part of each afternoon will be left free so that each person may do whatever he chooses — from such quiet pastimes as napping to such strenuous pursuits as trying to run down rabbits. There is a tennis court on the property and Parishfield is surrounded by 5000 acres of a state recreation area which includes many lakes.

People will come to Parishfield for varying lengths of time —some for a few days or a weekend, some for a full week, and eventually it is hoped, some for two weeks or even longer. As we have already indicated, they will come for many reasons but with a common faith and a common will to serve God. Inquiries are invited and should be addressed to Parishfield, Brighton, Michigan. A speaker will be available after the first of September and will be glad to speak to groups of men and/or women.

Parishfield was originally developed as a pony farm by Mr. James M. Teahen. The state, exercising its right of eminent domain, bought the property from Mr. Teahen who sold his prize-winning Shetlands and all the farm equipment. In the fall of 1947, the diocese of Michigan, through the efforts of Mr. Teahen, was able to purchase the property as a conference and retreat center. Bishop Emrich appointed a committee of which the Rev. Harold Towne is chairman to develop plans for and to supervise the running of the center. Through Bishop Emrich the committee was put in touch with a group of three men and their wives who had planned to form a community patterned after some of the centers which have been developed in Europe. The members of the community had studied, in so far as possible, these European centers and two of them had visited the only American counterpart, Kirkridge, in Pennsylvania. A meeting between a member of the community and the members of the committee in charge of the property took place in December of 1947 and was followed by another meeting in March with more members of each group present.

The committee decided to develop the center and the offer was joyfully accepted. The members of the community are Gibson and Blair Winter, Francis and Florence Ayres, and Charles and Mary Berger (along with many children too numerous to mention). The Ayres family is now living at Parishfield and the Winters and Bergers will follow in the later Spring of 1949.

The name Parishfield has been chosen for two reasons. First, it is hoped that the center will in itself be a parish in the fields. Second the members of the community and those who come to the center will be working in the field of parish life seeking to strengthen the life of a particular parish or to find new ways by which the life of the Church can be reinvigorated. The community will be known as the Parishfield Community. Eventually it hopes to have associate members who will live according to its discipline and purposes.

NEWS OF THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH

COMMITTEE TO WELCOME DEAN JOHNSON

★ Prominent Episcopal clergy are serving on a recently formed ad hoc commmittee of welcome to the Very Rev. Hewlitt Johnson, dean of Canterbury Cathedral. The many bishops include: Bishop Haines of Iowa, Bishop Hall of New Hampshire, Bishop Lawrence of Western Mass., Bishop Parsons of California (Ret.), Bishop Peabody of Central New York, and Bishop Stoney of New Mexico. Professors Vida Scudder, Joseph Fletcher, and Fleming James; Editor Guy Shipler; the Very Rev. John W. Day; and the Rev. Dr. Charles B. Ackley represent other prominent clergy and laity. Under the leadership of Ralph Barton Perry, Harvard University, the committee has formed "in order to assure this distinguished British Churchman the extension of our traditional American hospitality and courtesy." It has invited Dean Johnson to come to the United States in November and early December, at the same time notifying the State Department and reminding it of its press pledge that it had no objection to the Dean's coming to the United States for a speaking tour under auspices other than those of the American-Soviet Friendship council. The committee in a letter to the Secretary of State, said "In the words of one of us we are 'not wholly convinced that Dr. Hewlett Johnson has the whole story of eastern Europe, but he has an important part of it, and should have every encouragement within our hitherto remarkably free society, to express his views and to supplement what our newspapers are daily emphasizing'."

LEARN HOW TO BE CLERGY WIVES

★ The Church Divinity School of the Pacific is conducting for the third year a weekly seminar "What a Clergyman's Wife Ought to Know." Married students' wives are offered the course which has been developed in a three year cycle. Clergy wives who have not had the advantage of such a course will rejoice to hear there is at least one objective source for this sort of information in the country.

Mr. Robert Jordan was present and was in charge of a pre-vue of the new radio program "Great Scenes from Great Plays."

LAYMEN'S CONFERENCE IN DELAWARE

★ Laymen of Delaware met for their fifth annual conference recently at St. Andrew's School, Middletown. There they heard their Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Arthur R. McKinstry, review the findings of the Lambeth Conference; after which they were divided into groups to discuss the various topics assigned by the bishops at Lambeth.

Mariners' Church in Detroit, oldest in the city, may have to be moved because of the development by the city of the civic center plaza. Hundreds of letters however have come from people asking that one of the city's few remaining landmarks be not destroyed.

Many of the men agreed to urge the local clergy to inaugurate further discussion of the Lambeth conference in their local parishes by means of seminars and group conferences. The group was also addressed by Lieut-Gen. John C. L. Lee, U. S. Army, Retired.

SEVENTY-FIVE STUDENTS ENTER GENERAL

★ The Michaelmas Term began at General Theological Seminary, Chelsea Square, in New York, on Wednesday, September 22, with a record entering class of Juniors, holding degrees from thirty-five different colleges and representing 24 dioceses of the church. Less than a week later, at a chapel service, The Most Reverend Michael H. Yashiro, Presiding Bishop of the Nippon Seikokwai (the Holy Catholic Church in Japan) preached and received the honorary degree of Doctor of Sacred Theology. The degree had been voted to him at the May meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Seminary. One of the seminarians, now registered at General, Mr. Raymond De Corneille, recently figured in nation-wide press dispatches concerning litigation over the will of the late Eleanor Medill (Cissy) Patterson, owner and editor of the Washington Times-Herald.

BOSTON RECTOR TEACHES BUSINESS MEN

★ "Talks to Boston Businessmen" by the Rev. Theodore P. Ferris is one of the 11 courses given in the Massachusetts Diocesan School which begins its nine Thursday evening sessions on October 14 in the Cathedral Church of St. Paul. The course is an innovation in the school and is intended for men only. It will be given in the cathedral, centrally located in the business district, at 5 p. m. as offices close. The course will deal with basic problems and realities of our time. Later in the evening there will be an open forum, "Facing National Issues." Authoritative speakers will cover the various party platforms, the House Committee on Un-American Activities, the Taft-Hartley Act, and other like issues. Another feature of the school is instruction in country dancing, which will be given at the close of each session. Extra-metropolitan schools will also be held throughout the diocese.

N. Y. PREACHING MISSION BEING PLANNED

★ A Diocese-wide preaching mission culminating in a week of preaching at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine is being enthusiastically supported by clergy and laymen of that diocese's convocation of Westchester. Weekly preaching services will begin at the Westchester County Center, November 7, 4 p. m. Services will follow on successive evenings at St. Andrew's, Yonkers; Trinity Church, New Rochelle; and St. Mark's, Mt. Kisco. Massed choirs of all congregations are planned. The purpose of the mission was described as "trying to reach the 'casual Christians' and the 'fringers'." The Missioner, the Rev. Bryan Green, is expected to arrive from England next month.

VALLEY FORGE RECTOR DIRECTS SERVICES

★ The Rev. John Robbins Hart, rector of the Washington Memorial Chapel, Valley Forge, served as state chairman of religious activities during the 1948 observance of Pennsylvania Week. General church participation in the observance, the week of September 26, was arranged by a committee of more than 100 clergy and laymen drawn from various denominations. (RNS)

NEW WORK OPENED IN LOUISVILLE

★ Bishop Clingman of Kentucky opened, with services on Labor Day, the new St. Matthew's mission in the east end of Louisville. The congregation met in the new St. Matthew's Womens' Club building, and were greeted by their new Vicar, the Rev. Wilfred B. Myll. Having petitioned the bishop only six months ago for the formation of the mission, the congregation is already considering locations for a new church building, in this fast growing suburb. Bishop Clingman feels that the opening of this new work is in line with the program of the whole church for the coming year, the widespread project of Evangelization.

LAYMEN'S DIRECTOR TO HAWAII

★ The Rev. Arnold M. Lewis, director of the Presiding Bishop's Committee on Laymen's Work, will travel to Hawaii for a two-week trip to help Bishop Harry S. Kennedy organize laymen's work in the missionary district of Honolulu. On his way back and forth between "281" and the coast he will confer with various laymen's groups in the states. He will be back in the middle of October.

LOWRY CITES PARADOX OF SECULAR ERA

★ Scepticism and the "impulse of faith," indicated by the loss of religious faith and neocaesarism, combine to form a true paradox of our times. So said the Rev. Charles W. Lowry, Washington rector, as he addressed the Diocese of Bethlehem's annual clergy conference. These attributes of the age, besides a sense of impending doom and the spiritual disunity of a physically united world, make modern man "the prey of fear, anxiety, despair, and new compensatory superstitious idolatries." Through the 'impulse of faith,' there has arisen "a willingness to believe dictators' promises. America is not sealed off from political messiahs . . . Wallace is significant as an example of the holy-leader type. Dewey," he went on to say, "reiterates, as a political aside, the modern heresy that every man is divine, sharing the congenital optimism of Americans generally and their difficulty in realizing the revolutionary character of the new age." He concluded, "Belief in one God is the only way out."

OVERSEAS DEPARTMENT LISTS NEEDS

★ The Rev. Frank L. Titus, Overseas Department of the National Council, is looking for at least twelve priests, eleven teachers, one doctor and one nurse to answer immediate personnel needs for church work overseas. Vacancies exist in Alaska, China, Japan, Liberia, South America and the Pacific Islands. Need is urgent because of world-wide expansion plans.

Robert D. Jordan, as the able director of promotion of the National Council, knows what printers mean by the word "bugs"—errors that show up in a publication when it is too late to do anything about them. One of the most embarrassing errors we ever made was in the September 30 issue when we captioned his picture with the name of another person. We apologize to him and to our readers, with a salute to Mr. Jordan for the great job he is doing, particularly in giving to the people of the United States the broadcasts of "Great Scenes from Great Plays."

NAMES SUBMITTED FOR ELECTION

★ Among the names submitted for consideration for the office of Suffragan Bishop of Long Island are three members of the editorial board of The Witness: the Rev. Roscoe T. Foust, Church of the Ascension, New York City; the Rev. George W. MacMurray, St. Phillip's Church, Brooklyn; the Rev. Joseph H. Titus, Grace Church, Jamaica, L. I. The list also includes the Revs. Theodore Ferris, Charles W. MacLean, Harold Olafson and Jonathan Sherman. The special Convention called for this purpose will be held at Garden City, L. I., on October 12th.

Young people in college, seminary or training school, or who are anticipating such study, are urged to write for information about contemplated missionary careers to Mr. Titus at the National Council headquarters.

BISHOP NASH GIVING LECTURES

★ Exceptional teaching ability should be utilized wherever it is found. Such is the premise of the department of Christian Education of the Diocese of Boston which is sponsoring two lectures by Bishop Nash to his laity on October 3rd and 17th. The lectures, "What is Man? A Christian Answer" and "How Our Christian Worship Began" are being delivered by the former seminary professor at the Cathedral Church of St. Paul.

ECUMENICAL NEWS

RELEASED-TIME CLASSES STILL MEETING

Despite various court rulings, which cast doubt on the constitutionality of religious instruction in the public schools, mainly the U. S. Supreme Court ruling in the Champaign, Ill., case, week-day religious instruction classes have resumed in all parts of the nation. On the basis of a survey, Dr. Erwin L. Shaver, of the International Council of Religious Education, said: "Public school educators and church leaders have interpreted the Supreme Court decision of last March to forbid only sectarian classes in public school buildings and other uses of 'public school machinery', and schools therefore are continuing to release pupils for classes in churches and other buildings or to dismiss school grades early for these classes." In some states, he pointed out, state attorneys-general and other officials have ruled that the practice may continue, namely: New York, California, Indiana, Minnesota, Maine, Virginia, West Virginia, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Carolina and Iowa. The only states where there are definitely unfavorable rulings are Vermont, Michigan, Kansas and Illinois. St. Louis is the only major city discontinuing classes during school hours. "Thus," he said, "release of pupils for classes in other buildings and independent of the public school is, for the present, considered legal." (RNS)

WORLD MISSION GROUP TO ASSEMBLE

Thirty-five hundred Protestant leaders are expected to attend a World Mission Assembly at Columbus, O., October 6-8, it was announced there by the Foreign Missions Conference, an interdenominational group composed of 108 foreign mission boards in the U. S. and Canada. The secretary of the conference, Dr. Wynn C. Fairfield, said the assembly was called "to challenge Protestants in North America with the need to undertake a greatly increased expansion in foreign missionary work." Following the meeting a campaign will be launched in 36 key cities of the U. S. and Canada. Among the speakers will be Harold E. Stassen, president of the University of Pennsylvania; Bishop Oxnam; Dr. C. Oscar Johnson, Baptist World Alliance; Congressman Walter H. Judd of Minnesota; and the Rev. Henry P. Van Dusen. A feature of the Columbus meeting will be a demonstration of radio and mass communication techniques being developed for use in missionary areas. (RNS)

WORLD COUNCIL PUT IN OPERATION

The newly-constituted World Council is now set up in operating organization, following a meeting of the Council's Central Committee in Woudschoten, Holland. The committee, headed by Anglican Bishop Bell of Chichester, is a ninety-man group elected from the first assembly at Amsterdam to deal with the general issues of policy until the next assembly, scheduled for 1953. Dr. Franklin Clark Fry, president of the United Lutheran Church in America, was named vicechairman and Dr. W. A. Visser 't Hooft as general secretary. Five other men were chosen to serve as associate general secretaries. They are: Dr. Henry Smith Leiper and Dr. O. Frederick Nolde, with headquarters in New York; the Rev. Oliver S. Tomkins, London, England; and Bishop Stephen C. Neill and the Rev. Robert C. Mackie, both with headquarters in Geneva. Leiper, a Congregational minister, will assume the portfolio for promotion; Nolde has been offered the portfolio for international affairs; Tomkins has "Faith and Order" and relations with the Eastern Orthodox churches; Neill, assistant to the Archbishop of Canterbury, will assume the portfolio for study and evangelism; while Mackie was assigned the secretariat for reconstruction and youth. Several staff members were elected to positions they held when the World Council was a provisional body, and other officers of departmental committees elected were: The Rev. Henry P. Van Dusen, Youth Department; and Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, finance. Dr. Reinhold vonThadden-Trieglaff, delegate of the Evangelical Church in Germany to the Council, was named chairman of the Ecumenical Institute at Bossey. The six presidents of the World Council are: Pastor Marc Boegner, French Reformed Church; Archbishop of Canterbury; Bishop Oxnam of New York; Greek Archbishop Strenopolous Germanos, London; Dr. Erling Eidem, Primate of the Swedish Lutheran Church; and Dr. T. C. Chao (Anglican) of China.

CHURCHES PROVIDE PROBATION AID

Volunteer probation counselors—who were organized by the Louisville Council of Churches—are taking some of the strain off an overloaded Criminal Court program there. The volunteers are taking charge of juvenile lawbreakers who were set free under suspended sentences. Previously, no provision was made for such offenders because of a lack of state funds. The volunteers take one youth at a time and have no authority to arrest probation violators.

HOW MEN SHOULD TREAT WOMEN

Catholic women meeting in New Orleans at the convention of their National Council got a lecture from President E. A. Blaes of the National Council of Catholic Men on how they ought to be treated by the other sex. He told the 2,000 women attending that "the electrical engineer has taken woman's hands out of the dish-water. The chemist has made the scrubbing brush obsolete. The delicatessen has outmoded the cook book. The ready-to-wear shop has relegated her needle and thimble to oblivion."

But, he continued, "psychological techniques are being employed to divert the feminine mind from her natural vocation of motherhood; feminists cry for rigorous equalities between the sexes, forgetting that such spurious equality runs against the grain of sex differences legislated by Almighty God.

"Pressures such as these," Blaes said, "account for numerous pathological symptoms. Most abhorrent is the widespread abuse of the natural processes of procreation by unnatural and sinful interference —the murders of unborn children, the voluntary inflicting of sterility, the callous disregard of the legitimate, extra economic demands entailed by family life. Woman's duties can be discharged only by a woman herself." (RNS)

KINSEY REPORT CONDEMNED

An insult to the American people was the condemnation given the Kinsey Report in a resolution passed at the convention of Catholic Women, meeting in New Orleans. The resolution said the Kinsey report "can only add greatly to the unspeakable moral conditions that already exist due to unwholesome volumes and publications that flood the land, to the amoral or degrading pictures, to the preachment of birth control, and to the moral let-down that was one of the unfortunate products of the recent war."

In another action, the women urged the inauguration of a "clean literature" drive, with emphasis on "so-called comic magazines."

Reconsideration by the Supreme Court of its decision in the Champaign, Ill., case barring religious instruction from the public schools, was also asked.

Other resolutions called for the passage of state and federal laws increasing the minimum wage, equal pay for equal work for women, and support by the United Nations of fundamental human rights, including God as the source of these rights. (RNS)

CONGREGATIONALIST MAKES PROTEST

Pastor Charles Manker of the Congregational Church in El Paso, Texas, moved his pulpit into court to defend the right of Negroes and whites to sit in an unsegregated meeting. The test came over a proposal to require segregation at a Wallace meeting. Manker said that he was not a supporter of the presidential candidate but that "the issue of segregation should not be raised here."

EYEGLASSES FOR EUROPEANS

Pastor Clarence F. Avey of the Methodist Church in Athol, Mass., is collecting eyeglasses for Europeans, and since starting his campaign a few weeks ago has received hundreds of pairs of glasses from people in 23 states and Alaska. Fact is, he has received all required for the present, so don't send him any.

NEW CHURCH SCHOOL CURRICULUM

The Presbyterian Church introduced a new church school curriculum throughout the nation on October 3, the result of many years of work on the part of its board of education. It presents the Bible, the life of Christ, the history of the Church, the contents of doctrine and other related subjects, with stress on life-centered material. Printing matter for the first quarter of this year includes 488,000 bound books, 9,000 sets of teaching pictures, 215,000 activity packets, 175,000 work books and 202,000 teacher-parent magazines. The curriculum will involve an investment by the Church of over $2,000,000.

YMCA WORKER ARRESTED IN SHANGHAI

T. H. Liang, YMCA secretary in Shanghai, has been arrested and detained at police headquarters. Three plainclothes men entered his office and requested him to take a "walk" in order to have a "little talk." When he refused he was forced out of the building at the point of a gun, placed in a jeep, and that evening his family was notified by the police that he was under arrest, but no reason was given. Also other "Y" officials have been unable to see him. Liang, a graduate of St. John's University, an Episcopal institution, has been particularly interested in international affairs and was one of the organizers of the International Cultural and Service Society.

RUSSIAN ORTHODOX IN FINLAND

The Russian Orthodox Church has proposed that the Orthodox Church of Finland be placed under its canonical jurisdiction, with the proviso that the Finnish Church have its own spiritual head. The Church comprises 80,000 persons, with about 17 per cent Russians and the others Finns. It was formerly under the jurisdiction of the Moscow Patriarchate but transferred allegiance to the Ecumenical Patriarchate (Istanbul). Religious News Service says that "informed opinion is that the Russian proposal will be rejected."

WORLD COUNCIL APPEAL FOR REFUGEES

An appeal for action on behalf of refugees has been issued from the Geneva office of the World Council of Churches. The appeal outlined four ways in which church groups can assist in the resettlement of refugees: (1) Helping to find jobs and living quarters in your community. (2) Organizing local refugee resettlement committees to bring the problem to public attention and to stimulate public action. (3) Relating local committees to national and international Christian agencies operating on behalf of the churches among refugees in Europe and elsewhere. (4) Supporting denominational agencies, councils of churches and other Christian organizations in the formation of united resettlement committees.

DISCRIMINATION DENOUNCED

Policies of the South African government which deprive native Africans of their constitutional rights were denounced in a resolution adopted by the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church meeting at Pretoria. It stated that the assembly "views with alarm and sorrow proposals by the government to deprive Africans of their present parliamentary representation and to take from Colored people their long-established and pledged right to vote."

NO RELIGION TAUGHT IN ROMANIA

Religion will no longer be taught in Romanian schools. The ban against teaching religion outlaws a practice of giving religious instruction to all grammar and high school pupils for one hour each week.

ROMAN CHURCH FORMS TRADE UNION

Labor leaders who claim to represent 600,000 Roman Catholic workers in Italy are setting up a new labor organization to compete with the Federation of Labor, which they declare is Communist led.

AUSTRALIAN CATHOLICS ENTER POLITICS

Roman Catholics will soon enter party politics in Australia, it was forecast by Brian Doyle, associate editor of The Catholic Weekly. Mr. Doyle's prediction came in an article written for the Sydney Morning Herald which described "growing dissatisfaction" among Catholics with the Labor Party's policy on socialization and other issues. Doyle explained in his article that he was writing as an individual and not as an official spokesman laying down Church policy.

Meanwhile, Jack Ferguson, president of the Labor Party in New South Wales, informed Doyle that the Church "has enough problems of its own without interfering in the body politic." Ferguson said his party was capable of "looking after its own affairs."

GERMAN CHURCHMAN HITS MATERIALISM

A call to German Christians to stand against "the spirit of naked materialism" was sounded in Berlin by Bishop Otto Nibelius of the Evangelical Church. Hitting at Communism, he asserted that "anti-Christian powers may remove the Christian faith from schools and educational institutions and force the Church back to the catacombs" but they "will fail to break Christ's cross."

JERUSALEM SYNAGOGUES ARE FILLED

Jews from all parts of Palestine ushered in the Feast of Rosh Hashanah, which started October 4th, with the most impressive observances witnessed for many centuries. Synagogues, both in towns and villages, were jammed with worshippers.

The Vital Issues

WE hope that our Presiding Bishop was both misquoted and incompletely quoted in the reports that appeared in newspapers, based upon a press conference he gave on returning from Lambeth and Amsterdam. At least one of the country's most influential dailies quoted Bishop Sherrill as saying "that a number of the resolutions adopted by the Lambeth Conference will help to guide the policy of the Protestant Episcopal Church at its next General Convention a year from now." The report then goes on to speak of resolutions concerned with Church unity, marriage, intinction, ordination of women, commemoration of the 400th anniversary of the Book of Common Prayer, missionary strategy, a central college, and a congress of the Anglican communion. The reporters apparently got the impression that these were the matters to be "of vital concern to the Episcopal Church."

If so then two sections at Lambeth wasted their time in studying the Christian Doctrine of Man and the Church and the Modern World. The first 49 resolutions voted by the Bishops attending the conference came under these two heads, and we affirm, as did our Bishops, that the first resolution is an essential guide to the policy of the Church when it states "that man's disorders and conflicts are primarily due to ignorance or rejection of the true understanding of his nature and destiny as revealed by God in Jesus Christ" and the conference "affirms that man has a spiritual as well as a material nature, and that he can attain full stature only as he recognizes and yields to the love of God as revealed in Jesus Christ and to the influence of the Holy Spirit."

Likewise the resolutions concerning human rights, war, Palestine, communism, education, the modern state, the Christian way of life, are surely of more vital concern than most of the topics mentioned by Bishop Sherrill, many of which may well wait until we decide whether we are to have one world or two.

We are fully aware that newspapers, often because of space limitations, frequently misrepresent a man. They probably did in this instance. But we hope that the Presiding Bishop, and the many other Bishops who attended the Lambeth Conference, will deal with the vital issues that came before them as they present their reports to our Church people.

"QUOTES"

JUST because the Church of Christ must surround its members with the atmosphere of courtesy and good manners is the reason why we are patronized so often by the four hundred. But it is no reason why priests and vestrymen, should so often acquiesce in giving the church all the frigid dullness of a social function. We need to lose our self-consciousness in the consciousness of Christ. If we are putting on Christ we will unconsciously stop thinking of ourselves.

—The late BISHOP JOHNSON
First Editor of The Witness

Youth at Amsterdam

WE are glad to give you this week the report from Amsterdam written for us by one of the young people who represented the Episcopal Church, W. B. Parsons, Jr., a student at the Virginia Seminary. In doing so we report, because he fails to do so, that the youth delegates issued a statement at Amsterdam declaring that the Church has degenerated into a middle-class institution; that the elders do not know what they are talking about usually when they deal with communism, and said the Church better do something about the evils communism seeks to eradicate: economic injustice, racial inequality, social prejudices. There is too much "country club" atmosphere in churches and not enough attention paid to the working classes, these young people state in resolutions.

In other words, there is a dissatisfaction with the Church on the part of many young people which we think is wholesome, whether their appraisal is a just one or not, since it means that many of the evils they are so aware of will be corrected as they grow into position of leadership in the world-wide Church.

A Senator Speaks

A mill in Nashua, N. H., the key one in the small city, was scheduled to close, throwing 3,500 workers out of jobs and inevitably disrupting the entire economic life of the community. The president of the company, located elsewhere, told the citizens that Nashua textile workers are unproductive when compared with Southern workers and that taxes, fuel, power and freight charges, compare so unfavorably with the South that "irrestible" economic tendencies compelled the closing of the mill.

Mr. Royal Little, the president, was then addressed by Senator Charles W. Tobey, Republican of New Hampshire, as follows: "Mr. Little, you are a capitalist and you have made a good deal of money and you are powerful. These people in this town, they spin and they weave and they try to earn enough to make a decent living. There ought to be some sweet reasonableness in our hearts . . . we ought to be ashamed of ourselves if we can't do anything about this situation. I am one who believes sincerely in the principles of free competitive enterprise and the profit system, when and if it gives just consideration to human needs as it carries on its operations. Business and finance and government are all important factors in our American life. But I also hold that even more important are people and that other equations are not an objective in themselves but should be judged, in the last analysis, as to their effect on the people's lives, fortunes and happiness."

We do not know, as we write, whether the efforts by Senator Tobey and others succeeded in keeping the Nashua mill open. We do say however thats remarks made by the Senator were thoroughly Christian and he is to be honored for his efforts to apply sound principles to a difficult situation.

Kids in a Baggage Car

By Thomas V. Barrett

Chaplain at Kenyon College

ON a holiday week-end some time ago, we found ourselves sharing a baggage car with half a dozen college students. Surrounded by brawn and indifference, we crouched in a corner like a character out of a Gluyas Williams cartoon, until we discovered the boys were from our school:- Brave Amherst. Since we've been the sort of old grad that gives the Alumni Secretary ulcers, we were glad of the opportunity to catch up on things. It turned out that Amherst had some new buildings, and a new President since we were there, but outside of that things were pretty much the same. Professor Eliot was still a communicant of Grace Church, the football team had a bad season, and the Alpha Delts had won some kind of an interfraternity cup. Songfest or something.

We asked if the Philosophy Department was Christian, Positivist, or Bhuddist, but our informants were not sure. But the time we got to Bridgeport we found out one of the boys was going to be a doctor, one wanted to go into the diplomatic service, and a third was headed for the ministry. The others didn't know what they wanted to do, but were considering business — preferably Big. It occurred to us that it would be a good thing for society if these men knew something about the Christian religion. They may look like models for Finchley now, we said to ourselves cynically, but along with several thousand other young men and women who have had the advantage of four years of college, they may be the leaders in our town in twenty years. They may even be the leaders of our country; and it is important that they lead us in the right direction.

We chewed on that thought between Westport and Darien, and came up with the idea that the men riding with us might turn out to be world scientists, statesmen, theologians, business men. It was an awesome idea to have in a baggage-car. Our muscular companions took on a new lustre in our eyes.

If there is anything that can "save" civilization (we told ourselves) it is a group of brawny young men and women coming out of the universities year after year, with wisdom, and virtue added to information. As we rattled through Stamford we began wondering what the Church was doing about this immense missionary task of interpreting the Christian faith to our baggage-car mates, and thousands, even millions of others like them. Where else, we asked ourselves, is there such an important group of human beings from the standpoint of world strategy? If there is any hope for justice, freedom, world peace, a humane civilization, it is bound up in these astonishing, yet precious youths who are becoming persons of skill, and learning.

WE have always felt that what we need on this earth is not simply more scientists, business men, diplomats and philosophers but a larger number of Christian scientists, business men, diplomats and philosophers. People who know something of the Christian religion, and act upon its commandments. We were forced to admit to ourselves, before we reached Greenwich, that although our Uncle Elmer, who has been a Church warden for forty years without having finished high school, is a sweet soul, and dear in the eyes of the Lord, he is not as urgent an objective for our missionary efforts as young Joe Doe in the baggage car. By this time Uncle Elmer should be able to take care of himself; and it is pretty clear he is not going to be an international statesman. But Joe may be the man of the hour, the statesman of the age; the peacemaker for years to come.

We have visited a couple of hundred colleges and universities since that eventful ride, and are glad of this opportunity to report some of the things our Church is doing on the campus. The division of College Work is grateful to the editors of this magazine for making this regular column available. Like us, they realize the kids in the baggage car may turn into the men the world needs—skilled, learned men whose devotion to the good for humanity grows out of their devotion to God.

The Church

BY PHILIP H. STEINMETZ

PEOPLE can form a club or design and erect a factory which will make washing machines. But people cannot make a church, any more than parents can make a baby. They can provide the conditions under which new life is given, but until it is given they do not have a baby. So people can provide the conditions under which a church comes, but without the gift of God, the Holy Spirit, they do not have a church.

The conditions on which God's gifts are given are faith and prayer. Faith is the confident knowledge of God's power. Prayer is the expression of our admission of need, dependence and obedience. Before we blame God for war, hatred, injustice and all evil we should stop to see whether we have provided the conditions under which God can give his gifts—faith and prayer.

Whether the newly constituted World Council of Churches "comes alive" by the gift of the Holy Spirit or turns out to be human machinery depends upon our meeting the conditions of faith and prayer and so opening the way for God's gift of himself. It is for each of us to do our part.

Christians in India Seek Unity

ROBERT ROOT

WHEN fighting between the religious communities of India broke out last year, Christians everywhere rushed to help. In Pakistan, Hindus started to leave, Muslims began to flood in. A little group of doctors and nurses commenced to give medical aid to these refugees in the Pakistan city, Lahore. They were of different denominations, as the sick were of different faiths, but that did not bother them. They worked as a team.

Last spring that group opened a new united Christian hospital at Lahore. It will serve the general community, and the administration is planning a school of nursing. Two American denominations, the Presbyterians (USA) and the United Presbyterians, as well as mission organizations of two British Churches, are supporting the new work. In addition, the interdenominational agency, Church World Service Agency, has given it the boost of an initial grant.

All over India, old and new examples of interdenominational co-operation like that impress a visitor. There doesn't seem to be too much worry whether a particular Christian is a Baptist or a Presbyterian or a Methodist or something else. In fact, during the last year, Christian groups with five different denominational backgrounds joined forces to found the Church of South India.

calls "the Backbone of India," interdenominational mission projects testify to the mood for unity.

At New Delhi, E. C. Bhatty, relief director of the National Christian Council, told me that all Christian groups except the Roman Catholic, "from Salvation Army to Lutherans," had cooperated in the council's interdenominational emergency effort. Over 400 volunteers, a fifth of them Americans of various denominations, took part in distributing relief supplies to refugees, doing medical work in camps and providing recreation and assistance to the uprooted. Not far from the Indian capital and from Agra, home of the famed Taj Mahal, Methodist and Presbyterian mission fields adjoin. On the borderland between the two, a new interdenominational work has gone far enough that the beginnings of success can be seen. This is the "Indian Village Service," sponsored by American Methodists and Presbyterians and British Baptists. Its head is an expert rural sociologist and Presbyterian missionary, William H. Wiser. Working with Dr. Wiser, I saw an Indian Methodist, R. N. Solomon, trying to remake one of several villages in the project, by helping the inhabitants learn how to help themselves.

Instead of merely passing out assistance and winning weak dependence, these village workers try during three years to get village leadership on the job, then move on. For example, Mr. Solomon, in one village, had got local people who could read to start little classes to teach others. Foreign missionaries could doubtless teach better, but enthusiasts of this experiment feel that change in the village will be more permanent under the new system.

SINCE last November, the famed Allahabad Agricultural Institute, the only all-India agricultural college, has also been interdenominational. The Presbyterians started this school early in the century, but now the Disciples, Evangelical and Reformed, and Methodists, as well as an Anglican society, are represented on the board, under a Disciple chairman. Traditionally, the Allahabad school, down the Ganges Basin from Agra, has tried to promote better agricultural methods so that small peasants, who make up most of India's vast population, will have a better life and be free of the threat of starvation. Now the new principal, Arthur T. Mosher, 37-year-old Presbyterian with an interdenominational background, and a British Anglican chaplain are experimenting with schemes for linking better Christianity and better farming, in the belief the two go together.

Southwest of Allahabad, on a main railway, is Jubbulpore, where the American Methodists started a theological seminary 25 years ago. During the 1930's, the United Church of North India (Presbyterian and Congregational), Mennonites, Disciples, Evangelicals and the United Church of Canada, began official co-operation in running it. Now, this school too is falling into step with the march to union. A constitution has been drawn up to make it a Union Theological College, and enough of the various supporting groups have already given approval to indicate that the change-over will be made within a year.

Steps toward the interdenominational support of another college are being made on to the south, at Guntur, in a Lutheran mission area. This is the United Lutheran board's Andhra Christian College, with 1,300 students. Here are the varied groups which have joined in its support: An Anglican society, 1937; American Baptists, 1946; British Methodist, who since have become part of the new Church of South India, 1947. Now the American Lutheran church is expected to come in, too. Lutheran President H. H. Sipes calls these moves toward "a union college."

Down towards the southern tip of India, at Vellore, is a famous medical work in what has traditionally been a field of the Reformed Church in America. The hospital here was founded by Dr. Ida Scudder, who became so famous that a letter addressed simply, "Dr. Ida, India," reached her. At the hospital, the doctors and nurses I talked with included representatives of the Baptist, Lutheran, Presbyterian and the Anglican churches and the Church of South India. A medical college has also grown during the last 30 years here, to train Indian women, and now men, to be doctors for various mission hospitals. Thirty-eight different Church bodies now support that work!

Then finally, at the port of Madras, there is another work that has blossomed since the war. In charge is an American Episcopalian woman, Dr. E. D. Mason. With her is Miss Dorothy M. Pearson, a nutritionist contributed by the United Church of Canada. Supporting their project is $10,000 from the American Churches through Church World Service. Fittingly, the project is carried on at Women's Christian College, the first school in India to be started by several denominations in co-operation. In Dr. Mason's phase of the project, caged rats are fed various foods to discover how the predominantly rice diet of India should be improved. Already a menu which is much better than rice, but just as cheap, has been developed. Miss Pearson's job is to teach Indian housewives the importance of better nutrition and then how to prepare healthful new dishes that their families will eat. Not only does this mitigate present famine conditions but it lays a road to better living by forming better eating habits.

All down the line, in short, closer co-operation among the different churches is bringing results in India. Doubtless there are many other examples which I did not see. What I saw, whether it was village welfare work or education, or medicine or ministerial training or relief or health, demonstrated that the churches are learning that by teamwork they can get things done!

Youth at Amsterdam

By W. B. Parsons, Jr.

Youth Delegate at World Assembly

THE youth section of the assembly was made up of 100 delegates from 46 countries invited by the arrangements committee to be their guests. It was felt that some young people should be present at such an important gathering, particularly as it had become customary to have some youthful representatives at large ecumenical meetings. We sat in on all the plenary sessions and when they separated into sections to discuss the four themes of Amsterdam, we did likewise. Thus in addition to sitting in on the main assembly we had a parallel "conference" of our own. When the assembly went back into plenary sessions for the last four days, we rejoined them. Another stated function of the youth section was to act as a prayer group for the conference. It was thought that since we would have a little more leisure time than the delegates and since we were a more closely knit body we could perform this function. This we were able to do, but only to a very limited degree, for we found that our days were so full of scheduled and unscheduled meetings that there was not sufficient time given to prayer. Most of us felt that this was a shortcoming of the assembly in general, for whereas there was a daily chapel service in the morning and prayers at night, there was no opportunity at either time for quiet meditation in which the whole group could hold up the assembly to God and allow our work to be "bathed" by the Holy Spirit. Many individuals did this, of course, but as a corporate body we did it very rarely if ever. Many felt this lack and some spoke about it. One can only hope that at the next assembly a definite amount of time will be allotted for corporate intercession.

In looking back over the words that were uttered or written in connection with the assembly, it is hard to find anything that was brand new. Of course the chance to be at a large ecumenical and international gathering was new to many of us, and it was very exciting to see such luminaries as the Archbishop of Canterbury, Bishop Berggrav of Norway, Pastor Niemoller of Germany, all in one place; to hear different points of view presented by Karl Barth, Reinhold Niebuhr, Emil Brunner, C. H. Dodd, and others from the same platform; these are opportunities one rarely gets. We were greatly impressed at the opening service with the long history and the great scope of the work which lay behind Amsterdam. When one considered what this meant in terms of long years of patient prayer and sacrificial labor by scores of Christians in all parts of the earth, it became a very moving spectacle, and when to render heartfelt thanks to him who had brought all this about, the more than a thousand voices were raised in the familiar strains of "O God our help in ages past," it suddenly became very difficult to swallow.

There Were Disappointments

There were other high points in the two weeks which will never be forgotten, but after the initial thrill of getting together was passed, most of us began to look expectantly at the content of the conference. I don't think we expected anything in the way of a miraculous statement which would act as a panacea for the ills of the world. We were warned against that in the opening service of the youth section when the Rev. Peter Fagel, youth director of the Reformed Church of Holland, told us in the words of John 4:48 not to expect "signs and marvels" at Amsterdam. But as the conference drew to a close and the reports of the commissions were made, I thought I detected a slight disappointment among the younger delegates. Maybe we did expect too much, but I rather think that we failed to find as much spiritual content in some of the talks and reports as we had expected and as much spiritual lift to the whole assembly as we had hoped for. Perhaps these were not possible in a meeting of this size. Perhaps the over-optimism of youth got the better of us. Disappointment was far from being the major reaction however. We were shown and were able to appreciate what a very significant thing it was that the World Council was at last formally constituted, and that the Churches were now officially responsible for it. But by far the most lasting part of Amsterdam will be the experience that we had together as a youth section. As a group we were much smaller than the adult part of the assembly. We were thus able to have more intimate and informal discussion in our commission meetings. People were able to engage in a real exchange of ideas and that far more frequently than was the case in the main assembly groups. We had another distinct advantage over our elders in that whereas they were scattered about in the various hotels of Amsterdam, we all lived together in one youth hostel. It might be more accurate to say we lived on top of one another.

Fellowship Basic

THE resulting fellowship was of a very basic and deep variety and the ecumenical aspect of our two weeks at Amsterdam was not limited to the conference hall, but pervaded the whole of our daily life. We now have the sense of a very close and real fellowship with our fellow youth delegates that stretches all the way around the world and hopefully will be a very firm basis for our continued participation in the World Church.

We were given a very vivid demonstration of the unity that we have in Christ, the unity which breaks down the barriers of nationality and nationalism, color, and race, when we were invited to take part in a youth rally sponsored by the Ecumenical Council of the Netherlands. To it came 6,000 Dutch young people, and 2,000 had to be turned away for lack of space, a significant thing in itself. Our youth delegation was placed on a stage at the front and acted as a sort of choir, leading the group singing and presenting a program of speakers and singers. Towards the end, Pastor Niemoller spoke. One might have expected that after the long war years of oppression and starvation at the hands of the Nazis that the audience would give the German pastor a polite hand at most. But in Christ the bitterness engendered by the basest sort of treatment can be wiped away, and the Dutch who saw in Martin Niemoller, despite his national origin, a great and fearless fellow Christian, rose as one and gave him an ovation that brought tears to the eyes. The meeting was brought to a close on the same high note by the blessing invoked by a doctor from Indonesia, the scene of the dreadful conflict between that people and the Dutch.

Our Urgent Purpose

We have left Amsterdam, and we have come away with a far clearer view and a far deeper experience of the Church, the world-wide Church, the one Church (Church as meaning the whole body of Christ on earth as opposed to the Churches) not primarily as something that is yet to come, though this is important, but as something that now exists, not only in the fact of a World Council, but in the experience of the fellowship we had together at Amsterdam, a fellowship which will always exist though some of us may never meet again. There were no bars to this fellowship. We were all one in Christ, and in the light of it, any less inclusive fellowship such as we might find in some of our home Churches can never satisfy any of us. We are constrained to give our utmost to the building of the one Church, but not for reasons of practical economy or joint defense against a common foe. We seek to be obedient to the will of our Lord, and it is clearer than ever before that we cannot be obedient and live in a divided Church. Nor can our Christian witness be nearly as effective in our split condition. We saw with greater clarity the supreme and urgent purpose in the prayer of our Lord in St. John's gospel, "That they all may be one . . . that the world may believe." I'm sure that this will be the heartfelt prayer of all of us in the years that lie ahead.

The Younger Churches

As a footnote of sorts I would like to say it appears that the younger Churches will need material help in most cases for some time to come, but in many cases they will supply some excellent personnel to the older Churches. Their greatest contribution, however, would seem to be in the tremendous vitality and freshness of their Christian lives. They are unhampered by the tradition and influence of our western society and witness to their faith with a straightforward clarity that makes many of us look sick. If the rot of our secular age invades the western Churches to any greater extent I think we can expect—rather we should hope—that any spiritual reawakening on our part will have as its source the lands to which we once sent missionaries.

THE NEW BOOKS

Excellent Good *Fair

* * Critics and Crusades by Charles Madison. Henry Holt and Co. $3.50

American history, at its best, has always been the history of change and dissenting opinion. Mr. Madison here gives us the life-stories of some of our greatest citizens who, in the name of principle, became members of the 'out-group'. Included are William L. Garrison, Wendell Phillips, Edward Bellamy, Henry D. Thoreau, Emma Goldman, Henry George, Thorstein Veblen, John Peter Altgeld, Lincoln Steffens, Daniel DeLeon, John Reed and others.

—W. B. S., Jr.

* * Great Shorter Works of Pascal. Translated by Emile Cailliet. The Westminster Press. $4.50.

Pascal seems to be more than an author, he was an institution which continues to have a following. If you have read everything else by Pascal, here is some more. These selections are taken from personal letters, prayers, mathematical conjectures, and even from his will.

* * Psychology for Pastor and People by John Sutherland Bonnell. Harpers. $2.50.

All those who read and were helped by his former book, Pastoral Psychology, as well as many others who are seeking spiritual guidance and a Christian answer that is psychologically sound as they try to help people today, will welcome this new book. Dr. Bonnell writes from a profound experience in personal counselling and both clergy and laymen will find the book easy to read, yet one that adequately guides the reader through the many psychological terms and classifications which are increasingly appearing in popular literature.

Because the clergy are being called upon to counsel with many individuals, Dr. Bonnell recognizes the great need for adequate understanding and training on the part of the clergy, as well as the need of a more helpful cooperation between the clergy, psychiatrists, and physicians. But the clergy must never forget the patient is a person, not a body, and that the counselor is an instrument through whom God's holy spirit must work. God does the healing and although techniques are important the spiritual freedom and the emotional control of the minister is the important factor.

The reader will want to pay special attention to the qualifications necessary for the counselor, the importance of listening, asking questions, recognizing the importance of the experiences of youth, and of not taking anyone for granted. The chapter on "Ministering to the Sick," with its emphasis on the importance of scripture passages, should be challenging as well as helpful.

There is an appendix on "How to read the Bible" and a very adequate bibliography as well as a good index. The book is made up of lectures given at the Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va. If you are interested in helping people you will want to own this book.

—Ernest W. Churchill

* * A Serious Call to a Devout and Holy Life. By William Law. The Westminster Press. $2.00.

When the Presbyterian Press issues a reprint of the works of William Law, that's news. We've come a long way from the situation at the end of the eighteenth century when Law and Presbyterianism were considered to be at opposite poles. Perhaps this is a time when we need more mysticism; surely a little more of the Devout and Holy Life won't hurt any of us; his polemic against mediocre Christianity will ever be timely.

Firmly believing that now is the time for an advance in religious life, he points out the need for facing the facts of science while aware of the power of revelation and faith. He gives us an approach to religion pertinent to our present times of stress and confusion. $2.00

ANGUS DUN

HERE is a book to help everyone understand — perhaps for the first time — both unity and difference in American church life. It will give substance and vitality to the slumbering will for church union. The book will draw interest from members of every communion because of its two important qualities: realism and idealism. Bishop Dun is realistic in recognizing that there are real differences between denominations which hinder union; he is idealistic in his faith and vision that the spirit of God can in time overcome these obstacles. $1.50

CHURCH AND DRAMATIC ARTS

BY
WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD, JR.

THE first national radio program of the Episcopal Church has been inaugurated over the Mutual network. At this writing, of course, we can't judge what it will accomplish. But its presentation did live up to the ideas and planning that went into it.

Some have complained because there will be no good, old hymns or de-personalized sermons. But for most people, and certainly for the non-churched majority at whom the program is really aimed, this will be the greatest of blessings. Instead of the usual religious format, the show consists of great scenes from great plays . . . and, in such a setting, more real Christian dynamite should be coming over the air this winter than in some time past. Certainly Cyrano's anonymous wooing of Roxane for the manly, but dumb, Valentine put across the inner meaning of Christian self-sacrifice with more punch than most disembodied hymns.

The national department of promotion, under Robert Jordan, seems to have lined-up the best acting talent available and has engaged Walter Hampden to act as permanent host. As yet, I have seen no complete list of the productions. Since, now, we can dream, I hope that they have scheduled some of these great scenes with a religious message:

The meeting of Mio and Miriamne in Maxwell Anderson's Winterset; the defense of Bigger Thomas from Native Son; the opening of the tombs from Irwin Shaw's Bury the Dead; almost any part of the doctor's defense from Ibsen's Enemy of the People; Archbishop Beckett's sermon from T. S. Eliot's Murder in the Cathedral; any portion of any play by G.B.S. but, particularly, Saint Joan; the farewell scene in Lilian Hellman's Watch on the Rhine; the whole of The Terrible Meek by Charles R. Kennedy and every play in Dorothy Sayer's great production for the BBC and the Anglican Church, The Man Born to be King. As played by such actors as Burgess Meredith, Canada Lee, John Garfield, Paul Robeson, Jose Ferrer, Ingrid Bergman, Meg Mundy, Laurette Taylor, Bette Davis or Ethel Barrymore, the power of religion for our day can truly be portrayed through such drama.

As of now, the National Council only has enough money for thirteen weeks of radio evangelization. Each parish is asked to add three per cent of its annual budget to keep the work going. From my anxious seat in front of the domestic radio, it looks like one addition that is really worthwhile.

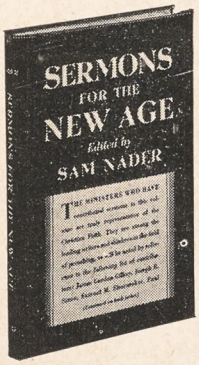
THE CHURCH

Its Nature, Structure and Function

By The Rt. Rev. J. W. C. Wand
Bishop of London

A scholarly book from the Bishop of London written especially for American churchmen. Bishop Wand covers a broad field of theology, touching on such universal subjects as the history of the Church, the four "marks" of the Church, origin of bishops and the fact of succession, the spirit of Scripture, the centrality of the sacramental.



Bishop Wand says we must break down the superstition that Christianity is a mere sentiment. "We shall arouse them to the glory of membership in Christ's Body and the honour of continuing His Work." This book will stmulate its readers to a clearer understanding of the Church and its purpose in this world. Price. $2.15

Watchman-Examiner (Bapt.)—It is well for us to understand the peculiar nature of our Baptist fellowship and constitution. If our interchurch organizations are likely to swerve from our principles, we must expect a certain amount of disruption. The Baptists have ever believed in the absolute independence of the churches. By this is meant that every church of Christ, that is, every company of believers united together according to the laws of Christ, is wholly independent of every other; that every church is perfectly capable of self-government; and that, therefore, no church acknowledges any higher authority, under Christ, than itself; that with the church all ecclesiastical action commences and with it, it terminates and hence, the ecclesiastical relations proper, of every member, are limited to the church to which he belongs. A church owes courtesy to every other church, but it is under no obligation to take part with it in wrongdoings. Thus it is that Baptists not only preserve their churches from ecclesiastical tyranny, but they have preserved for the individual member the freedom to act according to his conscience with a minimum of injury or discomfort.

Christian Century (Un-den.)—Henry Wallace is nevertheless an American of great eminence, who has served his country for years up to the limit of his ability and has occupied the next to the highest office in the land. Few American laymen have shown equal determination to make their Christian faith demonstrate its relevance in their personal and public life. But if Wallace were not a man of such unblemished character, the case would not be altered. He would still be an American citizen, exercising his citizen's right to run for office, and entitled to free speech as he does so. If he cannot exercise that right because the howling of mobs and the hurling of eggs and the inefficiency of the police make it impossible, then our boasted democratic superiority to Russia and other "slave states" is a fraud and an illusion.

Churchman (Anglican, Canada)—We preach to our people about the need for evangelism. We tell them they should be better witnesses. We quote statistics. We point to empty pews. We attempt to rouse concern for the Church, or for the nation. We speak of duty. Suppose we also gave rein to imagination, picturing, in terms of living men and women, the frustrations and ultimate despairs of those outside the Church, beneath all the surface frivolity, the apparent unconcern. The story of one of the many miserable suicides in some of our large, modern cities might make a good beginning for a sermon on evangelism.

Union Magazine (Bapt.)—The general public does not know that every drinker is a potential alcoholic. That is, social drinkers become excessive drinkers and excessive drinkers become alcoholics. To be exact, about one out of every twenty users of alcoholic beverages becomes an alcoholic addict. Two-thirds of the chronic alcoholics begin drinking in high school, and one-third at college-age level.

DEATHS:

William M. Kearons, 70, retired priest of Mass., died on Aug. 13 at his summer home in N. H. He was known throughout the country for his work in solar photography. He served as rector of parishes in Fall River and Bridgewater for 25 years.

MRS. GRACE ELSTON
Churchwoman of Baldwin Park, Cal.

The article by the Rev. Edmund F. Souder "Is Moderation the Answer" (Witness, July 8) is the first voice raised in your columns, these past eight years, against liquor drinking. From our limited viewpoint it seems that our pulpits are equally silent. One gets the impression that a young person raised in the Church would have received no warning of the danger in alcohol, nor acquire any sentiment against drinking.

Just before Bishop Johnson retired as editor of THE WITNESS he published an article entitled "Unemployment". It dealt with unemployment among clergy and he listed five main causes. Third on the list was drunkenness. If that estimate was accurate it explains the general silence of the clergy on the subject.

Drinking has become an evil so great that its extent cannot be estimated. Superior court judges of Los Angeles state that more than half of the criminal cases coming before the courts are caused by drinking. Similar conditions doubtless exist in all large cities. The liquor traffic is not maintained by drunkards but by the great majority of moderate and immoderate drinkers who want liquor on sale and keep it there by their vote and patronage.

The great Protestant Churches both here and in England long ago abolished the use of fermented wines on their communion tables and set total abstinence as the rule for Christians. This represents the highest ideal of conduct. Why has the Anglican communion, maintaining high standards in other respects, lagged so far behind on the question of drinking?

STERLING S. LANIER, Jr.
Layman of Nortonville, Ky.

In the September 16th issue of The Witness under "The New Books," S. A. T. throws stones at Dr. Ernest M. Ligon, and his new book, "A Greater Generation." Having had the privilege of hearing many of Dr. Ligon's lecture, from which I believe and hope came much of the material for his new book, I now make haste to send in my order to his publishers for a copy of "A Greater Generation," knowing in advance that it should have been listed as a three star volume.

In the same issue, you quote from the Churchman "last year the Methodist Church took in over 1,000,000 new members while the Protestant Episcopal Church took in 15,000." No doubt most new members came by the Church school route. I wonder if the smug pride reflected by S.A.T. is some indication of the reason for our failure in religious education.

REV. WILLIAM TULLBERG
Rector of the Nativity, Mineola, N. Y.

Before I was made deacon by Bishop Griswold and ordained priest by Bishop Anderson I had to sign an affidavit that I had to be loyal to the "doctrine, discipline and rules of the Protestant Episcopal Church of America," which, of course, includes The Book of Common Prayer. There it says clearly on page 82: "Then shall the Priest first receive the Holy Communion in both kinds himself, and proceed to deliver the same to the bishops, priests and deacons, in like manner, if any be present, and then, after that to the People also in order, into their hands . . . and when he delivereth the bread, he shall say: The Body of our Lord Jesus Christ. . . . Take and eat. . . . And the minister, who delivereth the cup shall say: The Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ. . . . Drink this in remembrance . . . "

How then can "provincial regulation" or anyone force me, a priest in the Episcopal Church in good standing, to deliver the Holy Communion by "intinction" to my people against my own will?

ROLFE K. HUGHES
Layman of Nutley, New Jersey

I have read The Witness for probably 25 years and have never before raised my voice in protest to any article although many times I have felt like doing so. But when a crack is taken at so fine a Christian organization as the Brotherhood of St. Andrew I can no longer refrain. Frankly I think the last sentence in the article on the 50th National Convention on page 6 of your issue of Sept. 16, could very well have been omitted. The Brotherhood of St. Andrew is the finest group of men and boys in our Church and has for these fifty years rendered a valuable service. No one, in my opinion, familiar with this organization could conceive of them having a speaker unfriendly to labor. While I know no more about the talk than quoted by your article I regard the Brotherhood so highly I do not hesitate to write in this way.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Leaders Give Their Views On Work in China

Group of Distinguished Chinese Christians And American Workers Reply to Letter

By W. B. SPOFFORD

★ Letters were addressed last month to thirty prominent Christians. Most of them went airmail to China; some to native Chinese and others to well-known missionaries. A few went to Church leaders in the U. S. and Canada who have recently come home after years of service to the Church in China.

We asked these people questions: should the Churches back U. S. government's policy in China; what, in view of the present situation in that country is the best thing for the Church to do; is there anti-American feeling in China, and are there indications also of anti-Christian feeling; should the Church try to work in the Communist areas; what is the attitude of Chinese Communists toward Christianity; what of civil liberties in Nationalist China; do you consider Generalissimo and Madame Chiang Kai-shek devout and practicing Christians?

We received replies from 25 of the 30, a surprising fact in itself and indicating the concern of these leaders with the questions asked. Several went to the trouble of commending The Witness for asking such questions in these days when so few facts are printed about China.

Another "story of the week" angle is that practically all of them cautioned us not to allow their names to appear in print. Some said, "the reason is obvious"; even some former missionaries now in either Canada or U.S., asked us not to reveal their names since "I still have many friends in China and I fear for what might happen to them."

So we are withholding all names. But that they are all leaders of distinction may be judged by the jobs they hold: director of a college in a China university; student secretary of the "Y" in China; an editor who is generally considered the foremost Chinese theologian and a person widely known throughout the world; an expert in religious education who was in China for years; five (three Chinese and two missionaries from America) are professors in China colleges.

Also in the group is the wife of a missionary bishop; a Chinese officer of the international YMCA; an officer of the Chinese Students Christian Association; an officer of the World's Student Christian Federation; a worker of the Friends Service Committee in China; a number of Chinese Christians who are serving the Church in various capacities in that country, and of course some whom we merely identify with the word "missionaries."

Now the most interesting angle to this story is that the answers of practically all of these people were, in effect, the same. Very few of those asked these questions were known to Witness editors. We knew simply that they were in China and that they were distinguished Christians. There were, naturally, differences in the intensity of their expressions. But these 25 people were unanimous in their answers to each of our seven questions.

The Churches in China should not support U.S. governmental policy.

The Church should not identify itself with the Kuomintang government or serve as its instrument. Christians everywhere, in China and elsewhere, should seek to bring about peace and to extend democracy. Several added that the Church should not be a party to the policy of supporting the Nationalist government as a bulwark against Russia.

Answers vary on whether there is much anti-American and anti-Christian sentiment in China. To generalize from the 25 replies I think it is fair to say that they agree that there is a great deal of anti-American government feeling, but not anti-American people. That is, people in China, particularly students and intellectuals, are making that distinction between government and people that we in the U.S. used to make between the Nazi government and the German people. As for anti-Christian feeling, opinions differ here also only in degree—all the way from a definite yes, to "not much yet but there will be if the Church continues to back State Department policy and thus make American imperialism and organized Christianity synonymous to increasing numbers of Chinese."

All are of the opinion that efforts should be made to carry on Church work in the Communist areas. Several point out that some Churches are successfully carrying on there without any opposition, and the Friends Service Committee came in for praise for doing likewise.

The cares and tribulations of life in China are marked on the face of this peasant as he treads his weary way through the streets of Kunming, a city that played such an important role in the world war.

One person, a professor, said that he believes at least eighty per cent of the stories about persecutions in Communist China are largely based on rumors and that most of them are "pure fabrications." He gives as his judgment that "if Christians were more flexible, more adaptable, less rigid, they and their institutions could carry on their work in most areas."

As for the attitude of Communists towards Christians, the opinion of these leaders is that whenever Christians were adaptable and understanding of the aims of the Chinese Communists they were tolerated and in many instances welcomed. A number stressed that Roman Catholics have trouble, first, because of their large land holdings which the Communists are determined to distribute to the people. Instances are given of Communist cooperation with missionaries, with two pointing out that the English Church is working successfully in a number of Communist areas, whereas missionaries from America would perhaps have difficulties because of the growing anti-American feeling.

All agree that anything that an American would call civil liberties simply does not exist in Nationalist China. A few say it is the same as Nazi Germany —spies, atrocities, murder. And three of the 25 do a bit of ribbing about the attendance of Ch'en Li-fu at the recent world conference of Moral Re-Armament in Riverside, California. They describe him as a gangster who is making a pretense at being a pious Christian because it serves the purposes of the Kuomintang government, while in reality he is the head of the ministry of education that is spying on students, kidnapping them, beating them, murdering them.

The sincerity of the Christianity of the Chiang Kai-Shek's is definitely questioned by some of these twenty-five leaders; "not judged" by others. This statement by one of the foremost leaders of young Chinese Christians, I would say, about expresses the opinion of them all: "I do not wish to make any judgment on their character or religious devotion. But I do condemn in the most damning terms their use of 'Christianity' as a cloak for the most vicious police-state and the most undemocratic, corrupt and anti-Christian regime that the modern world has seen." That may sound extreme, but here is the opinion of an American missionary: "I used to believe fervently in the 'Christianity' of the Generalissimo and Madame. I do so no longer. They and their colleagues have murdered, imprisoned, impoverished, uncounted numbers of the finest moral, intellectual, political and social leaders of China. Their minds are back in the middle ages."

That about covers the matter, unless you care to have a few direct quotes:

An American professor in China: "To support the present Kuomintang regime is sheer murder of the Chinese people and will win for us their undying hatred."

A Chinese professor: "The Christian faith will never spread in China so long as Christianity is identified with what is called 'the American way of life' or with American foreign policy."

A Chinese YMCA secretary: "Some Christians have been per-

NEWS OF THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH

BISHOP HARRIS URGES U. S. "LAMBETH"

★ Establishment of an Episcopal Congress in the United States along lines similar to the recent Lambeth Conference in England is being urged by the Rt. Rev. Bravid W. Harris, Bishop of Liberia. In an address at Geneva, N. Y., before the annual conference of the Diocese of Rochester, Bishop Harris said "A broader conception of the work of the Anglican Church could be gained by both clergy and members if it had a Congress in this country that could function along the same general plan as the Lambeth Conference." The Bishop, who has served in Liberia since 1945, declared that one of the outstanding accomplishments of the Lambeth Conference was its recognition that the church must face communism with a better way of life.

Bishop Harris, accompanied by the Very Rev. Edward R. Welles, dean of St. Paul's, Buffalo, will tour nine cities in this country to promote better understanding of Protestant missions. They will preach in a program known as the Advance in Foreign Missions. The program is sponsored by the Foreign Missions Conference of North America.

GERMAN PASTOR GETS EPISCOPAL RIDE

★ Thanks for a motorcycle have been received by the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief. The machine was given to Pastor Schniertshauer of the Old Catholic parish of Ratisbon in Germany. He takes care of various parish stations located at considerable distances from Ratisbon. "Is it pure chance," he added with his thanks, "or a deposition of Providence, that a French motorcycle, put to the account of a former French prisoner of war and donated by brethren overseas, is to be used for lightening the work of the Kingdom in our homeland? Truly God's providence works for all men." And here's hoping the motorcycle works, too.

PHILADELPHIA CHURCH HAS MUSIC SERIES

★ Christ Church, historic worship center in downtown Philadelphia, is beginning an unusual monthly music series. In addition to the regular organ recitals by Francis Murphy, Jr., there will be choral presentations by the chorus groups of downtown business houses. Each month a different company chorus is being featured, and the final program will consist of a music festival with all the participating groups combined. Christ Church conducts an active and effective ministry to the people in the business houses which surround it.

HISTORIC CHURCH IS RE-DEDICATED

★ Destroyed by fire in 1946, the new building of St. Thomas' Church, Trenton, Michigan, has been re-built, dedicated and officially opened. Bishop Emrich dedicated the building on September 12 and preached the sermon, with former rectors of the parish guests of the present rector, the Rev. G. Clare Backhurst. Later in the week, the parish held open house for the community and the diocese. The Suffragan Bishop of the diocese, the Rt. Rev. Russell S. Hubbard made his first official appearance in Michigan. Another historic parish of the Diocese of Michigan, St. Matthew's, Detroit, celebrated its 102nd anniversary on September 19. This downtown parish exerts an influence similar to that of Trinity Church on Wall Street in New York.

Blind Chinese children enjoy their meal at the institution that the Rev. Kimber Den has opened for them. This is but a part of the great relief program being carried on under his direction. It is aided by many American Churchmen through the Episcopal League for Social Action.

WYOMING CLERGY HEAR BISHOP HAINES

★ The Fall Conference program in the Missionary District of Wyoming featured five lectures on "An Active Clergy" delivered by Bishop Haines of Iowa. In the spirit of the lectures all but one of the district clergy attended. The conference was held at St. Mark's, Cheyenne, where the Rev. Charles A. Bennett was host. The Woman's Auxiliary of the southeastern district of Wyoming also met in Laramie to hear Mrs. David R. West of Minneapolis, representative for the sixth province. Mrs. West, speaking about the U. T. O., quoted Roger Babson: "The United Thank Offering of the women of the Episcopal Church is the greatest single effort of any group in the world today."

N. Y. CLERGY MEET AT WEST POINT

★ Presiding over the clergy conference of the Diocese of New York, Bishop Gilbert introduced as leaders: the Rev. Samuel Shoemaker, the Rev. Shirley C. Hughson, Suffragan Bishop Donegan, the Rev. Grieg Tabor, Mr. Lewis B. Franklin, and Mr. Theodore Oxholm, Diocesan treasurer. The conference met for two days, October 5th and 6th at Hotel Thayer, West Point.

DEAN TAYLOR VIEWS CLERGY SHORTAGE

★ With record enrollments in seminaries the clergy shortage will not be overcome within ten years. Our church is short by 500 to 1,000 ministers. So said the Very Rev. Charles L. Taylor of the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge. In the Boston area seminaries reported record enrollments. The Deans of the schools agreed that the unprecedented increase was due to a "spiritual renaissance" among World War II veterans, and to the aggressive efforts being made by the theological schools to provide clergymen to meet a nation-wide shortage in the Christian ministry. The Roman Catholic archdiocese of Boston, which has embarked on a program of "lend-lease" of priests in an effort to overcome shortages in other parts of the nation, finds its seminary facilities so over-crowded that a new building program is under way. Harvard Divinity School, a non-denominational institution, has twice as many students as last year.

MISSIONARY WINDS BLOW HOT AND COLD

★ From Durban, Natal, to Aklavic, Canada, is the shift being made by the Rev. Colin Montgomery, forty-six-year-old brother of Field Marshall Bernard L. Montgomery. Mr. Montgomery, formerly Vicar of Ladysmith, Natal, is on his way to serve under the Bishop of the Arctic, the Rt. Rev. Archibald L. Fleming. Mr. Montgomery attributes the change to "wanderlust," but says also, "it combines pioneering work with adventure, and I am still young enough to think those two are pretty good things."

JORDAN WILL RUN CWS APPEAL

★ Appointment of Robert D. Jordan, director of promotion for the National Council, as director of the concerted appeal of Church World Service, was announced recently by the interdenominational relief agency. Jordan will help churches raise their relief and reconstruction funds in 1949 in a great united campaign which will include all churches cooperating with CWS. The drive begins next spring.

BP. EMRICH SPEAKS ON MISSIONS AND MONEY

★ At the sixty-fourth annual convocation of the Missionary District of North Dakota, the Rt. Rev. Richard M. Emrich was both preacher and speaker. At the opening service he said: "If a person understands the Christian faith he is a missionary, and if a person is not a missionary he does not understand the faith. The reason why the Church is inevitably missionary springs from the inner teachings of the faith." Speaking later on the "Spiritual Significance of Money" at the Churchmen's dinner which concluded the session he said: "It is equally true to say that when a person learns to give he learns to believe and that when a person learns to believe he learns to give. He deplored the fact that we are living in an age of 'easy money'."

REPORTS SHORTAGE OF CHURCH MUSICIANS

★ Hollis E. Grant, organist at St. Stephen's Church, Providence, R. I., and dean of that state's chapter of the American Guild of Organists, reports a shortage of trained church musicians so acute that on the average five appeals a week have come to the chapter for help in filling vacancies. The shortage stems from the low pay offered by most churches. "Current salaries are no inducement for musicians to enter the church field with the amount of time involved in study, preparation and actual service playing," he said. "In many instances the pay offered church musicians is not adequate to cover the expenses for such a course of study."

WENDELL PHILLIPS IS BROADCASTER

★ Rector of Christ's Church, Rye, N. Y., the Rev. Wendell Phillips, is broadcasting regularly each Tuesday over the New York area on an American Broadcasting Company station, WJZ. He is heard twice during the day, and the program is sponsored by the Federal Council of Churches.

DIOCESE OF GEORGIA REPORTS ACTIVITY

★ New building and renovation is taking place in many Georgia parishes. At St. Michael's, which celebrated its patronal festival on St. Michael's and All Angels' Day, it was announced that a new addition had been made to the parish house to take care of the first grade of the parochial school. Christ Church, also in Savannah, was recently redecorated and renovated within and without; it was recently re-dedicated by Bishop Barnwell. Another Christ Church, Valdosta, Ga., is being built; the corner-stone was laid on September 10th by Mr. A. W. Goodwin, vestryman and former parish treasurer. Services are being held in the meanwhile in the auditorium of Georgia State Women's College. St. Mark's, Brunswick, has also undergone repairs made by the women and men of the parish. In Jessup, Georgia, St. Paul's Church recently made a $14,000 contract for the erection of a parish house.

PERIODICAL CLUB HOLDS MEETING

★ Founded in 1888, the Church Periodical Club marks its 60th year in operation with the meeting of its Executive Board at Seabury House, Conn., on October 6 and 7. CPC members send books, magazines and teaching materials to many parts of the world where they are urgently needed. The scope of the program is being enlarged to meet the many requests from missions, hospitals and schools for periodical and educational literature.

CHINESE WORKERS THANK HOSTS IN U. S.

★ Expressing gratitude for American church's hospitality to a team of Chinese visitors who traveled through the United States recently, the Rev. Jordan C. L. Liu writes "This is really the first time in the history of our Church that such a team of different kinds of Church workers, supported by the diocese of Hongkong and South China, has come together to America, since June 2, 1835, when the first American Missionary Bishop Boone sailed for China." Recalling with appreciation the kindness of many church families throughout the U. S. as well as many societies and institutions, the letter went on: "This 'Bishop Halward's Team from China' and its tour of America showed the importance of the real cooperation of the Chinese Church with the missionaries of both the American and the English Anglican Churches."

FAVORABLE PROGRESS IN CANADA UNION

★ Union negotiations between the United Church of Canada and the Church of England in Canada are proceeding hopefully, according to Dr. Gordon Sisco, secretary of the United Church. Addressing the denomination's General Council, Sisco said that "a spirit of mutual respect and understanding has been increasingly cultivated. After reading the Lambeth report it would seem apparent that the way is open to proceed with a consideration of the proposals now before us, and of all the other matters that will bring nearer the achievement of unity."

SACRED CHORAL MUSIC COMPETITION HELD

★ Entries of original choral works will be judged in the Ascension Day Anthem Competition being sponsored annually by the Church of the Ascension, Fifth Avenue, New York City. The Rev. Roscoe T. Foust, rector, announces that there will be an award of $100 for the winning work, which will be published by H. W. Gray Co. It will be sung on Ascension Day, May 26, 1949, at the New York Church. The judges will be Seth Bingham, Channing LeFebvre and Vernon de Tar. The text is to be that of Psalm 24, Book of Common Prayer version. Setting is to be for mixed voices with suitable organ accompaniment. Entries must be in not later than March 25, 1949.

BISHOP LARNED HEADS RECONSTRUCTION

★ Bishop J. I. Blair Larned, who is in charge of American Episcopal Churches in Europe, was named chairman of the board of managers of the World Council of Churches' department of reconstruction and inter-church aid. Under the constitution recently approved by the recent assembly, the board of managers will determine the policy for the reconstruction department. This department deals with problems of refugee work, scholarship aid, rebuilding of churches, health conditions and the dissemination of literature.

BP. SHERRILL DEPLORES LAW WITHOUT GOD

★ In a recent press conference, the Presiding Bishop was quoted: "There can be no solution to the world's crisis until people find a relationship to God, a moral law and a lawgiver." Attempts at the Nuerenberg Nazi trials to formulate a moral code had failed," he said, " because there can be no law without God. For the last hundred years," he concluded, "people have been 'losing their hold on God'."

ARMY POSTS TO HEAR "GREAT SCENES"

★ By short wave to all army posts, "Great Scenes from Great Plays" will be heard around the world. Arrangements have been made to send the program to all army posts and hospitals in the United States, in Europe and in Japan and Korea.

ECUMENICAL NEWS

HIGHER EDUCATION TO TRAIN LEADERS

"During periods of change, Christian leadership—a dependable and creative minority—has always arisen from the universities." According to a report presented to the fifth annual United Student Christian Council meeting at Green Lake, Wisconsin, higher education must produce the Christian leadership needed at this hour. The report was made by Prentiss L. Pemberton, chairman of the committee on religion in higher education, which is charged with summoning Christian professors and students to provide such leadership. In other matters put before the meeting, delegates gave approval to the admission of displaced persons into the United States, but took no action on national political or other social issues, saying they were unable to speak "with a clear, united voice" on the relevance of the gospel to current disorders in the nation. (RNS)

UNITED NATIONS DAY SERVICES PLANNED

United Nations Day is October 24 and will be observed throughout the world in special church services. The resolution of the U.N. General Assembly which set the date declares that the day "shall be devoted to making known to the peoples of the world the aims and achievements of the United Nations and to gaining their support for the work of the United Nations. We the peoples of the United Nations — the first words of the charter—created the United Nations so we could learn to live and work together in peace with one another. Participation in the world-wide observance of this Day is an excellent way to contribute to the cooperative spirit." On this day, special prayers of intercession for the delegates and the peoples they represent will be offered in many churches. The Archbishops of Canterbury and York, in a special message quoting the Lambeth Conference, said the United Nations "will fail unless it is upheld by the conviction that nations as well as individuals are all members of the one family under the One God and Father of all . . . we ask that in all our churches special prayers may be offered. The Federal Council in this country is also urging special attention be given to the day.

PITTSBURGH PROTESTANTS FOUND WANTING

Protestantism is a minority faith in the Pittsburgh area even though nearly eighty per cent of 1,291 churches are Protestant. In a report by the Allegheny County Council of Churches it was found that while the Roman Catholics had increased beyond the population growth, the Protestant churches had not kept up to it. Roman Catholic membership in the area—469,706; Protestant membership — 444,821. About 500,000 people in the area belong to no church and the report added that the Protestant churches "show a deficiency in evangelizing vigor as well as in public relations skill."

MORE DENOMINATIONS NEARING UNION

The Northern Baptists and Disciples of Christ, it is reported, are making steady progress toward eventual union. Differences "once held irreconcilable" have been settled, and Dr. Roy C. Snodgrass, president of the Disciples, expressed hope that union would be accomplished within another year. Merger would mean that some 1,500,000 Baptists and 1,600,000 Disciples would be joined. (RNS)

STRESS VALUE OF CHURCH PAPERS

Three leading Protestant churchmen have issued statements emphasizing the value of church papers in the lives of Christian Americans. Charles P. Taft, president of the Federal Council; Dr. C. Oscar Johnson, president of the Baptist World Alliance, and Dr. Paul E. Empie, of the National Lutheran Council, all agreed on the importance of extending its influence by reader-support, since as Taft said, "people are eager for intelligent discussion on the basis of their religious faith." And as Dr. Johnson said, "one of the prime weaknesses of Christian endeavor is in the fact that so many in our churches have never seen the value of having a religious paper coming into their homes." Dr. Empie added: National and world-wide news of religion must be featured and events must be evaluated in the light of the Christian conscience so the Church may be strong and flourishing." (RNS)

GEORGIA CHURCHES FIGHT KLAN ACTIVITY

Renewed Ku Klux Klan gangsterism in Georgia has brought severe protest from churchmen in that state. Following a cross-burning in the negro section of Valdosta, the town's ministerial association went on record to condemn such occurrences as constituting a "real threat to democratic liberty and to the peace and decency of the community." Meanwhile the Georgia Council of Church Women, in a resolution, condemned the burning of the cross as the "desecration of the universally accepted symbol of love and mercy." They also urged Georgia newspapers "to educate readers as to the un-American nature of all such acts."

Leaders Give Their Views

secuted in the Liberated Areas (Communist) but not because of their religious faith but because of their property and their opposition to reforms. Danish and British missionaries are carrying on, and so are the Friends, because they are sympathetic with the desirable reforms. Roman Catholics have trouble because they avowedly are not."

An American missionary: "Christians, Chinese and foreign, should support the side of the people, and make this moral support clear at once. This is both ethical and expedient—expedient, that is, if we desire to carry on Christian work in China."

An American missionary, until recently in China: "I was in the Communist areas in China and found them very friendly. They asked me to bring them a "Y" secretary to do Christian work, but we lacked both men and money. Now the Communists are more anti-American and more anti-Christian."

A leader of Chinese youth: "Church and "Y" leaders who have expressed themselves too openly against the evils of the Nationalist regime have been intimidated and arrested, in some cases, murdered. The latest arrest is of a well-known "Y" worker, Mr. Tsai, in Shanghai. The Church is free only to praise Chiang Kai-shek."

A Chinese professor: "Not only should the Churches not support the U. S. governmental policy, but they should demand the immediate cessation of such aid to the Chiang Kai-Shek government since it is a most immoral and unwise support of the forces of tyranny, intolerance and reaction in China."

Junks on the Famous Yangtze

A former Canadian missionary: "The most serious consequences can result from the failure of Christian missionaries to speak out against U. S. policy of supporting Chiang. Christians will be identified as spokesmen for a non-Christian foreign policy."

Another missionary: "There is no civil liberty under the Nationalist government. Christion groups are spied upon; there has been much intimidation and many secret arrests. Only those who support Chiang Kai-Shek have 'freedom'."

Well, perhaps that is enough to give you a general idea. We have many more similar quotes however in case you want them. Do you remember the old song, "That's where my money goes; to buy her everything and keep her in style"? It might be a good thing to meditate a bit on that theme the next time you read in the papers of the billions of American dollars being poured into the till of Chiang Kai-Shek and his colleagues, largely due to the propaganda efforts of Henry (Time-Life) Luce, Congressman Walter Judd, William Bullitt, Frank Price, whose manual on China is the text-book this year of the united Protestant Churches (reviewed elsewhere), John Foster Dulles, Protestant leader and Republican advisor to Governor Dewey—plus, the R. C. Church and the military, big and little.

We'll have more on China, since it is the subject of study advocated by our National Council and the Churches generally for this year: an article by Prof. L. E. Willmott of West China Union University, giving his appraisal of the situation; another by Prof. Bruce Collier on the crisis in China and what the Church should do; another on the student movement in China by Paul W. Moritz, a YMCA student secretary in China. So keep in touch with us if you want material to use along with that manual by Frank Price.

Former Missionary Speaks on China

Edith M. Lerrigo, at present a student secretary in the U. S. for the Intercollegiate Christian Council, was for a number of years a missionary in China. She returned from that country about a year ago and is therefore familiar with the present situation there. The Witness, in preparing this number on China, therefore, interviewed her with the following answers to our questions:

Question: Do you think under the present circumstances that the Churches in China and in America should support the American governmental policy of military aid to the Nationalists in the present conflict?

Answer: The Churches in China and America ought not to support the American governmental policy of military aid to the Nationalists because I am convinced that the large number of people in China in the peasant and student groups and the middle class groups have already lost their faith in the Chiang Kai-Shek government. They believe that our U. S. foreign policy is prolonging the civil struggle and strengthening the present corrupt regime. For us or the Churches of China to support this policy will be to discredit the Church in the eyes of the people.

Q.: In the light of the present political struggle in China, what course in the best interest of the future of the Church in that land should the Christians in China try to pursue? What should we, their fellow-Christians in America, do and refrain to do so as not to embarrass them but to help them in that course?

A.: It would be presumptious for those of us in America to tell the Christians in China what course would be best for the Church there to pursue, but it seems to me it is the same course the Christians must always pursue in their struggle for right. First, they must maintain that the Church is non-political but that the Church and Christians must speak out against injustice. They must support the rights of individuals and of groups to criticize what to them seems wrong in their government. In addition to this, the Church in China would be in a much stronger position if it would try to carry on its work in all of China, not just in a part of it. They would then be proving that the Church is not political but is concerned about all people. I think that Christians in America should speak out in protest against our foreign policy and should try to support the Church in China in any way that it can as it speaks out for truth and justice.

Q.: Under what circumstances do you think the present "anti-American" feeling among the students and intellectuals in China may take upon itself an anti-Christian characteristic? Are there indications giving you ground to fear that the present American China policy is a cause for skepticism and suspicion towards Christianity on the part of the Chinese youth?

A.: I fear that already the anti-American feeling among students and intellectuals in China is tending to take on anti-Christian characteristics because Christianity to so many of the people of China does seem like a foreign religion. Also the fact that many of our missionary and Church leaders in China have outwardly allied themselves with the Nationalist cause and with present American foreign policy.

Q.: Is the withdrawal of mission personnel and work from areas occupied by the Chinese communist troops the best we can do today?

A.: It seems to me that mission leaders ought to talk with Communist leaders in Hong Kong and find out whether some personnel could be placed in Communist occupied areas. We know that a Friends Service unit is at this time working in Communist areas. It seems quite possible that the right kind of mission personnel would be welcome in these areas. At least we ought to try.

Q.: Please comment on the situation of civil liberty in Nationalist China. From your knowledge have there been cases of curtailment of freedom for Christians and Christian groups?

A.: Civil liberty is denied to anyone who criticizes the Nationalist Government or who tries to work for democracy in China. Unfortunately, too few Christians in China are speaking out in criticism against the government or are working for democracy. When they do their freedom is curtailed, not because they are Christians, but because they are critical of the government. I do not know of any curtailment of freedom for Christians and Christian groups because on the whole, I do not know of many Christian groups who have had the courage to speak out against what they feel is wrong as Christians, although there are some shining examples of those who have done it as individuals.

Q.: Would you comment on the Christian character and religious devotion of Generalissimo and Madame Chiang and many top leaders of the Nationalist Party about which we hear so many divergent opinions?

A.: Students in China have said to me "It does not make Christianity appeal to me to know that some of our government leaders are Christians since they are so corrupt and are working for their own good rather than the good of the people. We do not feel that they are really Christians as you talk about Christianity".

EDITORIALS

Church in Changing China

CHINA and the work of the Church in that torn country is the subject studied by Protestant Churches throughout the U. S. and Canada this fall and winter. Each year the Missionary Education Movement, an inter-church agency to which the Episcopal Church belongs, issues books and pamphlets on some great area, with the main source of information this year the manual by Dr. Price which is reviewed in this number by Prof. H. Bruce Collier, who is a brilliant philosopher and scientist who served for a number of years on the faculty of West China Union University. It is fitting that the Churches should give careful study to China and the work of the Church in that ancient nation, particularly since fast-moving events have created wide interest in what is happening there.

The American people have great admiration and sympathy for the Chinese people in their struggle for independence, democracy and peace. In addition, American Christians are especially aware of their responsibility to win these millions to the cause of Christ. This goodwill and sympathy and missionary concern has expressed itself during the past century, and is still expressing itself today, through generous support given the mission boards of the various denominations for work there.

However mere goodwill is insufficient; we need understanding. Nor is superficial and sentimental understanding enough; we need great humility and self-criticism; we need also to ask ourselves important questions. How can we as Christians best serve China and her people and enable them to accept Christ's gospel? What can we do so that we do not sin against God by making the acceptance of the gospel unnecessarily more difficult for them? How are we to determine our missionary policy there? Do we dare adopt policies that are independent of the current American foreign policy? Is our work there to be limited to the area ruled by the Nationalist government, or are we going to extend our work beyond this area? Are we to gear our policy to the needs of the Chinese people, apart from any political expediency, or is our policy to be determined by the wishes and needs of rulers, be they those in Nanking or elsewhere?

We do not minimize the difficulties of Christian work in Chinese Communist areas. Nevertheless if our predecessors had feared difficulties there would have been little Christianity in the world today. Certainly there have been a sufficient number of reports to at least encourage us to hope that Christian evangelism is possible in the areas occupied by the so-called Chinese Communists. It all depends, it sometime seems, on what one likes to believe. And churchmen, like other Americans these days, are prone to join the chorus of red-smearing and tend to paint an entirely black picture of the attitude of the Chinese Communists towards Christianity. We are apt to believe any atrocity story and then throw into the waste basket any story which may require us to revise our over-simplified prejudice. In so doing we blind our eyes to the facts and slam the door on evangelism in a large part of China.

"QUOTES"

I am convinced that if American Christians were to give moral support to the so-called "Communists," that is to the people of China who are fighting their "American Revolutionary War," they would: a) ensure the continuance of the Christian movement in China; b) prevent a war with Russia; c) improve conditions for U. S. business in China and the Far East; d) ensure the democratic stabilization of China, Korea, Japan and the Far East; e) immeasurably improve relations between China and the United States.

Silence Being Broken

WE should not be so naive as to think that the silence of our fellow Christians there means their consent to what we are doing. Silence has been imposed upon them by political terror, so that even distinguished people in high places in Church circles, in replying to our requests for articles and answers to questionnaires, more often than not warn us that we should not use their names for "reasons that are obvious to you." But this imposed silence is beginning to break, ever so slightly, and we are being told by the more courageous Christians that what we do in the name of the Church is putting them in a very embarrassing situation. They tell us that the future of our work in China is too sacred to be a gamble and that we may be inviting trouble for ourselves, and for the Church in China, if we continue to follow U. S. governmental policy rather than having a policy that will meet the needs and aspirations of the Chinese people whom it is our task to serve. They assure us that there is no Church issue at stake in the present conflict there, unless we mean to align ourselves with one side in this conflict.

In this number we present articles and opinions by outstanding Chinese Christians and U. S. and Canadian Christians who have served as missionaries in that country. Insofar as we are able, we give the name of the person and the position he now holds. We repeat however that in many instances those replying to our questionnaire (reported on page three) asked us not to reveal their names—an important fact in itself, since these terrorized people are, without exception, important people in Christian communities in China.

Because of the wealth of material gathered during the summer months it is impossible to present it all in this one issue. But that perhaps is just as well since this study of China is to be promoted by our National Council and by the Missionary Education Movement during the months ahead. We will therefore present other articles on China from time to time, with the hope that it will be some small contribution to this inter-church study of what is perhaps the most crucially important country on the face of the earth.

China Church Faces Crisis

By Y. T. WU

Former Chairman of the Associated Christian Literature Societies of China

THE Christian Church in China is at the present time going through what is virtually a crisis. This crisis is created by the rapidly developing events of the past two years. Perhaps the Church is not even aware of the existence of the crisis, but it is there just the same. The political situation in the country is such that there is no hope of our returning to the status quo which obtained before the war. There will be a change, and a very basic one too. How and when that change will come, of course no one can prophesy, but that it will come in the not distance future, no one seems to doubt. In fact, the change has already come in vast sections of the country under the Communists now called "liberated areas." One of the most drastic reforms which have been carried out in those areas is the redistribution of land. The process of equalization is going on so that everyone who is entitled to a living, is supposed to have a fair share of the land he needs. This includes the landlords and rich farmers, a large part of whose land is confiscated in order to make possible this equalization for all. A hundred-and-one other changes along with land reform are being made in all spheres of civic and even private life. It does not take very much imagination to realize that these changes must have a profound effect on the Christian Church in those areas and the work which they carry on there.

What is happening in the "liberated areas" is destined to happen also in the rest of China in due time. If the Communists will win completely, then there will be no question what the trends of affairs will be. The main lines of action which are being taken in the "liberated areas" will be taken, with modifications of course, in the rest of China. It makes no difference whether the future government will be in name a Communist or a Coalition government; in either case it will be dominated by the Communists. We may not want to exclude entirely from our outlook the possibility of the present regime being maintained. Even if this possibility, which is exceedingly slight, is realized, we shall be confronted sooner or later with the same problem—the need for very drastic changes. The Chinese people are now in a desperate situation and the growth of Communism is an eloquent testimony of their plight. A government which is able to stand at all in such a turmoil and to maintain itself in the face of a strong and virile opposition party, the Communists, must be one which could satisfy the basic social needs of the people. That is to say, thoroughgoing reforms will have to be made either under the Communists or the present or a different regime.

If the above prediction of the course of events in the immediate future is anywhere near the truth, then we shall have to ask the question: how will the Christian Church fare in this new situation? Would it be better or worse for the expansion of Christian work? What should be the Christian attitude toward this development?

China has been going through a slow revolution during the last 25 years. I am afraid, however, the Chinese Church is unprepared at this time when the revolution is approaching its highest peak. We need not be surprised that this is so. Even up to the present time Christianity in China is still very much a movement informed and led by foreign missions. Its faith, its practices, its ideologies are all carried over to China from the West. Its leading personnel and its financial support also mainly come from the West. In regard to social problems, therefore, the Chinese Church has taken more or less the same attitude as that of the Church of the West. This attitude may be called the "liberal" attitude; which is of course different from the "radical" attitude which characterizes the revolutionary movement in China and other parts of the world under the influence of Marxist philosophy. This being true, it is not difficult to understand why the Chinese Church, like the Church in the rest of the world, has taken a markedly unfriendly attitude toward Communism, and why the Communists have taken a suspicious attitude towards Christianity in general.

Communist Treatment

WHAT is the actual situation that now obtains in the "liberated areas" as to the way in which Christians are treated by the Communists? The stories which we have heard from Christians themselves until recently have been decidedly unfavorable to the Communists. It has been reported that Christians have been persecuted or even killed; that Church properties have been confiscated or commandeered, and that religious services and instruction have been interfered with or even rendered impossible. Very often the stories were supposed to have been told at first-hand; when they were carefully checked, however, that was found to be untrue. Much of what was reported came through hearsay, and naturally, the stories became distorted or exaggerated, even if in the beginning, there is some truth in them. One of the stories, for example, which reported the crucifixion of three missionaries, was later known to be entirely false. On the other hand, we have also heard favorable reports of Communist behavior towards Christians. In one province, ninety percent of which is in "liberated areas," the Bishop of the provincial diocese was able to report that he could call conferences which Church representatives from all parts of the province could attend, with no interference and no difficulty in returning to their own stations. There are isolated cases where the Communists even went out of their way to help Christians. This was true with at least one Christian organization in the northeast. However, it could not be denied that many of the cases of reported atrocities to Christians by the Communists were true.

It is difficult to explain the occurrence of these events satisfactorily without first-hand investigation of the actual cases. But an attempt to make sense of the conflicting reports seem to yield the following tentative conclusions. In the first place, it is almost certain that it is not the intention of the Communists to persecute the Christians or to make their work difficult or impossible. We have seen announcements by Communist leaders saying that they intend to uphold religious liberty and would even welcome Christian work in their midst. In fact, one Church denomination actually received such an invitation. It seems these announcements on the part of the Communists were sincere. We are often misled by the thought that because Communists are atheists, they are necessarily antagonistic to Christianity. This is very far from the truth. At the present stage of the revolution, the Communists are concerned much more with practice than with theory. Their concern about the Christians is not what they believe but how they behave. For this reason, there is no doubt as to the attitude the Communists take towards the Catholics. The official policy of the Catholics is open hostility toward the Communists; therefore the Communists have adopted the same hostile policy towards the Catholics. This point must be made very clear if we are to understand the mind of the Communists in regard to Christianity in the new situation.

In the second place, in spite of what has been said about basic Communist attitude, excesses and extravagances in the execution of new policies still occur in Communist areas not only to Christians but to the people in general. This is due to the fact that the Communists have expanded very rapidly during the past two years, and are very deficient in personnel, both in numbers and in quality, for the management of newly "liberated areas." They are liable to have "black sheep" in their fold. Communist leaders openly admitted their shortcomings in this matter. They did not intend it, but they could not help it.

In the third place, most of the cases of persecution occur to Christians probably not as Christians but as ordinary citizens who happen to come into conflict with the new social legislation in operation with the advent of the Communists. This applies to such cases as ownership of land, possession of large properties, usury, profiteering and other forms of exploitation and oppression of the people. Unfortunately, many of these cases seemed to have been dealt with by what was virtually mob rule. A mob with grievances is liable to outdo the law or even make false accusations. When the cases are handled justly, it is hard enough on those who are affected, even though they may be sympathetic in general with the new regime; but when emotions are let loose and revenge is allowed to run rampant, then the reaction of the sufferer or observer can only be that of total condemnation or disillusionment.

In the fourth place, the connection between the Church and the United States is an outstanding factor in the situation. It is common now to regard the United States as an imperialistic country. This is true not only in the "liberated areas" but also among intellectuals in the rest of China. From the point of view of the Communists, American aid to the present government in China is the main cause of the continuance of the civil war. They believe that as soon as American aid is withdrawn, the present government will immediately collapse. For this reason they have looked upon the United States — or those who are responsible for American policy in China — as No. 1 enemy. The effect of this view on the attitude of the Communists towards the Church is plain. Even when they cannot actually find anything wrong with the Church and the Christians, they are still suspicious of them as either directly or indirectly supporting the cause of American imperialism in China. While this is unfortunate, considering the generally unfriendly attitude which Christians take towards Communism, it seems that Communists are not entirely without ground for their fear of subversive activities on the part of Christians.

Understanding Essential

IF the above analysis is correct, then we may draw the following conclusions: There seems to be no ground for the fear that the advent of a Communist regime in China would mean the end of Christian work or would render it very difficult if not impossible. The Communists have no reason for creating more enemies for themselves than they have to. Their present policy is to adapt themselves as much as possible to the situation which is peculiar to China and to go only as far as circumstances permit. Judging from what is happening, it seems there is no truth in the statement that Chinese Communists receive their orders from Moscow. In fact, what the Communists have proposed for China and what they are practising in the "liberated areas" is not Communism, and not even Socialism, but what they consider to be genuine "Three Peoples' Principles." While they are carrying out drastic reforms such as the redistribution of land, they would follow in general a much milder policy in other areas of life. For example, they repeatedly announced they would encourage non-monopoly private capital. If this is true, then it is certain that the Communists will not want to impose on Christians more restrictions than is necessary. What they will do to us will depend very much on what we shall do to them and what attitude we take toward social policies in the new regime. It is true that in the new situation the atmosphere may not be favorable to Christianity. The Communists always insist that if there is freedom for religion, there should also be freedom for anti-religious propaganda. We can expect a certain bias in favor of the latter; but on the whole, this would be very far from the situation in which Christian activities are forbidden or restricted.

In the light of the above discussion, let us consider what Christians should do in the new situation. First, a sympathetic understanding of the Communist movement is a pre-requisite. Communism has come into being as an answer to a desperate social need. This need has existed because of the evils and contradictions inherent in the present social system. As long as these evils and contradictions remain, Communism will prevail and grow. Unfortunately, Christianity has in a large measure been responsible for this social need. We have allowed social evils to exist and we have done nothing to grapple with them in a basic way. Communism, therefore, has come to us not as an enemy but as a challenge to a task which we should have performed but have failed to.

Second, I believe we have plenty of room in which to cooperate with the Communists in the sphere of social life with which the Christian faith is vitally concerned. China is a vast country and, as soon as the civil war ends, there will be a thousand and one problems of a social nature which the new regime will have to attend to.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Under such circumstances, I believe cooperation of the Christians would be heartily welcome. The Church and the Christian organizations are experts in all lines of social services. Take, for example, the matter of medical work. There will be numerous opportunities for the establishment of new hospitals and medical centers, services in which spheres any government would be eager to have. Take again the matter of literacy. Over eighty per cent of China's teeming millions are still illiterate. If the Church can lead in a nation-wide movement for literacy, they will be sure to receive governmental as well as popular support. We may not have an entirely free hand in determining the content of a literacy program and the technique to be used, but I believe we can, within reasonable limits, make a valuable contribution in such a movement.

Third, the Church should make its prophetic voice heard in the new situation. It has often been said that a Communist regime is necessarily totalitarian, not only now, but also in the future. Personally I do not think this is true. What the Communists are undertaking is the herculean task of "unrooting" humanity — as one author years ago put it. In doing this, they have plenty of enemies both within and without. In such a situation a degree of vigilance, fear and suspicion is unavoidable, and some form of totalitarian control is the result. It is not easy for us Christians, who are used to "liberal" thinking, to see this and take a sympathetic attitude about it. We have been, therefore, very critical of the so-called Communist way of doing things, forgetting that it is the necessary accompaniment of the goal they are trying to achieve in a precarious environment. This sympathetic understanding, however, should not mean a justification of totalitarian control, whatever its degree and cause. As Christians we should protect against anything in the new regime which violates our Christian conception of personality and freedom of conscience. We may do it with a measure of understanding and sympathy, and perhaps also with a sense of our own involvement in a common guilt, but nevertheless we cannot absolve ourselves from the duty of proclaiming God's judgment on any infringement of basic human rights, whatever justification it may be given in the name of justice and political necessity. In doing this we shall of course have to pay a price, but that is the only way to preserve the life and vitality of the Church.

I have ventured far afield in suggestions which may become entirely invalid if the developments do not take the exact form I have predicted. However, even if they will be invalid, this discussion has started a line of thinking which may help us not only to get better adjusted to the new situation, but also to lead in it a more worthy and effective way. The future may be full of uncertainties and hardships, but it is also full of challenges and possibilities. Let us therefore face them with faith and courage, believing with Paul that all things work together for good and for them that love God.

A Study Manual on

China Today

CHINA—TWILIGHT OR DAWN? By Frank Price. Friendship Press, $1.50 (paper 90c).

DR. Frank Price was born in China and has served in China as a missionary of the Presbyterian Church U. S. A. since 1923. This book has been prepared primarily as a study book, and it is well equipped with notes, a reading list, index, and map. The author has acquired a reputation as an apologist for Chiang Kai-shek and the Nationalist Party. But with this limitation in mind the book can be studied with profit.

Of the eight chapters, the first four deal with the political, economic, social, and cultural situation in China during and since the Sino-Japanese war. The last four chapters "appraise the effect of the war upon the Christian Church."

The earlier portion of the book is a brief but good summary of the background of the present crisis, and of China's travail during the war years. No attempt is made to gloss over many of the evils that arose as the strain of war increased. It is made clear that China has been going through a many-fold revolution during the past half-century; and we must appreciate with sympathetic understanding that that great nation is trying to accomplish in decades the changes and reforms that have taken us centuries.

Many will disagree with the author's interpretation of how civil war broke out again between the Nationalists and Communists. It is difficult to believe that the government was forced to "reluctantly order an all-out military campaign" against the Communists (p. 58) when we know that Chiang was keeping many of his best troops for blockading the Communists during the war instead of fighting the Japs.

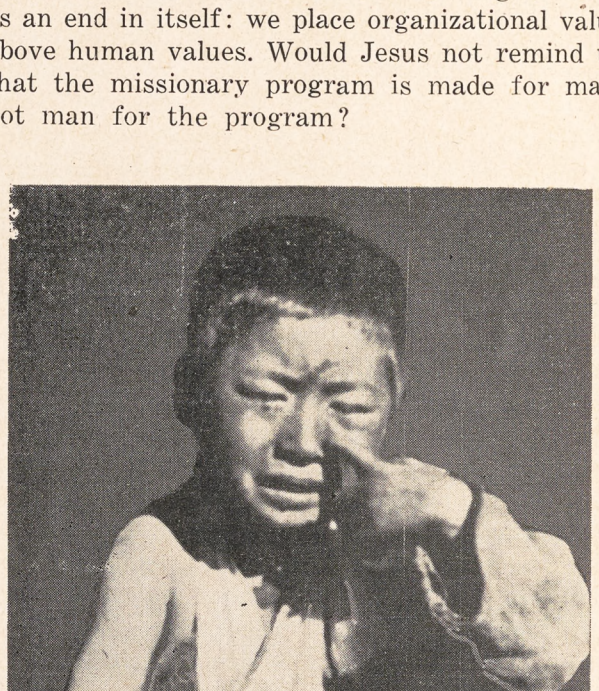
Nevertheless, "the crucial choices that confront the Chinese people" are well described. The choice is among fascism, democracy, and communism; and Mr. Price's hope is that a liberal and reformed government will evolve out of the present regime. It is difficult to visualize how this can come about as long as the Kuomintang maintains its hold through the dread secret police. Just before the recent national "election" the leaders of the Democratic League were assassinated and the party was outlawed, thus removing any effective opposition to the party in power.

The latter part of the book provides an excellent account of the great contribution made by the Churches in China during the war. Gains and losses have been assessed, and the Church has much to its credit. It is pointed out that there is an unparalleled opportunity for Christian work in China today; and it is a stirring challenge to the Churches of this continent that the author leaves with us in his final chapter.

The great weakness of the book is in its very serious omissions, thus creating a one-sided impression of controversial issues. Pious public pronouncements of Chiang Kai-shek are adduced as evidence of the sincerity of his Christian convictions. But we are not informed of the violently anti-foreign and anti-democratic tone of Chiang's book, "China's Destiny," which is the official exeposition of his philosophy and is used as such by all party members. Chiang's philosophy is reactionary and authoritarian, showing very little evidence of Christian influence.



Nothing is said of the great student riots against the government, urging cessation of the civil war and denouncing illegal arrests and violence by the secret police. There is no hint of the extent to which the government has lost the confidence of thinking people in China, many of whom feel that any government would be better than the present one. (Anglican Bishop Neill is recently reported as stating that virtually every Chinese Christian under thirty tends to have a favorable attitude towards the Communists.)

Believe it or not, a discussion of future Sino-American relations does not even mention the highly controversial policy of arms shipments from the U. S. and Canadian governments to bolster the rotten regime in China. This policy alone can well wreck the whole Christian program in China if the Churches do not vigorously disassociate themselves from the traffic in arms.

Finally, why does the author, in common with so many missionaries, detail the "devious and cruel" methods used by the Communists in achieving their objectives (pp. 70-71), and say so little about the unspeakable horrors perpetrated over the past twenty years by the Nationalists? There is the record of labor leaders treacherously betrayed and shot; students tortured for liberal thought; liberal professors assassinated by the secret police; millions of conscripted soldiers, and of peasants in famine areas, starved to death by corrupt and rapacious officials.

The Kuomintang seems to understand well enough that as long as it does not interfere directly with Church work it will be supported, or at least its crimes will be overlooked, by the majority of missionaries. The Communists, on the other hand, have interfered to some extent with missionary activity, and so their acts of violence are magnified and often distorted.

Is that actually the moral standard that the Church in China has adopted? If so, it can only be because we regard the Church organization as an end in itself: we place organizational value above human values. Would Jesus not remind us that the missionary program is made for man, not man for the program?

There are millions of refugees in China. One of the finest of Christian works of our time is being carried on in that country by the Rev. Kimber Den who looks to Church people in America to support it through the Episcopal League for Social Action.

THE NEW BOOKS

Excellent Good *Fair

* * The Future of the American Jew by Mordecai Kaplan. Macmillan. $6.00.

The author's interest would seem to be to preserve the American Jew for usefulness commensurate with his noble tradition. The disintegration of Judaism in America is causing concern not alone to the Jewish leaders but to many Christians as well, for if the Jew loses his sense of destiny, the world will be the poorer. The author has a bold concept of the part the Jew can play in our modern world. There are several significant chapters in the book, notably, those on "Significance of Being a People," "The Role of Eretz Yisrael," "Living in Two Civilizations," and particularly the chapter on "Judaism's Contribution to Education for Democracy."

The book is extremely valuable to Christians who are concerned at the plight of the modern Jew, not only because the true Christian appreciates how important Judaism has been to the building of so much that is good in our civilization, and how needed his contrbiution is today, but because many of the problems facing American Judaism are problems which face the Christian church. Not only is it essential to the survival of Judaism that it recaptures its sense of "community," but that same sense of "community" is essential to the survival of Christianity.

For all that is fine in the book, there seems to be something lacking in its message, a sort of weakness. The author gives the impression — which may be unfair — that he is a humanist — that God is a kind of convenience to explain and enhance moral and ethical conduct. He seems to belittle or underestimate the part which God has played in Jewish history. Quite rightly he condemns the arrogance born of an improper use of the "Chosen People" idea, but he does not do justice to what God can do —and in the case of the Jewish people has done—when a people is imbued with the conviction that they are called of God to serve him and his kingdom. He also seems to underestimate the value of sacred writings, the Bible, Torah, etc., p. 382.

On the whole, this book is timely and valuable. The author's words, p. 348, "Jews today show a great concern in defending the Jewish name from defamation. Such activity serves a legitimate purpose. But our fathers rose to a higher level of concern when they were afraid that reprehensible conduct on the part of the Jew might cause hillul ha-shem, the profanation of God's name. They looked upon scandalous behaviour as weakening men's faith in God. More important than any protective measures against the defamation of the Jew would be activity to offset the profanation of the Jewish ideal and the cheapening and vulgarizing of Judaism, and to restore the notion that to be a Jew means to be held to standards of honor and truth," are words to be taken to heart not by the Jews only, but by all who call themselves Christian.

YOUNG PEOPLE OF THE CHURCH

BY WALTER N. WELSH

WE do have in our Church a "United Movement of the Church's Youth." This must be stated again and again because some parochial leaders have an uncanny dread of even National Council "collectivism." They won't read its subversive literature. There are also sectional Church youth organizations which have difficulty disassociating U.M.C.Y. from the latest "red" spy scare. There is a united movement of the Church's youth, and it is a youth program. Bill Crittenden and his youth division of the department of religious education of the National Council worry a great deal about technical details, but there are signs that in the national youth commission it is the youth who make the "movement."

There may be a debate about the direction in which it moves from time to time. However, being a sort of auxiliary of the national Church it is to be expected that there would be somewhat well defined limits to its activity. This year as its Youth Sunday (October 17) project it is reaching into an area which might be considered one of the sundry skeletons in the closet of United States affairs, Puerto Rico. The objective of the youth offering given on this day is the support of Acion Unida de la Juventud Episcopal; otherwise known as A.U.J.E. (pronounced ou-hay). This is the Puerto Rican youth program of the Episcopal Church. The project is exceedingly well chosen.

Unfortunately there is too much chance that this project will be like so many of our offering projects. The study program for it and the final report of results will be promotional.

Perhaps our young people are not prepared for more than this. Some one attending the Christian youth conference held in Grand Rapids, Michigan, this last August reported that in the Episcopal group meetings the issues were confused. Clyde Allison, reporting in the Christian Century, indicated that real action on social issues was conducted by six young people. These young people stood on the sidewalk in front of the meeting hall distributing "Progressive" literature, and seizing every opportunity to talk to the delegates on issues of "segregation" and other social ills. The conference, he reports, felt vastly superior to these "challengers." They tried to entice the six young people to come with them to a better way. To which the reply came, "O. K., but what are you going to do about these issues?" The conference members did not like it.

If there are limitations seemingly imposed by an official youth program, it is good to remember that the mission of youth is ever to startle the perspective of the status quo. The opportunities within the framework of the U.M.C.Y. program can be cut to "conference" size, or they can be stretched into some genuine "evangelization."

It was on "street corners" that the Incarnation breathed new life into a dying organism. Apparently it is only there today where, at least, the staid Church regulars find their consciences irritated and disturbed. The issues there are of "life and death." A Church revived by God through its youth should find these issues to be of slightly more concern than the normal "offering" will create.

A Threefold Cord

By MAUDE ROYDEN

This book contains the inspiring record of the lives of three people, the Reverend Hudson Shaw, his wife Effie, and Dr. Maude Royden. These three were bound together by something even deeper than friendship. Maude Royden writes chiefly of the man she loved, painting an unforgettable portrait of him. He was dynamic and impractical as a person, yet as a teacher he reached his full stature. She sketches with a delicate touch the ellusive personality of Effie, invalid, musician, and artist, who shared her home so that Dr. Royden and Shaw might work together. This is a record of spiritual achievement between two people who shared an unconsummated love for each other and who loved sincerely the shy selfless woman who depended on them both. $2.00

THE PRESS

Watchman Examiner (Baptist) — The dictionaries define home as "a place where one habitually resides with one's family." But, as a matter of fact, a home is not a place, or a house, or a collection of furniture. A home is made up of the unseen elements of love, loyalty, work, a bit of the moonlight left over from the honeymoon, memories, a view from the east window of hope—and the radiance that comes in through the skylight of religion. . . . A happy home can be achieved by average people, with an average intelligence, if they are willing to pay the price of continuous endeavor.

Evangelist (Disciples)—Any attempt to appraise Mr. Truman as a President leads straight into the field of controversy. However, certain facts are indisputable. In his family life the President has set a good example before the nation. Bess Wallace who was his sweetheart back in their school days became his wife soon after his return from World War I. From the Presbyterian Sunday school which both President and Mrs. Truman attended during their childhood in Independence, the former entered the Baptist church of which his mother was a member. Mrs. Truman and Miss Margaret are communicants of the Episcopal church. Few Presidents have attended public worship with greater regularity than has President Truman.

Christian Century (Unden.)—A reader calls our attention to an open letter written to American Presbyterians by Moderator Jesse H. Baird. Writing from Glasgow through Presbyterian Life, Dr. Baird says: "I have met with a horrible spectre for which America is responsible. It is the idea that America wants war with Russia. A reporter sought me out in Belfast yesterday to get my answer: Does America really want war? We understand that her decision is, Come on, let's get it over with. All say frankly that the fate of these islands lies in America's hands. And if America wants war—well, it sounds to them like the stroke of doom. God forgive our heartless, irresponsible politicians for their careless statements! And God give us grace to correct this tragic misrepresentation of America's attitude! And let us correct it soon. Isn't this a task for American Christians? Can't we do something dramatic to enable European friends and foes to sense our deep, sincere longing for peace?"

Evangelist (Disciples) — Billions for military training for defense against possible war and gravely inadequate provision for the education of children and youth. Yet the schools of America are the best national defense. General Eisenhower, now president of Columbia University, who knows as well as any American the necessities of safeguarding our democracy both against foes without, and foes within, has said, "Education is the most important factor preserving this country's democracy . . . teachers should be brought to think they are democracy's champions." Just now it is critically important that leaders in government and the citizens of America shall be brought to think of the public school teachers as democracy's champions and defenders.

American Friend (Quaker) — There are persons, who apparently feel that counselling civil disobedience, in itself, is a valid position. With that point in view we take issue. There is no virtue in civil disobedience, as such. The real issue that we face is one of conscience and obedience to its guidance. We should seek as Quakers and as citizens to improve government by every rightful, cooperative effort. That is the emphasis, positive and constructive, which Friends make. The focus is not "Civil disobedience" but positive obedience to the will of God, as we understand it, which may at times lead to the disobeying of a law believed to be wrong, but positively leading to a constructive, Christian citizenship.

Church Management (Un-Den.) — Some tell us that to be good Christians we must hate Russia and Communism. My answer is that I am too old to hate. I have seen, through the years, the same story repeated time and time again. It is the story of the rise of hate, the persecution of the scapegoat, the departure from justice and common sense, the crippling of the spirit of liberty.

The Record (C. of E.)—The trouble with the Lambeth Report is that it is already a classic. When the official Church would have incurred odium and hostility in high places by lifting up its voice it was silent. When it will gain applause it speaks. What a revolutionary, dangerously living Church! If ever it dies it will die in safety.

61 CARILLONIC BELLS
"The Sweetest Music Ever Tolled"

For five centuries, the Flemish carillon bell has been considered the only perfect bell. And it requires such bells to produce the varied harmonies of true carillon play. The new 61 CARILLONIC BELLS is as tonally perfect as those world-famous bells; no other electronic bell instrument can duplicate it.

Because beauty of tone is so important in evaluating a carillon, more than 1500 churches and institutions have chosen CARILLONIC BELLS. Investigate fully all the advantages of the 61 CARILLONIC BELLS—made only by Schulmerich Electronics, Inc., Sellersville, Pa. Address Dept.— W-85

REV. C. R. ELLIOTT
Rector at Bridgetown, N. S., Canada

Many people, concerned for the greater progress and glory of the Church, and putting confidence for this in foreign missions, have looked with great sorrow upon the Church's voluntary withdrawal from a golden opportunity. I refer to the withdrawal from the Communist areas in China and the cooperating with the Koumintang. Many Chinese Christians, devout, sacrificing and suffering souls also are of the opinion that this action has turned many prospective converts away because it seems like an action that is contrary to what they were told of the Church. To these Christians the advance of the Church in China has been dealt an irreparable blow. And all this because of an unwarranted refusal to assist areas dominated by Communists, and a completely ridiculous withdrawal to the protection of the Chiang regime.

My interest in the matter is an honest one regarding Christian advance. It is also for a more fundamental reason, for I believe if the Church will take the right step, adopt the right attitude, stand firm for her principles, the Church in every country will have a guide of no uncertain worth, and the experience will teach the world much. But if the Church does the wrong thing in China she will have compromised herself and wrought her own eventual downfall in every country of the world.

Let us do what we can to get the Chinese problem solved according to the principles upon which the Church is built, that it may be a guide and comfort to the Church in other lands soon to be faced with the same decision.

MR. ERIC KOO and Others
Chinese Student in the U. S.

We are a group of both Chinese and American students from different universities throughout the United States. We were employed at a factory which is manufacturing arms and some of us were working in the .50 calibre ammunition shop. It became a source of anxiety to us when it was discovered from the authorities that this ammunition which we were directly helping to manufacture was sent to the Kuomintang government of China. We gradually felt that we were not being true to ourselves by continuing to work in a factory which eventually killed the Chinese people. Consequently, the moral conviction of a number of us forced ourselves, after careful consideration, to quit our jobs. This decision has been fortified by the whole-hearted support of the rest of the group. However, some felt that continued contact with those in the shop would also further the cause. So they stayed on their jobs to explain our action to our fellow workers.

We have come to realize that the struggle in China does not lie between two political parties, but is a struggle of the people for freedom and democracy. Any demonstration by students, small merchants, workers, and some industrialists is branded as communistic action, although they have no affiliation with the Communist party. The situation in China is really a struggle between the people and the corrupt and reactionary elements in the Kuomintang government. United States military aid to China does not help to spread democracy but helps in keeping a fascist-like dictatorhip in power which consequently injures the friendship between the two peoples. In fact, the intervention of the United States government prolong the civil war, for much of the Communist war supplies are obtained from captured Kuomintang outfits as well as bribed Kuomintang officials. American arms are thus being used on both sides to help Chinese kill Chinese! Is this an example of the democratic principles and Christian brotherhood in which we believe? The Chinese people believe that a democratic coalition government is the best solution, a government in which all classes and parties (except the Kuomintang reactionaries) would be represented. Therefore, we oppose the policy of any American military intervention in China.

We feel that this is a vital question for the American people to think about. Every U. S. stamped bullet will create an everlasting hatred in the hearts of the Chinese people who are now being suppressed in a bitter struggle for democracy and freedom.

Council Reports Progress In All Its Work

Dr. Lewis B. Franklin Resigns After 29 Years; Is Succeeded By Russell E. Dill

★ Substantial gain in all departments of the work of the National Council was reported at the first day of the meeting of the Council, October 13, at Seabury House, in Greenwich, Conn. Robert D. Jordan, reporting on the evangelistic campaign, stated that 8,000 requests had been received for the booklet, "Finding Your Way," as a result of the nation-wide Episcopal radio hour.

Dr. Lewis B. Franklin, treasurer of the National Council and the Domestic and Foreign Mission Society for 29 years, tendered his resignation, delayed for two years at the request of the church. Mr. Russell E. Dill, specialist in industrial efficiency, was elected treasurer after the Council voted to accept Dr. Franklin's resignation. Mr. Dill worked in the initial rationing program under Leon Henderson and also was sent to England to confer with Army authorities on confidential matters concerning aerial warfare.

Dr. Franklin was vice-president of the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York and supervised the national organization which distributed the five Liberty Loans in the period of the first world war. Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill presented him with a silver inkwell as an expression of the church's appreciation.

Bishop Breasted Harris reported the building of $150,000 of buildings, including a college dormitory. Education in Liberia is superficial and the church is preparing to serve the country in that manner. Clergy are needed since none of the clergymen in Liberia are under 55 years of age. Bishop Robert J. Wilner, suffragan of the Philippines, reported that there are 17 native students in the new theological seminary and that two men were ordained recently.

In the domestic field, Bishop William F. Lewis of Nevada reported vigorous activity shown by 424 baptisms and 200 confirmations in a diocese numbering two thousand members.

Mr. Jordan also reported that the world relief in 1949 will be handled through the Church World Service. Twenty-three church denominations will cooperate in a radio series.

Speakers for the Department of Christian Education headed by Bishop Angus Dun told of extensive work in and plans for curricula development. The courses, "Successful Marriage and the Christian Family" and "The Prayer Book Speaks to an Uuncertain Age," for Epiphany and for Lent in 1949 have been prepared, stated Bishop Dun. Dr. Theodore Switz will remain until December in the division of audio-visual and adult education and after that time will act as consultant under a resolution passed by the Council. A resolution to create an editorial board was adopted.

Canon C. Gardner Monks told of the three emphasises in the work being done on curricula. They are: factual knowledge of the church and Christain literature, Christian character, and church fellowship. The report on the plans for curricula development will be sent it is hoped, in the first of next year.

The American Church Institute was reported on by Mr. M. M. Millikan, assistant to the secretary of the Institute. He told of the continuance of the work of the Institute in creating racial understanding through education. The Institute has reverted to a former policy of using student labor in school construction and to date has spent $230,000 of the $435,000 alloted to it in the Reconstruction and Advance program. A survey of 9,000 students revealed 16 potential ministerial candidates. The Institute has no money to give them necessary aid because it is already contributing to the Bishop Payne Divinity School.

The Rev. William J. Crittendeon told of the value of students from over the world living together for two weeks at the Amsterdam conference. There were two Episcopal youths among the 18 representatives from the U. S. Bishop Charles Carpenter disclosed that the United Youth Offering amount to $17,000 which went to build a conference center in Honolulu. This year's offering will go to aid the youth movement in Puerto Rico.

The National Council will meet next year on Feb. 8-10, April 26-28, Sept. 23-24 at San Francisco, and Dec. 6-8.

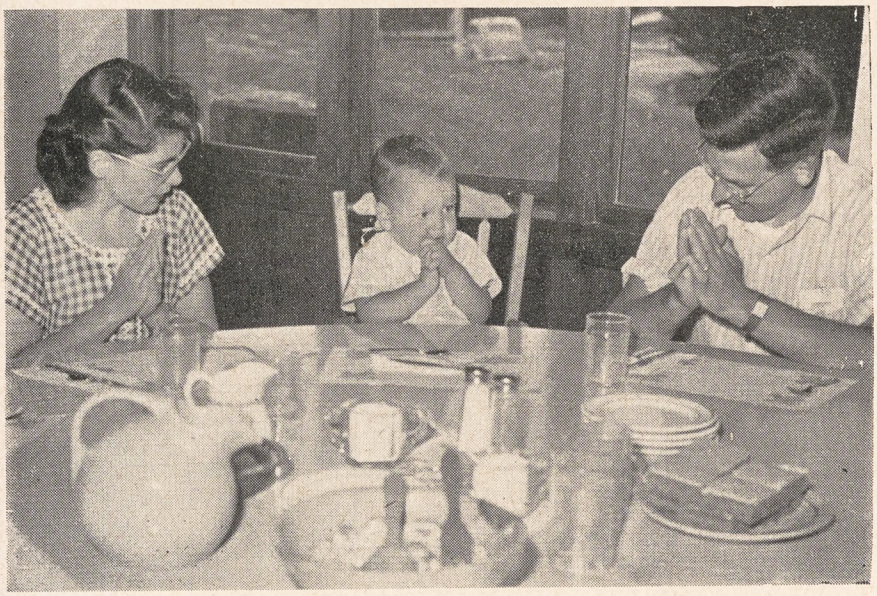
NEWS OF THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH

BISHOP GILBERT IN GROUP FOR "NATION"

★ Lifting of the ban on The Nation, weekly magazine which was excluded from the library lists of New York public schools last July because it published a series of articles allegedly attacking the beliefs of the Roman Catholic Church, was urged by Bishop Gilbert of the Diocese of New York, with 106 other prominent citizens.

Among those signing the request for removal of the ban were religious leaders, educators, writers, publishers and radio commentators.



In a document entitled, "An Appeal to Reason and Conscience," they proposed the following five-point program as offering a basis for the development of a national policy in American education:

"1. No published material which is regarded or could be regarded as objectionable on grounds of faith or creed by any group in the community should on that score alone be excluded from the community's schools and school libraries.

"2. Publication of material of this kind in any publication does not justify the suppression in schools and school libraries of the publication as a whole.

"3. The premise that religion cannot be criticized in education should be rejected.

"4. The test as to suitability of books and periodicals should be an individual test and a decision reached in each case on its merits.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas T. Turnbull of Oakdale, Cal., teach son Tommy to say grace before meals.

"5. In place of permissive lists of books and periodicals there should be substituted an advisory list for the use of public schools and libraries, drafted with the counsel of a group representing the best and most disinterested judgment available, chosen so as to avoid dominance by special interests and expressly protected from special influences, however exercised."

Among others signing the "appeal" were Dr. J. M. Dawson, executive secretary of the Baptist Joint Conference Committee on Public Relations; Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, pastor-emeritus of Riverside church, New York; Dr. John A. Mackay, president of Princeton Theological Seminary; Dr. Clyde R. Miller, chairman of the New York City chapter of the Methodist Federation for Social Action; Dr. Reinhold Niebuhr of Union Theological Seminary, New York; Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of New York; and Dr. Stephen S. Wise, president of the American Jewish Congress.

CHURCH GIVES ORGANIST SCHOLARSHIP AWARD

★ Grace Church, Sandusky, Ohio, recently showed its appreciation of the 20 years' service of their organist and choirmaster, Wesley R. Hartung, with a special service and a scholarship grant. Donald Wonders, Archdeacon of the Diocese of Ohio and former rector of Grace Church; Dr. Henry L. McClellan, and the Rev. Franklin J. Klohn, a former member of the Grace Church choir and now rector of Grace Church, Galion, O. rule of life. At their annual conference clergy of the Diocese of Maryland gave consideration to various forms of a rule presented to them by the diocesan chairman of the commission on evangelism. No fixed rule was accepted for all, but the majority agreed to follow certain broad outlines that each man might adjust on the basis of his own need, previous experience and depth of conviction. By secret ballot and without nominations three presbyters of the diocese were chosen by the clergy to be spiritual directors. They are the Rev. Ernest V. Kennan, the Rev. Philip J. Jensen, and the Rev. Don Frank Fenn. To any of these the clergy choosing to participate will give the pledge of their rule and at each Ember Season will make a report of their efforts.

COLLEGIATE SUPPLEMENT WITH NEW FORTH

★ Newest variant from the established pattern of diocesan editions of Forth is Collegiate-Forth, which makes its appearance with this month's issue of that magazine. It is edited by the Rev. Thomas V. Barrett, chaplain of Kenyon College. It is an eight-page supplement bound with the regular edition of the magazine. Various articles appear concerning college work and student projects. Information is given about the national organization of "Faculty Episcopalians" and of a student work camp.

BISHOP HAINES OPENS $1,000,000 FUND

★ The Diocese of Iowa is beginning a campaign for the Episcopal Advancement Corporation of Iowa with a goal of one million dollars. This is a result of action taken by the diocesan convention last May. The goal is expected to be reached in 1953, when the diocese will observe its centennial. In 1948 it is hoped that $500,000 will be raised with accent on youth indicated by a total allocation of $240,000 for the establishment of adequate student centers at the State University of Iowa, at Grinnell College, and at State Teacher's College. The remainder of the 1948 objective is allocated to St. Katherine's school in Davenport; to St. Monica's school in Des Moines; to the School of Nursing at St. Luke's Hospital, Davenport; to the Bishop Morrison Lodge, training center of the diocese; and for expansion activities to include new churches and the training of a native ministry.

GRACE CHURCH STARTS INTERRACIAL SERIES

★ The Interracial Fellowship of Greater New York held the first of this year's series of eight monthly religious services at Grace Church, New York City. The Rev. Louis Pitt presided. The Rev. Shelton Hale Bishop, of St. Philip's, Harlem, which with a membership of more than 3,000 is the largest negro Episcopal congregation in the country, preached. His topic was "Fellowship in Action in the Meeting of the World Council at Amsterdam." A fellowship hour preceded the service.

CHURCHES HEAR ABOUT HEALING MINISTRY

★ Recently returned from a three-months' trip to Britain, the Rev. John Gayner Banks of the Fellowship of St. Luke reports surprising progress there. He spent ten weeks investigating the work of the various societies and centers of spiritual therapy in Great Britain, integrated through the committee of the Archbishop of Canterbury and known as "The Churches' Council of Healing." Fr. Banks says the greatest center is at Milton Abbey in Dorset, started by the Rev. John Maillard in 1936 and now conducted by the Rev. Geoffrey Harding, M. C., former R. A. F. chaplain, with a large staff to assist him. There are five other healing centers in Britain. The British Medical Association has recently endorsed the church's ministry of healing in Britain.

It is hoped that the American Church will so integrate its work as to earn similar endorsement and cooperation from the A. M. A.

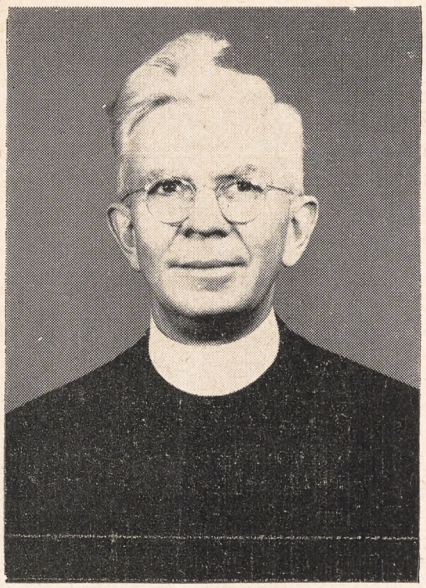
Banks is now engaged on a two-months' itinerary of healing missions. He will tell of the marked advance in Britain and offer a plan for extending this ministry in the U. S. and Canada.

RADIO, PRESS, CHURCHES BOOST PROGRAM

★ The Democrat & Chronicle, Rochester newspaper, ran an unsolicited editorial commending "Great Scenes from Great Plays," the Church's radio program. Rochester people who heard the first program are reported to be enthusiastic about it. St. Paul's Church in Rochester, has announced that it has included in its budget $1,569, which is 3% of the budget. Men of a mission in Rochester gave $100, an amount considered generous for a small mission without a resident priest.

One churchman said, "I can't help but feel that there will be a good response all over the country and that adequate funds will be put in the budgets of enough parishes to see this thing through. I have read 'Finding Your Way' with a great deal of interest. I hope it does a good followup job, and I am sure it will."

One of the responses which have come to the National Council is highly favorable comment from radio stations carrying "Great Scenes from Great Plays." One station director wrote: "I have been interested in religious broadcasting for many years. This particular idea intrigues me because I believe it could possibly have a greater impact on people and better promote the cause of real religion than the conventional type of religious broadcast. I believe the Protestant Episcopal Church will derive a great deal of publicity and benefit from this series of broadcasts, and my only regret is that my own Church did not think of it first."



That came from the south. From the middle west came another letter from the general manager of an important radio station. He said that he is the son of a Congregationalist minister, and is especially interested in the new program. "It will be possible to reach and retain the interest of thousands of people who take their religion for granted. This is by far the best approach to the problem to date."

A moving tribute was paid the Bishop by Dr. Rifenbark, president of the standing committee, citing the Bishop as "friend to all men, a true father-in-God to priests and people, and an executive of rare ability." After the service people greeted the Bishop in the "old crypt" of the Cathedral.

Connecticut Parson Gets Issue Aired

★ The Rev. Robert W. Beggs, minister-in-charge, St. Paul's, Waterville, Conn., questioned the daily "Waterbury American" on its war-like editorial policy regarding Russia and found himself publicly involved in the position taken by the Amsterdam Council on communism and capitalism. Concerned not only for the clarification of the Council's position (which condemned both communism and laissez-faire capitalism) but also for a Christian analysis of the present struggle, Mr. Beggs' letters to the paper evinced five lead editorials and stirred up community interest. As a result of his letters some groups in the city are planning to discuss the church in relation to peace and our economy. Apparently the Waterbury paper took the same stand as the Chicago Tribune a few weeks ago when it attacked the communism-capitalistic report by way of saying that religious leaders ought to be seen and not heard on such issues.

Rebuking the Tribune for its editorial attack, the Chicago Methodist Ministers' Association unanimously agreed that the Tribune had little to give in the way of moral leadership.

When the Waterbury paper took comfort in reproducing Dulles' World Council address on meeting the Russian challenge, Beggs asked that Dean Hromadka's address be printed as well. Quoted from the Witness, Hromadka's words appeared and an editorial as well which made a point of the difference between Soviet profession and performance, as such pieces generally do.

It commented: "After you've recovered from the shock of having communism cited as an exemplification of the Christian ethic . . . you'll understand why the conference arrived at some of its rather surprising general resolutions. But doesn't the gentleman (Hromadka) talk for all the world as if in Russia we had Marxism in its unadulterated form, and as if the economic accomplishments of a Marxist state had put the economic benefits of free enterprise capitalism on the defensive?" (Which is reminiscent of the remarks of John MacMurray, an English Christian, who pointed out some years ago, if that comparison is made then what about the differences between Christian profession and performance?—Ed.). Beggs replied in a subsequent letter that Hromadka shocked his audience "not because he believes that Communism rests on Christian ground, but that the West is losing its spirituality; hence his condemnation of capitalism today." Then he went on to state that the Council report generally indicated a course of silence and safety. "The World Council had a chance to give the world a whole word, not half a word. One hope is that by God's mercy the churches will give the word while there is yet time."

BERKELEY DIVINITY OPENS SEMESTER

★ The Berkeley Divinity School at New Haven, Conn., opened on September 27th, with a record enrollment of 55 students, including an entering class of 21 and two graduate students from the Greek Orthodox Church. Thomas Sparks Cline, as assistant librarian and lecturer in moral theology, and Prof. Wilbur Marshall Urban, as visiting professor of apologetics. The offices, library and classrooms are now established in the recently acquired former English House at 38 Hillhouse Avenue and Williams Hall on Sachem Street provides additional accommodation for students. At evensong on the opening night Dean Urban preached on the opportunities and dangers confronting the theological student. On October 7th the Rev. Harold Jones of the Cheyenne Agency, South Dakota, preached at evensong and spoke after dinner under the auspices of the missionary society of the school.

ECUMENICAL NEWS

World Mission Assembly Meets in Ohio

Sponsored by the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, a World Mission Assembly of more than 3,000 Protestant church leaders met recently in Columbus, Ohio. Its purpose was to plan a joint program for missionary expansion geared to changing economic conditions and political aspirations of many hitherto colonial peoples.

One World in Christ

The Rev. Ralph E. Diffendorfer, secretary of the board of missions and church extension of the Methodist Church, presented a program for missionary extension to be met by the 108 Protestant missionary groups represented by the delegates. It was estimated that missionary expenditures must be doubled within the next five years to meet the changing needs. The program, presented in a forty-four page booklet, entitled "One World in Christ," included physical and spiritual needs. Among them: rural missionary effort through agriculture, health and welfare programs; Christian urban centers developing clinics, cooperatives, and adult education; literacy campaigns such as those of Dr. Frank Laubach; dissemination of the Bible and other literature devoted to community and church needs; studies in student and family life; audio-visual education; medical and public health work; food for famine areas; schools and colleges to be built in cooperation with new government agencies; and technical services for the growth of local industry.

Special Needs

Other missionaries presented special needs. Dr. William Braisted, South China Baptist missionary, said that only one out of every ten thousand gets hospital aid in the South China area. Dr. R. F. Henry, a China relief worker, said: "If we don't feed the hungry, it is potential dynamite." A Congregational Zulu chief, Albert J. Luthuli, member of the native representative council under the British in Natal, South Africa, cited criticisms of missionaries often heard there, such as "Christianity is the vanguard of imperialism," or "the missionaries told us to look up and pray while their countrymen robbed us of our lands."

Methodist Bishop

Earlier, Bishop Oxnam spoke on the relation of Christian missionary effort to economic and political problems of the average citizen of the world. Declaring that the Christian Church must "move in" on economic problems, he said the Church must also aid in propagandizing the belief that "the main purpose of economic life should be the production of what is necessary, useful and beautiful, rather than the acquisition of things. The Church must recognize that hunger has been a fact for centuries and that it is not a task of relief but a problem of re-ordering our economic life so that every man has enough to eat, decent clothing and a place to live."

International Situation

A spokesman for the American Foreign Policy association, Miss Vera M. Dean, told the assembly that the present "international confusion" was largely the responsibility of the United States which had failed, since the war, to define its objectives. According to the Religious News Service, Miss Dean was critical of the United States for "circumventing the United Nations on some occasions" and determining its policy often by "mere reaction to what Russia does or fails to do."

Challenges

Secularism and communism were the subjects of a symposium conducted by the Rev. David A. MacLennan, Toronto clergyman, and Kermit Eby of the University of Chicago, formerly research and education director of the CIO. Mr. MacLennan described secularism as Christianity's "potent and charming enemy." Mr. Eby said that Christianity was offering "platitudes to people who are seeking bread. Sometimes," he said, "I think we spend so much time looking under the beds for Communists that we neglect the tasks at hand. Personally, I would like to have the Communists look under the bed for us for a while."

Stassen Speaks

Harold E. Stassen, president of the University of Pennsylvania, spoke following the symposium. In combatting communism, he stated, Americans must wipe out their own social, economic and racial 'blots,' and avoid smugness and self-righteousness. Stassen received an ovation as he pleaded for the growth of the United Nations, and as he condemned the "outmoded, absolute sovereignty of nations," which he said, "must yield to the concept of the sovereignty of peoples and their delegation of their authority in the manner than can best serve the nations for a just peace." He aso added, "the energetic, sustained expansion of mission programs throughout the world may well serve in an intangible but powerful manner as the implementation by which men find the way to live together in peace."

NEWS OF OTHER CHURCHES

OPERATIC AIRS ARE BARRED

Roman Catholic organists, meeting in convention at Rensselaer, Ind., voted to bar operatic airs from weddings; thus abolishing the wedding march from Wagner's "Lohengrin" and Mendelssohn's wedding march from "Midsummer Night's Dream". They voted also to "banish forever" from church services the singing of Ave Marias by Bach-Gounod, Shubert and Rosewig. At the same time they were told by the director of Catholic Teachers College, Cincinnati, that women "are never allowed to form part of the liturgical choir" in strictly liturgical functions. He allowed however that women might be organists.

SOUTHERN BAPTISTS ON COOPERATION

Southern Baptist pastors in Oklahoma favor cooperation with other denominations on a local scale if doctrinal beliefs are not involved. The national convention of the Church has repeatedly refused to join national or world councils of churches. The survey in Oklahoma revealed that cooperation is most general in civic enterprises, better government campaigns, Thanksgiving and Easter services, and revivals.

ANNIVERSARY MARKED BY UNION SERVICE

The origin of Presbyterians in Philadelphia will be commemorated by a series of events, the first of which will be on October 31 when a plaque marking the 250th anniversary of the denomination there will be unveiled. Largest event scheduled during the anniversary will be a joint popular meeting with Philadelphia Baptists on Nov. 12. Baptists are also celebrating the 250th anniversary of their origin there. Local records show there was an organized Presbyterian congregation in Philadelphia in 1698 which worshipped with Baptists in a warehouse. The First Presbyterian church of Philadelphia claims direct descent from this early congregation.

Presbyterian and Baptist ministers of the two congregations had an arrangement every Sunday whereby one would preach in the morning and the other in the afternoon. The Baptists, following a misunderstanding, later withdrew from the warehouse, which belonged to a trading company chartered by William Penn, and held their services in a brewhouse. (RNS)

EVANGELICAL CHURCH TO STRESS EVANGELISM

Plans for 150 one-day meetings on evangelism have been made by the Evangelical United Brethren General Brotherhood. Twelve teams will conduct the meetings. At the same time it was announced that October 17th will be "men's day" when laymen will be instructed how to lead church services in a more effective manner.

METHODISTS REPORT RECORD SALES

Sales totaling $11,232,564 for the last fiscal year is reported by the Methodist Publishing House, the largest in its history. The publishing house employs 690 persons in its Nashville branch alone, in addition to large numbers in its other 12 offices scattered over the nation.

PROGRESSIVE CHRISTIANS IN CONVENTION

A group that maintains that Christianity and Marxism are not incompatible held their first international meeting in Paris, with delegates from France, Italy, Poland and Belgium, including R. C. priests.

VACATION SCHOOLS ARE FAILURE

Vacation church-schools operated in three city housing projects during the past summer by the New Haven Council of Churches were branded as failures by Mrs. Frank Auld, Jr., schools' director. In a report to the Council, she declared that "the merest name of Jesus, God, or anything of religious nature brought forth jeers and wild yelling." She said that the children, who came from families in the lower-income level, felt no obligation to any authority. "To them," she added, "there is no merit and nothing to be gained by behaving themselves, obeying a teacher, being trustworthy, honest or fair, or in learning anything."

BAPTIST LEADER SEES IMPROVEMENT

Southern Baptist Hugh A. Brimm, following a lecture tour of the South, said that "responsible people want the Negro treated fairly without eggs and tomatoes being thrown." He said further that "the Negro should enjoy the rights granted him under the Constitution, including the right to vote, to serve on juries, to receive justice in the courts, to be free from mob violence and to secure a just share of the benefits of educational and other funds."

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

MOVIE BARRED IN SPAIN

The American movie "Gentleman's Agreement" has been rejected for distribution in Spain by order of the ecclesiastical member of the censorship board of the Franco government. The order stipulated that while it was a Christian duty to "stimulate love among individuals, societies, nations and peoples" this duty should not be extended to Jews. Meanwhile, James A. Farley, former U. S. postmaster general and a leading R. C. layman, had a ninety-minute interview with Franco in Madrid and later told the press that he hopes the U. S. will resume diplomatic relations with Spain in a common stand against Russia. "From my observations," he said, "I would say that Generalissimo Franco could make some very pertinent and worthwhile observations to the leaders of Allied forces."

WARNS OF COMING DEPRESSION

The United Church of Canada was warned by the Rev. J. R. Mutchmor, head of social service, that the country is "utterly unprepared" for depression, and said that the Church ought to urge government to prevent mass unemployment in the near future. He indicated that politicians were aware of the possibility but that "it is not politic or good policy for political parties to raise such questions just now."

ASSURANCE GIVEN CZECHS BY HROMADKA

Dean Josef Hromadka of Prague, and former Princeton professor, who was a headliner at the Amsterdam conference (Witness, Sept. 16), in a press interview on his return, said that the Council is "not going to be used as a weapon against communist-dominated countries. From our point of view this is of great importance, because there are numerous attempts being made to impose on the World Council religious sanctions for a crusade against the East." He said further that delegates at Amsterdam recognized that revolutionary changes are taking place in the social structure and that it is impossible to stop them.

SEVERS TIES ROMANIAN CHURCH

Greek Catholics in Romania have severed their ties with Rome and have joined with the Romanian Orthodox Church. The announcement said that 36 priests and 2 archpriests of the Byzantine Church, representing 423 priests of their rite, had on Oct. 1 voted unanimously to submit a petition for reunion with the Orthodox. At the same time an appeal was sent to the Uniates to accept this decision. The Byzantine Church has 1,725 churches and more than 700 priests and about a million and a quarter communicants.

FINNISH RELIGIOUS BROADCASTS

Religious broadcasts in Finland have remained at almost full volume despite the fact that the Finnish broadcasting corporation, a state monopoly, was placed under communist control four years ago. Programs are aired in both Finnish and Swedish. A survey shows that in the period from 1944 to 1947, time allotted to religious programs in Finnish dropped by only 25 from the top total of 229 hours before Mrs. Hella Vuolijoki, communist author, was appointed director of the government-controlled broadcasting corporation.

ANIMALS ATTEND CHURCH

St. Francis of Assisi extended brotherhood to animals. So the Rev. L. J. B. Snell, rector at Hereford, England, asked his young parishioners to bring their pets to church. There were dozens of cats and kittens, a sun fish, ducks, chickens and guinea pigs, dogs, a lamb, a white mouse, and 20 horses who, unfortunately, were compelled to remain outside. Rector Snell told the children that "animals and birds are a part of God's creation and there is nothing contrary to our Christian religion in the belief that our pets will live hereafter."

VATICAN RELATIONS WITH RUSSIA

The official paper of the Vatican has stated that, while opposed to communism, the Holy See is willing to enter into friendly relations with the Soviet Union "as soon as possible." It stressed that the conditions for an understanding with Russia are the same as those applicable to other nations: full freedom for the R. C. Church to carry on its religious ministry, to operate schools, and to engage in religious propaganda.

CHURCH LEADERS SENTENCED

Lutheran Bishop Lajos Ordass was sentenced in Budapest by a workers' court to two years imprisonment on charges of receiving remittances from American Lutherans without clearing them through the national bank of Hungary. Condemned to three years on the same charges was Alexander Varga, general secretary of the Lutheran Church in that country.

EDITORIALS

The Fatherly Approach

A statement issued by Congressman Rees (R., Kansas) recently, attacks the ruling of the Federal Communications Commission that a radio station which gives time free for religious broadcasting will lose its license unless it also allows time to atheists. This decision is based on the precedent of the similar one directing radio stations to give equal free time to all political parties.

It is true that the number of militant atheists in this country is infinitesimal. Most agnostics are that way because of mental inertia; and it is the physical weariness of most people, rather than any thought on the matter, that makes them fail to join a church and learn its faith and the reason for it. Perhaps most radio stations fear that few would listen to such a program, and it would not be worth the wrath of the narrow minded. But the principle of freedom of speech must be considered.

"Freedom of worship and speech," says Congressman Rees, "do not justify allowing a radio broadcast of slanderous statements regarding our Creator." He has evidently not heard of the practical Arab observation of what happens to the eye of a man who spits at heaven. We feel it is mistaken piety, a sort of reverent blasphemy, to describe the Creator as one who must be defended from calumny. We are sorry for atheists, but perhaps a broadcast of this sort might rouse some agnostics from their intellectual slumber, and would prove a help to evangelism.

"On the basis of this reasoning," complains the Congressman, "one could incite revolution." And precisely there is where one must take him seriously. Undoubtedly he is a sincere, scrupulous man, but his line of thought is one which leads to state control of the Church. Protectors too often become reformers or dictators, as Rome learned when she had given the promising young King Henry VIII of England the title "Defender of the Faith."

Some people would arrogate the same title to themselves. They are willing to hate all atheists, especially Russians, and the Church in gratitude for this must hate all Russians too. "Do you love the Russians more than you do God?" one of them has said, forgetting the fatherhood of God. General Franco in Spain said about the same thing, and now the Spanish Church, which is almost his private property, has banned the film "Gentleman's Agreement" on the grounds that "we ask the Lord to humiliate the enemies of His Holy Church, and as such might Jews be considered!"

The well-meant loyalty of Congressman Rees is the kind of thing that can too easily be used by men less scrupulous than he is, and that can be very unfortunate indeed. It all reminds one of the old-fashioned melodrama, where the villain offers the simple heroine a ride in his carriage. He points out the fact that it is snowing, and delicately suggests that she might not like to walk past the ruffians on the corner. Once he has her seated beside him, he puts his arm around her, lest the seat be too hard, or she feel the cold, and then—but the rest is too awful. We feel obliged to call out to the Church, like some agonizing young member of the audience: "Watch out, Miss! Don't go along with him!"

"QUOTES"

PEACE of body is the well-ordered disposal of the parts thereof. Peace of the unreasonable soul is the well-ordered rest of its appetites. Peace of the reasonable soul is a well-ordered harmony between knowledge and conduct. Peace of body and soul alike is the well-ordered life and good estate of the entire creature. Peace of mortal man with immortal God is well-ordered obedience, performed in faith, unto his eternal law. Peace of man with man is a well-ordered concord. Peace of the family is a well-ordered concord between its members as touching rule and obedience. Peace of a city, the well-ordered concord of the citizens. Peace of the City of God, a well-ordered concord in God, for the enjoyment of God.

—ST. AUGUSTINE

We Too Will Learn

THERE is a layman of the Christian Reformed Church, a son of a minister of that denomination, who visited Holland this summer, returning to his land of birth after seventeen years absence. He says that when he came originally to this country, there was no difference in the preaching in his church here and in Holland. But now, he was astounded in the change, and agreeably. For he discovered that in Holland the dominies are now dealing with the living political and social issues, relating Christian theology to them. In addition, they are active in programs of Christian unity. As he spoke of these things, he surmised that most of the daughter Churches of Europe in this country probably could not have a live gospel until they had undergone the experience of the members of the mother Churches. His analysis was that these latter Churches are no longer made up of middle-class people, since the war has forced almost all people into the economic insecurity which has usually characterized just the lower classes. This same fact was unconsciously affirmed by one of the Americans at Lambeth who bemoaned the fact that the Archbishop of Canterbury could only possess one black suit, and Mrs. Fisher could not buy napkins any more than the commonest of people, because of the ration system,

Many Americans have been surprised that the Amsterdam meeting of the World Council condemned capitalism, along with communism, as economic systems that could not fulfill their promises. Such statements spring from Christians who are living under conditions brought on by the failure of capitalism. They know that the Churches must seek new directions for the organization of economic life, for the old will not work. The abundant resources of this country still allow the highest standard of living, and so it is possible for Americans to be fairly successfully propagandized that capitalism is the "source from whence all our blessings flow." Some questionings of the doctrine do arise when free enterprise capitalism turns into monopolistic capitalism which so controls the price of milk that millions are unable to buy sufficient quantities. But as long as there is land, its minerals, and its water to exploit, and some of the blessings trickle down to a majority of our people, capitalism will appear to be the true economic way of life. But when failure comes our eyes will be opened, since we will all then be insecure. When this happens we will no longer wonder at European Christians seeking new directives, but will join them in seeking to regulate the common life more in accordance with the divine will.

America's Iron Curtain

By Robert Findlay Thomas

Rector of Christ Church, Point Pleasant, W. Va.

IT is more popular right now to draw apprehensive attention to the Communist "iron curtain" that prevails in eastern Europe than it is to draw attention to inconsistencies in our western democracy. But there are inconsistencies in the latter to which the Church is bound to draw attention because they are irreconcilable with the Christian gospel, and because they flout the revealed will of God. One such inconsistency in our American democracy is the iron curtain of racial discrimination.

"There cannot be Jew and Greek, slave and free man, male and female; you all are one in Christ Jesus." (Galatians 3.28) As this text implies, Christianity recognizes no distinction of race. Racial intolerance and discrimination are not only un-Christian; they are anti-Christian. As attitudes on the part of a Christian person they are an utter anomaly.

From its very beginning in the world, Christianity has had to struggle against the iron curtain of racial bigotry. Such bigotry prevailed among our Lord's contemporaries. The Jews despised Gentiles. The Jews despised Samaritans, a hybrid race; Christ was thought eccentric by his disciples when he stopped to chat with the Samaritan woman at the well. Racial prejudice flared in the infant Church, where there was objection to the initiation of Gentiles into the Christian fellowship, at least before they had first become converts to Judaism; and even then it was doubted that they should or could occupy quite as high a position in the Christian fellowship as those who were Jews by birth. One wonders how present-day white American Gentiles would have liked to be the victims of that discrimination!

But let us return to modern America and to the most important (but not the only) of our racial problems—the relation of Negroes to our social order. The plight of the American Negro remains one which should make us conscious of national shame. If any white Christian man or woman fails to feel that shame, he or she is an ignorant Christian indeed. Enlightened Christians will want to do something to help remove from what we rather unctuously call our "democracy" the shameful blot of racial inequality.

Let us consider, however, a few points which complicate the problem, necessarily postpone a complete solution, and make an easy solution impossible.

An Unconverted Society

First, there is the general difficulty of trying to force Christian ideals upon a largely unconverted society. Pride—national, racial, family, and personal—is an enormously popular human sin; and a lot of white people who haven't anything else to be proud of are inordinately proud of being white people, although it is hard to see upon what grounds, since they themselves had nothing whatever to do with choosing the race into which they were born. Right or wrong, they aren't going to relinquish that pride simply because it conflicts with a doctrine of the Christian religion—not unless they first are truly converted to Christianity itself; and even then they will not readily or easily relinquish their prejudices.

Another difficulty is the complacent self-righteousness of some people in the north who fail to understand that the oppression of the Negro in the south has been, and is, inextricably linked with the economic exploitation of the south as a whole by the north. Such people sanctimoniously speak of racial inequality in the south as though it were merely an evil and not also a problem. Often they fail to realize that it is one thing to be tolerant of one Negro neighbor in Vermont, but another thing to be tolerant of Negroes who, in some sections of southern states, outnumber whites.

Nor should the pot call the kettle black: it is significant that, in Kingsblood Royal, Sinclair Lewis' novel about the vicious intolerance of which white people can be capable, the scene is laid not in Alabama or Mississippi, but in a north-middle western state.

Only a misguided fanatic would recommend the immediate elimination of all forms of segregation. In the deep south the sudden end of certain forms of segregation doubtless would mean civil war. That is not a pretty commentary on our American way of life, but it is a realistic one. We are not yet a century removed from the end of the crime of slavery, and it will take much more than a century to eradicate the effects of that crime. Those effects have become woven into the very fabric of southern culture, if not into the very fabric of the southern mind, and they also have become woven—in bitterness—into the Negro's own race-consciousness. Considering everything, in fact, it is rather surprising the progress which has been made in the emancipation of the Negro, north and south, especially the progress the Negro himself has made in his own cultural and economic advancement.

What Christian people (if no one else) must realize is that that progress has been made only because there were those who were not satisfied to tolerate the evils of conditions as they found them. We must realize that the oppression of the Negro is a sin in which we all share—a national sin, which somehow we must work ourselves out of; and of course no one knows exactly how we shall do that. It will have to be done by trial and error, and with considerable patience, forbearance, and wisdom on the part of all concerned.

Freedom Is Limited

MEANWHILE, about one matter we may as well be frank: the distinction some try to make between discrimination and mere "segregation" is fiction. Segregated Negroes have privileges and opportunities equal to those whites have only in theory; seldom in fact. For instance, do Colored children in most southern communities have school facilities equal to those white children have? Actually the Negro's freedom under segregation is severely limited, especially his freedom in moving from one place to another. And in each new place to which he does move he painstakingly must learn in just what ways and in what places the iron curtain falls in that particular community.

Isn't it true that Negroes themselves prefer segregation? Well, suppose you, my white reader, were a well-bred, educated, refined Negro; a person, that is, superior in every measurable way (unless you actually attribute some mysterious virtue to the chemical pigment of your skin) to nine-tenths of the white people in this country; and suppose you were traveling with your family. Would you prefer to be turned away from the only clean hotel in town? From the only clean restaurant? Or perhaps from all the hotels and tourist homes in a town in which the exigencies of travel literally forced you and your family to spend the night? Segregation should be judged by the way it actually works out, not by the theorizing of those who defend it.

In our recent war against Japan and Germany we made a great and noisy pretense of fighting to destroy the Nazi practice of racial discrimination and the Nazi doctrine of a super-race. But while with our right hand we were doing that, with our left hand we were, and are, maintaining our own system of discrimination, and our own master-race myth. Now we evidently are preparing to fight another world war—this time against Communism, and in defense of what we call "human freedom." Does our American brand of human freedom include the Klu Klux Klan and its use of the weapon of terror and intimidation to deprive Negroes of their constitutional right to vote? If it does, then this prospective war will not be in defense of a Christian social order; it will be in defense of a social system which is merely the lesser of two evils.

Labor unions, and—more significantly—Communists, in recent years have been conspicuous in championing the civil rights of American Negroes. If the Church more courageously had championed the rights of that disinherited minority in the past, Communists would have that much less of a talking point today. For now it appears obvious, even to the most obtuse, that we are going forward in one of three directions: toward chaos; toward Communism; or else, for the first time, toward a Christian social order. Assuredly we are not going back to our snug little world of hypocrisy where the rabble-rousing gospel of white supremacy idiotically is mouthed by the Senator Claghorns of real-life!

Our Duty as Christians

WHAT is our individual and corporate duty as Christians and churchmen in connection with the problem we have been discussing? It is, first, to work steadily and patiently for the elimination of racial inequality from American life; and that primarily because it is God's will and part of the Christian gospel, but incidentally because it will cut an important part of the propaganda platform out from under the Kremlin.

Second, it is our duty to eliminate now—and completely—racial discrimination within the Church itself. That does not mean that there should not be predominantly white or preponderantly Negro congregations based upon the geographical convenience of people already segregated. It does mean that no person should be made to feel either unwelcome or segregated in any Christian church into which upon any occasion he should happen to go; it does mean that the iron curtain of racial discrimination must not fall across the fellowship of God (not even those silk-glove versions of the iron curtain wherein Negroes are segregated in certain pews at public worship or are secluded from certain parochial organizations or activities). How indeed can the Church strive to make society as a whole more Christian unless the Church herself is at least several steps ahead of secular society in conversion to what we are clearly taught is the mind of Christ?

Ghandi and the Negro

Early in the present century Mohandas K. Ghandi, educated in England, was a prosperous young lawyer practicing in Bombay, India, to the tune of about $25,000 a year. Hearing that native laborers in South Africa were being unjustly treated, and that no white lawyer cared enough to take up their cause, Ghandi unselfishly sacrificed his very lucrative law practice in Bombay, and went to South Africa to plead in court the case of the native laborers. While there, Ghandi, who had been reared in Hinduism, one Sunday open-mindedly went to a Christian church. At the door he was told, "This church is not open to niggers." Mr. Ghandi, of course, was not an African Negro. He was a dark-skinned native of India (and an alumnus of Oxford). But one supposes that such a distinction is beyond the limited comprehension of a person who in the first place would refer to other human beings as "niggers." Anyhow, Ghandi vowed then and there he never again would attempt to enter a Christian church. He lived to become the leader and idol—finally the martyred idol—of the second most populous nation on earth. He never again did attempt to enter a Christian church. But has there been in our lifetime a Christian man or woman anywhere in the world—black, brown, red, white, or yellow—who achieved, or who has achieved, the spiritual maturity and power and selflessness of that devout Hindu?

Suppose in his young manhood Mohandas Gandhi had been welcomed in a Christian church, and as a result had become converted to the Christian faith. How many millions, or tens of millions, in India ultimately would have followed Gandhi into the Christian fellowship? What difference might that by this time have made in the political situation in India? In the present relative strength of the British Empire? In the counsels of the United Nations? In the very fate of our world?

By all means let us do as we personally wish in our own houses. But let us remember that the Church is God's house. In God's house, in God's family, in God's sight, there are no iron curtains of racial discrimination or segregation; there just aren't any Jews or Greeks; or Caucasians, or Negroes, or Asiatics. There are only human beings, all of whom alike are sinners, all of whom alike need a divine Saviour.

And from that Saviour, if racial barriers do count, most of my readers as well as the present writer presumably would forever be separated. For in his human life Jesus Christ was not a western white Gentile. He was an oriental Jew, whose skin was preceptibly darker than ours is.

Blanchard and Gehan

BY THOMAS V. BARRETT
Chaplain at Kenyon College

WHEN we set out to look at the Church's college work, the middle west seemed a good place to begin. We were brought up in New England, but there is something about a college campus in Indiana or Iowa in the autumn that's hard to beat. Hazy, golden, cidery, BIG-Ten-Football-Middle-West!

After two or three razzle-dazzle Saturday afternoons, we turned south into Missouri, and visited Columbia. We were met half-way between the University of Missouri and swank Stephens College by the student Chaplain Roger Blanchard. Roger always makes us feel as though we ought to be in bed taking very light nourishment. His six-feet-three-inches of fantastic energy, brains, and jovial zeal swarms all over the city. We were swept to a football game—(not up to Big Ten Atomic War)—rushed to a post-game tea to meet some fifty students, whisked to dinner, pushed to the student center for informal conversation until 10:30, and hurled into bed exhausted. Sunday was almost our Waterloo. We preached at four services, being given enough time after each one to rush from front door fellowship to the end of the next choir procession. Stephens girls are required to attend Church somewhere. Roger, with beaming good looks, thoughtful, straight-forward sermons, and the vitality of a tornado, makes the Episcopal Church better than somewhere. Students from the University accept the choice of Stephens' girls and quickly accept Roger as their friend, pastor, and adviser on intellectual problems.

After four services, Roger and his U. T. O. worker Louise Gehan (who has a voice like a bass viol, and the Christian virtues of humor, good judgment, and understanding) took us out to dinner, but we were so debilitated that we fell asleep over the roast beef. Canterbury Club meets Sunday nights, one hundred strong. We gave them another speech, our last one in the barrel and after discussion on matters of education and theology, they let us retire to the sidelines. Fortified with three cokes, we sat under blankets and watched the young ones dance. After that we finished off the evening with a meditation given in a hoarse voice to a group of female students in a dormitory parlor. On Monday we spoke to a meeting of Roger's Mens' Club (including faculty and townsmen) and then made for the train. Blanchard thrives on this sort of circus, but we were glad to get out of town.

The work in Columbia is supported by the parish, which has grown along with the student work to a full time job in itself. (One vestryman whimsically complains he doesn't like Church any more because it's so hard to get a seat.) The diocese of Missouri is making available an assistant rector this fall. The Woman's Auxiliary through the United Thank Offering pays Louise Gehan's salary.

In between innings Roger acts as college work secretary for the seventh province, a small tract of land which includes Kansas, New Mexico, Texas and other outlying regions. As we headed northward from St. Louis we had time to reflect that given top-flight personnel, some money, and a proper location, (dead center between two large institutions) the Episcopal Church can do a superb job with students and faculty. Blanchard and Gehan's greatest assets: Incredible enthusiasm, intellectual honesty, good, old fashioned care for people, understanding of that curious mixture—the collegiate mind. There will be some Christian citizens coming out of the schools in Columbia, Missouri.

The Egg and Mr. Wallace

BY JOHN ELLIS LARGE
Rector of St. Andrew's, Wilmington

WE snarl at dictatorships and are smugly proud of our democracy. But too many of us have forgotten the priceless heritage of Voltaire's democratic words: "I disagree entirely with what you say, but I will fight to the death for your right to say it!" Now I hold no brief whatsoever for Henry Wallace's political beliefs. Nor am I going to hide behind the plea that a practicing Christian—for many years a devout communicant of St. Agnes' Episcopal Church in Washington—deserves better treatment at the hands of his allegedly Christian brethren.

What happened to Mr. Wallace on his Southern campaign tour shouldn't have happened to a mongrel dog. The eggs which splattered against Henry Wallace and befouled him, also befouled those who threw them. That's the tragic point. It's not hard to imagine what Europeans—outside the Iron Curtain as well as inside it—think of that highly-touted American institution, "freedom of speech," now that they've heard of the treatment accorded the Progressive candidate by fellow-Americans. If Mr. Wallace is a confused and deluded man, as I think he is, then his very confusion will engineer his downfall. Ripe eggs and assorted fruits and vegetables are not a required part of the recipe. At least not in America. Or so we had supposed.

God help Americans when they feel they have to use totalitarian tools! It's a sad day for democracy when we have to use slander, vicious name-calling, and general vilification against our neighbor, just because we don't happen to agree with him. As a much-needed act of penance, I suggest that our egg-hurling brethren take a look at the 15th Psalm. "Lord, who shall dwell in thy tabernacle, or who shall rest upon thy holy hill? . . . Even he that hath used no deceit in his tongue, nor done evil to his neighbor, and hath not slandered his neighbor."

Responsibility

BY GEORGE I. HILLER

Rector of Trinity, Miami

THOUGH you teem with ability and lack a sense of responsibility, it profiteth you nothing. From the largest to the smallest organization there is an incessant demand for responsibility.

A man well endowed with this world's goods, and who fails to see that his brother has need, or who has no feeling of social responsibility, is blind or behaving like an ostrich. By his actions he deliberately courts the downfall of the social order, which has given him his place, and permits him to enjoy the luxuries of life. While the group of men who think they can wrest power, privilege, and luxury from society by destroying the existing social order, are equally blind, because in such a struggle they destroy the very thing they covet.

As citizens, Christians, either rich or poor, privileged, or underprivileged, the saving grace is a sense of responsibility.

All this is true in a big way in our world today. It is also true in every organization. We have a responsibility not only for their financial support, but a responsibility to render personal service and individual leadership. Many often speak carelessly of "our city" or "my country" or "my parish" or "our Church." Possession of anything entails responsibility. "Rights" belong only to the man who is right.

One is amazed at the great number of people who will accept positions of leadership, titles, or honors, and who seemingly never see that these things are fraught with responsibility. There is a growing tendency to take it for granted that any organization which has its purpose clearly stated in its charter or by-laws will automatically attain that purpose. This is ridiculous. There must be a real corporate and individual sense of responsibility.

It is the old parable of the talents. Whether we have much or little is the measure of our responsibility. Faithfulness to that responsibility is the gauge of our commendation, or of our failure.

Mighty Right

BY PHILIP J. STEINMETZ

IT makes us mad when we read of brutality. But brutality is the inevitable fruit of the faith that "might makes right." In a mild form we practice it when we thrash our children in an effort to convince them that what we tell them is right and what they are doing is wrong. In another form we support it by failing to protest the use of such terms as "labor agitators" and "Communist unions" far more frequently than those of "company thugs" or "fascist executives." The weight of power being on the side of owners, we often conclude that they are in the right and assent to police violence in "protection of their rights."

The Christian faith proclaims that right is mightier than might. The testimony of the apostles was to that effect. They proclaimed the truth "Jesus is Lord" despite threats and acts of police violence. Their testimony lives today, recognized as truth, long after the structure of the mighty civilization which tried to crush them has collapsed.

In the modern struggles victory is to those who hold fact to God's truth, power politics and public opinion to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Koumintang

BY GENERAL J. W. STILWELL

THE Chinese government is a structure based on fear and favor, in the hands of an ignorant, arbitrary, stubborn man. It is interlaced with family and financial ties and influences, which could easily tear it to pieces if pulled out. Faced with emergency, it has no alternative but to go on, and none of these interlocking interests predominate to the extent that any one of them could take over and clean house, even if the necessary patriotism were present, which it isn't. Only outside influences can do anything for China—either enemy action will smash her or some regenerative idea must be formed and put into effect at once.

THE NEW BOOKS

Excellent Good *Fair

* * * God Was in Christ by D. M. Baillie. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.75

The professor of systematic theology in the University of St. Andrews gives as complete a summary of the several schools of Christology now existing, as can be found. As in most other fields, present day doctrines of the Incarnation are marked extremes. As a reaction to the former emphasis on "the Jesus of history," some theologians are ready to disregard the gospels entirely in forming their Christological theories. The problem of the two natures approaches modalism in Barth, while the English theologians are proving themselves to be the modern heirs of the Cappadocian Fathers. Fortunately we have the "paradox" in which we can leave all the problems nicely unsolved. This is a modern word for "mystery" which shares the sense of insolubility with the former term, but lacks that humility of that one, stressing rather the tension of modern times.

* * The Grand Inquisitor by Fyodor Distoevsky, translated by Constance Garnett with reflections on the story by William Hubben. Association Press. $1.50.

Again a Haddam House Book, a product of a publishing project to provide religious literature for youth, rings the bell. Few young people will take the time and trouble to read "Brothers Karamazov" thoroughly with the amount of concentration needed in order to take the full value from the work. Indeed there is so much in that Russian novel to arouse the reader's interest and thought that by the very mass of it, gems like the projected poem of The Great Inquisitor do not register on the mind with full force. One who has long experienced "Brothers Karamazov" and the other works of Dostoevsky will find new joy in reading this one section taken out and presented as a prose poem of profound insight.

* * Pilgrim's Progress by John Bunyan. Macmillan Co. $3.75.

One can hardly evaluate such standard volumes as those reviewed today. The only suggestion that a critic can make is in regard to the format in which the volume is presented and its usefulness today. Often reprints sell for a reduced price, but that is hardly the case with this volume. The book is beautifully printed and while the illustrations seem a little on the modern side, they are probably just right for the modern sophisticated child.

Incidentally, have you ever tried using Pilgrim's Progress as the sourcebook for a series of talks to the children's service, or at the time of the children's talk at the family service? If you try it keep close to Bunyan's account, allegorize and moralize to your heart's content, and always stop the story with Christian in a particularly perilous predicament.

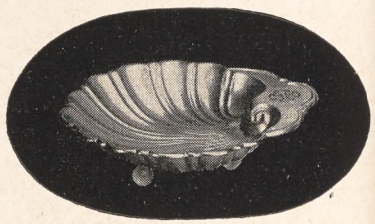
THE PRESS

Commonweal (R. C.)—Secularism has fashioned our idea of the Church. We still think and talk of it as a bureau; as an organization. We see its strength in numbers and in Catholics in high places—political and economic—rather than in the Holy Spirit moulding individuals and institutions. We see it less as Christ, extending himself in men and women, living in them his divine life, than we do as a series of political and economic states which we have come to call Christendom. We see it less as the living Christ to be saved from men than as real estate and buildings to be preserved against revolution. We give the impression that our fear of Communism is a concern for the Church as an organization, rather than a fear for the lives and heritage of the people.

Union Herald (Pres.)—In plain words, we ministers do not entrust our young people with more responsibilities because we are realists. We know from bitter experience what happens when we completely turn over meetings, programs and leadership to them. As a rule, they are lazy, incompetent and undependable!

Of course, young people today are basically no different than they have ever been. They have talents and possibilities equally as great. They are as easily molded and trained as ever. They are just as lovable and attractive. But they have lazy, incompetent, undependable parents and guardians and they are exact replicas of them. The exceptions prove the rule, too. Where you find fine, upstanding, dependable Christian young people, you will almost invariably find that they came from active, interested, sensitive Christian homes, or that they are backed by one or more active, interested, sensitive Christian adults.



Christian Century (Undenom.)—How shall we interpret this movement (the revolt of Southern Democrats)? Shall we put it down solely to evil men who enjoy certain privileges at the expense of their fellow men and are resolved to keep them "in their place" lest their own privileges be taken away? Some extremists hold that this is the case. But those who are closer to the scene have a more realistic understanding of the situation.

The fundamental fact to be remembered is this: The south is a tremendous reservoir of frustration and hysteria which, created by defeat in the Civil War and the unbelievable suffering following it—for which there never was any ameliorating Marshall plan—and fed by the continuing "colonization" of the region by outside financal interests, has been dammed up here for almost a century. This is a condition of psychological and social maladjustment so complex that no brief sketch can do it justice. It has to be experienced to be understood. Undoubtedly there have been economic and political tributaries to this reservoir of frustration. But its primary source is a feeling of inferiority, insecurity and fear. For this there is no quick and easy cure. Its allies are poverty and ignorance. It can be done away in time through sympathy, understanding and persevering patience.

United Presbyterian — Talking of evangelism, studying methods of winning men for Christ, or even preaching evangelistic sermons—this is not winning men, whether we be laymen or ministers. A minister preached a powerful appeal to his congregation to establish a family altar in every home. Much moved by the sermon, one of his members at the close of the service asked him how he conducted family prayers in his own family, and with a blush of shame the minister had to confess that he had no family altar in his own home. It is a temptation to a minister to feel that if he has preached a thing he has done that thing.

Churchman (P. E.)—More than any other Protestant denomination in America, the Methodists know the value of the church press. Perhaps that is one reason the Methodists added over a million new members to their communion in one year while the Protestant Episcopal Church added fifteen thousand.

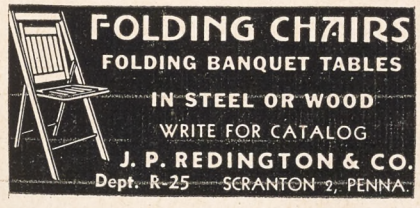
CHURCH AND DRAMATIC ARTS

BY

BY W. B. SPOFFORD, JR.



ARNOLD Toynbee has shown that when civilizations collapse they do so as much from internal deterioration as from external pressure. While the pagan, but positive, Gauls were making tentative forays into the Roman empire, the glory that was Rome was being reduced to a pattern of bread and circuses. From any ethical standpoint, whether Christian, Stoical or Epicurean, Rome had lost its meaning. The rich, looking down from their gold-encrusted houses on the seven hills, saw the mass population seduced into lethargy by the beneficent handouts they were given in terms of free bread and gladiatorial shows. This wasn't planned social security, motivated by a concern for the plight of the poor. Rather, it was a callous, cold-blooded attempt to stifle the organization of any retributive revolution.

This magazine has, continually, pointed out the moral defects in our contemporary culture. A new symptom, which has achieved plague proportions, has irked and worried us lately. Apparently, it is the modern manifestation of Rome's bread and circuses. It is, of course, the get-rich-quick, give-away shows on the radio and theatre stages. The jack-pots are getting bigger and bigger. And, according to figures in various radio journals, the audiences are getting larger by leaps and bounds with each eager member praying that the magic wand might tap his shoulder and make him "Stop the Music" or a "King or Queen for a Day" or something else equally asinine.

By now, you probably know that that very intelligent comedian, Fred Allen, has taken out an insurance policy to cover the losses incurred by any persons who might choose to listen to him on Sunday evening rather than to one of these etherial gold-mines. Which means, simply, that even Fred Allen has to enter into the give-away racket to hold his clientele.

The eagerness with which so many people huddle around their radio sets with the get-rich-quick dream dancing in their heads should make us pause. The Church has, consistently, condemned gambling as manifested in terms of Bingo games and other penny ante games. The entertainment world, however, has now put our people into the big-time. It is a big-time without shady characters wearing checked vests, smoking long cigars and talking quietly out of the corner of their mouths.

The Federal Communications Commission is seeking ways to stifle this plague. Undoubtedly, it is subjected to much pressure to lay off. The Church, which looks on gambling as anathema and which has a deep concern over good, legitimate entertainment, should speak out often and loud against this whole obnoxious trend and throw its weight behind the F.C.C.

Wallace Urges Full Separation Of Church, State

Basic Way to Safeguard All Religious Freedoms, He Says; Condemns Spirit of 'Holy War'

New York—Standing firmly on the democratic principle of complete separation of church and state, Henry A. Wallace, Progressive Party candidate for President, pointedly is warning Americans throughout the nation that it is the fundamental step toward preservation of our religious freedoms.

It is noteworthy that the Progressive Party is the only political party in the nation which has incorporated this demand in its platform pledges.

● To strengthen this separation of church and state, which in recent years has shown signs of weakening, Mr. Wallace has committed himself to four major points: protection of traditional American secular education; use of public funds for public schools only and not for sectarian institutions; ending of diplomatic relations with the head of any religious body; opposition to any attempt to involve America in a holy war.

● Confident that this program has the support of the overwhelming majority of the American people, the Progressive Party is urging all voters to support its fight for peace, its demands that the United Nations be made stronger, its proposals that negotiations be resumed with Russia, its efforts to repeal peace-time draft laws and end peace-time armament building.

● Readers are urged to send contributions to enable Mr. Wallace to reach the entire nation with this program by radio and through literature. The coupon below is provided for your convenience.

GOOD IDEA

BABY SITTERS are provided for services and church functions at the Methodist Church at Parchment, Michigan. It all started when a reception was planned for new members. Since the community has a large number of young couples with babies, it was realized that some plan had to be devised to enable them to attend. The Sunday before the reception the minister, the Rev. James R. Pollock, announced that baby-sitters would be provided, knowing that he could count on the members of the young people's organization. Scores of them volunteered, figuring that here was a way for them to serve their church. So, in the words of the pastor's wife: "Here's a formula for saving this generation of youthful parents from slovenly regard for the church. Offer a baby-sitting service whenever there are special meetings, Bible classes, parents' forums, etc., that are especially slanted for this age group. If they know we are interested enough in their presence to offer our sitting services free, how can they turn us down?" She further reports that in a previous parish, where there were a considerable number of elderly people, they also serve as baby-sitters for the young parents.

LEND-LEASE: A mission in the far west, recently organized, wants fifty hymnals, preferably with music. It will be glad to have either the 1940 hymnal or the old hymnal. The vicar wrote for the copies announced in the last number but unfortunately they had gone to an eastern mission before his letter was received. Please do not send material to The Witness; merely tell us what you have that you will give to another church, or what your own needs are, and as in the case with Get-Together, we will do our best to bring the need and the supply together.

Letters are to be addressed to The Witness, 135 Liberty St., New York 6, N. Y.

GET-TOGETHER: There are a number of parishes in our files who are looking for a new rector. Likewise a considerable number of clergymen have written to inform us that they seek new positions. It is the hope of this department to be of service in bringing the two together. However it is necessary for us to stress that there are definite rules that must be followed, first in the interest of fairness, and second, because we are limited as far as office workers are concerned.

In the past week we have received telegrams from a number of clergymen asking us to "wire collect the name of the parish in the midwest desiring a rector." If we sent such wires it would clearly be unfair to other clergymen who also have indicated interest in the parish. Therefore all that we can do is to send, at regular intervals, the names (and what records we receive) of the men interested in the parish to the clerk of the vestry. We also will send at intervals to all those clergymen seeking positions the names of parishes wanting rectors, with whatever details are at our disposal. We hope this will be considered fair to all concerned. We are not running an employment agency. We do want the department however to be of service to both rectors and to parishes and we will do our best to make it so.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

MRS. C. E. MAIMANN
Churchwoman of Lompoc, Calif.

I wrote you previously something of the struggle to live on a retired clergyman's pension, but do you think it really does any good to express one's opinion? Several have already done so in Backfire but I am afraid those in control of Church affairs are much like the members of the 80th Congress—they are living well so are not interested in the struggles of "little people." It gets more difficult as prices continue to rise but I am thankful that so far we have not been hungry exactly, but if we have a $5 plumbing bill it is a major catastrophe as there are simply no $5 left out of $83.34 (don't forget the 34c) when two people try to live on it and pay $17.60 a month on the house, plus insurance and taxes.

MR. GUY FRANCIS
Layman of Port Orange, Fla.

Can any of your readers give me information on the extent to which the rotating vestry system works successfully — that is, its advantages and disadvantages. I am trying to induce our parish to adopt it, believing that it is a small step toward more democracy in church affairs. I would like to know of several parishes which have adopted the system and used it for a number of years.

Also I would like to suggest as a good subject for an article by someone who knows something about it, the improvement of democratic participation in parish business by the rotating vestry and also by an improved type of parish meeting. All parish meetings I have ever attended have been dull, routine affairs concerned only with hearing reports and approving a previously prepared slate of vestrymen. I would like to see someone describe a parish meeting in which the members really got agitated about how best to carry out the Lord's business.

MR. S. T. CAIN
Churchman of Boston

The number devoted to the Church Society for College Work (Sept. 23) was excellent. I liked particularly the report by David Cochran of the University of Washington who so realistically presented the problems that face a chaplain in a state university. It was refreshing to read the account by a man who does not think, as so many clergy do, that he is setting the world on fire.

MRS. WILLIS W. ATWELL
Churchwoman of Grand Rapids, Mich.

A year ago our rector came to a guild meeting and discussed Church periodicals. The result was that I subscribed to The Witness, have read it faithfully ever since and would not be without it. As soon as I am through with a copy I pass it on to a fellow guild member who is also a neighbor.

During the past few months I have been increasingly aware that many Church people who consider themselves well informed in other fields are very ignorant of things going on in the Church outside of their own parish. I certainly was myself until I started to read The Witness. I felt sure that there were many people in the parish who did not take The Witness or any other Church publication. Today I called the rector and I have his permission to place an order for ten copies a week. It seems like a very small number, but at least it is a start. Since it was my idea, I seem to be the person elected to see that the magazines get into the hands of the parishioners.

I nearly forgot to say that I think all the improvements are fine.

LANE W. BARTON
Bishop of Eastern Oregon

Just a brief note in haste before taking off on an every-member canvass swing through Ohio to thank you and your collaborators for the "new" Witness. It is a grand improvement. I wish there was time to be more specific but there isn't so I send this abridged Te Deum so that you may know that I like it and enjoy it.

MR. JAMES STORY
Churchman of New York

Why print the picture of a ham actor like Boris Karloff on the cover of a Church paper? I think it is disgraceful. All he has ever done is to frighten children—and adults, too—with his horror movies.

Clergy and Laity Unite in Acclaiming

"Great Scenes from Great Plays"

Sponsored by Episcopal Families Through the National Council

CHURCH and radio history were both made when "Great Scenes from Great Plays" — the Episcopal radio program—made its debut over nearly 600 coast - to - coast radio stations.

Letters, telegrams and telephone calls from every diocese in the country keep pouring in to National Council Headquarters acclaiming not only the technical excellence of the program but—more important—the spiritual idea behind it.

On the eve of the first broadcast "Cyrano de Bergerac" with Walter Hampden, the Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, Presiding Bishop, sent a long telegram to each of the 87 Bishops warmly endorsing the program and concluding:

"We as Bishops have a tremendous responsibility to see that our clergy and laity are prepared to welcome the many thousands who will seek Christian fellowship through the Church as a result of our radio program, GREAT SCENES FROM GREAT PLAYS. . . . So I ask you in every way to support this program which is in reality a great venture of faith."

"This great venture of faith" can only continue to grow with your financial support.

Get Behind the Every Member Canvass as Never Before and Support the 3% Plan. This is Vital to the Success of the Program.

Important Church-State Decision by Judge

New Mexico Decision Will Be Historic One on Church-State Relations

By W. B. SPOFFORD

★ For many months a controversy has been going on in New Mexico growing out of the charge that the Roman Catholic Church has virtually taken over the public schools in many localities. There have been frequent reports in the Witness on the matter. It finally went to court through a suit brought by a number of Protestants — the so-called Dixon Case which undoubtedly will be an historic case.

A teacher stated that in the Dixon schools, pupils who avoided a Catholic catechism class were "scolded" and sometimes "slapped." He also declared that a junior English class that he taught was late every morning because a nun held the students after 9 a.m. to recite prayers. Another witness, Sister Lucille, principal of a grade school, said on the witness stand that until March of this year the parish priest customarily heard confessions in the school library once a month between 1:30 and 3:30.

Testimony was taken for nine days in the District Court in Santa Fe, and came to an abrupt end when Judge E. T. Hensley ruled that "there is no separation of Church and State" in some public schools. In an oral decision he declared that Roman Catholicism is taught in some public schools, and indicated that his written judgment, to be released later, would rule "generally in favor of the plaintiffs," who are a group of Protestants who went into court to bar garbed nuns, brothers and priests from public school teaching posts.

"Here we have many things in addition to sectarian dress," declared Judge Hensley. "We have the teaching of the catechism; the teaching of prayers peculiar to one sect; literature of one sect; works of art depicting scenes found only in the story or legend, or illustrations, of one sect; we have the particular religious observances common only to one sect, all these in our school buildings where playgrounds are dotted with statuaries and grottos peculiar to one sect; classrooms located in churches of that sect. With that collection of influences, and they could be nothing else but influences, even to the members of the orders themselves they are influences, constantly surrounding them, inspiring them to follow the tenets of that order. In the midst of these indoctrinating influences, to say that there is still a separation of Church and State in our schools, we must say that they are separated only by the sound of a bell, or a sign marked 'private'. To any reasonable person that would be a mirage. There is no separation."

On the subject of separation of Church and State, Judge Hensley said that he could not "altogether escape humanistic, realistic or idealistic impulses, but at the same time the court must consider, if our Constitution and the pronouncement of the Supreme court decisions are to mean anything, the legalistic as well. The decision of the case is comparatively simple. The expression of that decision is extremely difficult.

"In a case of this nature, reason gives away to prejudice, prejudice not peculiar to one side, but has permeated both, particularly among those who have not really studied and thought of the situation. Those who have studied and thought of it and viewed it in the light of history, particularly those years following the reign of the Emperor Constantine, see what can happen to a Church when the State has subsidized it, or attempted to lend its aid. They cannot help but reach the conclusion that the worst thing that could happen to a Church would be for the State to take it over. State aid is a step in that direction.

"Whenever any organization secures help from the State, they are yielding part of their autonomy—as I say, it is difficult to express a decision and perhaps I should not give any explanatory statement at all because anything that might be said could possibly be misconstrued."

The court gave attorneys for both sides 30 days in which to submit findings as a basis for a final judgment. He took no immediate action on a request for a restraining injunction.

NEWS OF THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH

PARISH RUNS SCHOOL IN SAVANNAH

★ Parochial schools are becoming increasingly popular in the Episcopal Church. A new church school has been in operation at St. Michael's Church, Savannah, Georgia, since last fall. Under the direction of the Rev. Theodore Patton, rector, the school now has two grades, kindergarten and first grade. The plan is to add a grade each year to at least the sixth grade. The kindergarten is limited to thirty pupils and first grade to sixteen; both are full. Each day opens at 8:50 a. m. with a chapel service conducted by the rector. Through this the children learn certain prayers and hymns, how to behave in church and the purpose and natural necessity of worship. During the school day, there are brief periods set aside for Bible stories and religious instruction. Practicing Christians are selected as teachers.

According to Mr. Patton, "it is not just a private school in a church building, but a church school endeavoring to teach children that God is at the center of His universe. We do not limit our school to Episcopalians, but each applicant is told that whatever religious teaching his child receives will be according to the faith and practice of the Episcopal church." In regard to further establishment of parochial schools, Mr. Patton feels that "it would not be workable in many communities, unless and until the church as a whole begins to realize the tremendous importance of such education, and supports such efforts. But in many places it is workable, especially where there are several Episcopal churches to draw from."

EPISCOPAL BOYS' HOME ADDS UNIT

★ Doubling in size, the St. Francis Boys' Home at Ellsworth, Kansas, District of Salina, has expanded this fall in opening a second unit of the Boys' Home near Salina, 30 miles from the original unit. The Ellsworth unit was established in September, 1945; the Salina unit was opened in August, this year.

Both units of the Boys' Home are housed in buildings formerly occupied by County Old Peoples' Homes. The Ellsworth unit comprises the main building, farm buildings, and 80 acres of land; the Salina unit, the main building, farm buildings, and 40 acres of land. The Salina property was purchased recently; the Ellsworth property is being leased from Ellsworth county. The county commissioners of Ellsworth county are requesting the electorate this fall for permission to sell the property on closed bids. Request for the purchase has been made by the St. Francis Boys' Home.

Arthur Geeson, rector of St. Paul's, Carondelet, Mo., is one of the leaders of a training school for Church people being held this fall in St. Louis.

The Ellsworth and Salina Homes are unique in the Church in being interested primarily in boys who have faced the police and who are often, therefore, ineligible to other Church schools or homes. The boys are retained in public life, attending nearby public schools. No endowment or designated form of financial backing has been achieved by the Boys' Home.

The Kansas City Star speaks of the St. Francis Boys' Home as continuing on "faith, hope, and charity."

E. P. F. MEETS IN WASHINGTON

★ The Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship held its annual meeting at the College of Preachers with Can. Theodore O. Wedel, Warden of the College and an associate member of the fellowship acting as host. The Rev. William H. Marmion, Birmingham, Alabama, discussed the part the peacemaker had to play in activity of civil rights in America. Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, who was an official visitor at the Amsterdam conference, reported on the pronouncements of the World Council on War and Peace. The Rt. Rev. William A. Lawrence, honorary chairman of the E.P.F., discussed the Lambeth resolutions on peace in comparison to similar pronouncements of the 1930 Lambeth conference. The following resolution was passed:

The Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship in its annual meeting of the College of Preachers on October 12th rejoices in the reaffirmation of the Lambeth Resolution of 1930 "that war as a method of settling international disputes is incompatible with the teaching and example of Jesus Christ"; but regrets the apparent contradiction in the succeeding resolution which states that "there are occasions when both nations and individuals are obliged to resort to war as the lesser of two evils" without any recognition that there is a third way which we believe is the Christian way, namely redemptive love through non-violent resistance.

The group also pledged itself to be of service in advising and aiding young men who registered os Objectors in the Draft or who felt that for conscience sake they were unable to take part in the Draft in any way.

BISHOP HART REPORTS ON CHAPLAINCY

★ Bishop Oliver J. Hart of Pennsylvania, chairman of the Army and Navy division, told National Council that he is endeavoring to influence Army authorities to restore the plan of registration of enlisted men, whereby they were permitted to register as Episcopalians, instead of the present three classifications, Protestant, Catholic, Jewish. The denominational registration was permitted toward the end of World War II, but has since been rescinded.

Bishop Hart asked that Council members and church people generally, consider carefully the matter of a Suffragan to the Presiding Bishop, for the country's armed forces, which will come before the next General convention. It is not certain that such a Bishop would be elected at once, even if authorized, but the question needs consideration and thought before final action is taken.

There are fifty-seven Episcopal chaplains in the armed services at present. The army and navy division budget for 1949 is $72,350. Bishop Hart does not anticipate that all of it will be used, but he pointed out with the greatest seriousness that the division must be prepared for any contingency, even for war.

Bishop Henry I. Louttit, coadjutor of South Florida, was made a member of the division.

Bishop Hart spoke briefly of his recent visit to Germany for the General Commission on Chaplains. He saw and conferred with many Chaplains and feels deeply their need for spiritual refreshment, to keep them in condition to minister most effectively to their men. He suggested the advisability of planning retreats and other strictly devotional and spiritual gatherings of Chaplains, to supply the need which he feels and which he knows the Chaplains themselves feel.

SESQUICENTENNIAL FOR YONKERS CHURCH

★ Visitations by the Bishop and the Suffragan Bishop of the Diocese of New York, a dinner with the Vicar of New York's Trinity Church as the principal speaker, and an historical pageant highlighted Sesquicentennial celebration week by St. John's Episcopal Church in Yonkers, N. Y. The period of special events brought to a climax the church's year-long celebration of the construction of the church building in 1798. Restoration of the church's interior to its original appearance has been the celebration's major project. The Rev. Osborne Budd is rector of St. John's.

Lonnie Napier, a student at Fort Valley State College, has been blind from birth and yet last year maintained an A average. He is here seated in the Fort Valley College Center receiving from the Rev. J. Henry Brown, director and chaplain, seven volumes of the Bible and the Communion Service and Gospels and Epistles in Braille. Lonnie is hoping some day to have a seeing-eye dog to help him get around.

NATIONAL EXECUTIVES OF W. A. MEET

★ The national executive board of the Woman's Auxiliary at its recent meeting in Seabury House elected Mrs. Roger L. Kingsland of Fairmont, W. Va., and Mrs. Alfred M. Chapman of Washington Crossing, Pa., to be presiding officer and assistant presiding officer at the coming Triennial meeting of the women of the church, to be held in San Francisco next September. The elections, according to the by-laws of the board, are held well in advance so that the officers can share in preparation of the program.

Mrs. Kingsland served two terms, 1940-46, as a member of the board. Mrs. Chapman has been a member since 1943 and has been chairman for the past two years.

New board officers for the coming year are: Mrs. William Taliaferro of Edgewood, Penna., chairman; Mrs. Rollin T. Chamberlin, Chicago, vice chairman; Mrs. Francis O. Clarkson, Charlotte, N. C., secretary.

Continuing its study of the Church by provinces, the board heard detailed reports of Province IV from Mrs. S. W. Tate of New Orleans and Province VII by Mrs. Edward G. Lasar of St. Louis. These reports dealt not only with specific activities of churchwomen but with the condition of the Church's work as a whole. The board feels that when all eight provincial reports have been heard they will provide a valuable background for future field policy of the Woman's Auxiliary. The board is also studying the overseas missionary districts and heard a presentation of Alaska by Mrs. John F. Heard of Atlanta.

The board acted on various recommendations of its standing committees, voting funds for repair and equipment of mission buildings, for equipment of women missionaries, and for scholarships, and recommended several appointments for action by the Council.

The amount now in hand for the United Thank Offering to be presented at the Triennial meeting in September, 1949, is $1,807,181.86. At the same point in the the previous triennium the comparable amount was $823,717.89.

PROVINCIAL SYNOD OF MID-WEST DELAYED

★ Because of a shortage of accommodations in housing delegates, the meeting of the Synod of the Province of the Midwest was changed from October 20 and 21 to November 15 and 16. Synod will meet in Christ Church, Indianapolis, and will open at 2 p. m. Monday, November 15.

It is planned to have a missionary service at Christ Church beginning at 8 p. m. Monday evening. All clergy attending the synod are asked to bring their vestments and to sing in the choir. Bishop Harris of Liberia and the Very Rev. Edward R. Welles, dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Buffalo, will be the speakers.

On Tuesday morning, November 16 at 7:30, the Holy Eucharist will be celebrated. A trip to Canterbury College, Danville, Ind., will take place at 11 a. m., and luncheon will be served at the college. At 2 p. m., a joint session of the synod and the Woman's Auxiliary will be held, at which time the Very Rev. Dr. William H. Nes, dean of Nashotah House, Nashotah, Wis., will speak on the Amsterdam Conference.

FAMILY EVANGELISM WORKS IN SOUTH

The same story has recently been repeated in south Alabama. Richard and Elizabeth Cobbs moved to Andalusia, where there was no church. Determined to have one, they exerted strenuous efforts by which a congregation has been formed, a lot has been purchased and there is $1400 on hand towards a church building. There are about 27 members of the congregation, and an active branch of the Woman's Auxiliary has been formed.

The most interesting feature of the two incidents is that in both cases the missionaries were former communicants of the same parish, the Church of the Holy Comforter, Gadsden, Ala. Here is real evangelism.

DETROIT CHURCH HONORS COMMUNITY LEADERS

★ Grateful parishioners of St. Cyprian's Church (one of Detroit's Negro congregations) gathered at a dinner in the parish house recently to honor seven Detroiters whose efforts have made the city a better place for all. They were praised as crusaders in the cause to improve interracial relations. As the Rev. Malcolm G. Dade, St. Cyprian's rector, said: "They 'stick out their necks' and often get the kiss of death." Bishop Emrich, who spoke before the citations were made, said, "In their specific decisions, they have brought respect for the individual, fellowship, service and sacrifice into the life of the community." Circuit Judge Ira W. Jayne, who acted as toastmaster, presented the citations to the following: Mrs. William Pope, who has given "time, energy and means toward the advancement of people everywhere"; Mr. Jean T. Sheafer, secretary-treasurer of Michigan Bell Telephone Co., who insisted always upon "fair practices in employment" by his company; Mr. Walter P. Reuther, UAW (CIO) president, "for his aggressive confidence that democracy can be made to work"; Rabbi B. Benedict Glazer of Temple Beth El, "one of the founders of the Michigan Committee on Civil Rights"; Mr. Edward M. Swan, executive secretary of the Detroit chapter of the N.A.A.C.P., "an outstanding leader in the Negro community"; Mr. George Edwards, president of the Common Council of the City of Detroit, who "has worked for more than the people's welfare . . . also for their dignity"; and Mr. Brewster P. Campbell, city editor of the Detroit Free Press, who has "striven continuously for a fair and unbiased interpretation of news . . . bringing about a better understanding between the people of Detroit." The community work of Attorney Willis Graves, senior warden of the Church, who opposed convenant cases in Detroit before the United States Supreme Court, was also commended.

PROTEST CANADIAN RECTORY TAX

★ A resolution protesting the action of the federal government of Canada in rescinding the tax-free provision on rectories was passed by the executive committee of the Anglican Diocese of Ontario which met recently. The resolution will be forwarded to the executive of the General Synod of the Anglican Church in Canada meeting in November.

Under the new directive, passed by the Dominion Parliament and retroactive to January 1 of this year, clergymen will be required to add the estimated rental value of rent-free rectories to their income for the year and thus will be taxed for it. (RNS)

MRS. D. R. WEST TO FILL COUNCIL VACANCY

★ At the October meeting of the National Council, Mrs. David R. West of Minneapolis was elected to fill the vacancy created by the death of Dr. Adelaide Case.

ABP. OF YORK TO BE IN SAN FRANCISCO

★ Bishop Block, Diocese of California, has definitey secured the Archbishop of York, the Bishop of Ely, the noted scholar, Professor Dillistone, and several other renowned men of learning for the 1949 sessions of The School of the Prophets. The Archbishop will represent the Church of England at General Convention.

Other progress in the diocese is noted at St. Paul's, Buringame, which is in the midst of a building program. The building fund was headed by G. J. David, former senior warden, and he had the help of 160 members of the parish. To date about $80,000, in pledges and cash, has been secured. The full building program, which will take several years to complete, calls for three additions to the present structures; a new building adjoining the present modern parish house; the replacement of the old wooden parish hall which was the original church building; and the extension and enlargement of the church itself. The first of these improvements is well under way, and will be ready for occupancy later in the fall.

Bishop McKinstry of Delaware goes into a huddle with the Rev. Charles Rantz when he visits the Ascension, Claymont.

ECUMENICAL NEWS

CHRISTIAN FOUNDATION GIVES SPORTS AWARDS

What may be the first Christian award of its kind in sports has gone to two major-league baseball managers, one player and a Florida sportswriter.

The Christian Athletes' Foundation announced at its Tennessee headquarters it was presenting "Most Wholesome Influence on Youth" awards to Lou Brissie, pitcher for Philadelphia Athletics; Connie Mack, Athletics' manager; Billy Southworth, manager of the pennant-winning Boston Braves; and Ash Wing, sports columnist and secretary of the Florida State Sportswriters Association.

The Rev. C. E. "Stoney" Jackson, Jr., director, said the Foundation had voted the awards because "we felt it was time religious forces were giving due credit to great leaders and the fine influences they exert." The awards, inscribed gold crosses, will be made at a banquet to be held this winter in Lantana, Fla. Hereafter they will be made annually in football, baseball and boxing as well as to a sportswriter.

The Foundation is an interdenominational organization of men interested in both sports and religion and is chartered by the state of Florida.

AP WRITER GOES WITH FEDERAL COUNCIL

Election of Donald C. Bolles, of Teaneck, N. J., public relations consultant and former newspaperman, as director of public relations of the Federal Council of Churches was announced by Charles P. Taft, president. Bolles succeeds John Fortson, who resigned last January to accept a post with an advertising agency.

He recently returned from Europe where he was in charge of relations with the daily press at the First Assembly of the World Council of Churches in Amsterdam. With the Associated Press for 18 years, he has been in the public relations field since 1943.

ROMAN CHURCH WEEKLY REPORTS COUNCIL

A sympathetic analysis of the World Council of Churches' First Assembly at Amsterdam, Holland, was made in Hungary in an article published by Uj Ember (New Man), weekly organ of Hungarian Catholic Action. Written by Alexandra Halasz, one of Uj Ember's regular women contributors, the article stressed that the World Council has carefully avoided the danger of seeming to be a kind of "superchurch," and is satisfied with "the strengthening of brotherly relations between its member Churches."

The article declared, however, that the Amsterdam Assembly did not succeed in bringing nearer the goal of church union by eliminating the differences of various dogma. "This is unthinkable without, or more correctly, outside the Roman Catholic church," it said. (RNS)

CHICAGO CLERGY TANGLE ON COUNCIL REPORT

★ The Church Federation of Greater Chicago were unhappily not of one mind regarding the communism-capitalism report of the World Council. Mr. Charles C. Morrison, editor-emeritus of the Christian Century, grieved that since the report was "overloaded with Communist sympathy" it would be "an embarassment to the Christian churches for many years to come." Mr. Morrison's reason for believing the report to be one-sided was that it gave only mild disapproval of the Communist ideology. But Morrison was answered by Dr. Paul G. Macy who also attended the meeting. He didn't see any reason to criticize the report "just because it did not indulge in the virulent and hysterical words of our secular press." (RNS)

SCOTTISH ECUMENICAL GROUP FORMED

Formation of a Scottish Ecumenical Committee to promote the programs and aims of the World Council of Churches has been announced in Edinburgh. The committee was set up at a meeting of representatives of all the Protestant churches in Scotland. Its functions will be similar to those of cooperating committees in several other countries. (RNS)

FOREIGN STUDENTS HERE ON SCHOLARSHIP

Forty-three European theological students will study in the United States and Canada during the coming year on scholarships sponsored by the department of reconstruction and inter-church aid of the World Council of Churches and affiliated groups. Thirty-five will study in the U. S., while Canada will be host to eight students.

This is the first year that scholarships have been awarded for study in Canada, according to Dr. C. E. Josephson, secretary of the council's scholarship committee. He said they were given by the Presbyterian Church in Canada and the United Church in Canada through the Canadian Council of Churches.

Living expenses of the students are to be borne by the seminaries which they attend or by the Churches sponsoring the seminaries. Students' travel costs were borne by Church World Service, the National Lutheran Council, and the Canadian Council of Churches.

NEWS OF OTHER CHURCHES

PASTOR RESIGNS AS PROTEST

Douglas Angell has resigned as pastor of the Unitarian Church in Norfolk, Va., as a protest against racial discrimination on the part of local ministers and his disillusions "with the enterprise as a whole, with this church in particular, and with other churches in general." A former engineer, Mr. Angell became a minister two years ago because he thought "it was the best way to help bring about what most of us consider 'the good life on earth'." However he now thinks that ministers fail "to put into practice what they preach. Members of the Norfolk ministers' association are preaching that every person is the child of God and preaching against the evils and injustices of segregation, and yet the association won't let Negro ministers become members." He charged that while there are ministers who really want to practice Christian brotherhood, "pressures within the church organization in the majority of cases make it impossible for most of us to be true to our own convictions. He who pays the piper calls the tune and a minister whose salary depends on contributions of those to whom he preaches tries to avoid friction and controversy."

METHODISTS SEEK LARGE SUM

A minimum of fifty million dollars will be sought by the Methodist Church as a part of its four year "Advance for Christ and His Church." The financial aspects were outlined before 800 representatives, including 500 superintendents, by Bishop Harrell of Charlotte, N. C., at a meeting at Columbus, Ohio. Bishop Oxnam of New York outlined the teaching and evangelistic aspects, which include six-month preparation for the clergy, and the holding of two mass meetings in each area of the Church next fall, with ministers, professors and laymen speaking on "our faith," "our Church," "our ministry" and "our mission."

ROW CONTINUES IN NEW MEXICO

The scrap over the teaching of R. C. priests and nuns in the public schools of New Mexico continues. One teacher, testifying in court, stated that in the Dixon schools, pupils who avoided a Catholic catechism class were "scolded" and sometimes "slapped." He also declared that a junior English class that he taught was late every morning because a nun held the students after 9 a.m. to recite prayers. Another witness, Sister Lucille, principal of a grade school, said on the witness stand that until March of this year the parish priest customarily heard confessions in the school library once a month between 1:30 and 3:30. The practice was discontinued, she said, because of the publicity given the Dixon suit in which citizens went to court to prevent priests and nuns from teaching in public schools.

LUTHERAN EDITORS DEMAND UNITY

Editors of Lutheran publications, meeting in convention at Rock Island, Ill., recommended formation of a federation of all Lutheran bodies in America as a preliminary step toward organic unity. They warned that the world is standing at one of the fateful crossroads of history, with "secular movements and human governments challenging the place and authority of the Church and seeking to restrict its activities and influence."

WORLD COUNCIL STAND CRITICIZED

Leaders of American business are assailing the condemnation of "laissez-faire capitalism" on the part of the World Council of Churches. Former Governor Miller of New York was the first to hit it. He is now attorney for a large oil corporation. Then John O. Knutson, layman of the Disciples, cracked down at their international convention meeting in San Francisco; while a third criticism came from Robert W. Johnson, industrialist of New Brunswick, N. J., who told those attending a convention of Church people meeting in that city that he resented the bracketing of capitalism with communism by the Amsterdam Assembly. Nobody, as far as we know, has yet pointed out publicly that in condemning "laissez-faire capitalism" the Assembly condemned an economic system that has not existed for many years.

OPPOSE REFERENDUM ON BIRTH CONTROL

The R. C. Church in Massachusetts has launched a drive against the referendum which would permit doctors to give birth control information under certain conditions. Earlier this year such legislation was defeated in the state's house and senate, but enough signatures were presented as favoring such a measure that it is on the ballot next month for referendum.

JOINT ACTION IN BRITAIN

The British Council of Churches and the Sword of the Cross, a Roman Catholic organization, jointly sponsored a conference for eighty German women. Most of the women visitors were engaged in social and religious welfare work in Germany.

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

CHURCHES PERSECUTED IN SPAIN

"Having had a taste of fascism in Spain in the form of religious persecution of Protestant churches, I am greatly troubled by those United States congressmen, generals and big business men who are openly advocating a military alliance with Spain, as well as official recognition." So says the Rev. Stanley I. Stuber, chairman of the commission on religious freedom of the Baptist World Alliance. Dr. Stuber, home from a three months tour of Europe said that he had seen Protestant churches in Madrid in which pews and furniture had been destroyed recently. He also said he had first hand reports from Baptist missionaries and documented evidence indicating that persecution of Protestant churches was more prevalent in small towns and villages than in cities.

FORMER R. C. PRIESTS HOLD MEETING

A resolution denouncing clauses in the Italy-Vatican concordat which "deny civil rights" to priests who have left the Catholic Church was adopted at a congress summoned by the International Association of Ex-Priests, meeting in Rome. The sessions were held simultaneously with the first International Congress for Religious Reform in Italy, sponsored jointly by Italian Protestant leaders and former Catholic priests.

"Considering the offense to civil rights committed by Italian legislation against thousands of Italian citizens," the resolution said, "this congress denounces to Italian and world public opinion this violation of freedom and religious tolerance, and invites all freedom loving people to manifest their militant solidarity." Organized in Florence last year, the Association claims to speak in the name of an estimated 4,000 priests who have abandoned Catholicism, and are said to suffer economic and civil handicaps because of disabilities imposed by the Vatican concordat. In a keynote address, the Rev. Anthony Caliandro, president of the association, reported that the group has made "considerable progress" since it was inaugurated. He announced that a home and seminary for former priests will be opened with funds obtained from "friends in the United States." In addition, Caliandro reported, the association plans to establish local committees in large cities, where cooperatives will also be established and agencies created to enable members to obtain jobs as private tutors.

OUSTER OF CATHOLICS IS SOUGHT

Church of Ireland (Anglican) authorities are bringing pressure to bear on the Ulster government to end what they describe as an anomaly created by a clause in Northern Ireland's new education act — the appointment of Roman Catholic teachers to certain Protestant schools. The action of the church leaders is said to be causing some embarrassment to officials of the predominantly Protestant government. These officials say they would like to end the irregularity, but find their hands tied because the education law has already been passed by both Houses of the six-county parliament.

"There is not a single member of the Cabinet who wants to see Roman Catholic instructors teaching Protestant children," declared Minister of Home Affairs, W. Warnock, K. C. "Trust us to do everything in our power to maintain the Protestant religion in this country," he added.

CHINA MISSIONARIES ARE PROTECTED

American and British missionaries in Communist-held Tsinan are "safe and well," according to a report received at Presbyterian headquarters in Shanghai from mission officials in Tsingtao, about 200 miles from Tsinan. "All foreigners in Tsinan are well and engaged in useful employment," the report said. "There are no financial or food problems, and the Cheloo mission has been spared, although some damage to property has occurred." According to Presbyterian officials, the report indicates that "the Communists are continuing their new policy of protecting missionaries, especially medical workers."

Eight American and two British missionaries are in Tsinan at present. The Americans are Dr. and Mrs. Howell Lair, the Rev. L. J. Davis, Miss Helen McLain, the Rev. and Mrs. John Hamlin, Auburn, N. Y.; the Rev. Richard Bryant, Lockport, N. Y., and Miss Florence Evans. The two British missionaries are the Rev. Fred Drake and J. E. Symly. All the missionaries are attached either to Cheloo University and Cheloo Mission Hospital, or to Cheloo Middle School.

Saints and Sinners

SAINTHOOD, among ordinary mortals at least, is not overly popular today. In the division that is increasingly driven between the spiritual and the secular, saints are considered as being those who have somehow managed to escape (by some special Providence perhaps) the toils that hold the rest of us earthbound. They do not belong to our species; they are religious "sports." This is a naive and obnoxious conception that should have no place in a time when we understand human drives and motivations far better than our forebearers did.

For from it has sprung all manner of evils. It has partly relieved the great majority of us from the difficult necessity of trying to be much better than we are; the gap between us and the holy ones is so great that it would be silly to try to bridge it. And we justify our failure in several ways. Some take unconscious pride in their un-saintliness by ostensibly humble public confession of what they once were. Others place high value on it: "He is a devil" say giggling ladies of the desired male. More than that; this utterly otherworldly concept of a saint has given rise to the erroneous belief that we will only have a good society when we have all saintly men and women. Actually it works both ways.

It is time we were as realistic about our saints as they were about themselves. If there ever was a saint who did not feel himself a sinner (and rightly so) he is not recorded in history. They were what they were not because of some spiritual ingenuity but because of the use they made of what God gave them (and us)—and with his help. We are all sinner-saints and saint-sinners. Which shall be the adjective and which the noun depends mostly upon our use of God's grade towards us. But it also depends very largely on what we do to order the world around us so that there will be a soil in which saints can grow. So the compilers of the Prayer Book had the wisdom to see when they chose the sermon on the mount as the gospel for All Saints Day.

"QUOTES"

IT is the clear duty of a Christian to participate as an active member of whatever political party not only assures honesty and efficiency in government, but comes nearest to expressing Christian principles in social, economic and world relations. After careful study of the history, platforms and purposes of all political parties, each individual must decide for himself before God which one most truly stands for social justice, brotherhood, goodness and mercy in human affairs.

The Coming Election

AS we go to press this week it would seem that the election were in the bag for Thomas E. Dewey. Every poll and every forecaster have it the same way. Indeed so one-sided has been the contest in the national mind that there has been relatively little interest in the campaign. Compare this year with the memory of Willkie's barnstorming across the country on his vain but stirring "crusade," or Roosevelt riding through the streets of New York in a pouring rain while millions cheered, the dynamic, confident Roosevelt, a whole show in himself.

Nineteen forty-eight has been a relatively dull year in its presidential extravaganza. Wallace has furnished whatever excitement there was, and Wallace's cause is a lost one for this political year. Differ with him as does the typical Episcopalian, nevertheless we must allow that Henry Wallace is sincerely devoted to the cause of world peace and democracy at home. It took courage to insist on a policy of no segregation in the south, rotten eggs and violence to the contrary. This, we believe, was not rabble-rousing, but having the courage of his convictions and practicing what he preaches. On the Russian question Mr. Wallace has been a voice crying in the wilderness, few Americans being willing to go along with his so-called appeasement line. Time alone will prove him either a prophet unheeded in a year of decision, or a fool who sentimentalized about the enemy!

Nothing but a miracle then will keep Mr. Dewey from the White House. He will hold the most strategic office in the world in a time of great tension and uncertainty. He will represent the conservative side in economics and politics, but not, we believe, the reactionary wing of the Republican Party. Rightist as he is, still we are hopeful that the trend of Washington will not swing back towards government for the benefit of corporations. America's danger is fascism as well as, perhaps even more than, communism. We hope for government honestly devoted to democracy, not as a cliche, but as a reality on the economic front as well as the political. Let there be no going back on the advances of recent years, but a fuller realization of the practical meaning of justice and freedom for every worker, every Negro, every least citizen!

Again we hope for a government which will quiet our "red" hysteria; a government without benefit of the military in so many key places; a more efficient government. Most of all we hope for a government that will strengthen and work within the framework of the United Nations for a true peace, a government not hopeless of working out a non-violent solution with Russia. We see war as the sheerest catastrophe for the life of Europe and America, literally the end of the world. There must be peace! On Mr. Dewey's shoulders will rest the terrible weight of a frightening, humbling responsibility. May God strengthen him, and may he serve God!

Finally, do not let the "sure" result of the election excuse you from voting next week. Remember when you don't vote, you are voting, but not as you intended!

The Son of Man

By JOHN PAULSEN

Rector of St. Stephen's, Delmar, N. Y.

IN 1909 Neville Figgis wrote a great work the thesis of which is as timely today as the day it was written. Man, he said, has deep fundamental needs among which are the need for freedom, pardon, mystery. Christianity fills these needs because it is "historical, miraculous, mysterious, other-worldly, personal, and all but impossible."

I said as timely but if such a thing is possible these words are more timely today. I have come to the conclusion that today we clergy are in danger of mistaking a certain hunger which people have, for a revival of religion.

I suppose that every parish priest has a certain number of young men in his parish who are impatient with the slow ways of mother Church and who urge us to be more definite, more full of business, more churchly in our everyday ways, more systematic in our work. They show a great interest in the liturgical movement, the ecumenical movement, the keeping of rules of life. This is a profoundly humiliating experience and it holds a danger in it. The danger is that we may become complacent; we may think that this enthusiasm is a solution to the problem whereas it is only the voicing of a challenge. So far as the clergy are concerned all of this enthusiasm is the expression of the intense hunger of men and women. We are sure in great danger of attempting to feed them with more literature racks, more services, more slogans more organizations. We may wake up to discover when it is too late that these things turn to dust and ashes in their mouths. We need to remember that Christianity has real meat and drink to provide. "Christianity fills these needs because it is historical, miraculous, other-worldly, personal, and all but impossible." It is all of these things because of our Lord Jesus Christ, "Labour not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of man shall give unto you."

The synoptists and St. John all bear witness that our Lord's favorite term for Himself was "the Son of man." When Jesus says "I, the Son of Man" He does so deliberately, because of the associations of the word.

I knew an old-fashioned preacher who was always referring to "Our Saviour" and he did it in such a way that you knew that he himself had experienced salvation. Many of you have been in the picture lined rooms of the Rev. Mr. Eastman up in Stockbridge, Mass., and have heard him speak of "the Lord Jesus" as he pressed a child or an adult to take a picture of Christ and hang it in his room. When he does so you know that he himself is wholly committed to "the Lord Jesus." Well the words "the Son of Man" have some such association in the mind of Jesus which he is trying to get over to his hearers. In "The Gospel in the Gospels" Dr. DuBose suggests four or five reasons why our Lord may have used this title:

1. He wants to identify himself with mankind.
2. He wants mankind to identify themselves with him.
3. He wants us to know that the Son of man is made perfect through suffering.
4. Jesus wants us to know that the judgment we shall have to face is the judgment of him who took our flesh.

Wants to Identify Himself

First of all then he wants to identify himself with mankind. He knows that he is the Messiah looked for by the prophets, so he chooses the one term from their writings which links the divine king with mankind, "The Son of man."

Because man is oppressed by the apparent mechanism of the universe, he needs a religion which will proclaim the freedom of his will and give him back his faith in himself. I wonder whether we realize how humanity, people, get snowed under in the course of history. War brings this about. We are so concerned about the bombing of entire cities because we do not realize what cities actually are. We take refuge in a word. "Cities" we say. But cities are homes, fathers, mothers, children, in-laws, friends, neighbors. Cities are people. Generals line men up and give them numbers. Then the soldiers come home and become musicians who regard people as "voices"; physicians who speak of them as "cases"; politicians who prate of their "constituents"—and sometimes one wonders what priests have in mind when we speak of our "parishioners."

Our Lord's humanity protests against all of that. The clergy are in the very best position to realize that men are men. The lack of identity does not mean that there is no equality. In a single day you may fill out marriage licenses for a truck driver and for a lawyer. Now in one sense the lawyer is not equal to the truck driver; he has not the skill nor the strength in his arms and perhaps not the presence of mind to guide a ten-ton truck through the intricate operations of highway building. The lawyer would be utterly non-plussed if the truck should break down. In the same sense the truck driver is not equal to the lawyer. He would be awkward and speechless in a court room. He would know very little law and he would not know how to express what he does know. Nevertheless both of these men honor each other. Strangely enough it was an aviator and not a theologian who expressed this truth for our generation. You remember how affectionately Du Saint Exupery speaks of "My Civilization":

> "The Scientist owed respect to the stoker, for what he respected in the stoker was God. And the stoker no less than the scientist was an ambassador of God . . . the physician was never a lesser man for having spent a sleepless night at the bedside of a thief. Charity was the service of God performed through the individual. . . . How was it possible for our enemies to understand this when we no longer understood it? The faithful of that new religion would object to several miners risking their lives for a single miner entombed, for in that case their rock-pile would be injured."

Man has not always tolerated man and Christians must be ever on the alert to the fact that our Lord's favorite term for himself "the Son of Man" is again and again used to enforce the lesson of humanity.

"The Son of man is Lord also of the sabbath" he said when he saw men were using the institution of the calendar to interfere with the healing of people on the sabbath.

"The Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives but to save them," he said when the disciples would have called down fire from heaven on a certain not very polite village.

Jesus says "Son of man" because he wants to identify himself with humanity.

Identification With Him

BUT there is a second person no less important than the first. Jesus calls himself "the Son of man" because he wants to invite humanity to identify themselves with him. He is the perfect embodiment of humanity and what he is, that we may become. He is the pattern of what Gods wants each of us to be. We are not to be identical; no two children in any family are identical. You remember James Barrie's mother. A fine son and daughter she had. One son became a famous writer and he describes how she loved a third child who had died in infancy. The young Jamie would try pathetically to remind her that there were others left. He would spread his legs apart, put his hands in his pockets, and try to whistle like his brother. But he was not that child; he did not realize how the imitation must have hurt her. Then one day she reached out her arms and let him know that she loved each of her children; she had plans for each of them. Well, God has plans for each of us. When the preacher says we are to be Christlike, he does not mean that we are all to be carpenters —as he was; nor that we are all to wear the costumes of Palestine and use the gentle idiom of Syrian speech—as he did. What are the things about him that we are to be in order to be Christlike? I believe it can all be summed up in this: we are to be the sons of God. A family of children may be ever so different but none of them will go wrong if each of them remains worthy to be called a son or a daughter. That is the reason for the emphasis laid on this expression in the story: "I am no longer worthy to be called thy son"; and on the character of his reception by the father—the fatted calf, the best robe, the ring on his finger, and on the father's statement, "This my son was dead and is alive again."

To return to our former illustration; the truck driver is to become a Christlike truck driver, and the lawyer to become a Christlike lawyer. There are certain qualities which are common to them both; these are qualities which they have by virtue of being sons of God: 1) Responsibility for one another; 2) Gratitude toward God who made them both; 3) Cleanliness from all excess or perversion which does violence to the personality God has given them; 4) The earnest desire to be worthy of their sonship.

I have always thought that the words of Jesus at the time when the disciples asked him to call down fire from heaven upon the Samaritan village are of the greatest significance to those who want to get to the heart of Jesus' teaching. "You know not what manner of spirit ye are of. The Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives but to save them." What manner of spirit are we of? We are of the Father's spirit. The spirit that is characterized by responsibility . . . gratitude . . . cleanliness . . . sonship.

The Son of Man

I am basing all that I have to say on the supposition that our Lord used the term Son of man deliberately because of the warm, human, religious associations which it has for him. It is quite evident that he had been reading the book of Ezekiel in which God addresses the prophet as "Son of man" and warns him of the suffering which will come to him for his loyalty:

> "Son of man, stand upon thy feet and I will speak unto thee . . . I send thee to the rebellious nation that have rebelled against me . . . and thou . . . be not afraid of them, though briars and thorns be with thee and thou dwell among scorpions. . . . He put forth the form of an hand and took me by a lock of mine head, and the spirit lifted me up between heaven and earth—behold the glory of the God of Israel was there. Son of man seest thou what they do?"

Do you see how the words held for Jesus all the associations and overtones of absolute obedience of God's power and God's plan no matter what the cost might be? It is these overtones of meaning that he has in mind when he refers to his own sufferings and the words had the same significance to at least a few of the disciples.

"The Son of man shall be betrayed into the hands of men . . . the Son of man must suffer many things and be rejected of the elders and the chief priests and scribes and be slain and be raised the third day."

Nor can we forget that the beatitudes—which start off gently enough with the happiness of the poor, the hungry, those who mourn—take a sudden turn for the worse and end on this uncompromising note which refers to the Son of man: "Blessed are ye when men shall hate you and when they shall separate you from their company and shall reproach you and cast out your name as evil for the Son of man's sake. Rejoice in that day and leap for joy; for behold your reward is great in heaven; for in like manner did their fathers unto the prophets."

That was one meaning reflected from the Old Testament. Can anyone doubt that the words inspired the idea of being made perfect through obedience and suffering? Do they not make the way of the cross understandable as the way of life and peace? And shall we not walk therein?

Judge of the Earth

BUT there is still another set of overtones connected with the words Son of man. The words are also used in the prophecy of Daniel. By the time Daniel was written the Son of man had become not the prophet but the divine king.

> ". . . the judgment was set and the books were opened . . behold one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven and came to the ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."

Jesus believed in his own humanity when he said Son of man; He was very man, concerned with all that matters to man. But he had also read this passage from Daniel. As early in his career as the sending forth of the 70 disciples he tells them "when they persecute you in one city flee to the next; you shall not have gone through all the cities before the Son of man be come." He does not mean come as a man for he is already present. He means come as judge of the earth.

So he thought of himself all the way through his own life, but it is in the last discourse given in the Temple itself that he expounds the doctrine of the coming of the Son of man in glory to judge both the quick and the dead. "As the lightening cometh out of the East and shineth unto the West so shall the coming of the Son of man be." He will come on the clouds of heaven; no man knows the day of his coming. Man must live in constant expectation. The discourse culminates in three great parables—the ten virgins, five prepared and five unprepared, "watch therefore for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh"; the talents, the one talent man did not use even that one, but hid it in a napkin "Cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness." Then he concludes with these words: "When the Son of man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory . . . "you know the rest 'I was hungry, thirsty, sick, in prison'." . . . Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren ye did it unto me."

What is the Lord of truth trying to tell us here? Simply this: No one can escape the judgment, no matter how great a king or how remote the kingdom. People would stop and think if they realized that everything might be ended by a great clap of thunder this very day. Judgment is just as imminent as that. And the standard of judgment is not whether we have done some great thing but whether we have humbly gone about doing those little unremembered acts of kindness and love.

Our Lord Jesus Christ begins to use the title Son of man to emphasize his own humanity; he ends by using it to emphasize the humane element in the king of glory who comes to judge the quick and the dead.

Roy Burroughs of Ames

BY THOMAS V. BARRETT
Chaplain at Kenyon College

WE are of the opinion that if a man has been doing college work for thirty years he must either know something about it, or else he has gone off into a long sleep. Someone told us that if we wanted to see what the Church was doing for students we had better go to Ames, Iowa. Since Iowa is a wonderful place this time of year, and Roy Burroughs has been there for thirty years, we dropped in to see him. We found out he has not been asleep. We would be glad to have ninety-nine others like him in college towns. He took us a little by surprise, since we had been visiting Roger Blanchard. Roy would probably reach almost to Roger's breastplate, and at first we thought he was what the women call "dumpy." But we have discovered that comparisons are not only odious but irrelevant, and we are constantly impressed by the fact that college work is done by men of all statures, types, personalities, and ecclesiastical markings. Comparing Roger and Roy is like comparing an Austin organ with a Steinway piano.

We found out Roy was a pioneer in college work, along with Bishop Dallas and Paul Micou. After thirty years at Iowa State (crack engineering and agricultural school with little of the "country club" atmosphere) Roy has built a modest but beautiful church and student-center just off the campus. He has a fabulous, book-lined study that reveals curiosity and roving imagination. He has also the rewarding knowledge that some of his present students are children of men and women who came to know him and to love him years ago, when they too were students at Ames.

There isn't much organization at Ames, and what there is is certainly not elaborate, but there is much personal work, and the finest kind of pastoral care. We have discovered that organization sometimes gets in the way of the propagation of the gospel. It did us good after a long train ride to sit down with Burroughs and talk about things. Witty, tolerant, and with that mellowness only wide reading seems to give, Roy opens hidden doors of the mind and soul until you feel quite illiterate, but blessed by his blithe and inquisitive spirit. We listened and saw new truth revealed from the pages of Christopher Morley, Don Marquis, Augustine, and Erasmus. We also saw what it could mean to a student to be near this fountain of ideas, preceptions and Christian insights.

Roy Burroughs and his wife Jean, who has been his "woman student worker" for thirty years, bring students into the merry, wholesome circle of their home and strengthen them in the faith more by infection than by inoculation. We went to church at Ames and liked Roy's imaginative approach; his sermon reminded us of a sparkler on a dark night touched off by the hand of a child. It had that simplicity and unconscious grace.

Unique in student work at Ames is the "Zero Club" which includes all those who have braved the wintry wind to attend early communion. Tangible reward—a mighty feast. Intangible rewards—discipline in the practice of worship; knowledge of the work of Christ. Roy, like Roger, is college secretary in the sixth province, and from Maine to California is acknowledged by college workers as their dean.

On the way out of Ames we reflected that a college worker must always have time to listen to people; to stop and talk with them on the college paths. We felt refreshed by our visit and had a thought for the week: it is a marvelous thing to find someone who conveys on the one hand the centrality of Christian worship for all human activity, and on the other reminds you of the truth of Archbishop Temple's famous statement, "It is a mistake to think that God is exclusively, or even primarily, interested in religion."

Talking It Over

BY

W. B. SPOFFORD

PEOPLE should think a bit about the meaning of words before they send telegrams and then hand copies to the press for publication. Mr. Harry Price, who is the rector of St. James the Less in Scarsdale, N. Y., joined with the executive committee of the men's club of this swank parish, in wiring the state department that the Dean of Canterbury, Hewlett Johnson, should not be allowed to enter the U. S. "upon the grounds that his teachings are un-Christian, un-American, subversive."

I wrote Rector Price at once to say that it seemed a rather large order, and that I would be interested to learn upon what he and his laymen based their opinion. But up to the moment, after several days, no reply has been received. The Dean has written a number of books and a lot of things can be said about them. But I rather question whether anyone, let alone a fellow-clergyman, would want to give chapter and verse on passages that could be marked: "Un-Christian."

As for "un-American" and "subversive," just how, please, do these Men of Saint James the Less figure that a citizen of the British Commonwealth can be "un-American"? Could it be that these men have gone so far in adopting the "American Century" line that they think, as many Englishmen fear, that England is now an American colony and that an Englishman's first loyalty must be to the United States?

WELL, I don't want to make too much of it; after all one clergyman, plus the executive committee of the Men of Saint James the Less, hardly speak for the entire Episcopal Church. And there is the comforting fact that large numbers of our bishops and lesser clergy have gladly joined the committee headed by Prof. Ralph Barton Perry of Harvard in sponsoring a lecture tour by the Dean. Not, certainly, because these sponsors all agree with the Dean's point of view. A number of them vigorously disagree. But these sponsors do believe in freedom—"the right of freedom of speech, of discussion and association, and to accurate information," as the Lambeth Resolutions put it. So, I take it, they want the Dean to come to the U. S., to say whatever he wants to say; they want to associate with him so that these important matters may be discussed; they want, themselves, to decide whether, in their judgment, the vast store of information that he has about Russia and the eastern countries is accurate or not. And it would be profitable I am sure for Rector Price and his Lesser Men of Saint James to follow the advice given them by our Anglican Bishops meeting this summer at Lambeth, rather than to hide their very nice parish behind a Curtain of Darkness.

Incidentally it is by no means certain that the Dean will be granted a visa—though he has one for Canada where apparently the current madness is less rampant. So it would help if you expressed your confidence in the American way of life by writing the state department that you do not believe that even as gifted a man as Hewlett Johnson is likely to overthrow it.

* * Christianity: How it Came to us, What it is, What it might be. By Charles Edwards Park. Beacon Press, $1.75.

This is a "popular" statement of the matured views of a veteran Unitarian, the famous pastor of the First Church in Boston. Jesus was a good man who loved everybody, but unwisely allowed himself to become deluded with the notion of his own messiahship. It was the open tomb which led to the belief in his resurrection; and it was Paul, with his "magical" religion, who substituted Christianity for the Gospel. Back, then, to Jesus! Humanism is not enough—world unity requires a religion rooted in belief in God.

This is the kind of liberalism against which the modern Protestant world has revolted, and the book reads like a recorded voice out of the distant past, the 90's or the early 1900's. —F. C. G.

THE NEW BOOKS

Excellent Good *Fair

* * Letter to Corinth, by John Schmidt. The Muhlenberg Press. $1.50.

This little book is a running commentary on St. Paul's first epistle to the Corinthians. The author uses the revised standard version of the New Testament as his text.

The author, who was born in Holland, is pastor of the First Lutheran Church of Toledo, O. He has written several other books. On the whole this particular book is very well done. It is written in a simple, readable style; and explains Paul's meanings carefully and clearly. The author has not dealt with critical problems — matters of text, philology, etc.; therefore, the book will not help scholars solve their problems. But the book is written to help laymen understand what Paul was getting at, and at that it succeeds.

One would question the exegesis at a few points, especially the author's apparent ignorance as to what Paul describes when he mentions powers of healing. The author says these powers "should be developed through study." I doubt whether Paul had anything as intellectual as that in mind! One might also question the author's use of the Fourth Gospel to substantiate Paul's meanings.

But the book could undoubtedly be both intellectually and spiritually edifying to innumerable members of the household of faith.

* * Personal Religion by H. C. Alleman, The Muhlenberg Press. $1.75.

Here we have a truly Bible centered book of brief homilies. Dr. Alleman, the retired Professor of Old Testament and theology at the Lutheran Seminary of Gettysburg, brings a fund of knowledge about the Bible plus the experience of his years to this volume. As would be expected by the title, the attempt is made to orient the whole of life to the person. One who is seeking a religious volume which emphasizes the importance of personality will find the twenty-four preachments of great value.

Dr. Daniel A. Poling, in the review quoted below, has truly captured all the charm and spirit of this book.

☆ "An authentic story as thrilling as fine fiction about the parson, his family, his friends and his wide ministry written by the one who knows—the parson's wife herself. For all who ever knew a parsonage or a manse, a rectory or a parish, here is nostalgic reading. But the book's appeal is universal. It mingles the human and the divine, the ridiculous and the sublime, the little and the big. The locales are in Virginia, Texas, New York and Washington. THE PRESS

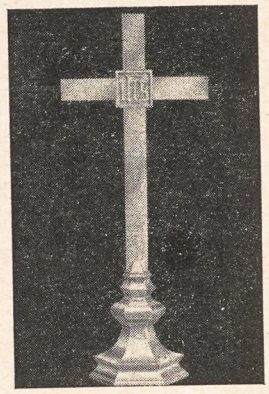
Union Herald (Pres.)—It's time we outgrew this childish preoccupation with numbers. To gauge Kingdom-of-God progress by a million of this and ten million of that is pure infantilism. It's worse than that; for it blinds us to facts, hypnotizing us into an only too ready belief that the church of Christ is gaining ground. What's needed isn't a corroding pessimism that distils the spirit of defeat, nor a comfortable optimism that has no basis in fact; but an utterly honest realism that refuses to be fooled. We've been recently reminded by the annual release of church membership statistics in this country that religious affiliation has done a little better than keep step with population growth in recent years. Well, is there much to crow about in that? Does anybody believe that there has been an advance in public morals or national character commensurate with that increase in church membership? Until we begin to see evidences of that, we'd do well to forget statistics for a while. For there is a terrible time-lag just now in the production of saints—and that's the church's monopoly. There just aren't enough good men and women coming off the production lines; and even the good men and women aren't good enough for the demand.

The Record (C. of E.)—The results of Amsterdam may go far to regain for the Churches the ear of the man in the street which was lost to so great an extent with the death of Archbishop Temple. This was the impression which gained ground daily in the press-rooms of the conference, and by the last day, that impression had become a conviction.



This conviction has already been transmitted through the secular press to the people. Typical of the comments is that which appeared in the editorial of the Daily Herald. "Often Christians — and especially the organized Christians of the Churches —are accused of failure to give leadership and help in difficult days. But the World Council of Churches has now created a new initiative. It has decided that Christians shall attack evil, instead of deploring it."

Evangelist (Disciples)—It was the younger Churches of Asia and Africa (at Amsterdam) who demanded that a criticism be made against unrestricted capitalism. It is in these areas of the world that humanity has suffered most from the ravishes of laissez faire capitalism. We need only to mention the imposition of the opium trade upon China by western capitalism, and the long years of traffic in human slavery on the continent of Africa. It is not strange that these and other seamy phases of western capitalism would have risen to prejudice its case at Amsterdam.

Outlook (C. of E. Canada)—The very fact that youth is so conspicuously absent from our churches is mute testimony of our static condition, and this in the midst of one of the most revolutionary situations in all history. Unless the Church can mobilize a real dynamic youth movement, as one sees so constantly featured in Marxist circles, there is little hope that the Church will mould the new era that must lie beyond the world-shattering events in which we live and move and have our being.

Watchman Examiner (Bapt.)—Let us be fully aware that there are bills before Congress which will be revived after the election, if precedents are followed, in which the principle of separation of church and state in the matter of public education will be evaded. The Catholics are desirous of obtaining as much of the distributed funds as possible, both as a contribution to their own financial need and as a retention of that Church's already conceded place within the government which they desire to extend. More is involved in this election that has yet come to the front.

Southern Churchman (P. E.)—If we can give 3% of our whole parochial budget for a radio program, we can give 3%—or more—of the rector's salary above a specified minimum to aid other Christian ministers not receiving a living wage.

CHURCH AND DRAMATIC ARTS

BY W. B. SPOFFORD, JR.

CONSIDERING the loving eyes that our government is now casting in the direction of the Iberian peninsula, a recent communique from Spain is of more than ordinary interest. Appearing in the New York Times of September 29th under the by-line of Paul Kennedy, it reads in part:

"The film 'Gentleman's Agreement' has been rejected for Spanish distribution by order of the ecclesiastical member of the Film Censorship Board on moral grounds. According to a source close to the board, the banning order stipulated that while it was a Christian duty to 'stimulate love among individuals, societies, nations and peoples', this should not extend to the Jews.

"Evil should be despised and evil-doers pitied, but to condescend to what is wrong, and even to stimulate it, is entirely different. That is why it is asked of the Lord that He should deign to humiliate the enemies of His holy church, and as such might Jews be considered."

There were six moral points listed with the banning: 1-2—"in the film divorce was made obvious," and that to state that there was no difference between Jews and Christians was merely so many words. 3—That the picture stated "that a Christian is not superior to a Jew." 4—That the hero forfeited being a Christian for eight weeks and thus, in effect, committed the grievous sin of renouncing his Christian faith. 5—"They say that for many Jews it is a matter of pride to be called Jews. Pride of what? The pride of being the people who put God to death? Of being perfidious, as they are called in Holy Scriptures?" 6—The film condoned the idea of suppression of religion.

We are happy to say that some top-ranking Roman Catholics quickly hit out at the banning of one of the most courageous pictures of modern times—a picture which won something like six Academy Awards. Both Cardinal Spellman and Father John LaFarge, editor of America, criticized the censorious order strongly and attempted to repudiate its charges of moral inadequacies in the film.

The important thing about the whole incident, however, lies in what the censoring shows concerning the true mind of the Spanish government and the Roman Catholic heirarchy which, while buttressing the fascist regime, makes a mockery of the name of Christ. And this, God help us, is the country which our foreign policy experts want to push into the vanguard of the struggle to save western democracy. For my part, I pray nightly that the phoenix of the Loyalists might arise soon from the ashes and moral wreckage of Madrid.

THINKING CHRISTIANLY

BY
W. BURNET EASTON, Jr.

"This book concerns itself with the application of Christian faith to the complexities of modern life rather than stating the fundamentals of the faith."
—Introduction

With this idea foremost throughout the book, Mr. Easton has written a vigorous and powerful analysis of how he believes Christianity can be applied to the problems of today. He believes firmly that Christianity has "the only important thing to say" to the world today, and that it is failing its work because Christians themselves do not approach life from a Christian point of view. In this straight-forward book Mr. Easton presents a positive and constructive solution to the problem of making Christianity a practical and vital force in today's world.

GOOD IDEA

Children are the most important members of the church in the opinion of the Rev. Eric A. Ayer of Milford, Mass., who presents this ten-point program for a good church:

1. One in which children are given every possible encouragement to participate in the activities of the church as far as their experience permits.

2. One in which children feel that they have a place of importance.

3. One in which children are not only guided in ethical behavior but are taught the meaning and value of worship.

4. One in which children are taught respect for all churches and an understanding of what the various churches emphasize in their doctrine.

5. One in which religions other than Christianity are sympathetically presented.

6. One in which children are helped to think out their religious convictions for themselves.

7. One in which children learn that service endered to others is the surest source of one's own satisfaction and happiness.

8. One in which children develop a sense of loyalty to the church of their choice.

9. One in which children come to learn the significance of a promise and grow up to be responsible, trustworthy adults.

10. One in which religion and life are closely, rationally, and practically allied.

LEND-LEASE: Christ Church, Coxsackie, N. Y., would be happy to accept COD any number of hymn books with music, either the Hymnal or the Hymnal, 1940. Also Rector F. A. Sisco says the parish would like to buy at half price twenty 10 to 12-ft. form-fashioned pews and give ours away. Write him direct, please.

Also another request for a Lectern Bible, this from the Rev. Randall C. Giddings who is in charge of St. George's Mission, Durham, N. H.

St. Thomas Mission, Lakewood Village, Long Beach 8, Cal., also would like about 25 old Hymnals, with music. The request is from Vicar G. I. Whitmeyer to whom they should be sent.

St. John's Mission, Clinton, Mich., has a choir of ten persons with only two really adequate vestments. Jack E. Warner, a laymen in charge, says that "if anyone has any choir vestments they could spare we really could put them into service immediately." Likewise this is another mission that could use about 25 hymnals, old edition or 1940.

GET-TOGETHER: The rector of an eastern parish, with some private means, unmarried, 48, healthy, Prayer Book Churchman, would like a small suburban parish in the east.—The rector of a suburban parish in the east is looking for an assistant: P. B. churchman; good at pastoral work; $3,000 for a single man, $4,000 if married.—A midwestern priest, 37, P. B. churchman, single, best of references, wants a middle-sized parish anywhere, preferably east. At present he is a rector at a salary of $3,500.

—The curate of a southern parish, 46, in good health, married, wants to hear from bishops or vestries looking for a rector.—A suburban eastern parish is looking for a hard-working clergyman who would like to be rector of a parish that has great opportunities for growth.—Rector of a large city parish seeks an assistant.

Anything pertaining to Lend-Lease should be addressed directly to the church involved, if possible. Of course things offered, or desired, should be addressed to The Witness, 135 Liberty St., N. Y. 6, N. Y., but please do not send us supplies.

Get-Together information also is to be addressed to The Witness. No personal calls, please, or unnecessary correspondence.

NAVE WINDOW
St. John's Church, Barrington, Rhode Island
The Rev. W. Owings Stone, Rector

The flowing lines and varied blues of the figure of the Virgin, the random placing of her monograms, the delicately drawn Child and attendant angels, recalls the tapestry-like quality of windows of the later middle-ages. This window, of richly textured quiet coloration, with its playfully irregular canopy framework, creates a pleasant, intimate atmosphere most harmonious in the smaller church.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

WILLIAM R. WOOD
Rector of the Messiah, Detroit.

The Church is once again shouting out her back door policy. This time on a national radio hookup. For many weeks now we have been prepared to listen to "The Church Speaks"—and the result is the old story of Balaam and his ass. We as churchmen have been told that the people on the back streets, the unchurched who need a religious program will turn it off as soon as they realize it is a religious program. What then about the Lutheran Hour and the Catholic Hour? And many other religious programs such as "The Greatest Story Ever Told" and many local religious programs? These people listen intently, week after week to these programs. They are not smeared by great scenes from secular plays. The preaching and the teaching has to do at once with the salvation of people in a time when we are saying that Christ and his gospel is the way out.

We ought to know ere this that the kind of diplomacy used by politicians and statesmen is not the diplomacy that appeals to people spiritually hungry. There are great preachers among our bishops and clergy who, if they had opportunity, would appeal to the unchurched and the indifferent, and make them want to listen.

Does the Episcopal Church really believe that the present radio program will reach the unchurched, or is it just our cut and try policy again? A family of average intelligence from the hills of Kentucky has just said "slush, we read that story in its entirety and what has it to do with our going to Church next Sunday?" A Presbyterian clergyman calls it a colossal failure and poor judgment. A Roman priest just smiled and walked away. And yet just as I write, a stenographer from one of our great offices has just called and asked me to dictate, over the telephone, a grace to be used before meals. She had tried the various libraries in the city to get one. Maybe the Church should broadcast a few good "Grace before meals." Yes, great religion is just as simple as that. And the thing that people are asking for. They do want to know about the Church, her ways and her teaching, but the ways of the Church are not found in a secular play with a plug at the end, "Come to my church next Sunday." Is the Friday night program designed to fill the Episcopal Churches, or it is a means to present the Church as an instrument to save people's soul and give them comfort in these trying and difficult days. It looks as though we are trying an end run when a plunge through the middle would reach the goal. People are no more deceived by an invitation to enter the Church through its back door, whether that be a parish house, a men's club or a radio program.

Answer: Rector Wood can tell the stenographer who phoned that there are two graces to be used before meals on page 600 of the Prayer Book. Or if neither of them are acceptable maybe she would be glad to say one used by a friend of ours in New England:

"We have meat, others have none:
God bless the Revolution! Amen."

JOHN C. BLAINE
Layman of New York.

Your issue devoted to China (Oct. 14) was very interesting. But I do not see how you can advocate Christian work in the Communist areas in view of the widespread persecutions that have been reported there.

Answer: Fulton Freeman, acting chief of the division of Chinese affairs of the U. S. State Department, reports (Oct. 13, as follows about Americans and conditions in Tsinan, recently taken by the Communists: "All eight Americans who remained in the city at the time of its capture were unharmed and well. They were courteously treated by the Communist forces, were promised food and were urged to continue their teaching. The Communists instructed all schools to remain open and permitted religious liberty. While there was some denunciation of 'United States imperialism', there was no hostility shown toward individual Americans. The new mayor of the city is a graduate of a mission school. Cheeloo University was practically unharmed and the hospital was functioning as usual. Electric and water facilities were restored on September 30. However, the city was estimated to have suffered nearly thirty per cent destruction, with hardly a building left undamaged in the old city."

IMPORTANT: As a result of our announcement last May, many of our friends and patrons feel the firm of J. M. Hall Inc. is no longer in business. We are still carrying on our work, however, and are now in a position to serve you as we have in the past.

STORY OF THE WEEK

The Bishop of New York Also a Carpenter

Transforms a Tumbled-Down Mill into a Home And Made All the Furniture Himself

By W. B. SPOFFORD

★ Heath, Mass., is a rustic country village which has developed into a summer colony, largely of church people. It started when the Rev. Howard Chandler Robbins, former dean of the cathedral in New York, bought a place there. He told others. The procedure was the same with most: buy a house in ill-repair, don overalls and lay in a supply of tools and go to work making something of the place. It wasn't long before trained workmen had to be called in to finish most of the jobs.

But not so with Dell-in-Heath, pictured on the cover. Dell is down the road a bit from Heath: a quiet trout pond, high water falls, gorgeous elms and oaks. Today you will find three fine summer homes there. One, now the summer home of Justice Felix Frankfurter, was bought by Bishop Charles K. Gilbert of New York. Largely by himself he remodelled the house, pointed up the stone wall, laid out his gardens.

Across the road was a tumbling-down mill called Pondside, the upper floor of which was a bolting mill and the lower floor simply a junk heap. There were no partitions, no windows, no stairs. The picture on page five will give you the idea better than words. Learning that it was to be converted into a service station, Bishop Gilbert bought it for a few dollars.

In 1933 he went to work, first with a sledge hammer. He broke up the cement engine base; he laid a rough floor on the ground floor; he closed up the big doors which were used for the entrance; he put in some windows.

The next summer he put partitions throughout; laid the upper floor; made closets; put in a tile bathroom. Then in 1935 he built the porch across the length of the building, looking out over the pond. He next hung all the doors and the trim on the inside of the windows, and made a fireplace and a mantlepiece.

The summer of 1937 found him working on kitchen cabinets and the counters and panels in the living and dining rooms. So the following year he was ready to paint the inside, with time left to make a beautiful refectory table and side-board and serving table. All of this he did in a workshop in a field beyond which he has equipped over the years with power-driven machines and other tools which he learned to use as a boy in a furniture shop owned by his father in up-state New York.

In 1939 Bishop Gilbert moved from the house now rented to Justice Frankfurter into the old mill, which with his own labor he had transformed into what you see on the cover this week. But he was not satisfied to sit on his porch and rock; he made living room tables and 12 chairs for the dining room. Since then he has made practically all of the furniture in the house; notably a desk and bureau in his own bedroom, and also a fine desk for the other house for the use of the Supreme Court Justice.

The third of the houses was a messy affair which was purchased a few years ago by Prof. Sherman Johnson of the Episcopal Theological Seminary. This too has been made into a very attractive summer home, and it has to be said that the Professor got blisters on his hands heaving rocks for his wall and carting lumber on his back. But he is no building genius like the Bishop of New York, and so had to call in carpenters, plumbers and the rest.

A couple of years ago I got hold of a barn in a field on the side of the hill, a few hundred yards from Bishop Gilbert's show-place. We camp out, with the Bishop coming up occasionally to tell me "how simple it would be to just knock out that wall, move that door over here, put cabinets here and a big window there and you'd have a really nice place. You could do it all yourself."

But I just grin, and continue to listen to the ball game over the radio.

NEWS OF THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH

OREGON WORK DESCRIBED BY BISHOP BARTON

★ With only a brief visit to his home and Missionary District of Eastern Oregon after participating in both the Lambeth and Amsterdam Conference, the Rt. Rev. Lane Barton returned to his native Diocese of Ohio this month to address the Regional vestry dinner meetings. Sounding the challenge of new opportunities for witnessing and stewardship in "the greater work of the church," Bishop Barton states that prospects for winning people to Christ and his Church in Eastern Oregon continue to be bright. The Northwest has been enjoying a marked population increase in the post-war years. A large part of this influx goes to the cities in the coastal region, though rural Eastern Oregon is receiving more than its share of the new settlers. Growth is most rapid in the areas opened up by irrigation where young couples are taking up small holdings from 30 to a hundred acres. Added to this, the percentage of people in the state of Oregon not attached to any religious body runs well above the national average. Seventy-eight percent of the population claims no religious affiliation! Because of these two factors, the population increase and the high percentage of unchurched people, the clergy of Eastern Oregon devote much of their time to recruiting and preparing people for membership in the Christian church.

BISHOP HARRIS TO BE IN CLEVELAND

★ The Rt. Rev. Bravid W. Harris, Missionary Bishop of Liberia, will be one of the speakers at the diocesan gathering in Trinity Cathedral on Nov. 11, in connection with the Foreign Missions Advance Program. Dean Edward R. Welles of St. Paul's Cathedral, Buffalo, will also address the meeting.

In the evening there will be a mass meeting in the Euclid Ave. Baptist Church, for the interdenominational part of the Foreign Missions program. The principal speaker will be Dr. George Howard, noted Latin-American missionary.

CLERGYMAN CONDUCTS MOTHER'S WEDDING

★ The Rev. Osborne Budd, rector of St. John's, Yonkers, N. Y., officiated at a service of Holy Matrimony recently in which his mother was married. One of the few clergymen who have had such a privilege, Mr. Budd read the service in which his mother, Mrs. Roberta LeMon, and Harry Leggatt were married. The bride, twice widowed, and the groom, a widower, will live in Brooklyn.

ENGLISH MISSIONER ARRIVES IN N.Y.

★ The Rev. Bryan Green, who is to conduct a Preaching Mission throughout the Diocese of New York of the Protestant Episcopal Church during November, arrived at LaGuardia airport from England, Nov. 3, and was met by the Rev. Lynde E. May III, Dean of the Convocation of Westchester, and the Rt. Rev. Horace W. B. Donegan, Larchmont, Suffragan Bishop of the Diocese.

The Preaching Mission, under the slogan "Faith that Can Change the World," will open with a County-wide Service at the County Center, in White Plains, Sunday, Nov. 7 at 4 p. m., and will close with a week's preaching in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

Mr. Green is a noted religious broadcaster in England, has conducted many missions in the British Isles, and has led the important Triennial Mission at Cambridge. He is also a Proctor in Canterbury Convocation and a member of the Archbishop's Council on Evangelism.

NEW COUNSEL CENTER IN PROVIDENCE

★ Grace Church, Providence, Rhode Island, has opened a Counseling Center. It is a means whereby the church will endeavor to help people with their problems of everyday living. Its services are available to everyone. The minister in charge is the Rev. Charles F. Brooks, a native of New England, who for the past 16 years was rector of All Saints, Denver, Colorado. He is a graduate of the Denver University School of Social Work, and has attended the Institute of Pastoral Care at Massachusetts General Hospital, Boston. Grace Church is also sponsoring an Institute of Religion which has been meeting weekly since October 13. Each week Bishop Bennett has given a general lecture on "The Great Beliefs of the Christian Church." Special speakers have been the Rev. Henry M. Ogilby, the Rev. Roy Wesley Battenhouse, Mrs. Dora P. Chaplin, and the Very Rev. Louis M. Hirshon.

DEAN CAMPBELL ELECTED IN LOS ANGELES

★ Dean Donald Campbell of Christ Church Cathedral, in Springfield, Mass., was elected Suffragan Bishop of Los Angeles on the second ballot at a special convention of the diocese, held October 21st. On the first ballot, with 126 lay votes and 63 clergy votes, needed for election, the result was as follows:

Dean Campbell, 109 lay votes and 56 clergy votes.

Rev. T. Raymond Jones, rector of St. James', South Pasadena, 43 lay votes and 15 clergy votes.

Rev. F. J. Stevens, chaplain of the Bishop's School at La Jolla, 25 lay votes and 18 clergy votes.

On the second ballot Dean Campbell received 251 lay votes and 124 clergy votes.

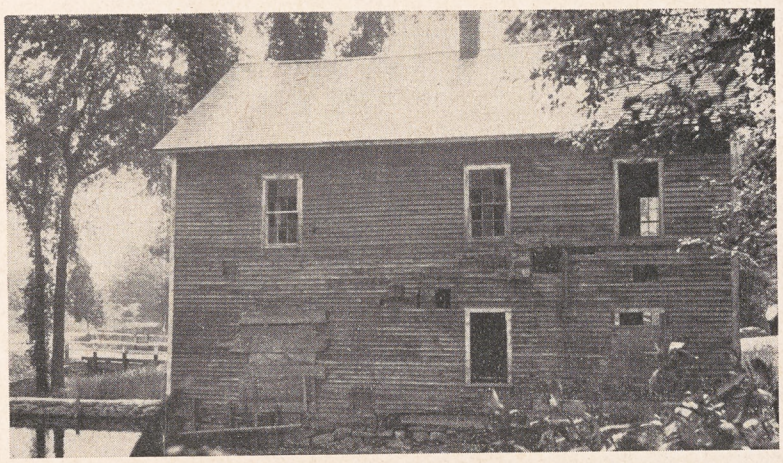
Dean Campbell was curate at St. Paul's Cathedral, Los Angeles, 1932-33; was assistant at St. Paul's, New Haven, Conn., 1933-35; rector of the Redeemer, Providence, R. I., 1935-43, and since has been dean in Springfield. His wife is Hester Hocking Campbell, daughter of Prof. W. E. Hocking, the retired professor of philosophy at Harvard. They have three children.

There is no indication that Dean Campbell will decline as he indicated that he was exceedingly pleased at his election when called on the phone by his twin brother, the Rev. Alexander K. Campbell, rector of St. David's, North Hollywood.

PEACE PANELS HELD IN SEMINARIES

★ Continuing the series of Peace Panels held in the Seminaries of the Church under the auspices of the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship, meetings were held on November 12 at Virginia and Philadelphia Theological Seminaries. At Virginia the panel consisted of two members of the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship, the Rt. Rev. William Appleton Lawrence and the Rev. William Marmion, and two members of the faculty of the Seminary, Drs. Stanley and Heim. About 125 members of the faculty, student body and their families attended the meeting. After two hours the meeting adjourned officially, only to continue as an informal discussion for another hour.

The president of the Fellowship, the Rev. Lawson Willard headed the panel at Philadelphia. Dr. Stanley Leavy, M. D., who is connected with the psychiatric department of Yale University and Mr. Noman Leamy, a conscientious objector in the present draft, completed the panel. The Dean of the Seminary joined with other representatives of the faculty and with members of the student body in the interesting discussion which followed.



These were the sixth and seventh Seminaries in which Peace Panels have been conducted in the last year. Plans are now being made to hold a similar meeting at the Theological Seminary at Sewanee.

HONOR RURAL RECTOR FOR UNSELFISH SERVICE

★ The Rev. Edwin S. Ford of Sparta, N. J., vicar of the Episcopal Western Counties Mission in Sussex County, N. J., was singled out by his Princeton University classmates, members of the class of 1913, for "completely unselfish service to his fellow man and to his Church."

Mr. Ford, who for 30 years has served as a country pastor in a parish covering some 500 square miles was named as the recipient of the Class's annual award for distinguished service, that in the past has gone to such prominent persons as the late John G. Winant, wartime ambassador to England, and Robert McLean, Philadelphia publisher and president of the Associated Press.

"His untiring efforts and his truly great humility have long since won him the affection, admiration and respect not only of those among whom he lives and works, but also of his bishop and other dignitaries of his Church," the citation concluded.

This was the condition of the bolting mill when Bishop Gilbert went to work to convert it into the summer home pictured on the cover this week. The story is on page three.

LOUIS PITT TO SPEAK AT COLUMBIA INSTITUTE

★ The Rev. Louis W. Pitt, rector of Grace Church, New York, and chaplain at Columbia University, will make an address at the 20th anniversary celebration of the National Conference of Christians and Jews. A two-day institute of human relations, marking the event, will be held at Columbia University, November 17-18.

The institute will bring together a number of leaders in various fields and the general public for a discussion of current problems in human relations. Other speakers will be Robert E. Sherwood, playwright; William Jansen, superintendent of New York City public schools; Dore Schary, motion picture producer; Dr. Mordecai Johnson, president of Howard University; and Dean Earnest Melby of New York University's School of Education. The institute will be divided into four general sessions for consideration of what practical steps can be taken to improve inter-group relations by educational and religious organizations, civic agencies, and press, radio, stage, films and advertising media.

MISSIONARY CHURCHES SEND GIFTS

★ A contribution of $10.86 from the Church of St. Augustine of Canterbury, Agawa, Philippine Islands, was received by "281". The offering was designated to the Church Building Fund, and when received in the Philippines was mostly in the form of produce which was sold so the cash could be forwarded. The gifts included 270 bundles of palay, which is unthreshed rice, 20 ears of dried corn, six bunches of green onions, two kilos of potatoes, four cabbages, two bundles of string beans and one egg.

The Rev. Leopold Damrosch, relative of Walter Damrosch the musician, is in charge of several Episcopalian mission stations in the Mountain Province of the Philippines. In sending the offering from Agawa he said: "By American standards this is not much money. But one bundle of palay provides a full meal for one Igorot. If an American congregation were to give the value of one meal apiece, it would make a respectable figure."

At their recent Niobrara Convocation, American Indian members of the Church in South Dakota presented an offering of more than $9,300 for the work of the Church. This set an all-time record, for this annual gift.

ALASKA OVER-CHURCHED, UNDER-STAFFED

★ Dr. Mark Dawber of the Home Missions Council, returning from Alaska, declared that "Alaska is over-churched and irreligious." The Rev. F. Robert Webb, formerly rector of Holy Trinity Episcopal Church, Juneau, Alaska, in reply, asserted that "People are irreligious in Alaska. They come for two reasons. One is to make a fortune, the other is to run away from something. It is over-churched because during the war it got so much publicity that every denomination rushed to start a church of its own. So far as my own Church is concerned, we do not have enough Episcopal ministers in Alaska."

Mr. Webb has served as volunteer secretary of the Juneau Chamber of Commerce, as a civic duty, and covered a wide territory with his ministry, traveling by plane.

Responding to the need for clergy in Alaska is the Rev. Robert H. Reid, who back in 1929 made a vow to become a minister of the Gospel. He has just been ordained to the ministry of the Episcopal Church and will work as a missionary in Alaska. He secured his theological education through the GI bill of rights, after service as a Marine in the South Pacific. As he sails for Alaska with Mrs. Reid, his ambition of 19 years is being realized.

HEBERT LECTURING AT BERKELEY

★ The Rev. A. Gabriel Hebert, Church of England authority on liturgy and liturgical theology, is visiting lecturer at Berkeley Divinity School for the fall term of 1948-1949. While resident at Berkeley he is also engaged to speak and preach over a vast itinerary during the next few months. He has already spoken at many diocesan clergy conferences, seminary chapel services, and at the College of Preachers during the last week of October.

When the Rev. J. Daniel Gilliam came to Trinity, Tallulah, La., as rector he brought with him Mary Laura Dick of New Orleans as his bride.

GRATEFUL STUDENT SENDS GIFT

★ The National Council has received a gift of $40 sent by a Chinese clergyman doing graduate work in this country at present, as an expression of "the splendid service rendered the Chinese Church and people by the Rt. Rev. Alfred A. Gilman and Mrs. Gilman." Bishop Gilman retired recently as Missionary Bishop of Hankow.

Prof. Trueblood Discusses Cell Groups

★ Emphasizing the fact that the "salt has seemingly lost its savor," D. Elton Trueblood told 250 participants in a one-day conference on cell group movements at Ann Arbor, Mich., that a new reformation is underway in Protestant Christianity through a return to the early Church's cellular-type organization. Addressing a diverse group of students, ministers and concerned laity on the University of Michigan campus, he expounded the thesis that the New Testament, basically, is a book about the origin, growth and aims of a small, committed redemptive fellowship ever spreading and dividing like cells in the human body.

Prof. Trueblood stated that the contemporary revolution in Christian thought is based on five points: 1) a recovery of urgency; 2) an emphasis on the ministry of the laity; 3) a recognition that the real human affiliations are horizontal —i. e. between persons committed to the same aims and beliefs and not, necessarily, between persons in the same denomination, racial group, nation or caste; 4) a recognition that life is a totality covering men's worship, work and recreation, and 5) a rediscovery that the fundamental Christian unit is not the lone individual but the individual living within and for an intense fellowship. "The need today," he said, "is for a rediscovery of the New Testament miracle whereby convinced, disciplined persons truly salt their society."

The Rev. John O. Nelson, director of the Federal Council's commission on the ministry and founder of the Kirkridge Community, discussed the idea of constructive retreats leading to a return to positive, Christian social action in the everyday world. The Rev. Ross Snyder, professor of religious education at the Chicago Theological Seminary, emphasized that a cell could only be vital and healthy in the social sense insofar as its members were aware of and committed to the "personhood" of all the members and were convinced that there was a possibility of redemption for both individuals and society even out of the sorriest state.

The final discussant, the Rev. James Luther Adams, professor at Meadville Theological Seminary, insisted that all Christians must know a lot more about their own early history and must learn ways and means of developing a little, revolutionary church within the total social institution that is now called the Church. "We recognize," he said, "that there is something terribly wrong, not only with our world, but with Protestant Christianity. Continually, Christians must come to realize that they have unlimited liability. Each one, individually, is responsible for the collapse or salvation of the world and it is not a burden that can be passed off on some scapegoat." Making a strong appeal for Christian social action, Adams said that major changes in any social order are always achieved by small groups and quoted Ernst Troeltsch to the effect that "virtue can't be realized in a vacuum but only in a social context."

During the conference, the participants broke up into interest groups dealing with cell groups on the campus, in the local church, in summer service and in permanent communities.

BISHOP HART WELCOMES DEAN JOHNSON

★ "If the Very Rev. Hewlett Johnson, Dean of Canterbury Cathedral, comes to this country on a visit, I shall be delighted to have him preach in any church in the diocese where the rector invites him. If Dr. Johnson comes to Philadelphia as a lecturer on Communism, I would not care to be a member of the sponsoring committee, nor would I plan to attend such a lecture."—(Signed) Oliver J. Hart. It was recently reported that Dean Johnson had been granted a visa to travel and talk in the United States.

By the summer of 1949 Christ Church, Dearborn, Michigan, is to have a new $260,000 church. Ground was broken by Mrs. Henry Ford, pictured holding the shovel. At her right is Roy Bryant, her brother; Mrs. Stacey and the Rev. Hedley G. Stacey, the parish rector. Mrs. Ford donated the site for the new church.

ECUMENICAL NEWS

CHURCH WORLD SERVICE MAPS DP PROGRAM

Church World Service has been responsible for bringing into this country 2,943 DPs from Europe and Asia during the last 18 months. Plans for expanding the program were made at a recent meeting of the relief agency in Asbury Park, N. Y.

Speakers at the session stressed that under the government's new edict, CWS will be responsible for a greatly increased number of displaced persons.

It was pointed out that the government has not yet found a way to provide inland transportation from the port of arrival to the community of ultimate destination. Employers hesitate to advance the necessary money, particularly to family groups, it was stated.

According to reports, the needed guarantees that individuals and their families will not become public charges have proved a formidable barrier. To date, however, the CWS has certified over 400 guarantees.

VIRGINIA RURAL AREAS OVER-CHURCHED

Dr. William E. Garnett, rural sociologist for the Virginia Agricultural Experiment Station, says Virginia has too many rural churches.

In a report on rural church problems, Dr. Garnett pointed out that there were 2,361 churches of six Protestant denominations in existence in the state's rural sections.

He said 16 per cent of these churches have less than 50 members; 24 per cent have 50 to 99 members; 19 per cent from 100 to 149 members; 14 per cent from 150 to 199 members; 16 per cent from 200 to 349 members; seven per cent with 350 to 599 members, and four per cent with 600 or more members.

Asserting that denominational bodies have made little attempt to face the problem of over-churching unitedly, Dr. Garnett said the consequences of over-churching were: "weak, struggling, poorly-equipped churches; difficulty in holding strong ministers qualified to meet the needs of their people; and drags in many aspects of community life." (RNS)

BOSTON CHURCHMEN MAP MISSIONS CAMPAIGN

Members of six Protestant denominations met in Boston recently to map a five-year plan for improving foreign missions. The meeting was one of 36 planned for as many key cities in the U.S. and Canada at the recent World Mission Assembly in Columbus, O.

Dr. George P. Howard of Buenos Aires, Argentina, evangelist for South America, told the session that the foreign missions advance campaign would consist of "intensified, more efficient service along all lines of education, health and religion."

"I think of this campaign," he said, "as an endeavor to take Christianity in earnest and to quit playing with religion. It's all part of a general stirring and awakening in Protestant Churches all over the world."

SEEKS AFTER-HOURS USE OF SCHOOL BUILDINGS

Legislation to permit use of school buildings in New York State after regular hours for religious education may be introduced at the next session of the legislature, and a companion bill brought before the New York City Council. Prepared under the joint authorship of State Senator Joseph Parisi and Jacob Paul Lefkowitz, attorney, the plan would apply to all religious groups. Lefkowitz said, "religion is the only secure foundation for peace in the world; the State has an obligation to utilize for this purpose buildings now being wasted after 3 p.m. After hours a public school ceases to function as such and is simply publicly-owned property; (they) should be available to religious groups for the religious education of their children in a healthy adequate environment."

JEWISH JOURNAL BACKS COUNCIL STAND

The Reconstructionist, official organ of the Jewish Reconstructionist Foundation, gave its approval to the World Council's communism-capitalism report.

Defining the theory of laissez-faire as "the theory that self-interest is an adequate basis for an economic order," The Reconstructionist declared that such a doctrine was "irreligious." "In condemning both it and Communism, the World Council of Churches puts its finger on the heresy that is common to both," the bi-weekly said. "That heresy is the assumption that the 'economic man' is the real man, and that loving-kindness and reverence for human personality must not interfere with economic processes. What is objectionable in Communism," it continued, "results from its ideological basis, from its assumption that morality is a class concept and that no act which advances the proletarian revolution is subject to condemnation on grounds of morality."

NEWS OF OTHER CHURCHES

CHURCH MEMBERS DECLINE

A yearly loss of 65,000 church members who become "inactive" was decried as a "scandal" by director G. Gerald Sias of the Disciples "Crusade for a Christian World." He was answered by Secretary James H. Tinsley of the Missouri Missionary Society, who told the delegates to the international convention of Disciples that many people are not interested in formal religion "but were definitely interested in meeting the needs of their fellowmen as taught and lived by Christ. The Christians in New Testament days expressed their Christianity by meeting the needs and helping to solve the problems of their fellowmen. They worked in the whole realm of life. Many of the fields in which they worked have now been shifted from the church to social and government agencies. Why was this shift made? It is reasonable to believe it came because we did not emphasize, teach and expect followers of Christ to be stewards. This we must correct."

PRESBYTERIANS OPPOSE 'GET TOUGH' POLICY

The Presbyterian synod of New York adopted a resolution unanimously opposing the "get tough" policy of the U.S. toward Russia. It also deplored the "daily mounting jealousy, ill-will and suspicion" between this country and the Soviet. It said it viewed with "grave apprehension" the growing tendency of Americans to think that war with Russia is inevitable. "We believe," the synod added, "that in all our dealings with the Soviet Union we should be patient, sympathetic, sparing no pains in the effort to put ourselves in the place of a people made hypersensitive by the events of recent history, and that efforts should be made to clarify all questions contributing to existing suspicions on both sides through conference and constructive statesmanship."

The synod assailed what it described as "the present trend toward militarism in this country," terming it a "threat to freedom at home and security abroad." Opposition to peacetime military conscription was reaffirmed by the synod. At the same time, it approved efforts to establish "a genuine world federation" and urged the U.S. to set an example by "utilizing fully the machinery and the growing prestige of the United Nations in the settlement of disputes on the international scene.

BAPTISTS OPPOSE DRAFT IN PEACETIME

Baptists of New York state, meeting at Jamestown in a missionary convention, voted to oppose continuation of the selective service act, stating that it "is in essence and practice actual peacetime military conscription." The delegates, by a voice vote of 500 delegates from 781 churches, asserted that "popular opinion is reflecting increasing fear, passionate ill-will and reckless war-mindedness toward Russsia" and added that "we utterly reject the fatalistic idea that war with Russia is inevitable."

SOUTHERN BAPTISTS ADOPT BUDGET

A budget of approximately three million dollars was adopted by the foreign mission board of the Southern Baptist Church, meeting at Richmond, Va. Of this, over two and a half million is for overseas work with slightly over a quarter million for the home office.

ROMAN CATHOLICS HIT IMMIGRATION LAWS

Delegates to the National Catholic rural life conference, meeting at La Crosse, Wis., were told by their executive committee that U.S. immigration laws are based on racial superiority and are therefore "undemocratic and un-Christian."

Commenting on American land policies, the Catholic farm leaders urged a national policy based on an increase in the number of family-sized farms with special efforts made to do so through reclamation, irrigation and conservation. They also urged that Catholic institutions increase agricultural research as part of their curricula.

The resolution on the Christian Rural Overseas Program — interdenominational relief agency, endorsed it and called for its support by Catholics on both local and national levels.

HOLLYWOOD EMBRACE CONDEMNED

The "Hollywood Embrace" has no place in church weddings according to Lutheran Pastor Frank J. Bauer of Olean, N. Y., speaking before the Buffalo pastoral conference of his synod. Himself but 30, he said that he "is still young enough to favorably regard kissing within its legitimate bounds, but feels nevertheless that any public display of affection, particularly in church, is in bad taste."

MEMBERSHIP DRIVE BY METHODISTS

A campaign to increase membership of the women's division of Christian service of the Methodist Church is planned for January. They will also seek an increase of 1,000 missionaries and deaconesses.

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

PRIESTS AT WORK IN FACTORIES

More than 100 Roman Catholic priests are currently working in factories and workshops in various parts of France. These "Vatican Commandoes" — as they have come to be known — went to the factories because the workers wouldn't come to the church in sufficient numbers. The priest-laborers live much like any other workers. They reside in tiny rooms near the factories, dress in rough working clothes, and roll their own cigarettes.

They celebrate mass on temporary altars, making use of workshop tables, lockers and the like. When not in the factory, they spend their free time with youth groups, visiting the sick and the old, attending workers' meetings, or discussing workers' problems in the canteens.

Among the priests are accomplished plumbers, garagemen, road-menders, mechanics, and dock-workers. As far as the priests are concerned, the job itself is of no importance, no matter how menial, as long as it brings them into contact with large numbers of people.

Without preaching or acting conspicuously pious, these specialized missioners have, according to observers, exerted great influence on those with whom they have come in contact.

CHINESE CHRISTIANS ARE PRAISED

Chinese Christians were highly praised for their record during the war years at the fifth general assembly of the Church of Christ in China meeting in full session at Soochow for the first time since 1937. The meeting was attended by 150 delegates representing synods from all parts of China, national Christian organizations, and 15 cooperating missions.

Moderator C. C. Chen, pastor of the largest church in Amoy, emphasized that the Church not only "maintained its life and witness" despite the stress of war, but also opened three new mission areas — in Kweichow, Yunnan, and among tribal peoples in southwest China.

Visitors from the United States and Canada echoed Chen's praise, among them American Ambassador Leighton Stuart. Addressing the Assembly in the Chinese language, the Ambassador paid tribute to the perseverance and courage of the country's Christians in wartime.

SERVICES BARRED BY POLIO

Church services have been forbidden by the land council in the Niesky district of Russian-occupied Germany because of "the danger and possible spread of polio." Religious leaders in the section said the polio "scare" had not prevented mass meetings by the Soviet-sponsored Socialist Unity Party. Meanwhile, a protest against the ban has been made by Roman Catholic and Evangelical officials.

MOSCOW BARS UNITY WITH ANGLICANS

Patriarch Alexei of the Russian Orthodox Church has stated that the Anglican Church cannot be recognized, giving as his reason that the Church of England has as its head the supreme secular authority, the king. He also stated that other obstacles were differences in ordination rites and Church canons and dogma.

BULGARIAN GOVERNMENT PRAISED BY CLERGY

Bulgaria's regime operates "in accord with the basic principles of Christianity," the 30th annual congress of the Clergymen's Union declared. The Union claims a membership of 2,000 Orthodox priests. Asserting that they welcomed separation of Church and state in Bulgaria, the priests termed it a "completely natural situation which will do no harm."

In other resolutions, the Orthodox clergymen declared that state-control of the education of youth was not directed against the Church or freedom of conscience; approved "active and permanent collaboration" between themselves and the government; pledged their participation in "all mass organizations, such as the Bulgarian-Soviet societies, relief organizations and cooperatives"; promised to help deepen "existing relations and brotherly connections between the Bulgarian and Russian Orthodox Churches and between the Bulgarian and the great Russian people."

MISSIONARY COUNCIL FOR RUSSIANS

A missionary council of the Russian Orthodox Church has been set up by authority of Moscow Patriarch Alexei, it was learned in Moscow. Archbishop Viteli of Tula will direct the agency, which aims to propagate the Orthodox faith among non-Russian peoples. Its first fields of activity are expected to be Polish Galicia, the Baltic States and the Far East.

CAMPAIGN STARTED BY CARDINAL

Charges that Joseph Cardinal Mindszenthy, primate of Hungary, has started a whispering campaign urging Roman Catholic parents not to send their children to nationalized church schools were made in Budapest by Premier Louis Dinnyes. He spoke at a meeting of the political committee of the Smallholders Party.

Franco and the Marshall Plan

THE dictator of Spain, Francisco Franco, is now receiving kind words from our government. Of course, it isn't on the record, as yet. But the trial balloons have been sent up and tested in the form of statements from Senator Chan Gurney, Coco-Cola's Jim Farley and the motion picture industry's Eric Johnson. All of them, after being cordially received by El Caudillo, have said that Franco's Spain, perhaps with a mild bit of white-washing, should be incorporated into the Marshall Plan for the rehabilitation of Europe. This plan, as you know, is designed to rebuild Europe a la western democratic way of life. These men, all staunch advocates of the Marshall Plan, say that Franco should qualify and, from Washington rumor, the bipartisan foreign administration thinks that it would be a great idea.

There is little doubt that Franco has a fine bargaining position. He still has portions of his Blue Squadron raring to go — the same squadron which fought side by side with the Wehrmacht and the S.S. troops against the Russians. Likewise, his country is hidden behind the Pyranees, a natural defense barrier in terms of pre-atomic war, and the American military look at bases there with covetous eyes. Likewise, Franco has never alienated the Roman Catholic Church, which has more than a little to say about what our foreign policy should be. Yes, Franco is in a fine position.

We, perhaps unfortunately for us, still remember the years 1936 to 1939. We watched Madrid with prayerful hearts and eager hopes. We deplored the United States' and Great Britain's most unneutral Neutrality Act. We had friends that fought gallantly against Franco's imported Fascists. We say now that any acceptance of Franco and his regime in the name of bi-partisan "democracy" would be the greatest moral delinquency that this country has yet fallen into. Such an action, we believe, would wreck the U. N. a thousand times more easily than the Berlin blockade, and we venture to prophesy, would do more to turn Great Britain, France and Italy against us than all of Russia's occupation troops put together.

We believe that this is a paramount moral issue which must haunt the conscience of all Americans, Christian or otherwise. A report from Washington states that what surprised the State Department about their Franco trial balloons was the quietness with which they were received by the American liberals and progressives. Well, we, at least, are now shouting and intend to do so until this specious kind of "democratic" reasoning is destroyed.

"QUOTES"

IT would be a grave mistake to believe that most of the world has any intention of accepting any single economic system, whether based on the communist doctrine of the classless society or the most extreme American capitalist version of a free enterprise system. In a world where so many forces are at work and so many different civilizations and cultural traditions are stirring and intermingling, domination by any single ideology, whether it be religion, or political, or economic, is unthinkable and impossible.

Old Age Poverty

WE believe that the trustees of the Church Pension Fund are doing the best job possible under the rules that govern them. But the October issue of "Protection Points" presents a deplorable picture which ought to be on the conscience of every churchman. There are 709 clergymen who were ordained before 1917 receiving pensions, and of these, 613 receive $1,100 a year or less, 37 of them being under $600 a year. We know how some few of these men are able to keep alive, and theirs is not a happy lot. Of the 94 on the pension roll who were ordained after 1917, 77 are at $700 a year or less. Many of these were ordained when they were in their forties or older, and so their length of service makes the pension smaller.

In the matter of pensions for the widows of the clergy, the report shows that of the 1,139 widows of those ordained before 1917, all but fourteen receive $800 a year or less, and of these 1030 are at the $500 or less level. The widows of those ordained after 1917 number 272, and 261 of these are recipients of $500 or less a year. The worst feature of this is that the clergyman who receives the smaller salary is oftentimes quite unable to save anything and then his widow is also given a small pension, which has been determined by his average wage and length of service.

The trustees can do no differently than they have, and their efforts have been marked by a sincere desire to give as large a grant as possible. However, the cost of living makes most of these pensions deplorably inadequate. The fault would seem to lie with the philosophy of the Church in its pension plan. It has been guided by a system of an actuarially sound fund. It has failed to take into account the fact that every man, whether he served in a small mission or a large parish, needs food, clothing and shelter when he retires. The widow of a man who has had a small salary is in worse straits. If the Church is a real fellowship, an actual brotherhood where one another's burdens are borne, then we must review what our pension plan is doing to destroy that concept. We have always had in the Christian tradition a special care for widows, but the record of the Episcopal Church in the matter does not suggest that we can be complacent. In fact, the whole matter of pensions in the Church seriously hinders our being able to speak with authority to the governments of the states in the present poverty levels of old age assistance programs. It is past time that the Church re-thinks this whole matter. It is time to seek out the ways of establishing a pension plan that will more fully show the Church indeed a body which cares for all its own.

East-West Tensions at Amsterdam

By Raymond E. Maxwell

Episcopal clergyman now with the Council of Relief Agencies in Germany (CRALOG)

MONDAY, October 11th, at a district conference of pastors in Germany I reported on the assembly of the World Council of Churches. In the discussion following my address one pastor asked why the assembly had not made an unequivocal condemnation of Communism. A second pastor replied that for many reasons, including the fact that Churches from both sides of "the iron curtain" were represented there, it would have been unwise for the Churches to do more than state Christian principles in rather large terms, which could then be given local applications. A third pastor, a bearded but doughty former missionary, reminded us that Christianity had been itself communistic in its early history, and stated that as a missionary in Africa he had worked among tribes where private property was not permitted, but that he had not considered his Christian duty to try to abolish their primitive Communism. He said it is not the Church's business to prescribe economic and social systems, but to support those programs and methods which are consistent with the biblical ethic and to resist those which contradict it.

In many countries discussions like this have doubtless taken place—with some people wishing that the Amsterdam assembly had issued more scathing denunciations either of Communism or of free enterprise (depending on the individual); and with others believing that the assembly could not have said much more or less than it did say. It is no easy thing for an individual to say a word to the complexities of the east-west situation without oversimplifying the issues and arousing prejudice. The difficulty of speaking a constructive word is infinitely greater when not one individual but many speak with a united voice, even if these individuals represent the Churches of the world and therefore speak from a common ground of truth and faith.

Many Points of View

The first and most obvious limitation upon Amsterdam in speaking a word to Communism and capitalism was imposed by the geographical, political and historical diversity of the countries from which the delegates came. The man from Czechoslovakia or Hungary or the man from the Orient, where revolutionary social and political currents are surging and where decisions are being made in protest against racial discrimination and western imperialism and where new nations are being born, views the east-west struggle quite differently from the American. The man from England and from Western Europe views it from a different position again. People in all countries beyond the Russian orbit, as well as millions within it, are fearful of the Russian struggle for power, but they often see in the east-west tensions something other than a simple contest between freedom and oppression. The non-American is not more objective or less emotional than the American, but as a third party to the struggle he still can view the two major contenders as a partial outsider, and he considers the aims and claims of both to be less idealistic than their official declarations indicate. The non-American is likely to take sides in the conflict out of historic or economic necessity or as protest against what he considers the social irresponsibility of the side representing "freedom" or against the tyranny or, on the other hand, against the social idealism of the side which claims that its revolution will automatically bring justice and "democracy"; and even when this non-American finds himself under pressure to take sides sometimes he is saying in his heart, "a plague on both your houses" and his inner feeling is that the possibility of war —therefore both sides—are a threat to his peace and security or that (in some measure at least) both sides are "foreign powers" threatening the independent life of his nation.

The man from the Orient or from the countries behind or beside "the iron curtain" is also often a man whose country has had a history of imperialism or tyranny antedating Bolshevism by generations or centuries. He may regard the threat to freedom under Bolshevism as a very serious one, but he is so accustomed to threats to his country's freedom as to regard this one as nothing new; or he may see in it not a threat, but the promise of a standard of social and economic well-being which he and his fellow-countrymen have never enjoyed.

The man behind or beside the iron curtain is often a man to whom daily bread is both a reality and a question mark in a sense completely unknown to most readers of The Witness. For good or ill, therefore, he is likely to be moved by considerations which have little to do with either democratic or Communist ideology.

The first and most obvious limitation at Amsterdam in speaking to the east-west tensions was that of the widespread diversity of the individuals and Churches represented there—geographical diversity, political diversity, diversity of attitudes to Communism and western capitalism, diversity in the interpretation of familiar words ("freedom," "democracy," etc.) and diversity in Christian thinking and practice.

The statements produced by the combined thinking of the Assembly—representative of the currents of life and thought in forty-four countries—reflect a degree of agreement among the delegates and succeed in measure in transcending national prejudices and self-interests. Quite apart from all theological considerations, if there had been any thought of sanctioning either Communism or capitalism, it would have seriously and perhaps tragically embarrassed many delegates and would have split the assembly. This practical fact, however, is not the crucial one: the statements of the assembly reveal that the leaders of Protestantism in all lands view the ideologies of capitalism and Communism as having unwittingly conspired together to bring us to our present impasse—capitalism by its inability to cope with the effects of modern productive power, and Communism by its ideology and methods which are intolerable to lovers of freedom.

But if the first and most obvious limitation that the assembly faced in speaking to east-west tensions was that of the diversity of its own constituency, a second limitation was inherent in the nature and function of the assembly itself and of the World Council of Churches.

No Protestant Vatican

THE Council exists expressly on the basis that it is not to be a "Protestant Vatican." It is contrary to the essence of Protestantism that any man or group of men should assume authority to speak ex cathedra or as "God's vicar." Protestantism allows no ultimate authority except that of Christ the Lord who speaks to us through the Bible by the working of the Holy Spirit, and he gives no infallible authority to men, not even to Church leaders, to give an ultimate interpretation of his will with respect to events and issues of a given historical moment. This Protestant conception helps to guard the Church against taking pride in itself and it helps to prevent the Church from interpreting great moral struggles as simple conflicts between God and the Devil, or to imagine that moral causes, though relatively good in themselves, can be regarded as holy crusades. It does not regard criticism of the Church's policies and programs as tantamount to enmity against God and his righteousness, though it may also be that. It does not equate the will of the Church—hierarchy, organization or leadership—with the will of God. The Protestant spirit has its own peculiar dangers and temptations, but in the refusal to link the destiny of the Churches with any existing historical institution or to give absolute meaning to very relative instruments, the faith and freedom of Protestantism is supremely manifested. As Dr. Hromadka of Prague put it, the Church "is not at home in any historical situation, she is not paralysed by any historical catastrophe."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

It was therefore not merely fear or indifference or compromise with "the world" which prevented the assembly from calling the (non-Roman) Christian world to a holy crusade for or against a particular political or economic system. Even in our present catastrophic situation there was no thought of regarding the east-west conflict in simple moralistic terms of black and white; there was general agreement that to over-simplify moral issues or to minimize their awful subtlety and complexity would only tend more fatally to entrench the Churches and us all behind a Maginot line of self-righteousness. This second limitation, then, upon what could and should be said to the Churches from Amsterdam was defined by the nature of Protestantism and was a limitation inherent in the nature and purpose of the World Council.

A third and closely related limitation upon what could and should be said concerning east-west tensions rests in the fact that it was the business of such an assembly to concern itself in its pronouncements only with the word of truth, not beginning with any attempt to justify particular social or economic programs, but beginning with the purpose of God for man and the world as revealed through his word. As Prof. Karl Barth put it in the opening address, "We should not try . . . to begin down below; neither with the . . . terrifying picture of a culture which is only technically oriented and only concerned with production, nor with the clash between a godless west and a godless east, nor with the threat of the atomic bomb, and certainly not with the few considerations and measures by which we think we might cure all this calamity. . . . The kingdom that we show the world must be God's Kingdom and not the kingdom of any sort of ideas and principles that we approve. Let our 'Yes' and 'No' to the activities of industry and the state be the Gospel's 'Yes' and 'No', and not the 'Yes' and 'No' of any sort of law! . . . We do not have to think about any Christian line of march, but we have to drill ourselves in concrete obedience to (the) living God. Otherwise the possibility could not be excluded that what we think we ought to show the world under the authority of God's word might turn out to be a program like other programs, and—who knows?—only too closely related to the program of particular parties, classes and nations. . . . We wait for the invisible city which God will build—not for a future political state to be set up with Christian assistance, whether it be of liberal or authoritarian character. . . . We have a unique revolutionary hope to proclaim to the world, but we have no system of economic or political principles to offer which would presume in itself to present the content of this hope."

God and Our Own Ideas

THE assembly was limited therefore to "rightly dividing the word of truth"; to distinguishing between the word of God and the plans and programs of men. We are all participants in the political and economic order and emotionally involved in those segments of it to which our loyalties are attached and unconsciously swayed by its symbols and slogans; this involvement always makes it precariously difficult to distinguish between the word of God and our own ideas, but the careful reports issued by the assembly, including the statements on capitalism and Communism, reveal the honesty of the attempt.

A fourth limitation facing the assembly in speaking a word to the east-west tensions was that of acknowledging in spirit and expressing in the tone and emphasis of its words the involvement of all Churches and people in the sin of the world, no matter within what political orbit their immediate task may have to be defined. Whatever can be said for or against specific economic or political systems, Christians cannot face each other in such a time of world chaos with self-confidence and pride. It may be questioned whether the official statements of the assembly adequately express this note, but those in a position to compare this ecumenical conference with the conferences between the two world wars have noted that at Amsterdam there was a marked absence of "this-world" evolutionary optimism about the task that faces the Churches today and very little feeling that we can be proud of our "success" in making the Christian witness effective in converting the world's peoples and its leaders and its life and its work to Jesus Christ.

The insight that we are all involved in the sin and shame of society can be the beginning of repentance and can open the door to understanding between Oriental and Occidental, and can enable persons from both sides of "the iron curtain" to confront each other as persons.

Reinhold Niebuhr's magnificent address on "The Christian Witness in the Social and National Order" was impressive for its sharp analysis of the inward illusions and outward injustices that exist respectively in liberalism and Communism. His critique called things by their right names and without even once using the words "democracy," "communism" or "capitalism" — words which are too often used as catch-words. His whole discussion, as one would expect, dealt with the motives of men as expressed in rival ideologies, and not with abstract approval or condemnation of "isms."

But the sin of the world is not just the sin of godless or anarchic social and economic systems; it is the sin of the Church and of us who are the Church. As Pastor Niemoeller powerfully declared, "We are called . . . to repentance: we the Church. . . . We have propagated our 'Christian' truths and principles as they seemed good, reasonable and effective in our own eyes. But we did not tell the world and the men and women of our time that 'we must all stand before the judgment seat of Christ,' . . . Instead of that, we thought we could turn the divine folly of the gospel into a system of human wisdom and expediency. We have indeed a message for the world. But it is not our message. It is God's message . . . the message of the cross."

No one could come to Amsterdam feeling that his country or his Church has a sure program for resolving the present crisis or that the problems of the present hour can find a utopian or ideal solution. Although as a popular journalist said, there was "no Pentecost" at Amsterdam, there were on the other hand no signs of bumptious self-assurance. The mood of the assembly was subdued but positive. The continuing years of war and rumors of wars have undoubtedly had a deepening effect upon the Church everywhere. As I mentioned before, American and Continental theologians are on the way to a better understanding of each others' language and a more fruitful encounter. This derives largely from a growing sense of the tragic depth of the power of sin in human existence and of the radical solution of the cross as sin's only cure.

Chiang Kai-shek's Christianity

By James G. Endicott

Former Missionary in China

IT is not possible for anyone to deny the claim of any man that he has repented of his sins, had an experience of conversion and received the saving grace of God into his heart. It is well-known that Chiang Kai-shek made such a claim and was baptized into the Christian Church. It is therefore technically correct to say that he is a Christian. But if being a Christian means that a person is to be found working for certain good causes, that he is to be judged by the fruits of the spirit and by what he does, then he would be a very determined optimist indeed who would claim that Chiang Kai-shek today is a "Christian." If such a claim is made, then the man on the street may well conclude that to be a Christian means anything or even nothing.

The writer of this article was for a time, in 1939 and 1940, an advisor to Madame Chiang and the Generalissimo in the New Life Movement and other wartime activities. It is my belief that when Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek was kidnapped at Sian in 1936, he had something of a religious experience and that, whatever was the nature of it, he was influenced and modified, as we would expect a man to be modified by such an experience. Those who at one time felt confident that the Christian religion was going to mean something real to Chiang Kai-shek were basing their judgment on the two or three years following that Sian experience. From 1936 until 1940 Chiang Kai-shek made several broadcasts which seemed to indicate that he was finding in his inner life something of value in Christianity. I recall being especially impressed by the religious point of view of a reply he sent to a group of Oxford professors who sent congratulations on his resistance to Japanese aggression. Of course, all such pronouncements were written by others for him, and they might not have meant more to him than an acceptance of the proper thing to say on such occasions. His friends and well-wishers who hoped and prayed that the Christian religion would make a difference in his life and work, may well have over-estimated the reality of such expressions.

The Deeds of the Man

It is when we turn the cold light of reason on the deeds of the man, that doubt and dismay overwhelm us. Ever since he joined the Christian Church he has continued, with the slight interruption of the years mentioned above, in the killing, torturing and imprisoning of hundreds of thousands of political opponents. He has done this in spite of the most solemn agreements for cooperation and political unity, especially during the resistance to Japan. One of the greatest and cruelest scandals of his regime has been the starvation of the conscripts in the military concentration camps. The men responsible for this inhumanity, which starved to death about 3,000,000 miserable peasants, were, and are still, the men who have a "special relation" as it is called, to the Generalissimo. He has rewarded them with power and wealth. In 1944 public anger over this starving of the conscripts rose to such a height that Chiang Kai-shek made a gesture, which was given full publicity. His son took him for a walk and he saw a long line of half-starved recruits being marched from a camp. They were roped neck to neck, although they were too weak to run away. Chiang Kai-shek called in the head of the administration of conscription, beat him over the head with his marshal's baton, but left the administration without the thorough reorganization which it needed, and the starvation continued unchecked.

Deplorable Conditions Exist

UNDER the regime of which Chiang Kai-shek is the head there exist throughout south and west China the most deplorable conditions of child-slave labor. These conditions have often been brought to the attention of the Generalissimo. He has at times made a gesture of "social service" to ameliorate the appalling cruelties. But no genuine reform has resulted. The reason is that Chiang Kai-shek has given away his power of reform (if he ever sincerely had a desire for it), in return for the support of those very elements in society who profit most from the child labor and who murder the reformers or jail them as "Communists." In these matters Chiang Kai-shek makes superficial gestures which in the end amount to nothing.

All Christians should read thoroughly an editorial in the June 26, 1948, China Weekly Review, entitled "Child Tin Miners." It is based on conditions revealed by a conservative British newspaper in Shanghai, The North China Daily News. A few quotations will suffice to prove the point that there is child-slave labor:

"Soon, pausing often to lean gasping against the walls of the shaft, a scarecrow of a lad appeared. He was naked except for a few rags. . . . He emerged from the opening and without straightening up from his crouched position, sank down on the ground, gasping pitifully. . . . He had two bags of tin ore on his shoulders. . . . In a few seconds he got up and without straightening up moved away. . . . It was with a nasty shock that I realized he couldn't straighten up. . . . In the largest mine the majority of the lads were just tiny kids, under 12 years of age . . . a few short years of work are fatal. . . They work all day and are locked up in stone wall forts at night . . ."

If we are going to boast that the head of a state is an outstanding example of the power of Christianity, then he must be judged by what he actually accomplishes in the reform of such inhuman and brutal abuses. Chiang Kai-shek does not even try, to the extent of rousing public opinion to support him. He suppresses opinion and red-baits instead of reforming.

The Formosan Massacre

As a final judgment on Chiang Kai-shek's Christianity, I suggest a careful and detailed study of the Formosan Massacre of 1946. Here was a test case, because Chiang Kai-shek himself came to the radio, promised a fair and just investigation and personally asked the wealthy Formosan businessmen who headed the revolt to trust him and cease opposition. The revolt was caused in the first place by the graft and corruption of Chiang Kai-shek's personal appointees who "took over" from the Japanese. Is it fair to say that a man is known by his friends? At the same time that Chiang Kai-shek was personally promising a fair and just settlement, he was rushing over a division of his American-trained and mechanized troops. They arrived within 48 hours and then there occurred one of the most ruthless and bloody slaughters in all China's history. This slaughter was observed in part by Christian missionaries. who have been strangely silent. The excuse they give is that if they spoke, Chiang would suppress all their work. So much for the religious freedom granted by China's leading Christian.

I commend to all Christians a careful study of Chiang's own book, "China's Destiny." Chiang Kai-shek has ordered this book to be compulsory study in all schools and university civics courses. There is no evidence in this book that Chiang's thought and feeling are guided in any way by Christian thought or practice.

Chiang Kai-shek began his rise to power by activity as a Shanghai gangster. In 1927 the British North China Daily News denounced him as one "who has standing against him in the police records of Shanghai charges of murder and armed robbery." I believe that in spite of the softening influence of his wife and mother-in-law, and of the Sian kidnapping, he has remained, in the hard core of his cruel and arrogant personality, an unprincipled Shanghai gangster.

THE NEW BOOKS

Excellent Good *Fair

* * * Christian Apologetics by Alan Richardson. Harpers. $3.00.

Professor John Bennett of Union Seminary writes concerning this work by a canon of Durham Cathedral, "I regard it as the most satisfactory statement that has yet come out of the present confusion concerning faith, revelation and reason." It is not an accident that this book which is Christian apologetics at its best should have come from the English tradition. Rationalism results in making theology equivalent to the philosophy of religion, while the activists can see in it only a systemization of the psychology of religion. In the empirical tradition of English thought we have here the closest approach to a real understanding of theology as the only true science of religion.

Canon Richardson calls the science of physics and of chemistry the abstract sciences for they do not deal with living reality, while the human sciences, like sociology and theology are the concrete sciences, studying real things. Perhaps not since the time of Bishop White in our country has there been so definite, yet sensible an emphasis upon the importance of revelation, and especially biblical revelation, in the Anglican Church. Christian Apologetics takes a real step forward with the publication of this volume.

* * Discovering Wayside Treasures by William Hutchins. Judson Press. $2.00.

Dr. Hutchins of the Baptist Church in Nova Scotia and professor of religious education and Old Testament at Acadia University has given us in this volume a book full of good advice. It isn't particularly religious but it does have some pertinent suggestions and telling illustrations about character and education, about the game of life and about black sheep. The more than half a hundred short essays will be useful as starting points for discussion in young people's classes or organizations. Every page has its good illustration of story. The book is almost worth the getting for the fund of stories for use in sermons, lectures or after dinner speeches.

* * The Bell Ringers by Vern Swartsfager. Macmillan. $3

The author, assistant at St. Matthew's Cathedral, Dallas, tells, excitingly, of his work with boys. The book is particularly interesting to Episcopalians since familiar faces move through its pages. Formerly a newspaperman, he knows how to get attention and used it to good stead in his fine work with young people. Young people will enjoy the book: parents and clergymen will profit by reading it.

* * Making a Go of Life by Roy L. Smith. Abingdon-Cokesbury. $1.

The editor of a religious weekly, the author knows how to say much with few words. This 365 page book gives you a page of purposeful advice for living each day of the year, after the style of the early "Meaning" books by Dr. Fosdick. It is a big dollar's worth.

* * The Secret of Inward Peace by A. Herbert Gray. Macmillan. $2.50.

Whether a book on peace of mind that has its roots in Christianity will get on the best seller list we doubt. But here is one that should. The author, who is well known here and abroad for his work with young people and students, tackled most of the problems that confront the average person, and always came up with helpful answers.

* * Questions Jesus Asked by Clovis G. Chappell. Abingdon Cokesbury. $2.

A preacher with over forty years' experience in many cities here offers a dozen and a half of his most popular sermons, all based on questions that Jesus asked. The author keeps ordinary needs of people constantly in mind and deals with them skillfully and entertainingly.

THE PRESS

RUIN: DEATH: Is this nation, with such material strength as no other has ever wielded, settling down to be just another great power? It can be that. It can be more than a great power; it can be the greatest power. Its fleets can command the seven seas, and its airforces can impose the American will on every continent. It can come closer to setting up a world empire, in the Roman sense, in the Burnham sense, in the sense against which Toynbee warns, than has any other nation in all history. Even Russia cannot stop us, not while we have sole possession of the atom bomb. There is a kind of greatness which plainly lies within our reach. And what will it get us? Toynbee has the answer: Ruin. Death.—Christian Century (un-Den.)

OVER-WHELMING EVIL: There is a well-known principle that a change of scale involves a change of character. Wars of the kind against which our government is now taking precautions are so vast in scale, and of such intensity, that they have little in common with those of the past as the polar regions have with a skating rink. Both imply physical destruction. The wars of the past however, arose out of the relationships between sovereign powers. Now they are upheavals in human society that, directly or indirectly, involve almost all mankind. They take the form of an attempt on the part of huge masses emotionally unstable, led perhaps by some power-intoxicated genius and governed by a compelling idea, to assert themselves over the rest of the human race. This overwhelming evil has been made possible by the develpoment of scientific techniques. It is a new phenomenon in history.—Record (C. of E.).

A SERIOUS EFFORT: Whereas the current average salary of Disciples ministers as reported to the Pension Fund is approximately $2,900.00 a year which figure includes parsonage at fifteen per cent of cash salary where parsonage is furnished rent free. such salary is $800.00 below the amount necessary to maintain a family of four according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics — Be It Resolved, That this convention recommends to each congregation of Disciples that a serious effort be made to pay their minister a salary sufficient to meet the need of his family and secure his undivided service for the work of Christ and his church. — Christian Evangelist (Disciples).

WATERED DOWN: Pastoral Teaching in the Church School Worship Service is the title of a new pamphlet just issued by the national department of Christian Education of our Church. This is among the first of the materials to be issued by the department as a part of its new program of increased service to the Church. The idea behind the issuance of this pamphlet is excellent. But the execution of the idea is pitiful. The pamphlet contains thirty-seven instructions which are to be memorized by the children; though they are recommended for adults as well. These thirty-seven paragraphs are a sad explanation of the Christian faith. They are actually a watered-down religion, reflecting an ethical liberalism more than the gospel of our Lord. Let us hope future pamphlets of the department will be reviewed by competent theologians before they are broadcast to the Church.—Southern

GOOD IDEA

All over the Church there is reflected, in this day of continued revolutionary crisis, a new awareness of the paganism all about us and also the lapse from Christian devotion. Even Church members are confessing their need of renewed knowledge of the "good news" which is the gospel of Jesus Christ. The faithful minority in America and in England and the Continent of Europe view with deep concern the poverty of Church attendance and the loose sense of membership in the Christian community. Others feel the irrelevance and weakness of much of the activitism of the Churches.

As men and women look out upon such a world they are more and more convinced of the primary need of looking up to God. The articulation of this sense of need usually comes in forms of expression that are a confession of a desire for communion with God. Every Christian knows that prayer is the center of religion because prayer is a living communion of man with God.

Because a group of communicants of Emmanuel Church, Baltimore, have made known to the rector their sense of need in our common life today, he has formed two prayer groups. One meets each Wednesday following the eleven o'clock celebration of the Holy Communion in the peace chapel and is designed for those who can be members of a daytime fellowship of prayer. The second, to meet the need of business men and women, is being held the first and third Thursdays of the month before the peace chapel altar at 8:00 p. m.

In discussing this basic work of the Christian Church, the rector, Rev. Ernest Victor Kennan said, "If the Christian Church is to bear witness to its faith in the saving gospel of Jesus Christ in this power age, it must rediscover the truth of the words of St. Chrysostom, 'There is nothing more powerful than prayer and there is nothing to be compared with it.' Of course, there is always the temptation to make a prayer group an ivory tower of escape from the demands of Christian witness and service. That temptation must be resisted. Only through prayer can we understand God's judgment upon our age and learn his will for individual believers and the Christian Church. In every age praying Christians have been instruments of God's will for social redemption."

Letters for this department are to be addressed to The Witness, 135 Liberty St., N. Y. 6.—No calls or interviews please.

YOUNG PEOPLE OF THE CHURCH

BY WALTER N. WELSH

THIS week we let youth take over. The United Movement of the Church's Youth has an elected leader, John Booty, who spoke to his Episcopal delegation at the Christian Youth Conference of North America, at Grand Rapids, Mich. I want him to speak to you. As chairman of our national youth commission he represents the vanguard of the youth in your parish. Could it be that youth has caught on to the sham around them? He says:

"This is the struggle for life: for the satisfaction of the evil self or for the hand of the Almighty. Which way, which direction, where? In this struggle for life we see man's desperate dilemma, the choice which drives him to new life, or death." And the necessity for making a choice, becomes increasingly important as man proceeds to higher forms of disorder, as

'Lies and lethargies police the world
In its periods of peace, What pain taught
Is soon forgotten; we celebrate
What ought to happen as if it were done—
Are blinded by our boasts. Then back they come,
The fears that we fear.'

"The hope lies in the fact that in each generation God reaches through to some to whom he gives vision and power on this training ground for eternity. . . . It can be seen that the rise and fall of civilizations has provided stepping stones by which God has come more and more close to his earth. We see that the chaos also has a function. . . . And as this present civilization proceeds to destroy itself we must rally the believing Christians to the banners of Christ (the beginning of the adventure of eternity here).

"While on this earth we cannot be entirely freed from the struggle. Those who give themselves to God will be especially the targets of evil. Evil will work against the true of heart with a vengeance. Thus to strengthen the faithful disciplines are necessary. . . . It demands that those whose hearts are on fire with the Holy Spirit must gird on the armour and adventures more and more for the faith. There are no other terms. This is it. There is no hint of compromise. There is a promise of forgiveness if we falter and repent, but our minds and souls must be set upon the cross. Our motto and goal must be 'no compromise'.

"With the faithful it must be God's will that is done, Christ's example which is followed; for there is no other way but self, and self is sin and sin is death.

"We must apply this in our relationships with society, even though it means 'loss of face' and persecution. For 'it is the function of the Church to lead and not endorse public opinion.' This means that out of the Church must proceed the faithful into the chaos to evangelize and heal. Into labor unions, into management, into politics let the faithful go to proclaim God's truth. Let the faithful go preaching and showing by example the inner peace and the outward joy of God living in man. And let them stand up and condemn the devil where he corrupts. Let these evangelists in the truest sense of the word go out nourished by God and strengthened by others who like them are through with hypocrisy and decay and have turned to live in God's love, loving one another."

Let this young prophet be heard and heeded by the status quo in his own church, his own country.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

ROBERT S. S. WHITMAN
Associate Rector, Bruton Parish,
Williamsburg, Va.

I have been re-reading the excellent article on the marriage service written by the Rev. Hugh McCandless and reprinted in the Witness.

There is one important point which, it seems to me that he and most people miss. It has to do with the challenge to the people to "show just cause why they may not lawfully be joined together" which Mr. McCandless says and many people feel to be obsolete. As an ex-chaplain in the army who has seen many marriages wrecked by gossiping acquaintances and in-laws who make sly innuendoes and spread tales I should hate to see this "obsolete" passage deleted. The point in the passage referred to seems to deal with this important problem and it is found in the words "or else hereafter for ever hold his peace." The Church gives final opportunity to anyone who may have something to say to say it. If he hasn't had the courage to say anything up to this point he is enjoined against saying it hereafter. In other words the Church says here to the family and friends of the couple: "Put up or shut up." And this suggestion strikes me as being anything but obsolete.

Personally, I would like to see some other "obsolete" word re-instated in the service such as "with my body I thee worship." A wedding is not the joining together of two disembodied spirits as the present service seems to imply and the Church needs to emphasize that we are in no way ashamed of sex when it is used as God intends it to be.

MISS JANE FOWLER
Churchwoman of Boston

What has happened to Spofford's "Talking It Over" column? Has he been eliminated from the "new" Witness? I like the new job and think it is a vast improvement, but I take those words of praise back if it means that Spofford's column is out, since it is the chief reason I take the paper.

FRANCIS O. AYRES
Director of Parishfield, Michigan.

There are two points which I would like to add to the article on Parishfield in the Oct. 7. number. First we intend as soon as feasible to extend the work beyond the borders of the diocese of Michigan. We will be delighted to have laymen come to the center from anywhere in the U. S. —or elsewhere for that matter. Second we have no intention of making the venture exclusively Episcopalian. Although the discipline and practice will be that of our Church, we will welcome men and women of all denominations.

JOHN F. DAVIDSON
Curate at St. John's, Troy, N. Y.

My sincere congratulations on your fine China number (Oct. 14). I was particularly interested as a former member of the staff of St. John's University, Shanghai. The number has strengthened my hand enormously in interpreting the present hideous situation in the East. Having spent three happy years in China I have maintained a keen interest in that great people. A reading of Robert Payne's "China Awake" (more down to earth and pessimistic than his brilliant and poetic "Forever China") had amongst other contacts given me pause to think pretty furiously, and now comes your piled up evidence than can hardly be gainsaid.

Two suggestions: have you any fund that would allow you to distribute as widely as it deserves: e.g.: to all public libraries? Could you not print some offsets at least of my friend Bruce Collier's review of the official study-book which could be sent to all rectors who do not get The Witness regularly? The review should be pasted in the front of every copy of the book by Frank Price ("China — Twilight or Dawn?") as a balancer and a warning.

Power to your editorial elbow in these days when the truth is too often hard to come by.

Answer: We have no funds for sending to libraries. We will however be glad to make reprints of Bruce Collier's review, as suggested, and also of other material from the Oct. 14 number if readers indicate a desire to have them.

CHARLES H. LONG
Secretary of the Diocese of Penna.

I have enjoyed reading the Story of the Week (Oct. 14) because it bears out many things that I have heard from men returning from China. This week a letter came from my son who is a missionary in Nanking, expressing the same ideas. Thank you for the good publicity of the great needs in China and the obstacles men are facing.

World Relief Problems Considered by C.W.S.

Mrs. Harper Sibley Says Church in Germany Teaches Omnipotence of Government

★ Church World Service held a plenary session in Asbury Park, N. J., attended by representatives of over twenty Protestant and Orthodox Churches which make up this relief agency. Episcopalian Harper Sibley was the chairman.

The Rev. Herbert C. Lytle, Jr., an executive of C. W. S. pointed out that contributions in cash through the constituent Churches had decreased approximately 25% as between 1946 and 1947, or from $28,587,179 to $21,206,603, while there had been an increase of approximately 33 1/3% in contributed supplies, or from 33,973,110 pounds in 1946 to 50,783,926 pounds in 1947. For the first nine months of 1948 3,398,000 has been contributed by the Churches through Church World Service and there have been 26,900,000 pounds of contributed supplies.

It was depressing to hear some urge as a basis for support of relief programs the argument that food and clothing from us are instruments for stopping the spread of Communism. Most refreshing, however, was the address of Mrs. Harper Sibley who called on Church World Service to re-think its support of what is in actuality a state Church in Germany. She pointed out that the proportion of women to men in Germany is three to two and that women are taking a large part in affairs, but that the door of the Church is closed to them. This same Church has taught and still teaches an uncritical obedience toward government. The Church in Germany today still believes in and teaches the omnipotence of government. Said Mrs. Sibley: "It is still a state Church. A real consideration before us is this: How much should we strengthen its hands?" This challenge was not met by the gathering or by the report of the committee on recommendations.

Roswell Barnes, a Federal Council official, lifted the sights of the meeting when he said that the relevance of what the Churches and Church World Service are doing is to bring to men a realization of God's concern for the world and to restore to people some sense of the value of the individual. It is only this which can give to the world a certain basis for hope in these times. Our objective must be the restoration of hope and the conviction that God cares, and in this there must be a combination of the word and the deed. He emphasized that C. W. S. must so define its work as not to give the impression that we are supporting our government in its objectives. We are not an adjunct of any Marshall Plan or Truman Doctrine. Church World Service is not to be thought of as giving a religious sanction to national policy in a power clash.

The session recommended to the board the adoption of the financial campaign plan which was outlined by Mr. Robert Jordan of the National Council of the Episcopal Church who has been assigned the task of directing the Church World Service campaign.

The plan calls for a united one-day giving by all the Protestant Churches which make up the agency. It is called "One Great Hour" and calls for every church member to be in Church on Sunday, March 20th, and at that time present his contribution for the relief and rehabilitation needs of the world. It is planned through this "One Great Hour" project to raise $10,000,000. Extensive use of radio, newspapers and every possible channel of publicity and organization is involved. It should be the largest and most extensive project in which Protestantism has yet joined.

Mr. Jordan's presentation was extremely well organized and the response was enthusiastic. The idea of the Churches working together, concentrating on one objective on the week end of March 19-20, had real appeal, and the feeling was expressed that in a successful project of this sort possibly in talking of a $10,000,000 financial goal Church World Service was being conservative, that a good deal more could be raised.

CHURCHMEN PROTEST BAN ON WORKERS' COURSE

★ The Rt. Rev. Richard S. Emrich, bishop of Michigan, and the Rev. Wm. B. Sperry, rector of Christ Church, Detroit, and chairman of the Detroit chapter of the Michigan Committee on Civil Rights, have been in the thick of a fight to save a Workers' Education Service which, for four years, has been sponsored by the University of Michigan. The educational service, which was designed to teach union people everything from art appreciation to techniques of labor organization, was recently reorganized out of existence by the board of regents of the university because of its reputedly teaching courses with "Marxist tinges."

The whole issue blew up last spring when a General Motors' official attending one of the courses at the school objected to the use of a C. I. O. pamphlet as an example of educational material in an economics course. The supporters of the workers' education service, however, claim that material from the N. A. M. was used for the same purpose and that the instructor was attempting to show what kind of educational and propaganda material was being produced on all sides.

Since then, the issue has been brewing and boiling. Most recently the Board of Regents announced the revamping of the service and the dismissal of Mr. Arthur Elder, director of the program. It was then that the citizens — union leaders, women's groups and church members — who had been keeping their fingers on the pulse of the matter, spoke up under the direction of the Detroit Chapter of the Michigan Committee on Civil Rights. Representing the Episcopal Diocese, the diocesan department of social relations passed a resolution condemning the precipitate and undemocratic action of the board of regents.

On October 27th, a group representing some two dozen organizations was scheduled to meet with Governor Kim Sigler, who many accuse of being responsible for the whole affair at the behest of the General Motors Corporation, in Detroit. Assembled to give the official their views on the matter were such individuals as Bishop Emrich; Archbishop Francis J. Haas, Roman Catholic prelate of Grand Rapids and president of the state. Comm. on Civil Rights; Rabbi Leon Fram of Detroit and Brandon Sexton, director of Region 1-A, U.A.W.-C.I.O. But Gov. Sigler never kept the appointment. Later, after the group held their meeting, addressing their remarks to the governor's empty chair, Gov. Sigler claimed that he could not make the meeting because bad weather held up his plane. Remarks that the telephone service had not been out of order and the production of weather reports showing generally favorable weather throughout the state that day brought no audible come-back from the governor's office. Some unkind souls even went so far to point out that the Detroit Free Press, local paper, ran the story of the aborted meeting on its front page side-by-side with a release announcing General Motors' greatest profits of all time.

After the meeting, Mr. Sperry declared that Gov. Sigler's failure to appear was a "direct insult to 1,500,000 Michigan citizens" and pledged a continued fight to see that educational facilities are supplied the working men and women of Michigan.

CONNECTICUT DIOCESE "RECEIVES" 146

★ Without Clair-Booth-Lucian histrionics a bulletin comes from the Diocese of Connecticut: "During the year, it may be of interest to you to know that 146 persons were received from the Roman Catholic Church into our Diocese."

☆ Each year an Empire Service is held at St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, when representatives of the British Commonwealth attend, and colorful Canadian troops march to the cathedral. The cover pictures the color guard dipping their flags before the altar, while Pipe Major John Copland marches through the lines playing "The Lament." And if you think it is easy to play "The Lament" or anything else on a Scotch bagpipe, dressed up in kilts, with a tight leather band under your lower lip, just take a look at the Major's face.

ARIZONA CLERGY MEET IN CONFERENCE

★ A full attendance of the clergy of Arizona greeted Bishop Kinsolving for the annual two-day conference at Trinity Cathedral recently. The Bishop presented a detailed account of the Lambeth Conference which he attended. Some of the principal debates and resolutions of Lambeth were outlined, not only with their reference to the present world situation but also as touching upon local conditions. His enthusiasm over the results of Lambeth were contagious and the clergy felt that this local conference was well worth attending. Bishop Kinsolving had the pleasant experience of introducing Ambassador Lewis W. Douglas, a native of Arizona, to the American bishops and others. "Ambassador Douglas," said Bishop Kinsolving, "is one of the most active and highly respected representatives this country has ever sent to England."

Still further high-lighting the clergy conference as a report on the Assembly at Amsterdam given by the Rev. W. Don Brown, rector of Trinity Church in Los Angeles. Mr. Brown had attended the Assembly as an unofficial observer. He spoke in high praise of the work of this Assembly which was made against a background of frightful devastation and disorder, with the tension of the Berlin crisis pulsing in the very streets of Amsterdam.

The second day of the Clergy conference was devoted primarily to mapping plans for the ensuing year and the discussion of the Every Member Canvass to be held in all of the parishes and missions in the district in November. The clergy approved of an increased quota and budget which will be presented to the next convocation in February for final action. Gradually the district is assuming more and more of the expense of witnessing and maintaining the Church in Arizona.

NEW AUXILIARY OFFICERS NAMED TO BOARD

★ New chairmen for the com-ing year are announced by the new chairman of the Woman's Auxiliary national executive board, Mrs. William R. Taliaferro of Edgewood, Pa., for the board's four standing committees: United Thank Offering committee, Mrs. Edward G. Lasar, St. Louis; personnel committee, Mrs. William T. Heath, Buffalo; finance committee, Mrs. Rollin T. Chamberlain, Chicago; committee on preparation and follow-up of Triennial meeting, Mrs. H. W. Whinfield, Sheboygan, Wis.

Mr. Taft served during the war as Director of the Office of Wartime Economic Affairs in the Department of State.

BRITISH THANKSGIVING URGED BY CHURCH

★ The Convocation of Canter-bury, meeting in London recently, moved toward petitioning a "more recognized and definite status" for the annual Festival of Harvest Thanksgiving in England. The action came on a motion which asked that the festival be associated with a public holiday, "thus combining the spiritual and social elements in thanksgiving."

Bishops Dagwell of Oregon, Block of California, Barton of Eastern Oregon and Bayne of Olympia have their fun at the synod of the Pacific.

CHARLES TAFT TO SPEAK IN BOSTON

★ Charles P. Taft, the 14th president of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America and the son of the 27th President of the United States, will be one of the featured speakers at the 75th anniversary assembly of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations to be held in Boston from November 14 through 17. Mr. Taft, an active Episcopalian layman who has recently returned from the meetings in Geneva of the World Council of Churches, will speak at the Assembly luncheon on Monday, November 15. A Cincinnatian,

U. T. O. INCREASES BUT NOT ENOUGH

★ Recent reports of the amount now in hand for the next United Thank Offering have given the impression of a large increase over the amount at the comparable period in the previous triennium. The national office of the Woman's Auxiliary calls attention to the fact that the increase, about $263,000, is actually not keeping pace with the increase in living costs. It is hoped that a considerable gain in this last year of the triennium will enable the Offering to meet the largely increased demands to be made upon it.

ARCHBISHOP GARBETT ON ACADEMIC FREEDOM

★ Incessant vigilance against encroachment by the State on the liberty of the universities was urged by Dr. Cyril Forster Garbett, the Archbishop of York, speaking at the opening of the fall term of the University of Nottingham. The Archbishop warned that universities dominated by the philosophy that man is merely a cog in a machine would turn out "useful and efficient robots" — who would readily obey the omnipotent state that controlled their lives. Dr. Garbett declared that universities should not be content with making man an encyclopedia of disconnected facts or a machine for the use of an economic or political system. The main purpose of such institutions, he said, is to teach men how to serve God according to conscience.

OPEN STUDENT CENTER IN COLORADO

★ The latest property to be acquired by the Diocese of Colorado is the Fred Ingley Episcopal Student Center, a house adjacent to the campus of the University of Colorado at Boulder. This house is to be used for the student chaplain's residence. It is well adapted for small meetings, and for personal conferences. Directly behind this house, is a smaller house, which will be called the Hattie Eckhardt House. This will be used for student gatherings and social purposes. One room will be made into a small temporary chapel for weekday services and where students may come for quiet prayer and meditation at any time. It also contains a well-appointed kitchen, so it is ideal for student purposes. Mrs. Eckhardt, the widow of a professor at the University of Colorado left the Diocese a bequest which provided the money for this purchase.

Now the need is provision for the salary and expenses of a resident chaplain. The hardest burden financially will be during the first years while the chaplaincy is being established, for there is no reason why over a period of years this work cannot become largely self-supporting. The students at the University are from every single part of this state, which makes it a diocesan matter. The college commission of the Diocese has, with the endorsement of the bishop and council, made request of the board of trustees for the inclusion of a thousand dollars in the diocesan budget towards this chaplain's salary.

In 1947-1948 the number of Episcopalian students registered at the university was 862.

BISHOP-ELECT GREETS CANTERBURY DEAN

★ Dean Donald J. Campbell, recently elected suffragan bishop of Los Angeles, now dean of Christ Church Cathedral, Springfield, Mass., is one of the speakers at the dinner November 14 in New York to greet the Dean of Canterbury. Other speakers will be Professor William Hocking of Harvard, Rabbi Louis I. Newman and of course the Dean. Two Episcopalians are listed among the sponsors of the dinner, the Rev. William Howard Melish of Brooklyn and Miss Mary van Kleeck of New York.

NEGRO CHURCH HONORS BISHOP GILBERT

★ St. Philips Church, New York City, the largest Negro Protestant Episcopal congregation in the United States, observed jointly the 18th anniversary of the consecration of the Rt. Rev. Charles Kendall Gilbert as a bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and the 25th anniversary in the ministry of the Rev. Shelton Hale Bishop, rector of St. Philip's.

Four hundred persons attended the celebration at a dinner in the church school auditorium.

Bishop Gilbert, who spoke at the dinner, was consecrated Suffragan Bishop of New York on Oct. 28, 1930, in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. He was elected Bishop of New York on Jan. 28, 1947, and installed April 26, 1947.

Bishop Walters of San Joaquin having the Cross of St. Thomas conferred upon him by Mar Shimun, Patriarch of the Church of the East. It was rendered in recognition of the Bishop's work on behalf of the persecuted people of Iran.

St. Philip's Church is now occupying its fifth building since it was founded as a Negro congregation in Centre Street in 1818, as an outgrowth of a Sunday school established by Trinity Church. The Rev. Fr. Bishop has been one of the ministers of St. Philip's Church for 25 years and rector of the church for 15 years. His father, the Rev. Dr. Hutchens Chew Bishop, was rector of the church from 1886 to 1933.

Service of Thanksgiving Marks Bishop Sterrett's Anniversary

★ At the Cathedral Church of the Nativity, Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, November 9th, at five p. m., church people of the Diocese of Bethlehem and visiting churchmen honored the Rt. Rev. Frank William Sterrett in a Service of Thanksgiving marking the 25th anniversary of his consecration. The sermon was preached by Presiding Bishop Sherrill.

An Anniversary Dinner followed the service at Hotel Bethlehem, at which the toastmaster was Wellington M. Bertolet, Esq. of Reading, Pa. Speaking at the dinner were Bishop Oliver J. Hart, Diocese of Pennsylvania, and the Rt. Rev. Walter H. Gray, Bishop-Coadjutor of Connecticut. Bishop Gray formerly served under Bishop Sterrett as Dean of the Bethlehem Cathedral. Mr. H. N. Miller, chairman of the finance committee of the Diocese, presented the Bishop with gifts, among which was a new car.

Bishop Sterrett, being among three of the bishops longest in active service of the Church, was consecrated November 9, 1923, as bishop-coadjutor of the Diocese of Bethlehem and became Diocesan in 1928. Previous to his consecration, he was rector of St. Stephen's, Wilkes-Barre, a leading church in the diocese. He therefore spent his entire ministry in the Diocese of Bethlehem.

In addition to his Diocesan duties, Bishop Sterrett has served as chairman of the Episcopal delegation to the Federal Council of Churches ever since the Episcopal church has had membership in that body. He has been a tireless worker in the movement toward unity among the churches. He is also a member of the Executive Committee of the Federal Council. For many years he has also served as American Chaplain of the Nucomen Society.

SEVENTH PROVINCE MEETS IN SYNOD

★ The Presiding Bishop was asked to appoint a special committee to study and analyze the Church Pension Fund and the adequacy of its procedures by a unanimous resolution adopted by the Synod of Province VII, the Province of the Southwest, meeting at Christ Church Cathedral, St. Louis, on October 28 and 29.

The resolution, introduced by the Rev. W. W. S. Hohenschild of St. Louis was the result of the discussion of the missionary problem of the general church in the session of missionary department chairmen with the Rev. George E. Wieland, secretary of the Home Department. The Synod felt particular attention should be given to protection of widows of clergymen. Bishop Scarlett told the gathering that he felt the present provisions very inadequate.

The Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, the Presiding Bishop, told the Synod that the national church would need greatly enlarged income if it is to be able to meet the real demands placed upon it—both in the field of education and missions. "It is not either missions or religious education," he said. "It must be both if we are to measure up to our opportunities."

Bishop Everett M. Jones of West Texas was elected President of the Province; with Bishop Hines, coadjutor of Texas, vice president; the Rev. Harold C. Gosnell, rector of St. Mark's Church, San Antonio, secretary; and D. C. Howard of Kansas City, treasurer. The Rev. C. Gresham Marmion, rector of the Church of the Incarnation, Dallas, was elected representative on the National Council.

The Provincial Council will include besides the officers Bishops Mason of Dallas and Stoney of New Mexico; Dean John Warren Day of Kansas and the Rev. Roger Blanchard of Missouri and Messrs. Loren W. Garlichs of West Missouri and J. A. Shahan of Salina.

The Court of Review will include Bishop Mitchell of Arkansas, the Rev. Edward H. Eckel of Oklahoma, the Rev. Alfred L. DuDomaine of West Missouri, and Landless Shannon of Texas; and Messrs. A. D. Cochran of Oklahoma, Fancher Upshaw of North Texas, and Vernon Cox of Dallas.

CHARLES W. SHEERIN MEMORIAL FUND

★ Setting a goal of $50,000 for a memorial to the late Charles W. Sheerin, the national board of Episcopal Service for Youth met last month to form a sponsoring committee for the fund. Representatives were chosen from every part of the country, with the Rt. Rev. Henry St. George Tucker as chairman. Income from the fund will be used to provide an annual award of a fellowship for graduate study of social work. Donors have commented on the appropriateness of this type of memorial, because of Dr. Sheerin's gift for helping troubled souls everywhere, and because of his belief that social work and psychiatry are necessary tools for the Church's work today.

MILLIONS FOR RELIEF IN GERMANY

More than 100,000,000 pounds of foods, clothing and medicines with an estimated value of about $50,000,000 have been shipped to Germany by the 16 member agencies of CRALOG since this voluntary relief program was launched on Feb. 19, 1946. Bulk of the supplies was contributed by church agencies, namely, Church World Service, War Relief Services of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, Mennonite Central Committee, American Friends Service Committee, and Lutheran World Relief.

A total of 285 shipments had been made to Germany as of Sept. 30. These consisted of 85,452,896 pounds of food; 17,058,434 pounds of clothing; 228,754 pounds of medical supplies; 848,123 pounds of health and recreational supplies; 1,115,393 pounds of vocational and educational supplies; 40,842 pounds of equipment for hospitals, schools and health centers; 337,073 pounds of industrial and agricultural equipment, and 657,656 pounds of miscellaneous goods.

No shipments have been made to the Russian zone, agreement with military authorities not having been reached.

CHURCH COUNCILS TAKE POLITICAL ACTION

Legislative procedure is being watched more carefully by the churches in Montana and Florida. In the western state, recently, the Montana Council of Churches and the Montana Council of Church Women will have an active lobby of clergymen and laymen at sessions of the state legislature. A program has been inaugurated for contacting all prospective office holders and finding out where they stand on issues in which the church is interested. One particular objective is that Montana take its full quota of displaced persons, under the national government's new program.

In Florida, the State Council of Churches has named a committee on legislation which will study proposals submitted to the next session of the Florida legislature and will keep all religious groups informed on measures which affect the church and civic welfare.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS INCREASING

Elbert W. Conover of New York, director of the Interdenominational Bureau of Architecture, predicts that "there may be a great number of Protestant parochial schools in the near future since religion cannot be taught in public schools." Dr. Conover said the trend of Protestant churches to establish schools for their children was to be seen in the "increasing use" of Sunday school rooms for week-day religious instruction given by the various church groups. (RNS)

FUNDAMENTALISTS HIT FEDERAL COUNCIL

Those "radicals" in the Federal Council were given a good going-over by representatives of fifteen "Bible-believing sects" who met in conference recently in Philadelphia. In a resolution they charged that the Federal Council had become "subversive of Biblical Christianity and the American system of free enterprise," and was seeking "a changed social order in terms of collectivistic economy." One of the "ring-leaders" singled out for personal attack was John Foster Dulles, who was said to be "an effective tool of pacifists and radicals." One of the leading speakers at the meeting also said that the "first intent" of the recently formed World Council of Churches is to set up a "super church organization which will dominate world politics."

MISSIONS COUNCIL GETS JEEP GIFT

A jeep station wagon to be used for religious and social work among migrant farm workers in mid-western states has been presented to the Home Missions Council of North America by the Women's Board of Domestic Missions of the Reformed Church in America.

Outfitted with a portable organ, motion picture supplies, slide projector, phonograph, typewriter, Bibles, books and recreational equipment, the station wagon will be assigned this winter to the Rio Grande Valley.

RELIEF FOR REFUGEES IN PALESTINE

Various voluntary agencies operating in the Near and Middle East have formed a continuing committee to provide assistance for Jewish and Arab refugees made homeless by the strife in Palestine. Coordination of an appeal throughout the U. S. for funds to aid a program of emergency relief was approved by the committee. It was emphasized that the committee would distribute relief funds without discrimination as to race, religion or politics, and refrain from any action of a political nature. Distribution of all relief will be made in the name of American voluntary organizations in consultation with the UN mediator and representatives of the voluntary agencies in the field. The meeting which saw the formation of the committee was held under the chairmanship of Dr. A. L. Warnshuis of the Church World Service. (RNS)

NEWS OF OTHER CHURCHES

QUITS BUSINESS FOR CHURCH

Ray Hausted, 35, Medina, O., sold a quarter of a million dollar business to devote all his time to Church work. "I guess you'd say I had to," he said when asked why he'd taken the step a year ago. "You see, I made a bargain with the Lord years ago. I told him that if I ever prospered in business, I'd give it up as soon as I'd made a stake and devote my full time to his work. I'm keeping my end of the bargain now."

In Cleveland to promote a series of lectures sponsored by the Seventh-day Adventist Church, Hausted said he had never regretted the move. "My friends thought I was crazy to do it," he grinned. "They couldn't understand why I'd be willing to give up a prosperous business to work for the Lord. By my wife and daughters knew. They've given me 100 per cent support and encouraged me in every way possible."

Hausted said he goes about his religious duties just as he used to carry on his business concern, "hustling . . . every minute."

LAYMEN GIVE LABOR TO THE CHURCH

Taking a cue from early disciples who worked with their hands as well as proclaimed Christ's word, about 20 laymen of the Covenant Presbyterian Church, Buffalo, saved $25,000 in the last five years by doing all maintenance work of the church themselves. Business and professional men without previous experience in plumbing, heating installation and carpentry donated thousands of hours of labor. Partly as a result the church reduced its debt from $87,600 to $24,927. A former minister once proposed closing the church because of the heavy debt and dwindling membership. Today the church is gaining members steadily due largely to the zeal and long-term program of the laymen.

Delbert Gardinier, an elder, explained the laymen's attitude thus: "Jesus called to follow him men who worked with their hands — carpenters, farmers, fishermen — as well as doctors and teachers. These men weren't preachers, but they could work and Christ gave them work to do. It's the same way now. There isn't one man in our community who hasn't some kind of ability which Covenant church needs and can use."

Although the men often lacked both "the know-how and the tools," they repaired two furnace boilers, installed five new radiators and repaired 70 others, tarred the roof, cut in extra entrances in several rooms, painted the church and large community house and erected new ceilings and walls. They saved $7,200 by doing all the painting themselves and about $6,500 by repairing boilers which professional steamfitters said were beyond repair. Wilson P. Perkins, church treasurer, crawled into the boilers and relined cracks with iron cement.

URGES END OF MINOR CONTROVERSIES

The Rev. Joseph Cantillon, Roman Catholic priest, told the directors of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, meeting in New York, that there should be a "one-year moratorium" on minor controversies. He deplored the tendency of many clergymen to "worry about brush fires while the world is on fire," and recommended that R. C. priests should "stop defending Francisco Franco" and that Protestant ministers ought to "forget the Spanish inquisition in discussing Spain." He also said that Rabbis should denounce anti-Christianity when they discuss anti-Semitism.

DEDICATE LUTHERAN RADIO STATION

A religious service, attended by about 2,000, was held when the new office and studio building of radio station KFUO was dedicated in St. Louis. The station, owned and operated by the Missouri synod of the Lutheran Church, is supported entirely by listeners and members of the denomination, without benefit of any commercial programs. The new annex is the first and major part of a $500,000 expansion program. Future plans call for a 10,000 watt output (now 5,000) both in AM and FM, a television department, and a series of amateur short wave stations in foreign countries.

METHODISTS ASK DRAFT REPEAL

Opposition to the peace-time draft was voted by the annual conference of Kansas Methodists, meeting at Emporia. The resolution also stated that "it is still possible to achieve peace with Russia without resort to the methods of war." It urged also that "our government desist from those policies of exploitation and domination which create fear and distrust in the minds of the other people of the world."

BAPTISTS OPPOSE CONSCRIPTION

The New Jersey convention of the Northern Baptists unanimously expressed opposition to peacetime conscription. A resolution opposing recognition of the Franco government was withdrawn when delegates objected that it was "not wise" to single out Spain when Protestants "are persecuted in some South American countries."

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

DE GAULLE'S SUPPORT QUESTIONED

Six French Cardinals recently met in Paris to discuss whether the hierarchy should switch its support from MRP, the country's predominantly R. C. political party, to De Gaulle. Observers point out that should the assembly decide that public schools should be cleared of Church influence, the prelates will make the change and if so would probably give DeGaulle a parliamentary majority. It is said here that De Gaulle has given his pledge to Cardinal Suhard of Paris and Cardinal Gerlier of Lyons that if the Catholic Church supports his program, he would, when in power, issue a Christian education decree "giving satisfaction to all Catholics."

WORLD COUNCIL MAKES PROTEST

The World Council of Churches, from headquarters in Geneva, has made a protest to the Hungarian government against the imprisonment of Primate Louis Ordass of the Lutheran Church. He was sentenced for two years by a workers' court on charges of having received money from the U. S. without clearing through the national bank of Hungary.

The protest was signed by Bishop Bell of Chichester who is the chairman of the Council's central committee, who declared that the charges against the primate were "pure fabrications."

ROMANIA REJECTS VATICAN NOTE

The Romanian government announced it had rejected a Vatican protest against a resolution by a number of Greek Catholic priests to break all ties with the Holy See and reunite with the Orthodox Church. The announcement said the protest, filed by Bishop Gerald P. O'Hara of Savannah - Atlanta, Ga., regent of the Apostolic Nunciature, was considered "meddling in Romania's internal affairs."

According to the government, the protest was "further evidence of the unfriendly attitude which the Nunciature has systematically adopted" towards Romania. The government note stated further it was "difficult to understand how Catholics can speak of religious liberty while they take an oath to fight and destroy non-Catholics." The note added that the Nunciature, in saying that the violation of religious liberty would alarm world opinion, had taken "a campaign line of imperialist circles and against democratic Romania."

Meanwhile, Bucharest newspapers reported that "thousands of former Greek Catholics, including priests and laymen" had met in Alba Uilia, Transsylvania, on October 21 and had declared the break with Rome to be permanent. The Greek Catholics, according to the newspaper reports, pledged their loyalty to Patriarch Justinian, head of the Romanian Orthodox Church, who was present along with other high Orthodox leaders.

SOUTH AFRICAN RACIAL POLICY HIT

The Congregational Union of South Africa, at its annual assembly, denounced the racial policy of the government. The Christian Council of South Africa, representing all Protestant Churches, is now being asked to organize a deputation to see the prime minister on the subject. The resolution stated that the assembly viewed with deep concern the government's proposal to abolish representation of the Negroes in parliament and to remove Negro voters from the rolls. The resolution also vigorously opposed the government's policy of segregation.

DIVORCE IS UPHELD BY CHURCHMAN

Divorce is "necessary social surgery" in the eyes of the Congregational Church of So. Africa. The Rev. D. W. Ross, chairman, in addressing the annual assembly, said the denomination adopted a friendly attitude towards divorcees and readily admitted them. Declaring that some Churches took a "rigid" view of divorce, refusing any recognition of it, Mr. Ross added that the result was loss of members.

"We who have adopted a freer attitude need to come out into the open and be less apologetic," he said. "Let us say plainly that we regard divorce as a serious piece of social surgery, as serious as any other major operation, but equally as necessary under certain conditions. Let us have done with hair-splitting nonsense about legally guilty or innocent parties, which only sets a premium on collusion and hypocrisy of every kind. So long as anyone comes with a sincere intention to start afresh I incline to think we should help them, and tell the ordinary man how anxious we are to befriend him in this serious business."

EXECUTIONS HALTED BY THE CHURCH

Church leaders in Germany have succeeded in halting the execution of 45 persons, now in prison, all of whom were Hitler bodyguards. An effort is now being made to have the testimony reviewed. General Clay halted the executions following the meeting with the Church leaders.

EDITORIALS

The Sacramental System

AS we read the religious press of our own and other Christian bodies, as we do quite thoroughly week by week and month after month, we find ourselves wondering just what most lay persons actually make out of some of the theological terms, phrases and references which constantly appear in both articles and editorials. To take a few such terms at random —"The Holy Trinity," "The Atonement," "The Deposit of Faith," "The Merits of Christ," "Regeneration," "Conversion," "Sacramental System." Our guess is that the average reader — active and devoted Church member though he may be — has very little notion of the significance of such phrases for his own spiritual life or for the problems of the world in which he lives. We fear that all such theological terms are an actual snare to the average believer because they tend to make him think that Christianity is something very like an automatic scheme for the culture of individual souls, quite apart from the experiences and problems of the ordinary man in this miserable and naughty world. And for the mere outsider who may happen to dip into such literary waters, the language is an offense and a scandal to him and his reaction to it is a scornful retort, "More silly shibboleths that these Christians seem to dote on!" As a matter of fact it is our conviction that the Christian world needs a thorough revision of religious terminology much more than it has ever needed new translations of the Bible.

None of us Witness editors is a theological expert nor a specialist in ascetic theology, but we do presume to suggest that there is no more profitable mental and spiritual exercise than to make a meditation on one of the commoner theological slogans, trying to think out its basic significance for the great secular world and its peoples, with an imaginary interlocutor asking embarrassing questions.

Just as a sample of what we mean, let's take the common phrase, "The Sacramental System." The professional theologian would perhaps define its meaning as baptism and the holy communion — and, if you please, the other five "so-called Sacraments"—as God's method of bringing the human soul into personal relations with himself. This is, of course, true enough as far as it goes, but it doesn't go nearly far enough. It's not a missionary-minded definition, because it means little or nothing to the bewildered outsider looking for light in a dark, confused world dominated by force and greed. The question such an outsider — and many a nominal insider too—would be sure to ask first is "Why did the Lord of life—as you believe your master to be—choose a little water, a bit of bread and wine to get himself into the lives of human beings?" It's a fair question and a searching one, and surely it's an easy query to answer.

Our Lord chose "a little water, a bit of bread and wine" to give himself to us humans because the Creator made all this little planet and its inhabitants according to this same plan. It's the very nature of the world we know. It is always through the physical world that God gets some part of himself into the minds and hearts of men. The artist realizes this as he sees beauty in the world about him and expresses it; an eternal, spiritual reality not measurable by physical standards. The lover, in physical intimacy with his beloved, finds himself overwhelmed by a spiritual reality, hitherto unknown, that is timeless fellowship. Every explorer of unreached territory—whether a scaler of mountain heights, a searcher of dark continents or polar wastes, a scientist seeking yet unrevealed secrets of the creation, an economist or statesman or inventor pursuing the holy grail of a freer, juster, more abundant life for mankind —all these are workers in God's universal sacramental system, all alike assured of an "inward and spiritual grace" transmitted to them through the "outward and visible sign," if only their hearts are pure and their wills centered on the blessing of mankind and not upon wrenching the secrets of God's universe for selfish or destructive purposes. For all such explorers do walk inevitably a dangerous as well as a thrilling road and the solemn warning of the Apostle to the primitive Christian fellowship gathered for the Lord's supper—"he that eateth and drinketh unworthily eateth and drinketh damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body"—applies equally to this modern gathering of bold spirits exploring the physical world which is, as St. Athanasius realized and declared truly "The Body of God." It is a warning that scientists, economists and statesmen must take heed of very humbly and determine that their discoveries shall not be permitted to lead to destruction, to poverty, to oppression, and to their own souls' condemnation instead of to an ever-broadening fellowship and to an abundant life for mankind which our Lord made possible.

THE Incarnation, the coming of God in Jesus into human life, is the divine invasion of history; God entering his world to recreate it. Jesus was no weak visionary intoning beautiful, consoling words. He was the torrent of the life of God flowing into history—strong, turbulent, sweeping.

This sacramental principle obtaining through all God's creation is as intimately related to the religious reality described by the ecclesiastical slogan, "The Sacramental System," as a man's eyes and ears are related to his heart. They cannot be separated, even in thought, because they both alike concern vitally all human personalities living together on the planet, earth. The Christian Church's two — or seven — Sacraments are the inner-most of an infinite series of concentric circles of which God is the focus. In that inner-most circle God gives himself more intimately, more vitally, more enduringly than in any of the outer circles of his imminent life because there his incarnate life abides in family relationship with his individual children by keeping the covenant or plain agreement given for all time by our blessed Lord Jesus. But the triune God is one God and his sacramental principle of life is a universal one. He presses in on our little world of sense continuously, ready to give to mankind everywhere enduring spiritual gifts as they seek him through the multitudinous aspects of the physical world—even to those children of his who, like so many of our modern scientists, economists, statesmen and adventurers, are not yet aware of him as a person who is the lord of their life and the master of the world.

Here, then, is our simple meditation on one of the common theological slogans of the Christian religion. There are many more, some of which we have already listed. We invite our readers to try their hand—and their heart and mind—on some of them and send us their attempts to elucidate their significance for the world at large so that "the wayfaring man, though a fool, may understand."

Gammack, Turnbull & Co-eds

BY THOMAS V. BARRETT
Chaplain of Kenyon College

W. A. Personnel Executive Ellen Gammack has been whispering in our ear for a long time about the importance of vocational conferences for women. We have always held that a woman's place was at her dressing table, or in front of a washing machine, but having a tolerant temper we took in one of these conferences at Orleton Farms, London, Ohio. Orleton Farms (for the benefit of those who have been excluded from one of life's richest experiences) is Miss Mary Johnston's delightful, fabulous, food-stocked manor situated on several thousand acres of good Ohio land southwest of Columbus. There is a fireplace in every room, except the living room which has two fireplaces, and a grand piano. We had a breakfast of bacon and eggs, gold as a sunrise, and cream on our wheaties that had to be ladled out of the pitcher.

This put us in a genial frame of mind and we listened with interest to the discussion of twenty or thirty co-eds concerning professional Church work. We gave a short talk on Christian vocation followed by several top-notch speeches on various kinds of work in the Church open to women. Capable, devout, missionary-minded executive Irving Swift presented overseas work with statesmanlike vision. Ellen Gammack reviewed the mechanics and qualifications, Helen Turnbull's eager, intense, compelling knowledge of the dignity and scope of women's work in the Church was so forceful we found ourselves signing up to go to Windham House before we realized we were already working for the Church.

The importance of the conference was apparent. The Church has hundreds of places for well trained women workers. In overseas hospitals, schools, missions, at-home Church schools, parish offices, diocesan headquarters and organ lofts.

And college campuses like Vassar, Ohio State, South Carolina, Texas and twenty others. Procedure of the conference: worship, recreation, specialized talks by experts like ourselves on college work, Negro work, rural work, nursing, teaching, counseling, evangelism and personnel work. After two days together, the co-eds went back to college, some planning definitely to go into Church work, and all richer for having learned much about the Church they didn't know before.

We are now in favor of vocational conferences, and believe the whole Church should be grateful to the W. A., and for the U. T. O. which helps to support such conferences, provides scholarships for training, and pays salaries of a score or more trained workers in various fields. Further thanks are due to Mary Johnston and others like her who generously provide places for holding such conferences for students—with non-pouring cream gratis.

Possibilities, of interest to the parish priest: a trained woman worker, young, energetic, with good-housekeeping-seal of approval of the W. A. and "281". Pay the worker yourself or apply to the W. A. for a salary. Also to be kept in mind: Untrained college graduates (in limited number) who might serve apprenticeship in Church work, take training in graduate school after a period of service. The Church owes a debt of gratitude to college pastors, W. A. officers, training school directors, like Turnbull and Grammer of Berkeley, for promoting women's work in the church, and following through with conferences, personal recruiting, careful selection, training.

We left Orleton Farms licking the cream off our lips, and resolved to read the booklet on Women's Work published by "281".

"After all," we said to ourself, "what if some of them marry the curate after two or three year of service. If a woman takes her place in front of the washing machine, or the dressing table she may not be doing Church work for a living. But a home is a good place for a woman who knows something about Christian religion."

Introducing Christianity Into Christendom

By Arthur C. Lichtenberger

Professor of Pastoral Theology, General Theological Seminary

WHEN a man is ordained priest in the Episcopal Church the bishop says to him, "You have heard of what dignity and of how great importance this office is, whereunto you are called." As the service proceeds it becomes evident where the dignity and importance of the office are to be found. Not in the person of the priest, in his abilities or his achievements; certainly not in his pretensions. The ministry is so weighty an office and of so high a dignity not because of what we bring to it or make of it but because of him who has called us—called us to be his servants and stewards.

In the deepest sense we are here, either as students preparing for the ministry or as men ordained, not because we have chosen this work but because we could not do otherwise. It is unthinkable that any man should say, casually and offhand, "I am going to be a servant of Christ and steward of God's mysteries." When we offer ourselves for the sacred ministry our offering is a response. That is what vocation means. The initiative is not ours but God's. And when we are persuaded in all seriousness that we have been called by God to the ministry, then we answer because we are compelled; that pressure upon us in the pressure of God's love. In the days of Frederick Denison Maurice a clergyman's life was very different from what it is today, but even then he spoke of "the responsibilities" and "the terrors" of the ministry. No man can make the effort to meet those responsibilities or live serenely with the terrors unless he has unshakable conviction—not only on the luminous day of his ordination but on the dark days of his failure and his disappointments—the unshakable conviction that he did not choose

Christ but that Christ chose him.

With that conviction we are here. Some of us preparing for the ministry, some of us guiding and directing that preparation. The seminary is, in a common phrase, a place where men study for the ministry. To study for the ministry, obviously, does not mean only to study. There is much more in a three year seminary course than the work in lecture room and library and tutorial hour. But to study for the ministry does mean to study; to study the Bible, Church history, dogmatic theology, apologetics, Christian ethics, Liturgics—to study pastoral theology.

Old Definitions

From the earliest days in this place, as in all seminaries presumably, there have been courses called pastoral theology. In the General Seminary catalogue of 1834-35, which is the earliest bulletin preserved in the Library, there is printed this requirement—"All classes on one day each week, . . . and as often on the day appointed as he may require, attend the professor of pastoral theology and pulpit eloquence, for the performance of the services of the Church, the delivery of original sermons, and the instructions and recitations, or other exercises, to which he may think proper to call their attention." In 1854 the catalogue states that "The design of the course in this department (pastoral theology) is, specially to prepare the student for the duties of the desk and pulpit, and for all other pastoral offices." Fifty years later the professor of pastoral theology and the dean were having an uneasy time. "Fortunately or unfortunately in the old days of the seminary," we read, "the demands upon the incumbent of this chair were not as great as they are now, or as they ought to be and must be in our later day, provided the chair is not lumbered up with those various ephemeral educational experiments of our period which threaten to take up its time and which deal with very small matters and matters of very questionable ultimate value."

The present incumbent of the chair of pastoral theology is also somewhat perplexed. Coming to the seminary from many years in the parochial ministry I will not presume in this inaugural sermon, after four weeks of residence to give the proper specifications of the chair. There is no doubt it could easily be adorned with excess lumber. Everybody has an idea or two about what should be taught in pastoral theology and how to teach it. Experiments are in process in many places. Both the content and method of teaching the courses are under careful scrutiny. What, precisely, should be taught in the department of pastoral theology? How much field work should be required of students? How can such field work be supervised effectively? Can clinical training properly be part of the three year course? Every seminary in the country is asking those questions and seeking the answers. And that is good. It would be better if we had found the answers, but since we haven't it is good that we are determined to press the search.

Must Be Critical

We must, therefore, be very critical of what we teach in this department; critical of how this part of a man's training for the ministry is given. Without such criticism we are likely to find ourselves dealing with the subject in a way which is quite unreal, quite irrelevant to this historical situation in which we stand. There is a constant change in the social and cultural patterns of life, in our day such change moves at a rapid pace; we must be aware of this process as we train men to be pastors. Pastoral theology as taught in 1948 can bear little resemblance to pastoral theology as taught in 1900 and in 1958 another approach may be required. This does not cause confusion and uncertainty. This makes for order and definiteness. Only in this way can we train men adequately for the pastoral ministry and such training, certainly, is a necessity which must be met if the Church is to be the redemptive community.

Now whatever explorations and experiments we may make we shall have one fixed purpose: to enable the men to go from here into the ministry to relate the given element of the faith to the life of a Christian community so that the Christian community can be an effective witness of the gospel of the world.

This is implicit in the title of the department. It is pastoral theology. The emphasis is upon both words. It is not pastoral care nor practical theology, for pastoral care in all its aspects finds its ultimate reference in theology, and theology that is of any use to the pastor is bound to be practical which means it is applicable to life. We do not study theology without being involved personally, for theology is the study of the living faith of the Church. So why speak of practical theology? I should not want to be asked to teach that, for the overtones of such terminology are that the theology taught in the other disciplines in a seminary is impractical, academic, abstract; and that since such subjects as counseling, parish administration, preaching and Christian education are practical, therefore they are only accidentally and remotely connected with theology. Terminology here, as often, is important: we have a department of pastoral Theology.

Does Christianity Matter?

SO we are concerned both with the faith by which the Church lives, the given, and with men and women, social beings in this present day. The task of the minister in this situation is an extremely difficult one, requiring as Kierkegaard put it, the introduction of Christianity into Christendom. When we think of what it means to do, we think first of all, I suppose, of the great numbers of men and women who cannot see how Christianity has any relevance for their lives. We think of the people who cannot see where Christianity matters at all. They live in one world, the Church lives in another. In one of the reports presented at Amsterdam the question is asked, "What does the world see, or think it sees, when it looks at the Church?"

Answer from the world: "It is a Church that has largely lost touch with the dominant realities of modern life, and still tries to meet the modern world with language and a technique that may have been appropriate two hundred years ago." Whether that be true or not, that is what many people think of the Church. Between them and us there is a great gulf fixed. If that gulf is to be bridged the clergy must have a real grasp of the meaning of Christian faith and a profound understanding of people where they are.

The priest then must know theology but he must also have a working knowledge of the psychology of personality and an understanding of social structure. He must know people and he must know what happens to people in our secular culture, our "demonically distorted" secular culture. It is quite useless for a priest, no matter how orthodox his theology and how sound his churchmanship, to stand on one side of the gulf which separates him from perplexed and needy people and tell them that they have no business being over there, they should be where he is. Our Lord cannot be served in that manner. The servant of Christ, the pastor, meets people where they are in their predicament and helps them find a way. He walks with them in a rediscovery of the way made for us all by the Lord Christ.

But when we ask what its means to introduce Christianity into Christendom, we cannot think only of those outside the life of the Church. Christianity must be introduced into Christian churches. There are of course many devoted men in the ministry, there are great numbers of faithful lay people; but if we are going to take seriously the words which everyone used so freely a few years ago—"let the Church be the Church" —then the parishes of the Church must be rebuilt.

Dr. Visser 't Hooft has said that the rebuilding of parishes in continental Europe means three things. 1) "To help each parish overcome the spirit of the bourgeois secularism and to rediscover its specific calling as part of the body of Christ. This means realizing anew the fundamental difference between the Church of Christ and an association to promote the religious interest of its members." 2) To bring lay people into a full, active share in the tasks of the parish. 3) To create a real fellowship within the parish. Are not those the essential needs of every one of our parishes here in America? It is required of a faithful steward of the mysteries of God in our day that he do at least this: lead the people in his care toward those goals.

Not a Refuge

We cannot conserve the Christian faith and the tradition of our Church if we use this heritage as a comfortable refuge for ourselves and the faithful few gathered about us. That is to bury the talent with which we have been entrusted. You will remember what our Lord said about that kind of stewardship. One has the impression at times that we Episcopalians think we may escape his condemnation because of the careful and orderly way in which we preserve what has been given us. It was remarked long ago that "the Episcopal Church embroiders the napkin in which it lays away its talent." But we are still unfaithful no matter how we bury it.

Clergy and people must see what has been given them, use it to make the parish a center of Christian faith and witness in the midst of common life.

Can a man in his theological course learn how to be that kind of a pastor? Can he learn how to care for individuals and "to provide for the Lord's family"? To minister to persons and to lead in rebuilding the life of the parish? To stand, as Archbishop Temple said, "To stand for the things of God before the laity that the laity may stand for the things of God before the world?" I believe he can. That of course is the end to which all he studies and does here is directed. He will not emerge from Chelsea Square on graduation day with a diploma and a burning conviction and a complete set of perfected techniques. We trust he will have the diploma and we pray God he will have the burning conviction. What else? This, I think: Enough understanding to know that he is only a beginner and has much to learn. A man with that equipment will be a good pastor. He will never cease to learn. He will seek in the diaconate, in the exercise of his priesthood, in clinical courses or wherever it can be found, further training. For if a man learn here that he enters the ministry as a disciple, a learner, and that he goes among people not as a master but as a servant, not as a ruler but as a slave, a slave of the Lord Christ and their servant for his sake, then he understands the true dignity and importance of his office. Then he will be indeed "a servant of Christ and a steward of the mysteries of God."

A sermon preached in the chapel of the General Seminary on October 18 at the inauguration of Prof. Lichtenberger to the chair of pastoral theology.

What Is Truth?

BY ALSON J. SMITH

of the Methodist Federation for Social Action

THEOLOGICALLY speaking (which we seldom are) one of the most curious observations to come out of the World Council of Churches meeting in Amsterdam last summer was Prof. Reinhold Niebuhr's remark that Communism was more dangerous than Fascism because it contained more truth. This is a typical, tortured Niebuhrism, representative of the kind of Luce thinking Reiny has indulged in ever since the day he discovered that the wages of sin is a check from Life.

This reminds us vaguely of something Toynbee said in "Civilization on Trial"; that Communism is a page torn from the book of Christianity and misread. And also of Mr. John Foster Dulles' statement before the General Conference in Boston that Communism and Christianity sought the same ends. Communism seeks these ends by fair means or foul. Christianity, of course, seeks them only by such means as are sanctified by Christian ethic and current capitalistic practice (atomic war, for instance) although historically it has used all the means it now professes to abhor when the Soviets use them. But let's not talk about that. Toynbee, who knows that the Inquisition and the Crusades, as well as the burning of the witches, are a part of contemporary Christian history, shows an awareness of the dimensions of the whole problem of truth and error which neither Niebuhr nor Dulles do.

Is the truth so dangerous that even the little bit of it that Niebuhr, Dulles, and Toynbee grudgingly grant to Communism constitutes a threat to that western "Christian" civilization (the one that created and used the atomic bomb) and which, they allege, has a great deal more of it? And just how much of its does western civilization have, anyway? And just how little do the godless Soviet have? What are the dimensions, the proportions of truth?

Prof. Hromadka of the Prague theological faculty told the Amsterdam Conference, in reply to Mr. Dulles' attack on the Menace In The East, that it was high time the West realized that it had no monopoly on truth, justice and freedom. In the smug self praise and the allocation of all virtue to their own side of the Dulles and Niebuhr speeches at Amsterdam there was more than a trace of that blind Pharisaism which led Jesus to denounce the self-styled chosen people of his day as "kalsomined tombs" who would get into the Kingdom of Heaven only after the thieves, murderers and harlots had been admitted, if at all.

The truth, of course, is that nobody has the truth. This is a secret which theologians, educators, scientists, politicians, bishops and corporation lawyers guard with their lives and deny from the housetops.

Brotherhood Now

BY PHILIP H. STEINMETZ

SUSUMA Fuyita, a Japanese, a leper, died at the age of twenty, horribly disfigured and after terrific suffering. He said:

> O wondrous God
> By whom my life was blest,
> I yield to thee again
> This body torn with pain,
> And find my rest.

The first public prayer of a Negro from a primitive African village near Mompono was:

> Lord Jesus, you be the needle and I will be the thread. You go through first and I will follow wherever you may lead.

An Italian youth living 250 years before Columbus wrote:

> Lord, make me an instrument of your peace; where there is hatred, let me sow love; where there is injury, pardon; where there is doubt, faith; where there is despair, hope; where there is darkness, light; where there is sadness, joy.
> O Divine Master, grant that I may not so much seek to be consoled as to console; to be understood, as to understand; to be loved as to love; for it is in giving that we receive, it is in pardoning that we are pardoned, and it is in dying that we are born to eternal life.

There are no national or racial lines in the fellowship of those who know and love God.

THE NEW BOOKS

Excellent Good *Fair

* * More and More of Memories by Arthur Porritt. Macmillan. $3.50.

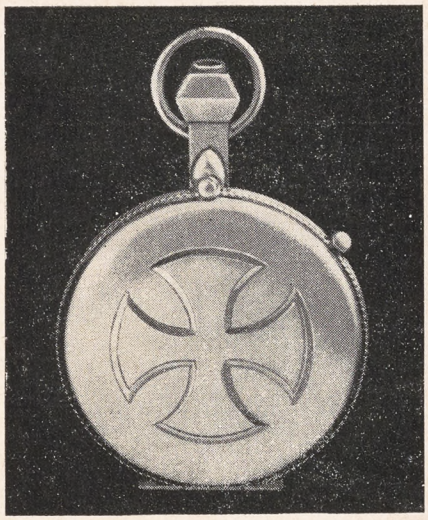
When a motor accident cost the late editor of the Christian World his position, he took up his reminiscences again and added this new book to his delightful "The Best I Can Remember." From his stories of his native Lancashire through those of his reporting days in London and at Cambridge to those of later days spent on The World and in the ecumencial movement, the book sparkles with anecdote and bon mot, vignettes of professors, nobility, laymen, bishops, preachers, authors and government officials on both sides of the Atlantic. The chapters on John Burns "Concerning Prime Ministers" and on "Dr. James Moffatt" are of especial interest.



—Helen Grant

* * A Call to What Is Vital by Rufus M. Jones. Macmillan. $2.

The distinguished professor of Haverford, now emeritus, here presents the religious experiences of a large number of friends, along with chapters on the Bible; the future of religion, in which he has interesting things to say about saints; chapters dealing with the conflicts between religion and science, and an excellent one on prayer. Prof. Jones has for years had a wide following.

THE PRESS

THE REVEREND: In his diocesan paper Bishop Stephen F. Bayne unburdens his soul in this fashion: "If you have any respect for the Bishop's blood pressure, PLEASE do not use the word 'Reverend' as a title. It is wrong. It is sinful. It is against Emily Post. It is ungrammatical. It is everything that is loathsome and horrible. There. 'Reverend' is an adjective, like 'Honorable' which is used to modify a noun—as 'The Reverend Mr. Brown' or 'The Reverend John Brown.' It is NOT a title. It is always prefixed by 'the.' It is never used with the last name alone. Archbishops are 'The Most Reverend'—that includes Bishop Sherrill in our book—Bishops are 'The Right Reverend,' Deans are 'The Very Reverend,' Archdeacons are 'The Venerable,' Parish Priests—those peasants—are 'The Reverend.' End of annual blast on the subject." — Olympia Churchman.

NO EVANGELISM: Following the exhibition (the first broadcast of Great Scenes from Great Plays), an invitation was given to the hearers to join the Episcopal Church. Bishop Sherrill had high hopes, for he sent a long telegram to the 87 Episcopal bishops in the United States, asking them to be prepared to welcome into the church "many thousands" of non-churchgoing Americans expected to seek spiritual sanctuary after hearing the new program. We have long had the feeling that a lot of church people are using the term evangelism without thinking what its content ought to be. There can be no evangelism without the "evangel"—which is the gospel of Christ. There can be no "spiritual sanctuary" unless sinners admit the spirit of God into their hearts and repent of their sins, accepting the provisions made for their redemption in our Lord Jesus Christ. Dramatics cannot be separated from that which is unreal. —Watchman Examiner (Baptist).

FOLLOW YOUR BEETLE: "Truth or Consequences" has condemned four young men to an annual forfeit. In cars provided, with attendants to see they don't cheat, they are to drive from the West Coast to Chicago. The first one to arrive will receive a brand new car. But their routes will be determined by an accompanying beetle, who will crawl where he will on a state map, and the car's driver must follow exactly: where the beetle stops, there he must tarry; should it proceed only backwards, or exclusively sideways, so must he drive. Should the beetle sulk or sleep, the driver must not tease or goad it into action; should it die, replacement beetles are provided by the management. Perhaps this is the real answer to all our problems, such as: What is the world coming to? or where do we go from here? Be beetle-led, bet your bottom beetle, follow your beetle and forget your fears. Not on the turn of a card, or the throw of a dice, not even on a girl's variable favor, but on a beetle's progress shall hang our fate and future.—Commonweal (R. C.)

AS IF THEY WERE: Drive-in theatres are springing up all over the country, and their popularity seems to be an assured fact. Inevitably there should be a drive-in church. Now the resort town of Rockford has provided one under the auspices of the First Baptist Church. A "congregation" of 200 or more now go to church without even getting out of their cars on Sabbath evenings. Services are conducted on the high school grounds by means of a public address system. They include about 45 minutes of religious music and a 15 minute sermon. Ushers go from car to car collecting the offering with their plates. The decorum of the drive-in congregation is said to be as reverent as if they were in church. —Union Herald (Pres.)

AUTHOR OF "THE MAN I WANTED TO KNOW"

$1.00 plus postage

Dr. H. S. Leiper, in a foreword to this eye-witness account by an accredited visitor to the 1st assembly of The World Council of Churches, says:

"Mr. Kennedy has used excellent criteria for his selection of materials, genuinely reflecting the substance as well as the spirit of the plenary sessions, the commissions, the sections, and the worship services. His descriptions are accurate, restrained, and in proper perspective. They will help those who were not present to catch something of the color and drama of a great event in contemporary history."

CHURCH AND DRAMATIC ARTS

BY WM. B. SPOFFORD, JR.

WE have continually pointed out that drama has always had a close affinity to religion. Worship, whether in Egypt, Greece, Palestine or in the modern world, has, of necessity, used dramatic forms. We think this relationship is natural and that a lot more should be done about it. We believe that the Church should take its responsibility seriously and help to foster experimental dramatic groups aimed at putting on simple, but sound, drama for the local church.

Many attempts have been made. A few years ago, a group in the diocese of Massachusetts failed, despite the backing of the diocesan department of education, to establish a group called the Diocesan Players. The aim was to have them on call for all diocesan parishes, ready, willing and able to put on good performances of such plays as "Murder in the Cathedral," "The Terrible Meek," "Awake and Sing," etc. More recently, the Vesper Players, operating on the same principle in the diocese of Michigan for a period of three years, passed into the realm of secular children's dramatics.

Now comes word of the Opportunity Drama Guild of Toledo, O., which started in June, 1946, as a result of a group of housewives and manual laborers interest in some medium of self-expression. In September of the same year they made their debut in St. Paul's Church, at the request of the rector, Howard Graham, in the chancel play, "The Wanderer." It was a three-act, hour-long production dealing with the Prodigal Son theme. Since then, the play has been presented 72 times before 18 denominations and non-denominational groups, at two summer resorts and on the local county fair midway. (Any similarity to the performances the Miracle Play groups gave in the town market place in the Middle Ages is, we are sure, strictly intentional.) Last Lent, the group prepared a new version of The Rock. This has been presented 18 times so far and both dramas are booked solid for the rest of this year.

Many people, apparently, have this idea. Perhaps the national Church can do something about getting them all in one place to find out what can be done in this field. Some exploratory discussions that have already been held show that such persons as Dorothy Sayers, T. S. Eliot and W. H. Auden would not be hostile to the idea, with some of them willing to travel all the way from England to tell what is done at Canterbury Cathedral and elsewhere.

There is certainly a real need to get Church drama off of the level of the "poor starving missionary" theme (both in plot and staging). The "Great Scenes from Great Plays" is a good start but good theatre starts on a somewhat lower level.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

DONALD W. CRAWFORD
Vicar, Christ Church, Lexington, Ky.

The review of "A Greater Generation" surely calls for further comment. How anyone so sensitive to "content" could have read this book and so completely miss its content is well-nigh inconceivable. The 27 churches now in the project—four of them Episcopal parishes—evidently have found something to learn about teaching the Christian religion that fills an unmet need in religious education. Only one YMCA group has tried the program in part.

The weakness of Christian conviction as evidenced by the amount of "dead wood" that clutters up the communicant list of the average parish in our church surely makes the thinking person question the effectiveness of the educational methods the church has used heretofore. Indeed it is high time we paid a little attention to how we are to learn the content of our religion and translate it into effective Christian character. Was not Jesus himself moved to protest, "Why call ye me, Lord, and do not the things which I say?"

Let us have done with this belittling of things we do not understand.

MRS. EVANS HAMMOND
President of Auxiliary of California

Can you send me five copies of the Oct. 14 issue? I forward my copy through the Church Periodical Club but do not want to let it out of my hands until I am sure of getting another. Thank God that through The Witness we can have a true picture which shows more than one side of some of our missionary problems.

Answer: We are completely out of Oct. 14. If there are those who have extra copies they would like to send to Mrs. Hammond, her address is 134 York Avenue, Berkeley 8, Cal.

MRS. EDNA C. McELWAIN
Churchwoman of Washington, D. C.

I was quite surprised to see the Progressive Party advertisement in the Witness (Oct. 21), especially since Wallace urges a full separation of Church and state. Why does the party choose a religious publication for its ad? Does the Episcopal Church endorse Mr. Wallace and his platform?

Answer: We carried the ad of the Progressive Party because it was sent to us, and paid for. We would have been delighted to have had the ads of any of the other ten parties' running candidates, providing they paid for them. A number of church weeklies did, as a matter of fact, run full page ads of the Republican and Democratic Parties, but none were offered us, worse luck. As to why the Progressive Party ad was placed in a religious publication, we presume it was because they think Church people are interested in the separation of Church and state issue. As for the last question, the Episcopal Church does not endorse any candidates or platforms.

Churchwoman of New York

Congratulations on the "new" Witness. I think it is wonderful and should be a big success. The editors have done a lot of hard work and this new magazine shows the fruits of their hard labor. Keep on giving us a truly progressive Christian paper as you have been doing over the years. The world certainly needs it.

GERALD H. LEWIS
Rector at Gas City, Indiana

Congratulations on the new format of The Witness. The cover is more attractive; the printing and headings are easier to read; and that editorial about getting rid of parochial mechanics was most heartening. I wonder what would happen if we stopped raising money in the Church and gave our whole time to feeding the sheep.

JOSEPH F. FLETCHER
Professor at Cambridge Seminary

The issue on China is great. Nobody could ask for better Church journalism. It's tops.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Church Army Does Unique Work in Missouri

It Develops Churches Abandoned by Others In a Number of Town-Country Centers

By WILLIAM PADDOCK
Church Army Captain, Parkville, Mo.

★ In April of 1947 the Church Army was asked to send a man to the Roanridge rural field area to help in developing the abandoned churches at Union Chapel and Tiffany Springs. These churches were abandoned by other communions and the congregations had asked the National Council for help. Captain William Paddock was sent from Rochester to Parkville, Maryland, as the first regular minister for these two promising churches.

During the first three months Union Chapel was restored by the local congregation and seminarians of the Episcopal Church studying at the national town and country Church institute at Park College. The congregation has had a Baptist, Holiness background. Captain Paddock started services in the area by having services that the people were accustomed to attending. Gradually the worship services were changed from Baptist to Methodist, to Presbyterian to Episcopal so that today the congregation at Union Chapel has voted to come in union with the diocese of West Missouri.

For the first time in the history of Union Chapel and Tiffany Springs Churches they are having regular services and the full time services of a Church Army field officer. Calls are made on the sick, the people are prepared for baptism and confirmation . . . the fullest effort is made to relate the work of the church to farm life and agriculture. The harvest festival in the fall of the year is a great service of thanksgiving for the fruits of the harvest. The church is decorated with sugar cane, corn, apples, fruits, potatoes, and canned goods. This year calves, hogs and chickens were presented at this service as a part of the Lord's Acre offerings of the people. Each year the farmer churchman sets aside a part of his flock of chickens or a pig, or a calf to be given to the church at the time of harvest festival for the expenses of the church during the coming year. The national town and country Church institute students have helped with a spirit of enthusiasm and good teaching to help with the work of conducting the daily vacation Bible school during the summer months.

There are many part-time farmers being ministered to at Union Chapel. They work in the fields up until ten o'clock on Sunday and then wash up, put on Sunday clothes, and go to church. A service of worship, plus a 12-minute sermon . . . then back to the fields to complete the day. Probably not the ideal, but the farmers are being reached. These part-time farmers have regular jobs in Kansas City and do farm work at home in their spare time.

The work of the Church Army at Union Chapel has reached out to the nearby community of Farley . . . they requested that a Church Army minister be sent to them. A large church with an active Woman's Auxiliary and Church were a Disciples of Christ congregation, having been without a minister for sixty years. Captain William Johnson of Los Angeles was dispatched to that field and he is now their minister in one of the largest churches in Platte County, Missouri.

The work of the Church Army has been to establish congregations on a permanent supporting basis and to acquaint the people with the Episcopal Church. To prepare the way for the ordained clergy following the example of the patron saint of the Church Army, St. John the Baptist.

SISTER ALICE HORNER TO RETIRE

★ Sister Alice A. Horner is about to retire from active service in the mission field after 39 years in the Church Army, the past 19 of which she has spent in the Indian mission field of South Dakota. Before going to South Dakota, Sister Horner had twenty years of parish work under the Church Army, ten in England and ten in Philadelphia. Sister Horner is one of our great women workers. The Indians of Pine Ridge and all over South Dakota are going to feel her loss.

For some time, Sister Horner has been a much desired speaker at meetings, and she is going to give some time to continuing this after her retirement.

NEWS OF THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH

THE TRAINING CENTER OF CHURCH ARMY

By CAPT. ERIC KAST, Director

★ Quite often young people who are eager to give their full time in the service of the Church, write: "Church Army is just the kind of thing I want to do." It provides joyous, adventurous service in mountains and cities, in rural places and slums. Young people, however full of zeal for God's work, still need training in the ways of the Church and in methods of evangelism. Dwight L. Moody found the same thing. He needed help in his work and there were many fine laymen ready to help but they needed training. He was much concerned about this and so began work which later became the Moody Bible Institute.

The Church Army has its own training center in Cincinnati, where a fine class is now in training. Courses are in Bible study, voice and reading by Rev. Francis J. Moore; Prayer Book by Rev. Robert S. Lambert; Christine doctrine by Rev. G. L. Pennock; Christian social service by Rev. John L. Langhorne; Church history by Rev. M. B. Long; Christian education by Miss Irene Scudds and homiletics by Mr. Earl Estabrook. There is practical training in such things as the local detention home and the work house and other welfare institutions in the city, parish visiting, teaching and young people's work, making religious surveys and street preaching.

The Church Army aims at giving men and women sufficient training and understanding, to make them useful layhelpers to the clergy and bishops of the Church and in many instances to become religious leaders.

All over the country there is such an urgent need for trained workers. If only we could fill the training school to over-flowing with young men and women eager for the Lord's work and send them out equipped to these places of need. In parishes there are places to help with visiting, especially among the poor and delinquent small children and youth groups and survey work in opening up new places, reviving dead and dying churches, and preaching missions. Institutions also are calling for workers. Then there is the foreign mission field — Alaska, China, the Philippines, needing help. We can do so much to help. With more men and women and the means to go forward, and with plenty of prayers and hard work, there is no reason why the Church Army should not grow to be a much greater power for good in the Church.

CHURCH ARMY SISTER HAS PLENTY TO DO

★ Sister Daisy Kitchen, commissioned at the Church Missions House last spring, has gone to her first Church Army position in Whiterocks, Utah. Here is something of the work she does: "My work includes organizing the women's and youth work, which is a full time job in itself. Overseeing and directing Church school plans for 150 children with only six teachers, all having varied denominational backgrounds, demands a great deal of time and thought. The Rev. J. F. Hogben and I both instruct our confirmation and catechism class of 115 children. One evening a week we have a family hour with both Indians and whites attending; I have thus far organized two campfire girls groups with 30 or more girls in each, developing within them drill and drum corps. I maintain the distribution of clothing, which is a job which needs very close attention, requiring the keeping of records and a constant check on the needs of families.

"Just recently I had the burial service of a six-year old Indian boy. There are no doctors or nurses available within 25 miles of the mission, so we must constantly be in the homes to do a job of prevention before acute medical cases develop.

"I also lead group singing in the whole school of 300 children several days a week. The government school is grateful to the mission for this because they have no music teacher or music department. This is a glimpse of the mission life which goes on 24 hours a day, seven days a week. You may be interested in knowing that I have collected bit by bit Ute Indian stories of traditional fears and superstitions of the Ute tribe. These will all help in relating Christian teaching to their thinking and experience."

And Sister Kitchens only began this work in August!

Sister Daisy Kitchens, just recently commissioned, finds Church Army work plentiful and also exciting.

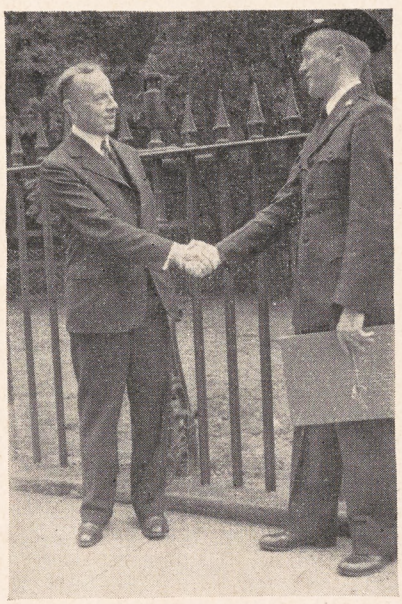
Experiences of Church Army Captain



BY CAPTAIN ERIC KAST
Director of Church Army Training Center

★ When I think back of my years in the Church Army, I realize more than ever that it has been a happy and wonderful experience. After being accepted as a trainee in the Church Army, I was sent out for field experience under Captain Lewis at St. Barnabas' Mission in the west end of Cincinnati. There, in the midst of dirt and poverty, I learned how wonderfully God, the Holy Spirit, works in people's hearts. The young fellow who gave us the most trouble, interfering with the services and trying to break up the meetings, was changed and became quite interested in the Church. I'll never forget the circus we put on with the children. There were cowboys and Indians, lions and giraffes, clowns and acrobats. My stay there was full of happiness; plenty of real fun mixed with the joy of the Lord. Often at the end of a hard day's work, we would gather around the piano and sing "Praise to the Holiest in the Height."

After four months of training at St. Barnabas' I was instructed to go to Fort Pierce, Florida; to hold services at two churches while the rector was away. I was really pretty scared after only four months in the Church Army but I remember setting up a prayer altar in my room which was used frequently and grace was given to carry on.

From Florida next to the House of Happiness in North Alabama to work with sharecroppers and tenant-farmers under Captain C. L. Conder for three weeks before being called in to the training center in New York. Our class spent about eight months at training center. The good fellowship together was a blessing. Old Dr. John W. Chapman, former missionary to Alaska, was warden of the training school at that time and a great saint. We studied the Bible, Church history, Prayer Book, Christian education, homiletics as well as first-aid and other useful subjects. Our class was commissioned while at General Convocation in Cincinnati in 1937, by Presiding Bishop Perry.

After commissioning, my first work was with Captain Earl Estabrook at Greenville, Ohio, making a religious survey in the county. Then the call came from the House of Happiness again at Scottsboro, Ala., where I stayed for about six months until new work was begun at a government resettlement project nearby at Skyline Farms, to which I was sent. I married while at Skyline Farms and altogether we were there for about four years. The Church had forty acres of land but no buildings so my first business was to don overalls and help build a house. Later on we built a large log cabin for a Church. The whole project was our parish. The government had established 156 new farms on this section of Cumberland Mountain table-land. I often walked ten to twenty miles a day visiting and preaching in the people's homes. I tried using a horse, then a bicycle, but finally decided that walking was the best way after all. Gradually a few people were baptized and confirmed and a small congregation begun. I remember how much fun it was having chapel services in the school. There were eight grades. Each morning, I went to one of the rooms and held a short service with singing, prayers, and a talk. The children were so responsive that it was a joy to be with them.

Lewis B. Franklin, former treasurer of the National Council and a trustee of the Church Army, congratulates a newly commissioned Captain following the service at Church Missions House, in New York City.

From Skyline Farms we were moved back to the House of Happiness, to be in charge. This was a much older and better established work ministering to a good many people. Being the central place in the whole community, it provided Church services, school, recreation, medical care and clothing, and much of the work spread out over the entire county. Part of the work was the overseeing of the 160 acre farm on which the House of Happiness was located. I liked the visiting in the people's homes especially and holding cottage meetings with them after supper. There were the big times too, like home-coming and Easter when there would be large gatherings with dinner on the grounds, and Christmas, when gifts were given to everyone in the community as well as to the inmates of the jails and the tuberculosis sanitarium in Scottsboro. There were difficulties and trying situations as there are everywhere. They seem to go along with the joy in the work.

Our next assignment at the Episcopal Church home in Mobile was entirely different. There we were house-parents to an ever-changing family of 20 boys. It was hard work and seemed always difficult but there was much happiness in living with these children and trying to make a good home for them. This is a wonderful work for Christian people, full of opportunities to save souls and to direct young lives in the right way.

Now we are at the Church Army training center in Cincinnati and are beginning on our part in training young men and women for this interesting and wonderful work in the Church. We hope that a great many young men and women will want to serve God in this adventurous way.

IN TRAINING FOR CHURCH ARMY

★ Church Army training center in Cincinnati has just opened again, with Captain Eric Kast in charge. He has a fine group of students, pictured on the cover.

William Henderson (wearing light suit) from St. Andrew's Church, Wellesley, Mass. He is twenty years old and at one time attended Lenox school. It was there he became interested in the Church. During the past summer he worked under Captain John Prior and with the staff of St. Paul's Wayside Cathedral in Southern Ohio.

Harper Anderson (with double-breasted suit) is from St. Simeon's Church, Philadelphia. He is 27 and spent three and a half years in the army, a good part of the time overseas, his work being mostly chaplain's assistant. During the past summer he worked under Bishop Emrich at Prudenville, Mich.

Herbert Sparks (hands folded), aged 20, came from Rochester, N. Y., the Church of the Epiphany. He served 18 months overseas in Korea, and this summer worked with St. Paul's Wayside Cathedral and with the national town-country Church institute at Parkville, Missouri.

Edna Brooks from Nelsonville, O., comes from the Presbyterian Church and was baptized through the ministry of St. Paul's Wayside Cathedral. She worked for almost two years at a mental hospital and has lots of experience working with children.

Others are inquiring and may be coming in before the year is out.

EPISCOPAL HOSPITAL GOES WITH UNIVERSITY

★ Mr. Harold E. Stassen, president of the University of Penna., and Mr. Laurence H. Eldredge, president of the board of managers of the Episcopal Hospital in Philadelphia, have issued a joint statement that under an agreement reached by the two institutions, the hospital would remain at its present site in the industrial district of the northeastern section of the city, where it has been established 97 years as a Church institution; but would henceforth be administered as one of the hospitals of the university. The Episcopal Hospital is the largest medical institution in its section of the city. It has faced a deficit this year of $141,758. Its deficit in 1947 was $81,316. It receives no state aid because it is among those considered sectarian. Operated as a unit of the University of Pennsylvania Hospital, the University can receive state aid for free work done there. Although the institution was not the creature of the Diocesan Convention, and technically not under its control, it has in fact been a diocesan institution, and actively supported by the people of the diocese. The merger was enacted by the hospital board as the result of a resolution made at a special diocesan convention, June 18, 1948.

PHILIPPINE COURT VOIDS UNFAVORABLE RULING

a new ruling of the Philippine courts. Setting aside a previous decision in favor of the minority group, which has held out against friendly relations with the American Episcopal Church, a new trial has been ordered. The issue arose out of the establishment of intercommunion between the Aglipayan and the American Episcopal Church which was followed by the consecration of Aglipayan bishops according to the Episcopal rite. In the interest of "good administration of justice," the Court of Appeals decided to call the new trial having considered a statement by Bishop Binsted that the de los Reyes group did not establish organic union with the American Church, and did not make any changes in the constitution of the Philippine Church. The minority faction had charged that the de los Reyes group, because of its dealings with the American Church, had lost official status in the Aglipayan Church and, consequently, official control over any of its land and buildings. The minority faction consists of about two per cent of the total membership.

CLOSER TIES ARE SOUGHT WITH POLISH GROUP

★ Plans for closer relations among parishes of the Episcopal Church and the Polish National Catholic Church were discussed at a Pittsburgh meeting of bishops and priests of the two communions. It was the third joint meeting of intercommunion committees of the two Churches. According to a report of the last meeting, the Episcopal and the Polish Church "are in fact two national Churches which, maintaining the doctrine and fellowship that have come down to them from the Apostles, find themselves in the same territory through the accident of immigration combined with the barrier of language." Major topic of discussion at the meeting here was proposed methods of breaking down the barrier of language. Other subjects were the history of the two Churches, their services, and means of bringing about closer relations. It was decided that an interchange of lectures, seminars and visits would help accomplish their goal. The committees also heard reports from the Rt. Rev. John Z. Jasinski of Buffalo on the Old Catholic conference at Hilversam, Holland, and from Episcopal Bishop G. Ashton Oldham of Albany, N. Y., on the Lambeth conference at London.

DIOCESE OF VIRGINIA ELECTS SUFFRAGAN

★ The Rev. Robert Fisher Gibson, Jr., D. D., dean of the school of theology of the University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn., was unanimously elected suffragan bishop of the diocese of Virginia, at a diocesan council held at St. James' Church, Richmond, last week. This action followed the third ballot which resulted in 56 out of 97 clerical votes, and 70 out of 108 lay votes.

ARCHDEACON HIGLEY TO BE CONSECRATED

★ Consecration of the Ven. Walter Maydole Higley as Suffragan Bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Central New York, will take place on Dec. 15, it was announced by Bishop Malcolm E. Peabody. Bishop Peabody also announced the acceptance of the invitation of St. Paul's Church, Syracuse, to hold the consecration service there. Clergy and lay representatives from each of the 130 parishes and missions of the diocese will attend. Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church, will be the consecrator, with Bishop Peabody as Co-consecrator. Born in Norwich, Mr. Higley will be the first bishop of the diocese to have spent his whole life within its boundaries. Following his graduation from General Theological Seminary, he first served missions in Memphis, Jordan and Port Byron, before going to Johnson City in 1929, where he remained 14 years, until he became archdeacon of the diocese in 1943. He has been chairman of the Department of Christian Education, and is now chairman of the Department of Missions.

DEAN JOHNSON'S TRIP STIRS CONTROVERSY

★ The Very Rev. Hewlett Johnson, who has been making a speaking tour of Canada before coming into the United States, has been unfavorably received by officialdom of the Church of England there. The Most Rev. George F. Kingston, Archbishop of the Canadian Church, made clear that the Dean's tour was not under the Church's auspices. He stated publicly, "we do not endorse his views," but also declared that he did not question "his right to speak." Less diplomatic in their consternation the Imperial Order of Daughters of the Empire called an emergency session for the purpose of getting the government to bar him from the country. Said they, he is "a supporter of the doctrines of Communism emanating from Russia." One of the outstanding clergymen who differed with the Daughters was the Rev. J. Gregory Lee, who charged that the IODE was lining up with the "Mosley Fascist group in England."

PRESENTED TO BISHOP BY LAY-READER

★ When the Rt. Rev. Russell S. Hubbard, Suffragan Bishop of Michigan visited Grace Church in Jonesville for confirmation on October 17, Jack E. Warner, layreader-in-charge of the small mission, presented to him the largest class since 1895. There were five ladies and three men in the all adult class.

ECUMENICAL NEWS

MILKMEN GO BACK TO CHURCH

Now that Indianapolis has eliminated the Sunday morning delivery of milk, milkmen are finding their way back to the churches. Many churches have reported that they've issued special invitations to the milkmen to spend their Sunday mornings at religious services and at Bible school and other classes. No definite figures are available, but church officials say their Sunday attendance has increased since the start of the "no-Sunday-delivery" system. (RNS)

NO "CHRISTIAN" SYSTEM OF ECONOMICS

In a statement prepared by its department of the Church and Economic Life, the Federal Council says that while some economic systems may be more favorable to Christian life than others, there is no "Christian" economic system that is suitable for all occasions. "There can be no Christian sanction for one-sided support of either economic individualism or economic collectivism."

The belief that God ordained existing economic systems has been discredited, the statement said, adding that changes which occurred in recent centuries made it difficult to regard any particular economic institution as final or ordained by God. Another "misconception," the Federal Council said, is the idea that Christian love, in basic economic relationships, can best be expressed by a paternalism which leaves uncriticized the power of the few over the many.

"Exploited or neglected classes and races have won new political and social order and have been able to challenge the pretensions that usually accompany use of power over others." The statement stressed that the Church must make its influence felt in the economic sphere principally through the decisions of its laymen and urged the churches to help their members convert Christian principles into attitudes that control life.

The Federal Council meets in its next Biennial session at Cincinnati, O., on Dec. 1, 2 and 3, 1948. Evening speakers will be Mr. John Foster Dulles, Dr. Leighton Stuart, ambassador to China, and the Council's president, Mr. Charles P. Taft. Others who will lead worship services and speak include Professor Elton Trueblood, the Rt. Rev. Stephen Neill, formerly Bishop of Tinnevelly, South India, and Professor Walter M. Horton of Berlin.

STUDENT CHRISTIAN COUNCIL MEETING

The first quadrennial conference of the United Student Christian Council will be held in Lawrence, Kansas, on the campus of the University of Kansas, Dec. 27-Jan. 1. The theme will be "World Churchmanship—1949," and will stress guidance of laymen. United Student Christian Council members comprise the Y.M.C.A., Y.W.C.A., Student Volunteer Movement, Interseminary Movement, Lutheran Student Association of America and the student work departments of ten major denominations.

CHRISTIAN STATESMAN MUST BE HELPED OUT

British churches have been warned that if they direct their members to oppose the government because it was "taking measures of self-defense," they would defeat the efforts of Christian statesmen to avert war. Dr. J. H. Oldham, of the British Council of Churches' commission on atomic power, made the warning and said that if churches oppose rearmament the political consequences might be to plunge the world into war. In line with this curious logic, Dr. Oldham referred specifically to John Foster Dulles and Ernest Bevin of Great Britain as "Christian statesmen."

DENOMINATIONS START STOREFRONT CHURCH

A vacant store in East Harlem has been made into a cooperatively run storefront church in a unique plan "to take the church to the people." It is a project of four Protestant denominations in cooperation with the New York City Mission Society and Union Theological Seminary. The church is the first in a chain of similar storefront churches which will be called the East Harlem Protestant Parish. For years now, storefront churches have been meeting the people where they live, and have been mainly of the sectarian, revivalist type. The established denominations have not succeeded heretofore in overcoming what has been called "block-consciousness." People in congested areas seldom travel more than a few blocks to satisfy their religious, social and economic needs. The storefront church is an attempt to take the church to the people where they live instead of trying to bring the people to church. It is planned to inaugurate with the church a program of community aid in health, sanitation, housing and recreation. The Rev. Don Benedict, Union graduate, will serve as pastor of the new church.

NEWS OF OTHER CHURCHES

TO TRAIN MEMBERS IN POLITICS

The Church should train its members to exert their "Christian influence" upon the political life of the nation, according to a report that is being submitted this week at a convention of the American Lutheran Church, meeting in Detroit. The report, presented by the commission on social relations, stated that the Church "can and should provide and disseminate factual information helpful in guiding congregational members in evaluating the merits of candidates and measures."

It also proposed that church members attend sessions of town councils, county commissions, school boards, etc., "to remind these public representatives that the Christian element is keenly interested in and insistent on the faithful conduct of the public's business."

To meet his political responsibilities, the commission said, the Christian citizen should: "Commend faithful public employees for service well rendered, whether in putting the public interest above personal or partisan interest, for unusual demonstrations of helpfulness and courtesy above and beyond the line of duty, or for other meritorious work. Accept service on juries, parole boards, school and library boards, fact-finding commissions, town councils, county commissions, etc., where qualified and requested to serve. Accept appointive or merit-system positions in public departments, agencies, or institutions, wherein one may serve his fellow men in accord with the guiding light of Christian principles.

"Express honest convictions and benefits on current issues to public officials and representatives, either through written communications or the spoken word. Obey all laws not contrary to God's will, working for the repeal of laws that are out-of-date or anti-Christian, rather than permitting them to continue unobserved on the statute books. Encourage a discriminating Christian loyalty which seeks the best interests of one's own community, state and nation without jeopardizing the welfare of any other community, state or nation, thus contributing to community, state, national and international well-being."

BAPTIST WARNS OF CONFLICT

President Sanford Fleming of the Northern Baptist convention, speaking at the N. J. convention of that Church, warned that "unless we are alive to all the implications of what is going on, we are going to have another conflict between Church and state." Another speaker, Pastor Edward Pruden of Washington, D. C., said that the major responsibility for Christian education "is not in the public schools but in the home and church." He said some had been guilty of "transferring that task to teachers paid from public funds."

LUTHERAN CENTER IS BARRED

A reception center for displaced persons, which Lutherans planned in St. Paul, Minn., has been temporarily blocked because of the opposition of residents in the neighborhood. Representatives of the Church, who have knocked on doors in the area of the proposed center to find out reasons for the opposition, reported that some of the people said they didn't want foreigners. Others didn't want Jews. Counsel for the society contended that re-zoning is sought "solely to prevent its use by a different class of persons."

BAPTISTS URGE BIBLES FOR BUSINESSMEN

A Bible on the desk of every Baptist businessman is one of the hopes of their Brotherhood of the South. Secretary G. W. Schroeder told the national committee of the organization that it was one way in which businessmen could silently witness to their faith. He also said that executives could influence their employees either by hiring a chaplain for their plant, conducting weekly services or holding a five-minute prayer meeting before the start of the day's work.

OCCUPATIONAL TAX EXEMPTION

City fathers of Louisville, Ky., are seeking an amendment to a local occupational tax so that priests, ministers and rabbis will be exempt. The mayor also has asked that churches be relieved of collecting the tax from their salaried employees. Meanwhile an attorney for the Roman Catholic archbishop has stated that the tax is illegal for priests in any case.

ROMANISTS PRAY FOR USSR

About 10,000 Roman Catholics, some barefoot, braved rain and cold to trudge up a mountain trail at El Paso, Tex., for a prayer service at the monument of Christ atop Sierra de Cristo Rey. On reaching the monument they prayed for the conversion to Roman Catholicism of Soviet Russia.

WASHINGTON OFFICE OF LUTHERANS

The Missouri synod of the Lutheran Church has opened a public relations office in Washington. It is in charge of Miss Olinda Roettger who was a staff worker at the service center during the war.

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

URGE PROTECTION OF MINORITIES

Minorities would be protected by the terms of an article recommended by Denmark for inclusion in the UN Declaration of Human Rights. The Danish delegation asked that the article read as follows: "All persons belonging to a racial, national, religious or linguistic minority have the right to establish their own schools and to receive instruction in the language of their own choice."

After this proposal was made The Netherlands immediately asked that the article be amended to include a statement to the effect that primary responsibility for the education of children rests with the family and that parents should have the right to determine the kind of education their children shall receive.

An article similar to that offered by Denmark was introduced by the Soviet Union. The Russians urged the article read: "All persons, irrespective of whether they belong to a racial, national or religious minority, have the right to their own ethnic or national culture, to establish their own schools, and receive instruction in their native tongue, and to use that tongue in the press, at public meetings, in courts and other official premises."

PROGRAM PROPOSED TO AVOID WAR

Differences between the U. S. and the U. S. S. R., and between Christians and Communists, "need not result in war," the United Lutheran Church declared, following a discussion of the matter at a convention in Philadelphia. A report adopted by the convention proposed the following program for avoiding war: (1) Individuals and church groups should persuade others to join in securing support of a federal program of "sound democratic cooperation" with other nations. (2) Church members should "challenge the judgment of those who say 'war is inevitable' and those who urge 'a preventive war'" with Russia. (3) Efforts should be made to discuss the present international situation with members of Congress. (4) A study should be made of the statements, "A Positive Program for Peace" and "Soviet-American Relations," issued by the Federal Council of Churches, in order that church members may discuss the issues involved intelligently. (5) Daily prayers should be said that "leaders of the nations may know and follow God's will, and that as individuals we may be cleansed from hatred and selfishness."

BERLIN CATHEDRAL STOPS BUILDING

Reconstruction of Berlin's war-damaged Protestant Cathedral has been stopped for lack of materials and funds. It will make it impossible to hold the Christmas service there as had been planned.

SARTRE'S WORKS ON INDEX

The books of Jean-Paul Sartre, French philosopher, have been placed on the list of forbidden books by the Vatican. Roman Catholic philosophers, meeting recently in Rome, discussed extentialism and its relation to catholicism, and drew a sharp distinction between the ideas of the founder of existentialism, Soeren Kierkengaard, and those of modern advocates of the philosophy, who like Sartre, are charged with debasing it in their quest for popularity. According to Religious News Service: "Existentialism teaches that truly to know man one must first approach him through the concrete and the individual and must consider all the conditions and circumstances under which he lives. It holds that those who approach him only through the universal and abstract do not truly know him." To which we add that we do not truly know what that means. But apparently Pope Pius does for he states: "We have no intention of dealing fully with existentialism. But we ask: has philosophy any road open to it except despair if it does not fully find its solutions in God, in personal eternity and immortality."

ROMAN BISHOPS ARRESTED

Three Roman Catholic bishops have been arrested in Romania and another has been placed under house arrest, according to the Vatican. It says further that 200 priests have been arrested. Vatican officials use such terms as "these and other persecutions" and "tragic situation of Catholics" whereas Romanian government spokesmen say that Vatican protests are an "unjustified intervention in the internal situation of the Romanian state."

RELIGIOUS CENSUS IN ISRAEL

A census to be conducted by the Israeli government will include the term "agnostic" as a subdivision of the religious part of the questionnaire. Results will strongly influence the religious policy of the state, since Orthodox Jewish groups demand that large powers be given to rabbis, which is opposed by the more progressive citizens.

EDITORIALS

Return to Sanity?

NOW that the election is over we ought to begin treating people as people. A mass-circulation magazine in a recent Gallup-style poll (more accurate we trust than either Gallup or Roper) discovered that 90% of our citizens think that they really love their neighbor as themselves, even though he has a different religion. However 57% of these people do not have this love when the fellowman is a member of a political party that is thought dangerous. Delegates to the American Legion convention went all out to establish themselves as vigilantes over school teachers by demanding that in teaching the differences between democracy and socialism "our system must not suffer but be exalted." The U. S. Chamber of Commerce also furthers the witch-hunt by urging that every village and hamlet set up a committee to seek out the "subversive," meaning presumably those who do not follow the line of the Chamber of Commerce. In many communities such a self - appointed committee would be run by men who consider the 22,000,000 citizens who voted for Mr. Truman as "subversive," to say nothing of the million and a quarter who voted for Mr. Wallace.

Christians would do well to remind themselves of the divine standard of judgment which the Son of Man establishes in the 25th chapter of St. Matthew. Here he suggests that the way of eternal life is populated by those who have done something to alleviate the physical needs of their fellows. He calls blessed those who help the sick, the sorrowful, the prisoners, the foreigners. "Inasmuch as you have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Now that Mr. Truman has been elected, following a vigorous campaign in which he stressed social issues, perhaps our more conservative friends will stop red-baiting everyone who thinks that this country has not done all that it should in meeting the physical needs of people—food, clothing, housing, sickness and old age benefits. As Christians we might better praise those in every country, including our own, who are breaking down the barriers of color and race, and all other barriers which prevent the distribution of goods, material and spiritual, needful for the life of man. God accepts this work on man's part as his own, and blesses it. We would do well to judge those who are active in forward-looking social welfare programs by this New Testament standard. When we do we will stop using labels like "red," "pink," "socialist," "communist" and begin, with understanding, to labor for the same ends. God is concerned with how much we desire the good life for all mankind, not with our "associations." So ought his people to be.

Come, Come to The Fair

WE don't know just what season is the most popular one in which to hold parish fairs, but it seems there are now periods in many communities when they reach epidemic proportions. The parish fair has many features which in some ways provide the one and only parish activity in which whole families of the congregation can engage. They usually provide something for everybody's participation and enjoyment. On this score we can recommend them.

But like most functions where profit is too much the prime motive, they get out of hand. People proud of the name Christian become absolutely demoralized with greed. Any kind of game goes as long as it produces a bigger return than last year's total. Even friendly competition between booths takes on a cut-throat aspect which only sometimes melts when the grand total is announced. Of course, plans for the distribution of the spoils may cap the climax of rancor.

Now a new stage has been added. The parish fair idea is spreading. "St. Dominic does it, why can't we; and after all we've got to do something to take the place of those bad pledges." So now the competition involves strategy and timing between neighborhood parishes and institutions in a community. "When do the pay envelopes come out? When will the Christmas checks be cashed? Can we possibly have our fair ready before the Community Church has theirs?" and so on. We even heard of one parish that timed its fairs with dividend dates of A. T. & T.

There are many subtle ways in which the world has taken over the Church—even more serious ways. But here is a most graphic symptom. There are fewer and fewer clear-cut gospel practices to help a "pagan" reach a decision to become a "Christian" member of a church. Evangelization these days raises the problem of the ethical premises, at least, of the life of particular congregations. Why give Jehovah's Witnesses such a tenable argument for their stand in relation to the institutional church?

Risking over-simplification, its call comes down to this: Does your parish give at least an equal amount of energy and time to an informative, Christian every-member canvass?

Church Army Needed Today

By CLIFFORD L. SAMUELSON
Of Domestic Missions Division of Nat'l Council

WE hear a great deal about the distinctive character of the Episcopal Church. We hear it said that the Episcopal Church has much in its faith and practice which is lacking in some other Church bodies. At the same time we often hear, "You must understand the Episcopal Church really to appreciate it. It requires some knowledge of its history and practices truly to understand it. The Episcopal Church is an acquired taste." Since both these points are true, how is the Church to reach persons unfamiliar with it and lead them to greater Christian witness and to full participation in the Christian fellowship?

Since it is a basic educational principle that people must first be approached at their present level of experience before moving on to a new experience, what is to be the approach of the Episcopal Church in working with persons who are indifferent or even negative toward an ecclesiastical organization? The Church Army in the ministry of its captains and sisters has demonstrated its special genius in being true to essentials of Episcopal faith and practice and still being able to interpret the Church's life to the indifferent and those predisposed to being critical and negative. The factor in the Church Army which gives its ministers this power is that first and foremost a commissioned man or woman is an evangelist—a sharer of the good news. The Church Army officer is not dependent for his own Christian witness on the supports of organized parish life to which the average priest has become habituated and dependent. In his own life, rather than in the ecclesiastical organization and structure, the Church Army worker is an incarnation of Christ's redeeming power. He reflects this in intimate face-to-face relationship with those whom he meets. His work usually combines a high degree of pastoral ministry, coupled with opportunity for systematic teaching and preaching. The Church Army worker lives closely to people in their common life. Thus, those whom he reaches come to take note that he acts as one "who has been with Jesus." Building on this personal relationship the Church Army worker leads those whom he reaches to a deeper Christian conviction and knowledge.

Compelling Witness

The compelling Christian witness and power of the work of the Church Army has shown itself in all sections of the Church, rural and urban. Among those mission situations in which the Church Army is serving with distinction is in the national Town-Country Church Institute in the Roanridge rural field of the diocese of West Missouri. Here the Church is developing a town and country training center in an area where our Church is largely unknown and where most other Church bodies have relinquished their ministry. Abandoned churches are scattered throughout the area. Yet the population is several times greater than when these churches were first built. Here Captains William S. Paddock and William C. Johnson minister to revitalized groups of Christian believers. Although one strong Episcopal mission has been established and is in union with the diocese and well on its way to becoming a self-supporting parish, some of the congregations do not include a single person familiar with the Episcopal Church. But by Church Army evangelistic techniques of maintaining a close pastoral ministry and an awareness of the educational principle that we must move slowly from the familiar to the unfamiliar, the Church Army has firmly established the ministry of the Episcopal Church in this area.

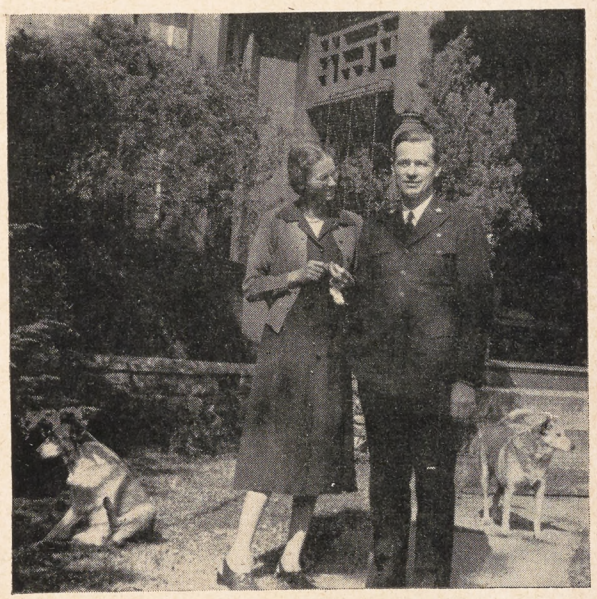
Typical of the approach of the Church Army in leading persons to an appreciation of the dignity and beauty of the Prayer Book forms of corporate worship is to begin their work with a simple form of worship service, using song books with which the people are familiar. But because the Prayer Book is so firmly based on Holy Scripture, the Church Army has demonstrated it is possible soon to lead these congregations to an acceptance of the scriptural authority for Prayer Book services of worship. Following this procedure the Church Army has established a norm of corporate worship for a congregation, only slightly distinguishable from a normal Episcopal group.

Such work as is being carried out by Captains Paddock and Johnson is typical of that being done in many places. Their work is compelling in power because in their Church Army vocation and training they are alert that in their ministry they must ever heed the call to minister "unto all the flock." A basic principle in this is to provide the flock with a food which is digestible and which will nurture those who partake into a stronger spiritual life.

President Reports



BY SAMUEL THORNE
President of Church Army, U. S. A.

LOOKING over the progress of the Church Army in the U.S.A. during the past year, there have been bright spots of encouragement and times of testing. Last May a meeting of captains and sisters was held at the Church Army training headquarters in Cincinnati, O., under the guidance of our director, Captain Earl Estabrook. It was stimulating in the number who could come and encouraging reports of progress were received from a wide section of the country where captains and sisters have been faithfully carrying on their work.

At this meeting the spirit of fellowship was very real. All left renewed in spirit and eager to return to their tasks, challenged afresh in being partners in a lay movement of such importance for the future.

Much interest was aroused by Captain William Paddock's account of evangelistic and other activities at the Mid-Western ranch at Parkville, Missouri. This ranch was formerly owned by a Mr. Cochel. He had stocked it with blooded Shorthorn cattle and had turned it over to a board of trustees representing our Church, as an experiment station to train domestic missionaries in the knowledge of and approach to the rural problem in that part of the country. The experimental training school is being carried on under the direction of the Rev. Clifford L. Samuelson of the division of domestic missions of the National Council and he is now also a member of the board of trustees of Church Army.

Last spring Captain Earl Estabrook, our fine, faithful and trusted national director of the past twenty years, resigned from Church Army to study for holy orders. Since Captain Estabrook had done the impossible task of filling two positions, the board of trustees realized that two men must now be found to carry on his work as director of the training school and as national director of Church Army. Captain Eric Kast was appointed to fill the first of these positions as director of the training school in Cincinnati. He and Mrs. Kast are now settled there, looking forward to a busy and promising season.

Captain and Mrs. Eric Kast are in charge of the Training Center.

Lucy Kent in Charge

Miss Lucy Kent, long within the family of Church Army and one of the most active members of the board of trustees, is taking charge of the New York office of Church Army during this interim period. Knowing Church Army intimately and most of the captains and sisters,

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Miss Kent is able to carry this responsibility with great ease and effectiveness.

The board of trustees have not been idle in canvassing the field to find a new national director. They felt that they must make haste slowly in a choice where spirit, experience and ability mean so much in meeting and developing the expanding opportunities for trained lay evangelists—both men and women.

With the increased emphasis being placed by the National Council of our Church on lay evangelism, we hope and pray that the trustees of Church Army under the guidance of the Holy Spirit may soon find the leadership they so earnestly seek in a challenging world.

Church Army is entirely dependent upon volunteer support. No aggressive financial efforts were made during the war period when the work was heavily restricted. Now Church Army is ready to assume its full responsibility and respond to the many opportunities before it. This will, however, only be possible through the gifts of the many friends of Church Army. They can be sent directly to Church Army Headquarters, 435 Ninth Avenue, New York 1, New York. Many will undoubtedly want to become associates of Church Army, receiving copies of the Church Army paper, "Co-Partners." We welcome your sharing with us.

Church Army Captain At Work

BY JACK VIGGERS

Church Army Captain at Chillicothe, Missouri

IN the diocese of West Missouri the Church Army has been called into a new field. In many ways the situation at Chillicothe, Brookfield and Trenton is typical of far too many of our rural and small town parishes. They have suffered along with so many in that they have had no rector over long periods of time. When they do get one he soon moves on to what seems a greater calling. Unlike many places, this lack of leadership has in no way broken the spirit of the people. Under lay readers the congregation at Chillicothe, who have been without a rector since last October, have not missed a single Sunday service. These same lay readers have also helped hold the other two congregations together.

During this past summer, students from the national town-country Church institute came to Chillicothe, Brookfield and Trenton for a six weeks period. They held services, called on the congregations, and generally helped raise the lagging spirits of the people who, quite naturally, had come to feel that they were to be forever without full-time leadership.

The result of the efforts of these five students has been that when a Church Army captain was assigned to help these people, he received a welcome second to none. Where in most Church Army fields, the captain or mission sister must first reestablish an interest in the Church and its place in the community, here the problem is not to be carried away by the enthusiasm of the people.

In each instance, the Church property is in excellent condition. This is a good indication of the love and devotion the people feel for them. The only thing they lack is trained leadership. The interest is already here, needing only to be channeled to where it will do the most good.

The Lack of Youth

In this field, like so many that have been without clergy, we suffer from the lack of youth. Because there has been no activity aimed directly at the youth of the parishes, many of them have drifted away to other churches that do have active youth programs. In all three of these communities there is a crying need for a church-related program to attract the young people who have no church ties. As is often the case in small towns, the youth are permitted to pretty much grow up and provide their own entertainment. Since wholesome activities are not provided, they seek recreation in the taverns, or just "loaf" on the street corners. Fortunately, at Chillicothe we are well able to cope with this situation. We have a large, well equipped parish house, and the church is located only three blocks from the center of the business district. Just how such a program on the Church's part will work out is hard to predict. If we can draw one person into the fellowship of this church, it will have been worth the effort. Certainly, the contact with such loyal, devoted, Christian people as we have in the congregation at Chillicothe, will have a lasting effect on any that take advantage of these parish facilities.

It just isn't possible to say enough for the people who worship at Grace Church, Chillicothe. They have shown a loyalty and a zeal for Christ that is simply amazing. If Christian love and devotion are what is required to make a successful parish program, this parish should grow rapidly. At present, all three of these Churches have a mission status. I keep calling them parishes because we all pray they will soon be completely self-supporting.

Now I must dash a bit of cold water on our beautiful prospects. Though we have one Church Army captain here, the field is much too widely scattered for one man to give it the attention it needs. At least two or even three men are needed to cultivate this field in the way in which it needs to be cultivated. Now the base is at Chillicothe, which is pretty much central. Brookfield is 26 miles to the east, and Trenton is 25 miles to the north. In addition to these places, there are two or three other towns that have had mission stations where there are Church families that must be reached from time to time. Some have not seen a priest or other Church worker for many months, or even years. All these people must be contacted to remind them that mother Church has not forgotten them, it is only that she hasn't enough hands. Most of these places could well use a man on a full-time basis, but all are forced by the lack of manpower to share one man. Is it any wonder that men stay such a short time, as a rule, in small towns or rural missions? One can see so much that needs to be done, but there are just too few hours in the day in which to do them.

Time Is Running Out

ALL these congregations can still be saved, but our time is running out. The spirit of the people is remarkable, but we are running out of people. The worst thing of all is that our congregations are getting old. When we lose one, there is no young person to take his place. Soon the work of building that was done fifty or sixty years ago, will be all to do again. There will be nothing but a failure to build upon, because we will have failed by not providing leadership when it was needed. "The harvest is truly plenteous, but the laborers are few." Nowhere are laborers more needed than in our town and country churches.

The Church Army is here in Chillicothe, Trenton, Brookfield, Brunswick, Plattsburg, and wherever else it is needed. But the Church Army can never begin to fill the needs of these people. A Church Army captain or two to assist a resident priest could make a valuable contribution to the lives of the people. One Church Army captain is going to be limited, but he will certainly have the help and cooperation of all the people to make a difficult job easier.

God, grant that we have more places like Chillicothe, Brookfield and Trenton. Grant also that we have more men to serve them.

Mentally Ill From Fear

BY MRS. S. T. M. ALEXANDER

Member of the President's Committee on Civil Rights

THE gap between what we believe as American ideals and what we practice is creating moral dry rot within us. We are threatening the emotional and rational bases of our democracy. We must act because the mental health of America is threatened by this gap. There are signs that the American people are becoming mentally ill.

Many situations develop mental frustrations, bringing on fear and hate. They result in investigations. Then we come along with witch hunts. And it will not be long before we have purges, gestapos and concentration camps. We must act now, for economic reasons, because we have become the breadbasket of the world. If we are to produce enough to feed Europe and America we have got to put to work every able-bodied man and woman, regardless of race or religion.

Need of Greater Faith

BY EDWARD R. STETTINIUS, JR.

Former Secretary of State

IDEOLOGICAL differences do not necessitate War. At the time of the Crusades it was thought that Moslem countries and Christian countries could not inhabit the same world in peace. At the time of the Religious Wars of the seventeenth century, it was thought that Catholic countries and Protestant countries could not inhabit the same world in peace. Those thoughts were errors. Let us make it an error to think that countries of private capital and countries of public capital must fight. . . . It is only faith that produces the works that can world welfare and World Peace.

small book, what is generally spoken of as the high Church position on the nature, structure and function of the Church. One gathers that he is slightly to the left politically—at least from the current American point of view, which seems to be a bit to the right of Winston Churchill. But apparently Bishop Wand does not feel that the Church, as such, needs to do much about it since "English speaking people are in the fortunate position of having a strong Christian representation in all the political parties." The Church can best function, he says, by being a social conscience and passing moral judgments. But he is also for having factory and office meetings and for making civil servants aware that spiritual ends are paramount.

* * I Would Do It Again by F. E. Davison. Bethany Press. $2.

The author, pastor of the Christian Church in South Bend, here sets forth, in good straight-forward commonsense, the joys of a clergyman's life. It is a book solid with good advice for all clergymen, young and old, and is rich with practical suggestions.

* * Masterpieces of Religious Verse, edited by James Dalton Morrison. Harpers. $5.

Books these days are high. One that we recently received, for example, contained actually but 32 pages, and small pages at that, yet the book sells for $2. So it is a real satisfaction to announce this book of verse as a bargain, even at $5. There are over 700 pages, with the page size about twice that of the ordinary book, well bound with an attractive jacket. There are 2020 poems by 900 poets, so you may be sure you will find your favorites.

THE PRESS

NO DEFEAT: It seems indisputable that war is neither desirable nor necessary; that Russia is making tremendous advances because she is aligning herself with the social change of the day and turning it to her own false, deceptive, dictatorial ends. We dare not let her out-wit us. We're afraid she will unless our tactic is Christian tactic. An army can be defeated and routed by guns. But an effective way of life, as Christian history has proved many times, knows no defeat. It is up to us to decide which is the more powerful: the sword or the spirit.—Christian Evangelist (Disciples).

MY BROTHER'S KEEPER: The first moral isolationist in history was Cain. He said, "Am I my brother's keeper?" and all of history shouts back "yes, you are. You ought to be his keeper because you are his brother but if you ignore all humanitarian reasons and consider only your own welfare, you must be his keeper in order to protect yourself. If you do not keep his legitimate interest secure, you cannot keep your own. If you do not treat his decently, ultimately he or his maladies will rise up and destroy you." — Current Religious Thought (un-Den.).

MORAL FOUNDATION: The vital problems of human history are not political or economic but moral. Society cannot be held together without virtue. Governments cannot be effective and permanent without righteousness. Business cannot be lastingly prosperous unless ruled by honesty and fairness. Beneath all that is uplifting and abiding there must be a sound moral foundation. Civilization is built upon character and depends thereon for permanence. The downfall of nations and civilizations has been almost invariably due to moral rottenness. — United Presbyterian.

COLD CASH: We sometimes hear the expression "cold cash." What a misnomer! As a matter of fact, your money is part of you. It frequently involves "blood and sweat and tears." Money is minted life. When you give it, you are giving yourself, the time and thought and effort that you spend in earning it. That is why what you spend your money for is so important. It is at least one expression of your estimate of your life—what you think is most worthy, what you believe deserves "priority." This is why giving to the Church is not just a financial matter; it is a spiritual transaction.—Southern Churchman.

THOUGHTFUL PEOPLE: Etymologists tell us that the verb "to thank" and "to think" come from the same root. "The primary sense," Dr. Murray observes, "was therefore thought." It seems likely that thoughtful people are more disposed to gratitude than those who lack the capacity to think. By thoughtless persons favors received are taken for granted. Observation, and the reasoning resulting therefrom convince those who think of the surprising extent to which we depend for the indispensable things of life upon forces beyond our control.—Churchman (C. of E. in Canada)

RATHER THE REVERSE: Most intelligent people who look out on the world in its present condition do so with a profound feeling of disquiet: they do not know in what direction it is moving — indeed, whether it has any sense of direction at all! This state of uncertainty is that which enables the Communist, with his clearly defined "this world" view, to cash in to the extent he does on the plea often that some medicine is better than none at all. But with all the material achievements of his system, the price—man's loss of his freedom—is so high as to offer little attraction to those who have ever known what freedom is. Only one alternative holds the field —the Christian faith! Indeed, among a large and increasing body of opinion the conviction is growing that man must return to God, and that until he does so, things are not going to get better—rather the reverse. — Record (C. of E.)

VISION AND COURAGE: The Episcopal Church is doing what the liberal Churches everywhere should be doing—utilizing the radio intelligently, and with vision and courage taking on a substantial extra expense to do the job. Liberal Churches could do the same. Our need is never lack of money. It is lack of vision and courage and not enough belief in the response of the people to a worth-while project.—Christian Leader (Universalist) of your Episcopal radio program?

Are you helping the

OF course you are listening every week to Great Scenes from Great Plays, The Episcopal Radio Program, but what are you doing to interest your non-Episcopal friends in the program? Have you held a "listening party" in your home? Do you talk about the program with your business associates? Have you sat down with your personal address book and written to at least ten friends to listen?

MEMO: TO CLERGYMEN

Re: Great Scenes from Great Plays

IS your publicity chairman making the fullest possible use of the news releases and mats sent from National Council headquarters? Are you making the chancel announcements every Sunday? Only by the greatest use of publicity can we hope to have our radio audience grow locally and nationally.

There are 70 million Americans, approximately one-half of our total population, who have no Church home. According to the Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, Presiding Bishop, it is these 70 million we want to reach and offer them the friendship and spiritual help our Church can give.

Remember, it is your privilege to keep this program on the air. You can do it without any financial burden, merely by subscribing an additional 3% to the Every Member Canvass pledge. Thus you can give tangible help to the Outreach of your Episcopal radio program.

GET BEHIND THE EVERY MEMBER CANVASS AS NEVER BEFORE and support the 3% plan. This is vital to the success of the program

GOOD IDEA

Episcopal Churches in and near Berkeley, California, have coffee-hour directly after their 11 o'clock services. With instant coffee, tea bags, packaged cookies, etc., any parish house with chairs for all can manage such an affair with a minimum of effort. Church attendance increases; a spirit of fellowship is created in the parish. Every congregation should give this idea a trial, according to Subscriber Ben Dawson of Berkeley. — Bishop Malcolm Peabody of Central New York recently arranged for a radio broadcast at 11:30 when he summarized the progress of the diocese in the ten years of his episcopate, and outlined goals for the days ahead. Each church had a radio installed which was tuned in for the bishop's address, which took the place of the sermon. Rectors are said to have liked it . . . no sermon to prepare. — A similar plan has been used for a number of years by Bishop Reinheimer of Rochester.

GET-TOGETHER: Suburban parish wants an assistant; middle of the road churchman: $3,000 single, $4,000 married.—Young clergyman from the middle west, P. B. churchman seeks a parish, preferably east. Present salary is $3,500.—Clergyman, former chaplain, now serving two missions in the east, seeks a parish in some metropolitan area. Present salary, $3,500. Is A. C. "but I can work with any type of ceremonial."

The vicar of a charming church in England would like to arrange for an exchange with some U. S. rector this coming summer, or the summer of 1950. He is an outstanding man in the Church of England, has a comfortable vicarage, his church is alive, and he has an able assistant. Any interested in this please give details about their parish to Witness, 135 Liberty St., New York 6, and we will forward them to the English vicar for whatever action he may care to take.

LEND-LEASE: The Episcopal Church at Centerville, Iowa, needs a paten. Any church having one to give away should send it to the Rev. L. A. Wilson, 811 Court Avenue, Chariton, Iowa.—A chapel that ministers to college students would like to have a lectern Bible. Drop a card to The Witness, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y., if you have one and we will tell you where to send it.—Another missions wants hymnals. — Still another asks for vestments for the choir.

A large midwestern parish recently installed new hymnals. Through this department 50 copies of their former hymnals, with music, all in good condition, were sent to the Canterbury Club of a southern university. — Just send a note listing what you have to offer, or what your needs are, and we will do our best. But please do not send merchandise of any description. Address: Witness, 135 Liberty St., New York 6, N. Y.

The Flint Flashing Fire

VAUGHAN stands in the long and distinguished line of English writers on the interior life. He tells us in the preface to "Silex scintillans," how much he owed to George Herbert, who had died in 1632, when he, Vaughan, was only a child of ten; and anyone who knows Herbert will see at once, when he reads Vaughan, how often he echoes him. On the other hand, Vaughan's poem "The Retreat" appears to have inspired Wordsworth's more famous "Ode on Intimations of Immortality." Like Wordsworth, Vaughan seems to have come nearest to God when he was in the open air. He has left us some exquisite descriptions of the countryside, often in only a few words:

. . . One day
I stole abroad.
It was high-spring, and all the way
Primros'd, and hung with shade.

E. Allison Peers, in "Behind That Wall," $2.50

When Jesus Passes By

YES, Lord! I will! I come!" Matthew needed Jesus, but Jesus needed Matthew, too, needed him to write that gospel, needed him to give that witness by his death, needed him to give that service for his fellowmen. And He needs you.

Jesus has the power, but first the man must come.

All things are possible when Jesus passes by. I do not care what your life has been—it can be better. I do not care how little you may have been wanted—He wants you. I do not care what you may have done—Jesus can work a change. He is the Lord of Life!

Jesus passes through our streets today. Oh, yes, He does! In the hearts of those who believe in Him, in the work and in the sacraments of His Church, in the silent influence of His Gospel, He walks our streets today. And as He passes by, life and usefulness and joy spring up like flowers after rain.

The Rt. Rev. Wm. Moody, in "The Lord of Life," $1.35

I request that you take my name off your mailing list. I regret to do this but I do so for several reasons: one, you seem to think that unless we cow-tow to Stalin and his atheistic cohorts we must of necessity be great sinners and warmongers. Two, the way your magazine has so brazenly advised young men to refuse to submit to the draft is in my opinion distinctly treasonable. I am myself a man of peace; I hate war but the happenings of the last thirty years should have convinced every sane person that the surest way to get into war is to demonstrate to the world that we have nothing with which to defend ourselves. Therefore I look upon a year or a year and a half training of every able bodied young man in the country as cheap insurance as compared with the waste of blood and treasure in war.

Answer: We never have advocated cow-towing to Russia. We have pointed out that Russia exists; that there are grave differences between that country and our own; that these differences should be settled around a conference table if possible, and we think that there is enough of a possibility to make it worth trying. Certainly it is clear that atomic war will settle nothing except probably the end of the world. As for military training, we have never taken any position on the matter, though perhaps we should. We have merely reported resolutions that have passed innumerable Church conferences and conventions as a part of our news service.

MRS. ROLLIN T. CHAMBERLIN
Churchwoman of Chicago and Member of Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary.

I am shocked at the heading on page 3 (October 21): "Council Reports Progress in All Its Work." How can this be said when the Church has failed by more than $200,000 to meet the budget which it adopted for 1948 in the last General Convention, and when its work has been reduced by that amount, tragic reductions being made all along the line, at home and abroad? The budget was made just to hold the line, not to make advances. Missionary askings were $250,000 greater than the budget and were denied. Then came the curtailment of $200,000 in the planned work. Progress indeed. We are failing to meet opportunities to make a more Christian world, and in these urgent times.

Can you not give some publicity to the sad reductions that the Council has had to make, as outlined in "Doors of Opportunity" (published by National Council) instead of reporting "Progress in All Work"?

SAMUEL S. HARDY
Rector of St. Paul's, Medina, Ohio.

Heartiest congratulations on your editorial "Old Age Poverty" (Nov. 4). You have clearly exposed the fate of many clergy in our Church who are nearing the age of retirement. At the end of years of faithful ministry they are destined to live in poverty. And to that fate they are destined by the actuarial principle upon which our pension system is founded, based upon each clergyman's salary.

If clerical salaries were all equal that actuarial principle would be just. Since they are not equal, the poorly paid clergy are headed for low and most inadequate pensions. And they cannot provide otherwise for old age because they cannot afford to buy sufficient insurance against old age in companies other than the Church Pension Fund. That insurance against age by the Church Pension Fund costs the poorly paid clergy the same as the highly paid—which is nothing, in cash.

Either a flat salary for all clergy—deacons, priests and bishops—or a graduated pension assessment upon clerical salaries might be better than the present actuarial basis of our Pension Fund. At any rate, something ought to be done right now to relieve the old age poverty situation for many an Episcopal clergyman.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Worldwide Bible Reading Is Being Promoted

American Bible Society Is Urging Millions To Plan Regular Bible Reading

★ Seeing an unused Bible lying about in his home, a small boy asked his mother whose book it was. "It is God's Book," she is reported to have said. "Well," replied the boy, "don't you think we should return it. Nobody seems to read it!"

Stories like the above do not apply to all the homes of America, according to Frederick Cropp, secretary of the American Bible Society, who has spent a considerable amount of time investigating just this situation. "People are wrong who say that while the Bible may be the world's best seller, it is the least read book and the book that nobody knows," continued Cropp.

The use of helps for reading the Bible and lists of suggested Scripture passages is way above pre-war years as indicated by the figures of religious publishing houses. "The Bible Society alone," declared Cropp, "distributed last year on request more than 15,000,000 copies of the bookmark containing a list of readings for the worldwide Bible reading between Thanksgiving and Christmas. In addition the list was reprinted more than 20,000,000 times. An even larger response is expected this year in observance of the program, which has as its theme, 'The Book of All Nations.' One million copies of a reading list, made up of passages to be read daily throughout the year were circulated also by the Bible Society."

Commercial and religious publishing houses continually bring out "new" Bibles, new in the sense they contain outlines, explanations and many references to help the reader in understanding obscure and difficult passages. The Bible, that used to appear in nothing but a sombre binding of black, can now be found in attractive, colored bindings, appealing to the eye in format and readability of type.

Uncounted millions of Americans listen every Sunday in their churches to ministers reading from the Scriptures. One of the most popular radio programs of its class, according to a Hooper rating, is the half-hour broadcast on Sunday evening of "The Greatest Story Ever Told," based entirely on incidents taken from the Bible.

At the last annual convention of the Rabbinical Council of America, Rabbi Uri Miller of Baltimore, Maryland, spoke for his colleagues when he said that "the Bible is our greatest source of prestige. We must continue to be a Bible loving and Bible studying people."

This phenomenon of increased reading of the Bible is not confined to our own land. A recent visitor to Japan has reported seeing the Japanese reading copies of the New Testament on park benches and while riding in buses and trains. The Student Christian Association there operates makeshift sidewalk Bible stalls in Tokyo where the passerby may secure a copy of the Scriptures, so great has been the demand for the books.

★ More than fifty parishes, missions and church institutions in the Diocese of California contributed exhibits to three convocational programs in San Francisco, Palo Alto and Alameda in the weeks preceding services and meetings for the Foreign Missions Program of Advance, November 14-17.

An amazing variety of colorful exhibits presented vivid scenes and graphic portrayals of the Church's work in missionary fields in the United States and overseas. All departments and divisions of the National Council were represented at a literature table at each of the convocational programs, which included movies, filmstrips and also a children's pageant in Christ Church, Alameda. Brief talks were given by the Rev. A. Roland Merrix, National Council Field Officer, and the Rev. Frank L. Titus, Assistant Secretary of the Overseas Department. In Alameda one person at each booth told in turn the story of each exhibit in a two-minute speech over a travelling sound kodascope.

Visiting speakers at services and meetings for the Foreign Missions Advance Program included the Right Rev. Reginald Heber Gooden, Panama Canal Zone; the Rev. Charles W. Ranson, General Secretary, International Missionary Council; Dr. Paul W. Harrison, "desert doctor" from Arabia.

NEWS OF THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH

ARCHBISHOP GARBETT AGAINST HOLY WAR

★ "The Church has no right to look forward to the end of Marxian Communism unless it is doing all in its power to hasten the time when human rights will be reorganized throughout the world and peace and justice firmly established." So said the Most Rev. Cyril F. Garbett, Archbishop of York, addressing a service sponsored by the British Industrial Christian Fellowship. Warning against unwarranted hostility, he said, "we would be unjust to many communists and do lasting disservice to Christianity if we engaged in a so-called Holy war against all forms of Communism and branded as atheists all who accept its economic and political teaching. This would mean a breach with millions of fellow Christians in Russia and elsewhere who are loyal to the Christian faith and the communist state under which they live. If the Church at the time of the industrial revolution had denounced social wrong and demanded justice for the working class in days of weakness and oppression, the evils against which communism is a revolt would not have arisen."

Dr. Garbett defined Communism as a classless and equal society made possible through ownership by the community of the means of production and distribution. He said this system is open to criticism as "impractical, politically unworkable, and economically unsound," but added that its ideal is "not un-Christian and ought not to be condemned as such." The Archbishop asserted that "different as modern Communism is from the Communism described in the Bible," it need not be inconsistent with the Christian faith and life. "Many Christians," he said, "are convinced there is much more in common between Christianity and Communism than between Christianity and Capitalism. In Russia, millions of Orthodox are loyal citizens of the Communist state. In Poland, convinced Communists regularly attend mass. In Czechoslovakia, members of Reformed churches are convinced Communists, and the same is true of China and Australia." Stressing that the Church should avoid indiscriminate condemnation of Communism, Dr. Garbett said otherwise they "would compel many, especially of the younger generation, to choose between Christianity and Communism."

Describing the line of cleavage between communism and Christianity, he said:

"This dialectical materialism describes progress as due to incessant economic warfare which is governed by iron laws, and is remorseless and inevitable in its results. Such a deterministic and materialistic philosophy is openly and avowedly atheistic. It is the most dangerous rival to Christianity and directly and uncompromisingly challenges its faith and morals. It does not necessarily persecute the Church, for in Russia Orthodox and Protestant Churches are given today as much freedom as under the Czars, but on the implicit understanding of no opposition to the State. Thus it is possible for Russian Christians to live quietly in a Marxian state while rejecting its philosophical ideology."

DIOCESE OF NEW JERSEY ADDS 1,893 MEMBERS

★ Bishop Gardner reported to the Diocesan Convention of 1948 that during 1947 he and Bishop Banyard had confirmed 1,820 persons, and received (because they had been confirmed in some other Church) 73; making a total of 1,893 for the year: 164 had been previously members of the Roman Catholic Church, 17 of the Greek Catholic, four of the Russian Orthodox, and two of the Polish National Catholic Church. Further, 253 had been Methodists, 145 Prsebyterians, 106 Baptists, 69 Lutherans, 24 Congregationalists, with 32 reporting no previous church connection and two stating that they had been of the Jewish religion. Thus, the bishop reported, approximately 46 per cent of our new communicants had a background other than that of the Episcopal Church.

STATUS OF THEOLOGUES UNDER DRAFT

★ Requests are being received by the Army and Navy division of the National Council from theological students, asking for the procedure with regard to Selective Service deferment. The division has secured full information about this, and supplied the following: The Selective Service Regulation 622.19, Class IV-D; Minister of Religion or Divinity Student reads: Section (a) in Class IV-D shall be placed any registrant (1) who is a minister of religion; (2) who is a duly ordained minister of religion; (3) who is a student preparing for the ministry under the direction of a recognized church of religious organization and who is satisfactorily pursuing a full-time course of instruction in a recognized theological or divinity school; or (4) who is a student preparing for the ministry under the direction of a recognized church or religious organization and who is satisfactorily pursuing a full-time course of instruction leading to entrance into a recognized theological or divinity school in which he has been pre-enrolled.

In order that a seminarian or student in a college or university may receive deferment, he must make application to the Local Draft Board when called, advising them that he asks for deferment under the Selective Service Regulation 622.19, Class IV-D, Section (a) 3 or 4, and informing them that he is preparing for Holy Orders and giving the name of the institution where he is pursuing his studies. The Bishop of his diocese and the dean of the theological seminary or college or university must also write the Local Draft Board asking for deferment for the student or seminarian from Selective Service and the statement must be made that he is satisfactorily pursuing a full-time course of study.

MAKE MERRY CHRISTMAS FOR GERMAN PARISH

★ Parishioners of St. Peter's Episcopal Church, Springfield, Mass., have already wished parishioners of the Reformed Bethlehem Church in Berlin-Spandau, Germany, a merry Christmas. St. Peter's has sent the ingredients for 24 large fruit cakes to the German church. But the local church knows Christmas is more than just cake. They're sending the decorations for a Christmas tree, too—gold and silver paper for paper chains, tinsel, candles and candle holders. Mrs. Martin S. Payne, a member of the committee, said the "German people have contributed so much to our observance of Christmas that we thought it only right that we should do something to insure plenty of Christmas cheer among at least one whole parish in Germany." The German church includes 200 adults and 90 children in its membership. Its building was destroyed during the war, and since the parish hall is not large, the Christmas party at which the fruit cakes will be the feature will be held in three installments.

FATHER HEBERT SPEAKS OF CHURCH AND UNITY

★ The annual Kingsbury Lectures at the Berkeley Divinity School, New Haven, were delivered by the Rev. A. Gabriel Hebert, S.S.M., of Kelham, England, last month. The Bishop of Connecticut presided and two societies of Connecticut clergy and several visitors from Yale Divinity School were present. Father Hebert took as his subject the Doctrine of the Church and Christian Unity, and spoke first on the Biblical Doctrine of the Church. His thesis was:

We have substituted for the idea of "the Church" that of "denominations." In the New Testament the Church was first of all regarded as a "nation"; the Israel of God, reconstituted by the saving work of Christ and enlarged to include people of all races; hence the name ecclesia. But the ecclesia, though it is God's creation, is always imperfect, so that salvation can be worked out only through the Remnant. Such is the Church always; when our Lord was crucified he was the faithful Remnant; in his death and resurrection judgment and salvation are seen as being worked out at the same time, and we are baptized into his death. Because we men are sinful and our deliverance from sin is being worked out in the Church, the Church is necessarily a complex fact; and while the divisions of Christians are shameful and scandalous, it is not any greater problem to faith that the Church should be divided than that it should be sinful.

Resuming in the afternoon, the lecturer spoke on the Way of Christian Unity:

The Church of the early centuries had the task not merely of converting individuals, but of redeeming and transforming the whole civilization of the Greco-Roman world. It did not come through its conflict unscathed; the medieval Church was so distorted and one-sided that the efforts of the reformers to return to the pure gospel resulted in further distortions and in schisms on a scale hitherto unknown. In our day a great movement towards Christian unity is taking place; what is on the way is a deep inner understanding between Catholic and Protestant sides of Christendom. True reunion will come only through this, and cannot come by that ecclesiastical diplomacy which assumes that sufficient doctrinal agreement can be taken for granted. The result of this would not be Christian reunion but only an amalgamation of denominations.

LONG ISLAND DIOCESE HEARS MOREHOUSE

★ The Czechoslovakian and the Hungarian government allow freedom of religion, according to Clifford P. Morehouse, editor of the Living Church, in a talk to the social relations department of the diocese of Long Island at the Diocesan House, Nov. 15, 1948.

Between the Lambeth and Amsterdam conferences Mr. Morehouse visited Czechoslovakia and Hungary. He found no hindrance to his movements or censorship of his reports sent out of the two countries. A high Roman Catholic official in Czechoslovakia said there was no interference with the church and that the government had offered to increase the support of the churches. This offer has been essentially rejected by both Roman Catholic and Protestant churches.

The people look to Russia because it liberated them and offered immediate help. They are dejected and tensely waiting for something, said Mr. Morehouse.

In Hungary he found no rationing though prices were high. Cardinal Mindszenty, primate of the Roman Catholic Church, is in open and avowed opposition to the government. The cardinal, however, said the government had not interfered on the ordinary parochial level. The church opposed the government because it nationalized the schools. Even though the government stated there should be compulsory religious teaching of both Protestants and Roman Catholics, the cardinal has pulled all religious orders out of the schools. Only the church, he said, had the God-given right to teach religion. Bishop Beretzky of the Reformed Church had signed a twenty-year concordat with the government providing for decreasing government support. Eventually the church would maintain some of its own institutions, especially its four seminaries. Lutheran Bishop Ordass who opposed nationalization of the schools was now in jail.

Matthew Rakosi, leader of the Communist party in Hungary, granted an exceptional interview to Mr. Morehouse and told him that the Calvinist Church had paved the way for democracy in Hungary. Mr. Rakosi also felt that the church must keep out of politics and that the press in his country was too free. He believed there would be local wars in the next ten years but no world war.

Mr. Morehouse said he believed that communism was regarded as a religion and that it was a judgment on the shortcomings of our system.

The Rev. George H. MacMurray, reporting on a conference on Church and Industry sponsored by the Economic Justice committee of the Brooklyn division of the Protestant council and three formal church bodies, said that industry and labor both stated neither looked to the church. In regard to clergy in picket lines labor said it was glad to have anyone join them. Industry said it assumed a clergyman didn't know all the facts if he took any part in any conflict.

MORE MEN GOING INTO THE MINISTRY

★ The Rt. Rev. Charles K. Gilbert, Bishop of New York, has announced that there is a great increase in the number of men who wish to study for the priesthood of the Church in the Diocese of New York. He said he regarded it as "a matter of deep significance to know that during the past year I have interviewed fifty-six young men who wish to study for Holy Orders, and this comes at a time when the Episcopal Church throughout the United States is faced with a pressing need for additional clergy. This also comes at a time when young men are supposed to be under the influence of prevailing secularism."

Early lessons in reading for this Indian child are from the Bible. The American Bible Society supplies large numbers of Bibles and Portions to Indians throughout the country.

Dean Johnson Asserts That Russia Is Friendly

BY ROBERT M. COOK

★ "There are some who maintain that war is inevitable; others, and I amongst them, who maintain that peace is possible," said Dean Hewlett Johnson, of Canterbury, at a dinner of welcome in New York Sunday, November 14.

Mr. Olin Downes, the noted music critic, who was master of ceremonies, stated that he with others was taking part in the welcoming because they refused to be red-baited and because he believed it to be an historic moment. Dean Donald J. Campbell, of Christ Church Cathedral, Springfield, Mass., and Bishop Suffragan-elect of Los Angeles, welcomed him as the dean of the parent see of the Church of England of which the Episcopal Church in the United States is a daughter Church. Both capitalism and communism are under the judgment of religion which is under the judgment of God, said Dean Campbell.

William E. Hocking, professor emeritus of Harvard, said the national Committee of Welcome had as its one concern, "that the traditional hospitality of this country—its mental hospitality—to responsible expression of opinion—shall be maintained."

The alternative to peace is a type of war more terrible than the world has yet known, said Dean Johnson. "But we must not delude ourselves into thinking that an atomic war can be a press-button war." Germany's industrial potential was not destroyed under all the bombing it received. Hiroshima was damaged only to the extent of six per cent of its industry. According to the Franck report, two countries and perhaps two alone are invulnerable in atomic warfare—Russia and China.

The rights of the West which include freedom of speech and press and association and the rights of the East which include the right to work, the right to adequate pay for work, the right to rest after work, the right to health, to education, to full security for all regardless of sex, religion or race are complementary, said the Dean.

"In their concern for world peace, peoples all over the earth view with grave misgivings the encirclement of the Soviet union by 434 American air bases." He asked "Why should not the great religious bodies in your great country take a foremost place in this campaign to which they are really pledged as bearers of the name of the Prince of Peace."

The disagreements and misunderstandings between the U. S. and the U. S. S. R. are three, he pointed out. "Russia's obstinacy with regard to the solution of atomic bomb problems, the solution of the Berlin problem and Russia's relationship to the six republics of Eastern Europe." Russia is essentially interested in atomic energy for civil development. If one regards the United States as having one hundred horsepower per capita then Britain has seventy-three per cent while Russia has only one-sixth of this amount. She naturally desires these fresh sources of energy, since wealth and prosperity stand in direct ratio to the power per head of population.

Russia has never asked the Western powers to leave Berlin but simply to return to the principles of the original agreements. She views with alarm the setting up of Frankfurt as a capitol, the introduction of the new currency, and the lack of de-nazifying activities.

Dean Johnson referred his listeners to an essay of Dr. Arnold Toynbee where Dr. Toynbee shows that historically Russia has always been attacked from the West.

Dean Johnson quoted Jan Masaryk, "My people love Soviet Russia and any policy which could threaten to divide my people from Soviet Russia is doomed to failure."

In conclusion the Dean said he believed the mass of the people of America desire peace. "We have seen evidence of the peoples' power in the proposed Vinson mission but it was not enough. We hope that the voices of peace may grow and take concrete form."

Rabbi Louis I. Newman welcomed Dean Johnson as a clergyman desiring reconciliation between nations.

His first public appearance since arriving in the States was at Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, where the Rev. John H. Melish is rector. More than 1500 persons, and several hundred who were turned away, came to hear the Dean at the regular eleven o'clock service on November 14. In welcoming Dean Johnson to Trinity Church, Dr. Melish said he was repaying a similar courtesy extended to him by the Dean when he was at the Manchester Cathedral.

ECUMENICAL NEWS

MISSIONARY TRANSLATES BIBLE INTO NAVAJO

One stubborn clergyman and one hundred determined Indians are making Bible history in the West. For a people who have no written language, the nomadic Navajos, they are putting into print the New Testament. The Rev. William Goudbert has been at the job for 18 years. Translations of Mark and John have been printed, and a third book, I Corinthians, now is ready for the American Bible Society to publish. In explaining the difficulties of translation, Mr. Goudbert said: "Sometimes one verse takes a whole day for us to work out. Take the word Baptism, for example. The Navajos have no word for that. They have one that means water on the head, which might suit my Methodist and Presbyterian friends all right. But how about the denominations that believe in immersion? We studied and studied and finally decided on the Navajo word 'Na'aelaago' which means ceremonially washed."

The Navajo language has very few nouns. All of the translating is done from the original Greek. The reason for this is that the Navajo language has a syntax similar to the Greek. Mr. Goudbert reads a verse to the Indians, putting the translation into idiomatic Uavajo. The Indians then tell him the way they would say it to their people to make them understand.

PRESIDENT STRESSES RELIGIOUS LIBERTY

President Truman, in a letter to the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, described the American formula of religious liberty and freedom for persons of all faiths as "a contributing factor in the development of the American way of life that we call democracy."

The President's message, addressed to Jacob Aronson of New York, chairman of the executive board of the Union, was released here prior to the opening of the group's 75th anniversary convention.

"Separation of Church and State on the one hand," Mr. Truman wrote, "and the encouragement and support of religious organizations by individuals on the other hand, has successfully answered the problem that in other countries, and in other times, has plagued humanity. Strong voluntary organizations, such as the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, are a distinctive aspect of American life."

DIVORCE LAW CHANGED

South Carolina has lost its unique position as the only state completely outlawing divorce. An amendment to the constitution has been approved by the voters which will permit divorce for adultery, physical cruelty, desertion or habitual drunkenness.

AGENDA ANNOUNCED FOR FEDERAL COUNCIL

The biennial meeting of the Federal Council of Churches will be held in Cincinnati, December 1-3. Six issues of major concern to the 25 member churches of the Council are scheduled for extensive consideration at the sessions. These are: the development of a greater lay participation and leadership in the Church; ministry to older people; plans for the United Evangelistic Advance; programs and policies of the Church in the field of human rights; responsibility of the Church in dealing with juvenile delinquency; and responsibility of the American Church for displaced persons and overseas aid.

Reviews of the international situation from the Church standpoint will be given by John Foster Dulles, foreign policy expert; and Leighton J. Stuart, Ambassador to China. Another highlight of the meeting will be a report on effecting the merger of the Federal Council and seven other interdenominational groups into the proposed National Council of Churches. This report will be given by Dr. Luther A. Weigle, chairman of the planning committee. Charles P. Taft, Council president, will preside at the meeting. It will be the first time in the history of the Council that a layman has presided at a biennial session. Delegates to the meeting will also elect a successor to Mr. Taft, and another to Bishop John S. Stamm, Harrisburg, Pa., senior bishop of the Evangelical United Brethren Church, retiring vice president of the Council. Applications of at least two churches for membership in the Council will be acted upon. These are the Religious Society of Friends of Philadelphia, and the Romanian Orthodox Church in America.

Speakers who will discuss the six major issues at the meeting will be Francis S. Harmon, vice president of the Motion Picture Association of America; the Rev. C. E. Krumbholz, executive secretary of the department of welfare of the National Lutheran Council; Dr. Edwin T. Dahlberg of Syrcause, N. Y., former president of the Northern Baptist Convention; Prof. William G. Mather of Pennsylvania State College; Dean Leonard W. Mayo of the School of Social Work, Western Reserve University; and the Rev. A. R. Pepper, executive vice president of Church World Service.

OPPOSE EXTENSION OF CONSCRIPTION

Quakers meeting in annual convention in Philadelphia were urged by their officials to start preparations for opposing the extension of conscription beyond 1950. Lloyd Baily of the legislation committee said it was useless to work for repeal but "we can lay the groundwork to oppose its extension." He also said that Quakers and other peace Churches would oppose any move to raise the present military appropriation or to reintroduce universal military training. Various speakers appealed to Americans of all creeds "to live without suspicion or prejudice toward any nation." Visitors attending the meeting came from four foreign countries and from at least eight other Friends bodies in the U. S. and Canada.

MORE DOCTORS FIRED

Two more doctors have been fired from the staff of a Roman Catholic hospital in Greenfield, Mass., bringing the total to date to four. They had approved the proposed amendment in the state law which would permit physicians to give married women contraceptive advice when, in their judgment, pregnancy would endanger their life or health. The amendment was vigorously opposed by the R. C. Church, who were supported also by the Lutheran Church. The amendment failed to pass.

QUAKERS THANKED BY RUSSIANS

The Friends Service Committee has received a cable from the Russian Red Cross thanking them for a gift of streptomycin valued at $25,000. The Russians reported that the drug was distributed among children in tuberculosis hospitals and sanatoriums in the USSR. A message on the 4,000 packages stated that the gift was "a testimony of good will and friendship from the American Friends Service Committee to be used to promote the health of the people of the USSR."

CHURCH MADE INTO BOWLING ALLEYS

Fairhill Baptist Church, once a flourishing congregation in the heart of Philadelphia's textile district, has been turned into a Church sponsored athletic center. It will serve as headquarters for 42 bowling teams, all members of the Baptist Union Athletic Association. The old church now contains eight bowling alleys and a basketball court.

ORTHODOX ACADEMY IS OPENED

The theological seminary of the Russian Orthodox Church, housed in an annex of the Union Seminary, New York, has been opened, the first of that Church to be established in the U.S. Dean George Florovsky of the Seminary in Paris, who will teach at the new school, presided over the inaugural ceremonies.

TAKING PRISONERS TO CHURCH

John A. Flaska, candidate for sheriff of Bernadillo County, New Mexico, said he planned to take some of his prisoners to church on Sundays if elected. "Sermons are good medicine for some of the wayward ones. I plan to have some of the prisoners listen to the radio on Sunday morning too so they can absorb good teaching from sermons." We have not learned whether or not he was elected.

SENATOR JOHNSON WANTS MORE RELIGION

Senator Johnson of Colorado, speaking at the convention of the Seventh-day Adventists held in Denver, was sharply critical of the nation's armament program. Declaring that the world needs more religion, he urged delegates to devote all of their energies to building up a worldwide spiritual ministry. The convention adopted a budget of $13,446,800.

BAPTISTS TO SPREAD FREEDOM HERITAGE

Baptists were challenged to carry their heritage of freedom into the country's political, social and economic life, at a ministers' conference held in Cleveland. D. R. Sharpe, head of the Baptist Association, told them that "we must work constantly for racial brotherhood, seek greater justice in the economic order and fight for a regeneration of our political life."

PRESBYTERIANS OFFER SCHOLARSHIPS

The Southern Presbyterians are to award 20 scholarships, ranging from $200 to $2,000, in colleges of their church. Applicants must be members of that Church and high school seniors or recent graduates. With the application must be submitted an essay of not less than 500 words on "why attend a Christian college" together with an autobiography of 1,000 words or more.

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

MICHAEL SCOTT CARRIES FIGHT FOR NATIVES

Michael Scott, Anglican clergyman of South Africa, and a militant champion of Africa's non-white races, has cancelled an air trip to London and Paris rather than surrender his passport to an official at Johannesburg airport. He had planned to go to Paris to present a petition to the U. N. on behalf of the Herero natives, who are opposed to South Africa's proposal to incorporate South West Africa in the Union. The petition from the tribesmen, which Scott had been asked to present, asked that South West Africa be made a mandated territory under trusteeship. The action of the government official however prevented Scott from leaving Africa.

He will be remembered by many in the Episcopal Church since he was in the U. S. last year when he did present, though with great difficulty, a similar petition to the Assembly when it met at Lake Success. Fairly recently he served a prison sentence for joining Indian passive resisters who had defied the Union government's new land tenure laws.

VATICAN AGREEMENT IS POSSIBLE

The possibility of eventual understanding between the Vatican and the government of Czechoslovakia has come to the front in Prague as a result of the visit of Archbishop Beran of Rome. Issues that have to be settled include compensation for Church land seized by the state; whether or not parochial schools will be allowed; subsidies by the government for Church personnel; whether priests shall be allowed to hold political office. This latter question was headlined in Prague when the Rev. Joseph Plojhar refused to give up the post of minister of health when ordered to do so by the Church. He was suspended by the Church for six months and will probably be excommunicated at the end of that period unless an agreement is arrived at on this issue between the Vatican and the government.

CHINA MISSIONARIES IGNORE PLEA

Missionaries in the areas of China which may be taken by the Communists have refused to follow the recommendations of consular officials that they evacuate. Increasingly stories are coming from China that Christian missionaries are well treated in the Communist areas and are being urged to carry on their work.

WOMEN URGED TO AID

English women were urged to aid in a campaign aimed at obtaining higher salaries for clergymen of the Church of England. The laymen's committee said it was appealing to the women "because the responsibility of budgeting for your household and of making ends meet is largely yours. You can therefore sympathize with the wives of the Church of England clergy who are bearing in these days an increasingly heavy burden."

UNIVERSAL CHURCH IS PREDICTED

Prof. T. C. Chao, speaking at the meeting of the national Christian Council of China, meeting at Shanghai, predicted that the "universal Church may come within 30 to 50 years." Dr. Chao is one of the six presidents of the World Council of Churches. "We in the Churches are unsophisticated perhaps," he said, "but we cannot understand why each sect cannot carry over into one Church the riches of its own heritage. In times of peace diversity is a luxury. In times of trouble disunity is a menace and a sin against God."

Dealing with the present crisis in China, Dr. Y. T. Wu, considered the foremost Chinese theologian, stated that "we miss the whole point unless we realize that the present situation is a symptom of a dying order and the birthpangs of a new order." He set forth this point of view in a special article for The Witness (Oct. 14). Dean T. H. Sun of Chelco University said that the Church in China is leaning "too heavily" on western Churches and has not yet produced a leadership capable of "integrating the riches of the Chinese culture with the Christian faith."

GREEK PROTESTANT CONVICTED

Elias Paraskovopoulos of Greece has been sentenced to three and a half months in jail, plus a heavy fine, for giving a band of gypsies clothing, sent by an American missionary organization, in an attempt to convert them to Protestantism. He has been set free pending appeal to a higher court.

JAPAN UNION CHURCH ADOPTS CREED

The Apostles Creed was made the official creed of the United Church in Japan at an assembly meeting in Tokyo and attended by hundreds of delegates. The Church, which comprises a number of Protestant denominations, not including the Episcopal, was formed during the war and had the backing of the government.

A Thoughtful Thanksgiving

THE words "think" and "thank," etymologists say, come from the same root. It makes sense. One who gives thanks is a person who thinks. Consider the relationship of these two words in some of our everyday experiences—the food we eat for instance. Only in exceptional cases do we produce it. It has been cared for by many persons, in many ways, before it reaches our table. The person who thinks gives thanks for his bread.

So, likewise, one who thinks is thankful for friends, for family, for home, for church, for community. As we celebrate the national holiday of Thanksgiving, those who think will give thanks for our nation; not only for the fruits of the harvest and for the great natural resources with which our country has been endowed, but also for the leadership this nation has given the world. The thinking person will also realize the crisis of our day and will give thanks for the opportunities we have to establish justice, equality and peace, not alone for ourselves but for the nations of the world.

This is not alone a time for greatness. It is even more a time for thinking and for thanking. May our Thanksgiving be a thoughtful one.

"QUOTES"

IN an age when the foundations seem to be slipping, it is well for us to remember the pithy saying of the poet Lowell, "The Ten Commandments will not budge." Take the very first Commandment, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," which means, stated positively, "Thou shalt have one God." When asked what it means to have a God, the reply has been made: "Whatever thy heart clings to and relies upon, that is properly thy God." What does America rely upon? Do you think the American people would vote to recall the first Commandment? The charter signed in the cabin of the Mayflower before the Pilgrim fathers landed on American soil began with the words: "In the name of God, Amen." Do you think our people want to revoke that appeal? Do you think we are ready to strike from our national hymn the words: "Our fathers' God to Thee"?

—Forward, Youth Edition

The Same Ditch

THE convocation address of the Archbishop of York is one which may well bring dismay to Christian people who are looking for leadership and intelligent coping with facts in these critical days. After spending many words on the horror and futility of war he becomes victim of the muddled thinking which is characteristic in this realm. What can one make of this: he endorses the findings of the two Lambeth Conferences that "as a method of settling disputes war is incompatible with the teaching and example of our Lord Jesus Christ" but then continues, we "cannot stop there" (sic!) and proceeds solemnly to re-state the dreary old cliches that "there are occasions when war is just" and "war is not the worst of all evils." We leave it to him who can to explain how an act can be incompatible with Christ's teachings and example and yet "just."

After the first world war a devastating book was published, "Preachers Present Arms" from which the Church should have learned a lesson. But here it is again; the same futile, crass cry: to Archbishop Garbett there is apparently little choice between appeasement and bigger and better weapons for the destruction of human life. He says, to be sure, "the Christian must do his utmost to preserve the peace and remove the causes of war." But in this trumpet call to arms he spends only two short paragraphs on what he acknowledges is one of the chief dangers to peace: national sovereignty. Rampant and uncontrolled national sovereignty is without doubt one of the most obvious causes of war; it is one which we in all countries have to deal with at the moment. Here is the point where the Christian can immediately and best throw his weight. There is nothing startling or new about this—nor yet impracticable. The renunciation of sovereignty is the early history of our own country; it is the story of the achievement of such civilization as we have; it is the very basis of Christianity. For there cannot be brotherhood in any sphere without the giving up of sovereignty; it is the meaning of love.

Wherever public opinion has been tested in the United States (not alone through polls but through balloting in several States) there has been a marked majority in favor of the giving up of sovereignty on our part; concretely for the centralizing of military power and the establishment of a world police force in a strengthened United Nations. And sentiment is as great among many of the other western nations. To the question, will Russia go along with this, the answer is, obviously, no one knows until it is tried. But there is a reasonable and two-fold reply; it is hardly likely that Russia could afford to stand out against the other nations of the world and, if she did, it is certain that we would not be in any worse condition than we are at present. She should be given every opportunity to come in—but someone must start. At any rate we commend this alternative to greater armament to the Archbishop before he visits this country to address the General Convention when it meets next fall in San Francisco. No less than in his own country the American people are sick to death of hearing reiterated the old methods that have always resulted in dreadful agony. They have a right to expect something else from their spiritual leaders; they yearn for light and hope. But as they read the convocation address the words of the two gospels come to their mind: "Can the blind lead the blind? Shall they not both fall into the ditch?"

Our Common Biblical Heritage

By RANDOLPH CRUMP MILLER

Professor at Church Divinity School of the Pacific

IF no Bible, then no Christianity. With these words, Prof. Edgar Brightman makes clear the common Biblical heritage which is the property of all Christians. We do not have the same ministry or prayers or fellowship. The World Council of Churches, expressing the unity that now exists, had separate communion services. It is the Bible which is our common Christian heritage, shared by Protestants and Catholics alike, even though we may differ widely in our interpretations of the Bible.

The Bible is inescapable, even when men have no acquaintances with it. It pervades our life and our culture. Its literary, moral and religious influence is part of our everyday living. Hall Caine probably was not a great novelist, but his stories often had good plots. He writes: "Whatever strong situations I have in my books are not my creation, but are taken from the Bible. 'The Deemster' is the story of the Prodigal Son, 'The Bondsman' is the story of Esau and Jacob, 'The Scapegoat' is the story of Eli and his sons, but with Samuel as a little girl, and "The Manxman' is the story of David and Uriah." Not only plots but titles of books and motion pictures are taken from the Bible, such as "Green Pastures," "Seven Pillars of Wisdom," "The Promised Land," "The Way of a Transgressor," "Jezebel," "The House of Mirth," and "A Far Country."

But more often literary phrases and embellishments are from the King James version. Daniel "saw the handwriting on the wall," our youngsters "drive like Jehu," nobody in my church lives off "the fat of the land," my daughters are "the apple of my eye," Job was not the only one who got along "by the skin of his teeth." And quotations such as these are only "as a drop in the bucket" as II Isaiah would say.

The Bible's moral significance is also inescapable. It is like Roman or British common law. It is so taken for granted in our culture that we accept it without knowing its sourse. The Ten Commandments, for example, are the product of primitive Jewish society, yet they are basic to modern society. We act in accordance with them and call such behavior "good." We break any of them and call such action "bad." It is true that a man may refuse to follow the first four without getting into trouble, but his neighbors will be suspicious of him if he does not believe in God, if he worships images, if he is profane with a loud voice, or if he desecrates the Sabbath. And the law steps in if he dishonors his parents, kills, commits adultery, steals, tries perjury, or covets his neighbor's wife or property too openly. It is hard to escape this ancient code handed down from some 3000 years ago.

Thomas Jefferson was convinced that a Christian needed only to follow Jesus' moral code, and he entitled his private Bible, "The Life and Morals of Jesus of Nazareth." When he had selected what he thought were Jesus' authentic teachings and had cut out all the rest, "there will be found remaining," he wrote, "the most sublime and benevolent code of morals which has ever been offered to man." This document he called "proof that I am a real Christian, that is, a disciple of the doctrines of Jesus."

Much in American democracy has reflected that moral interpretation of Jesus as found in one of America's greatest leaders. We cannot escape the "common Biblical heritage" in the field of morals.

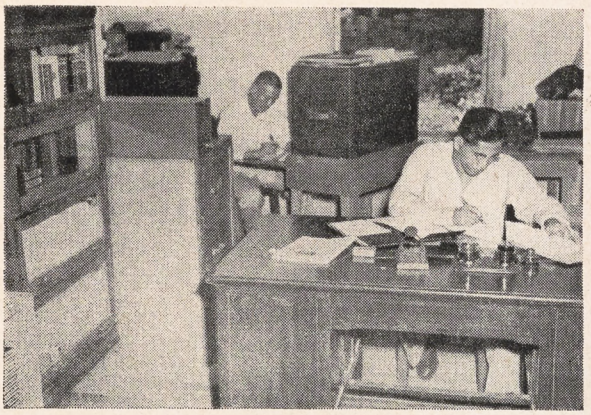
The impact of the Bible on religious belief we also cannot escape when the Gideons have put it in every hotel room and in as many school rooms as possible, and when the American Bible Society prints portions of it in a thousand tongues for reading at any time. The Bible has been a missionary for the Christian religion wherever men have been able to read it. It is the biggest seller because of natural demand.

Good preaching of Christianity has always been Biblical. It may not be textual, and sometimes Biblical preaching has been dull. It has been put this way: "The preacher may have mastered all the devices for winning friends and influencing people, he may be as jovial a mixer as ever crossed the threshold of a fraternal organization, he may even give his body to be burned out in shaking hands, knocking on doors, and joining orders; but when he stands up to preach, unless he can take his place in the line of succession as a biblical prophet and speak with an authority greater than his own, it will profit him nothing. He will still be a man's man; he will not be God's messenger."

God in History



WE come now to the chief reason that the Bible is our common heritage. It is not a best seller because of promotion methods, for men risked their lives to own it long before modern advertising became a racket. The Bible's claim to unique status lies in the story that it tells; and it tells of the mighty acts of God in history. It does not tell the whole story, but it reveals a cross-section of humanity in its search for God.

It is no accident that story tellers use the Bible for their pattern, for every kind of man is pictured in the Bible. In reading of the little near Eastern tribe called the Israelites, we discover that we are reading about ourselves. Change the date, the geography, and the plumbing, and there is very little difference between the characters of the Old and New Testament and those in our immediate neighborhood. We still have our Josephs and his brothers, our Jezebels, our Uriahs, our Davids, our Solomons, our Amoses, our Jeremiahs, our pessimistic writes of Ecclesiastes, and our Proverb-ial columnists.

We suffer with Job and doubt with Jonah. We vaccilate with Peter and we brag with Paul. We are indifferent with the Pharisees and we are cruel with Salome. We stumble with Magdalene and we are forgiven with the harlot who is unnamed. Our husbands are as long suffering as Hosea and our wives are as loyal as Ruth. We drive like Jehu and we are as curious as Lot's wife. We are as tempting as Eve and as gullible as Adam. We travel farther than Abraham and we conduct war with the courage of the Maccabees.

Then we praise famous men with the author of Sirach, and we know the list in the letter to the Hebrews of those whose faith made them better servants of God. We rejoice in Scripture with Paul and we love with the unknown Elder. And finally we share the faith of the disciples that Jesus was the Messiah come to save us, and that this is not just the story of a primitive Semitic tribe but the drama of God's salvation for the world. Here are the mighty acts of God revealed in a people and condensed for us in a capsule, Jesus Christ our Lord.

The chief actor in this drama is God. The Bible gives us the picture of our world in which men are important and in which their discoveries of truth are necessary in order to live meaningfully. But there would be no discovery without the prior act of God. God intends that we should know him, and in giving himself we have revelation as well as discovery.

"But why," some will say, "did God reveal himself to the Jews?" The answer is fairly easy. Each culture develops its own genius and makes its own contribution to mankind. The Greeks gave us philosophy, and in that area they were the chosen people. Western Europe gave us industrial progress. The Roman Empire gave us justice based upon law; China gave us the broad humanitarianism of Confucius. But only the Jews developed a distinctively religious consciousness which could reveal God's nature in a unique way. God acted through the Jews because that was the best way to reveal himself. God sent us Jesus Christ as a Jew because only the prophetic insights of the Jews made this possible.

The Bible is our common Christian heritage, then, because it is the sole historical record of the most important acts of God in history. In the life and death and resurrection of Jesus Christ, we have the high water mark of God's revelation and man's discovery. We believe that "the Bible contains all doctrine necessary for salvation through faith in Jesus Christ."

Whenever the Bible has been neglected, Christianity has fallen into disrepute. The great event of the Protestant Reformation was the giving of the Bible to the people, for the Bible is the one document which gives meaning and purpose and significance to life. "If no Bible, then no Christianity." But the Bible is not to be worshipped; it is not infallible; it is not inerrant; it is not a relic . . . not a playground for fanatics.

When the Bible is intelligently and reverently read and studied, with all the aids of modern scholarship which a lay person can grasp, it becomes the great source book of God's revelation; it is a record of some of the acts of God in that unique historical process by which he made himself known to the Jews. The Bible speaks to us of God, or it does not speak at all; the Bible tells us about ourselves, or it tells us nothing. God is made real to us now, because the Bible speaks to our day.

Fiorello and The Bible

BY

ANTIONETTE M. BUCHANAN

MR. La Guardia was, unexpectedly, an Episcopalian—a very nice thing to be by the way, but how this rough-and-tumble, individualistic Latin with an Italian father and a Hungarian mother should be associated with something so "Anglo," correct, and orderly was a never-ending subject of wonder to me. That so self-willed and independent an individual as he was should be connected with any formal religion was surprise enough.

I sometimes amused myself considering what he would have made of the Thirty-nine Articles if he had ever read them; or how he would approach the general confession (imagination failed me at this point), or whether he ever went to church at all.

So I was entertained and greatly interested when Newbold Morris told me once of a memorable Church holiday. It was Christmas, and Newbold said he was picked out of bed early by the telephone and he found the mayor on the other end of it.

"What are you doing?" queried Fiorello.

"I was sleeping," retorted Newbold.

"Get up and come to the early service with me at the Cathedral," went on the mayor.

"What!" shrieked Newbold. "Look at the weather. There will be no service."

"Yes there will," returned his honor. "The bishop is taking the service and you and I are going."

Needless to say, the honorable President of the Council forsook his warm room and went out in the cold and snow—to church.

"Was anybody really there?" I inquiried.

"The Bishop and Fiorello and I," said Mr. Morris.

When I first met and was thoroughly charmed by the little giant who ruled city hall, he certainly gave no suggestion of being religious. Any one who listened very long to his business vocabulary would have no suspicion that he would be anything but a mild atheist or a comfortable agnostic, if he bothered to "be" anything in particular. I imagine a possible "hereafter" was something very remote to the mayor at that time.

I soon found out that he had a curious admiration and respect for the Bible, curious because Fiorello was a student of life rather than books; also, in his childhood and impressionable days when he probably made his first acquaintance with formal religion, the higher criticism had penetrated to the provinces and the more hasty readers of the Darwin-Huxley serial considered the Bible pretty outmoded.

Bible and Economics

The first surprise he gave me was when I happened to question his all-absorbing preoccupation with economics.

"You speak as though economics were the whole of life," I objected.

"It is," he retorted. "Ever since God said to Adam, 'in labor and toil shalt thou eat' economics became man's entire concern."

I was taken too completely unaware to remember to chirp up with "man does not live by bread alone." I was surprised that the little mayor had quoted Genesis instead of Marx to justify the faith that was in him—social economics, humanitarianism, simple charity, or what you might call it.

I remember early in his administration he made the front page in connection with Holy Writ when he spoke at some affair, making his subject ("text" he would have liked to call it —he loved to dress up) "Give us this day our daily bread." "That is my doctrine," he said in effect, "and if that be radicalism, make the most of it."

I dare say all the world—his radio world at least—knew how he loved the Christmas gospel. I think he enjoyed the dramatic simplicity of the story and its great implications, tremendous and terrible as an army with banners. It was best written by St. Luke who, all things considered, was his favorite evangelist. He quite liked both his style and subject matter.

One day he was giving his frequently expressed opinion on lawyers, swearing like a pirate meanwhile.

"I like lawyers," I protested. "What is the matter with the law?"

"'Woe unto you lawyers'," he quoted readily and eloquently, "'for you have taken away the key of knowledge—you yourselves have not entered in, and those that were entering in, you have hindered.' St. Luke says so."

Generally speaking, Mayor La Guardia was no literary or scholastic adventurer, and it was the well traveled roads in the great journey that he knew best; but he had an unexpected, if highly sketchy, knowledge of the scriptures, especially the gospels; also Isaiah whom he greatly admired, Deuteronomy and other books of the Old Testament. He could nearly always find words to back up his own social philosophy, which was a very definite one. But he could not always recite chapter and verse or have the time and patience to look for it.

He complained bitterly of the many copies of the Bible that were not substantial enough to stand the physical wear and tear he gave them. He liked to mark them up, score them with pen, pencil, or fingernail, whichever happened to be handiest.

He liked to have a Bible on his desk, sometimes two. In the later years of his administration he had a handsome, bright blue Masonic one, also a limp leather, black, ecclesiastical-looking Revised Edition, with a Douay and "The Bible as Living Literature" within easy reach He occasionally amused himself with certain of the simpler differences of interpretation, fluctuating between approval of the King James "peace on earth, goodwill to men," and the Douay version of "men of good will."

Children were his passion and charity, by any of its names—generosity, social service, tolerance, feeding the hungry, and paying proper wages to workmen—was his law. The bits that he could quote on such subjects were legion. He liked St. James' epistle, and much valued his saying,

> "if a brother or sister be naked and want daily food, and one of you say to them, 'be ye warmed and filled'; yet give them not those things that are necessary for the body, what shall it profit?"

He approved of that one. He said it was no use to preach to a man and expect him to listen on an empty stomach. One of the few texts I heard him read with bitterness and anger, because of a provocation which now slips my memory, was:

> "It were better for him that a millstone were hanging about his neck, and be cast into the sea, than that he should scandalize one of these little ones."

An injury to a child, any injury, was to him the unpardonable sin.

He was, of course, especially devoted to the Sermon on the Mount, quoted it frequently, and liked to have it where he could lay his hand on it instantly. The ironic comments on the over-ostentatious doers of penance and givers of alms amused him greatly and he found frequent use for them.

He found many ready uses for his scriptural language in his ordinary, utterly fascinating conversation which, of course, was quite spontaneous, but I generally knew in advance more or less what he was going to say in his scheduled public utterances. However, on one occasion he surprised me, and probably a good many other people by bursting forth with a large portion of the second chapter of the Second Timothy, in a mood of somewhat tragic earnestness.

There is a fresh attraction for me in reading the Bible now. An active and interested Fiorello seems to pop in and out of the text, pointing up the lines that he liked to use, and also I run onto many another one that reminds me of as vivid and charming an individual as I ever knew.

I remember in the difficult days of the first term of his long administration when through death and disaster he had lost his majority on the Board of Estimate, I sometimes thought of him fighting, like the storied prince, with a broken sword. And pretty gallantly at that. If I had known him better then I should have been reminded of Proverbs: "If thou faint in the day of adversity, thy strength is small." Fiorello La Guardia's strength was not small.

Talking It Over

BY
W. B. SPOFFORD

A behind-the-scenes scrap has been going on for some time in the relief agency, "Care". It was brought to a head at the recent meeting of the board when the Rev. Herbert C. Lytle Jr., representing Church World Service, read a statement expressing "no confidence" in the executive secretary of "Care", Paul C. French. Lytle's motion asking for the resignation of Mr. French was seconded by the representative of Catholic War Relief Services. It has been these two Church agencies, together with United Jewish Appeal, that have been gunning for French for over a year, with a number of insiders believing that they resent "Care's" success and the strong nationwide appeal and aggressive campaigns which it has carried on. There is little doubt but that the wide popular support of the organization, which is the only package service which can guarantee delivery in the areas in which it operates, has drawn off funds which otherwise might have gone to the Church agencies.

At this recent meeting resentment was expressed by representatives of some of the smaller relief agencies (which have for the most part supported Mr. French in these months of controversy) at the manner in which the demand of the resignation was brought up, particularly since it was quite evident that there had been a pre-meeting caucus of the anti-French forces. Leo Perles, CIO representative, moved an amendment to the Church World Service resolution which called for a committee to receive any charges against Mr. French and to give him an opportunity to answer them. This motion was passed, though both Church World Service and Catholic War Relief Services opposed it.

"Care" is a non-profit agency and is the only package service recognized by the State Department and Military Government. It enjoys such widespread confidence and support that the public is entitled to know what this internal battle is all about. It certainly has to be said that the agency has been eminently successful under the leadership of Mr. French. There are those who question his ability to bring others along with him, and he is said to lack tact. But the question also arises as to how much self-interest had to do with this move on the part of the Protestant and Catholic Relief agencies. In any case it is a fact that "Care" has been very successful in presenting its cause to the people, whereas the voluntary relief agencies, over the past year and a half, have had one campaign after another with little success.

It is tragic, with the tremendous need in Europe, that this scrap should come at the very time that Charles P. Taft, chairman of President Truman's advisory board on voluntary relief, following his tour of Europe, calls for a tremendous increase in the "Care" program. Mr. Taft, incidently, is also president of the Federal Council of Churches which is closely associated with Church World Service.

Practical Procedure

BY J. LINDSAY PATTON
Rector of Grace Church, Colorado Springs

THE Prayer Book states: "My bounden duty is to follow Christ, to worship God every Sunday in his church; and to work and pray and give for the spread of his kingdom." This is the program for Christian living inaugurated by our Lord Jesus Christ two thousand years ago. It is not metaphor; it is not sentiment; it is practical procedure. It will influence not only our individual lives, but extend to the community, the nation and throughout the world.

Worship comes first, service follows. And they come in that order. Worship is our obligation to God. Service is our duty to our neighbor. Service is working and praying and giving; we can accept it as a duty but we can also accept it as a privilege.

Giving of our money for the work of the Church is becoming one of the serious matters in the life of future generations both in our own country and among all peoples the world over. There can be little moral progress in our own nation unless the Church has sufficient influence to counteract the forces of evil that are so rampant among us. And the Church cannot successfully teach the principles of Christianity unless she has the financial means to carry on and enlarge her work. Giving to the Church becomes a patriotic duty. We have learned that there is no such thing as racial or national or social isolation; the whole human race lives in the same street, in the same neighborhood.

Each one of us is to some extent writing his own destiny in the signing of his pledge for the work of the Church in 1949.

YOUNG PEOPLE OF THE CHURCH

BY WALTER N. WELSH

WHAT young people accomplished in one church is the thrilling story of the Sunday school that today exists in a Presbyterian Church in Columbus, Ohio. It exists because seven people, all in their 30's, agreed ten years ago that needs of people their age were not being met. They decided: (1) That young couples should be encouraged in bringing their children to Sunday school with them. (The innovation of nurseries in churches hadn't taken place then, generally); (2) They wanted a class which would be a feeder into the church and religious work; (3) They wanted a teacher to lecture about the Bible, applying it to everyday living; (4) They wanted a class to be an influence in the community and to take an active interest in world affairs from a Christian viewpoint.

Then they did something about it. They founded such a class with one of their members, Jack Sensenbrenner, as its teacher. Today the class numbers 300 members.

"We were sitting around talking, settling world problems from sex to politics," said Sensenbrenner, explaining how the seven young people decided to start the class. "The conversation got around to religion. Most of us were Sunday school members, but we agreed that most young people had grown away from the habit of attending Sunday school because their needs weren't being met."

Within a few weeks after the class started, its membership increased. People liked its principles. Word of its objectives spread. And individual class members worked to get new members. As the class grew, its activities likewise expanded. Socially, the class now holds parties once a month, its activities ranging from square dances in the church basement to high school football attendance. The class leaders keep in close personal contact with members. When a member of the group is in a jam—financially or otherwise—the first people at his side are members of the class.

Possibly, somewhere in the Episcopal Church there is such a group. If so, tell us about it. The fact is that the Church periodically gets very worried and talks about evangelism. The result is a few spurts that last a few years at most.

The factors of success in the Columbus venture seem to be: (1) A small group of lay young people took the trouble to analyze their bewilderment and frustation. Too many Church young people reaching this point in college or in their family community just quit, or go elsewhere to find an answer. A willingness to take time to find the correct starting point is a prerequisite; (2) The group came up with principles others could understand. The principles were a self-imposed discipline which prevented the fellowship from turning inward on self-enjoyment to the exclusion of wide community responsibilities; (3) The key principle was "bearing one another's burdens." No Christian group can hold together for Christian activity without this principle as a written or unwritten law; (4) They "did something about it." God only knows how much "good intentions" are used as a justification for the Church. A parish which expresses its fellowship in the Incarnation with cold, hard cash when "a member of the group is in a jam" has some reason to talk to the Church and to the whole world about its economic pattern.

THE PRESS

NO ATOM IS PASSIVE: As the power of gravitation is made up of the influence of atoms, so the public sentiment of the community is formed by the character of the individuals who compose it. As no atom is passive in the world, so no person is passive. There are deep philosophies in the old Saxon law that fined every member of the community in which a crime was committed. Every person in a community helps to determine its character, and the sum of these in turn determines the character of the many. If each person could live alone in his goodness or perish alone in his iniquity, life would not be so important. But it takes on unmeasured value when he knows that every thought leaves its impress on those it reaches and so it moves out through the neighborhood, the state and the world. — United Presybterian.

CONVENIENT TARGETS: Parsons who are determined to live their religion are invariably in for hard sledding. Whether they are in a large city parish or a small town parish, they and their families are convenient targets for the small minds of those laymen and women who think clergy and their families should conform to their own small-minded and usually ignorant concepts of Christianity. If the clergyman, of whatever communion, is liberal either theologically or on the social front or both, he is bound to be condemned as a "radical" and therefore "dangerous," the critics conveniently overlook the fact that the founder of Christianity was executed on the same charges, and that the early Christians were condemned for "turning the world upside down."—Churchman (P. E.)

* * Prospecting for a United Church by Angus Dun. Harpers. $1.50.

The Bishop of Washington is a scholarly, fair-minded man who can take a position and fight for it. This fine book presents all that the average person would need for a good grasp of one of the basic problems of our generation—how to resolve the differences between the Churches, without losing any of the contributions that all of them have to make, so that within a reasonable time we may have a united Church. It is a first rate job which will receive the commendation of Protestants and Catholics alike.

* * James II. By F. C. Turner. Macmillan. $5.

An exhaustive and absorbing biography of a singularly unattractive monarch. Much of the most valuable material for the period is found in the detailed reports to Louis XIV of Barrillon, the French ambassador in London. They include accounts of his success in purchasing incriminating letters for blackmail, in demanding the exchange of cabinet officials, in paying Charles II four hundred and fifty thousand pounds to prorogue Parliament for four months, disband his new army, and use his influence with William of Orange in favor of Louis.

YOUNG MR. NEWMAN

by Maisie Ward

Maisie Ward spent six years on this book and obviously enjoyed every moment of them. She was given access to a mass of new material preserved by Newman's sisters' descendants, and never touched before—his mother's letters, his own letters, diaries, sketches of him by school fellows, letters from his sisters. What emerges is an unexpectedly delightful picture of the Newman household and family, and of an oddly unfamiliar England. We find it difficult to imagine the reader who will not enjoy this book. O. Roy Greene, 52, associate rector of St. George's, Newburgh, N. Y., died of a heart attack on Nov. 14. He was ordained deacon in 1945 and priest the following year. He was the rector of Trinity, Boston, at the time of his election as bishop in 1923, a position he filled for 21 years. He had previously declined elections to be bishop of Washington, Newark and Western New York, in each instance because he thought his work in Boston was incomplete. He was a member of the Advisory Board of The Witness from the founding of the news magazine in 1918.

A CLERGYMAN
Retired

After a little over 21 years in the Church I have retired. Being a late ordination, with my pension conditioned by years of service and amount of stipend, I am to receive $490 a year. I have saved $2,000 but having helped my son get started in a small service station, which failed to give him even a living, I am broke. I have no home, and even if I had a trailer to shelter me it would cost $20 a month for location and light.

I am blind in one eye, have arthritis which is spreading and a heart condition which calls for rest.

I have written all this not to complain but to explain why I have to cut things to the bone. I still get your esteemed and vastly improved paper, but of course have to give it up. I am sorry to do so, but I am buying nothing I can possibly do without.

A BISHOP
Retired

I cannot tell you how much I regret, due to the high cost of living and the paying of income tax, together with the necessities of life out of my small pension, that I will not be able to renew my subscription. I have taken The Witness for years and it is with real regret that I am obliged to give it up. All during world war two, and since, I have had to get a loan from the bank to pay my income tax and will have to do so again within a short time. I am in the same condition as thousands whose income is several times larger than my pension, which is my sole income.

A BISHOP
Retired

I have to ask you to discontinue my subscription. My income is so greatly reduced that I have to give up a good many things that I have prized. The Witness is one of them and particularly now when it is so greatly improved.

Answer: To both retired bishops and to the retired priest, we merely say that The Witness will be continued. If there are those among our readers who care to help with these subscriptions, and others in a similar situation, we will be glad to receive their donations. Please send to Subscription Fund, The Witness, 135 Liberty St., New York 6, N. Y.

JOHN B. LOVE
Curate at Christ Church, Indianapolis

Since the death of the Rev. W. A. Powell we have been unable to find his file on the Lenten preachers at Christ Church, Indianapolis, for 1949. We know that he had made definite arrangements with five people to come for this next Lent. Will you kindly print this in hope that those five will see it and let us know what arrangement Mr. Powell made with them?

CHARLES G. HAMILTON
Clergyman of Aberdeen, Miss.

That the Witness could swallow the myth of a Republican victory (Oct. 28) is alarming evidence that the Episcopal Church does not understand the American people. We are a democratic people with a big D and have proven it for 20 years, and seven out of the last ten presidential elections. No Republican Church can possibly reach the people of this nation.

HANNAH L. BATTY
Churchwoman of Hardin, Montana.

The Witness has ever been to me the ideal Church news magazine. I get more national and world news from The Witness than from all my other Church papers combined. Articles are short and concise and easy to read. I find I know more about the work of the Church than others who read other Church papers. The Witness continually grows better.

FESSENDEN A. NICHOLS
Rector, Christ Church, Suffern, N. Y.

You are publishing a wonderful magazine. Reprints are desirable for Bruce Collier's review of "China, Twilight or Dawn." I can use them in a study class.

JOHN B. MORRIS
Layman of New York City

I have been getting the Witness from the chapel at Columbia University. It is my Sunday afternoon reading and I enjoy it immensely. May I say simply, more power to you, especially to the editorial line. I hope to make several of my Christmas gifts subscriptions to The Witness.

A Famine of Scriptures

HAVE you ever been hungry? Do you remember the feeling of warmth and well-being you experienced when the empty ache was satisfied? Doubts disappeared. You were able to carry on. Americans of good will are giving generously for the relief of physical hunger.

There is a spiritual hunger too. Thousands and thousands of people today are hungry for the help that is to be found in the Bible. But they have no Bibles.

> "It is not only a source of consolation but it is a source of power," wrote one refugee in Europe when he received a copy of the Bible in his own language from the American Bible Society. "I am happy again to own my own Bible. A word of the Lord gives us strength and it is strength in faith we need in our days."

The American Bible Society during 1948 has been asked to furnish 7,856,000 copies of the Scriptures. These requests have come from fifteen countries. The books will cost $2,010,700 over and above its regular program. The Society stands ready to supply the books, but it must look to the Christian people of America to furnish the funds.

This you can do by becoming a member of the Society. Read the coupon below, fill out and mail, accompanied by your gift, to the Bible Society.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Ministry in Rural Areas Vastly Expanded

An Elaborate Program Has Been Developed Under Leadership of Mr. Samuelson

★ Contrasting vividly with the sum of only $600 in the budget for rural work in 1940, the proposed budget of $77,150 for 1949 offers convincing evidence of the Church's determination to vitalize its ministry to rural people. The proposed budget, which is the sum set by the General Convention, also reflects the confidence the Church has in the lines along which the national rural program has been developing in recent years under the direction of the Rev. Clifford L. Samuelson, associate secretary for Domestic Missions, who with the Rev. George A. Wieland, director of the Home Department, has been spearheading the Church's advance into rural areas. For the past two years, Miss Elizabeth A. Rhea has been assistant secretary for rural work.

The 1949 budget figure is entirely for field work, for staff salaries and central office expense are carried within the general budget of the division of Domestic Missions. Of the budget, approximately fifty per cent is designated for established rural field projects and for grants to supplement local funds for developing new fields which show high potentiality of demonstrating effective rural Church extension. Included in the present established projects is the year-round field work of the national town-country Church institute, Roanridge, diocese of West Missouri, regional and provincial training centers and demonstration fields in a considerable number of dioceses and districts which are making strategic advance into new rural communities.

Next major category of disbursements is the $21,000 which goes toward additional education of clergy, seminarians and women trainees in sound policies and methods of town and country Church work. Through the national conference on rural work and the twelve regional rural conferences more than 300 clergy are annually enrolled in short courses related to the Church and the rural community. Most of these short courses are made available at state colleges and universities. This budget item aims to cover from one-third to one-half of the expenses of clergy attending these courses, most of whom are in the rural field. In addition to improving methods of work, this in-service training affords opportunity for contact and fellowship with other Church leaders and provides a boost in morale in these men, many of whom work in definite isolation from the Church as an institution.

William Davidson of Montana and John Baden are two young clergymen who specialize in the rural ministry.

For a few selected clergy who have demonstrated their proficiency and consecration in the rural ministry and who are qualified for study toward advanced degrees, scholarship grants are available for year-round graduate study. Thus, within clerical ranks, is developing a group of men who are not only experienced rural pastors but who also have a sound technical knowledge of rural sociology and rural community life.

To stimulate seminaries to provide lectureships and regular courses in the rural Church, the rural budget includes an item of $3600 to assist theological schools in paying rural specialists for special lectures, seminars and, in two cases, regular course work by a full time faculty member in the field of the rural Church.

Among the major educational activities along rural Church lines, has been the development of the student rural field service. This provides opportunity for seminarians to obtain a constructive experience in rural Church work during the summer periods of their seminary years. Developed slowly through recent years, this now provides practical training in the rural ministry for more than 100 seminarians and women trainees at an annual cost of $10,000 to the rural budget. The students are enrolled in either the group projects of the rural training institutes or in extension centers throughout the Church.

The sum of $6200 in the budget is used for assisting in the development of rural programs and organization on a provincial basis. At present Provinces I, V and VIII have a provincial organization and work. Other areas are in process of developing rural departments with either voluntary or part-time leadership. Related to the development of diocesan and provincial plans of rural work is the service which the division of Domestic Missions provides dioceses and districts in making thorough surveys of their areas with a view to the adoption of new policies, realignments of field and other measures for strengthening the rural ministry. The division of Domestic Missions not only provides technical guidance and field assistance in such studies, but includes in the rural budget an item of $3600 to assist in partial payment of the expense of the survey.

The rural service grant item in the budget makes provision for a number of financial grants of from $200 to $400 each to rural clergy who on recommendation of their bishops should be given recognition for the distinctive ministry they are fulfilling in the rural field. These grants are not considered as salary or travel subsidies for the latter are properly the responsibility of diocesan or district budgets. The rural service grant provides recognition of exceptional service in the rural fields and acts as an incentive to longer tenure.

The rural budget designates $6450 to be used for promoting information about the rural field throughout the Church and for the publication and distribution of literature helpful to rural clergy. Among the educational and promotional activities is the production of the colored slides in the Cross and Plough series which illustrate various aspects of needs and opportunities in the rural areas and methods of rural Church work.

Because in rural areas a high degree of Church cooperation and mutual understanding of various Church bodies are essential, the budget includes grants toward the work which is done through the committee on town and country and the migrant committee of the Home Missions Council, the Christian Rural Fellowship, Agricultural Missions, Inc., Home Prayers and the Council of Southern Mountain Workers.

"We could well use an additional $30,000 in the rural budget in 1949 to meet the many opportunities before us to strengthen and extend our rural work," comments the Rev. Mr. Samuelson concerning the outlook for the coming year. "Instead of this, we are faced with a cut of from $15,000 to $20,000 due to the Church's failure to meet the budget set by General Convention. The future strength of our Church and our contribution to a Christian America depend in large measure on going far beyond present gains toward vitalizing our ministry to those in small towns and open country. But there are other needs and opportunities within the Church quite as immediate and compelling as those in rural areas. If the giving of the Church to its total program permits us to hold the rural budget for 1949 at the figure set by General Convention, we shall be grateful. With this sum, we can continue to guide the Church to fulfill with more zeal, consecration and efficiency its rural ministry.

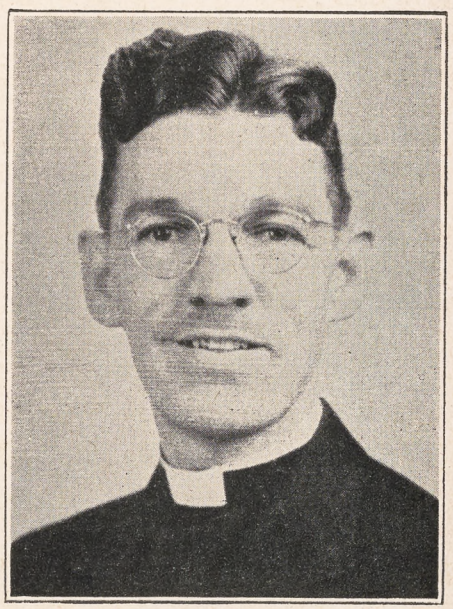
Rural Workers' 25th Anniversary; To Employ Executive Secretary

Back in the early twenties a group of leaders in the Church got together to do something about the further development of town and country work in the Episcopal Church. They attended the town-country leadership training school at the University of Wisconsin, and while there met together as a national conference of the Episcopal Church on rural work. Out of this effort there was born the Rural Workers' Fellowship of the Episcopal Church.

The purposes of the Fellowship are as follows: 1) to promote the interest of the whole Church in developing an effective ministry to town and country areas; 2) to increase fellowship among rural workers and those interested in rural community life; and 3) to aid the National Council in its program and its services to rural workers.

The idea of a fellowship for rural workers caught the imagination of the Church and the membership grew. Officers were elected; and the "Rural Messenger."



The Rural Workers' Fellowship has been instrumental in working with the division of domestic missions of the National Council in developing various phases of the new national program for rural work. Through the medium of the "Rural Messenger" information regarding national rural policy has found its way into every section of the country. Rural workers have been brought together in fellowship and for the mutual exchange of ideas. Urban workers and Church leaders have gained a new vision of the importance of this work and have given it great support. A new interest has been stimulated in the observance of certain special occasions native to rural life, such as Rogationtide and the Harvest Festival. The Rural Workers' Fellowship has become affiliated with the Christian Rural Fellowship, interdenominational and international, and has thus brought the members into fellowship and cooperation with rural workers everywhere. Through the Fellowship the best literature on town and country work available has found its way into the hands of our rural workers. Among recent developments are the establishment of provincial and diocesan fellowships, affiliated with the national organization.

In June 1949 the Rural Workers' Fellowship will observe the twenty-fifth anniversary of its founding with a special meeting at Roanridge. This meeting will mark a milestone in the life of the fellowship. Some of the founders, it is hoped, will be there. Special awards will be given for outstanding service in the rural field. Most important of all there will be launched a drive to raise funds for the employment of a full-time, paid executive-secretary.

Up to this time all the work of the Fellowship has been carried on by the voluntary activities of the officers, and the members of the division of domestic missions have given liberally of their time and talents. The time has come, however, when it is felt that the work has grown to the point where neither voluntary labor nor the National Council should be asked to do this work. During the year of the silver anniversary the goal of the fellowship is to raise $5000. This, in addition to funds already assured, will make it possible to obtain the services of a full-time executive-secretary to maintain the much needed work of the fellowship. At a recent meeting of the board of directors it was decided that the following would be the major projects of an executive-secretary:

1) To promote the Rural Workers' Fellowship nationally, in the various dioceses and districts, and among lay persons; 2) to assist in the promoting of town and country work on all of the above levels; 3) to be responsible for publicity of the fellowship in the Church and secular press and to edit the "Rural Messenger"; 4) to arrange the program of the annual meeting of the Fellowship and to see that representatives are present from as many provinces, dioceses and districts as possible; 5) to coordinate the work of the fellowship with the program of the division of rural work of the National Council; 6) to act as a clearing house for good ideas and plans for work in town and country churches.

Every person in the Church, lay or clerical, interested in town and country work may be a member of the Rural Workers' Fellowship. This membership properly should include a large number of men and women in urban centers who, although not living or working in the country, see the value of the work and wish to help support it.

INSTITUTE IS TRAINING RURAL MINISTERS

By
WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD, Jr.

★ Iona, Sigtuna and Communite de Cluny are some of the experimental Christian communities in Europe aimed at making the Christian imperatives more relevant to contemporary society. For the most part, they have sprung up out of the challenges presented Christianity by a chaotic world depression in the thirties and the material and human waste of a world war — catastrophes which a nominally Christian world was powerless to stop. By and large these movements are based on the rural life and seek to relate men, as social beings, to the soil and the natural processes of production. Fundamental in their philosophy is the conception that modern culture has divorced Christians from an awareness of their dependence on and responsibility for an ordered community living. Therefore, these dynamic movements seek to bring Christians together to manually work, mentally study, and prayerfully worship so that they, in whatever field of work they may be employed, might have the true Christian community as the central ideal.

The philosophy of the Town-Country Church Institute, centering around Roanridge Farm in Parkville, Mo., appears to have sprung out of the same social demands which inspired these European groups. Now in its fourth experimental year, under the division of Domestic Missions of the diocese of West Missouri, the institute carries a year-round program of rural community living and mission work in the Missouri river valley north of Kansas City. During the winter, a staff of one priest, two Church Army captains and a woman Church worker cover the field, holding services, establishing Sunday schools and organizing communities. In the summer, students from every seminary and women's training center of the Church carry on an intensified work in this area in order to become acquainted with rural Church work. This year, for the first time, the program has been accepted by the seminaries as a regular part of the students' training in pastoral work, even as clinical pastoral training was adopted several years ago.

The work at Roanridge received its impetus in 1942 when Mr. Wilber Cochel, churchman of Kansas City and retired editor of the Weekly Kansas City Star, offered his farm and life estate to the Church as a training center for rural workers. Basic in his decision and in the terms of acceptance of the Church, were two ideas: 1) Most major church groups have failed to provide enough well-trained, consecrated ministers truly qualified to serve well in rural areas where community life has been disorganized by soil and soul erosion; 2) Training of a strong ministry for rural areas requires church leaders to have first-hand and scientific experience and association with farm families, agriculture, rural community life and the distinct problems associated with them.

The training program, as developed by the trustees of the Roanridge Rural Foundation and as carried through by the Rev. Clifford L. Samuelson, is basically work-centered. This means that students at the institute are expected to put "blood, sweat and tears" into a real experience of rural living and that, through community

A conference for the evaluation of Church Rural Work was held recently at the Bishop's House, Boise, Idaho. At the right seated at the card table is the host, Bishop Rhea, with George Weiland, head of the Home Missions Division, facing him. In the door is Richard D'Easum, newspaper man, with Bishop Dagwell of Oregon in the easy chair. evaluation of the work done, a more efficient and realistic program for Church expansion and work in rural fields should be developed.

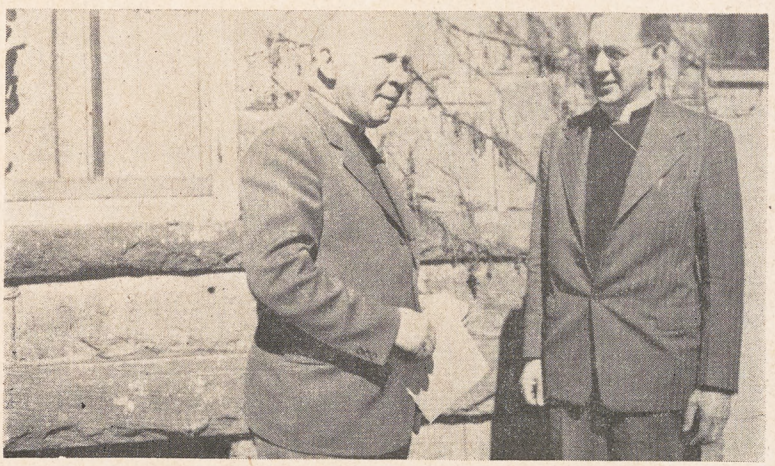
A fundamental part of the institute's work is done in extension centers where major rural problems are given more intensive study. For instance, an extension service in soil conservation and community resources was run in Shenandoah, Iowa; another in intercultural rural life was conducted amongst the Navajo Indians at Ft. Defiance.

This year, the work at Roanridge emphasized community surveys and comprehensive census work in an attempt to judge exactly what was the nature of the field in which the institute was working. This sociological study was conducted in a professional manner entirely by seminary students and women church workers. As a result of this study, for the first time the institute is prepared to attack the area using all of the best techniques of modern social study.

The summer work of the students is truly comprehensive. Following two weeks of indoctrination in the work of the rural Church, they are sent out into various work areas in teams. Some of their activities include surveys, fanning wheat, digging privies, studying rural sociology, learning about erosion control, conducting daily vacation Bible schools, organizing community and parents' nights, pastoral calling, driving tractors, clearing long abandoned graveyards, visiting stock-yards and meat processing plants, taking services in rural community churches, and perhaps most important, learning what type of people make up rural America.

Many of the students in attendance at the institute probably will not enter the rural ministry. However, the experience should not be wasted. The rural field is still the great "feeder-belt" for urban life. Not only does the urban worker's food come from the farm, but for the most part, city dwellers have moved to the country, bringing with them many of the strengths and weaknesses of the rural character. For this reason, the director of the institute feels that all students can receive a positive and helpful experience at the school.



The program is definitely experimental and has some wrinkles to be ironed out, but as analysed by one of the students, the value of the program lies in the fact that "many of these rural people have never heard of the Episcopal Church. But they get acquainted with it through us. They see us get out and work in the fields or on their own Church buildings. We show that as Christians, we are truly concerned with them and their children. We bring something new and real in social and religious experience to them. And we get something entirely new in experience ourselves. We become aware that our Lord took little children seriously; that he walked the dusty roads and that the common people heard him gladly. We discover the imperative of prayer in our own lives. We have to discover our own spiritual power and not lean on the Church. It's a thrill to have our Church show that it can really identify itself with the men and women who grow the wheat that goes into the bread we offer at the eucharist."

COMMUNITY SURVEYS ARE HELD

★ The determination of the Church to adjust its policy and work on a basis of factual data is shown by the increased emphasis being placed on scientific studies of communities and areas. During the past two years the division of domestic missions of the National Council has assisted in comprehensive surveys in Montana, Idaho and Eau Claire. The diocese of Georgia and South Florida are currently involved in self-surveys under the technical direction of the division.

Of particular significance is the year survey recently begun in Central New York. Prof. Wm. V. Dennis, formerly of the department of rural sociology of Pennsylvania State College and long a proponent of extending the Church's work in town and country areas, has been placed on the staff on a full time basis for this diocesan wide intensive study of the Church's work.

Back of these studies is the realization that with its limited resources of men and funds, the Church has an obligation to be efficient in maintaining its ministry.

TOWN, COUNTRY GROUP HEAR PAUL LANDIS

★ Keynoter of the fifth annual convocation on the Church in Town and Country meeting in San Jose, California, November 9-11 was Dean Paul H. Landis, of the college of agriculutre and head of the department of rural sociology of Washington State College. Loss of social controls once exercised by the Church in rural community life succumbing to a growing secularization was graphically described and analyzed by Dr. Landis in his address opening the convocation. "The most significant transition has come in the shifting of the first loyalties of the people of the neighborhood and community from the Church to the school," stated Dean Landis. Also, "The rural Church has lost its welfare function to the secularized social welfare services of civil authority. It has also lost much of its control over the family and marriage to civil authority."

Dean Landis blamed the widespread secularization of rural population on large scale migrations to urban areas, which enable country people "to escape the constant surveillance of the pastor and Church folk."

"I would suggest," he said, "that the seriousness of man's religious belief is to be a considerable extent measured by his mobility probably even more so is his loyalty to the Church. Those who are anchored in a community for a lifetime, by and large, are probably more serious and more devoted in their Church duties than those who move frequently."

He said another major force in weakening social control "is the shift in attitudes toward authority." In this connection, he said that people of the Western world have gradually shifted from a sacred view of authority to a secular view.

Among the problems that have emerged from the relaxation of social controls he listed 1) problems of a personal adjustment experienced by rural youth, 2) a lowered rural birth rate, and 3) the decline of the Church to a place of secondary importance in the community.

"I fear that few rural and small town churches have an adequate system of follow-up for their young people as they migrate to large towns and cities," Landis said. "Exchange of information between the old pastor and the new pastor is inadequate. It is likely that a fairly high percentage of farm youth are lost to the Church at the time of their first migration.

"By a more systematic and business-like approach to the problem through a system of case history and card file exchanges or other such means, they might be saved to leadership in the urban Church."

Dean Landis said that both Church and school "have an obligation to help prepare young people for the transition from rural to urban values without losing their orientation to the forces of social control."

"The Church faces the particular challenge of seeing that the guiding and regulative force of religion is kept alive in them after they have shed the protective controls of their rural locality," he concluded.

The Rev. Ross W. Sanderson, director of research for Congregational Christian Church, emphasized the need for cooperative action among Church bodies for maintaining an adequate ministry in the smaller communities. "Little churches, like little nations, are strangely helpless; unless they act together, they are undone."

The necessity for Christian education again to be fulfilled in the home was the plea of the Rev. John B. Ketcham of the International Council of Religious education. "Nowhere else may religion be taught so easily and with such abiding results as in the home," he said. "Parents teach religion by what they say and do and are. The home is still the most influential teacher, but its teaching is too seldom definitely and effectively Christian. In all too many cases today, the home has virtually abdicated as a purposeful Christian teacher. Most of the responsibility has been shifted to the Church."

In this connection he warned that the best Church school could not take over the whole job of Christian teaching, but could only supplement the influence of the home.

Fifty clergy of the Episcopal Church participated in the convocation. Bishop Walters, San Joaquin, acted as chairman of the commission on the town church and spoke on the panel on training for better rural work. The Rev. John R. Pickells, chairman of the town and country department of the diocese of Chicago, was the National Council's representative; and the Ven. Wm. F. Bulkley, chairman of the rural commission of the eighth province was in charge of the Episcopal sessions.

RURAL FIELD SERVICE EXPANDS PROGRAM

BY ELIZABETH RHEA
Of the National Dept. of Rural Work

★ Bibles and blisters characterize the summer life of a seminary student enrolled in the national student rural field service program. Bibles because evangelism is the heart of the work — blisters because learning to live and work with farm people is their method of evangelism.

Believing that practical experience in town and country work under the guidance and supervision of qualified rural leaders is of prime importance to future clergy and women workers, the student rural field service program was given official recognition as part of the national rural program in 1945. Prior to this time a few students had been placed in missions as summer supply without initial training and without supervision.

The program today is organized on the basis of a three-week intensive training period at a central institute, followed by six weeks field work in an extension center. The total experience for the student culminates in a final week for critical evaluation of the entire summer. At the present time there are two institutes providing orientation sessions. The national town-country Church institute is the national training center and is located at Roanridge, Parkville, Mo. The southern rural Church institute is the southern rural training center in Valle Crucis, N. C. Students attending the national town-country Church institute go to midwest and western states for their field work, while those attending the southern rural Church institute work in the various southern states. Plans are being made to establish similar training centers on the east and west coasts to serve those sections of the country.

This past summer 119 students, representing every seminary and women's training school, participated in some phase of this training program.

Following the orientation, 10 students went to the Good Shepherd Mission, Ft. Defiance, Ariz., and Farmington, N. M., to serve in the intercultural rural Church institute among the Navajos. This work was under the supervision of Mrs. Robert Rosenthal (formerly Betty Clark). Others went to the Iowa rural Church program under the leadership of the Rev. Henry Robbins. This latter program emphasized modern soil conservation control and the importance to Church leaders of knowing and understanding these methods. It was made possible through the whole-hearted cooperation of the regional United States soil conservation office. Individual students went to the dioceses of Oregon, Salina, Montana, Nebraska, Northern Michigan, San Joachim, Utah, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Bethlehem and Central New York for field work. Special training was given students in Maine and Vermont. A number of students were given specal assignments in the migrant program of the Home Missions Council.

The most competent leaders in the fields of rural sociology, rural Church methods, conducting and teaching daily vacation Bible schools, community surveying, modern agricultural practices, rural community resources, give lectures and seminars to the students.

Extension centers for this work are selected on several grounds. Primarily, a field is chosen because the student will be working in close association with a priest who understands town and country work and who is able to give expert guidance to the student. The expense for each student is shared by the local field and diocese in which he works and the national rural budget. The training and field program for 1949 will be considerably modified from past years in accord with the policy of constant adjustment based on the growing experience of those responsible for this type of clinical training and the needs and opportunities provided by the field. Application for any town and country field of work to serve as an extension center of the student rural field service program may be made to the Rev. Clifford L. Samuelson, national director.

June 17 through July 7 are the dates for the 1949 orientation sessions in both of the institutes.

POLICY GROUP TO MEET FOR RURAL STRATEGY

★ With area meetings already held in the eastern, midwestern and western sections, the General Convention's joint commission on rural work has scheduled a session for the entire commission in Kansas City the last week in January, according to recent notice issued by Bishop William F. Lewis, Nevada, chairman. Charged with defining policy for the national program of rural work, the sectional meetings of the commission which were held at Seabury House, Kansas City, and San Jose were concerned with evaluation of the present program for rural work with a view to the report to be made to the General Convention in San Francisco and adoption of emphases to be made during the 1950-52 triennium. Shortage of adequately trained clergy for strategic rural fields continues to be a major concern of the commission, according to Bishop Lewis.

Town and Country

THE 1949 proposed national program and budget for rural work which is the Story of the Week in this issue is the outgrowth of a realistic facing of facts concerning the weaknesses which characterize much of the past and some of the present policies and work of the Episcopal Church in rural areas. The point may be well raised concerning the budget that a disproportionate amount of money available for strengthening rural work goes into educational activities. This may be regrettable but at the moment our town and country work is necessary. For some years a considerable amount of money and much energy must be directed toward guiding the Church to see what it has at stake in rural areas. Also the clergy serving in rural areas will continue to need guidance in methods.

Due to the predominant urban character of the Church certain attitudes and practices have quietly and unconsciously entered into its life. Next to the Christian Science Church, ours has the highest percentage of urban membership in relation to total membership of any Church. We may rejoice in the strength, dignity and witness which we show in many cities. But we also need to remind ourselves that quite unwittingly this urban prestige has caused us to place an urban standard of values on the ministry and the Church's work. Unconsciously we have accepted the well established parish with its complex of functioning organizations and group activities as the norm. But we have accepted it not simply as the norm, but as the goal and indeed field for the ministry. With rare exceptions our standard of values as to a man's worth are measured by the size and prestige of the parish of which he is rector. Since eighty-five per cent of our communicant strength is in urban parishes, it is natural that the focus of seminary training is toward the urban parish and that the average seminarian envisions his ministry as being fulfilled as leader of a metropolitan congregation.

It is this mental set and standard of values for the ministry which underlies much of our Church's weakness in rural areas. It has led us to fail to dignify and support the small church and the rural pastor. It is this habit of thought and resultant action which accounts for the closing of hundreds of our small churches, and the general weakness which characterizes our work in rural sections. Some dioceses have always realized that the Church's life issues from small churches. Also, in recent years a few dioceses have given major attention to the opportunity and need for strengthening the ministry in rural communities. But for the most part the Church is not yet providing the support in men, training, tools, and money for town and country. The latest tabulation discloses more than 500 unmanned fields due to lack of ordained men. Practically all of these are in rural areas, and being "multiple-stations" for the most part it is conservative to state that there are now close to 1,000 small congregations without pastoral oversight. Or we could quote the statistics from three recent diocesan-wide surveys which disclose that average length of pastorates over a 25-year period were 22, 21 and 19 months, respectively. No Church can have such a turnover and long be a stabilizing influence in the community and with the families it is supposed to serve.

With no attempt to be encyclopedic nor detailed, a few of the glaring weaknesses which confront the Church in the rural field today are the following: (1) Shortage of ordained men and trained women workers. Those conversant with the total picture of the Church's life, attest to the fact that in nearly every diocese vacancies exist due to the shortage of clergy. Many of these places without leadership are established small congregations; many new concentrations of populations offer opportunities for a ministry to be fulfilled in entirely unchurched areas, but advance work cannot be done without more workers.

"QUOTES"

IT is necessary to develop a Protestant strategy for rural America. The alternative is that decreased rural populations will have declining religious institutions. Our task is nothing less than to rebuild the Protestant culture of America. Out of it has come much of its best blood. As the hillsides are denuded, so is our rural Church culture eroded. We must enlist and train and place in the rural areas better men and women. Then we must put behind them the resources of the whole Church.

(2) Inadequate training for rural Church leadership. Since our urban character and the habit of our thinking of the ministry in relation to baptized, confirmed communicants, has made us think of "constituency" rather than of community. Without any diminution of responsibility for pastoral oversight and emphasis on the ministry of the sacraments, the rural minister to be effective must make a close identification of himself and his congregation to the total life of the community. He needs to acquaint himself with the numerous agencies which are ministering to the welfare of rural people and the up-building of the rural community.

Elasticity and imagination are necessary for adaptation of our ecclesiastical and institutional expression so that people will not feel alien to the Church's teachings and practices. Special approaches in education and promotion must be made if we are to get a response from rural people. We need to know that in many rural communities the educational, intellectual, cultural and economic level is equal to that of the most sedate and satisfied suburban congregation.

(3) Lack of adequate equipment. Poorly maintained buildings, inadequately equipped or even no parish house characterize many rural churches.

(4) Inconvenient and uncomfortable living quarters. Often the houses or living quarters, perhaps even in the parish house or church building itself, afford a minimum of comforts for the minister and his family.

(5) Insufficient travelling allowance. The average rural minister is involved in the "stretch-out," having responsibility for two or more communities. This alone is frustrating since it is impossible to fulfill a proper pastoral oversight. But the injury is aggravated by the fact that rarely is a travelling allowance provided which covers the actual cost of car operation. Obviously he must have a car. With a salary sufficient only for living expenses, he must also purchase a car. Then, because of a low travel allowance, he must pay for its operation from his salary. This means that out of the family budget, he must finance the Church's work.

(6) Salaries are far below the norm of clerical salaries for the Church as a whole. Among the most pernicious fallacies of which the Church is now guilty is that living expenses of rural clergy are much lower than urban clergy. Although true in some areas, in many small towns throughout the U.S. the living costs, with the possible exception of rent, are relatively as high if not higher than in large cities.

One could go on to list numerous other facts such as geographical isolation, failure to receive any recognition for sacrifical service, the frequent loss and change of active Church families by movement to the cities, a low pension provision commensurate with low salaries—all of which make for a breakdown in morale of the rural minister. But, as stated earlier, the aim of this statement is not to list all the problems nor weaknesses confronting the rural minister and the rural Church. Instead, we wish to point out that the Episcopal Church today is suffering in its rural work because of attitudes and policies which have quietly and unconsciously crept into its life by failure to dignify the rural ministry and to give recognition to the importance of the rural and small town congregation. The national program for rural work is directed along lines which will guide the Church to esteem the rural church; towards winning clergy increasingly to the rural ministry, and to formulate such policies and methods that support for their work will be given generously.

Rural Work a Reality

BY GEORGE A. WIELAND
Director, Home Department, National Council

THE Episcopal Church can still be described as "urban and Eastern." Eighty-five per cent of the communicant strength is found in city parishes. The geographic center of our Church population is said to be in the neighborhood of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania.

The missionary strategy of the home department has therefore been focused on the needs and opportunities of the town and country field. Surveys in widely separated areas indicated a need for more aggressive rural evangelism. But to evangelize there must be evangelists. The tragic failure of our Church in the town and country areas of American life has been largely due to a shortage—almost a complete absence—of rural clergy. That our active clergy list is still below the level of 1919 helps to explain the neglect of rural fields. We need accelerated programs of recruiting on the parochial level until this major need is met.

Meantime many experimental programs in rural areas have been inaugurated and maintained. An impressive number of our seminarians are annually being exposed to the challenge of a town and country ministry. The values of such a ministry are slowly being recognized.

We not only have a "capacity" for town and country work—though this has been challenged—we have a positive "genius" for it when proper direction is available. The National Town-Country Church Institute is training the leadership and setting the standards for this work. At long last we are on the way to successful missionary adventuring in rural areas.

We still need men and money to translate a vision into a reality. We believe that both will be increasingly available as the program unfolds. Under the able leadership of the Rev. Clifford L. Samuelson, aided and abetted by Miss Elizabeth Rhea, we are confidently looking forward to a day when rural work will be a source of pride and of strength in the whole national picture of the Church's work.

The Episcopal Church and Rural America

BY
E. DARGAN BUTT
Instructor Rural Church Methods, Seabury-Western and Pacific Seminaries

THE Episcopal Church is making a great effort today to establish herself and develop her work in the town and country areas of America. This is evidenced by creation in the Home Department of National Council of a Division of Rural Work; by the organization of the Rural Workers' Fellowship, Inc.; by the institution of courses of training in rural Church work in some of the theological seminaries; and by the many efforts in the several dioceses and missionary districts to inaugurate programs for the development of this work.

"Why," may we ask, "is the Episcopal Church getting so much interested in town and country work? Are there real reasons why the Church, traditionally so largely an urban Church, should now become so greatly interested in rural work?" Some say that this field is already adequately taken care of by other Church bodies. Others suggest that some of the other Churches are better adapted to this particular kind of work than is the Episcopal Church, and certainly are better prepared to do it. "Are we justified, therefore, in this endeavor to build up our rural Church work?" The answer is that the Episcopal Church is justified in going into this field with increasing vigor, and should welcome every aid that can be given in the development of this work. There seem to be, generally, three reasons why this is so.

In the first place the Episcopal Church is needed in the town and country field because of the general need for the Christian gospel in rural society. Many think of rural people as being by nature religious, and that most rural communities are already over-churched. Such is not the case. Rural life is conducive to the development of spiritual values, but rural people are not becoming Christian people simply because they live in small towns and in the open country. A process of secularization is going on in rural society. Sociological changes are breaking up the cohesion of small rural communities, and, with them, many small church congregations. Statistics show that only about one-third of all rural people in America are church members. This means that in the rural areas of this country there are between thirty and thirty-five million people who are not members of any church. About four million children are receiving no religious training. Small rural churches are closing at the rate of several hundred a year. The battle against materialism is being waged in rural communities as well as in urban communities, and, because of a lack of resources on the part of rural churches, the issue in many places is not reassuring.

In going into the rural field on a much greater scale than in the past, one should not feel that the Episcopal Church is invading the territory belonging to someone else, but, rather, that at long last the Episcopal Church is beginning to stand with the other Church bodies in a realistic way in endeavoring to bear her just share of the burden. There are places, particularly in the west, but not entirely so, where the Episcopal Church is the only church in the community. There are many communities where there is no church at all, and where the Episcopal Church might carry on a vital ministry where otherwise nothing would be done.

Unique Contribution

THE second question, which is, "What peculiar contribution does the Episcopal Church have to make to the life and thought of rural society, both through her own ministration, and through the effect she has on the other Church bodies working in this field?" This leads to a consideration of theology rather than sociology. No institution can permanently endure without a sound theological basis for its life, and that rural society is confused and a good many rural churches are floundering because of a lack of sound theology, there can be no question. Episcopalians are not always enthusiastic about, or true to, the theology of the Church, but it is in theology, together with polity and worship, that her greatest strength lies, and therein lies her greatest contribution to rural life and religion. In what respects does this influence manifest itself?

The Episcopal Church, through her Catholic heritage, offers a pattern of unity and stability to those harassed by the diviseness of modern society. When we speak of "Catholic heritage" we mean much more than the world-wide scope of the Anglican Communion, as impressive as that is. We mean more than the historic episcopacy, as important as that is. We mean the doctrine which links the life of the individual worshipper inseparably with the life of the Church from Apostolic days; that links the individual worshipper with the Church in its world-wide scope today; that links him with the future of the Church on earth and eternally in heaven. Many Christians other than Episcopalians believe this, and there is no doubt but that it is more meaningful to some outside the Church than inside. The point, however, is that with the Episcopal Church it is the expression of her very nature, and a doctrine without which there is little meaning to anything in her life. In rural society, where, more and more, human relations are becoming impersonal and abstract, where the future for the individual and for society is becoming more uncertain, people feel the need for more than an individualistic expression of religious life and relationships, and for more than a purely local form of church government. Rural society, for so many years organized in small, isolated, more or less protected small towns and open country neighborhoods, has within the past generation expanded into participation in a large, impersonal, sophisticated, secular world, with all of its demoralizations and dangers. Rural people need an interpretation of religion in terms of a fellowship larger and broader and more enduring than the big world into which they have suddenly been plunged. The Episcopal Church can and does at this point contribute a great deal to the scope of rural religious outlook and stability.

The Episcopal Church, through her sacramental system, offers an interpretation of reality which can emancipate rural people from the fear and thraldom of material things, in an age of expanding materialism. So much of contemporary rural religion is tinged with a false distinction between what is spiritual and what is material, one being looked upon as essentially good and the other as essentially evil. Salvation has been sought through the escape from the physical into the spiritual, rather than by seeing in the physical material creatures capable of expressing the spiritual. Beginning with the Incarnation, and extending through the entire sacramental life of the Episcopal Church, material creation and physical life are looked upon as vehicles for the expression of the spirit, with the grace of God coming through the sacraments for the purpose of enabling men to use material things for good purposes and not for evil. This concept has saved the Church from trying to escape the world on one hand, and from becoming a reforming society on the other. It has enabled the Church to encourage the right use of the natural instincts of life, rather than condemning them in order to avoid their wrong use. As rural society, through new scientific methods, secular leadership, greater educational advantages, becomes more prosperous, more sophisticated, more secularized, there is the tendency either to forget God or to despise the world and try to escape it by other-worldly considerations. The Episcopal Church can give great leadership here through showing how the increase of knowledge and wealth can be a means of increased opportunities for dedication to the service of God and man.

Life and Worship

THE Episcopal Church, through her positive doctrine, discipline and worship, offers a satisfactory means of expressing the spiritual life in an age of confusion, self-centeredness, and self-will. She has set a hedge about her people so that, however they may differ in individual opinion, they have a basic doctrine in the creeds, a common discipline in the ordering of the Church life, and a corporate worship in the liturgy. This means that the man in the pew is not left to the caprice of the individual minister who happens at the time to be in charge of the congregation, or even to the capricious thinking of a particular generation of people, but is protected by a classic statement of the faith, a time-tested discipline, and a corporate expression of worship by the whole body of which he is a part. Today, in rural areas, as people become better educated, they are becoming less trustful of an emotional religion on the one hand, and a humanistic one on the other. So much preaching today in rural churches is either emotional pressure, or humanistic moralizing. Neither of these satisfies the spiritual needs of the people, one being shallow, and the other futile. What rural people need, and want, is an objective, God-centered faith, in which the answers to the questions of reality become both reasonable and obtainable. As rural life becomes more secular, and therefore more uncertain, people are increasingly bored with stunts and attractions in the church in order to keep up attendance. What they want is a spiritual discipline, through the Church, into which they can enter, which will curb their own wills, and which will give some hope for a disciplined world. The Prayer Book, with its Church year and its directions for all the spiritual needs of life, gives the pattern for such discipline.

As rural life becomes more scientific and mechanistic, there is increasing need for art and beauty in worship, to offset the deadening effects of the machine age and mathematical precision. The Episcopal Church offers this through her architecture, music, symbols and liturgy. It is at this point, perhaps, that above all, the Episcopal Church is making her greatest contribution to rural life. Finally, as rural life becomes increasingly impersonal, there emerges the need for a more corporate expression of religion, a sense of community in the things of the spirit, a fellowship which binds mankind together in the common worship of God. This the Episcopal Church offers through her common service of worship. All of these things are inherent in the Episcopal Church, and all of the major Protestant Churches are, consciously or unconsciously, moving in this direction. Rural America needs the leadership of the Episcopal Church, both for what she can do herself in this field, and for the guidance she can give the other Church bodies in apprehending and doing these things themselves.

Successful Work

THE final consideration is whether the Episcopal Church really does succeed in town and country work, or whether the ideas concerning her contribution to rural religious life are mostly theoretical. It is true that in many places the Church has failed in the rural field. In some places today her town and country work is on the decline. In most of these instances, however, she has not backed up this work with her deepest interest, good leaders, and adequate resources. In many instances she has maintained a defeatist attitude towards rural work. In other cases she has looked askance on this type of work as being inferior in value to urban work. In many cases she has simply not had the necessary manpower and material resources to do an effective job. Where the Church has really faced the rural Church problem, taken it seriously, given the necessary resources for its life and work, and adapted her program to the actual conditions which obtained in each particular place, she has succeeded wonderfully well. There are numerous examples which can be given.

There are rural parishes in Virginia and Maryland, as well as other places, which have been doing successful work since before the Revolutionary War. Some of these parishes are modelled on county lines, and have been great influences in shaping the lives of all in those counties for many years. Several bishops of the Church have grown up in, and been ministers in, these parishes. There is the work of the late Rev. George Gilbert in Connecticut, unique in its nature, but very effective in the lives of its people. Mr. Gilbert was selected in a national poll as the model rural minister. There is the church in Tarboro, N. C., with its fringe of rural missions, where it has been demonstrated how a town church can also serve the surrounding country. There is the work at Valle Crucis, N. C., where the Church has been at work in a quiet mountain valley for over one hundred years. At Tracy City, Tenn., a coal mining town, a consecrated priest labored for fourteen years, with the result that the Church there is the largest and most influential in the community. There are the fields of rural work among the American Indians in Arizona and New Mexico, the Dakotas, and other reservations. There is successful rural work going on in Massachusetts, Central New York, Michigan, Minnesota, to name only a few sections. There is the growing influence of the Church at work around Roanridge, near Kansas City, Mo. And then there is the town and country work which comprises so much of the work of the Church in the dioceses and missionary districts in the west.

The Episcopal Church can do rural work, and can do it well. There is a great opportunity as well as responsibility awaiting the Church in this particular field. All she needs is the consciousness of this challenge, the necessary equipment in men and resources, and the backing of the whole Church, in order to take her due place and perform her particular task, to the glory of God and the service of rural people.

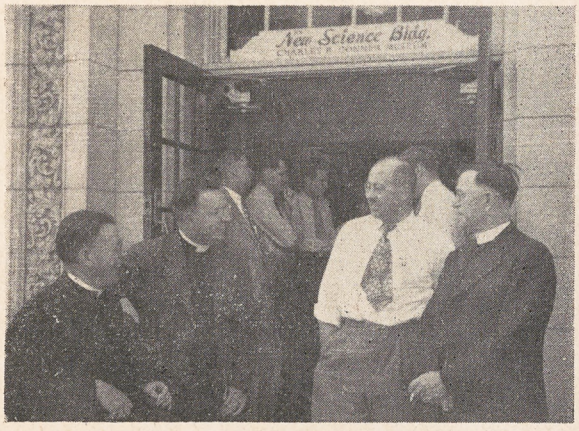
Rural Social Action

BY SAMUEL N. McCAIN, Jr.
Vicar of the Good Shepherd, North Kansas City

IN the past, our Church, through such groups as the Episcopal League for Social Action, has borne witness to the need for Christian social action in society. By and large, however, that witness has been applied to an urban economy and conceived of in terms of labor and management relations in the industrial field. Such an exclusive interest has meant that a good half of our economy dealing with rural production and rural mores has been neglected.

We are concerned with fair wages and just returns for city dwellers but unless similar thought is given to the welfare of our rural population we will continue to find our over-all economy unstable. It has been difficult for our historic rural culture, always predominantly conservative, to adjust itself to the concentration of wealth and people in the cities. Also, it has been difficult for the country people to find Church leadership that will help them to understand and meet their many problems. Today, however, we have some hope because men are dedicating themselves to the town-country ministry, our Seminaries are studying the rural scene and committees are rising in Church bodies to give direction in thought and action. Our total economy is not determined by industry nor farm alone but by the well-ordered functioning of both. Yet it is true to say that the basic commodity of life, food, depends on the efficient management of our nation's natural resources, which conservationalists prove are being depleted at an alarming rate. As the soil goes, so will our country, families and Church go.



What problems are there in the rural area that need Christian thought and action? The more immediate problems, many of which can be seen as threats in the urban area also, are the need of adequate care for the aged, proper education and recreation for the young, adequate housing, the movement away from the family sized farm, the relating of our rural communities to larger communities, and, of course, care of migrant laborers. The question of rural electrification, valley authorities (T.V.A.) and controlled farm prices in an uncontrolled economic field are also live issues that call for more Christian thought. The Church is concerned with such problems, but from the urban point-of-view. Now we are finding ourselves as a country Church.

The relationship of city and country is not something new or forced—the relationship is very real and natural. As the farmer sees that a strike in an agricultural equipment plant affects him, so must the city dweller realize that a farm boy's leaving school at sixteen affects him.

Rural Field Neglected

WE may wonder why it is that the country needs so much government money and personnel expended on it, when according to some reports the lot of the farmer has been bettered so decidedly these last years. Some inquiry will show that hardly more federal money is going to our rural areas than to urban centers. However, the social and intellectual needs of the rural field have been so long neglected that it takes a greater amount to develop the minimum standard of living. The variance between the city and rural standards can be shown in the variance in the number of hospital facilities, total school programs, facilities for caring for the aged, programs for welfare and relief. The institutions of most cities are not perfect but in many rural areas they are all but lacking. In the years ahead, despite a conservative drive for economies, we may expect increased aid going to the country.

The rural area is one of the basic sources of wealth in the United States. From it real things are produced. As we inspect this flow of wealth from the farm to the city, we see that the balance of trade lies with the city. There are sections of rural America, such as the wheat belt, where profits are great; there are other areas where the standard of living is touching rock-bottom. During the war the lot of the farmer was improved. So was it improved during the war years of 1916-1918. Our aim, as Christians, is not for a high standard of living in war years, but for a continuing prosperity for all men during years of peace.

Parsons Henry Hurd, Ray Clark & Sidney Morgan, all of Wyoming, chat with Dean Paul H. Landis, in shirtsleeves, at a school on rural work at Washington State University.

As we notice the wide spread between the price the farmer is paid for his produce and the price that the consumer pays, we know that something is wrong. Or when we see business speculating with the farmer's wheat, butter or eggs, we begin to wonder why it is that at one time the farmer's product is worth so much and then, at another time, though no labor has been expended, it is worth so much more. Obviously the farmer is not the one who is receiving the full worth of what he produces. Such speculation is a forceful argument for the need of more good cooperatives in the rural scene in America. The money that rightfully should go to the farm remains in the city, making the country money poor.

Money and leadership also leaves the farm in other ways. We can say that an educated youth is money invested. Many of the educated youth of the country go to the city because in a mechanized age there is not enough tangible work for all on the farm. This money and leadership must be returned to the land in other ways.

The country and city are one. Each must recognize its responsibilities toward the other. In an atomic age, when the urban culture is threatened with extinction, it is of vital necessity that all Church people recognize and understand the fundamental strengths and weaknesses of our contemporary rural culture.

Waiting Upon God

BY PHILIP H. STEINMETZ
Rector of the Ashfield Churches

THE work of the rural church and the city church are identical. Both involve worship and witness, glory to God and God's saving grace mediated to men. But since the people who do the work and those toward whom the second part is directed are fewer in number and somewhat more scattered in residence in rural parishes, we often think and speak of rural work as a special sort of business. Actually it is of a piece with the work of the Church everywhere.

The chief weakness of rural churches as in city churches is the feeble faith and dim vision of pastor and people which can only be corrected by a revival of religion in them. Let us remember that, as we plan strategy, laying our stress upon waiting upon God personally and in small groups rather than upon seeking some shift in personnel or organizing new programs.

Growth is the gift of God. It is a life-process. We have become so blinded by the productive power of machine industry and the methods which work there that we have forgotten that in the Church we are not operating a factory but a farm. The secret of success lies in making the soil as suitable as possible and then letting growth take place. Neither crops nor converts can be made by order or directive. They must be given time to grow. We plant and water, but God gives the increase.

The methods of cultivation are prayer and personal witness. Our Lord did not set up an organization with program, officers and financial backing. He trained a few men in prayer and in bearing witness and trusted to the contagion of their example to prepare the hearts of others for the working of God's grace. That working is not influenced by trademarks and brand-names. Congregationalists, Roman Catholics, Baptists, Methodists, Quakers, Unitarians and Episcopalians all receive grace and show the signs of life and growth. God is the giver, but he does not limit his gifts to items from one seed catalog. The rural Church and the younger Churches of Asia and Africa have discovered this fact and have a mission to city sophisticates in bringing it home to them. Federated churches, agreements on areas of work are far more common and the sense of common cause between Churches more vivid than in the city. After all you expect more horse sense and good farm practice in the country.

FINALLY, growth is a matter of quality as well as size. When you live in a small community in which you know literally everyone, it dawns on you that the Church may never be much larger. But it can improve in quality. When a plant starts from seed there is great increase in size for a while. But then begins the long process of ripening. Development is no longer in size but in depth of root and in ripeness of fruit. Time and patience are of the essence. Power and pressure are worthless. Long and patient pastorates alone can lead to such growth whether in city or country.

Surely there is food for much thought in these few insights which experience in rural work give us into the way God works in producing growth in those forms of life which are subservient to his will, the plants and animals. It is for us to be guided in the free exercise of our own wills to following his ways in plans for the conduct of his Church, rejoicing in the abundance of increase which he gives when we take time to find out how the soil should be prepared and have patience to wait for the growth which comes in his time and way.

EPISCOPAL RURAL CHURCH NEWS

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION BY MAIL

★ Members of the sixth province department of Christian education meeting at the synod in Billings, Montana, discussed a unique method of Christian education which has developed within the Episcopal Church—the Church school by mail. The fact that the mail always gets through is one on which alert, rural-minded Christian educators have capitalized for maintaining regular contact among isolated families. From the "Mountain Mission by Mail," developed by Mrs. Amy Little in New Hampshire, through southern, mid-west and western states, this work has met with notable success. Long distances make regular Church attendance impossible for many western families, just as does the lack of clergy.

However, receiving regular lessons, special cards, Christmas and birthday remembrances together with occasional visits from the nearest clergyman, the archdeacon, the bishop and the director of the Church school by mail, keeps these families within the Church no matter how isolated they may be. Perhaps one of the most successful of these schools is in Colorado, where Mrs. Saidie Boyd has brought the total enrollment to 1,417 families and 635 children this year. The Rev. A. M. Lukens has been appointed rural dean for the Bishop's scattered congregation. Children are prepared for baptism and confirmation by instruction received through the mail, and special services are held for them.

In addition to instruction for children, other forms of this technique have developed. In South Carolina, a Church school teacher's institute by mail reaches nearly 100 teachers each month. Also an altar guild by mail in that diocese sends regular study material to about 150 girls. In Massachusetts, "Home Prayers" has been developed by the Rev. Allen W. Clark. This weekly paper is a printed service and sermonette designed as a letter to be sent by local clergy to shut-ins and isolated persons and is used extensively. A pamphlet summarizing the various methods now being used effectively together with suggested course materials is being prepared through the division of domestic missions. It will be published early in 1949.

CHURCH SCHOOLS GIVE FOR ROANRIDGE

★ Children throughout the United States will give their birthday thank offering to build and furnish children's rooms in the new Roanridge rural Church community center in 1948-49. The need for adequate Christian education facilities and furnishings in the town and country areas of our nation is thus being pointed out to the Church. The plan for the Roanridge center calls for a model rural Episcopal Church with a parish house which will serve as a demonstration center to the nation.

Special free aids for presenting the birthday thank offering to Church schools have been prepared and are available through the department of Christian education of the National Council. They include birthday cards, offering envelopes, a picture folder entitled "The Church Comes to Roanridge" and a teacher's guide, "Roanridge Builds a Church."

A set of 18 kodachrome slides depicting this work may be purchased at five dollars per set from the division of audio-visual education, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

'48-'49 THANK OFFERING FOR NEW UNIT

At present, the community centers at Park College in Parkville but within a year or two most community activity will center at the Roanridge Farm which serves as a natural focal point for four distinct rural neighborhoods. The birthday thank offering for 1948-49 will go toward erection of a religious education unit in the Roanridge rural center.

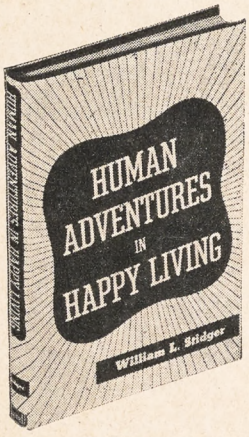
MASSACHUSETTS CLERGY REGISTER PROTEST



★ At its recent convention, the Massachusetts State Council of Churches protested the action of a hospital in that state which dropped from its staff four doctors who supported the Planned Parenthood Referendum. One of the leaders in this move was the Rev. Gardiner Day, rector of Christ Church, Cambridge.

BUFFALO CATHEDRAL HAS INSTITUTION

★ On Sunday, Nov. 21 at 4 p. m. there was a service of Institution in the Cathedral in Buffalo. The Bishop of the diocese, Lauriston Scaife had the service and instituted Samuel N. Baxter, Jr., as archdeacon of the diocese and also Sigfrid Sundin as canon missioner and Walter Lord and Philip Mosher as honorary canons of St. Paul's cathedral.

Dr. Frederick H. Allen, Pennsylvania psychiarist said, "No, more education and greater service to the community and world's causes in healthy minded women makes for better rather than worse mothers." Such was the discussion at a session on "The State of the World's Mental Health" conducted by two Philadelphia parishes, St. Paul's and St. Martin-in-the-Fields. Mr. Arthur Bunker and Miss Isobel Leighton of the International Committee for Mental Hygiene spoke. The Rev. Robert Morris, chaplain of Episcopal hospital, put the challenge to the church of nurturing family well-being as the antidote to mental breakdowns.

NEW JERSEY CHURCH INSTALLS WINDOWS

★ Grace Church in Nutley, celebrating its 75th anniversary, will have installed by the end of the year thirteen new memorial windows. The great west window, dividing point for all the other windows in the Church, was installed on November 28. Its theme is the "Great Commission," showing Our Lord giving the commission prior to His ascension, and with surrounding panels of scenes from the Acts of the Apostles. The "Great Commission" was executed by Charles J. Connick Associates, and the twelve other windows by Len Howard. Five of the windows by Howard, which are not yet in place, will be installed in December, according to the Rev. L. Howard Hinrichs, rector.

THE NEW BOOKS

Excellent Good *Fair

* * Some Thoughts on University Education. By Sir Richard Livingstone. Cambridge University Press. $1.00.

The Vice-Chancellor of Oxford University seeks an answer to the problem of higher education which, having lost leveling influence of the religious subjects, fails increasingly to prepare men and women for a full life. "Education continually tends to degenerate into technique, and the life tends to go out of all subjects when they become technical." The essay is a fair criticism of all modern education at higher levels, giving a good insight especially into the problems faced in the English schools. But he finds, as do many modern preachers, that it is easier to state the problem than to suggest a satisfying solution. His answer is that he would replace the "great texts" of the Harvard report on education with a required study of Plato's "Republic." Though Plato did title that work, "Oh Goodness," yet some will doubt that a study of that work will give a complete preparation for a full life, thus solving the difficulties facing our schools. —S. ROBERT WORTHINGTON
Executive Vice-president, Church Pension Fund

Your editorial (Witness Nov. 4, 1948) mentions that the cost of living makes inadequate most of the pensions at present being paid by The Church Pension Fund. It goes on to say "The fault would seem to lie with the philosophy of the Church in its pension plan. It has been guided by a system of actuarially sound fund."

I respectfully suggest that the difficulty is created by the inflated cost of living and not because the system is actuarially sound.

Everyone may wish that the pensions could be higher, particularly the smaller pensions. Certainly the Trustees of the Fund want it.

There is a perspective that must be brought to bear on the question:

1) This Church earmarks for pensions a higher share of its income than any other Church, except one with a non-actuarial system, whose pensions are much lower than those of our Church.

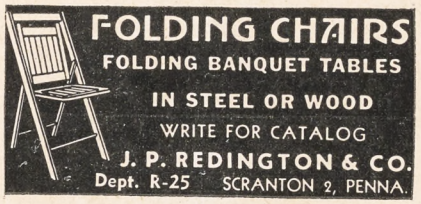
2) The pensions are higher than those being provided currently by any of the other ministerial pension systems.

3) If the Church had not adopted its actuarial system, the pensions would be not only smaller than they are but also hopelessly limited and uncertain for the future.

4) When related to living costs the present pensions are much more favorable than the pensions paid by the Fund in the period (temporary) of inflated living costs following the first World War.

MISS MARGARET SMITH
Churchwoman of San Diego

The Bishop of New York must be a very remarkable man. I refer of course to the story of the week (Nov. 4) with the "before" and "after" picture of that beautiful summer home he built. It it fitting of course that a Bishop of the Church should also be a carpenter and it did something for me to learn that the Bishop of our largest diocese spends his vacation in useful and productive work rather than on a golf course or at the seashore.



MARTIN SCHLESINGER
Layman of Detroit

I have moved from New York to Detroit. For months the N. Y. Edison Co. has been advertising for laborers at 75c an hour. I went to their office expecting to see a group of seedy, broken-down men, but the room was crowded with young, hearty fellows, fully three-fourths of whom would easily pass for college men. I did not get a job: there were restrictions on age—none over 40, and this for 75c an hour in these days of high living costs. I know of no better way to undermine a man's confidence or his health than these tests for the jobless.

Yet somehow the notion struck me that these ads were not solely for hiring men. They could have got all they wanted in half a day. This must have been a survey. Anyhow the first person I discussed this with told me that a friend of his had been tipped off that it was that. The word "survey" suggests something noble and lofty carried on by a university. But from what I have seen of unemployment it suggests to me a purpose that is just too base to set down on paper.

So here I am in Detroit employed in an automobile factory at simpler work and a higher rate of pay than I have ever received in my life. My number here is 294,297. That means that I am named after a car part.

As soon as my baggage with my "meeting clothing" arrives I am going to hear your dramatic editor preach. If he preaches as well as he writes and still does not penetrate his congregation, then that's what's wrong with the Detroit, U. S. A., of our day.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Leprosy Work Carried On All Over the World

Patterns Have Become Sharper During Year Says President of American Mission

BY
WILLIAM JAY SCHIEFFELIN
President, American Mission to Lepers

★ As I reflect on the world-wide program of the American Mission to Lepers during the past year, and back over the forty-one years during which I have been its president, I think I can see some patterns that have been forming for a long time, but that have become this year sharper than ever before.

There is, first, the care of the patient as a whole human being. Of course this kind of care was being given in missionary "asylums" before any medical treatment was known, and through the years it has grown in recognition and daily practice in many leprosy institutions of the world; but in many of them it has been gravely slighted, and to the frightened public of every country it has been wholly unknown. They have hardly regarded leprosy patients as human beings at all!

I have seen this situation change, and never more sharply than this year. In many parts of the world and in the several circles where leprosy work is done — missionary, government, research — I see leprosy patients being more justly recognized as persons than ever before. They are being woven into the communal life of farm villages. They are being allowed the largest feasible contact with their families. They are being brought to Jesus Christ and into his Church. They are even being designated by words that will spare them the wounded feelings and the sense of degradation that have hitherto haunted their lives. They are being saved in every possible way from loneliness, fear, mental darkness and despair. And these purposes are being recognized as a main function of a leprosy institution, equal to the medical function.

There is evident, second, a more informed and discriminating medical care of the patient. It is being recognized that thousands of patients because of the type or stage of leprosy they have, are not dangerous to the community and—except for their own protection and for closer observation—need not be segregated at all. They can live in their own homes, learn to safeguard their families from even the fractional percentage of risk that may be incurred, and receive successful treatment in clinics. Even in an uneducated population the same effect can be obtained and is being obtained — in India, for example. There village clinics are being developed with night segregation only: that is, sleeping quarters are provided where the patients can be apart from their families at night, though working in their own fields and otherwise living in their own homes. This is a happier form of segregation than that provided in even the best run agricultural colony.

A third development is the emergenc of sulfa drugs in leprosy treatment. I have seen new treatments for leprosy emerge one after another, each tried and found wanting, each disappearing again into obscurity. Only the first, chaulmoogra oil, has held its own for twenty-five years or more. Even it has never been acclaimed as a cure, has been repeatedly challenged, and within the last decade has been rejected by some authorities. Other treatments have come and gone very quickly. Within the last six years, only the sulfones have stood test after test and in the North and South American leprosaria have been accepted, not as cures, but only as the most promising yet known. In Asia and Africa not enough testing has been done. We have been fooled so many times that we should go slow. Let us be sure. Let us go on testing, but let us not, as we have before, break hearts and cruelly shatter hopes.

Nevertheless, speaking now as a reporter, not as a critic, I must say that as in the general care of patients, so in the use of specific medicines, there is more informed and discriminating practice—and more apparent hope—this year, than in any preceding year.

Through all these particular developments, the unique contribution of Christian missions persists, with its universal and timeless quality. In every missionary colony we support, and in our evangelical ministry to givernment colonies, the living Christ moves, abides and performs his recurring miracles.

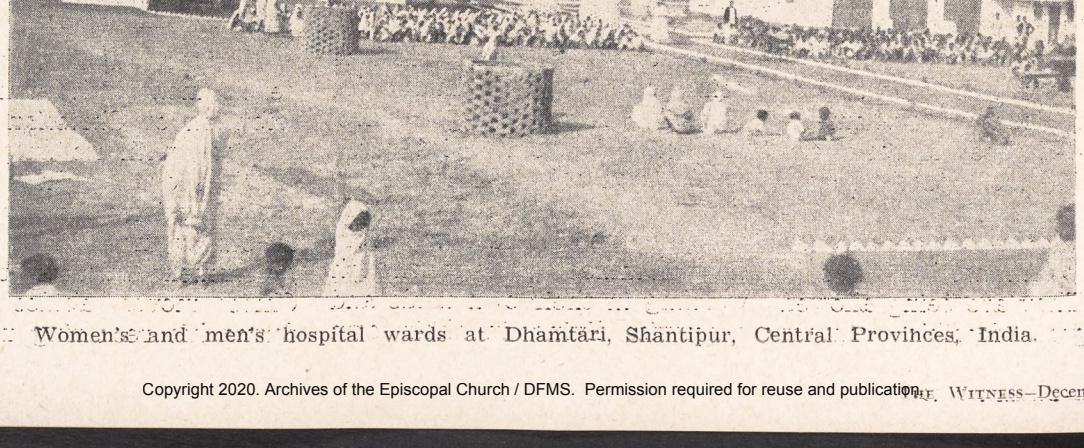
EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

ST. TIMOTHY'S COLONY IS COMPLETED

★ Patients at the Episcopal leprosy colony in Liberia—associated since its founding in 1936 with St. Timothy's Hospital, Cape Mount—have been moved from their Massateen Island homes to the colony's new location near Mbaloma. Having been settled on 500 high, fertile acres, 35 miles inland from Cape Mount, the colonists are rapidly clearing land for the planting of crops.

During his recent visit in New York, Bishop Bravid W. Harris reported that between 40 and 50 patients are now in residence at the colony and that the mission personnel as well as the patients are happy at the colony's long anticipated relocation.



Long-standing negotiations with the Liberian government resulted, last year, in the deeding of a 500-acre land tract to the Episcopal mission for a leprosy colony, and a $1500 annual government subsidy for the maintenance of its patients. The American Mission to Lepers provides a $2,000 annual subsidy and the Episcopal mission provides medical services, a spiritual ministry, and other needs of the patients.

Houses of sturdy native construction have been erected on the new colony site, according to Bishop Harris, and the farm program is well under way. Colonists will soon be enjoying the fruits of their own agricultural efforts: harvests of rice, cassava, eddo, and a wide variety of other fruits and vegetables which can now be grown. This will be in pleasant contrast to life at Massateen Islands, where the sandy soil was pitifully unproductive and failed to provide even the necessary elements of good native housing construction. Due to the lack of clay in the soil, homes of the patients were regularly washed away by heavy seasonal rains.

Medical services are carried on as before by a trained lay medical worker, Thomas Haines, under the supervision of Dr. A. J. Christensen of St. Timothy's. Religious services are conducted regularly in the newly built chapel by the Rev. Packard L. Okie from the nearby mission station at Mboloma.

MEMORIAL PLANNED FOR FATHER FITTS

★ New church doors, renovated porch and narthex will be given as a memorial to the Rev. Frederick W. Fitts by friends and parishioners of St. John's Church, in Roxbury Crossing, Massachusetts. Father Fitts was widely known throughout our Church for his development of the English ceremonial for the liturgy of this Church. During his long rectorship of 37 years he was also chairman of the standing committee of the Massachusetts diocese and delegate to the General Convention. Contributions to the memorial fund are now being received, according to the Rev. Warren McKenna, present rector of St. John's.

INDUSTRIAL PROGRAM AT NANCHANG

★ The Nanchang Leprosarium is a long stride nearer its goal of self-support, the Rev. Kimber H. K. Den, honorary superintendent of the colony, reports in a letter received by Raymond P. Currier, executive secretary of the American Mission to Lepers. The construction of a brick kiln and the inauguration of a brick-making program is yielding 100,000 bricks a week and excellent therapeutic results among the patients.

Patients working on straw and motal for the making of bricks at the brick kiln factory at Nanchang, China.

"Our industrial project has been carried out with results such as I had never anticipated," Kimber Den writes. "I am more deeply moved than I can say when I see our poor patients working so hard and with such enthusiasm for their support. Even those with broken fingers and crippled legs are doing something in the brick kiln factory, such as piling the bricks, cutting fuel and straw, and carrying water."

The brick kiln factory, begun a little less than a year ago, was the gift of American friends through the American Mission to Lepers. It constitutes the first major step in the reconstruction of an industrial-agricultural program which will eventually make the colony self-supporting, in a large measure, and provide vocational and physical activities of therapeutic value in the treatment of leprosy patients. Incidentally the new brick factory will bring nearer the possibility of the early rebuilding of the bomb-destroyed Nanchang chapel.

Another recent development at Nanchang is the construction of a mechanical water pump, needed to supply large quantities of water called for in the brick-making process. Up to recently patients carried water for drinking purposes and their own personal use from a creek a mile distant from the colony buildings. Brick making required the use of several tons of water daily—much more than could be carried in the usual way; and by necessity a well, costing $250 American currency, was constructed. Describing this aspect of the program, which was not covered by funds budgeted for the industrial program, Kimber Den writes: "It was an adventure of faith, for I knew not where the money would come from. But I believe the good Lord will never fail us."

LOUISIANA ELECTS G. M. JONES

★ Girard M. Jones, rector of St. Andrew's, New Orleans, was elected bishop of Louisiana on November 17. Ten men received votes, but practically all of them went to Mr. Jones and the Rev. Robert A. Magill, rector at Lynchburg, Va. On the first ballot the vote was Jones, 25 clergy and 14½ lay votes; Magill, 11 and 15. Jones was elected on the second ballot with 32 and 22½, to Magill's 12 and 16. The bishop-elect has indicated that he will accept the election.

SOUND COLOR FILMS ON LEPROSY

★ Both dealing with persons who had leprosy and lived to give effective service to their fellow sufferers, two films on leprosy in sound and color have been recently released, according to Raymond P. Currier, executive secretary of the American Mission to Lepers.

"The African Prince," produced by Alan Shilin, is the life story of a Nigerian tribal king's son who came against his will to the Garkida leprosy colony and gradually came to accept the Christian life. Narrated by House Jameson, filmed in the famed Garkida leprosy colony of the Church of the Brethren in Nigeria.

"Mary Reed," produced by Crusader Films and starring Hazel Keener in the leading role, is the story of the early years in the life of Mary Reed, pioneer Methodist missionary worker among leprosy victims. Having contracted leprosy in her initial term as a general missionary, Mary Reed dedicated her subsequent years — more than a half century—to the relief of those with leprosy in India.

At the present time "Mary Reed" is being shown only in community-wide, church council, or multi-church sponsored gatherings. "The African Prince" is available to churches at a small rental fee or voluntary offering.

"SPIRITUAL FOUNDATION" LACKING IN G.O.P.

★ These were the sentiments of Charles P. Taft, leading Episcopal layman and president of the Federal Council. In addressing the 75th anniversary convention of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, he emphasized that the Republican party will have to restore the "human spiritual foundation laid by Abraham Lincoln and rebuild on the 'square deal' of Theodore Roosevelt before it will return to power."

NEW CHRISTIANS AT KUSATSU

★ Writing from the government Leprosy Sanatorium at Kusatsu, Japan, the Rev. M. S. Matsumura reports, in a recent letter to the American Mission to Lepers, that the "Episcopal Church in the sanatorium is gradually increasing its number of Christians" and that by Christmas, they are hoping, "there shall be over a hundred new converts.

"All Christians are doing their utmost to abide by the Christian doctrine," Mr. Matsumura writes further. "They often bring their non-Christian friends along to church, hoping the latter will someday become Christians.

"Please pray for us all; we in turn always are praying for your welfare."

Though the historic Episcopal Church ministry to leprosy victims at Kusatsu, begun by Miss Cornwall-Leigh, came virtually to an end in 1940, Christian communities in that and other leprosy colonies have continued to thrive throughout the war and postwar years.

CHURCH COOPERATION ON DISPLACED PERSONS

The Rev. Dr. Almon R. Pepper, director of the National Council's department of Christian social relations, has written to the bishops, to chairmen of diocesan departments of social relations, and to social relations chairmen of diocesan branches of the Woman's Auxiliary, on the subject of resettlement of displaced persons. It is pointed out that there is work to be done in securing locally resettlement opportunities for displaced persons; that the required blanks may be had from the national department at 281 Fourth Avenue, New York 10. N. Y.; and that blanks, when filled, are to be returned to the department, not to Church World Service. The department of Christian social relations of the National Council will forward the applications for admission to Church World Service. A parish priest may act as the certifying agent for an individual (for employment and housing). "If you know of any people in your diocese who have relatives eligible for entry under this program, they may use the blank supplied for that purpose. Priority is given to such applications."

BOOST INDIAN WORK IN ARIZONA

★ An encouraging announcement is made by the Bishop of Arizona in that a full time worker has come into residence among the Mavasu Indians; this worker being Miss Letitia Viele, for many years a worker representing the Christian Social Service department of the Diocese of Western New York among the Seneca Indians in that diocese. Miss Viele will be the only person resident in the village of Supai other than the Indian families who live there. She will reside in the government teacher's residence until the completion of her living quarters and the arrival of the full equipment for these quarters in the quonset chapel, St. Andrew's, which was flown into the canyon by helicopter last April. The Rev. Robert P. Frazier is directing Church work among the Havasu Indians.

DEAN GIBSON ACCEPTS

★ Dean R. F. Gibson, Jr., of the theological school of the University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn., has accepted his election to be suffragan bishop of Virginia.

After a recent confirmation service the congregation had their picture taken with the bishop and the clergy. The place is at the government Leprosarium at Kusatsu, Japan.

CHURCH COOPERATION IN MASSACHUSETTS

★ When St. John's Episcopal Church in Ashfield, Mass., was facing the change of vicars in the early part of 1945 it was learned that the Congregational Church in the same town was also seeking a new pastor. By serving other nearby Episcopal churches a vicar could find an adequate means of support, although St. John's was not able to pay more than $1500 per year by itself. But the Congregational church, capable of paying $1800 per year, was not able to find a man to meet its needs at that figure.

These two churches have buildings across from each other on the street which runs through the center of the town. Ashfield itself is scattered over a farm area in the Berkshires and populated by approximately 1,000 persons. There are no other churches in the town. The Roman Catholic people find it necessary to go to nearby Conway to attend mass. Neither Bishop Lawrence nor the vicar were keen about spreading the ministry into another parish and forcing the vicar and his family to be members of two distinct communities. It would be better, they thought, to meet the pagan forces head-on in one community than simply to "fence with" evil in two communities.

The Episcopalians and the Congregationalists had always been on the most congenial of terms. There were no distinct groups in either local church, separated beyond any hope of fusion. On the other hand, the two churches did not wish to "federate" and become "one" for purposes of worship and administration. The Congregational denomination might have non-Congregational ministers in their associations. Consequently neither the local church nor higher authorities would object to an Episcopal minister preaching in their church.

The result was that the Rev. Philip H. Steinmetz candidated in the Congregational Church, submitted to the usual examination, and was regularly called to be the pastor of the church. Whereupon Bishop Lawrence appointed Mr. Steinmetz to the vicar of St. John's. The Steinmetz family set up residence in the Episcopal vicarage and he became the only minister in the community.

At first the two churches paid $1500 each toward the minister's salary of $3000 per year. However, the Congregational Church voluntarily arranged to pay $1800 and the Episcopal Church to pay $1200, thus reflecting the difference in the size of the two congregations and making unnecessary Mr. Steinmetz' work in a neighboring parish. The next year St. John's increased its share to $1300, making a total salary now of $3100, plus vicarage and plus pension.

When Mr. Steinmetz was asked if he expected a definite union to result he explained that this was not a matter of church union. Federation is economically impossible, dissolution and absorption of either congregation is not likely. He said, "This is a program of mission strategy. We are trying to Christianize the community with a united program."

Certain factors of success are inherent in the Ashfield project: 1) There are no extreme differences in "churchmanship"; 2) social, economic and cultural differences are not apparent in the community; 3) the minister is adaptable; 4) essential respect for cooperation with both denominations is present; 5) no strict agreement has been made, flexibility of plan is desirable.

ECUMENICAL NEWS

COOPERATIVE FACULTY IN DIVINITY SCHOOL

A faculty of divinity operated on a cooperative basis by Canadian Protestant bodies has been established at McGill University, Montreal. It will be sponsored chiefly by the United Church of Canada and the Church of England in Canada. Head of the faculty is the Rev. James Sutherland Thomson, 56-year-old Scottish-born clergyman, who was for some years general manager of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and afterwards served for 11 years as president of the University of Saskatchewan. Dr. Cyril James, principal and vice-chancellor of McGill, declared that "the inclusion of theology among the faculties is a welcome opportunity for giving practical expression to the importance of spiritual truth within the range of learned studies presented by a modern university."

He added that "this new emphasis on the importance of theology is full of promise for the higher education of youth and the training for the holy ministry." The Presbyterian Church in Canada is the only major Protestant body in the country which declined to co-sponsor the new faculty. However, a large section of the Presbyterian clergy and laity is said to favor the plan.

CHRISTIAN LABOR UNIONS LIST 2,700,000

The International Federation of Christian Labor Unions has a membership of more than 2,700,000 in eight countries. This figure was attained despite the fact that Christian Unions have been banned in Poland, Hungary, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Lithuania and Spain, it was said. The membership is split up as follows: French Christian Workers Federation, 800,000; Catholic Association of Italian Workers, 1,000,000; Belgian Union of Catholic Workers, 429,000; Alliance of Dutch Catholic Workers, 251,000; National Union of Dutch Christian Workers, 131,300; Canadian Federation of Catholic Workers, 70,000; National Union of Swiss Christian Workers, 40,000; Swiss Evangelical Union of Workers, 12,000; and the Luxemburg Union of Christian Workers, 3,000. PLAN CHINESE CHURCH IN PHILADELPHIA

Plans for the erection of a $100,000 Chinese Christian Church and center for the use of all persons of Chinese birth and descent have been authorized in Philadelphia by six Protestant denominations. The venture is sponsored by Baptist, Evangelical and Reformed, Congregational, Methodist, Presbyterian and Episcopal churches in the area. Called to be pastor of the new church is the Rev. Gilbert Lum, 25, a graduate of San Francisco Seminary. He will be assisted by Miss Maribelle Mackenzie, a graduate of the Baptist Institute for Christion Workers.

NEW MERGER PROCEDURE AGREED UPON

Basic agreement has been reached between the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Church for proposed union in 1949. A committee of 50 representing both denominations recently announced their confidence in the union, which will bring into the merged church 2,000,000 members. At the meeting it was also disclosed that 67.3 percent of the Congregational churches have now approved the union.

MISSIONARIES WITHDRAW FROM SUCHOW

A large-scale withdrawal of Protestant and Catholic missionary personnel has taken place from Communist-beleagured Suchow, strategic northern Kiangsu rail junction. Only Protestant missionaries believed left in the city are Mr. and Mrs. Deane Walter, of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., and F. A. Brown, Norfolk, Va., of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. (Southern). All aged and infirm Catholic missionaries have been ordered evacuated from the threatened city, but about fifty priests and nuns have remained behind. This group consists mainly of refugees from outlying districts. Two Presbyterian missionaries —Miss Florence Logan, of San Francisco, and Miss Minnie Witmer, of Mt. Joy, Pa.—are still at their posts in Paoting, capital of Hopeh province, from which government forces have been ordered withdrawn.

PROTESTANTS DECLINE IN IRELAND

School statistics issued by the Northern Ireland government indicate that Ulster's Roman Catholic population is increasing steadily, while the Protestant denominations are declining. At the beginning of the year, 73,917 children were enrolled in Catholic primary and special schools, as compared with 68,959 in 1922, an increase of 4,958.

In the same period, figures for Protestant denominations showed Presbyterian enrollments had declined from 66,665 to 52,463 and Church of Ireland from 51,743 to 47,389. Methodists reported an increase of school enrollments from 6,648 to 7,232, and enrollments of other Protestant groups rose from 4,370 to 5,014.

NEWS OF OTHER CHURCHES

CALL FOR END OF COMMITTEE

The abolition of the Committee on Un-American Activities was called for by the National Women's League of the United Synagogue of America, meeting in Atlantic City. The delegates charged in their resolution that the Committee had violated democratic principles "by intimidation and sensational publicity against individuals." The convention also went on record as opposing "any move in the U. N. to reverse its policy with regard to Franco Spain" and urged President Truman to follow "the non-military tradition" of appointing civilians to high government posts.

Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of New York also blasted at the Committee in an address in Newark. He said it was out of discredit to Protestantism and that it is "singularly strange" that the un-American Committee "has been silent concerning the fascist threat to our freedom." "Reactionary forces," he continued, "know that Protestantism is demanding social justice and racial brotherhood. Some of these forces who are primarily interested in keeping their own special privileges rather than establishing justice seek to block reasonable reform by attacking those who would establish righteousness."

KINSEY REPORT CRITICIZED

"The Kinsey report has planted the seeds of a movement which may destroy all concepts of moral conduct," said Msgr. Maurice S. Sheeby, professor at the Catholic University. "With all its array of tables," he charged, "the report is a most unscientific work. It is such because it went to institutions chiefly for its data, because its sampling method was wrong, because it trespassed upon the right to privacy which precluded sensitive people from testifying, and because Dr. Kinsey does not know how to use statistics."

"As soon as we start living as we think other people live, without regard to God's claim on human conduct, then, in the name of pseudo-science, we deal a dastardly blow to the dignity of man and God's purpose in our lives," he stated. "The report suggests that if one has not some hidden or overt means of sexual expression he is beyond the pale of normality."

WELFARE DEPARTMENT URGES CHAPEL

The state welfare department of Wisconsin has proposed that $125,000 of the state's tax funds be used to provide worship facilities for the inmates of the two principal state prisons. "Religion plays an important part in the individual to attain self direction in a constructive way. The importance of religion in dealing with our young adults and adult offenders cannot be too strongly stressed and brings us to the realization of the absolute necessity for a church edifice which would contribute an atmosphere of spiritual strength, conducive to worship and a desire for right living."

SUGGESTS NEGRO IN CABINET

"I would like to see the President appoint at least one Negro to his cabinet," said Pastor A. Powell Davies, of All Souls Unitarian Church in Washington to his congregation. "It would be a demonstration to the world that we mean what we say when we speak of the equal rights of free men and of the glories of democracy."

SUPREME COURT CRITICIZED

Roman Catholic archbishops and bishops of the U. S., in annual meeting in Washington, expressed hope that the "novel interpretation" of the United States Supreme Court in the McCollum case "will in due process be revised." They said the founders of this country had, by the wording of the first amendment, meant there would be "no official Church for the country as a whole, no preferment of one religion over another by the federal government—and at the same time no interference by the federal government in the Church-state relations of the individual states."

OFFICIAL APPROVES BIBLE STUDY

Teaching the King James version of the Bible from an historical, narrative, biographical or literary standpoint, without reference to any religious sect, has not been outlawed by any ruling of the Supreme Court stated Albert A. Carmichael, attorney general for Alabama in an opinion. A. R. Meadows, state superintendent of education, asked for the opinion in connection with a plan for non-sectarian Bible instruction as a course in literature, and not as a course in religious education.

BAPTISTS RESOLVE TO FIGHT KLAN

Baptists of South Carolina are out to fight the Ku Klux Klan. Meeting in convention they also opposed the teaching of Roman Catholicism in the public schools and reaffirmed their opposition to the presence of Myron C. Taylor (an Episcopalian) as the President's special representative at the Vatican.

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

PROFESSOR HROMADKA WARNS CZECHS

Prof. Joseph L. Hromadka, dean of the seminary at the University of Prague, an outstanding leader at Amsterdam, recently addressed Protestants of his country on "the present problems of the Church." He declared that Christians, while they need not protest against social, economic and political changes, "must prepare for the moment when we must cry aloud: Touch not that which is for us the supreme authority.

"We are all subject to the authority of truth, justice and the judgment of God," he said. "People have the intelligence to realize whether we speak to them in the name of the living God or from economic or political self-interest masquerading as religion."

Asserting that economic and social changes are no solution to the "ultimate questions of man," Prof. Hromadka said that "even in a classless society the problem of man's relation to man will remain unchanged.

"There will be lying, unfaithfulness, envy, pride," he said. "Who will be able to fight against these? Socialists follow their illusions and will not take these circumstances into account. The time will come when they themselves will begin to seek for people who know how to free man from the final bonds enslaving him in inhumanity. And it is then that the Christian message on sin and the need of forgiveness will once more take on its supreme importance."

FINNISH LUTHERANS ON MARRIAGE

A strict stand against the remarriage of divorced persons was taken by the Evangelical Lutheran Church of Finland, meeting at Turko for their assembly which takes place every five years. The new Church law is that no divorced person, whose former spouse is still living, may have a church wedding, nor is a clergyman allowed to bless such a marriage following a civil ceremony. The new law will have to be approved by the Finnish parliament. The present law is just the opposite: ministers are compelled to marry all couples who wish an ecclesiastical marriage, without taking into consideration whether they are divorced or not. The assembly also approved by a vote of 87 to 24 a law which will permit laymen to participate in the election of bishops. As things now stand the Church is run nearly 100 per cent by the clergy.

RELIGIOUS BROADCASTS ARE RESTRICTED

Religious broadcasts are not allowed in Canada after 5 p.m. Sundays, by order of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. It has brought a flood of protests from churchmen of all denominations, who point out that it is an indication of the commercialism of radio. One spokesman for a Church group declared that protests had been made to the CBC governors, but that no attention had been paid to them. They are therefore now appealing to the acting prime minister.

TURKISH MISSIONARIES ARE OPPOSED

Turkish religious newspapers are opposed to "the Chrsitianization of the Islamic faith." One paper said Christian missionaries have been evangelizing ever since American aid to Turkey first began. "They believe they can buy up Turkish faith with money," according to this paper.

CAPITALISM STAND SOFT-PEDALED

American and Canadian delegates to the Amsterdam Conference this summer soft-pedaled the condemnation of capitalism, according to J. R. Mutchmore, secretary of the United Church's department of social service, speaking at the annual meeting of the Canadian Council of Churches. "The Church must not be a defender of things as they are, nor a mere spectator of events. Let us remember there are a million members of organized labor in this country and if they are to grapple with the content of of our message, it must be put in terms of plain and common speech. Then we must go out and give witness to it. We must make the gospel come alive in terms of men's needs in the world today."

Canon W. H. Davidson, of Montreal, said that sometimes Church pronouncements are phrased in such language that the ordinary people do not know what they mean. "Let us," he urged, "put them in journalese."

BRITISH CHURCH COUNCIL REJECTS LOBBY

The idea of a lobby to work for legislation favored by Churches has been rejected by the British Council of Churches. Instead a list of members of Parliament, both houses, is being compiled of those considered sympathetic to Church aims.

ARCHBISHOP OF SEVILLE IS ALARMED

Pedro Cardinal Segua y Saenz, archbishop of Seville, has warned Catholics of the danger of Protestantism in Spain. He said it could be met only by intensifying religious instruction and spreading Catholic culture among the masses of the people.

Our Bounden Duty

WHERE or how did so many Protestant Christians get the idea that it doesn't matter whether or not they go to church? That only Roman Catholics "have to" go because they are taught it is a sin not to go?

Well, if the Church is what we believe it is, and if we meant our baptismal and confirmation vows, then it is a sin to sit at home on Sunday morning, to ignore and neglect the chief work of the Church. By our absence we are casting our vote with the indifferent and neutral who, although enjoying the spiritual benefits won long since by the Christian Church, still do nothing whatsoever for the cause. We are refusing to do what the Prayer Book says is our bounden duty, "to worship God every Sunday in his Church." We are weakening the growth and influence of the Church in our life and in our community.

The Church stands for the supreme reality of life, the very secret of our existence, whose name is Love. On the Lord's day, the household of faith gathers together to acknowledge and worship this God and hear his word. This is the chief work of the Church, and one absolutely necessary if the Christian faith is to remain a vital power in human life, our best hope and highest truth. For any man who calls himself a Christian to separate himself from the fellowship and its divine service is indeed a sin, if sin means self will and disobedience.

We may argue that we can worship God elsewhere, but, in all honesty, do we? And, even if we do, do we not owe something we can never pay back to the sacred institution by virtue of which we have inherited the Christian faith? Let there be a revival of discipline among us, a new loyalty to the Church, and our religion will begin to come alive on the personal level as well as on the corporate level.

"QUOTES"

THE world today takes little note of the Church because the Church is much—too much—like the world. Let the Church begin again to be like Jesus Christ, and the world will take note. It may take note by way of dislike and active opposition. But that would be only a further fulfillment of the life of the Church as the body of the Incarnate Saviour. From the hatred of the world the Church has nothing to fear, since it knows already that on the far side of Good Friday lies Easter Day.

—BISHOP STEPHEN C. NEILL, Assistant to the Archbishop of Canterbury, in address to the Canadian Council of Churches.

A Higher Realism

IT is the scientists who have become the prophets—often of doom—today and who are using many of the words found in the Collect for the first Sunday in Advent. They speak of "the last day" and of "judgment," but it appears that the market place people heed them no more than they did Jeremiah of old. We are told "there is no military defense against atomic bombs—none is expected"—so peace-time military training is instituted.. We are warned that "preparedness is futile, and if attempted will ruin the structure of our social order"—so we have an estimate for armament for 1949 "held down" to 15 billion dollars with the brass hats clamoring for 32 billion. They point out that even atomic bombs are undoubtedly already dwarfed in destructiveness by weapons of germ warfare—so we continue to challenge our rivals with our boasting of our military superiority.

The scientists plead with us for "a higher realism which recognizes that our fate is joined with our fellowmen throughout the world"—and that is only a different way of saying "give us grace that we may cast away the works of darkness and put upon us the armour of light." That is exactly what we must not only pray but work for in Advent and always: a higher realism. We are wandering in the midst of delusion and despair, our diplomatic destiny apparently directed by military-minded leaders whose only theory is "get tough." Their tragic mistakes are being brought into bold and alarming relief; see what is happening in Greece, Palestine and China today—where they have guessed wickedly wrong.

It was a trifle embarrassing to read recently in a secular newspaper the words of a well-known commentator (not a Christian, by the way); "big boom-boom is not the only force which counts in the world. Moral forces also count . . . and we are losing the moral battle."

Advent is a call to a fight, a moral fight—to put on the armor of light—that we in America seem perversely blind to. Time is running out and judgment is upon us but we can win if we will only take our prayer seriously and put as much energy into waging peace as we are now putting into preparing for war.

One Colony -- A Look Backward

By George J. Lapp

IN 1899 and 1900 a devastating famine ravished the heart of India. Along with other famine sufferers, leprosy victims also wandered into the relief centers established by our missionaries at Dhamtari, in the central provinces of India. The city municipality implemented plans for feeding about 75 leprosy victims in kitchens, but when—at the close of the famine—these were closed and an effort was made to raise money locally for the support of these unfortunate sufferers, only a small sum could be raised.

The local authorities submitted an appeal to Bishop J. A. Ressler, founder of our American Mennonite Mission, to organize and manage an asylum for the leprosy victims who had formed a small colony in a mangoe grove at the outskirts of Dhamtari. They had built themselves grass and mat huts and were living in abject squalor, without supervision. Bishop Ressler, giving the matter due consideration, acceded to the request laid before him.

After taking over the organization and administration of the newly founded leprosy asylum Bishop Ressler in 1901 communicated with the Mission to Lepers in India and the East, Edinburg, Scotland. This body promptly responded with a remittance of fifty pounds sterling for the immediate needs of the patients and the promise of an annual grant of 120 pounds with the condition that the American Mennonite Mission be given free access to the patients for the purpose of giving them Christian instruction and that a Christian caretaker be placed in charge. The Malguzar of Dhamtari kindly gave to the mission a deed of gift for a plot of ground where the asylum was first built—the very same plot where the homeless unfortunates had formed a colony and had lived in the mangoe grove.

Buildings were needed to comfortably house the inmates. Able bodied patients were employed to make bricks and as workers in wood. By 1903 more than one hundred had been admitted to the asylum. By 1904 wards for the inmates, a small chapel, and a medical dispensary had been constructed from local contributions and from grants of money from the Mission to Lepers. By the close of 1905 there were 145 inmates. The missionaries in charge and their assistants attended to the physical and spiritual needs of the leprosy victims and also treated them for their ailments as best they could. Until that time Leperine, as it was then known, was not available.

Up to April of 1916 no special treatment for leprosy had been administered. The Rockefeller Foundation, as a result of a series of experiments, recommended the use of Chaulmoogra oil by injection. It had been used with considerable success in the Philippine Islands. Our medical missionary, Dr. C. D. Esch, started the treatments with nine patients. They soon showed decided improvement.

During the following years the treatment became general in all the leprosy homes throughout India and in our asylum all inmates were urged to submit to it—with the result that a few cases became symptom free. This revived the hope of the less advanced cases that they might again become healthy and return to their home communities. Previously they had come to die. Now they came to be helped and possibly cured. The number of inmates increased by leaps and bounds. A number began to pass through the institution practically restored to normal health again, and happy.

It now became obvious that another site for an enlarged institution must be chosen. By 1920 the Mission to Lepers decided to purchase a plot of 110 acres of land four miles southwest of Dhamtari upon which to build larger and better Shantipur Leper Homes. Shantipur means city of peace. In November of 1924 sufficient room was available for the patients and they were moved. The Mission to Lepers had generously contributed the sum of 51,000 rupees for the

EDITOR'S NOTE: The author, a veteran missionary, reviews a half century in the history of a well-known leprosy colony—that of the American Mennonite Mission at Dhamtari, in the Central Provinces of India. 110 acres of land, the superintendent's home and a few other buildings. The government kindly contributed the remaining half of the cost of the additional buildings including a medical dispensary and wards for patients.

After the inmates were settled in their new homes, farm work and various industries were organized for them. All men and women were required to do what manual labor they could do according to their physical strength. By the close of 1924 there were more than 200 inmates including healthy children of patients housed in cottages separate from their diseased parents.

The number of inmates increased to more than 450 by the close of 1938. A lovely memorial church had previously been built. From funds provided by the Mission to Lepers a new and enlarged medical dispensary including a laboratory and injection sheds was now constructed. Two large wards for hospitalized patients were also built. The boys and girls were provided with separate homes under the supervision of well qualified matrons. A school was opened for them in a well made and equipped school house. A windmill was sent out from England and installed over one of the Shantipur wells. It became the pride of Shantipur.

With our inmate family rapidly increasing, medical and other staff members were added until we had a well qualified Indian physician and surgeon provided by the Mission to Lepers, a laboratory technician, dressers, injectors (from among the patients) and nurses for the hospitalized patients. As improved remedies and methods became known they were tried and the results were carefully noted and reported. During the years of my superintendency more than 1500 patients passed through the institution. Among them were a number of wanderers who left to seek greener pastures but the majority were discharged as symptom free. They were ordered to return periodically for careful checking. It was found that the majority remained healthy. There were also burnt out cases so disfigured and helpless that they were allowed to remain in the homes.

Due to war conditions and the difficulty of maintaining the support of their many leprosy homes throughout the world the Mission to Lepers found it necessary to limit the number of inmates to its prewar figure. At Shantipur there were no vacancies, for as patients were discharged or left on their own account their places were immediately taken by those who were waiting for admittance.

I must here refer to a project which gave promise of substantial development and great good to arrested leprosy cases and to adult healthy children of leprosy patients making a new start in life. The matter was urged by the superintendents of the leprosy homes of the central provinces. The cooperation of the Mission to Lepers and the government was also secured, and I was asked to approach the government regarding the setting aside of cultivatable undeveloped land for colonizing the above mentioned needy people.

Accordingly the government set aside a grant of 6288 acres of forest area for this purpose. Both government and the Mission to Lepers gave grants for the purchase of animals and agricultural equipment and for huts for the residents and for the manager. Reservoirs and wells were constructed, and a number of colonists from various leprosy homes were settled on the land in three hamlets. It was hoped that the colony known as Mangal Tarai (Valley of Joy) might become permanent. However, World War II changed circumstances and the colony had to be discontinued. The area remains intact but has been taken over again by the government and left open for colonists according to conditions established under what is known as the Ryotwari Act. By special consent a few original colonists remain. The need for the colonization of others still exists and it is hoped that plans may be implemented in the future for them.

center evangelistic work has been carried on with the purpose of appealing to the inmates to accept Christ. Many have responded and deeply appreciate the eternal hope they have through faith in a living Savior. Their emancipation from idolatry, superstition and fear has given them a sense of deep joy and satisfaction. At a farewell meeting when patients were given the opportunity to witness to their joy in Christ Jesus, one blind and fingerless and toeless victim arose and said, "Tell your people when you arrive in your country that we thank God for this haven of comfort and kind treatment where we also have found eternal salvation and hope."

Christmas in the Leprosy Colonies

"Spring breezes of love again come over the Pacific"

UNFORTUNATELY spring breezes were blowing across the islands when Christmas gifts from America came to the leprosy colonies of Japan last year—the first Christmas greetings from friends in America since the outbreak of the war. Winter was over in most of the eleven government leprosaria by the time the packages arrived, and poems of appreciation which were written as "thank you" notes could not conceal the happy signs of spring: cherry blossoms and budding trees and chirruping birds.

Still, for the patients of Kusatsu, Kanoya-si, and those others, it was Christmas, unlike the three they had had since the surrender of their country. Postwar privations, added to those suffered during the war years, were many and burdensome. Medicine and food were pitifully scarce. Fuel was non-existent; clothing, inadequate to the weather. So 900 packages from friends in America — one for every Christian church member in the eleven leprosy colonies —were, without season, a witness to the great gift of God to mankind in the birth of the Christ child.

Inside the packages were towels, blankets, flannel cloth—all new. That they were new was a source of never-ending wonder to those who had had for so many years so little of what was new. There was soap and powdered milk—and most precious of all: sweets.

The children, we are told, were so excited their fingers fairly danced over the packages, pulling at the wrapping from the bottom-side up. Christians shared their precious hoard without thought of self—so grateful were their hearts for this evidence of "spring breezes of love" from across the Pacific. Services of thanksgiving happened spontaneously—like poems straight from the heart—and hundreds of letters on whatever scraps of paper was available, poured into headquarters of the Kozensha.

This was Christmas, 1947, in the leprosy colonies of Japan. Every year in more than a hundred leprosy colonies around the world, Christmas gifts, like those that went to Japan last year, find their way into the hands of those with leprosy cared for or ministered to by the Christian Churches of America. As far back as anyone can remember, Christians in America have sent, channeled through the American Mission to Lepers, an annual sum in the neighborhood of ten thousand dollars to help make Christmas an extra special day in these colonies. Even so small a sum as ten thousand dollars, spread thin around the globe, can provide, and has, through the years, a variety of special treats —treats as different as the people who receive them.

Gifts From America

The gifts from America to Japan last year were unusually plentiful. In view of their extraordinary need, the American Mission to Lepers sent an additional $10,000—over and above the usual Christmas fund—just for the patients in Japan. This year, at the stated preference of the patients through their ministers, the American Mission is sending to the Japanese colonies a Christmas gift of 1,600 pounds of hard candy.

There is no way of knowing in advance what Christmas will be like in the leprosy colonies—it is often March and April before the missionary letters come in describing Christmas services and celebrations. In Nanchang, at the Kimber Den Leprosarium, a small amount of money provided 70 padded cotton suits last year. In Africa feasts are a time-honored custom, and such scarcities as meat, salt and palm oil, together with an extra ration of rice and vegetables will bring smiles to the faces of even the most abject sufferers.

In other places where these little Christmas treats can be spared out of the regular budget, the extra Christmas check is often used to make larger, otherwise unobtainable purchases—a motion picture projector, perhaps, a labor-saving farm implement, tools, or books.

While it is usually the missionary whose decision determines the use of the Christmas fund, patients are often given a choice in the matter. And then results are apt to be surprising. In one colony in India patients voted to give their Christmas money to the ongoing work of their Church. In another, the money was spent for the relief of the "needy." During the height of the London blitz, patients of Karkida Happy Villages in Nigeria, apologizing to American givers for what seemed to be a lack of appreciation for the gift, asked that the entire sum be sent to England for the relief of German bombing victims!

Making Christmas real in a leprosy colony is, of course, only one of the many aspects of the worldwide Christian ministry to leprosy victims —in more than 125 mission stations scattered throughout the world. For the majority of these unfortunate outcasts to whom Christianity provides a haven of compassion, medical care, and a Christian ministry—Christmas is a daily recurring spiritual experience. For men accepted and loved as brothers, the gift of Christ is an everpresent, not a seasonal, reality.

Nevertheless, the gifts from America make Christmas an extra-special day to several thousand sick and lonely outcasts. They are tokens of love and friendliness and good-will—given in the spirit of Christmas by men and women and children with thankful hearts on the anniversary of our Lord's birth.

Purdue Needs Help

BY THOMAS V. BARRETT
Chaplain at Kenyon College

WE knew what Ross Lockridge was talking about when he wrote of the beauty of Raintree County. We don't know just where that particular county is, but in late fall, Indiana has a golden, winey tang that makes us glad to be alive. We went around there before the leaves fell, and visited Purdue University. The rector of the parish, Reese Thornton, worked a miracle for us, and had a faculty churchmen's dinner in our honor. We found ourselves seated between Mr. Thornton and University President Hovde, and had our mind busy thinking up choice remarks, when Dr. Hovde leaned across our chest and asked Mr. Thornton the names of faculty members who were meandering into the room. Reese knew them all. "That's Dr. Jones of the English department," he said, and the President answered, "Oh, yes . . . I've heard of him."

This struck our funny bone. We remember the time when a college president knew the names of all his faculty, and the names he would like to call all their children. But times have changed. If you have a thousand faculty members, more or less, on your staff you've got a good memory if you can say, "I've heard of them."

We were led to reflect on the immense task facing the Church in today's university. Purdue for instance, has not only the biggest auditorium outside of Radio City (students at Indiana in Bloomington say theirs is prettier), but about 15,000 students of whom approximately 550 are Episcopalians. It's safe to guess that 500 others haven't seen a Church since they were in their sister's bridal party. This number of students makes a good sized parish in itself.

Hardworking, gentle, twinkle-in-the-eye Reese Thornton has a congregation of a couple of hundred to look after, across the river from the campus. It might as well be three miles, since the river (not the Shawmucky as far as I know) divides town and gown neighborhoods effectively. Thornton gathered in 65 faculty Episcopalians to hear us orate, has a Canterbury Club meeting twice a month for corporate Communion and discussion, works conscientiously with students. But he is unable to devote the amount of time required to minister at close range to over five hundred Episcopalians. To say nothing of some of the sophomore infidels.

We have talked to good friend Reese for several years, off and on, about the Purdue problem, and decided long ago the Church has failed to do a good boilermaking job on some of the country's finest potential engineers, who presumably will be influential members of communities from New York to Calcutta. We agree with Reese and Bishop Kirchhoffer: Purdue is a priority. In a technical age the technicians need attention from the Church. Problem: how to finance a student chaplain at Purdue who would live near campus, run student center that ought to be built, and devote full time to engineering men, and maids in home economics.

We found Dr. Hovde, and other top brass willing to co-operate, recognizing, as many scientific men do, that their students need the broadening, humanizing influence of the Christian religion because curriculum provides little by way of nourishment in the great humane tradition. Purdue needs another priest to help Reese Thornton. Cost to the National Church, or the C.S.C.W. about $1500. Attention General Convention and the Division of College Work. Purdue students will be leading engineers, A-bomb experts, world travelers. It would be good to keep them close to the Church.

Want Laymen Active

EDITORIALS in two journals of the Episcopal Church have a common purpose. The Living Church entitles its piece "More Past Senior Wardens." The Southern Churchman writes on "Parish Communions." The burden in the LC opus is not liquidation of the estimable gentlemen who have attained the post of SW, but rotation. The general theme is developing a "fellowship of past senior wardens," by means of making the office a two year term, and no reelection. Thus, there is always promotion, and more men have opportunity to serve actively in the work of the parish. Activity on a broader base among the laity should develop a larger sense of belonging to the parish family. In the SC the parish communion is commended, and particularly the wider participation of the laity in the Holy Communion. It is suggested that the new wardens might carry the bread and wine to the holy table, and the vestry be given seats in the chancel, all done so that the service is not thought of as the ritual act of a priest. Maybe these two editorials are both trying to point out that ours is essentially a layman's religion, not a priestly cultus.

THE PRESS

SMALL FRY: Fresh and crisp in his new attire, the Dollar lay folded in the Churchman's billfold. Jingling about with the pennies and nickels, a little dime played. "You'd better have a good time," the Dollar spoke through the partition, hearing the noise. "You won't be here long." "How do you know?" The little dime stopped its frolicking, frightened at the idea. "Because you're going to church." "Do you go to church?" asked the Dime of the Dollar. "I?" exclaimed the haughty Dollar, in surprise. "Of course not! I go to shows and gasoline stations and parks. Sunday is my big day, but I don't spend it in church. There's a place for small fry like you."—Lutheran Sentinel.

FOOTBALL: An investigation is what this episode (the suspension and reorganization of the Workers Educational Service) calls for, with more passionate insistence than any hot-eyed crooner ever called for Chloe in the dismal swampland. Maybe Victor Reuther is leaning on it a little bit when he asked, "Who runs this state (Michigan) — the people or General Motors?" It may sound melodramatic, but in the light of what has happened, it is a pretty good question. The University of Michigan keeps on winning football games, and that fact will keep the old grads happy forever and ever, but the workers are a different story. They aren't quite as sentimental about football.—Commonweal (RC).

IT IS EMBARRASSING: Much that the Archbishop of York said about modern wars in his world-report convocation address was true. The fate of a defeated nation is immeasurably worse today than in the past. "Ruin and enslavement" are the consequences of losing a war these days —though it is embarrassing to have the archbishop remind us of this at a time when our side is supposedly reaping the fruits of victory. Nevertheless, it gives us the shivers to hear ministers of the gospel of Jesus Christ calling on Christians to support a rearmament program and to make ready to fight against totalitarian enslavement because there are "evils worse than war."—Christian Century (Undenom.)

SKIN DEEP: It's a mad world. But most important of all, from the Christian point of view, it's a pagan world. Much of its vaunted Christianity has never gotten more than skin deep; and under the corrosive action of a civilization in decay, the skin has peeled off. The Church must begin again its long effort to recapture this world for God by commencing with this most fundamental of fundamentals: the proclamation of the Lord of hosts, before whose infinite power all lesser gods are only fuel for fire; the High and Lofty One who inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy.—Union Herald (Presb.).

Excellent Good *Fair

* * The Many and the Few. By Henry Kraus. The Plantin Press, Los Angeles. $2.50.

As editor of the U. A. W.-C. I. O. paper, Mr. Kraus was in a position to analyze the great General Motors sit-down strike of 1936 from the inside. This is the story of the Flint phase of that historic moment in the annals of the American labor movement and, while based on over 10,000 documents, Mr. Kraus tells the tale in a vital manner. Although it is now 10 years later, the author has a strong point when he says that citizens of good-will and progressive leaning should know the nature of those days intimately. And it is with rather a nostalgic mood that one reads of the present leaders of a factionalized labor movement — John L. Lewis, the brothers Reuthers, George Addes, R. J. Thomas and Philip Murray — working together with a sense of dedication.

—W. B. S. Jr.

* * The Age of the Great Depression. By Dixon Wecter. Macmillan. $3.50.

Here is a panoramic view of 'Only Yesterday.' It appears to be a living memory which was clearly in peoples' hearts and minds as they went to the polls recently. A knowledge of the period 1929-1941 does more to explain the election than all of the apologies of the pollsters and commentators. Mr. Wecter brings the whole period back—and it still strikes us as a fearful, chaotic time.

—W. B. S., Jr.

* * * Handel's Messiah: A Touchstone of Taste. By Robert M. Myers. Macmillan. $5.

Throughout the Christian world, Handel's "Messiah" is now an almost inevitable part of the celebration of Christmas. The story of the heroic efforts of its creator to gain a hearing for the sacred oratorio, in spite of indifference and opposition, is little known. It seems almost inconceivable, now, that the leaders of fashionable society should have resorted to the meanest tricks in order to prevent the presentation of the sublime composition—nevertheless they did. The story is one of faith and courage and persistence, and of final success against overwhelming obstacles. The book is a good Christmas gift.

—H. M. G.

* * Early Tales of the Atomic Age. By Daniel Lang. Doubleday. $2.50.

A collection of New Yorker articles which deals with the attitudes, emotions and conflicts of the men and women, military and civilian, who discovered and constructed the paramount fact of our era—the A bomb. Mr. Lang's tales of booming Oak Ridge, blinding Los Alamos and dead Hiroshima are worth your attention in a period when the bomb is too often some facile, confusing words on the lips of international diplomats.

* * The Authorized Daily Prayer Book. By Joseph H. Hertz. Bloch Pub. Co. $5.00.

The heart of the Jewish religion is the Jewish Prayer Book, as the heart of Anglicanism is the Book of Common Prayer. Episcopalians ought therefore to find this volume of special interest, as it is a religious and devotional as well as a historical commentary on the Jewish Prayer Book, tracing the origin and growth of the various services and bringing out their rich and deeply spiritual content. The Jewish Prayer Book is directly continuous with the Psalter and the prophets of the Old Testament; even the language is the same, as well as the ideas. If Christians are ever to understand the religion of their Jewish brethren, they must do more than study its ideas—e. g. those of the apocalypses, on one hand, or of the Mishnah, on the other, and study the liturgy, where the very heart and soul of Israel is laid bare. Dr. Hertz's commentary will be an invaluable guide to such a study.

* * The Priest and the Proletariat. By Robert Kothen. Sheed and Ward. $1.50.

This is a book with a program, by a French Catholic eager to see the Church regain the lost multitudes of the working people. Living among and knowing the people, a popular liturgy ("a liturgy of work, whose rites would integrate the labors of mankind into the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass in a way more intimate and more eloquent than has ever been known in the past"), Catholic Action, factory chaplains—all these proposals are presented and explained. The book, ably translated by Frank Maher, is full of suggestions—and we have the same problems over here.

THE REV. KIMBER DEN
Director, Christian Rural Service
Union, China

Soon after my return from a vacation in Kuling mountain in the later part of last month, I made a special trip to Lotus Pond village where the Marcia Spofford Memorial school is situated. That trip was made with a team of four men interested in rural work. In one way they helped to keep me in good company so that I wouldn't feel lonely while walking on the dusty country road for five miles from the bus station to the village service center. With the beginning of this fall term, we have a total enrollment of 60 pupils, all of whom are the children of our poor farmers in that section. Evenings, our school teachers, four in all, will have to teach those illiterate farmers in the village to read and write the "1,000 characters." We hope to expand this kind of mass education classes into the surrounding villages this winter by using the "small teacher."

As a measure of immediate relief to those flood suffering farmers in that section this past summer, two piculs of paddy rice were loaned out without interest. When I made a trip this time just after their autumn harvest, every grain of rice loaned out was returned with much gratitude and appreciation. This is just a small beginning of a revolving loan fund which is on our plan to help those unfortunate farmers in various calamities back to their own feet. I am very glad to see that this "self-help" system has worked out with remarkable success.

It seems to me that in connection with the village school work, we need also to strengthen the religious life both of the school children and the village people as a whole. When I was there holding services for the school children, we still met in a flimsy mud and thatch house for our worship. For this, I felt very badly, and said to the local village leaders that we must have a more decent and proper place for the worship of our Heavenly Father. Instantly an offer of a piece of land adjoining the Marcia Spofford Memorial school was made to us on the condition that I would help them to raise the necessary funds for putting up a new chapel in the village. This is, indeed, a most heartening challenge that I can hardly decline. It has been estimated that a small chapel with a seating capacity of about 200 people built in very simple style won't cost more than $500, U. S. Now let us pray for it and I believe the good Lord will not fail us. Anything that you can do for us in this good cause will be highly appreciated by all of us.

Answer: Any contributions for the work of Kimber Den should be sent to the Episcopal League for Social Action, 412 West Grand Blvd., Detroit 6, Michigan.

EDWIN WHEELIN
Layman of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Do we Episcopalians take care of our aged? Do we maintain homes for them? If so where are they located, what do they look like, how are they supported? Can we be proud of them? I think it would be of much interest to your readers if an issue could be devoted to their work in our Church. You are doing a fine job with The Witness and I look forward to each issue.

GORDON F. BEST

Thank you for giving us such a complete story of the work of the Church Army (Nov. 18). I am sure that there are many like myself who think they are well informed members of the Church who nevertheless know very little of its work. Your policy of devoting a number occasionally to some phase of Church work I think is an excellent one.

JAMES G. COLE
Layman of New York

The number devoted to China (Oct. 14) ought to be in the hands of every churchman—every American in fact. The role we are playing in that country is indeed a sad one and is doomed to fail.

"How Far

HAVE YOU GONE

in Your Search for $5000?"

Rev. Kimber H. K. Den, honorary superintendent, before the front gate of the Nanchang Leprosarium.

This question was put to us recently by the Rev. Kimber H. K. Den, honorary superintendent of the leprosy colony at Nanchang, China. We regretfully find ourselves obliged to answer: "Nowhere at all." We are still, after more than a year, looking for $5,000 to rebuild the bomb-destroyed Episcopal chapel of the Nanchang Leprosarium!

When, a few months ago, Kimber Den wrote to us for help, explaining that the Chinese Christians who had founded and maintained the Leprosarium since 1932 were no longer able to raise among themselves sufficient funds for the support of the colony, we did what we could. We came to Kimber Den's aid with a $4,000 annual maintenance grant and a special grant of $3,570 for building repairs and for farming and industrial equipment.

These things we were able to promise, and these things we did. But the rebuilding of the Leprosarium's bomb-destroyed chapel had to wait. Our funds at hand were simply not sufficient. We assured Kimber Den, however, that somewhere in these United States there must be friends among Episcopalians who would be willing, in the face of his extraordinary need, to come to his aid. And we pledged to help him find, among these friends, $5,000 for a new chapel.

For several months we have been looking for that $5,000. But up to now no part of it is in our hands. Somewhere, we think, is the friend who would like to give this Chapel as a single memorial gift. Or two or three might like to join in such a gift.

And so we make this public appeal. Can you help? Will you help? Do you know someone who will help? Please write us a letter. Or send us your gift.

Help* Rebuild the Destroyed Nanchang Chapel!

Help* Us Find $5000 for Kimber H.K. Den!

Institute, Council Develop Closer Work Relations

Problems of Chinese Missionaries Will Be Handled by Officers as They Arise

BY DONALD M. COOK

Integration of the American Church Institute with the National Council and more direct control of the institute by the Council was voted at the December meeting of the National Council at Seabury House, Greenwich, Conn. Bishop Malcolm Peabody, chairman of a special committee of the National Council to work with the Institute, reported proposals that the director of the Home Department be the president of the institute, that the latter's budget be approved by the council, and that the council shall have final voice of trustees nominated for the institute. The council accepted these proposals.

Chinese native clergy in the interior of the country will be aided accordingly as developments direct and permit. Officers of the council will use the authority already delegated to them as situations arise.

Mr. M. M. Milligan, secretary of the American Church Institute, reported failure in an attempt to get the Grundy county school board to assume responsibility for St. Paul's school in Lawrenceville, Va. The institute will continue to aid Gailor Industrial Schoo in Tiptonvillle, Tenn., and Gaudet Normal and Industrial School in New Orleans only through May of 1949.

Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill stated the council should aim for increased giving to the 1949 budget in view of the 1949 outlook. A resolution was adopted directing each member of the council to stimulate church giving in his section of the nation.

Dr. Robert P. Magill, reporting for the department of social relations, stated the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief in 1948 amounted to $1,458,000. One million dollars was raised through the radio appeal. The Episcopal Church is the largest contributor of undesignated funds in the Church World Service. Through the Church World Service $350,000 has been spent in the reestablishment of Episcopal work in the Orient. The council voted that a report on the Amsterdam conference be submitted to the General Convention by the joint committee on arrangements. The department stimulated an urban church survey now being made by the commission on social relations in the diocese of New York with the help of the General Theological Seminary students. The department also had representation at meetings of the CIO, the A F of L, the Farm Bureau, and the National Council of Cooperatives.

The Rev. Meredith B. Wood, headmaster of Hoosac School in Hoosick, N. Y., was chosen to succeed Bishop Donegan and the Rev. C. Gresham Marmon, Jr., of Dallas, Texas, to succeed Bishop Moore on the council.

Bishop McKinstry said the outlook was optimistic in regard to every member canvasses. One church in his diocese was helped to get twenty members in a confirmation class by the Episcopal radio hour. The department of promotion in its work with laymen plans to extend volunteer field associates among laymen and clergy.

Mr. Wallace Smith, Miss Luquire McGay, Mrs. Gladys Van Hoyser and Miss Mabel Condict, all of whom have been with the National Council for thirty years or more, were retired. The council voted funds which will make their pension amount to half their former salary.

The Rev. Dr. Percy J. Hall reported 59 active Episcopal chaplains in the armed forces, 147 in army reserve, 162 in naval reserve, and 26 in the national guard. Bishop Henry I. Louttit was approved for membership on the General Commission on Chaplains, replacing Bishop Dun who resigned because of pressure of duties. Dr. Hall said many young men did not realize the length of the active reserve duty required of them by the army after one year's service.

Dubose Conference center in Tennessee will be the site for the national youth commission meeting Jan. 27 - Feb. 2.

The Rev. Walter Williams, Denver; William S. Lea, Knoxville; Matthew Warren, Atlanta, and Sister Rachel of St. Margaret's, Versailles, Ky., are helping on the development of curriculum for Christian education.

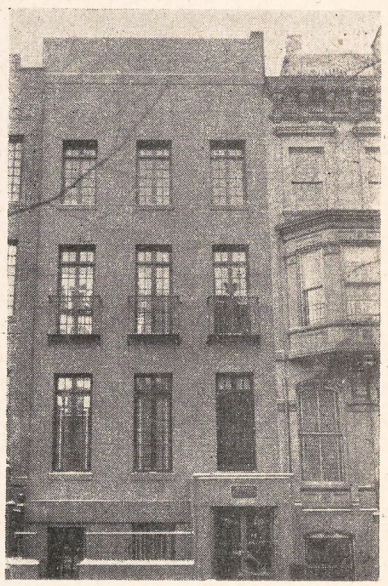
EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

DEAN JOHNSON VISITS IN MICHIGAN

★ According to reports from the Diocese of Michigan, the visit of the Very Rev. Hewlett Johnson, Dean of Canterbury, to Detroit was accompanied by a flurry of protests, cancellations and withdrawals which finally resulted in his making only one scheduled appearance in the city on November 29 at the Music Hall, instead of several as had been planned. An address scheduled for Monday afternoon at Wayne University fell through because of disagreement between the Dean and a special program committee of the University as to the subjects to be covered in his address. A visit to the River Rouge plant of the Ford Motor Company, requested by the Dean for himself and his party, with opportunity for an address to the workers, was turned down because the company felt the visitors might be subjected to "unpleasant incidents." The Dean spent a quiet day on Tuesday in Ann Arbor where he made one formal public address to a capacity crowd of more than 1,000 at the Masonic Temple in that city, on "The Road to Peace with Russia," which was largely a reiteration of the speech he delivered Monday night in Detroit. Thirty-six students gathered in the lounge at Lane Hall at noon to hear Dean Johnson. In a letter to all of the clergy of the Diocese of Michigan, the Rt. Rev. Richard S. Emrich, S. T. D., Bishop of the Diocese, had declared that Dean Johnson "speaks solely in his own name, and his views are opposed to the official statement of the Church." The local welcoming committee had included several Episcopal clergymen, some of whom withdrew their names before his arrival. Asked about the clergy who had withdrawn from his welcoming committees here and elsewhere during his tour, he observed that "some might be scared by a Bishop."

COMMISSION TO MEET ON RURAL WORK

★ With area meetings already held in the eastern, midwestern and western sections, the General Convention's joint commission on rural work has scheduled a session for the entire commission in Kansas City the last week in January, according to recent notice issued by Bishop William F. Lewis of Nevada, chairman. Charged with defining policy for the national program of rural work, the sectional meetings of the commission which were held at Seabury House, Kansas City, and San Jose were concerned with evaluation of the present program for rural work with a view to the report to be made to General Convention in San Francisco and adoption of emphases to be made during the 1950-1952 triennium. Shortage of adequately trained clergy for strategic rural fields continues to be a major concern of the commission, according to Bishop Lewis.



PARISH RETREAT FOR LAYMEN

★ Twenty-seven laymen of St. Mary's Episcopal Church of Arlington, Va., and the rector, the Rev. George F. Tittman, met at the College of Preachers, of the Washington Cathedral, December 3-4, for their second annual laymen's retreat. The laymen were quartered overnight in the dormitory of the College of Preachers.

Canon Theodore O. Wedel, of the Washington Cathedral, was in charge of the meetings. The subject of the conversations was "Questions Men Ask Today and the Christian Answers."

9,000 AT ST. JOHN'S HEAR MISSIONER

★ Climaxing a week's preaching mission at the cathedral of St. John, New York, the Rev. Bryan Green preached to a congregation numbering more than nine thousand people. People stood along the sides of the nave and the crossing of the cathedral in addition to filling the great choir, the seven chapels and occupying the seats in the nave and the crossing. Mr. Green has been preaching since November 7 at churches in the Diocese of New York at the invitation of Bishop Gilbert. The final week of the mission was held in the cathedral with congregations each night of between four and five thousand people. A special service of thanksgiving for the mission was held December 7 in the cathedral. Mr. Green's message was a very simple and direct one. It was not directed so much to regular Church-going people as it was to "fringe" people, who while not anti-God or anti-church, yet for some reason do not make direct connection with any religion. He insisted that God demands highest standards of honesty, righteousness and fair dealing, and that character is a much more definite and intensive thing than reputation. Educated at the University of London, the forty-seven-year-old missioner has for the past ten years been rector of Brompton Parish Church in London. When he returns to England after this visit to the United States he will become rector of St. Martin's, Birmingham. He has conducted many missions in England, and is regarded as an expert in this form of evangelistic endeavor. He has been the house guest of Bishop Gilbert during the stay. During the Diocesan preaching mission he also found time to address students at Vassar, Barnard, Columbia and other schools.

GIRLS' FRIENDLY REORGANIZES

★ Thanking the president of the Girls' Friendly Society for its report on recent action which made it an assisted agency under the National Council's department of Christian education, the Presiding Bishop said, "I believe this is a real forward step and I wish you to know of my desire to help the good work in every possible way." This approval of Bishop Sherrill's followed two recent events in GFS history. The first was the constitutional action that made the GFS a youth organization. Now the new GFS is an organization for all girls from the ages of 7 to 14 as junior members, and girls from 15 to 21 as members. All women over 21 who support the GFS are known as GFS sponsors. This action cleared the way for a second important step. After an extensive study, the department of Christian education approved standards and accepted the GFS as an assisted agency of the department of Christian education functioning through the division of youth. This gives the organization official standing within the Church. The GFS has a week-day activity program to help girls translate Christian teaching into everyday living. It has branches in 73 dioceses and missionary districts, including branches in Puerto Rico, Cuba, Japan and China. In the past year GFS has admitted 3,000 new members, of which 2,000 were in new branches. Bishop Banyard of New Jersey recently said that he hopes to see a GFS in every parish in his diocese. As a means of helping girls and training them as future Churchwomen and leaders, there is a place for Girls' Friendly Society in every parish.

PARSHAD YOUTH CONTEST SPONSORED BY UCYM

★ Two college scholarships of $400 a year for four years are the principal national awards given this year to the two top winners, a boy and a girl, in the 1949 Parshad Youth Week Award contest sponsored by the United Christian Youth Movement. In addition, there will be regional college scholarship awards, $250 a year for four years, six regional summer conference scholarships covering room, board and fees as well as eighteen partial scholarships to the UCYM regional summer conferences. These awards will be made on the basis of evidence of Christian service in the local church and in interdenominational cooperation, of evidence of Christian citizenship in the community and a superior essay not to exceed 1500 words on "Youth in the Community; Our Christian Responsibility." Entries must be received by January 23, 1949. Episcopal young people who wish to enter the contest should write for entry blanks to the Division of Youth, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y., or consult diocesan youth chairmen for complete information. The Parshad awards are a part of the Interchurch Youth Week program from January 30 to February 6, 1949, sponsored by the UCYM. They are made possible through the interest and generosity of Mr. Alfred H. Avery of Massachusetts, an interested Christian layman.

THE REV. JOHN GASS HAS RESIGNED

★ The Rev. John Gass has resigned as rector of St. Paul's, Troy, N. Y., to retire from the active ministry. He has been ill for a considerable time with a heart condition and doctors have advised complete rest. According to present plans he and Mrs. Gass will take up residence in Florida in January.

John Gass broke into the front pages of papers throughout the country a number of years ago when he persuaded the vestry of the Church of the Incarnation, New York, that the Church should be closed and the large endowment turned over to the Chapel of the Incarnation which he insisted was doing a more effective work among the poor of that area than the church was doing on Madison Avenue. In so doing he talked himself out of the rectorship of what was then considered one of the best parishes in the city, since he also persuaded the vestry that the vicar of the Chapel should remain in charge there and that his own resignation should be accepted. The action was unprecedented. However a number of women communicants of the parish formed a committee to oppose the action of the rector and vestry and succeeded in having their action withdrawn.

WEST MISSOURI DIOCESE HAS LAY CONFERENCE

★ With featured speakers, Gen. John C. H. Lee (U.S. Army ret.) and the Rev. Arnold Lewis, the Diocese of West Missouri held an impressive and significant laymen's conference stressing evangelism. General Lee told of the need for a chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in every parish and mission. He emphasized that the Brotherhood needs and wants men who have soberly considered what service and membership in the Brotherhood means. Mr. Arnold, executive director of the Presiding Bishop's committee on Laymen's Work, explained the Church's program which is to bring its message to the American people and to the missionary areas throughout the world, for which we have assumed responsibility. He spoke of evangelism through education, worship, service and action. The only other member of the clergy present was the diocesan, Bishop Spencer.

ARCHDEACON HIGLEY BECOMES BISHOP

★ The Rt. Rev. Edward Huntington Coley, retired Bishop of the Diocese of Central New York, was co-consecrator with the present Diocesan Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Malcolm Endicott Peabody, at the service of consecration of the Ven. Walter Maydole Higley as Suffragan Bishop of the Diocese in St. Paul's Church, Syracuse, December 15. The presiding Bishop was the consecrator and the Rt. Rev. Angus Dun, Bishop of Washington, was preacher. Mr. Higley was presented for consecration by the Rt. Rev. Charles Kendall Gilbert , Bishop of New York, and the Rt. Rev. Frederick Lehrle Barry, Bishop Coadjutor of Albany.

SCHOOL OF PROPHETS LISTS SPEAKERS

★ The 1948-49 schedule for the School of the Prophets, diocese of California, has been announced. Such outstanding leaders as Professor Dillistone, Bishop Bayne of Olympia, Bishop Lewis of Nevada, the Rev. Canon Frederic Hood of Pusey House, Oxford, Professor Pierson Parker, who is to succeed Dr. Easton in the chair of New Testament at General Theological Seminary, the Archbishop of York, and probably the Bishop of Ely, with several other noted scholars are included in the faculty. The School of Prophets has become exceedingly popular in the Pacific Coast and Intermountain areas and has entirely justified the hopes of its founder, Bishop Block.

ST. BARNABAS GUILD HELPS HOSPITAL

★ A new missionary project is being assumed by the St. Barnabas Guild for Nurses, according to announcement made by the Rev. Dr. John G. Martin, chaplain-general of the Guild, from his headquarters at 685 High Street, Newark 2, N. J. By vote of the Guild's biennial council, meeting recently in Boston on its sixty-second anniversary with some 800 nurses and others attending, the Guild members are sponsoring the work of a nurse in the Philippines. Through its united benevolent fund, the Guild will provide the salary of Laura P. Wells, R. N., now directing social service in St. Luke's Hospital, Manila. Miss Wells, a graduate of Mt. Holyoke, 1910, and St. Luke's Hospital training school, New York, trained Chinese nurses from 1915 to 1940 at St. Elizabeth's Hospital in Shanghai. During the war she worked in the social service department of St. Luke's, New York, and in 1947 returned to the Orient for work at St. Luke's, Manila.

BISHOP ROBERTS WRITES REASSURING LETTER

★ A communication dated November 25, from Bishop William P. Roberts of Shanghai, told the National Council that the Rev. and Mrs. Alfred B. Starratt, Dr. and Mrs. Paul Ward, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur J. Allen and Mr. and Mrs. Walter P. Allen, are going to Hongkong; that Sisters Anita and Augusta and Mrs. Walworth Tyng are going to Shanghai for evacuation; that the Anking staff is still remaining in Anking, that the Wuhu workers are in Shanghai, except for Bishop Craighill who is still in Wuhu; and that Mrs. Craighill, Miss Elda Smith, John Morrett, Miss Bessie Sims, the Rev. and Mrs. J. M. Wilson expected to sail November 29 on the transport Republic. A cable received later stated that Sister Augusta left December 2 for Boston by air.

Bishop Roberts' letter was reassuring, on the whole, as to the present situation. "Please bear in mind," he wrote, "that we are in constant touch with the highest authorities over here on the whole subject. For instance, Charles Long has been able to make contact with the Embassy and even Ambassador Stuart himself, in Nanking, and has several times telephoned to us in Shanghai. Last week I met with a group of missionaries at Counsul Cabot's house, with Ambassador Leighton Stuart present and the whole situation was thoroughly gone into. I am, myself, a member of the American Association Committee which is composed of about 25 Americans from all walks of life in this city, and we get the latest information and generally try to follow a common policy. In the light of all these opportunities we try to make the wisest decisions, but it is not always easy, as you have to take a chance on the future. Please encourage relatives and friends of the workers here to relax and not be worried. Our workers are most eager to stay at their jobs and it is a pain to have to urge any of them to go home."

JOINT SERVICES WITH OLD CATHOLICS

★ Chaplain James H. Terry, who is stationed at Heidelberg, has informed the Army and Navy division that a close and happy relationship has been established with the Old Catholic congregation in Heidelberg. He says that we have been invited to use Saviour Church on Sundays and in return we supply fuel for heating the building. Our service is held first and the Old Catholic celebration follows immediately. On All Saints Day, a joint celebration was offered by Fr. Brinkhues and Chaplain Terry and the church was filled with Americans and Germans. The program was printed in German and English. The hymns were sung in German. The service to the Creed was in German and in English. The Creed was recited in English. The offertory was in both tongues. The Prayer for the Church, Confession, Absolution, Comfortable Words and Sanctus were in English as well as the Prayer of Consecration. The Lord's Prayer was in both languages and said in unison. The Commixture and Agnus Dei in English. Each communicant received the Holy Communion according to the practice of his own Church. The Old Catholics returned to the pews after reception of the holy bread and the Episcopalians received in both kinds. Post Communion prayers were said in German and the General Thanksgiving in English. The Benediction was in both German and English. Our Church folk in German now have the opportunity of attending American or Church of England services in Hanau, Frankfurt-on-Main, Wiesbaden, Heidelberg, Bad Kitzingen, Berlin, Salzburg and Vienna. The Old Catholic group is in communion with the Anglican Churches.

Federal Council of Churches Elects New Officers and Adopts Vigorous Statement on Human Rights

Bishop John S. Stamm of Harrisburg, Pa., senior bishop of the Evangelical United Brethren Church and vice-president of the Federal Council of Churches, was unanimously elected president of the Council at its 40th anniversary convention in Cincinnati. He succeeds Episcopalian Charles P. Taft, Cincinnati lawyer. The new Council head, a native of Kansas, is president of the Pennsylvania Council of Churches. He is a graduate of the Evangelical Theological Seminary in Naperville, Ill., and the University of Chicago. After eight years as professor in the Evangelical Theological Seminary, he was elected bishop in 1926, residing in Kansas City until named by the 1934 general conference of the Evangelical Church to preside over the denomination's eastern area with headquarters in Harrisburg. He worked ardently for the union of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ and the Evangelical Church which resulted in 1946 in the establishment of the Evangelical United Brethren denomination.

Unanimously elected as vice-president was Mildred McAfee Horton of New York City. Mrs. Horton, retiring president of Wellesley College and wartime commander of the Waves, is the first woman ever named to this post. She is the wife of Dr. Douglas Horton, minister of the General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches. W. Glenn Roberts, New Haven, Conn., was reelected recording secretary. Episcopalian Harper Sibley of Rochester, N. Y., was reelected treasurer.

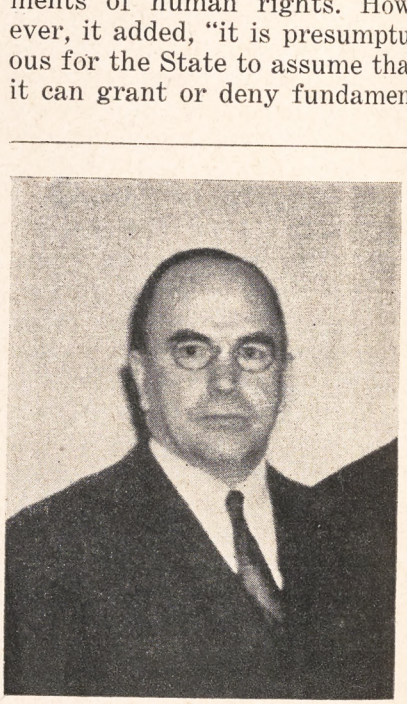
On Human Rights

A statement on human rights, the most complete and specific ever issued by the Council, was unanimously adopted by the convention. Three general categories were listed as follows: Full opportunity to participate in the economic resources of the community; full opportunity, on a non-segregated basis, to participate in the social and public life of the community; and full opportunity to participate in the political community.

Economic Rights

Regarding economic resources the statement included: 1) The right to a standard of living adequate for the welfare and security of the individual and the family; 2) the right of every employable person to work under decent conditions and fair compensation, or to engage in an individual enterprise or profession and to be upgraded if character and ability merit it; 3) the right of all persons to organize into labor unions, corporate enterprises, cooperative ventures and social actions.

Social Rights



Opportunity to participate in social and public life, the Council said, included: the right to a wholesome living space; the right to move within one's country and to leave and return to one's country; the right to educational and professional training and to cultural opportunities. Also, the right of participation in community social services; the right to adequate health services; the right to the use of transportation on the basis of full equality; and the right to receive equal service from businesses and persons serving the public, such as stores, theatres, hotels and restaurants.

Political Rights

Rights of participation in the political community included: the right to vote with alternative choices and by a normal ballot. Equal rights before the law, which include police protection, the right of an accused person to a fair and public trial, the right to counsel, the right to be confronted by written indictment, evidence and witnesses against him, the right to present in his own behalf his own witnesses and evidence, the right to have the judgment of his actions depend upon an evaluation of the facts by an impartial jury of his peers. The right to be a candidate for public office and to serve if elected. The right to participate fully in any branch of the government, including the military. The right to organize for peaceful political activity.

Responsibility

The declaration went on to assert that the Churches, the State and individuals, as well, have the responsibility for the observance of these requirements of human rights. However, it added, "it is presumptuous for the State to assume that it can grant or deny fundamental rights. It is for the state to embody these rights in its own legal system and to ensure their observance in practice," the statement declared. "It is for the churches to encourage the state fully to recognize these rights in law, but also, since the churches are under special obligation to obey God rather than man, they must go beyond the requirements of law and seek vigorously to realize these principles wherever they apply within their own fellowship; to support and to encourage their members in conscientious endeavor to achieve these ends in the community and nation; and to seek solutions in the spirit of Christian reconciliation. The churches are likewise bound to offer a continual challenge to the conscience of the community and to seek to influence the government in its appropriate sphere to safeguard the rights of all."

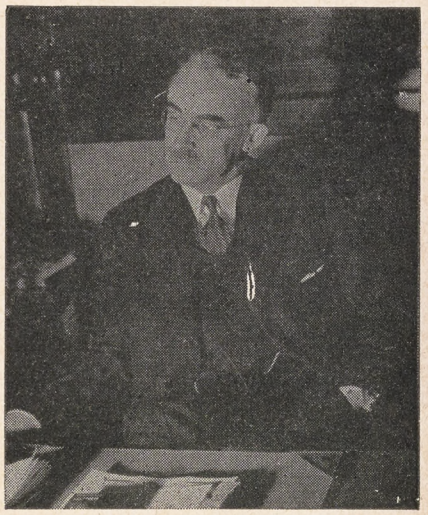
COMMUNISM, CAPITALISM HIT BY NIEBUHR

Reinhold Niebuhr, in an address before the Federal Council convention, again supported the communism-capitalism report of the Amsterdam meeting of the World Council, held last summer.

If Communism promises freedom as a by-product of a tyrannical equality and fails to keep that promise, so too does capitalism, he said. Capitalism, in its pure form, he added, promises justice as the by-product of an uncontrolled freedom and also fails to keep its promise. Democracy, as men know it today, he said, is not really good enough to win the present battle between ideologies. Democracy, he insisted, must be "constantly perfected by repentance for the evils of pride of race and lust for power which now corrupt it." Dr. Niebuhr warned that a Christianity which was merely anti-Communism was not a real Christianity any more than a Protestantism which was merely anti-Catholicism was a real religion.

TAFT SAYS CHURCHES FAIL ON LAYMEN



Christian churches are failing today because they have never succeeded in handling the problem of the relation of the individual layman to the community in which he lives, according to Charles P. Taft, retiring president of the Federal Council of Churches. "My complaint," he said, "is that the churches are paying no attention to the two-thirds of the world in which the people in the pews live. If you want to know why religion hasn't saved the world," he added, "it's because religion is still dealing with a primitive agricultural and trading economy like that of the Bible." Taft urged that churches bring to the layman "the hard-thinking of the soundest theology of the highest intellectual quality."

SIX SECTIONAL GROUPS DISCUSS TOPICS

The following subjects were discussed by six groups whose findings were discussed in plenary sessions of the Federal Council's convention: Development of a greater lay participation and leadership in the Church; the ministry of the Church to older people; plans for united evangelistic advance; program and policies of the Churches in the field of human rights; responsibility of the Churches in dealing with juvenile delinquency; and responsibility of the Churches for displaced persons and overseas aid.

KEYNOTE ADDRESS DENIES COMMUNIST CHARGE

Delivering the keynote address to the convention of the Federal Council, Dr. Samuel McCrea Cavert, general secretary denied that his organization is "Communistic." "In an effort to follow Christ into the factory, the market-place, the farm, the banking house, the court room and the halls of government," he explained, "the Churches in the Federal Council have done frontier work in bringing the truth of Christianity to bear on the secularized civilization of today." He asserted that the premises of Christian social action were quite different from those of "a proud and confident humanism" and were often misunderstood and even described as Communistic. "As a matter of fact," he said, "the constant struggle to make our society more Christian by securing both freedom and justice for all is the one effective long-range way of preventing Communism." NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

SWEDISH STATE CHURCH DISCUSSES LAYMEN

Greater participation of laymen in the life of the Lutheran Church, state Church of Sweden, was discussed at the synod held in Stockholm. It was presided over by Archbishop Erling Eidem, primate, whose picture was on the Witness cover October 28. He declared that there is a real need for clergymen to play a more active role in the Church. The synod, which meets every five years, therefore increased the number of lay members from 30 to 36, but at the same time it increased the number of clergy members from 30 to 42.

ATHENAGORAS GOES TO ATHENS

Archbishop Athenagoras of New York, newly elected Ecumenical Patriarch, arrived in Athens December 6 enroute to Istanbul for enthronement. The official Roman Catholic paper of Greece, expressed its pleasure over the election, and calls for close cooperation between Catholicism and Orthodoxy "in order to face the common enemy which is now plotting against the national and religious existence of Greece."

JOURNAL PUBLISHES SEX ISSUE

The attitude of Christians toward sex life; sexual education of children in the different stages of life; birth control as a medical-ethical problem; castration and sterilization; pastoral care and sexuality are subjects dealth with in a special issue of the Protestant monthly magazine "Wending," published in The Hague, Holland. Officials of the Dutch Reformed Church greeted the issue as "an encouraging symptom that this field of human life which for the greater part was neglected by the Church is now being met by prominent men and women within the Church."

RC OFFICIAL ARRESTED IN HUNGARY

The arrest of the Rev. Andrew Zakar, private secretary to Joseph Cardinal Mindszenthy, primate of Hungary, on charges of treason, has taken place in Budapest. His "anti-national activities" were given as the reason. In June, 1947, a Budapest Communist newspaper reported that police authorities had begun to expose illegal actions involving the secretaries of Cardinal Mindszenthy and former prime minister Ferenc Nagy.

The action against Father Zakar climaxed weeks of increasingly bitter attacks by Communist leaders against Cardinal Mindszenthy for his open criticisms of government policies. Observers are convinced that the government is ready to begin a drastic campaign against the Cardinal and his followers for their "reactionary" and "anti-democratic" attitude. Erno Gero, Communist minister of transport, speaking in Szeged, warned that the "liquidation of clerical reaction" is imminent. "It is intolerable that associates of imperialistic war-mongers should be left undisturbed," Gero said.

AGNOSTICS REGISTER IN JERUSALEM

Unofficial estimates indicate that five per cent of Jerusalem's 85,000 Jews declared themselves agnostics, while a higher percentage listed themselves as "non-religious." Haifa and Tel-Aviv will probably reveal a higher proportion of agnostics. Minister of Interior Gruenbaum and Minister of Agriculture Zisling registered in this category. If final results show a substantial proportion of agnostics in the Israel population, the introduction of a proposed personal status law concerning civil marriages and divorce will probably be accelerated.

PREDICTS NO THEOCRACY

Abba Hillel Silver, American Zionist leader, predicted Israel will not become a "theocratic state" at the anniversary convention of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations in Boston. "The more orthodox may seek to establish again a central religious authority in Israel as in the days of old, with the chief rabbinate of Israel at its head, in the same manner as the international Catholic community has its religious center in Rome. If such a center is ever established, it will, of course, have authority only over those who will voluntarily recognize its authority, either in Israel or outside," he said. Israel presents no problem of "dual loyalty" to American Jews. "The Jews of Israel will be Israeli citizens, and the Jews of the United States will be Jews of the United States, and similarly with Jews in other lands," said the Rabbi.

INTERNATIONALIZATION IS OPPOSED

Chief Rabbi Isaac Herzog of Jerusalem expressed "deep sorrow" over a recent statement by Archbishop Fisher of Canterbury, urging that Jerusalem be placed under international control. The bulk of Jerusalem's population is Jewish and arrangements could be made for international control of Moslem and Christian holy places and for giving them an extraterritorial status, said the Jewish leader.

EDITORIALS

Appeal to Conservatives

IT is by this time generally suspected by our readers that the composite opinion of The Witness editors on matters social and political is a bit left of center and we cherish a lively hope that our friends—whether conservative or radical in their personal opinions—understand that our political convictions are maintained from a definite religious motive. That is to say, we sincerely believe that the economic and political world we hope to see and are willing to work for is the kind of world that our Master actually desires and wills, under the conditions of this present age, because it gives promise, we believe, of the more abundant life for his children and would provide a better medium for the growing of human souls in his likeness.

Whether, however, we are destined in this country to undergo a period of Fascism, with big business and the military completely dominating our economy, no one can yet be sure. To us, at the present writing, it seems not unlikely. Our bi-partisan foreign policy presupposes a war economy, if not actual shooting war. Our support of nationalist China—which is thoroughly Fascist—and our plans in western Germany for building a strong buffer against Russia point in this direction. But there is not very much, perhaps, that the general public or the Christian Churches can do about it. There is, however, one present and pressing issue on which we can make ourselves heard effectively, and that is the issue of civil rights. The natural human rights of Americans are being threatened today more seriously and outrageously than ever before in the history of the Republic, even in the era of the notorious alien and sedition laws. The Klan is burning its blasphemous crosses with fresh vigor. Hatred of Jews, Roman Catholics and Negroes of course we have always with us as a national disgrace, but we now have added to all this a new and vicious element in a concerted drive against political and economic minorities.

This is a perfectly logical aim and procedure, considering the nature of our present foreign policy, for a nation geared for total war—or preparation for total war—cannot afford to have even small minorities openly disagreeing with its policies, which are essential if war is to be waged. For modern war and democracy are mutually exclusive and in getting ready for total war it is necessary that the country shall be conditioned to a regimented economy and life. Germany and Japan both found this a sine qua non for effective war preparations. Minorities could not be tolerated. And this is the raison d'etre for the present drive against minority groups here. It begins, as it did in Nazi Germany, with proscribing the Communists as the smallest and weakest of such minorities, and it will proceed, also as in Germany, to campaigns against the Jews and then against radicals and liberals of all descriptions.

Now, and not later, is the time for all lovers of the American way of life and for all believers in the Christian doctrine of the sacredness of the human personality to protest, with fire and determination, against this modern witch hunting. The old Jew, Gamaliel, was aware of the principle at issue here when Christianity itself was the unpopular and feared minority. The free-thinker, Voltaire, challenged the traditionalists of his day with the famous slogan that is so familiar to everyone and so little regarded by our makers of political policy. And it was a similar motive that actuated our own doughty patriot, Patrick Henry, to fling his challenge at the conservatives of his day: "Give me liberty or give me death. If this be treason, make the most of it."

The first step in the drive to outlaw the Communists and their sympathizers was the Mundt-Nixon Bill of last spring which was killed by the uprising of lovers of American liberty and fair play. The second step is now being attempted by the indictment of the twelve leaders of the Communist Party. This indictment does not even accuse them of acts of violence or of conspiring to commit such acts against the government, but merely of organizing a party which teaches the principles of Marx and Lenin. The American way of life is assumed to be so weak that it is dangerous for American citizens even to learn of any differing political and economic system. This is an attempt at "thought control" that should be abhorrent to every Christian and every democrat.

As a Christian journal which believes enthusiastically in the American way of life, we appeal to our fellow Christians and Churchmen, and more especially to those of a pronounced conservative way of thinking, to protest vigorously to the President and the Attorney-General against the present prosecution of the Communist leaders. The more you detest Communism and all totalitarian regimes, the more it should lie heavy on your conscience to fight this first step against liberty of thought and speech. The more ardently you believe American democracy to be a strong and going concern, the more convincingly can you condemn the cowardice and lack of faith which animates these procedures of fear and arbitrary repression. Opposition to these present actions is truly our first line of defense against the proscribing of all minority groups. In Nazi Germany this first line was not defended — and the inevitable flood followed. Lovers of Christian liberty are today in much the same position as the famous Dutch boy who kept his hand in the single hole in the dike until further help arrived. A flood of letters and telegrams to the President and Attorney-General can, we believe, prevent the noxious flood of bigotry and fear from sweeping through the American dikes and inundating our hard-won American way of life.

This is an appeal to America's economic conservatives. You can do much more for Christian freedom and American democracy in this crisis than twice your number of militant liberals and radicals. May this call to action to our conservative brethren not be in vain.

A World Alliance for Peace

By JOHN R. INMAN

Assistant Secretary of the Church Peace Union

THE World Alliance for International Friendship through Religion came to birth this year in Town Hall, New York, at the conference of Religion for Moral and Spiritual Support of the United Nations. At this conference, arranged by the Church Peace Union and co-sponsored by 56 national and international groups, authority was given for the appointment of an international provisional committee. This committee was made responsible for handling organizational details for the new World Alliance until the next quadrennial world conference is convened, probably in 1952. The committee is now at work, and sub-committees are perfecting plans to raise an adequate budget and set up regional councils throughout the world.

Like its parents, the Church Peace Union and the World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches, the new World Alliance is an interfaith organization whose primary purpose is to work, through the major religions, for world order and enduring international peace. Its fundamental predicate stems from the faith of the leading religions, that our world, under God, is one world and therefore that all people can and must live together in amity. The world which modern science has made into a neighborhood must, if it is to endure, be welded into a brotherhood. To this task, moral and spiritual in nature, the World Alliance dedicates its concerted efforts and resources.

The World Alliance for International Friendship through Religion is under the executive direction of Dr. Henry A. Atkinson, who for more than thirty years has been general secretary of the Church Peace Union. The chairman of the executive committee is Dr. William Hung, professor of history at Harvard University and formerly dean of Yenching University in China. Mr. H. William Ihrig, a prominent attorney in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, was appointed chairman of the ways and means committee. The Church Peace Union will continue to act as the administrative body for the World Alliance for International Friendship through Religion until its provisional organization is given permanent status at the next quadrennial conference.

The conference of Religion for Moral and Spiritual Support of the United Nations provided an auspicious setting for the inauguration of the World Alliance for International Friendship through Religion. Delegates from the major religious faiths and from every region in the world convened for the conference in Town Hall. These delegates, nearly 600 in number, represented religious groups, women's clubs, youth groups, and like organizations working for international friendship and world order.

The Opening Session

The colorful opening session, under the chairmanship of the Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, president of the Church Peace Union, set the tone for the entire conference. Delegates dressed in their native costumes, coming from different islands and representing unofficially the various religious faiths, participated in the program. The chiefs of mission to the United Nations from the Philippines and Canada stressed the imperative need for a vastly increased support of the United Nations by governments and people; and the president of the Economic and Social Council made a forceful appeal on behalf of fundamental human rights. All the speakers emphasized that the United Nations, essentially a people's movement, derives its basic strength from the concerted backing of the world's peoples.

A high point of the conference was attained in the third session. Lewis Mumford analyzed the moral breakdown of our day. This profound general analysis of the critical situation faced by our civilization was specifically illustrated by James P. Warburg as he discussed the economic predicates for world peace. Dr. Taraknath Das of India described the resources which we must utilize if our perilous times are to be redeemed; he underlined the central place of religion as a force for world unity and ended with a moving tribute to Mahatma Mohandas Ghandi.

In preparation for the conference, four commissions were organized. They carried on study and investigation for some months prior to the conference, and presented reports of their findings and recommendations at four of the plenary sessions. Membership in the commissions represented the major religious faiths and many different nations. Among the countries represented were: Bolivia, Canada, Chile, Czechoslovakia, China, Egypt, France, Great Britain, Greece, India, Japan, Norway, Peru, the Philippines, the Republic Indonesia, Switzerland, Turkey, the Union of South Africa and the United States. Participating delegates also represented Islam, Judaism, Christianity (Roman Catholic, Protestant, Eastern Orthodox), Hinduism, Buddhism, and Sikhism.

Consciousness of Crisis

THROUGHOUT the conference there was a consciousness of crisis. This was evident in the addresses of United Nations statesmen like Romulo of the Philippines, Hsia of China, Malik of Lebanon, McNaughton of Canada, and de Lozada of Bolivia; world citizens like Rohde, Hurst, Das and Natarajan of India, and Tanriover of Turkey; molders of thought such as Mumford, Overstreet, Russell, Warburg, and DuBois. Representatives of the Councils of the World Alliance in Europe, Canada and Japan took part in the discussions. Andre Bouvier of Switzerland made an excellent impression as did Pierre Toureille of France, Soichi Saito of Japan and C. E. Silcox of Canada, who wisely warned that the new world organization must not become "too American". All seemed to realize that "mankind as a whole now lives in a state of utmost peril". At the same time there was none of the hysteria so prevalent in too many circles today. The purpose was to be constructive and creative and this effort was successful.

The final conference session considered "A Practical Program for Action". The addresses and discussion centered on the work of the new World Alliance and specific recommendations for the new organization were approved. The projected practical program, proposed and supported by the assembled leaders of religion, science, education, and culture, is now being carried into action.

Behind the conference and the organization of the World Alliance for International Friendship through Religion lies a history of more than two decades of preparatory meetings in various parts of the world and the preparation of numerous reports and volumes of studies. These reports dealt with preliminary plans for a "World Conference for International Peace Through Religion", while the books treated broader themes relating to the responsibility of religion for world order and international peace. The world conference itself had to be postponed several times, at first because of "the economic debacle on the part of the nations", and later because of the second world war. Even the conference of this year could not draw together all the representatives from other countries who wished to be present, inasmuch as travel conditions, exchange rates, and the unstable world situation seriously restricted attendance. The developement of the new organization can be traced to Dr. Atkinson's vision and forceful leadership through the persistent efforts, trials, and disappointments of the formative years.

The international provisional committee earnestly hopes that its next quadrennial conference can include full representation from all major religious faiths and from all countries. This world conference, to convene in 1952, will meet, according to present plans, in India.

The membership of the International Provisional committee, still in process of formation, is as follows:

Dr. William Hung, chairman; Dr. William Agar; Mulana Muhammad Ali, Dr. Paul B. Anderson, Mr. DeWitt C. Baldwin, Dr. Herbert C. F. Bell, Dr. Herbert E. Benton, Pastor Andre Bouvier, Rev. Edward C. Boynton, Mrs. A. M. Brady, Mr. Irwin Canham, Dr. J. Henry Carpenter, Rabbi Rudolph I. Coffee, Mrs. Ruth Cranston, Dr. Taraknath Das, Mr. Malcolm W. Davis, Dr. Robert C. Present Situation in China

By PAUL B. DENLINGER

Witness Correspondent in China

THE economic and military situation in China has become so serious that both the consular authorities and bishops have recommended evacuation to American missionary staffs. In most cases this was worded as a considered suggestion, to be disregarded only on the individual's responsibility. Most married missionaries and all those with small children have already complied with the suggestion. The vast majority of unmarried missionaries, or those without heavy responsibilities, have decided to stay in spite of the almost certain defeat of the Kuomintang and the consequent consolidation of a Communist government.

The past two months in China have been a sharp and extenuated crisis. For almost all people it contained new depths of suffering and despair. For most Chinese intellectuals there has been deepened distress, and a growing hope that the war might be settled speedily, even by Communist victory, before all are ground into dust by the relentless oppression of war. For the poor there has been a more gnawing hunger, and more frequent starvation. And for the foreign community there has been, if not outright anxiety, at least deprivation and distress. The only hope in really tragic suffering has been that any kind of peace must be better than this kind of war, and when breakdowns this severe occur, the end cannot be far away.

About mid-October the recent currency reform of the Kuomintang began to show serious weaknesses. The government had promised a metallic currency which included some silver, and everyone was relieved that hard money with at least some intrinsic value, would be a deterrent to further inflationary spirals. The government, through its banks, called in several million dollars (U.S.) worth of gold, silver and U.S. bank notes. This sum came mainly from white collar and intellectuals, who used these stable commodities as a form of saving against absolute poverty and starvation. A month later the hard currency had still made no appearance. According to a semi-official report of economic analysis and recommendations issued recently by a group of Peiping professors, at this point the Central government did not accurately estimate the amount of money needed in circulation, nor did they limit their issue to the value of the commodities which backed it. In other words, they still continued printing-press money. This old practice of printing excessive amounts of paper money without any backing, set off the former inflationary spiral. The government, moved as much by panic as by careful analysis, instituted rigid price controls. And when these controlled prices were below the value of the commodities in question, everyone refused to sell. This stagnation made a shortage, and shortage increased the real value. For a while it was impossible to buy almost everything—eggs, meat, flour, rice, sugar, even vegetables, just disappeared from the markets. No one would sell. A situation like a very serious general strike settled over the country, causing widespread suffering and discontent. Finally the government accepted the actual situation and suspended price controls, and prices doubled and tripled each day as people with cash reserves tried to turn this into commodities such as rice and cloth that possessed a relatively staple value.

Situation in Anking

FOR from ten days to two weeks the situation in Anking was critical. This inland river city depends upon the Shanghai cotton mills for its cloth. Farmers bring their rice in from the country, sell it, buy cloth or salt, and return the same day. The economic chaos in Shanghai, and the government's commandeering of boats for troop transport, cut us off from Shanghai. Merchants unable to replace cloth and uninterested in the depreciating currency, refused to sell. Farmers therefore did not bring their rice in from the country. Almost all essentials were unavailable, and quotation prices soared insanely, registering gains two and three times a day; and goods were generally unobtainable at any price. A large part of the city's population live on the verge of starvation, without sufficient money to buy more than one day's food at a time. One day without food makes them restive, and after that they begin to starve to death, and that always involves serious discontent. Fortunately there was only one small-scare disturbance as a hungry crowd broke into and looted a rice shop near the north gate.

The mission found itself very seriously pinched. The official exchange rate set by the Central government only represented 1/10 to 1/25 of the actual value or the purchasing power of the U.S. currency on which we live. Prices in terms of mission exchange were even more fantastic than they were to the ordinary Chinese citizen. Rice cost between $50 and $100 U.S. a bushel, and it was further needed as a medium of exchange since no one wanted to accept money. Flour was near U.S. $70 for 50 pounds. Most missionaries had to stop purchases of any kind and simply do without whatever they did not have. Meat and eggs, and sometimes bread, sugar and foods from Shanghai simply disappeared from the menu. But this was merely an incidental annoyance. The real problems were concerned with the continued operation of the middle school, and the hospital, and the mission station. Recently the situation was eased by new shipments from Shanghai, a partial stabilization of the currency, and an adjustment of the exchange rate to somewhere near forty per cent of the real value of U.S. money.

Serious military reverses went hand in hand with economic paralysis and collapse. The Communists followed the capture of Tsinan with the occupation of all Manchuria. American newspaper correspondents and the Communist radio agree that approximately 500,000 Nationalist troops were lost in Manchuria alone. In most cases these were almost bloodless victories, for the Communists were strongly aided by "defections" of both commanders and troops. Large amounts of American equipment were involved in these losses, for many of the troops that joined the Communists took with them their American equipment. Several new divisions, recently trained by American officers in Taiwan, and bearing good American equipment, were lost near the Manchurian port of Hulutao in less than two weeks. Morale proved itself to be a more important factor than equipment, as large numbers of troops went over to the Communists. Many political generals, expecting a speedy Kuomintang collapse and anxious to leap from the sinking ship, threw in their lot with the Communists. As many of the garrison cities between the Peiping-Tientsin area and the Yangtze Valley passed into Communist hands, very important stores, both military and economic, were added to Communist resources. At every turn economic chaos and shattered morale contributed to military disaster, and military disaster, in turn, further shattered economics and morale.

They Hope for Peace

IN spite of continued resignations from the government and shattering defections of commanders, the Generalissimo still repeated his usual talk about unceasing opposition to the Communists. Instead of his usual two years in which he contended he could defeat Communism, he now spoke of eight years. Most observers felt this was an interesting expression that the Generalissimo would not be sympathetic to any form of coalition government, and worth very little more than this. How much more of this kind of suffering and misery the Chinese people will accept under his war-program is an interesting conjecture. Almost all Chinese, and most foreigners hope for peace, even a Communist peace.

The Generalissimo, in a move to placate his dissatisfied troops placed the whole area around Nanking under martial law. Soldiers are able to commandeer any food, vehicle or anything else they want in that area. A rigid curfew has been imposed, and a censorship of mail has been announced.

Most of the mission personnel feel that a Communist victory is only a matter of time, perhaps the speedier the less suffering. And most are prepared to stay at their posts and attempt to continue their work under a Communist government in China.

EDITOR'S NOTE: An idea of the inflation in China may be perhaps imagined when we inform WITNESS readers that the envelope that brought Mr. Delinger's letter by air carried four million, four hundred thousand dollars worth of Chinese stamps.

A Word With You

By HUGH D. McCANDLESS
Rector of the Epiphany, New York

"If I had only . . ."

A foreign phonetics expert has said that on the basis of pure sound, the word "funeral" is the most beautiful in the English tongue. It is at funerals, however, and during the days surrounding them, that some of the most useless words in our speech are uttered, in phrases that start, "Why didn't I . . ." and so forth.

At least twice a year I find myself talking to someone who has had much of the burden of care for someone who has died; the member of the family who has done the most for the deceased, perhaps through circumstance, perhaps because of his own generosity and dependability. Such a person often finds his grief complicated by self accusation, the memory of small requests refused, small acts of thoughtfulness overlooked. These can be magnified out of all proportion.

I am no psychologist, but my guess is that one unconsciously misses the responsibility he has had before. The loving desire to do something helpful is frustrated, because there is almost nothing one can do for a person who has passed away. This frustration may take the form of self-accusation, and it can be quite insidious. One suddenly finds oneself brooding over a thing so insignificant in itself it makes one say, "It was little enough for him to ask," or "It would have been little enough for me to do." What one forgets is that the disappointment of the other person was little too, and that the matter was probably forgotten long since.

All that this self-accusing proves is the reality of one's concern for the dead person. It doesn't invariably happen to those who care deeply and sincerely, but it never happens to those whose care was superficial. Such thoughts should be understood as a sort of psychological reaction; then they can be dismissed as false scruples.

Grief seems many times to have four stages. First, there is the initial shock, even when the death was inevitable and expected. During this, one can get along on one's nerve: a merciful provision of nature. Self-discipline is a blessing here; it protects one from torturing one's self with too much hysteria. But there is no need to torture one's self with too much self-control either. Then there is a period of realization, when the sense of loss is felt, and it is during this time that one is most apt to accuse one's self baselessly. Next comes a period of readjustment. The most helpful books I know for use at this time are "If a Man Die" by Crosby Bell, and the fine little Forward Movement pamphlet "For Those Who Mourn." The final stage frequently comes after some months or a year, when there is a feeling of nearness to the dead person which may be so strong that it almost seems like a return on his part.

It is necessary to add, and perhaps it will be helpful, that one does not always go through all these stages of grief, and sometimes one may circle around through the same stages several times. But we should never forget that even out of our barren stony griefs, God can help us raise stronger pillars of faith.

CHURCH AND DRAMATIC ARTS

BY WM. B. SPOFFORD, JR.

ACCORDING to the latest news from England, the Archbishop of Canterbury has ruled that Nativity plays and other dramatic presentations in the Church should be subject to censorship in the future. In the Canterbury Diocesan Notes, Dr. Geoffrey Fisher has named Bishop Alfred C. W. Rose of Dover and one-time chaplain of the late King George V, as controller of Church plays. In doing this, the Archbishop wrote:

"I request that in every case application for permission for a performance in a church school be made to the Bishop of Dover and that a copy of the script should accompany the application. Control is very necessary, both to secure that the standard of the plays presented is worthy and to secure that only plays which are suitable for presentation in a church are admitted.

It is certainly true that a better standard of Church play is necessary. We are sure that, already, our English brethren have all the best of it in this field since they have managed to get such talented artists as Dorothy Sayers and T. S. Eliot to produce works for them.

If any persons are writing Church dramas today, it would be wise to see that they are of the highest standards and that they square with Biblical criticism and tenable doctrines. Heaven only knows how many potential Christian spirits have been alienated from the Church by insipid dramas which have been staged in a manner that any self-respecting kindergarten would be ashamed of. We need an agency to show our parishes that they don't need a fancy stage or gigantic chancel to stage worthwhile plays. They have to be shown that miracles can be achieved with light and shadows; plain, functional costumes and off-stage voice choirs.

We believe that some kind of assistance should be given the parishes in this field. However, since we mistrust censorship in any shape, whether it be political, economic or religious, we deplore this new step of the Archbishop of Canterbury. We need experimentation in the Church drama field and any confinement of language to the "closely scriptural" would prevent this. We stand in need of constructive thinking on this whole matter and not of "yea" and "nay" decisions handed down from above.

THE NEW BOOKS

Excellent Good *Fair

* * Revelation and Response in the Old Testament. By Cuthbert A. Simpson. Columbia Univ. Press. $2.50.

Professor Simpson's Paddock Lectures at General Theological Seminary trace in brilliant, clear, readable style the development of Hebrew religion as reflected in the Old Testament. The language used, even in the title, reminds us of Toynbee; the scholarship is modern, and is supported now by the author's major work on "The Early Traditions of Israel" (Blackwell, 1947). The great development of Israelitic religion from belief in a god of sheer destruction to trust in the loving, faithful God of the prophets and psalmists is the miracle of revelation, and of response to it, which laid the foundations of biblical faith. This is a book the "ordinary" reader will enjoy and profit by—not just the scholar and technician.

—F. C. G.

* * The Stars in Our Heaven. By Peter Lum. Pantheon. $3.75.

This is a clear, simple, beautifully illustrated book about the stars, their constellations, the zodiac—even including the southern stars not seen in our hemisphere. The myths and legends woven about their lore through the centuries, not only in Greece and the West but also in China and India, are told in language a child can understand and appreciate. But many adults will enjoy the book as well. An excellent gift—for the right person.

—F. C. G.

* * * The War Lords of Washington. By Bruce Catton. Harcourt, Brace. $3.50.

As an ex-member of the WPB, Mr. Catton tells the story of how the idea of the Peoples' War and the War for Four Freedoms was subverted in Washington by men who feared any change in the status quo. Quoting chapter and verse, the author traces a deep conflict which was waged in the marble halls of Washington during the war over the issue of whether the American economy would serve abundance and peace or unlimited profits and privilege. An interesting history which helps explain today's prices and election returns.

WILLIAM W. HORSTICK
The Bishop of Eau Claire

Thank you for the December 2nd issue of The Witness dedicated to the Rural Work of the Church. Too few Church people understand the excellent constructive job that Dr. Wieland and the Rev. Clifford Samuelson are doing for the Church in our rural field. Your issue will do much to tell the story of the importance, the extent, and need for the work.

The rural field has been neglected too long by the Church. With the kind of help that comes to us in rural areas under the leadership, understanding and encouragement of Dr. Wieland and Clif Samuelson the Church can look to our coming into our own in the development of a rural pastoral ministry second to none. The total missionary program of the Church cannot be strengthened nor make progress until such time as there is dignity and value given to the clergyman who must with agility and understanding follow the plowman's furrow and rap at the kitchen door of the farm home with the fanaticism of a brush salesman!

An adequate rural ministry means strength in our own rural fields and more communicants from the rural areas for the urban parish. To say nothing of more help in a financial way for the overseas as well as domestic missions. Here in the Diocese of Eau Claire we are all deeply grateful to both Dr. Wieland and Clif Samuelson for their counsel, their work and their help.

FRANK W. STERRETT
The Bishop of Bethlehem

I have read the editorial of "The Same Ditch" in the issue of November 25 with great interest and considerable bewilderment for I realize that I am entirely in agreement with the Archbishop of York in his position on this whole problem of war, and like him I do not find it open to the description of "the same futile, crass cry." And apparently the majority of the Bishops of Lambeth are victims of the same so-called "muddled" thinking, for you will remember their resolutions on war:

"That war as a method of settling international disputes is incompatible with the teaching and example of Our Lord Jesus Christ.

"The Conference reaffirms that it is the duty of governments to work for the general reduction and control of armaments of every kind and for their final elimination, except those which may be necessary for international police protection; but until such time as this is achieved, it recognizes that there are occasions when both nations and individuals are obliged to resort to war as the lesser of two evils."

War as the method of settling disputes is certainly incompatible with the teaching of Our Lord Jesus Christ, and it behooves us to do everything in our power to hasten the day when this will be recognized throughout the world. But suppose some group of neighbors, for whatever reason, may enter on some campaign of aggression and persecution that could result in a loss for us and our loved ones of everything we value. Some of us, and I think most of us, would agree that under such conditions we would be obliged to resort to war as the lesser of two evils and that in that sense it would be definitely just.

This is an ancient question about which men of good-will will be arguing long after we are all gone. We look forward to the coming of the day when the United Nations may be so strengthened as to justify the decrease of national armaments and in that direction would favor a just limitation of national sovereignty. But until that time comes, surely a strong case may be made for the position of the Archbishop of York not only as realistic but Christian.

FREDERICK W. BLATZ
Rector at Westfield, N. J.

I want to join the chorus of praise for the new look of The Witness. I think you are doing a good job in giving us news of the Church and in stimulating our thinking in your articles. The Lord knows we need stimulation.

Churches Should Carry on In North China Area

Friends Service Worker Reports Few Groups of Christian Missionaries Remain

BY

MARGARET STANLEY TESDELL

Of the Friends Service Committee

★ There are unused church buildings in North China today. Christian church buildings, Protestant and Catholic, built by Christian missionaries from western countries, are empty. Crosses silhouetted against the Hopeh skies are evidence of once active Christian missions in Chinese villages.

Where are the missionaries? Where are the Christians? Are the only evidences of the mission work, well-built steepled church buildings surrounded by fine houses, spacious compounds and thick walls?

We walked across northern Shansi, Hopeh and Shantung, and saw concrete evidence in the form of mission grounds, of a foreign religion imposed on Chinese culture. Sturdy, foreign looking buildings set down in the midst of flimsy Chinese dwellings. The big buildings seem to cast shadows upon the surrounding native dwelling-places — top-heavy, without roots in Chinese soil. Are thick-walled compounds the only remains of Christian mission work in North China today? The missionaries have left the area, except for a few groups who stayed on, and they have found work in calmer fields, in West and South China. But the turbulence of civil war, the agonizing cries of humanity struggling, penetrates even there.

Chinese peasants, the agrarian natives of North China, have bowed, acquiescing for centuries, to masters who piled high the burdens of misery onto already calloused shoulders. Now they reach toward the light of progress. Now they beg for guidance. And they have found leadership in the Chinese Communist movement (an indigeous Chinese movement not to be confused with Russian Communism). The century-old struggle of the peasants has merged with the revolutionary movement of Chinese Communism, until it has become one mighty movement, half of China's population, pulling itself up from the level of serf and slave to the level of human being.

We evacuated, with International Peace Hospital No. 1, from Yenan, then the Communist capital, to northern Shensi and across the Yellow River into Shansi in the face of Nationalist-Communist fighting. We lived in cave-villages; cared for patients in cave-wards; operated in cave-rooms; lived among the lao pai shing whose caves we occupied temporarily. Everywhere the spirit of dedication and optimism is indomitable. Why?

The lao pei shing, political workers, educators, hospital staffs, are struggling successfully to bring about a movement which will help the common people to help themselves. The land reform program assures the peasants that they will have food enough. Two good meals of millet and beans and pepper and pickled turnips each day, every day, is a great step forward from the poverty of serfdom. The land reform program assures agricultural progress. Planting of fruit trees is rewarded by freeing such land of taxes for a time, thereby helping to alleviate soil erosion which destroys the hills, and also producing fruit to supplement a too-simple diet. The adult education program assures heretofore illiterates that soon they may read the newspapers themselves. Political workers and educators living as the villagers live, primitively, prove by their works that the movement is striving toward democracy and equal rights. Medical help, slowly but surely, reaches out into the hills, immunizing against typhus fever and smallpox, treating relapsing fever; teaching mothers that fifty per cent of their babies do not need to die. The agrarian population, living primitively from hand to mouth, is aware of the world and its problems. With this progress, they identify themselves with people like themselves in other countries the world over.

The power behind the Chinese Communist movement is the strength of the common people, millions of them, reaching out for enough to eat and wear and a place they may live

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

ST. GEORGE'S TO OPEN FOR CHRISTMAS

★ St. George's Episcopal Church, Stuyvesant Sq. in New York City, will reopen the main church building for the Christmas services, the Rev. Edward O. Miller, rector, announced recently. For the past six months, regular services have been held in the Centennial Chapel, which has been used while an $185,000 reconstruction program has been progressing in the main edifice, first opened for worship Nov. 19, 1848. St. George's this year is observing its bicentennial as a congregation. It was founded in 1748 as a chapel of Trinity Church, Broadway and Wall Street. First important Christmas event is Church decoration night, Wednesday, Dec. 22 at 8 p. m., which in other years has attracted 1,000 to decorate the church for the festival services. To decorate the chancel and the balconies in the nave 500 yards of laurel roping and 1200 pounds of laurel greens and two 20-foot trees have been ordered. The combined choirs of 110 voices lead the congregation in carol singing. Archibald Dudgeon is chairman of the committee and Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce is secretary.

LIBERIAN CHRISTIANS SEND OFFERINGS

★ After hearing a sermon on "the evils of civilization and the bad habits of some Americans in their neglect of Christianity" the native congregation of the Holy Cross Mission (Episcopal), Kailahun, Sierra Leone, West Africa, have sent an offering of $22.25 to Bishop Wallace E. Conkling of the Episcopal Diocese of Chicago. They asked that he use it to further the work being done by the Negro congregations of the Episcopal Church in Chicago. In the letter which accompanied the check, the Rev. Ralph T. Mulligan, O.H.C., says: "This represents the total of our Easter offering, saved through Lent, 1948, by the 300 Christians and Catechumens in Bolahun and the outstations. Through this offering we try to teach our people about their responsibility for missions of the Church throughout the world. Last year we sent it to the Philippines. We have a rule about offerings. Nothing is expected from the hearers, but the Catechumens (those receiving instruction in the doctrine of Christianity) are expected to give three cents a month, and the Christians five cents. Even this is hard for them as there is little money in this country. As in the early Church much of our Sunday offering is in kind and three or four cents a months from our people is equal to fifty cents or a dollar from someone at home." The mission at Kailahun is conducted by the Episcopal Order of the Holy Cross, a religious order for priests and laymen devoted to the cultivation of the spiritual life of its members and the practice of good works. The work of the Order in West Africa includes three boys' schools, a seminary, more than 20 evangelistic centers and a hospital.

CEREBRAL PALSY SCHOOL IN PARISH HOUSE

★ In cooperation with the Cerebral Palsy Society of Georgia, St. Luke's Church opened the first Cerebral Palsy School in Georgia on December 7th, it was announced by the Rev. J. Milton Richardson, rector. This school, which is held in the recently rebuilt and remodeled parish house of St. Luke's Church, will enroll cerebral palsied boys and girls from four to eight years of age. The aim of this special school is to give children with cerebral palsy a chance at normal life. Pupils will be given eyesight, ear, speech coordination and mental tests as the basis for their training. There will be conferences with the mothers of such handicapped children to give them an understanding of what the children need and of what they can do for them at home. Besides a teacher for the school furnished by the Atlanta board of education, there will be a medical director of the school furnished by the Aidmore Crippled Children's Hospital of Atlanta. Arrangements have been made also to have a physiotherapist visit the school daily to give each child the therapy prescribed by his personal physician.

and work without being driven away by armies marching back and forth across their fields.

A tight blockade around Communist China, imposed by the Chinese Nationalist government, prevents medicines, mail, relief workers, books, exchange professors or students, from entering or leaving. Inside this blockade, with no chance of the broader outlook which such contacts would bring, the self-sufficient Communists become bitter against the "imperialistic capitalism" of the U.S.A. which continues to send military support to Nationalist China which makes the civil war possible. Both sides in the civil conflict use U.S.A. equipment. The Nationalists receive it directly; the Communists, indirectly. Patients in the operating room of IPH No. 1 were found to be wounded —some of them, both Nationalist and Communist—with ammunition made in the U.S.A. Without the military aid of the U.S.A. the civil war might have ended.

There are a few groups of concerned Christians who are carrying on their work inside the blockade. LMS medical and evangelical workers, medical staff in Taiku, Friends Service Unit, and others.

In Communist China western Christians have been invited to help fight against hunger, poverty, disease, illiteracy and fear. Wang Yin P'u, secretary-general of CLARA (Chinese Liberated Areas Relief Association) writes: "All international friends who come to liberated areas for the sincere purpose of helping the people—such as in the work of medical, agricultural, cooperatives and motor transport, and who would observe the laws and program of the democratic government, will be welcome. . . . We contend that all peoples have the freedom of religion, but they must follow the laws, program, of the democratic government, as well as to respect the customs of the society and should not involve themselves in political activities."

Empty steeples against the North China skies? Rather, deep roots in the China soil. Love, at all costs, plants the seed of eternal truths. Love at all costs, nurtures the seed until it is a strong root.

Editor's Note: Miss Tesdell was a member of the Friends Service Unit in China from 1946 until this past summer. She was with this unit in the Communist area of North China from March, 1947, until April, 1948. The staff of her particular unit, known as International Peace Hospital Number One, consisted of seven people from New Zealand, Canada, England and the United States.

CUTTINGTON COLLEGE TO OPEN SOON

★ Formal announcement of the reguilding plans for Cuttington College and Divinity School in Liberia has been sent to the National Council by Dr. Seth C. Edwards, principal. He writes: "We take pleasure in announcing that the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America has made possible the rebuilding of Cuttington College and Divinity School, which was closed for nearly twenty years, on a new site near Suacoco, Liberian hinterland. The Liberian Government has made a grant of 1500 acres of land and we have been assured by the building contractor that sufficient number of buildings will be ready so that the Cuttington College and Divinity School may be opened on a limited scale for both men and women at the beginning of the next school year, February 15, 1949."

DIOCESAN HOUSE OPENED IN SOUTH CAROLINA

★ Several hundred persons from throughout the Diocese of South Carolina attended the dedication ceremony for the recently occupied Diocesan House, 138 Wentworth Street, Charleston, December 5. Bishop Carruthers and Bishop Thomas, retired bishop of the diocese, conducted the service of dedication which was followed by a social hour. The building was given by Miss Marguerite C. Miller of Charleston last year for a diocesan center. In addition to the gift of the building itself, Miss Miller has furnished one of the rooms as the bishop's chapel. One of the large rooms has been furnished as a diocesan library by Mrs. George L. Buist of Charleston in memory of her son, Reginald Hudson Bedell, Jr., who lost his life in World War II. Mrs. A. Kinloch McDowell, also of Charleston, has furnished the bishop's office in memory of her husband. A number of other memorials have been given and several hundred gifts of money have been received, enabling the diocese to renovate the entire building. The largest of these gifts was one for $2,000 from Bishop and Mrs. Thomas. The building of Greek revival architecture was renovated by a committee headed by Mr. T. Wilbur Thornhill. There is a guest room for visiting clergy as well as offices for the secretary, the director of young people's work, and the registrar and historiographer of the diocese. The dedication ceremony was arranged by a committee headed by Mr. John P. Frost.

NEW YORK TO BEGIN $150,000 DRIVE

★ The Diocese of New York will conduct a campaign for $150,000 to enable it to build several new churches and a parish house in the diocesan missionary field. The campaign will be launched January 1st and it is hoped that the full goal will be reached before March 1st so that building operations can start as soon as the frost is out of the ground. No mission church has been built in the Diocese for nearly ten years and there are several churches which were started 12 to 25 years ago and never completed. In commenting on the campaign Bishop Gilbert said, "We must not let anything stand in the way of our obligation to perform this very fundamental missionary task to plant the Church in these growing communities in our own Diocese. I am certain we will have the full backing of all of our clergy and lay people."

R. W. F. ORGANIZED IN VIRGINIA

★ A conference for rural ministers in Virginia was held at Rosslyn, the conference center of the Diocese of Virginia, recently. The conference was sponsored by the three dioceses in the state and there were 20 clergymen present. The Rev. G. William Beale of Rocky Mount presided at the meetings, and the speakers included Bishop Goodwin, Bishop Mason and the Rev. E. Dargan Butt, president of the Rural Workers Fellowship of the Episcopal Church and instructor in pastoral theology and rural work at Seabury-Western Theological Seminary and Church Divinity School of the Pacific. As a result of the conference a Rural Workers Fellowship of the Episcopal Church in Virginia has been formed and the following officers elected: president, the Rev. J. P. H. Mason; vice presidents, the Rev. Edgar Burnz and the Rev. Thomas L. Cox; secretary, the Rev. Harry Baldwin; treasurer, the Rev. Richard H. Lee. The fellowship is open to all interested Episcopalians in the state and the next meeting is to be held immediately after Easter.

ANOTHER LAYMAN HEADS SCHOOL

★ William W. Barber, Jr., teacher of Greek, has been made headmaster of St. Mark's School, Southboro, Mass., to succeed the Rev. William Brewer who resigned last June. Thus another long tradition has been broken since the school has always heretofore had a clergyman as headmaster. St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H., was the first to break this tradition when it elected a layman to succeed Norman B. Nash when he became bishop of Massachusetts.

DR. LEIPER SPEAKS TO WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

★ At the Advent meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of New York, the Rev. Henry Smith Leiper and Bishop Oliver J. Hart of Pennsylvania were speakers. Speaking in his capacity of associate general secretary of the World Council of Churches Mr. Leiper urged an approach to problems of the World Council similar to that in family problems. "We have to develop a sense of caring about our brethren," he said, and predicted" a new era in the life of the church." He emphasized the need of conceding to other Christians the right to be different and urged "always being on the side of conciliation where there is friction."

The six hundred women who were present attended a holy communion service in the cathedral in the morning and contributed $14,000 toward a United Thank Offering being raised for presentation at the triennial general convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church next September in San Francisco. Mrs. John H. Michaeli of St. James the Less Church, Scarsdale, treasurer of the diocesan women's thank offering, said the total before this meeting had reached $63,444. The women pledged $42,000 to the budget of the National Council for 1949. Mrs. Eleanor S. McCulloh of Christ Church, Rye, president, said this was an increase of $2,000. A pledge of $3,000 to Christian Social Service on Ellis Island was also voted.

Bishop Hart said: "From grateful hearts you make this offering. So long as there are men and women in the world who will work and sacrifice in order that the Gospel may be proclaimed, a great hope will move over the earth."

NOMINATIONS FOR HONOR ROLL

★ If you know of an Episcopalian who in your judgment should be on the Witness Honor Roll, please send the name, with citation, to the Witness, 135 Liberty Street, New York. Those nominated will be carefully considered by the editorial board. We want the names of those who have served the Church and Christianity in some outstanding way, conspicuously or otherwise, this year or in preceding years.

ENGLISH BISHOP WARNS CANADIAN YOUTH

★ Christians "have a great deal to learn from the Communists," the Rt. Rev. Stephen C. Neill, assistant Bishop to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and associate secretary of the World Council of Churches, told an inter-denominational youth rally held recently in Ottawa. The rally was held on the eve of the annual meeting of the Canadian Council of Churches. "I do not agree with the aims of the Marxists, but we have a great deal to learn from them," Bishop Neill declared. "It is no use running them down, for we must learn from them in order to beat them." He said that Christian young people must become imbued with the fervor shown by Communist youth, "who are absolutely convinced they've got the answer and are ready to sacrifice anything to put their doctrines into effect. They know what they are after, and they are convinced they are going to change the world in 15 years." Bishop Neill cautioned Christian youth "not for a minute to imagine that the Christian cause will advance automatically because it has 19 centuries of tradition behind it." Instead, he appealed to them to set objectives on the number of new recruits they can gain.

ECUMENICAL NEWS

FEDERAL COUNCIL TO ACT ON HOUSE COMMITTEE

A resolution condemning the House Committee on Un-American Activities and calling for its abolition was referred to the executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches for action at its January meeting by delegates at the Council's 40th anniversary convention at Cincinnati. The resolution, presented at the close of the convention, was referred to the executive committee on the suggestion of the business committee because of lack of time for thorough study. The delegates unanimously agreed to a statement stressing that there was no intention of sidetracking the proposal. The resolution, they said, must "receive the serious attention it deserves. As Christians and as citizens we are concerned for the safeguarding of our democracy and individual liberties inherent in it," the resolution declared. "From that standpoint," it added, "we have examined the record of the House Committee on Un-American Activities including its latest excursion into the field of religion. Individuals who should be assumed innocent until proven guilty have been labelled guilty without hearing or trial. In the interest of our democracy and peace we call for the Committee's abolition. We call for a new democratic Congressional Committee on Civil Liberties." (RNS)

ONLY FOUR ATHEISTS IN NEW ORLEANS

The Greater New Orleans area is 51.4 per cent Protestant, 47.3 per cent Roman Catholic, and 1.3 per cent Jewish, according to a report on the religious census taken there recently under the auspices of the local Council of Churches. Dr. Guy H. Black, who made an analysis of the census, said the white population was 60 per cent Catholic or Catholic constituency, and 40 per cent Protestant or Protestant responsibility.

LEGISLATION DISCUSSED BY CHURCH GROUPS

A three-day seminar on the relation of the churches to political affairs was held in Chicago recently under the sponsorship of the Illinois Council of Churches, the Illinois Council of Church Women, the Church Federation of Greater Chicago and the Council of Church Women of Greater Chicago. Religious leaders attending the seminar approved a seven-point program of federal legislation, one of the most specific ever to be presented by an American church meeting.

The adopted program urged a strong fair employment practices commission; a new displaced persons bill admitting at least 500,000 DPs including non-Europeans and eliminating present discriminating provisions; and legislation to insure equality of naturalization and a modification of immigration laws. Also recommended was the enactment of appropriate legislation to eliminate discrimination and segregation in the nation's capital; and the termination, either by statutes or executive order, of existing discrimination in the armed forces.

The Protestant Church leaders called for discontinuance of the House Committee on Un-American Activities and "unfair procedures denying adequate protection to public employees charged with disloyalty." Turning their attention to conscientious objectors, the delegates urged provision of alternative service for COs and the restoration of citizenship rights to all those convicted for violating the 1940 draft act on grounds of conscience. In addition to suggesting that churches back such national legislation, the delegates recommended five new state laws which would make discriminatory practices illegal.

CHURCH AND ECONOMIC LIFE WEEK SET

The Federal Council of Churches has designated the week of Jan. 16-22 as "Church and Economic Life Week." Object of the observance, which will become an annual event, is to develop an informed and active concern within the churches for Christian principles in economic life, according to the Rev. Cameron P. Hall, executive secretary of the council's department of the Church and Economic Life. Asserting that many church people were "confused and hesitant" about what was required of them as Christians in economic life, Mr. Hall added: "'Church and Economic Life Week' will provide an opportunity for church people to grow into and build upon their responsibility before God for what they do in economic life."

'CROP' CHRISTMAS TRAINS BEING ASSEMBLED

Twenty-four states are currently engaged in campaigns to assemble CROP Christmas trains, it was announced by officials of the Christian Rural Overseas Program. They estimated that the campaign would see farmers and others in the 24 states contribute enough produce to fill between 2,000 and 2,500 cars. All food will later be sent to needy persons in war-devastated areas. CROP is a joint project of Church World Service, Lutheran World Relief and the National Catholic Rural Life Conference.

NEWS OF OTHER CHURCHES

UN-AMERICAN COMMITTEE BLASTED BY BAPTISTS

Cleveland Baptists, through the board of their association, have blasted the House Un-American Activities Committee. The committee's charge that Communists have infiltrated into Protestant Churches, the churchmen stated to be "un-American, unfounded and false." The resolution also demanded that "every person or institution accused be given a trial by jury, the same as has been granted to J. Parnell Thomas, chairman of the committee, for his alleged wrong-doing."

COOPERATES WITH KLAN GROUP

Louie D. Newton, chairman of the civic committee of the Christian Council in Atlanta, has issued a statement deploring the attendance of robed and hooded Ku Klux Klansmen at a service in an Alabama church. "When the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ has to depend upon hooded men with fiery crosses to produce order and provide financial support, rather than upon the presence of the Holy Spirit for light and power and comfort, we have come upon a time of confusion."

CATHOLIC STATEMENT CRITICIZED

An attack on the recent statement of the Roman hierarchy which criticized the Supreme Court decision barring religious instruction in schools has been made by the Rev. Stanley I. Stuber, chairman of the Baptist's commission on religious freedom. He assailed the Catholic pronouncement as "biased and misleading," "a propaganda document of the worst kind" and as "a dangerous weapon used for extremely selfish ends." He declared that when the bishops said the court had ruled in favor of "an omnipotent state" they followed a "dangerous procedure" that came "near to being subversive doctrine." Stuber charged that the Catholic statement, instead of building up a case against secularism as it purported to do, actually laid the ground "for public support" of the Roman Catholic school system. "They obviously want to use tax money to support sectarian religion."

METHODIST BISHOPS HIT COMMITTEE

Bishops of the Methodist Church, meeting in Cincinnati, issued a statement condemning the Committee on Un-American Activities for its recent statement charging that Communists have infiltrated Protestant Churches. "We who know the Church," the bishops said, "know these charges to be false we deplore any statement from any source which defames a great Christian communion representing millions of faithful Christians and loyal Americans." As an illustration of the trustworthiness of the Un-American Committee's report, the bishops point out that this recent blast at the Protestant Churches names the Epworth League as one of the Church groups being used by Communists. Pointing out that the Epworth League has not been in existence for nine years, the bishops state that "thus the nation is informed that an organization not in existence is being infiltrated today."

WARNS OF FASCISM IN AMERICA

Fear that Americans may go into a political "tailspin" which might emerge into a "type of American fascism" was expressed by President John A. Mackay of Princeton Seminary, speaking at a dinner in Newark. If this develops, he declared, possibly from the military emergency, a "demand would go forth to all churches to give unqualified support to this new creed which would be called Christian." He said that Hitler, through the same tactics, was able to secure allegiance of many so-called Christians and Christian leaders.

ROMAN CHURCH HAS NEW THEATRE

The Roman Catholic Church has opened a theatre in Boston, and with three dramatic successes to its credit promised to become an outstanding local project. Both New York and Washington have similar theaters. New York's Blackfriars have achieved national fame and the Washington theater, operated by Georgetown University, is rated a financial and artistic success.

EVANGELISM DRIVE BY METHODISTS

Plans for adding 2,000,000 new members to the Methodist Church in the next four years were made at a meeting of the denomination's conference secretaries of evangelism. The secretaries proposed a three-fold program, including visitation, pulpit and public evangelism, aimed at acquiring 400,000 new members in 1949, 500,000 in each of 1950 and 1951, and 600,000 in 1952.

CLERGY PLACEMENT A PROBLEM

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

HUNGARIAN PASTORS COOPERATE

The Rev. Alexander Kiss, a Protestant minister, was met by Father Andrew Szecsy, the local Roman Catholic pastor, when the latter arrived in Augyalfold, a labor district in the northern part of Hungary, to assume a new charge. Speaking for his parishioners, Father Szecsy said, "Though there may be things which separate our Churches, I rather seek the things which unite us. We both work for the cause of Christ among the working people."

NO INTERFERENCE IN CHINA

Lewis Hoskins, just returned from Communist China where he has been with the Quakers for the past three years, reports that their project in Honan province has been successfully operated in spite of four changes of command of that territory between Communist and Nationalist armies. Both sides have recognized the work of the Quakers as a project for the people, without regard for race or politics. He illustrated their attitude by telling of a large stock of gasoline and trucks which the Friends owned which would be invaluable for military purposes. The armies, both Nationalist and Communist, were told that the supplies were essential for the work so instead of confiscating it, as they might easily have done, they stationed guards to protect it for the Quaker unit.

CHRISTMAS IN JERUSALEM

Rabbi Jacob Herzog, director of the Christian affairs department of the Israeli ministry of religion, recently flew to Rome where he discussed with Vatican officials arrangements for Christians to celebrate Christmas in the holy land. Previously Anglican Bishop, Weston Stewart, called upon Rabbi Judah Leib Fishman, Israeli minister of religion, but the nature of their conversation was not disclosed. However it has been announced by Israeli officials that Christians in the Jewish section of Jerusalem would receive "all facilities" for celebrating Christmas in the traditional manner.

HUNGARIAN LUTHERANS APPROVE PACT

Hungarian Lutherans are to sign an agreement with the government. Approval of the pact came after lengthy debate during which the government came in for vigorous criticism because it nationalized Church schools despite the opposition of Lutherans and other Church leaders. The agreement stipulates that the Lutheran Church will be permitted to enjoy "the fullest religious liberty" and that the state will continue to make grants for its upkeep.

SWEDISH CHURCH HAS UNITY COMMISSION

A special commission to handle international relations has been approved by the general synod of the Lutheran Church, state Church of Sweden. It will support the ecumenical movement and will also enlarge contacts and fellowship between the Swedish Church and Protestants throughout the world.

DEFENSE GROUP IN MEXICO

The national committee for Evangelical Defense, agency to protect Protestants from persecution, has been reorganized in Mexico. The aims of the committee are to procure and document facts, from witnesses, of each incident of discrimination and harassment; to present each case to government officials; to publicize such incidents in the local and foreign press. The chairman of the committee stated that only in rare instances have R. C. priests been involved in the persecution of Protestants, adding that most attacks upon Protestants were made by irresponsible groups.

R.C. PRIEST VISITS HUNGARY

Abbe Jean Boulier, leader of the Progressive Christian movement in France, has been invited to lecture in Hungary. He is the head of a considerable group of Roman Catholics in France who believe that Communism and Christianity are not incompatible. He recently shared the platform at a Communist-sponsored workers' meeting in Paris with Maurice Thorez, leader of the French Communists. His attendance reportedly caused concern to French ecclesiastical authorities.

ROMANIA DISSOLVES GREEK CHURCH

The Greek Catholic Church in Romania has been declared no longer in existence and all of its properties have been ordered —by government decree—turned over to the state. This follows an announcement in October that the 250-year-old Church had been re-accepted into the Orthodox Church of Romania by Patriarch Justinian. The Greek Catholic Church in the country has about 1,300,000 members, under the jurisdiction of a metropolitan and four bishops. It has 1,700 churches, monasteries and other buildings.

EDITORIALS

December Moods

THERE'S a marked contrast these December days in our preparation for Christmas. Department store windows are decked with tinsel and expensive toys for young and old. Rotund and bewhiskered Santa Clauses ring their bells on street corners and welcome children to their North Pole workshops. Crowds push through store aisles laden down with bright packages looking for something for grandmother or Uncle Fred. On the streets of every city are all the evidences of the Christmas rush: colored lights, evergreen trees, the sound of carols played over loudspeakers, people getting ready for the holiday — shopping and hurrying about — everybody in the lighter mood that characterizes this season even though there is apprehension in many hearts over the future and over the peace.

Every Sunday we step out of this world into the church which is also preparing for Christmas. And here the mood is so different. Here are no bright colors but the somber color of Advent, the purple of penitence. Here are no chimes pealing out the joyous carols, not yet! Here instead are hymns and lessons and prayers of a more solemn judgment. Advent speaks of last things. Advent bids us prepare for one who is either received as our saviour or comes as our judge. Advent sounds the ancient cry, Repent ye, for the Kingdom of God is at hand.

Have we ever questioned, have we pondered at all this difference of preparation for the blessed feast of Christmas? The gaiety and feverish busy-ness of the world over against the relatively serious accent of the Church? Of course, all too often the world (and many of us, too) is getting ready only to celebrate family reunions or at best a lovely story of a baby born in a manger while heavenly choirs sang and shepherds watched in their fields by night.

If this is all Christmas means, then the world is consistent in its preparation. But if Christmas celebrates the nativity of one who divides all history and in whom is revealed the heart of the universe, if this Christ is the very perfection of our manhood and the end of all human aspiration, the saviour of the world and our supreme hope, then how true is the Church in its Advent emphasis. How right that we should be profoundly penitent. For we must confess in all humility that we have never really received him as our only lord and saviour. He came unto his own and his own received him not, and this is still our tragic story. We receive him not. We call him, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which he says.

If we would know the great joy of Christmas, Christ come for us, Christ come for you and for me, then we must have such preparation as the Church in her wisdom decrees; making ready in heart and mind; penitence for our forgetful, negligent, selfish ways which leave no room for Christ; affirming anew our devotion to him who is the fountainhead of all our faith in life's holy meaning and God's reality. Repent ye, for the Kingdom of heaven is at hand!

"QUOTES"

THE birth of a baby in Bethlehem seemed of small significance to the rulers and the peoples of the ancient world. Yet almost two thousand years later, their empire has long since fallen into ruin while Christ lives as a vital power in the hearts and minds of millions of men and women of every race and clime. Here more than a parable is an historic fact to guide us through the perplexities of today. Truth, goodness, love, these are eternal realities because they are of God. Our generation can only be led into the paths of peace as we as individuals kneel at the manger and thus find the secret of the good tidings of great joy which shall be to all men.

—HENRY K. SHERRILL,
Presiding Bishop.

Peace of Christmas

THE church is filled with people. It is the midnight service on Christmas Eve. The candlelight procession is over. Carols have been sung. The crowd stands as the gospel is read. The phrases build one upon another, and then is heard, "The Word was made flesh and dwelt among us." There is a pause. Not a sound interrupts the moment. The organ and the voices are stilled. In the silence there is peace. What has made it? Perhaps it comes from the consciousness that the author of this passage had made sense out of his experience of life. There were for him no more fundamental questionings. He knew God's ordering of life, and he knew the order, the peace, that came into his own life when he had committed himself to discipline in that order. In the beginning God had purposed the creation that man might live with him in a father-son relationship. He came into the world, and to those who received him there was given power to achieve sonship. He was convinced that there was no other reason for his existence than that of becoming a son of God. Peace was for him because there was perfect harmony, complete integration, of his life. His motive was single. His will was set solely on attainment of being a son.

But the peace did not bring to that writer a cessation of all striving. Far from it! Since God had humbled himself to dwell in a fleshly body on his earth, he looked on the world and its life with different vision. God gave himself that the world and human life might be reconciled to him. The task was set, the redemption of the world that would establish a family relationship of brothers under God. Discipleship which gave the ordered peace made him confront all those things which were obstacles to achievement of sonship and a broadening brotherhood, and seek their removal or overthrow. He knew peace, but he also knew it as "striving, closed in the sod." Our prayer should be that we too may have the peace of Christmas that was his, a purity and singleness of heart — and mind — and will — for God's purposings for his creation.

To Brethren Far Away

BY
GILBERT P. SYMONS

SOMEWHERE in the Holy Book, I remember, a man of God asks, "Where is the scribe?" Well, for once, may not I be the scribe, writing upon a tablet not just for my poor self but also for others of like mind? And because it is Christmastime I trust the good God will let my message fly up and go all ways. Where it cannot meet the eye, some good angel, translating it into your strange speech, may whisper it to your heart like the conveyance of a prayer.

Some of your streets I know, for when I was young and strong I walked in them with delight. Your children babbled to me in their mother tongue and I stammered my replies. Once, soldiers clanking by stopped the innocent chatter of babes. They gaped at helmeted men and I shivered as if a cloud had shut out the sun. Now those streets lie waste; only ghosts of houses haunted by ghosts of once bonny girls and boys with here and there, scraping among the ruins, a broken creature—man or woman, I cannot tell.

Some of your streets—you of the Far East—I never saw. They were too far away. But fancy has bright eyes. Like a harmless spirit I have looked into your little houses of paper and wood, or bamboo and straw, or mud brick and tile, and watched the mother sewing in safety near the ancestral tablet or the sacred scroll. I have stepped delicately about in your tiny gardens where the plum tree, or the cherry, or the dwarf deodar grows. The children looked up at my blonde head without alarm and smiled. And we both thought we heard little temple bells, or was it a bulbul singing?

A GERMAN WORKER & FAMILY

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Your streets are desolate now there in the Far East. Appollyon spread out his black wings and rained down fire. The earth shook, a great wind blew and then came more fire. But after, in the calm a little sound arises. Children are singing, new children, not the ones I knew. Often they are hungry, their little garments are tattered and their sandals worn through. But still they sing, for the snow-capped mountain is still there and Spring will come, and the rice will sprout again.

This age of iron vexes my heart and causes me to rebel. The iron enters into my soul. Why should armies tick as grasshoppers march about and eat up the children's bread? Why cannot you all come and share with us who have bread enough and to spare? For we have peace. No. It is a vain wish. You have your own land and we ours. Each must stay where he belongs. Rebel as I may against that stern rule, only by the spirit wings of love and prayer can I cross the great gulf that parts me from you.

You are good to say that we have sent you more than words. Many a parcel of our good things have we packed and sent you—as much to still our own disquiet as to relieve your need. And our rulers have ordered ships of grain and other things you lack. But however much we send, it is not enough. They are only tokens. Soon you could win your own from the good earth if only we had peace.

Peace from fear! If the world's wise men plucking at their chins cannot agree how to come at peace, what can I do? And then in my frustration I see light. It is only a little glow from a Baby's head, perhaps the sheen of his hair, or the glint of his eyes, or even a halo from heaven. The man of God said of him long ago, "Of the increase of his peace there shall be no end." And he said true.

Ah, this little Prince of Peace! Before his kingdom comes, what tears and blood must be shed, by him and by all who toil after him. When Mary first held him to her heart, want and fear stalked the earth, and cruel men lay in wait. But he brought her peace, that helpless little child—peace in Bethlehem, peace while they were refugees, peace even though a sword should pierce her heart. She clasped to her the living, breathing little Prince of Peace though all about her was the frightful dark.

At this Christmastime see blessed Mary in the stable. She says to you and me, "Neither do I know what Herod and Caesar next will do." And then she holds out her little Son to us and says, "Here, take him! Hold him warm and tight, and let him give you what he gives to me."

So, whatever our woes, tonight you have this Babe in your arms and I have him in mine. If not, I could not send you this message nor could you hear. But you have him and we have him and that makes us one. He is our good cheer.

So may God's peace and love be with you and your children at this Christmas time.

The Dreamer of Nazareth

BY

HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK

CHRISTMAS dramatically brings out the contrast between vitality and size. Our poetry has dressed up that first Christmas Day as though the very stars in heaven showed their concern, but, as for the realistic fact, how irrelevant to the vast affairs of the Roman World seemed the birth of that baby in a manger! Yet, now, in retrospect the things that then had bulk and size in the world's opinion have dwindled, and that vitality, so very small, has proved more important than them all.

Today the big things in our world are discouraging, but what if the Christmas message is true—that it is not the big things which win but vitality, not the lump but the leaven! A very little bit of leaven, that babe of Bethlehem, was thrust by the mercy of God into the lump of this world, with the question rising now for each of us to face: Which do we think in the end will win? Is it everlastingly true that vitality is mightier than size?

Christmas reminds us of that truth, illustrated in personality. The story of mankind is so much the story of a lump of dough, into which the leaven of a person is introduced with consequences no one can foresee. I sat the other evening in a group of medical research scientists. They were talking about one of their comrades who recently had died. They spoke of what they called his apostolic zeal for the truth, of the opposition and incredulity he had met, and of his courage and persistence in facing it. Then one of the group said this: "He was wrong for so long and then he turned out to be right."

The Vital Question

This Christmas my faith in Christ takes that form. Men still say that he was a dreamer, that his ideas may be beautiful but will never work, that he was sentimental and utopian, and that what he taught is not realistically true and never can be. Look at this lump of the world! they say; his way of life can never be introduced into it. And now Christmas comes again, raising a question intensely real and practical: Which are we going to believe in, the world's discouraging bulk and bigness, or his vitality, the lump or the leaven? I am not much on creeds, but this Christmas I have one. I believe it with desperate need and deep conviction. Some day men will be saying about Christ, "He was wrong for so long and then he turned out to be right."

Indeed, many from whom one would not expect it are beginning to say that now. We have tried antichrist for a long while, have thought antichrist practical. See where that has landed us! It is not a preacher, but a professor of sociology at Harvard who writes: "There must be a change of the whole mentality and attitudes of our day, in the direction of the norm prescribed in the Sermon on the Mount." So the leaven is mightier than the lump!

This truth holds good not simply with regard to persons, but with regard to ideas. I never read the Declaration of Independence without marveling at one word in it. "We hold these truths to be self-evident." Self-evident! Then the Declaration goes on to rehearse the ideas that are self-evident, idea that for centuries had been denied, scorned, laughed at, derided by all the big forces of the world—that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, and so on. Was there ever a set of ideas that for so long were only the tiniest of leaven, the most infinitesimal of seed? Then the hour struck when a newborn nation could set them forth for all the world to hear—"We hold these truths to be self-evident."

Faith in Christ

Such is my faith in Christ's ideas. They are only leaven now, most of the lump not yet transformed by them, but the leaven is what counts in the end. "All they that take the sword shall perish with the sword," he said. Well, is he right or wrong? Mankind for so long has taken war for granted, regarded it as inevitable, even glorified it. Shakespeare's Othello talked about the "pride, pomp and circumstance of glorious war!" Try saying that to some G.I. who went through the hell of this last war, and see if his remarks are printable in the Ladies' Home Journal!

Ah, Christ of God, Prince of Peace, you have been wrong for so long, but now you turn out to be right!

This truth holds good not only about persons and ideas but about small groups. Around Jesus a little group gathered, and what an insignificant company it was! All the miracle stories ever told by man's excited and superstitious imagination do not equal this real miracle of history: the incredible thing that came of the tiny seed which Jesus planted in that little group.

The big affairs of the world today are, indeed, discouraging. That, however, makes all the more important the small groups where the leaven of decency and kindliness, goodwill and love, has got its start. Small they are, but they are like hothouses where slender growths begin that later can be transplanted to the wider field. They are vitally important. If we are ever tempted to belittle them, let us say to ourselves that this lump of the world is evil enough, even with the leaven in it, but what would it be without the leaven?

We are betting our lives on the leaven against the lump. And Christmastime is the festival celebration of that amazing miracle, which yet shall create a warless world—the triumph of vital persons, ideas and groups over size.

General Education--Ally of Religion

BY
GEORGE W. EDWARDS
Episcopal Clergyman and Professor at College of the City of New York

ONE of the most significant movements in American college life is the sweep of general education. Recognizing the failings of the curriculum to meet the needs of this critical hour, forward-looking college administrators have reexamined their educational philosophy and, as a result, have drastically reformulated their courses of study. This reformation in our colleges has followed a pattern which has become known as general education.

The true nature of this movement has been completely misunderstood by the Church press. One writer declared that, because of its report on general education, Harvard was against Christianity, and that the philosophy of the committee making the report was not Christian. Those interested in the cause of Christian education were urged to rally against such trends.

Actually general education may well prove a powerful ally to the Church. The new movement is fighting the very forces against which the Church for years has battled in vain. General education is highly critical of a curriculum which is concerned only with the intellectual development of the student. Mere adaptations to environment is regarded as too narrow a goal for any educational institution. The relativeness of the content of college courses and the refusal to recognize that there are absolutes and eternal truths has been bitterly scored. General education also believes that the function of the teacher is not performed by merely maintaining an objective neutrality toward individual and social problems. General education stands for the development of the total personality of the student: not only his mind, but also his spirit must grow. Progressive teachers now realize that the unification of personality is more than developing the student's mind, more than attaining emotional maturity, but it also means elevating the spiritual qualities of the individual. The college today has come to recognize that its function is to improve that vague thing known as the "soul" of its students. Education is no longer satisfied to help the student in his adaptation to his environment but, what is more important in these days, adaptation to himself. The college man and college woman are regarded as individuals with personal problems which can be solved only as he develops a working philosophy of life. General education is based squarely on the firm faith that there are absolutes, there are eternal truths, there exist standards for measuring the conduct of individuals and of social groups. Once more in college classrooms, there is the search for values and the expression of ethical judgments.

Success Still in Doubt

The success or failure of general education is still in doubt. On many a college campus the battle has been joined. Faculty meetings today are the scenes of bitter controversy, when innovators seek to present the proposals of general education. Entrenched interests and privileged groups which will fight progress can be found not only in our economic, political and even ecclesiastical life, but also our educational life. Within these college ranks may be found many tired liberals, products of the cynical twenties and the disillusionized thirties, who oppose the trend of general education. These critics within the college halls label supporters of general education as mystics and medievalists, while outside the campus they are characterized as humanists and diests by churchmen.

General education needs a unifying principle —a core around which the college curriculum can be synthesized. This integrating power can be found only in religion. It alone can supply the foundation for developing an all rounded personality; it alone can provide a workable life philosophy for these times; it alone can furnish the standards for judging individual and social values; it alone can point the way to the eternal verities. The alliance of religion and general education could completely transform our college life.

The Role of the Church

FROM a reading of some denominational papers and of pulpit utterances one could conclude that the Church is engaged in a holy war against higher education. One derives the impression that these Church critics and preachers believe that underneath most caps and gowns in the academic profession of an educational institution are concealed communists and atheists. It has become a favorite theme for a Sunday sermon to denounce the irreligion of the campus and the wickedness of faculty members in undermining the faith of the students.

From my own observations this attitude is plain bunk. An impartial study of the religious attitudes of college administrators and teachers would disclose very little anti-religious bias. True, there are in every college faculty some smart aleck nihilists who think it is their mission to apply what they consider withering satire to any subject—sacred or profane. But we find this type in our theological faculties as well. For the greater part, the members of a college faculty are today indifferent to religion.

On the campus, throughout our land, there are also men in both the physical and social sciences who will have nothing to do with the institutional Church, but have sound ethical foundations and deep spiritual yearnings.

What should be the strategy of the Church to higher education? The Church should seek to win college faculties over to its cause, not by petulant charges and negative criticism but by a positive and constructive attitude toward college faculties. The loyal Church members on the campus can be made the shock troops for this strategy. Men of good will on college faculties, even though they do not accept the doctrine and creed of the church, should be won over as allies and not condemned as enemies.

". . . For Us the Living"

BY DOUGLAS SIMPSON

THE second phase of the War of the Twentieth Century is now some three or four years behind us. The pounding of its drums and the hysterical caterwauling of its patriotic slogans still echo in the distant corners of the world but, to all intents and purposes, we are through with phase two.

It is, perhaps, too soon for the historians to get to work on this era. The molds have been set and the cement poured but the dream mansion of tomorrow has not begun to take shape. Actually, there is little that the historians can work on save to reiterate much that was said, honestly and truly, during the twenties and thirties.

The novelists, however, aren't slowed down by creeping time. They can, in their mind's eye, write history even before the calendar leaves fall. And, as is to be expected, they have concerned themselves with the major theme of this era—wars and their aftermaths.

Phase Two, like Phase One, has produced its own crop of young war novelists. Today, the Dos Passos - Hemingway - Farrell - Faulkner-Fitzgerald School is peopled by successful cadavers who, while still being technically proficient with the language, have nothing to say. Their places have been taken by younger men in their twenties, James Michener, Guiseppe Berto, Alfred Hayes and Norman Mailer, to name a few. They, for the most part, show that they were raised in U. S. A. with "Studs Lonigan" during the period of "The Great Gatsby."

Like their forebears, the junior set scorns war, although they seem to have known what it was about much more readily than their tutors. They, too, blame a decrepit and immoral social order for casting them adrift in the South Pacific or on the Anzio Beachhead but they aren't so pat with the answers of what to do about it. They aren't cynics — save about such cynical subjects as false patriotism, the military caste or war and peace profiteers. Rather they give the impression of having a cold, confident faith in the future combined with a recognition that the future may trap them in new concentration camps, new wars and atomic armageddons. In their writings, one feels that they believe that the power of good, which they never, never equate with Christianity or religion, ultimately always out-weighs the power of evil.

As suggested above, the new war novels are not products of that largely fictional group of men who were the "non-atheists in the foxholes." These writers are products of their times. They aren't anti-religious. Instead, for them, religion is of no importance. They ignore it completely and insist that it has nothing to do with modern life. These men have dreams and ethics and, for the most part, they are fine dreams and, at least, functional ethics given a rotten world. But neither the dreams or the ethics are religious.

These well-written books should be read by church people, I believe, because they tell us what we have just been through, they were written by the men who went through it and because, for them, we don't exist. The reasons for our non-existence in their eyes might be the fruit of our meditations following this reading.

YOUNG PEOPLE OF THE CHURCH

BY WALTER N. WELSH

FOUR hundred Harvard students and one hundred Radcliff students were the "guinea pigs" for a questionnaire to discover how much religion was left in colleges after the war. Prof. Gordon W. Allport, chairman of the department of psychology at Harvard concluded that two-thirds were basically "religious in their inclinations," and one-third "definitely irreligious."

Aside from questions on theology, which naturally revealed but a small orthodox percentage, such little matters like praying daily were shunned by all but twenty-five per cent. The important question seemed to be, "Do you feel that you require some form of religious orientation or belief in order to achieve a fully mature philosophy of life?" Eighty-two per cent of the men and sixty-eight per cent of the women answered "yes"; about ten per cent were doubtful, and the balance said that religion in any form whatsoever is not necessary for them. Many endorsed the idea of an "ethical but not theological" Christianity.

This vagueness was explained away in the usual fashion by pointing out that it was the recurrent rejection of the older views by a younger generation, and that many dissenters will return to the parental position —especially after having children of their own. The recommendation seemed to suggest having more courses in comparative religion, philosophy of religion, and theology.

We certainly need more intelligent courses in religion, taught by professors who have more than "scientific" objectivity in their souls. I do not know any one, however, who has had his spirit set on fire by a course in comparative religion. Nothing could be more impersonal, more passive, than to have religions pass by in review without having to choose one.

Sometimes too, the reports of Canterbury clubs sound like a smorgasbord of religious ideas which philosophically bent gourmets enjoy. They can pick here and there and taste what appears attractive. If it is not palatable, they will not have any more of that idea.

We ought to make up our minds about this matter of inculcating a faith that can be called Christian. To continue a haphazard, glorified "youth fellowship" approach with the hope that college students will be "basically religious in their inclinations" is far wide of the calling of any Christian mission.

Even the most diluted religious orientation must involve some common commitment, common discipline, and common action. There is needed somewhat of a trend away from the average parental position of simple respectability. If college students really are as adventurous as they are cracked-up to be, they deserve more than traditional lecture courses, and social club teas.

Now appearing on several campuses is a pattern of Christian reclamation which makes some sense. The design is old, but ever new. Young people are getting together in fellowship cells. In these cells there is a disciplinary sharing in brotherhood, worship, study and action. These young people are learning what the power of the Holy Spirit is. The evidence indicates that we ought to strongly encourage the natural development of such cells among our Church youth on every campus.

There are two tools to be recommended for the basis of such cells. One is the "Rule of Life" of our United Movement of the Churches Youth (the four points of the rule to be used as the center of the common life of the cell). The other tool is a booklet "Spiritual Power through Fellowship Cells," which can be procured for twenty cents from the United Christian Youth Movement, 203 North Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

The laity of the campuses have a power available which can shake the dust off said professional religious philosophy, and certainly even outdo the recent commendable action of one Amherst fraternity.

THE NEW BOOKS

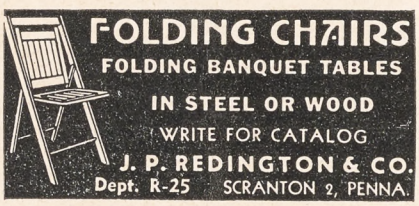
FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

* * Essays on Freedom and Power. By Lord Acton. Int. by G. Himmelfarb. Pref. by Herman Finer. Beacon Press. $5.00.

Lord Acton was one of the greatest of modern historians. He wrote as a Christian as well as a historian, for he was a devout Roman Catholic. His chief interest was in the history of human freedom—which some historians seem to believe another tale than the history of religion. A thousand years hence, if history is still studied and if man the political animal still survives, his famous saying will be quoted: "Power tends to corrupt, and absolute power corrupts absolutely." It is a healthy sign of contemporary intellectual interests that this fine volume of selected essays has been published, including his famous Inaugural Lecture on the Study of History, an essay on The Vatican Council and eight others.

—F. C. G.

* * A Treasury of Russian Spirituality. Edited by G. P. Fedotov. Sheed and Ward. $6.50.



This anthology of biographies, autobiographies, anecdotes and stories will do more to explain the Russian Church and the religion of the Russian people than a dozen books of plain description. It will even help to explain the revolt of the Bolshevists. The great figures presented include St. Theodosius, St. Sergius, Avvakum, St. Seraphim, Father John of Cronstadt and others. Each is given a special introduction, in addition to the general introduction sketching in outline the whole history of the Russian Church—on this vital side of its total life. Dr. Fedotov is now in this country, and teaches Church history at St. Vladimir's Seminary (now located at Union Theological Seminary in New York). The book is excellently illustrated.

—F. C. G.

* * Psychiatry and Religion. Edited by J. L. Liebman. Beacon Press. $3.

The late Rabbi Liebman, author of the best seller, "Peace of Mind," organized in 1947 a symposium under the title of the present book. To it were invited leading representatives of both religion and psychiatry. Though religion is often misrepresented, and although psychiatry is often misapplied, and although salvation certainly does not depend upon psychoanalysis, here is nevertheless an important field for the pastor—at least for cooperation with the mental expert. Human life could be so much richer, fairer, happier than it is! Perhaps the readers of this volume will become more sympathetic with the cooperative undertaking, and perhaps more symposia of this kind will be arranged.

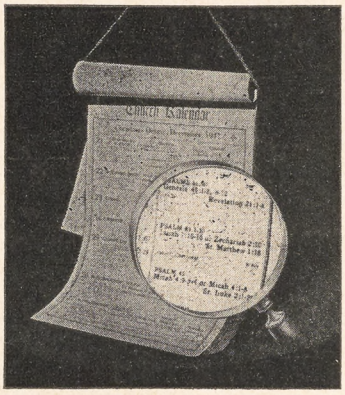
THE PRESS

OUR REVOLUTIONARY CHURCH: When Rousseau set the tone for the liberal era he started with the proclamation, "Man is born free; and everywhere he is in chains." Marx and Engels concluded the Communist Manifesto with the exhortation: "Let the ruling classes tremble at a Communist revolution. . . . Working men of all countries, unite!" The manifesto of the Lambeth Conference emits no such high-pitched cry. Instead it offers a pledge. "We pledge ourselves to work for the removal of injustice and oppression, and in particular, to stand by those whose right to religious liberty is threatened." Undoubtedly there are some who looked for the lightning phrase or for the clarion call that would go echoing down the decade. They will be disappointed by its absence. Any document, however able, is improved by a touch of the dramatic or a flash of unusual brilliance. This has already, in its social aspects, been hailed as a classic of its kind. This is too early, however. The trouble with the Lambeth report is that it is already a classic. When the official Church would have incurred odium and hostility in high places by lifting up its voice, it was silent. When it will gain applause it speaks. What a revolutionary, dangerously living Church! If ever it dies it will die of safety.—Record (C. of E.)

RATE OF INTEREST: At heart we aren't really selfish, — at least most of us aren't: it's just that we have never been taught certain facts. Religion is not free; your Church should mean more to you than some loose change per week. Our Lord's sacrifice on the cross should go down deeper into our resources than the mere surface. God loaned you all you have; what rate of interest are you paying for the loan of your life, your job, your home, your loved ones, your religion?—Pastoral Staff (diocese of Erie).

IN THE FACE OF THIS: Certainly we hold no brief for Communism. Its only strength is in the weakness of democracy. What does concern us is the smugness of those who resent any adverse criticism of our political or economic philosophy. When we view both our national and international situation, how can anyone be complacent about our way of life? We have developed a world order in which we have shed more human blood by means of war since 1900 than was shed in all history prior to that time. Millions of people killed in battle, billions of dollars blown up in smoke, natural resources seriously drained for purposes of war, economic depressions that have brought woe to young and old alike, and now a present world outlook that is more ominous than anything we have ever known in the annals of history—and in the face of this there are those who object to any questioning about our way of doing things.—Presbyterian Tribune.



"WAR IS INEVITABLE": It is too simple an analysis of the present "Time of Troubles" to say, as our newspapers are saying, that "Earth might be fair, and all men glad and wise" if only Russia would cease from troubling us. Earth will not be fair again until the underlying causes of the last two wars, which may be briefly stated as a failure to put men's needs above "economics," are faced and resolved. If this were done, there need be no fear of Communism since it is upon a deteriorating social system, of which inflation is the most obvious symptom at the present time, that Communism thrives. Unless we on the American continent recognize, as Amsterdam has said, that Capitalism is an ideology that has been proved false, war is inevitable for exactly the same reason that war was inevitable in 1914 and in 1939.—Anglican Outlook (C. E. in Canada).

Your news that the Russian Orthodox Seminary in New York is the first to be established in the U. S. is not correct. The Holy Trinity Orthodox Seminary at Jordanville, N. Y., was founded in 1930. It is under the direct supervision of Archbishop Vitaly Maximenko, who is the ruling head of the Russian Orthodox Church in the U. S. and Canada, which does not recognize the Soviet Patriarch as the head of the Church in the U. S. A remarkable 12th century Russian Church gold leafe ("onion") and all, is located on a hill from where it can be seen for miles. Thirty monks live there and they have done all the work of construction. Dr. Nicholas Alexander, the only one who speaks English, said they were deluged with applications from Europe.

The Rev. Santos M. Molina, Relator, 39, Sevilla, Spain, pastor of the San Basilio congregation of the Spanish Reformed Church, has written me that his new chapel was occupied in August and that about $400 is needed to complete payment. Some readers of The Witness may care to send him a few dollars. The Spanish Reformed Church is Anglican and looks to the Archbishop of Armagh for episcopal ministrations, although he has not been able to visit it since 1935.

What a troubled world in which to write a short note to all my good Christian friends in America for the Christmas season. All of you are in the same situation, however, and it was to such a troubled world that the Christ Child came 1900 years ago and he has the same panacea for the ills of today as he did then.

We are again in the midst of war sufferings. Everything looks dark and makes me broken-hearted. However, we still hold fast in our faith in the eternal mercy and love of our living God who has been so merciful to my country through all the generations for the last 4,000 years. We are now right in the midst of a dark storm, but I believe the dawning of tomorrow will be upon us ere long.

I am so sorry that I don't find time to write to each one of my good Christian friends in America at this holy season. However, I must confess that I have never forgotten any one of them, both in my prayers and happy memories. I will be very much obliged if you will be kind enough to convey this short message of my most cordial and hearty greetings to all of them through The Witness.

The issue of The Witness for December 2 dealing with the rural work of the Church was very informative. I am writing, however, to take issue with the statement under Dorgan Butt's picture that his is the feature article. After reading everything appertaining to rural work in this issue I am convinced that Waiting Upon God by Phil Steinmetz merits the designation as the feature article. Writing from a long experience to which he has given deep thought, he has correctly estimated the real needs of the rural field as I have come to find them in my short experience. His brief article has more basic value for rural work than all the others put together. I wish that all rural workers shared his views and were acting accordingly.

I note in your November 25 issue you carry an item stating that South Carolina has lost its unique position in that the divorce law has been changed. I believe if you will look into this a little further you will find this is not actually the case. It is true that in a referendum of the voters of this state a majority voted in favor of a change in the law. As I understand it, however, before it becomes effective an act of the legislature is necessary. What the legislature will do about it remains to be seen.

World Council Formation Outstanding Event With Other Unity Steps Taken

BY

WINFRED E. GARRISON

Professor Emeritus at University of Chicago

★ The formation of the World Council of Churches was the most conspicuous religious event of the year, and probably in the long run the most important. This is one of the facts that make it even less possible than usual to stay within national boundaries in considering "the year in religion."

Formal organization of the World Council was accomplished at Amsterdam on August 23. A long series of inter-church conferences lay behind this action and the notable Assembly — which might also be called an Assembly of Notables—at which it was taken.

Its purpose is: first, to recognize the essential ideal unity of the Church in spite of its visible divisions; second, to give practical and effective expression to the limited degree of actual unity which now exists; third, to study the grounds of division and approach a more perfect objective unity.

Delegates chosen by 135 communions in 44 countries formed the membership of the first assembly of the World Council. Almost every type of Church except the Roman Catholic was represented, including some of the Eastern Orthodox Churches.

Official visitors from the Roman Catholic Church were present, and the ranking Catholic prelate of the Netherlands authorized a special prayer for the success of the assembly to be read in all the churches of his diocese.

There were few delegates from the "iron curtain" countries, and none from Russia. A month earlier the Russian Orthodox Church, celebrating at Moscow the 500th anniversary of what is called its "independence," took occasion to denounce the World Council of Churches as more political than religious in its purpose, and at the same time to blast Vatican political action as "anti-Christian, anti-democratic, and anti-national."

In spite of wide differences in theology, liturgy and polity, the member Churches found their agreements sufficient to be the basis for practical cooperation and for further consultations directed toward closer unity. A rather decided slant toward the left was discernible in the discussions and reports of the "sections" on social, economic and international questions. British, middle-European and Oriental opinion tipped heavily toward socialism.

The fact that the World Council is financed almost entirely by American gifts perhaps made the American delegates hesitate to put even their own proper weight into the scales, lest they should seem to be weighting it with dollars too. One of them did, however, make an effective last-minute protest against naming capitalism and Communism as the two extremes between which Christianity should find a middle way. (Episcopalian Charles Taft.—Ed.). "Capitalism" was changed to read "laissez-faire capitalism"—a revision which removed the objection but also removed most of the point of the paragraph, since laissez-faire capitalism has not existed for the last half century. Only a professor from Prague spoke openly in defense of Communism, and he in somewhat guarded terms and to an unsympathetic audience.

The Council offered a free forum, and its freedom was not abused. It did not presume to speak for Christendom, and in accepting the reports of the sections it went no farther than to "commend them to the Churches for study and appropriate action." There was no underwriting of socialism, but the prevailing coloration of articulate opinion was socialistic.

In the judgment of this observer, this does not mean that the machinery of the Churches or of the World Council is being used, or will be used, to advance any form of collectivism. Perhaps the feeling of dependence upon America for economic recovery, and for military defense if that should be needed, impelled the Europeans to issue declarations of their independence from American ideologies as a means of maintaining their self-esteem.

In the formation of the World Council of Churches, the "ecumenical movement" gained a permanent and a continuing existence, with the essential personnel and agencies for carrying on its work; and that was a great gain. It is not a super-Church, or a merger of Churches or an authority over Churches. A serious limitation upon its scope is that it does not include the Roman Catholic Church.

Projects for Union

Of the specific projects for union between related or congenial Churches, in the United States and elsewhere some made progress during the year and others were checked. Large majorities in the Congregational and Christian Churches and in the Evangelical and Reformed Church approved a merger of these two bodies. If, as is expected, this merger is completed in 1949, the resulting "United Church" will have approximately 1,800,000 members. The national conventions of Northern Baptists and Disciples of Christ received with enthusiasm the reports of progress made by their joint commission on union, but the immediate unification of their Churches and agencies is not being pressed and cannot be regarded as imminent.

The Federal Council of Churches, at the suggestion of the Congregationalists and the Disciples of Christ, has called a conference of all denominations which "recognize one another's ministries and sacraments," and several have accepted. The Methodists appointed a commission to study union with other bodies and specifically authorized it to participate in this conference. The Presbyterian Church, U. S. (Southern), voted to postpone for five years further consideration of union with the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A.

Church in Europe

A federation including a great majority of the Protestants in Germany adopted a constitution, at a conference held at Eisenach, and named itself the Evangelical Church in Germany (EKID). It is a close bund of Lutheran, Reformed (Calvinist) and United Churches rather than a merger into one Church, for there is only a limited degree of intercommunion among its constituent parts.

A feature of postwar European Christianity has been the increasing prominence of "Christian" political parties, most of which are Roman Catholic in origin and leadership. The most conspicuously successful of these is the Christian Democratic Party in Italy.

Another important, and perhaps ominous, phenomenon is the closer ties between Churches and governments in the Russian-dominated countries, notably in Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Romania. The Soviet view is that independent churches dependent upon voluntary support by their membership represent a "bourgeois ideology." The state Church system is still firmly entrenched in most countries of Europe, and the "voluntarism" which Americans regard as essential to complete religious liberty is there generally regarded as exposing the Church to serious risk of not being supported at all. Few, if any, European countries would officially admit that they do not have religious liberty; but, aside from unequal treatment of Churches in most of them, there are such phenomena as these: Spain has closed most Protestant Churches and schools and forbids Protestant evangelism, and the Spanish hierarchy has issued a statement declaring that Protestantism must be restricted to an inconspicuous place in the interest of the nation's religious and cultural unity; the Orthodox Church in Greece has demanded a law which would forbid the conversion of Orthodox to any other faith, and would permit the appointment of clergy and the erection of Churches by the non-Orthodox only "by special permission of the State."

Church in Far East

Both Roman Catholic and Protestant foreign missionary work, especially from bases in America, has been further revived and extended. Especially notable has been the sending of new missionaries to Japan and the return of many old ones.

The United Church in Japan (Kyodan) has suffered the defection of some of its former Churches, but a revived National Christian Council provides an agency for limited cooperation including the Kyodan and several organizations which are not within that more closely united body.

Intensification of civil war in China has added to the difficulties of Christian work. India's freedom is still too new to permit a determination of its effect upon religious life and institutions. The larger American denominations and many of the smaller ones have continued their contributions toward relief and rehabilitation in Europe and in the Orient. Through Church World Service, an agency through which many Churches and individuals cooperate, 30 million pounds of food and other supplies worth $9,500,000 were sent to Europe and Asia in the first eight months of the past year.

Religion in Schools

The practice of "released-time" for religious education in connection with the public schools received wide attention because of an adverse decision by the Supreme Court in the McCollum case at Champaign, Ill. In this case the classes in religion were held in public school buildings, though the teachers were supplied by the Churches. The court decided that this practice was unconstitutional, but left undetermined the question as to whether "released-time" might be lawful under other conditions. A later ruling by the Supreme Court of New York held that "released-time" as practiced in that state was not banned by the federal decision. Further litigation will doubtless be required to clarify the issue for other states, and further study to adjust the practice to the law. The question of the support of sectarian schools by public money is a controversial issue at least a century old, but it gained new urgency through pressure for the passage of a federal education bill which would permit the introduction of that practice. This bill died with the 80th Congress, but its re-introduction in the 81st will be watched with interest.

In many Church bodies, even in the South, there is a trend toward the abandonment of racial segregation. An example, going farther than most, was an action by the St. Louis Church Federation urging its member Churches to disregard color and race as qualifications for membership and service.

Statistics, as of July 1948, show the ratio of Church membership to population in the U. S. the highest in history, 53 per cent. Of the 77 million members, 60 per cent (46 million) are Protestant, 33 per cent (25 million) Roman Catholic, 6 per cent (4.6 million) Jewish. The date of increase over the preceding year was 2.6 per cent for Protestants, 3.5 per cent for Roman Catholics. The highest rate of gain was registered by the medium-sized Protestant Churches, having from 200,000 to 1,000,000 members. (RNS)

ELECTED TO BOARD OF TRUSTEES

★ Mr. J. Paschall Davis of Nashville, Tennessee, has been elected to the Board of Trustees of the Church Pension Fund to fill the vacancy created by the death earlier in the year of Dr. Thomas S. Gates, who was chairman of the University of Pennsylvania. Mr. Davis is a member of the vestry and council of Christ Church, Nashville. He is a graduate of Harvard College and Law School, a member of the Tennessee bar, the New York bar and various bar associations, is a lieutenant commander in the United States naval reserve, president of the Nashville Navy league and secretary of the Nashville committee on foreign relations.

The library of the World Peace Foundation is much used by students and researchers. (STORY ON PAGE TWELVE)

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

DIOCESE OF NEWARK HAS HOUSING COUNCIL

★ About a year ago, the board of Christian social relations of the diocese of Newark was instrumental in organizing the New Jersey housing council. This council has been made up of many representatives from various organizations in the state. The objective has been to rally support for the low rental housing features of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner Bill, and also to set up a similar project in New Jersey. On December 14, a committee of the council held a conference with Governor Driscoll in Trenton to present to him a housing program.

The council seeks enactment of a 100 million dollar bond issue which will be loaned to municipalities for low rent housing projects approved by state commission on economic development. The projects would be designed for persons having incomes of less than $3,500 a year, and would be expected to repay the loans out of rentals, over a fifty year period. In talking with the Governor, the committee showed that there was ample housing renting at $30 a room, but a desperate need for units to rent at about $50 a month. It was felt that private enterprise has failed to build the necessary low rental units, and only the state can do the job.

The committee which went to the Governor was headed by Mr. Max Roller of the American Veterans committee, and included Mr. Edward Parker of the family service bureau of Newark; Mr. Spencer Miller, state highway commissioner; Mr. Carl Holderman, state president of the CIO; Mr. Lewis Cohen, president of the Essex county Jewish council; Mr. Harry Wendrich of the Essex county trade union council AFL; Mr. Harry Davis, investment banker of Newark, and the Rev. Andrew M. Van Dyke, chairman of Christian social relations of the diocese of Newark. (Miller, Parker, Holderman, and Davis are all Episcopalians.)

NATIONAL COUNCIL AIDS JAPANESE MISSION

★ Bishop Stephen E. Keeler of Minnesota sent a request to the Council for aid in the establishment of a new mission in the Twin Cities area, for Japanese people. It would provide a place for services, and serve as a social center as well. A property is available at a cost of $16,000, of which the Diocese of Minnesota will provide $6,000. The Council was asked to provide $10,000. Dr. Wieland, head of the home mission department recommended that the help be given, and explained the need, also commended highly the work being done there by the Rev. Daisuke Kitagawa. The National Council appropriated the $10,000 from the Kate Latham legacy, with the understanding that the Diocese of Minnesota will provide the additional $6,000 and that in the event that the mission should be discontinued at any time, or the property not required for the stated purpose, it is to be sold and "To the extent that the proceeds of such sale shall suffice, the sum of $10,000 shall be repaid to the domestic and foreign missionary society." National Council also approved the election of Mr. Stanley L. Thornton and Mr. Harrison Garrett as trustees of the American University at Cairo. Mr. Thornton is a vestryman of Grace Church, Mt. Airy, Philadelphia, and has been interested in the university for a considerable time. Mr. Garrett, board member, is up for reelection this year.

BISHOPS REPORT ON CHINA PERSONNEL

★ A letter received by the National Council from Bishop Lloyd R. Craighill, and dated December 6, tells of the status of affairs in the diocese of Anking. Bishop Craighill has left Wuhu and set up a temporary office for Anking in Shanghai. He believes that at least for a time, he will be able to serve the whole diocese, whereas had he remained in Wuhu, he would have been "of no service," employing his own modest term. Bishop Robin T. Chen has gone to Anking to help counsel with the Chinese and American staff about the future of the work. Mrs. John J. Morrett and their son Scottie flew to California, and Mr. Morrett is traveling by ship. The Henri Pickens family sailed together. Mrs. Craighill sailed on December 2. Miss Elda Smith also sailed that day. Sisters Louise, Lucy and Virginia are aboard ship. Miss Guy Nellie McGouirk is working at St. Luke's in Shanghai; Alice Gregg is in Shanghai. Remaining in Anking at present, the Bishop said, are Dr. and Mrs. Harry Taylor, Dr. Helen Taylor, Miss Emeline Bowne, Miss B. E. Myers, Miss Virginia Hebbert and Mr. Paul Denlinger. A letter dated December 7, from Bishop William P. Roberts of Shanghai, tells that members of the staff who will be returning to the United States—and the list is incomplete he emphasizes—include Dr. and Mrs. A. W. Tucker, Dr. and Mrs. H. H. Morris, Miss Anne Lamberton, Miss Nancy Wilson, Mrs. Charles E. Perry and three children, the Gilbert Baker family, Joseph and Frederick Norton, children of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Norton, who will go to the Brent school in the Philippines, Bruce Roberts and the Rev. and Mrs. S. W. Green.

Plans Developing for General Convention; Diocese of California Gets Ready

★ "Convention Fever" has already begun to sweep over the Diocese of California, as more and more of the sunny-state churchmen become aware of the fact that September, 1949, is really not too far away. Already preliminary plans have progressed to the point where all the meeting places for the major business will be conducted. Convention meets September 26 to October 7 in San Francisco. The city's Civic Auditorium has been designated for the opening service. Later on it will be used for the U. T. O. presentation service and evening mass meetings. The House of Bishops will meet in Larkin Hall at the east end of the auditorium, and the House of Deputies will be at the west end in Polk Hall. Tentative plans have been made to have the joint sessions of the bishops and deputies in San Francisco's Veteran's Auditorium. The Woman's Auxiliary meets in the fine California Hall, and the Fairmont will be the headquarters hotel for the convention. All exhibits will be housed in the Civic Auditorium. The office of the general chairman is in the Cathedral House, and the address of the Convention committee is 1055 Taylor Street, San Francisco 8. Preparing for general convention is a big job; an indication is found in the list of the main committees:

1) halls and meetings places; 2) pulpit assignments; 3) religious services; 4) hospitality; 5) motor corps; 6) public services (everything from information bureau to police and parking); finance; 8) printing, publicity and publication; 9) registration; 10) welcome and recreation; 11) music; 12) cooperation with national organizations; 13) diocesan and interdiocesan cooperation; 14) program, records and reports; 15) flower guild; 16) secretarial pool. In addition there are 40-odd subcommittees.

ROMAN CATHOLIC SHARES IN P. E. SERVICE

★ Nativity Church, Crafton, Pa., recently had a very unusual experience as part of its 75th anniversary celebration. Both Catholic and Protestant clergy took part in the service of evensong. Father William C. Kelty of St. Philip's Roman Catholic Church spoke and he also pronounced the benediction. Twenty-five years ago, at the golden anniversary of the parish, Father Kelty also was the featured speaker.

PRESIDING BISHOP IN CINCINNATI

★ Bishop Sherrill paid his first visit to Cincinnati since becoming Presiding Bishop and spoke at the Christ Church every member canvass dinner. He was introduced by Bishop Hobson, who first paid high tribute to Christ Church for its magnificent leadership both in the diocese and in the country. Bishop Sherrill's key-note was that the Church can only meet the present critical times by its members realizing the urgency of the days in which we live and in seizing the great opportunities now offered to set Christianity against materialism and atheism. These opportunities exist all over the world, and it is the Gospel alone that offers the solution to the problems of the world.

ECUMENICAL NEWS

ATOMIC WORKERS WANT MORE CHURCHES

Atomic workers want to build churches. And the congregations want their own building sites in the atomic city of Oak Ridge, Tenn. Twenty Oak Ridge ministers who are without Churches have appealed to Senator-elect Estes Kefauver for help in obtaining lands withing the atomic area as sites for Church buildings. Senator Kefauver, who moves from the House to the Senate January 1, has taken the ministers' appeal directly to the Atomic Energy Commission.

"Oak Ridge needs permanency and no community can have this without Churches," he said. "The Government has retained title to all lands on the atomic project, hence there has been no space available for people to erect Churches. I will do all possible to impress the AEC officials with the necessity for Churches." (RNS)

SEES TRUMAN ON HUMAN RIGHTS

Bishop John S. Stamm of Harrisburg, Pa., newly elected president of the Federal Council, has met with President Truman to present him with the new Council statement on human rights. This statement, entitled "Churches and Human Rights," sets forth the responsibilities of the Churches, the state and the individual citizens in upholding such human rights as freedom of religion, conscience, speech, press, inquiry, study, political and social beliefs and assembly, and equality in civil rights. Expressing to Mr. Truman gratitude "for the convincing evidence which you have given of your own devotion to the securing and maintaining of human rights in our country," Bishop Stamm submitted the Federal Council statement as "the most comprehensive and the most definite ever issued by any great religious body on this subject." The bishop was accompanied to the White House by Dr. Samuel McCrea Cavert of New York, general secretary of the Federal Council. Bishop Stamm also said, "The statement commits the Churches to working for measures which will secure full opportunity for all men to share in the economic resources of the community and its political processes and also 'to participate on a non-segregated basis in the social and public life of the community.' The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America takes this stand because it regards these as 'God given rights which society must respect and for whose realization it must make provision'."

WORK CAMP PROGRAM IN EUROPE

The World Council of Churches has issued a call for 100 American Christian youth to volunteer for reconstruction work in Europe during the summer of 1949. Pointing out that "European young people are hungry to meet mature, thoughtful, understanding Americans and dedicated Christians," the Rev. William Keys, secretary of the World Council's youth department, declared that work camps for Christian reconstruction had already been set up in France, Germany and Italy by the World Council's youth department last summer. "In these days of shortage of manpower, money and material," Mr. Keys said, "last summer's achievements of the work camps, in which over 300 Christian young people from 14 nations served, were a demonstration of practical Christian faith." Over 100 Americans participated in the projects. The needs of physical construction are at present only slightly less acute than they were last summer, according to the Council's headquarters in Geneva; and the needs of international cooperation through physical work and personal contact are increasingly important. Directing the work camp program from the Geneva headquarters of the World Council will be George Booth, an experienced work camper. American agencies cooperating with the work camp project include Church World Service, the Congregational Christian service committee and the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. Applicants for the international work camps should be over 18 years of age, Mr. Keys noted, and should be prepared to meet, either personally or through the Church or student group, total expenses of $600 or more. A working knowledge of either French or German is desirable.

THEOLOGICAL COMMITTEE REESTABLISHED

Reestablishment of the American Theological Committee was announced in New York by the American section of the World Council of Churches' commission on faith and order. The committee will make a continuing study of the theological disagreements that divide Protestant Churches. It will be headed by Dr. Clarence T. Craig, professor at Yale Divinity School. Members will include Dr. Henry P. Van Dusen, president of Union Theological Seminary, and Dr. Kenneth Scott Latourette of Yale. Committee meetings in the near future will concentrate on isolating the essential agreements and disagreements between the Churches which are relevant to their union and cooperation.

NEWS OF OTHER CHURCHES

PENSION FUND HEADS HAVE MEETING

Pensions boards of 21 denominations and two church-related agencies associated with the Church Pensions Conference paid out total benefits of $18,216,099 during the past year, it was reported at the annual meeting of the conference. This figure represents an increase of nine per cent over the previous year. Of the total, $16,215,600 was paid to pension beneficiaries, $1,530,392 to relief beneficiaries, and $470,107 in miscellaneous benefits.

William M. Huggins, statistician of the conference, noted that there were 37,635 pension beneficiaries this year as compared with 7,185 relief beneficiaries. "This shows the large number of beneficiaries under formal pension plans," he said, "as compared with those who receive benefits only on the basis of need. There was a time when nearly all the benefits were paid only on the basis of need."

Total funds available to the pension boards reporting to the conference amount to $314,125,-141, an increase of 9.3 per cent over last year. There are 123,-130 ministers and 138,628 congregational units whom the pension boards are serving. The denominations they represent have a church membership of 32,403,856, or nearly 25 per cent of the population of the U. S.

METHODIST WOMEN LAUNCH PROGRAM

A four year program by which Methodist women plan to make their impress on the social development of the world was outlined at a meeting held at Buck Hill Falls, Pa. It will be led by Thelma Stevens, social service secretary. Stressed is the backing of UN; using the ballot for world betterment and peace; stabilization of family life; safeguarding human freedoms; applying Christian principles to economic life.

PRIEST URGES AID TO KUOMINTANG

The Rev. Gabriel Gorman of the Passionist Fathers, just arrived from China, at once appealed to Americans "to urge President Truman to give immediate encouragement and support to the Chinese people against Communist invaders." By "Chinese people" he meant the Kuomintang, headed by Chiang Kai-shek. The R. C. priest declared that "communism is the sworn enemy of Christianity. If the Reds take over China, Christianity will be forced underground as is now the case in Red-occupied area of Mongolia and Manchuria."

Quite the contrary report comes from an agency that maintains hospitals for the blind in China, whose honorary president is Madame Chiang Kai-shek, and on whose board is Congressman Walter Judd, said to be the number one spokesman for Chiang Kai-shek in the U.S. In an appeal for funds, the agency states definitely that their work has in no way been interfered with by Communists. The Friends Service Committee reports the same thing, as do many missionaries in China.

METHODISTS HIT KLAN

Methodist ministers of Atlanta took a healthy poke at the Ku Klux Klan by unanimously passing a resolution calling for legislation by the city, county and state governments against the KKK and "any group under the cover of masks." The resolution states further that "we are scandalized at the Klan's desecration of the cross. We denounce as un-American the attempt or threat by any mob to take the law into its own hands. We condemn as un-Christian the Klan's constant stirring of prejudice and hate." The ministers also passed a resolution commending the Rev. Kenneth Brown, Methodist, for standing against Klan demonstrations in the city. It resulted in a widely-publicized exchange of words with the county's police chief after Mr. Brown had insisted that county police "actively participated in the Klan parade."

RACE RELATIONS INSTITUTE

Practical methods for achieving a non-segregated Church in a non-segregated society were advanced at a Presbyterian interracial conference held in Philadelphia. The delegates from all parts of the U.S. agreed that the Church should put its preachings and social pronouncements into practical effect in community affairs.

FOOD CONTRIBUTIONS ARE GOOD

Donations of farm commodities for the 24 state Christmas trains exceeded expectations, it was announced by the Christian Rural Overseas Program. The agency announced that 2,000 carloads of relief food will probably be donated, all of which will be shipped to feed hungry people abroad.

ROMAN CATHOLIC MISSIONARIES

Roman Catholic Church has 261,895 full time missioners in 560 mission dioceses throughout the world, stated Bishop T. J. McDonnell, national director of the Church's mission society at a dinner sponsored by the Jesuits.

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

FRIENDS ENTER PALESTINE

The American Friends Service Committee has accepted the invitation of Trygve Lie, acting on behalf of UN, to participate in the Palestine refugee relief program. It is to assume responsibility for the program in the Arab-controlled areas of southern and southwest Palestine adjacent to the border of Egypt. The committee already is engaged in a small relief project in Israel, which will be continued. Clarence Pickett, head of the committee, said last week that it is hoped that relief activities will facilitate agreement between Israel and the Arabs. There are about 250,000 Arab refugees in the Gaza area in desperate need of shelter, food, blankets. The U.S. has promised $13,000,000 for the project and it is hoped that UN resources will add a like amount. The Friends need 50 people for the work in Palestine, with several of these already on their way. The committee reports that scores of people want to help in Palestine, so that they are not lacking for numbers of applicants, but there is still need for mature, experienced, concerned persons for several responsible posts.

METHODISTS REMAIN IN CHINA

Bishop Ralph Ward, Methodist, following a tour of areas in the north of China, reports that missionaries are showing "amazing steadiness" in the face of the uncertain conditions. He declared that most of them regard the struggle in that country as its own affair, and said that leaders of the Church are urging only the ill, infirm, aged and mothers with young children to evacuate. In the Peiping area, Bishop Z. T. Kaung urged all missionaries to leave but some announced that they would stay "under any political regime." In the Nanking and Shanghai area, Bishop Ward said, few missionaries were disposed to leave. He declared further that he was having trouble even persuading the elderly and mothers to leave.

WATCH OUT FOR CAPT. ABER

Church groups have been warned to be on the alert for the financial appeals from a Captain Lawrence Aber of Guadalajara, Mexico. The warning is issued by the Foreign Missions Conference that says he appeals for support for "missions projects" but that investigations have failed to uncover any. Letters are written in longhand and are usually accompanied by a crudely printed pamphlet describing Aber's mission work. They are generally addressed "To any Protestant church" in a given town.

UNITE FOR SERVICE IN LONDON

Representatives of three national Churches — Church of England, Evangelical Church of Germany and the Serbian Orthodox Church—held a joint service before Christmas in London's Holy Trinity Church. It was sponsored by the committee for Christian reconstruction in Europe.

WEST GERMANY HAS CHURCH CONTROL

The proposed new constitution for west Germany (U. S., British and French zones) will include provisions for state regulation of Church affairs, according to a decision announced by the parliamentary council at Bonn, in the British zone. Roman Catholic authorities have served notice that they will not accept a constitution which protects the rights of atheists and not the rights of Christians. They have complained of interference in education and have demanded the adoption of a clause safeguarding the right of parents to send their children to parochial schools.

POPE BLESSES FRANCO

The Pope gave his blessing to Spain, including Generalissimo Franco, at an audience to Joaquin Ruiz-Jimenez y Cortes, new Spanish ambassador to the Vatican. "May the God of mercy and truth," the Pope declared, "always protect the Spanish nation—a land fecund in saints. May he always keep her faithful to her Christian vocation, and may he accord her on this earth the esteem to which the numerous services she has rendered to the cause of religion give her a right to expect."

AN INJUNCTION STANDS AGAINST BISHOP

An appeal by Bishop Arnold L. Wylde, Anglican of Bathhurst, New South Wales, against an injunction restraining him from introducing Roman Catholic mass customs at holy communion services has been dismissed by the high court of Australia. A previous judicial ruling barred him from administering any form of service other than that contained in the Prayer Book of the Church of England. It sustained lower court injunctions against making the sign of the cross or using the sanctus bell during the service. In handing down the high court's decision, Justice Rich said "the subject of this unhappy controversy is only fit for a domestic forum and not for a civil court."

Let's Grow Up

OUR diplomatic relationships are in the diaper stage. We don't recognize it, Russia doesn't recognize it, but a large part of the world does. We read in the papers: "Herbert V. Evatt, president of the United Nations General Assembly and United Nations Secretary Trygve Lie sent an unprecedented joint note to the Big Four powers to make a new start toward solving the Berlin crisis, basing it on the Mexican-sponsored appeal." Mexico! our shabby, backward neighbor to the south is telling us we ought to behave!

And well she might, for both the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. have maneuvered themselves into an entirely juvenile and unrealistic position from which each, in their Peter Panishness (we take it all back, Peter Pan had a certain amount of maturity) dare not retreat. Why? To "save face." Whose face? yours? mine? No: faces will not be saved if this continues. Countless millions of young men will, if this tragic silliness isn't soon stopped, do their loyal best to disfigure the faces and dismember the bodies of others—be they Russians or Americans.

"My dad can lick your dad." "Honest teacher; I didn't start it—he socked me first"—to such a low level have our international dealings come, however clothed in dignified verbiage. "Bang, you're dead," so we heard a nine year old shriek exultantly as he aimed a tin machine gun at his nine year old enemy. It reminded us immediately of current speeches both on our side and Russia's in the Security Council. So it goes, the "bang" school of diplomacy. Gentlemen, for God's sake let's grow up! This isn't a game we're playing to save our faces or our dignity or whatever; you're gambling with life and death—with the end of the world. If we're wrong, let's admit it; if we aren't, let's be generous. Let's stop making a fool of him who said in answer to the question, "Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me and I forgive him? till seven times?"—"I say not unto thee, until seven times; but until seventy times seven."

"QUOTES"

A GOOD woman became emotional in an enthusiastic evangelistic meeting and began shouting even as old-time Methodists did upon occasions. In her ecstacy she took off her hat and threw it at the minister. He was happy too and said, "Amen, throw your book at me, sister." She did. He said: "Throw your umbrella at me, sister," and she did. He then said, "Throw your pocketbook at me, sister." She immediately stopped and said to the preacher, "You have quenched the spirit."

Ministry a Man's Job

IN the minds of many laymen the ministry is misunderstood. This is unfortunate both for the layman and the Church. For in the last analysis the clergy are recruited from the laity. It is true that many men enter the ministry in response to a divine feeling of vocation. This is a valid experience. But others are attracted to the ministry as a vocation, or repelled by it, on the basis of the concept they have of the ministry as laymen. This is particularly true of the young man in high school or college.

The popular concept of the ministry frequently obscures its real function. Instead there exists a superficial popular concept. Recent novels and motion pictures, although they are not necessarily accurate, becloud the minister's real function. He seems to be concerned with trifles and to be a sort of business manager of an institution which in many instances is just about able to make ends meet. Often his life is considered a continuous round of bridges, buncos, and bazaars. Again his life may be bogged down with the maintenance of property, the keeping of records, the manipulation of the mimeograph and the addressograph.

To many intelligent young men the challenge to devote one's life to apparent trifles has little appeal. Law, medicine, business or engineering, these present a challenge. To bring an action in court, to cure a disease, to manage a business, to build a bridge—these things appeal. How tragic it is that the real function of the ministry is so obscured by the popular concept of it . . . tragic because it discourages the best men from considering it for their life's work.

Is it not possible through paid or volunteer parochial help to relieve the clergyman of much of the administrative detail that is placed on him; relieved of those things which seem to others to be his chief concern so he could devote his full efforts and time to his real task. In its real function the ministry is the greatest service a man can offer. The purpose of the ministry is to mediate the life of God to man, through sacraments, worship, teaching and counciling. Moreover, it presents the challenge of interpreting God's word to a world which is given over to sham, materialism and despair.

The ministry demands the best a man has in physical stamina, moral courage and intelligence. May clergy and laity do their part, in whatever they can to eliminate misconceptions. If the real challenge can be made clear, perhaps many will dedicate themselves to the sacred ministry.

The World Peace Foundation

BY MARGARET BATES

WITH the attention of the world today focused upon the need for international understanding and cooperation, it is of some interest to review the work and achievement of an organization which for nearly forty years has been working in this field. The World Peace Foundation, founded in 1910, is today a unique institution on the American educational and international scene.

Centering its activities around the task of making available to the public the facts of international affairs and leaving interpretation to the individual, the Foundation is a non-profit, non-partisan organization whose history reflects in large degree the growing interest of the United States in what is going on outside its borders. Originally one of that large group of American organizations whose goal was extreme pacifism, the Foundation has grown and changed with public opinion, and today is a leader in the movement to inform Americans about the daily happenings and long-term trends of international events.

A small organization which has headquarters at 40 Mount Vernon street, Boston, the Foundation specializes in the publication of studies and monographs concerning American foreign relations and international organization, maintains a reference library on international questions, and from time to time holds conferences and meetings to discuss problems within its scope. Its building has become the center of many international groups and associations in the New England area, attracting alike the novice who wishes information on the United Nations or the European Recovery Program and the specialist who is looking for research aids for detailed technical studies. Its publications are widely used in colleges and libraries not only in the United States but throughout the world, and its documents library contains one of this country's most complete collections of materials concerning the United Nations and some fifty other international organizations created by the nations of the world. The work of the organization has been praised by such international leaders as United Nations Secretary-General Trygve Lie, American Ambassador Warren Austin, and former Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles, and its books are used regularly by most of the world's foreign offices and departments of foreign affairs.

Founded by Edwin Ginn

The Foundation was established by Edwin Ginn, the well-known educational publisher, who was greatly influenced by the early works of Norman Angell on the futility of war. To bring the problem of peace to the attention of the American people, he decided to found a school, semi-theological in character, which would train young men and women in the fight for peace. In 1910, therefore, Mr. Ginn established the International School of Peace, for the purpose, as its charter said, of "educating the people of all nations to a full knowledge of the waste and destructiveness of war and of the preparation for war, its evil effects on present social conditions and on the well-being of future generations, and to promote international justice and the brotherhood of man; and generally by every means to promote peace and goodwill among all mankind." Within seven months the name of the organization had been changed to World Peace Foundation.

Since Mr. Ginn believed in educational means of solving the problem of war, and since two members of its first Board of Trustees were college presidents—A. Lawrence Lowell of Harvard and David Starr Jordan of Leland Stanford—the Foundation from its beginning has shown special interest in the academic world. Although Mr. Ginn's idea of training men and women as workers for peace was early abandoned, one of the Foundation's first actions was to detail members of its staff to work with college teachers and students, and it helped to found the foreign student's associations which came eventually to be the International Relations Clubs active on so many campuses today. The Foundation's close relationship with American education has continued over the years, and its directors have not infrequently described their profession as that of "educator." Today four members of the Board of Trustees are college presidents—James Phinney Baxter 3rd of Williams College, John Dickey of Dartmouth, Kenneth C. M. Sills of Bowdoin and Henry M. Wriston of Brown University.

Because Mr. Ginn was interested in obtaining their support for world peace, the Foundation has also worked closely with commercial and industrial groups, and until his death last year William K. Jackson, president of the United Fruit Company, was a trustee of the Foundation. Early activities among business men included attempts to convince them of the futility of war by pointing out the economic burden on the individual citizen. One of the Foundation's first pamphlets, published in 1911, stressed the fact that the United States was spending more money for support of its army and navy than any other nation except Great Britain.

Nor were women's groups neglected; one of the ablest lecturers of the day, Mrs. Anna Sturgis Duryea, joined the staff to work with women's clubs and church organizations. Her early speeches covered such topics as the Hague Conference of 1907 and a biographical sketch of the famous Austrian pacifist, Baroness von Suttner, who received the Nobel Peace Prize in 1905.

Publications Program

THE publications program of the Foundation was also started at an early date. The first pamphlets included translations and reprints of the works of many nineteenth-century pacifists, from Victor Hugo to Charles Sumner, as well as studies of the progress of international arbitration, the settlement of world disputes, disarmament programs, and so on. A monograph published by the Foundation in 1911, Paul Reinsch's "Public International Unions," is still regarded today as the outstanding publication in its field—a statement which is almost as startling, so fast has the study of international relations progressed, as the assertion that a medical textbook of that era is still the best.

The outbreak of the first world war was to change vitally the nature of the work carried on by the Foundation. Edwin Ginn himself had not been a militant pacifist; he had believed that the international army sent to put down the Boxer Rebellion in 1902 had been a striking example of the possibilities of international cooperation and the enforcement of peace. Most of the trustees of the Foundation shared his belief, and after months of discussion it was decided to center the efforts of the Foundation around the achievement of a just peace settlement. The Foundation was to work closely with many American organizations concerned with establishment of a sounder world order, primarily the League to Enforce Peace, which had been founded in 1915 to urge the creation of a society of nations capable of outlawing war.

In 1920 the Foundation became one of the first American groups to work with the League of Nations. Interested in connection with its informational activities in increasing public knowledge about the new world organization, the Foundation became the sales agent in this country for all League publications, and during the next ten years was to handle some 750,000 documents dealing with all phases of international cooperation, from the world control of slavery and narcotics traffic to studies in economic statistics. Until 1936, the Foundation also was in charge of distribution for other international organizations such as the International Labor Organization.

In the meantime, a large reference library was built up. A portion of this library was later transferred to the newly-established Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy, to be used by a large number of students concerned with international affairs.

Since 1938, many of the Foundation's activities have been connected with the publication of documents. In that year, the Foundation began to edit and issue an annual series of "Documents on American Foreign Relations," which has become an indispensable source for any one interested in the development of American foreign policy. The eighth volume in this series has just appeared, and a supplement to it, "The First Five Peace Treaties," will contain the only detailed material available concerning the negotiations which ended World War II with Italy and with Germany's satellite states.

During the war, the Foundation published the reports of the Universities' Committee on Post-War Problems, and it has recently entered a new field with the publication of a quarterly journal, "International Organization." This magazine deals with the work of the United Nations and some fiifty other international groups, summarizing their activities in a section written directly from their documents and working papers, and containing also interpretive articles, important documents, and bibliographical guide. The editing of "International Organization" is under the direct supervision of a special Board of Editors, made up of persons who attended the San Francisco Conference in 1945, and who have worked closely with the United Nations and other international groups since that time. The actual coverage of the magazine is very wide, for the activities of even such diverse organizations as the Council of Foreign Ministers, the Far Eastern Commission, the International Civil Aviation Organization and the Caribbean Commission are summarized.

In the two years since it first appearance this journal has come to be widely read throughout the world, and is now in use as a textbook in a number of universities. Since 1947 the Foundation has been supplying a large number of copies of the magazine to fifty-three areas whose educational facilities were devastated by the war and in which there is a dollar shortage, under a grant received for this purpose. Thus European and Asiatic centers of learning are being helped to rebuild.

Expansion Planned

OTHER recent publications of the Foundation have included the authoritative "Charter of the United Nations: Commentary and Documents," written by Leland M. Goodrich, former director of the Foundation, and Edvard Hambro, now registrar of the International Court of Justice at The Hague. The commentary, the first of its type to appear, has several times been cited in United Nations Security Council debate. A selected bibliography, "Documents of International Organizations," has appeared during the last year under the guidance of a special advisory board whose members include Phillip Jessup, now deputy American representative on the Security Council.

It is interesting to note that, since its inception, the Foundation has worked closely with allied organizations. Its original ties with the Church Peace Union, the American Peace Society, and the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace have been continued, while today it also cooperates actively with groups such as the Foreign Policy Association, the Institute of Pacific Relations, and Britain's Royal Institute of International Affairs. On a national level, it works with the Department of State; on an international level, with the United Nations. One of its present trustees is Christian A. Herter, vice-chairman of the House of Representatives Select Committee on Foreign Aid, who was instrumental in the creation of the European Recovery Program.

The outlook of the World Peace Foundation today is reflected by efforts to expand its informational activities and its services to the public. Under the leadership of its Board of Trustees, of which Harvey H. Bundy, former Assistant Secretary of State and of War, is president, and the present director, Raymond Dennett, the Foundation is attempting to make more and more people—in the United States as well as throughout the rest of the world—aware of the increasing need for international understanding, and to help them learn about world affairs. The widely representative membership of the Board of Trustees, which includes among its members educators, lawyers, businessmen, and public officials, indicates the diverse interests of the Foundation and its intention of working actively with all groups within the community. The Foundation's library today is a center for information for the layman and student, while its publications, going out from Boston to all corners of the world, serve also to help fulfill the Foundation's objective of education for peace.

Increasing Understanding

BY PHILIP H. STEINMETZ
Rector of the Ashfield Churches

SUFFERING increases sympathy and understanding. Apparently our calm detachment in the face of the greatest devastation and destruction ever wrought by men; our quiet tolerance of the use by ourselves of the atomic bomb against civilians; our willingness to think of going to war again if by so doing we can improve our position; the lack of concern for other people which these attitudes reveal, arise from the fact that we have not suffered enough.

We cannot be expected deliberately to bring disaster upon ourselves, but we can share in suffering by making gifts which cost us real privation—larger than we can afford. Such gifts not only bring great blessing to others, but they may do us some good, too. Let us not be afraid to dare deeply for the desperate plight of the many who suffer far more than they deserve.

We're Better Than Our Press

BY
W. B. SPOFFORD

HE has come and gone and the U. S. government is still in business. And I'm not talking about Santa Claus but the Dean of Canterbury. Mr. Truman, while not in the White House, is still residing at Blair House next door, the 81st Congress is about to convene and the Supreme Court is still handing down decisions. So that case of jitters shown by some churchmen over the Dean's visit seems hardly justified. Maybe it wasn't jitters in any case, but simply that a few of our bishops—not many—lunch too frequently at their downtown clubs and listen mostly to conversations of people who live on one side of the tracks. Money does have to be raised to keep the wheels turning, so a bit of compromising with those who have it is understandable even if to be regretted. For after all the Dean of Canterbury is a Christian. Whether he is also one of that group referred to in the Lambeth resolutions as "Communists who are practising Christians" I have no way of knowing. But if he is then I would think that our bishops were offered an excellent chance to put to work another of their resolutions, number 26, which reads: "The Conference believes that Communism is presenting a challenge to Christian people to study and understand its theory and practice, so that they may be well instructed as to which elements in it are in conflict with the Christian view of man and must therefore be resisted, and which elements are a true judgment on the existing social and economic order."

Ear-plugs and blinders, which two or three bishops advised the faithful to use if they saw the Dean approaching, are gadgets which hardly make for understanding.

A Notable Achievement

In any case I was proud to have Dean Johnson up before huge crowds all over the country, picturesque in clericals and cross, talking about what he thinks is required of us if the principles of Christianity are to be applied to international situations. So also I was delighted to have Henry Wallace stand before 20,000 people in Madison Square Garden at the Dean's meeting and say proudly that he was an Episcopalian. He could have left it unsaid, and it would have been understandable if he had, everything considered.

WHAT we need to know however is not about the few, bishops and others, who denounced the Dean (and so get the headlines), but rather the fact that Episcopalians in every city where he spoke were on committees to welcome him, with communicants of our Church in most instances either chairmen or introducers. I haven't the complete record, but I am glad to pass on the names of those who, in various capacities, played their part in making the speaking tour of the Dean a real success. I apologize to those whose names are omitted because I lack the information. Neither can I list the many who served on local committees simply because it is so long.

First of all the following Episcopalians were on the national committee to welcome Dean Johnson: Bishop Haines of Iowa; Bishop Hall of New Hampshire; Bishop Lawrence of Western Massachusetts; Bishop Nash of Massachusetts; Bishop Parsons, retired of California; Bishop Staney of New Mexico; Bishop Moulton, retired of Utah; Bishop Peabody of Central New York; Bishop Dagwell of Oregon; Bishop Bayne of Olympia. Also the Rev. Charles B. Ackley of New York; Dean John W. Day of Topeka; Dean Charles Taylor and the Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher of the Episcopal Theological School; the Rev. Fleming James of the Yale Divinity School; Editor Guy Emery Shipler of the Churchman; Prof. Vida D. Scudder of Wellesley; the Rev. Arthur Lichtenberger of the General Seminary; the Rev. Joseph G. Moore of Seabury-Western Seminary.

But members of our Church did more than merely serve on a committee and let it go at that. At the dinner in New York which launched the Dean's tour, the Rev. W. H. Melish of Brooklyn presided; the Rev. Roscoe T. Foust of New York gave the invocation; Bishop-elect Donald Campbell of Los Angeles was one of the speakers. In Boston the chairman of the meeting was the Rev. Kenneth Hughes of Cambridge; the Rev. Joseph Fletcher introduced the Dean and the Rev. Warren McKenna was active in promotion. Dean Johnson also preached at the Cathedral of St. Paul upon the invitation of Dean van Etten.

In Minneapolis Bishop Keeler presided at a meeting at which the Dean addressed the clergy of the city; Bishop Kemerer, Dean Morris and

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

Canon E. C. Prosser of St. Mark's Cathedral all extended the visitor a hearty welcome; the Rev. Norman Burgomaster of St. Luke's introduced him at the public meeting.

In Chicago the rector of one of the city's largest parishes, St. Edmund's, the Rev. S. J. Martin introduced the Dean, and Prof. Moore of Seabury Western and the Rev. Clarence Parker of St. Mark's took a leading part in making the meeting a success.

In Detroit, where official pressure was on to keep the clergy from having anything whatever to do with the meeting, the Dean was introduced by the Rev. W. B. Spofford, Jr., executive secretary of the Episcopal League for Social Action, with the Rev. Malcolm Dade of St. Cyprian's and the Rev. F. R. Meyers of St. Matthew's taking an active part. In Denver, Dean Paul Roberts of St. John's Cathedral was a prominent member of the committee, and the same goes for Bishop Bayne in Seattle, and in San Francisco Bishop Parsons, as one would expect, presided at the meeting.

At the Madison Square mass meeting, with 20,000 present, the chairman was the Rev. W. H. Melish of Brooklyn, with Episcopalian Henry Wallace a featured speaker. Praise also goes to Rector Howard Melish of Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, who invited the Dean to preach and also to a large number of Long Island clergy who went to LaGuardia field to welcome him on arrival.

In Philadelphia the Rev. Charles Ehly, rector of the Incarnation, Drexel Hill, introduced the Dean with Elizabeth Frazier, formerly head of religious education in the diocese, a leader of the local committee. Also active were the Rev. William Russell, now with the Friends Service Committee, and the Rev. Kenneth Forbes, a retired but very peppy priest of our Church.

High Spot of Tour

THIS Philadelphia meeting on December 14th was originally planned as the final one of the tour. But a request came from Atlanta, Ga., which in many ways is the Episcopal Church Story of the Year. At the invitation of Bishop John Moore Walker, the Dean's meeting in that Southern city was held at St. Philip's Cathedral. It was a mass meeting rather than a religious service, with Dean Johnson delivering pretty much the same address that he gave two nights before in Madison Square Garden. It was understood that he would, both by Bishop Walker and all the people involved, and it was so announced in advance. What is more, there was absolutely no segregation at the cathedral—not, as I understand it, at the insistence of any committee, but because Bishop Walker and the cathedral authorities said it should be that way. Furthermore, Dean Johnson was met at the airport by the Bishop of Atlanta and was a guest at the Bishop's home during his stay in the city.

All of which adds up in my book to pretty good going for Episcopalians, with a pat on the back to the Episcopal League for Social Action to which practically all of those here named belong.

The Dean's Message

As for the addresses by Dean Johnson, I fail to see on just what points anybody can quarrel with him. He said that the people of Russia, like those of every other nation, desire peace. What's wrong with that? He said that Russia and its satellite states were following the teachings of Christ in bringing better relations among men. A person can question whether this is a fact, but a Christian, I would suppose, would hasten to add, "I hope it is true." He said that it is possible for such diverse systems as the American and Russian to live side by side in peace. And if this is subversive then a lot of people are subversive, including the late President Roosevelt and the late Wendell Willkie—just to be non-partisan by bringing in both a Democrat and a Republican.

In calling upon us to face the realities of the present situation, the Dean said this:

"(1) We cannot compel the Soviet Union and other countries to change their form of society.

"(2) We cannot organize the world against them.

"(3) We cannot force the rest of the world to oppose the Soviet Union.

"In so far as the United States is trying to do these things she exhausts her resources and the resources of Europe and Asia. What could not be done today if the expenditure on armaments was diverted to food, clothing and housing for the people in your land and the rest of the world? What is really necessary is a change of policy. This requires courage. It requires courage to recognize that the present policy leads to bankruptcy."

To which I say that the only thing wrong with that is that if "the present policy leads to bankruptcy" (talk to your banker sometime about that) then it is not alone courage that is needed but also "strong common sense of a very practical nature," which is the way Noah Webster defines "horse-sense."

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

Ancient Egyptian Religion. By H. Frankfort. Columbia University Press. $3.00.

Who has not felt the spell of ancient Egypt? Who, having even begun the study of Egyptian religion, has not been baffled by it? It seemed to reflect a profound philosophy, or deep mysteries; but its worship of animals and its crude myths seemed only to be survivals of primitive animism—or something equally barbarous. And so attempts were made to show an "evolution" or at least "development" or religious ideas from the barbarous to the refined. In this epoch-making book Professor Frankfort disregards the modern theories, and asks the questions which should have been asked in the beginning. He finds that the whole outlook of the ancient Egyptians, in religion, politics, morals, literature and art, took for granted a static universe, a permanent world-order. This is what —alone—gives order to their religion and "theology." Of course Egypt influenced the surrounding nations, including the Hebrews and, especially, the world of later Hellenism. But it was often in a negative way (see the Book of Wisdom). Every serious student of the Bible should read this book, for here at last is the Ariadne's thread for exploring the cavernous, labyrinthine religious thought of the ancient Egyptians.

The Un-Marxian Socialist. By Henri de Lubac, S. J. Sheed and Ward. $3.50.

This is an historian's book, written for historians. Fr. Lubac has attempted to re-construct the figure of Pierre Joseph Proudhon as an opponent of a reactionary Church who was not, at bottom, an atheist at all! Out of the wealth of his primary researches Lubac makes a startlingly good case for at least qualifying the over-simple traditional picture of Proudhon as a purely secular social-revolutionary, a picture commonly drawn from classical dicta repeated out of context, such as "property is theft" and "God is evil."

This work, at the academic level, appears to be a part of the general movement in French Catholicism to re-establish "contact" with the working class and its revolutionary directions. The same rapproachment, at the grass-roots level, is to be seen in books like Fr. Perrin's "Priest Workman in Germany," and in movements such as the Jocists' and others described in Mrs. Bishop's "France Alive." The latter aim at a moral unity. Fr. Lubac seeks an intellectual common ground.

—J. F.

The Russian Idea. By Nicholas Berdyaev. Macmillan. $2.75.

This is one of the most valuable books ever written about Russia. It attempts to deal with the question, not, what has Russia been historically, but what is Russia in the mind and thought of the Creator?

The theme of Russian messianism runs through the whole work, as in a most sympathetic manner Berdyaev illustrates by the development of thought and literature the movement of Russia in the modern period. The struggle which arose from discontent with the "wrongness and ugliness" of life under the Tsars is pictured as an attempt to rediscover the import-

Things have not greatly changed ---

In 1833 a Seminary Dean said this in his Report to the Trustees:

I have visited all the rooms in the building. A few of them require slight repairs, chiefly of plastering; the grates of several of the stoves need fixing; some of the rooms still annoy the occupants by smoking; and, in one, a leak along the flue is injuring the plaster. In other respects, I believe, the building is in good condition.

The institutions which train our spiritual leaders still depend upon the people of the Church for their maintenance.

ance of personality, which in the West had been lost to egotism. "Personality stands opposed to the hidebound exclusiveness of egoism; it is possible only within the common life." It is not always easy for a westerner to put himself in a position to understand the mysticism of the East, for such explanations as this are not easily subsumed under the concepts of our thought:

> "In the West there was a movement of the mind toward truth, by way of a logical concatenation of concepts, while here in Orthodoxy is to be found a striving after truth by an inward raising of consciousness towards integrality of the heart and concentration of the mind."

The Russian Idea is a great book, but hardly an easy one. A much wiser man than the present reviewer wrote the blurb on the inner flap to the effect that this volume "helps make clear to American people the true Russia." It may bring the true Russia closer to us and even expose it to our understanding, but the clarity of the whole thing is not evident.

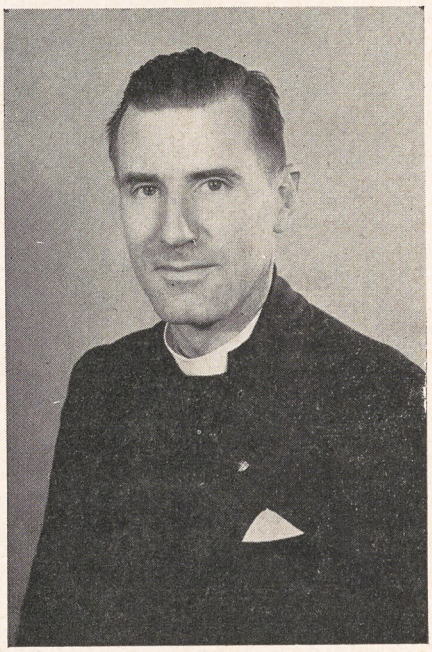
Selected Poems of John Oxenham. Edited by Charles L. Wallis. Harper. $2.00.



The most significant poems of John Oxenham and a biographical sketch by the poet's daughter are to be found in this his first representative selection to be published in America. These short poems, expressing the poet's thought and experience in the Christian life, should be useful to both clergy and laymen for inspiration in private meditation, in sermons, and in informal prayer groups.

Young Mr. Newman. By Maisie Ward. Sheed and Ward. $4.50.

Mrs. Ward already has us in her debt for a delightful study of Gilbert Keith Chesterton and a rounded treatment of the Roman Catholic revival in England associated with her father Wilfrid Ward. The present book is a portrait of Newman as a child, boy and man, before his departure from the Church of his fathers to the Roman obedience. It is a charmingly written, amply documented piece of work, which manages to convey to us some sense of the delicacy, grace and early power of the later Cardinal. Since Mrs. Ward is herself a devout Romanist, she naturally feels that in his final decision—after a typically Newmanian uncertainty—he chose the right way. But it must be added that no anti-Anglican spirit animates the book; indeed Mrs. Ward seems to sum up her own feelings in the sentence, "Conversion meant no casting aside of positive truth but its completion." Why this seemed to Newman "completion" is made sufficiently plain in the course of the study; that it was necessarily so, in actual fact, is another matter, upon which the reviewer (like most readers of this review) could hardly be expected to agree with the author. We may commend this study, however, as a sympathetic and discerning appraisal of "the young Mr. Newman," with his strange attractiveness, his shyness, his deep moral earnestness, and that indefinable quality which makes so appropriate both his own motto, "Cor ad cor loquitur," and the words inscribed on his tomb, "Ex umbris imaginibusque in veritatem."

Lincoln and the Preachers. By Edgar DeWitt Jones. Harpers. $2.50.

A somewhat disjointed study of Lincoln's relationship to Protestant, Catholic and Jewish clerics, which rambles on into statements they made about him for more than fifty years after his death.

THE PRESS

A SENSE OF HUMOR: But with it all there is much in the strange episode (the recent presidential election) that is reassuring for American democracy. Nothing has been so characteristic of our national life as our concern for the underdog, and our insistence that the spirit of fair play be maintained at all costs in whatever we do. Harry Truman, though he may not have possessed all the qualities of genius for his task, was an American citizen trying hard to do the job assigned him—one he had not asked for. When he told the folk back home at the whistle stops, the trouble he was having with the boys in Washington, apparently they believed him and went home to do something about it. It is also reassuring that the American people still have a sense of humor. The grim facts we have faced so long have not smothered it. So long as we can laugh at ourselves the country is safe. — Christian Evangelist (Disciples).

A STRONG DRIFT: One of the perils of our industrial age is the suppression of personality. The individual is lost in the mass. The workman becomes a mere shuttle in the great machinery that weaves out complex life. In former days the workman made an entire product. This appealed to the personal element in him and he was proud of his work. Now he stands with his hand on a lever or works some machine in a monotonous way. He cannot clearly discover his part in any finished product. The result is the suppression of personal initiative and the loss of personality. There is a strong drift toward the collective condition of society. We are forgetting the individual in the study of the multitude. — United Presbyterian.

ONLY ONE HOPE: Thus far along the roadway of civilization, man has been able to dally in his ignorance. The harm he could do was in proportion to his control, Now, in our time, the chain has run out. On the end of it is an atom. "There is no defense." How these hollow monotones echo down the corridors of our fears. There is only one hope. "Christian education is the hope of the world." The church must educate.—Christian-Evangelist (Disc.).

JUST A TRICKLE: William James, the great psychologist, wrote a book entitled "The Energies of Man." He said that men habitually used only a small fraction of the powers they possessed. He said that the average person uses only about 20 per cent of his brain power. Personally we think he was exaggerating but are confident that we could all be more intelligent, more sensitive and more dynamically alive. We are not getting out of us what is in us—just a trickle getting through when back there is 80 per cent of our capacity asleep, as useless as if it were not there at all. Think of what might happen in our lives, in the life of our Church, if we increased our output only 20 per cent, or even ten! The greatest moment in life is the moment when we become alive, when something touches us, or when somebody comes to us and calls out of us the things that are really in us. — Christian Leader (Universalist).

NOT SO DUMB: The American people aren't so dumb, after all. Just why they all voted as they did is, and will remain a mystery, but they had a lot of good reasons: Dewey, the 80th Congress, thinning pocketbooks, Taft-Hartley, housing (or absence of it), to mention only a few. The Democrats' rebirth has virtually killed all prospects of the labor-backed new party which Walter Reuter and friends were once so hot for, and about which William Green allowed himself to say a few kind words back in the pre-election gloom. And the lovely pasting that was given Henry Wallace and his ill-timed and ill-starred venture won't help to resurrect the corpse. What is more important is that the American people were smart enough to get fed up with the reactionary swing after only two years. What we will be able to do with this liberal swing is now the big question.—Commonweal (R. C.)

GOOD IDEA

To stimulate interest and understanding, the organizations of St. Mark's, Waterloo, Iowa, where the Rev. Perry Gilfillen is rector, make regular reports to the vestry. Likewise a representative of each parish organization is present at vestry meetings to find out what they are doing and thinking. They of course report back to their organizations. The rector also gives a report of his activities for the past month. The idea keeps everybody on their toes.

LEND LEASE: Requests that we have received for lectern Bibles have all been filled. However, a considerable number wrote us that they have Bibles they will be glad to send churches or missions in need of one, so if you can use one write this department at The Witness, 135 Liberty Street, New York 6, N. Y. A request has been received from a mission for a red dorsal; also there are requests for hymnals, with music, either the new or old editions.

We have also had a nice letter from the Rev. Frank L. Titus, assistant secretary of the Overseas Department of the National Council, congratulating us on the "new" Witness. He says he likes the new format and set-up. Editor Bill Leidt of Forth told us that too the other day, which sets us up no little. But to get back to Secretary Titus, he says that he has received a letter from the en. Arnold Waldock concerning his work in Nicaragua in which he says: "I am wondering if you can locate for me a Service Book for the Altar, and if possible a large Hymn and Prayer Book. Don't mind in the least if they are second hand. Also our workers are asking for Bibles (large print). In these parts we never mind how old such materials might be. All will be gratefully received." So if there are individuals or churches having any of these things they should be sent to Mr. Titus at 281 Fourth Avenue, New York 6, N. Y. He adds that "in case of duplications we will send such duplicates to other missions where they have similar needs."

GET-TOGETHER: An eastern parish, not far from New York, is looking for a curate: sound Prayer Book churchman; good at pastoral work and with youth. Salary $3,000 with $1,000 house allowance. — A former chaplain, married, desires work near a university. He will be satisfied with a small salary and house, providing he is allowed twelve hours during the week for study. — The church looking for the hard working rector has found the man; also the suburban parish wanting an assistant. However the city parish that wants an assistant who likes to work with poor people and has a social awareness, is still looking. — A midwestern church needs "a good, religious, young man, preferably single." There is a pretty church and a rectory recently decorated. Salary $2,000 plus $500 from the diocese if married; $1,600 plus $500 if single. The church is in a fast growing town of 12,000 and the vestry says there is a real opportunity for a man who is willing to work. This department conducts business by correspondence only. Please do not ask for interviews.

MR. W. A. COCHEL
Churchman of Kansas City

I have just completed reading of the rural number (Dec. 2) and am particularly pleased with your report of the work at Roanridge. It is very heartening to note the widespread interest. Yours is the first of the Church publications, aside from those under supervision of the National Council, to give readers definite information of our efforts. You may be interested to know that our architect is now working on plans of the house at the Round Barn Farm into a dormitory and community center. When completed this will permit transfer from Park College to Roanridge of all activities now in existence and enable us to start on an all year rather than summer program.

ALEXANDER M. LUKENS
Rector of St. Barnabas, Denver

A correction is due I believe of your statement (Dec. 2) where you state that "the Rev. A. M. Lukens has been appointed rural dean for the bishop's scattered congregation." He hasn't been. The appointee is the Rev. Eric A. C. Smith whose efficient and energetic work is well known in Colorado. You or your correspondent should have checked with him, or the Bishop. True the Living Church Annual made this mistake. But the Morehouse Co. is not infallible. Let this be a lesson to you.

I. W. MOOMAW
Agricultural Missions Secretary.

The recent copy of The Witness is of special interest to us because it presents to us clearly your program of work and the wholesome Christian philosophy behind it. Mr. Reisner has not yet reached the office since his return from England yesterday, but I am sure he joins me in extending our best wishes to you for the still further development of of your program.

MRS. VERNON SKEWES-COX
Churchwoman of Ross, Calif.

I read with great pleasure your editorial (Nov. 25) when you spoke in favor of this country giving up sovereignty and strengthen the U. N. so as to make it capable of enforcing law through a real world police force. Our family are all working through the United World Federalists for world government. I am a church member and have a hard time justifying the attitude of the Church to my daughter and sons. They ask me why the Church is not a leader in this movement for the brotherhood of man. If the Church took a strong stand on this most Christian tenet it would regain the respect and following of thousands of young people who long for real spiritual leadership in a chaotic and materialistic world.

DEACONESS EVELYN SEYMOUR
Diocese of Eau Claire

The Witness has also arrived and I had to read it from cover to cover before putting it down. The Bishop was here yesterday, and you will be pleased to know that he was so delighted with the issue he wrote and asked for 100 copies. He plans to distribute them to the diocese and especially to the lay men and women. I think the number on the Church Army was very well done too.

DEAN FRANK GIFFORD
Philadelphia Divinity School

In the December 2 issue of The Witness there are many interesting articles concerning the Church's ministry in rural areas. You have certainly accomplished a great deal in arousing the Church to this great need.
